In the continued belief that UNFICYP's presence on the island remained indispensable if the objectives set out by the Council were to be achieved, the Secretary-General recommended extending the UNFICYP mandate for a further six months, until 30 June 1997. He later informed the Council [S/1996/1016/Add.1] that Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom had indicated their concurrence with the proposed extension and that Turkey had also indicated its concurrence with and support of the Turkish Cypriot's position, as expressed at previous Council meetings on the subject.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 23 December and, following consideration of the Secretary-General's 10 December and 17 December (see below) reports, adopted resolution 1092(1996).

The Security Council,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 10 December 1996,

Welcoming also the report of the Secretary-General on his mission of good offices in Cyprus of 17 December 1996,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) beyond 31 December 1996,

Reaffirming its earlier relevant resolutions on Cyprus, and in particular resolutions 186(1964) of 4 March 1964, 939(1994) of 29 July 1994 and 1062(1996) of 28 June 1996,

Gravely concerned by the deteriorating situation in Cyprus and by the fact that intercommunal tensions on the island have escalated and, over the last six-month period, violence along the ceasefire lines has reached a level not seen since 1974 as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 10 December 1996,

Concerned also at the increased use of and threat to use violence against the personnel of UNFICYP,

Noting the beginning of indirect discussions through the UNFICYP Force Commander between the military authorities of both sides on measures aimed at reduction of military tensions,

Reiterating its concern that negotiations on a final political solution have been at an impasse for too long,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of UNFICYP for a further period ending on 30 June 1997;

2. Deplores the violent incidents of 11 and 14 August, 8 September and 15 October 1996, which resulted in the tragic deaths of three Greek Cypriot civilians and one member of the Turkish Cypriot Security Forces, as well as injuries to civilians and UNFICYP personnel, in particular the unnecessary and disproportionate use of force by the Turkish/Turkish Cypriot side, as well as the largely passive role played by the Cypriot police in response to civilian demonstrations;

3. Reminds both sides of their obligation to prevent violence directed against UNFICYP personnel, particularly those involving firearms, which inhibit UNFICYP from carrying out its mandated responsibilities, and demands that they ensure UNFICYP complete freedom of movement and extend their full cooperation to UNFICYP;

4. Emphasizes the need to maintain law and order and, in this context, demands that both parties prevent unauthorized incursions into the buffer zone, and respond immediately and responsibly to any demonstrations which violate the buffer zone and any demonstrations near the buffer zone that might lead to an increase in tensions;

5. Calls upon the parties to accept as a package, without delay or preconditions, the reciprocal measures proposed by UNFICYP, namely: (a) to extend the 1989 unmanning agreement to other areas where the two sides remain in close proximity to each other; (b) to prohibit loaded weapons along the ceasefire lines; and (c) to adopt a code of conduct, based on the concept of minimal force and proportional response, to be followed by troops on both sides along the ceasefire lines, and expresses its disappointment that no progress has been made towards implementing these measures thus far;

6. Further calls upon the military authorities on both sides:

(a) To clear all minefields and booby-trapped areas inside the buffer zone without further delay, as requested by UNFICYP;

(b) To cease military construction in the immediate vicinity of the buffer zone;

(c) To refrain from any military exercises along the buffer zone;

7. Reiterates grave concern about the excessive levels of military forces and armaments in the Republic of Cyprus and the rate at which they are being expanded, upgraded and modernized, including by the introduction of sophisticated weaponry, as well as the lack of progress towards a significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus, which threaten to raise tensions both on the island and in the region and complicate efforts to negotiate an overall political settlement;

8. Calls again upon all concerned to commit themselves to a reduction in defence spending and a reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus to help restore confidence between the parties and as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces as described in the set of ideas, stresses the importance of eventual demilitarization of the Republic of Cyprus as an objective in the context of an overall comprehensive settlement, and calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to promote efforts in this direction;

9. Expresses continuing concern about military exercises in the region, including overflights in the airspace of Cyprus by military fixed-wing aircraft, which have markedly increased political tension on the island and undermined efforts towards achieving a settlement;

10. Reiterates that the status quo is unacceptable and stresses its support for the Secretary-General's mission of good offices and the importance of the concerted efforts to work with the Secretary-General towards an overall comprehensive settlement;

11. Welcomes the efforts of the Secretary-General's Special Representative, and of those working in support, to prepare the ground for open-ended direct negotiations in the first half of 1997 between the leaders of the two Cypriot communities in order to secure an overall settlement;

12. Calls upon the parties to cooperate with the Special Representative to that end, as well as with his intensified preparatory work in the first months of 1997 with the objective of clarifying the main elements of an overall settlement;

13. Underlines that the success of this process will require the creation of genuine mutual confidence on both sides and the avoidance of actions which increase tension and calls upon the leaders of both communities to create a climate of reconciliation and confidence;

14. Reaffirms its position that a Cyprus settlement must be based on a State of Cyprus with a single sovereignty and international personality and a single citizenship, with its independence and territorial integrity safeguarded, and comprising two politically equal communities as described in the relevant Security Council resolutions, in a bicomunal and bizonal federation, and that such a settlement must exclude union in whole or in part with any other country or any form of partition or secession;

15. Welcomes the continuous efforts by UNFICYP to implement its humanitarian mandate in respect of Greek Cypriots and Maronites living in the northern part of the island, and Turkish Cypriots living in the southern part, and regrets that there has been no further progress on the implementation of recommendations arising out of the humanitarian review undertaken by UNFICYP in 1995;

16. Welcomes the continuing efforts of the United Nations and others in the international community to promote bicomunal events, regrets the obstacles which have been placed in the way of such contacts, and strongly urges all concerned, and especially the Turkish Cypriot community leadership, to lift all obstacles to such contacts;

17. Reaffirms that the decision of the European Union concerning the opening of accession negotiations with Cyprus is an important new development that should facilitate an overall settlement;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the structure and strength of UNFICYP with a view to its possible restructuring, and to present any new considerations he may have in this regard;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by 10 June 1997 on the implementation of this resolution;

20. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

23 December 1996 Meeting 3728 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/1062).

Financing

On 7 June, during its resumed fiftieth session, the General Assembly, on the basis of its consideration of the Secretary-General's proposed budget for UNFICYP for the 12-month period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 [A/50/722/Add.1] and of the related ACABQ report [A/50/889], adopted resolution 50/236.

Financing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 186(1964) of 4 March 1964, by which the Council established the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus, and 1032(1995) of 19 December 1995, by which the Council further renewed the mandate of the Force until 30 June 1996,

Recalling also its resolution 49/230 of 23 December 1994 on the financing of the Force,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force that are not covered by voluntary contributions are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force by certain Governments,

Expressing its appreciation to all those Member States and observer States which have made voluntary contributions to the Special Account established for the financing of the Force for the period prior to 16 June 1993,

Noting that voluntary contributions were insufficient to cover all of the costs of the Force, including those incurred by troop-contributing Governments prior to 16 June 1993, and regretting the absence of an adequate response to appeals for voluntary contributions, including that contained in the letter dated 17 May 1994 from the Secretary-General to all Member States,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus as at 21 May 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 9,486,206 United States dollars, representing 14.5 per cent of the total assessed contributions from 16 June 1993 to the period ending 30 June 1996, notes that some 23 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

5. Endorses the recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and takes note of the observations therein and of the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Approves, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements for the Force with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Force shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus an amount of 45,079,500 dollars gross (43,049,600 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, inclusive of an amount of 1,065,900 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions of the one-third share of the cost of the Force, equivalent to 14,349,867 dollars, from the Government of Cyprus and the annual pledge of 6.5 million dollars from the Government of Greece, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 30 June 1996 and the mandate periods to be decided upon by the Council;

9. Decides also, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions of the one-third share of the cost of the Force, equivalent to 14,349,867 dollars, from the Government of Cyprus and the annual pledge of 6.5 million dollars from the Government of Greece, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion an amount of 24,229,633 dollars gross (22,199,733 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 among Member States at a monthly rate of 2,019,136 dollars gross (1,849,978 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1996 and 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 30 June 1996 and the mandate periods to be decided upon by the Council;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,029,900 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

11. Decides to continue to maintain as separate the account established for the period prior to 16 June 1993 for the Force, invites Member States to make voluntary contributions to that account, and requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in appealing for voluntary contributions to the account;

12. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus".

ANNEX

Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations

1. At the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts payable shall remain recorded in the Special Account for the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus until payment is effected.

2. (a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for goods supplied and services rendered, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which required claims have not yet been received shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period shall be treated as provided for under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period, any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

Meeting 120

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/827/Add.1) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.50), based on informal consultations; agenda item 131.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 56, 64 (resumed); plenary 120.

On 18 December, during the Assembly's fifty-first session, the Secretary-General submitted the financial performance report of UNFICYP for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996, together with action to be taken by the Assembly on the disposition of the unencumbered balance indicated for that period [A/51/755 & Corr.1].

By decision 51/460, also of 18 December, the Assembly decided that, at its resumed fifty-first session, the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item on the financing of UNFICYP, along with 26 other agenda items and one sub-item.

Good offices mission (December report)

In a report of 17 December on his good offices mission [S/1996/1055], the Secretary-General noted that in the past six months efforts had been intensified to break the impasse and create conditions for successful direct negotiations between the leaders of the two communities. The Special Representative undertook an extensive familiarization mission during the last week in June and the first half of July, meeting with each of the two leaders, as well as with political party leaders, businessmen and trade unionists on both sides.

He also visited Athens and Ankara; the capitals of interested Governments, notably London, Moscow, Paris and Washington, D.C; and Dublin, Ireland, and Brussels, Belgium, for meetings with the EU Presidency and the European Commission, respectively. On subsequent occasions, he visited Bonn, London and Paris.

The Special Representative believed that, for the moment, direct talks would not yield positive results. The positions of the two leaders still remained far apart on a number of issues, and the two communities held a plurality of views and opinions. The EU decision to begin accession negotiations with Cyprus six months after the conclusion of its Intergovernmental Conference had in effect established a time-frame of approximately 18 months for the achievement of an overall settlement. The Special Representative urged all concerned to redouble their efforts, and stressed the critical importance of support from Greece and Turkey for negotiations to succeed.

The Special Representative's second visit to the area in mid-September was overshadowed by heightened tension between the two communities in the wake of the August incidents. His discussions with the two communities had focused on ways to reduce that tension, and he had built on the efforts of the Deputy Special Representative to encourage the issuance of a joint statement making clear that the incidents did not reflect the true sentiments of the communities and must never recur, that differences must be resolved through negotiation, and that efforts must be redoubled to work tirelessly for an overall settlement. The Turkish Cypriot leader agreed to such a joint statement. The Greek Cypriot leader stated it would be inappropriate, but subsequently issued a statement of his own to the effect that the incidents must not dissuade the parties from pursuing efforts to find an overall settlement under the Secretary-General's auspices; that they could not be interpreted to mean that the two communities could not live together in peace and prosperity in Cyprus, their common home; and that both communities should make every effort to defuse the existing tensions.

The Special Representative made a third visit to the area in mid-December to assess the situation. In Cyprus, he met separately with the two leaders and, in Athens and Ankara, with senior foreign ministry officials. He found that the gap in the positions of the two leaders had not narrowed and that each continued to express serious doubts about the true intentions of the other, thus making it difficult to be optimistic about prospects for direct talks. The Greek Cypriot leader had observed that, in view of the campaign for the February 1998 presidential elections in Cyprus, the window of opportunity for negotiations was likely to close by the autumn of 1997. The Special Representative reiterated to both leaders and to his interlocutors in Athens and Ankara the concern of the United Nations and the international community about the existing situation in Cyprus. He emphasized the urgency for direct negotiations on an overall settlement, for which intensified preparations should begin early in 1997, with the active support of Greece and Turkey.

As to the increasing international interest in the Cyprus problem, the Secretary-General said that all who had undertaken missions to Cyprus, Greece and Turkey in order to explore possible ways of bringing the positions of the two sides closer and to seek greater support from Greece and Turkey recognized the importance of ensuring, through appropriate consultations, that the efforts of interested Governments were coordinated with his mission of good offices.

The Secretary-General said it was widely believed that the accession of Cyprus to EU membership in a manner consistent with the agreed basis for an overall settlement would offer both communities the opportunity for enhanced prosperity and security. An urgent effort was accordingly required in 1997 to bring about early direct talks between the two leaders. To that end, the Secretariat was in the process of reviewing, updating and expanding the already extensive material on hand, as well as preparing additional material to enable the United Nations to help the two leaders reach common positions during their negotiations. In addition, more contacts with the two leaders and with Greece and Turkey were planned for 1997.

The Secretary-General called on the two leaders to give tangible indications that they were seeking an overall settlement on the basis of one country and that their words and deeds were in harmony with that objective. He said such change in attitude could not wait for a settlement; rather, it must precede it and should be adopted without delay. The emphasis in their public statements and in their communications with each other must shift from polemics and mutual accusations to their future relationship in a federal Cyprus.

The Secretary-General also called on both leaders to implement measures giving proof of their good intentions and to help create an atmosphere of confidence. Those measures could include: members of both communities crossing with minimal formality (presenting identity cards only) at the Ledra Palace checkpoint; facilitation of bicomunal contacts; cooperation and joint projects in areas of intercommunal concern, such as the environment, water, health, education and the restoration of historic sites; youth and student exchanges; bicomunal sports events; elimination of provocative emblems and slogans; island-wide telephone communications; and bicomunal commercial activities and trade. The Secretary-General called on both leaders to cooperate with his Special Representative and Deputy Special Representative and with the Governments supporting his mission of good offices.

Other issues

Cooperation with OSCE

In keeping with General Assembly resolution 50/87 [YUN 1995, p. 623], the Secretary-General on 14 October 1996 submitted a report [A/51/489], according to which the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) continued to consolidate cooperation and coordination between them at a variety of levels within the agreed 1993 framework [YUN 1993, p. 518].

During the year, UNHCR, together with OSCE and the International Organization for Migration (IOM), organized a regional conference (Geneva, 30-31 May) to address the problems of refugees, displaced persons, other forms of involuntary displacement and returnees in CIS countries and relevant neighbouring States. Attended by 87 States, 27 international organizations and 77 NGOs, the conference provided a forum for the countries of the region to discuss population displacement and refugee movements in CIS countries and to clarify areas of concern. It adopted a programme of action which included measures aimed at establishing national migration systems and developing appropriate policies and operational activities, as well as implementation and follow-up proposals.

UNHCR and the OSCE High Commissioner for National Minorities subsequently convened a joint workshop (Geneva, July) on the subject of return and reintegration of formerly deported peoples in CIS countries and examined areas of mutual interest, such as questions of nationality and citizenship in Europe.

Tripartite consultations among representatives of the United Nations Office at Geneva, OSCE and the Council of Europe had been held in December 1995 (Paris), with another series expected before the end of 1996 (Geneva). That supplementary informal process, initiated in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 610], had proved effective in securing the participation of the Chairman-in-Office of OSCE and its institutions in a regular dialogue with humanitarian organizations, thereby assuring an essential link between the processes for control and resolution of conflicts and humanitarian operations. Given the emphasis on the latter, other organizations, such as ICRC, IOM and the EU Commission, had been included in the consultations on the basis of their involvement in those areas under discussion. On the UN side, the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Geneva, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, UNHCR and the Economic Commission for Europe were regularly represented; other UN entities involved in operations under discussion were also invited. In view of the usefulness of the process, it had been proposed that the consultations also cover social and economic matters in Europe.

As to cooperation in the field, the International Police Task Force, a component of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, provided security assistance to OSCE as it supervised the preparation and conduct of the September elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights conducted an introductory human-rights training course for OSCE monitors (Vienna, February) assigned to Bosnia and Herzegovina, supplemented by a more comprehensive training course there (July) in cooperation with the Council of Europe. The UN High Commissioner's field operation in the country also participated in drafting human rights-related election guidelines and proposed or evaluated responses to abuses of election rights.

The United Nations continued to support the ongoing peacemaking efforts of the OSCE Minsk Group in Nagorny Karabakh, Azerbaijan. UNHCR sent a mission to Baku and Yerevan (9-12 September) to discuss the humanitarian situations in Azerbaijan and Armenia, respectively, and the possibility of starting non-political negotiations on humanitarian issues, particularly the return of refugees and internally displaced persons. Consultations by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and OSCE with the authorities in Abkhazia, Georgia, had resulted in the acceptance of a programme for the promotion of human rights in Abkhazia; a human rights office was to be established in Sukhumi, staffed by two human rights officers, one from each of the two organizations (see above, under "Georgia").

In Tajikistan, where the United Nations was primarily responsible for peacemaking and peacekeeping, with OSCE concentrating on the promotion of human rights and democratic institution-building, both organizations continued efforts to obtain a political solution to that conflict. The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights continued dialogue with the Russian Federation and pursued contacts with the OSCE Chairman-in-Office regarding implementation of his mandate in respect of the human rights situation in the Chechen Republic of the Russian Federation. The UN High Commissioner and OSCE remained in consultation regarding the former's plan to deploy a human rights officer to work with the OSCE Assistance Group in Grozny.

Other endeavours jointly undertaken by the two organizations during the reporting period included electoral observation missions in Azerbaijan (November 1995) and Kyrgyzstan (December 1995).

In a later addendum to his report [A/51/489/Add.1], the Secretary-General stated that, pursuant to the Assembly's 1993 request [res. 48/155], the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights had been in touch with the OSCE offices in Latvia and Estonia regarding the human rights situations in those countries and the analysis of institutional structures in Latvia by the High Commissioner's adviser on human rights institutions. In addition, the High Commissioner had been in touch with OSCE regarding technical cooperation activities in the Republic of Moldova.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/57.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/5 of 13 October 1993 on observer status for the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and the framework for cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe signed on 26 May 1993, as well as its resolution 50/87 of 18 December 1995 on cooperation between the two organizations,

Recalling also the declaration at the 1992 Helsinki Summit by the heads of State or Government of the participating States of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe of their understanding that the Conference is a regional arrangement in the sense of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations and as such provides an important link between European and global security,

Acknowledging the increasing contribution of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security in its region through activities in early warning and preventive diplomacy, including through the activities of the High Commissioner for National Minorities, crisis management, arms control and disarmament, post-crisis stabilization and rehabilitation measures, and its efforts in supporting the economic dimension, as well as its crucial role in the human dimension,

Welcoming the meeting held on 15 and 16 February 1996 on the invitation of the Secretary-General between the United Nations and the regional and other organizations, and noting the importance of continuing and further developing the practice of convening such meetings,

Recalling the special ties between the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Mediterranean Partners for Cooperation,

Underlining the continued importance of enhanced coordination and cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Also welcomes the progress in common work in the field between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;
3. Further welcomes the Summit Declaration and the decisions adopted by the heads of State or Government of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe on 3 December 1996 at Lisbon, in particular the Lisbon Declaration on a Common and Comprehensive Security Model for Europe for the Twenty-first Century, which, as such, complements the mutually reinforcing efforts of other European and transatlantic institutions and organizations in this field;
4. Commends the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe for the fulfilment, in cooperation with the United Nations, of the role assigned to it by the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively, "the Peace Agreement"), in particular for:
  - (a) The successful supervision of the preparation and the conduct of the elections held on 14 September 1996;
  - (b) The monitoring, together with other international organizations, of the development of human rights standards;
  - (c) The support offered to the Human Rights Commission of Bosnia and Herzegovina;
  - (d) The agreements concluded under its auspices on confidence- and security-building measures, as well as on subregional arms control;
5. Welcomes the decision of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to continue its engagement in Bosnia and Herzegovina and to contribute to the building of democratic structures and to the fostering of civil society, including the promotion of human rights standards, and welcomes in this context further cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;
6. Underlines the responsibility of the parties to organize free and fair municipal elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina and, in this regard, welcomes the confirmation that the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe will supervise the preparation and conduct of those elections;
7. Welcomes the readiness of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to continue to contribute in and around Bosnia and Herzegovina to regional stabilization and, also in accordance with the Peace Agreement, to assist the implementation of the agreements on confidence- and security-building measures, on subregional arms control, as well as to promote negotiations on regional arms control;

8. Also welcomes the readiness of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to support the Human Rights Office in Sukhumi, Georgia, which forms part of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia;

9. Fully supports the activities of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to achieve a peaceful solution to the conflict in and around the Nagorny Karabakh region of Azerbaijan, and welcomes cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in this regard;

10. Welcomes the intensified cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe over the past year, for example in Tajikistan, Croatia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, in the provision of human rights training courses in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and in collaboration on the subject of the return and reintegration of refugees and other involuntarily displaced persons in countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States;

11. Supports the activities of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe aimed at contributing to stability and the maintenance of peace and security within its region, and stresses the importance of the work done by its field missions;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to continue exploring with the Chairman-in-Office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe possibilities for further enhancement of cooperation, information exchange and coordination between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations and on the basis of the framework for cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, avoiding as much as possible duplication and overlapping in those areas where both organizations have their own respective roles to play;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe", and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in implementation of the present resolution.

12 December 1996

40-nation draft (A/51/L.52 & Add.1), amended by Azerbaijan (A/51/L.54); agenda item 38.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Armenia, Micronesia, Nepal, Papua New Guinea.

Before adoption of the resolution, an amendment by Azerbaijan was adopted by a recorded vote of 43 to 1, with 103 abstentions, and subsequently incorporated as paragraph 9.

Armenia, whose procedural motion for no action on the amendment had been rejected by a recorded vote of 38 to 2, with 106 abstentions, pointed out that the decisions of OSCE, adopted by consensus, expressed the common position of its membership and, in the case of Nagorny Karabakh, took account of the need to guarantee balance and objectivity in the mediation efforts of the OSCE Minsk Group. Precisely because the final Declaration of the 1996 OSCE Summit (Lisbon, 2-3 December) did not include any paragraph on the Nagorny Karabakh conflict, Armenia said, the sponsors of the original draft did not find it appropriate to include a reference to that conflict.

Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region

As requested in General Assembly resolution 50/75 [YUN 1995, p. 624], the Secretary-General submitted a July report with later addendum [A/51/230], reproducing replies from six States to his note verbale, addressed to all Member States, requesting information on steps taken or envisaged in implementation of its resolution on the strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region.

One of the six States was Italy, which replied on behalf of the EU and of the countries of Central and Eastern Europe associated with it (Bulgaria, Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, Slovakia, Slovenia), as well as of the associated countries of Cyprus and Malta.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/50.

Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, including resolution 50/75 of 12 December 1995,

Reaffirming the primary role of the Mediterranean countries in strengthening and promoting peace, security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region,

Bearing in mind all the previous declarations and commitments, as well as all the initiatives taken by the riparian countries at the recent summits, ministerial meetings and various forums concerning the question of the Mediterranean region,

Recognizing the efforts made so far and the determination of the Mediterranean countries to intensify the process of dialogue and consultations with a view to resolving the problems existing in the Mediterranean region and to eliminate the causes of tension and the consequent threat to peace and security,

Recognizing also the indivisible character of security in the Mediterranean and that the enhancement of cooperation among Mediterranean countries with a view to promoting the economic and social development of all peoples of the region will contribute significantly to stability, peace and security in the region,

Recognizing further that prospects for closer Euro-Mediterranean cooperation in all spheres can be enhanced by positive developments worldwide, in particular in Europe, in the Maghreb and in the Middle East,

Noting the developments in the Middle East peace process that will lead to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region and therefore to promoting confidence-building measures and a good-neighbourly spirit among the countries of the area,

Expressing satisfaction at the growing awareness of the need for more joint efforts by all Mediterranean countries so as to strengthen economic, social, cultural and environmental cooperation in the region,

Reaffirming the responsibility of all States to contribute to the stability and prosperity of the Mediterranean region and their commitment to respect the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Expressing its concern at the persistent tension and continuing military activities in parts of the Mediterranean that hinder efforts to strengthen security and cooperation in the region,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on this item,

1. Reaffirms that security in the Mediterranean is closely linked to European security as well as to international peace and security;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the continuing efforts by Mediterranean countries to contribute actively to the elimination of all causes of tension in the region and to the promotion of just and lasting solutions to the persistent problems of the region through peaceful means, thus ensuring the withdrawal of foreign forces of occupation and respecting the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of all countries of the Mediterranean and the right of peoples to self-determination, and therefore calls for full adherence to the principles of non-interference, non-intervention, non-use of force or threat of use of force and the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, in accordance with the Charter and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

3. Commends the efforts by the Mediterranean countries in meeting common challenges through coordinated overall responses, based on a spirit of multilateral partnership, towards the general objective of turning the Mediterranean basin into an area of dialogue, exchanges and cooperation, guaranteeing peace, stability and prosperity;

4. Encourages Mediterranean countries to strengthen such efforts through, inter alia, a lasting, multilateral and action-oriented cooperative dialogue among States of the region;

5. Recognizes that the elimination of the economic and social disparities in levels of development as well as other obstacles in the Mediterranean area will contribute to enhancing peace, security and cooperation among Mediterranean countries through the existing forums;

6. Recognizes also that respect and greater understanding among cultures will contribute to enhancing peace, security and cooperation among Mediterranean countries;

7. Calls upon all States of the Mediterranean region that have not yet done so to adhere to all the multilaterally negotiated legal instruments related to the field of disarmament, thus creating the necessary conditions for strengthening peace and cooperation in the region;

8. Encourages all States of the region to favour the necessary conditions for strengthening the confidence-building measures among them by promoting genuine openness and transparency on all military matters, by participating, inter alia, in the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures as well as by providing accurate data and information to the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms;

9. Encourages the Mediterranean countries to strengthen further their cooperation in combating terrorism, in all its forms and manifestations, which poses a serious threat to peace, security and stability in the region and therefore to the improvement of the current political, economic and social situation;

10. Invites all States of the region to address, through various forms of cooperation, problems and threats posed to the region, such as terrorism, international crime and illicit arms transfers, as well as illicit drug production, consumption and trafficking, which jeopardize the friendly relations among States, hinder the development of international cooperation and result in the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and the democratic basis of pluralistic society;

11. Encourages the continued widespread support among the Mediterranean countries for the convening of a conference on security and cooperation in the Mediterranean, as well as the ongoing consultations to create the appropriate conditions for its convening;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on means to strengthen security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region".

General Assembly resolution 51/50

10 December 1996      Meeting 79      Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.16) without vote, 14 November (meeting 23); 34-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.33); agenda item 76. Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 14, 23; plenary 79.

Chapter VI

Middle East

In 1996, the United Nations continued to support efforts to keep the peace process on track and remained involved in the Middle East in a number of ways—through its peacekeeping operations and the good offices of the Secretary-General, as well as through significantly expanded programmes of economic, social and other forms of assistance. Promising developments, such as the withdrawal of Israeli troops from some West Bank cities, paved the way for the first general Palestinian elections in January. There were some setbacks, as well, including those linked to the delayed redeployment of Israeli troops from the city of Hebron, plans to expand Israeli settlements, seizure of Palestinian land and demolition of Palestinian homes.

The General Assembly in December stressed that the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Middle East conflict would constitute a significant contribution to strengthening international peace and security. It stressed the need to achieve rapid progress on all tracks of the Arab-Israeli negotiations within the peace process. The Assembly reaffirmed the necessity of achieving a peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine, which it again acknowledged as the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Negotiations on a permanent status for the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel were formally launched in May, raising hopes that tangible results would soon follow. Among the outstanding "final status" issues to be resolved was the status of Jerusalem, which again drew international attention in the wake of protests against Israel's decision to open an old tunnel under the Al-Aqsa Mosque, connecting sacred and archaeologically important sites in the Holy City. Bloody confrontations ensued, during which the Israeli army and Palestinian police faced each other for the first time, and fighting erupted in other cities of the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, resulting in a large number of casualties on both sides. After the Security Council called for immediate cessation and reversal of acts that had aggravated the situation, with negative implications for the peace process, Israel and the Palestinian side decided in October to resume negotiations aimed at resolving outstanding issues and implementing the 1993 Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements.

The Secretary-General attended a "Summit of Peacemakers" in March, co-chaired by the Presidents of Egypt and the United States and convened to confront the acts of violence that threatened the Middle East peace process.

To redress the difficult economic situation of the Palestinians, the UN system responded with increased assistance, coordinated by the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories. At a Ministerial Conference on Economic Assistance to the Palestinian People, held in January, donors pledged more than $800 million for investment projects in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

UN initiatives were largely geared towards creating employment opportunities for Palestinians, developing infrastructure, expanding and encouraging the private sector, and assisting the young Palestinian Authority in building its institutions and in providing education and health services.

In 1996, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) continued to mobilize international support for the Palestinians. The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories reported to the General Assembly on the situations in the Golan Heights, the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip.

Despite serious financial problems, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) continued to provide a wide-ranging programme of education, health and relief services to more than 3.3 million Palestinian refugees living both in and outside camps in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, as well as in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The situation in southern Lebanon remained both tense and volatile, with hostilities between Israel and armed elements opposing Israeli occupation intensifying in early 1996. The Security Council and the General Assembly called for an immediate cessation of those hostilities. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) pursued its efforts to limit the conflict and protect inhabitants from its consequences. The mandates of UNIFIL and of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Golan Heights were extended, and the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization UNTSO, headquartered in Jerusalem, continued to assist both peacekeeping operations in their tasks.

On 16 December, by decision 51/433, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the agenda item entitled "Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second (1997) session. The item had been inscribed yearly on the Assembly's agenda since 1981, following the bombing by Israel of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad [YUN 1981, p. 275].

Peace process

Overall situation

In a November report [A/51/678-S/1996/953], the Secretary-General observed that the Middle East peace process had been challenged during the year by a series of tragic incidents, by the urgency of translating signed agreements into peace and security for all, and by the need to find solutions to outstanding issues acceptable to the parties.

In accordance with the 1995 Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip [YUN 1995, p. 626], Israeli troops were withdrawn from the major West Bank cities, with the exception of Hebron, paving the way for the holding of the first Palestinian general elections in January 1996. Negotiations on a permanent status were formally launched in May; subsequent terrorist acts had had a negative effect on the peace talks, while the prolonged closure of the occupied territories imposed by Israel to prevent further terrorist activities had severely affected the Palestinian economy and resulted in an increased level of unemployment, the Secretary-General stated.

The absence of progress in the peace process in the second half of 1996 had caused frustration and disappointment, he continued, leading to events that threatened to unravel the negotiating process and fomented a crisis of confidence between its parties—the Israelis and the Palestinians. Following Security Council action, the Prime Minister of Israel and the Chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) took the reassuring decision in October to resume negotiations.

From the outset, the Secretary-General said, it had been expected that the road to peace would not be easy. However, the only alternative to the negotiation process was a return to instability, endemic violence, regional tensions and uncertain economic prospects. All participants, therefore, had a duty to listen to reason and to show determination and flexibility to carry out negotiations in earnest, in accordance with the principles agreed at the Madrid Peace Conference in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 221] and other agreements already reached, until a permanent settlement was achieved on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213]. It was also clear that for the Middle East peace process to produce truly comprehensive and lasting results, progress had to be made on the Israeli-Syrian and Israeli-Lebanese tracks of negotiation.

For its part, the United Nations would continue to support the peace process and to respond in an integrated way to the economic, social and other needs of the populations of the West Bank and Gaza. The coordinated approach to delivery of assistance to the Palestinians, implemented by the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories (see below), had proved effective, particularly in times of crisis. However, economic and social conditions in the West Bank and Gaza remained dire, and it was to be hoped that ways could be found to improve them in the near future, including by eventually lifting the order for closure of the territory.

In response to the Secretary-General's request for their views, Security Council members voiced grave concern about the developments, and stressed the necessity for the parties to pursue negotiations and to fulfil their obligations under the agreements achieved. They also expressed their determination to provide the needed backing to the Middle East peace process, fully supporting those agreements as well as their timely implementation.

Having sought also the positions of Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the PLO, the Secretary-General reported that he had received two replies.

The PLO stated there had been a further deterioration in both the situation on the ground and the status of the peace process since the new Israeli Government of Prime Minister Netanyahu had taken office in May. The PLO charged that the Government had adopted guidelines contradictory to the 1993 Declaration of Principles [YUN 1993, p. 521] and the September 1995 Interim Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 626]—the so-called Oslo agreements—and had persisted in violating those accords, through the continued siege of the Palestinian territory and intentional delays in redeployment from Hebron, as well as its ongoing attempts to create new facts with regard to occupied East Jerusalem. Israel, the PLO charged, also had resumed its colonial settlement activities in the occupied territory, which could reverse the peace process as a whole. The Palestinian side believed that the international community, represented by the General Assembly, should uphold the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, international law and international humanitarian law, and the validity of the relevant Security Council resolutions.

In its reply, Egypt fully supported principles set out by the Assembly in a 1995 resolution [YUN 1995, p. 646, GA res. 50/84] and said it was working tirelessly towards a final settlement. Israel, however, had adopted policies which clearly contradicted those principles, by delaying agreed troop withdrawal and redeployment; attempting to establish new facts that would change the situation on the ground in occupied East Jerusalem; resuming settlement activities in the occupied territories; and delaying negotiations on issues of a final settlement, Egypt declared.

Palestinian elections

The 1995 Interim Agreement had set the stage for free elections in the West Bank and Gaza Strip on 20 January 1996, during which Palestinians elected 88 members and a President for a legislative council entrusted with drawing up a constitution for the work of the Palestinian Authority, as well as establishing the necessary legislation. The elections were held under fair conditions, according to international observers, with the participation of around 1 million voters. The Palestinian Council was inaugurated on 7 March, and, on 9 May, President Yasser Arafat announced the appointment of a 21-member Executive Authority of the Council.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

After consultations of the Security Council held on 22 January, the President of the Council issued the following statement [S/PRST/1996/3] on behalf of the members of the Council:

The members of the Security Council warmly welcome the successful holding of the Palestinian elections on 20 January 1996, which constitutes a major step forward in the Middle East peace process. The members of the Council congratulate the Palestinian Authority and the Palestinian people on this achievement, which reflects credit on all concerned. The members of the Council note with satisfaction the conclusion of the international observers that the elections were an accurate reflection of the wishes of the Palestinian electorate.

The members of the Security Council consider that the holding of the elections marks a significant step towards the fulfilment of the Declaration of Principles, signed by Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization in Washington on 13 September 1993. The members of the Council reiterate their full support for the Middle East peace process.

Terrorist acts

On 25 February, one day after Israel had lifted its closure order for the Gaza Strip and West Bank, the military wing of the fundamentalist organization Hamas claimed responsibility for two suicide bombings in downtown Jerusalem and in the Israeli town of Ashkelon. Israel on 26 February reported [A/51/70-S/1996/135] that the explosion in Jerusalem killed 24 Israelis and injured another 51. During the Ashkelon attack, one Israeli was killed and 36 were wounded. Those crimes, Israel stated, were intended not only to kill Israelis, but to derail the peace process.

On 3 March, a member of Hamas detonated a bomb on a commuter bus in downtown Jerusalem, killing 18 Israelis and injuring an additional 7. On 4 March, a suicide bomber struck outside a shopping mall in Tel Aviv, leaving 12 Israelis killed and 35 injured. According to Israel [A/51/74-S/1996/193], the terrorists were trying to continue to prevent the dawn of a new day of hope for the Middle East.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

After consultations of the Security Council on 4 March, the President of the Council issued the following statement [S/PRST/1996/10] on behalf of the Council:

The members of the Security Council condemn the terrorist attacks in Jerusalem on 3 March and in Tel Aviv on 4 March. They extend their sympathy and deepest condolences to the Government and people of Israel and to the families of the victims. They wish a speedy recovery of the wounded.

These vile acts had the clear purpose of trying to undermine Middle East peace efforts through such terror. The members of the Security Council reiterate their support for the peace process and call on the parties to consolidate it and to increase their co-operation in curbing violence and combating such terrorism.

Summit of Peacemakers

By a statement of 5 March, the Secretary-General called on the international community to unite in action against what he termed despicable acts of violence. On 13 March, he attended the Summit of Peacemakers in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, convoked to confront the acts of violence that threatened the Middle East peace process. The summit was attended by nine heads of State and nine heads of Government, among them

Co-Chairmen Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and United States President William J. Clinton, as well as one Crown Prince, 11 deputy prime ministers, and special envoys and ministers for foreign affairs.

In their statement [A/51/91-S/1996/238], transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council on 1 April, the Co-Chairmen said the meeting, which had taken place at a time when the peace process was confronting serious threats, had three fundamental objectives: to enhance the peace process, to promote security and to combat terror. Accordingly, summit participants expressed their full support for the Middle East peace process and their determination that it continue in order to accomplish a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region. They affirmed their determination to promote security and stability and to prevent the enemies of peace from achieving their ultimate objective of destroying the real opportunity for peace in the Middle East. They also re-emphasized their strong condemnation of all acts of terror in all its abhorrent forms, whatever its motivation and whoever its perpetrator, including recent terrorist attacks in Israel, reaffirming their intention to stand staunchly against all such acts and urging all Governments to join them in that condemnation and opposition.

The participants decided to support the Israeli-Palestinian agreements and the continuation of the negotiating process, and to reinforce it politically and economically; to enhance the security situation for both sides, with special attention to the pressing economic needs of the Palestinians; to support the continuation of the negotiating process in order to achieve a comprehensive settlement; to work together to promote security and stability in the region by developing effective and practical means of cooperation and further assistance; to promote coordination of efforts to stop acts of terror on bilateral, regional and international levels, ensuring that instigators of such acts were brought to justice, supporting efforts by all parties to prevent their territories from being used for terrorist purposes and preventing terrorist organizations from engaging in recruitment, supplying arms or fund-raising; to exert maximum efforts to identify and determine the sources of financing for those groups and to cooperate in cutting them off, and by providing training, equipment and other forms of support to those taking steps against groups using violence and terror to undermine peace, security or stability; and to form a working group, open to all summit participants, to prepare recommendations on how best to implement the decisions contained in the statement, and to report to the participants within 30 days.

(For further details on UN action against terrorism, see PART FOUR, Chapter III.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/29.

The Middle East peace process

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/21 of 4 December 1995,

Stressing that the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Middle East conflict will constitute a significant contribution to strengthening international peace and security,

Recalling the convening of the Peace Conference on the Middle East at Madrid on 30 October 1991 on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 and the subsequent bilateral negotiations as well as the meetings of the multilateral working groups, and noting with satisfaction the broad international support for the peace process,

Noting the continuing positive participation of the United Nations as a full extraregional participant in the work of the multilateral working groups,

Bearing in mind the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements signed by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993 and the subsequent Agreement on the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area signed by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization at Cairo on 4 May 1994, their 29 August 1994 Agreement on the Preparatory Transfer of Powers and Responsibilities, the Protocol of Further Transfer of Powers and Responsibilities signed by the Government of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization at Cairo on 27 August 1995 and the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and Gaza Strip, signed by the Government of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization in Washington, D.C., on 28 September 1995,

Also bearing in mind the Agreement between Israel and Jordan on the Common Agenda, signed in Washington, D.C., on 14 September 1993, the Washington Declaration signed by Jordan and Israel on 25 July 1994 and the Treaty of Peace between the State of Israel and the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan of 26 October 1994,

Welcoming the Declaration of the Middle East/North Africa Economic Summit held at Casablanca from 30 October to 1 November 1994, the Declaration of the Middle East/North Africa Economic Summit held at Amman from 29 to 31 October 1995 and the Middle East/North Africa Economic Conference held at Cairo from 12 to 14 November 1996,

Welcoming also the declared commitment of the parties concerned to overcome remaining difficulties and proceed with negotiations,

1. Welcomes the peace process started at Madrid, and supports the subsequent bilateral negotiations;
2. Stresses the importance of, and need for, achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East;
3. Expresses its full support for all the achievements of the peace process thus far, which constitute important steps in achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

4. Urges all parties to fulfil their obligations and to implement the agreements already reached;

5. Calls for the immediate acceleration of negotiations within the Middle East peace process on its agreed basis;

6. Stresses the need to achieve rapid progress on all tracks of the Arab-Israeli negotiations within the peace process;

7. Welcomes the results of the Conference to Support Middle East Peace, convened in Washington, D.C., on 1 October 1993, including the establishment of the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee, and the subsequent work of the World Bank Consultative Group, welcomes also the appointment by the Secretary-General of the "United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories", and urges Member States to expedite economic, financial and technical assistance to the Palestinian people during the interim period;

8. Calls upon all Member States to extend economic, financial and technical assistance to parties in the region and to render support for the peace process;

9. Considers that an active United Nations role in the Middle East peace process and in assisting in the implementation of the Declaration of Principles can make a positive contribution;

10. Encourages regional development and cooperation in areas where work has begun within the framework of the Madrid Conference.

37-nation draft (A/51/L.40 & Add.1); agenda item 33.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: plenary 70-72.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Iran, Lebanon, Syrian Arab Republic.

Abstaining: Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Sudan.

The Assembly, in resolution 51/26, emphasized the importance of the United Nations playing a more active and expanded role in the current peace process and in implementation of the Declaration of Principles.

In explanation of vote on resolution 51/29, Israel welcomed the adoption of the "positive resolution" which, it said, expressed the support of the international community for the ongoing peace process. It called once again on its neighbours to renew negotiations without preconditions and on those States of the region that had not participated in the multilateral talks to do so without further hesitation. It had hoped that the resolution would explicitly condemn terrorism in all its forms; it also believed that the process of democratization could assist the progress towards peace.

The representative of Palestine said the voting reiterated the international community's commitment to the conclusion of a just settlement of the Palestinian question and to the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East. The text was anchored in the principle of the continuing United Nations responsibility for the question of Palestine until a settlement was reached. The international community had sent a clear and correct message and he hoped that all parties would understand its content and work accordingly.

Speaking on behalf of the Arab States which had voted in favour, Egypt noted that the text did not include reference to Security Council resolution 425(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312], the central pillar of the negotiations between Israel and Lebanon. Further, it believed that the difficult circumstances and dangerous daily developments on the ground were caused by Israel in order to co-opt and derail the peace process, a fact which should have been reflected. Also, the text lacked any reference to the dangerous and destructive impact of Israel's decision to resume building settlements in the occupied territories, which could completely undermine the whole peace process; thus the votes for the text should not be interpreted as acceptance of the status quo.

In the view of the United States, the resolution clearly endorsed the parties' efforts to keep moving forward in their mutual quest for a comprehensive, just and lasting peace, and was an acknowledgement that their commitments deserved the Assembly's generous, unbiased and unreserved support and encouragement. The text highlighted the positive role the United Nations had to play in the peace process and contributed significantly to continuing the momentum developed in the five years since the Madrid Conference.

Among States voting against the text, Lebanon said the resolution's sponsors had admitted that no progress had been made in the Middle East peace process, yet ignored that that process was threatened as a result of Israeli intransigence. They also did not take into consideration the need to implement resolution 425(1978) in order to end the Israeli occupation of southern Lebanon and the violence there. Lebanon repeated its objection to synchronizing the bilateral and multilateral negotiations, as, in its view, the latter would not bear fruit as long as Israel remained in the occupied territories.

The Syrian Arab Republic, which also voted against the text, stated that it could not welcome a peace process which was not based on the principles of international legality and of land for peace. The text should have referred to resolution 425(1978) and reflected the status quo of the peace process and the obstacles raised by Israel. An urgent message should have been sent to Israel that its current positions were causing the freeze in that process. The adoption of a routine text did not reflect recent developments and was not going to break the current deadlock; it was extremely important that Israel be urged to resume negotiations on the Lebanese and Syrian tracks since a just and lasting peace could not be achieved without them.

Iran, which also voted against the resolution, expressed support for the people of Lebanon who were fighting the occupation by Israel, thus exerting legitimate rights. By no means could they be labelled terrorists, it said.

Jerusalem

Questions centring on Jerusalem were considered a "final-status" negotiation issue [YUN 1995, pp. 631-632] in the ongoing Middle East peace process, and the status of the Holy City continued to be a focal point of United Nations concern in 1996. The opening by Israel in September of an old entrance to the Hasmonean tunnel connecting sacred and archaeologically significant sites under the western wall of the Al-Aqsa Mosque in East Jerusalem and the shooting of Palestinians demonstrating against that action led to widespread protest and calls for Security Council action. The Council, on 28 September, called for the immediate cessation and reversal of all acts that had aggravated the situation and that had negative implications for the Middle East peace process, for the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians to be ensured, and for the immediate resumption of negotiations within the Middle East peace process and the timely implementation of the agreements reached.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

At a meeting on 27 September, requested by Saudi Arabia in its capacity as Chairman of the Arab Group [S/1996/790], the Security Council considered action taken by Israel to open a tunnel entrance under the western wall of the Al-Aqsa

Mosque and the shooting of Palestinian demonstrators. Saudi Arabia said the Arab Group strongly condemned the assault and Israel's action, and affirmed the Arab character of Jerusalem and its special significance for the Arab and Islamic worlds. Saudi Arabia requested that the Council take the necessary measures regarding the situation, including the closing of the tunnel.

The convening of the Council was supported by Egypt in a letter of 26 September [S/1996/792]. The Council also had before it several other letters, from the Permanent Observer of Palestine to the United Nations, from Israel, and from the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, pertaining to the situation in the occupied territories and in Jerusalem [A/51/396-S/1996/772, A/51/400-S/1996/779, A/51/407-S/1996/786, A/51/411-S/1996/791, A/51/416-S/1996/793, A/51/418-S/1996/795].

Thirty-two States—Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Bahrain, Brazil, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Djibouti, India, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mauritania, Morocco, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, Yemen—were invited under Council provisional rule 37 to participate in the debate. Also invited was the head of the observer delegation of Palestine and the head of the Political Department of the PLO, in accordance with the Council's provisional rules of procedure and previous practice.

Opening the debate, the Observer from Palestine stated that Palestinians in the occupied territories had been brutally assaulted by the Israeli army and police, which were using armoured vehicles and helicopters, resulting in the deaths of over 86 persons and the injury of more than a thousand; it would seem that those measures had been planned in advance to undermine the achievements of the political process on the Palestinian track and to send a warning concerning the other peace tracks. Following the declaration of its political programme, the new Israeli Government had taken many provocative actions, the Observer declared, including resumption and expansion of settlement activities, while restricting housing development in Arab neighbourhoods; the closing of Palestinian educational and cultural institutions; and isolation of Jerusalem from other Palestinian territories, emphasizing the preservation of a united Jerusalem as the eternal capital of Israel under total Israeli sovereignty.

The economic siege against the Palestinians in the occupied territories had intensified existing psychological pressure and aggravated living conditions, with unemployment reaching 56 per cent. In addition, 4,500 Palestinian prisoners continued to languish in Israeli jails, and Israel refused to allow the return of displaced Palestinians. The Israeli Government's slogan, "Peace for the sake of peace", meant emptying the negotiations of their political content, denying international legality and deliberately ignoring the land-for-peace formula and the political provisions contained in the United States initiative. The Prime Minister had called for negotiations without preconditions, without any principles or guidelines to govern them; that in itself was enough to create a vicious circle of events and meant nothing other than an attempt to kill time. The painful events that took place in the occupied territories sprang from the accumulation of simmering tensions, and Israel alone bore full responsibility for them; as soon as Israel announced the opening of the tunnel, the spark of conflagration was touched off.

Concluding, the Observer emphasized the Palestinian side's commitment to the underpinnings of the peace process, which called for Israeli withdrawal from all occupied Arab and Palestinian territories, including Jerusalem. He reiterated the desire for the establishment of a just, lasting and comprehensive peace that would ensure legitimate Palestinian rights, including the right to self-determination, the establishment of an independent Palestinian State and the return of the Palestinian refugees to their homeland. Negotiations should be started on the final-status issues, including the central points of Jerusalem, the dismantling of settlements, the return of refugees and the question of voters.

Israel refuted what it called distortions of fact regarding the events of the last days which, it said, had cast a dark cloud over the entire peace process; no matter what claims might be held against Israel, they in no way justified the incitement to violence and the use of live weapons, especially by those who had been empowered by the agreements to ensure law and order. The atmosphere of escalation, threats and calls for armed struggle would not move Israel from the fundamental principles guiding its policy: the pursuit of peace while ensuring national and personal security for its citizens; its desire for peace was enshrined in the declared policy guidelines of the Government, which was committed to the agreements signed by its predecessor.

From the inception of the new Government, Israel had been subjected to calls for the normalization process to be halted and threats of a return to the intifadah if it did not commit itself in advance to the outcome of the negotiations with the Palestinians; it had been threatened that if the demands of the other side were not met in their entirety, it would face armed struggle.

While the opening of the western wall tunnel was officially the reason for convening the Council, it was merely a pretence and yet another attempt to dictate to and pressurize Israel as a means of achieving political goals, and to predetermine the outcome of the negotiations. The 2,500-year-old tunnel, which in ancient times had been used as a water system for Jerusalem, remained a symbol for the city's unique and eternal character. It held no political or religious significance whatsoever, and attributing a religious nature to the issue was manipulative and baseless, designed purely to arouse emotions. Israel's sole intention in opening the exit of the tunnel was to provide greater comfort and safety to the many visitors—Jews, Christians and Muslims—and the many tourists and pilgrims. The supreme Muslim religious authority in Jerusalem, the Waqf, had been informed in advance of the intention to open the tunnel and great pains were taken to ensure that the opening neither damaged any archaeological or religious sites nor endangered any structures in the Old City, Islamic or otherwise. The tunnel did not run beneath the Temple Mount, nor did it affect the Al-Aqsa Mosque or its foundations, as had been claimed.

Israel said the President of the Palestinian Authority had to exert the authority vested in him to exercise his restraining influence and issue unequivocal instructions to his forces and to the residents of the autonomous areas to refrain from violence lest there be any further deterioration. Israel remained committed to pursuing peace through honouring agreements, which was an integral element of peace and of the efforts required to achieve it. During the ongoing contacts of the new Government with Yasser Arafat, the President of the Palestinian Authority, and his colleagues, a clear structure for resuming negotiations in order to discuss and resolve the issues in dispute had been agreed upon.

After the meeting was suspended and resumed twice, the Council, on 28 September, adopted resolution 1073(1996).

The Security Council,

Having considered the letter dated 26 September 1996 from the representative of Saudi Arabia on behalf of the States members of the League of Arab States, contained in document S/1996/790, that referred to the action by the Government of Israel to open an entrance to a tunnel in the vicinity of the Al-Aqsa Mosque and its consequent results,

Expressing its deep concern about the tragic events in Jerusalem and the areas of Nablus, Ramallah, Bethlehem and the Gaza Strip, which resulted in a high number of deaths and injuries among the Palestinian civilians, and concerned also about the clashes between the Israeli army and the Palestinian police and the casualties on both sides,

Recalling its resolutions on Jerusalem and other relevant Security Council resolutions,

Having discussed the situation at its formal meeting on 27 September 1996, with the participation of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of a number of countries,

Concerned about the difficulties facing the Middle East peace process and the deterioration of the situation, including, inter alia, its impact on the living conditions of the Palestinian people, and urging the parties to fulfil their obligations, including the agreements already reached,

Concerned about developments at the Holy Places of Jerusalem,

1. Calls for the immediate cessation and reversal of all acts which have resulted in the aggravation of the situation, and which have negative implications for the Middle East peace process;

2. Calls for the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians to be ensured;

3. Calls for the immediate resumption of negotiations within the Middle East peace process on its agreed basis and the timely implementation of the agreements reached;

4. Decides to follow closely the situation and to remain seized of the matter.

Transfer of diplomatic missions

Report of Secretary-General. In October 1996, the Secretary-General reported [A/51/543] that one Member State had replied to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement General Assembly resolution 50/22 A, dealing with the transfer by some States of their diplomatic mission to Jerusalem and calling on them to abide by the relevant UN resolutions [YUN 1995, p. 632]. In its response, Japan said it had supported the Assembly resolution but it had taken no specific measures to implement its provisions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1996, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/27.

Jerusalem

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/120 E of 10 December 1981, 37/123 C of 16 December 1982, 38/180 C of 19 December 1983, 39/146 C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 C of 16 December 1985, 41/162 C of 4 December 1986, 42/209 D of 11 December 1987, 43/54 C of 6 December 1988, 44/40 C of 4 December 1989, 45/83 C of 13 December 1990, 46/82 B of 16 December 1991, 47/63 B of 11 December 1992, 48/59 A of 14 December 1993, 49/87 A of 16 December 1994 and 50/22 A of 4 December 1995, in which it determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which have altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States which had established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Determines that the decision of Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980) and their refusal to comply with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

4 December 1996

148-1-13 (recorded vote)

18-nation draft (A/51/L.38 & Add.1); agenda item 33.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: plenary 70-72.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Barbados, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Dominica, Fiji, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Samoa, Swaziland, United States.

Introducing the text on behalf of the sponsors, Egypt stated that the resolution was particularly important because of the real crisis in the peace process. Those who desired peace needed the Assembly's full support.

Speaking after the vote, Israel said it believed that the issue of Jerusalem should be addressed within the framework of negotiations between the parties themselves; the Assembly was not the correct forum for its discussion.

The United States explained that it abstained, as in the past, because Jerusalem should remain undivided and its future decided through permanent status negotiations, as agreed by the parties in the September 1993 Declaration of Principles; the Assembly should not inject itself into that most complex and emotional issue.

Occupied territories

Special Committee on Israeli Practices

The situation in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of armed conflicts in the Middle East continued to be of concern to the United Nations in 1996. The three-member Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories, established in 1968 [YUN 1968, p. 555], reported for the twenty-eighth time to the General Assembly on events in those territories it considered to be occupied, namely, the Golan Heights of the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip.

In addition to that annual report [A/51/99/Add.2], two periodic reports were prepared in 1996 by the Special Committee at the request of the Assembly [YUN 1995, p. 635], one in February, the other in June [A/51/99 + Add.1]. The three reports, which covered developments between 18 August 1995 and 20 September 1996, contained information obtained from the Arab and Israeli press; testimony given at hearings held in Amman, Jordan, Cairo, Egypt, and Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, between 20 and 30 June; Israeli government policy statements; and other communications and reports. In carrying out its mandate, the Committee said, it had benefited from the cooperation of Egypt, Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Palestinian representatives. As in the past, Israel had not responded to requests for cooperation with the Committee. As an addendum to the report, the Secretary-General transmitted in November a map showing Israeli settlements in the occupied territories [A/51/99/Add.3].

The Chairman of the Committee, in his letter of transmittal to the Secretary-General, stated that the Committee in its annual report attempted to present a composite picture of the realities in the occupied territories as they affected the human rights of the civilian population. The signing of the Oslo agreements had given rise to great expectation within the international community that a new era of peace, security and hope would be ushered in for the people of the Middle East, enabling them to live in harmony, dignity and mutual respect. That was the spirit in which the Special Committee approached its mandate.

The Committee reported that the human rights situation in the occupied territories had deteriorated remarkably since the beginning of the peace process, contrary to expectations. By far the most serious aspect of the current situation was the significant deterioration in the economic and social conditions stemming from the virtually hermetic closure of the territories in February 1996, in the wake of four suicide bomb attacks in Israel. Particularly adverse consequences were felt in the Gaza Strip, where economic activity was said to have come to a practical standstill. The closure deprived many Palestinians of their livelihood, and had severely restricted freedom of movement throughout the territories.

The closure also affected students from Gaza studying in the West Bank, and had a negative effect on both Muslim and Christian worshippers in the territories who were unable to gain access to certain holy sites.

Conditions of detention were reported to have deteriorated further. It was alleged that numerous villages and mosques had been raided and family members and relatives of persons charged with having been involved in violent activities against Israel, as well as persons affiliated with certain political parties, had been arrested.

Israeli authorities demolished nine houses and sealed a number of others belonging to the families of persons involved in the recent violent acts. Houses built without a licence continued to be demolished throughout the territories; however, applications for building licences were consistently denied to Palestinians. The unabated expansion of Israeli settlements was a most serious source of tension, according to the Committee. Of particular concern was the policy of the new Israeli Government to lift the freeze on the building of new settlements, as well as to the expand existing ones. Large areas of Arab-owned land continued to be confiscated, both for the expansion of settlements and for quarries and the building of bypass roads.

During its visit to the Syrian Arab Republic, the Special Committee observed the destruction caused by Israelis in the town of Quneitra. Witnesses informed the Committee that the expression of nationalist sentiments by inhabitants continued to be severely punished and their freedom of movement curtailed. They also spoke about the continued confiscation of land and water resources and the inadequate educational and health facilities, as well as the economic difficulties facing the Arab population.

In conclusion, the Special Committee observed that there was a general sense of disappointment and despondency in the face of continuing rights violations. Even in areas where there had been a transfer of limited authority to the Palestinian Authority and the Palestinian Council, the situation appeared to have deteriorated because of impediments by Israel. Unless there was serious effort to maintain the momentum of the peace process, the Committee stated, and a commitment by both sides to implement the peace agreements, the important achievements accomplished so far would be lost and the situation would deteriorate even further. All parties had to work together and progress in the peace process had to be accompanied by full compliance with universally accepted human rights standards and all relevant UN resolutions.

The Special Committee recommended measures to safeguard the basic human rights of the Palestinians and other Arabs in the territories, including: full application of the relevant provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention (see also below); full compliance with all UN resolutions pertinent to the question of the territories; full Israeli cooperation with UNRWA and full respect for its privileges and immunities; full Israeli cooperation with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in order to protect detainees; full support by Member States of UNRWA and ICRC activities, to enable both organizations to maintain and improve assistance to the refugee population and detainees; full Israeli cooperation with the UN Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories; renewed efforts by Member States to convince Israel of the need for increased human rights protection through international human rights monitoring, including enabling the Special Committee to perform its functions more effectively by allowing it access to the territories; and full Israeli cooperation with the UN Centre for Human Rights concerning implementation of human rights advisory assistance programmes in the areas falling under the interim self-government arrangements.

The Committee appealed to Israel to act in conformity with the spirit animating the peace process by giving effect to certain concrete measures: halting the establishment of new settlements and the expansion of existing ones; ending land confiscation and the building of bypass roads; refraining from destroying property, demolishing houses and uprooting trees, as well as discriminatory measures in the use of water resources; stopping closures and curfews as measures of collective punishment; reviewing the situation of all Palestinian and other Arab prisoners, especially political detainees or persons having committed non-violent crimes, and expediting their release; improving conditions of detention; exercising utmost restraint in responding to outbreaks of violence and fully investigating all shooting incidents; preventing acts of violence by settlers; and allowing those deported or expelled to return and, where applicable, have their properties restituted.

The Special Committee felt that implementation of those recommendations and others would contribute immensely to strengthening the peace process, enabling all the people of the territories and in the region to live in harmony, dignity, peace and security.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The Security Council met on 15 April, in response to a request [S/1996/257] by the United Arab Emirates, as Chairman of the Arab Group of Member States, to consider the situation in the occupied territories. The President, with the consent of the Council, invited Algeria, Colombia, Cuba, Iran, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Morocco, Norway, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter and rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. The President also invited the Observer of Palestine, at his request [S/1996/274], to participate in the discussion in accordance with Council rules of procedure and previous practice. He also extended, with the Council's consent and under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, invitations to the Acting Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights and to the Permanent Observer of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) to the United Nations, as requested by Guinea [S/1996/277].

The President drew attention to a letter of 2 April from Palestine to the Secretary-General [A/50/915-S/1996/235], containing a memorandum on what was called the Israeli siege and strangulation of the Palestinian territory, people and economy. In an earlier letter of 29 March, Yasser Arafat appealed to the Secretary-General to help put an end to Israel's blockade and closure measures, which, he said, constituted a flagrant violation and gross breach of the agreements concluded. The Secretary-General transmitted the letter to the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Security Council on 1 April [A/50/916-S/1996/233].

In debate, the Observer of Palestine stated that the suffering of the Palestinians had become unbearable in recent weeks due to Israeli policies and measures which violated the spirit of peace and threatened prospects for continuation of the peace process. Some of those policies—which were in place before the recent bombings—had absolutely no relation to Israeli security considerations, as was claimed. Maintaining security should involve the security of all parties and under no circumstances should one party impose unilateral measures by force; further, Israel could not separate itself from Palestinian territory and at the same time isolate that territory and its people from the rest of the world as if they were hostages. If Israel chose separation, regardless of its reasons and despite its obligations and commitments, it should bear the consequences of that decision and accept complete political separation at the same time.

Israel explained that during eight terrifying days in February and March, Islamic fundamentalist terrorists from the West Bank and Gaza had perpetrated four separate suicide bombings within Israel. As a direct result of those murderous acts, Israel had imposed a closure of the country to residents of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which was not a form of collective punishment against the Palestinian population but a measure enacted solely to ensure security for the people of Israel and a must to save the peace; easing the closure preceded the terrorist actions which took place in the urban centres of Israel, and the connection between the two was very obvious. Israel was aware of the toll the closure had taken on the residents of the West Bank and Gaza and was sensitive to the plight of the Palestinian population. In recent days, the closure had been gradually eased; currently, 7,000 workers from Gaza were permitted entry into Israel each day and, since 8 April, Palestinians 45 years of age and older had been able to cross into Israel to earn their living. In addition, development projects initiated in Gaza by Israel and other international donors continued to employ over 25,000 local labourers. Lately, restrictions on the passage of goods had also been greatly eased.

Israel was encouraged, however, by the efforts undertaken lately by the Palestinian Authority to curb terrorist groups—which were supported by several foreign Governments that had time and again shown their opposition to peace through word and deed—within areas under its jurisdiction. The international community had to unite in its efforts to isolate terrorist regimes. Israel pledged to continue to work towards enhancing the peace process despite the terrorist attacks, as well as towards implementing the agreement with the Palestinians.

The terrorist attacks in Israel were widely condemned by those who spoke before the Council, and general concern was expressed about the measures imposed by Israel in return—citing its need for security and protection of its citizens—in particular the closure of the territories. Those measures were considered by many to be a form of collective punishment for the acts of a few individuals. The majority of speakers agreed that the peace process had to continue, for the benefit of all parties. Many speakers appealed to Israel to relax the measures it had taken, in view of the economic hardship they imposed on the Palestinians, as well as the obstacle they created to the peace process.

Meeting number. SC 3652.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the Special Committee's annual and periodic reports and four reports of the Secretary-General on specific aspects of the situation in the occupied territories (see below), the General Assembly on 13 December adopted resolution 51/134.

Israeli practices affecting the human rights of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions and the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights,

Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the most recent of which are resolutions 904(1994) of 18 March 1994 and 1073(1996) of 28 September 1996,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the reports of the Secretary-General,

Aware of the responsibility of the international community to promote human rights and ensure respect for international law,

Reaffirming the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming also the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

Welcoming the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization in Washington on 13 September 1993, as well as the subsequent implementation agreements, including the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip signed in Washington on 28 September 1995,

Noting the withdrawal of the Israeli army, which took place in the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area in accordance with the agreements reached between the parties, and the initiation of the Palestinian Authority in those areas,

Noting also the redeployment of the Israeli army from six cities in the West Bank,

Concerned about the continuing violation of the human rights of the Palestinian people by Israel, the occupying Power, especially the use of collective punishment, closure of areas, annexation and establishment of settlements and the continuing actions by it designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem,

Expressing its deep concern in particular over the closure by the Israeli authorities of the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, which prevents the freedom of movement of persons and goods and is the cause of great economic and social hardship, in violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and the agreements reached between the two sides,

Convinced of the positive impact of a temporary international or foreign presence in the occupied Palestinian territory for the safety and protection of the Palestinian people,

Expressing its appreciation to the countries that participated in the Temporary International Presence in Hebron for their positive contribution,

Convinced of the need for the full implementation of Security Council resolutions 904(1994) and 1073(1996),

1. Determines that all measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, in violation of the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and contrary to the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, are illegal and have no validity and that such measures should cease immediately;

2. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, cease all practices and actions which violate the human rights of the Palestinian people;

3. Calls for an immediate end of the closure and the assurance of the freedom of movement of persons and goods within the Palestinian territory and with the outside world in conformity with international law and the agreements reached;

4. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to accelerate the release of all remaining Palestinians arbitrarily detained or imprisoned, in line with agreements reached;

5. Calls for complete respect by Israel, the occupying Power, of all fundamental freedoms of the Palestinian people, pending the extension of the self-government arrangements to the rest of the occupied territory;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 51/134

13 December 1996 Meeting 83 149-2-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/592) by recorded vote (125-2-7), 27 November (meeting 22); 13-nation draft (A/C.4/51/L.22); agenda item 85.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Work of Special Committee

On 17 October, the Secretary-General reported [A/51/514] that all necessary facilities had been provided to the Special Committee on Israeli Practices, as requested in General Assembly resolution 50/29 A [YUN 1995, p. 635]. Arrangements had been made for it to meet in February, June and September 1996, and a field mission was carried out in Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic in June. The Department of Public Information continued to provide press coverage of Special Committee meetings and to feature and distribute information materials, documents and press releases on its activities (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, following consideration of the report of the Secretary-General and the Special Committee's annual and periodic reports (see above), the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/131.

Work of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Guided also by the principles of international humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, as well as international standards of human rights, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including resolution 2443(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, and relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights,

Recalling also relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Aware of the lasting impact of the uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people,

Convinced that occupation itself represents a primary violation of human rights,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the relevant reports of the Secretary-General,

Noting the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements by the Government of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization in Washington on 13 September 1993, as well as the subsequent implementation agreements, including the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip signed in Washington on 28 September 1995,

Expressing the hope that, with the progress of the peace process, the Israeli occupation will be brought to an end and therefore violation of the human rights of the Palestinian people will cease,

1. Commends the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly and for its impartiality;

2. Demands that Israel cooperate with the Special Committee in implementing its mandate;

3. Deplores those policies and practices of Israel which violate the human rights of the Palestinian people and other Arabs of the occupied territories, as reflected in the reports of the Special Committee covering the reporting period;

4. Expresses concern over the recent deterioration of the situation in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, as a result of Israeli practices and measures and the impasse facing the Middle East peace process;

5. Requests the Special Committee, pending complete termination of the Israeli occupation, to continue to investigate Israeli policies and practices in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, especially Israeli lack of compliance with the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and to consult, as appropriate, with the International Committee of the Red Cross according to its regulations in order to ensure that the welfare and human rights of the peoples of the occupied territories are safeguarded and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arises thereafter;

6. Also requests the Special Committee to submit regularly to the Secretary-General periodic reports on the current situation in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem;

7. Further requests the Special Committee to continue to investigate the treatment of prisoners in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

8. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To provide all necessary facilities to the Special Committee, including those required for its visits to the occupied territories, so that it may investigate the Israeli policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

(b) To continue to make available such additional staff as may be necessary to assist the Special Committee in the performance of its tasks;

(c) To circulate regularly to Member States the periodic reports mentioned in paragraph 6 above;

(d) To ensure the widest circulation of the reports of the Special Committee and of information regarding its activities and findings, by all means available, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat and, where necessary, to reprint those reports of the Special Committee that are no longer available;

(e) To report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the tasks entrusted to him in the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories".

General Assembly resolution 51/131

13 December 1996 Meeting 83 79-2-76 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/592) by recorded vote (69-2-59), 27 November (meeting 22); 13-nation draft (A/C.4/51/L.19); agenda item 85.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jordan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Myanmar, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Qatar, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Albania, Andorra, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Canada, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Palau, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Samoa, San Marino, Sierra Leone, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Spain, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Uzbekistan.

Explaining its vote on all five resolutions adopted under the agenda item, the United States urged the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee members to refrain from making their standard request to the Special Committee to continue its work and submit reports in the following year. The time had come to recognize that the Special Committee's existence did not contribute to the joint efforts being made by Israel and Palestine to settle their differences.

Ireland, speaking on behalf of the EU, said that although the Union was concerned at many actions of the Israeli Government, it believed that the mandate and functions of the Special Committee failed to take account of the contemporary realities. The EU hoped that Israeli troops would be withdrawn from all the occupied territories, after which there would be no further need to maintain the Special Committee.

Fourth Geneva Convention

The Special Committee on Israeli Practices, in its annual report [A/51/99/Add.2], reiterated that the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) remained the main international instrument in humanitarian law that applied to the occupied territories, the applicability of which had repeatedly been reaffirmed by the Security Council, the General Assembly and other UN organs.

On 17 October, the Secretary-General informed [A/51/516] the Assembly that Israel had not replied to his May request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement Assembly resolution 50/29 B [YUN 1995, p. 636] demanding that Israel accept the de jure applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention and comply scrupulously with its provisions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/132.

Applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories

The General Assembly,
Recalling its relevant resolutions,
Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the relevant reports of the Secretary-General,

Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Stressing that Israel, the occupying Power, should comply strictly with its obligations under international law,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

2. Demands that Israel accept the de jure applicability of the Convention in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and that it comply scrupulously with the provisions of the Convention;

3. Calls upon all States parties to the Convention, in accordance with article 1 common to the four Geneva Conventions, to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for its provisions by Israel, the occupying Power, in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Palau.

Palestinian prisoners

The Special Committee on Israeli Practices, which continued to monitor the situation of Palestinian prisoners, reported [A/51/99/Add.2.] that although some 2,000 had been released in October 1995 and January 1996 following the signing of the Interim Agreement, the number of Palestinian prisoners in Israeli detention facilities remained high and had even increased after the recent wave of arrests. Conditions of detention were reported to have deteriorated further. Overcrowding, bad food and a persistent lack of medical care were cited among the prisoners' complaints. After the suicide bombings in February and March, large numbers of arrests were reported throughout the territories, and many of the persons arrested were said to have been placed in administrative detention.

As a result of restrictions imposed on the freedom of movement, Palestinian detainees in Israel had not been able to receive family visits and meet with their lawyers. In addition, the Special Committee was informed that large numbers of Palestinian minors had been detained in Israeli prisons under the same conditions as adults. A large number of prisoners reportedly had no access to lawyers and their families were not informed about their trials.

The Special Committee reiterated that measures to safeguard the basic human rights of the Palestinians and other Arabs in the territories included full cooperation of the Israeli authorities with ICRC in order to protect detained persons, in particular ensuring full access of ICRC representatives to such persons.

In a 17 October report [A/51/517], the Secretary-General stated that he had not received any response from Israel to his May request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 50/29 C [YUN 1995, p. 643] calling on Israel to accelerate the release of all remaining Palestinians arbitrarily detained or imprisoned, in line with agreements reached, and to facilitate the return of the remaining deportees to the occupied territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 51/134 on Israeli practices affecting the human rights of the Palestinians in the occupied territories, the General Assembly called on Israel, the occupying Power, to accelerate the release of all remaining Palestinians arbitrarily detained or imprisoned, in line with agreements reached.

Palestinian women

In March 1996, the Secretary-General reported [E/CN.6/1996/8] to the Commission on the Status of Women on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women, in accordance with a 1995 Economic and Social Council request [YUN 1995, p. 637]. As a result of the political developments since the signing of the 1993 Declaration of Principles and in line with the results of the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing [YUN 1995, p. 1168], which established a link between the advancement of women and the peaceful settlement of conflicts, the focus of the report had shifted from that of previous reports on the subject: instead of monitoring the general living conditions of Palestinian women under Israeli occupation, it emphasized aspects of their development and human rights within a new political framework.

According to the report, the peace process had had a significant impact on the lives of Palestinian women and the activities of women's organizations. Women's organizations and human rights groups formed coalitions in the areas of human rights and legal services. They had drafted a bill of women's rights following the release of the Palestinian Draft Basic Law. A Gender Mainstreaming Department was established within the Ministry of Planning.

Women's organizations, in preparation for the Palestinian elections, led protests demanding a quota for women on the Palestinian Council, arguing that they faced difficulties in competing with men in the elections because of historical inequalities in a male-dominated society. Of the more than 1 million registered Palestinian voters in the Gaza Strip, the West Bank and East Jerusalem, 49 per cent were women, but there were only 28 women (4 per cent) among the 676 candidates for the 88-seat legislative council. Five women were elected to the Palestinian Council.

During the period under review, a number of projects for Palestinian women were carried out by the UN system and bilateral donors in close cooperation with the Palestinian Authority and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). UNRWA financed new projects under the Palestinian Women's Initiative Fund, including a community-run kindergarten in the West Bank and a training workshop in Gaza on maintenance and repair of sewing and knitting machines. It also operated a solidarity group-lending programme in the Gaza Strip to make credit available (on average $400) to individual women working in micro-enterprises and as street vendors in the informal sector of the economy. Under its Peace Implementation Programme, UNRWA established nine women's programme centres, and construction began for a college of nursing and allied health science. Of the university scholarships UNRWA awarded to 863 Palestine refugee students, 371 went to women.

Assistance was provided to women's units in various ministries in order to build and strengthen their efforts for mainstreaming gender at the policy level. A Palestinian Coalition for Women's Health, supported by the Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People (PAPP) of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), aimed to improve health services for Palestinian women by addressing their needs through a life-cycle approach. To improve women's limited access to education, classrooms in villages and rural areas were constructed or renovated, primarily for girls. A school drop-out study, sponsored by UNDP and to be carried out by the Palestinian Ministry of Education, was to target female youth. Women's enrolment in agricultural schools was encouraged through a project offering both pre-service and in-service training and targeting women as 50 per cent of the beneficiaries.

The United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) launched a permanent Women in Development (WID) Facilitation Initiative to coordinate the multiplicity of donors, NGOs and initiators of WID projects. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) gave priority to programmes reaching out to children in underprivileged communities, with special focus on the girl child. Gender issues were integrated into programming and training to upgrade the skills of health-care and education professionals. A national programme of action was formulated to ensure political and social mobilization and long-term planning for children, girls in particular. The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) implemented two expanded maternal and child health and family-planning projects in Gaza and the West Bank.

Concluding, the report suggested that the Commission on the Status of Women might wish that appropriate assistance be given in order to: increase women's participation in conflict resolution and decision-making; ensure respect by the parties, in implementing their agreements, for the human rights of Palestinian women; ensure women's equal access to and full participation in power structures; integrate a gender perspective in legislation, public policies, programmes and projects; ensure equality and non-discrimination under the law and in practice; prepare for ratification of and accession to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [GA res. 34/180], without reservations; create a national machinery and other governmental bodies for the advancement of women at the highest possible level of government; reduce the female illiteracy rate to at least half of its 1990 level; improve women's access to vocational training, science and technology, and continuing education; promote women's economic rights and independence; facilitate women's equal access to resources, employment, markets and trade; increase women's access to appropriate, affordable and high-quality health care and information and related services; and generate and disseminate gender-disaggregated data and information for planning and evaluation.

Action by Commission on the Status of Women. In March 1996, the Commission on the Status of Women adopted a resolution on the integration of women in the Middle East peace process [E/1996/26 (res. 40/2)], urging Governments, intergovernmental bodies and NGOs to include women in the peace process, and urging Member States to ensure that all assistance to parties in the region took into account the role of women as full participants and beneficiaries. The Commission considered that an active UN role in the peace process and in assisting in the implementation of the Declaration of Principles could make a positive contribution with regard to the status of women.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/5.

Palestinian women

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 concerning Palestinian women and children, and the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women,

Recalling also its resolution 1995/30 of 25 July 1995 and other relevant United Nations resolutions,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women as it concerns the protection for civilian populations,

Welcoming the signing by the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Government of Israel of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements in Washington on 13 September 1993, as well as all subsequent agreements reached between the two parties,

Concerned about the continuing difficult situation of Palestinian women in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and about the severe consequences of continuous Israeli illegal settlements activities, as well as the harsh economic conditions and other consequences for the situation of Palestinian women and their families, resulting from the frequent closure and isolation of the occupied territory,

1. Recognizes the gradual, positive changes that are taking place as a result of the implementation of the agreements between the two parties;

2. Reaffirms that the Israeli occupation continues to constitute a major obstacle to the advancement and self-reliance of Palestinian women and their integration in the development planning of their society;

3. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with the provisions and principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Hague Conventions and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, in order to protect the rights of Palestinian women and their families;

4. Calls upon Israel to facilitate the return of all refugee and displaced Palestinian women and children to their homes and properties in the occupied Palestinian territory, in compliance with relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Urges Member States, financial organizations of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and other relevant institutions to intensify their efforts to provide financial and technical assistance to Palestinian women for the creation of projects responding to their needs, especially during the transitional period;

6. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to continue to monitor and take action on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 concerning Palestinian women and children, and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to review the situation and to assist Palestinian women by all available means and to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-first session a report on progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Israeli settlements

Special Committee report. The existence and expansion of Israeli settlements and the construction of bypass roads linking them and with Israel was, according to the Special Committee on Israeli Practices, one of the most serious sources of tension in the occupied territories. The Council of Jewish Settlements, as quoted in the Committee's October report [A/51/99/Add.2], estimated that almost 150,000 Jews lived in the territories, a 46 per cent increase between June 1992 and May 1996. Israel's previous Labour Government, while declaring a freeze on the building of new settlements, had allowed the expansion of existing ones by private companies, sometimes tripling the size of the settlements. The confiscation of large areas of Arab-owned land had not subsided; Palestinian sources estimated the amount of land confiscated since the signing of the 1993 Declaration of Principles up to August 1995 at 166.4 square kilometres, not counting 17.8 square kilometres of unofficial confiscation by settlers. Of a total of 194 settlements, 60 were estimated to have been extended in that manner during the same period. The current trend appeared to be the expropriation of numerous small plots of land in Palestinian neighbourhoods, especially around Jerusalem. It was reported that settlers from the Efrat settlement had taken advantage of the territories' closure to seize land and prepare for the construction of new housing.

In the Committee's view, the single most alarming step taken so far by the new Likud Government and the biggest threat to the peace process was the Cabinet's decision on 2 August to end the four-year freeze imposed by the previous Government regarding the construction of new settlements. The Israeli Prime Minister was reported to have described the move as one aimed at correcting the discrimination against Jewish settlements.

The situation of Palestinian landowners was difficult in view of the fact that land registration in the territories reportedly had stopped in 1967, the Committee said.

Israel's plan to build a highway between the Lydda and Kalandia airports in Jerusalem involved the confiscation of thousands of acres of land belonging to 12 West Bank villages and 750 acres of land adjacent to Kalandia in Bir Nabala, Beit Hanina and Rafat, the Committee reported. Besides confiscation of prime agricultural land, large numbers of olive, almond and fig trees and vineyards continued to be uprooted for the construction of such roads. Some 120,000 Palestinians were said to have been excluded from the Jerusalem City limits since 1967, and it was estimated that currently approximately 72 per cent of the inhabitants of Jerusalem were Jews. While building licences were well beyond the financial means of Palestinian families, Palestinian-owned houses built without a licence were systematically demolished. Numerous inhabitants of Jerusalem were forced to leave the city's municipal boundaries, either in search of jobs or better living conditions.

Tension was aggravated by the behaviour of settlers, particularly in Hebron, where they had been consistently violent and Palestinians were physically attacked as well as their property damaged. The coexistence of settlers with the Palestinian population was difficult owing to the location of their settlement in the town centre. The Special Committee believed that the low voter turnout in Hebron during the Palestinian elections in January was indicative of the helplessness the population felt. Reasons invoked by Israel for not withdrawing the Israel Defence Forces from Hebron hinged on certain security concerns regarding the settlers. In order to delay the army's withdrawal, settlers attacked Palestinians and vandalized their property.

In the Gaza Strip, there were 18 Israeli settlements, and settlers were said to occupy about 30 per cent of the area, with 1.2 million Palestinians living in the remaining part.

A map showing Israeli settlements established in the territories since June 1967 was transmitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly in November 1996, as an addendum to the Committee's report [A/51/99/Add.3.].

Report of Secretary-General. In an October 1996 report [A/51/517], the Secretary General informed the General Assembly that no reply had been received from Israel to his May request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement Assembly resolution 50/29 C [YUN 1995, p. 643], reaffirming that Israeli settlements in the occupied territory, including Jerusalem, were illegal and an obstacle to achieving comprehensive peace.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/133.

Israeli settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, as well as relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967, 446(1979) of 22 March 1979, 465(1980) of 1 March 1980 and 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Welcoming the Middle East peace process started at Madrid and the agreements reached between the parties, in particular the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements of 13 September 1993 and the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip of 28 September 1995,

Expressing grave concern over the decision of the Government of Israel to resume settlement activities in violation of international humanitarian law, relevant United Nations resolutions and the agreements reached between the parties,

Gravely concerned in particular about the dangerous situation resulting from actions taken by the illegal armed Israeli settlers in the occupied territory, as illustrated by the massacre of Palestinian worshippers by an illegal Israeli settler in Al-Khalil on 25 February 1994,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms that Israeli settlements in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal and an obstacle to peace and economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan and to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49;

3. Demands complete cessation of all illegal Israeli settlement activities;

4. Stresses the need for full implementation of Security Council resolution 904(1994) of 18 March 1994, in which, among other things, the Council called upon Israel, the occupying Power, to continue to take and implement measures, including, inter alia, confiscation of arms, with the aim of preventing illegal acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and called for measures to be taken to guarantee the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians in the occupied territory.

13 December 1996 Meeting 83 152-2-6 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/592) by recorded vote (126-3-6), 27 November (meeting 22); 13-nation draft (A/C.4/51/L.21/Rev.1), orally amended by Norway; agenda item 85.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Guatemala, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Palau, Swaziland, Uruguay.

Israel said the resolution ran counter to the principles on which the peace process was based, such as the principle of direct negotiations between the parties without preconditions, and might have an adverse effect on those negotiations. The question of settlements related exclusively to the permanent-status issue between Israel and the Palestinians and should be resolved in the framework of direct negotiations.

Economic and social repercussions

A report [A/51/135-E/1996/51] prepared by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia and submitted by the Secretary-General in June, in accordance with requests of the Economic and Social Council [ESC res. 1995/49] and the General Assembly [GA res. 50/129], dealt with the economic and social repercussions of Israeli settlements on the Palestinians in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, occupied since 1967, and on the Arab population of the Syrian Golan.

Covering the period from April 1995 to March 1996, the report stated that the September 1995 Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, which detailed the mechanisms and limitations of the extension of Palestinian self-rule to significant portions of the West Bank, provided for the division of the West Bank into three areas, each with varying degrees of Israeli and Palestinian responsibility. Area A consisted of the seven major Palestinian towns—Bethlehem, Hebron, Jenin, Kalkiliya, Nablus, Ramallah and Tulkarm—in which Palestinians would have complete authority for civilian security. In area B, which comprised all other Palestinian population centres, except some refugee camps, Israel was to retain "overriding security responsibility". In area C, which included all settlements, military bases and areas, as well as State lands, Israel would have sole security authority.

The Interim Agreement provided for the redeployment of the Israeli army, allowing the Palestinian National Authority to assume its civil and security responsibilities under the schedule provided for in the Agreement. Indeed, the Israeli army began its withdrawal from Jenin on 13 November 1995, followed by Tulkarm on 10 December, Nablus and other villages in the Tulkarm area on 11 December, Kalkiliya on 17 December, Bethlehem on 21 December and finally Ramallah on 28 December. Withdrawal from Hebron, however, was postponed to the end of March 1996. By the end of March, withdrawal from Hebron had been postponed indefinitely, following a unilateral decision by Israel in the light of the prevailing security conditions in Israel and the occupied territories.

It appeared from official Israeli statements, the report stated, that in the context of a final settlement, Israel intended to gather Jewish settlers in settlement compounds with centres in the large settlements of Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Tulkarm, Kalkiliya and Nablus. Jewish settlements in the Jordan Valley would remain under Israeli control.

The progress in the peace process, in particular the implementation of the Interim Agreement and the redeployment of the Israeli army and its evacuation of agreed areas, had led to a slight but growing change in the attitude of Jewish settlers concerning the future of the settlements and their own future in the occupied territories, the report continued. A certain percentage of them expressed willingness to leave their settlements if offered reasonable compensation. Israeli parliament sources claimed that 600 Jewish settler families had voluntarily abandoned their dwellings in settlements of the West Bank and Gaza Strip since the signing of the Agreement. A large number of other families, it was said, wished to leave the settlements but had not received the necessary support from Israeli authorities.

Sources from the Centre for Land Research in East Jerusalem estimated the total area of expropriated Palestinian land in 1995 at 18,180 dunums (one dunum equaling 1,000 square metres), of which 3,500 dunums were seized as State land, 8,900 for settlement purposes, 1,100 for military purposes and 4,680 for public projects. Palestinian sources indicated that, between the signing of the Declaration of Principles in September 1993 and the end of 1995, Israel had confiscated 230,000 dunums.

A Palestinian study revealed that what remained of the Jerusalem area occupied since 1967 for potential use by Arab inhabitants no longer exceeded 4 per cent, as Israel had confiscated 33 per cent of the city's area directly for settlement purposes. Another 40 per cent had come under Israeli control as a result of new maps having been drawn, wherein the size of Arab neighbourhoods and villages was reduced and only a limited space within them was designated for building, thus bringing the total area of Jerusalem under Israeli control to 73 per cent, with an additional 6 per cent already designated for the construction of roads. The remaining 21 per cent was in Arab hands, of which 10 per cent was inhabited and 7 per cent unplanned, rendering it vulnerable to expropriation or sale because of high taxes imposed.

As for strengthening Jewish settlements in Jerusalem, Israeli press sources indicated that 11,000 housing units were being constructed at the beginning of 1996 and thousands more were planned.

According to the Peace Now movement, 1,400 housing units had been started since the beginning of 1995 in the Jewish settlements over the Green Line, most of them in the Greater Jerusalem area, said to be the largest number of building starts in the territories in three years. Altogether, 6,000 units were under construction to provide housing for 25,000 people.

As for settlements close to the Green Line, Israeli press sources reported the Minister of Housing as stating that his Ministry had prepared the blueprints for a new neighbourhood for religious Jews within the Green Line called Mattiyahu, near the settlement of Kiryat Sefer west of the city of Ramallah, and for the Hashmonaim neighbourhood, also within the Green Line, so that the three sites would become one settlement with 12,000 housing units.

Efforts to strengthen settlements in the occupied Golan Heights continued. There was a reported mass influx of newcomers to Katzrin, which experienced a population boom in 1995. Golan regional council officials revealed in August 1995 that 120 families had been absorbed into existing settlements in the preceding two months alone.

Water utilization in the territories remained a problem adversely affecting the lives of Palestinians and their economic and social conditions. After Israel and the Palestinian Authority had reached an initial agreement in July 1995 on the water issue, water rights and methods of utilization in the West Bank were to be determined in the final-stage negotiations, and a tripartite Israel-Palestine-United States committee was to be formed to discuss issues such as utilization and distribution, supervision of its utilization, and development of new sources of water. The agreement on water issues was one of the most difficult subjects the two parties had to discuss, threatening the negotiation of the transitional stage.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/40.

Economic and social repercussions of the Israeli settlements on the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, occupied since 1967, and on the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan

Recalling General Assembly resolution 50/129 of 20 December 1995,

Recalling also its resolution 1995/49 of 28 July 1995,

Reaffirming the principle of the permanent sovereignty of people under foreign occupation over their national resources,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, and recalling Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980 and other resolutions in which the Security Council affirmed the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 904(1994) of 18 March 1994, in which, inter alia, the Council called upon Israel, the occupying Power, to continue to take and implement measures, including, among others, confiscation of arms, with the aim of preventing illegal acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and called for measures to be taken to guarantee the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians in the occupied territory,

Aware of the negative and grave economic and social repercussions of the Israeli settlements on the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, occupied since 1967, and on the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan,

Welcoming the ongoing Middle East peace process started at Madrid, in particular the signing in Washington, on 13 September 1993, by the Government of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, and the signing in Washington, on 28 September 1995, of the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and Gaza Strip,

1. Takes note of the report prepared by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia;
2. Reaffirms that Israeli settlements in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 are illegal and an obstacle to economic and social development;
3. Recognizes the economic and social repercussions of the Israeli settlements on the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, occupied by Israel since 1967, and on the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan;
4. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the Palestinian people and the population of the Syrian Golan to their natural and all other economic resources, and regards any infringement thereof as being illegal;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/40

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/190.

Permanent sovereignty of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and of the Arab population in the occupied Syrian Golan over their natural resources

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/40 of 26 July 1996,

Reaffirming the principle of the permanent sovereignty of people under foreign occupation over their natural resources,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, and recalling Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967, 465(1980) of 1 March 1980 and 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

Expressing concern at the exploitation by Israel, the occupying Power, of the natural resources of the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

Aware of the additional, detrimental economic and social impact of the Israeli settlements on Palestinian and other Arab natural resources, especially the confiscation of land and the forced diversion of water resources,

Welcoming the ongoing Middle East peace process which was started at Madrid on 30 October 1991 and which is based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967), 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 and 425(1978) of 19 March 1978 and the principle of land for peace, in particular the two implementation agreements embodied in the Agreement on the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area of 4 May 1994 and the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip of 28 September 1995,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the Palestinian people and the population of the occupied Syrian Golan over their natural resources, including land and water;
3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, not to exploit, to cause loss and depletion of or to endanger the natural resources in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan;
4. Recognizes the right of the Palestinian people to claim restitution as a result of any exploitation, loss or depletion of, or danger to, their natural resources, and expresses the hope that this issue will be dealt with in the framework of the final status negotiation between the Palestinian and Israeli sides;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to it, at its fifty-second session, on the implementation of the present resolution, and decides to include in the agenda of its fifty-second session an item entitled "Permanent sovereignty of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and of the Arab population in the occupied Syrian Golan over their natural resources".

16 December 1996 Meeting 86 133-3-21 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/51/601) by recorded vote (123-20-17), 2 December (meeting 37); 12-nation draft (A/C.2/51/L.30/Rev.2); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 2nd Committee 27, 28, 35-37; plenary 86.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour. Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador,

Against: Israel, United States, Vanuatu.*

Abstaining: Bahamas, Barbados, Belarus, Congo, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Estonia, Fiji, Gambia, Georgia, Grenada, Kenya, Latvia, Liberia, Lithuania, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Palau, Paraguay, Ukraine, Uruguay.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

The text was the result of informal consultations in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on two draft resolutions, one submitted by Afghanistan, Cuba and the Syrian Arab Republic, on behalf of the Group of Arab States [A/C.2/51/L.29], the other tabled by Bangladesh, Egypt, Malaysia, Mauritania, the Sudan, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen [A/C.2/51/L.30].

In explanation of vote, Israel called the text superfluous, because the issue of rights over natural resources had been covered in the Interim Agreement and should be settled within the framework of the permanent status negotiations. The real objective of the draft, it believed, was to predetermine the outcome of those negotiations, contradictory to the spirit and letter of the Interim Agreement and of the Madrid Conference.

The United States firmly opposed the text on the grounds that it risked compromising the parties' efforts in the direct negotiations under way and prejudged their outcome.

Issues related to Palestine

General aspects

During 1996, the General Assembly continued to grapple with the question of Palestine. Following consideration of the annual report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) [A/51/35], the Assembly in December adopted four resolutions, reaffirming, among other things, the necessity of achieving a peaceful settlement of the question—the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict—in all its aspects, stressing the need for the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, primarily the right to self-determination, for Israeli withdrawal from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967 and for resolving the problem of the Palestine refugees.

In commemoration of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, celebrated annually in accordance with Assembly resolution 32/40 B [YUN 1977, p. 304], the Committee held a solemn meeting on 29 November to which all Member States, specialized agencies and observers were invited and on the occasion of which the Secretary-General and the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Security Council spoke.

Report of Secretary-General. In a November report on the peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine [A/51/678-S/1996/953], the Secretary-General made observations on the Middle East peace process (see under "Peace process", above). The PLO and Egypt supplied information regarding steps taken to implement General Assembly resolution 50/84 D, on the Palestine question [YUN 1995, p. 646].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's report, the General Assembly, on 4 December, adopted resolution 51/26.

Peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to the request made in its resolution 50/84 D of 15 December 1995,

Convinced that achieving a final and peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine, the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict, is imperative for the attainment of a comprehensive and lasting peace in the Middle East,

Aware that the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples is among the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Affirming the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war,

Affirming also the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the territory occupied since 1967 and of Israeli actions aimed at changing the status of Jerusalem,

Affirming once again the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized borders,

Aware of the mutual recognition between the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, and the signing by the two parties of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993, as well as the subsequent implementation agreements, including the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip signed in Washington, D.C., on 28 September 1995,

Noting with satisfaction the withdrawal of the Israeli army, which took place in the Gaza Strip and the Jericho area in accordance with the agreements reached by the parties, and the initiation of the Palestinian Authority in those areas, as well as the beginning of the re-deployment of the Israeli army in the rest of the West Bank,

Noting also with satisfaction the successful holding of the first Palestinian general elections,

Aware that the United Nations has participated as a full, extraregional participant in the work of the multi-lateral working groups of the Middle East peace process,

Noting the establishment of the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories and its positive contribution,

Welcoming the convening of the Conference to Support Middle East Peace in Washington, D.C., on 1 October 1993, and all follow-up meetings,

Concerned over the serious difficulties facing the Middle East peace process and the deterioration of the socio-economic conditions of the Palestinian people as a result of the Israeli positions and measures,

1. Reaffirms the necessity of achieving a peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine, the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict, in all its aspects;

2. Expresses its full support for the ongoing peace process which began in Madrid and the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements of 1993, as well as the subsequent implementation agreements, including the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip of 1995, and expresses the hope that the process will lead to the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

3. Stresses the necessity for the immediate and scrupulous implementation of the agreements reached between the parties and the commencement of the negotiations on the final settlement;

4. Calls upon the concerned parties, the co-sponsors of the peace process and the entire international community to exert all the necessary efforts to ensure the success of the peace process;

5. Stresses the need for:

(a) The realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, primarily the right to self-determination;

(b) The withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967;

6. Also stresses the need for resolving the problem of the Palestine refugees in conformity with its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948;

7. Urges Member States to expedite the provision of economic and technical assistance to the Palestinian people during this critical period;

8. Emphasizes the importance for the United Nations to play a more active and expanded role in the current peace process and in the implementation of the Declaration of Principles;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts with the parties concerned, and in consultation with the Security Council, for the promotion of peace in the region and to submit progress reports on developments in this matter.

4 December 1996 Meeting 72 152-2-4 (recorded vote)

22-nation draft (A/51/L.36 & Add.1); agenda item 35.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Costa Rica, Fiji, Marshall Islands, Micronesia.

The Permanent Observer of Palestine stressed that the Assembly should uphold its position related to the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and related to the elements of the final settlement (final status issues), where Israel had already created illegal, de facto situations, until negotiations on those issues took place and a final settlement was effectively achieved. The principle of the return of land for peace and the implementation of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) had to be respected. The parties had to comply with the agreements reached and to implement them in good faith and without delay.

In Israel's view, the resolution was fraught with internal contradictions: on the one hand, it claimed to support the peace process begun in Madrid, while on the other, it sought to undermine the fundamental principle of direct negotiations without preconditions, on which the Madrid process was based. Israel believed that Member States that claimed to support the peace process had a responsibility to oppose the text, as it struck at the essential principles of that process.

The United States said the unbalanced resolution complicated the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace, inappropriately injecting the General Assembly into issues that were under direct negotiation between the parties. What the parties needed from the Assembly was support and encouragement, not second-guessing and side-taking.

Committee on Palestinian Rights

As mandated by General Assembly resolution 50/84 A [YUN 1995, p. 649], the Committee on Palestinian Rights, established in 1975 [GA res. 3376(XXX)], kept under review the situation relating to the Palestine question, reported on it and made suggestions to the Assembly or the Security Council. The Committee continued to exert all efforts to promote the effective implementation of the 1993 Declaration of Principles and the 1995 Interim Agreement, as well as to mobilize international support for and assistance to the Palestinians.

The Committee continued to monitor the situation in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the developments in the peace process on an ongoing basis through the media, reports of UN organs and agencies, and information provided by NGOs, individual experts and others who participated in meetings held under its auspices.

The Committee continued to follow the activities related to the Palestine question of UN bodies, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and intergovernmental organizations and, through its Chairman or Acting Chairman, participated in Security Council meetings on the situation in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem (see above), and in relevant meetings of intergovernmental bodies.

During the year, the Committee sponsored a combined meeting of consultations with representatives of NGO coordinating committees (New York, 1-2 February); a seminar on assistance to the Palestinian people, with the theme "Building the Palestinian economy" (Cairo, Egypt, 21-23 May); a symposium for NGOs in North America on the Palestine question (New York, 24-26 June); and a combined symposium for European NGOs and international NGO meeting (Geneva, 2-4 September). Noting that it had not organized an event in the Asian region for several years, the Committee decided in principle to convene a combined seminar and NGO symposium in Asia in early 1997, subject to consultations with prospective host countries.

The Committee decided to pursue new activities to expand its contacts with the Palestinian Authority and other institutions in the area under the Authority's jurisdiction. Specifically, it envisaged inviting Authority officials and other Palestinian personalities to Special Committee meetings to apprise its members and other delegations of important developments on the ground and the evolving needs of the Palestinians to be met through international action. The Committee also would consider ways of developing cooperation with and assistance to Palestinian NGOs.

In its 1996 report [A/51/35], the Committee welcomed the redeployment of Israel's military forces from six major West Bank towns and over 450 villages, and that administrative and civilian powers and responsibilities, as well as in the area of security, had been transferred to the Palestinian Authority. The Committee noted with satisfaction the continued strengthening of the institutional capacity of the Authority and welcomed the successful holding of the first Palestinian elections, in January, to the legislative council and the Presidency of the Palestinian Authority, and it congratulated President Yasser Arafat on that historic event. The Committee was also pleased to note that, for the first time, the Palestine National Council had been able to meet in Gaza, from 22 to 25 April, and had decided to abrogate articles of the Palestine National Charter that were contrary to agreements reached between Israel and the PLO. The Committee also noted the start of the permanent status negotiations between Israel and the PLO in early May, in accordance with the timetable contained in the 1993 Declaration of Principles. Negotiations were adjourned after a number of procedural decisions had been taken.

The Committee noted with grave concern the exacerbation of the situation on the ground as a result of Israeli security measures in the wake of suicide attacks against Israeli civilians in February and March. Of particular concern were the guidelines adopted by the new Israeli Government and statements by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu concerning the peace process, including the implementation of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) and the principle of land for peace, as well as issues related to a final settlement, in particular Jerusalem, Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, the return of refugees and Palestinian sovereignty, which appeared to depart from agreed principles and to link implementation to extraneous issues. The delay in redeployment of Israeli troops from Hebron had encouraged provocations by settlers and greatly aggravated tension in the town. The continued lack of safe passage between the West Bank and the Gaza Strip infringed on the status and integrity of the Palestinian territory as a single territorial unit, stipulated in the agreements, hampered the Palestinian Authority in exercising its responsibilities and further exacerbated the serious economic situation, the Committee stated. It was also concerned at Israel's interference in activities of the Palestinian Council members representing the Jerusalem district. It noted with concern that further redeployment of Israeli troops, due to commence six months after the Council's inauguration, had not begun on 7 September in accordance with the agreed timetable. The Committee also noted that although a number of prisoners had been released, some 3,100 Palestinians still remained in Israeli prisons, and that their relatives and ICRC had experienced serious difficulties in visiting them.

The imposition on 25 February of the closure of areas under Palestinian jurisdiction in effect fragmented the territory into many small enclaves isolated from each other and from the outside world, the Committee noted. The Committee further noted with the greatest concern that staff of NGOs and UNRWA had experienced restrictions in their freedom of movement and that their humanitarian work had been disrupted at a time of great crisis.

The Committee praised the Secretary-General and his Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories, and the UN system as a whole, for their work to promote an easing of the closure and the creation of local employment, as well as for the continuing programme of assistance for the development of the Palestinian territory. The Committee called on the international community, in particular donor countries, to continue to spare no effort in the pursuit of economic and social development and improvement of the living conditions of Palestinians as the indispensable underpinning for peace.

The Committee was gravely concerned at the negative implications of the prolonged closure for the future of Jerusalem, to be negotiated as part of a final settlement. It noted that the closure had practically cut off Palestinian access to East Jerusalem, thus depriving Palestinians in Gaza and the West Bank of their most important religious, cultural and social centre, while isolating Palestinians in Jerusalem from their natural hinterland and stifling East Jerusalem's economy.

The Committee welcomed the relocation of UNRWA headquarters from Vienna to Gaza City (see below). It took note of the signing, on 5 July, of the headquarters agreement between UNRWA and the Palestinian Authority. At the same time, the Committee expressed concern at the Agency's financial constraints and hoped that outstanding pledges and voluntary funds would be forthcoming so that it could continue to provide its vital services.

The Committee further expressed serious concern at policy statements and decisions by the Israeli Government portending renewed land confiscation and settlement construction in the occupied territory.

It was gravely concerned at the escalation of violence in September, when Israel opened an entrance to a tunnel in the vicinity of Haram al-

Sharif in East Jerusalem (see above). It welcomed efforts to resolve the situation and resume the peace process. The Committee noted the Middle East Summit, held at the invitation of the President of the United States and with the participation of King Hussein of Jordan, the Israeli Prime Minister and the President of the Palestinian Authority (Washington, D.C., 1-2 October), and the parties' determination to renew and intensify negotiations on how to carry out the provisions of the peace agreements already concluded. In that regard, the Committee reiterated its strong support for the peace process and its determination to spare no effort in promoting the rights of the Palestinians, including the right to self-determination and statehood.

The United Nations had a permanent responsibility with respect to the Palestine question until a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement was reached, the Committee reaffirmed, and the involvement of the United Nations in the peace process, both as guardian of international legitimacy and in mobilizing and providing international assistance, was essential for the successful outcome of the peace efforts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/23.

Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 181(II) of 29 November 1947, 194(III) of 11 December 1948, 3236(XXIX) of 22 November 1974, 3375(XXX) and 3376(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 31/20 of 24 November 1976, 32/40 A of 2 December 1977, 33/28 A and B of 7 December 1978, 34/65 A of 29 November 1979 and 34/65 C of 12 December 1979, ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 35/169 A and C of 15 December 1980, 36/120 A and C of 10 December 1981, ES-7/4 of 28 April 1982, 37/86 A of 10 December 1982, 38/58 A of 13 December 1983, 39/49 A of 11 December 1984, 40/96 A of 12 December 1985, 41/43 A of 2 December 1986, 42/66 A of 2 December 1987, 43/175 A of 15 December 1988, 44/41 A of 6 December 1989, 45/67 A of 6 December 1990, 46/74 A of 11 December 1991, 47/64 A of 11 December 1992, 48/158 A of 20 December 1993, 49/62 A of 14 December 1994 and 50/84 A of 15 December 1995,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Welcoming the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, including its Annexes and Agreed Minutes, by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993, as well as the subsequent implementation agreements, in particular the Agreement on the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area, signed at Cairo on 4 May 1994, and the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, signed in Washington, D.C., on 28 September 1995,

Reaffirming that the United Nations has a permanent responsibility with respect to the question of Palestine until the question is resolved in all its aspects in a satisfactory manner in accordance with international legitimacy,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly;

2. Considers that the Committee can continue to make a valuable and positive contribution to international efforts to promote the effective implementation of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements and to mobilize international support for and assistance to the Palestinian people during the transitional period;

3. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee contained in chapter VII of its report;

4. Requests the Committee to continue to keep under review the situation relating to the question of Palestine and to report and make suggestions to the General Assembly or the Security Council, as appropriate;

5. Authorizes the Committee to continue to exert all efforts to promote the exercise of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, to make such adjustments in its approved programme of work as it may consider appropriate and necessary in the light of developments, to give special emphasis to the need to mobilize support and assistance for the Palestinian people and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session and thereafter;

6. Requests the Committee to continue to extend its cooperation to non-governmental organizations in their contribution towards heightening international awareness of the facts relating to the question of Palestine and promoting support and assistance to meet the needs of the Palestinian people and to take the necessary steps to involve additional non-governmental organizations in its work;

7. Requests the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, established under General Assembly resolution 194(III), and other United Nations bodies associated with the question of Palestine to continue to cooperate fully with the Committee and to make available to it, at its request, the relevant information and documentation which they have at their disposal;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate the report of the Committee to all the competent bodies of the United Nations, and urges them to take the necessary action, as appropriate;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Committee with all the necessary facilities for the performance of its tasks.

22-nation draft (A/51/L.33 & Add.1); agenda item 35.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Saint Lucia, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Andorra, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Grenada, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Monaco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Samoa, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Tajikistan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, United Kingdom.

Israel said it had opposed the existence of bodies such as the Committee and the Division for Palestinian Rights since their inception; they had obstructed dialogue and understanding through a one-sided and distorted portrayal of the Arab-Israeli conflict and stood in contradiction to the very principles on which the peace process was based. In addition, they expended valuable resources that should be devoted to more constructive activities, such as supporting social and economic development that would benefit Palestinians.

In the view of the United States, the $7 million that currently funded the activities of obscure UN committees and departments which purported to be dedicated to the welfare of Palestinians could make a real difference in the lives of ordinary people. The funds should go instead to the activities of other UN organizations, such as the Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories, UNRWA and UNDP, which would carry out programmes directly benefiting the Palestinians.

Division for Palestinian Rights

With the guidance of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, the Division for Palestinian Rights of the UN Secretariat continued to function as a centre for research, monitoring, preparation of studies, and collection and dissemination of information on all issues related to the Palestine question. The Committee emphasized the essential contribution of the Division in that regard and requested it to continue its programme of publications, in consultation with the Committee. The Committee considered that the studies, bulletins, information notes, reports and other material published by the Division should focus on priority issues to be addressed by the Committee in 1996 in order to enhance their usefulness at that important stage.

The Committee noted with appreciation that the Division, in accordance with its mandate, continued to respond to requests for information and to prepare and disseminate the following publications: monthly bulletins covering action by the Committee and other UN organs, organizations and agencies, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, on the Palestine question, containing the texts of relevant resolutions, statements and decisions; the periodic bulletin "Developments related to the Middle East peace process"; a monthly chronological summary of events relating to the Palestine question; reports of seminars and NGO meetings organized under Committee auspices; a special bulletin on the commemoration, in 1995, of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People; and a compilation of relevant resolutions, decisions and statements adopted in 1995 by the General Assembly and the Security Council relating to the Palestine question.

The Committee noted with appreciation that, in response to its request, the Division had completed the first draft of a study on Jerusalem, and requested that it pay particular attention to finalizing the proposed study on Israeli settlements during the coming year.

The Committee noted with appreciation the further progress made by the Division, in cooperation with relevant technical services of the Secretariat, in developing the UN information system on the question of Palestine, and in making it available to users, including through the establishment of a home page on the Internet. It called for intensified efforts to include all relevant documentation in the system, if necessary through redeployment of funds from lower-priority areas.

Noting further the successful introduction in the Division of a pilot project for the training of staff of the Palestinian Authority in the workings of the UN system, the Committee requested the Division to continue that exercise in the future.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/24.

Division for Palestinian Rights of the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Taking note in particular of the relevant information contained in chapter V.B of that report,

Recalling its resolutions 32/40 B of 2 December 1977, 33/28 C of 7 December 1978, 34/65 D of 12 December 1979, 35/169 D of 15 December 1980, 36/120 B of 10 December 1981, 37/86 B of 10 December 1982, 38/58 B of 13 December 1983, 39/49 B of 11 December 1984, 40/96 B of 12 December 1985, 41/43 B of 2 December 1986, 42/66 B of 2 December 1987, 43/175 B of 15 December 1988, 44/41 B of 6 December 1989, 45/67 B of 6 December 1990, 46/74 B of 11 December 1991, 47/64 B of 11 December 1992, 48/158 B of 20 December 1993, 49/62 B of 14 December 1994 and 50/84 B of 15 December 1995.

1. Notes with appreciation the action taken by the Secretary-General in compliance with its resolution 50/84 B;

2. Considers that the Division for Palestinian Rights of the Secretariat continues to make a useful and constructive contribution through the organization of seminars and meetings of non-governmental organizations, as well as through its research and monitoring activities, the preparation of studies and publications and the collection and dissemination of information in printed and electronic form on all issues pertaining to the question of Palestine;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Division with the necessary resources, including for the further development of the United Nations Information System on the Question of Palestine, and to ensure that it continues to discharge the tasks detailed in paragraph 1 of resolution 32/40 B, paragraph 2 (b) of resolution 34/65 D, paragraph 3 of resolution 36/120 B, paragraph 3 of resolution 38/58 B, paragraph 3 of resolution 40/96 B, paragraph 2 of resolution 42/66 B, paragraph 2 of resolution 44/41 B, paragraph 2 of resolution 46/74 B, paragraph 2 of resolution 48/158 B, paragraph 3 of resolution 49/62 B and paragraph 3 of resolution 50/84 B, in consultation with the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and under its guidance;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure the continued cooperation of the Department of Public Information and other units of the Secretariat in enabling the Division to perform its tasks and in covering adequately the various aspects of the question of Palestine;

5. Invites all Governments and organizations to lend their cooperation to the Committee and the Division in the performance of their tasks;

6. Notes with appreciation the action taken by Member States to observe annually on 29 November the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, requests them to continue to give the widest possible publicity to the observance and requests the Committee to continue to organize, as part of the observance of the Day of Solidarity, an annual exhibit on Palestinian rights in cooperation with the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine to the United Nations.

Special information programme

As requested by General Assembly resolution 50/84 C [YUN 1995, p. 652], the Department of Public Information (DPI) continued in 1996, in full cooperation and coordination with the Committee on Palestinian Rights, its special information programme on the Palestine question, with particular emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America. In doing so, DPI was to focus on six particular areas of activity, as identified in the 1995 Assembly resolution.

Dissemination of information on all activities of the UN system relating to the Palestine question was provided by DPI. The Department's NGO Section continued to disseminate information materials through the NGO Resources Centre. The global network of UN information centres (UNICs) and services actively promoted the central issue relating to the Palestine question, organizing media activities and special events and regularly disseminating relevant information materials made available from Headquarters.

DPI continued to issue press releases and publications on various aspects of the Palestine question.

The Department's Radio and Central News Service provided a wide range of coverage on the Palestine question and related issues in daily news bulletins, weekly news magazines and feature programmes in official and non-official languages for worldwide dissemination. DPI organized a number of international, regional and national encounters for journalists. It also organized in 1996 a training programme for 10 Palestinian journalists at UN Headquarters (15 September-8 November).

Concluding, the Committee noted the efforts undertaken by DPI over the past year and expressed appreciation of the results, but noted that some important aspects of the special information programme had yet to be implemented. The Assembly's requests needed to be borne in mind, said the Committee, in an assessment of performance. A more regular and structured process of cooperation and coordination of DPI with the Committee, as called for by the resolution, should assist in identifying and overcoming difficulties that might be encountered in the organization of specific events and should thus ensure full implementation of the resolution.

The Committee favoured utilization of modern electronic media to facilitate the production of new publications.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/25.

Special information programme on the question of Palestine of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Taking note in particular of the information contained in chapter VI of that report,

Recalling its resolution 50/84 C of 15 December 1995,

Convinced that the worldwide dissemination of accurate and comprehensive information and the role of non-governmental organizations and institutions remain of vital importance in heightening awareness of and support for the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people,

Aware of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements signed by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993, and of the subsequent implementation agreements, in particular the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip signed in Washington on 28 September 1995, and their positive implications,

1. Notes that several defined provisions of the special information programme on the question of Palestine of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat are yet to be implemented, and stresses the importance of implementation of all provisions of the programme;

2. Considers that the special information programme is very useful in raising the awareness of the international community concerning the complexities of the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East in general, including the achievements of the peace process, and that the programme is contributing effectively to an atmosphere conducive to dialogue and supportive of the peace process;

3. Requests the Department, in full cooperation and coordination with the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, to continue, with the necessary flexibility as may be required by developments affecting the question of Palestine, its special information programme for the biennium 1996-1997, with particular emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America and, in particular:

(a) To disseminate information on all the activities of the United Nations system relating to the question of Palestine, including reports on the work carried out by the relevant United Nations organizations;

(b) To continue to issue and update publications on the various aspects of the question of Palestine in all fields, including materials concerning the recent developments in that regard and, in particular, the achievements of the peace process;

(c) To expand its audiovisual material on the question of Palestine, including the production of such material;

(d) To organize and promote fact-finding news missions for journalists to the area, including the territories under the jurisdiction of the Palestinian Authority and the occupied territories;

(e) To organize international, regional and national encounters for journalists;

(f) To provide, in cooperation with the relevant bodies and agencies of the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, assistance to the Palestinian people in the field of media development, including training for Palestinian broadcasters and journalists.

General Assembly resolution 51/25

22-nation draft (A/51/L.35 & Add.1); agenda item 35.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Fiji, Marshall Islands, Micronesia.

Israel believed that the resolution entailed a needless expenditure of valuable resources that could be put to better use. Similarly, the United States felt that such funds could better serve economic development projects in the West Bank and Gaza.

Assistance to Palestinians

UN involvement

On 21 June, the Secretary-General reported [A/51/171-E/1996/75] on assistance to the Palestinians, specifying needs, ongoing programmes and proposals for additional assistance. Following the second inter-agency meeting convened by Terje Rød-Larsen (Norway), the UN Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories, in June 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 653], sectoral strategies covering education, health, employment generation, infrastructure and housing, institution-building and the private sector were finalized; they articulated a coordinated, integrated and targeted approach to the main developmental priorities in the West Bank and Gaza Strip as identified by the Palestinian Authority. Each of the six strategies included proposals from UN agencies and programmes for specific technical and project assistance for implementation starting in late 1995 and 1996. The total package of proposals comprised projects costing approximately $550 million.

The UN-proposed programme of assistance for 1996 was formally presented to the donor community by the Special Coordinator at the ministerial-level meeting of the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee, the main donor-led body overseeing the assistance efforts, convened in September 1995 on the occasion of the signing of the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. At that meeting, the Committee had stressed the imperative to respond quickly to the major political achievement represented by the Interim Agreement by intensifying efforts in the economic arena. It was decided to hold a ministerial conference of donor countries as soon as possible, preceded by a World Bank-led Consultative Group meeting in Paris on 18 and 19 October 1995.

In close coordination with the Palestinian Authority and in consultation with Israel, and following discussions with key donors, the United Nations and the World Bank jointly prepared a policy document for consideration by donors. For its part, the Palestinian Authority established a "core list" of technical and infrastructural assistance projects, drawing from proposed UN, World Bank and bilateral activities. The core list required approximately $550 million in donor funds, of which 27 projects valued at about $100 million were for implementation by UN agencies and programmes.

The Ministerial Conference on Economic Assistance to the Palestinian People was held in Paris on 9 January 1996. Conference participants emphasized, among other things, the importance of improving the economic and social conditions of the Palestinians through a comprehensive effort to create jobs, improve physical and social infrastructure, and establish a basis for sustainable economic growth in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. The donors considered the Palestinian Authority's core list of development activities for 1996, as well as other activities proposed by it, the World Bank and the United Nations. At the Conference and over the weeks following it, around $805 million was pledged by donors for investment projects, and an additional $72.5 million towards the Palestinian Authority's recurrent budget deficit projected at $75 million for 1996.

According to information provided to the Office of the Special Coordinator, UN agencies and programmes received approximately $105 million in donor funding between July 1995 and June 1996 for technical and infrastructural project assistance to benefit the Palestinian Authority and Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Of the UN projects on the "core list", 19 received approximately $59 million in donor funding. Those figures did not include funding for UNRWA regular programmes amounting to approximately $150 million for the West Bank and Gaza Strip in 1996 (see below); nor did they reflect the decision of UNDP to double the funding from its own "core resources" for the period 1996-1998, to a minimum of $8 million. By mid-1996, many donors had yet to commit their 1996 pledges to specific projects.

Following a series of suicide terrorist attacks and Israeli countermeasures, including the closure of the occupied territories, a decline of economic activity took place in the territories and employment of Palestinians in Israel dropped, resulting in a sharp reduction in the revenues of the Palestinian Authority. By mid-April 1996, with the closure still in place, the 1996 recurrent budget deficit was estimated to have increased by some $100 million above the $75 million projected in late 1995.

In response, the Special Coordinator proposed the framework for a plan aimed at easing the closure and at establishing a donor-funded emergency employment-creation programme. The United States announced on 28 March that the Palestinian Authority, Israel and Norway (as representative of the donor community) had agreed to the framework. Subsequently, steady increases were recorded in the movement of goods into and out of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Overall trade volume, however, remained below the pre-closure level and the Palestinians employed in Israel numbered approximately 10,000 at the end of May, compared to an estimated 70,000 before the closure.

UNDP joined the Palestinian Economic Council for Development and Reconstruction (PECDAR) in implementing projects in mid-March that were expected to provide up to 5,000 employment opportunities during 1996.

From 15 to 17 April, the Special Coordinator convened the third inter-agency meeting in Gaza.

Its main purpose was to establish priorities for UN assistance programmes in 1997. Those priorities, accompanied by project proposals for addressing unmet needs, were to be presented to donors at the World Bank-led Consultative Group meeting (Paris, 20 November).

Education

Education was the largest service sector run by the Palestinian Authority, catering to the needs of more than 35 per cent of the population. The total cost of the educational system (excluding higher education) was estimated at $180 million annually. Following the transfer of responsibility for education to the Palestinian Authority in 1994, new challenges had arisen from the continued rapid increase in the school population and the need to accommodate the children of returnees.

To improve access to schooling, as well as the quality of teaching and learning, and to increase the relevance of education to society's needs, the Ministry of Education prepared a National Plan of Action, defining priorities for urgent attention and financial and technical assistance. The overall challenge for the United Nations was, according to the Secretary-General, to shape a coherent programme, leading to the improvement and growth of the educational system. Above all, the UN programme should be integrated within the framework of the five-year master plan for education currently being prepared by the Ministry of Education.

Since 1950, UNRWA had been the single largest provider of education in the Gaza Strip and a major provider in the West Bank. The overall objective of its education programme (see below) was to provide general education; in-service teachers' education; vocational, technical and higher education; and university scholarships for Palestinian refugees.

UNDP focused on improving infrastructural facilities through the construction and renovation of schools and classrooms and on increasing access for girls to educational opportunities. In February 1996, UNDP launched a project aimed at defining the extent of the school dropout phenomenon and its geographical and gender distribution, with the aim of making policy recommendations to the Ministry of Education and of introducing remedial programmes, especially for female dropouts. UNDP also provided support for in-service training and curriculum development in agricultural training schools.

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), under its Culture of Peace Programme launched in 1994 to give greater emphasis to countries and territories in conflict, carried out two missions to review the Palestinian education sector. It proposed establishing, through the Palestinian European Academic Cooperation in Education programme network, UNESCO Chairs in archaeology, foreign language teaching and marine sciences.

UNICEF's education programme was implemented through three main projects focusing on formal and non-formal education: early childhood development/psychosocial health; primary education; and youth and community development. Under the last category, 110 community-based camps for children and youth were organized in 1995, and 700 youth leaders were trained in planning educational, recreational, art and environmental activities for children.

Other assistance came from the International Labour Organization (ILO), fielding technical missions to examine the needs of the vocational training sector, with particular reference to workers' education programmes and training activities for Ministry of Labour officials; and the World Food Programme (WFP), supporting vocational training by providing meals for women and youth trainees and supporting trainees at rehabilitation centres for the mentally and physically disabled.

Employment

A high rate of unemployment (projected at an average 31 per cent in 1996 and in the Gaza Strip surpassing 50 per cent), and underemployment in the occupied territories, constituted an immediate social and economic challenge to the development efforts of the Palestinian Authority. There were an estimated 20,000 new job-seekers each year in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. With one of the world's highest labour force growth rates (nearly 4 per cent) and with nearly half the population under 15 years of age, the Palestinian economy was unable to absorb many of the unemployed and was unlikely to accommodate the expected increase in job-seekers in the years ahead. In addition, many of those denied access to the Israeli labour market could not find work at home and the dependent nature of the Palestinian economy limited employment creation and growth. The industrial sector was relatively small, while major sources of employment were in agriculture and construction. Given continuing economic unpredictability and the lack of an adequate basic infrastructure, large-scale domestic and foreign investment had not been forthcoming.

With the extension in late 1995 of Palestinian self-rule to major towns and surrounding areas in the West Bank, the Palestinian Authority, the United Nations, the World Bank and donors agreed that emergency employment-generation programmes, largely confined to the Gaza Strip, should be extended to the West Bank. UN agencies should assist the Palestinian Authority in formulating a clearly defined employment strategy, the Secretary-General suggested in his report. Unemployment should be addressed as a structural problem requiring long-term solutions. The strategy should include employment services, training, development of small and medium-sized enterprises, establishment of a social safety-net mechanism, social security, and local and regional cooperation in labour migration.

In coordination with the Palestinian Authority and donors, the sectoral working group on employment generation had identified a series of priority projects for the West Bank, according to the report. On-the-job training would continue to be provided for project management, the planning of high labour-content infrastructure activities and the introduction of transparent and accountable methods of project implementation.

In the long run, the report stated, sustainable employment would be generated mainly by the private sector. Recently, Israel and the Palestinian Authority had reached a general agreement on the need for a programme of border industrial zones to attract foreign investment and create employment opportunities.

ILO technical missions, in coordination with the Palestinian Authority, devised strategies to address the unemployment issue and introduce labour-intensive work programmes. ILO was also undertaking ongoing employment-related activities, such as reintegration of ex-detainees. The report said that ILO could also provide training to Palestinian Authority staff, small and medium-sized contractors, consultants and workers, an approach which could be combined with related programmes in employment policy, employment services, labour administration and vocational training.

Following three fact-finding missions, UNESCO proposed setting up a programme, employing both specialists and unskilled workers, to safeguard historical sites and monuments in Bethlehem, Gaza, Hebron and Jericho.

Health

The Palestinian Authority had assumed overall responsibility for health in the Gaza Strip and Jericho in May 1994 and the remainder of the West Bank in December of that year. With the creation of a Ministry of Health, health matters were being addressed with reference to the needs of the local population. The Secretary-General reported that the Palestinian Authority had made commendable progress in implementing its Interim Action Plan, based on the National Health Plan, which was developed in consultation with Palestinian health professionals. During the first year, the Palestinian Authority set up the organizational structure of the Ministry of Health, established sectoral priorities and policies, and addressed the sector's requirements in the area of human resources and basic needs. The report noted a geographical disparity in terms of health facilities and personnel, with a tendency to favour urban centres, in particular Jerusalem. Of the 24 hospitals in the West Bank and Gaza, serving a population of almost 2.5 million, 6 were operated by the Ministry of Health and the remainder by NGOs and UNRWA.

According to the report, the fragmentation of health services had been a limiting factor in the development of an integrated and efficient health system. The development and implementation of clearer health policies and a major re-orientation of the system were essential for the future, as was a more comprehensive approach to women's health. Discrepancies between the formal training and work experience of health staff and the functions they were required to perform, as well as the training, work experience and medical background of health managers, presented further obstacles to the implementation of appropriately oriented health policies. The report also identified a need for a comprehensive and cohesive revision of health legislation, reflecting recent trends and developments, as well as the policy choices made by the Palestinian Authority.

Following the signing of the 1993 Declaration of Principles, UN agencies, in collaboration with the Palestinian Authority and the donor community, identified and planned priority interventions for the rehabilitation of the health infrastructure, aimed primarily at building, renovating and expanding a number of health facilities. UN organizations played a primary role in implementing such projects.

The World Health Organization (WHO) provided the Ministry of Health with direct financial assistance and fielded several assessment missions, permitting the Ministry to establish a number of units to develop strategic plans for intersectoral coordination and national health planning. WHO also assisted in the development of a zoonotic disease policy, and rehabilitated and equipped health facilities in the Gaza Strip. It also financed the establishment of a Continuing Education Centre and a Public Health Training Centre in Gaza.

Furthermore, UN agencies supported such areas as immunization, insurance, the control of acute respiratory infections and diarrhoeal diseases, and maternal and reproductive health.

Other UN-assisted projects included: child health/family planning projects (UNFPA); promotion of breastfeeding (UNICEF); upgrading medical infrastructure at the primary care level (UNRWA); and food aid in the Gaza Strip to households classified as hardship cases, the majority of which were headed by women with large numbers of dependants (WFP).

Infrastructure

UNRWA's Peace Implementation Programme (PIP) primarily targeted infrastructure projects in the education, health and social sectors, with the aim of improving refugees' living conditions and contributing to employment generation. Under the second phase of the programme (PIP II), the Agency received $17.3 million for projects to improve environmental conditions in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and was seeking over $110 million in donor funding for additional projects.

The primary elements of a UN strategy for infrastructure development, in support of the Palestinian Authority's efforts, were the continued rehabilitation of basic education, health and agriculture, as well as the adoption of labour-intensive techniques in the design and implementation of projects. There was an urgent need for both the rehabilitation of existing infrastructure and investment in new strategic facilities, with potential for regional linkages.

In view of the enormous needs of infrastructural development, the report cited rehabilitation, operation and maintenance of existing physical infrastructure facilities as the first priority. Simultaneously, sustainable capacity had to be developed to manage, operate and maintain those facilities, through adequate management systems and structures, on-the-job training and transfer of skills and knowledge. All capital investments should be combined with appropriate technical assistance packages, and support for future development planning should be coordinated with Palestinian institutions, in particular the Ministry of Planning and International Cooperation.

Infrastructural requirements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip were similar in terms of the type of projects needed, but development priorities should be tailored to their varying needs. A regulated programme of land use was seen as a prerequisite for all other forms of infrastructural development, and such development should incorporate strict guidelines for protection of the environment and of human resources. Dwindling water resources, the growth of the agricultural sector and a rising population necessitated, the report said, the creation of efficient water preservation and distribution systems, and assistance was required in the field of water policy, legislation and management strategies. Closely related to the question of water resources was the issue of waste-water disposal and reuse, as inadequate sewage systems and the absence of proper treatment and disposal schemes threatened both the water supply quality and public health.

The revival of the agricultural sector, according to the report, featured prominently in Palestinian development planning. To encourage private investment, improvement of the legal, regulatory and institutional framework was necessary. Basic agricultural infrastructure—schools, laboratories, and quarantine and research stations—also required upgrading.

In order for Palestinian industry to develop and become competitive, a proper transportation system and modern electric and telecommunications networks were necessary. Power generation plants, energy planning and information systems, energy efficiency programmes and renewable energy technologies were needed.

Institution-building

The report noted that institution-building was one of the four primary components of the Palestinian Authority's preliminary statement on a Palestinian development strategy, presented at the Ministerial Conference on Economic Assistance to the Palestinian People, held in Paris in January 1996. That component aimed to achieve a new system of governance and build local capabilities and a competent civil service necessary to implement the economic development strategy. The Authority's priorities included strengthening the technical, financial and managerial capabilities of municipal governments; building a legal basis for public administration; strengthening the key central institutions relating to commerce and economic management; ensuring that institution-building components were included in development projects; ensuring extensive consultations between the central Government, local authorities, the private sector and NGOs in the implementation of an economic development strategy; creating capacity within Palestinian institutions for research and policy analysis and implementation; and ensuring open participation in the decision-making process by involving the public in policy formulation and the design of the development strategy. The UN strategy for institution-building would be geared towards responding to those priorities.

An important focus for the UN system would be physical infrastructure, the report said; another would be support for sustainable human and social development through technical assistance to those Palestinian institutions closely concerned with the delivery of public and social services. Assistance could also be provided to strengthen the monitoring and evaluation capacities of the Palestinian Authority ministries; to develop and implement sectoral gender-sensitive strategies and action plans; to establish data systems and information bases and strengthen institutional capacities in data analysis, dissemination and utilization; and to establish mechanisms for partnership between Palestinian Authority institutions and NGOs. Another key element of the UN strategy for institution-building would be continuing to focus on public-sector management and public administration development. The report recognized the development of cohesive and equitable legal and judicial frameworks as another critical element in ensuring the proper development of public-sector institutions.

A central objective of UN support for institutional development was to facilitate the progressive inclusion of the West Bank and Gaza Strip into regional and subregional spheres. The UN system would encourage regional networking, utilizing the established field office network of UN organizations throughout the Arab States, as well as the exchange of technical expertise within the region.

The UN Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories continued to coordinate bilateral and multilateral training programmes for the Palestinian police force. In the first half of 1996, more than 550 policemen received training in advanced driving, basic forensic science, drug law enforcement, human rights, maintenance of public order, management development and training, management training for traffic police and women police.

Private-sector development

The Palestinian Authority identified the private sector as the principal engine for growth, development and employment generation. Its strategy for private-sector development had three broad thrusts: creation of an enabling environment and basic infrastructure for industry, agriculture and tourism; promotion of medium-term lending, particularly for small businesses and for farming activities; and promotion of private-sector participation in infrastructure development.

The strategy emphasized the establishment of industrial estates, an investment promotion programme, facilities for political risk insurance, an export development programme, and clarification and modernization of the legal and regulatory framework. For small-scale and micro-enterprises, which accounted for over 90 per cent of industrial employment, the strategy called for the development of municipal industrial complexes, incubator and business support services, and the promotion of leasing, venture capital and small credit schemes.

In the agricultural sector, the Authority's strategy aimed to support private-sector farming through improved legal, regulatory and institutional frameworks, to enhance the efficiency of traditional and domestic market-oriented agriculture, to enhance the efficiency and competitiveness of intensive and export-oriented agriculture, and to improve access to regional and international markets.

The Authority's strategy also called for promotion of the area as a tourism destination and integration into global marketing systems; the development of tourism and related industries; and improvement of training and human resources development. Constraints to the development of the private sector included a volatile security environment; lack of clear legal, regulatory and administrative frameworks; and, most importantly, the frequent closure of the territories, severely affecting access to supplies, capital and the labour market in Israel and preventing the transfer of Palestinian produce, products and services.

The United Nations would provide specialized advisory services, technical assistance and training to private, public and semi-public entities. Special attention would be given to the environmental soundness of the proposed development models; the creation of local capacities in the public and private sectors which could sustain development efforts and momentum; the utilization of local Palestinian capacities; and the incorporation of women and marginalized groups in mainstream economic development. The United Nations could also help formulate policies and strategies for human resources development and provide technical, managerial and entrepreneurial training, and would continue to implement a plan of action to develop a conducive environment for entrepreneurship and self-employment.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/252, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

UNDP action. By a decision of 29 March [E/1996/33 (dec. 96/19)], the UNDP Executive Board took note of the January report [DP/1996/15] of the Administrator on the Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People (PAPP) during 1995. The Board requested him to envisage increasing UNDP core resources allocated to the Programme under the future arrangements for 1997-1998, and encouraged the international donor community to continue its high level of contributions to PAPP and to take full advantage of its well-tested implementation and delivery capacities.

As reported by the Administrator [DP/1997/16/Add.3], expenditures under PAPP amounted to $52 million in 1996, compared to $37 million in 1995. The Programme paid increased attention to the expansion of its advocacy role in promoting sustainable human development themes, such as poverty elimination, sustainable livelihoods, gender in development and environmental management. In 1996, PAPP also launched major activities to enhance governance at the local, municipal and central levels of the Palestinian Authority.

UNDP/PAPP continued to support the UN Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories, serving as secretariat to 6 of the 12 sectoral working groups established in January 1995 to promote and coordinate activities of donors in various sectors, according to the priorities of the Palestinian Authority. They also facilitated coordination at the technical level.

Seminar on Assistance to Palestinian People.

In accordance with its mandate to promote international support for and assistance to the Palestinians during the transitional period, the Committee on Palestinian Rights organized a Seminar on Assistance to the Palestinian People, with the theme "Building the Palestinian Economy—Challenges and Prospects" (Cairo, Egypt, 21-23 May). The Seminar, attended by donor and other Governments, intergovernmental organizations, agencies and entities of the UN system, officials of the Palestinian Authority and NGOs, provided a framework for an exchange of views on various aspects of the current challenges facing the Palestinians in their efforts to rehabilitate and develop the economy and on the role of international assistance in that regard.

The Seminar addressed the following general themes: (a) building the Palestinian economy—challenges and prospects; (b) international assistance to the Palestinian people: experience and perspective; (c) trade sector; (d) the role of the financial institutions; and (e) the housing sector. An overview of the Seminar, including a summary of presentations made, was provided in a report of the Committee, transmitted to the Secretary-General in June [A/51/166-E/1996/67].

The Committee hoped that the Seminar had made a constructive contribution to international efforts aimed at promoting the economic and social development of the Palestinian society during the transitional phase. It also believed that ensuring the viability and advancement of the Palestinian economy was a key to a just and lasting peace in the region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/150.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/58 H of 20 December 1995,

Recalling also previous resolutions on the question,

Welcoming the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements of 1993 between the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, as well as the signing of the subsequent implementation agreements, including the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip of 1995,

Gravely concerned about the difficult economic and employment conditions facing the Palestinian people throughout the occupied territory,

Conscious of the urgent need for improvement in the economic and social infrastructure of the occupied territory and the living conditions of the Palestinian people,

Aware that development is difficult under occupation and best promoted in circumstances of peace and stability,

Noting, in the light of the recent developments in the peace process, the great economic and social challenges facing the Palestinian people and their leadership,

Conscious of the urgent necessity for international assistance to the Palestinian people, taking into account the Palestinian priorities,

Noting the convening of the United Nations Seminar on Assistance to the Palestinian People, "Building the Palestinian Economy—Challenges and Prospects", held at Cairo from 21 to 23 May 1996,

Stressing the need for the full engagement of the United Nations in the process of building Palestinian institutions and in providing broad assistance to the Palestinian people, including assistance in the fields of elections, police training and public administration,

Noting the appointment by the Secretary-General in June 1994 of the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories,

Welcoming the results of the Conference to Support Middle East Peace, convened in Washington, D.C., on 1 October 1993, and the establishment of the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee and the work being done by the World Bank as its secretariat, as well as the establishment of the consultative group and the convening in Paris, on 9 January 1996, of the Ministerial Conference on Economic Assistance to the Palestinian People,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his rapid response and efforts regarding assistance to the Palestinian people;
3. Also expresses its appreciation to the Member States, United Nations bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have provided and continue to provide assistance to the Palestinian people;

4. Stresses the importance of the work done by the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories and of the steps taken under the auspices of the Secretary-General to ensure the achievement of a coordinated mechanism for United Nations activities throughout the occupied territories;

5. Urges Member States, international financial institutions of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and regional and interregional organizations to extend, as rapidly and as generously as possible, economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people in order to assist in the development of the West Bank and Gaza, and to do so in close cooperation with the Palestine Liberation Organization and through official Palestinian institutions;

6. Calls upon relevant organizations and agencies of the United Nations system to intensify their assistance in response to the urgent needs of the Palestinian people in accordance with the Palestinian priorities set forth by the Palestinian Authority, with emphasis on national execution and capacity-building;

7. Urges Member States to open their markets to exports from the West Bank and Gaza and on the most favourable terms, consistent with appropriate trading rules;

8. Calls upon the international donor community to expedite the delivery of pledged assistance to the Palestinian people to meet their urgent needs;

9. Suggests the convening in 1997 of a United Nations-sponsored seminar on the Palestinian economy;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution, containing:

(a) An assessment of the assistance actually received by the Palestinian people;

(b) An assessment of the needs still unmet and specific proposals for responding effectively to them;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session, under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", the sub-item entitled "Assistance to the Palestinian people".

General Assembly resolution 51/150

18-nation draft (A/51/L.41); agenda item 21 (d).

Israel explained that its participation in the consensus on the resolution should not be construed as implying any position regarding the current status of the territories referred to as "the occupied territories". Also, its support did not carry any implication with regard to its position on the territories' permanent status which, in accordance with the 1993 Declaration of Principles, was to be negotiated between Israel and the PLO. Israel felt that the United Nations should increase its efforts and funding to assist the Palestinians, thus facilitating the successful implementation of the Declaration of Principles.

It welcomed the concerted efforts of Member States, international financial institutions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to aid in the development of the West Bank and Gaza, and it believed that economic and social progress could be advanced only through cooperation. Further, economic development and improved living conditions there would encourage peace and stability in the region.

The UN and Palestine refugees

In a year in which the Middle East peace process experienced important steps forward as well as some serious setbacks, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) continued to provide humanitarian services under difficult conditions and worsening financial constraints. As of 30 June 1996, more than 3.3 million refugees were registered with the Agency, an increase of 4.4 percent over the 3.17 million the previous year. They lived both in and outside camps in the West Bank (532,000) and the Gaza Strip (717,000), territories which were mostly under the administration of the Palestinian Authority, and in the host countries of Jordan (more than 1.35 million), Lebanon (352,000) and the Syrian Arab Republic (347,000). Of the refugee population, 38 per cent were age 15 or under, 53 per cent were between 16 and 59 years of age, and 9 per cent were age 60 or older.

UNRWA operations continued to aim to support the peace process while improving socio-economic conditions within the refugee community. Coordination and harmonization of services with the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank and Gaza was furthered. The transfer of UNRWA's core headquarters operations from Vienna to Gaza City was completed in July, with some units relocated to Amman, Jordan, where UNRWA programme departments and some support offices were already situated. Peter Hansen became Commissioner-General of UNRWA in January, succeeding Ihter Turkmen.

In the introduction to his annual report [A/51/13] covering the work of the Agency, the Commissioner-General stated that the period under review (1 July 1995-30 June 1996) had been a time of significant transition for UNRWA, with developments in a number of areas that would have ramifications for its operations in the short and longer term. The peace process had advanced with the redeployment of Israeli forces in the West Bank and the holding of Palestinian elections, only to face a setback following an escalation of violence in early 1996 and the imposition by the Israeli authorities of a prolonged closure of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. That and other security-related restrictions had interfered with Agency operations. UNRWA's financial position had also grown increasingly serious, with a fourth consecutive, now structural, deficit foreseen for 1996 and financing of its regular programmes coming under increasing strain. Finding a means to allow the Agency to continue to meet the essential needs of the refugees within acceptable terms was therefore an urgent necessity.

When it became clear that the Agency could not survive 1996 without additional funding, an extraordinary meeting of the UNRWA Advisory Commission, major donors, host Governments and the Palestinian Authority was called in September, which produced pledges of $15 million, including $11.25 million for the 1996 regular budget. Those funds were to be used to build up working capital reserves, which had been depleted, while programme priorities were re-evaluated.

Work of UNRWA

In his annual report, the Commissioner-General noted that the cumulative effect of deficits and austerity measures was to erode the Agency's ability to maintain its core functions in a manner consistent with its mandate and traditional role. In the absence of additional funding, the Agency was faced with a choice of either drifting towards insolvency, while allowing the level and quality of services to continue their inexorable decline, or making the difficult decision to withdraw entirely from certain core programmes.

In order to promote refugee self-reliance and ensure longer-term viability of services, UNRWA continued to emphasize community participation in its social development activities. Where appropriate and feasible, refugees were asked to make some form of contribution towards service delivery, for example, by contributing voluntarily towards the upkeep of schools or making co-payments for hospitalization. Local committees managed more than 60 per cent of the women's programme centres, as well as all community centres for rehabilitation of the disabled and youth activity centres, with the Agency providing financial and technical support and actively promoting self-management and financial sustainability.

Under its regular programmes of assistance, UNRWA provided essential education, health and relief and social services through a network of 637 schools, 8 training centres and 123 out-patient health facilities. Environmental health services included sewage and refuse disposal, wastewater management and provision of clean drinking water to more than 1 million refugees living in 59 camps. A special hardship programme provided over 179,000 of the neediest refugees with food rations, medical subsidies, shelter rehabilitation and other benefits. A range of social services was provided to more than 25,000 refugees through 125 women's programme, community rehabilitation and youth activity centres sponsored by UNRWA. An income-generation programme had by mid-1996 provided loans valued at $11 million to 2,545 refugee-run enterprises, achieving repayment rates of more than 95 per cent.

Peace Implementation Programme

UNRWA's commitment to supporting the peace process was most clearly demonstrated through its Peace Implementation Programme (PIP), which continued to grow rapidly because of generous donor support. By November 1996, $211 million had been pledged or contributed to PIP by donors, of which $177 million was for projects in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and $34 million for projects in Jordan, Lebanon and Syria. PIP projects reinforced and supported regular Agency programmes, with priority given to education and health projects.

PIP funding enabled UNRWA to embark on wide-ranging infrastructure development, including the construction and upgrading of schools, training, health and community centres and auxiliary facilities, as well as the European Gaza Hospital and College of Nursing and Allied Health Sciences, two special initiatives undertaken by UNRWA as a major contribution to the Palestinian health sector in Gaza. PIP also supported the rehabilitation of refugee shelters, provision of sewerage and drainage systems in camps, expansion of income-generation and job-creation initiatives, health services and after-school recreation programmes. Activities financed under PIP constituted a decisive contribution to the physical infrastructure and human resources available to the Palestinian Authority and the Palestine refugee community in the short term and for the future.

Foremost priority was given to projects in the education sector, where special contributions helped UNRWA to expand services at a rate commensurate with natural growth in the student population and to cater to the needs of returnee children in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. By mid-1996, the Agency had received funding to construct 43 schools and 78 additional classrooms in those fields. In Jordan, Lebanon and Syria donors focused on vocational training, contributing $2.4 million for projects to upgrade and expand UNRWA vocational and technical training centres. Projects to improve environmental health conditions for the refugee community continued to attract strong donor support, accounting for $29.6 million of total PIP pledges and contributions as at mid-1996. During the reporting period, contributions received mainly through PIP in the amount of $2.6 million for hospitalization expenses and medical supplies in Lebanon allowed the Agency to meet the growing need there for primary and secondary health care. The European Gaza Hospital project had received $41.2 million in pledges and contributions by mid-1996. In the relief and social services sector, shelter rehabilitation represented the largest project category, having received $31.8 million under PIP since October 1993.

To address socio-economic hardship resulting from the extended closure of the Gaza Strip, UNRWA launched an emergency job-creation programme in March with a PIP contribution. That provided temporary gainful employment to more than 2,700 individuals, who were paid $ 12 a day, over a period of five months, to help with refugee camp clean-up, insect eradication, shelter rehabilitation and various community services. A longer-term approach was the organization development initiative launched by UNRWA to develop the managerial skills of its Palestinian area staff in the West Bank and Gaza.

UNRWA continued to cooperate with and assist the Palestinian Authority in accordance with its mandate. At an informal meeting of donors and host Governments in Amman in May, UNRWA presented its strategy for harmonizing services and programmes in its five fields of operation. Host Governments and the Palestinian Authority were assured that harmonization would focus on complementarity, compatibility and cost-effectiveness in the interest of greater efficiency and was not related to the issue of the Agency's eventual dissolution after the fulfilment of its mandate in the future. One landmark in the harmonization process was the agreement reached between UNRWA, the Palestinian Authority and the EU as the major donor involved that the European Gaza Hospital would eventually become an integral part of the Palestinian Authority's health system. However, it was noted that some $22.5 million remained to be provided to fund the completion of construction and equipping of the hospital as well as its running costs.

Major service areas

Education

UNRWA continued to cooperate with and assist the Palestinian Authority in the education sector, taking a number of practical steps to harmonize further its education services with those provided by the Authority. During the 1995/96 school year, UNRWA schools in the West Bank and Gaza Strip used the Palestinian Authority's study plans for the basic education cycle, as well as the textbooks prescribed by the Authority. UNRWA staff participated in the Palestinian Authority's curriculum development committee, and the Agency was given a leading role in the revision of the Authority's vocational training study plan. UNRWA education staff provided assistance for in-service training courses organized by the Authority, and cooperated in career placement and guidance initiatives. The Agency also coordinated with the Palestinian Authority in accommodating children of returning refugee families in its schools, particularly in the Gaza Strip. All those efforts enhanced the compatibility and interdependence of the parallel education systems in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Education remained UNRWA's single largest area of activity, employing 14,863 persons, or 70 per cent of all Agency staff. The education programme's operating budget of $ 159.1 million for 1996 accounted for 47 per cent of the total budget. In the five fields of operation, UNRWA's 637 schools accommodated 421,854 pupils mainly in the elementary and preparatory cycles, an increase of 12,993 pupils over the previous reporting period, of whom 11,088 were in the Gaza Strip. While the bulk of the increase could be attributed to natural population growth, the movement of Palestinian families within the region and the consequent transfer of their children to UNRWA schools from non-Agency schools in their previous place of residence were significant factors in the Gaza Strip, the West Bank and Lebanon.

Agency schools followed host government curricula in Jordan, Lebanon and Syria, and used the Jordanian and Egyptian curricula adopted by the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, respectively. The Agency's basic education programme consisted of an elementary cycle of six years and a preparatory cycle of three or four years, depending on local norms; a three-year secondary cycle was offered at the single UNRWA secondary school, in Lebanon. The eighth biennial education work plan emphasized curriculum enrichment and in-service teacher training as priorities for 1996-1997.

Eight Agency vocational and technical training centres in the five fields serviced 4,624 refugees. Two-year vocational courses at the post-preparatory level were offered in the mechanical, electrical, building and metalworking trades, in addition to courses for women in clothing production and hairdressing and beauty care. Twenty-five two-year technical/semi-professional courses were offered at the post-secondary level, offering training in a variety of technical, paramedical and commercial skills.

Pre-service and in-service teacher training leading to a first-level university degree was provided through the Educational Sciences Faculty. The four-year pre-service programme, which granted university degrees in several teaching specializations, was offered at the Amman and Ramallah training centres to 690 secondary-school graduates, of whom 454 were women. The three-year in-service programme at the Amman Training Centre, which aimed to upgrade the qualifications of UNRWA teachers holding two-year teacher training diplomas to the first university degree level, had an enrolment of 564 Agency teachers, 182 of whom were women. In addition, 651 teachers, head teachers, school supervisors and vocational and technical training instructors benefited from the Agency's regular in-service teacher training programme.

In the West Bank and Gaza Strip, the academic performance of pupils remained a matter of concern as a result of disruptions to the Agency's education programme. Although education facilities were for the most part able to function normally throughout the year, restrictions on movement imposed by the Israeli authorities continued to affect education services. Closures often prevented UNRWA teachers and other education staff residing in the West Bank from reaching their place of work.

The Agency's education infrastructure continued to be affected by steadily increasing enrolment and limited possibilities for expansion. Chronic shortage of school buildings made it frequently necessary to accommodate two administratively separate schools in one building, working in morning and afternoon shifts. That practice shortened the school day, led to overuse of facilities and effectively deprived pupils of the benefit of extracurricular activities. The average classroom occupancy rate Agency-wide reached 42.7 in 1995/96. During the period under review, 41 school buildings were constructed to replace unsatisfactory rented premises, prefabricated structures and dilapidated premises that were beyond repair.

The Agency awarded scholarships to 943 Palestine refugee pupils, including 437 women, for studies at 48 universities in 12 countries in the region. Over 70 per cent of scholarship recipients were studying engineering, pharmacology or medicine, with other fields of study including dentistry, science, the arts and education.

Health

UNRWA's comprehensive primary health-care programmes included outpatient medical care, disease prevention and control, maternal and child health and family-planning services, delivered through the Agency network of 99 health centres and 22 health points—smaller facilities offering a wide range of health-care services on a part-time basis to refugees living outside camps—as well as at the 43-bed Qalqilia hospital in the West Bank. UNRWA health facilities handled some 6.6 million patient visits during the period under review. The health programme had an operating budget of $60 million in 1996, representing 18 per cent of the total Agency budget. The 3,476 staff employed in the health programme in all five fields of operation, the majority of whom were locally recruited Palestinians, represented 16 per cent of all Agency staff.

Harmonization of UNRWA health policies and services with those of the Palestinian Authority and rehabilitation and construction of essential health infrastructure in the Palestinian self-rule areas were top Agency priorities in 1996. UNRWA remained committed to contributing to the process of building a unified health-care system in the Palestinian self-rule areas within available means, and retained its focus on maintaining and expanding primary health-care facilities and completing major health development projects, including the European Gaza Hospital and the Gaza College of Nursing and Allied Health Sciences. The Agency also continued to play a leading role in the planning and coordination of viable and sustainable projects in the environmental health sector, including for sewerage, drainage and solid-waste management.

An agreement in principle was reached with the Palestinian Authority to avoid overlapping and duplication of health-care facilities and services, including mapping of primary health-care facilities to determine how resources could best be shared and the transfer of certain facilities newly constructed by UNRWA. Biddo health centre in the West Bank was the first installation to be handed over to the Palestinian Authority. Auja health point in the West Bank was slated for transfer, and agreement in principle was reached with respect to health facilities in the northern Gaza Strip. Those facilities, located outside camps, would be accessible to both refugees and non-refugees. Within the framework of a special donor-funded project, the Agency provided school health services to Palestinian Authority schools, organizing three school health teams to carry out medical examinations and immunization of children.

UNRWA also continued to provide essential health services to Palestine refugees in Jordan, Lebanon and Syria, and maintained close contact with host government health ministries. In early 1996, the Agency took part in national immunization campaigns for eradication of poliomyelitis throughout its area of operations in the context of a WHO regional strategy; a total of 200,564 refugee children under the age of five were immunized. Jordan and Syria provided UNRWA's annual requirements for hepatitis B vaccine as part of ongoing arrangements. UNICEF donated regular vaccines and cold-chain equipment in certain fields of operation.

Special care for non-communicable diseases such as diabetes mellitus and hypertension was fully integrated within health centre activities, as was specialist care covering paediatrics, obstetrics, gynaecology, cardiology, ophthalmology, and treatment for chest diseases and ear, nose and throat illnesses. Seventy health centres accommodated dental clinics offering comprehensive oral health services, with eight mobile teams providing community oral health care. In addition, 120 health centres included mother and child health clinics providing mainly preventive care, and 86 centres contained clinical laboratories. Thirteen physiotherapy clinics in Jordan, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip offered rehabilitation services to refugees in those fields.

With women of reproductive age and children below the age of five comprising two thirds of the registered Palestine refugee population, UNRWA placed special emphasis on maternal and child health and family-planning services as an integral part of its regular health programme.

Over 1 million refugees in 59 camps in the five fields of operation benefited from environmental health services provided by the Agency, which included sewage disposal, management of storm water run-off, provision of safe drinking water, collection and disposal of refuse and control of insect and rodent infestation.

Health education and promotion activities focused on promoting healthy lifestyles among the refugee population, especially young people. With the support of WHO, a school health curriculum on the prevention of HIV/AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases was implemented. An education package was prepared with the objective of preventing the onset of tobacco use among schoolchildren.

Relief and social services

UNRWA activities within the relief and social services sector were carried out in coordination and cooperation with local authorities and NGOs, with joint initiatives in specific areas such as training of community workers and volunteers. The relief and social services programme had an operating budget of $36.6 million in 1996, accounting for 11 per cent of the total Agency budget, with 749 staff.

In the West Bank and Gaza Strip, the Agency sought to deepen its working relationship with the Palestinian Authority departments for social affairs, youth and sports, and housing, through information-sharing, input into the Authority's policy formulation, programme planning and project development, and support for community-managed programmes.

The Agency continued to develop a unified registration system, a project begun in 1993 to improve access to and the security of data on refugees and to facilitate programme planning and management. The system comprised a database of all registered individuals and families, family files containing key documentation from the pre-1948 period to the present, and a socio-economic profile of individuals and families enrolled in the special hardship programme. The information was to be electronically integrated when the project was completed. A pilot project was developed for scanning hard-copy family files. With the endorsement of the Palestinian Authority, a research organization developed a proposal to conduct a feasibility study on the preservation and organization of UNRWA archives and refugee registration data and documents.

Through its special hardship programme, the Agency provided material and financial aid to refugee families without a male adult medically fit to earn an income and without other identifiable means of financial support sufficient to cover food, shelter and other basic needs. As a result of stricter application of eligibility criteria, the number of special hardship cases declined Agency-wide in both absolute and relative terms during the period under review, from 181,437 at 30 June 1995, representing 5.7 per cent of the registered refugee population, to 179,178 at 30 June 1996, representing 5.4 per cent. Deteriorating socio-economic conditions, including unemployment, contributed indirectly to demand for assistance by inducing nuclear families, which might have been able to rely on the support of income-earners in the extended family, to seek special hardship assistance instead. The percentage of refugees enrolled in the programme continued to be highest in the Gaza Strip and Lebanon and lowest in Jordan.

Assistance provided under the special hardship programme included food rations distributed every two months, increased subsidies for hospital care, cash assistance on an ad hoc basis to families facing extreme difficulty, eligibility for Agency shelter rehabilitation and poverty alleviation initiatives, and preferential access to UNRWA training centres.

UNRWA continued to the extent permitted by available resources to address the urgent housing needs of the poorer segment of the refugee population, which were most acute in the Gaza Strip and Lebanon. The Agency repaired or reconstructed 2,556 shelters belonging to special hardship families and other impoverished refugees during the reporting period, of which 2,307 were in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Many shelters were rehabilitated under a self-help programme. The Agency assisted with a survey of housing and related infrastructure in refugee camps in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, to be shared with the Palestinian Authority upon completion in late 1996.

Community-based programmes

Further progress was achieved under UNRWA's five-year plan (1995-2000) to promote community management and financial sustainability in community-based services for women, youth and persons with disabilities. The focus was on institution-building and the acquisition of independent revenue sources for the 125 Agency-sponsored community centres which served as the main conduit for those services. By mid-1996, 42 of the 68 women's programme centres, as well as all 30 community rehabilitation centres and 27 youth activity centres, were managed by local committees, with UNRWA continuing to provide financial and technical support. Income-generating projects had been established at most centres and were being planned at others, in order to generate revenue to defray operating costs, provide income to participants, and demonstrate that disadvantaged groups could be successfully integrated into viable socio-economic enterprises. UNRWA staff and community representatives were trained in the skills necessary for self-management of the centres, including the structure and functioning of governing boards and managing committees, development of organizational constitutions and by-laws, programme and administrative planning and management, and budget preparation and accounting. The Agency also worked to promote linkages between the centres and local NGOs. The Palestinian Women's Initiative Fund supported the establishment of a food production unit in Jordan and literacy classes in Lebanon, with production units financed by the Fund in previous years continuing to operate and expand.

Income-generation

UNRWA reported that its income-generation programme continued to grow in size and scope, expanding its capital base and loan portfolio and undertaking new credit-providing and training initiatives, particularly in the Gaza Strip. Established in 1991 in response to deteriorating socio-economic conditions and rising unemployment among Palestine refugees, the programme aimed at creating employment, generating income and supporting sustainable business enterprises within the refugee community. The programme targeted small-scale and micro-enterprises in the formal and informal sectors of the economy producing goods for sale locally and abroad. Such enterprises normally had limited access to credit, owing to the inability of most small entrepreneurs to meet the collateral requirements of formal banking institutions. By using other guarantee mechanisms, the income-generation programme sought to make finance capital available at reasonable interest rates for the expansion of existing enterprises and the establishment of new ones, actively encouraging the participation of women.

By mid-1996, the field-based programmes had issued loans valued at $11 million to a total of 2,545 enterprises and accumulated a combined capital base of $11 million, creating or saving an estimated 4,000 jobs. The income-generation programme was distinct from the income-generation activities carried out under the Agency's poverty-alleviation programme, which sought to assist refugee families below the poverty line to rise above it and become self-reliant, as well as to help Agency-sponsored community centres to become financially sustainable.

The leading field-based income-generation programme was in the Gaza Strip, where four separate sub-programmes were operating. The largest was the small-scale enterprise programme, which offered loans for capital investment to new and expanding enterprises and working capital to established enterprises. Special attention was devoted to the informal sector of the economy, where an increasing number of men and women were compelled to work as a result of diminishing employment opportunities in Israel and locally. In February 1996, the Agency broadened its credit activities in the Gaza Strip with the establishment of a micro-enterprise credit programme, which aimed to provide working capital loans to formal and informal enterprises.

As part of the income-generation programme, the Agency also operated revolving loan funds for small-scale enterprises in Jordan, Lebanon and the West Bank. Steps were taken to restructure and revitalize the West Bank programme during the reporting period. It was decided to discontinue the bank guarantee programme for business development as outstanding loans were recovered, and to establish in its place a small-scale enterprise portfolio similar to that in Gaza.

Other matters

Refugees in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Jointly with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the Agency undertook three missions during the reporting period to assess the situation of Palestinians required to leave the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya who were encamped at the Salloum checkpoint on the Libyan-Egyptian border, most of whom had arrived there in September and October 1995 following the termination of their work contracts and right of residence in Libya. In addition to delivering medical supplies and equipment for use in the Salloum camp, UNRWA provided emergency assistance, including blankets, supplementary food items and medical care to 36 Palestinians stranded at the Rafah crossing between Egypt and the Gaza Strip, and followed up on several individual requests for family reunification. The Agency remained concerned at the living conditions and health status of some 150 persons still at Salloum at the close of the reporting period, and continued to monitor the situation together with UNHCR.

Relocation of UNRWA headquarters

UNRWA entered a new phase in its history in 1996 with the return of its headquarters to the area of operations, after 18 years in Vienna, in accordance with a decision of the Secretary-General, endorsed by the General Assembly in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 660] and 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 665]. The relocation was envisaged as a way of demonstrating the commitment of the United Nations to the peace process, to underline its confidence in the Palestinian Authority and to contribute to the economic development of the Gaza Strip. The move was expected to result in savings for UNRWA and facilitate interaction with its principal interlocutors and among its constituent units. Preparations for the final relocation began in earnest in February 1996, and in July, the Office of the Commissioner-General and other key departments were moved from Vienna to a new headquarters in Gaza City. Other offices were moved to Agency headquarters in Amman, where the three main programme departments and a number of support units were situated. A total of 81 headquarters staff were transferred to Gaza, and 6 to Amman. It was decided to reconstitute UNRWA's Advisory Commission in Amman.

General Assembly resolutions related to Palestine refugees

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted seven resolutions relating to Palestine refugees: assistance to Palestine refugees (51/124); financing of UNRWA (51/125); displaced persons (51/126); scholarships for higher education and vocational training (51/127); operations of UNRWA (51/128); Palestine refugees' properties and their revenues (51/129); and the proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees (51/130).

In a 3 May note verbale, reproduced in two reports of the Secretary-General, on persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 hostilities [A/51/369] and on revenues from Palestine refugee properties [A/51/371], Israel recalled that its position on the resolutions on Palestine refugees had been set forth in successive annual replies, the latest of which was included in a 1995 report by the Secretary-General [A/50/451].

Israel stated that while the number of resolutions regarding UNRWA had been reduced in past years, their content remained occupied with political issues irrelevant to the Agency's work and detached from the new reality of the peace process. While Israel believed that UNRWA could play an important role in promoting the social and economic advancement foreseen in the agreements between Israel and the PLO, and accordingly looked forward to continuing cooperation with the Agency, it considered it essential that the Assembly consolidate the UNRWA resolutions into one directly related to the Agency's humanitarian tasks.

Advisory Commission on UNRWA.. By a letter of 22 September to the Commissioner-General, included in his report, the Advisory Commission of UNRWA confirmed its support for the Middle East peace process, but voiced concern over the slow pace of developments in that process and the failure to achieve a just, lasting and comprehensive peace, as well as over the lack of progress in finding a just solution to the Palestine refugee issue. While expressing great appreciation for the Agency's programmes as well as for the host Governments' services to Palestine refugees, it voiced dismay at the negative impact on its operations of measures imposed by Israel, particularly the worsening of the socio-economic conditions of Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank. The Commission viewed with extreme gravity the structural deficit facing the Agency and stated that if immediate and comprehensive solutions were not found to its financial problems, the negative implications would be critical and dangerous. Any actual or perceived weakening in the support traditionally given by the international community to the Palestine refugees, especially through UNRWA, would have very negative consequences. The Commission urged the Agency to further its efforts to develop appropriate strategies for fund-raising and noted with interest the management review and organizational changes introduced by the Commissioner-General.

General aspects

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/124.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/28 A of 6 December 1995 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996,

Welcoming the signature in Washington on 13 September 1993 by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the people of Palestine, of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements and the subsequent implementation agreements, and also the signature of the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip in Washington on 28 September 1995,

Encouraging the Multilateral Working Group on Refugees of the Middle East peace process to continue its important work,

Welcoming the completion of the transfer of the headquarters of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to its area of operations,

1. Notes with regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees, as provided for in paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III), has not yet been effected and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and to private organizations for their valuable work in assisting refugees;

3. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III), and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but no later than 1 September 1997;

4. Notes the significant success of the Peace Implementation Programme of the Agency since the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, and stresses the importance that contributions to this Programme are not at the expense of the General Fund;

5. Welcomes strengthened cooperation between the Agency and the World Bank and other specialized agencies, and calls upon the Agency to make a decisive contribution towards giving a fresh impetus to the economic and social stability of the occupied territories;

6. Urges all Member States to extend and expedite aid and assistance with a view to the economic and social development of the Palestinian people and the occupied territories;

7. Reiterates its concern regarding the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the Agency, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

8. Commends the efforts of the Commissioner-General to move towards budgetary transparency and internal efficiency, and hopes that such moves will continue;

9. Notes with profound concern that the structural deficit problem confronting the Agency portends an almost certain decline in the living conditions of the Palestine refugees and that it, therefore, has possible consequences for the peace process;

10. Calls upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, including the costs of moving the headquarters to Gaza, urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly, and encourages contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions.

The Assembly, also on 13 December, adopted resolution 51/128.

Operations of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 194(III) of 11 December 1948, 212(III) of 19 November 1948, 302(IV) of 8 December 1949 and all subsequent related resolutions,

Recalling also the relevant Security Council resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996,

Taking note of the letter dated 22 September 1996 from the Chairman of the Advisory Commission of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East addressed to the Commissioner-General, contained in the report of the Commissioner-General,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General submitted in pursuance of its resolutions 48/40 E, 48/40 H and 48/40 J of 10 December 1993 and 49/35 C of 9 December 1994,

Recalling Articles 100, 104 and 105 of the Charter of the United Nations and the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations,

Affirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Aware of the fact that Palestine refugees have, for over four decades, lost their homes, lands and means of livelihood,

Also aware of the continuing needs of Palestine refugees throughout the occupied Palestinian territory and in the other fields of operation, namely, in Lebanon, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic,

Further aware of the valuable work done by the refugee affairs officers of the Agency in providing protection to the Palestinian people, in particular Palestine refugees,

Deeply concerned about the critical financial situation of the Agency and its effect on the continuity of provision of necessary Agency services to the Palestine refugees, including the emergency-related programmes,

Aware of the work of the new Peace Implementation Programme of the Agency,

Welcoming the signing in Washington on 13 September 1993 of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, and the subsequent implementation agreements, including the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip signed in Washington on 28 September 1995,

Taking note of the agreement reached on 24 June 1994, embodied in an exchange of letters between the Agency and the Palestine Liberation Organization,

Aware of the establishment of a working relationship between the Advisory Commission of the Agency and the Palestine Liberation Organization in accordance with General Assembly decision 48/417 of 10 December 1993,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, as well as to all the staff of the Agency, for their tireless efforts and valuable work;

2. Also expresses its appreciation to the Advisory Commission of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, and requests it to continue its efforts and to keep the General Assembly informed of its activities, including the full implementation of decision 48/417;

3. Welcomes the completion of the transfer of the headquarters of the Agency to Gaza and the signing of the Headquarters Agreement between the Agency and the Palestinian Authority;

4. Acknowledges the support of the host Government and the Palestine Liberation Organization for the Agency in the discharge of its duties;

5. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and to abide scrupulously by its provisions;

6. Also calls upon Israel to abide by Articles 100, 104 and 105 of the Charter of the United Nations and the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations with regard to the safety of the personnel of the Agency and the protection of its institutions and the safeguarding of the security of the facilities of the Agency in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem;

7. Calls once again upon the Government of Israel to compensate the Agency for damages to its property and facilities resulting from actions by the Israeli side;

8. Requests the Commissioner-General to proceed with the issuance of identification cards for Palestine refugees and their descendants in the occupied Palestinian territory;

9. Notes that the new context created by the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization and subsequent implementation agreements has had major consequences for the activities of the Agency, which is henceforth called upon, in close cooperation with the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories, the specialized agencies and the World Bank, to continue to contribute towards the development of economic and social stability in the occupied territory;

10. Notes also that the functioning of the Agency remains essential in all fields of operation;

11. Notes further the significant success of the Peace Implementation Programme of the Agency;

12. Urges all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to continue and to increase their contributions to the Agency so as to ease current financial constraints and to support the Agency in maintaining the provision of the most basic and effective assistance to the Palestine refugees.

Displaced persons

The Secretary-General reported [A/51/369] in September 1996 on compliance with General Assembly resolution 50/28 C [YUN1995, p.666], calling for the accelerated return of all persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967. He said that since UNRWA was not involved in arrangements for either refugees or displaced persons not registered with it, Agency information was based on requests by returning registered refugees for the transfer of their entitlements to their areas of return. The Agency would not necessarily be aware of the return of any registered refugees who did not request the provision of services. Displaced refugees known by UNRWA to have returned to the West Bank and Gaza Strip since June 1967 numbered about 15,280. Its records indicated that, between 1 July 1995 and 30 June 1996, 784 refugees had returned to the West Bank and 329 to the Gaza Strip. Some of the refugees might not have been displaced in 1967, but might be family members of a displaced registered refugee whom they either had accompanied on return or had joined later.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2252(ES-V) of 4 July 1967, 2341 B (XXII) of 19 December 1967 and all subsequent related resolutions,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 237(1967) of 14 June 1967 and 259(1968) of 27 September 1968,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in pursuance of its resolution 50/28 C of 6 December 1995,

Taking note also of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996,

Concerned about the continuing human suffering resulting from the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities,

Taking note of the relevant provisions of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, signed in Washington on 13 September 1993 by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, with regard to the modalities for the admission of persons displaced in 1967, and concerned that the process agreed upon has not yet been effected,

1. Reaffirms the right of all persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

2. Expresses the hope for an accelerated return of displaced persons through the mechanism agreed upon by the parties in article XII of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements;

3. Endorses, in the meanwhile, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, as far as practicable, on an emergency basis, and as a temporary measure, to persons in the area who are currently displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities;

4. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously to the Agency and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned for the above purposes;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly before its fifty-second session on the progress made with regard to the implementation of the present resolution.

Education, training and scholarships

In September, the Secretary-General reported [A/51/370] on responses to the General Assembly's 1995 appeal [GA res. 50/28 D] to augment special allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestine refugees, for which UNRWA acted as recipient and trustee.

In the 1995/96 academic year, Japan offered 10 vocational fellowships for study in that country to Palestine refugees in UNRWA's employ. Under grants of $400,000 made annually between 1992 and 1994, and $500,000 in 1995, some 300 Palestinian students were participating in the UNRWA university scholarships programme during 1995/96. Contributions from Switzerland in 1995 totalling $256,000 enabled 221 Palestinians to pursue university studies. UNESCO had offered five new scholarship awards to Palestinian students since October 1995, and the United World Colleges provided four scholarships in 1996.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/127.

Offers by Member States of grants and scholarships for higher education, including vocational training, for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 212(III) of 19 November 1948 on assistance to Palestine refugees,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, 36/146 H of 16 December 1981, 37/120 D of 16 December 1982, 38/83 D of 15 December 1983, 39/99 D of 14 December 1984, 40/165 D of 16 December 1985, 41/69 D of 3 December 1986, 42/69 D of 2 December 1987, 43/57 D of 6 December 1988, 44/47 D of 8 December 1989, 45/73 D of 11 December 1990, 46/46 D of 9 December 1991, 47/69 D of 14 December 1992, 48/40 D of 10 December 1993, 49/35 D of 9 December 1994 and 50/28 D of 6 December 1995,

Cognizant of the fact that the Palestine refugees have, for the last four decades, lost their homes, lands and means of livelihood,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996,

1. Urges all States to respond to the appeal in its resolution 32/90 F of 13 December 1977 and reiterated in subsequent relevant resolutions in a manner commensurate with the needs of Palestine refugees for higher education, including vocational training;

2. Strongly appeals to all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to augment the special allocations for grants and scholarships to Palestine refugees, in addition to their contributions to the regular budget of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

3. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations that responded favourably to its resolutions 41/69 D, 42/69 D, 43/57 D, 44/47 D, 45/73 D, 46/46 D, 47/69 D, 48/40 D, 49/35 D and 50/28 D;

4. Invites the relevant specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue, within their respective spheres of competence, to extend assistance for higher education to Palestine refugee students;

5. Appeals to all States, specialized agencies and the United Nations University to contribute generously to the Palestinian universities in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including, in due course, the proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees;

6. Appeals to all States, specialized agencies and other international bodies to contribute towards the establishment of vocational training centres for Palestine refugees;

7. Requests the Agency to act as the recipient and trustee for the special allocations for grants and scholarships and to award them to qualified Palestine refugee candidates;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds"

In keeping with General Assembly resolution 50/28 G [YUN 1995, p. 668], the Secretary-General reported [A/51/476] in October 1996 on the proposal to establish a university for Palestine refugees at Jerusalem. First considered by the Assembly in 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 444], it had been the subject of annual reports by the Secretary-General.

To assist in the preparation of a feasibility study and at the Secretary-General's request, the Rector of the United Nations University asked expert Mihaly Simai to visit the area and meet with the competent Israeli officials. By a note verbale of 6 September, the Secretary-General requested Israel to facilitate the expert's visit.

The Secretary-General reported it had not been possible to complete the study as planned.

Israel replied on 12 September that its position remained unchanged. The sponsors of the resolution on the proposed university sought to exploit higher education for political purposes extraneous to genuine academic pursuits. Accordingly, Israel was of the opinion that the proposed visit would serve no useful purpose.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/130.

University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 G of 16 December 1981, 37/120 C of 16 December 1982, 38/83 K of 15 December 1983, 39/99 K of 14 December 1984, 40/165 D and K of 16 December 1985, 41/69 K of 3 December 1986, 42/69 K of 2 December 1987, 43/57 J of 6 December 1988, 44/47 J of 8 December 1989, 45/73 J of 11 December 1990, 46/46 J of 9 December 1991, 47/69 J of 14 December 1992, 48/40 I of 10 December 1993, 49/35 G of 9 December 1994 and 50/28 G of 6 December 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996,

1. Emphasizes the need for strengthening the educational system in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 5 June 1967, including Jerusalem, and specifically the need for the establishment of the proposed university;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take all necessary measures for establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds", in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, giving due consideration to the recommendations consistent with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate in the implementation of the present resolution and to remove the hindrances that it has put in the way of establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds";

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Property rights

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/28 F [YUN 1995, p. 669], the Secretary-General in September reported [A/51/371] on steps taken to protect and administer Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel and to establish a fund for income derived therefrom, on behalf of the rightful owners. He indicated that he had transmitted the resolution to Israel and all other Member States, requesting information on any steps taken or envisaged with regard to its implementation. Israel had set out its position in a note of 3 May, referring to all resolutions adopted under the agenda item (see above).

The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in its fiftieth report [A/51/439] covering the period from 1 September 1995 to 31 August 1996, stated that it had nothing new to report since the submission of its report last year [YUN 1995, p. 669].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/129.

Palestine refugees' properties and their revenues

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 194(III) of 11 December 1948, 36/146 C of 16 December 1981 and all its subsequent resolutions on the question,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General in pursuance of resolution 50/28 F of 6 December 1995,

Taking note also of the report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine for the period from 1 September 1995 to 31 August 1996,

Recalling that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the principles of international law uphold the principle that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his or her property,

Recalling in particular its resolution 394(V) of 14 December 1950, in which it directed the Conciliation Commission, in consultation with the parties concerned, to prescribe measures for the protection of the rights, property and interests of the Palestine Arab refugees,

Taking note of the completion of the programme of identification and evaluation of Arab property, as announced by the Conciliation Commission in its twenty-second progress report, and of the fact that the Land Office had a schedule of Arab owners and file of documents defining the location, area and other particulars of Arab property,

Recalling that in the framework of the Middle East peace process the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Government of Israel agreed, in the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements of 13 September 1993, to commence negotiations on permanent status issues, including the important issue of the refugees, and calling for the commencement of those negotiations,

1. Reaffirms that the Palestine Arab refugees are entitled to their property and to the income derived therefrom, in conformity with the principles of justice and equity;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps, in consultation with the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, for the protection of Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel and to preserve and modernize the existing records;

3. Calls once more upon Israel to render all facilities and assistance to the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Calls upon all the parties concerned to provide the Secretary-General with any pertinent information in their possession concerning Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel that would assist him in the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Urges the Palestinian and Israeli sides, as agreed between them, to deal with the important issue of Palestine refugees' properties and their revenues in the framework of the final status negotiations of the Middle East peace process;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

UNRWA financing

UNRWA operations were financed almost entirely by voluntary contributions, which accounted for 95 per cent of income towards the regular budget. Most contributions were received in cash, although 8 per cent was received in kind, mainly as donations of food commodities for distribution to needy refugees. Five per cent was received from other UN bodies to cover staffing costs, including funding of 92 international posts by the United Nations during the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996, and assistance from UNESCO and WHO in the staffing of the education and health programmes.

The Agency's financial situation continued to worsen, with an $8.4 million deficit recorded in 1995 and a fourth consecutive budget deficit expected in 1996. Those deficits reflected the inability of some donors to increase their contributions to match the pace of UNRWA's annual budget growth of 5 per cent, the minimum increase possible to maintain services in the face of natural population growth and inflation. Also, unexpected needs in the area of operations required UNRWA to utilize funds in excess of budgeted ceilings. Contributing to the latter tendency were the increasing demands placed on the Agency within the context of the rapidly changing political environment in the region. Moreover, with the agreement of its donors, the Agency began to include in its 1996-1997 budget a provision of $12.7 million a year towards the $127 million in entitlements payable to staff upon UNRWA's eventual dissolution. In 1996, delays and shortfalls in funding for the relocation of UNRWA headquarters and the European Gaza Hospital project also put pressure on UNRWA finances by requiring advances from the General Fund.

The deficit reduced the Agency's working capital by more than half, from $22.6 million at the beginning of the biennium to $8.2 million at its close. Towards the end of the period, the Agency was faced with an increasingly precarious cash position, with available reserves barely sufficient to meet routine payments and a possibility that the Agency would run out of cash in the months ahead.

Faced with a deficit that had become structural, UNRWA exerted strenuous efforts toward bringing income and expenditure into line. The bulk of austerity measures imposed in previous years, totalling some $14.2 million, were carried over, and $12 million in salary increases for area staff was deferred. In February 1996, UNRWA effected a 6.4 per cent reduction in costs on the 92 Agency posts funded by the United Nations in 1996-1997, producing $1.3 million in savings over the biennium.

In May 1996, a net budget deficit of $ 16 million was projected for 1996, exclusive of the $12.7 million provision for termination indemnities and the $ 14.2 million required to reverse the austerity measures first introduced in 1993. By mid-1996, the Agency faced an estimated deficit of $45.2 million, comprising a core deficit of $9.3 million, a cost of $23.2 million to reverse austerity measures and the $ 12.7 million for termination indemnities. In response, the Agency introduced a further $9 million in austerity measures as of June 1996, including a freeze in recruitment of certain posts and cuts in the budget allocations for vehicles, computers, equipment and supplies, construction, maintenance, hospitalization, medical supplies and temporary labour. In the absence of additional funding to redress the imbalance between income and expenditure, the Agency said it was faced with the choice of either drifting towards insolvency while allowing the level and quality of services to decline, or withdraw entirely from certain core programmes or other areas.

The Commissioner-General said that maintaining the status quo regarding services could technically lead the Agency into bankruptcy. The General Assembly in resolution 50/28 A had noted [YUN 1995, p. 665] with profound concern that the structural deficit problem confronting UNRWA portended an almost certain decline in the living conditions of the Palestine refugees and therefore had possible consequences for the peace process. He felt it was critical for the Agency, donors and host Governments to re-examine priorities and explore options and alternatives to resolve the situation. An extraordinary meeting was held in Amman on 23 September 1996 to address those issues. At the meeting, attended by representatives of 27 major donors, the host Governments (Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Syrian Arab Republic) and the PLO/Palestinian Authority, pledges were made in the amount of some $ 15 million, of which $ 11.25 million was for UNRWA's General Fund budget for 1996. Other donors promised additional support, subject to parliamentary approval. The Commissioner-General reported that those additional funds would enable the Agency to meet its minimum obligations for the year.

Special report on financial crisis. To underscore the seriousness of UNRWA's financial situation, the Secretary-General in October forwarded to the General Assembly a special report from the UNRWA Commissioner-General [A/51/495], with an appeal for adequate funding to bridge the budget deficit projected for 1997 and to deal with the structural deficit.

The Commissioner-General outlined the causes and effects of the deficit and the measures taken to deal with it. He noted that a lack of sufficient funds had prevented the Agency from expanding services at a rate commensurate with the growth in the refugee population, while successive rounds of belt-tightening were progressively downgrading the level of services and giving rise to longer-term costs. He advised that austerity measures had not produced savings; at best, they effected short-term deficit reductions while leaving behind costly long-term problems.

When Middle East peace negotiations were in full swing, the Commissioner-General noted, the international community had recognized the importance of demonstrating the concrete benefits of peace and had generously responded to PIP. Now that the peace process had reached a more delicate stage, it was all the more important that the refugees were able to sustain their hopes for a successful outcome. There were no more austerity measures UNRWA could implement, as further steps would have to lead to actual cuts and shutdowns in services; new initiatives, such as harmonization of services, would have to be slowed. Responsibility for the provision of adequate resources rested firmly and squarely with the international community.

The Commissioner-General outlined three options faced by the Agency in the final quarter of 1996: financing of the deficit by the international community so that services might continue uninterrupted and possibly restore some programmes cut for austerity reasons; agreement by the international community to cuts and reductions in Agency programmes; or continuation of the Agency's work until available funds were used up, at which point UNRWA would declare insolvency and fold.

On the basis of the encouraging results of the Amman extraordinary meeting, which would enable UNRWA to avoid shutting down essential programmes and allow it to enter 1997 with enough money to cover a few weeks of operations, it was hoped that the international community would make the necessary funds available for 1997 which, together with internal reform processes, would eliminate the structural deficit, establish a more rational balance between income and needs, and enable services to be delivered to the refugees at acceptable levels.

Working Group on financing. The Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA held two meetings in 1996, on 13 September and 14 October. In its report to the General Assembly [A/51/509], the Group noted that by the end of the 1994-1995 biennium, UNRWA's recorded financial balance for the year showed expenditures of $546.6 million on the Agency's regular programmes, against income from contributions of $532.2 million, leaving an adjusted deficit of $14.4 million. Those shortfalls reduced the Agency's working capital from $22.6 million at the beginning of the biennium to $8.2 million at its close. In addition, some $28.4 million had been spent on EMLOT (extraordinary measures for Lebanon and the occupied territory) activities in 1994-1995, against receipts of $20.8 million, leaving a deficit of $7.6 million, which had to be funded out of working capital. The Agency also operated a number of "extrabudgetary" accounts. PIP had produced a total of $192.6 million in pledges and contributions from its inception in October 1993 to June 1996; it superseded the Expanded Programme of Assistance (established in 1988 to improve living conditions in camps and upgrade UNRWA infrastructure) which would be phased out as projects were completed. Other special project accounts existed for the European Gaza Hospital and relocation of UNRWA headquarters. As at June 1996, the Agency had received pledges and contributions of $41.2 million towards the hospital project and $9.6 million towards the headquarters move.

In view of the seriousness of the financial crisis facing the Agency by the latter half of the year, the Working Group, in informal consultations on 18 September, agreed on a statement which the Chairman forwarded to the Commissioner-General in time for the extraordinary meeting of major donor and host Governments in Amman. In the statement, the Group stressed the following: the deficits facing UNRWA in recent years had become structural, rather than temporary, in nature and therefore must be addressed in terms of their impact on the services which the Agency was mandated to provide; the situation facing UNRWA in the last quarter of 1996 was untenable because its cash reserves had been depleted, and replenishment could only be effected by immediate payment of pledges already received; future deficits could no longer be absorbed because the Agency's working capital would have been exhausted by the end of 1996; UNRWA would start the 1997 budget year having reduced its budget volume through accumulated austerity measures and other reductions, depleted its financial reserves and lowered overhead costs to their practical limits, with the projected cumulative gap between expenditure and income inevitably leading to ruptures in services; as the Commissioner-General could not incur commitments beyond the level of the financial resources made available through contributions and confirmed pledges, the Agency's ability to continue delivering its services in the remainder of the 1996-1997 budget biennium and beyond was absolutely limited to the level of funding provided, and expenditures therefore had to be kept within the limits of funds actually made available. The Working Group strongly urged those present at the Amman meeting to take serious and concrete steps to provide the financial resources needed by UNRWA to carry out essential programmes and avoid creating an even more serious crisis with potentially dangerous and far-reaching implications for the Palestine refugees and the entire Middle East region.

In general, the Working Group was extremely concerned about the financial crisis facing the Agency at the end of 1996, particularly the depletion of its working capital and the emergence of a structural deficit which could lead to major qualitative or quantitative reductions in programmes. Due to the extraordinary efforts of the Commissioner-General to mobilize the donor community, sufficient financial support was forthcoming to get the Agency through the end of the year. However, unless firm guarantees were secured of continued adequate funding to maintain Agency programmes at their traditional level and allow the restoration of activities curtailed or suspended through austerity cuts over the past three years, the crisis was expected to continue. The Working Group felt that the General Assembly had to be more actively engaged in seeing to it that UNRWA was given the resources it needed to fulfil its mandate.

The Group commended the Commissioner-General and his staff for their tireless fundraising efforts, particularly for organizing the Amman meeting. The Group joined the Commissioner-General in expressing the hope that the example set by those donors would be followed by others. It shared his concern that the core of UNRWA services to Palestine refugees were increasingly threatened due to the chronic budget-deficit problem and that the Agency had been unable to raise the funds needed to restore cuts and other austerity measures. As the Commissioner-General had pointed out, while every effort was being made to streamline and rationalize UNRWA operations to avoid reductions in services, cost-saving measures could only be taken so far. If funding shortfalls continued, the Agency would have no choice but to effect substantive reductions in programme activities. In the coming years, UNRWA would have to identify and attract the resources required to serve a refugee population whose needs were growing by 5 per cent a year through a combination of natural growth, inflation and new registrations. If the current chronic structural deficits continued, the level and quality of UNRWA services would more rapidly decline, the ramifications of which were highly political and potentially destabilizing. In the light of the Agency's unique role in the region, any deterioration or reduction in services would be immediately interpreted as reflecting a decreased commitment by the international community to the resolution of the Palestine refugee problem.

The Group urged Governments to continue contributing generously and to consider additional contributions to finance deficit amounts so that services could continue uninterrupted and, if possible, services cut for austerity reasons could be restored, and to ensure support of emergency-related and special programmes, as well as PIP, the European Gaza Hospital project and the relocation of headquarters, without diverting contributions to the Agency's regular programmes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/125.

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791 (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 50/28 B of 6 December 1995 and the previous resolutions on this question,

Recalling also its decision 36/462 of 16 March 1982, by which it took note of the special report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

Having considered the report of the Working Group,

Taking into account the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996,

Deeply concerned about the critical financial situation of the Agency, which has affected and affects the continuation of the provision of the necessary Agency services to the Palestine refugees, including the emergency-related programmes,

Emphasizing the continuing need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at the current minimum level, the activities of the Agency, as well as to enable the Agency to carry out essential construction,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the financial security of the Agency;

2. Takes note with approval of the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in cooperation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, for the financing of the Agency for a further period of one year;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the Working Group for the conduct of its work.

Peacekeeping operations

UN peacekeeping operations were born in the Middle East with the establishment in 1948 of the Organization's first and oldest operation—the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), originally set up to monitor the cease-fire called for by the Security Council in May 1948 in newly partitioned Palestine. Its unarmed military observers have fulfilled changing mandates—from supervising the original four armistice agreements between Israel and its Arab neighbours—Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic—to observing and monitoring other ceasefires, as well as performing a number of additional tasks.

In 1996, UNTSO personnel worked with the two remaining UN peacekeeping forces in the Middle East—its Observer Group Golan (OGG) with the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Golan Heights, and the Observer Group Lebanon (OGL) with the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL). UNTSO observers in 1996 also maintained a presence in Egypt, with headquarters in Ismailia. The UNTSO liaison office in Gaza was closed in April 1996.

Lebanon

Tension in southern Lebanon intensified in February and March 1996, with escalating attacks by Islamic fundamentalists against Israeli targets, culminating in April in more than two weeks of heavy Israeli bombardment. The Security Council considered the situation and adopted a resolution calling for an immediate cessation of hostilities by all parties. The General Assembly, in resolution 50/22 C of 25 April, issued a similar call and expressed its support of the diplomatic efforts to that end. Those efforts, pursued by France and the United States, resulted in a partial ceasefire, which went into effect on 27 April, and, in the form of an understanding, was simultaneously announced in Beirut and Jerusalem.

According to the published text of the understanding, summarized in a July report of the Secretary-General on UNIFIL operations [S/1996/575], armed groups in Lebanon would not carry out attacks by any kind of weapon into Israel, and Israel and those cooperating with it would not fire any kind of weapon at civilians or civilian targets in Lebanon. The two parties would ensure that under no circumstances would civilians be the target of attack and that civilian populated areas and industrial and electrical installations would not be used as launching grounds for attacks. The text stated that, without violating the understanding, nothing therein should preclude any party from exercising the right of self-defence. The understanding provided for the establishment of a monitoring group consisting of the United States, France, Israel, Lebanon and Syria, and of a consultative group, to consist of France, the European Union (EU), the Russian Federation and other interested parties, for the purpose of assisting in the reconstruction of Lebanon. On 16 July, France and the United States informed UN Secretariat officials that the chair of the monitoring group would be based in Cyprus, while its military experts would meet in Naqoura. The two countries requested that UNIFIL provide facilities for the latter meeting.

In several communications throughout the year, addressed to the Secretary-General, Lebanon provided detailed accounts of Israeli attacks.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

By letters of 13 April [S/1996/280, 281], Lebanon requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the grave situation in Lebanon resulting from the large-scale Israeli bombardment of many towns and villages, including a southern suburb of Beirut. The bombardment, Lebanon said, was continuing unabated for the third consecutive day, killing and wounding an alarming number of civilians, displacing thousands and severely damaging property.

In accordance with those requests, the Council convened on 15 April to consider the situation in the Middle East, in particular that in Lebanon.

Afghanistan, Algeria, Colombia, Cuba, Iran, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Morocco, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey and the United Arab Emirates, at their request, were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter and rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Leading off the debate, Lebanon stated that for five days it had been subjected to continued Israeli aggression by land, sea and air. Israeli military forces, whose activities were escalating at an alarming rate, were bombarding an area extending from the south to the north of Lebanon, causing the displacement of hundreds of thousands of persons. The new cycle of large-scale violence, not to be viewed apart from the overall situation in the south and the western Bekaa, was the result of Israeli occupation, in flagrant violation of Council resolution 425(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312]; furthermore, that new cycle had been triggered by Israel on purpose, to serve the electoral ambitions of its Government. The number of casualties was still constantly increasing and the destruction of property was devastating.

As a pattern, any resistance to Israeli aggression was immediately labelled an act of terrorism, Lebanon said. Its constant position on that point was: while it firmly condemned all forms of terrorism, it also firmly supported the legitimate right of people to resist foreign occupation. There was foreign occupation in south Lebanon and the Lebanese were within their legitimate rights in defending themselves against occupation, human rights abuses and displacement. Israeli occupation of Lebanon was terrorism. Israel had carved out the so-called security zone in south Lebanon and the western Bekaa, thus perpetuating its occupation.

If the purpose of Israel's military action was to force Lebanon into submission, it was a futile hope; Lebanon would have no peace with Israel as long as the latter did not withdraw from south Lebanon, in implementation of resolution 425(1978), and from the Golan Heights, in implementation of resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213]. Concluding, Lebanon asked the Council to order Israel to stop immediately its aggression and withdraw all its reinforcements; to condemn Israeli aggression against Lebanon and its civilians, economy, infrastructure and archaeological sites, in particular those internationally protected; to force Israel to implement resolution 425(1978); to provide, in cooperation with the Secretary-General, a massive programme of assistance to Lebanon and its people to help them overcome the suffering and casualties resulting from Israel's aggression; and to remain seized of the matter as long as Israel did not abide by the Council's order to halt its aggression.

Israel declared that, while Lebanon had begun counting from 10 April, eight Israelis had been killed and 29 more wounded by Hezbollah (Hizbullah) Islamic fundamentalists since 1 February. In the past week, 36 more Israeli civilians had been injured in several waves of Katyusha rocket attacks fired by the Hezbollah into northern Israel. Since then, more than 100 such attacks had been launched against more than 20 towns and villages in northern Israel. Tens of thousands were living in shelters or had left the northern part of the country. Israeli actions had been deceitfully described from several sides as if there were no murderous Hezbollah provocations against it or its citizens; the truth was that, after a long period of restraint and exhaustion of all political and diplomatic means, the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) were hitting back at Hezbollah strongholds with air, sea and artillery strikes.

Israel said its primary obligation was to protect the security of all of its citizens, and it would not allow its civilian centres to be held hostage by the Hezbollah, whose activities the Lebanese Government did not have the ability—or the will—to control. Therefore, Israel had to defend the security of its north by all measures necessary. It had no territorial claim on Lebanon, and no intention of entering into battles with either the Syrian or the Lebanese army, but it had the right and obligation to defend its people.

Operations were being conducted solely against Hezbollah terrorist targets, but Hezbollah positions were situated throughout Lebanon, usually in the midst of civilian population centres. Unfortunately, innocent civilians on both sides of the border were suffering as a result of the confrontation; the escalation, however, was initiated by the murderous acts of Hezbollah, without any intervention by the so-called sovereign Government of Lebanon. Israel hoped that the unnecessary suffering would soon be over permanently, based on the understanding that all parties were committed to maintaining peace and security for all people in the area.

The Council resumed consideration of the item on 18 April, after hostilities continued, causing further casualties and destruction of property, including a tragic incident that morning at the headquarters of the Fijian battalion of UNIFIL in Qana, during which more than 100 Lebanese civilians who had sought refuge in the area were said to have been killed and more than 100 wounded, among them several UN personnel. In addition to those previously invited, the Council extended invitations to Bahrain, Canada, the Comoros, Djibouti, Iraq, Ireland, Japan, Mauritania, Norway, Oman, Qatar, the Sudan and Yemen, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with the relevant Charter provisions and rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

The President drew attention to a draft resolution [S/1996/292] submitted by Algeria, Bahrain, the Comoros, Djibouti, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen. By that resolution, the Council would have called on Israel immediately to cease its military action and withdraw its forces from all Lebanese territory; called for strict respect for Lebanon's territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence; called for implementation of all relevant Council resolutions, in particular resolution 425(1978); strongly condemned the Israeli aggression against Lebanon, which had brought about high tolls of civilian casualties, led to the displacement of hundreds of thousands of civilians and a massive destruction of Lebanon's infrastructure, as well as of internationally protected archaeological and cultural sites; called for participation in the reconstruction of Lebanon and for help in meeting the humanitarian needs of the civilian population; and called for redress to Lebanon for the destruction suffered from the Israeli aggression.

When put to the vote, the draft resolution was not adopted because it did not obtain the required majority. The vote was 4 in favour (China, Egypt, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia) to none against, with 11 abstentions (Botswana, Chile, France, Germany, Honduras, Italy, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States).

At the same meeting of 18 April, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1052(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions regarding the situation in Lebanon, including resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978 which established the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL),

Taking note of the letters dated 13 April 1996 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the President of the Security Council,

Bearing in mind the debate which took place at its 3653rd meeting on 15 April 1996 on the situation in the Middle East,

Gravely concerned at the consequences which the ongoing fighting could have for the peace and security of the region and for the furthering of the peace process in the Middle East, and affirming its full support for that process,

Gravely concerned also at all attacks on civilian targets, including residential areas, and at the loss of life and suffering among civilians,

Stressing the need for all concerned to respect fully the rules of international humanitarian law with regard to the protection of civilians,

Gravely concerned further at actions which seriously threaten the safety of UNIFIL and impede the implementation of its mandate, and deploring in particular the incident on 18 April 1996 in which shelling resulted in heavy loss of life among civilians at a UNIFIL site,

1. Calls for an immediate cessation of hostilities by all parties;
2. Supports the ongoing diplomatic efforts to this end;
3. Reaffirms its commitment to the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries and to the security of all States in the region, and calls upon all concerned fully to respect those principles;
4. Calls upon all concerned to respect the safety and security of civilians;
5. Calls upon all concerned to respect the safety, security and freedom of movement of UNIFIL and to allow it to fulfil its mandate without any obstacle or interference;
6. Calls upon Member States to offer humanitarian assistance to alleviate the suffering of the population and to assist the Government of Lebanon in the reconstruction of the country and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the United Nations and its agencies play their part in meeting the humanitarian needs of the civilian population;
7. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of developments on a continuing basis;
8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1052(1996)

18 April 1996      Meeting 3654      Adopted unanimously

8-nation draft (S/1996/304).

Meeting numbers. SC 3653, 3654.

Lebanon expressed regret that the Council had not met immediately on 14 April and did not act swiftly on its request to end Israeli aggression. It deplored that the Arab draft—which embodied two very basic principles: solidarity of the Arab world in respect of Lebanon and its constant position in favour of finding a solution to the endemic cycle of violence, which was due in particular to Israel's non-implementation of resolution 425(1978)—had not been adopted.

Israel said the tragedy had been caused by Hezbollah launching rockets at Israel a short distance from the UN position where innocent civilians had taken shelter. Israel accepted the initiative of the United States President to reach a ceasefire, to be implemented as soon as the other party agreed to implement it as well.

Report of Military Adviser. By a letter of 7 May [S/1996/337], the Secretary-General transmitted to the members of the Security Council a 1 May report by his Military Adviser, Major-General Franklin van Kappen, on his mission to Lebanon and Israel in the wake of the tragic events at Qana on 18 April. As noted by the Secretary-General, the mission sought to establish, to the extent possible, the facts surrounding those events. General van Kappen had had extensive discussions with UNIFIL commanders, Lebanese and Israeli authorities and eyewitnesses. As indicated in the report, the Secretary-General said, while the possibility could not be ruled out completely, the pattern of impacts in the Qana area made it unlikely that the shelling of the UN compound was the result of technical and/or procedural errors. For its part, IDF maintained that the incident was due to a sequence of operational mistakes and technical failures, compounded by chance.

Welcoming the ceasefire agreement announced on 26 April, the Secretary-General expressed his earnest hope that the restoration of calm in the area would enhance the prospects for negotiations leading to a comprehensive peace settlement which would preclude further tragic events. In the meantime, he had instructed the UNIFIL Commander to enhance cooperation with the Lebanese Government and the Lebanese Armed Forces in maintaining peace and stability in the UNIFIL area. He had also given instructions for arrangements to be worked out with the Israeli authorities to see to it that the UN positions in Lebanon were not fired on in the future. It remained of the greatest importance, he stressed, that the parties to the conflict ensured that innocent civilians did not become victims of the hostilities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By a letter of 19 April [A/50/940], Colombia, as Chairman of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, transmitted to the President of the General Assembly a Bureau request that the fiftieth session of the Assembly resume consideration of the agenda item "The situation in the Middle East", to consider the Israeli military attacks against Lebanon and their consequences. A similar request was made on the same date by Guinea, as Chairman of the Islamic Group at the United Nations [A/50/941]. Subsequently, on 23 April, the Assembly reopened consideration of the item.

In debate, Lebanon said it had come to the Assembly in the hope that all stood firmly and decisively together against aggression and transgression, and against the heinous crimes that had gone unpunished. Lebanon was for a comprehensive and just peace; Israel would not make it renege on that commitment. Lebanon called for Israel to be condemned and punished for the crimes committed against the Lebanese, their institutions and sovereignty, and against humanity.

Israel stated that it had been forced into fighting with those who sought its destruction, as well as the derailment of the chances for peace. Since 1 February, Hezbollah Islamic fundamentalists had stepped up their attacks, breaching unilaterally the agreements brokered in 1993. It was deplorable that the Lebanese Government disarmed all the militias that had operated within its territory, but never Hezbollah which was supported by a very forceful Power. The Syrian Government, which controlled a large part of Lebanon, had been told time and again to use its influence to stop the terrorists. As the Lebanese Government had neither the ability nor the will to control Hezbollah activities, Israel had to do it alone. The continued suffering of the people of Lebanon was entirely the responsibility of terrorist organizations—first and foremost the Hezbollah, Israel maintained.

Following three days of discussions and negotiations on a draft resolution presented by representatives of the Arab Group, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, the Organization of the Islamic Conference and others, the Assembly on 25 April adopted resolution 50/22 C.

The Israeli military attacks against Lebanon and their consequences

The General Assembly,

Having heard the statement of the President of the Lebanese Republic before the plenary on 23 April 1996,

Taking note of the letters from the Alternate Permanent Representative of Colombia to the United Nations in his capacity as Chairman of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and from the Permanent Representative of Guinea to the United Nations in her capacity as Chairperson of the Islamic Group and on behalf of the States Members of the United Nations that are members of the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Reaffirming the relevant Security Council resolutions on the situation in Lebanon, in particular resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978,

Reaffirming also Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973, and in particular the principles of withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories and the right of all States in the region to live in peace and security within internationally recognized boundaries,

Bearing in mind the debate that took place at its 113th to 117th meetings, on 23, 24 and 25 April 1996, on the situation in the Middle East,

Gravely concerned at the consequences that the ongoing fighting could have for the peace and security of the region and for the furtherance of the peace process in the Middle East, and affirming its full support for that process and for the need to achieve real progress, especially on the Lebanese and Syrian track,

Gravely concerned also at all attacks on civilian targets, including residential areas, and at the loss of life and suffering among civilians,

Stressing the need for all concerned to respect fully the rules of international humanitarian law with regard to the protection of civilians, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949,

Gravely concerned further at actions that seriously threaten the safety of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and impede the implementation of its mandate, in particular the incident that occurred on 18 April 1996 in which shelling resulted in heavy loss of life among civilians at a site of the Interim Force,

Taking into consideration the statement of the International Committee of the Red Cross of 19 April 1996, in which it firmly condemned the shelling of civilians who had taken refuge in an Interim Force base in the village of Qana,

Expressing concern at the bombardment of the archaeological and cultural sites and monuments in the city of Tyre, which are internationally protected, in accordance with international law and the 1954 Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, and which are considered by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to be the heritage of all mankind,

1. Calls for an immediate cessation of hostilities;
2. Supports the ongoing diplomatic efforts to this end;
3. Condemns the Israeli military attacks against the civilian population in Lebanon, especially against the United Nations base at Qana, which violate the rules of international humanitarian law pertaining to the protection of civilians, and expresses its grave concern and sorrow over the loss of lives and serious injuries to innocent men, women and children;
4. Calls upon Israel immediately to cease its military action against the territorial integrity of Lebanon and to withdraw forthwith its forces from all Lebanese territory, in conformity with Security Council resolution 425(1978);
5. Calls for strict respect for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;
6. Calls upon all concerned to respect the safety and security of civilians in conformity with the rules of international humanitarian law;
7. Considers that Lebanon is entitled to appropriate redress for the destruction it has suffered and that Israel is responsible for such compensation;
8. Requests the Secretary-General to dispatch a special technical mission to the area to study and prepare, within one month's time, in cooperation with the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, a report on the human and material losses and damage resulting from the recent and ongoing hostilities;
9. Calls upon Member States to offer humanitarian assistance to alleviate the suffering of the population and to assist the Government of Lebanon in the reconstruction of the country, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the United Nations and its agencies play their part in meeting the humanitarian needs of the civilian population;
10. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

25 April 1996 Meeting 117 64-2-65 (recorded vote)

25-nation draft (A/50/L.70/Rev.1); agenda item 44.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: plenary 113, 117.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Bhutan, Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Egypt, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mauritius, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Albania, Andorra, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Ecuador, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mexico, Monaco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Samoa, San Marino, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela.

After the vote, Lebanon said that Israeli bombardments against the Lebanese civilian population were still ongoing, for the fourteenth day, in violation of all norms and principles of international law. Lebanon would have liked to see those few countries that voted against the resolution instead play a positive role in forcing Israel to stop its madness. The Assembly had clearly denounced Israel as the aggressor; now it was up to Israel to abide by the will of the international community and cease its attacks.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1996/274 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of a 23 April resolution [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/68)] of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in southern Lebanon and the western Bekaa (see PART TWO, Chapter III). The Commission requested the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to the attention of Israel and to invite it to provide information concerning the extent of its implementation thereof. By a note of 16 October, [A/51/507], the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly that no reply from Israel had been received as of that date.

UNIFIL

The Security Council in 1996 twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), in January and July, each time for a six-month period.

Established by the Council in 1978 [YUN 1978, p. 312, SC res. 425(1978)], following Israel's invasion of Lebanon, [Ibid., p. 296], UNIFIL originally was entrusted with confirming the withdrawal of Israeli forces, restoring international peace and security, and assisting the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area. After a second Israeli invasion in June 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 428], the Council, in resolution 511(1982) [Ibid., p. 450], authorized the Force to carry out, in addition to its original mandate, the interim tasks of providing protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population, while maintaining its positions in its area of deployment. During 1996, UNIFIL continued to do its best to carry out its mandated tasks in a situation of mounting tension, but the Secretary-General reported that its efforts were severely hindered by sustained Israeli bombardment and harassment by both sides.

The Force continued to maintain close contact and cooperate with the Lebanese authorities on matters of mutual concern. Those authorities provided valuable assistance in connection with the rotation of troops and logistic activities in Beirut. The Lebanese army was particularly helpful in defusing confrontations with armed elements and provided accommodation for some UNIFIL contingents while on leave in Lebanon. The Force continued to cooperate with the Lebanese Internal Security Forces on matters pertaining to the maintenance of law and order. During the Lebanese parliamentary elections in September 1996, UNIFIL cooperated closely with the Lebanese army and the Internal Security Forces to ensure security in its area of operation.

Composition

In January 1996, UNIFIL military personnel numbered 4,649, provided by nine countries: Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, Nepal, Norway and Poland. Civilian support was provided by a staff of 561, of whom 134 had been recruited internationally and 427 locally. By July, at the beginning of the second 1996 mandate period, troop strength had decreased slightly, to 4,483. Civilian staff remained at 561, with 123 recruited internationally and 438 locally. From early December on, an Estonian company was deployed in the eastern Norwegian sector as an integrated part of that battalion. Major-General Stanislaw F. Wozniak of Poland continued as Force Commander.

UNIFIL was assisted in the performance of its tasks by 57 unarmed military observers of UNTSO, organized as the Observer Group Lebanon (OGL) under UNIFIL operational control. They manned five observation posts along the Lebanese side of the Israeli-Lebanon armistice demarcation line. They also operated five mobile teams in the Israeli-controlled area (ICA).

Report of Secretary-General (January). In a report [S/1996/45] on developments from 20 July 1995 to 22 January 1996 in the UNIFIL area of operation, the Secretary-General stated that hostilities continued in south Lebanon between the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) and its local Lebanese auxiliary, the de facto forces (DFF), on the one hand, and armed elements who had proclaimed their resistance against the Israeli occupation on the other. UNIFIL continued its efforts to limit the conflict and protect the inhabitants from the fighting. Through its network of checkpoints and observation posts and an active programme of patrolling, the Force did its best to prevent its area from being used for hostile activities. It also deployed as necessary to provide a measure of protection to the villages and to farmers working in the fields.

Within ICA, Israel maintained a civil administration and security service. Movement between ICA and the rest of Lebanon was strictly controlled; crossing points were closed frequently, in one case for two months, causing difficulties for the inhabitants. ICA remained economically dependent on Israel, and an estimated 3,000 of its inhabitants held jobs in Israel; access to such jobs was controlled by DFF and the security services. There were again reports of forced recruitment into DFF. During the reporting period, the Lebanese authorities stepped up work to maintain the infrastructure in ICA, especially the improvement of roads.

During the period under review, UNIFIL observed 118 operations by armed elements against IDF/DFF, as compared to 129 in the previous period. There were also numerous reports of attacks against IDF/DFF positions north of the Litani river, bringing the total number of operations to over 350. Most attacks were carried out by a group known as the Islamic Resistance, the military wing of the Shiite Muslim Hezbollah organization. The Shiite movement Amal increased its attacks against IDF/DFF. Palestinian factions were responsible for a small number of attacks. In their operations, the armed elements employed small arms, roadside bombs, rockets, mortars, rocket-propelled grenades and anti-tank missiles. Armed elements fired a total of about 1,000 mortar rounds, rockets and anti-tank missiles.

IDF/DFF continued their own attacks and retaliatory firing against armed elements, employing artillery, mortars, tanks and aircraft. UNIFIL recorded more than 20,000 artillery, mortar and tank rounds fired by IDF/DFF, as compared to 16,500 in the previous period. IDF increased its patrolling, including long-range ambush patrols outside ICA. The use of assault helicopters for both reconnaissance and combat support increased. As before, Israeli naval vessels patrolled Lebanese territorial waters in the south and imposed restrictions on the local fishermen. The targeting of civilians decreased during the reporting period. UNIFIL confirmed one civilian fatality from IDF fire during a retaliatory attack following the firing by armed elements into Israel on 29 December.

UNIFIL continued to extend humanitarian assistance to the civilian population in the form of medical care, essential supplies and engineering work and repairs to buildings damaged as a result of hostilities. Force personnel escorted farmers so they could work their fields that were within range of IDF/DFF positions and assisted in putting out fires set off by IDF/DFF firing. UNIFIL battalion medical centres and mobile teams continued to provide care to 2,500 civilian patients per month. The Force helped distribute educational equipment provided by UNICEF and assisted UNDP in its south Lebanon emergency rehabilitation programme (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

As in the past, UNIFIL detonated mines, roadside bombs and unexploded remnants of war and dismantled ordnance of various types in its area of deployment. A total of 100 such controlled explosions were carried out.

The Secretary-General concluded that, although there had been no progress towards implementation of UNIFIL's mandate, the Force's contribution to stability in the area and the protection it was able to afford the inhabitants remained important. He therefore recommended that the Security Council accept Lebanon's request, as expressed in a letter of 18 July [S/1996/566], and extend UNIFIL's mandate for another six months, until 31 July 1996. The Secretary-General recalled that UNIFIL was not an end in itself but should be viewed in the context of the broader objective of achieving a durable peace. At the time of reporting, renewed negotiations were under way between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic within the framework of the Middle East peace process. Those negotiations, he said, deserved every encouragement and support, and it was to be hoped that they would quickly lead to tangible results; it was equally to be hoped that progress would be made soon towards resolving the situation in the Israel-Lebanon theatre as well.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council, on 29 January, adopted resolution 1039(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 22 January 1996 and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 17 January 1996 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further period of six months, that is until 31 July 1996;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Condemns all acts of violence committed in particular against the Force, and urges the parties to put an end to them;

6. Welcomes the streamlining of the Force described in paragraph 16 of the report of the Secretary-General of 22 January 1996, to be completed by May 1996, and stresses the need to continue efforts to achieve further savings by rationalizing the administrative and support services of the Force, provided they do not affect its operational capacity;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

29 January 1996 Meeting 3622 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/58).

In a Presidential statement of 29 January [S/PRST/1996/5], complementing the resolution on the mandate extension for UNIFIL, the Council reaffirmed its commitment to Lebanon's full sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity within its internationally recognized boundaries. In that context, any State should refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations, the statement said. In extending UNIFIL's mandate, the Council again stressed the urgent need for implementing resolution 425(1978) in all its aspects. It reiterated its full support for the 1989 Taif Agreement and for the continued efforts of the Lebanese Government to consolidate peace, national unity and security in the country, while successfully carrying out the reconstruction process. The Council commended the Government for its successful effort to extend its authority in the south of the country in full coordination with UNIFIL.

The Council again expressed concern over the continuing violence in southern Lebanon, regretted the loss of civilian life and urged all parties to exercise restraint. Finally, it expressed appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his staff in that regard, and commended UNIFIL's troops and troop-contributing countries for their sacrifices and commitment to the cause of international peace and security under difficult circumstances.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In a report [S/1996/575] to the Security Council on developments during the period from 22 January to 20 July 1996, the Secretary-General noted that the reporting period was marked by an escalation of hostilities between IDF and DFF, on the one hand, and armed elements who had proclaimed their determination to resist the Israeli occupation, on the other. After a relatively calm period in January, hostilities intensified in February and March and culminated in April in more than two weeks of heavy Israeli bombardments. The Council considered the situation and, on 18 April, adopted resolution 1052(1996) calling for an immediate cessation of hostilities by all parties; on 10 May, the General Assembly also debated the matter and adopted resolution 50/22 C (see above).

The ability of the Islamic Resistance to penetrate deep inside ICA and inflict casualties on IDF triggered a public debate in Israel, the Secretary-General said, the thrust of which was that IDF must respond forcefully and should no longer be bound by constraints imposed on it. Those constraints were connected with an agreement reportedly arranged by the United States in 1993; the United Nations had not been informed of that agreement, although it had been publicly mentioned by Israel and Hezbollah officials. Based on such public statements, it would appear, the Secretary-General stated, that the Islamic Resistance agreed to refrain from targeting villages and towns in northern Israel, while IDF agreed to refrain from doing the same in Lebanon; there had been no mention of limitations concerning attacks on military targets. Indications in Israel that the agreed restrictions were no longer acceptable and that a large-scale operation against the Islamic Resistance was being contemplated heightened tension in the area. On 15

March, the UNIFIL Commander conveyed his concern to the Israeli authorities.

IDF/DFP also initiated attacks and carried out retaliatory firing against armed elements. Israeli aircraft continued to overfly Lebanese territory, including Beirut, and the Israeli navy patrolled Lebanese territorial waters and imposed restrictions on local fishermen around Tyre.

As before, the Force continued its efforts to limit the conflict and protect the inhabitants from the fighting. Through its network of checkpoints and observation posts and an active programme of patrolling, the Force did its best to prevent its area of deployment from being used for hostile activities and to defuse situations that could lead to escalation. It also deployed as necessary to provide a measure of protection to the villages and to farmers working in the fields. As previously, Lebanese villagers sought refuge in UNIFIL positions when there was shelling.

During a two-week period in April, UNIFIL counted in its area more than 600 Israeli air raids, involving both fixed-wing aircraft and helicopters, which used over 1,500 bombs or rockets. Throughout the Israeli bombardment, the Islamic Resistance fired some 1,100 rockets from the UNIFIL area; many fell short, but an estimated 600 landed in northern Israel where some of them impacted in villages and towns, causing injuries to civilians as well as damage.

In UNIFIL's area of deployment, more than 120 civilians were killed by Israeli fire and an estimated 500 wounded. Most of the casualties occurred on 18 April as a result of the shelling of the UN compound at Qana, during which over 100 Lebanese were killed and many more wounded. The incident was the subject of the investigation by the Secretary-General's Military Adviser, whose report was conveyed to the Security Council on 7 May (see above). In the whole of the UNIFIL area, at least 450 houses were damaged or destroyed, many roads were made impassable by bombs, and the supply of water and electricity was disrupted.

UNIFIL continued to do its best to protect the civilian population from the violence and to provide humanitarian assistance. Because of the mounting tension, the Force had already reinforced its positions close to the line of confrontation, and increased patrolling. UNIFIL trucks and armoured personnel carriers, engaged in delivering humanitarian aid, were often delayed or stopped altogether as a result of the bombardments. After a partial ceasefire went into effect on 27 April, there was a brief lull in activities.

In view of the seriousness of the events in southern Lebanon, the Secretary-General had asked the Under-Secretary-General for Peace-

Keeping Operations, Kofi Annan, to travel to the region to consult with Governments prior to the expiry of the UNIFIL mandate. He visited the region from 26 June to 4 July and met with senior officials in Israel, Lebanon and Syria. He also met with the UNIFIL Commander and his staff and visited the Fijian battalion headquarters at Qana and other locations in the UNIFIL area.

During the period under review, UNIFIL continued to extend humanitarian assistance in the form of harvest escorts, medical care, engineering works and the distribution of educational material and equipment provided by UNICEF. Medical teams treated more than 2,000 patients each month at UNIFIL medical aid posts and mobile clinics. Some humanitarian projects were funded by troop-contributing Governments.

In connection with the Israeli bombardment in April, Lebanon requested the United Nations to issue an international appeal to meet the urgent humanitarian needs resulting from the hostilities. The Department of Humanitarian Affairs launched a "flash appeal" on 20 April to mobilize $8.6 million to address the needs of the 20,000 most affected families. The overall response was positive: some $15 million was committed by donors (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

During the period under review, two Ghanaian soldiers died from natural causes and five Fijian and two Nepalese soldiers were wounded as a result of firing. Since the Force's establishment, the Secretary-General reported, 207 of its members had died: 76 as a result of firing or bomb explosions, 84 in accidents and 47 from other causes. A total of 324 had been wounded by firing or by mine or bomb explosions.

Concluding, the Secretary-General observed that the previous six months had been marked by a serious escalation of hostilities in April, of which the population of southern Lebanon was the primary victim and during which UNIFIL also came under fire. The Secretary-General regretted that the United Nations once again had cause to call on the parties to respect the non-combatant status of civilians and UN peacekeepers. The co-operation necessary for UNIFIL to implement its mandate, as reiterated by the Security Council in January, had not been forthcoming and there had been no active political pressure on the parties to implement resolution 425(1978).

In recent years, the best hope for implementation of that mandate had been through the negotiating process within the framework established in Madrid in October 1991; that process, however, appeared to have made no progress towards the attainment of the Council's objectives concerning southern Lebanon, which left UNIFIL in the same difficult and dangerous situation in which it had been since the Israeli forces withdrew to their current lines in 1985. In the circumstances, the Force had done its best to limit violence and protect the civilian population, which had become its de facto mandate. In carrying out that mandate, UNIFIL had impeded both sides from pursuing their military aims, but only to the extent that the parties had permitted it to do so, out of a presumed desire to avoid escalation. As a peacekeeping force, UNIFIL was powerless when either party was bent on confrontation.

In that connection, the Secretary-General noted that the understanding announced on 26 April had the potential of contributing to the protection of civilians and restraining the parties; it was therefore to be hoped that the understanding would soon be put into full effect. He had instructed the Force to assist the monitoring group currently being set up in accordance with the understanding; doing so, he believed, was consistent with the Security Council's objectives and would meet with its approval.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Council accept Lebanon's request, voiced in a communication of 18 July [S/1996/566], that UNIFIL be extended at its current strength for another six months, until 31 January 1997. In making that recommendation, the Secretary-General stated, he had especially in mind the Force's role in shielding the civilian population from the worst effects of the violence; its work during the April escalation had underscored the importance of that function.

Drawing attention to the serious shortfall in the Force's funding, with unpaid assessments amounting to $201.9 million, the Secretary-General again appealed to all Member States to pay their assessments promptly and in full and to clear all remaining arrears. He also expressed gratitude to the troop-contributing Governments, especially those of developing countries, for their understanding and patience in those difficult circumstances.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 30 July, the Security Council adopted resolution 1068(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 20 July 1996 and taking note of the observations expressed and the commitments mentioned therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 18 July 1996 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further period of six months, that is until 31 January 1997;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Condemns all acts of violence committed in particular against the Force, and urges the parties to put an end to them;

6. Welcomes the completion of the streamlining of the Force described in paragraph 33 of the report, and encourages further efficiency and savings provided they do not affect the operational capacity of the Force;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Meeting 3685

Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/599).

On the same date, as a complement to the resolution, the Council President made a statement [S/PRST/1996/33] similar to that of 29 January (see above).

Financing

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ (February/March). In a February 1996 report [A/50/543/Add.1], the Secretary-General presented the proposed UNIFIL budget for the 12-month period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 in the amount of $122,757,000 gross ($119,700,000 net), which reflected a 7.4 per cent decrease in gross terms compared with the prorated resources approved for the preceding 12-month period ending 30 June 1996. The proposed budget provided for maintaining the Force at a level of 4,513 military personnel (3,518 infantry and 995 logistics), supported by 336 civilians, of whom 143 were internationally and 193 locally recruited.

As to the status of contributions, the Secretary-General reported that amounts totalling $2,544.8 million had been assessed on Member States for the period from the Force's inception in 1978 to 31 January 1996. Contributions received as at 31 December 1995 for the same period amounted to $2,331.4 million. As a result of the withholding of or delays in payment of assessed contributions by certain Member States, the Secretary-General stated, UNIFIL had been unable to meet its obligations on a current basis or in full, particularly those due to the troop-contributing countries. Full reimbursement to them had been made up to the period ending 31 January 1995. For the period from 1 February to 31 July 1995, reimbursements to Governments had been made only at the initial rate of $750 per person per month as part of the standard rates approved by the Assembly for troop cost reimbursement. For the period from 1 August to 31 December 1995, no reimbursement had been made to troop contributors. It was estimated that an amount of $36.8 million was due for troop costs for the period ending 31 December 1995.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in its March report on the financing of UNDOF/UNIFIL [A/50/694/Add.1], concurred with the Secretary-General's proposed appropriations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 7 June, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/89 B.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, by which the Council established the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 1039(1996) of 29 January 1996,

Recalling its resolution S-8/2 of 21 April 1978 on the financing of the Force and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 50/89 A of 19 December 1995,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recalling further its resolution 34/9 E of 17 December 1979 and the subsequent resolutions in which it decided that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the financial regulations of the United Nations should be suspended, the latest of which was resolution 49/226,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Force on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

Concerned also that the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon have been used up for meeting expenses of the Force in order to compensate for the lack of income resulting from non-payment and late payment by Member States of their contributions and have consequently been exhausted,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon as at 21 May 1996, including the contributions unpaid in the amount of 204.4 million United States dollars, representing 8 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending 30 April 1996, notes that some 17.2 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his next report on the financing of the Force a full evaluation of damages resulting from the incident that occurred at the headquarters of the Force at Qana on 18 April 1996 and the costs thereof;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon the amount of 53,874,000 dollars gross (52,448,000 dollars net) authorized by the General Assembly in paragraph 7 of its resolution 50/89 A for the period from 1 February to 30 June 1996;

9. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, taking into account the amount of 32,324,400 dollars gross (31,468,800 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/89 A, to apportion an additional amount of 21,549,600 dollars gross (20,979,200 dollars net) for the period from 1 May to 30 June 1996 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27

August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1996 and 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 567,200 dollars approved for the period from 1 May to 30 June 1996;

11. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the estimated income of 3,200 dollars, other than staff assessment income, for the period from 1 May to 30 June 1996;

12. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon an amount of 125,722,800 dollars gross (122,665,800 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, inclusive of the amount of 2,965,800 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be assessed on Member States at a monthly rate of 10,476,900 dollars gross (10,222,150 dollars net) in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 31 July 1996;

13. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 3,037,000 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

14. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share in the estimated income of 20,000 dollars, other than staff assessment income, for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

15. Invites voluntary contributions to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session, under the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations peacekeeping forces in the Middle East", the sub-item entitled "United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon".

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 104-2-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/824/Add.1) by recorded vote (85-3-1), 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Lebanon (A/C.5/50/L.67); agenda item 122 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 56, 64; plenary 120.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Belarus, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Senegal, Singapore, Slovakia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Sweden, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Iran, Syrian Arab Republic.

In the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, paragraph 7 was adopted by a recorded vote of 82 to 2, with 2 abstentions. The United States, which requested the vote on the paragraph, as well as, because of its inclusion, a recorded vote on the text as a whole, explained that it firmly supported UNIFIL, but was concerned at the proposals to amend the customary formulation of the resolution on UNIFIL financing, which it saw as a regrettable attempt to politicize the Committee's work. The Qana tragedy had been the subject of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions; the fact that an attempt was made within the Committee to attribute responsibility for that tragedy in a partial manner would only obstruct the efforts made to advance the peace process.

Israel stated that it had voted against the paragraph, as well as the resolution as a whole, because it introduced unnecessary political considerations into the Committee's discussion. Those really responsible for the Qana tragedy were the Hezbollah terrorists, who had shelled northern Israel repeatedly from positions close to UNIFIL headquarters.

Lebanon was profoundly grateful to those who had voted for paragraph 7. The text had no political connotations, it said; only the negative position adopted by two Member States, in an attempt to cover up Israel's responsibility for the massacre, was political.

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ (October/November). The Secretary-General submitted in October a financial performance report [A/51/535] on UNIFIL covering the period from 1 February 1995 to 31 January 1996, for which resources amounting to $ 134,814,000 gross ($130,450,000 net) were provided. The corresponding expenditures amounted to $124,257,400 gross ($121,666,600 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $10,556,600 gross ($8,783,400 net). The action to be taken by the General Assembly was a decision to credit Member States their respective share in the unencumbered balance. ACABQ, in a November report [A/51/684], concurred with that recommendation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

The General Assembly, on 16 December (decision 51/439), decided that for Member States that had fulfilled their financial obligations to UNIFIL, their respective share in the unencumbered balance should be set off against their future apportionment; for those Members that had not fulfilled their financial obligations, their share should be set off against their outstanding contributions.

Iran and Syria both stated that they would not have supported the decision, had it been put to a vote, on the grounds that UNIFIL costs should be borne exclusively by Israel, whose aggressive behaviour, they maintained, had led to the deployment of the Force in the first place.

The Syrian Arab Republic

The General Assembly in 1996 continued to call for Israel's withdrawal from the Golan Heights, an area in the southern part of the Syrian Arab Republic near its borders with both Israel and Lebanon. Israel occupied the Golan Heights following the 1967 war, effectively annexing that area when it extended its laws, jurisdiction and administration to the territory towards the end of 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 309]. The annexation was confirmed by the Israeli Knesset on 11 November 1991.

Israeli practices affecting the human rights of the population in the Golan Heights and other occupied territories were monitored by the Special Committee on Israeli Practices and were the subject of resolutions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter III) and the General Assembly.

By a note of 30 July [S/1996/603 & Corr.1], the President of the Security Council stated that the Council had decided that, as of 15 September, matters which it had not considered in the preceding five years would be automatically deleted from the list of matters of which it was seized; among them were items 5 and 23, relating, respectively, to the Palestine question and the situation in the Middle East, as well as item 40, "Letter dated 4 February 1986 from the Permanent Representative of the Syrian Arab Republic to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council". A matter would, however, be provisionally retained for a one-year period if a Member notified its objection to its deletion before 15 September; if at the end of one year, the matter had still not been considered by the Coun-

By a letter of 26 August [S/1996/695], Syria voiced strong objection to the deletion of the three items. Item 40, it said, referred to irrefutable evidence of Israel's practice of State terrorism and its defiance of the will of the international community. Items 5 and 23 were of the utmost importance, particularly when the new Israeli Government was acting in defiance of UN resolutions, the principle of land for peace and the international community's will; the issue as a whole fell within the Council's purview in the context of its responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Committee on Palestinian Rights, in a letter of 16 August [S/1996/667], also objected to deleting those items, which it felt were of utmost concern to the majority of Member States and should remain on the list of matters of which the Council was seized.

By a note of 29 August [S/1996/704], the Council President stated that the Council had decided that no item would be deleted from the list of matters of which the Council was seized without the prior consent of the Member States concerned.

The Golan Heights

Committee report. In its annual report [A/51/99/Add.2], the Special Committee on Israeli Practices stated that during its mission to the Syrian Arab Golan, it had visited again the town of Quneitra, where it observed the destruction caused by the Israelis. The Committee was informed by witnesses who testified before it that the expression of nationalist sentiment by inhabitants of the area continued to be severely punished. The confiscation of land and water resources persisted, while health and educational facilities for the Arab population remained inadequate. Although a greater number of students from the Golan had been allowed to study in Syria, the freedom of movement in general remained curtailed.

The affirmation of Syrian national identity, job opportunities for Arabs in the occupied Golan, lack of health guarantees or indemnities in case of illness, a ban on the sale of agricultural produce, and the price and quantity of water available to Arab inhabitants and harsh conditions for Arab prisoners in Israeli detention centres posed continuing problems, the Committee said.

The Special Committee recalled the position taken by the General Assembly and the Security Council that the Israeli annexation of the occupied Golan was illegal and null and void. It hoped that the negotiations concerning the Golan within the Middle East peace process would be resumed in the near future.

Reports of Secretary-General. In an October report on the situation in the Middle East [A/51/543], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that, as of 16 October, one reply—from Japan—had been received to his August request to Israel and other Member States for information on steps they had taken or envisioned taking concerning implementation of the relevant provisions of Assembly resolution 50/22 B [YUN 1995, p. 679], demanding once more that Israel withdraw from all the occupied Syrian Golan.

On 17 October, the Secretary-General reported [A/51/518] that no reply had been received from Israel to his May request for information on any steps it had taken or envisaged concerning implementation of another 1995 resolution [50/29 D], by which the Assembly had called on Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the Golan, and from its repressive measures against the population. No reply had been received from States parties to the fourth Geneva Convention, whose attention he had drawn to the Assembly's call in the same resolution not to recognize Israel's measures and actions regarding the Golan, which the Assembly had declared null and void.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly, under the agenda item on the Middle East situation, adopted resolution 51/28.

The Syrian Golan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Deeply concerned that Israel has not withdrawn from the Syrian Golan, which has been under occupation since 1967, contrary to the relevant Security Council and General Assembly resolutions,

Noting with satisfaction the convening at Madrid on 30 October 1991 of the Peace Conference on the Middle East on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967, 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 and 425(1978) of 19 March 1978 and the principle of land for peace,

Expressing deep concern about the stumbling of the peace process on the Syrian and Lebanese tracks, and hoping that talks for ensuring a just and comprehensive peace in the region will soon be resumed from the point that has been reached,

1. Declares that Israel has failed so far to comply with Security Council resolution 497(1981);

2. Declares also that the Knesset decision of 11 November 1981 annexing the occupied Syrian Golan constitutes a grave violation of resolution 497(1981) and therefore is null and void and has no validity whatsoever, and calls upon Israel to rescind it;

3. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect for their obligations under those instruments in all circumstances;

4. Determines once more that the continued occupation of the Syrian Golan and its de facto annexation constitute a stumbling block in the way of achieving a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region;

5. Calls for the resumption of the talks on the Syrian and Lebanese tracks and for the respect for the commitments and guarantees reached during the previous talks;

6. Demands once more that Israel withdraw from all the occupied Syrian Golan to the line of 4 June 1967 in implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

4 December 1996 Meeting 72 84-2-71 (recorded vote)

20-nation draft (A/51/L.39), orally revised; agenda item 33.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: plenary 70-72.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

In introducing the draft on behalf of the sponsors, Egypt said it reaffirmed the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of acquisition of territory by force, as well as the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the Syrian Go-

lan. The text's authors hoped they would continue to obtain support from the international community based on the principles underlying the peace process begun in Madrid.

Explaining its negative vote, the United States said the resolution served only to complicate the achievement of a mutually acceptable outcome. As Israel and Syria had committed themselves to a negotiating process to resolve their differences and achieve a lasting peace agreement, the Assembly could only make that goal more elusive by injecting itself into issues which the parties had agreed would be decided in face-to-face negotiations; the United States believed that the resolution was not conducive to creating an atmosphere of trust and reconciliation that would help that process succeed.

In Israel's view, the Assembly was not the correct forum for discussing the Golan Heights issue, which should be addressed within the framework of direct negotiations between the parties; any resolution such as the one adopted served only to prejudice the outcome of the negotiations.

On 13 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/135 under the agenda item "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories".

The occupied Syrian Golan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories,

Deeply concerned that the Syrian Golan occupied since 1967 has been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also its previous relevant resolutions, the last of which was resolution 50/29 D of 6 December 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 17 October 1996,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions in which, inter alia, it called upon Israel to put an end to its occupation of the Arab territories,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of the decision of 14 December 1981 taken by Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Welcoming the convening at Madrid of the Peace Conference on the Middle East on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 aimed at the realization of a just, comprehensive and lasting peace, and stressing the need for rapid progress in all bilateral negotiations,

1. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to comply with the relevant resolutions on the occupied Syrian Golan, in particular Security Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan was null and void and without international legal effect, and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, should rescind forthwith its decision;

2. Also calls upon Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan and in particular to desist from the establishment of settlements;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan are null and void, constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

4. Calls upon Israel to desist from imposing Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Golan, and to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the occupied Syrian Golan;

5. Deplores the violations by Israel of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

6. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 51/135

13 December 1996 Meeting 83 153-1-9

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/592) by recorded vote (127-1-6), 27 November (meeting 22); 15-nation draft (A/C.4/51/L.23/Rev.1); agenda item 85.

UNDOF

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) established by the Security Council in 1974 [YUN 1974, p. 205, SC res. 350(1974)], as called for under the Agreement on Disengagement of Forces between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic concluded that year [Ibid., p. 198], was charged with supervising the observance of the ceasefire between the two countries in the Golan Heights area and ensuring the separation of their forces. Assisting UNDOF, as required, were observers from UNTSO.

The Force's mandate was renewed twice in 1996, in May and November, each time for a six-month period.

Composition

In November 1996, UNDOF personnel comprised 1,052 troops from Austria, Canada, Japan and Poland, as well as four UN military observers detailed from UNTSO. In addition, UNDOF was assisted by 73 UNTSO military observers of the Observer Group Golan. Major-General Johannes C. Koster of the Netherlands continued as Force Commander.

Activities

UNDOF in 1996 continued to supervise the area of separation between Israeli and Syrian troops in the Golan Heights, to ensure that no military forces of either party were deployed there, by means of permanently manned positions and observation posts and patrols operating at irregular intervals on predetermined routes by day and by night. In addition, temporary outposts were established and additional patrols conducted from time to time as necessary. UNDOF also continued its fortnightly inspections of armament and force levels in the areas of limitation. Liaison officers from the party concerned accompanied the inspection teams. As in the past, both sides denied inspection teams access to some of their positions and imposed some restrictions on UNDOF's freedom of movement.

The Force Commander and his staff maintained close contact with the military liaison staff of Israel and Syria. Both sides cooperated with UNDOF in the execution of its tasks.

UNDOF also assisted ICRC with mail facilities and the passage of persons through the area of separation. Within the means available, medical treatment was provided to the local population on request.

Reports of Secretary-General (May and November). Before the expiration of the UNDOF mandate on 31 May, and again on 30 November, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on UNDOF activities that took place between 18 November 1995 and 17 May 1996 [S/1996/368], and between 18 May and 18 November 1996 [S/1996/959 & Corr.1]. Both reports noted that UNDOF continued to perform its functions effectively, with the cooperation of the parties. In general, the ceasefire in the Israel-Syria sector was maintained without any serious incidents, and the area of operation of UNDOF remained calm. In September and October, the Secretary-General noted, there was a period of tension between the two sides amid speculation about the possibility of armed conflict. Tension had since subsided, however, following assurances by both parties through the intermediary of other Governments. During that period, the level of forces and armaments in the areas of limitation on both sides remained well below the ceiling established by the 1974 disengagement agreement.

In concluding observations, the Secretary-General stated that despite the quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East continued to be potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem could be reached. He hoped for determined efforts by all concerned to tackle the problem in all its aspects, with a view to arriving at a just and durable peace settlement, as called for by the Security Council in resolution 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213]. Stating that he considered the Force's continued presence in the area to be essential, the Secretary-General, with the agreement of both Syria and Israel, each time recommended that the UNDOF mandate be extended for a further six months, until 30 November 1996 in the first instance and 31 May 1997 in the second.

In making his recommendation, the Secretary-General drew attention to the serious shortfall in the funding of the Force, with unpaid assessments amounting to $60.7 million in May and $64.1 million in November, which represented money owed to troop-contributing Member States. The enduring scarcity of resources, he said, had compelled him to seek ways to lower UNDOF expenditures; therefore, since 1992 the Force had implemented two streamlining exercises which reduced its size and budget by more than 20 per cent, leaving it a very lean and cost-effective operation. Doing so had been possible in large part because of the very good cooperation both Israel and Syria had extended to the Force; he would continue to keep UNDOF under close scrutiny with a view to using every opportunity for further economies, the Secretary-General added.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May and November)

Meeting on 30 May, the Security Council, without debate, adopted resolution 1057(1996).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force of 23 May 1996,

Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 30 November 1996;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the development in the situation and the measures taken to implement Security Council resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 1057(1996)

30 May 1996 Meeting 3669 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/393).

On 27 November, the Council, also without debate, adopted resolution 1081(1996).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force of 18 November 1996,

Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 31 May 1997;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the development in the situation and the measures taken to implement Security Council resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 1081(1996)

27 November 1996 Meeting 3715 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/975).

After the adoption of each resolution, the President made the following statement [S/PRST/1996/27, S/PRST/1996/45] on behalf of the Council:

As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph 14 [13 in the November report]: "Despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached." That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council.

Financing

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ (February/March).

In a February 1996 report [A/50/386/Add.1], the Secretary-General presented the proposed budget of UNDOF for the 12-month period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, in the amount of $31,494,000 gross ($30,582,000 net), reflecting an overall 2.3 per cent decrease in gross terms when compared with the prorated resources approved for the preceding 12-month period of $32,140,000 gross ($31,192,000 net). The decrease was mainly due to the anticipated transfer of vehicles and equipment from liquidated missions to UNDOF and to an exclusion of the provision for the support account for peacekeeping operations during the budget period.

The proposed budget provided for maintaining the Force at a level of 1,036 troops (821 infantry and 215 logistics personnel), supported by a civilian establishment of 120 (36 international and 84 local).

The actions to be taken by the General Assembly included the appropriation of the proposed budget amount, to be assessed at the monthly rate of $2,624,500 gross ($2,548,500 net), subject to the extension(s) of the Force by the Security Council. Other action required was the appropriation of $16,074,000 gross ($15,618,000 net) for the period from 1 December 1995 to 31 May 1996, authorized and assessed on Member States in accordance with a Assembly resolution 50/20 A on UNDOF financing [YUN 1995, p. 682], and appropriation of $2,679,000 gross ($2,603,000 net) for the period from 1 to 30 June 1996.

ACABQ, in a March report [A/50/694/Add.1], concurred with the Secretary-General's proposal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

The General Assembly, on 7 June, adopted resolution 50/20 B.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, by which the Council established the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 1024(1995) of 28 November 1995,

Recalling its resolution 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974 on the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 50/20 A of 1 December 1995,

Reaffirming that the costs of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Force on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

Concerned also that the surplus balances in the Suspense Account for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have been used to meet expenses of the Force in order to compensate for the lack of income resulting from non-payment and late payment by Member States of their contributions,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force as at 21 May 1996, including the contributions unpaid in the amount of 60,700,000 United States dollars, representing 5 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending 31 May 1996, notes that some 29 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force the amount of 16,074,000 dollars gross (15,610,284 dollars net), authorized and apportioned by the General Assembly in paragraph 7 of its resolution 50/20 A for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 December 1995 to 31 May 1996;

8. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 2,679,000 dollars gross (2,601,714 dollars net), authorized by the General Assembly in paragraph 7 of its resolution 50/20 A for the period from 1 to 30 June 1996, the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with paragraphs 8 to 10 of the same resolution, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 31 May 1996;

9. Decides further to appropriate the amount of 32,254,900 dollars gross (31,342,900 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, inclusive of the amount of 760,900 dollars for the support account for peace-keeping operations, to be assessed on Member States at the monthly rate of 2,687,908 dollars gross (2,611,908 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996, and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1996 and 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 31 May 1996;

10. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 897,000 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

11. Decides also that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the estimated other income of 15,000 dollars for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

12. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

13. Decides to keep the sub-item entitled "United Nations Disengagement Observer Force", under the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations peacekeeping forces in the Middle East", under review during its fiftieth session.

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/792/Add.1) without vote, 31 May (meeting 64); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.54), based on informal consultations; agenda item 122 la).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: Fifth Committee 56, 64; plenary 120.

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ (September/November). In September, the Secretary-General submitted a financial performance report [A/51/405] of UNDOF for the period from 1 December 1994 to 30 November 1995, for which expenditures amounted to $30,928,300 gross ($30,158,900 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $1,202,700 gross ($973,100 net). The action to be taken by the General Assembly was a decision to credit Member States their respective share in that balance for the aforesaid period. ACABQ, in a November report [A/51/684], concurred with the proposal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

The General Assembly, on 16 December, decided (decision 51/438) that for Member States that had fulfilled their financial obligations to UNDOF, there should be set off against their future apportionment their respective share in the unencumbered balance as specified by the Secretary-General. It also decided that for those Members that had not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, their share of that balance should be set off against their outstanding contributions.

Procurement practices

Between February and May 1996, the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) conducted investigations into allegations that two senior staff members were interfering with the decision-making process of the local committee on contracts in favour of one of the local fresh ration suppliers over other bidders. The constant introduction of new requirements on the lowest acceptable bidder caused the committee to reach a stalemate and delay the award of the contract to the lowest bidder, allowing the favoured contractor to secure several short-term extensions at a cost to the United Nations of $60,000. The stalemate reached such a level that the UNDOF Commander set up an enlarged ad hoc local committee on contracts, which reviewed the bidding process and concluded that the contract should be awarded to the lowest acceptable bidder. Another investigation into the management practices by a senior staff member of the UNDOF Service Institute, the so-called P.X., also revealed a number of anomalies.

OIOS also instituted charges against a senior staff member who had attempted to intimidate staff who had reported such abuses.

Five recommendations were made to the effect that charges should be brought against the two senior staff members for breaching procurement rules and the provisions of the OIOS mandate. Another seven recommendations were made on the development of an enhanced quality control mechanism in the performance of the fresh rations contract; the use of UN vehicles in the transport of P.X. goods; and that the situation with "special orders" in the P.X. cease.

A summary of these investigations was provided in the Secretary-General's second annual report covering the activities of OIOS [A/51/432].

Chapter VII

Disarmament

The adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (CTBT) by the General Assembly on 10 September 1996 was the culmination of more than four decades of lengthy and complex negotiations and marked a major milestone on the road to nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament. Upon the opening for signature of the historic, 17-article document at United Nations Headquarters in New York on 24 September, the Secretary-General, as depositary of the Treaty, said its approval by the General Assembly had been a "bold act" that had realized a long-standing objective of the international community.

In the Treaty's preamble, States parties recognized that the cessation of all nuclear-weapon-test explosions and all other nuclear explosions, by constraining the development and qualitative improvement of nuclear weapons and ending the development of advanced new types of nuclear weapons, constituted an effective measure of nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation in all its aspects. They stressed that the most effective way to end nuclear testing was through a universal and internationally and effectively verifiable comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, which had been one of the highest priority objectives of the international community in the field of disarmament and non-proliferation.

In May 1996, the Review Conference on the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons adopted an amended Protocol II on prohibitions or restrictions on the use of mines, booby traps and other devices. The revised Protocol constituted an important step towards the total elimination of anti-personnel mines. The number of participants continued to increase in the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms, which promoted an enhanced level of transparency regarding arms transfers.

In October 1996, the requirements were fulfilled to allow the entry into force of the 1992 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction. The Convention was to enter into force on 29 April 1997. Efforts continued towards strengthening the 1972 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction at the Fourth Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention, held in Geneva from 25 November to 6 December.

Progress at the regional level included the opening for signature of the 1995 African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (also known as the Treaty of Pelindaba), by which the entire continent of Africa would become a nuclear-weapon-free zone, and the signing of its Protocols by the five nuclear-weapon States, as well as France's ratification of them. The signing of the Protocols to the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Rarotonga) by France, the United Kingdom and the United States was considered another achievement in the area of disarmament in 1996.

The Conference on Disarmament, a multilateral negotiating body, held a three-part session in Geneva in 1996 (22 January-29 March, 13 May-28 June and 29 July-13 September). In addition to concluding a draft comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, it considered items on: cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament; prevention of nuclear war; prevention of an arms race in outer space; effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons; new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons; a comprehensive programme of disarmament; and transparency in armaments.

The Disarmament Commission (New York, 22 April-7 May), comprising all United Nations Member States, considered the subject of international arms transfers, as well as a new item on an exchange of views on convening a fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament.

UN role in disarmament

UN machinery

United Nations disarmament efforts continued in 1996, mainly through the General Assembly and its First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee, the Disarmament Commission (a deliberative body) and the Conference on Disarmament (a multilateral negotiating forum which convened in Geneva).

First Committee agenda items

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 September, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the General Committee, decided to allocate all the agenda items relating to disarmament and international security to the First Committee.

By decision 51/411 of 10 December, the Assembly took note of part one of the report of the First Committee [A/51/566], which contained the allocation of the agenda items.

Also on 10 December, by decision 51/414, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its 1997 session the item entitled "Non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and of vehicles for their delivery in all its aspects".

Fourth special session devoted to disarmament

Disarmament Commission action. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/72 D [YUN 1995, p. 186], the Disarmament Commission included a new item on its agenda dealing with an exchange of views on the question of convening a fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament [A/51/42]. The Commission established a working group on the item, which held 10 meetings between 23 April and 3 May. By the end of the Commission session, it appeared that it might be possible, in the First Committee later in the year, to agree on a date in 1999 for the special session (see below for General Assembly action).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 C.

Convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 49/75 I of 15 December 1994 and 50/70 F of 12 December 1995,

Recalling also that, there being a consensus to do so in each case, three special sessions of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament were held in 1978, 1982 and 1988, respectively,

Bearing in mind the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, and the objective of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Welcoming the recent positive changes in the international landscape, characterized by the end of the cold war, the relaxation of tensions at the global level and the emergence of a new spirit governing relations among nations,

Taking note of paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995, which supported the convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament in 1997, which would offer an opportunity to review, from a perspective more in tune with the current international situation, the most critical aspects of the process of disarmament and to mobilize the international community and public opinion in favour of the elimination of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction and of the control and reduction of conventional weapons,

Taking note also of the interim report of the 1996 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission on the item entitled "Exchange of views on the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament",

Desiring to build upon the constructive exchange of views on the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament during the 1996 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission,

Reiterating its conviction that a special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament can set the future course of action in the field of disarmament, arms control and related international security matters,

Emphasizing the importance of multilateralism in the process of disarmament and arms control, peace and security,

Noting that, with the completion of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction and the adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty, as well as of amended Protocol II and new Protocol IV to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, the following years would be opportune for the international community to start the process of reviewing the state of affairs in the entire field of disarmament and arms control in the post-cold-war era,

1. Decides, subject to the emergence of a consensus on its objectives and agenda, to convene its fourth special session devoted to disarmament in 1999;

2. Notes the view of the Secretary-General that preparations for the special session could begin in 1997;

3. Decides, subject to the outcome of deliberations concerning the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament at the 1997 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission, to convene a meeting of the Preparatory Committee for the Fourth Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament before the end of the fifty-first session of the Assembly in order to set an exact date and to decide on organizational matters relating to the convening of the special session, and requests the Preparatory Committee to submit its progress report to the Assembly at its fifty-second session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Preparatory Committee with all necessary assistance, including essential background information and relevant documents as necessary;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament" and, subject to the outcome of deliberations at the 1997 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission, to take up the report of the Preparatory Committee for the Fourth Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament.

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 163-2-5 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.11) by recorded vote (137-2-1), 18 November (meeting 25); draft by Colombia, for Non-Aligned Movement (A/C.1/51/L.11/Rev.2); agenda item 71 (d).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-14, 25; plenary 79.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Denmark,* Latvia,* Russian Federation, Tajikistan,* Uzbekistan.

*Later advised the Secretariat they had intended to vote in favour.

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, comprising all United Nations Member States, held seven plenary meetings during its 1996 session (New York, 22 April-7 May); it also held organizational meetings on 11 December 1995 and 13 March and 19 April 1996 [A/51/42].

The Commission's 1996 agenda contained only two substantive items: on international arms transfers, with particular reference to General Assembly resolution 46/36 H [YUN 1991, p. 56], and a new item on an exchange of views on the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament. No consensus could be reached on the exact wording of a possible third item on nuclear-weapon-free zones.

Working Group I, established to deal with international arms transfers (see below, under "Conventional weapons"), met between 23 April and 3 May and held 15 meetings.

Working Group II, entrusted with the mandate of dealing with the exchange of views on the fourth special session on disarmament, held 10 meetings between 23 April and 3 May. Its Chairman also conducted a number of informal consultations.

The Commission concluded its work on 7 May by adopting its report [A/51/42] to the General Assembly.

Note by Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/72 D [YUN 1995, p. 186], the Secretary-General in July transmitted a compilation [A/51/182] of all texts of principles, guidelines or recommendations on subject items adopted unanimously by the Disarmament Commission since its inception [YUN 1978, p. 39].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/47 B.

Report of the Disarmament Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Recalling its resolutions 47/54 A of 9 December 1992, 47/54 G of 8 April 1993, 48/77 A of 16 December 1993, 49/77 A of 15 December 1994 and 50/72 D of 12 December 1995,

Considering the role that the Disarmament Commission has been called upon to play and the contribution that it should make in examining and submitting recommendations on various problems in the field of disarmament and in the promotion of the implementation of the relevant decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Commends the Disarmament Commission for its adoption by consensus, at its 1996 substantive session, of a set of guidelines for international arms transfers in the context of General Assembly resolution 46/36 H of 6 December 1991, which were recommended to the Assembly for consideration;

3. Endorses the guidelines for international arms transfers in the context of General Assembly resolution 46/36 H of 6 December 1991, as adopted by the Disarmament Commission;

4. Notes with satisfaction that the Disarmament Commission has made significant progress in the discussions on its agenda item regarding the convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;

5. Reaffirms the importance of further enhancing the dialogue and cooperation among the First Committee, the Disarmament Commission and the Conference on Disarmament;

6. Also reaffirms the role of the Disarmament Commission as the specialized, deliberative body within the United Nations multilateral disarmament machinery that allows for in-depth deliberations on specific disarmament issues, leading to the submission of concrete recommendations on those issues;

7. Encourages the Disarmament Commission to continue to make every effort to enhance its working methods so as to enable it to give focused consideration to a limited number of priority issues in the field of disarmament, bearing in mind the decision it has taken to move its agenda towards a three-item phased approach;

8. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and with paragraph 3 of Assembly resolution 37/78 H of 9 December 1982, and to that end to make every effort to achieve specific recommendations on the items of its agenda, taking into account the adopted "Ways and means to enhance the functioning of the Disarmament Commission";

9. Recommends that, pursuant to the adopted three-item phased approach, the Disarmament Commission, at its 1996 organizational session, adopt the following items for consideration at its 1997 substantive session:

(a) The establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned;

(b) The fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;

(c) [to be added];

10. Requests the Disarmament Commission to meet for a period not exceeding four weeks during 1997 and to submit a substantive report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Disarmament Commission the annual report of the Conference on Disarmament, together with all the official records of the fifty-first session of the General Assembly relating to disarmament matters, and to render all assistance that the Commission may require for implementing the present resolution;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure full provision to the Disarmament Commission and its subsidiary bodies of interpretation and translation facilities in the official languages and to assign, as a matter of priority, all the necessary resources and services, including verbatim records, to that end;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Report of the Disarmament Commission".

At its 208th plenary meeting, on 11 December 1996, the Disarmament Commission adopted the agenda for its 1997 substantive session, including a third substantive item entitled "Guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of General Assembly resolution 51/45 N".

General Assembly resolution 51/47 B

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.13) without vote, 14 November (meeting 23); 12-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.5/Rev.1); agenda item 73 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 16, 23; plenary 79.

Conference on Disarmament

In 1996, the Conference on Disarmament, a multilateral negotiating body, held a three-part session in Geneva (22 January-29 March, 13 May-28 June and 29 July-13 September), and concluded by adopting its report [A/51/27] to the General Assembly.

During 30 formal plenary meetings and four informal meetings, the Conference considered a nuclear test ban; cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament; prevention of nuclear war; prevention of an arms race in outer space; effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons; new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons; a comprehensive programme of disarmament; and transparency in armaments.

In January, the Conference re-established the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban. However, there was no consensus on the establishment of other ad hoc committees.

Regarding the agenda in general, the Conference appointed a Special Coordinator to consult on the review of the future agenda as well as on organizational arrangements to deal with the subjects of: prohibition of the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices; effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons; prevention of an arms race in outer space; and transparency in armaments.

In 1996, the Conference on Disarmament resolved the outstanding issue of the expansion of its membership by admitting, on 17 June, 23 new members [CD/1406]. Thereafter, a total of 60 States, as listed below, participated as members in the work of the Conference (the newly admitted States are indicated in italics): Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Egypt, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Germany, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Poland, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Senegal, Slovakia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Zaire and Zimbabwe. In addition, 36 non-member States (Angola, Armenia, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Ecuador, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Holy See, Iceland, Ireland, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Malta, Mauritius, Nicaragua, Oman, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Seychelles, Singapore, Slovenia, Swaziland, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen) participated in its work.

In ajoint letter [CD/1407] addressed to the President of the Conference, the 23 new member States made the commitment, legally binding upon each individually, not to obstruct any consensus among the original members of the Conference. The commitment would cease to apply after two years for States not subject to comprehensive enforcement measures under Chapter VII of the UN Charter, or earlier, if there was consensus in the Conference that the circumstance that had given rise to the situation (i.e., sanctions imposed by the Security Council on one of the new members) no longer existed.

After the expansion of the membership by 23 States, there were still 14 outstanding applications (in chronological order): Ireland, Tunisia, Ecuador, Greece, Croatia, Kuwait, Portugal, Slovenia, Czech Republic, Malaysia, Costa Rica, Denmark, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Cyprus. The Conference requested the President to continue consultations on further expansion of its membership.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/47 C.

Report of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community, has the primary role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament,

Considering, in this respect, that the present international climate should give additional impetus to multilateral negotiations with the aim of reaching concrete agreements,

1. Reaffirms the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community;
2. Welcomes the determination of the Conference on Disarmament to fulfil that role in the light of the evolving international situation, with a view to making early substantive progress on priority items of its agenda;
3. Also welcomes the decision taken by the Conference on Disarmament on 17 June 1996 to expand its membership with the admission of twenty-three new members;
4. Encourages the Conference on Disarmament to continue further review of its membership;
5. Also encourages the Conference on Disarmament to intensify further the ongoing review of its agenda and methods of work;

6. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to make every effort to reach a consensus on its agenda and programme of work at the beginning of its 1997 session;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure the provision to the Conference on Disarmament of adequate administrative, substantive and conference support services;

8. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 51/47 C

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.13) without vote, 14 November (meeting 23); draft by Poland (A/C.1/51/L.25), orally revised; agenda item 73 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 17, 23; plenary 79.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/47 A.

Expansion of the membership of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament and in particular the section concerning the expansion of the membership of the Conference,

Stressing the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the sole multilateral global negotiating body on disarmament,

Convinced that a more representative membership of the Conference on Disarmament from among the United Nations would contribute to the more effective pursuit of disarmament goals affecting the entire international community,

Recalling that since 1978, when agreement was reached at the first special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament that the membership of the then Committee on Disarmament would be reviewed at regular intervals, there have been thirty-seven applications for membership in the Conference,

Recalling also that, in 1993, the Special Coordinator for Membership of the Conference on Disarmament proposed that twenty-three applicants for membership should be admitted to the Conference and proposed further that a dynamic solution to the question of membership should be pursued,

Recalling further decision CD/1406 of the Conference on Disarmament, adopted at its 739th plenary meeting on 17 June 1996, admitting twenty-three countries as members of the Conference,

Recalling its resolution 50/72 C of 12 December 1995, adopted without a vote, in which it urged that, following the presentation of progress reports by the President of the Conference, the other applicants to date be further considered by the Conference at its 1996 session,

Noting the request of the Conference on Disarmament that its President continue consultations on a further expansion of its membership and report to it at the beginning of its 1997 session,

1. Recognizes the legitimate aspirations of all countries that have applied for membership to participate fully in the work of the Conference on Disarmament;
2. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to consider all remaining applications for membership with a view to reaching a decision on its further enlargement before the end of its 1997 session.

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 171-0-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.13) by recorded vote (144-0-2), 15 November (meeting 24); 16-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.1/Rev.1); agenda item 73 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-14, 24; plenary 79.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Turkey, United States.

Multilateral disarmament agreements

Parties and signatories

As at 31 December 1996, the following numbers of States had become parties to the multilateral agreements listed below (listed in chronological order, with the years in which they had been initially signed or opened for signature).

(Geneva) Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare (1925): 131 parties

The Antarctic Treaty (1959): 43 parties

Treaty on the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone (Bangkok Treaty) (1995): 5 parties

African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Pelindaba Treaty) (1996): 2 parties

Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (1996): 1 party

Nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament

Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty

The General Assembly on 10 September adopted a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty (CTBT) by resolution 50/245 (see below), culminating years of complex negotiations, many under the aegis of the United Nations.

The Treaty consists of a preamble, 17 articles and two annexes. By article I, each State party undertakes not to carry out any nuclear-weapon-test explosion or any other nuclear explosion, and to prohibit and prevent any such nuclear explosion at any place under its jurisdiction or control. Further, each party undertakes to refrain from causing, encouraging, or in any way participating in the carrying out of any nuclear-weapon-test explosion or any other nuclear explosion.

Other articles deal with: the Organization (including the Conference of the States Parties, the Executive Council, the Technical Secretariat and privileges and immunities); national implementation measures; verification (including the International Monitoring System); measures to redress a situation and to ensure compliance, including sanctions; settlement of disputes; amendments; review of the Treaty; duration and withdrawal; status of the Protocol and annexes; signature; ratification; accession; entry into force; reservations; depositary; and authentic texts. The Treaty is accompanied by a three-part Protocol (dealing with the International Monitoring System and International Data Centre functions; on-site inspections; and confidence-building measures), with two annexes.

The goal of a global test ban had been on the agenda of multilateral, trilateral and bilateral negotiating and deliberative bodies for more than 40 years. Concerns first arose about nuclear testing in the mid-1950s as the general public became increasingly aware of the harmful effects of radioactive fallout from atmospheric nuclear tests. Worldwide public protests led Governments to pursue a ban on nuclear-weapon tests. Three treaties on nuclear testing, none comprehensive, were concluded: the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water [YUN 1963, p. 137], and two bilateral treaties on limitations of yields of nuclear tests for military and peaceful purposes between the former USSR and the United States—the Treaty on the Limitation of Underground Nuclear Weapon Tests and the Treaty on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes.

The Conference on Disarmament had long attempted to establish a working group to formulate a comprehensive test ban. It created a subsidiary body on the item in 1982, but succeeded in agreeing upon a mandate for the group only in 1993. Negotiations began in 1994; following two-and-a-half years of intense negotiations, the Conference concluded a draft treaty in August 1996, but the draft did not command consensus, and therefore the Conference was unable to transmit it to the General Assembly for adoption.

Capitalizing on the political momentum gained in the negotiations and the heightened international expectation for finalization of a global ban, an overwhelming majority of Member States of the Assembly, on 10 September, adopted a CTBT identical to the one drafted by the Conference.

As depositary, the Secretary-General opened the Treaty for signature on 24 September. Seventy-one States signed the Treaty on the first day, including the five nuclear-weapon States (China, France, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States) and 32 of the additional 44 States required by article XIV to ratify it to allow its entry into force. As at year's end, 138 States had signed and one (Fiji) had ratified the Treaty.

Pursuant to a request made by Canada as organizer of the process preparing for the first session of the Preparatory Commission for the CTBT Organization (CTBTO), the Secretary-General as depositary convoked a Meeting of States Signatories on 19 November which established the Preparatory Commission.

The Commission held the first part of its first session in New York from 20 to 22 November [CTBT/PC/I/22 & Corr.1], during which it adopted one resolution, entitled "Text on the Establishment of a Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization" [CTBT/MSS/RES/1]. The Commission adopted its provisional rules of procedure and provisional financial regulations and elected five Vice-Chairmen. It took note of a report [CTBT/PC/I/11 & Add.1] on host country commitments prepared by the Government of Austria and adopted the host country agreement as annexed to that document.

Owing to lack of time, the Commission decided to suspend the first session and to resume the session in Geneva early in 1997.

Conference on Disarmament consideration.

On 23 January, the Conference on Disarmament decided [CD/1380] to re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban with the same mandate it had in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 142] and 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 194], namely, to negotiate a comprehensive test-ban treaty. The Committee held 50 meetings between 23 January and 16 August.

The Committee established two working groups: Working Group 1, on verification, and Working Group 2, on legal and institutional issues. In addition, it appointed 12 Friends of the Chair and 5 Moderators to deal with specific issues in private and open-ended consultations.

Working Group 1 made intensive efforts towards finalizing treaty language on the verification regime in the rolling text. The Friends of the Chair held consultations with delegations on the International Monitoring System (IMS), the International Data Centre (IDC) and on-site inspections (OSI). As a result, at the end of March, the Chairman of the Working Group presented revised draft language on provisions relating to verification issues for inclusion in the rolling text.

Working Group 2 focused on legal and institutional aspects of the future organization to be entrusted with implementing the treaty. It considered, inter alia, the issues of entry into force, duration and withdrawal, review, composition of the Executive Council, measures to redress a situation contravening the treaty, national implementation measures including compliance, funding and the seat of the organization and its possible relationship to the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Following the discussion on those issues, the treaty language in the rolling text was substantially revised and refined.

Negotiations continued on the basis of the rolling text of September 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 195] and subsequently that of 22 January 1996 [CD/1378]. In February, draft treaty texts were submitted by Iran [CD/1384 & Corr.1] and by Australia [CD/1386 & Corr.1], which were used by the Ad Hoc Committee as resource papers.

At the end of the first part of the session, on 28 March, the Chairman submitted for the first time a working paper entitled "Outline of a draft comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty", which was structured in treaty format, beginning with a preamble followed by 17 articles. The paper pointed out some of the most contentious areas—scope, entry into force, elements of OSI, composition of the Executive Council—and retained most of the brackets contained in the rolling text. The Chairman indicated that his aim was to show what a CTBT could look like and to highlight the key issues needing decisions. Various countries stressed, nonetheless, that they expected the Chairman to present a new rolling text at the second part of the session.

At the opening meeting of the second session of the Conference on Disarmament, on 13 May, the Chairman announced that there would not be another version of the rolling text, but rather a treaty. On 28 May, underscoring that presentation of a complete draft text of the treaty constituted an essential and indispensable step towards finalizing their work within the time-frame set by the international community, the Chairman brought such a text before the Committee. Following discussions of the text, the Chairman, on 24 June, introduced changes to it, which drew mixed reactions. Canada, on behalf of a number of delegations—Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Czech Republic, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Romania, Slovakia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Ukraine—read out a declaration urging all countries to come to a compromise agreement by the end of June.

On the closing day of the second part of the session, 28 June, the Ad Hoc Committee Chairman presented a revised draft treaty, expressing his conviction that convergence had reached its peak and recommending the draft treaty for serious consideration to delegations and to their capitals. Several States expressed their support for the text, though only France voiced its full acceptance outright. A number of others reaffirmed their willingness to continue the negotiations until an agreement was reached on a consensus draft treaty. The Chairman also presented a revised draft text on the establishment of a preparatory commission, which had been prepared by one of the Friends of the Chair.

At the outset of the third part of the session at the end of July, a considerable number of countries stated that, in spite of reservations, they could accept the Chairman's text as presented, and that the Conference should seize the opportunity to forward it to the General Assembly for signature in September. A number of them expressed concern that any further negotiations might lead away from consensus.

Following intense discussions and consultations by the Chairman, nearly all members of the Committee made statements expressing support, reservations or objections to the Chairman's text and to the proposal to transmit it to the Conference, which were recorded in the report of the Conference [A/51/27].

The Ad Hoc Committee therefore concluded that no consensus for transmittal could be reached and thus referred its report to the Conference on Disarmament without the treaty attached.

Thereupon, the delegation of Belgium, in its national capacity, on 22 August, issued the treaty as a document of the Conference [CD/1427].

Communications. In a letter of 22 August [A/50/1024], Australia requested the President of the fiftieth session of the General Assembly to make arrangements for the Assembly to meet in plenary session to consider and take action on a CTBT, pursuant to Assembly resolution 50/65 [YUN 1995, p. 196]. In that resolution, the Assembly had declared its readiness to resume consideration of the item, as necessary, before its fifty-first session in order to endorse the text of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty. Australia also submitted to the Secretary-General for circulation as official documents the text of a draft treaty [A/50/1027], identical to the one circulated by Belgium in the Conference on Disarmament, and a draft resolution calling for adoption of the treaty and its opening for signature at the earliest possible date.

On 29 August, India, in a letter [A/50/1030] to the President of the Assembly, noted that the 1995 Assembly resolution referred to the text of a CTBT that was to be concluded by the Conference on Disarmament, and that the treaty text submitted by Australia "as a national document" had not been adopted by consensus at the Conference. India considered therefore that the endorsement of any national document containing the non-consensus text would be contrary to the relevant provisions of the 1995 resolution. In a letter [A/50/1036] of 9 September addressed to the General Assembly President, India suggested changes in the preamble and in the provisions on basic obligations and entry into force.

Japan, on 26 August [A/50/1026], expressed support for the resumption of consideration of a CTBT. Argentina [A/50/1031] and the Russian Federation [A/50/1032], both on 3 September, declared their support for the draft treaty text and the procedure for its consideration. The Russian Federation added that the course of action chosen for the adoption of the treaty was a departure from the existing practice for the elaboration of multilateral agreements in the Conference on Disarmament, but that it had agreed to such a departure owing to the exceptional nature of the situation that had arisen with regard to the treaty.

General Assembly consideration. On 9 September, the Assembly agreed to Australia's request to resume consideration of the item dealing with CTBT and proceeded immediately to its consideration in plenary session. Upon introducing the draft resolution, which had at that point garnered 126 co-sponsors, Australia explained the reasons for the procedural arrangement made to submit the draft treaty to the Assembly, namely, that the treaty had been overwhelmingly agreed to in the Conference on Disarmament and that only one State had not agreed to transmit it to the Assembly. Australia also underlined that those "particular or exceptional circumstances" should not set a precedent, and expressed support for the operating procedures of the Conference—a point stressed by a large number of States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 September, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/245.

Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/65 of 12 December 1995, in which the Assembly declared its readiness to resume consideration of the item "Comprehensive test-ban treaty", as necessary, before its fifty-first session in order to endorse the text of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

1. Adopts the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty, as contained in document A/50/1027;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, as depositary of the Treaty, to open it for signature, at United Nations Headquarters, at the earliest possible date;

3. Calls upon all States to sign and, thereafter, according to their respective constitutional processes, to become parties to the Treaty at the earliest possible date;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, as depositary of the Treaty, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the status of signature and ratifications of the Treaty.

General Assembly resolution 50/245

10 September 1996 Meeting 125 158-3-5 (recorded vote)

127-nation draft (A/50/L.78/Add.1); agenda item 65.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: plenary 123-125.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Liberia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Palau, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bhutan, India, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

Abstaining: Cuba, Lebanon, Mauritius, Syrian Arab Republic, United Republic of Tanzania.

On 10 December, the Assembly, by decision 51/413, took note of part seven of the report of the First Committee [A/51/566/Add.6], which stated that the Committee had taken no action on the item dealing with the implementation of the comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty.

In other related action, the Assembly, on the same date, by decision 51/412, took note of part six of the report of the First Committee [A/51/566/Add.5], which stated that the Committee had taken no action regarding the amendment of the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water [YUN 1963, p. 137] (also known as the partial test-ban treaty).

Nuclear explosive testing in 1996

On 27 January 1996, France conducted its last nuclear test explosion at the Mururoa and Fanga-taufa atolls in French Polynesia, and announced the end of its testing programme two days later.

In a letter of 8 June, China stated that on that date it had conducted a nuclear test at its testing site at Lop Nor [A/51/163]. In a statement of 10 June [A/51/174], Kazakhstan expressed concern at the nuclear test. On 11 June [CD/1409], Argentina deplored the test, taking place as it did at a decisive moment in the negotiation of CTBT. Chile, in a letter of 12 June [A/51/167], strongly protested China's detonation of the nuclear device.

China's last nuclear test explosion at Lop Nor was conducted on 29 July, which was followed by the announcement of a moratorium on further testing effective the next day [A/51/262]. On 29 July [CD/1415], the United States regretted the test but welcomed the moratorium. Argentina, on 5 August [CD/1418], deplored the test but noted with satisfaction the decision of China to declare a moratorium on nuclear testing.

The former USSR had conducted its last nuclear test on 24 October 1990 [YUN 1991, p. 39], and the Russian Federation maintained the moratorium; the United Kingdom's last nuclear test was on 26 November 1991; and the United States' final test occurred on 23 September 1992.

Notes of Secretary-General. By a note of 7 August [A/51/279], the Secretary-General transmitted information received from Australia detailing nuclear explosions detected by that country from January to December 1995.

By a later note [A/52/88], the Secretary-General transmitted a communication received from Australia detailing nuclear explosions detected by that country from January to September 1996. Three nuclear explosions had taken place, one at the Fangataufa atoll in the South Pacific, by France (27 January), and two by China at the Lop Nor testing site (8 June and 29 July).

Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts

The Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Cooperative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events (GSE) held three sessions at Geneva in 1996. The main topic of the Group's forty-third session, held from 12 to 23 February [CD/1385], was the evaluation of the first full year of the Group of Scientific Experts Third Technical Test (GSETT-3), which was an experimental global seismic monitoring system intended to test concepts for possible use in a future CTBT International Monitoring System (IMS). GSETT-3 had begun full-scale operations on 1 January 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 195]. During its forty-fourth session (20-24 May) [CD/1398], the Group reviewed results from GSETT-3. At its forty-fifth session (5-15 August) [CD/1422 & Corr.1], the Group focused on preparing a comprehensive report on the GSETT-3 experiment, which provided an overview of the results and conclusions from a year and a half of GSETT-3 operation. The report [CD/1423], which was submitted to the Conference on Disarmament in September, recommended that the Group continue GSETT-3 until the Preparatory Commission for CTBTO assumed responsibility for the evolving IMS, including the experimental International Data Centre.

Non-proliferation treaty

In 1996, Andorra, Angola and Djibouti acceded to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) [YUN 1968, p. 17, GA res. 2373(XXII)], bringing the number of States parties to 185 at year's end.

Pursuant to NPT's entry into force on 5 March 1970, quinquennial review conferences were held in 1975 [YUN 1975, p. 27], 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 51], 1985 [YUN 1985, p. 56], 1990 [NPT/CONF.IV.45/I] and 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 189], as called for under article VIII, paragraph 3, of the Treaty.

Following consultations, the parties to the Treaty decided that the first meeting of the Preparatory Committee for the next NPT review conference, to be held in the year 2000, would take place in New York from 7 to 18 April 1997.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 A.

Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons: 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and its Preparatory Committee

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2373(XXII) of 12 June 1968, the annex to which contains the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Noting the provisions of article VIII, paragraph 3, of the Treaty regarding the convening of Review Conferences at five-year intervals,

Recalling the decision on strengthening the review process for the Treaty, of the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of Parties to the Treaty in which it was agreed that Treaty Review Conferences should continue to be held every five years and that, accordingly, the next Review Conference should be held in the year 2000,

Recalling also the decision of the 1995 Review and Extension Conference that the first Preparatory Committee meeting for the 2000 Review Conference should be held in 1997,

Recalling further its resolution 50/70 Q of 12 December 1995, in which it took note of the various decisions of the 1995 Review and Extension Conference,

1. Takes note of the decision of the parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, following appropriate consultations, to hold the first meeting of the Preparatory Committee in New York from 7 to 18 April 1997;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services, including summary records, as may be required for the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and its Preparatory Committee.

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 167-0-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.11) by recorded vote (142-0-2), 15 November (meeting 24); draft by Sri Lanka, for States parties to NPT (A/C.1/51/L.3); agenda item 71 f/A

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 15, 24; plenary 79.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: India, Israel.

The Assembly also adopted resolution 51/45 G on 10 December.

Nuclear disarmament with a view to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/70 C of 12 December 1995,

Recognizing that the end of the cold war has increased the possibility of freeing the world from the fear of nuclear war,

Appreciating the entry into force of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, to which Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States of America are party, and looking forward to the early entry into force of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, which was ratified by the United States of America,

Welcoming the reductions in the nuclear arsenals of other nuclear-weapon States,

Welcoming also the decision of the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to extend the Treaty indefinitely, taken without a vote, as well as the decisions on strengthening the review process for the Treaty and on the principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament,

Noting the reference in the decision on the principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament to the importance of the following measures for the full realization and effective implementation of article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, including the programme of action as reflected below:

(a) The completion by the Conference on Disarmament of the negotiations on a universal and internationally and effectively verifiable comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty no later than 1996, and utmost restraint that should be exercised by the nuclear-weapon States pending the entry into force of that treaty;

(b) The immediate commencement and early conclusion of negotiations on a non-discriminatory and universally applicable convention banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices in accordance with the statement of the Special Coordinator of the Conference on Disarmament and the mandate contained therein;

(c) The determined pursuit by the nuclear-weapon States of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons, and by all States of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Welcoming the adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty at the fiftieth session of the General Assembly and its opening for signature at the beginning of the current session,

Recalling that nuclear non-proliferation and the promotion of nuclear disarmament are key elements in the maintenance of international peace and security, which is one of the most important purposes of the United Nations,

1. Urges States not parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to accede to it at the earliest possible date, recognizing the importance of universal adherence to the Treaty;

2. Calls for the determined pursuit by the nuclear-weapon States of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons, and by all States of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control, and invites them to keep States Members of the United Nations duly informed of the progress and efforts made;

3. Calls upon all States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to make their best efforts for a smooth start of the strengthened review process of the Treaty as they convene their first Preparatory Committee, in 1997, with a view to the success of the next Review Conference which should be held in the year 2000;

4. Calls upon all States to implement fully their commitments in the field of disarmament and non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 159-0-11 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.11) by recorded vote (132-0-11), 11 November (meeting 18); 22-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.17); agenda item 71 (i).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 15, 18; plenary 79.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Algeria, Brazil, China, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, India, Iran, Israel, Mauritius, Myanmar, Nigeria.

In the Committee, paragraph one and the seventh preambular paragraph were adopted by separate recorded votes of 138 to 2, with 2 abstentions, and 133 to 1, with 6 abstentions, respectively.

The Assembly retained the same paragraphs by recorded votes of 161 to 3, with 2 abstentions, and 161 to 1, with 5 abstentions, respectively.

Nuclear proliferation in the Middle East

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/73 [YUN 1995, p. 190], the Secretary-General submitted, in October, a report [A/51/446] on the risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East. He stated that apart from the text of an IAEA resolution adopted by its General Conference on 20 September, he had received no additional information on the subject since the submission of his 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 190].

Annexed to the Secretary-General's report was the text of the resolution adopted by the IAEA General Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/48.

The risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the relevant United Nations resolutions,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, the latest of which is GC(40)RES/22 adopted on 20 September 1996, and noting the danger of nuclear proliferation, especially in areas of tension,

Cognizant that the proliferation of nuclear weapons in the region of the Middle East would pose a serious threat to international peace and security,

Mindful of the importance of placing all nuclear facilities in the region of the Middle East under full-scope safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Recalling the resolution on the Middle East adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons on 11 May 1995, in which the Conference noted with concern the continued existence in the Middle East of unsafeguarded nuclear facilities, reaffirmed the importance of the early realization of universal adherence to the Treaty and called upon all States in the Middle East that had not yet done so, without exception, to accede to the Treaty as soon as possible and to place all their nuclear facilities under full-scope International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Recalling also the decision on principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons on 11 May 1995, in which the Conference urged universal adherence to the Treaty as an urgent priority and called upon all States not yet party to the Treaty to accede to it at the earliest date, particularly those States that operate unsafeguarded nuclear facilities,

Noting that, since the adoption of the aforementioned resolution and decision on 11 May 1995, Djibouti and the United Arab Emirates have become parties to the Treaty, and that Oman will become a party to the Treaty at the earliest date, and noting also that Israel shall be the only State in the Middle East that has not yet become a party to the Treaty and has not declared its intention to do so,

Concerned about threats posed to security and stability by the proliferation of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction in the region,

Stressing the importance of undertaking confidence-building measures, in particular the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, in order to consolidate the non-proliferation regime and enhance peace and security in the region,

Noting the adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty by the General Assembly and its signature by one hundred and thirty-two States, including a number of States in the region,

1. Welcomes the accession of Djibouti to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons on 22 August 1996, as well as the decision of Oman, expressed by its Minister of State for Foreign Affairs before the General Assembly on 1 October 1996, to accede to the Treaty;

2. Calls upon the only State in the region that is not yet party to the Treaty and has not declared its intention to do so, to accede to the Treaty without further delay, and not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons and to renounce possession of nuclear weapons, and to place all unsafeguarded nuclear facilities under full-scope International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards as an important confidence-building measure among all States of the region and as a step towards enhancing peace and security;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "The risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East".

General Assembly resolution 51/48

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 129-3-32 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.14) by recorded vote (98-2-32), 18 November (meeting 25); draft by Egypt, for League of Arab States, and Malaysia (A/C.1/51/L.27/Rev.2); agenda item 74.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 17, 24, 25; plenary 79.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Finland, France, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Morocco, Mozambique, Namibia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, Micronesia, United States.

Abstaining: Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Congo, Cote d'Ivoire, Equatorial Guinea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Georgia, Guatemala, India, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Latvia, Liberia, Lithuania, Marshall Islands, Mongolia, Myanmar, Nepal, Nicaragua, Norway, Paraguay, Singapore, Tajikistan, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Venezuela.

In the Committee, the sixth preambular paragraph was adopted by a separate recorded vote of 118 to 2, with 10 abstentions.

The Assembly retained the paragraph by a recorded vote of 155 to 2, with 8 abstentions.

Prohibition of use

The Conference on Disarmament, at its 1996 session, was unable to undertake negotiations on a convention on the prohibition of use of nuclear weapons, as the General Assembly had requested [YUN 1995, p. 208, GA res. 50/71 E].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/46 D.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the use of nuclear weapons poses the most serious threat to the survival of mankind,

Bearing in mind the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 8 July 1996 on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons,

Convinced that a multilateral, universal and binding agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would contribute to the elimination of the nuclear threat and to the climate for negotiations leading to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons, thereby strengthening international peace and security,

Conscious that some steps taken by the Russian Federation and the United States of America towards a reduction of their nuclear weapons and the improvement in the international climate can contribute towards the goal of the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Recalling that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that any use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Determined to achieve an international convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons, leading to their ultimate destruction,

Stressing that an international convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons would be an important step in a phased programme towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 1996 session, was unable to undertake negotiations on this subject as called for in General Assembly resolution 50/71 E of 12 December 1995,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a possible basis the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons annexed to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly on the results of those negotiations.

ANNEX

Draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The States Parties to the present Convention,
Alarmed by the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that any use of nuclear weapons constitutes a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity,

Desiring to achieve a multilateral, universal and binding agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice that there exists an obligation of all States to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control,

Determined, therefore, to achieve an international convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons, leading to their ultimate destruction,

Convinced that the present Convention would be an important step in a phased programme towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework,

Determined to continue negotiations for the achievement of this goal,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

The States Parties to the present Convention solemnly undertake not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons under any circumstances.

Article 2

This Convention shall be of unlimited duration.

Article 3

1. The present Convention shall be open to all States for signature. Any State that does not sign the Convention before its entry into force in accordance with paragraph 3 of the present article may accede to it at any time.

2. The present Convention shall be subject to ratification by signatory States. Instruments of ratification or accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. The present Convention shall enter into force on the deposit of instruments of ratification by twenty-five Governments, including the Governments of the five nuclear-weapon States, in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article.

4. For States whose instruments of ratification or accession are deposited after the entry into force of the Convention, it shall enter into force on the date of the deposit of their instruments of ratification or accession.

5. The depositary shall promptly inform all signatory and acceding States of the date of each signature, the date of deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession and the date of entry into force of this Convention, as well as of the receipt of other notices.

6. The present Convention shall be registered by the depositary in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

Article 4

The present Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall send duly certified copies thereof to the Governments of the signatory and acceding States.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Convention, opened for signature at _____ on the _____ day of _____ one thousand nine hundred and _____.

Security assurances

In 1996, the Conference on Disarmament did not establish an ad hoc committee to undertake negotiations on international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, but the subject was actively debated within the framework of CTBT negotiations. China and Ukraine advocated inclusion of a separate article on assurances, and China tabled a textual proposal that was later withdrawn. In general, the non-aligned States held that the unilateral commitments given in Security Council resolution 984(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 192] by the five nuclear-weapon States fell far short of expectations since they had not been negotiated multilaterally and were not legally binding or comprehensive, and that the Conference on Disarmament should consider further steps that might be taken. The Western nuclear-weapon States, however, maintained that their assurances were legally valid and adequate. Nevertheless, at the end of the session, it was recognized that an ad hoc committee on assurances could be set up and its mandate updated.

New action on security assurances was taken by the nuclear-weapon States in connection with their signature and ratification of relevant protocols to the Treaty of Rarotonga [YUN 1985, p. 58] and the Pelindaba Treaty [YUN 1995, p. 203], but no broader commitments were undertaken. The commitment embodied in the Protocol to the Bangkok Treaty, whereby the nuclear-weapon States would undertake not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons within the South-East Asia zone, was considered too sweeping, and contributed to the reluctance of the nuclear-weapon States to adhere to the Protocol as drafted.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/43.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Welcoming the progress achieved in recent years in both nuclear and conventional disarmament,

Noting that, despite recent progress in the field of nuclear disarmament, further efforts are necessary towards the achievement of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Determined strictly to abide by the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations on the non-use of force or threat of force,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures and arrangements to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures and arrangements to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can contribute positively to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document,

Recalling the relevant parts of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, and of the special report of the Conference on Disarmament submitted to the Assembly at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament, as well as the report of the Conference on its 1992 session,

Recalling also paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item,

Taking note of the proposals submitted under that item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note also of the relevant decision of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995, and also of the decision adopted by the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference reiterated in the Final Communiqué of the Twentieth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Istanbul from 4 to 8 August 1991, calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to reach an urgent agreement on an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note further of the unilateral declarations made by all nuclear-weapon States on their policies of non-use or non-threat of use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

Noting also the greater willingness to overcome the difficulties encountered in previous years,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 984(1995) of 11 April 1995 and the views expressed on it,

Recalling its relevant resolutions adopted in previous years, in particular resolutions 45/54 of 4 December 1990, 46/32 of 6 December 1991, 47/50 of 9 December 1992, 48/73 of 16 December 1993, 49/73 of 15 December 1994 and 50/68 of 12 December 1995,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach an early agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to work actively towards an early agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula that could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including, in particular, those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends also that the Conference on Disarmament should actively continue intensive negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.9) by recorded vote (100-0-43), 11 November (meeting 19); 19-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.30); agenda item 69.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-14, 19; plenary 79.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Albania, Andorra, Argentina, Armenia, Austria, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Monaco, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, San Marino, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

International Court of Justice Advisory Opinion

By a note of 15 October [A/51/218], the Secretary-General transmitted the 8 July Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) on the legality of the threat or use of nuclear weapons. The Court addressed the question in the light of the provisions of the Charter relating to the threat or use of force; it then turned to the law applicable in situations of armed conflict, first addressing the question, of whether there were specific rules in international law regulating the legality or illegality of recourse to nuclear weapons per se and then examining the question in the light of the principles and rules of humanitarian law and the law of neutrality. Given the difficulties arising from the examination and considering that international law and the stability of the international order were bound to suffer from the continuing difference of views with regard to the legal status of nuclear weapons, the Court expressed the view that it was important to put an end to that state of affairs, and that complete nuclear disarmament appeared to be the most appropriate means of achieving that result.

In its Opinion, the Court agreed unanimously that a threat or use of force by means of nuclear weapons that was contrary to Article 2, paragraph 4 (refraining from the threat or use of force), of the Charter and that did not meet the requirements of Article 51 (inherent right of individual or collective self-defence) was unlawful, and that a threat or use of nuclear weapons should be compatible with international law applicable in armed conflict. By a vote of 7 to 7, with the President's vote deciding, it said that the threat or use of nuclear weapons would generally be contrary to the rules of international law applicable in armed conflict; however, it could not conclude definitively whether the threat or use of nuclear weapons would be lawful or unlawful in an extreme circumstance of self-defence. It decided unanimously, however, that "there exists an obligation to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 M.

Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legality of the threat or use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/75 K of 15 December 1994, in which it requested the International Court of Justice to render an advisory opinion on whether the threat or use of nuclear weapons is permitted in any circumstance under international law,

Mindful of the solemn obligations of States parties, undertaken in article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, particularly to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament,

Recalling its resolution 50/70 P of 12 December 1995, in which it called upon the Conference on Disarmament to establish an ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament to commence negotiations on a phased programme of nuclear disarmament and for the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework,

Recalling also the principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament adopted at the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and in particular the objective of determined pursuit by the nuclear-weapon States of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons,

Recognizing that the only defence against a nuclear catastrophe is the total elimination of nuclear weapons and the certainty that they will never be produced again,

Desiring to achieve the objective of a legally binding prohibition of the development, production, testing, deployment, stockpiling, threat or use of nuclear weapons and their destruction under effective international control,

Reaffirming the commitment of the international community to the goal of the total elimination of nuclear weapons, and welcoming every effort towards this end,

Reaffirming also the central role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum,

Noting the adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/245 of 10 September 1996,

Regretting the absence of multilaterally negotiated and legally binding security assurances against the threat or use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States,

Convinced that the continuing existence of nuclear weapons poses a threat to all humanity and that their use would have catastrophic consequences for all life on Earth,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the International Court of Justice for responding to the request made by the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session;

2. Takes note of the Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, issued on 8 July 1996;

3. Underlines the unanimous conclusion of the Court that there exists an obligation to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control;

4. Calls upon all States to fulfil that obligation immediately by commencing multilateral negotiations in 1997 leading to an early conclusion of a nuclear-weapons convention prohibiting the development, production, testing, deployment, stockpiling, transfer, threat or use of nuclear weapons and providing for their elimination;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary assistance to support the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session an item entitled "Follow-up to the Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons".

General Assembly resolution 51/45 M

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.11) by recorded vote (94-22-29), 14 November (meeting 22); 45-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.37); agenda item 71 (k).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 15, 22; plenary 79.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Albania, Belgium, Canada, Czech Republic, France, Germany, Hungary, Italy, Luxembourg, Monaco, Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Andorra, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Benin, Bulgaria, Croatia, Cyprus, Denmark, Equatorial Guinea, Estonia, Finland, Georgia, Iceland, Israel, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Norway, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Senegal, Tajikistan, Togo, Ukraine, Uzbekistan.

In the Committee, paragraphs 3 and 4 were adopted by separate recorded votes of 115 to 7, with 19 abstentions, and 87 to 27, with 27 abstentions, respectively.

The General Assembly retained those paragraphs by recorded votes of 139 to 7, with 20 abstentions, and 110 to 27, with 29 abstentions, respectively.

IAEA safeguards

In early 1996, IAEA began to implement the new measures, principally the collection of environmental samples and unannounced inspections, contained in Programme 93+2. The Programme consisted of two parts: one concerned measures for which IAEA already had authority; and the second dealt with measures that would require additional authority. In June, the Board of Governors decided to move ahead with concrete steps that would increase the authority of the inspectorate. It agreed to establish a Committee on Strengthening the Effectiveness and Improving the Efficiency of the Safeguards System that would draw up a draft model protocol to supplement the existing safeguards inspection agreements between IAEA and non-nuclear-weapon States, and to define the nature of additional information and additional access to nuclear-related locations that were to be inspected.

The Committee met in July and in October, and examined the proposals concerning measures requiring additional authority that had been put forward by the IAEA secretariat and amendments that had been submitted by delegations. As at year's end, the bracketed rolling text of a model protocol additional to existing safeguards agreements reflected the degree of agreement reached, and intensive multilateral consultations were under way to facilitate progress in the session scheduled for January 1997.

As to safeguards with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), the information and access provided to IAEA were insufficient to give a comprehensive picture of the country's nuclear programme and to answer questions about the completeness of its initial declaration of nuclear activities. The verification arrangements currently in place, however, gave confidence that the graphite-moderated reactors and related facilities subject to a freeze under the 1994 Agreed Framework [YUN1994,p.442] between the United States and the DPRK were actually frozen. In 1996, IAEA adopted a resolution on the implementation of the agreements between it and the DPRK (see also PART ONE, Chapter IV).

Regarding Iraq, IAEA continued to implement its ongoing plan for monitoring and verifying Iraq's compliance with relevant Security Council resolutions through its Nuclear Monitoring Group, assisted by and in coordination with the United Nations Special Commission (see also PART ONE, Chapter IV).

Nuclear disarmament

Programme of action to eliminate nuclear weapons

By a letter of 22 October [A/C.1/51/12], Egypt, on behalf also of other members of the Group of 21 non-aligned countries (Algeria, Bangladesh, Brazil, Cameroon, Colombia, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Zaire, Zimbabwe), transmitted a proposal for a programme of action for the elimination of nuclear weapons. The programme of action was to be carried out through the establishment by the Conference on Disarmament of an ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament.

The first phase of the programme of action, which would take place between the years 1996 and 2000, consisted of measures aimed at reducing the nuclear threat and measures towards nuclear disarmament. The second phase, planned for the years 2000 to 2010, aimed at reducing the nuclear arsenals and promoting confidence between States. The programme's final phase, to take place between the years 2010 and 2020, was intended to achieve the consolidation of a nuclear-weapon-free world.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 O.

Nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/75 E of 15 December 1994 on a step-by-step reduction of the nuclear threat, and its resolution 50/70 P of 12 December 1995 on nuclear disarmament,

Reaffirming the commitment of the international community to the goal of the total elimination of nuclear weapons and the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free world,

Determined to achieve the objective of prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons and their destruction, and to conclude such an international convention or conventions at an early date,

Bearing in mind paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, calling for the urgent negotiation of agreements for the cessation of the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear-weapon systems, and for a comprehensive and phased programme with agreed timeframes, wherever feasible, for progressive and balanced reduction of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, leading to their ultimate and complete elimination at the earliest possible time,

Taking note of the adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/245 on 10 September 1996,

Recognizing that the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty and any proposed treaty on fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices must constitute disarmament measures, and not only non-proliferation measures, and that these measures, together with an international legal instrument on adequate security assurances for non-nuclear-weapon States and an international convention prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons, must be integral steps leading to the total elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework,

Recognizing also that the end of the cold war has brought about favourable conditions for creating a world free of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming the entry into force of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, to which Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States of America are States parties,

Welcoming also the conclusion of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms by the Russian Federation and the United States of America and the ratification of that Treaty by the United States of America, and looking forward to the full implementation of the START I and START II Treaties by the States parties, and to further concrete steps for nuclear disarmament by all nuclear-weapon States,

Noting with appreciation the unilateral measures by the nuclear-weapon States for nuclear arms limitation, and encouraging them to undertake further such measures,

Recognizing the complementarity of bilateral and multilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament, and that bilateral negotiations can never replace multilateral negotiations in this respect,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and the multilateral efforts in the Conference on Disarmament to reach agreement on such an international convention at an early date,

Taking note of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice dated 8 July 1996 on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, and welcoming the unanimous reaffirmation by all Judges of the Court that there exists an obligation for all States to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control,

Taking note also of paragraph 84 and other relevant recommendations in the Final Document of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995, calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to establish, on a priority basis, an ad hoc committee to commence negotiations early in 1996 on a phased programme of nuclear disarmament and for the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework, and paragraph 26 of the Communique of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegations of the Non-Aligned Countries, held in New York on 25 September 1996,<sup>a</sup>

Expressing its regret that the Conference on Disarmament has not been able as yet to establish an ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament, as called for in Assembly resolution 50/70 P,

Taking note of the proposal of twenty-eight delegations to the Conference on Disarmament that are members of the Group of 21 for a programme of action for the elimination of nuclear weapons, and expressing its conviction that this proposal will be an important input and will contribute to negotiations on this question in the Conference,

1. Recognizes that, in view of the end of the cold war and recent political developments, the time is now opportune for all nuclear-weapon States to undertake effective disarmament measures with a view to the total elimination of these weapons within a time-bound framework;

2. Recognizes also that there is a genuine need to de-emphasize the role of nuclear weapons, and to review and revise nuclear doctrines accordingly;

3. Urges the nuclear-weapon States to stop immediately the qualitative improvement, development, production and stockpiling of nuclear warheads and their delivery systems;

4. Calls upon the nuclear-weapon States to undertake the step-by-step reduction of the nuclear threat and a phased programme of progressive and balanced deep reductions of nuclear weapons, and to carry out effective nuclear disarmament measures with a view to the total elimination of these weapons within a time-bound framework;

5. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to establish, on a priority basis, an ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament to commence negotiations early in 1997 on a phased programme of nuclear disarmament and for the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework through a nuclear-weapons convention;

6. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to take into account in this regard the proposal of the twenty-eight delegations for a programme of action for the elimination of nuclear weapons;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Nuclear disarmament".

Fissile material

The impasse in the Conference on Disarmament with respect to negotiations on a fissile material cut-off, which had developed the previous year [YUN 1995, p. 202], persisted in 1996. In plenary meetings, some delegations spoke of the commencement of negotiations on a cut-off as the next logical step for the Conference to take, once it had concluded a CTBT. Most non-aligned States, however, saw a cut-off as an element of their programme of action for the elimination of nuclear weapons, and sought to ensure that the Conference would deal with it in that context before agreeing to begin negotiations on a cut-off. In the end, although no delegation opposed negotiating a cut-off convention, it was not possible to undertake focused work at the Conference's 1996 session.

Some progress at the unilateral level was made. Early in the year, France, which had already halted the production of plutonium for military purposes, reported its decision to close down its Pierrelatte plant, which was capable of producing highly enriched uranium for national defence purposes. The Russian Federation, which had ceased producing weapons-grade uranium, announced that its national programme to cease producing weapons-grade plutonium would be implemented by 1998.

On 17 September, the Secretary of Energy of the United States and the Minister of Atomic Energy of the Russian Federation met with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) Director General in Vienna to discuss IAEA verification of fissile material transferred from military use to peaceful nuclear activity. Following the meeting, a trilateral statement was issued, in which the Russian Federation and the United States agreed to discuss how to protect sensitive nuclear-weapons information and to prevent its disclosure, and to hold appropriate consultations with IAEA thereon; to form a joint group to address the various technical, legal and financial issues associated with implementing IAEA verification and to report on progress within nine months; and to visit two sites in the United States to examine how IAEA safeguards had been implemented at plutonium facilities under existing United States voluntary offer agreements with the Agency.

Issues related to START and other bilateral agreements

The 1991 Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START I) [YUN 1991, p. 34], which was signed by the Presidents of the former USSR and the United States and entered into force on 5 December 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 145], was halfway through its implementation phase in 1996. The actual dismantling and destruction, at the rate of some 2,000 nuclear warheads a year, had begun before the Treaty entered into force. At year's end, the United States had achieved 60 per cent of its target, and both parties had reduced their nuclear-delivery vehicles below the limits set for December 1999. The Russian Federation encountered some delays, however, in dismantling its nuclear-powered submarines.

Regarding the 1993 START II Treaty [YUN 1993, p. 117], on 26 January, the United States Senate ratified the Treaty with an overwhelming majority and without amendment, as was reported in a Conference on Disarmament document [CD/1382]. The Russian Federation delayed ratification because of concerns over the ratio of land-based, sea-based and airborne nuclear strategic missiles to be destroyed within the established quotas, as well as over proposals in the United States Senate to develop and deploy theatre missile defence (TMD)—actions that might conflict with the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty [YUN 1972, p. 5].

With regard to the first concern, according to START II not only would nuclear warheads be reduced to 3,000 or 3,500 on each side, but all multiple independently targetable re-entry vehicle (MIRV) intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBMs), considered to be the most destabilizing of all weapons, would be eliminated. Thus, the Russian Federation's 400 land-based ICBMs would be destroyed, leaving it with 1,700 missiles deployed on submarines and 300 on aircraft. In order to build up to the ceiling of 3,000, the Russian Federation would have to build 600 mono-block (one warhead) missiles until the year 2003 at a rate of 100 annually. The Russian strategic forces, however, did not have sufficient financial means to develop at that pace, the Conference on Disarmament reported. Under the Nunn-Lugar Cooperative Threat Reduction Program to reduce the threat posed by weapons of mass destruction, the United States provided $230 million in 1996 to facilitate early deactivation and the elimination of strategic offensive arms in the Russian Federation.

With regard to the second concern, by a bill introduced in the United States Congress in February, the United States would be required to withdraw from the 1972 ABM Treaty in order to clear the way for deployment of a national missile defence system. The United States, however, continued its discussions on TMD with Russia, and on 23 September, it was announced that they had reached agreement on the first part of an understanding that would allow the United States to proceed with efforts to build a defence against shorter-range missiles, while preserving the ABM Treaty. The first part of the understanding was to deal with low-velocity systems, and the second part with higher-velocity systems. However, on 30 October, Russia withdrew from the agreement.

During the year, there were important developments in other countries that were parties to the 1992 Protocol to START I, known as the Lisbon Protocol [YUN 1992, p. 79]. By the Lisbon Protocol, signed by four successor States to the former USSR (Belarus, Kazakhstan, Russian Federation, Ukraine) and by the United States, the four successor States assumed the obligations of the former USSR under the Treaty. The Protocol had entered into force on 5 December 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 145]. By a letter of 6 June [A/51/157], Ukraine informed the Secretary-General that on 1 June the process of withdrawing strategic nuclear warheads from its territory to the Russian Federation for subsequent destruction under the supervision of Ukrainian observers was completed. On 2 June [A/51/159-S/1996/417], the Russian Federation stated that it was prepared to continue to deepen its cooperation with Ukraine in matters of security. The European Union (EU) [A/51/165-S/1996/435] and the United States [A/51/169-S/1996/444], in letters of 13 June, welcomed the removal of nuclear warheads from the territory of Ukraine.

A United States-Ukrainian facility to dismantle 130 deactivated SS-19 missiles, at a rate of at least four a month, was opened in 1996. In June, Belarus signed an agreement with Germany, according to which Germany agreed to help Belarus, before the end of 1996, to remove 18 nuclear-armed SS-25 intercontinental missiles from its territory. In a letter of 30 November [A/51/708], Belarus informed the Secretary-General that on 27 November the removal of nuclear weapons from its territory had been completed.

At the end of September, the President of Kazakhstan reported that the last nuclear missile launchers in the territory of Kazakhstan had been eliminated [A/C.1/51/5].

Significant developments were also registered as a result of unilateral actions by other nuclear-weapon States. In February, France announced new unilateral cuts in its nuclear arsenals, the closure of the Plateau d'Albion missile base in southern France, and the dismantling of the 30 Hades missiles that had been mothballed. That action entailed structural reductions as well, as France was thereby abandoning the land-based component of its deterrent and the short-range missiles it possessed. The United Kingdom proceeded with its programme of reductions; it projected that by the end of 1998 its nuclear forces would be limited to a single system deployed on submarines.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 R.

Bilateral nuclear arms negotiations and nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,
Recalling its previous relevant resolutions,

Recognizing the fundamental changes that have taken place with respect to international security, which have permitted agreements on deep reductions in the nuclear armaments of the States possessing the largest inventories of such weapons,

Mindful that it is the responsibility and obligation of all States to contribute to the process of the relaxation of international tension and to the strengthening of international peace and security and, in this connection, to adopt and implement measures towards the attainment of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Appreciating a number of positive developments in the field of nuclear disarmament, in particular the Treaty between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, and the treaties on the reduction and limitation of strategic offensive arms,

Appreciating also the indefinite extension of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and acknowledging the importance of the determined pursuit by the nuclear-weapon States of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons, and by all States of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Welcoming the steps that have already been taken by the Russian Federation and the United States of America to begin the process of reducing the number of nuclear weapons and removing such weapons from a deployed status, and bilateral agreements on the issue of de-targeting strategic nuclear missiles,

Noting the new climate of relations between the States of the former Soviet Union and the United States of America, which permits them to intensify their cooperative efforts to ensure the safety, security and environmentally sound destruction of nuclear weapons,

Noting also that the Russian Federation and the United States of America concurred that, once the Treaty between them on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms was ratified, they would proceed to deactivate all nuclear delivery systems to be reduced under the Treaty by removing their nuclear warheads or taking other steps to remove them from alert status,

Noting further the commitment between the Russian Federation and the United States of America to intensify their dialogue to compare conceptual approaches and to develop concrete steps to adapt the nuclear forces and practices on both sides to the changed international security situation, including the possibility, after ratification of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, of further reductions of and limitations on remaining nuclear forces,

Taking note of the joint statement of 10 May 1995 by the Russian Federation and the United States of America on the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems,

Recalling the Moscow Summit Declaration on Nuclear Safety and Security of April 1996,

Urging early action to complete the ratification of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms and further intensification of efforts to accelerate the implementation of agreements and unilateral decisions relating to nuclear arms reduction,

Welcoming the significant reductions made by other nuclear-weapon States, and encouraging all nuclear-weapon States to consider appropriate measures relating to nuclear disarmament,

1. Welcomes the entry into force of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, signed in Moscow on 31 July 1991 by the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, including the Protocol to that Treaty, signed at Lisbon on 23 May 1992 by the parties thereto, and the exchange of documents of ratification between the United States of America, Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation and Ukraine on 5 December 1994 at Budapest;

2. Also welcomes the signing of the Treaty between the Russian Federation and the United States of America on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms in Moscow on 3 January 1993, and urges the parties to take the steps necessary to bring that Treaty into force at the earliest possible date;

3. Expresses its satisfaction at the entry into force and ongoing implementation of the 1991 Treaty as well as the ratification by the United States of America of the 1993 Treaty, and expresses the hope that it will soon be possible for the Russian Federation to ratify that Treaty also;

4. Expresses further satisfaction at the continuing implementation of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, in particular at the completion by the parties of the destruction of all their declared missiles subject to elimination under the Treaty;

5. Welcomes the removal of all nuclear weapons from the territory of Kazakhstan as of 1 June 1995, and from the territory of Ukraine as of 1 June 1996;

6. Encourages the Russian Federation, the United States of America, Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine to continue their cooperative efforts aimed at eliminating nuclear weapons and strategic offensive arms on the basis of existing agreements, and welcomes the contributions that other States are making to such cooperation as well;

7. Welcomes the accession to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons of Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine as non-nuclear-weapon States, which thereby provided notable enhancement to the non-proliferation regime;

8. Encourages and supports the Russian Federation and the United States of America in their efforts to reduce their nuclear weapons and to continue to give those efforts the highest priority in order to contribute to the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons;

9. Invites the Russian Federation and the United States of America to keep other States Members of the United Nations duly informed of progress in their discussions and in the implementation of their strategic offensive arms agreements and unilateral decisions.

General Assembly resolution 51/45 R

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.11) by recorded vote (129-0-12), 12 November (meeting 20); 45-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.45); agenda item 71.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 17, 20; plenary 79.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Lebanon, Myanmar, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania.

Also on 10 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 I.

Bilateral nuclear arms negotiations and nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions,

Recognizing the fundamental changes that have taken place with respect to international security, which have permitted agreements on deep reductions in the nuclear armaments of the States possessing the largest inventories of such weapons,

Stressing that it is the responsibility and the obligation of all States to contribute to the process of the relaxation of international tension and to the strengthening of international peace and security through disarmament, in particular, nuclear disarmament, which remains the highest priority of our times,

Stressing also that, as stipulated in many agreements and recently reiterated by the unanimous decision by the International Court of Justice, there exists the obligation to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control,

Welcoming the number of positive developments that have created opportunities for nuclear disarmament, in particular, the completion of the implementation of the 1987 Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, removing such weapons from deployed status, the conclusion of bilateral agreements on de-targeting strategic missiles, the cooperative efforts to ensure the safety, security and environmentally sound destruction of nuclear weapons as well as the efforts to deactivate all nuclear delivery systems or other steps to remove them from alert status,

Noting that there are still significant nuclear arsenals and that the primary responsibility for nuclear disarmament, with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons, rests with all nuclear-weapon States, in particular, those possessing the largest stockpiles,

Recalling the expressed commitment by the nuclear-weapon States to pursue systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of the elimination of those weapons, which should be carried out within a time-bound framework,

Recalling also the agreement between the Russian Federation and the United States of America to intensify their dialogue to compare conceptual approaches and to develop concrete steps to adapt the nuclear forces and practices on both sides to the changed international security situation, including the possibility, after ratification of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, of further reductions of and limitations on remaining nuclear forces,

Taking note of the joint statement of 10 May 1995 by the Russian Federation and the United States of America on the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems,

Welcoming the reductions made by other nuclear-weapon States in some of their nuclear-weapons programmes, and encouraging all nuclear-weapon States to consider appropriate measures relating to nuclear disarmament,

Affirming that bilateral and multilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament should facilitate and complement each other,

1. Welcomes the entry into force and implementation of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, signed in Moscow on 31 July 1991 by the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, including the Protocol to that Treaty, signed at Lisbon on 23 May 1992 by the parties thereto, and the exchange of documents of ratification between the United States of America, Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation and Ukraine on 5 December 1994 at Budapest, as well as the ratification by the United States of America of the 1993 Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, and urges the parties concerned to make further efforts to bring that Treaty into force at the earliest possible date;

2. Encourages the United States of America and the Russian Federation to continue their efforts aimed at eliminating nuclear weapons and strategic offensive arms on the basis of existing agreements, and welcomes the contributions that other States are making to such cooperation as well;

3. Welcomes the removal of all nuclear weapons from the territory of Kazakhstan, as from June 1995, and from the territory of Ukraine, as from June 1996;

4. Encourages and supports the Russian Federation and the United States of America in intensifying their work for deep reductions in their nuclear armaments, and calls upon those States to accord the highest priority to this work, in order to contribute to the elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework;

5. Invites the Russian Federation and the United States of America to keep the States Members of the United Nations and the Conference on Disarmament duly informed of progress in their discussions and in the implementation of their strategic offensive arms agreements and unilateral decisions;

6. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to take such information into account in the negotiations to be held on nuclear disarmament leading to the elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework.

Nuclear-weapon-free zones

Africa

On 11 April in Cairo, 45 African States signed the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty [YUN 1995, p. 203], known as the Treaty of Pelindaba. China, France, the United Kingdom and the United States signed the Protocols for which they were eligible. In September, France ratified the Protocols, and in November, the Russian Federation signed those for which it was eligible. By the end of the year, 48 States had signed the Treaty, and the Gambia and Mauritius had become parties.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council President, on 12 April, made the following statement [S/PRST/1996/17] on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council notes with deep satisfaction the signature of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Pelindaba) on 11 April 1996 in Cairo, Egypt, and notes further the adoption of the Cairo Declaration on that occasion.

This historic event marks a successful formalization of the commitment undertaken 32 years ago when the leaders of Africa adopted in July 1964 at Cairo the pioneering resolution of the First Ordinary Session of the Assembly of the Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, which declared Africa a denuclearized zone.

The Security Council considers that the signing of the Treaty by more than 40 African countries, as well as the signing of the relevant protocols to the Treaty by the majority of the nuclear-weapon States, constitute important steps towards the effective and early implementation of the Treaty. To that end it emphasizes the importance of early ratification of the Treaty with a view to securing its rapid entry into force.

The Security Council, reaffirming the statement made by its President on behalf of members of the Council at the meeting held at the level of heads of State and Government on 31 January 1992 that the proliferation of all weapons of mass destruction constitutes a threat to international peace and security, considers that the signature of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty constitutes an important contribution by the African countries to the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Security Council seizes this occasion to encourage such regional efforts, and stands ready to support efforts on the international and regional levels aimed at achieving the universality of the nuclear non-proliferation regime.

Meeting number. SC 3651.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/53.

African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Pelindaba)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/78 of 12 December 1995 and all its other relevant resolutions, as well as those of the Organization of African Unity,

Noting and welcoming with satisfaction the successful conclusion of the signing ceremony of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Pelindaba) that was held at Cairo on 11 April 1996,

Recalling the Cairo Declaration adopted on that occasion,<sup>a</sup> which emphasized that nuclear-weapon-free zones, especially in regions of tension, such as the Middle East, enhance global and regional peace and security,

Noting with satisfaction the statement made by the President of the Security Council on behalf of the members of the Council on 12 April 1996, in which it was stated that the signature of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty constituted an important contribution by the African countries to the maintenance of international peace and security,

Considering that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, especially in the Middle East, would enhance the security of Africa and the viability of the African nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Bearing in mind resolution CM/Res.1660(LXIV) on expediting the process of ratification of the Treaty of Pelindaba, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its sixty-fourth ordinary session, held at Yaounde from 1 to 5 July 1996,<sup>b</sup>

1. Calls upon African States to sign and ratify the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty as soon as possible so that it may enter into force without delay;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the international community and in particular to the nuclear-weapon States which have signed the Protocols that concern them, and calls upon them to ratify the Protocols as soon as possible;

3. Calls upon the States contemplated in Protocol III to the Treaty to take all necessary measures to ensure the speedy application of the Treaty to territories for which they are, de jure or de facto, internationally responsible and which lie within the limits of the geographical zone established in the Treaty;

4. Calls upon the African States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons which have not yet concluded comprehensive safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency pursuant to that Treaty to do so, thereby satisfying the requirements of article 9 (b) and annex II to the Treaty of Pelindaba when it enters into force;

5. Expresses its profound gratitude to the Secretary-General for the diligence with which he has rendered effective assistance to the signatories to the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty in accordance with resolution 50/78;

6. Expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency for the diligence with which they have rendered effective assistance to the signatories to the Treaty;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to extend assistance, within existing resources, to the signatories in 1997 in order to achieve the aims of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty".

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.19) without vote, 11 November (meeting 19); draft by South Africa, for African Group (A/C.1/51/L.23), orally revised; agenda item 79.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 17, 19; plenary 79.

Asia

Central Asia

On 29 October, the First Committee [A/51/566/Add.11] considered a draft resolution sponsored by Kyrgyzstan and Mongolia [A/C.1/51/L.29], calling on the five nuclear-weapon States to support the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Central Asian region. Consultations with interested delegations and other potential sponsors took place, but no action was taken on the draft.

South Asia

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/67 [YUN 1995, p. 207], the Secretary-General, in a June report [A/51/176], presented the views of the European Union (EU) and the countries of Central and Eastern Europe associated with it (Bulgaria, Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, Slovakia), as well as the associated countries of Cyprus and Malta, on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia. The EU stated that it supported the project.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/42.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/73 of 10 December 1976, 32/83 of 12 December 1977, 33/65 of 14 December 1978, 34/78 of 11 December 1979, 35/148 of 12 December 1980, 36/88 of 9 December 1981, 37/76 of 9 December 1982, 38/65 of 15 December 1983, 39/55 of 12 December 1984, 40/83 of 12 December 1985, 41/49 of 3 December 1986, 42/29 of 30 November 1987, 43/66 of 7 December 1988, 44/109 of 15 December 1989, 45/53 of 4 December 1990, 46/31 of 6 December 1991, 47/49 of 9 December 1992, 48/72 of 16 December 1993, 49/72 of 15 December 1994 and 50/67 of 12 December 1995 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures that can contribute effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will assist in the strengthening of the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note with appreciation of the declarations issued at the highest level by the Governments of South Asian States that are developing their peaceful nuclear programmes, reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Welcoming the proposal for the conclusion of a bilateral or regional nuclear-test-ban agreement in South Asia,

Noting the proposal to convene, under the auspices of the United Nations, a conference on nuclear non-proliferation in South Asia as soon as possible, with the participation of the regional and other concerned States,

Noting the proposal to hold consultations among five nations with a view to ensuring nuclear non-proliferation in the region,

Considering that the eventual participation of other States; as appropriate, in this process could be useful,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly regarding the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, including in the region of South Asia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

2. Urges once again the States of South Asia to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the meantime, from any action contrary to that objective;

3. Welcomes the support of all the five nuclear-weapon States for this proposal, and calls upon them to extend the necessary cooperation in the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to communicate with the States of the region and other concerned States in order to ascertain their views on the issue and to promote consultations among them with a view to exploring the best possibilities of furthering the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia".

South-East Asia

The Treaty on the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone (Bangkok Treaty), which was opened for signature in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 207], was strengthened in 1996 by the ratification of five States (Brunei Darussalam, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Myanmar, Viet Nam). A total of 10 States had signed the Treaty.

As to the Protocol to the Treaty, it was not possible to allay the concerns of the nuclear-weapon States over the inclusion of continental shelves and exclusive economic zones in the zone of application and over the negative security assurance contained in the Protocol, or to resolve the conflicting territorial claims in the zone. At year's end, none of the nuclear-weapon States had signed the Protocol, although talks aimed at overcoming those difficulties continued throughout the year between various nuclear-weapon States and the members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN).

Latin America and the Caribbean

The process of consolidation of the nuclear-weapon-free zone established by the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean, known as the Treaty of Tlatelolco [YUN1967, p. 13], continued throughout 1996. During the year, there were no new ratifications and the number of parties to the Treaty stood at 38.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/52.

Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its resolution 1911 (XVIII) of 27 November 1963 it expressed the hope that the States of Latin America would take appropriate measures to conclude a treaty that would prohibit nuclear weapons in Latin America,

Recalling also that in the same resolution it voiced its confidence that, once such a treaty was concluded, all States, and in particular the nuclear-weapon States, would lend it their full cooperation for the effective realization of its peaceful aims,

Considering that in its resolution 2028(XX) of 19 November 1965 it established the principle of an acceptable balance of mutual responsibilities and obligations between nuclear-weapon States and those which do not possess such weapons,

Recalling that the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) was opened for signature at Mexico City on 14 February 1967,

Taking note of the thirtieth anniversary on 14 February 1997 of the opening for signature of the Treaty of Tlatelolco,

Recalling that in its preamble the Treaty of Tlatelolco states that military denuclearized zones are not an end in themselves but rather a means for achieving general and complete disarmament at a later stage,

Recalling also that in its resolution 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967 it welcomed with special satisfaction the Treaty of Tlatelolco as an event of historic significance in the efforts to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security,

Recalling further that in 1990, 1991 and 1992 the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean approved and opened for signature a set of amendments to the Treaty of Tlatelolco, with the aim of enabling the full entry into force of that instrument,

Recalling resolution C/E/RES.27 of the Council of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean,<sup>a</sup> in which the Council calls for the promotion of cooperation and consultations with other nuclear-weapon-free zones,

Noting with satisfaction that, with the full adherence on 6 May 1996 of Guyana, the Treaty of Tlatelolco is in force for thirty-one sovereign States of the region,

Also noting with satisfaction that the amended Treaty of Tlatelolco is fully in force for Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Guyana, Jamaica, Mexico, Peru, Suriname and Uruguay,

1. Welcomes the concrete steps taken by some countries of the region during the past year for the consolidation of the regime of military denuclearization established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco);

2. Notes with satisfaction the full adherence of Guyana to the Treaty of Tlatelolco;

3. Urges the countries of the region that have not yet done so to deposit their instruments of ratification of the amendments to the Treaty of Tlatelolco approved by the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean in its resolutions 267(E-V) of 3 July 1990, 268(XII) of 10 May 1991 and 290(E-VII) of 26 August 1992;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)".

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.18) without vote, 11 November (meeting 18); 33-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.9); agenda item 78. Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-14, 18; plenary 79.

Middle East

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/66 [YUN 1995, p. 205], the Secretary-General submitted an August report with a later addendum [A/51/286 & Add.1] on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. He stated that he had continued to carry out consultations to explore ways to promote the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone, but regretted that since his 1995 report the views of the main parties concerned had not evolved any further. He expressed concern about the impasse in the work of the Working Group on Arms Control and Regional Security, which was established under the framework of the multilateral peace process in the Middle East (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Annexed to the report were views received from States on measures to move towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East as outlined in a 1990 report of the Secretary-General [A/45/435].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/41.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 A and B of 9 December 1981, 37/75 of 9 December 1982, 38/64 of 15 December 1983, 39/54 of 12 December 1984, 40/82 of 12 December 1985, 41/48 of 3 December 1986, 42/28 of 30 November 1987, 43/65 of 7 December 1988, 44/108 of 15 December 1989, 45/52 of 4 December 1990, 46/30 of 6 December 1991, 47/48 of 9 December 1992, 48/71 of 16 December 1993, 49/71 of 15 December 1994 and 50/66 of 12 December 1995 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, and in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and to deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly since its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous of building on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East,

Welcoming all initiatives leading to general and complete disarmament, including in the region of the Middle East, and in particular on the establishment therein of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear weapons,

Noting the peace negotiations in the Middle East, which should be of a comprehensive nature and represent an appropriate framework for the peaceful settlement of contentious issues in the region,

Recognizing the importance of credible regional security, including the establishment of a mutually verifiable nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Emphasizing the essential role of the United Nations in the establishment of a mutually verifiable nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 50/66,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all countries of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Takes note of resolution GC(40)RES/22, adopted on 20 September 1996 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its fortieth regular session, concerning the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East;

4. Notes the importance of the ongoing bilateral Middle East peace negotiations and the activities of the multilateral Working Group on Arms Control and Regional Security in promoting mutual confidence and security in the Middle East, including the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

5. Invites all countries of the region, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with paragraph 63 (d) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

6. Also invites those countries, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

7. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and the spirit of the present resolution;

8. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Invites all parties to consider the appropriate means that may contribute towards the goal of general and complete disarmament and the establishment of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction in the region of the Middle East;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to pursue consultations with the States of the region and other concerned States, in accordance with paragraph 7 of resolution 46/30 and taking into account the evolving situation in the region, and to seek from those States their views on the measures outlined in chapters III and IV of the study annexed to his report or other relevant measures, in order to move towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

General Assembly resolution 51/41

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.7) without vote, 18 November (meeting 25); draft by Egypt (A/C.1/51/L.28/Rev.2), amendment by Israel (A/C.1/51/L.54) adopted by recorded vote (61-28-33); agenda item 67.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 17, 24, 25; plenary 79.

In the First Committee on 18 November, Israel introduced an amendment consisting of the insertion, in paragraph 4, of the words "ongoing" before "bilateral", "peace" before "negotiations" and "the activities of" before "the multilateral". The amendment was adopted by recorded vote. Subsequently, the draft text, as amended, was adopted without a vote.

South Pacific

In a letter dated 22 March [A/51/86-S/1996/216], France, the United Kingdom and the United States expressed their intention to sign the three Protocols to the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Rarotonga) [YUN 1985, p. 58], which they did on 25 March in Suva, Fiji. China and the former USSR had signed the two Protocols for which they were eligible in 1987 and 1986, respectively, and had ratified them in 1988. Under Protocol 1, the States internationally responsible for territories situated within the zone would undertake to apply the relevant prohibitions of the Treaty to those territories; under Protocol 2, the five nuclear-weapon States would provide security assurances to parties or to territories within the zone; and under Protocol 3, the five would undertake not to carry out nuclear tests in the zone.

Southern hemisphere and adjacent areas

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 B.

The nuclear-weapon-free southern hemisphere and adjacent areas

The General Assembly,

Determined to continue to contribute to the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons in all its aspects and to the process of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control, in particular in the field of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, with a view to strengthening international peace and security, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Stressing the importance of the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba, establishing nuclear-weapon-free zones, as well as the Antarctic Treaty,

Recalling that, at its first special session devoted to disarmament, the General Assembly declared, inter alia, that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of agreements or arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the zone concerned constitutes an important disarmament measure; that the States participating in such zones should undertake to comply fully with all the objectives, purposes and principles of the agreements or arrangements establishing the zones, thus ensuring that they are genuinely free from nuclear weapons; and that the nuclear-weapon States are called upon to give undertakings, negotiated with the competent authority of each zone, in particular, to respect strictly the status of the nuclear-weapon-free zone and to refrain from the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons against the States of the zone,

Recalling also that the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons reaffirmed the conviction that the establishment of internationally recognized nuclear-weapon-free zones, on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned, enhances global and regional peace and security, and encouraged the development of nuclear-weapon-free zones, especially in regions of tension, such as in the Middle East,

Recalling further the applicable principles and rules of international law relating to rights of passage through maritime space,

1. Recognizes with satisfaction that the Antarctic Treaty and the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba are gradually freeing the entire southern hemisphere and adjacent areas covered by those treaties from nuclear weapons;

2. Calls for the ratification of the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba by all regional States, and calls upon all concerned States to continue to work together in order to facilitate adherence to the protocols to nuclear-weapon-free zone treaties by all relevant States that have not yet done so;

3. Calls upon all States to consider proposals to establish further nuclear-weapon-free zones, especially in areas such as the Middle East and South Asia, on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned, to strengthen the nuclear non-proliferation regime and, with particular reference to the responsibilities of the nuclear-weapon States, to advance the process of nuclear disarmament with the ultimate goal of eliminating all nuclear weapons;

4. Calls upon the States parties and signatories to the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba, in order to promote the common goals envisaged in those treaties, to explore and implement further ways and means of cooperation, including the consolidation of the status of the nuclear-weapon-free southern hemisphere and adjacent areas;

5. Encourages the competent authorities of nuclear-weapon-free zone treaties to provide assistance to the States parties and signatories to such treaties so as to facilitate the accomplishment of these goals;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session an item entitled "The nuclear-weapon-free southern hemisphere and adjacent areas".

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 129-3-38 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.11) by recorded vote (111-4-36), 13 November (meeting 21); 69-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.4/Rev.1), amendment by Pakistan (A/C.1/51/L.51) adopted by recorded vote (89-1-51); agenda item 71.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 17, 21; plenary 79.

Against: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Andorra, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, Georgia, Germany, Hungary, Iceland, India, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Mauritius, Monaco, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Tajikistan, Turkey, Uzbekistan.

In the First Committee on 13 November, Pakistan introduced an amendment by which a reference to the proposal for a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia was inserted into paragraph 3. The Committee adopted the amendment by a recorded vote of 89 to 1, with 51 abstentions. It adopted the paragraph by a recorded vote of 100 to 1, with 43 abstentions.

Similarly, the Assembly retained paragraph 3 by a recorded vote of 118 to 1, with 46 abstentions.

Other nuclear and related issues

Convention on Nuclear Safety

The International Convention on Nuclear Safety entered into force on 24 October, following the deposit of the twenty-fifth instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval, it having been also the seventeenth instrument from a State having at least one nuclear installation that had achieved criticality in a reactor core. The Convention, the depositary of which was IAEA, aimed to commit States operating land-based nuclear power plants to maintain a high level of safety. Obligations covered siting, design, construction, operation, the availability of adequate financial and human resources, the assessment and verification of safety, quality assurance and emergency preparedness. The Convention obliged parties to submit reports on the implementation of their obligations for peer review at meetings of the parties to be held at IAEA.

Moscow Declaration

By a letter of 7 May [A/51/131], France and the Russian Federation, which jointly chaired the Summit on Nuclear Safety and Security (Moscow, 19 and 20 April), transmitted to the Secretary-General the texts of the Moscow Summit Declaration on Nuclear Safety and Security; the Programme for Preventing and Combating Illicit Trafficking in Nuclear Material; and a statement on CTBT. A statement on Ukraine and another made by participants of the Summit concerning Lebanon and the peace process also were transmitted.

Participants attending the Summit pledged to increase cooperation in nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament by promoting universal adherence to the 1968 NPT [GA res. 2373(XXII), 12 June 1968], by working to strengthen the IAEA safeguards system and by implementing effective and responsible export control measures. Concerning the safety of civilian nuclear reactors, they urged all countries to sign the International Convention on Nuclear Safety (see above) and noted the need for the countries of Central and Eastern Europe and the newly independent States to continue their efforts, in cooperation with multilateral and bilateral programmes, to improve nuclear safety. As to nuclear waste management and ocean dumping issues, the participants called on national authorities to ensure that radioactive waste be managed safely and that provision be made for its proper handling, storage and ultimate disposal; they stated that the development of a convention on the safety of radioactive waste, based on those principles, was of paramount importance. They committed themselves to banning dumping at sea of radioactive waste.

The Summit agreed on the Programme for Preventing and Combating Illicit Trafficking in Nuclear Material, which recognized the risk of global proliferation and potential danger to public health and safety posed by trafficking. International efforts to suppress the phenomenon would have to address, inter alia, safe and secure storage and effective material protection; cooperative intelligence, customs and law enforcement efforts to prevent the sale of diverted material; and joint efforts to identify illicit supply and to deter potential traffickers. In addition, nuclear material released through the nuclear-weapon dismantling process should be placed under international safeguards as soon as possible. The programme included a system of measures designed to strengthen a collective response, on the part of the participating countries, to illicit trafficking.

Weapons of mass destruction

Although the item "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: radiological weapons" was on the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament [A/51/27], the Conference did not establish an ad hoc committee on the subject. The topic was, however, discussed in plenary sessions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/37.

Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Taking note of paragraph 77 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Determined to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction that have characteristics comparable in destructive effect to those of weapons of mass destruction identified in the definition of weapons of mass destruction adopted by the United Nations in 1948,

Noting that the item entitled "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: radiological weapons" was considered in the Conference on Disarmament during its 1994, 1995 and 1996 sessions,

Also noting the desirability of keeping the matter under review, as appropriate,

1. Reaffirms that effective measures should be taken to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, without prejudice to further overview of its agenda, to keep the matter under review, as appropriate, with a view to making, when necessary, recommendations on undertaking specific negotiations on identified types of such weapons;

3. Calls upon all States, immediately following any recommendation of the Conference on Disarmament, to give favourable consideration to those recommendations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this item by the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report the results of any consideration of the matter in its annual reports to the General Assembly;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference on Disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 51/37

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.1) without vote, 11 November (meeting 19); 33-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.36); agenda item 60.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-14, 19; plenary 79.

Radioactive wastes

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 J.

Prohibition of the dumping of radioactive wastes

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind resolutions CM/Res.1153(XLVIII) of 1988 and CM/Res.1225(L) of 1989, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, concerning the dumping of nuclear and industrial wastes in Africa,

Welcoming resolution GC(XXXIV)/RES/530 establishing a Code of Practice on the International Transboundary Movement of Radioactive Waste, adopted on 21 September 1990 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its thirty-fourth regular session,

Welcoming also resolution GC(XXXVIII)/RES/6, adopted on 23 September 1994 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its thirty-eighth regular session, inviting the Board of Governors and the Director General of the Agency to commence preparations for a convention on the safety of radioactive waste management, and noting the progress that has been made in that regard,

Taking note of the commitment by the participants at the Summit on Nuclear Safety and Security, held in Moscow on 19 and 20 April 1996, to ban the dumping at sea of radioactive wastes,

Considering its resolution 2602 C(XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it requested the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, inter alia, to consider effective methods of control against the use of radiological methods of warfare,

Recalling resolution CM/Res.1356(LIV) of 1991, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, on the Bamako Convention on the Ban on the Import of Hazardous Wastes into Africa and on the Control of Their Transboundary Movements within Africa,

Aware of the potential hazards underlying any use of radioactive wastes that would constitute radiological warfare and its implications for regional and international security, in particular for the security of developing countries,

Recalling all its resolutions on the matter since its forty-third session in 1988, including its resolution 50/70 E of 12 December 1995,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 76 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

1. Takes note of the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament relating to a future convention on the prohibition of radiological weapons;

2. Expresses grave concern regarding any use of nuclear wastes that would constitute radiological warfare and have grave implications for the national security of all States;

3. Calls upon all States to take appropriate measures with a view to preventing any dumping of nuclear or radioactive wastes that would infringe upon the sovereignty of States;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to take into account, in the negotiations for a convention on the prohibition of radiological weapons, radioactive wastes as part of the scope of such a convention;

5. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify efforts towards an early conclusion of such a convention and to include in its report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session the progress recorded in the negotiations on this subject;

6. Takes note of resolution CM/Res.1356(LIV) of 1991, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, on the Bamako Convention on the Ban on the Import of Hazardous Wastes into Africa and on the Control of Their Transboundary Movements within Africa;

7. Expresses the hope that the effective implementation of the International Atomic Energy Agency Code of Practice on the International Transboundary Movement of Radioactive Waste will enhance the protection of all States from the dumping of radioactive wastes on their territories;

8. Welcomes the current efforts of the International Atomic Energy Agency in the preparation of a draft convention on the safe management of radioactive wastes and the appropriate recommendations made by the participants at the Summit on Nuclear Safety and Security, held in Moscow on 19 and 20 April 1996, in particular their call on all States generating nuclear wastes with nuclear installations to participate actively in the preparation of this convention under the auspices of the International Atomic Energy Agency and to encourage its effective finalization and prompt adoption;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Prohibition of the dumping of radioactive wastes".

General Assembly resolution 51/45 J

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.11) without vote, 11 November (meeting 18); draft by Burundi, for African Group, France, Monaco, Mongolia and Russian Federation (A/C.1/51/L.24); agenda item 71 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 17, 18; plenary 79.

Bacteriological (biological) and chemical weapons

Bacteriological (biological) weapons convention

Ad Hoc Group on verification

The Ad Hoc Group of the States Parties to the 1972 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction [GA res. 2826(XXVI), 16 Dec. 1971], established in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 138], held its fourth (15-26 July) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/31 & Corr.1] and fifth (16-27 September) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/32] sessions in 1996, both in Geneva. The Ad Hoc Group had held its first three sessions in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 211]. It continued to consider measures, including verification measures, to strengthen the 1972 Convention, for inclusion in a legally binding instrument.

Four groups, each led by a Friend of the Chair who assisted the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Group in consultations and negotiations, considered subjects in four areas: definitions of terms and objective criteria, such as lists of bacteriological (biological) agents and toxins and their threshold quantities, and equipment and types of activities, where relevant for specific measures designed to strengthen the Convention; the incorporation of existing and further enhanced confidence-building and transparency measures, as appropriate, into the regime; a system of measures to promote compliance with the Convention; and specific measures to ensure effective and full implementation of article X (transfer of technology), which would avoid any restrictions incompatible with the obligations undertaken under the Convention with regard to the transfer of scientific knowledge, technology, equipment and materials.

At the end of the fifth session, the Ad Hoc Group was unable to complete its work and submit a draft instrument to the States parties for consideration at the Fourth Review Conference (see below), due to time constraints and a wide divergence of views on such central elements of the future regime as institutional, legal and financial arrangements, modalities, safeguards and limitations under article X, and initiation of investigations, post-investigation reviews and tools for investigations in the area of compliance measures.

In order to fulfil its mandate, the Ad Hoc Group decided to intensify its work by holding three sessions of two to three weeks each in 1997, and two sessions of the same duration in 1998, building on materials contained in the papers of the Friends of the Chair, which were updated after every session and annexed to the relevant reports on the sessions.

Fourth review conference

The Preparatory Committee for the Fourth Review Conference of the Parties to the 1972 Convention, meeting in Geneva on 9 and 10 April, decided that the Review Conference should take place in Geneva from 25 November to 6 December, and considered the provisional agenda, draft rules of procedure, background documentation and final document for the Conference. At the request of the Committee, the Secretary-General prepared background information documents on participation of States parties in the agreed confidence-building measures [BWC/CONF.IV/2 & Corr.1-5]; compliance of States parties, compiled from information received from them [BWC/CONF.IV/3 & Corr.1,2 & Add.1-3]; and new scientific and technological developments relevant to the Convention, compiled from information received from States parties [BWC/CONF.IV/4 & Add.1,2]. The Committee's report, without its annexes, was later annexed to the Final Document of the Fourth Review Conference [BWC/CONF.IV/9].

The Fourth Review Conference opened in Geneva on 25 November. Previous review conferences were held in 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 70], 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 64], and 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 52]. It concluded on 6 December after adopting by consensus a Final Declaration which was contained in the Final Document of the Conference [BWC/CONF.IV/9]. At year's end, there were 139 parties to the Convention, which had entered into force on 26 March 1975 [YUN 1975, p. 64]. The depositary Governments for the Convention were the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.

At the opening of the Conference, Iran proposed two amendments to the Convention that would stipulate specifically a ban on use, and would entail the addition of the word "use" to the title and the phrase "to use biological weapons" in article I. Following consultations, it was decided to include the proposal in the agenda under the item "Other matters", and to reflect it under article XI in the Declaration that was being drafted. In accordance with article 40 (2) of the 1986 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations [YUN 1986, p. 1006], all States parties would have to be notified of the proposed amendment, and each had the right to take part in any decision or negotiation regarding it; thus, no decision could be taken by the Fourth Review Conference itself. A communication on the matter was issued by the United Nations Office of the Legal Counsel [BWC/CONF.IV/7]. The subject of use was commented upon by many delegations in various contexts throughout the Conference.

The general debate focused on issues related to scope of the Convention, compliance, confidence-building measures, the work of the Ad Hoc Group, export control, technical cooperation, the 1925 Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, known as the 1925 Geneva Protocol, and the 1992 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction [YUN 1992, p. 65].

At the conclusion of the general debate, the Committee of the Whole [BWC/CONF.IV/6 & Add.1] met six times and held some additional informal consultations, during which it reviewed the articles of the Convention and received proposals concerning the text for the Final Declaration.

The Drafting Committee [BWC/CONF.IV/DC/2], following the conclusion of the Committee of the Whole, held 11 meetings and additional informal consultations; it worked on the basis of the proposals put before the Committee of the Whole and drew on the language of the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference, at which there had been no new proposals.

At its last plenary meeting, on 6 December, the Conference concluded its work with the adoption by consensus of its Final Document, which contained the Final Declaration. The Declaration consisted of a preamble, an article-by-article review of the Convention, and a section on the Ad Hoc Group.

The Declaration stressed the prohibition of use at several points in the article-by-article review. As a result of general concern over the matter and with the submission of the proposal by Iran, it was decided to state explicitly, both under article I and article IV, that the use of bacteriological and toxin weapons was prohibited. Moreover, under article VIII, the Conference adopted what was considered very strong language to the effect that reservations to the Geneva Protocol concerning retaliation through the use of any of the objects prohibited by the Convention were "totally incompatible" with the Convention, and stressed the importance of the withdrawal of all reservations to the Protocol relating to the Convention. In addition, under article II, the Conference specified that the destruction of prohibited items required under that article would have to be completed upon a State's accession, that it should be carried out completely and effectively, and that submission of information on destruction could enhance confidence in the Convention.

In its review of article IX, the Declaration incorporated language identical with some paragraphs of the draft resolution that had been negotiated in the First Committee at the end of November; the draft was subsequently adopted by the General Assembly on 10 December as resolution 51/45 T (see below).

Regarding article X, the Declaration referred to parties' legal obligation to facilitate and right to participate in technological exchange and emphasized that provisions of the Convention should not be imposed to restrict transfers consistent with its objectives.

As to the work of the Ad Hoc Group, the Declaration did not set a target date for the completion of the Group's work. The Conference agreed to encourage the Group "to review its method of work and to move to a negotiating format". In addition, under article XIV, the Declaration contained an appeal to parties to participate actively in the Ad Hoc Group.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/54.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions relating to the complete and effective prohibition of bacteriological (biological) and toxin weapons and to their destruction,

Noting with satisfaction that there are one hundred and thirty-nine States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, including all the permanent members of the Security Council,

Bearing in mind its call upon all States parties to the Convention to participate in the implementation of the recommendations of the Review Conferences, including the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, and to provide such information and data in conformity with standardized procedure to the Secretary-General on an annual basis and no later than 15 April,

Recalling its resolution 46/35 A, adopted without a vote on 6 December 1991, in which it welcomed, inter alia, the establishment, proceeding from the recommendations of the Third Review Conference, of an ad hoc group of governmental experts open to all States parties to identify and examine potential verification measures from a scientific and technical standpoint,

Recalling also its resolution 48/65, adopted without a vote on 16 December 1993, in which it commended the final report of the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts to Identify and Examine Potential Verification Measures from a Scientific and Technical Standpoint, agreed to by consensus at the last meeting of the Ad Hoc Group at Geneva on 24 September 1993,

Recalling further its resolution 49/86, adopted without a vote on 15 December 1994, in which it welcomed the final report of the Special Conference of the States Parties to the Convention, adopted by consensus on 30 September 1994, in which the States parties agreed to establish an ad hoc group, open to all States parties, whose objective should be to consider appropriate measures, including possible verification measures, and draft proposals to strengthen the Convention, to be included, as appropriate, in a legally binding instrument to be submitted for the consideration of the States parties,

Recalling the provisions of the Convention related to scientific and technological cooperation and the related provisions of the final report of the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts, the final report of the Special Conference of the States Parties to the Convention, held from 19 to 30 September 1994, and the final documents of the Review Conferences,

1. Welcomes the information and data provided to date, and reiterates its call upon all States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction to participate in the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention;

2. Also welcomes the progress made by the Ad Hoc Group in pursuing the mandate established by the Special Conference of the States Parties to the Convention on 30 September 1994, and urges the Ad Hoc Group, in order to fulfil its mandate, to intensify its work with a view to completing it as soon as possible before the commencement of the Fifth Review Conference and to submit its report, which shall be adopted by consensus, to the States parties to be considered at a special conference;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render the necessary assistance to the depositary Governments of the Convention and to provide such services as may be required for the implementation of the decisions and recommendations of the Review Conferences, as well as the decisions contained in the final report of the Special Conference, including all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Group;

4. Welcomes the convening, at the request of the States parties, of the Fourth Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention at Geneva from 25 November to 6 December 1996;

5. Calls upon all signatory States that have not yet ratified the Convention to do so without delay, and also calls upon those States that have not signed the Convention to become parties thereto at an early date, thus contributing to the achievement of universal adherence to the Convention;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction".

General Assembly resolution 51/54

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.20) without vote, 11 November (meeting 19); 56-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.2); agenda item 80. Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 16, 19; plenary 79.

Also on 10 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 P.

Measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, in particular resolution 43/74 of 7 December 1988,

Determined to act with a view to achieving effective progress towards general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Recalling the long-standing determination of the international community to achieve the effective prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical and biological weapons as well as the continuing support for measures to uphold the authority of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, as expressed by consensus in many previous resolutions,

Welcoming the end of the cold war, the ensuing easing of international tension and the strengthening of trust between States,

Welcoming also the recent initiatives by some States parties to withdraw their reservations to the 1925 Geneva Protocol,

1. Renews its previous call to all States to observe strictly the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and reaffirms the vital necessity of upholding its provisions;

2. Calls upon those States that continue to maintain reservations to the 1925 Geneva Protocol to withdraw those reservations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 51/45 P

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 165-0-7 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.11) by recorded vote (132-0-10), 11 November (meeting 19); draft by Colombia, for Non-Aligned Movement (A/C.1/51/L.41); agenda item 71. Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-14, 19; plenary 79.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Belarus, Israel, Kazakhstan, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Tajikistan, United States.

Chemical weapons convention

On 31 October, the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, adopted by the Conference on Disarmament in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 65] and opened for signature in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 111], received its sixty-fifth instrument of ratification, which was required for its entry into force. Under the Convention, its entry into force would take place 180 days following receipt of the deposit of the sixty-fifth instrument of ratification, on 29 April 1997. As at 31 December 1996, there were 67 States parties to the Convention.

Preparatory Commission

In 1996, the Preparatory Commission for the Organization on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW), set up in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 65] to prepare for the Convention's implementation, held its thirteenth (18-22 March) [PC-XIII/18], fourteenth (22-27 July) [PC-XIV/29] and fifteenth (16-20 December) [PC-XV/25] sessions, all at The Hague.

The Commission considered verification issues, and progress was made in developing procedures to implement the inspection and declaration provisions of the Convention. Some 400 inspections were foreseen for the first year after the Convention's entry into force, and practical arrangements were set out for the General Training Scheme for inspectors. The OPCW Laboratory and Equipment Store was inaugurated in Rijswijk, the Netherlands, and proficiency tests involving a number of laboratories in different parts of the world got under way with a view to creating a worldwide network of laboratories that would meet OPCW analytical standards. Regarding concerns that the 1990 Agreement between the United States and the USSR on Destruction and Non-Production of Chemical Weapons and on Measures to Facilitate the Multilateral Convention on Banning Chemical Weapons [CD/1000 & CD/1001], under which national teams of the two States would verify each other's destruction programme, would not be in force at the time of entry into force of the Convention itself, the Convention secretariat submitted estimates for the additional resources for inspection that would be required. Moreover, the secretariat continued to assist States, as far as possible, in establishing their national implementation programmes.

Outstanding issues at year's end included: agreement on some declaration issues related to the chemical industry and chemical weapons facilities, and verification measures to be applied to inspections of chemical weapons and chemical weapons production facilities converted to civilian use, as well as to old and abandoned chemical weapons sites; the question of the timing of a harmonization of export controls with the provisions of article XI (on economic and technological development); and decisions on the composition of the Executive Council, the future Director-General and the top management structure of OPCW, which needed to be resolved before the first session of the Conference of States Parties, scheduled for May 1997.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 T.

Status of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons, in particular resolution 47/39 of 30 November 1992, adopted without a vote, in which it commended the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction,

Noting with satisfaction that, since the Convention was opened for signature at a signing ceremony held in Paris from 13 to 15 January 1993, one hundred and sixty States have signed the Convention,

Determined to achieve the effective prohibition of the development, production, acquisition, transfer, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and their destruction,

Convinced of the urgent necessity of universal adherence to the Convention so as to abolish an entire category of weapons of mass destruction, and thus eliminate the risk to mankind of renewed use of these inhumane weapons,

Noting the ongoing work of the Preparatory Commission for the Organization on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons,

1. Welcomes the fact that the required sixty-five instruments of ratification have now been deposited and that the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction will therefore enter into force on 29 April 1997;

2. Stresses the importance to the Convention that all possessors of chemical weapons, chemical weapons production facilities or chemical weapons development facilities should be among the original parties to the Convention and, in this context, the importance of the United States of America and the Russian Federation, having declared possession of chemical weapons, being among the original States parties to the Convention;

3. Also stresses that this would promote the full realization and effective implementation of the Convention;

4. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to sign and/or ratify the Convention without delay;

5. Notes that the Preparatory Commission for the Organization on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, at its fourteenth session from 22 to 26 July 1996, entrusted the Chairman of the Commission, in close consultation with its member States, with the task of convening, as necessitated by circumstances in connection with the occurrence of the trigger point, a meeting of the Commission to provide appropriate guidance;

6. Urges the Preparatory Commission for the Organization on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons to intensify efforts to complete its remaining work;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session an item entitled "Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction".

Conventional weapons and related issues

Landmines

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/700 [YUN 1995, p. 223], the Secretary-General reported [A/51/313] in August on information received from Governments and the EU on steps taken to implement moratoriums declared on the export of anti-personnel landmines. The Secretary-General described unilateral, regional and global initiatives to limit their export.

Ottawa conference

By a letter [A/C.1/51/10] of 16 October, Canada transmitted information concerning the Ottawa International Strategy Conference, which was convened by the Government of Canada from 3 to 5 October in its capital, with the theme "Towards a global ban on anti-personnel mines".

The Conference led to the adoption of the Ottawa Declaration, by which the 50 participating States, known as the "Ottawa Group", agreed to enhance cooperation and coordination of efforts to achieve their goal, taking into account that the extreme humanitarian and socio-economic costs associated with the use of anti-personnel mines required urgent action on the part of the international community to ban and eliminate them. Until such a ban was achieved, the Declaration said, States must work to encourage universal adherence to the prohibitions or restrictions contained in amended Protocol II of the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons. Mine-affected States must halt all new deployment of anti-personnel mines to ensure the effectiveness and efficiency of mine-clearance operations, and the international community must provide significantly greater resources to mine-awareness programmes, mine-clearance operations and victim assistance. In addition, the members of the Ottawa Group committed themselves to work together to ensure the following: the earliest possible conclusion of a legally binding international agreement to ban anti-personnel mines; progressive reductions in new deployments of mines with the urgent objective of halting all new deployments; support for a General Assembly resolution calling on Member States, among other things, to implement national moratoriums, bans or other restrictions, particularly on the operational use and transfer of anti-personnel mines, at the earliest possible date; regional and sub-regional activities in support of a global ban; and a follow-up conference, to be hosted by Belgium in June 1997, to review the progress in achieving a global ban.

The Chairman of the Conference presented his Agenda for Action to advance a total ban on anti-personnel mines. The Agenda envisaged global measures, such as building public awareness and political will for a global ban, rapid entry into force and universal adherence to amended Protocol II, increased exchanges of information and data on anti-personnel mines, and preparation of a draft agreement, as well as regional action in all parts of the world. The Agenda also dealt with landmine clearance, mine awareness and victim assistance. The Government of Canada expressed its intention to host a ceremony in December 1997, at which time the treaty banning anti-personnel mines would be signed.

Communications. By a letter [CD/1381] of 23 January, Turkey communicated the text of a statement by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs concerning the introduction by Turkey of a comprehensive moratorium, for a renewable term of three years, on all anti-personnel landmine exports and transfers. On 26 January, Canada announced that it was declaring comprehensive unilateral moratoriums on the production, export and operational use of anti-personnel landmines [A/51/313]. Singapore, on 7 May, informed the Secretary-General that it had declared a two-year moratorium on the export of anti-personnel landmines that had no self-destruct or self-neutralizing mechanisms [A/51/136]. On 14 May, Italy, on behalf of the EU, transmitted a declaration by the EU on anti-personnel landmines [A/51/139], which stated that the European Union would consider the possibility of conducting specific demining actions. Denmark on 23 May said that it would renounce unilaterally the use of anti-personnel landmines and destroy existing stockpiles [A/51/323]. On 15 July, Israel informed [A/51/313] the Secretary-General of its decision to extend its moratorium on export of anti-personnel landmines for a further period of three years. By a letter [A/51/266-S/1996/621] of 24 July, Germany presented a seven-point action programme on anti-personnel mines. Germany stated that in January it had imposed a unilateral unlimited moratorium on all exports of anti-personnel mines, and in April, the Federal Armed Forces relinquished totally and unconditionally the use of anti-personnel mines. Existing stocks were to be destroyed. France, by a letter [A/C.1/51/7] of 4 October, stated that the Council of Ministers, on 2 October, had adopted important decisions relating to anti-personnel mines. It drew attention to the country's commitment to refrain from the use of anti-personnel mines and its determination to arrive at a legally binding and verifiable international agreement on a total and comprehensive ban on anti-personnel mines within the framework of the Conference on Disarmament. Belgium, on 17 October, reporting on the status of Belgian legislation on anti-personnel mines, informed [A/C.1/51/11] the Secretary-General that the Act of 24 June required the State or the public authorities to destroy existing stocks of anti-personnel mines and similar traps or devices within three years. A limited number of anti-personnel mines would, however, be kept for research and training.

Similar statements were made in various forums. The following were announced at the Review Conference. Australia stated that it had decided to unilaterally suspend the use of anti-personnel landmines. Bulgaria informed the Conference that by a decision of 2 May concerning changes and amendments to the import and export regime of the country, a timely moratorium on the export of anti-personnel landmines had been introduced; the decision took effect immediately upon adoption and was valid until 30 April 1999. China declared that, pending the entry into force of Protocol II, it would implement a moratorium on its export of anti-personnel landmines that were not in conformity with the technical specifications on detectability, self-destruction and self-deactivation as provided for by the Protocol, and would ban the export of booby traps. Croatia on 19 April issued a statement declaring a moratorium on the use, production, stockpiling, import and export of anti-personnel landmines, booby traps and remotely delivered anti-personnel mines. Luxembourg reported the introduction of a complete moratorium on the production, transfer, stockpiling or use of landmines, and with the exception of a small number of devices intended for training deminers, existing stockpiles would be destroyed. New Zealand on 22 April announced a formal renunciation of the use of anti-personnel landmines. South Africa, on 3 May, announced that it had decided to suspend the operational use of anti-personnel landmines by its defence force, which would conduct a study to review long-term policy. It had also decided to replace an earlier moratorium on the export of landmines with a prohibition on the export of all types of landmines.

Speaking before the General Assembly on 26 September, the Foreign Minister of Italy announced that the Government pledged to renounce the production and export of anti-personnel landmines. The country would also initiate the destruction of existing devices and promote further restrictions.

On 11 March, the Netherlands declared that its army would no longer use anti-personnel landmines and that stockpiled mines would be destroyed. On 21 March, the Minister for Foreign Affairs announced in Parliament that the Government would not allow anti-personnel mines to be exported from the Netherlands, and on 2 April, a resolution calling for a bill banning the production of those weapons was passed by a unanimous vote of the Lower House of the Dutch Parliament, which was the final step to a comprehensive ban in the Netherlands. On 22 April, the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs of the United Kingdom announced that the United Kingdom would destroy a substantial part of its existing stocks of anti-personnel landmines; would not use any of those mines operationally, except in exceptional circumstances and with specific ministerial authorization; and would also extend with immediate effect its national export moratorium to prohibit the export of all types of anti-personnel landmines to all destinations. On 16 May, the United States President, in announcing his Government's landmine policy, stated that the country would undertake not to use, and to place in inactive stockpile status with intent to demilitarize by the end of 1999, all non-self-destructing anti-personnel landmines not needed to train personnel engaged in demining and countermining operations, or to defend the United States and its allies from armed aggression across the Korean Demilitarized Zone. Between the present and the time an international agreement took effect, the United States would reserve the option to use self-destructing/self-deactivating anti-personnel landmines, subject to the restrictions it had accepted in the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons, in military hostilities to safeguard American lives and hasten the end of fighting.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 S.

An international agreement to ban anti-personnel landmines

The General Assembly,

Recalling with satisfaction its resolutions 48/75 K of 16 December 1993, 49/75 D of 15 December 1994 and 50/70 O of 12 December 1995, in which it, inter alia, urged States to implement moratoriums on the export of anti-personnel landmines,

Also recalling with satisfaction its resolutions 49/75 D and 50/70 O, in which it, inter alia, established as a goal of the international community the eventual elimination of anti-personnel landmines,

Noting that, according to the 1995 report of the Secretary-General entitled "Assistance in mine clearance", it is estimated that there are one hundred and ten million landmines in the ground in more than sixty countries throughout the world,

Noting also that, according to the same report, the global landmine crisis continues to worsen as an estimated two million new landmines are laid each year, while only an estimated one hundred and fifty thousand were cleared in 1995,

Expressing deep concern that anti-personnel landmines kill or maim hundreds of people every week, mostly innocent and defenceless civilians and especially children, obstruct economic development and reconstruction, inhibit the repatriation of refugees and the return of internally displaced persons, and have other severe consequences for years after emplacement.

Gravely concerned about the suffering and casualties caused to non-combatants as a result of the proliferation, as well as the indiscriminate and irresponsible use, of anti-personnel landmines,

Recalling with satisfaction its resolutions 48/7 of 19 October 1993, 49/215 A of 23 December 1994 and 50/82 of 14 December 1995 calling for assistance in mine clearance,

Welcoming the recent decisions taken at the Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, particularly with respect to the amended Protocol II to the Convention, and believing that the amended Protocol is an essential part of the global effort to address problems caused by the proliferation, as well as the indiscriminate and irresponsible use, of anti-personnel landmines,

Welcoming also the adoption of the declaration entitled "Towards a Global Ban on Anti-Personnel Mines" by participants at the Ottawa International Strategy Conference on 5 October 1996, including its call for the earliest possible conclusion of a legally binding international agreement to ban anti-personnel landmines, and further welcoming the follow-on conference at Brussels in June 1997,

Welcoming further the recent decisions taken by States to adopt various bans, moratoriums or other restrictions on the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of anti-personnel landmines, and other measures taken unilaterally as well as multilaterally,

Recognizing the need to conclude an international agreement to ban all anti-personnel landmines as soon as possible,

1. Urges States to pursue vigorously an effective, legally binding international agreement to ban the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of anti-personnel landmines with a view to completing the negotiation as soon as possible;

2. Urges States that have not yet done so to accede to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and Protocol II as amended on 3 May 1996, and urges all States immediately to comply to the fullest extent possible with the applicable rules of Protocol II as amended;

3. Welcomes the various bans, moratoriums or other restrictions already declared by States on anti-personnel landmines;

4. Calls upon States that have not yet done so to declare and implement such bans, moratoriums or other restrictions—particularly on operational use and transfer—at the earliest possible date;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on steps taken to complete an international agreement banning the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of anti-personnel landmines, and on other steps taken by Member States to implement such bans, moratoriums or other restrictions and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "General and complete disarmament";

6. Requests Member States to provide the requested information for the report of the Secretary-General on steps taken to complete an international agreement banning the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of anti-personnel landmines, and on other steps taken to implement bans, moratoriums or other restrictions on anti-personnel landmines and to submit such information to the Secretary-General by 15 April 1997.

Excessively injurious conventional weapons

Convention and Protocol

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/74 [YUN 1995, p. 222], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/51/254], presented information on actions taken between 1 July 1995 and 30 June 1996 concerning the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects [YUN 1980, p. 86], and its three Protocols (dealing with non-detectable fragments; mines, booby traps and other devices; and incendiary weapons). The Convention is also known as the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons.

As at 31 December 1996, 63 States were parties to the Convention. During the year, Djibouti, Georgia, Luxembourg, Mauritius, the Philippines and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia became parties to the Convention and its Protocols, which had entered into force in 1983 [YUN1983,p.66].

Review conference

Pursuant to its 1995 decision [YUN 1995, p. 222] to continue work on amendments to the Convention's Protocol II on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices, the Review Conference of the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons met twice during the year (Geneva, 15-29 January and 22 April-3 May) [CCW/CONF.I/16].

The first resumed session focused on the further elaboration of articles 2 to 6 and the Technical Annex of Protocol II, concentrating on military-technical aspects, with a view to finding acceptable compromises that would strengthen the provisions of the Protocol. The work was carried out within the framework of the President's consultations.

On 19 January, the President submitted to the Conference a working paper incorporating changes to articles 2 to 6 and the Technical Annex of the draft amending Protocol II contained therein for the consideration of delegations, and to serve as a basis for the work of the concluding session of the Review Conference. The President's text reflected the stage of negotiations as seen by the President and did not commit any delegation. The parties agreed to continue negotiations on the basis of that text, with a view to reaching agreement on an amended Protocol II during the concluding phase of the resumed session, in April.

At the second resumed session, the Conference continued its work on amending Protocol II through the President's consultations and consultations of Friends of the Chair. While the President himself undertook to work on the understanding regarding technical matters, the Friends of the Chair dealt with those provisions of the Protocol relating to consultations and compliance, technical cooperation and assistance, transfers, and protection from the effects of minefields, mined areas, mines, booby traps and other devices. As agreed to during the first resumed session, the President's texts on Protocol II and its Technical Annex served as a basis for the negotiations.

On 3 May, the President's consultations and those of his Friends resulted in a compromise agreement to amend Protocol II in a number of important areas. The scope of application of the Protocol was extended to cover both international and internal armed conflicts; restrictions on the use of all types of mines were increased significantly; the use of non-detectable anti-personnel mines was prohibited, albeit with a long period of deferral (nine years from the entry into force of the Protocol as amended); the use of non-self-destructing and non-self-deactivating mines outside fenced, monitored and marked areas was prohibited; the transfer of non-detectable anti-personnel mines was prohibited with effect from the Protocol's entry into force, i.e., after 20 States parties had notified their consent to be bound by the Protocol. There was, however, a political obligation to refrain from such transfers with effect from the date of the Protocol's adoption. Broader obligations of protection in favour of peacekeeping and other UN missions and agencies were imposed on States parties or parties to a conflict; and the Protocol required States to enforce compliance with its provisions within their jurisdiction, and called for penal sanctions in case of violation. Annual conferences were instituted to ensure periodic reviews of the operation of the provisions of the Protocol. The UN Secretary-General, in his capacity as depositary, would convene, at an early date following entry into force of the Protocol, a preparatory meeting for the first Annual Conference to elaborate draft rules of procedure and agenda items, which might include a review of the operation and status of the Protocol.

Although the focus of the resumed session was on amending Protocol II, the Conference did continue its review of the scope and operation of the Convention and its annexed protocols and its elaboration of a Final Declaration.

In its review of the preamble of the Convention, the Conference stressed the obligation of parties to determine whether the use of a weapon that they were considering to develop or acquire would in some or all circumstances be unlawful, and reaffirmed the need to continue the progressive development of international law applicable to conventional weapons that might be excessively injurious or have indiscriminate effects. Parties emphasized the desirability of achieving universal adherence by the year 2000.

In connection with article 1 (scope of application of the Convention and its annexed protocols), the parties agreed to broaden the scope of Protocol II to include conflicts not of an international character. With a view to ensuring the effectiveness of the Convention, parties recognized that it was important that the provisions of the Convention be well known to their respective armed forces (article 6, "Dissemination"). It was widely felt that international cooperation and collaboration could facilitate that process, for example, through the exchange of experience at all levels and the exchange of instructors. In that context, Switzerland's offer to host a seminar on dissemination was noted.

The Convention made no provision for convening review conferences at regular intervals (article 8). Participants agreed, however, that such conferences should be held more frequently, and considered doing so every five years. They decided, consistent with article 8, subparagraph 3(c), to convene a review conference five years following the entry into force of the amendments that they were in the process of adopting, but in any case not later than 2001 with preparatory expert meetings starting as early as 2000 if necessary. Concerning the next Review Conference, Switzerland proposed the consideration of an additional protocol on small-calibre weapons and ammunition; Sweden, measures related to naval mines; and Mexico, consideration of certain other conventional weapons.

On 3 May, the Conference concluded its work with the adoption of amended Protocol II and the Final Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/49.

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/74 of 12 December 1995 and previous resolutions referring to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption, on 10 October 1980, of the Convention, together with the Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I), the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) and the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III), which entered into force on 2 December 1983,

Also recalling with satisfaction the adoption, on 13 October 1995, of the Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons (Protocol IV),

Reaffirming its conviction that a general and verifiable agreement on prohibitions or restrictions on the use of certain conventional weapons would significantly reduce the suffering of civilians and combatants,

Noting that, in conformity with article 8 of the Convention, conferences may be convened to examine amendments to the Convention or to any of the Protocols thereto, to examine additional protocols concerning other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing Protocols or to review the scope and application of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto and to examine any proposed amendments or additional protocols,

Welcoming the fact that the Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects met at resumed sessions at Geneva from 15 to 19 January 1996 and from 22 April to 3 May 1996 and concluded its work,

Particularly welcoming the adoption on 3 May 1996 of the amended Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II),

Recalling the desire expressed by the States party to the Convention that all States, pending the entry into force of the amended Protocol, respect and ensure respect for the substantive provisions of the amended Protocol to the fullest extent possible,

Also recalling the role played by the International Committee of the Red Cross in the elaboration of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto,

Welcoming the national measures adopted by an increasing number of Member States relating to bans, moratoriums or restrictions on the transfer, use or production of anti-personnel landmines or to the reduction of existing stockpiles of such mines,

Desirous of reinforcing international cooperation in the area of prohibitions or restrictions on the use of certain conventional weapons, in particular for the removal of minefields, mines and booby traps,

Recalling, in this respect, its resolution 50/82 of 14 December 1995 and previous resolutions on assistance in mine clearance,

Noting with appreciation contributions pledged to the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance,

1. Registers its satisfaction with the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the fact that additional States have ratified or accepted the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, which was opened for signature in New York on 10 April 1981, or have acceded to the Convention;

3. Urgently calls upon all States that have not yet done so to take all measures to become parties, as soon as possible, to the Convention and its Protocols, and upon successor States to take appropriate measures so that ultimately adherence to these instruments will be universal;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in his capacity as depositary of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto, to continue to inform it periodically of ratifications and acceptances of and accessions to the Convention and the Protocols;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the final report of the Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, adopted at Geneva on 3 May 1996;

6. Commends the amended Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) to all States, with a view to achieving the widest possible adherence to this instrument at an early date, and calls, in particular, on the States parties to express their consent to be bound by the Protocol with a view to its entry into force as soon as possible;

7. Again commends the Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons (Protocol IV) to all States, with a view to achieving the widest possible adherence to this instrument at an early date, and calls, in particular, on the States parties to express their consent to be bound by the Protocol with a view to its entry into force as soon as possible;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects".

General Assembly resolution 51/49

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.15) without vote, 13 November (meeting 21); 48-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.40); agenda item 75. Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 15, 21; plenary 79.

Confidence-building

UN Register of Conventional Arms

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/70 D [YUN 1995, p. 213], the Secretary-General published in August the fourth annual report [A/51/300 & Add.1-5] on the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms, established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 75] to promote enhanced levels of transparency regarding arms transfers. The report contained information provided by 96 Governments for the calendar year 1995 on imports and exports of conventional arms in the seven categories (battle tanks, armoured combat vehicles, large-calibre artillery systems, combat aircraft, attack helicopters, warships, missiles and missile launchers) covered under the Register and/or background information on their military holdings, procurement through national production, legislation and policies. Of the 32 Governments submitting information, 27 reported on military holdings and 19 on procurement through national production. The submissions for 1995 revealed again high participation by Western European States and the same or higher level of participation from those of Asia and Eastern Europe. Participation from nations of Latin America and the Caribbean was lower than in previous years. Participation from African and Middle Eastern States remained low. After four years of operation, the overall number of participants in the Register continued to increase, rising to 134.

Although not all publicly known importers participated in the Register, the information provided by the major exporters reflected most "import" transactions. Twenty-three States that were identified by exporting States as recipients of arms in 1995—as compared to 19 in 1994, 19 in 1993 and 25 in 1992—did not participate in the information exchange.

The question of the continued operation and further development of the Register was scheduled for examination in 1997 by a Group of Governmental Experts, which was to consider issues related to participation, adjustment of the categories of weapons covered, the addition of new categories of weapons and the possible inclusion of information on military holdings and procurement through national production on the same basis as information on imports and exports.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 H.

Transparency in armaments

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/36 L of 9 December 1991, 47/52 L of 15 December 1992, 48/75 E of 16 December 1993, 49/75 C of 15 December 1994 and 50/70 D of 12 December 1995,

Continuing to take the view that an enhanced level of transparency in armaments contributes greatly to confidence-building and security among States and that the establishment of the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms constitutes an important step forward in the promotion of transparency in military matters,

Welcoming the consolidated report of the Secretary-General on the Register, which includes the returns of Member States for 1995,

Welcoming also the response of Member States to the request contained in paragraphs 9 and 10 of resolution 46/36 L to provide data on their imports and exports of arms, as well as available background information regarding their military holdings, procurement through national production and relevant policies,

Welcoming further the report of the Disarmament Commission at its 1996 session on the subject of international arms transfers, which was adopted by consensus,

Stressing that the continuing operation of the Register and its further development should be reviewed in order to secure a Register that is capable of attracting the widest possible participation,

1. Reaffirms its determination to ensure the effective operation of the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms as provided for in paragraphs 7, 8, 9 and 10 of resolution 46/36 L;

2. Calls upon Member States to provide the requested data and information for the Register, on the basis of resolutions 46/36 L and 47/52 L and the annex and appendices to the 1994 report of the Secretary-General on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development, to the Secretary-General by 30 April annually;

3. Reaffirms its decision, with a view to the further development of the Register, to keep the scope of and participation in the Register under review, and, to that end:

(a) Recalls its request to Member States to provide the Secretary-General with their views on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development and on transparency measures related to weapons of mass destruction;

(b) Recalls its request to the Secretary-General, with the assistance of a group of governmental experts to be convened in 1997, on the basis of equitable geographical representation, to prepare a report on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development, taking into account the report of the Disarmament Commission at its 1996 session on the subject of international arms transfers, the work of the Conference on Disarmament, the views expressed by Member States and the 1994 report of the Secretary-General on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development, with a view to a decision at its fifty-second session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that sufficient resources are made available for the Secretariat to operate and maintain the Register;

5. Invites the Conference on Disarmament to consider continuing its work undertaken in the field of transparency in armaments;

6. Reiterates its call upon all Member States to cooperate at the regional and subregional levels, taking fully into account the specific conditions prevailing in the region or subregion, with a view to enhancing and coordinating international efforts aimed at increased openness and transparency in armaments;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the progress made in implementing the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Transparency in armaments".

The Assembly retained those paragraphs by recorded votes of 147 to none, with 13 abstentions, and 146 to none, with 18 abstentions, respectively.

Transparency of military budgets

In June, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/51/179] containing the views of Italy on behalf of the European Union (EU) and of the countries of Central and Eastern Europe associated with it (Bulgaria, Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, Slovakia), as well as of the associated countries Cyprus and Malta, in reply to his request on ways to implement guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/66 [YUN 1994, p. 161].

In a July report [A/51/209], the Secretary-General provided information received from 28 Member States concerning their military expenditures, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 40/91 B [YUN 1985, p. 84]. Annexed to the report was the standardized form for international reporting of military expenditures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/38.

Objective information on military matters, including transparency of military expenditures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/66 of 15 December 1994 on objective information on military matters, including transparency of military expenditures,

Also recalling its resolution 35/142 B of 12 December 1980, which introduced the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures, and its resolution 48/62 of 16 December 1993, calling upon all Member States to participate in it, and its resolution 47/54 B of 9 December 1992, endorsing the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters and inviting Member States to provide relevant information to the Secretary-General regarding their implementation,

Noting that since then national reports on military expenditures and on the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters have been submitted by a number of Member States belonging to different geographic regions,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on ways and means to implement the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters, including, in particular, how to strengthen and broaden participation in the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures,

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General for providing Member States with the reports on military expenditures in standardized form reported by States and on guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters,

Welcoming the decision of many Member States to exchange and to publish information annually on their military budgets and to implement the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters, as appropriate,

Reaffirming its firm conviction that a better flow of objective information on military matters can help to relieve international tension and contribute to the building of confidence among States and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements,

Convinced that the improvement of international relations forms a sound basis for promoting further openness and transparency in all military matters,

Recalling that the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters recommended certain areas for further consideration, such as the improvement of the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures,

1. Recommends the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters to all Member States for implementation, fully taking into account specific political, military and other conditions prevailing in a region, on the basis of initiatives and with the agreement of the States of the region concerned;

2. Calls upon all Member States to report annually, by 30 April, to the Secretary-General their military expenditures for the latest fiscal year for which data are available, using, for the time being, the reporting instrument as recommended in its resolution 35/142 B;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate annually the reports on military expenditures as received from Member States;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States and make recommendations on necessary changes to the content and structure of the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures in order to strengthen and broaden participation, and to submit a report within existing resources on the subject to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

5. Calls upon all Member States, in time for the deliberation by the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, to provide the Secretary-General with their views on ways and means to strengthen and broaden participation in the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures, including necessary changes to its content and structure;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Objective information on military matters, including transparency of military expenditures".

General Assembly resolution 51/38

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.2) without vote, 14 November (meeting 22); 30-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.47); agenda item 61.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 16, 22; plenary 79.

Arms transfers

International arms transfers

Disarmament Commission. In 1996, the Disarmament Commission continued to consider the item "International arms transfers, with particular reference to General Assembly resolution 46/36 H of 6 December 1991" [YUN 1991, p. 56]. By that resolution, the Assembly had called on all States to give high priority to eradicating illicit trade in all kinds of weapons and military equipment.

Working Group I, which dealt with the item, based its discussion on the Chairman's 1995 working paper [YUN 1995, p. 218]. It agreed on a set of guidelines, covering both licit and illicit transfers, which the Commission subsequently adopted and annexed to its report [A/51/42].

The guidelines assigned equal responsibility to suppliers and recipients. The former were to seek to ensure that the quantity and level of sophistication of their exports did not contribute to instability and conflict, and the latter were to ensure that their level of armaments was commensurate with their legitimate self-defence and security requirements. The guidelines suggested a number of ways, both national and international, to ensure effective control over transfers, and proposed institutional arrangements, including the role of the United Nations.

Illicit transfers

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/75 M [YUN 1994, p. 166], the Secretary-General, in a June report [A/51/181], provided information received from seven Governments regarding measures they had taken to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms.

Pursuant to Assembly resolution 50/70 H [YUN 1995, p. 220], the Secretary-General transmitted an October report [A/51/452] on further developments regarding the issue of assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and collecting them.

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 50/70 B [YUN 1995, p. 217], the Secretary-General appointed a Panel of Governmental Experts on Small Arms to prepare a report [A/52/298] on the types of small arms and light weapons actually used in conflicts, the causes of their excessive and destabilizing accumulation and transfer, and the ways and means to prevent and reduce their transfer. The Panel held its first meeting in New York from 24 to 28 June 1996.

To gain better insight into the problems created by the accumulation, proliferation and use of small arms in various regions, the Panel decided to hold a series of workshops. The first regional workshop (Pretoria, South Africa, 23-25 September) adopted an appeal by which the participants declared themselves ready to adopt collective regional measures, including combating criminal activity, harmonizing national legislation, standardizing licensing procedures for arms possession, pooling relevant intelligence and entering into extradition agreements. They appealed to the donor community to make provision in their development assistance policies for programmes to reintegrate demobilized military personnel into civil society, and called on the United Nations to ensure that its post-conflict peace programmes included arrangements for destruction and disposal of weapons and for trade-off of weapons and equipment for gainful employment.

Communication. In accordance with Assembly resolution 50/70 B [YUN 1995, p. 217], Italy, by a letter [A/51/377] of 29 May addressed to the Secretary-General, presented a common reply to the resolution on behalf of the EU and of countries of Central and Eastern Europe associated with it—Bulgaria, Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, Slovakia—as well as of the associated countries Cyprus and Malta. The response dealt with definition of small arms, the nature and cause of the excessive and destabilizing accumulation and transfer of such arms, including their illicit trade, and ways and means of preventing or reducing the phenomenon.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 F.

Measures to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/36 H of 6 December 1991 and its decision 47/419 of 9 December 1992 on international arms transfers,

Recalling also its resolutions 48/75 F and H of 16 December 1993, 49/75 M of 15 December 1994 and 50/70 J of 12 December 1995 on measures to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms,

Recognizing that the availability of massive quantities of conventional weapons and especially their illicit transfer, often associated with destabilizing activities, are most disturbing and dangerous phenomena, in particular for the internal situation of affected States and the violation of human rights,

Bearing in mind that in certain situations mercenaries, terrorists and child soldiers are supplied with weapons acquired from illicit transfers of conventional arms,

Convinced that peace and security are inextricably interlinked with and in some cases imperative for economic development and reconstruction, including in war-stricken countries,

Realizing the urgent need to resolve conflicts and to diminish tension, and to accelerate efforts towards general and complete disarmament with a view to maintaining regional and international peace and security,

Recognizing the curbing of the illicit transfer of arms as an important contribution to the relaxation of tension and peaceful reconciliation processes,

Stressing the need for effective national control measures on the transfer of conventional weapons,

Convinced that effective measures to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms will help enhance regional and international peace, security and economic development,

1. Welcomes the adoption by the Disarmament Commission of the report on international arms transfers, with particular reference to General Assembly resolution 46/36 H, as well as a text entitled "Guidelines for international arms transfers in the context of General Assembly resolution 46/36 H of 6 December 1991";

2. Invites Member States:

(a) To enact adequate national legislation and/or regulations and adopt administrative procedures in order to exercise effective control over armaments and the export and import of arms, inter alia, with the aim of preventing trafficking in illicit arms and bringing offenders to justice;

(b) To provide the Secretary-General, by 15 April 1997, with relevant information on national control measures on arms transfers with a view to preventing illicit arms transfers;

3. Also invites Member States to provide the Secretary-General, by 15 April 1997, with their views on:

(a) Effective ways and means of collecting weapons transferred illicitly, in particular in the light of experience gained by the United Nations;

(b) Concrete proposals concerning measures at national, regional and international levels to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms;

4. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report containing the views expressed by Member States;

(b) To report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the effective implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Measures to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms".

General Assembly resolution 51/45 F

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.11) without vote, 14 November (meeting 22); 15-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.16); agenda item 71 (f).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 16, 22; plenary 79.

Also on 10 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 L.

Assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and collecting them

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/36 H of 6 December 1991, 47/52 G and J of 9 December 1992, 48/75 H and J of 16 December 1993, 49/75 G of 15 December 1994 and 50/70 H of 12 December 1995,

Considering that the illicit circulation of massive quantities of small arms throughout the world impedes development and is a source of increased insecurity,

Considering also that the illicit international transfer of small arms and their accumulation in many countries constitute a threat to the populations and to national and regional security and are a factor contributing to the destabilization of States,

Basing itself on the statement of the Secretary-General relating to the request of Mali concerning United Nations assistance for the collection of small arms,

Gravely concerned at the extent of the insecurity and banditry linked to the illicit circulation of small arms in Mali and the other affected States of the Saharo-Saharan subregion,

Taking note of the first conclusions of the United Nations advisory missions sent to the affected countries of the subregion by the Secretary-General to study the best way of curbing the illicit circulation of small arms and ensuring their collection,

Taking note also of the interest shown by other States of the subregion in receiving a United Nations advisory mission,

Noting the actions taken and those recommended at the meetings of the States of the subregion held at Banjul, Algiers and Bamako to establish close regional co-operation with a view to strengthening security,

1. Welcomes the initiative taken by Mali concerning the question of the illicit circulation of small arms and their collection in the affected States of the Saharo-Saharan subregion;

2. Also welcomes the action taken by the Secretary-General in implementation of this initiative in the context of General Assembly resolution 40/151 H of 16 December 1985;

3. Thanks the Governments concerned in the subregion for the substantial support that they have given to the United Nations advisory missions, and welcomes the declared readiness of other States to receive the United Nations Advisory Mission;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts, in the context of the implementation of resolution 49/75 G and of the recommendations of the United Nations advisory missions, to curb the illicit circulation of small arms and to collect such arms in the affected States that so request, with the support of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa and in close cooperation with the Organization of African Unity;

5. Notes that, as part of its efforts to halt the flow of small arms into Mali and the Saharo-Saharan subregion, the Malian Government oversaw the destruction, at the "Flame of Peace" ceremony held at Timbuktu on 27 March 1996, of thousands of small arms handed over by ex-combatants of the armed movements of northern Mali;

6. Encourages the setting up in the countries of the Saharo-Saharan subregion of national commissions against the proliferation of small arms;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to examine the issue and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 51/45 L

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.11) without vote, 13 November (meeting 21); 20-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.35), orally revised; agenda item 71.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 16, 20, 21; plenary 79.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 N.

Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purpose of the United Nations to maintain peace and security and, in this context, reaffirming in particular the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament, as well as the commitment of Member States to take concrete steps in order to strengthen that role,

Convinced that a comprehensive and integrated approach towards certain practical disarmament measures, such as, inter alia, arms control, particularly with regard to small arms and light weapons, confidence-building measures, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants, demining and conversion, often is a prerequisite to maintaining and consolidating peace and security and thus provides a basis for effective rehabilitation and social and economic development,

Noting in this context the reports of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace" and "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace" in which the Secretary-General, inter alia, stressed the urgent need for "practical disarmament in the context of the conflicts the United Nations is actually dealing with and of the weapons, most of them light weapons, that are actually killing people in the hundreds of thousands", and in which, with regard to practical disarmament measures, the Secretary-General stated that "the assembly, control and disposal of weapons has been a central feature of most of the comprehensive peace settlements in which the United Nations has played a peacekeeping role",

Recalling its resolutions 49/75 M of 15 December 1994 and 50/70 B and 50/70 J of 12 December 1995 concerning small arms and light weapons, as well as the control and the illicit transfer of such weapons, and, in this context, encouraging the work of the United Nations expert panel on small arms,

Welcoming the adoption by the Disarmament Commission of the "Guidelines for international arms transfers in the context of General Assembly resolution 46/36 H of 6 December 1991",

Recalling its resolutions 49/75 G of 15 December 1994 and 50/70 H of 12 December 1995, in which it welcomed the initiative taken by Mali concerning the question of illicit circulation of small arms and their collection in the affected States of the Saharo-Saharan subregion, as well as the action taken by the Secretary-General in the implementation of that initiative,

Welcoming, in this context, the measures taken and other ongoing efforts by the Central African States to promote, within the framework of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, confidence-building and conflict prevention in their subregion,

Recalling its resolution 50/70 D of 12 December 1995 on transparency in armaments, and continuing to take the view that an enhanced level of transparency could contribute to confidence-building and security among States,

Recalling also its resolutions 50/70 O and 50/74 of 12 December 1995 and 50/82 of 14 December 1995 addressing the global landmine problem,

Welcoming the adoption on 3 May 1996 of a revised Protocol II by the Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects as a further step, and also welcoming respective national measures adopted by a growing number of States,

1. Stresses the particular importance of certain practical disarmament measures, such as the collection, control and disposal of arms, especially small arms and light weapons, coupled with restraint over the production and procurement as well as transfers of such arms, the demobilization and reintegration of former combatants, demining and conversion, for the maintenance and consolidation of peace and security in areas that have suffered from conflict;
2. Underlines the important role of the United Nations in providing a political framework for such practical disarmament measures in those areas and in facilitating their implementation;
3. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of experience gained from conflict resolution, to make recommendations and suggestions for an integrated approach to such practical disarmament measures, taking also into account the work of the United Nations expert panel on small arms, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;
4. Also requests the Secretary-General, in this connection, to seek the views of Member States on this subject and to include them in his report;
5. Calls upon Member States, as well as regional arrangements or agencies, to assist the Secretary-General in his endeavours in this regard and to contribute actively to the implementation of such practical disarmament measures;
6. Encourages United Nations organs and agencies to join in this task within the framework of their responsibilities, in particular the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research on the basis of its Disarmament and Conflict Resolution Project;
7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session an item entitled "Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures".

General Assembly resolution 51/45 N

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.11) without vote, 15 November (meeting 24); 43-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.38/Rev.1); agenda item 71.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-14, 24; plenary 79.

Regional approaches to disarmament

Africa

The signing in April in Cairo of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (the Treaty of Pelindaba) constituted an important contribution by the African countries to the maintenance of international peace and security (see above, under "Nuclear-weapon-free zones").

Reports of the Secretary-General described demobilization, collection of arms and the reintegration of military forces into civilian society in Angola [S/1996/1000], Liberia [S/1997/90] and Sierra Leone [S/1997/80].

In Angola, the Government and the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) continued talks on completing the formation of the Angolan Armed Forces (FAA), and they agreed on a timetable for the quartering of UNITA troops and their incorporation into FAA. Only limited progress was made in that area during 1996, however. The disarmament and demobilization processes in Liberia began on 22 November as scheduled and, despite constraints, made some progress by the end of the year, especially in extending the demobilization exercise to all designated disarmament sites. With respect to Sierra Leone, a Peace Agreement was signed in Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire, on 30 November by the newly elected Government and the Revolutionary United Front, under which the United Nations was requested to lend its assistance, in particular with demobilization and the reintegration of former combatants.

The International Commission of Inquiry, established by Security Council resolution 1013(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 382] to investigate reports of military training of and arms transfers to former Rwandan government forces, completed its work in March [S/1996/195]. The Commission recommended that, when an arms embargo was imposed, neighbouring States be encouraged to participate in a data bank of movements and acquisitions of small arms; that they be urged to adhere to the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects [YUN 1980, p. 76], especially its Protocol II, on landmines; and that suppliers be requested not to transfer such arms to non-State entities.

Two forums took place in 1996 to address the problems of destabilization and armed conflict: a regional workshop on small arms, convened by the Panel of Governmental Experts on Small Arms (Pretoria, South Africa, 23-25 September) (see above), and a High-level Consultation on Post-conflict Peace-building in West Africa: Political and Development Initiatives (New York, 21 October) [A/51/730-S/1996/1043], held under the auspices of the Secretary-General. The Consultation was attended by the members of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), 21 donor countries and five multilateral institutions.

The Secretary-General, in an August report [A/51/287], stated that he had attended the first meeting of heads of State and Government of States members of the UN Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa (Yaounde, Cameroon, 8 July) [A/51/274-S/1996/631]. At the meeting, a Non-Aggression Pact designed to prevent future armed conflicts among the States of the subregion was signed by Burundi, Cameroon, Chad, the Congo, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Sao Tome and Principe, and Zaire. Subsequently, it was also signed by the Central African Republic. The Final Declaration of the summit set out a course of action on subregional security cooperation and outlined a number of specific measures, among them establishment under UN auspices of an early warning mechanism, a disarmament programme to deal with the wide proliferation of weapons, and model peacekeeping units within the armed forces of member States. Subsequently, the first training seminar, for senior military and civilian officials who would train the specialized peacekeeping units took place in Yaounde from 9 to 17 September.

Convinced of the value of coordinating policies in order to strengthen regional stability, the heads of State or Government of the Southern African Development Community (SADC) met in Gaborone, Botswana, on 28 June [A/50/1001] and established the SADC Organ on Politics, Defence and Security. Among its objectives were to mediate inter-State and intra-State disputes; pre-empt conflict through an early warning system; develop a collective security capacity and a regional peacekeeping capacity; and encourage and monitor the ratification of international and regional arms control and disarmament conventions. (See also PART ONE, Chapter II.)

Asia and the Pacific

Concerning nuclear issues, France, the United Kingdom and the United States on 25 March signed the three Protocols to the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty, thereby contributing to stability in the Asian-Pacific region. In addition, consultations continued between members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) and the nuclear-weapon States regarding the Protocol to the 1995 Treaty on the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone, known as the Bangkok Treaty (see above under "Nuclear-weapon-free zones").

Significant confidence-building took place in various subregions. On 26 April, China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation and Tajikistan signed an agreement in Shanghai, China, on confidence-building in the military field in the border area [A/51/137]. By the 16-article Agreement, the Joint Party (Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan) and China committed themselves to a series of confidence-building measures, such as information exchanges on their respective border units, notification of large-scale military activity, invitation of observers to military exercises, and increased cooperation between the armed forces in contiguous military districts. The Agreement stated that armed forces in the border area "shall not be used to attack the other Party or carry out any military activity threatening the other Party and disturbing tranquillity and stability in the border area". Also in April, China and the Russian Federation reaffirmed their commitment to resolve outstanding boundary issues between them and agreed to set up a telephone hotline between their capitals [A/51/127].

At the third ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF) meeting (Jakarta, Indonesia, 23 July), the issues discussed included the security situations in the South China Sea and on the Korean peninsula. ARF held meetings of the Inter-sessional Support Group on Confidence-building Measures (Tokyo, 18 and 19 January; Jakarta, 15 and 16 April). The Group proposed more dialogue on security issues and information exchange on defence programmes.

Europe

Important issues related to confidence-building and international security, such as the projected enlargement of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and the modernization of the 1990 Conventional Armed Forces in Europe Treaty (CFE), preoccupied European countries throughout most of 1996. At the first CFE Treaty Review Conference (Vienna, 15-31 May), member States reaffirmed the fundamental role of the Treaty with regard to European security and resolved to continue the conventional arms control process. The parties agreed to begin negotiations on modernization in Vienna in January 1997.

In the context of regional efforts to deal with arms control issues and plans to enlarge NATO, 54 heads of State of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) met in Lisbon, Portugal, on 2 and 3 December, to assess the situation.

By a letter of 4 December [A/51/716], the Permanent Observer Mission of Switzerland to the United Nations transmitted to the Secretary-General the Lisbon Document, adopted on 3 December, which contained the Lisbon Summit Declaration and the Lisbon Declaration on a Common and Comprehensive Security Model for Europe for the Twenty-First Century. It also contained a Framework for Arms Control and information on the development of the agenda of the Forum for Security Cooperation, which aimed at strengthening security and stability within the OSCE community of States. In the Lisbon Document, OSCE articulated a vision of a common security space for Europe in which all member States were equal partners—a concept elaborated on in its Declaration on a Common and Comprehensive Security Model for Europe for the Twenty-First Century and the Framework for Arms Control. In the latter document, members stressed that arms control was an integral part of OSCE's comprehensive and cooperative concept of security, and that the CFE Treaty had established a core of military stability and predictability that was fundamental to the security of OSCE members.

Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) signed the Agreement on Subregional Arms Control on June 14, in Florence, Italy. The parties agreed to set limits on five categories of armaments—battle tanks, armoured combat vehicles, artillery of 75 millimetre calibre and above, combat aircraft, and attack helicopters. They also agreed to an extensive information exchange and on-site inspection regime to verify compliance with the Agreement. The Agreement established the Subregional Consultative Commission to act as an implementation review body, the chairmanship of which would rotate among the parties (see also PART ONE, Chapter V).

Latin America and the Caribbean

Regional efforts to promote peace and security in the Americas continued during the year, with some significant achievements. On 30 December [S/1996/1045/Add.2], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace had been signed on 29 December between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca. To support the peace process, the Secretary-General requested the Council to approve the establishment of a military component in the existing UN Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala, to undertake verification of the ceasefire, the separation of forces and the demobilization of combatants, as called for in the peace accords.

Regarding the border dispute that had erupted into armed confrontation between Ecuador and Peru in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 214], the parties, by the Santiago Agreement signed on 29 October, decided to begin substantive talks to reach a complete and lasting solution to their differences [A/51/648-S/1996/900].

As part of its continuing efforts to enhance regional confidence-building and transparency in military matters, the Organization of American States (OAS) on 7 June adopted a resolution dealing with confidence- and security-building measures in the Americas, by which it urged member States to implement the recommendations of the 1995 Declaration of Santiago on Confidence- and Security-building Measures [YUN 1995, p. 214], and requested them to provide the OAS Secretary-General, by 15 May each year, with the same information that they submitted to the UN Register of Conventional Arms and to the UN standardized system of reporting of military expenditures.

Concerned that there were still approximately 170,000 anti-personnel landmines in Central America, OAS adopted on 7 June a resolution by which member States committed themselves to the global elimination of anti-personnel landmines and to conversion of the western hemisphere into a mine-free zone. Member States were urged to adhere to the 1980 Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons, especially amended Protocol II (see above, under "Landmines"). It also called for the establishment of a complete and integrated registry of anti-personnel landmines based on information provided annually by member States with respect to the approximate numbers of mines in their stockpiles, the number removed during the past year, and plans for clearance. In addition, it urged members to establish stockpile controls, to adopt domestic legislation to prohibit the private possession and transfer of mines and to inform the OAS Secretary-General of such action.

At a high-level meeting (Cochabamba, Bolivia, 3 and 4 September), members of the Rio Group attending the meeting—Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica (representing the Central American countries), Ecuador, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Trinidad and Tobago (representing the Caribbean Community), Uruguay, Venezuela—approved in principle two proposals of Mexico: adoption of a convention to impede the illicit transfer of weapons and adoption of measures to prevent an arms race in Latin America and the Caribbean.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 K.

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/58 P of 4 December 1990, 46/36 I of 6 December 1991, 47/52 J of 9 December 1992, 48/75 I of 16 December 1993, 49/75 N of 15 December 1994 and 50/70 K of 12 December 1995 on regional disarmament,

Believing that the efforts of the international community to move towards the ideal of general and complete disarmament are guided by the inherent human desire for genuine peace and security, the elimination of the danger of war and the release of economic, intellectual and other resources for peaceful pursuits,

Affirming the abiding commitment of all States to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations in the conduct of their international relations,

Noting that essential guidelines for progress towards general and complete disarmament were adopted at the tenth special session of the General Assembly,

Taking note of the guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security adopted by the Disarmament Commission at its 1993 substantive session,

Welcoming the prospects of genuine progress in the field of disarmament engendered in recent years as a result of negotiations between the two super-Powers,

Taking note of the recent proposals for disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation at the regional and subregional levels,

Recognizing the importance of confidence-building measures for regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that endeavours by countries to promote regional disarmament, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region and in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest level of armaments, would enhance the security of smaller States and would thus contribute to international peace and security by reducing the risk of regional conflicts,

1. Stresses that sustained efforts are needed, within the framework of the Conference on Disarmament and under the umbrella of the United Nations, to make progress on the entire range of disarmament issues;

2. Affirms that global and regional approaches to disarmament complement each other and should therefore be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

3. Calls upon States to conclude agreements, wherever possible, for nuclear non-proliferation, disarmament and confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels;

4. Welcomes the initiatives towards disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation and security undertaken by some countries at the regional and subregional levels;

5. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels in order to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation measures at the regional and subregional levels;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Regional disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 51/45 K

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 170-0-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.11) by recorded vote (145-0-1), U November (meeting 22); 26-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.31); agenda item 71.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-14, 22; plenary 79.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: India.

Also on 10 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 Q.

Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/75 J of 16 December 1993, 49/75 O of 15 December 1994 and 50/70 L of 12 December 1995,

Recognizing the crucial role of conventional arms control in promoting regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that conventional arms control needs to be pursued primarily in the regional and subregional contexts since most threats to peace and security in the post-cold-war era arise mainly among States located in the same region or subregion,

Aware that the preservation of a balance in the defence capabilities of States at the lowest level of armaments would contribute to peace and stability and should be a prime objective of conventional arms control,

Desirous of promoting agreements to strengthen regional peace and security at the lowest possible level of armaments and military forces,

Noting with particular interest the initiatives taken in this regard in different regions of the world, in particular the commencement of consultations among a number of Latin American countries and the proposals for conventional arms control made in the context of South Asia, and recognizing, in the context of this subject, the relevance and value of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe, which is a cornerstone of European security,

Believing that militarily significant States, and States with larger military capabilities, have a special responsibility in promoting such agreements for regional security,

Believing also that an important objective of conventional arms control in regions of tension should be to prevent the possibility of military attack launched by surprise and to avoid aggression,

1. Decides to give urgent consideration to the issues involved in conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, as a first step, to consider the formulation of principles that can serve as a framework for regional agreements on conventional arms control, and looks forward to a report of the Conference on this subject;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels".

Regional confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the United Nations and its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the guidelines for general and complete disarmament adopted at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions 43/78 H and 43/85 of 7 December 1988, 44/21 of 15 November 1989, 45/58 M of 4 December 1990, 46/37 B of 6 December 1991, 47/53 F of 15 December 1992, 48/76 A of 16 December 1993, 49/76 C of 15 December 1994 and 50/71 B of 12 December 1995,

Considering the importance and effectiveness of confidence-building measures taken at the initiative and with the participation of all States concerned and taking into account the specific characteristics of each region, in that they can contribute to regional disarmament and to international security, in accordance with the principles of the Charter,

Convinced that the resources released by disarmament, including regional disarmament, can be devoted to economic and social development and to the protection of the environment for the benefit of all peoples, in particular those of the developing countries,

Convinced also that development can be achieved only in a climate of peace, security and mutual confidence both within and among States,

Bearing in mind the establishment by the Secretary-General on 28 May 1992 of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, the purpose of which is to encourage arms limitation, disarmament, non-proliferation and development in the subregion,

Recalling the Brazzaville Declaration on Cooperation for Peace and Security in Central Africa,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on regional confidence-building measures, which deals with the activities of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa in the period since the adoption by the General Assembly of resolution 50/71 B;

2. Reaffirms its support for efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at regional and subregional levels in order to ease tensions and conflicts in the subregion and to further disarmament, non-proliferation and the peaceful settlement of disputes in Central Africa;

3. Also reaffirms its support for the programme of work of the Standing Advisory Committee adopted at the organizational meeting of the Committee held at Yaounde in July 1992;

4. Welcomes the fact that the Committee's programme of work has led to specific actions and measures promoting confidence-building and security in the Central African subregion;

5. Notes the holding of the First Summit of Heads of State and Government of Countries Members of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, at Yaounde on 8 July 1996;

6. Welcomes with great satisfaction the signature at that Summit of the Non-Aggression Pact between the States members of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee, and reaffirms its conviction that the Pact is likely to contribute to the prevention of conflicts and further confidence-building in the Central African subregion;

7. Invites the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee that have not yet signed the Pact to do so, and encourages all member States to expedite ratification so that it may enter into force as soon as possible;

8. Welcomes with satisfaction the Final Declaration of the First Summit of the Standing Advisory Committee, which aims at the implementation of the following measures:

(a) The promotion of participatory systems of governance as a means of preventing conflicts;

(b) The organization, under United Nations auspices, of training seminars for officers in the armed forces, republican guard, gendarmerie and police forces of the Central African States, in order to promote a culture of peace by explaining, once again, their role in a democratic context;

(c) The development of a programme to combat illicit arms trafficking, in order to remove this source of insecurity and a threat to the stability of States in the subregion;

(d) The setting-up, under United Nations auspices, of an early warning system as the basic instrument for preventive diplomacy in Central Africa;

(e) The strengthening of cooperation between States of the subregion and bilateral and multilateral partners on the question of peace and security in Central Africa;

9. Expresses its conviction that the democratic process offers a valuable means to build confidence, promote development and prevent conflicts, and welcomes with satisfaction the decision taken by the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee to hold a subregional conference at Brazzaville in January 1997 on the topic "Democratic institutions and peace in Central Africa";

10. Welcomes the holding, under United Nations auspices, of the first training seminar for instructors in peace operations, at Yaounde from 9 to 17 September 1996, with a view to strengthening the capacity of the units specializing in peace operations in the armed forces of the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee;

11. Expresses its gratitude to those Governments which responded favourably to the request from the General Assembly and contributed towards financing the aforementioned training seminar;

12. Emphasizes once again the importance of continuing with this training programme in order to strengthen the participation of States members of the Standing Advisory Committee in future United Nations peace operations;

13. Commends the Secretary-General for having established the Trust Fund for the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa;

14. Appeals to Member States and governmental and non-governmental organizations to make additional voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the implementation of the programme of work of the Standing Advisory Committee, in particular the measures and objectives referred to in paragraphs 8, 9 and 12 of the present resolution;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide assistance to the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee to ensure that they are able to carry on with their efforts;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Regional confidence-building measures".

General Assembly resolution 51/46 C

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.12) without vote, 15 November (meeting 24); draft by Congo, for members of UN Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa (A/C.1/51/L.15), orally revised; agenda item 72 (c).

Financial implications. S-G, A/C.1/51/L.52.

Other disarmament issues

In 1996, there were a number of issues that had been before the international community for some time, but that for various reasons were not directly addressed to any extent in the different disarmament forums. They were, however, the subject of resolutions adopted by the General Assembly. Studies, training and information programmes in the area of disarmament continued in 1996.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

Despite general agreement among Member States on re-establishing the ad hoc committee on the prevention of an arms race in outer space, the Conference on Disarmament [A/51/27] did not do so in 1996, mainly because it concentrated its efforts on the nuclear-test ban (see above, under "Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty"). As a result, outer space issues, to the extent that they were addressed, were referred to in plenary meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/44.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes and shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development,

Reaffirming also provisions of articles III and IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

Recalling the obligation of all States to observe the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the use or threat of use of force in their international relations, including in their space activities,

Reaffirming paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that in order to prevent an arms race in outer space further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this issue and taking note of the proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions, and of the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Recognizing that prevention of an arms race in outer space would avert a grave danger for international peace and security,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, including bilateral agreements, and with the existing legal regime concerning the use of outer space,

Considering that wide participation in the legal regime applicable to outer space could contribute to enhancing its effectiveness,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment in 1985 and seeking to enhance its functioning in qualitative terms, continued the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

Regretting the inability of the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee in 1996,

Emphasizing the mutually complementary nature of bilateral and multilateral efforts in the field of preventing an arms race in outer space, and hoping that concrete results will emerge from those efforts as soon as possible,

Convinced that further measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space, including the weaponization of outer space,

Stressing that the growing use of outer space increases the need for greater transparency and better information on the part of the international community,

Recalling in this context its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 45/55 B of 4 December 1990, 47/51 of 9 December 1992 and 48/74 A of 16 December 1993, in which, inter alia, it reaffirmed the importance of confidence-building measures as means conducive to ensuring the attainment of the objective of the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Conscious of the benefits of confidence- and security-building measures in the military field,

Recognizing that the conclusion of an international agreement or agreements to prevent an arms race in outer space remains the fundamental task of the Ad Hoc Committee and that the concrete proposals on confidence-building measures could form an integral part of such agreements,

1. Reaffirms the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space, and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective, in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;

2. Reaffirms its recognition, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal regime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that this legal regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, that there is a need to consolidate and reinforce that regime and enhance its effectiveness, and that it is important strictly to comply with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and of the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to refrain from actions contrary to that objective and to the relevant existing treaties in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international cooperation;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee with a negotiating mandate at the beginning of its 1997 session, taking into account the work undertaken since 1985, with a view to conducting negotiations for the conclusion of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

7. Recognizes, in this respect, the growing convergence of views on the elaboration of measures designed to strengthen transparency, confidence and security in the peaceful uses of outer space;

8. Urges States conducting activities in outer space, as well as States interested in conducting such activities, to keep the Conference on Disarmament informed of the progress of bilateral or multilateral negotiations relating to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, if any, so as to facilitate its work;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

In the Committee, paragraph 6 was adopted by a recorded vote of 87 to 1, with 39 abstentions, and the seventeenth preambular paragraph was adopted by a recorded vote of 85 to 1, with 39 abstentions.

The Assembly retained those paragraphs by recorded votes of 117 to 1, with 45 abstentions, and 116 to 1, with 45 abstentions, respectively.

Disarmament and development

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/70 G [YUN 1995, p. 226], the Secretary-General submitted a July note [A/51/207] on the relationship between disarmament and development. The Secretary-General stated that there had been no new developments since the submission of his last report in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 226].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 D.

Relationship between disarmament and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly concerning the relationship between disarmament and development,

Recalling also the adoption on 11 September 1987 of the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development,

Recalling further its resolutions 49/75 J of 15 December 1994 and 50/70 G of 12 December 1995,

Bearing in mind the Final Document of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995,

Stressing the growing importance of the symbiotic relationship between disarmament and development in current international relations,

1. Acknowledges the note by the Secretary-General and actions taken in accordance with the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development;

2. Urges the international community to devote part of the resources made available by the implementation of disarmament and arms limitation agreements to economic and social development, with a view to reducing the ever widening gap between developed and developing countries;

3. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General, by 15 April 1997, their views and proposals for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development, as well as any other views and proposals with a view to achieving the goals of the action programme, within the framework of current international relations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take action, through appropriate organs and within available resources, for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the International Conference;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Relationship between disarmament and development".

General Assembly resolution 51/45 D

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.11) without vote, 14 November (meeting 23); draft by Colombia, for Non-Aligned Movement (A/C.1/51/L.12); agenda item 71.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-14, 23; plenary 79.

Science and technology

In 1996, as in past years, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the subject of the role of science and technology in disarmament.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/39.

The role of science and technology in the context of international security and disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that scientific and technological developments can have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needs to be maintained and encouraged,

Concerned that military applications of scientific and technological developments can contribute significantly to the improvement and upgrading of weapons of mass destruction,

Aware of the need to follow closely the scientific and technological developments that may have a negative impact on international security and disarmament, and to channel scientific and technological developments for beneficial purposes,

Cognizant that the international transfers of dual-use as well as high-technology products, services and know-how for peaceful purposes are important for the economic and social development of States,

Expressing concern over the growing proliferation of ad hoc and exclusive export control regimes and arrangements for dual-use goods and technologies,

Recalling that the Final Declaration of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995, noted that restrictions being placed on access to technology through the imposition of non-transparent ad hoc export control regimes with exclusive membership tended to impede the economic and social development of developing countries,

Emphasizing that the internationally negotiated guidelines for the transfer of high technology with military applications should take into account the legitimate defence requirements of all States and requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, while ensuring that access to high-technology products and services and know-how for peaceful purposes is not denied,

1. Affirms that scientific and technological progress should be used for the benefit of all mankind to promote the sustainable economic and social development of all States and to safeguard international security, and that international cooperation in the use of science and technology through the transfer and exchange of technological know-how for peaceful purposes should be promoted;

2. Invites Member States to undertake additional efforts to apply science and technology for disarmament-related purposes and to make disarmament-related technologies available to interested States;

3. Urges Member States to undertake multilateral negotiations with the participation of all interested States in order to establish universally acceptable, non-discriminatory guidelines for international transfers of dual-use goods and technologies and high technology with military applications;

4. Recalls the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security", and requests the Secretary-General to update and further develop that report in order to evaluate the impact of recent scientific and technological developments, especially those which have potential military applications, and to submit a report to the General Assembly not later than at its fifty-third session;

5. Encourages United Nations bodies to contribute, within existing mandates, to promoting the application of science and technology for peaceful purposes;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "The role of science and technology in the context of international security and disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 51/39

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 105-39-24 (recorded vote)

*Later advised the Secretariat that it had intended to vote against.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/40.

The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject of the role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields, in which, inter alia, it recognized that scientific and technological developments could have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needed to be maintained and encouraged,

1. Invites Member States to enhance bilateral and multilateral dialogue on the role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields, with a view to:

(a) Ensuring implementation of relevant commitments already undertaken under international legal instruments;

(b) Exploring ways and means of further developing international legal rules on transfers of high technology with military applications;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields".

Environment and disarmament

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/45 E.

Observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms control

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/70 M of 12 December 1995,

Emphasizing the importance of the observance of environmental norms in the preparation and implementation of disarmament and arms limitation agreements,

Recognizing that it is necessary duly to take into account the agreements adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, as well as prior relevant agreements, in the drafting and the implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms limitation,

Mindful of the detrimental environmental effects of the use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note of the preamble to the Comprehensive Nuclear Test-Ban Treaty, opened for signature on 24

September 1996, concerning the contribution to environmental protection provided by the Treaty,

Considering its resolution 2602 C (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it requested the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, inter alia, to consider effective methods to control radiological means of warfare, in the interest of averting the hazards of using radioactive wastes as a means of radiological warfare, and of their impact on international security and environmental preservation,

Recognizing that prevention of the nuclear arms race on the seabed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof contributes to keeping the peace and protecting the environment,

Convinced of the general interest of mankind in the progress of the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes, and the need to preserve the world's environment in this context,

Desirous that, in the interest of mankind, Antarctica should continue to be used for exclusively peaceful purposes and that the balance of that important ecosystem should be preserved,

Taking note of the environment-related provisions laid down in the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction,

Convinced of the importance of strengthening the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction through the adoption of appropriate measures, including possible verification measures, and the drafting of proposals to be included, as appropriate, in a legally binding instrument, on the basis of the findings of the ad hoc working group set up to that effect, and which, inter alia, should take into account the necessity of ensuring the preservation of the environment,

Conscious that the international transfer of relevant technologies, services and know-how for peaceful purposes can contribute positively to abiding by environmental norms in the framework of the disarmament and arms limitation agreements,

1. Invites the Conference on Disarmament to take every necessary measure to include the relevant environmental norms and provisions in negotiating treaties and agreements on disarmament and arms limitation, taking into account the need to preserve the world's environment and to ensure the strict observance of such environmental norms and provisions during the entire process of implementation of the provisions of the aforementioned treaties and agreements, particularly during the process of destruction of the arms covered by them;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to take into account, in the negotiations for a convention on the prohibition of radiological weapons, radioactive wastes as part of the scope of such a convention, as well as express provisions relating to environmental protection;

3. Expresses grave concern regarding any use of nuclear wastes that would constitute radiological warfare and have grave implications for the national security of all States and for preserving the environment;

4. Urges States parties to comply strictly with the provisions of the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Seabed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof, and calls on States that possess nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction that have not yet done so, to become parties to the Treaty, as a major contribution to international peace and the ecologically rational use of the environment;

5. Calls upon all States, especially those that have major space programmes, to contribute actively to the attainment of the goals of using outer space for peaceful purposes, preserving the world's environment and preventing the arms race in outer space and, for the sake of international peace and security and of promoting international cooperation, to refrain from acting counter to the spirit of that international legal instrument;

6. Welcomes the concrete measures taken by several countries to ensure compliance with the Antarctic Treaty, and calls upon all countries to refrain from carrying out any activity counter to the spirit of that international legal instrument;

7. Emphasizes the importance of the compliance by all States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, and calls upon them to cooperate and to preserve the environment in the process of the implementation of the Convention in all its relevant aspects;

8. Urges States parties to consider all the relevant norms related to the protection of the environment in implementing the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction;

9. Calls upon States to adopt unilateral, bilateral, regional and multilateral measures so as to contribute to ensuring the application of scientific and technological progress in the framework of international security, disarmament and other related spheres, without detriment to the environment or to its effective contribution to attaining sustainable development;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms control".

Studies, information and training

Disarmament Information Programme

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/76 A [YUN 1994, p. 178], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/51/219], presented information covering the implementation of the activities for the Disarmament Information Programme in 1995 and 1996, and outlined future activities for the following two years.

The Centre for Disarmament Affairs (CDA) continued to carry out its information and education activities. In addition to producing publications, CDA organized several meetings and workshops in Africa and the Asia-Pacific region through the regional centres for peace and disarmament, and participated in an international seminar on arms control and disarmament for scholars and educators (Pennsylvania, United States).

In cooperation with the NGO Committee on Disarmament, the Centre sponsored a panel, in January, to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of General Assembly resolution 1(I) [YUN 1946-1947, p. 461], on the establishment of a commission to deal with problems raised by the discovery of atomic energy; a two-day discussion, in April, on the theme "Disarmament at a critical juncture"; and panel discussions, during Disarmament Week (October), on the NPT review process (see above, under "Nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament"), the ICJ advisory opinion (see above, under "Nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament"), implementation of CTBT (see above, under "Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty"), and conventional weapons and landmines (see above under "Conventional weapons and related issues").

Activities of the Department of Public Information (DPI) included wide radio and television coverage of relevant statements made by the Secretary-General; the provision of information on disarmament in its regular publications; the distribution, loan and screening of films and videos; and answering of public inquiries. The UN information centres conducted programmes to promote public awareness of the Organization's work in disarmament.

In a November addendum [A/51/219/Add.1] to his report, the Secretary-General stated that as at 30 June 1996, the balance remaining in pledges and contributions to the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Disarmament Information Programme amounted to $377,582, of which $254,166 was in convertible and $123,416 in non-convertible currencies.

Unlike in previous years, no Pledging Conference for the Programme was convened, as the Secretary-General had not been requested by the General Assembly to do so. On 11 October, the Secretary-General invited all States wishing to do so to make contributions to the various disarmament trust funds and to the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/46 A.

United Nations Disarmament Information Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision taken in 1982 at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, by which the World Disarmament Campaign was launched,

Bearing in mind its various resolutions on the subject, including resolution 47/53 D of 9 December 1992, in which it decided, inter alia, that the World Disarmament Campaign should be known thereafter as the "United Nations Disarmament Information Programme" and the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund as the "Voluntary Trust Fund for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme",

Recalling its resolution 49/76 A of 15 December 1994,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 19 July 1996 on the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme,

Deeply concerned by the continuing decrease in contributions to the Programme, which has already affected a number of activities, beginning with the suspension of publications such as the Disarmament Newsletter and Topical Papers,

1. Takes note with concern of the report of the Secretary-General of 19 July 1996 on the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme;

2. Commends the Secretary-General for his efforts to make effective use of the limited resources available to him in disseminating as widely as possible information on arms limitation and disarmament to Governments, the media, non-governmental organizations, educational communities and research institutes, and in carrying out a seminar and conference programme;

3. Stresses the importance of the Programme, as a significant instrument in enabling developing countries to participate fully in the deliberations and negotiations on disarmament in the various United Nations bodies;

4. Notes with appreciation the contributions to the efforts of the Programme by the United Nations information centres and the regional centres for disarmament;

5. Recommends that the Programme focus its efforts:

(a) To inform, to educate and to generate public understanding of the importance of multilateral action and support for it, including action by the United Nations and the Conference on Disarmament, in the field of arms limitation and disarmament, in a factual, balanced and objective manner, in particular through the continuing publication in all official languages of The United Nations Disarmament Yearbook and Disarmament: A Periodic Review by the United Nations, and the updating of the Status of Multilateral Arms Regulation and Disarmament Agreements;

(b) To facilitate unimpeded access to and an exchange of information on ideas between the public sector and public interest groups and organizations, and to provide an independent source of balanced and factual information that takes into account a range of views to help further an informed debate on arms limitation, disarmament and security;

(c) To organize meetings to facilitate exchanges of views and information between governmental and non-governmental sectors and between governmental and other experts in order to facilitate the search for common ground;

6. Invites all Member States to contribute to the Voluntary Trust Fund for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme;

7. Commends the Secretary-General for supporting the efforts of universities, other academic institutions and non-governmental organizations active in the educational field in widening the worldwide availability of disarmament education, and invites him to continue to support and cooperate with educational institutions and non-governmental organizations engaged in such efforts, without cost to the regular budget of the United Nations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report covering both the implementation of the activities of the Programme by the United Nations system during the previous two years and the activities of the Programme contemplated by the system for the following two years;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "United Nations Disarmament Information Programme".

General Assembly resolution 51/46 A

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.12) without vote, 14 November (meeting 23); 14-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.8); agenda item 72 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-14, 23; plenary 79.

Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters, which advised the Secretary-General on the disarmament studies programme and implementation of the Disarmament Information Programme and served as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR, held only one session in 1996 (Geneva, 1-5 July) [A/51/352], owing to the Organization's financial crisis.

The Board discussed the comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty; the strengthened review process of NPT; microdisarmament and anti-personnel landmines; and the fourth special session of the General Assembly on disarmament (see above, under "UN role in disarmament"). It also discussed issues relating to "preventive disarmament" as a contribution to conflict prevention.

In its capacity as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR, the Advisory Board reviewed the Director's report covering the period from July 1995 to June 1996 (see below).

By a note of 21 November [A/C.5/51/33], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly for approval the recommendation of the UNIDIR Board of Trustees for a subvention of $213,000 for 1997 from the UN regular budget. By resolution 51/221 A, section II, of 18 December, the Assembly approved the subvention.

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

By a September note [A/51/364], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the UNIDIR Director's report covering activities from July 1995 to June 1996, and the report of the Board of Trustees concerning the 1997 work programme. During the period under review, the research programme continued to focus on collective security, regional security studies and non-proliferation studies. In addition, it addressed UNIDIR's contribution to the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament (see above, under "UN role in disarmament").

Disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services

In 1996, 19 fellows participated in the UN disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme, which began on 8 September in Geneva and ended on 1 November in New York [A/51/553]. It included lectures and briefings; speaking, drafting and simulation exercises; research projects; and study visits to IAEA (Vienna) and the Preparatory Commission for the Organization on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) (The Hague), as well as to Germany and Japan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/46 F.

United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in which it decided, inter alia, to continue the programme,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has already trained an appreciable number of public officials selected from geographical regions represented in the United Nations system, most of whom are now in positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament affairs in their respective countries or Governments,

Recalling all the annual resolutions on the matter since the thirty-seventh session of the General Assembly, in 1982, including resolution 50/71 A of 12 December 1995,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme, as designed, continues to enable an increased number of public officials, in particular from the developing countries, to acquire more expertise in the sphere of disarmament,

Believing that the forms of assistance available to Member States, in particular to developing countries, under the programme will enhance the capabilities of their officials to follow ongoing deliberations and negotiations on disarmament, both bilateral and multilateral,

1. Reaffirms its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly and the report of the Secretary-General approved by the Assembly in its resolution 33/71 E of 14 December 1978;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Germany and Japan for inviting the 1996 fellows to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme;

3. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to implement annually the Geneva-based programme within existing resources and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services".

General Assembly resolution 51/46 F

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/566/Add.12) without vote, 14 November (meeting 23); 37-nation draft (A/C.1/51/L.32); agenda item 72 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 17, 23; plenary 79.

Regional centres for peace and disarmament

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/71 C [YUN 1995, p. 231], the Secretary-General reported [A/51/403] on his efforts to seek new alternative sources of financing for the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa and the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean. He stated that there were possibilities to integrate the operational and administrative functioning of the centres with projects and activities of existing UN development programmes. The Secretary-General noted that consultations with the United Nations Development Programme were under way.

The Secretary-General's report included an account of the Centres' activities covering the period from July 1995 to June 1996.

Africa

The activities of the Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, established in Lome, Togo, in 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 85], continued to be curtailed owing to financial constraints. However, the Centre continued to organize monthly informal meetings at which political leaders, NGO representatives, academics and the general public could discuss and propose solutions for issues relating to peace, security and disarmament in Africa. The Centre's documentation reference library increased and diversified its holdings through an inter-library loan system linking it with several research and academic institutions. The Centre widened distribution of its quarterly bilingual publication, The African Peace Bulletin/Bulletin Africain de la Paix. Moreover, it provided substantive and organizational support to two ministerial meetings of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa.

Latin America/Caribbean

As to the Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, established in Lima, Peru, in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 88], the Secretary-General stated that he was obliged to suspend its activities at the end of June owing to insufficient funds to cover the costs of the salary of its only staff member and of the planned operational activities for the second half of 1996. Activities involving the region were being carried out through UN Headquarters. Up until then, the Centre had published issues of a Spanish-language bulletin and regularly distributed disarmament and security-related publications of its own or from other UN offices throughout the region, and continued to open its reference library to researchers and students.

The Secretary-General strongly appealed to Member States, as well as to international and national organizations and foundations, to make substantial contributions to the centres.

Asia and Pacific

Pursuant to Assembly resolution 50/71 D [YUN 1995, p. 232], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/51/445] describing the activities of the Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific established in Kathmandu, Nepal, in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 88]. Despite limited financial resources available during the reporting period (August 1995 to July 1996), the Centre organized two major regional meetings. The first regional meeting, "Priority issues on the current disarmament agenda: global and regional concerns" (Kathmandu, 21-24 February), focused on nuclear disarmament issues such as the status of the negotiations on CTBT, non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, nuclear-weapon-free zones and transfer of technology. The second regional event was a conference on disarmament issues entitled "Common efforts towards a safer and nuclear-weapon-free world" (Hiroshima, Japan, 17-20 July), which addressed such issues as CTBT, the role of nuclear weapons and deterrence in the post-cold-war era, and nuclear safety. In addition, the Centre assisted the United Nations Association of Japan in organizing a symposium (Kanazawa, Japan, 3-5 June), which dealt with issues in the subregion, including the development of common and shared values, economic and technical cooperation and non-military challenges in north-east Asia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/46 E.

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/151 G of 16 December 1985, 41/60 D of 3 December 1986, 42/39 J of 30 November 1987 and 43/76 D of 7 December 1988 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, and its resolution 46/36 F of 6 December 1991 and 47/52 G of 9 December 1992 on regional disarmament, including confidence-building measures,

Reaffirming its resolutions 48/76 E of 16 December 1993, 49/76 D of 15 December 1994 and 50/71 C of 12 December 1995 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa and the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean,

Mindful of the provisions of Article 11, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations stipulating that a function of the General Assembly is to consider the general principles of cooperation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and arms limitation,

Taking into account the guidelines for international arms transfers adopted by the Disarmament Commission at its 1996 substantive session,

Welcoming the activities carried out by the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, which have contributed substantially to understanding and cooperation among the African States and have thereby strengthened its role in the areas of peace, disarmament, security and development,

Bearing in mind the financial situation of the Regional Centre as described by the Secretary-General in his report on the activities of the Regional Centre,

Underlining, therefore, the need to provide the Regional Centre with financial stability so as to facilitate the effective planning and implementation of its programmes of activities,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the Member States, international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations that have, so far, contributed to the Trust Fund of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa;

2. Commends the activities carried out by the Regional Centre in identifying and broadening the understanding of pressing disarmament and security issues in the African region;

3. Reaffirms its support for the further operation and strengthening of the Regional Centre, and encourages it to continue to intensify its efforts in promoting cooperation with subregional and regional organizations, as well as among the African States, in order to facilitate the development of effective measures of confidence-building, arms limitation and disarmament, with a view to promoting peace and security;

4. Appeals once again to Member States, mainly to African countries, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make regular and appropriate voluntary contributions in order to revitalize the Regional Centre, strengthen its programmes of activities and facilitate the effective implementation of such programmes;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the current financial situation of the Regional Centre, to intensify his efforts in exploring new ways and means of funding, and to continue to provide all necessary support to the Regional Centre for better achievements and results;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Director of the Regional Centre is, as far as possible and within existing resources, locally based in order to revitalize the activities of the Regional Centre;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, under the item entitled "Review and implementation of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly", on the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, and on the implementation of the present resolution.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 1st Committee 3-8, 10-13, 17, 23; plenary 79.

Also on 10 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/46 B.

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/39 D of 30 November 1987 and 44/117 F of 15 December 1989, by which it established the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and renamed it the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific, with headquarters at

Kathmandu and with the mandate of providing, on request, substantive support for the initiatives and other activities mutually agreed upon by the Member States of the Asia-Pacific region for the implementation of measures for peace and disarmament, through appropriate utilization of available resources,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General, in which he expresses his belief that the mandate of the Regional Centre not only remains valid but is even more relevant today in the changed international environment,

Commending the useful activities carried out by the Regional Centre in encouraging regional and subregional dialogue for the enhancement of openness, transparency and confidence-building, as well as the promotion of disarmament and security through the organization of regional meetings, which has come to be widely known within the Asia-Pacific region as the "Kathmandu process",

Noting that trends in the post-cold-war era have emphasized the function of the Regional Centre in assisting Member States as they deal with new security concerns and disarmament issues emerging in the region,

Recognizing the need for the Regional Centre to pursue effectively its expanded function,

Expressing its appreciation to the Regional Centre for its organization of substantive regional meetings at Kathmandu and at Hiroshima, Japan, in 1996,

Appreciating highly the important role Nepal has played as the host nation of the headquarters of the Regional Centre,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 50/71 D of 12 December 1995, in particular its strong support for the continued operation and further strengthening of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific as an essential promoter of the regional peace and disarmament dialogue in the Asia-Pacific region known as the "Kathmandu process";

2. Expresses its appreciation for the political support and financial contribution received by the Regional Centre;

3. Appeals to Member States, in particular those within the Asia-Pacific region, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make voluntary contributions in order to strengthen the programme of activities of the Regional Centre and its implementation;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary support, within existing resources, to the Regional Centre in carrying out its programme of activities;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific".

Chapter VIII

Other political and security questions

During 1996, the United Nations continued to consider a number of general issues related to international peace and security, as well as regional aspects of such security, the eradication of colonialism, information, the peaceful uses of outer space and the effects of atomic radiation.

The United Nations supported government efforts to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies, through such means as providing electoral assistance and building institutions for democracy. According to the Secretary-General, the Organization had a distinct role to play in democratization by helping each State that so requested to pursue its own path in that direction through a variety of processes. The General Assembly encouraged the Secretary-General to continue to improve the UN capacity to respond to Member States' requests by supporting their efforts to achieve democratization.

In 1996, the Assembly took action on the specific regional security issues of the South Atlantic, the Indian Ocean and Antarctica, after having considered relevant reports on UN activities in those areas.

In the area of decolonization, the Assembly acted on the recommendations of its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

UN activities in the field of information focused on two areas—the use of information and related technology in the service of humanity, and UN public information policies and activities. The Assembly acted on both topics.

Acting on the recommendations of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space—the main body dealing with space issues, particularly in the scientific, technical and legal fields—the Assembly in December adopted the Declaration on International Cooperation in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space for the Benefit and in the Interest of All States, Taking into Particular Account the Needs of Developing Countries. In doing so, it stated its desire to apply the principle that the exploration and use of outer space would be the province of all mankind. The Assembly also endorsed the Committee's recommendations on its future programme of work.

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation continued its studies on atomic and ionizing radiation and analysed its effects on mankind and the environment. The Assembly noted with satisfaction the Committee's completion in 1996 of a scientific annex on the effects of radiation on the environment and called on the Committee to ensure the widest possible dissemination of that study to Member States.

General aspects of international security

Implementation of the 1970 Declaration

In December 1996, the General Assembly adopted decision 51/415.

Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security

At its 79th plenary meeting, on 10 December 1996, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security" [YUN 1970.p.

Maintenance of international security—prevention of the violent disintegration of States

During the debate in the General Assembly's First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia introduced a draft resolution entitled "The maintenance of international security—prevention of the violent disintegration of States". It said the text took into account the emergence of new opportunities for building a peaceful world; its starting point was respect for the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations and international law, strict compliance with the principle of the inviolability of international borders, and good-neighbourliness and friendly relations among States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/55.

The maintenance of international security—prevention of the violent disintegration of States

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that the observance of the Charter and the principles of international law is essential for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Considering the emergence of new opportunities for building a peaceful world,

Mindful of the obligations of all States under the Charter, inter alia, to refrain in their international relations from threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, to develop friendly relations among nations and to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Deeply concerned that situations that may lead to a breach of international peace are continuing in spite of the efforts of the United Nations to put an end to them and to avert such conflicts in the future,

Stressing the importance of the activities of the international organizations, such as the Organization of African Unity, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Organization of American States, the Association of South-East Asian Nations, the Council of Europe, the League of Arab States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, with the aim of preventing the violent disintegration of States, of maintaining international peace and security and of promoting international cooperation for development,

Considering that the violent disintegration of States may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security,

Affirming the need for United Nations measures to help prevent the violent disintegration of States, thereby enhancing the maintenance of international peace and security and the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

1. Calls upon all States, the relevant international organizations and competent organs of the United Nations to continue to undertake measures in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations as appropriate to help prevent the violent disintegration of States;

2. Stresses the importance of good-neighbourliness and the development of friendly relations among States to the solution of problems among States, to prevent the violent disintegration of States and to promote international cooperation in accordance with the Charter;

3. Affirms the need for strict compliance with the principle of the inviolability of international borders among States;

4. Affirms also the need for strict compliance with the principle of the territorial integrity of any State;

5. Requests all States and the relevant international organizations to communicate to the Secretary-General their views on the maintenance of international security—prevention of the violent disintegration of States;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session an item entitled "The maintenance of international security—prevention of the violent disintegration of States".

Support for democracies

In October [A/51/512], the Secretary-General reported on support by the UN system of the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies, as requested by the General Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 294]. The 1996 report followed up on his 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 293]—the first comprehensive one—on the subject. Both reports covered developments in the promotion of a democratic culture, including the provision of electoral assistance and the building of institutions for democracy. The 1996 report contained suggestions on ways the United Nations could respond effectively to Member States' requests for assistance in that field.

As he had stated in the first report, the Secretary-General reaffirmed that the UN system did not promote any specific form of government and that democracy could take many forms. The term "democratization" was used to denote a process by which an authoritarian society became increasingly participatory. Mechanisms to achieve that goal included periodic elections to representative bodies, a free press, an independent judiciary and a transparent and accountable public administration. The pace at which democratization could proceed was dependent on many political, economic, social and cultural factors, the Secretary-General said, and the goal might be attained only gradually.

Since the recommendation was made in the 1995 report that the United Nations should increase cooperation in institution-building and governance, the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) took the initiative towards improving efficiency and coordination while avoiding duplication in that area. It established three task forces to support countries' implementation of commitments made at global conferences and a sub-group on capacity-building for governance chaired by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

In order to improve the effectiveness of governance programmes in the development area of the UN system, the Secretary-General stated, they needed to be coordinated with the work of the departments and offices concerned with the peace and democratization agendas of the Organization. Many activities in institution-building and governance in the development field—whether their ultimate purpose was to enhance accountability, transparency, free flow of information, or full participation and the rule of law—were as crucial for a successful democratization process to take place as they were for promoting sustainable development. At the same time, the work of the departments that had the lead role in preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peacekeeping, peace-building and humanitarian affairs included many aspects of governance, whether in a preventive, emergency, negotiation or post-conflict context.

Since 1995, individual UN agencies, programmes, funds and offices had strengthened their governance programmes. UNDP, for example, had taken steps to support new or restored democracies, primarily in three areas: improvement of UNDP's internal capacity to respond to requests to support the strengthening of democratization; leadership of components of UN system-wide special initiatives on governance; and an expanded number of programmes and projects in governance and areas related to democratization. Measures to improve UNDP's internal capacity included training programmes for UNDP staff and national counterparts; support for international workshops to exchange experience and increase awareness about democratic governance programmes; preparation of a UNDP governance policy paper to provide clear direction to managers and operational staff; and creation of a UNDP management development and governance home page on the World Wide Web that included a Management and Governance Network (MAGNET) to exchange knowledge, information and experience about democratic governance within UNDP and among its development partners.

UNDP established an agency-wide task force to expand in-house communication and information on governance, as well as regional networks linking country offices with regional experts. In response to the increase in requests for UNDP support to democratic governance projects, the focus on governance had been incorporated in the new five-year (1997-2001) UNDP country cooperation framework documents of many countries. Most of the requests were for electoral assistance; from 1989 up to 7 August 1996, the United Nations had received 123 such requests, 99 of which were either accepted or under consideration. A total of 76 Member States had requested assistance since 1989, plus Palestine and Western Sahara.

The Secretary-General pointed out that the Organization's capacity to respond to Member States' requests to consolidate and promote new and restored democracies might be limited by the lack of adequate funding. In some instances, trust funds had been established to finance particular aspects of a democratic transition. In Haiti, for example, the trust fund was being used to support the institutional transformation of the Haitian national police.

The Secretary-General recommended that the work of the sub-group on capacity-building for governance, established by ACC and chaired by UNDP (see above), be expanded gradually to a system-wide blueprint in order to integrate and coordinate all UN activities in that field more effectively. He would ensure that the Secretariat programmes related to public administration and development were fully coordinated with UN governance programmes.

The Secretary-General emphasized the need for the UN system to integrate civil society into its efforts to consolidate democratic development, and warned that a rapid process of democratization could create severe social and economic problems, as widespread disillusion with the results of democratization could have direct political consequences for electoral processes and government policies. Greater interaction and coordination between Governments, the UN system, other international organizations, non-governmental organizations and the business sector would facilitate the creation of conditions for further democratization in the decades to come. The Secretary-General hoped that those partners in democratization would find ways to work together more effectively.

In December [A/51/761], the Secretary-General issued a supplement to his two earlier reports. He noted that from Latin America to Africa, Europe and Asia, a number of authoritarian regimes had given way to democratic forces, increasingly responsive Governments and increasingly open societies. That phenomenon of democratization had had a marked impact on the United Nations, and the desire for democratization was evident not only within States but also among them and throughout the international system. Following a new wave of accessions to statehood and political independence, Member States were turning to the United Nations for support in democratization. While that had been most visible in the requests for electoral assistance, virtually no area of UN activity had been left untouched. The peace-keeping mandates entrusted to the United Nations now often included both the restoration of democracy and protection of human rights. UN departments, agencies and programmes had been called on to help States draft constitutions, create independent systems for justice administration, provide police forces that enforced the rule of law, de-politicize military establishments and establish national institutions for promoting and protecting human rights.

According to the Secretary-General, the United Nations had a distinct role to play in democratization, not by offering a model of democracy, but rather by helping each State to pursue its own particular path towards democratization in a variety of processes and experiences. As with its development activities, the goal of the United Nations in the area of democratization was to provide and help coordinate assistance, and to seek a strengthened context in which those requesting it and those responding might achieve success. Democratization was a new area for technical assistance, as the wave of economic and political transitions witnessed in the post-cold-war period had led Member States to reorient their requests for such assistance towards areas more relevant to democratization. The United Nations was strengthening the context for supporting democratization through information-gathering and awareness-raising and by offering Member States and the international community a universally legitimate global forum for dialogue, debate and consensus-building. Through the United Nations, multilateral agreements could be reached which helped to define a common political and legal framework for action.

According to the Secretary-General, the emerging consensus on democracy found the United Nations well placed to respond to requests for assistance in democratization. The growing interest in democratization and requests for UN support received added impetus from international conferences such as the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights [YUN 1993, p. 908], and the First and Second International Conferences of New or Restored Democracies, held respectively in Manila, Philippines, in June 1988, with 13 countries attending, and in Managua, Nicaragua, in July 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 250], with 74 countries participating. Those conferences evidenced an emerging global consensus on democracy and on an array of issues relevant to democratization. The United Nations responded by establishing a Focal Point for Electoral Assistance Requests within the UN Department of Political Affairs, along with an Electoral Assistance Division; establishing various trust funds for electoral assistance; creating a global Electoral Assistance Information Network; and refining procedures and designing new approaches to electoral assistance.

The evolution of the reform process in the electoral field coincided with increased requests for technical assistance in institution-building, encompassing assistance provided in many forms before, during and after the holding of elections. In Cambodia (1993) and El Salvador (1994), the United Nations helped the parties conduct a fair electoral campaign through diplomacy, civic education programmes and efforts to ensure fair access to the media. In Mozambique (1994), the United Nations assisted the transformation of the Resistência Nacional de Moçambique (RENAMO) into a political party and facilitated the country's transition from a one-party to a multi-party system.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General stated that the UN role in democratization was to help States and the international community deal with prioritization and timing as they arose both nationally and internationally. Through the United Nations, he said, the three goals of peace, development and democracy could receive the treatment they deserved.

The role of the United Nations in new or restored democracies, as well as in post-conflict, post-election or mid-transition conditions, was underlined by the General Assembly during its consideration of public administration and development in April 1996 (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/31.

Support by the United Nations system of the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the indissoluble links between the principles enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the foundations of any democratic society,

Recalling the Manila Declaration adopted by the First International Conference of New or Restored Democracies in June 1988,

Considering the major changes taking place on the international scene and the aspirations of all peoples for an international order based on the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, including the promotion and encouragement of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and other important principles, such as respect for the equal rights and self-determination of peoples, peace, democracy, justice, equality, the rule of law, pluralism, development, better standards of living and solidarity,

Recalling its resolutions 49/30 of 7 December 1994 and 50/133 of 20 December 1995, in which it recognized the importance of the Managua Declaration and Plan of Action adopted by the Second International Conference of New or Restored Democracies in July 1994,

Recalling also the view expressed in the Managua Declaration that the international community must pay closer attention to the obstacles facing the new or restored democracies,

Taking note of the views of Member States expressed in the debate on this item at its forty-ninth, fiftieth and fifty-first sessions,

Taking note also of the holding of the Informal Ministerial Meeting of New or Restored Democracies in New York on 30 September 1996 in accordance with the Managua Plan of Action,

Bearing in mind that such activities of the United Nations carried out in support of the efforts of Governments are undertaken in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and only at the specific request of the Member States concerned,

Bearing in mind also that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing and that democracy is based on the freely expressed will of the people to determine their own political, economic, social and cultural systems and on their full participation in all aspects of their lives,

Noting that a considerable number of societies have recently undertaken considerable efforts to achieve their social, political and economic goals through democratization and the reform of their economies, pursuits that are deserving of the support and recognition of the international community,

Noting with satisfaction that the Third International Conference of New or Restored Democracies will take place at Bucharest from 2 to 4 September 1997,

Stressing the importance of support by Member States, the United Nations system, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations of the holding of the Third International Conference,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance provided in the past by the United Nations, at the request of Member States, as well as important concepts and considerations that are pertinent to this question,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Commends the Secretary-General, and through him the United Nations system, for the activities undertaken at the request of Governments to support the efforts to consolidate democracy, as reflected in his report;
3. Recognizes that the Organization has an important role to play in providing timely, appropriate and coherent support to the efforts of Governments to achieve democratization within the context of their development efforts;
4. Stresses that activities undertaken by the Organization must be in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;
5. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to improve the capacity of the Organization to respond effectively to the request of Member States through coherent, adequate support of their efforts to achieve the goal of democratization;
6. Encourages Member States to promote democratization and to make additional efforts to identify possible steps to support the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies;
7. Invites the Secretary-General, Member States, the relevant specialized agencies and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as other intergovernmental organizations, to collaborate in the holding of the Third International Conference of New or Restored Democracies;
8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution, including innovative ways and means as well as other reflections, to enable the Organization to respond effectively and in an integrated manner to requests of Member States for assistance in the field of democratization;
9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Support by the United Nations system of the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies".

Regional aspects of international peace and security

South Atlantic

As requested by General Assembly resolution 50/18 [YUN1995, p. 181], the Secretary-General reported on the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic, which had been established in 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 369] to promote cooperation among States of the region in political, economic, scientific, technical, cultural and other fields. In the October report [A/51/458], the Secretary-General reproduced the replies received from five Governments to his request for views on the implementation of the declaration on the zone, as well as from seven UN organizations and bodies.

By a letter of 28 June [A/51/183], South Africa transmitted the Final Declaration and decisions adopted by the fourth meeting of the States of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic (Somerset West, South Africa, 1-2 April). By the Declaration, the participants decided that cooperation among them must be pursued in all areas, especially in the economic, technological, environmental, cultural and sporting fields, and reiterated their commitment to encourage democracy and political pluralism, to promote human rights and to pursue the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. They agreed that the zone had a valuable role to play as a forum for dialogue on multilateral issues, including those relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, protection of the environment and strengthening the role of the United Nations. They encouraged Member States to expand regional economic cooperation and commercial links across the South Atlantic, to facilitate the establishment of sea, air and telecommunications links, to collaborate in developing new technologies, to share natural resources and international communications systems, and to develop human resources in science and technology. They called for further cooperation in fulfilling environmental agreements, safe transportation of nuclear material and radioactive waste through the South Atlantic, monitoring and eliminating drug trafficking in the zone, and halting the spread of AIDS.

The three decisions adopted by the meeting dealt with drug trafficking control, protection of the marine environment and halting illegal fishing activities in the zone.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/19.

Zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/11 of 27 October 1986, in which it solemnly declared the Atlantic Ocean, in the region between Africa and South America, the "Zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic",

Recalling also its subsequent resolutions on the matter, including resolution 45/36 of 27 November 1990, in which it reaffirmed the determination of the States of the zone to enhance and accelerate their cooperation in the political, economic, scientific, cultural and other spheres,

Reaffirming that the questions of peace and security and those of development are interrelated and inseparable, and that cooperation for peace and development among States of the region will promote the objectives of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic,

Aware of the importance that the States of the zone attach to the environment of the region, and recognizing the threat that pollution from any source poses to the marine and coastal environment, its ecological balance and its resources,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the purposes and objectives of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic as a basis for the promotion of cooperation among the countries of the region;

2. Calls upon all States to cooperate in the promotion of the objectives established in the declaration of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic and to refrain from any action inconsistent with those objectives and with the Charter of the United Nations and relevant resolutions of the Organization, particularly action which may create or aggravate situations of tension and potential conflict in the region;

3. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, submitted in accordance with its resolution 50/18 of 27 November 1995;

4. Recalls the agreement reached at the third meeting of the States members of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic, held at Brasilia in 1994, to encourage democracy and political pluralism and, in accordance with the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, to promote and defend all human rights and fundamental freedoms and to cooperate towards the achievement of those goals;

5. Welcomes with satisfaction the holding of the fourth meeting of the States members of the zone at Somerset West, South Africa, on 1 and 2 April 1996, and takes note of the Final Declaration, the decision on drug trafficking, the decision on the protection of the marine environment and the decision on illegal fishing activities in the zone, adopted at the meeting;

6. Welcomes the progress towards the full entry into force of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco), and the conclusion of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Pelindaba);

7. Also welcomes the efforts of the Government of Angola to implement the Lusaka Protocol, expresses its deep concern at the delay in fully implementing the Lusaka Protocol and calls upon the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola to fulfil immediately the tasks enumerated in the "Mediation Document" formulated by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in consultation with the three observer States, as contained in Security Council resolution 1075(1996) of 11 October 1996;

8. Reaffirms its willingness to contribute by all means at its disposal to an effective and lasting peace in Angola;

9. Urges the international community to fulfil expeditiously its pledges to provide assistance to facilitate the rehabilitation of the Angolan national economy and the resettlement of displaced persons, and stresses the importance of such assistance at this time in order to consolidate the gains in the peace process;

10. Welcomes the outcome of the summit meeting of the Economic Community of West African States Committee of Nine on Liberia, which revalidated the Abuja Agreement and, inter alia, foresees the holding of democratic elections in Liberia by 30 May 1997;

11. Commends and encourages Nigeria in its capacity as chair of the Committee of Nine, as well as all the members of the Economic Community of West African States, to pursue positive efforts towards peace in Liberia, and requests the international community to support the endeavours of the new chairperson of the Council of State of the Liberian National Transitional Government and to provide the necessary assistance to the Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group to enable it to carry out its mandate;

12. Commends the efforts of Member States and humanitarian organizations to render humanitarian assistance to Angola and Liberia, and urges them to continue to provide and to increase such assistance;

13. Affirms the importance of the South Atlantic to global maritime and commercial transactions and its determination to preserve the region for all peaceful purposes and activities protected by international law, in particular the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;

14. Welcomes the offer by Argentina to host the fifth meeting of the States members of the zone;

15. Requests the relevant organizations, organs and bodies of the United Nations system to render all appropriate assistance which States of the zone may seek in their joint efforts to implement the declaration of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the implementation of resolution 41/11 and subsequent resolutions on the matter under review and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, taking into account, inter alia, the views expressed by Member States;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic".

14 November 1996 Meeting 58 117-0-1 (recorded vote)

23-nation draft (A/51/L.16); agenda item 32.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, Benin, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Indian Ocean

As requested in General Assembly resolution 50/76 [YUN 1995, p. 182], the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean continued to meet in 1996 with the permanent members of the Security Council and major maritime users of the Indian Ocean and to apprise the Ad Hoc Committee of his consultations and other relevant developments. The Committee held its 1996 session in New York on 8 July, its only formal meeting during the year, and issued its report [A/51/29] later that month.

The Chairman reported on his consultations with the three permanent members of the Security Council that had withdrawn from the Committee—France, the United Kingdom and the United States—emphasizing the context in which the consultations were being conducted, especially the newly emerging international climate of confidence following the end of the cold war and the reduction of tensions as a consequence of the end of super-Power rivalry. Those events, he said, augured well for peace in the Indian Ocean area, and it was the Committee's view that the renewed participation of those permanent Council members in its work was important.

The United States reiterated its position that it disagreed with the concept of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace because it felt that the initiative restricted the free movement of its navy there, and it was not clear as to what the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace was seeking to achieve. It considered the points made in the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace [GA res. 2832(XXVI)] to be irrelevant in the context of present-day developments. It also felt that if the Indian Ocean countries were seeking to address their concerns, they should do so themselves on a regional basis without involving outside Powers, such as the zone of peace arrangements in the South Atlantic, an initiative of the States concerned.

In the United Kingdom's view, the Committee was not making any significant progress and therefore there was no reason for it to change its position on rejoining the Committee. France confirmed its position, as conveyed in 1995, that suppression of the references to the 1971 Declaration in the resolution of the General Assembly defining the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee was a prerequisite to its eventual return to the Committee. France drew attention to its contribution to peace and security in the Indian Ocean; in particular, its signing of the three protocols to the Treaty of Pelindaba—approved by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in June 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 203], which created a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa—had contributed, France said, to peace and security in the western part of the Indian Ocean.

At the Committee meeting, the Chairman informed the members of his intention to hold informal consultations concerning a draft resolution to be submitted to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/51.

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolution 50/76 of 12 December 1995 and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean held in July 1979,

Emphasizing the need to foster consensual approaches, in particular given the prevailing international climate, which is conducive to the pursuit of such endeavours,

Noting the initiatives taken by countries in the region to promote cooperation, in particular economic cooperation, in the Indian Ocean area and the possible contribution of such initiatives to overall objectives of a zone of peace,

Convinced that the participation of all the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean is important and would assist the progress of mutually beneficial dialogue to develop conditions of peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region,

Having considered the report of the Ad Hoc Committee, including the statement by its Chairman on 8 July 1996, as contained in paragraph 8 of the report,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean;

2. Reiterates its conviction that the participation of all the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee is important and would greatly facilitate the development of a mutually beneficial dialogue to advance peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region;

3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to examine its future work, taking into account, inter alia, the statement made by the Chairman on 8 July 1996, and to make recommendations for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

4. Also requests the Ad Hoc Committee to hold a session during 1997, of a duration of no more than three working days;

5. Further requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace".

Antarctica

In response to General Assembly resolution 49/80 [YUN 1994, p. 240], the Secretary-General issued in September 1996 a report [A/51/390] on the state of the environment in Antarctica. Information was taken from reports of the Nineteenth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 8-19 May 1995) and the Twentieth Meeting (Utrecht, Netherlands, 29 April-10 May 1996). Reports on activities in the Antarctic were also provided by the World Meteorological Organization, the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the UN Department of Public Information, the UN Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea, and the World Bank. The report was prepared on behalf of the Secretary-General by the United Nations Environment Programme with the assistance of the International Centre for Antarctic Information and Research, Christchurch, New Zealand.

As the coldest, highest, driest, windiest, remotest and cleanest of continents, Antarctica's scientific and environmental values were of high priority for protection, the report said, and the continent and the Southern Ocean surrounding it played a critical role in the global environmental system. Major processes of interaction between the atmosphere, oceans, ice and biota affected the entire global system through feedbacks, biogeochemical cycles, circulation patterns, transport of energy and pollutants, and changes in ice mass balance.

Under the terms of the 1959 Antarctic Treaty [United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 402, No. 5778], the States parties agreed to make available data and information from research done there, and, under the 1991 Protocol on Environmental Protection to the Antarctic Treaty (the Madrid Protocol) [International Legal Materials, vol. XXX, No. 6, p. 1461], they designated Antarctica as a natural reserve, devoted to peace and science, and pledged to protect its environment. Other provisions of the Protocol dealt with arbitration and dispute settlement; environmental impact assessment; conservation of Antarctic wildlife; waste disposal and management; prevention of marine pollution; and area protection and management. The Protocol was adopted by 26 States parties to the Antarctic Treaty. As of 1 August 1996, instruments of ratification had been deposited by 22 of the States that were party to its negotiation: ratification by Finland, Japan, the Russian Federation and the United States was required for the agreement to enter into full international legal effect. Other international conventions on Antarctic life were in force, including those on conservation of seals, conservation of marine living resources and regulation of whaling.

Scientific research concerning Antarctica was carried out by various international organizations on a variety of subjects, such as sea-ice processes in the physical climate system; the physical and dynamic processes controlling the ice sheet; palaeo environmental evidence from ice cores; ice sheet effect on sea level; the ecology of the Antarctic sea-ice zone; monitoring of Antarctic ozone levels; weather patterns and climatic change; other issues affecting the marine environment; pollution; and the ecosystem. According to the Secretary-General's report, scientific investigation was the predominant human activity in Antarctica, followed by tourism, with more than 60,000 tourists estimated to have visited the area over the previous 40 years. Tourism was a growing industry, with the number of sites being visited, as well as the range of types of activity, increasing dramatically.

Fishing, sealing and whaling were regulated by the Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources and stringent measures to halt the further decline of fish stocks were implemented by 1989. Prior to the Convention's coming into force in 1982, many Antarctic fish stocks were over-exploited. Current fishing was below total allowable levels set by the Commission for the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources (CCAMLR), but some kinds of marine life, particularly krill, were still attracting much commercial activity. Problems had been encountered with birds being killed as a result of long-line fishing, and also with illegal fishing within the CCAMLR area.

Long-range pollutants, originating primarily in the industrialized areas of the world, were transported to Antarctica in the upper atmosphere as vapour, or by ocean currents. Air reaching Antarctica from outside had to pass through the zone of cyclonic storms surrounding the continent; that acted as a filter, removing some of the particles and gases from the air and depositing them in the Southern Ocean. Examples of such pollutants included chlorofluorocarbons, responsible for Antarctic ozone depletion, trace gases such as carbon dioxide and methane, and radioactive debris from past atmospheric tests and accidents. A substantial Antarctic ozone "hole" in the atmosphere was expected to occur each austral spring for many more decades due to increased levels of stratospheric chlorine and bromine, thereby increasing surface ultraviolet radiation and posing a threat to Antarctic ecosystems. Those levels were not expected to be reduced until the next century and would peak around 1998. It was only because of the restric-dons set by the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer and the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, which controlled chlorine and bromine emissions and entered into force in 1988 and 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 420], respectively, that the Antarctic ozone "hole" could be expected to disappear.

Sea ice, an important environmental parameter, was being studied in an effort to understand causes and effects of global climate changes; however, there was insufficient evidence to predict trends.

At the Twentieth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting, it was suggested that the Scientific Committee on Antarctic Research prepare a state of the Antarctic environment report. The relevant UN scientific and technical agencies were willing to assist in issuing such a report and to contribute to meeting goals agreed under Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672], adopted in 1992 by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and the common interests of both States parties to the Antarctic Treaty and the non-Antarctic Treaty States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/56.

Question of Antarctica

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/80 of 15 December 1994, in which it requested the Secretary-General to submit information provided by the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties on their consultative meetings and on their activities, and on developments in relation to Antarctica,

Taking into account the debates on the question of Antarctica held since its thirty-eighth session,

Conscious of the particular significance of Antarctica to the international community, including for international peace and security, the global and regional environment, its effects on global and regional climate conditions, and scientific research,

Reaffirming that the management and use of Antarctica should be conducted in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and of promoting international cooperation for the benefit of mankind as a whole,

Recognizing that the Antarctic Treaty, which provides, inter alia, for the demilitarization of the continent, the prohibition of nuclear explosions and the disposal of nuclear wastes, the freedom of scientific research and the free exchange of scientific information, is in furtherance of the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Recognizing also the designation, in the Protocol on Environmental Protection to the Antarctic Treaty, of Antarctica as a natural reserve devoted to peace and science and the provisions contained in the Protocol regarding the protection of the Antarctic environment and dependent and associated ecosystems, including for environmental assessment, in the planning and conduct of all activities in Antarctica,

Welcoming the continuing cooperation among countries undertaking scientific research activities in Antarctica, which may help to minimize human impacts on the Antarctic environment,

Welcoming also the increasing awareness of an interest in Antarctica shown by the international community, and convinced of the advantages to the whole of mankind of a better knowledge of Antarctica,

Reaffirming its conviction that, in the interest of all mankind, Antarctica should continue for ever to be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it should not become the scene or object of international discord,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of Antarctica and the role accorded by the Secretary-General to the United Nations Environment Programme in preparing his report, and also of the Nineteenth and Twentieth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meetings, which took place at Seoul from 8 to 19 May 1995 and at Utrecht, the Netherlands, from 29 April to 10 May 1996, respectively;

2. Recalls the statement under chapter 17 of Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, that States carrying out research activities in Antarctica should, as provided for in article III of the Antarctic Treaty, continue:

(a) To ensure that data and information resulting from such research are freely available to the international community;

(b) To enhance the access of the international scientific community and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system to such data and information, including the encouragement of periodic seminars and symposia;

3. Welcomes the invitations to the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to attend Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meetings in order to assist such meetings in their substantive work, and urges the parties to continue to extend such invitations for future consultative meetings;

4. Welcomes also the practice whereby the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties regularly provide the Secretary-General with information on their consultative meetings and on their activities in Antarctica, and encourages the Parties to continue to provide the Secretary-General and other interested States with information on developments in relation to Antarctica, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report which shall consist of that information to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Question of Antarctica".

General Assembly resolution 51/56

10 December 1996 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/51/567) without vote, 25 November (meeting 26); draft by Chairman (A/C.1/51/L.55); agenda item 62.

Trusteeship and decolonization

The United Nations continued in 1996 its efforts to eradicate colonialism. The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Special Committee on decolonization) held its annual session in New York in two parts—on 16 February and 4 April for the first part, and from 22 July to 1 August for the second. As the Assembly had requested in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 237], the Special Committee reported [A/51/23] in September 1996 on its 1996 activities. The Committee considered various aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration [GA res. 1514(XV)], both general decolonization issues and the situation of individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs). It considered reports of its Working Group [A/AC.109/L.1852] (which functioned as a steering committee), its Open-ended Working Group [A/AC.109/L.1842] (which made recommendations on how to improve the efficiency of the Special Committee) and its Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance [A/AC.109/L.1843]. As at 1 January 1996, the Special Committee was composed of 23 members.

The Territories considered specifically by the Special Committee and by the General Assembly in 1996 were East Timor, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, New Caledonia, Tokelau and Western Sahara (see PART ONE, Chapter II), as well as a number of small island Territories.

Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism

As part of its effort to implement the 1991 plan of action [YUN 1991, p. 777] for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000), declared by the General Assembly in 1988 [GA res. 43/47] and aimed at ushering in, in the twenty-first century, a world free from colonialism, the Special Committee on decolonization organized a Pacific Regional Seminar to Review the Situation in the Non-Self-Governing Territories, particularly their Political Evolution towards Self-Determination by the Year 2000 (Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea, 12-14 June) [A/AC.109/2058]. The Seminar identified areas in which the international community could enhance its participation in assistance and development programmes and adopt a comprehensive approach to ensure the viable and sustainable development of the Territories concerned.

The Seminar, expressing concern that there still remained a core of NSGTs (mostly small island States) even after three and a half decades since the Declaration on decolonization was adopted, took note of a suggestion that another option be considered as a legitimate means for decolonization, namely, "any other political status freely determined by the people". The Seminar felt that the free association formula as it was being developed acknowledged the fact that local resources could not cover the material side of self-determination and self-government without assistance from the former administering Power, the United Nations and the international community. The Seminar affirmed that all options for self-determination were valid as long as they were in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned and in conformity with the principles contained in General Assembly resolutions on decolonization. It reiterated that the administering Powers should adhere to the wishes of the people of the Territory in formulating any law for the Territory. The question of emigration from and immigration to a Territory should be addressed in a manner that would protect the interests of the people of that Territory.

Reaffirming the need for the United Nations to send visiting missions to the NSGTs to obtain information on the process of self-determination, the Seminar recognized that for small island NSGTs, self-determination was not an end in itself but required an ongoing post-decolonization role of the United Nations. Bearing in mind that most of the remaining NSGTs were small islands with vulnerable ecosystems, assistance programmes should be formulated by the administering Powers in co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and other UN bodies.

Concerning specific Territories, the Seminar affirmed the right to self-determination of the Chamorro people in Guam and recommended that a UN mission visit the Territory. It noted with satisfaction the positive constitutional developments that had occurred in Tokelau. With regard to New Caledonia, the Seminar supported self-determination referendums as well as conciliation efforts between the Government of France and the political parties of New Caledonia. The Seminar recommended that the Special Committee should expedite its efforts to find a satisfactory solution to the question of East Timor.

Implementation of the 1960 Declaration

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/146.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all its subsequent resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, most recently resolution 50/39 of 6 December 1995, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recognizing that the eradication of colonialism is one of the priorities of the Organization for the decade that began in 1990,

Deeply conscious of the need to take, speedily, measures to eliminate the last vestiges of colonialism by the year 2000, as called for in its resolution 43/47 of 22 November 1988,

Reiterating its conviction of the need for the elimination of colonialism, as well as of the need for the total eradication of racial discrimination and violations of basic human rights,

Noting with satisfaction the achievements of the Special Committee in contributing to the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization,

Stressing the importance of the participation of the administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee,

Noting with satisfaction the cooperation and active participation of some administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee, as well as their continued readiness to receive United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under their administration,

Noting with concern the negative impact that the non-participation of certain administering Powers has had on the work of the Special Committee, depriving it of an important source of information on the Territories under their administration,

Aware of the pressing need of newly independent and emerging States for assistance from the United Nations and its system of organizations in the economic, social and other fields,

Aware also of the pressing need of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, including in particular the small island Territories, for economic, social and other assistance from the United Nations and the organizations within its system,

Taking special note of the fact that the Special Committee held a Pacific Regional Seminar to Review the Situation in the Non-Self-Governing Territories, particularly their Political Evolution towards Self-Determination by the Year 2000, at Port Moresby from 12 to 14 June 1996,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 1514(XV) and all other resolutions on decolonization, including its resolution 43/47, in which it declared the decade that began in 1990 as the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all necessary steps to enable the peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully as soon as possible their right to self-determination, including independence;

2. Affirms once again that the continuation of colonialism in any form or manifestation, including economic exploitation, is incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

3. Reaffirms its determination to continue to take all steps necessary to bring about the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and the faithful observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its support for the aspirations of the peoples under colonial rule to exercise their right to self-determination, including independence;

5. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering its work during 1996, including the programme of work envisaged for 1997;

6. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to give effect within their respective spheres of competence to the recommendations of the Special Committee for the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

7. Calls upon the administering Powers to ensure that no activity of foreign economic and other interests in the Non-Self-Governing Territories under their administration hinders the peoples of those Territories from exercising their right to self-determination, including independence;

8. Takes note of the decision of some of the administering Powers to close or reduce some of the military bases in the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

9. Calls upon the administering Powers to eliminate the remaining military bases in the Non-Self-Governing Territories in compliance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and urges them not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States;

10. Urges all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to provide moral and material assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories, and requests that the administering Powers, in consultation with the Governments of the Territories under their administration, take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those Territories;

11. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration and to carry out those actions approved by the General Assembly regarding the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism in all Territories that have not yet exercised their right to self-determination, including independence, and in particular:

(a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

(b) To continue to examine the implementation by Member States of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions on decolonization;

(c) To continue to pay special attention to the small Territories, in particular through the dispatch of regular visiting missions, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

(d) To take all necessary steps to enlist worldwide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations, for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

12. Calls upon the administering Powers to continue to cooperate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and to receive visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and to ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants;

13. Also calls upon the administering Powers that have not participated in the work of the Special Committee to do so at its 1997 session;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to provide economic, social and other assistance to the Non-Self-Governing Territories and to continue to do so, as appropriate, after they exercise their right to self-determination, including independence;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the facilities and services required for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as of the other resolutions and decisions on decolonization adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee.

Implementation by international organizations

As requested by General Assembly resolution 50/34 [YUN 1995, p. 241], the Secretary-General reported [A/51/212] in July 1996 on the implementation of the Declaration on decolonization by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations. The Secretary-General had requested information from the executive heads of 25 such organizations on measures they had taken to implement the relevant resolutions. The answers received were summarized in a July report [E/1996/85] by the President of the Economic and Social Council. According to the information provided, a number of agencies and organizations continued to provide assistance to the peoples of NSGTs. Several extended or formulated assistance programmes from within their own budgetary resources, in addition to their contributions as executing agencies of projects funded by UNDP, the primary provider of assistance.

UNDP funded projects in human resources development, reform of the public sector, environmental and natural resources management, teacher training, disaster assistance, development strategy, and economic planning and management. For Anguilla, the UNDP indicative planning figure for 1992-1996, including cost sharing, was $1,269,000; for the British Virgin Islands, it was $97,000 for 1995-1996; for the Cayman Islands, $1,457,000 for 1993-1996; for Montserrat, $632,000 for 1992-1996; and for the Turks and Caicos Islands, $910,000 for 1993-1996. Planning for the next programming period, 1997-1999, was under way.

The International Maritime Organization (IMO) reported that, with financing from Norway ($891,000), it had completed a project to develop port state control capabilities in the Caribbean, and a regional agreement on the matter was adopted in February 1996. The project aimed to enhance the capacities of the island nations and Territories of the Caribbean to implement global standards for maritime safety. Three fellowships were allocated in the context of the project, to the Turks and Caicos Islands, Bonaire and Curaçao. UNESCO had supported training activities for journalists and media specialists from NSGTs. In particular, journalists and other specialists from Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands, Montserrat and Tokelau attended training courses under its regional projects. Another UNESCO project, focusing on environment and development in coastal regions and small islands and aimed at securing integrated coastal zone planning and management in the South Pacific, East Africa, South-East Asia and Caribbean regions, was also to take into account the needs of the remaining small island NSGTs.

In his report, the Council President expressed the view that UN bodies should strengthen measures of support and formulate additional assistance programmes to the NSGTs, most of which were islands, small in size and population, geographically isolated, vulnerable to natural disasters and economically relatively undeveloped and particularly dependent on external assistance. The President's observations were formulated on the basis of his close contact with the Chairman of the Special Committee on decolonization. The President considered strengthened cooperation between them useful in order to mobilize the maximum possible assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/37.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council on consultations held with the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having heard the statement by the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, resolutions of the Special Committee and other relevant resolutions and decisions, including, in particular, Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/58 of 28 July 1995,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, the South Pacific Forum and the Caribbean Community,

Conscious of the need to facilitate the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Noting that the large majority of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories are small island Territories,

Welcoming the assistance extended to Non-Self-Governing Territories by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme,

Stressing that, because the development options of small island Non-Self-Governing Territories are limited, there are special challenges to planning for and implementing sustainable development and that those Territories will be constrained in meeting the challenges without the continued cooperation and assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system,

Stressing the importance of securing necessary resources for funding expanded assistance programmes for the peoples concerned and the need to enlist the support of all major funding institutions within the United Nations system in that regard,

Reaffirming the mandates of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all the appropriate measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions,

Expressing its appreciation to the Organization of African Unity, the South Pacific Forum, the Caribbean Community and other regional organizations for the continued cooperation and assistance they have extended to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in this regard,

Expressing its conviction that closer contacts and consultations between and among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and regional organizations help to facilitate the effective formulation of assistance programmes to the peoples concerned,

Mindful of the imperative need to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization,

Bearing in mind the extremely fragile economies of the Non-Self-Governing small island Territories and their vulnerability to natural disasters, such as hurricanes, cyclones and sea-level rise, and recalling other relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 50/34 of 6 December 1995 on cooperation and coordination of the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their assistance to Non-Self-Governing Territories,

1. Takes note of the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council on his consultations with the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and endorses the observations and suggestions arising therefrom;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Recommends that all States intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to ensure implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

4. Reaffirms that the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system should continue to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the United Nations in their efforts to contribute to the implementation of the Declaration and all other relevant General Assembly resolutions;

5. Reaffirms also that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the aspirations of the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories to exercise their right to self-determination entails, as a corollary, the extension of all appropriate assistance to those peoples;

6. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have continued to cooperate with the United Nations and the regional and subregional organizations in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and requests all the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to implement the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

7. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and international and regional organizations to examine and review conditions in each Territory so as to take appropriate measures to accelerate progress in the economic and social sectors of the Territories;

8. Requests the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations and regional organizations to strengthen existing measures of support and to formulate appropriate programmes of assistance to the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, within the framework of their respective mandates, in order to accelerate progress in the economic and social sectors of those Territories;

9. Recommends that the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system formulate, with the active cooperation of the regional organizations concerned, concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and submit the proposals to their governing and legislative organs;

10. Recommends that the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system continue to review at the regular meetings of their governing bodies the implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

11. Welcomes the continued initiative exercised by the United Nations Development Programme in maintaining close liaison among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and in providing assistance to the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories;

12. Encourages Non-Self-Governing Territories to take steps to establish and/or strengthen disaster preparedness and management institutions and policies;

13. Requests the administering Powers concerned to facilitate the participation of appointed and elected representatives of Non-Self-Governing Territories in the relevant meetings and conferences of the agencies and organizations so that the Territories may benefit from the related activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system;

14. Recommends that all Governments intensify their efforts with the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and, in that connection, accord priority to the question of providing assistance to the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

15. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution and to the discussion held on the subject at the substantive session of 1996 of the Economic and Social Council;

16. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to continue to maintain close contact on these matters with the Chairman of the Special Committee and to report thereon to the Council;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the present resolution, paying particular attention to cooperation and integration arrangements for maximizing the efficiency of the assistance activities undertaken by various organizations of the United Nations system, and to report thereon to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1997;

18. Decides to keep these questions under continuous review.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/141.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations",

Having also considered the reports submitted on the item by the Secretary-General and the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541 (XV) of 15 December 1960, and resolutions of the Special Committee, as well as other relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, the South Pacific Forum and the Caribbean Community,

Conscious of the need to facilitate the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in its resolution 1514(XV),

Noting that the large majority of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories are small island Territories,

Welcoming the assistance extended to Non-Self-Governing Territories by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme,

Stressing that, because the development options of small island Non-Self-Governing Territories are limited, there are special challenges to planning for and implementing sustainable development and that those Territories will be constrained in meeting the challenges without the continued cooperation and assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system,

Stressing also the importance of securing necessary resources for funding expanded assistance programmes for the peoples concerned and the need to enlist the support of all major funding institutions within the United Nations system in that regard,

Reaffirming the mandates of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all the appropriate measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions,

Expressing its appreciation to the Organization of African Unity, the South Pacific Forum and the Caribbean Community, as well as other regional organizations, for the continued cooperation and assistance they have extended to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in this regard,

Expressing its conviction that closer contacts and consultations between and among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and regional organizations help to facilitate the effective formulation of assistance programmes to the peoples concerned,

Mindful of the imperative need to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization,

Bearing in mind the extremely fragile economies of the Non-Self-Governing small island Territories and their vulnerability to natural disasters, such as hurricanes, cyclones and sea-level rise, and recalling its relevant resolutions,

Recalling its resolution 50/34 of 6 December 1995 on the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples on his consultations with the President of the Economic and Social Council and endorses the observations and suggestions arising therefrom;

2. Recommends that all States intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to ensure implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

3. Reaffirms that the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system should continue to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the United Nations in their efforts to contribute to the implementation of the Declaration and all other relevant General Assembly resolutions;

4. Reaffirms also that the recognition by the General Assembly and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the aspiration of the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories to exercise their right to self-determination entails, as a corollary, the extension of all appropriate assistance to those peoples;

5. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have continued to cooperate with the United Nations and the regional and subregional organizations in the implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

6. Requests the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations, as well as regional organizations, to examine and review conditions in each Territory so as to take appropriate measures to accelerate progress in the economic and social sectors of the Territories and strengthen existing measures of support, and, in that regard, to formulate appropriate programmes of assistance to the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, within the framework of their respective mandates;

7. Recommends that the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system formulate, with the active cooperation of the regional organizations concerned, concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and submit the proposals to their governing and legislative organs;

8. Also recommends that the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system continue to review at the regular meetings of their governing bodies the implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

9. Welcomes the continuing initiative exercised by the United Nations Development Programme in maintaining close liaison among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and in providing assistance to the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories;

10. Encourages Non-Self-Governing Territories to take steps to establish and/or strengthen disaster preparedness and management institutions and policies;

11. Requests the administering Powers concerned to facilitate the participation of appointed and elected representatives of Non-Self-Governing Territories in the relevant meetings and conferences of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system so that the Territories may benefit from the related activities of those agencies and organizations;

12. Recommends that all Governments intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and, in that connection, accord priority to the question of providing assistance to the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and to prepare for submission to the relevant bodies, with the assistance of those agencies and organizations, a report on the action taken in implementation of the relevant resolutions, including the present resolution, since the circulation of his previous report;

14. Commends the Economic and Social Council for its debate and its resolution 1996/37 of 26 July 1996 on this issue, and requests it to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee, appropriate measures for coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

15. Requests the specialized agencies to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the implementation of the present resolution;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to the governing bodies of the appropriate specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations so that those bodies may take the necessary measures to implement the resolution, and also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution;

17. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session.

Foreign interests impeding implementation of the Declaration

In 1996, the Special Committee on decolonization, as in previous years, considered activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding implementation of the 1960 Declaration on decolonization. The Special Committee had before it working papers prepared by the Secretariat containing information on economic conditions, with particular reference to foreign economic activities, in the Territories of Anguilla, Bermuda, the Cayman Islands, Montserrat, the Turks and Caicos Islands, and the United States Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/2041 & Corr.1, A/AC.109/2045, A/AC.109/2051-2053, A/AC.109/2054 & Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/140.

Activities of foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Territories under colonial domination

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Territories under colonial domination",

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, as well as all its other relevant resolutions, including, in particular, resolution 46/181 of 19 December 1991, endorsing the Plan of Action for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming also that any economic or other activity that constitutes an obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and obstructs efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism is a direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming further that the natural resources are the heritage of the indigenous populations of the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location, size and economic conditions of each Territory, and bearing in mind the need to promote the economic stability, diversification and strengthening of the economy of each Territory,

Conscious of the particular vulnerability of the small Territories to natural disasters and environmental degradation,

Conscious also that foreign economic investment, when done in collaboration with the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and in accordance with their wishes, could make a valid contribution to the socio-economic development of the Territories and could also make a valid contribution to the exercise of their right to self-determination,

Concerned about the activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests which exploit the natural and human resources of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories and deprive them of their right to control the wealth of their countries,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, the South Pacific Forum and the Caribbean Community,

1. Reaffirms the right of peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories to self-determination in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as their right to enjoyment of their natural resources and their right to dispose of those resources in their best interest;

2. Affirms the value of foreign economic investment undertaken in collaboration with the people of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and in accordance with their wishes in order to make a valid contribution to the socio-economic development of the Territories;

3. Reiterates that any administering Power that deprives the colonial peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources, or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests, violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter;

4. Reaffirms its concern about the activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests which continue to exploit the natural resources that are the heritage of the indigenous populations of the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories in the Caribbean, the Pacific and other regions, as well as their human resources, to the detriment of their interests, thus depriving them of their right to control the resources of their Territories and impeding the realization by those peoples of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence;

5. Reiterates its deep concern about those activities of foreign economic and other interests in the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV), and the efforts to eliminate colonialism;

6. Calls once again upon all Governments that have not yet done so to take, in accordance with the relevant provisions of its resolution 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

7. Reiterates that the damaging exploitation and plundering of the marine and other natural resources of colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories by foreign economic interests, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, is a threat to the integrity and prosperity of those Territories;

8. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system to take all possible measures to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of the peoples of colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

9. Urges the administering Powers concerned to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the peoples of the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories to their natural resources and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources, and requests the administering Powers to take all necessary steps to protect the property rights of the peoples of those Territories;

10. Calls upon the administering Powers concerned to ensure that no discriminatory working conditions prevail in the Territories under their administration and to promote in each Territory a fair system of wages applicable to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue, through all means at his disposal, to inform world public opinion of those activities of foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration;

12. Appeals to the mass media, trade unions and non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, to continue their efforts for the implementation of the Declaration;

13. Decides to follow the situation in the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interest of the indigenous peoples and at promoting the economic and financial viability of those Territories, in order to facilitate and accelerate the exercise by the peoples of those Territories of their right to self-determination and independence;

14. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session.

Abstaining: Mali, Mauritania, Palau, Republic of Korea.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Ireland, on behalf of the States members of the EU, explained that they had voted against the resolution as, despite consultations with the Special Committee, the final version of the text was still not satisfactory. The EU once again requested the Special Committee to be more mindful of its observations in drafting a resolution in 1997.

Military activities and arrangements in colonial countries

The Special Committee on decolonization considered military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration. For that purpose, it had before it working papers prepared by the Secretariat containing information on military activities and arrangements in Bermuda, Guam and the United States Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/2041 & Corr.1, A/AC.109/2047 & Add.1, A/AC.109/2054 & Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly adopted decision 51/427 in December.

Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration

At its 83rd plenary meeting, on 13 December 1996, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee), adopted the following text:

"1. The General Assembly, having considered the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to an item on the agenda of the Special Committee entitled 'Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration', and recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and all other relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, reaffirms its strong conviction that military bases and installations in the Territories concerned could constitute an obstacle to the exercise by the people of those Territories of their right to self-determination, and reiterates its strong views that existing bases and installations, which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, should be withdrawn.

"2. Aware of the presence of such bases and installations in some of those Territories, the General Assembly urges the administering Powers concerned to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States.

"3. The General Assembly reiterates its concern that military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration might run counter to the rights and interests of the colonial peoples concerned, especially their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly once again calls upon the administering Powers concerned to terminate such activities and to eliminate such military bases in compliance with its relevant resolutions.

"4. The General Assembly reiterates that the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories and areas adjacent thereto should not be used for nuclear testing, dumping of nuclear wastes or deployment of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction.

"5. The General Assembly deplores the continued alienation of land in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, particularly in the small island Territories of the Pacific and Caribbean regions, for military installations. The large-scale utilization of the local resources for this purpose could adversely affect the economic development of the Territories concerned.

"6. The General Assembly takes note of the decision of some of the administering Powers to close or downsize some of those military bases in the Non-Self-Governing Territories.

"7. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to continue to inform world public opinion of those military activities and arrangements in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories which constitute an obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

"8. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to it at its fifty-second session."

General Assembly decision 51/427

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/596) by recorded vote (87-46), 20 November (meeting 18); draft by Special Committee on decolonization (A/51/23); agenda items 89 & 19.

Abstaining: Mauritania, Micronesia, Palau, Republic of Korea, Uzbekistan.

On behalf of the EU States members, Ireland stated that they felt compelled to vote against the decision as the question it referred to was not included among the agenda items the Assembly had allocated to the Fourth Committee.

Information dissemination

As described in its 1996 report [A/51/23], the Special Committee and its Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance considered the question of the dissemination of information on decolonization. The Subcommittee reported [A/AC.109/L.1843] as well on its consultations with representatives of the Departments of Public Information and of Political Affairs of the Secretariat, and on the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of All Colonial Territories Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Human Rights (27-31 May 1996), which had been observed annually since 1972. Speaking on the occasion of the Week of Solidarity, the Subcommittee Chairman said the task in the field of decolonization was still unfinished. Those peoples who had not achieved self-determination were mostly of small island NSGTs mainly in the Pacific and Caribbean regions; they were confronted with problems due to the small size of their Territories, low population, geographic remoteness, limited natural resources and vulnerability to natural disasters. Their situations required new and innovative solutions geared towards implementation of the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000). The Chairman, emphasizing that there was no alternative to the principle of self-determination, added that the wishes of the peoples of the NSGTs should not be ignored when examining again the options of self-determination available to them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/147.

Dissemination of information on decolonization

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations concerning the dissemination of information on decolonization, in particular General Assembly resolution 50/40 of 6 December 1995,

Recognizing the need for flexible, practical and innovative approaches towards reviewing the options of self-determination for the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories with a view to achieving complete decolonization by the year 2000,

Reiterating the importance of dissemination of information as an instrument for furthering the aims of the Declaration and mindful of the role of world public opinion in effectively assisting the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories to achieve self-determination,

Recognizing the role played by the administering Powers in transmitting information to the Secretary-General in accordance with the terms of Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations,

Aware of the role of non-governmental organizations in the dissemination of information on decolonization,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization;

2. Considers it important to continue its efforts to ensure the widest possible dissemination of information on decolonization, with particular emphasis on the options of self-determination available for the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories;

3. Requests the Department of Political Affairs and the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to take into account the suggestions of the Special Committee to continue their efforts to take measures through all the media available, including publications, radio and television, as well as the Internet, to give publicity to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization and, inter alia:

(a) To continue to collect, prepare and disseminate, particularly to the Territories, basic material on the issue of self-determination of the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories;

(b) To seek the full cooperation of the administering Powers in the discharge of the tasks referred to above;

(c) To maintain a working relationship with the appropriate regional and intergovernmental organizations, particularly in the Pacific and Caribbean regions, by holding periodic consultations and exchanging information;

(d) To encourage involvement of non-governmental organizations in the dissemination of information on decolonization;

(e) To report to the Special Committee on measures taken in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Requests all States, including the administering Powers, to continue to extend their cooperation in the dissemination of information referred to in paragraph 2 above;

5. Requests the Special Committee to follow the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second ses-

Abstaining: Belgium, Finland, France, Kazakstan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Romania, Russian Federation.

The amendment proposed by the EU, which added the fifth preambular paragraph, was adopted by a recorded vote of 143 to none, with 8 abstentions.

Puerto Rico

At a July meeting, the Special Committee on decolonization postponed again, until 1997, consideration of its decision of 15 August 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 790], by which it had deplored the fact that the United States Congress had not adopted a legal framework for holding a referendum to enable the people of Puerto Rico to determine their political future. The Committee agreed, on the basis of its usual practice, to give due consideration to requests for hearings and heard representatives of 10 Puerto Rican organizations.

Other general questions

Scholarships

The Secretary-General reported in September 1996 [A/51/373] on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of NSGTs. Since 1954, Member States had been invited by the General Assembly to offer education and training, not only at the university level, but also at the post-primary level, and technical and vocational training of immediate practical value. Those offers were communicated by the Secretariat to the administering Powers to enable them to give them appropriate publicity in the Territories under their administration.

As requested by General Assembly resolution 50/35 [YUN 1995, p. 246], the September 1996 report provided information on the offers and awards made during the period from 1 October 1995 to 30 September 1996. Over the years, 46 Member States and one non-member State had offered scholarships. During the reporting period, two countries, Austria and the United Kingdom, informed the Secretary-General of their offers. Austria said that it regularly provided vocational training and capacity-building in the infrastructure and education sectors for inhabitants of Western Sahara. The United Kingdom stated that during the 1995/96 financial year, it had offered 64 scholarships to students from the British Territories of Anguilla (5), Bermuda (20), the British Virgin Islands (5), the Cayman Islands (8), the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) (2), Gibraltar (2), Montserrat (3), St. Helena (including Tristan da Cunha) (18) and the Turks and Caicos Islands (1). September 1996, the UN Secretariat received requests from 29 students for information on the availability of scholarships; none of them were inhabitants of NSGTs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/142.

Offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/35 of 6 December 1995,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories, prepared pursuant to its resolution 845(IX) of 22 November 1954,

Conscious of the importance of promoting the educational advancement of the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and expansion of offers of scholarships is essential in order to meet the increasing need of students from Non-Self-Governing Territories for educational and training assistance, and considering that students in those Territories should be encouraged to avail themselves of such offers,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have made scholarships available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories;
3. Invites all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of those Territories that have not yet attained self-government or independence and, wherever possible, to provide travel funds to prospective students;
4. Urges the administering Powers to take effective measures to ensure the widespread and continuous dissemination in the Territories under their administration of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States and to provide all the necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution;
6. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution.

13 December 1996 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/598) without vote, 28 October (meeting 8); 18-nation draft (A/C.4/51/L.6); agenda item 91.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 4th Committee 2-5, 8; plenary 83.

Information to the United Nations

As in previous years, the General Assembly had in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 247] requested Member States, which had responsibilities for the administration of Territories whose peoples had not fully attained self-government, to inform the Secretary-General of economic, social and educational conditions in those Territories, as prescribed in Article 73 e of the UN Charter. The Secretary-General reported [A/51/316 & Add.1] in August 1996, with additional information presented in September, on those replies transmitted to him in respect of the years from 1993 to 1996. Countries which had submitted information were: New Zealand (Tokelau), United Kingdom (Anguilla, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, Pitcairn, St. Helena (including Tristan da Cunha)) and United States (American Samoa, Guam, United States Virgin Islands). The Special Committee on decolonization considered information from NSGTs on 22 July.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/139.

Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations and the action taken by the Special Committee in respect of that information,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General on the item,

Recalling its resolution 1970(XVIII) of 16 December 1963, in which it requested the Special Committee to study the information transmitted to the Secretary-General in accordance with Article 73 e of the Charter and to take such information fully into account in examining the situation with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Recalling also its resolution 50/32 of 6 December 1995, in which it requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under resolution 1970(XVIII),

Stressing the importance of timely transmission by the administering Powers of adequate information under Article 73 e of the Charter, in particular in relation to the preparation by the Secretariat of the working papers on the Territories concerned,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that a Non-Self-Governing Territory has attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter, the administering Power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter with respect to that Territory;

3. Requests the administering Powers concerned to transmit or continue to transmit to the Secretary-General the information prescribed in Article 73 e of the Charter, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned, within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in those Territories;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that adequate information is drawn from all available published sources in connection with the preparation of the working papers relating to the Territories concerned;

5. Requests the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under resolution 1970(XVIII), in accordance with established procedures, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session.

The United Kingdom explained that it had abstained because it did not agree with paragraph 2.

Visiting missions

The Chairman of the Special Committee on decolonization held consultations in 1996 with representatives of the administering Powers on the question of sending visiting missions to Territories, as requested by the Committee in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 247]. During those consultations, the Chairman informed them that the Committee continued to attach importance to the dispatch of UN visiting missions to the NSGTs as a means of securing first-hand information on those Territories. He appealed to the administering Powers to cooperate with the United Nations in that regard and indicated that some territorial Governments had expressed willingness to receive such missions.

In a July report [A/AC.109/L.1848], the Chairman said that the representative of one administering Power stated that his Government's record on decolonization had been good and that its position with regard to visiting missions to the Territories under its administration had not changed, adding that those territorial Governments willing to receive visiting missions should first consult with the administering Power concerned. Concerning decolonization, the representative said that the Territories under his Government's administration had democratically elected Governments and it was up to them to decide their future status. So far, none of those Territories had taken any action in that direction.

The representatives of two administering Powers stated that they remained open to any suggestions by local Governments regarding their readiness to receive UN visiting missions. They recalled their Governments' communications informing the United Nations that they would stop participating in the work of the Special Committee and indicated that they did not foresee a change of that policy. However, they reiterated their commitment to fulfil their obligations concerning transmission of information under Article 73 e of the Charter.

The representative of one administering Power stated that it was difficult for his Government to facilitate the access of a visiting mission to the Territory concerned. He expressed the hope that the Secretary-General would succeed in his efforts to bring the parties concerned together and make possible the dispatch of a visiting mission to the Territory in the near future.

New Zealand reiterated its readiness to continue to provide the Committee with all relevant information on Tokelau and to participate in the Committee's work. It expressed the hope that, in view of the current constitutional developments in Tokelau, it would be possible for the people of the Territory to decide soon on their future status, within their own time-frame.

According to the report, the latest visiting mission dispatched by the Committee was in 1994 to Tokelau.

The Committee, by a resolution of 24 July, stressed the need to dispatch periodic visiting missions to NSGTs, called on administering Powers to cooperate by receiving UN missions and requested the Chairman to continue consultations with those Powers. It also requested the Chairman to enter into consultations with the administering Power of Guam, with a view to facilitating the dispatch of a UN mission there.

Other colonial Territories

East Timor

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of East Timor on 23 and 24 July, having before it a working paper [A/AC.109/2049 & Corr.2] prepared by the Secretariat containing information on political developments, the human rights situation, and economic, social and educational conditions in the Territory. The paper was based on international media reports, as well as UN documentation, and covered consideration of the issue by the United Nations. Since 1977, Portugal, as administering Power, had annually informed the Secretary-General that, owing to conditions in the Territory, namely, the presence of armed forces of Indonesia, it had been prevented from transmitting any information concerning East Timor under Article 73 e of the Charter. In 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 1349], the General Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to initiate consultations with all parties directly concerned, with a view to exploring ways of achieving a comprehensive settlement of the problem, and since then the Secretary-General had kept the Assembly apprised of developments related to the exercise of his good offices.

The Secretary-General held the seventh round of talks on the question of East Timor in London on 16 January 1996, with the Foreign Ministers of Portugal and Indonesia, continuing discussions on those substantive issues which had been identified as related to an eventual framework for the achievement of a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution, as well as other related issues, including the preservation and promotion of the cultural identity of the East Timorese people and bilateral relations between Indonesia and Portugal.

In March, an all-inclusive intra-East Timorese dialogue was held in Schläining castle, Austria, at the end of which the 29 participants, representing a broad cross-section of political opinion from inside and outside the Territory, called for continuation of the discussion initiated by the Secretary-General in an effort to find a solution. In a signed declaration, they noted the positive atmosphere that had prevailed during the talks and expressed readiness to continue the sessions. The consensus declaration expressed interest in establishing an East Timorese cultural centre in Dili to research the culture, language, customs and traditions of the Territory. It welcomed Portugal's support for East Timor University, as well as practical training for East Timorese youth, and proposed that Indonesia provide further opportunities for East Timorese to play a greater role in the administration of the Territory.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights visited Indonesia and East Timor in December 1995. The human rights situation in East Timor was raised by the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, in a statement of 10 April 1996 agreed on by consensus by the Commission. Expressing its deep concern at the reports on human rights violations there, the Commission recalled the undertakings by Indonesia to promote human rights in East Timor. It stressed the need to take further steps towards their implementation, including the early release of the East Timorese detained or convicted and the further clarification of the circumstances surrounding the Dili incident of 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 798], involving the killing of a number of demonstrators at the Santa Cruz cemetery, when Indonesian armed forces opened fire on the group. Noting with satisfaction the greater access recently granted by the Indonesian authorities to international media and humanitarian organizations, the Commission welcomed the visit of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in December 1995. (For other action on human rights in East Timor, see PART TWO, Chapter III.)

According to the Indonesian military, as of July 1995, the number of rebels of the Frente Revolucionaria de Timor Leste Independente (FRETILIN) stood at 200 persons, supported by a 3,000-member clandestine network throughout Indonesia. During the period from March 1995 to January 1996, 20 FRETILIN members were killed by the Indonesian security forces and 27 others had been captured by or had surrendered to the Indonesian authorities. In late 1995, Indonesia withdrew two army battalions from East Timor, leaving six battalions stationed there. Throughout the reporting period, there were a number of violent incidents and clashes between FRETILIN supporters and Indonesians.

After hearing statements from a number of petitioners, the Special Committee, on the proposal of the Acting Chairman, decided to continue consideration of the question at its next (1997) session, subject to any directives that the General Assembly might give at its forthcoming session.

Portugal, by a note verbale of 28 June [A/51/187], reported to the Secretary-General that it continued to be prevented de facto from exercising its responsibilities for the administration of East Timor due to its illegal occupation by a third country; nonetheless, other sources allowed it to report on some aspects of the situation in the Territory. Since its last report a year earlier, Portugal said that ethnic and religious tensions between East Timorese and Indonesians (fostered by the latter's immigration into the Territory), a pattern of short and arbitrary detentions of young people accompanied by beatings and torture, "disappearances", summary executions and a difficult social and economic situation with high unemployment rates had contributed to a climate of fear, distrust and intimidation. In Portugal's view, Indonesia intended to subdue the opponents to integration. According to the Indonesian military, a reported 5,000 soldiers and 4,500 policemen were posted in East Timor in 1995, but some sources, Portugal said, estimated the total figure at between 13,000 and 15,000 armed forces. After widely reported religious incidents in September 1995, riots occurred in which between 50 and 100 persons were arrested, reportedly the worst riots since the 1991 killings at the Santa Cruz cemetery. On 10 October 1995, two people died as a result of confrontations in Dili, which were followed by four days of riots and involved hundreds of youths. The protest was crushed by the armed forces, who conducted round-ups and house-to-house searches, leading to the detention of 150 persons.

According to Amnesty International, at least 300 people were arrested for their alleged involvement in the October riots. Recently, further incidents involving hundreds of young people had broken out in the city of Baucau, reportedly resulting in the death of two persons and the wounding of an undetermined number of others. It appeared, Portugal stated, that from September 1995 to June 1996, the combination of terror and despair had caused a wave of young East Timorese to leave Indonesia for political asylum abroad.

Stressing that involvement of the East Timorese was crucial, Portugal expressed support for the all-inclusive intra-East Timorese talks, organized and facilitated by the United Nations. UN involvement in those talks had ensured their credibility and independence, as well as enlarged representative participation by the different East Timorese political currents. Portugal viewed as positive the fact that participants not only were able to establish a dialogue, but could also agree on a platform of common concerns on several issues.

Following the seventh round of talks, the Prime Minister of Portugal met President Suharto of Indonesia in Bangkok, Thailand, during the Asia-Europe Meeting on 29 February. The Prime Minister put forward a proposal that Portugal would agree to the opening of an interests section in a friendly embassy in Jakarta and accept an Indonesian interests section in a friendly embassy in Lisbon provided that Indonesia agreed to release the East Timorese leader, Xanana Gusmão, and his followers and ensure respect of human rights in East Timor under UN monitoring.

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

On 22 July, the Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas). Having before it a working paper prepared by the Secretariat covering developments in the Territory [A/AC.109/2048], the Committee heard a number of speakers, but the United Kingdom, the administering Power concerned, did not participate in the Committee's consideration of the item. At the meeting, the Committee adopted a resolution reiterating its view that the way to end the dispute over sovereignty between Argentina and the United Kingdom was through a peaceful and negotiated settlement. The Committee requested those two Governments to resume negotiations in order to find a quick and peaceful solution in accordance with General Assembly resolutions on the issue.

The Secretariat working paper issued in June described political developments and economic and social conditions over the previous year. On 8 January 1996, Richard Ralph was sworn in as Governor of the Territory. At his swearing-in ceremony, he reaffirmed the commitment of the United Kingdom to uphold the right of the islanders to choose under which flag they wished to be governed and stated that the islanders' views would be taken into account over the development of cooperation over fishing (the mainstay of the economy) and oil. The fishing issue had been raised at talks a few months earlier between the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the President of Argentina, the first such high-level meeting since the 1982 conflict. The Foreign Minister of Argentina, at a meeting with the Secretary-General on 17 April 1996, informed him about recent incidents in the South Atlantic resulting from the United Kingdom's enforcement of collection of licence fees on Argentine trawlers fishing off the coast of South Georgia, south-east of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas). The Foreign Minister said he had already met twice with the Foreign Minister of the United Kingdom on the issue and that a settlement of the dispute over licence fees had been under discussion.

The two Governments reached an understanding on hydrocarbons in the maritime areas of dispute in the south-west Atlantic in September 1995. According to the understanding, the two Governments established a Joint Commission to coordinate commercial activities by the offshore oil and gas industry, including the formation of joint ventures and joint projects for exploration, production and use of infrastructure, and to set standards for protection of the marine environment. The understanding would not affect the positions of the two countries on sovereignty. The Joint Commission held its first meeting on 29 February and 1 March 1996.

Another area of recent agreement was mine clearing. In July 1994, Argentina and the United Kingdom agreed to request the collaboration of the United States in removing mines laid by the Argentine armed forces in 1982. Having agreed, the United States began working with the Argentine Government in 1995 on the modality for the procedure.

The Secretariat paper noted that a declaration on the Territory was adopted on 4 June 1996 by acclamation by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States, which welcomed Argentina's reiteration of its intention to explore ways for a peaceful settlement of the dispute and its positive considerations towards the inhabitants of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas).

On 15 March, the Latin American Parliament issued a declaration expressing its support of Argentina's claim to sovereignty. Brazil, in a note verbale of 9 July to the Secretary-General [A/51/205], forwarded a declaration issued on 25 June by the tenth meeting of the Presidents of the States members of the Southern Cone Common Market (MERCOSUR) and the Presidents of Bolivia and Chile in which they reaffirmed their support for Argentina's claim to sovereignty over the Territory.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 51/407 of 25 October 1996, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and included it in the agenda of its 1997 session.

Gibraltar

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of Gibraltar on 23 July, having before it a working paper prepared by the Secretariat describing developments concerning the Territory [A/AC.109/2057]. The Committee acceded to the request of Spain to participate in its consideration of the question. It decided to continue its consideration of the question at its next session, subject to any directives that the General Assembly might give.

The Secretariat, in its July working paper, reported that general elections were held in Gibralt tar on 16 May 1996. According to the administering Power, the United Kingdom, 88 per cent of the registered voters participated in the elections. The Gibraltar Social Democratic Party, with 52.2 per cent of the votes, won eight seats in the Territorial Legislative Assembly, while the Gibraltar Socialist Labour Party obtained seven. Peter Caruana, the leader of the winning party, was appointed Chief Minister of Gibraltar. In his first interview after taking office, Mr. Caruana said that while he would seek negotiations with Spain on economic issues, the sovereignty issue would not be up for discussion. Spain maintained its position that the question of sovereignty should be negotiated at the talks between it and the United Kingdom.

In accordance with plans announced in July 1994, the United Kingdom continued to reduce manpower levels of the garrison stationed in Gibraltar, with the intention of having some 500 servicemen and between 350 and 700 civilians stationed there by the end of the decade.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 51/430.

Question of Gibraltar

At its 83rd plenary meeting, on 13 December 1996, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee), adopted the following text as representing the consensus of the members of the Assembly:

"The General Assembly, recalling its decision 50/415 of 6 December 1995 and recalling at the same time that the statement agreed to by the Governments of Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland at Brussels on 27 November 1984 stipulates, inter alia, the following:

'The establishment of a negotiating process aimed at overcoming all the differences between them over Gibraltar and at promoting cooperation on a mutually beneficial basis on economic, cultural, touristic, aviation, military and environmental matters. Both sides accept that the issues of sovereignty will be discussed in that process. The British Government will fully maintain its commitment to honour the wishes of the people of Gibraltar as set out in the preamble of the 1969 Constitution', takes note of the fact that, as part of this process, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland hold annual meetings alternately in each capital, the most recent of which took place in London on 20 December 1994, and urges both Governments to continue their negotiations with the object of reaching a definitive solution to the problem of Gibraltar in the light of relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and in the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations."

New Caledonia

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of New Caledonia on 24 July. It heard statements by Papua New Guinea and representatives of the Front de libération nationale kanake socialiste (FLNKS) and of the Congrès populaire. The Special Committee also had before it a working paper [A/AC.109/2046] prepared by the Secretariat, which covered recent developments in the Territory, particularly progress in implementing the Matignon Accords of 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 742]. Those accords provided for a 10-year period of economic and social development, leading to a self-determination referendum to be held in 1998. The signatories to the accords were the Government of France and the two main Caledonian political groupings—the Rassemblement pour la Calédonie dans la République (RPCR) and FLNKS. On 16 October 1995, the signatories met at Hotel Matignon to discuss implementation of the Accords. In a communique issued after the meeting, they agreed that implementation of economic and social development measures should be accelerated and stated their intention to meet at regular intervals. During a February 1996 visit to the Territory, the Minister for Overseas Departments and Territories of France said that the real issues concerned, first, the link to France and, second, New Caledonia's control over its economic and social development. During his visit, the three signatories established a Preliminary Discussion Committee in order to seek a consensual solution which could be proposed to the Caledonians at the end of the period covered by the Accords. The Committee would focus on the nature of the link between the Territory and France; increasing local responsibility; and institutional alignment and political representation. In addition, the parties agreed on a timetable for drafting a general framework of an agreement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1996, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/144.

Question of New Caledonia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of New Caledonia,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to New Caledonia,

Reaffirming the right of peoples to self-determination as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960,

Noting the importance of the positive measures being pursued in New Caledonia by the French authorities, in cooperation with all sectors of the population, to promote political, economic and social development in the Territory, including measures in the area of environmental protection and action with respect to drug abuse and trafficking, in order to provide a framework for its peaceful progress to self-determination,

Noting also, in this context, the importance of equitable economic and social development, as well as continued dialogue among the parties involved in New Caledonia in the preparation of the act of self-determination of New Caledonia,

Welcoming the strengthening of the process of review of the Matignon Accords through the increased frequency of coordination meetings,

Noting with satisfaction the intensification of contacts between New Caledonia and neighbouring countries of the South Pacific region,

1. Urges all the parties involved, in the interest of all the people of New Caledonia and building on the positive outcome of the mid-term review of the Matignon Accords, to maintain their dialogue in a spirit of harmony;

2. Invites all the parties involved to continue promoting a framework for the peaceful progress of the Territory towards an act of self-determination in which all options are open and which would safeguard the rights of all New Caledonians according to the letter and the spirit of the Matignon Accords, which are based on the principle that it is for the populations of New Caledonia to choose how to control their destiny;

3. Welcomes measures that have been taken to strengthen and diversify the New Caledonian economy in all fields, and encourages further such measures in accordance with the spirit of the Matignon Accords;

4. Also welcomes the importance attached by the parties to the Matignon Accords to greater progress in housing, employment, training, education and health care in New Caledonia;

5. Acknowledges the contribution of the Melanesian Cultural Centre to the protection of the indigenous culture of New Caledonia;

6. Notes the positive initiatives aimed at protecting New Caledonia's natural environment, notably the "Zonéco" operation designed to map and evaluate marine resources within the economic zone of New Caledonia;

7. Acknowledges the close links between New Caledonia and the peoples of the South Pacific and the positive actions being taken by the French and provincial authorities to facilitate the further development of those links, including the development of closer relations with the countries members of the South Pacific Forum;

8. Welcomes, in particular, in this regard, continuing high-level visits to New Caledonia by delegations from countries of the Pacific region and high-level visits by delegations from New Caledonia to countries members of the South Pacific Forum;

9. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue the examination of this question at its next session and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session.

Tokelau

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of Tokelau on 25 July, having before it a working paper [A/AC.109/2050] prepared by the Secretariat on political developments and economic and social conditions in the Territory.

The national representative body of Tokelau, the General Fono, established a broadly based Special Committee on Constitutional Developments at the end of 1994, with a core membership of 30. In March and April 1995, workshops on constitutional developments were held on each atoll by the Tokelau government, with financial support by UNDP. The workshops led to a clearer identification of Tokelau's needs in terms of self-determination.

The General Fono made all major decisions for Tokelau, but recent experience highlighted the need for a devolution of legislative power, a principle under discussion with Tokelau elders for a decade. In 1995, planning was undertaken to confer legislative power on the General Fono by amending the Tokelau Act of 1948. In May 1996, the Parliament of New Zealand, the administering Power, passed a Tokelau Amendment Bill conferring on the General Fono the power to make rules for Tokelau, including imposing taxes, and providing that such rules could be disallowed by the Administrator of Tokelau. It also amended the 1948 Act as it related to the sources of law for Tokelau and the jurisdiction of Tokelau Commissioners. The Bill acknowledged that Tokelau had been developing its own administrative and decision-making capabilities and moving towards a greater degree of self-government. The existing constitutional relationship with New Zealand was maintained and New Zealand retained the power to legislate for Tokelau. The Bill also acknowledged New Zealand's responsibility to Tokelau, the international community and the United Nations to support and encourage the process towards self-government and economic self-sufficiency.

The people of Tokelau, according to the Secretariat, had expressed a strong preference for a status of free association with New Zealand. In a reply dated 14 February 1996 to the message of the New Zealand Administrator of Tokelau, the Ulu-o-Tokelau (the highest authority of Tokelau) stated that the political process Tokelau was engaging in, and had been engaging in over the past three years, reflected the wishes of the people. Tokelau had set no timetable for self-determination, but it would continue to discuss with New Zealand the shape that a future relationship of free association might take.

As administering Power, New Zealand continued to participate in the work of the Special Committee in relation to Tokelau. The Administrator of Tokelau and the Ulu-o-Tokelau made statements to the Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/145.

Question of Tokelau

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Tokelau,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question of Tokelau,

Recalling the solemn declaration on the future status of Tokelau delivered by the Ulu-o-Tokelau (the highest authority on Tokelau) on 30 July 1994, that an act of self-determination in Tokelau is now under active consideration, together with the constitution of a self-governing Tokelau, and that the present preference of Tokelau is for a status of free association with New Zealand,

Recalling also the emphasis placed in the solemn declaration on the terms of Tokelau's intended free association relationship with New Zealand, including the expectation that the form of help Tokelau could continue to expect from New Zealand in promoting the well-being of its people, besides its external interests, would be clearly established in the framework of that relationship,

Noting with appreciation the continuing exemplary co-operation of New Zealand as the administering Power with the Special Committee relating to Tokelau and its readiness to permit access by United Nations visiting missions to the Territory,

Recalling the dispatch in 1994 of a United Nations visiting mission to Tokelau,

Noting that, as a small island Territory, Tokelau exemplifies the situation of most remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Noting also that, as a case study pointing to successful decolonization, Tokelau has wider significance for the United Nations as it seeks to complete its work in decolonization,

1. Notes that Tokelau remains firmly committed to the development of self-government and to an act of self-determination that would result in Tokelau assuming a status in accordance with the options on future status for Non-Self-Governing Territories contained in principle VI of the annex to General Assembly resolution 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960;

2. Also notes Tokelau's desire to move at its own pace towards an act of self-determination;

3. Commends Tokelau for seeking on the basis of wide consultation with its people a form of national government that reflects its unique traditions and environment, and for charting its own constitutional course;

4. Acknowledges the collaboration between New Zealand and Tokelau regarding the Tokelau Amendment Act 1996, which provides Tokelau's national government with a legislative power, supplementing the executive power delegated in 1994;

5. Also acknowledges Tokelau's need for reassurance, given that local resources cannot adequately cover the material side of self-determination, and the ongoing responsibility of Tokelau's external partners to assist Tokelau in balancing its desire to be self-reliant to the greatest extent possible with its need for external assistance;

6. Welcomes the assurances of the Government of New Zealand that it will meet its obligations to the United Nations with respect to Tokelau and abide by the freely expressed wishes of the people of Tokelau with regard to their future status;

7. Invites the administering Power and United Nations agencies to continue their assistance to the social and economic development of Tokelau.

General Assembly resolution 51/145

13 December 1996 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/588) without vote, 28 October (meeting 8); draft by Special Committee on decolonization (A/51/23); agenda item 19.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 4th Committee 2-5, 8; plenary 83.

Island Territories

The Special Committee on decolonization had before it working papers by the Secretariat describing political developments and economic and social conditions in the following island Territories: American Samoa [A/AC.109/2044 & Add.1], Anguilla [A/AC.109/2045], Bermuda [A/AC.109/2041 & Corr.1], British Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/2055], Cayman Islands [A/AC.109/2053], Guam [A/AC.109/2047 & Add.1], Montserrat [A/AC.109/2052], Pitcairn [A/AC.109/2056], St. Helena [A/AC.109/2043], Turks and Caicos Islands [A/AC.109/2051] and United States Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/2054 & Add.1]. The Special Committee decided to allocate those Territories, plus Tokelau (see above), for consideration to the Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance, which considered the 12 Territories en bloc from 26 June to 8 July [A/AC.109/L.1843]. The Subcommittee reviewed the political, economic and social conditions in each of the Territories in the light of the information contained in the working papers. It noted that that information was not always up to date and that the Secretariat relied at times on published sources. The Subcommittee requested the administering Powers to cooperate with the Secretariat in furnishing information on the Territories.

The Subcommittee focused its review on: progress in ascertaining the wishes of the population regarding their future status; the position of the territorial Governments and political parties on the future status of the Territories; socio-economic developments and specific problems in respect of environment, drug trafficking, etc.; and the dispatch of visiting missions and participation of representatives of NSGTs in the Committee's work. The Subcommittee noted that in some cases there was no up-to-date information on the wishes of the population regarding their future status. It was aware that some of the Territories were not seeking independence but other options of self-determination, and some attached priority to their socio-economic development before making a choice.

After consideration of the 12 island Territories, the Subcommittee recommended draft resolutions for action by the Committee—one on those 12 Territories (including Tokelau) in general and 11 others on the individual Territories of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands. The Committee acted on those drafts on 22 July, approving them all and recommending them to the General Assembly for adoption. By the consolidated resolution, the Assembly would, among other things: approve the part of the Special Committee's report dealing with the 12 Territories; reaffirm the right of the Territories' peoples to self-determination; request the administering Powers to report regularly on the aspirations of the people regarding their status; reaffirm the responsibility of those Powers to promote economic and social development; and call on them, in cooperation with the territorial Governments, to counter problems of drug trafficking, money laundering and other offences.

With regard to American Samoa, the Assembly would request the administering Power to continue to assist the territorial Government in the Territory's economic and social development, including measures to rebuild financial management capabilities and strengthen other governmental functions. Concerning Anguilla, it would call on the administering Power, all countries and UN organizations to assist it in social and economic development. On Bermuda, the Assembly would request the administering Power to elaborate development programmes specifically to alleviate the economic, social and environmental consequences of the closure of certain military bases in the Territory. The administering Power of the British Virgin Islands, UN organizations and financial institutions would be requested to provide assistance to the Territory for socio-economic development, bearing in mind the vulnerability of the Territory to external factors.

Noting the lack of up-to-date information on the Cayman Islands, the Territory's stable political and economic climate, and the fact that it had become one of the world's leading offshore financial centres, the Assembly would request the administering Power to keep it informed of the aspirations of the people on their future political status, and to counter problems related to money-laundering, smuggling of funds and other related crimes, as well as drug trafficking. Regarding Guam, the Assembly, conscious that immigration into Guam had resulted in the indigenous Chamorros becoming a minority in their homeland, and taking note of the proposed closing of four United States Navy installations there, called on the administering Power to facilitate the exercise of self-determination by the Chamorro people, as endorsed through a referendum by the people of Guam in the 1987 draft Guam Commonwealth Act. The Assembly would also request the administering Power to continue the transfer of land to the people, and to promote sustainable development of economic activities by the Chamorro people, including commercial fishing and agriculture. Noting the dire consequences of the 1996 volcanic eruption on Montserrat, the Assembly would call on the administering Power and UN and other organizations to provide urgent emergency assistance to the Territory. The Assembly, taking into account the unique nature of Pitcairn in terms of population (58) and area, would request the administering Power to continue its assistance for the improvement of socio-economic conditions.

The Assembly would request the administering Power of St. Helena to conduct a constitutional review, as requested by the local Legislative Council, taking into account the wishes of the population. It would call on the administering Power of the Turks and Caicos Islands to continue to provide assistance for the improvement of the social, educational and other conditions of the population and to cooperate with the territorial Government to counter problems related to money-laundering, smuggling of funds and drug trafficking. The Assembly would request the administering Power to facilitate the participation of the United States Virgin Islands in various organizations, in particular the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States and the Caribbean Community, and would welcome the negotiations between the administering Power and the territorial Government on the question of Water Island.

The two draft resolutions (one on the 12 island Territories in general and the other on the 11 individual Territories) were considered together by the General Assembly's Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/51/588]. During the process of consultations at the meetings, the United Kingdom and the United States introduced amendments [A/C.4/51/L.11] to the two resolutions.

The Chairman of the Committee, having organized informal consultations between the sponsors of the amendments and the Committee in an effort to find a compromise solution, announced that it had not been possible to resolve all the differences; however, both parties had shown signs of flexibility and a willingness to co-operate and had managed to reach agreement on 7 of the 25 amendments [A/C.4/51/SR.20]. The sponsors, for their part, had withdrawn two of the amendments. After a discussion, the United Kingdom moved that the debate on the item be adjourned until March 1997. The motion was adopted by a recorded vote of 52 to 46, with 22 abstentions.

The United Kingdom said it would be desirable to continue negotiating in search of further areas of agreement. Others expressing support for postponement in order to achieve a consensus were Chile, Ireland (speaking on behalf of the EU), Norway, Romania (speaking also on behalf of the Republic of Moldova), the Russian Federation, Sierra Leone, the United States and Venezuela. Those expressing opposition to deferment were China, Colombia, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Iran, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea (speaking in its capacity as Acting Chairman of the Special Committee) and the Syrian Arab Republic. The Acting Chairman felt it was not reasonable to expect the Committee to withdraw resolutions that it had itself prepared and to accept amendments which devalued the basic agreements reached, especially in regard to protection of the rights and aspirations of the peoples of NSGTs which the international community had a moral and legal obligation to report. Postponing action might have serious consequences for the interests of those peoples.

The United States recalled that it and the United Kingdom had withdrawn from the Committee in 1971, deeming the work there to be pointless. The Committee's practices and policies did not serve the objectives of the Organization, its members or the Territories, and remained a relic of the ideological issues of the cold war. The United States was pleased to note that in 1996, for the first time, the Chairman of the Fourth Committee had taken the initiative of bringing the parties together with a view to initiating a dialogue on unresolved questions. The process had produced some goodwill and confidence.

Speaking in explanation of vote as a member of the Committee and as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance, Trinidad and Tobago said it had voted in accordance with the position of the Chairman of the Committee that consideration of the draft should not be deferred. It was disappointed that it had not been possible to resolve the matter in the Committee itself and that it had been necessary to refer the issue to the Fourth Committee. Trinidad and Tobago was encouraged that informal consultations had been initiated with the administering Powers. Agreeing that it was regrettable that common ground had not been reached, Fiji noted that the administering Powers had displayed little willingness to compromise on certain critical issues and some Special Committee members had refused to yield, resulting in an impasse.

Having abstained, Uruguay advocated consultations between the administering Powers and the Special Committee, but felt that negotiations should be concerned with how to achieve the objective of eliminating colonialism before the year 2000 and not merely a possible consensus resolution. Argentina, also abstaining, said it recognized the Committee's efforts to adjust its work to the new international situation and it continued to stress the importance of observance of the principles of self-determination and the territorial integrity of States.

Cuba voted against the motion because it believed it was not in the interests of the population of the NSGTs; Papua New Guinea also believed that the motion had serious consequences for the interests of those peoples and gave a negative signal.

Future of Trusteeship Council

In 1996, discussion continued on the future of the Trusteeship Council, which in 1994 had effectively completed its work with respect to the 11 Territories placed under the International Trusteeship System. The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 50/55 [YUN1995,p.266], sought comments from Member States. In an August 1996 report [A/50/1011], he conveyed to the Assembly the 19 responses he had received. Of those replies, 11 Member States agreed with his 1994 proposal [YUN 1994, p. 8] to dissolve the Council, in accordance with Article 108 of the Charter, i.e., by amending the Charter.

One country said the Trusteeship Council had fulfilled its mandate but did not believe that it should be dissolved. Four countries (including Malta) expressed support for Malta's proposal to include in the Council's mandate responsibility for safeguarding the "common heritage of mankind". Three other States believed the Council should be given new functions but did not specifically mention Malta's proposal. Of those three, one made a similar suggestion—that it preserve humankind's common heritage; another said the Council should be given a new mandate over the global commons in the collective interest of humanity, which included the atmosphere, outer space, the oceans beyond national jurisdiction, and the related environment and systems that contributed to the support of human life; and the third said that the Assembly should decide on the areas of the Council's future activities.

Information

UN public information activities continued to focus in 1996 on publicizing the work of the Organization and enhancing the communication capabilities of developing countries. Within the Secretariat, that work was largely carried out by the Department of Public Information (DPI). Other bodies involved were the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), an inter-agency committee of UN officials which coordinated information activities within the UN system.

The General Assembly's Committee on Information, at its eighteenth session (New York, 6-17 May) [A/51/21], continued to examine UN public information policies and activities in the light of the evolution of international relations, an evaluation of progress made by the UN system in the field of information and communications, and the need to establish a new international economic order and a new world information and communication order. In considering those questions, the Committee, whose membership numbered 89 States, had before it the Secretary-General's reports on the allocation of resources to UN information centres (UNICs) in 1995 [A/AC.198/1996/2] and a review of DPI publications [A/AC.198/1996/3]. Also before the Committee was a report on activities of JUNIC [A/51/96], prepared by its secretariat.

The recommendations of the Committee on Information were considered by the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee in November and by the General Assembly in December. The Assembly adopted two resolutions on information: one calling for the development of information flows and communication capabilities in the service of humanity, particularly in developing countries, and the other outlining UN public information policies and activities.

Communication issues

The Committee on Information, at its 1996 session, continued to promote the establishment of a new, more just and more effective world information and communication order intended to strengthen peace and international understanding and based on the free circulation and wider and better-balanced dissemination of information, as requested by the General Assembly.

Among UN activities in that field was a seminar held by the United Nations and UNESCO for Arab media representatives (Sana'a, Yemen, 7-11 January). At its conclusion, the participants issued the Sana'a Declaration on Promoting Independent and Pluralistic Arab Media, which was transmitted to the Secretary-General by Yemen on 10 April [A/51/96].

The Fifth Conference of Ministers of Information of Non-Aligned Countries (Abuja, Nigeria, 3-6 September) adopted a Final Declaration in which the Ministers agreed that the struggle for the new world information and communication order should be intensified in spite of the end of the cold war. In addition, they noted the continued imbalances in the field of international information and communication. The text of the Declaration was transmitted to the Secretary-General by a 17 September letter from Nigeria [A/51/372].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/138 A.

Information in the service of humanity

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the comprehensive and important report of the Committee on Information,

Also taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on questions relating to information,

Urges all countries, organizations of the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned, reaffirming their commitment to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to the principles of freedom of the press and freedom of information, as well as to those of the independence, pluralism and diversity of the media, deeply concerned by the disparities existing between developed and developing countries and the consequences of every kind arising from those disparities that affect the capability of the public, private or other media and individuals in developing countries to disseminate information and communicate their views and their cultural and ethical values through endogenous cultural production, as well as to ensure the diversity of sources and their free access to information, and recognizing the call in this context for what in the United Nations and at various international forums has been termed "a new world information and communication order, seen as an evolving and continuous process":

(a) To cooperate and interact with a view to reducing existing disparities in information flows at all levels by increasing assistance for the development of communication infrastructures and capabilities in developing countries, with due regard for their needs and the priorities attached to such areas by those countries, and in order to enable them and the public, private or other media in developing countries to develop their own information and communication policies freely and independently and increase the participation of media and individuals in the communication process, and to ensure a free flow of information at all levels;

(b) To ensure for journalists the free and effective performance of their professional tasks and condemn resolutely all attacks against them;

(c) To provide support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes for broadcasters and journalists from public, private and other media in developing countries;

(d) To enhance regional efforts and cooperation among developing countries, as well as cooperation between developed and developing countries, to strengthen communication capacities and to improve the media infrastructure and communication technology in the developing countries, especially in the areas of training and dissemination of information;

(e) To aim, in addition to bilateral cooperation, at providing all possible support and assistance to the developing countries and their media, public, private or other, with due regard to their interests and needs in the field of information and to action already adopted within the United Nations system, including:

- (i) The development of the human and technical resources that are indispensable for the improvement of information and communication systems in developing countries and support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes, such as those already operating under both public and private auspices throughout the developing world;
- (ii) The creation of conditions that will enable developing countries and their media, public, private or other, to have, by using their national and regional resources, the communication technology suited to their national needs, as well as the necessary programme material, especially for radio and television broadcasting;
- (iii) Assistance in establishing and promoting telecommunication links at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, especially among developing countries;
- (iv) The facilitation, as appropriate, of access by the developing countries to advanced communication technology available on the open market;
- (f) To provide full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which should support both public and private media.

General Assembly resolution 51/138 A
13 December 1996 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/594) without vote, 7 November (meeting 11); draft by Committee on Information (A/51/21); agenda item 87.

UN public information

DPI activities

Efforts to publicize UN activities throughout the world were the main focus of DPI, which had significantly enhanced its capacity to disseminate public information about the goals and achievements of the Organization, the Secretary-General stated in an October 1996 report [A/51/406]. The Department had integrated advanced technologies to increase cost-effectiveness and the range of its outreach. By implementing efficiency measures to raise productivity, it had met the challenge of managing rising interest and the need for services even as resources declined. At the same time, DPI had sought to articulate a coherent message regarding the diverse work of the United Nations by working more closely with other areas of the Organization and by sharpening the focus on key issues and constituencies. Its principal goal had been to foster greater support for the Organization's central role in meeting the challenges of peace, security and development. To that end, it had been effective in bringing the message of the United Nations to all corners of the world through a variety of media formats and in many languages.

During the reporting period, DPI had sought to reflect the diversity of the Organization's work, the Secretary-General stated, highlighting its peacekeeping operations and efforts in social development, and had given attention to correcting distorted public perceptions of the Organization's work and effectiveness. DPI had cooperated with peacekeeping and other field missions as well as other UN bodies, enabling new efficiencies and enhancing the outreach of the network of UNICs at the country level.

The Department had undertaken new initiatives designed to address the pressures of increased demand for its information products and diminished financial resources, including: emphasis on the priority issues of peace, security and development, and the identification of targeted audiences, with priority given to redissimulators of information products to maximize multiplier effect; integration of advanced information technologies, including use of the Internet and electronic publishing, for efficient production and more extensive dissemination of information products; closer cooperation with other departments and members of the UN system to ensure professionalism and efficiency; and streamlining of the organizational structure. The management of DPI consulted regularly with the Committee on Information, the representatives of each regional group, the Group of 77 and China on implementation of its mandates, as well as for an exchange of views on the coverage of issues of particular interest to Member States.

As part of ongoing DPI activities, the Office of the Spokesman for the Secretary-General was the main contact point with the world press covering the United Nations, particularly with the media representatives accredited at UN Headquarters. Through daily briefings, as well as an increasing number of one-on-one contacts with journalists, the Office provided authoritative and timely information on UN activities. The Assistant Secretary-General of DPI maintained direct contacts with media officials, which had been strengthened as a result of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations and recent major UN conferences on development. In view of the heightened interest of information media in the Organization, DPI and Italy's public broadcasting organization, RAI, organized the first UN world television forum on 19 and 20 November to address the impact of audio-visual media and their influence on society and international affairs.

During the reporting period, liaison and assistance were extended to more than 5,000 accredited correspondents. The world media's interest in UN affairs was demonstrated during the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII), for which 3,865 accreditations were arranged.

DPI provided press releases, photographic, television and radio coverage and programmes, video feature productions and technical services to the media. As supported by the General Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 272], and despite budget constraints, DPI continued to produce press releases in both working languages of the Secretariat (English and French), but financial considerations had compelled curtailment of coverage of some meetings. The Department continued to produce monthly, weekly and daily radio programmes in 15 languages. Radio programmes were fed by the integrated system of digital network lines to the World Radio Network, for retransmission by cable, satellite and AM and FM radio to Europe, Africa, North America, Asia and the Pacific. The radio series "Population and Development", commissioned by the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), was broadcast by approximately 1,300 radio stations, and the series "Law of the Sea" by about 600 stations. The possibility of packaging radio programmes into sound files for posting on the UN "home page" on the Internet was being investigated. Full-text searchable databases of audio-visual materials on Security Council activities, as well as of the Department's video series "UN in Action", had been prepared for posting onto the "home page". In addition, UN photographs were accessed electronically, as well as available at Headquarters. A total of 25,383 visits to the UN photo page and 460,548 downloadings of individual images were registered during the first six months of 1996.

Television reports on the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations were sold to 64 television broadcasters for use in their programmes. Eight 30-second public service announcements, "UN Facts", were broadcast in 27 countries. An award-winning documentary on the role of the United Nations, "A Place to Stand", was produced in six languages and broadcast during the anniversary period. A 50-minute video documentary on the history and role of peacekeeping, "No Place to Hide", adapted into 15 languages and aired in many countries, also won awards. The series "UN in Action", produced in English and adapted into Arabic, French, Russian and Spanish, was aired weekly by about 110 television stations. The English version was broadcast weekly by CNN with the capacity to reach 400 million households worldwide.

DPI expanded its utilization of satellite transmission where appropriate. The 1995 "Year in Review", a 15-minute video in six languages, was transmitted by satellite, reaching an estimated 350 million households, and the Secretary-General's United Nations Day Message 1995 was for the first time sent by satellite in three languages, reaching an estimated 400 million households.

Non-governmental organizations (NGOs) continued to serve as a link with the public at large and DPI remained in contact with 1,500 of them, organizing weekly briefings to keep them informed of UN activities. The DPI/NGO Web site, established in August 1996, became a cost-effective tool to make UN publications and information available to NGOs. The guided tours programme at Headquarters continued to rank among the leading tourist attractions in New York City, despite the restrictions in tour size for security reasons. DPI hosted a UN Information Fair at Headquarters from 22 to 25 October 1996, bringing together, for the seventh consecutive year, most UN programmes and organizations and providing a forum to acquaint the public with their activities. The Department continued to respond to an increasing number of inquiries from the public by answering individual questions, providing fact sheets and making information available on the UN "home page". It planned to open an electronic mail address to the public as an additional channel of communicating UN information.

Education outreach was another area of DPI's efforts, by building on the network of teachers and professors who brought their students for briefings at the United Nations. During the reporting period, DPI developed the capacity to design exhibits utilizing, for the first time, in-house computer-generated designs. The first computer-generated exhibit on UN history and major UN activities was produced for display at the G-7 Summit held in Lyon, France, in June, and was easily adaptable for use elsewhere. In cooperation with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, DPI produced the exhibit "Sports against Drugs" for display at UN premises in New York and Vienna and at the Olympic Village in Atlanta, United States, during the 1996 Olympic Games. It also produced a display for Habitat II which could be modified at minimal cost. Other exhibits the Department provided assistance for included "The Chernobyl Disaster: Ten Years After" and a major exhibit on landmines, both mounted at Headquarters.

DPI's annual training programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries, a six-week programme held at Headquarters, had seen a total of 237 journalists from 124 countries taking part. The 1996 programme took place from 16 September to 24 October with participants from 18 countries. DPI also continued its training activities for Palestinian broadcasters, begun in 1995. On 15 September 1996, 10 Palestinian journalists began a six-week training course at UN Headquarters.

Through its Promotion and Public Services Division, DPI developed thematically integrated information programmes on priority issues before the international community, focusing on the Organization's role in furthering sustainable development, peace and security, democracy, human rights and humanitarian assistance. It did that through such means as producing special publications (for example, Development Update), disseminating promotional packets, developing radio and television products and producing media kits.

In cooperation with UNESCO, DPI continued promoting independent and pluralistic media. As it had done previously for other regions, it organized a seminar for the Arab region in Sana'a, Yemen, from 6 to 11 January 1996.

Since 1994, DPI had focused on the promotion of four major international conferences on development issues: the International Conference on Population and Development (Cairo, Egypt, 1994) [YUN 1994, p. 955], the World Summit for Social Development (Copenhagen, Denmark, 1995) [YUN 1995, p. 1113], the Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing, 1995) [YUN 1995, p. 1169] and Habitat II (Istanbul, Turkey, 1996) (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII). Publicizing the plans of action emanating from those conferences was coordinated by Junic, under the chairmanship of the Assistant Secretary-General. Junic decided in 1996 to establish a working group to coordinate promotional activities on development issues in follow-up to those conferences. For Habitat II, a wide range of print and audio-visual activities were carried out. At the Conference site, the Department prepared an inter-agency exhibit, organized a journalists' encounter and provided press services including media liaison, press releases and radio and television coverage.

Dissemination of information related to peace and security

As requested by General Assembly resolution 50/31 B [YUN 1995, p. 272], DPI's public information initiatives on peace and security focused on three main goals: ensuring a coordinated approach to public information relating to peacekeeping and other field operations; improving the Organization's capacity to reach wider audiences with timely information about the UN role in promoting peace and security; and communicating the message that UN peacemaking and peacekeeping efforts must be complemented by international support for post-conflict reconstruction and sustainable development, respect for human rights and improved governance. As peacemaking, peacekeeping and peace-building efforts had grown in number, size and complexity, the audiences had expanded and channels of communication had multiplied; consequently, efforts to disseminate information had become increasingly complex, requiring speed, volume and immediacy of reporting.

Those factors, said the Secretary-General, had demonstrated the need for a closer working relationship between DPI and the departments and offices dealing with political, peacekeeping and humanitarian issues. An Interdepartmental Working Group on Media Strategies for Peacekeeping and Other Field Operations was established for advance planning of public information components in the field. In addition to DPI, the Departments of Political Affairs, Peacekeeping Operations and Humanitarian Affairs participated in the Working Group. The Group elaborated guidelines for planning, establishing and supporting information components of peacekeeping and other field operations. During 1996, it facilitated interdepartmental consultations on public information issues relating to field missions in Angola, Burundi, Haiti, Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia. It addressed technical and policy questions, such as staffing and budgetary requirements for information components in the field, as well as UN radio and television coverage of missions.

Radio broadcasting options in several mission areas were considered by the Group. There was a growing perception that the United Nations should have an independent capacity for radio broadcasting—the most powerful and effective medium—in mission areas or conflict zones, but lessons learned from several attempts to establish and maintain UN radio stations in peacekeeping missions had proved that that was more easily conceived of than done. Setting up a radio station required support that went beyond frequency attribution or the requisition of a transmitter. It involved staffing, training, programming in relevant languages, building a listenership, interacting with the target population and monitoring and evaluating feedback, and raised political, legal and programmatic questions.

In an effort to benefit from recent UN public information efforts in field missions, DPI participated in lessons-learned exercises on the United Nations Operation in Somalia and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda, as well as in the mid-mission review of the United Nations Mission in Haiti conducted by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO). From those exercises, it became evident that the planning, staffing and supporting of information components of missions needed to be more systematic and focused. In order to arrive at realistic public information objectives and requirements, DPI aimed to ensure that field missions benefited from the input of staff members who had technical expertise and professional experience in broadcasting, publishing and press relations, as well as a clear understanding of the United Nations. DPI was working with DPKO to develop standard operating procedures for public information components in the field, as well as a manual for public information personnel in field missions, based on guidelines adopted by the Interdepartmental Working Group. The Department continued to provide personnel and technical support to peacekeeping missions, and produced and disseminated information materials worldwide through print, broadcasts and the Internet.

Publications

Publications continued to be a DPI priority, given the broad and long-term impact of authoritative, institutional publications on opinion and policy. At the same time, publications were being carefully differentiated to avoid duplication and ensure that their content and approach met the needs of their respective audiences.

In response to a 1995 General Assembly request to review DPI publications to ensure that they fulfilled an identifiable need and did not duplicate other publications inside or outside the UN system and were cost-effective [YUN 1995, p. 272], the Secretary-General presented a report in March 1996 [A/AC.198/1996/3] to the Committee on Information. During 1995, the Assistant Secretary-General for Public Information, together with senior programme managers, undertook a review of the publications programme, with the following considerations in mind: ensuring that each publication had a well-defined target audience; enhancing sales and marketing efforts for those with commercial potential; consolidating products where possible to eliminate duplication; improving cost-effectiveness; and utilizing new technologies for electronic publishing and dissemination.

Important gains were made on several fronts, including the deployment of advanced publishing technology; closer cooperation with substantive units, thus sharpening message and content; a more streamlined editorial process through which different units could use research already done by others; growing use of electronic publishing, thus widening outreach and helping reduce print runs; and greater use of internal reproduction facilities.

Among the recurrent publications was the annual report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization, intended for government officials, media representatives, NGOs and the academic community. It reviewed the work of the Organization in all its primary fields of endeavour. The Yearbook of the United Nations, published annually in a single volume, was the most comprehensive reference book on all aspects of the work of the UN system. The 1994 edition was released on schedule, in April 1996. In August 1995, a Special Edition of the Yearbook was published to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations, highlighting major achievements of the Organization. The magazine UN Chronicle provided, in a journalistic style, an overview of all major UN activities. Sold through subscription, it was also available on-line and through CD-ROM. Updated every two years, Basic Facts gave a concise account of UN operations and the contributions the Organization had made to the major issues facing the international community. The latest version was published in 1995. Everyone's United Nations, last produced in 1986, duplicated much of Basic Facts, and a decision was taken to postpone publication of its next edition, originally scheduled for 1995, pending a review of its status. UN in Brief, a 20-page illustrated pamphlet, was updated regularly and available in all official languages. It was primarily distributed through UNICs and to visitors to the United Nations. Other recurrent publications were Image and Reality, a booklet in question-and-answer format intended to dispel various misconceptions about the Organization's work and financing, and Student Booklet, aimed at secondary-school students.

Among thematic publications issued in 1995 were seven volumes in the United Nations Blue Books Series, launched in December 1994. The series provided UN research and reference materials to scholars, policy makers, journalists and others, and each volume highlighted the role of the United Nations in a major international endeavour. The 1995-1996 publications in the series, issued before the Secretary-General's March report, were: The United Nations and Cambodia, 1991-1995; The United Nations and Nuclear Non-Proliferation; The United Nations and El Salvador, 1990-1995; The United Nations and Mozambique, 1992-1995; The United Nations and Human Rights, 1945-1995; The United Nations and the Advancement of Women, 1945-1995; and The United Nations and Somalia, 1992-1996. The publication Development Update, an eight-page bimonthly, began its third full year of publication in 1996. It covered UN social and economic initiatives with articles on major UN conferences, regional economic programmes and trends affecting the developing countries. Development Business, published in newspaper format twice a month, contained articles about investing in the developing world. It also provided bidding information on economic development projects funded by the United Nations, thus catering to the procurement information needs of Member States' development banks, companies and other organizations. It assisted developing countries and countries in transition in procuring goods and services at competitive prices. The quarterly magazine Africa Recovery was intended to increase international awareness of the critical economic situation in Africa by reporting on regional developments from a UN perspective.

DPI continued to produce a number of non-recurrent publications to promote the work of the United Nations in economic and social development, peacekeeping and peacemaking, human rights and humanitarian assistance. Those publications included information kits, back-grounders, feature articles, reference papers, pamphlets, booklets and posters, aimed at providing succinct, easy-to-read yet authoritative information in formats suitable for use by a variety of audiences, including the media, NGOs and educational institutions. Most of them were published at Headquarters. DPI coordinated its production of non-recurrent publications with relevant substantive departments to ensure accuracy and avoid duplication.

The Publications Board, under the chairmanship of the Assistant Secretary-General, coordinated the 1996-1997 publications programme of the United Nations. The Board met in December 1995 and June 1996 to approve new UN initiatives, including those on publishing in electronic formats. Its Working Committee considered technical matters, including external contracts for publication of UN materials, and reviewed changes in the publications programme with the goal of achieving efficiency savings.

Library services

The Dag Hammarskjöld Library (DHL) made use of advanced technologies to become more cost-efficient and audience-focused. It installed a CD-ROM server capable of sharing more than 15 CD-ROM disks on the Headquarters local area network (LAN). Through link-ups to the LAN and a CD-ROM server, DHL was able to make full text information from outside on-line services and databases concurrently available to Secretariat units. Where access was not possible, DHL made selective dissemination of information available through cc:Mail. Other new services available included two Optical Disk System workstations for DHL users, enabling them to download and/or print the text of UN documents. In July 1996, the Library launched the UN World Wide Web site, presenting an overview of services and collections, as well as on-line research tools with a focus on the Organization and its work. Reference files for UN documentation were posted on the "home page" and could be accessed worldwide. DHL also initiated on-line indexing of UN documentation and was developing a shared indexing network among the libraries of the UN system. As reported in October, seven additional depository libraries were established, bringing the total to 355 libraries in 142 countries and territories.

UN information centres

UN information centres (UNICs)—a global network of over 70 offices—were engaged in reaching out to key audiences to heighten public awareness of, and interest in, the United Nations.

In 1996, that included follow-up activities in connection with the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1995, often with local partners.

The centres continued to build new audiences, focusing on cooperation with major redisseminators, such as educational institutions, national media, UN associations and NGOs, to enhance awareness of the Organization's priority issues. With activities such as "model United Nations" and lectures, the centres extended their outreach to young audiences. In coordination with local UN system partners and others, the centres continued to arrange publication of booklets and other materials, and to organize round tables, press briefings, lectures and special events to help promote the work of the Organization.

The centres devoted special attention to the promotion of economic and social development issues, in particular the main concerns of Habitat II (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII). Arrangements were made with local partners for the training of journalists, publication of newsletters, organization of journalists' encounters and translation into local languages of major UN publications and information material. By the end of the second quarter of 1996, UNICs had disseminated more than 3,000 UN titles, of which approximately 30 per cent were translated into local languages.

The centres co-produced programmes in cooperation with other UN bodies and continued to strengthen their relationships with radio and television organizations and producers to encourage the development and airing of programmes about the Organization. On a daily basis, they responded to an increasing volume of inquiries about the Organization and its work.

The centres made positive strides in applying advanced information technologies to their daily functions. Multimedia presentations, production of CD-ROMs with local partners and creation of local "home pages" on the World Wide Web were gradually becoming part of their operations. The introduction of new technologies resulted in significant savings in external printing and other communications costs.

In a March report [A/AC.1987/1996/2], the Secretary-General stated that the critical financial situation of the Organization had affected the UNICs, particularly limiting travel and the purchase of equipment, including computers, and had slowed progress towards modernizing communication capabilities. In the current financial climate, it would be difficult for DPI to maintain the current level of UNIC activities. Therefore, the financial support provided by several host Governments had been invaluable to UNIC operations.

In keeping with the General Assembly's request, efforts continued to facilitate the integration of UNICs with UNDP field offices whenever feasible, on a case-by-case basis. The objective of integration remained to ensure a unified image of the United Nations in the field, to enhance information activities in all areas, including development issues, and to achieve economies by sharing common services. By March 1996, 15 UNICs were integrated with UNDP offices, and another 15 were operating under the supervision of UNDP resident representatives. All centres carried out their mandates with regular programmatic and administrative guidance from DPI. To avert problems that might arise in the field and to enhance the performance of the integrated centres, a UNDP/DPI working group began meeting monthly in February.

Coordination in the UN system

The Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), an inter-agency committee of representatives to coordinate information activities within the UN system, held its twenty-second session in Geneva from 3 to 5 July 1996 [ACC/1996/13]. It discussed, inter alia, ways to promote public understanding of UN achievements, ongoing JUNIC projects, special events calling for JUNIC participation and inter-agency participation in audio-visual productions. It was agreed that the UN system needed to develop a simple joint message stressing the interrelationship among system members, while preserving the diversity and identity of its different components. Among potential new audiences, JUNIC recognized the importance of the business community as a partner in promoting sustainable development and expressed interest in the business community as a possible source of funding for public information activities.

JUNIC recognized the role played by the Non-Governmental Liaison Service (NGLS) in promoting cooperation between the UN system and the non-governmental community. It endorsed the decision to undertake a strategic review of the NGLS role in the UN system. With regard to requests for UN participation in two international expositions, the 1998 Lisbon (Portugal) Exposition on "The oceans, a heritage for the future" and the 2000 Hannover (Germany) Exposition on "Mankind, nature, technology", JUNIC stated that, in the future, it should be made clear to host authorities from the outset that the United Nations could not allocate any financial resources for participation in international expositions or take part in fund-raising activities. JUNIC agreed to remind the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) of its own decision delegating consideration of UN-system participation in international expositions to JUNIC, in accordance with 1992 ACC guidelines, amended in 1994. JUNIC further reviewed inter-agency participation in UN special events dealing with such topics as the 1996 World Food Summit (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII) and mobilization for the UN System-wide Special Initiative on Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III). Other issues discussed included preparation of a new system-wide film and video catalogue to be available on line, and development of a short-wave radio broadcasting capacity for the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/138 B.

United Nations public information policies and activities

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its primary role in elaborating, coordinating and harmonizing United Nations policies and activities in the field of information,

Also reaffirming that the Secretary-General should ensure that the activities of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, as the focal point for the public information tasks of the United Nations, are strengthened and improved, keeping in view the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the priority areas defined by the General Assembly and the recommendations of the Committee on Information,

Taking note of all the reports of the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee at its eighteenth session,

Encouraging the Secretary-General to develop a concrete plan to continue to enhance the public image of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to membership in the Committee on Information;
2. Recalls its decision to consolidate the role of the Committee as its main subsidiary body mandated to make recommendations relating to the work of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat;
3. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in respect of the public information policies and activities of the United Nations, to implement fully the recommendations contained in paragraph 2 of its resolution 48/44 B of 10 December 1993;
4. Takes note of the reductions in the resources allocated to the Department of Public Information, expresses its concern about the proposals of the Secretary-General on further reductions in the Department's budget which might negatively affect the activities mandated by the General Assembly, and requests the Secretary-General to support the Department of Public Information, in accordance with section II, paragraph 6, of Assembly resolution 50/214 of 23 December 1995;

5. Also takes note of the efforts of the Secretary-General to put into practice the need for an effective public information capacity of the Department of Public Information for the formation and day-to-day functioning of the information components of peace-keeping and other field operations of the United Nations, and requests the Secretariat to continue to ensure the involvement of the Department at the planning stage of such future operations through interdepartmental consultations and coordination with the other substantive departments of the Secretariat;

6. Requests the management of the Department of Public Information to review the Department's publications and proposals for publications to ensure that all publications fulfil an identifiable need, that they do not duplicate other publications inside or outside the United Nations system and that they are produced in a cost-effective manner, and to report thereon to the Committee at its nineteenth session;

7. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General regarding the review of major publications of the Department of Public Information, and urges all efforts to ensure timely production and dissemination of its major publications, in particular the UN Chronicle, the Yearbook of the United Nations, the World Media Handbook and Africa Recovery, maintaining consistent editorial independence and accuracy, taking the necessary measures to ensure that they contain adequate, objective and equitable information about issues before the Organization and reflecting divergent opinions wherever they occur;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to conduct a review of existing publications produced and disseminated by the Department of Public Information in the sphere of development and to renew his efforts to improve existing publications or explore the possibility of alternative publications, in such a manner as to respond to the development-related information needs of people, in accordance with the requirements that the publications fulfil an identifiable need, that they do not duplicate other publications inside or outside the United Nations system and that they are produced in a cost-effective manner;

9. Reaffirms the importance attached by Member States to the role of United Nations information centres in effectively and comprehensively disseminating information in all parts of the world, particularly in developing countries and countries in transition, and especially in those countries where there is a need for greater understanding about United Nations activities;

10. Reaffirms also that United Nations information centres meet the primary objectives outlined by the Committee in its report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

11. Recalls the report of the Secretary-General on the results of the trial of integrating United Nations information centres with field offices of the United Nations system in general, and requests the Secretary-General to continue the integration exercise in a cost-effective manner and whenever feasible, on a case-by-case basis, taking into account the views of the host country and ensuring that the information functions and the autonomy of United Nations information centres are not adversely affected and to report thereon to the Committee;

12. Welcomes the action by some Member States with regard to financial and material support to United Nations information centres in their respective capitals, and invites the Secretary-General, through the Department of Public Information, to consult Member States, where appropriate, on the possibility of providing the centres with additional voluntary support on a national basis;

13. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the allocation of resources to United Nations information centres in 1995, and calls upon him to continue to study ways and means to rationalize and effect equitable disbursement of available resources to all United Nations information centres;

14. Also takes note of the important impact on the functioning and the fulfilment of the objectives of some of the United Nations information centres of the development of new technologies such as the Internet and CD-ROM, and their effect on the dissemination of information, the increase in the number of United Nations depository libraries in some Member States and the increased importance of all concerned actors of the international community in their cooperation with the Organization;

15. Requests the Secretary-General therefore to submit a report to the Committee, for its consideration at its nineteenth session, on United Nations information centres, in particular, on added value, efficiency, cost-effectiveness and avoidance of duplication, especially in the areas of new technologies, with a view to offering recommendations on the review, strengthening and rationalization of their activities;

16. Reaffirms the role of the General Assembly in relation to the opening of new United Nations information centres, and invites the Secretary-General to make such recommendations as he may judge necessary regarding the establishment and location of these centres;

17. Recognizes the continued enhanced cooperation between the Department of Public Information and the University for Peace in Costa Rica as a focal point for promoting United Nations activities and disseminating United Nations information materials;

18. Takes note of the requests of Bulgaria, Gabon, Guinea, Haiti, Kyrgyzstan and Slovakia for information centres or information components;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to conduct an evaluation, within existing resources and without detriment to mandated programmes and activities, through the services of an independent consultant selected after an open and transparent selection process, of the functioning of the Dag Hammarskjöld Library, covering, inter alia, its infrastructure, operations, and all its services and taking advantage of new, cost-effective automated and electronic library information and communication technologies and services and taking into account previous studies on the subject, and to submit a report thereon to the Committee at its nineteenth session;

20. Expresses its full support for the wide and prompt coverage of United Nations activities through a continuation of United Nations press releases in both working languages of the Secretariat, namely, English and French, and stresses the importance of the continued speedy issue and high quality of those press releases in both working languages;

21. Encourages the Secretary-General to explore ways and means to improve the access of United Nations radio to airwaves worldwide, bearing in mind that radio is one of the most cost-effective and far-reaching media available to the Department of Public Information and is an important instrument in United Nations activities, such as development and peacekeeping, in accordance with its resolution 48/44 B;

22. Underlines the continued importance for the Department of Public Information of using traditional and mass media channels in disseminating information on the United Nations, and encourages the Department to take full advantage of recent developments in information technologies, such as the Internet and CD-ROM, in order to improve in a cost-effective, comprehensive and timely manner the dissemination of information on the United Nations, taking into account the linguistic diversity of the Organization;

23. Commends the Department of Public Information for the important role it played in responding to the increased public interest resulting from the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations;

24. Requests the Department of Public Information to continue to ensure the greatest possible access to United Nations guided tours, as well as to ensure that displays in public areas are kept as informative, up to date and relevant as possible;

25. Invites Member States and relevant international organizations to submit to the Secretary-General by 15 March 1997 their observations and suggestions on ways and means of furthering the development of communication infrastructures and capabilities in developing countries, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report thereon to the Committee at its nineteenth session;

26. Recommends, in order to continue to facilitate contact between the Department of Public Information and the Committee between sessions, that the Bureau of the Committee, together with representatives of each regional group, the Group of 77 and China, in close contact with the members of the Committee, should continue to meet on a regular basis and consult at periodic intervals with representatives of the Department;

27. Takes note of the contribution made by Member States, in cooperation with the Department of Public Information and the United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl, to information activities for the tenth anniversary of the Chernobyl disaster, and recalls its resolutions concerning the consequences of the above-mentioned disaster, in particular, resolutions 50/31 B of 6 December 1995 and 50/134 of 20 December 1995, encouraging the regular exchange of information with the countries concerned and with the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, with a view to enhancing world public awareness of the consequences of such disasters;

28. Recognizes the positive role of the regional seminars held at Windhoek, Santiago, Almaty and Sana'a for the promotion of independent and pluralistic media, takes note of the invitation of the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-eighth session, in its resolution 4.6 of 15 November 1995, to cooperate with the Director-General of the Organization in the preparation and organization of a similar regional seminar in 1997 in Central and Eastern Europe, depending on the availability of funding, also takes note of the offer of the Government of Bulgaria to host such a seminar, and invites the Department of Public Information to provide the requested assistance in jointly mobilizing the support of various other voluntary funding sources;

29. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee at its nineteenth session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the activities of the Department of Public Information and on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the present resolution;

30. Decides that the nineteenth session of the Committee should last no more than ten working days, and requests the Bureau of the Committee to explore ways and means of making optimum use of the Committee's time;

31. Requests the Committee to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

32. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Questions relating to information".

General Assembly resolution 51/138 B

13 December 1996 Meeting 83 172-0 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/594) without vote, 7 November (meeting 11); draft by Committee on Information (A/51/21), amended in plenary by Costa Rica, for Group of 77 and China (A/51/L.61); agenda item 87.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 4th Committee 9-11; plenary 83.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Palau, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

During the Assembly's debate, Costa Rica tabled an amendment proposing that the original operative paragraph 29 be deleted and subsequent paragraphs renumbered. By that paragraph, the Assembly would have requested that DPI be provided with an identification of all costs, including estimated man-hours and printing, publishing and material expenditures, arising from mandates contained in resolutions other than the annual resolution of the Assembly as recommended by the Committee on Information. By a recorded vote of 101 to 55, with 5 abstentions, the Assembly adopted the amendment.

Introducing the amendment on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, Costa Rica stated that the paragraph in question would establish a difficult procedure without specifying who would be responsible for its implementation, which in turn could have a negative impact on resolutions relating to DPI. The paragraph contradicted the position that financial considerations should be left up to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee and should not be included in draft resolutions adopted by other Main Committees.

On behalf of the EU, Ireland expressed the view that consensus on the text should be upheld because it had been reached after difficult negotiations in the Committee on Information. The paragraph in question did not contain any hidden implications, but had been included to assist good administrative practice. There was nothing in the paragraph that might, for example, prevent implementation of the DPI special information programme on the question of Palestine. The United States reiterated that view and, noting concern expressed by the Palestinian delegation that paragraph 29 would adversely affect programmes related to Palestinian issues, said that was neither the intention nor the effect of the resolution.

Bulgaria, speaking also in its capacity as Chairman of the Committee on Information, supported the statements by Ireland and the United States and stated that the proposed amendment, coming at such a late stage, could have a negative impact on the Committee's future work. The Russian Federation and Ukraine also expressed regret that the consensus had been broken.

World Television Day

On 21 and 22 November, the first World Television Forum was held at the United Nations. Leading media figures from more than 50 countries met under UN auspices to discuss the growing significance of television and to consider how they might enhance future cooperation. Italy, by a 5 December letter to the Secretary-General [A/51/235], forwarded an explanatory memorandum on the Forum and a draft resolution on the proclamation of a World Television Day. According to the memorandum, the representatives of the broadcasters—both private and public—discussed the increasing impact television had on decision-making by alerting world attention to international conflicts and threats to peace and security and television's potential role in sharp-ening the focus on other major—including economic, social and cultural—issues. It was also recognized that the United Nations faced increasing demands to address the major issues facing mankind and that television could play a role in presenting those issues to the public.

Italy felt that it would be appropriate for the General Assembly to recognize a day on which special attention would be given by broadcasters to issues facing the international community.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/205.

Proclamation of 21 November as World Television Day

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 13(I) of 13 February 1946, in which it stated, inter alia, that the United Nations cannot achieve its purposes unless the peoples of the world are fully informed of its aims and activities,

Recalling also its resolutions concerning information in service of humanity and United Nations public information policies and activities,

Reaffirming its commitment to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to the principles of freedom of information, as well as to those of the independence, pluralism and diversity of the media,

Underlining that communications have become one of today's central international issues, not only for their relevance for the world economy, but also for their implications for social and cultural development,

Recognizing the increasing impact that television has on decision-making by alerting world attention to conflicts and threats to peace and security and its potential role in sharpening the focus on other major issues, including economic and social issues,

Underlining that the United Nations faces ever-increasing demands to address the major issues facing humankind and that television, as one of today's most powerful communications media, could play a role in presenting these issues to the world,

Noting with satisfaction the holding at Headquarters, on 21 and 22 November 1996, of the first World Television Forum, where leading media figures met under the auspices of the United Nations to discuss the growing significance of television in today's changing world and to consider how they might enhance their mutual cooperation,

1. Decides to proclaim 21 November World Television Day, commemorating the date on which the first World Television Forum was held;
2. Invites all Member States to observe World Television Day by encouraging global exchanges of television programmes focusing, among other things, on such issues as peace, security, economic and social development and the enhancement of cultural exchange;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Governments and appropriate non-governmental organizations.

General Assembly resolution 51/205

17 December 1996

Meeting 88

141-0-11

147-nation draft (A/51/L.60 &amp; Add.1); agenda item 164.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Estonia, Fiji, France, Gabon, Georgia, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Palau, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Czech Republic, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Haiti,* Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Explaining its abstention, the United States said the resolution was unneeded and unnecessary and the proclamation of 21 November as World Television Day was a doubtful expenditure of time and energy; a commemorative day that did not have the concept of facilitating the free and uncensored flow of information and ideas to ordinary people around the world ran the risk of providing legitimacy for those who would misuse television as a tool of repression and control. The Netherlands felt that the resolution did not address an issue important enough to be discussed by the Assembly, but only added another so-called special day to the seemingly endless list of days, mostly of questionable use. Further, paragraph 2 of the text could be considered as requesting Member Governments to influence the contents of television programmes, which was against the basic values and convictions of the Netherlands. Although welcoming the World Television Forum, Germany noted that there were already three UN days encompassing similar subjects; also, television was only one means of information and an information medium to which the poor majority of the world population had no access. Germany also considered paragraph 2 to be ambiguous and giving rise to concern that it would have negative implications for freedom of the press.

Cuba stated that it voted for the resolution as the proclamation of World Television Day should serve as a point of departure and a time of reflection on those peoples and nations that did not even know what television was, on those who did not have access to a well-balanced flow of information, and on those subjected to television signals intended to undermine their territorial integrity, sovereignty and freely chosen political and social system and broadcast in violation of the most basic norms of international telecommunications treaties. Cuba was confident that the Day would stimulate promotion of the fact that television should always benefit the oppressed and the needy, and not the wealthy and powerful nations.

France believed that the initiative to proclaim World Television Day opened a door which should be explored for two reasons: for the United Nations, as it needed to be better known through the exceptional medium of television, and for world television itself. Cooperation between television and the United Nations should serve both.

Peaceful uses of outer space

In 1996, issues relating to international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space were again considered by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on outer space) and its Scientific and Technical and Legal Subcommittees. At its thirty-ninth session (Vienna, 3-14 June), the Committee discussed ways of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes and spin-off benefits of space technology, and reviewed the work of the Subcommittees.

In December, the General Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the Committee for its future work, including that of its Subcommittees. The Assembly also adopted the Declaration on International Cooperation in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space for the Benefit and in the Interest of All States, Taking into Particular Account the Needs of Developing Countries, approved by the Committee.

Space science and technology

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee of the Committee on outer space, at its thirty-third session (Vienna, 12-23 February) [A/AC.105/637 & Corr.1], reviewed the UN Programme on Space Applications, coordination of space activities within the UN system and implementation of the recommendations of the Second (1982) United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82) [YUN 1982, p. 162]. The Subcommittee also dealt with matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites, including applications for developing countries; the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; space debris; space transportation; the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit and its utilization for space communications; life sciences, including space medicine; space activities related to the Earth environment; planetary exploration; astronomy; and the use of small satellites for the expansion of low-cost space activities.

Implementation of the recommendations of UNISPACE-82

In August 1996 [A/51/276], the Secretary-General, as requested by General Assembly resolution 50/27 [YUN 1995, p. 282], reported on implementation of the recommendations of UNISPACE-82. The Committee on outer space, its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee and the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space considered the question during their 1996 sessions. The Subcommittee endorsed the recommendations of the Working Group as annexed to its report [A/AC.105/637 & Corr.1].

The Working Group noted that training courses and workshops in remote sensing, satellite communications and other topics had been organized for the benefit of developing countries with UN assistance, and recommended that such courses on advanced applications of space science and technology and on new technological developments should continue to be organized regularly. It also recommended that the recent advances in space technologies and applications for development be brought to the attention of planners, administrators and decision makers in developing countries. Particularly the developed Member States and international organizations were requested to support the training programme on an ongoing basis. In addition, the Working Group recommended that the reports prepared by the Office for Outer Space Affairs on the resources and technological capabilities of States in space activities, as well as in the areas of education, training, research and fellowship opportunities for the promotion of cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space, should continue to be periodically updated. The Group recommended that the Committee request all States, particularly those with major space capabilities, to inform the Secretary-General about those activities that could be the subject of greater international cooperation, with particular emphasis on the needs of developing countries.

Another recommendation of the Working Group called for further studies by the Office for Outer Space Affairs, with emphasis on developing countries' needs, on space technology applications for preventing and mitigating the effects of natural disasters and on the use of new technologies in communications and information networks. In order to promote national space programmes, the United Nations should continue to arrange, on request, for expert consultants to assist in preparing national plans for initiating, strengthening or reorienting space applications programmes, in conformity with other national development programmes.

As for the UNISPACE-82 recommendation regarding free exchange of scientific and technological information and the transfer of technologies to promote the use of space technology in the developing countries, the Working Group said a greater international understanding needed to evolve to overcome the difficulties faced by developing countries in that regard. Among other priorities emanating from UNISPACE-82 were the promotion of a greater exchange of experiences in space applications; UN support for the full implementation of the Programme on Space Applications; and voluntary cash and in-kind contributions for Programme activities.

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, in considering implementation of UNISPACE-82 recommendations, noted that the Assembly had specifically mentioned the following as needing urgent attention: all countries should have the opportunity to use the techniques resulting from medical studies in space; national and regional data banks should be expanded and an international space information service established; the United Nations should support the creation of regional training centres, with funding made available through financial institutions; and the United Nations should organize a fellowship programme for advanced students from developing countries. The Subcommittee adopted the Working Group's report on the understanding that its recommendations would be carried out in accordance with the UNISPACE-82 recommendations.

Endorsing the Working Group's recommendations, the Committee on outer space noted the conclusion that many of the UNISPACE-82 recommendations had not been fully implemented and the disappointment expressed by developing countries at the lack of financial resources to implement those recommendations fully.

UN Programme on Space Applications

In accordance with its 1982 mandate [GA res. 37/90], the UN Programme on Space Applications continued to focus on developing indigenous capabilities in space science and technology, through the provision of fellowships for training and technical advisory services; organizing regional and international training courses and conferences; assisting in disseminating space-related information; and promoting cooperation between developed and developing countries.

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considered the report of the UN Expert on Space Applications [A/AC.105/625] and noted that the Programme on Space Applications for 1995 had been carried out satisfactorily. The Subcommittee noted that some of the activities it had endorsed at its previous session had had to be postponed to 1996 because of the UN financial situation. It continued to express concern over the still limited financial resources available for the Programme and appealed to Member States for support. The Committee on Outer Space also expressed concern over the Programme's financial resources and appealed for voluntary contributions. The Committee noted that the Programme was the priority activity of the Office for Outer Space Affairs.

In 1996, 10 training courses, workshops, expert meetings and symposia, on the regional and international level, were scheduled in cooperation with the host Governments. The Programme received 15 long-term fellowship offers for 1995-1996, with Brazil offering 10 in the field of remote-sensing technology and the European Space Agency (ESA) offering 5 in several areas of study. For 1996-1997, ESA offered five long-term fellowships.

Technical advisory services were provided by the Programme in support of regional space applications projects. Such assistance was provided to Ecuador in promoting the regional operation, administration and funding of the remote-sensing receiving station in Cotopaxi; to Chile in its follow-up, as pro tempore secretariat, of the recommendations of the Second Space Conference of the Americas; and to the Republic of Korea in establishing the Asia-Pacific Satellite Communications Council. The Programme included collaboration with ESA in several areas. One project was to address a recommendation of the 1993 Dakar Regional Conference on Space Technology for Sustainable Development in Africa, regarding the need to establish a communications network among African and European scientists, professionals, educators and decision makers. Other collaboration was in follow-up activities to the November 1995 training course on remote-sensing applications for natural resources, renewable energy and the environment (Frascati, Italy). Collaboration with ESA also included follow-up activities relating to the workshop series on basic space science.

In 1996, the Programme co-sponsored the participation of scientists from developing countries in the Thirty-first Scientific Assembly of the Committee on Space Research (COSPAR) (Birmingham, United Kingdom, 14-21 July) and the UN/International Astronautical Federation (IAF)/ESA workshop on space technology and application in the developing world (Beijing, 3-6 October). Proposals were made for five workshops and training courses in 1997.

In order to facilitate the development of indigenous capability, as had been recommended by UNISPACE-82, regional centres for space science and technology education were being established. In 1995, the General Assembly had endorsed [GA res. 50/27] the Committee's recommendation that those centres be established on the basis of affiliation to the United Nations as early as possible. The Committee noted that the Centre for Space Science and Technology Education in Asia and the Pacific had been inaugurated in India in November 1995 and its first education programme began in April 1996. Brazil and Mexico were nearing agreement on a centre in Latin America and the Caribbean. Offers were made by Morocco and Nigeria, respectively, to establish, operate and sustain a centre for French-speaking African countries and for English-speaking African countries. Discussions were in progress on the establishment of such a centre in western Asia, and Jordan, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic had indicated their interest in hosting it. Bulgaria, the Czech Republic, Greece, Hungary, Poland, Romania and Turkey had agreed to establish an educational system consisting of a network of space science and technology education institutions, with the activities of each member of the network being in harmony with existing institutions in Europe and open to international cooperation. Those countries agreed that a group of experts should be established under the aegis of the Office for Outer Space Affairs in order to prepare a technical study of a framework for and modalities of such a network.

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/123 (see below), endorsed the 1997 UN Programme on Space Applications, as proposed by the Expert on Space Applications.

Remote sensing

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee continued in 1996 its consideration of matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites, including applications for developing countries. It reviewed national and cooperative programmes in remote sensing, particularly exam-pies of national programmes in developing and developed countries and of international programmes based on bilateral, regional and international cooperation, including programmes of technical cooperation between developing countries. Argentina, Australia, Austria, Brazil, Canada, China, France, Germany, India, Indonesia, Japan, Morocco, the Russian Federation, Ukraine, the United States and ESA continued their programmes for remote-sensing satellites. The Subcommittee noted that the launches of the European Remote Sensing (ERS-2) satellite and the RADARSAT satellite of Canada would provide valuable microwave data to complement previously launched European and Japanese satellites, as well as visible and infra-red data from other satellites. Other remote-sensing systems were being developed for future launch, including by Argentina, Canada, China, India, Japan and the Russian Federation and some joint programmes (Brazil/China and Japan/United States).

The Subcommittee reiterated its view that remote-sensing activities should take into account the need to provide non-discriminatory assistance to meet the needs of developing countries. Emphasizing the importance of making remote-sensing data and analysed information available to all countries at reasonable cost and in a timely manner, the Subcommittee also recognized the example of international cooperation in the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) in the exchange of meteorological data. Those countries which had freely and openly provided meteorological satellite data were encouraged to continue to do so.

International cooperation in the use of remote-sensing satellites should be encouraged, the Subcommittee said, through coordination of the operations of ground stations and through meetings between satellite operators and users. Continuity in the acquisition of data was important, as was the sharing of experiences and technologies, cooperation through international and regional remote-sensing centres, and joint work on collaborative projects. The Subcommittee noted the value of remote-sensing systems for environmental monitoring and, in that context, stressed the need for the international community to utilize remote-sensing data in an effort to implement the recommendations contained in Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672] of the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

The Committee on outer space also noted the importance, particularly for developing countries, of sharing experiences and technologies, of cooperating through international and regional remote-sensing centres and of working on collaborative projects. In that connection, it noted that the Middle East and African Remote Sensing International Symposium on Space Remote Sensing for the Environment had been held in Ifrane, Morocco, in 1995. It recognized the importance of ongoing international efforts to ensure the continuity, compatibility and complementarity of systems for remote sensing and to promote cooperation through meetings of satellite operators, ground-station operators and users. The Committee also agreed with the Subcommittee on the value of remote-sensing systems for environmental monitoring and on the importance of making the data widely available. In addition, the Committee endorsed the Subcommittee's recommendation that the item on remote sensing by satellites be retained on the Subcommittee's agenda as a priority item.

Nuclear power sources

As in previous years, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considered the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. Recalling that the General Assembly in 1992 had adopted the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space [GA res. 47/68], the Subcommittee noted that the Committee on outer space in 1995 had agreed that the Principles should remain in their current form until amended and that consideration should be given to the aims and objectives of any proposed revision. The Subcommittee agreed that, at the current time, revision of the Principles was not warranted.

As requested by Assembly resolution 50/27 [YUN 1995, p. 282], the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space was reconvened on 21 February 1996. No further work was undertaken in the Working Group during the Subcommittee's session.

In a statement to the Subcommittee, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) emphasized that it was important that the safety principles for nuclear power sources in outer space should be consistent with the most recent international recommendations on radiation protection, which were based on the International Basic Safety Standards for Protection against Ionizing Radiation and for the Safety of Radiation Sources, jointly adopted by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), IAEA, the International Labour Organization (ILO), the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (Nuclear Energy Agency) and the Pan American Health Organization. The Subcommittee noted that the new safety practice document on emergency planning and preparedness for re-entry of a nuclear-powered satellite had been approved by IAEA and was due to be published in its final form in 1996.

Mindful of the differences in the safety principles applied for space and the safety standards for terrestrial systems, the Subcommittee agreed that a study of those developments, arising from the latest International Commission on Radiological Protection recommendations, should be continued.

In response to the Assembly's request for information on the problem of collisions of space objects, including those with nuclear power sources, with space debris, Canada, Chile, Germany, Japan and the United Kingdom had submitted information to the Subcommittee. Working papers were submitted by the United Kingdom on the interpretation and development of safety principles for nuclear power sources in space and by the Russian Federation on the problem of collisions between nuclear power sources in space and space debris. The Subcommittee took note of a view expressed on principles for nuclear power sources in space, as contained in the working paper submitted by the United Kingdom, namely, that further discussions should be held on concepts such as risk justification, maximum tolerable risk, risk reduction and the numerical values related to those.

The Subcommittee agreed that Member States should continue to be invited to report to the Secretary-General on national and international research concerning the safety of space objects with nuclear power sources, and that further studies, to be reported to the Subcommittee, should be conducted on the collision of orbiting space objects with nuclear power sources on board with space debris.

The Committee on outer space agreed with the findings of the Subcommittee, including that revision of the Principles was not currently warranted and that discussions on the issue should continue. The Committee considered that IAEA participation was a useful contribution to its work and was desirable for future sessions of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies. The Committee agreed with the Subcommittee that study of the different safety principles regarding nuclear power sources should be continued.

Space debris

The item on space debris was put on the agenda of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee in 1994 and a multi-year work plan adopted in 1995 for specific topics to be covered during 1996-1998. Space debris was understood to be inactive man-made objects, such as spent upper stages, spent satellites, fragments or parts generated during launch or mission operations, or fragments from explosions and other break-ups. In accordance with its multi-year plan, the Subcommittee in 1996 focused its attention on measurements of space debris, understanding of data and effects of that environment on space systems.

The Subcommittee agreed that international cooperation was needed to expand affordable strategies to minimize the potential impact of space debris on future space missions. Stating that it would be desirable to compile information on steps taken by space agencies for reducing the growth or damage potential of space debris and to encourage common acceptance by the international community on a voluntary basis, the Subcommittee noted with appreciation the report prepared by the Secretariat on the subject [A/AC.105/620] and recommended that it be updated annually. The Subcommittee took note of programmes of some Member States (Canada, Germany, Japan, Russian Federation, United States) and organizations, including ESA, on the acquisition and understanding of data on the characteristics of the space debris environment, and on measuring, modelling and mitigating the orbital debris environment. The Subcommittee noted that cooperation continued through the Inter-Agency Space Debris Coordination Committee, with the participation of Japan, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) of the United States, ESA and the Russian Space Agency (RSA), and since 1995 the Chinese National Space Agency, to enable its members to exchange information on space debris activities, facilitate cooperation in space debris research and identify debris mitigation options.

The Subcommittee agreed that Member States should pay more attention to the problem of collisions of space objects, that national research on space debris should continue and that the results of that research should be made available to all interested parties. France, Germany, the United Kingdom, the United States and ESA made scientific and technical presentations on space debris to the Subcommittee, and the Russian Federation submitted a working paper on its work on the problem of the technogenic pollution of near space. The Subcommittee said the research already undertaken had allowed for a better understanding of the sources of debris, the areas in near-Earth orbit that were reaching high levels of space debris density, the probabilities and effects of collisions and the necessity of minimizing the creation of space debris.

The Committee on outer space endorsed many of the Subcommittee's findings and agreed that it should continue its consideration of space debris as a priority matter.

Space transportation

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee at its 1996 session considered space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space, reviewing national and international cooperative programmes in such systems, including expendable launchers, reusable space shuttles and space stations. In particular, it noted that China was continuing to develop its Long March series of launch vehicles; that India was continuing development of the Geostationary Satellite Launch Vehicle and had launched the Polar Satellite Launch Vehicle; that Japan had introduced into service its H-II launch vehicle, had launched the J-1 launch vehicle and was continuing development of the H-IIA and M-V vehicles; that the Russian Federation had launched space objects of various types using expendable launchers and had sent a number of national and international crews to the Mir space station; that Ukraine, in cooperation with the Russian Federation, was producing and using two types of rocket launchers; that the United Kingdom was cooperating with ESA in its Future European Space Transportation Investigation Programme; that the United States was continuing its programme of expendable launchers and flights of the reusable space shuttle, many involving international participation; that Canada, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United States and ESA were continuing preparations on the international space station programme; and that ESA was continuing to develop the Ariane series of launch vehicles.

The Subcommittee took note of developments in the United States commercial launch industry, including expendable vehicles, and the reusable launch vehicle technology programme. It also took note of the automatic landing flight experiment and a study of an experimental unmanned winged vehicle of Japan. In addition, it noted developments in the Russian Federation, including improved and ecologically clean launchers and airborne launched systems, as well as the introduction into the Russian space transportation system of launchers that were based on converted ballistic missiles.

The Subcommittee and the Committee on outer space stressed the importance of international cooperation in space transportation in order to provide all countries with access to the benefits of space science and technology.

The Committee took note of the progress being achieved in various programmes by China, India, Japan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine, the United Kingdom, the United States and ESA, and of recent developments in the launch vehicle industry.

Technical aspects of the geostationary orbit

In its examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit and its utilization and applications, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee reviewed national and international cooperative programmes in satellite communications, in particular technology that would make satellite communications more accessible and less expensive and increase the communications capacity of the geostationary orbit and the electromagnetic spectrum. The Subcommittee took note of the growing use of communications satellite systems for telecommunications, television broadcasting, data networks, environmental data relay, mobile communications, disaster warning and relief, telemedicine and other communications functions.

Some Subcommittee members expressed the view that the geostationary orbit was a limited natural resource and that saturation should be avoided in order to ensure that all countries had non-discriminatory access to it. Those delegations felt that a special sui generis legal regime was required to ensure equitable access by all States, particularly developing countries. Some expressed the view that in considering the question of equitable access, account should be taken of the geographic situation of the equatorial countries, while others believed that a geostationary satellite, like all satellites, was attracted by the entire body of the Earth and that, therefore, it could not be said that the phenomenon of a geostationary satellite was linked to gravitational phenomena produced uniquely in the plane of the terrestrial equator. Some delegations noted that the use of the geostationary orbit, like other orbits, was affected by the problem of space debris and that efforts were needed to minimize the generation of debris in the orbit and to move satellites shortly before the end of their useful lives into disposal orbits beyond the geostationary orbit.

The Committee on outer space noted that delegations had reiterated views concerning the geostationary orbit that had been reflected in earlier reports of the Committee and its two Subcommittees. The Committee expressed its appreciation to the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) for submitting its annual progress report on telecommunication and the peaceful uses of outer space [A/AC.105/634].

Legal aspects of the geostationary orbit were considered by the Legal Subcommittee (see below).

Space and Earth environment

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee continued in 1996 its consideration of progress in national and international space activities related to the Earth environment, in particular progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme. The Subcommittee noted the progress being made through international cooperation in that programme, with the participation of many countries. It noted that such a joint international effort was important for managing natural resources, and that there was a need to involve as many countries as possible in the scientific activities of the programme, in both developed and developing countries. Other important contributions of satellite remote sensing were noted—for environmental monitoring, planning sustainable development, water-resource development, monitoring crop conditions, and predicting and assessing drought. The Subcommittee also noted the progress made in India in climate modelling, monsoon dynamics, atmospheric chemistry and radiation, and land, air and ocean interaction. The important contribution of meteorological and atmospheric research satellites was noted for studying global climate change, the greenhouse effect, the degradation of the ozone layer and other global environmental processes. A number of previously launched satellites were useful for that purpose, as would be planned spacecraft voyages. The Subcommittee noted the need for further space research relating to climate change, weather patterns, vegetation distribution, storm and flood risk and other environmental factors.

The Committee on outer space agreed that it could promote international cooperation in the applications of space technologies for environmental monitoring and sustainable development. In particular, it felt that the UN Programme on Space Applications could play an important role in assisting developing countries in strengthening their capabilities in related space technologies and applications, particularly in reducing poverty and enhancing rural development.

Spin-off benefits

The Committee on outer space agreed that spin-offs of space technology were yielding substantial benefits in many fields and took note of the efforts in many Member States to develop such spin-off benefits and to disseminate information on such activities to interested countries. Spin-offs had led to new techniques in industrial measurement and control, image and data processing, human health and telemedicine, computer systems, aviation, meteorology, robotics, power generation, special materials and chemicals, water treatment, public safety, consumer goods, manufacturing and refrigeration. Recent spin-offs included a lightweight metal cutter for emergency rescue operations, an automotive assembly fastener, a catalyst to convert carbon monoxide to carbon dioxide, a portable ultraviolet indicator, a new greenhouse for agricultural crops, new foods and medicines and honeycomb fire-proof insulation material. The Committee remarked on the growing importance of international cooperation in developing spin-off benefits and in ensuring that all countries, in particular developing countries, had access to those benefits.

The Committee reiterated its 1993 recommendation that the UN Programme on Space Applications consider devoting at least one of its training courses or meetings each year to the promotion of spin-off benefits from space, and it expressed satisfaction that, pursuant to that recommendation, the Programme had organized the United Nations/United States of America International Conference on Spin-off Benefits of Space Technology: Challenges and Opportunities (Colorado Springs, 9-12 April 1996) [A/AC.105/642].

The Committee believed that further efforts should be made to promote space activities for sustainable development and for improving the quality of life on Earth and that the conversion of military industries to productive uses would facilitate the transfer and use of space technologies and their spin-off benefits. It acknowledged a need to examine ways of strengthening international cooperation by improving the access of all countries to spin-off benefits, particularly those through which the social and economic needs of developing countries could be addressed.

The Committee noted with interest Ukraine's proposal to utilize the Evpatoria Centre of Deep Science Communication as the basis for a new international centre for space research that could be used by the UN Programme on Space Applications for its activities as a way of strengthening international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space. The Committee agreed that micro-satellite technologies were particularly important in that regard as they could provide substantial spin-off benefits at a lower cost than other satellite technologies.

Micro- and small satellites

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/27 [YUN 1995, p. 282], the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee in 1996 paid special attention to the utilization of micro- and small satellites for the expansion of low-cost space activities, taking into account the special needs of developing countries. The Subcommittee noted with satisfaction that, at its invitation, COSPAR and IAF had organized a symposium on the theme (Vienna, 12-13 February).

The Subcommittee noted the fact that as a consequence of the evolution of space-related technologies, in particular microelectronics, power generation and storage, as well as propulsion technology, micro- and small satellites could make significant space capabilities accessible to a wide range of users, including students in secondary schools and universities and engineers and scientists in many countries. It regarded small satellite projects as ideal for extensive international cooperation, as relatively sophisticated technological experiments as well as application missions could be flown in space at modest costs. Particular application areas included space physics, astronomy, astrophysics, technology demonstrations, communications and data relay experiments, and acquisition of Earth resource data, including disaster-related information. In the Subcommittee's view, small satellites represented an excellent method for training students, engineers and scientists in different disciplines, including engineering, computer software development, and management of sophisticated technical programmes. Among the difficulties in promoting the use of small satellite technology for developing countries was a low awareness of policy-making officials and the general public of the importance and benefits of a national space programme, as well as a lack of trained local personnel, the Subcommittee stated. It recommended that more activities of the Programme on Space Applications be devoted to the topic.

Coordination in the UN system

In 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 282], the General Assembly had requested all UN bodies and other intergovernmental organizations working in the field of outer space or related matters to cooperate in implementing the recommendations of UNISPACE-82 (see above). In that connection, the Committee on outer space, in its 1996 report to the Assembly, noted with appreciation the cooperation in its work by UN bodies and other international organizations. Those UN bodies with extensive space-related programmes that were contributing to implementing UNISPACE-82 recommendations were the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), UNDP, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), UNESCO, the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), FAO, ITU and WMO. The Secretary-General outlined their programmes in his report on coordination of outer space activities within the UN system for 1996-1997 [A/AC.105/631]. The programmes and projects of UN organizations were coordinated at annual inter-agency meetings. At its seventeenth session (Vienna, 7-9 February 1996) [A/AC.105/630], the Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities agreed that the use of advanced information technologies, in particular the Internet, should be expanded as a means of strengthening inter-agency coordination and that the Office for Outer Space Affairs could serve as a coordinating node for accessing space-related information of UN bodies.

The Committee on outer space found that the reports submitted by UN organizations helped to enable it and its subsidiary bodies to fulfil their role as a focal point for international cooperation in space, especially with respect to the practical applications of space science and technology in developing countries.

Convening of a third UNISPACE

As recommended by General Assembly resolution 50/27 [YUN 1995, p. 282], the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, through its Working Group of the Whole, considered the organization of a third UN Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE III) prior to the turn of the century, including technical and political objectives, a detailed agenda, funding, timing and organizational aspects, as well as other means to achieve the goals set for the conference.

The Committee on outer space considered the matter and agreed that a special session of the Committee, open to all UN Members (UNISPACE III), should be convened in Vienna in 1999, unless it decided the year 2000 was more appropriate depending on agreement on an agenda. The Committee agreed to act as the Preparatory Committee for UNISPACE III, with the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee acting as the Advisory Committee and the Office for Outer Space Affairs acting as the executive secretariat.

The Committee requested the Advisory Committee, at its 1997 session, to finalize the agenda and decide on a specific date for the special session, taking into account the objectives agreed upon by the Working Group [A/AC.105/637]. The Working Group had defined as the basic objective of the proposed UNISPACE III to promote effective means of using space technology to assist in solving problems of regional or global significance and to strengthen the capabilities of Member States, in particular developing countries, to use the applications of space research for economic, social and cultural development.

The Committee further requested the Advisory Committee to work out organizational aspects of the conference and a schedule of events and recommended that it outline the desired form of participation of international, regional and other governmental and non-governmental organizations in the preparations. Prior to the 1997 session of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, the Secretariat should provide details of the venue, the financial basis for the planning and execution of the conference and other information, in order to assist the Subcommittee in its role as the Advisory Committee. The Committee stated a need to provide the Subcommittee with some further guidelines to assist it in that role, as well as a need for a sufficiently detailed agenda to allow the Subcommittee to invite international organizations to become involved in the planning and the preparatory activities, as well as in supporting the event in kind or financially.

Other questions

The Committee on outer space and its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considered other space-related questions, including life sciences and space medicine. The Subcommittee noted that studies of human and animal physiology under the microgravity conditions of space flight had led to important advances in medical knowledge in such areas as blood circulation, sensory perception, immunology and the effects of cosmic radiation. New information in those fields had been obtained through experiments on the Mir space station, particularly during a 1995 joint ESA-Russian mission, during the first long-duration flight of a woman cosmonaut, during the first flight of a United States astronaut aboard the Mir space station and during two docking missions of the United States space shuttle with the Mir space station. Important data were gathered during several United States space shuttle missions, in particular on microgravity. The Subcommittee noted that applications of space technologies were demonstrating growing promise in medicine and public health on Earth. In that connection, it noted that Portuguese specialists had studied a new "vibration disease" that occurred after prolonged stays in specific industrial, aeronautical and spatial environments. Products of space biotechnology, such as pharmaceutical and medical instruments, could have applications for improved health care. The Subcommittee encouraged further research and exchange of information on those applications, and called for international cooperation to enable all countries to benefit from those advances.

The Subcommittee, continuing its consideration of planetary exploration and astronomy, noted that several planetary exploration missions were currently under way. The Galileo spacecraft had entered into the orbit of Jupiter and sent a probe into Jupiter's atmosphere. The ESA Ulysses spacecraft, following its swing-by trajectory from Jupiter, was studying the solar polar regions that had not been previously investigated. Other missions were planned for studying Mars, the Moon, Saturn, asteroids and comets. Noting the high degree of international cooperation in all those investigations, the Subcommittee stressed the need to enable all countries to benefit from and participate in those activities.

The Subcommittee noted that the use of spacecraft for making astronomical observations from above the atmosphere had greatly advanced knowledge of the universe by allowing observations in all regions of the electromagnetic spectrum. A number of telescopes, observatories and satellites had contributed to the expanded knowledge, and the Subcommittee noted with satisfaction that those projects were open to broad international cooperation.

Space law

The Legal Subcommittee of the Committee on outer space, at its thirty-fifth session (Vienna, 18-28 March) [A/AC.105/639], continued its review and possible revision of the 1992 Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space [GA res. 47/68]; matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit; and legal aspects of the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries.

The Committee on outer space [A/51/20] took note with appreciation of the Legal Subcommittee's report.

Nuclear power sources

Continuing its review of the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, adopted by the General Assembly in 1992 [GA res. 47/68], the Legal Subcommittee concurred with the view of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee (see above) that revision of the Principles was not warranted at the current time. The Subcommittee also agreed that consideration by its Working Group on the subject should again be suspended for one year, pending the results of the work in the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, unless sufficient progress was made by that Subcommittee in 1997 to warrant reconvening the Group. The item would be retained on the Legal Subcommittee's agenda to give delegations an opportunity to discuss it in plenary meetings.

The Committee on outer space endorsed those recommendations and agreed that the Principles would remain valid for the time being, with the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considering the need for revision in the light of changing technology before the Legal Subcommittee or the Committee undertook any actual revision.

Geostationary orbit and definition of outer space

The Legal Subcommittee continued through a working group to consider matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including ways to ensure the rational and equitable use of that orbit without prejudice to the role of ITU. It noted that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, at its 1996 session, had dealt with certain scientific aspects of the geostationary orbit (see above). The Legal Subcommittee had before it a working paper submitted by Colombia on some considerations concerning the utilization of the geostationary orbit, and replies from Member States [A/AC.105/635 & Add.1.2] to a questionnaire that it had finalized in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 281] containing their views on possible legal issues with regard to aerospace objects. The Subcommittee endorsed the recommendations of the Working Group that the Secretariat encourage those States members of the Committee on outer space who wished to submit replies to do so as early as possible; that the Secretariat prepare in time for the Subcommittee's 1997 session a comprehensive analysis of the replies received in order to assist the Working Group in its deliberations; and that the Secretariat, in cooperation with the ITU secretariat, provide for the next session of the Working Group an analysis of the compatibility of the approach contained in Colombia's working paper with the existing ITU rules and procedures relating to the use of the geostationary orbit. The Committee on outer space agreed with the last of those recommendations.

Noting the work of the Subcommittee and its Working Group, the Committee remarked on the variety of views expressed on the definition and delimitation of outer space, which were elaborated on during the 1996 Committee session. Some delegations reiterated that a conventionally defined boundary between airspace and outer space was needed and that the Legal Subcommittee should continue to consider the question, with a view to establishing such a boundary.

In that regard, the view was expressed that a delimitation between airspace and outer space was necessary in order to establish which activities would be governed under the sovereignty of States and which under the res communis omnium. Other delegations believed that attempts to establish a boundary prematurely might complicate and impede progress in the peaceful exploration and use of outer space. Still others noted that the lack of any definition/delimitation had not precluded international cooperation in sharing frequencies and orbital positions which had been established in a satisfactory manner by ITU.

The Committee recognized that space debris was a cause for concern in the geostationary orbit, as well as in lower orbits. Some delegations believed that the topic of space debris should be included in the agenda of the Legal Subcommittee, while others found that premature in view of the many technical issues that needed to be dealt with first in the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee.

Exploration of outer space

The Legal Subcommittee again considered, through a working group, the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries. The Subcommittee had before it two working papers on the topic and another, informal, working paper representing a merger of the other two as a result of extensive informal consultations.

The Committee on outer space took note with satisfaction of the consolidated text and held informal consultations of its own on the basis of that text. At that time, the Chairman of the Working Group submitted a text containing a draft declaration. The Committee was able to reach a consensus on the basis of that text, recommending that the Assembly adopt it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/122.

Declaration on International Cooperation in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space for the Benefit and in the Interest of All States, Taking into Particular Account the Needs of Developing Countries

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the work of its thirty-ninth session and the text of the Declaration on International Cooperation in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space for the Benefit and in the Interest of All States, Taking into Particular Account the Needs of Developing Countries, as approved by the Committee and annexed to its report,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling notably the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

Recalling also its relevant resolutions relating to activities in outer space,

Bearing in mind the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, and of other international conferences relevant in this field,

Recognizing the growing scope and significance of international cooperation among States and between States and international organizations in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Considering experiences gained in international cooperative ventures,

Convinced of the necessity and the significance of further strengthening international cooperation in order to reach broad and efficient collaboration in this field for the mutual benefit and in the interest of all parties involved,

Desirous of facilitating the application of the principle that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Adopts the Declaration on International Cooperation in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space for the Benefit and in the Interest of All States, Taking into Particular Account the Needs of Developing Countries, set forth in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration on International Cooperation in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space for the Benefit and in the Interest of All States, Taking into Particular Account the Needs of Developing Countries

1. International cooperation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes (hereinafter "international cooperation") shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of international law, including the Charter of the United Nations and the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies. It shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all States, irrespective of their degree of economic, social or scientific and technological development, and shall be the province of all mankind. Particular account should be taken of the needs of developing countries.

2. States are free to determine all aspects of their participation in international cooperation in the exploration and use of outer space on an equitable and mutually acceptable basis. Contractual terms in such cooperative ventures should be fair and reasonable and they should be in full compliance with the legitimate rights and interests of the parties concerned, as, for example, with intellectual property rights.

3. All States, particularly those with relevant space capabilities and with programmes for the exploration and use of outer space, should contribute to promoting and fostering international cooperation on an equitable and mutually acceptable basis. In this context, particular attention should be given to the benefit and the interests of developing countries and countries with incipient space programmes stemming from such international cooperation conducted with countries with more advanced space capabilities.

4. International cooperation should be conducted in the modes that are considered most effective and appropriate by the countries concerned, including, inter alia, governmental and non-governmental; commercial and non-commercial; global, multilateral, regional or bilateral; and international cooperation among countries in all levels of development.

5. International cooperation, while taking into particular account the needs of developing countries, should aim, inter alia, at the following goals, considering their need for technical assistance and rational and efficient allocation of financial and technical resources:

(a) Promoting the development of space science and technology and of its applications;

(b) Fostering the development of relevant and appropriate space capabilities in interested States;

(c) Facilitating the exchange of expertise and technology among States on a mutually acceptable basis.

6. National and international agencies, research institutions, organizations for development aid, and developed and developing countries alike should consider the appropriate use of space applications and the potential of international cooperation for reaching their development goals.

7. The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space should be strengthened in its role, among others, as a forum for the exchange of information on national and international activities in the field of international cooperation in the exploration and use of outer space.

8. All States should be encouraged to contribute to the United Nations Programme on Space Applications and to other initiatives in the field of international cooperation in accordance with their space capabilities and their participation in the exploration and use of outer space.

General Assembly resolution 51/122

13 December 1996 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/590) without vote, 13 November (meeting 14); draft by Austria, for Working Group on International Cooperation in the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (A/C.4/51/L.7); agenda item 83.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 4th Committee 2, 12-14; plenary 83.

Working methods

Changes in the working methods of the Legal Subcommittee, particularly achieved through a flexible approach to its work schedule, begun in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 281], were reviewed in 1996 and were generally regarded by delegations as improvements. A number of delegations, however, believed that further improvements were necessary. Some of them were of the opinion that the Subcommittee's work schedule should be further rationalized following the example of other UN bodies. The view was expressed that the scheduled length of each Subcommittee session should be two weeks, which, if necessary, could be extended on an ad hoc basis; others opposed such a reduction. Some delegations suggested that the Committee on outer space consider adopting a multi-year plan for its work and having simultaneous plenary and working group meetings.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/27 [YUN 1995, p. 282], the Committee on outer space reconvened the Working Group of the Whole to examine the working methods of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies. The Working Group agreed that the following matters should be examined: composition and election of the offices of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies, and the issue of rotation; issues regarding rules of procedure; Committee working methods, records and new agenda items; duration of sessions; and other issues, including rationalization and improvement of working methods. The question of consensus was also discussed.

Summing up the discussion, the Committee Chairman stated, on behalf of all members of the bureau, that they did not want to stand in the way of the Committee's work and would step down as soon as a new bureau was agreed upon. In order to provide for a smooth transition from one bureau to another, he would undertake further inter-sessional informal consultations with a view to reaching a consensus on the modalities of a new composition and election of bureaux of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies. All issues involved, such as geographical distribution and rotation, as well as other proposals regarding the agenda, duration of sessions and rationalization of working methods, would be taken into account in those consultations. Accordingly, the Committee entrusted its Chairman, with the assistance of the other bureau members and the Secretariat, to undertake informal consultations with the aim of reaching consensus decisions before the Committee's next session on the modalities of establishing a new composition of bureaux keeping in view the principles of equitable geographical representation and rotation. The Committee further recommended that all other proposals, including those on the need for agenda restructuring and an examination of session duration, be taken into account during those consultations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/123.

International cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 50/27 of 6 December 1995,
Deeply convinced of the common interest of mankind in promoting the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes and in continuing efforts to extend to all States the benefits derived therefrom, and also of the importance of international cooperation in this field, for which the United Nations should continue to provide a focal point,

Reaffirming the importance of international cooperation in developing the rule of law, including the relevant norms of space law and their important role in international cooperation for the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Stressing the importance of the widest possible adherence to international treaties that promote the peaceful uses of outer space,

Concerned about the possibility of an arms race in outer space,

Recognizing that all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, should contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international cooperation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Considering that space debris is an issue of concern to all nations,

Noting the progress achieved in the further development of peaceful space exploration and application as well as in various national and cooperative space projects, which contribute to international cooperation, and the importance of further international cooperation in this field,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the work of its thirty-ninth session,

1. Endorses the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the work of its thirty-ninth session;

2. Invites States that have not yet become parties to the international treaties governing the uses of outer space to give consideration to ratifying or acceding to those treaties;

3. Notes that, at its thirty-fifth session, the Legal Subcommittee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, in its working groups, continued its work as mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/27;

4. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee that the Legal Subcommittee, at its thirty-sixth session, taking into account the concerns of all countries, particularly those of developing countries, should:

(a) Continue its consideration of the question of review and possible revision of the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space;

(b) Continue, through its working group, its consideration of matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including consideration of ways and means to ensure the rational and equitable use of the geostationary orbit without prejudice to the role of the International Telecommunication Union;

5. Also endorses the recommendation of the Committee that the Legal Subcommittee, at its thirty-sixth session, should suspend consideration in its working group of the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space pending the results of the work in the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, without prejudice to the possibility of reconvening its working group on that item if in the opinion of the Legal Subcommittee sufficient progress was made in the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee at its session in 1997 to warrant the reconvening of the working group;

6. Notes that deliberations on the question of the geostationary orbit have been undertaken by the Legal Subcommittee as reflected in its report, on the basis of recent proposals which might provide a new and enhanced basis for future work;

7. Endorses the recommendations and agreements concerning the organization of work in the Legal Subcommittee;

8. Notes that the Chairman of the Legal Subcommittee, at its thirty-fifth session, conducted open-ended informal consultations with all members of the Subcommittee on the working methods of the Subcommittee, including the consideration of possible additional items for inclusion in its agenda, as outlined in the report of the Committee, and that the implementation of several recommendations made by the Subcommittee at its thirty-fourth session resulted in a general recognition of the improvements in the working methods of the Subcommittee at its thirty-fifth session;

9. Welcomes the fact that, pursuant to its request in paragraph 12 of its resolution 50/27, the Legal Subcommittee reviewed its requirement for summary records and that, beginning with its thirty-sixth session, it would be provided with unedited verbatim transcripts in lieu of summary records;

10. Notes with satisfaction that, in accordance with paragraph 11 of its resolution 50/27, the Committee was provided, at its thirty-ninth session, with unedited verbatim transcripts of that session in lieu of verbatim records and that the Committee would evaluate the use of unedited verbatim transcripts at its fortieth session to inform the General Assembly at its fifty-second session of the experience of the Committee with the transcripts;

11. Notes that, in accordance with paragraph 9 of its resolution 50/27, the Committee reconvened, at its thirty-ninth session, the Working Group of the Whole to examine the working methods of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies;

12. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee as contained in its report on its thirty-ninth session with regard to its working methods;

13. Notes that, in accordance with the agreement of the Committee at its thirty-ninth session, the Chairman of the Committee undertook and will continue to hold, as necessary, inter-sessional informal consultations among the members of the Committee with a view to reaching consensus decisions before the fortieth session of the Committee on the modalities of establishing a new composition of bureaux, keeping in view the principles of equitable geographical representation and rotation, and that all proposals made by delegations and groups of delegations, including the need for agenda restructuring and an examination of session duration, were taken into account in the framework of those informal consultations;

14. Agrees that if consensus agreement is reached among the members of the Committee on measures relating to the working methods of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies, including the composition and election of the bureaux, duration of sessions of those bodies and inclusion of additional items in the agenda of the Legal Subcommittee, those measures should be implemented during the 1997 sessions of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies as the transitional arrangements for the year 1997;

15. Notes that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, at its thirty-third session, continued its work as mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/27;

16. Notes with satisfaction that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee continued to consider on a priority basis the agenda item on space debris and that the work of the Subcommittee at its thirty-third session concentrated on the topic of measurements of space debris, understanding of data and effects of this environment on space systems, based on the multi-year work plan adopted by the Subcommittee at its thirty-second session;

17. Agrees that the multi-year work plan for the consideration of the item on space debris should continue to be implemented with flexibility;

18. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, at its thirty-fourth session, taking into account the concerns of all countries, particularly those of developing countries, should:

- (a) Consider the following items on a priority basis:
  - (i) United Nations Programme on Space Applications and the coordination of space activities within the United Nations system;
  - (ii) Implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;
  - (iii) Matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites, including, inter alia, applications for developing countries;
  - (iv) Use of nuclear power sources in outer space;
  - (v) Space debris;
- (b) Consider the following items:
  - (i) Questions relating to space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space;
  - (ii) Examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit and of its utilization and applications, including, inter alia, in the field of space communications, as well as other questions relating to space communications developments, taking particular account of the needs and interests of developing countries;
  - (iii) Matters relating to life sciences, including space medicine;
  - (iv) Progress in national and international space activities related to the Earth's environment, in particular progress in the international geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme;
  - (v) Matters relating to planetary exploration;
  - (vi) Matters relating to astronomy;
- (vii) The theme fixed for special attention at the thirty-fourth session of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee: "Space systems for direct broadcasting and global information systems for space research"; the Committee on Space Research and the International Astronautical Federation, in liaison with Member States, should be invited to arrange a symposium, with as wide a participation as possible, to be held during the first week of the Subcommittee's session, to complement discussions within the Subcommittee on the special theme;

19. Considers, in the context of paragraph 18 (a) (ii) above, that it is particularly urgent to implement the following recommendations:

(a) All countries should have the opportunity to use the techniques resulting from medical studies in space;

(b) Databases at the national and regional levels should be strengthened and expanded and an international space information service should be established to function as a centre of coordination;

(c) The United Nations should support the creation of adequate training centres at the regional level, linked, whenever possible, to institutions implementing space programmes; necessary funding for the development of such centres should be made available through financial institutions;

(d) The United Nations should organize a fellowship programme through which selected graduates or postgraduates from developing countries should get in-depth, long-term exposure to space technology or applications; it is also desirable to encourage the availability of opportunities for such exposure on other bilateral or multilateral bases outside the United Nations system;

20. Endorses the recommendations of the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, as endorsed by the Committee and as contained in the report of the Working Group of the Whole;

21. Also endorses the recommendation of the Committee that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee should reconvene, at its thirty-fourth session, the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, to continue its work;

22. Invites Member States to report to the Secretary-General on a regular basis with regard to national and international research concerning the safety of space objects with nuclear power sources on board;

23. Endorses the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for 1997, as proposed to the Committee by the Expert on Space Applications;

24. Emphasizes the urgency and importance of implementing fully the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, in particular those relating to the promotion of the establishment and strengthening of regional mechanisms of cooperation through the United Nations system;

25. Invites all Governments within the organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations working in the field of outer space or on space-related matters to take effective action for the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference, and also invites the Secretary-

General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

26. Notes with satisfaction that, in accordance with paragraph 30 of resolution 50/27 and in the context of paragraph 19 (c) above, the Centre for Space Science and Technology Education in Asia and the Pacific began its first education programme in April 1996 and that significant progress has also been achieved in establishing regional centres for space science and technology education in the other regions covered by the regional commissions;

27. Notes that, pursuant to its recommendation in paragraph 33 of resolution 50/27, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, at its thirty-third session, continued to discuss the possibility of holding a third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space before the turn of the century, and that the Committee continued these discussions at its thirty-ninth session with a view to making a final recommendation to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

28. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee that a special session of the Committee (UNISPACE III), open to all States Members of the United Nations, should be convened at the United Nations Office at Vienna, preferably in 1999, unless progress towards agreeing on an agenda in the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee at its thirty-fourth session makes it more appropriate to consider the year 2000;

29. Requests the Committee and the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee to act as the Preparatory Committee and the Advisory Committee for UNISPACE III and the Office for Outer Space Affairs to act as the executive secretariat; and also requests the Preparatory Committee and the Advisory Committee to carry out the tasks entrusted to them in paragraphs 178 to 185 of the report of the Committee and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the progress made in the preparatory work for UNISPACE III;

30. Recognizes the contribution of the Third Space Conference of the Americas, held at Punta del Este, Uruguay, in 1996, towards promoting regional cooperation in space activities, as well as the meetings mentioned in paragraph 13 of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, and calls upon the regional commissions to support those initiatives;

31. Recommends that more attention be paid to all aspects related to the protection and the preservation of the outer space environment, especially those potentially affecting the Earth's environment;

32. Considers that it is essential that Member States pay more attention to the problem of collisions of space objects, including those with nuclear power sources, with space debris, and other aspects of space debris, calls for the continuation of national research on this question, for the development of improved technology for the monitoring of space debris and for the compilation and dissemination of data on space debris, and also considers that, to the extent possible, information thereon should be provided to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee;

33. Urges all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international cooperation in the exploration and uses of outer space for peaceful purposes;

34. Emphasizes the need to increase the benefits of space technology and its applications and to contribute to an orderly growth of space activities favourable to sustained economic growth and sustainable development in all countries, particularly in the developing countries;

35. Requests the Committee to continue to consider, as a matter of priority, ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes, taking into account the views expressed at its thirty-ninth session and at the fifty-first session of the General Assembly, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its fifty-second session;

36. Also requests the Committee to continue to consider at its fortieth session its agenda item entitled "Spin-off benefits of space technology: review of current status";

37. Endorses the decision of the Committee to grant permanent observer status to the Planetary Society;

38. Requests the specialized agencies and other international organizations to continue and, where appropriate, enhance their cooperation with the Committee and to provide it with progress reports on their work relating to the peaceful uses of outer space;

39. Requests the Committee to continue its work, in accordance with the present resolution, to consider, as appropriate, new projects in outer space activities, and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, including its views on which subjects should be studied in the future.

General Assembly resolution 51/123

13 December 1996 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/590) without vote, 13 November (meeting 14); draft by Austria, for Working Group on International Cooperation in the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (A/C.4/51/L.8); agenda item 83.

Effects of atomic radiation

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its forty-fifth session in Vienna from 17 to 21 June 1996. As part of its annual report [A/51/46], the Committee issued one scientific annex entitled "Effects of radiation on the environment", covering the Committee's latest findings and evaluations of the sources and effects of ionizing radiation on man and his environment. The 1996 annex, developed over several annual sessions and completed in 1996, was combined with nine 1993 and two 1994 scientific annexes in a series of reports entitled Sources and Effects of Ionizing Radiation.

In the 1996 annex, the Committee considered the effects of ionizing radiation on plants and animals in the environment, with information drawn from reported observations in natural and contaminated environments, from experimental studies and from the Committee's own assessments of radiobiological effects. The intention was to provide countries, national and international organizations and the scientific community with a reference on the effects of radiation on plants and animals in all sectors of the environment. Previous Committee assessments had concerned the effects of radiation on human health.

All living organisms had developed and survived in environments subject to a natural radiation background, the 1996 annual report said. Global fallout from nuclear-weapon tests in the second half of the twentieth century had made minor additions to that background. Also, increments in radiation exposures in particular areas had arisen because of emissions to the atmosphere, water bodies and the ground from the operation of nuclear power facilities, from industrial, medical and defence-related operations and from some accidents. Generally, there had been no apparent effects in plants and animals from those radiation exposures. Following accidents, however, damage had been observed in individual organisms and populations.

There was a wide range of sensitivities of plants and animals to ionizing radiation, the report said. In general, mammals were considered the most sensitive, followed by birds, fish, reptiles and insects. Reproductive capacity appeared to be the most radiosensitive attribute. For natural plant and animal communities, there was little evidence that dose rates of 0.1 milligray per hour (i.e., about 1,000 times as great as the natural background) to a small proportion of the individuals (and therefore a lower average dose rate to the remaining organisms) would have any detrimental effects at the population level.

In 1996, the Committee was proceeding with a new work programme to evaluate the sources and effects of ionizing radiation, collecting recent data on radiation exposures worldwide in order to determine representative values and ranges of such exposures in human population groups. New information from radiobiological and epidemiological studies was being reviewed, to improve understanding of radiation effects and the underlying risks.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/121.

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific

Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 50/26 of 6 December 1995, in which, inter alia, it requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation,

Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations resulting from the levels of radiation to which mankind and the environment are exposed,

Noting the views expressed by Member States at its fifty-first session with regard to the work of the Scientific Committee,

Conscious of the continuing need to examine and compile information about atomic and ionizing radiation and to analyse its effects on mankind and the environment,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past forty-one years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation, and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Notes with satisfaction the completion in 1996 of a further scientific annex by the Scientific Committee informing the scientific and world communities of its latest evaluations of the sources and effects of ionizing radiation on man and his environment, and calls upon the Scientific Committee to ensure the widest possible dissemination of this scientific annex to Member States;

3. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important activities to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources;

4. Endorses the intentions and plans of the Scientific Committee for its future activities of scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly;

5. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue at its next session the review of the important problems in the field of radiation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

6. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue providing support for the effective conduct of the work of the Scientific Committee and for the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public;

7. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, and invites them to increase their cooperation in this field;

8. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned to provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help in the preparation of future reports of the Scientific Committee to the General Assembly.

General Assembly resolution 51/121

13 December 1996 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/589) without vote, 22 October (meeting 7); 34-nation draft (A/C.4/51/L.3/Rev.1); agenda item 82.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 4th Committee 6, 7; plenary 83.

In response to a request of some Member States at the informal consultations on the draft resolution, the Secretary of the Fourth Committee provided some details on the mandate and budgetary provisions of the Scientific Committee. Its mandate, he said, was to address concerns of a general nature regarding the hazards of ionizing radiation. Until 1980, the Committee's primary concerns had been the testing of nuclear weapons in the atmosphere, the spread of radioactive fallout and its health implications. The Scientific Committee had also evaluated other releases of radioactive materials to the environment, such as those from nuclear fuel cycle installations or from accidents, like the one at Chernobyl, and it also reviewed radiation doses from natural background radiation, medical radiation and occupational exposures. It also reviewed epidemiological and radiobiological studies to evaluate health effects and risks. Although the Scientific Committee had not been in a position to review specific problems of Member States, its published reports had been widely used for comparative purposes.

PART TWO

Human rights

Chapter I

Promotion of human rights

In 1996, the United Nations continued its efforts to promote human rights through a number of mechanisms, including the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary body—the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities—and human rights treaty-monitoring bodies which reported on their work to promote respect for human rights to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. In addition, the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, with the assistance of the United Nations Centre for Human Rights, carried out the programme of advisory services in human rights, which in 1996 implemented some 402 activities compared to 215 in 1995.

Human rights instruments during 1996 promoted a wide range of human rights covering civil and political rights, economic, social and cultural rights, racial discrimination, discrimination against women, protection of children and the practice of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

UN machinery

Commission on Human Rights

The Commission on Human Rights held its fifty-second session in Geneva from 18 March to 26 April 1996 [E/1996/23], during which it adopted 85 resolutions and 14 decisions. Five draft resolutions and 42 draft decisions were recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

On 19 March [dec. 1996/101], the Commission invited experts, special rapporteurs, special representatives and chairmen/rapporteurs of various working groups to participate in the discussion of their reports at Commission meetings.

Organization of work in 1997

On 23 April [dec. 1996/110], the Commission recommended that its fifty-third session take place from 10 March to 18 April 1997. That recommendation was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1996/294 of 24 July.

Also on 23 April [dec. 1996/111], the Commission recommended that the Council authorize 40 fully serviced additional meetings, to be used only if necessary, for the Commission's 1997 session, and requested its Chairman to make every effort to organize the work of the session within the times normally allotted. On 24 July, by decision 1996/295, the Council authorized the additional meetings and approved the request to the Chairman.

The Commission, on 24 April [dec. 1996/113], decided that all continuing thematic or country-oriented mandates established by it and entrusted to special rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups were expected to report in 1997, even if the relevant 1996 resolutions did not make explicit reference to that reporting obligation.

On the same date [dec. 1996/114], the Commission decided to defer to its 1997 session consideration of a draft text concerning the adoption of decisions and resolutions based on consensus.

Thematic procedures

Pursuant to a 1995 Commission request [YUN 1995, p. 688], the Secretariat issued in March a note [E/CN.4/1996/47] containing references to the conclusions and recommendations of the Commission's thematic special rapporteurs and working groups.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/46], the Commission on Human Rights commended Governments that had invited the thematic special rapporteurs or working groups to visit their countries and recommended that Governments consider follow-up visits. Taking note of the recommendations of the 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1050] and 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 710] meetings of the special rapporteurs, representatives, experts and chairpersons of working groups of the special procedures of the Commission and of the advisory services programme with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to issue annually their conclusions and recommendations and to consider convening further periodic meetings. He was also asked to present annually a list of all persons currently constituting the thematic and country procedures, including their country of origin, and to ensure the availability of resources for effective implementation of all thematic mandates. Special rapporteurs and working groups were asked to provide comments on problems of responsiveness and the result of analyses, and to make suggestions as to areas that might use the advisory services of the Centre for Human Rights. They were called on to include in their reports gender-disaggregated data and information on human rights violations directed against women.

Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

1996 session

The Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, at its forty-eighth session (Geneva, 5-30 August 1996) [E/CN.4/1997/2], adopted 39 resolutions and 21 decisions, and recommended 12 draft decisions for adoption by the Commission.

The Subcommission adopted decisions relating to its organization of work, its methods of work, reform of its work, the composition of its pre-session working groups and the dissemination of declarations. It also adopted a decision [1996/105] concerning voting by secret ballot whenever a vote was requested on proposals pertaining to allegations of human rights violations in countries, and another [dec. 1996/115] by which it would take no action in 1997 regarding the question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including policies of racial discrimination and segregation and of apartheid, in all countries, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories. In a decision of 6 August, the Subcommission decided to add a new sub-item to its agenda entitled "Thirtieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights". In a subsequent resolution [1996/13] of 23 August, the Subcommission regretted that the anniversary of the Covenants had not been celebrated and asked the Secretary-General to emphasize the role of the Covenants during the celebration in 1998 of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see below).

Report of Subcommission Chairman. The Commission on Human Rights had before it a report [E/CN.4/1996/81] of the Subcommission's 1995 Chairman, Ioan Maxim (Romania), on progress made in implementing a 1995 Commission resolution on improving the Subcommission's work [YUN 1995, p. 688].

Review of Subcommission work

Commission action. On 19 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/25)], the Commission asked the Subcommission to review its mandate and working methods with a view to improving its efficiency further and avoiding duplication with the Commission. It asked the Subcommission to devote a portion of its meetings earmarked for a closed exchange of views among the experts and their alternates to consideration of the outcome of the review of its mandate and working methods, and decided to consider the Subcommission report on the issue in 1997. The Commission asked the 1996 Subcommission Chairman to report in 1997 on significant aspects of the Subcommission's work.

Note by Secretary-General. In a July note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/3], the Secretary-General provided a review of developments between 15 June 1995 and 1 June 1996 in areas with which the Subcommission had been concerned. Those related to the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [GA res. 2106 A (XX)], the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)], the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [GA res. 39/46], the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [GA res. 44/25], and the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families [GA res. 45/158].

Office of High Commissioner for Human Rights

In a March 1996 report [E/CN.4/1996/103], the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Jose Ayala Lasso (Ecuador), presented policy orientation and guiding elements for his action over the next two years. He also described his activities since the submission of his last report in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 689].

He discussed cooperation for development and cooperation with Governments, regional and other forums, national institutions, academic institutions and human rights centres, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), the media, the UN system, mechanisms of the Commission and experts of the treaty bodies. Other subjects covered dealt with promoting and protecting human rights, addressing human rights challenges in the field (Burundi, Abkhazia (Georgia), Rwanda, the former Yugoslavia, Zaire), reforming the human rights programme and empowering the United Nations for human rights. The report contained a statistical annex which provided information on human rights treaties, technical cooperation for human rights, communications, special procedures, field activities, the Centre for Human Rights and budgetary matters.

In a July report [E/1996/87], the High Commissioner briefed the Economic and Social Council on his activities since his March report to the Commission. He described his activities relating to the right to development and his participation in the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Istanbul, June 1996) (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII). Field activities in 1996 included visits by the High Commissioner to Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro); the sending of a mission to Georgia, including Abkhazia; the deployment of human rights officers in Burundi and the sending of a mission to the country; the operation of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda; missions to Zaire to attempt to finalize an agreement between the Government and the United Nations to allow the establishment of a human rights office; and a needs assessment survey to South Africa to provide human rights technical assistance. By decision 1996/253 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the High Commissioner's report.

In an October report to the General Assembly [A/51/36], the High Commissioner discussed cooperation for human rights with various entities, and components of the UN human rights programme, including the prevention of human rights violations, assistance to countries in transition to democracy, the technical cooperation programme in the area of human rights, democracy and the rule of law, and human rights education. The High Commissioner reviewed human rights field operations in progress, as well as those being planned. Among the issues presenting challenges to human rights were equality and non-discrimination; extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions; the practice of torture; acts of enforced disappearance; and the protection and assistance needs of internally displaced persons. As to the right to development, consultations were held in July between the World Bank and the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights to explore, in the context of programmes aimed at sustainable development, various aspects of possible cooperation between the two entities, as well as between them with other partners, including Governments, international organizations, expert bodies and others. Cooperation was earmarked for country projects; reconstruction and development assistance in the transition to democracy; field offices; national capacities for governance and the promotion and protection of human rights; human rights education; and cooperation with human rights treaty-based bodies. The High Commissioner described the recent activities of the Commission on Human Rights, special procedures (rapporteurs, representatives, experts and working groups of the Commission and Subcommission) and treaty-based bodies. In a later addendum [A/51/36/Add.1], the High Commissioner described cooperation with UN agencies and programmes in support of human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/119.

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, establishing the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights for the promotion and protection of all human rights,

Reaffirming its commitment to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993,

Recalling its decision 50/465 of 22 December 1995, concerning the organization of work of the Third Committee and the biennial programme of work of the Committee for 1996-1997, which includes in its programme of work the item entitled "Human rights questions: report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights",

Recognizing, in accordance with resolution 48/141, the crucial and important role that the High Commissioner's functions play in removing the current obstacles and in meeting the challenges to the full realization of all human rights and in preventing the continuation of human rights violations throughout the world, as reflected in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Stressing the importance of enabling the smooth running of the United Nations human rights machinery,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the effective promotion and protection of all human rights;

2. Encourages the High Commissioner to continue his activities in discharging his responsibilities under resolution 48/141;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the constructive manner in which the High Commissioner is carrying out his functions;

4. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-second session under the sub-item entitled "Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights".

General Assembly resolution 51/119
12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote
Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.5) without vote, 26 November (meeting 53); 44-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.42), orally revised; agenda item 110 (e).
Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-53; plenary 82.

Centre for Human Rights

Commission action. On 24 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/82)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to make available additional resources and to enhance the capability of the High Commissioner and the Centre for Human Rights to fulfil effectively their mandates and their ability to carry out mandated operational activities and to coordinate efficiently with other relevant departments of the Secretariat, as well as other UN organs, bodies and specialized agencies. It also asked him to facilitate the High Commissioner's participation in all established procedures of existing mechanisms within the UN system with a view to addressing urgent crises in the area of human rights. The High Commissioner was asked to continue to keep States informed on a regular basis of the ongoing process of restructuring the Centre.

On the same date [res. 1996/83], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue to convene at least twice yearly in Geneva meetings with all interested States to provide information and exchange views on the activities conducted by the Centre and its process of restructuring. The Economic and Social Council in decision 1996/286 of 24 July approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General.

Reports of Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly [YUN 1995, p. 690], the Secretary-General submitted an interim report [E/CN.4/1996/116] providing details regarding the allocation of resources to the Centre. He submitted a final report [A/51/641] on the subject in November.

In a June report [A/C.5/50/71], the Secretary-General presented the new management structure of the Centre, consisting of a Research and Right to Development Branch, a Support Services Branch and an Activities and Programmes Branch.

Composition of staff

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 33 to 16, with 4 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights on 23 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/65)] asked the Secretary-General to adopt measures regarding the recruitment of personnel from developing countries for the Centre for Human Rights. It asked him also, In signing agreements with countries on the hiring of junior professional officers (JPOs), to urge those countries to ensure financial resources to guarantee that personnel from developing countries were able to work as JPOs, with a view to conforming to the principle of equitable geographical distribution. The Secretary-General was urged to report to the General Assembly at its 1996 session on the geographical composition and functions of the Centre's staff, and to make recommendations to improve the current situation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1996/272.

Composition of the staff of the Centre for Human Rights

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 23 July 1996, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/65 of 23 April 1996, approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-third session on the implementation of Commission resolution 1996/65, including measures adopted and their results, and recommendations for improving the present situation.

Economic and Social Council decision 1996/272

32-20 (recorded vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1996/23); agenda item 5 (d).
Meeting numbers. ESC 44, 46.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Egypt, Ghana, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Jordan, Lebanon, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Paraguay, Philippines, Senegal, South Africa, Sudan, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belarus, Bulgaria, Canada, Czech Republic, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Note by Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission, the Secretary-General in November provided information to the Assembly on the geographical distribution of Professional posts of the Centre [A/51/650].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/90.

Strengthening of the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/ Centre for Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling, inter alia, its resolutions 48/141 of 20 December 1993 and 50/187 of 22 December 1995, and bearing in mind all relevant resolutions of the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, including Commission resolution 1996/82 of 24 April 1996,

Recalling its request to the Secretary-General contained in paragraph 37 of its resolution 50/214 of 23

December 1995 to establish within the biennium 1996-1997 a new branch whose primary responsibilities would include the promotion and protection of the right to development.

Reaffirming that the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms must be considered as a priority objective of the United Nations in accordance with its purposes and principles, in particular the purpose of international cooperation,

Recalling that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights stressed the importance of strengthening the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat,

Taking into account the fact that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights requested the Secretary-General and the General Assembly to take immediate steps to increase substantially the resources for the human rights programme, from within the existing and future regular budgets of the United Nations, and to take urgent steps to seek increased extrabudgetary resources,

Taking into account also the establishment of the post of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as well as the mandate for the post, including its coordinating role and its overall supervision of the Centre, as well as the request by the General Assembly in resolution 48/141 for appropriate staff and resources to enable the High Commissioner to fulfil his mandate,

Noting with concern that the response to the above-mentioned requests has not been commensurate with the needs, resulting in a serious and continuing imbalance between the mandates assigned to the High Commissioner and the Centre by the competent bodies of the United Nations system in the field of human rights and the resources available to fulfil all of those mandates,

Taking into account the fact that the responsibilities of the High Commissioner include engaging in a dialogue with all Governments in the implementation of his mandate with a view to the promotion and protection of all human rights, and rationalizing, adapting, strengthening and streamlining the United Nations machinery in the field of human rights, with a view to improving its efficiency and effectiveness,

Taking into account also the fact that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights urged United Nations organs, bodies and the specialized agencies whose activities deal with human rights to cooperate in order to strengthen, rationalize and streamline their activities, taking into account the need to avoid unnecessary duplication,

Bearing in mind that Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations states that the paramount consideration in the employment of the staff of the Secretariat and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity and that due regard shall be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff of the Secretariat on as wide a geographical basis as possible,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the strengthening of the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights and the note by the Secretary-General on the composition of the staff of the Centre, as well as the report of the High Commissioner,

Taking note with appreciation of the information provided by the High Commissioner with regard to the restructuring of the Centre with a view to increasing the efficiency and effectiveness of the Centre and ensuring that all its mandates can be implemented,

Considering that this process should contribute to the strengthening of the functional framework for integrated and consolidated activities of the Secretariat in the field of human rights,

Emphasizing that, while further improvement in the functioning and efficiency of the Centre, together with a strong emphasis on good management practices, is needed in order to enable the Centre to fulfil all mandates entrusted to it and cope with its constantly increasing workload, good management practices need to be complemented by resources commensurate with mandates,

1. Supports and encourages the efforts of the Secretary-General to enhance the role and further improve the functioning of the Centre for Human Rights, as an integral part of the Secretariat of the United Nations, under the overall supervision of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

2. Reiterates the need to ensure that all the necessary human, financial, material and personnel resources are provided from the regular budget of the United Nations without delay to the United Nations human rights programme to enable it to carry out its mandates efficiently, effectively and expeditiously, having due regard to the need to finance and implement activities of the United Nations relating to development;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to enhance the capability of the High Commissioner and the Centre to fulfil effectively their mandates and their ability to carry out mandated operational activities and to coordinate efficiently with other relevant departments of the Secretariat, as well as other organs, bodies and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, including on logistical and administrative questions;

4. Supports fully the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner in their efforts to strengthen the human rights activities of the United Nations, inter alia, through reorganization of the structure of the Centre to improve its efficiency and effectiveness;

5. Encourages increased cooperation and coordination on human rights issues between the High Commissioner, acting within his mandate, and other departments and offices of the Secretariat;

6. Emphasizes the need for full participation of the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights in all mechanisms related to the follow-up to major United Nations conferences, in particular the inter-agency task forces established for this purpose;

7. Requests the High Commissioner to continue to provide information and exchange of views with all States on a regular basis on the ongoing process of restructuring the Centre, inter alia, through informal open briefing sessions;

8. Encourages the High Commissioner, within his mandate as set out in General Assembly resolution 48/141, to continue to play an active role in promoting and protecting human rights, including by preventing human rights violations throughout the world, and in this context requests the Secretary-General to support activities proposed by the High Commissioner;

9. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 51/90
12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 29 November (meeting 56); 73-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.39/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 110 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-52, 56; plenary 82.

Strengthening UN action

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/105.

Strengthening of United Nations action in the field of human rights through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that among the purposes of the United Nations are those of developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and taking other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace, as well as achieving international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Desirous of achieving further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that such international cooperation should be based on the principles embodied in international law, especially the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant instruments,

Deeply convinced that United Nations action in this field should be based not only on a profound understanding of the broad range of problems existing in all societies but also on full respect for the political, economic and social realities of each of them, in strict compliance with the purposes and principles of the Charter and for the basic purpose of promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms through international cooperation,

Reaffirming all its resolutions in this regard,

Reaffirming also the importance of ensuring the universality, objectivity and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues, as affirmed in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Affirming the importance of the objectivity, independence and discretion of the special rapporteurs and representatives on thematic issues and countries, as well as of the members of the working groups, in carrying out their mandates,

Underlining the obligation that Governments have to promote and protect human rights and to carry out the responsibilities that they have undertaken under international law, especially the Charter, as well as various international instruments in the field of human rights,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect that right within the provisions of the Charter, including respect for territorial integrity;

2. Reaffirms that it is a purpose of the United Nations and the task of all Member States, in cooperation with the Organization, to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur;

3. Calls upon all Member States to base their activities for the promotion and protection of human rights, including the development of further international cooperation in this field, on the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other relevant international instruments and to refrain from activities that are inconsistent with that international framework;

4. Considers that international cooperation in this field should make an effective and practical contribution to the urgent task of preventing mass and flagrant violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and to the strengthening of international peace and security;

5. Reaffirms that the promotion, protection and full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, as legitimate concerns of the world community, should be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity and should not be used for political ends;

6. Requests all human rights bodies within the United Nations system, as well as the special rapporteurs and representatives, independent experts and working groups, to take duly into account the contents of the present resolution in carrying out their mandates;

7. Expresses its conviction that an unbiased and fair approach to human rights issues contributes to the promotion of international cooperation as well as to the effective promotion, protection and realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

8. Stresses, in this context, the continuing need for impartial and objective information on the political, economic and social situations and events of all countries;

9. Invites Member States to consider adopting, as appropriate, within the framework of their respective legal systems and in accordance with their obligations under international law, especially the Charter, and international human rights instruments, the measures that they may deem appropriate to achieve further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

10. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to take duly into account the present resolution and to consider further proposals for the strengthening of United Nations action in the field of human rights through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to consult Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on ways and means for the strengthening of United Nations action in the field of human rights, including the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity, and to submit a comprehensive report on this issue to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

12. Decides to consider this matter at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 51/105

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 27 November (meeting 54); 47-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.71/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 110 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-52, 54; plenary 82.

The Assembly, by decision 51/420, also adopted on 12 December, took note of a report [A/51/619] of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee on human rights questions.

Right to promote and protect human rights

Working Group activities. The working group to draft a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms held its eleventh session [E/CN.4/1996/97] in Geneva from 4 to 8 and on 28 March. Annexed to the working group's report was the first reading text of the draft declaration as amended during the second reading at its ninth [YUN 1994, p. 1067] and tenth [YUN 1995, p. 692] sessions, and a compilation of second reading proposals presented during the current session.

Commission action. On 23 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/81)], the Commission urged the working group to submit the completed draft declaration, and decided to continue in 1997 its work on the elaboration of the draft.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/25.

Question of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/81 of 23 April 1996,

1. Authorizes an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to meet for a period of one week prior to the fifty-third session of the Commission in order to continue work on the elaboration of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all necessary facilities, within existing United Nations resources, to the working group for its meetings.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/25

23 July 1996 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1996/23); agenda item 5 (d).

Meeting numbers. ESC 44, 46.

Human rights instruments

General aspects

In 1996, there were seven UN human rights instruments in force that required monitoring of their implementation by expert bodies. The instruments and their treaty bodies were: the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [GA res. 2106 A (XX)] (Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination); the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] (Human Rights Committee); the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] (Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights); the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid [GA res. 3068 (XXVIII)] (Group of Three, suspended in 1995) [YUN 1995, p. 693]; the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [GA res. 34/180] (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women); the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [GA res. 39/46] (Committee against Torture); and the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [GA res. 44/25] (Committee on the Rights of the Child).

Consideration of the item "Implementation of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid" was suspended in 1995 by the Commission on Human Rights. The Commission suspended meetings of the Group of Three in 1995.

Report of High Commissioner. In January, the High Commissioner for Human Rights submitted a report [E/CN.4/1996/87] containing an inventory of all international human rights standard-setting activities, covering work and activities that fell under the Commission's purview.

Commission action. On 19 April [E/1996/23 (res.1996/22)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to encourage the independent expert on possible long-term approaches to the supervision of new instruments on human rights to finalize his interim report [A/CONF.157/PC62/Add.11/Rev.1] in time for the final report to be considered in 1997; the Secretary-General was asked to assist him. The High Commissioner was also asked to ensure that the revised UN Manual on Human Rights Reporting [Sales No. E.91.XIV.1] be made available in all official languages. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1997 on resources for the operations of the human rights treaty bodies and on the implementation of the current resolution.

Reports of Secretary-General. At its 1996 session, the Commission on Human Rights considered a report [E/CN.4/1996/77] of the Secretary-General on measures taken to implement a 1995 Commission resolution [YUN 1995, p. 693], which dealt with the effective implementation of international human rights instruments, including reporting obligations.

As requested by a 1995 General Assembly resolution [GA res. 50/170], the Secretary-General submitted in September a report [A/51/425] on measures taken to implement the Assembly's resolution, which dealt with the same subject as the Commission resolution.

By an October note [A/51/482], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the seventh meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies (Geneva, 16-20 September 1996), convened pursuant to the 1995 Assembly resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/87.

Effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, including reporting obligations under international instruments on human rights

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 50/170 of 22 December 1995, as well as other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the relevant paragraphs of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Reaffirming that the full and effective implementation of United Nations human rights instruments is of major importance to the efforts of the Organization, pursuant to the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that the effective functioning of the treaty bodies established pursuant to United Nations human rights instruments is indispensable for the full and effective implementation of such instruments,

Conscious of the importance of the coordination of the human rights promotion and protection activities of the United Nations bodies active in the field of human rights,

Noting with appreciation the initiatives taken by a number of treaty bodies to elaborate early-warning measures and urgent procedures, within their mandates, with a view to preventing the occurrence, or re-occurrence, of serious human rights violations,

Expressing concern that the underresourcing of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat is one impediment to the treaty bodies in their ability to carry out their mandates effectively,

Reaffirming its responsibility to ensure the effective functioning of treaty bodies, and reaffirming also the importance of:

(a) Ensuring the effective functioning of the periodic reporting by States parties to these instruments;

(b) Securing sufficient financial, human and information resources to overcome existing difficulties with their effective functioning;

(c) Promoting greater efficiency and effectiveness through better coordination of the activities of the United Nations bodies active in the field of human rights, taking into account the need to avoid unnecessary duplication and overlapping of their mandates and tasks;

(d) Addressing questions of both reporting obligations and financial implications whenever elaborating any further instruments on human rights,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Welcomes the report of the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies on their seventh meeting, held at Geneva from 16 to 20 September 1996, and takes note of their conclusions and recommendations;

2. Encourages greater efforts to identify measures for more effective implementation of the United Nations human rights instruments;

3. Emphasizes the need to ensure financing and adequate staff and information resources for the operations of the treaty bodies, and with this in mind:

(a) Reiterates its request that the Secretary-General provide adequate resources in respect of each treaty body;

(b) Calls upon the Secretary-General to make the most efficient use of existing resources and to seek the resources necessary to give the treaty bodies adequate administrative support, access to technical expertise and access to appropriate databases and on-line information services;

(c) Requests that the Secretary-General report on this question to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-third session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

4. Welcomes the continuing efforts by the treaty bodies and the Secretary-General aimed at streamlining, rationalizing, rendering more transparent and otherwise improving reporting procedures, and urges the treaty bodies and the meetings of persons chairing the treaty bodies to continue to examine ways of reducing the duplication of reporting required under the different instruments, without impairing the quality of reporting, and of generally reducing the reporting burden on Member States;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a detailed analytical study comparing the provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, with a view to identifying duplication of reporting required under these instruments;

6. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in accordance with his mandate, to encourage the independent expert to finalize his interim report on possible long-term approaches to enhancing the effective operation of the human rights treaty system in time for the final report to be considered by the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-third session, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/120 of 20 December 1993;

7. Urges States parties to contribute, individually and through meetings of States parties, to identifying and implementing ways of further streamlining, rationalizing, avoiding duplication in and otherwise improving reporting procedures;

8. Expresses concern about the increasing backlog of reports on the implementation by States parties of United Nations instruments on human rights and about delays in consideration of reports by the treaty bodies;

9. Also expresses concern about the large number of overdue reports under the United Nations instruments on human rights, and again urges States parties to make every effort to meet their reporting obligations;

10. Invites States parties that have been unable to comply with the requirements to submit their initial report to avail themselves of technical assistance;

11. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to ensure that the revised Manual on Human Rights Reporting is available in all official languages at the earliest opportunity;

12. Encourages the efforts of the treaty bodies to examine the progress made in achieving the fulfilment of human rights treaty undertakings by all States parties, without exception;

13. Urges States parties to address, as a matter of priority, at their next scheduled meetings, the issue of States parties consistently not complying with their reporting obligations;

14. Urges all States parties whose reports have been examined by treaty bodies to provide adequate follow-up to the observations and final comments of the treaty bodies on their reports;

15. Encourages the treaty bodies to continue to identify specific possibilities for technical assistance, to be provided at the request of the State concerned, in the regular course of their work of reviewing the periodic reports of States parties;

16. Welcomes the recommendation by the meeting of persons chairing the treaty bodies that treaty bodies urge each State party to translate, publish and make widely available in its territory the full text of the concluding observations on its reports to the treaty bodies, and requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to make every effort to ensure that recent reports and the summary records of committee discussions pertaining to them, as well as concluding observations and final comments of the treaty bodies, are made available in the United Nations information centres in the countries submitting those reports;

17. Also welcomes the contribution to the work of the treaty bodies made by the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies, and invites the specialized agencies, other United Nations bodies and the treaty bodies to continue to pursue further cooperation between them;

18. Further welcomes the recommendation of the persons chairing the treaty bodies that efforts continue to be made to enhance coordination and cooperation between the treaty bodies and the special rapporteurs, representatives, experts and working groups of the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

19. Recognizes the important role played by non-governmental organizations in the effective implementation of all human rights instruments, and encourages the exchange of information between the treaty bodies and such organizations;

20. Recalls, with regard to the election of the members of the treaty bodies, the importance of giving consideration to equitable geographic distribution of membership and to the representation of the principal legal systems and of bearing in mind that the members shall be elected and shall serve in their personal capacity and be of high moral character and recognized competence in the field of human rights;

21. Encourages the Economic and Social Council, as well as its functional commissions and their subsidiary bodies, and other United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies to consider the feasibility of participation by representatives of the treaty bodies in their meetings;

22. Welcomes the continuing emphasis by the persons chairing the treaty bodies that the enjoyment of the human rights of women should be monitored closely by each treaty body within the purview of its mandate, and in this regard endorses the recommendation by the meeting of the persons chairing the treaty bodies that each treaty body should continue to consider how it might most effectively incorporate gender perspectives in its work practices;

23. Also welcomes all appropriate measures the treaty bodies may take, within their mandates, in response to situations of massive human rights violations, including bringing those violations to the attention of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Secretary-General and the competent bodies of the United Nations in the field of human rights, and requests the High Commissioner, acting within his mandate, to coordinate and consult throughout the United Nations system in this regard;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on measures taken to implement the present resolution and on obstacles to its implementation;

25. Decides to continue giving priority consideration, at its fifty-second session, to the conclusions and recommendations of the meetings of persons chairing treaty bodies, in the light of the deliberations of the Commission on Human Rights, under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 51/87

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.1) without vote, 22 November (meeting 49); 40-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.34/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 110 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 36, 37, 42, 43, 45, 46, 49; plenary 82.

Successor States and human rights treaties

Pursuant to a 1995 Commission request [YUN 1995, p. 695], the Secretary-General submitted information [E/CN.4/1996/76] on successor States that were UN Members regarding action taken with respect to their accession to or ratification of international human rights treaties to which the predecessor States had not been parties.

Fiftieth anniversary of Universal Declaration of Human Rights

On 19 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/42)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the High Commissioner to coordinate preparations for the fiftieth anniversary of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights [YUN 1948-49, p. 535, GA res. 217A (III), 10 Dec. 1948]. Governments were asked to review and assess the progress that had been made since the adoption of the Declaration, to identify obstacles to achieving progress and ways in which they could be overcome and to undertake additional efforts to develop education and information programmes. Human rights treaty bodies were invited to give attention to the anniversary and to reflect on their possible contribution to the preparations. The Commission called on relevant UN organs and agencies to make an assessment of and to put forward pertinent conclusions on the state of implementation and the impact of existing international human rights instruments, and invited them to mark the anniversary by intensifying their own contributions to UN system-wide efforts to promote and protect human rights. NGOs and national institutions were invited to participate in the preparation of the anniversary, to intensify their campaign for greater understanding and better use of the Declaration and to communicate their observations and recommendations to the High Commissioner.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/88.

Commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in adopting the Universal Declaration of Human Rights on 10 December 1948, it recognized the inherent dignity and equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family as the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Considering that the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration provides an opportunity for the United Nations and its Member States to redouble their efforts to promote awareness and strengthened observance of the rights set out in the Declaration,

Recognizing the Declaration as the source of inspiration and the basis of subsequent progress in the field of human rights,

Concerned that international human rights standards are not fully and universally respected, that human rights continue to be violated in all parts of the world and that people still suffer misery and are deprived of the full enjoyment of their civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights, and convinced of the necessity to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms in all situations and to strengthen United Nations efforts in this regard,

Recalling the significance and the message of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling also its decision 48/416 of 10 December 1993, in which it decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session an item entitled "Fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights",

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in particular section IX thereof entitled "1998: Human Rights Year", in which proposals to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary were made, including the convening of a ceremonial meeting of the General Assembly, and welcoming the intention of the High Commissioner to facilitate cooperation between various initiatives aimed at the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary,

1. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to coordinate the preparations for the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, bearing in mind the provisions set out in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action for evaluation and follow-up;

2. Invites Governments to review and assess the progress that has been made in the field of human rights since the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to identify obstacles and ways in which they can be overcome to achieve progress in this area, to undertake additional efforts and to develop programmes of education and information, with a view to disseminating the text of the Declaration and arriving at a better understanding of the universal message;

3. Invites the human rights treaty bodies to give appropriate attention, within their mandates and methods of work, to the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration and to reflect on their possible contribution to the preparations;

4. Endorses the intention of the relevant United Nations organs and agencies, in the light of the purposes set forth in the Declaration, to make an assessment of and to put forward pertinent conclusions on the state of implementation and impact of existing international human rights instruments;

5. Calls upon the relevant United Nations organs and agencies, in coordination with the High Commissioner, to mark the anniversary by intensifying their own contributions to United Nations system-wide efforts to promote and protect human rights;

6. Invites non-governmental organizations and national institutions to participate fully in the preparations for the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration, to intensify their campaign for greater understanding and better use of the Declaration and to communicate their observations and recommendations to the High Commissioner;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to include in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 appropriate activities to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration;

8. Decides to convene, during its fifty-third session, a one-day plenary meeting, on 10 December 1998, to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration;

9. Also decides to review during its fifty-second session the state of preparations for the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration and to consider appropriate measures in this regard, including its own contribution.

General Assembly resolution 51/88

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.1) without vote, 20 November (meeting 46); 41-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.35/Rev.1); agenda item 110 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 36, 37, 42, 43, 45, 46; plenary 82.

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocols

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1996, parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966 [YUN 1966, p. 423, GA res. 2200 A (XXI), 16 Dec. 1966] and in force since 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 609], totalled 136 and 89 States, respectively. Belize, Kuwait, Sierra Leone and Thailand became parties to the Covenant in 1996; Malawi and Sierra Leone acceded to the Optional Protocol.

In 1996, there were no new parties to the Second Optional Protocol, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty—adopted by the Assembly in 1989 [GA res. 44/128] and in force since 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 544]; the total number of States parties remained at 29 as at 31 December 1996.

On 11 April [res. 1996/16], the Commission on Human Rights appealed to States that had not done so to become parties to the Covenant and the Optional Protocols and to make the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant. It asked the Secretary-General to consider ways of assisting States parties to the Covenant in the preparation of their reports; to provide the Human Rights Committee—the body responsible for monitoring the implementation of the Covenant—with additional means to deal with its increasing workload; and to report in 1997 on the status of the Covenant and its Protocols.

The Secretary-General submitted a report on the status of the Covenant and its Protocols as at 1 November 1996 [E/CN.4/1997/72].

Monitoring body. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, held three sessions in 1996: its fifty-sixth from 18 March to 4 April in New York, and its fifty-seventh from 8 to 26 July and fifty-eighth from 21 October to 8 November, both in Geneva.

At its 1996 sessions, the Committee considered reports from 12 States—Brazil, Denmark, Gabon, Germany, Guatemala, Mauritius, Nigeria, Peru, Spain, Switzerland, United Kingdom (Hong Kong), Zambia—under article 40 of the Covenant. It adopted views on communications from individuals claiming that their rights under the Covenant had been violated, and decided that other such communications were inadmissible. Those views and decisions were annexed to the Committee's report [A/51/40].

The Committee adopted General Comment No. 25 on article 25 of the Covenant, which recognized and protected the right of every citizen to take part in the conduct of public affairs, the right to vote and to be elected, and the right to have access to public service.

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

On 11 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/11)], the Commission on Human Rights, recalling the conclusions and recommendations of the 1993 seminar on appropriate indicators to measure achievements in the progressive realization of economic, social and cultural rights [YUN 1993, p. 890], recommended that the Centre for Human Rights convene expert seminars focused on specific economic, social and cultural rights with a view to clarifying the content of those rights. By decision 1996/256 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's recommendation.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to invite international financial institutions to continue considering the possibility of organizing an expert seminar on their role in the realization of economic, social and cultural rights. The High Commissioner was asked to continue to promote coordination of the human rights activities of the United Nations and those of development agencies with a view to drawing on their expertise and support.

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1996, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966 [YUN 1966, p. 419, GA res. 2200A (XXI)] and in force since 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 609], had been ratified, acceded to or succeeded to by 135 States. During the year, Kuwait and Sierra Leone became parties.

On 11 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/16)], the Commission on Human Rights appealed to all States that had not done so to become parties to the Covenant. It asked the Secretary-General to consider ways of assisting States parties in the preparation of their reports; to provide the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights—the body responsible for monitoring the implementation of the Covenant—with additional means to deal with its increasing workload; and to report in 1997 on the status of the Covenant.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report [E/CN.4/1997/72] on the status of the Covenant as at 1 November 1996.

Implementation

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/38.

Follow-up to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1988(LX) of 11 May 1976, by which it noted the important responsibilities placed upon the Economic and Social Council by the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in particular those resulting from articles 21 and 22, and expressed its readiness to fulfil those responsibilities,

Recalling its decision 1978/10 of 3 May 1978, by which it decided to establish a sessional working group on the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling also its resolutions 1979/43 of 11 May 1979 and 1982/33 of 6 May 1982 and its decision 1981/158 of 8 May 1981,

Recalling further its resolution 1985/17 of 28 May 1985, by which it reviewed the composition, organization and administrative arrangements of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and established the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Having taken into account the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Conference on Human Rights, which reaffirmed that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat them globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing, and with the same emphasis,

Aware of the provisions of article 29 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Noting that the provisions concerning the follow-up and monitoring of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights are not consistent with those in other human rights treaties,

Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its resumed substantive session of 1996, a report on the legal procedure necessary to bring the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in line with other similar human rights treaty bodies.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/38

26 July 1996

Meeting 51

Adopted without vote

Draft by Costa Rica, for Group of 77 and China (E/1996/L.38/Rev.1); agenda item 5 (d).

Meeting numbers. ESC 44, 46, 47, 50, 51.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the Council (see above), the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/1996/101] on the legal procedure required to bring the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in line with other similar human rights treaty bodies. He stated that the Committee was the only monitoring body whose establishment had not been provided for in the relevant treaty, and the only way to bring it in line with similar human rights treaty bodies was to grant the Committee a treaty-based status. The Secretary-General cited the procedure for amending treaties under the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties [YUN 1969, p. 734]. Pending the entry into force of the amendments, namely, after their adoption by a majority of the States parties and after their approval by the General Assembly, but prior to their acceptance by a two-thirds majority of the States parties, the Economic and Social Council or the Assembly could, by appropriate action, give effect to the provisions of those amendments.

On 10 October, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/308, took note of the Secretary-General's report and asked him to bring it to the attention of the States parties to the Covenant.

Monitoring body. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, established in 1985 [YUN 1985, p. 878], held its fourteenth and fifteenth sessions in Geneva, from 30 April to 17 May and from 18 November to 6 December, respectively [E/1997/22]. The Committee's pre-session, five-member working group, established in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 527], met in Geneva from 11 to 15 December 1995 and from 20 to 24 May 1996 to identify issues that might most usefully be discussed with representatives of reporting States.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/253 of 23 July, took note of the Committee's report on its twelfth and thirteenth (1995) sessions [YUN 1995, p. 698].

In 1996, the Committee examined reports covering articles 1 to 15 of the Covenant submitted by Belarus [E/1994/104/Add.6], the Dominican Republic [E/1990/6/Add.7], El Salvador [E/1990/5/Add.25], Finland [E/1994/104/Add.7], Guatemala [E/1990/5/Add.24], Paraguay [E/1990/5/Add.23], Portugal (Macao) [E/1990/6/Add.8], Spain [E/1994/104/Add.5] and the United Kingdom (Hong Kong) [E/1994/104/Add.10]. In addition, the Committee considered the state of implementation by Guinea of the economic, social and cultural rights contained in the Covenant.

The day of general discussion was devoted to further consideration of the proposed draft optional protocol which would grant the right of individuals or groups to submit communications concerning non-compliance with the Covenant. The Committee concluded consideration of the draft optional protocol. By a December note [E/CN.4/1997/105], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights the Committee's report on the draft optional protocol. It provided an analysis of the issues that would need to be examined by the Commission in its consideration of the proposed optional protocol.

Pursuant to a 1976 Economic and Social Council resolution [YUN 1976, p. 615], the Secretary-General transmitted the twenty-first [E/1996/40] and twenty-second [E/1996/98] reports of the International Labour Organization concerning implementation of the Covenant.

Convention against racial discrimination

As at 31 December 1996, there were 148 parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in 1965 [GA res. 2106 A (XX)], and in force since 1969 [YUN 1969, p. 488]. Azerbaijan and Malawi acceded during 1996.

The Secretary-General reported [A/51/435] on the status of the Convention as at 30 August 1996.

On 29 August [E/CN.4/1997/2 (dec. 1996/120)], the Subcommission asked two of its members, working together with two members of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, to prepare a working paper on article 7 of the Convention, to be submitted to the two bodies at their respective sessions in August 1997. Article 7 dealt with the adoption by States parties of measures to combat prejudices which led to racial discrimination and to promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among nations and racial or ethnic groups.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), set up under article 8 of the Convention, held its forty-eighth and forty-ninth sessions, both in Geneva, from 26 February to 15 March and from 5 to 23 August, respectively [A/51/18].

The Committee mainly devoted its sessions to examining reports submitted by States parties on measures taken to implement Convention provisions. It considered reports, comments and information submitted by 32 States parties. It summarized its members' views on each country report and the statements made by the States parties concerned.

Under the item dealing with the prevention of racial discrimination, including early warning measures and urgent procedures, the Committee adopted decisions concerning the situations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Cyprus, Liberia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). In addition, the Committee adopted a declaration on the situation of Rwanda, in which it recommended the convening of a constitutional conference aimed at structural measures to secure agreement on the form of government acceptable to all people of Rwanda, to guarantee personal security for everyone and to build a democratic society (for details of the political situation in Rwanda, see PART ONE, Chapter II; for information on human rights violations there, see PART TWO, Chapter III).

In conformity with article 14 of the Convention, CERD considered communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming violation of their rights under the Convention by a State party recognizing CERD's competence to receive and consider such communications. Twenty-three States parties (Algeria, Australia, Bulgaria, Chile, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Russian Federation, Senegal, Slovakia, Sweden, Ukraine, Uruguay) had declared such recognition.

Under article 15, the Committee was empowered to consider copies of petitions, reports and other information relating to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories. CERD observed that it found it impossible to fulfil its functions under article 15 as the documents did not include copies of petitions and did not contain valid information concerning legislative, judicial, administrative or other measures directly related to the Convention's principles and objectives. The Committee asked that the appropriate information be furnished.

On 8 March, the Committee adopted a general recommendation dealing with the nature of obligations under article 5, which contained the obligation of States parties to guarantee the enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights and freedoms without racial discrimination, and the right to self-determination. On 16 August, it adopted a general recommendation on the rights of refugees and persons displaced on the basis of ethnic criteria.

Annexed to the CERD report was a statement adopted on 6 March condemning recent terrorist acts in Israel (see PART ONE, Chapter VI) and a statement of 14 March addressed to the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII) calling for priority attention to residential segregation in any consideration of the right to live in dignity.

In a September 1996 report [A/51/430], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that, as at 30 August, 17 States parties had accepted an amendment to the Convention regarding the financing of CERD. The amendment, adopted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 714], was to enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties. The Secretary-General stated that as at 30 September outstanding assessments and arrears totalled $225,506.

On 19 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/22)], the Commission on Human Rights urged States parties to notify the Secretary-General, as depositary of the Convention, of their acceptance of the amendment.

Seminar. The Centre for Human Rights in 1996 organized a seminar (Geneva, 9-13 September) [E/CN.4/1997/68/Add.1] to assess the implementation of the Convention, with particular reference to articles 4 and 6. Its aim was to consider the obstacles to the effective implementation of the Convention and propose ways to overcome them. With particular reference to article 4, emphasis was placed on the difficulties which prevented the adoption of measures aiming at the elimination of all forms of incitement to racial hatred and discrimination and the organizations involved in such activities. Under article 6, participants considered the effectiveness of legislation and recourse procedures available to victims of racism and racial discrimination.

The participants noted that despite the efforts taken by the international community, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia, ethnic antagonism and acts of violence resulting therefrom were increasing. They also noted with concern that technological developments in communications, including computer networks such as the Internet, could be used for dissemination of racist, anti-Semitic and xenophobic propaganda.

The seminar made recommendations for CERD, States parties, the mass media and NGOs. It recommended that a seminar be organized by the Centre for Human Rights in cooperation with CERD, UNESCO, ITU and other relevant UN agencies, NGOs and Internet service providers, to assess the role of the Internet and to suggest ways for its responsible use in the light of the implementation of the Convention's provisions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/80.

International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and its resolutions on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Reiterating the importance of the Convention, which is one of the most widely accepted human rights instruments adopted under the auspices of the United Nations,

Reiterating once again the need to intensify the struggle for the elimination of all forms of racism and racial discrimination throughout the world, especially its most brutal forms,

Aware of the importance of the contributions of the Committee to the efforts of the United Nations to combat racism and all other forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin,

Emphasizing the obligation of all States parties to the Convention to take legislative, judicial and other measures to secure full implementation of the provisions of the Convention,

Expressing its satisfaction at the entry into force on 3 December 1982 of the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from individuals or groups of individuals under article 14 of the Convention,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in particular section II. B. relating to equality, dignity and tolerance, and General Assembly resolution 50/201 of 22 December 1995, in particular paragraph 9 thereof,

Recalling its resolution 47/111 of 16 December 1992, in which it welcomed the decision, taken on 15 January 1992 at the Fourteenth Meeting of States Parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, to amend paragraph 6 of article 8 of the Convention and to add a new paragraph, as paragraph 7 of article 8, with a view to providing for the financing of the Committee from the regular budget of the United Nations, and concerned that an amendment to the Convention has not yet entered into force,

Welcoming efforts of the Secretary-General to ensure interim financial arrangements for the financing of the expenses incurred by the Committee,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 4 of article 10 of the Convention regarding the location of the meetings of the Committee,

Stressing the importance of enabling the Committee to function smoothly and to have all necessary facilities for the effective performance of its functions under the Convention,

I

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination on the work of its forty-eighth and forty-ninth sessions;

2. Commends the Committee for its work with regard to the implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

3. Calls upon States parties to fulfil their obligation, under paragraph 1 of article 9 of the Convention, to submit in due time their periodic reports on measures taken to implement the Convention;

4. Commends the Committee on its working methods, including its procedure for reviewing the implementation of the Convention in States whose initial and periodic reports are overdue and the formulating of concluding observations on reports of States parties to the Convention;

5. Commends the Committee for its contribution to the prevention of racial discrimination, including early warning measures and urgent procedures, and welcomes its relevant action thereon;

6. Encourages the Committee to contribute fully to the implementation of the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and its revised Programme of Action, including by the continued collaboration between the Committee and the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

7. Welcomes the cooperation and exchange of information between the Committee and relevant structures and mechanisms of the United Nations, including the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as well as the process of establishing liaisons with other international organizations;

II

Financial situation of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

8. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination;

9. Expresses its profound concern at the fact that a number of States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination have still not fulfilled their financial obligations, as shown in the report of the Secretary-General, and strongly appeals to all States parties which are in arrears to fulfil their outstanding financial obligations under paragraph 6 of article 8 of the Convention;

10. Urges States parties to accelerate their domestic ratification procedures with regard to the amendment to the Convention regarding the financing of the Committee and expeditiously to notify the Secretary-General in writing of their agreement to the amendment, as decided upon at the Fourteenth Meeting of States Parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination on 15 January 1992, endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/111 of 16 December 1992 and further reiterated at the Sixteenth Meeting of States Parties on 16 January 1996;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure adequate financial arrangements and appropriate means to ensure the functioning of the Committee;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to invite those States parties that are in arrears to pay the amounts in arrears and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

13. Decides to consider at its fifty-second session, under the item entitled "Elimination of racism and racial discrimination", the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee and the report of the Committee;

III

Status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

14. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

15. Expresses its satisfaction at the number of States that have ratified the Convention or acceded thereto;

16. Reaffirms once again its conviction that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and implementation of its provisions are necessary for the realization of the objectives of the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and for action beyond the Decade;

17. Requests those States that have not yet become parties to the Convention to ratify it or accede thereto;

18. Encourages States to limit the extent of any reservation they lodge to the Convention and to formulate any reservation as precisely and as narrowly as possible while ensuring that no reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention or otherwise contrary to international law;

19. Requests the States parties to the Convention that have not yet done so to consider the possibility of making the declaration provided for in article 14 of the Convention;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report concerning the status of the Convention, in accordance with resolution 2106 A (XX) of 21 December 1965.

Convention against torture

As at 31 December 1996, 101 States were parties to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [GA res. 39/46], which entered into force in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 755]. Azerbaijan, El Salvador, Honduras, Iceland, Kuwait, Lithuania, Malawi and Zaire became parties in 1996. The optional provisions of articles 21 and 22 (under which a party recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a party claims that another is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and to receive communications from or on behalf of individuals claiming to be victims of a violation of the Convention by a State party) also entered into force in 1987; 41 parties had made the required declarations under articles 21 and 22. Amendments to articles 17 and 18, adopted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 735], had been accepted by 20 States parties by the end of 1996.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 3 September [A/51/426] and 5 December [E/CN.4/1997/28].

Commission action. On 19 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/33A)], the Commission on Human Rights urged all States to become parties to the Convention and invited all ratifying or acceding States that had not done so to make the declaration provided for in articles 21 and 22 and to consider withdrawing their reservations to article 20. States parties were encouraged to notify the Secretary-General of their acceptance of the amendments to articles 17 and 18. The Secretary-General was asked to ensure the provision of adequate staffing and technical facilities for the Committee against Torture.

Draft optional protocol

On 19 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/37)], the Commission welcomed the conclusion of the first reading of the draft optional protocol to the Convention made by the working group on the draft optional protocol in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 703]. The protocol would establish a system of visits to places of detention to be carried out by a committee of experts. The Commission asked the working group to continue its work and to submit a report. The Secretary-General was asked to transmit the report to Governments, specialized agencies, chairpersons of the human rights treaty bodies and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs concerned, and to invite them to submit their comments to the working group. It also wanted Governments, specialized agencies and NGOs, as well as the Chairman of the Committee against Torture and the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, to participate in working group activities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/22.

Question of a draft optional protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/37 of 19 April 1996,

1. Authorizes an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to meet for a period of two weeks prior to the fifty-third session of the Commission in order to continue the elaboration of a draft optional protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend to the working group all the necessary facilities for its meetings and to transmit the report of the working group to Governments, the specialized agencies, the chairpersons of the human rights treaty bodies and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/22

23 July 1996

Meeting 46

Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1996/23); agenda item 5 (d).

Meeting numbers. ESC 44, 46.

Working group activities. The working group on the draft optional protocol held its fifth session from 14 to 25 October [E/CN.4/1997/33]. Annexed to the working group report were the text of the articles which constituted the outcome of the second reading and the text of those which constituted the basis for future work.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee against Torture, established as a monitoring body under the Convention, held its sixteenth session in Geneva from 30 April to 10 May [A/51/44]. It examined reports submitted by Armenia, China, Croatia, Finland, Malta and Senegal.

The Committee held four closed meetings during which, in accordance with article 20, it studied confidential information that appeared to contain well-founded indications that torture was systematically practised in a State party to the Convention. Under article 22, the Committee considered communications submitted by individuals who claimed that their rights, as enumerated in the Convention, had been violated by a State party and who had exhausted all available domestic remedies.

The Committee held its seventeenth session, also in Geneva, from 11 to 22 November [A/52/44], during which it reviewed reports submitted by Algeria, Georgia, Poland, the Republic of Korea, the Russian Federation and Uruguay. In closed meetings, the Committee examined communications from individuals claiming to be victims of violations by States parties to the Convention.

Convention on Elimination of Discrimination against Women

By a note of 11 June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/20], the Secretary-General summarized information received from the UN Division for the Advancement of Women giving the views of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Commission on the Status of Women on whether it would be desirable to have an advisory opinion on the value and legal effect of reservations concerning the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [GA res. 34/180].

On 29 August [E/CN.4/1997/2 (res. 1996/21)], the Subcommission appealed to Governments which had not done so to ratify the Convention without resort to reservations.

On 12 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 51/68, urged all States that had not ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so as soon as possible, so that universal ratification could be achieved by the year 2000.

(For details on the status of the Convention and work on an optional protocol, see PART THREE, Chapter X.)

Convention on Rights of the Child

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, there were 188 States parties to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [GA res. 44/25], which entered into force in 1990. During 1996, Andorra, Oman and Saudi Arabia became parties.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 15 August [A/51/424] and 1 November [E/CN.4/1997/93]. On 12 December, the General Assembly, by decision 51/418, took note of the Secretary-General's August report.

Implementation

Monitoring body. During 1996, the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) held its eleventh (8-26 January) [CRC/C/50], twelfth (20 May-7 June) [CRC/C/54] and thirteenth (23 September-1 October) [CRC/C/57] sessions, all in Geneva.

Under article 44 of the Convention, the Committee considered initial reports from 19 States parties: China, Croatia, Cyprus, Finland, Guatemala, Iceland, Lebanon, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Republic of Korea, Slovenia, United Kingdom (Hong Kong), Uruguay, Yemen, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), Zimbabwe.

On 7 October, the Committee devoted its day of general discussion to the issue of the child and the media.

By decision 1996/253 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the third biennial report of CRC [A/51/41], covering its activities at the sixth to eleventh sessions.

Commission action. On 24 April [res. 1996/85], the Commission on Human Rights urged States that had not done so to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority, and recalled the responsibility of States parties to implement the Convention. It urged States parties that had made reservations to review the compatibility of their reservations with article 51 of the Convention and other relevant rules of international law. The Commission asked UN bodies and organs and encouraged States parties, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, the media and the community at large to intensify their efforts to disseminate information on the Convention, promote understanding of it and assist States parties in its implementation. The Secretary-General was asked to ensure the provision of staff and facilities for the effective performance of CRC.

Children in armed conflict

Working group activities. As authorized by the Economic and Social Council in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 707], a second session of the working group on a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on involvement of children in armed conflicts was held (Geneva, 15-26 January and 21 March) [E/CN.4/1996/102]. The working group conducted a general discussion on the draft optional protocol and considered proposals relating to the preamble and operative part of the draft. Annexed to the working group's report was a draft text of the optional protocol.

Commission action. On 24 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/85)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to transmit the working group's report to Governments, relevant specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, the International Committee of the Red Cross and the expert appointed to undertake a study on the impact of armed conflicts on children, and to invite their comments thereon in time for circulation prior to the working group's next session. CRC was asked to offer comments on the draft. The Commission asked the working group to meet for a two-week period or less prior to the Commission's 1997 session, with a view to finalizing the draft optional protocol.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/288 of 24 July, approved the Commission's request to the working group.

Sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

Working group activities. As authorized by the Economic and Social Council in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 707], a second session of the working group for the elaboration of a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography was held (Geneva, 29 January-9 February and 22 March) [E/CN.4/1996/101]. The working group undertook a general discussion pertaining to its mandate and the content of the protocol and considered proposals relating to the guidelines for a possible draft optional protocol. Annexed to the working group's report were texts resulting from its discussions.

Commission action. On 24 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/85)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to transmit the working group's report to Governments, relevant specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, CRC and the relevant Special Rapporteur, and to invite their comments thereon in time for circulation prior to the working group's next session. The working group was requested to meet for a two-week period, or less if possible, prior to the Commission's 1997 session, with a view to finalizing the draft optional protocol. That request was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1996/288 of 24 July.

Convention on migrant workers

Status of Convention

As at 31 December 1996, the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in 1990 [GA res. 45/158], had been signed and ratified by Morocco and the Philippines, acceded to by Bosnia and Herzegovina, Colombia, Egypt, Seychelles, Sri Lanka and Uganda, and signed by Chile and Mexico.

The Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on the status of the Convention as at 31 August [A/51/415], and to the Commission on Human Rights as at 1 November [E/CN.4/1997/65].

Commission action. On 11 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/18)], the Commission on Human Rights called on all Member States to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority. The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to cooperate with regional and international organizations concerned with the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and members of their families. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide all assistance necessary to promote the Convention through the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights and the human rights programme of advisory services, and to report in 1997 on the Convention's status and on the Secretariat's efforts to promote it and the protection of the rights of migrant workers.

(For further information on migrant workers, see PART TWO, Chapter II.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/85.

International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once more the permanent validity of the principles and norms set forth in the basic instruments regarding the international protection of human rights, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Bearing in mind the principles and norms established within the framework of the International Labour Organization and the importance of the work done in connection with migrant workers and members of their families in other specialized agencies and in various organs of the United Nations,

Reiterating that, despite the existence of an already established body of principles and norms, there is a need to make further efforts to improve the situation and to guarantee respect for the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and members of their families,

Aware of the situation of migrant workers and members of their families and the marked increase in migratory movements that has occurred, especially in certain parts of the world,

Considering that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, all States are urged to guarantee the protection of the human rights of all migrant workers and members of their families,

Underlining the importance of the creation and promotion of conditions to foster greater harmony and tolerance between migrant workers and the rest of the society of the State in which they reside, with the aim of eliminating the growing manifestations of racism and xenophobia taking place in segments of many societies and perpetrated by individuals or groups against migrant workers,

Recalling its resolution 45/158 of 18 December 1990, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the International Convention on the ### Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families,

Bearing in mind that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, States are invited to consider the possibility of signing and ratifying the Convention at the earliest possible time,

Recalling that, in its resolution 50/169 of 22 December 1995, it requested the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-first session a report on the status of the Convention,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the growing manifestations of racism, xenophobia and other forms of discrimination and inhuman or degrading treatment directed against migrant workers in different parts of the world;

2. Welcomes the signature or ratification of, or accession to, the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families by some Member States;

3. Calls upon all Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority, and expresses the hope that it will enter into force at an early date;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all facilities and assistance necessary for the promotion of the Convention through the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights and the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

5. Invites the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify their efforts with a view to disseminating information on and promoting understanding of the Convention;

6. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and requests him to submit to it at its fifty-second session an updated report on the status of the Convention;

7. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its fifty-second session under the sub-item entitled "Implementation of human rights instruments".

General Assembly resolution 51/85

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.1) without vote, 20 November (meeting 46); 24-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.32); agenda item 110 (all Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 36, 37, 42, 43, 45, 46; plenary 82.

Convention on genocide

As at 31 December 1996, 122 States were parties to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide [GA res. 260 A (III)]. Azerbaijan and Lithuania acceded to the Convention in 1996.

The Secretary-General reported [A/51/422] to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention as at 31 August.

Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1996, there were 100 States parties to the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid [GA res. 3068(XXVIII)], which entered into force in 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 575]. Azerbaijan acceded to the Convention in 1996.

In a September report [A/51/427], the Secretary-General detailed the status of the Convention as at 31 August. On 12 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report by decision 51/419.

The Commission on Human Rights in 1995 had suspended consideration of the item "Implementation of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid" [YUN 1995, p. 790], as well as meetings of the Group of Three [YUN 1995, p. 693], the monitoring body of that Convention.

Other activities

Follow-up to 1993 World Conference

Commission action. On 23 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/78)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights, the General Assembly and other UN organs and bodies related to human rights to take further action towards the full implementation of all recommendations of the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights [YUN 1993, p. 908]. It asked the High Commissioner to coordinate human rights promotion and protection activities throughout the UN system, as set out in a 1993 Assembly resolution [48/141].

The Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council consider devoting the coordination segment at its substantive session of 1998 to the question of the coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the 1993 Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action [YUN 1993, p. 908] as part of the 1998 five-year review called for in the Declaration and Programme of Action. The Council endorsed that recommendation in decision 1996/283 of 24 July. The High Commissioner was asked to continue to report on measures taken and progress achieved in the implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action, particularly concerning the preparation for the 1998 review.

Note by High Commissioner. By a September note [E/CN.4/1997/3], the High Commissioner transmitted to the Commission the report of a meeting of special rapporteurs, representatives, experts and chairmen of working groups of the special procedures and advisory services of the Commission (Geneva, 28-30 May), as called for in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action. The participants discussed cooperation with the High Commissioner; restructuring the Centre for Human Rights; format, length and deadlines for reports; assessment of progress made in achieving mandated objectives; coordination between the special procedures system and treaty bodies; the relationship between terrorist activities and human rights in the context of the participants' mandates; integrating the rights of women; and administrative questions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/118.

Comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/121 of 20 December 1993, in which it endorsed the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, as well as its subsequent resolutions on this matter,

Reaffirming the view of the World Conference that the promotion and protection of human rights is a matter of priority for the international community,

Considering that the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms is one of the basic purposes of the Charter of the United Nations and one of the main priorities of the Organization,

Convinced that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action has to be translated into effective action by States, the competent United Nations organs and organizations and other organizations concerned, including non-governmental organizations,

Recognizing the importance of dialogue and cooperation between Governments and non-governmental organizations in the field of human rights,

Recalling the request of the Conference to the Secretary-General and the General Assembly to take immediate steps to increase substantially the resources for the human rights programme from within the existing and future regular budgets of the United Nations,

Recalling also part II, paragraph 100, of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, in which the Conference requested the Secretary-General to invite, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, all States and all organs and agencies of the United Nations system related to human rights to report to him on the progress made in the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, through the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council,

Recalling further that regional and, as appropriate, national human rights institutions, as well as non-governmental organizations, may present their views to the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and that special attention should be paid to assessing the progress towards the goal of universal ratification of international human rights treat-ties and protocols adopted within the framework of the United Nations,

Recalling that by its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993 the General Assembly decided to create the post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights as the United Nations official with principal responsibility for United Nations human rights activities, including coordination of the human rights promotion and protection activities throughout the United Nations system,

Noting that, at the first regular session of 1994 of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, held in April, the executive heads of all United Nations agencies discussed the implications of the results of the Conference for their respective programmes and committed themselves to support the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the coordination of the United Nations organs, bodies and the specialized agencies whose activities deal with human rights, as set out in resolution 48/141,

Recognizing that the interdependence of democracy, development and respect for human rights, as stated in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, requires a comprehensive and integrated approach to the promotion and protection of human rights and that adequate inter-agency cooperation and coordination are essential in order to ensure such a fully integrated approach throughout the United Nations system,

Noting that the High Commissioner has established a permanent dialogue with the United Nations programmes and agencies whose activities deal with human rights in order to maintain systematic exchanges of information, experience and expertise,

Welcoming the fact that the call of the World Conference on Human Rights for a United Nations system-wide approach to human rights issues has been reflected in the recommendations of major international conferences organized by the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,

Noting the ongoing efforts to ensure a coordinated follow-up to major international conferences in the economic, social and related fields,

Recalling that each year the Economic and Social Council shall carry out, within the framework of its coordination segment, a review of cross-cutting themes common to major international conferences and/or contribute to an overall review of the implementation of the programme of action of a United Nations conference, in accordance with agreed conclusions 1995/1 of the Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in particular chapter IX, entitled "1998: Human Rights Year",

1. Reaffirms the importance of the promotion of universal respect for and observance and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, as expressed in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

2. Reaffirms also the views of the World Conference on Human Rights on the urgency of eliminating denials and violations of human rights;

3. Recognizes that the international community should devise ways and means to remove current obstacles and meet the challenges to the full realization of all human rights and to prevent the continuation of human rights violations resulting therefrom throughout the world;

4. Calls upon all States to take further action with a view to the full realization of all human rights in the light of the recommendations of the Conference;

5. Urges all States to continue to give widespread publicity to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, including through training programmes, human rights education and public information, in order to promote increased awareness of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

6. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights and other organs and bodies of the United Nations system related to human rights to take further action with a view to the full implementation of all the recommendations of the Conference;

7. Also requests the High Commissioner to continue to coordinate the human rights promotion and protection activities throughout the United Nations system, as set out in resolution 48/141, including through a permanent dialogue with the United Nations agencies and programmes whose activities deal with human rights;

8. Invites the Administrative Committee on Coordination to continue to discuss the implications of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action for the United Nations system, with the participation of the High Commissioner;

9. Takes note of the intention of the High Commissioner to invite all States and all organs and agencies of the United Nations system related to human rights to carry out a thorough evaluation of the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, as part of the 1998 five-year review foreseen in part II, paragraph 100, of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

10. Welcomes the inter-agency consultations of the High Commissioner with all United Nations programmes and agencies whose activities deal with human rights for the preparation of the 1998 five-year review, and calls upon them to contribute actively to this process;

11. Encourages regional and national human rights institutions as well as non-governmental organizations to present, on this occasion, their views on the progress made in the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

12. Welcomes and supports Economic and Social Council decision 1996/283 of 24 July 1996, in which the Council endorsed the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights to consider devoting the coordination segment at its substantive session of 1998 to the question of the coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action as part of the 1998 five-year review foreseen in part II, paragraph 100, of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

13. Requests the High Commissioner to continue to report on the measures taken and the progress achieved in the comprehensive implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, in particular concerning the preparation of the 1998 five-year review;

14. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-second session under the sub-item entitled "Comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action".

General Assembly resolution 51/118

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.4) without vote, 27 November (meeting 54); 91-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.67), orally revised; agenda item 110 (d).

Meeting numbers: GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-49, 52, 54; plenary 82.

International cooperation

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/100.

Enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the enhancement of international cooperation is essential for the effective promotion and protection of human rights,

Reaffirming its commitment to promote international cooperation, as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, in particular in Article 1, paragraph 3, as well as relevant provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, to enhance genuine cooperation among Member States in the field of human rights,

Encouraging the Working Group on Human Rights of the Third Committee to continue its efforts to implement section II, paragraph 17, of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, giving due consideration to ways and means to promote international cooperation in the field of human rights with a view to accomplishing its mandate before the conclusion of the fifty-first session of the General Assembly,

1. Supports the consultations initiated during the fifty-second session of the Commission on Human Rights on the need to promote international cooperation through genuine and constructive dialogue on the basis of mutual respect and equality of States;

2. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to pursue the matter with a view to reaching a successful conclusion of this initiative, preferably by the fifty-third session of the Commission.

General Assembly resolution 51/100

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 114-42-16 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) by recorded vote (94-39-15), 26 November (meeting 53); draft by Colombia, for Non-Aligned Movement and China (A/C.3/51/L.58), orally revised; agenda item 110 (b).

Also on 12 December, the Assembly, by decision 51/423, decided that the item "Comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action" would remain on the agenda of its fifty-first session to allow the Working Group of the Third Committee to continue its work.

Advisory services

In 1996 [E/CN.4/1997/86], under the UN programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, established in 1955 [YUN 1955, p. 164], activities carried out rose to 402, compared with 215 in 1995. Activities were funded by the UN regular budget, by the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights, established in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 790], and the Trust Fund for a Human Rights Education Programme in Cambodia. During 1996, four multi-year national projects were completed—in Albania, Benin, Sao Tome and Principe, and Slovakia. Implementation of major multi-year technical cooperation projects began in Argentina, Burundi, Latvia, Nepal, Palestine, Papua New Guinea and Togo. In addition, a 15-month project began in Haiti which aimed at strengthening the judicial system and assisting in national reconciliation. As to regional and global projects, global activities concerned a wide range of issues, including women's rights, training for peacekeepers and human rights monitors, training for the military and human rights education; regional activities took place in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and Eastern Europe. At year's end, there was a technical cooperation field presence in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Cambodia, Gaza (Palestine), Malawi, Mongolia, Rwanda and Togo. Twenty-six new projects were approved in 1996, most to provide assistance to a variety of national counterparts aimed at strengthening national capacity.

Commission action. On 19 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/55)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the High Commissioner to establish a roster of experts under the programme of advisory services and technical cooperation, and to invite Member States to provide relevant information to that end. It also asked him to explore further the possibilities offered by cooperation with the Centre for Human Rights, specialized bodies and other UN organizations, and NGOs. The Secretary-General was asked to allocate to the Centre more resources to enlarge the programme of advisory services and technical cooperation in the field of human rights in order to meet the substantially increased demand.

As for the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to ensure its more efficient management, strict and transparent project management rules, periodic evaluations of its programme and projects, and dissemination of evaluation results, including programme implementation and financial accounting reports, as well as to arrange for annual information meetings open to all Member States and organizations directly involved. It also asked that administrative assistance be provided for the Fund's Board of Trustees and that the Board's conclusions be reflected in the annual report to the Commission. The Board was asked to exercise its full mandate as advisory body to promote and solicit contributions to the Fund and to continue to assist the High Commissioner in monitoring, reviewing and improving the process of selecting and implementing technical cooperation projects; the Chairman of the Board was invited to address the Commission.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1997 an inventory and an analysis of the availability of technical cooperation in the field of human rights from all sources, to request relevant information from them and to report on progress made in implementing the programme of advisory services and technical cooperation in the field of human rights and on the operation and administration of the Voluntary Fund.

Voluntary Fund Board

The Board of Trustees of the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights in 1996 held its fifth and sixth sessions (Geneva, 25-28 June [VFTC/BT5/96/14], 19-22 November [VFTC/BT6/96/7]).

In June, the Board endorsed project proposals in the Arab region, the Asia-Pacific region, Guatemala, Kyrgyzstan and Papua New Guinea. It endorsed, on an ex post facto basis, a project on strengthening human rights in the former Yugoslavia.

In November, the Board noted that as at 31 October 1996 total programming resources amounted to $8 million, while $5.8 million was required to finance ongoing and pipeline projects, including project proposals reviewed during the session. The Board endorsed project proposals for Belarus, Bolivia, Burundi, Chile, Moldova, Morocco, Namibia, Panama and South Africa. It also endorsed a project for Africa, as well as four global projects.

Cambodia

Report of Special Representative. In February, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for human rights in Cambodia, Michael Kirby (Australia), described his visit to the country (6-16 January), during which he paid particular attention to vulnerable groups [E/CN.4/1996/93 & Add.1]. He reviewed progress made in Cambodia regarding the right to health, cultural rights, the right to education, the right to a healthy environment and the right to sustainable development, the independence of the judiciary and the rule of law, prisons and other custodial institutions, freedom of expression, the right to be elected and to take part in government, the situation of vulnerable groups, reporting obligations under international human rights instruments, and the provision of ongoing technical advice and assistance.

The Special Representative stated that there had been good progress in the areas of the right to health, culture, education and reporting obligations. Implementation and follow-up had been much more limited in other areas, including judicial independence and the rule of law, police and military, prisons and other custodial institutions, and the rights of vulnerable groups. He noted that his recommendations concerning press law had not been followed.

The Special Representative gave notice of his resignation following a governmental appointment.

In a separate addendum, Cambodia presented its observations on the Special Representative's report.

Commission action. On 19 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/54)], the Commission on Human Rights expressed grave concern about the atrocities that continued to be committed by the Khmer Rouge and about the serious human rights violations detailed by the Special Representative in his reports.

Welcoming the appointment of Thomas Hammarberg (Sweden) as the new Special Representative, the Commission asked him to continue his evaluation of the extent to which the recommendations made by the former Special Representative had been followed up and implemented. It asked the Secretary-General to provide the resources to enable the Special Representative to carry out his work.

The Commission asked the Centre for Human Rights to develop and implement programmes, with the consent and cooperation of the Government, in the priority areas identified by the Special Representative, paying particular attention to women, children, disabled persons and minorities. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1997 on the role of the Centre and on the recommendations made by the Special Representative.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 713], the Secretary-General reported [A/51/453] in October on the recommendations made by the Special Representative on matters within his mandate.

The new Special Representative, during his first mission to Cambodia from 25 June to 6 July, focused on the rights of the child, emphasizing child trafficking and prostitution; effective measures for the protection of the individual against land mines; issues relating to the independence of the judiciary and the administration of justice; and problems relating to the forthcoming elections, including guarantees for freedom of expression.

The Special Representative believed that Cambodian society had made remarkable progress since 1993, within three years becoming one of the freest countries in the region. However, Cambodia was still a poor country suffering from a lack of educated officials and professionals. Attitude changes for a broad recognition of basic democratic principles had been slow; there were contradictions within the political scene that could easily paralyse decision-making and government administration. Tendencies towards corruption existed and remaining Khmer Rouge forces threatened public security.

In a later addendum [A/51/453/Add.1], the Government of Cambodia submitted comments on the Secretary-General's report.

Report of Special Representative. The Special Representative undertook a second mission to Cambodia from 1 to 13 December [E/CN.4/1997/85]. In addition to following up on the four areas of concern selected during his first visit, he examined labour rights, torture and ill-treatment of prisoners and detainees, and further aspects of impunity.

There had been, the Special Representative reported, significant progress in writing reports on implementation of international human rights treaties which Cambodia had ratified in 1993. He noted the intention to develop further the training of police in the area of human rights in law enforcement. Some progress had been made regarding labour rights, but the system of workplace inspections had to be reviewed and made more effective. He expressed deep concern over atrocities committed by the Khmer Rouge, including killings, laying of mines and taking of hostages. Administration of justice was a major concern and the question of impunity had to be addressed, he said. Following visits to two prisons, the Special Representative expressed alarm about their conditions, which appeared to be systematic rather than isolated and coincidental. A recommendation to ban the manufacture, trade and use of anti-personnel mines had not been followed. Although torture was not part of government policy, the practice was not uncommon and had been reported.

In concluding remarks, the Special Representative noted that the human rights situation appeared to be fragile, with tensions between the two major parties slowing the pace of development of laws, structures and broader awareness to protect human rights. The security situation had improved in recent years, but full peace had not been achieved and large areas of the country were traumatized by anti-personnel mines and unexploded ordnance. Progress was being made on human rights education and proposals for laws for the respect of human rights had been submitted to the National Assembly. The Special Representative emphasized that the UN approach to supporting human rights in Cambodia needed to be systematic and long term.

Role of Centre for Human Rights

Reports of Secretary-General. In a February report [E/CN.4/1996/92], the Secretary-General described the activities and programmes of the Cambodia office of the Centre for Human Rights from July to November 1995. Assistance was provided for legislative reform, the administration of justice, treaty reporting and international obligations, human rights education, NGOs and civil society, the dissemination of human rights information and the activities of the three provincial offices of the Centre.

In October the Secretary-General reported [A/51/552] on the activities of the Centre from December 1995 to July 1996, which included extensive cooperation with the Government, cooperation with other UN agencies with programmes and offices in Cambodia, support for legislative reform, human rights training for the armed forces, human rights education, including teacher training and curriculum development, dissemination of human rights materials, support to NGOs and civil society, and carrying out human rights activities at the provincial level. In addition, assistance was provided for the administration of justice to the National Assembly's Commission on Human Rights and for reporting obligations under human rights conventions.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1997/84], the Secretary-General detailed Centre activities from July to December 1996, including legislative reform, the administration of justice, national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, treaty reporting and international obligations, assistance to human rights NGOs, education and training programme and curriculum development, dissemination and translation of information and documentation, and assistance to provincial offices.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/98.

Situation of human rights in Cambodia

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Taking note of the Agreement on a Comprehensive Political Settlement of the Cambodia Conflict, signed in Paris on 23 October 1991, including part III thereof, relating to human rights,

Taking note also of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/54 of 19 April 1996, and recalling General Assembly resolution 50/178 of 22 December 1995 and previous relevant resolutions, including Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/6 of 19 February 1993, in which the Commission recommended the appointment of a special representative for human rights in Cambodia, and the subsequent appointment by the Secretary-General of a special representative,

Bearing in mind the role and responsibilities of the United Nations and the international community in the process of the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Cambodia,

Recognizing that the tragic recent history of Cambodia requires special measures to assure the promotion and protection of the human rights of all people in Cambodia and the non-return to the policies and practices of the past, as stipulated in the Agreement signed in Paris on 23 October 1991,

Commending the continued operation in Cambodia of the office of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat,

Welcoming the understanding reached between the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General and the Government of Cambodia in May 1995 regarding increased consultations between the Centre for Human Rights and the Government of Cambodia,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, through his Special Representative for human rights in Cambodia, in collaboration with the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, to assist the Government of Cambodia in ensuring the protection of the human rights of all people in Cambodia and to ensure adequate resources, from within existing resources, for the enhanced functioning of the operational presence in Cambodia of the Centre;

2. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the role of the Centre for Human Rights in assisting the Government and people of Cambodia in the promotion and protection of human rights;

3. Also welcomes the continuing role of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the promotion and protection of human rights in Cambodia and the signing of a memorandum of understanding with the Government of Cambodia to allow the office in Cambodia of the Centre for Human Rights to continue to operate for the next two years and to maintain its technical cooperation programmes;

4. Commends the work of the former Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Mr. Michael Kirby, in promoting and protecting human rights in Cambodia, and welcomes the appointment by the Secretary-General of Mr. Thomas Hammarberg as his new Special Representative;

b. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Representative, and endorses his recommendations and conclusions, including those aimed at combating child prostitution and trafficking and ensuring the independence of the judiciary and the establishment of the rule of law, freedom of expression and the promotion of an effective, functioning multi-party democracy;

6. Requests the Special Representative, in collaboration with the office in Cambodia of the Centre for Human Rights, to continue his evaluation of the extent to which the recommendations made by the Special Representative in his report and those contained in reports of his predecessor are followed up and implemented;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary resources, from within the regular budget of the United Nations, to enable the Special Representative to continue to fulfil his tasks expeditiously;

8. Welcomes the efforts made by the Government of Cambodia to promote and protect human rights, in particular in the area of human rights education and the essential area of creating a functioning and impartial system of justice, urges that efforts continue in this area, and encourages the Government to improve the conditions of prisons;

9. Notes that communal elections are due to be held in 1997 and National Assembly elections in 1998, and strongly urges the Government of Cambodia to promote and uphold the effective functioning of multi-party democracy, including the right to form political parties, stand for election and take part freely in a representative Government, and to freedom of expression, in accordance with the principles set out in paragraphs 2 and 4 of annex 5 to the Agreement signed in Paris on 23 October 1991;

10. Welcomes the proposed measures, outlined by the Government of Cambodia in its comments on the report of the Secretary-General, to ensure that the forthcoming communal and national elections are free and fair, that members of the armed forces remain neutral during the election campaign, that the individual vote is confidential and that local and international observers are welcomed;

11. Calls upon the Government of Cambodia to investigate cases of violence and intimidation directed at minor political parties and their supporters, as well as against media personnel and offices, and to bring to justice those responsible;

12. Also calls upon the Government of Cambodia to ensure fair access to government television and radio regardless of political affiliation and to ensure that the people of Cambodia have access to a variety of information, especially in the lead-up to the elections;

13. Commends the Government of Cambodia for its constructive approach to the inclusion of Cambodian human rights non-governmental organizations in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Cambodia, and recommends that their skills be drawn upon to assist in ensuring that forthcoming elections are free and fair;

14. Expresses serious concern at the comments made by the Special Representative concerning the continuing problem of impunity, whereby the courts in several areas are reluctant or unable to charge members of the military, police and other security forces for serious criminal offences, and encourages the Government of Cambodia, as a matter of urgent priority, to address this problem, which in effect places the military and police above the principle of equality before the law;

15. Expresses grave concern about the atrocities that continue to be committed by the Khmer Rouge, including the taking and killing of hostages and other deplorable incidents detailed in the reports of the Special Representative and his predecessor;

16. Also expresses grave concern about the serious violations of human rights as detailed in the reports of the Special Representative and his predecessor, and calls upon the Government of Cambodia to prosecute in accordance with the due process of the law and international standards relating to human rights all those who have perpetrated human rights violations;

17. Calls upon the Government of Cambodia to ensure the full observance of human rights for all persons within its jurisdiction in accordance with the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments to which Cambodia is a party;

18. Urges the Government of Cambodia to give priority attention to combating child prostitution and trafficking and, in this connection, to work with the office in Cambodia of the Centre for Human Rights and non-governmental organizations to develop an action plan;

19. Recognizes the seriousness with which the Government of Cambodia has approached the preparation of its initial reports to the relevant treaty bodies, and encourages the Government to continue its efforts to meet its reporting obligations under international human rights instruments, drawing on the assistance of the office in Cambodia of the Centre for Human Rights;

20. Encourages the Government of Cambodia to request the Centre for Human Rights to provide advice and technical assistance with respect to the creation of an independent national institution for the promotion and protection of human rights;

21. Commends the ongoing efforts of the office in Cambodia of the Centre for Human Rights in supporting and assisting the Government of Cambodia, as well as non-governmental organizations and others involved in the promotion and protection of human rights in cooperation with the Government;

22. Welcomes and encourages the efforts of individuals, non-governmental organizations, Governments and international organizations involved in human rights activities in Cambodia;

23. Notes with appreciation the use by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Trust Fund for a Human Rights Education Programme in Cambodia to finance the programme of activities of the office in Cambodia of the Centre for Human Rights as defined in resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights, and invites Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, foundations and individuals to consider contributing funds to the Trust Fund;

24. Requests the Centre for Human Rights, in cooperation with the relevant specialized agencies and development programmes, to develop and implement programmes, with the consent and cooperation of the Government of Cambodia, in the priority areas identified by the Special Representative, paying particular attention to vulnerable groups, including women, children, disabled persons and minorities;

25. Expresses grave concern at the devastating consequences and destabilizing effects of the indiscriminate use of anti-personnel landmines on Cambodian society, encourages the Government of Cambodia to continue its support and efforts for the removal of these mines, and urges the Government to ban all anti-personnel landmines;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the role of the Centre for Human Rights in assisting the Government and the people of Cambodia in the promotion and protection of human rights and on the recommendations made by the Special Representative on matters within his mandate;

27. Decides to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights in Cambodia at its fifty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 51/98

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 27 November (meeting 54); 29-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.56); agenda item 110 (b). Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-52, 54; plenary 82.

Haiti

Report of independent expert. The Commission had before it in 1996 a January report [E/CN.4/1996/94] of Adama Dieng (Senegal), the independent expert on the situation of human rights in Haiti. The report updated information contained in a 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 823], in particular the results of the December 1995 presidential elections. Also included was a section on the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights, which, he stated, the Government was incapable of guaranteeing at the current time.

Commission action. On 19 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/58)], the Commission on Human Rights expressed concern at recent acts of violence in Haiti, in particular assassinations, possibly of political origin, and cases of reprisals. It urged the Government to intensify the ongoing process of judicial reform and the teaching of international humanitarian law and human rights. Welcoming the establishment of the programme of technical cooperation prepared by the Centre for Human Rights, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to ensure resources for the programme's implementation. The independent expert was asked to report in 1997, a request approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1996/269 of 23 July.

Report of independent expert. The independent expert reported [E/CN.4/1997/89] on his mission to Haiti and neighbouring countries (31 October-14 November). In Haiti, he met with high-level government officials, including the President. He also met in Miami, Florida, and in New York with Haitian community representatives.

The economic and social situation in Haiti had been deteriorating since 1991, the expert declared. Less than 50 per cent of the population had access to primary health care and the infant mortality rate was high, the result of poor sanitary conditions, nutritional deficiencies, illiteracy, the lack of infrastructure, low incomes and the spread of urban slums. The high illiteracy rate—about 75 per cent—was one of the most pressing problems. Some progress had been made concerning the right to land and women's rights.

As to the administration of justice, the expert stated that a draft law on judicial reform would probably be adopted in 1997. However, until the reform achieved its objectives, the unstable, precarious situation of judicial personnel needed to be addressed. The independence of magistrates was undermined by factors linked to their status, the mass dismissals since the return of democracy and poor remuneration. The quality of criminal procedure and the penal system were other sources of concern. A course on police ethics was included in the national police training programme and there were moves towards ending the culture of impunity for police officials. Corruption was endemic and a real threat to the democratic process. The inhumane and cruel prison conditions reflected the conditions faced by the population at large, which had suffered greatly in the absence of democracy and of the rule of law. The delay in publishing and widely distributing the report of the National Commission for Truth and Justice (see PART ONE, Chapter III) had raised doubts about the Government's willingness to take account of the Commission's recommendations.

The independent expert recommended that Haiti ratify the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)], the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [GA res. 39/46], and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)]; submit its report to the Human Rights Committee; establish a programme of security for peasants; monitor measures called for by the World Health Organization; lower fees for private schools; distribute legal documents to courts, law schools and bar associations; train an initial intake of magistrates; address the question of remuneration for judicial personnel; take urgent measures to ensure respect for judicial guarantees; identify those responsible for the murders of police officers and give greater attention to the availability of weapons; undertake a study on corruption, with a view to establishing a system to combat it; ease prison overcrowding; publish and widely distribute the report of the National Commission for Truth and Justice; and create a special team of prosecutors to prosecute those responsible for human rights violations.

The expert also recommended that: the United States return documents seized which would help bring to justice those responsible for the crimes committed during the regime established following the 1991 coup d'etat [YUN 1991, p. 151]; the mandate of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH) (see PART ONE, Chapter III) be extended and Mission observers placed in charge of human rights training for magistrates and police; the Minister of Justice ensure that government commissioners systematically open investigations into suspicious deaths; the Ministry of Justice develop a comprehensive programme to provide civic education and human rights training and establish legal services in rural areas; visits to Haiti be made by the Special Rapporteur on violence against women and the Special Rapporteur on the independence of the judiciary; media publicity be given to penalties imposed on police officers found guilty of abuses; and, under bilateral or multilateral assistance, equipment be made available to the Ministry of Justice to provide Haiti with ballistic analysis and fingerprint identification capabilities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/110.

Human rights in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling its resolution 50/196 of 22 December 1995, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/58 of 19 April 1996,

Taking into account the report of the independent expert of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Haiti, Mr. Adama Dieng, appointed to assist the Government of Haiti in the area of human rights, to consider the development of the human rights situation in that country and to verify compliance by it with its obligations in that field, and the recommendations contained in that report,

Recognizing the important contributions of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti and the National Commission for Truth and Justice to the establishment of a climate of freedom and tolerance propitious to the respect for human rights and the restoration and spread of democracy in Haiti,

Welcoming the renewal by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/86 C of 29 August 1996 of the mandate of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti,

Welcoming also the improvements in the situation of human rights in Haiti, and noting the policy statements by Haitian authorities that the Government of Haiti remains committed to upholding human rights and improving accountability,

Expressing concern at the increase in common crime, and noting the continuing need for technical training of the Haitian National Police and for strengthening of the judicial system,

Expressing its satisfaction with the invitation to visit the country extended by the Government of Haiti to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences,

Considering the request of the Government of Haiti for technical assistance and advisory services in the field of human rights addressed to the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat,

1. Expresses its thanks to the Secretary-General and his Special Representative for Haiti for their efforts in favour of the consolidation of democratic institutions in Haiti and the respect of human rights in that country;

2. Welcomes the satisfactory evolution of the political process in Haiti and the holding of presidential elections on 17 December 1995, which permitted the first transfer of power between two democratically elected Presidents;

3. Takes note of the report of the independent expert of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Haiti and the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

4. Expresses its concern about recent and other persistent security challenges to Haitian society caused, inter alia, by difficult economic and social conditions, which threaten progress in the field of human rights and democratic stability in the country;

5. Welcomes the report of the National Commission for Truth and Justice, as well as reports by the International Civilian Mission to Haiti on Haitian justice and on respect for human rights by the Haitian National Police, and urges the Government of Haiti to undertake appropriate follow-up action on the recommendations contained in these reports, with the support of the international community;

6. Supports the Government of Haiti's ongoing process of reform of the judicial system, including instructions in international human rights law and human rights;

7. Requests the international community, including the United Nations Development Programme, to continue providing funds for the reform of the judicial system and for those activities that contribute to the social and economic development of Haitian society;

8. Encourages the international community to contribute generously to the United Nations trust fund for the Haitian National Police, which will be needed to respond to the request of the Government of Haiti for a technical adviser programme;

9. Welcomes the establishment of the programme of technical cooperation prepared by the Centre for Human Rights aimed at strengthening institutional capacity in the field of human rights, in particular in the areas of legislative reform, training of justice administration personnel and human rights education, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of this programme to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

10. Invites the international community, including the Bretton Woods institutions, to continue their involvement in the reconstruction and development of Haiti;

11. Invites the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences to consider favourably the invitation to visit the country extended to him by the Government of Haiti, with the support of the United Nations Population Fund;

12. Decides to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Haiti at its fifty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 51/110

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.3 & Add.3/Corr.1) without vote, 26 November (meeting 53); 52-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.55); agenda item 110 (c).

Meeting numbers: GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-53; plenary 82.

Guatemala

Report of independent expert. The independent expert on the situation of human rights in Guatemala, Monica Pinto (Argentina), submitted to the Commission in 1996 a report covering events from January to October 1995 [E/CN.4/1996/15]. She noted that some important decisions had been made, in line with recommendations, but those decisions had not succeeded in solving or changing substantive problems affecting the exercise of human rights in the country.

Commission action. On 19 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/59)], the Commission, regretting that serious human rights violations persisted in Guatemala, attributed mainly to members of the armed forces and security forces and to the so-called voluntary civil self-defence committees, asked the Government to promote all legislative reforms pertaining to military tribunals so that violations committed by armed forces were excluded from their jurisdiction. It also asked for the adoption of a law regulating obligatory non-discriminatory military service.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to increase advisory services to the Government and to develop specific programmes with NGOs. The Secretary-General was also requested to extend the independent expert's mandate so that she might continue to examine the human rights situation in Guatemala, taking into account the work of the United Nations Mission for Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala (see PART ONE, Chapter III), provide assistance to the Government and submit a report in 1997. On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/270, approved the Commission's requests to the Secretary-General.

Subcommission action. On 20 August [E/CN.4/1997/2 (dec. 1996/106)], the Subcommission decided, among other things, to authorize its Chairman to issue a statement on the situation of human rights and the progress of the peace process in Guatemala; and to urge the Government to intensify efforts to combat and prevent violations of fundamental human rights, to continue to combat impunity and to prevent the proclamation of amnesties or of any other mechanism that granted impunity to human rights violators.

On the same date, the Subcommission Chairman issued a statement [E/CN.4/1997/2] on the situation of human rights and progress of the peace process in Guatemala.

Report of independent expert. The independent expert, who visited Guatemala from 13 to 27 November [E/CN.4/1997/90], observed that an extremely fragmented society, devastated by high levels of violence, was trying to find ways of becoming part of the peace construction process (see PART ONE, Chapter III, for agreements which emerged from the peace negotiations).

Noting that there were major shortcomings in the administration of justice, the expert stated that it was important and urgent for Guatemala to redefine its justice system. The prison system did not have enough resources and there were no guidelines to regulate the rights of prisoners or the career development, rights and duties of prison officials. Leaders of human rights organizations, deputies, trade unionists and church members had been threatened. Threats and harassment of journalists had increased.

The expert described violations of the right to decent and equitable working conditions and trade union rights. Health care coverage was inadequate. Authorities stated that they were working towards equality in education throughout the country.

Somalia

Report of independent expert. In a February report [E/CN.4/1996/14], independent expert Mohamed Charfi (Tunisia) stated that it had been extremely difficult for him to fulfil his mandate against a background of high tension between rival clans, continued violence and banditry, and in the absence of any form of legitimate effective governmental authority with which the United Nations could cooperate in delivering technical assistance in the field of human rights.

The expert stated that hundreds of unarmed civilians had been deliberately killed by members of armed political groups during periods of fighting between opposing clan factions, owing to their membership in a particular clan. Extrajudicial executions were widely reported to be used as a political tool to remove particular opposition leaders. Regarding the treatment of minorities, access to justice and resources depended very much on the relative power of the clan or faction. There were forced displacements and human rights violations against international aid workers. Human rights violations committed by UN troops were under investigation by three national contingents. Minimal progress had been made towards the re-establishment of a system of independent justice.

In April, the expert reported [E/CN.4/1996/14/Add.1] on the situation in Somalia based on a visit to the country from 22 February to 13 March. He discussed the civil war, the demise of a system of administration of justice and the setting up of tribunals, and the impact of the war, including mass population displacement, the destruction of buildings, bridges, ports and airports, a slowdown in agricultural production and the closure of the university, as well as the majority of primary and secondary schools.

Commission action. On 19 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/57)], the Commission on Human Rights strongly urged all parties in Somalia to respect human rights and humanitarian law, to apply criminal justice standards and to protect UN personnel, humanitarian relief workers and international media representatives. The independent expert was asked to report in 1997. The Secretary-General was to provide adequate resources to fund the activities of the independent expert and the Centre for Human Rights, and Governments and organizations in a position to do so were asked to respond positively to requests for assistance in implementing the Commission's resolution. On 23 July, by decision 1996/268, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's requests to the expert and to the Secretary-General.

Togo

Report of Secretary-General. In a January report [E/CN.4/1996/89], the Secretary-General described UN cooperation with the Government of Togo towards establishing a programme of advisory services and technical assistance in the field of human rights, and summarized action taken by a number of special rapporteurs. The report reproduced the text of a note verbale from the Government of Togo containing information and comments regarding a 1995 Commission resolution [YUN 1995, p. 716].

Commission action. On 23 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/67)], the Commission on Human Rights decided to terminate consideration of the question of Togo after noting a 23 March agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Togo on a human rights technical assistance programme. It asked the Government and the Centre for Human Rights to ensure the proper execution of that programme.

Public information

Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request [YUN 1994, p. 1053], the Secretary-General submitted in October a report [A/51/558] on public information activities in the area of human rights, including the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights, launched by the Assembly in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 539, GA res. 43/128, 8 Dec. 1988] and carried out by the High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights and the UN Department of Public Information (DPI). He described activities of the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights concerning publications; e-mail, the Internet and CD-ROM capability; external relations, including briefings, exhibitions and human rights observances, fellowships, internships and training courses; and coordination and cooperation with other UN bodies, NGOs and academic and research institutions. The human rights activities of DPI from January 1995 to August 1996 included production and distribution of brochures, pamphlets, backgrounders, booklets, fact sheets, feature articles, posters and information kits. Films and radio and television programmes were also produced and disseminated, and training programmes for journalists and broadcasters were held.

Human rights education

Report of High Commissioner. In a March report [E/CN.4/1996/51], the High Commissioner updated information submitted in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 717] on the implementation of the Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2004), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1039, GA res. 49/184].

The High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights publicized and sought support for the Plan of Action, coordinated activities with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), and launched a two-year project to enhance national capacities for human rights education. States had provided information on steps taken to implement the Plan; Algeria, Argentina, Chad, the Holy See and Norway had established national focal points and centres for human rights education. The High Commissioner summarized action taken by Governments in primary and secondary schools, university law faculties, the justice sector and armed forces, and for the general public. He also presented information on measures taken by the regional commissions, UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs, as well as the views of Cuba concerning proposals for supplementing the Plan.

Commission action. On 19 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/44)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the High Commissioner to accelerate, within existing resources, the implementation of the Plan of Action, and to encourage and facilitate the establishment of national plans of action, focal points and centres of human rights education in Member States. It asked human rights monitoring bodies to consider adopting a general comment on human rights education, emphasizing the implementation by Member States of their international obligation to promote human rights education. The High Commissioner was invited to seek the views of States on ways to increase support to the Decade, emphasizing activities of NGOs in human rights education, and on the advisability of establishing a voluntary fund for that purpose, and to include such information in his report in 1997.

Reports of High Commissioner. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/177 [YUN 1995, p. 717], the Secretary-General, in October, transmitted a report [A/51/506] of the High Commissioner on the implementation of the Plan of Action, based on the eight components comprising the Plan, namely: assessing needs and formulating strategies to further human rights education; strengthening international programmes and capacities for human rights education; strengthening regional programmes and capacities; strengthening national programmes and capacities; strengthening local programmes and capacities; coordinated development of materials for human rights education; strengthening the role of the mass media in furthering human rights education; and global dissemination of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

A December addendum to the report [A/51/506/Add.1] contained the Plan of Action and reflected comments made by Governments. The Plan defined human rights education, set out general guiding principles, presented the Decade's objectives, defined principal actors and target groups, and put forth a structure for coordination and implementation. A mid-term global evaluation of progress towards achieving Decade objectives was scheduled to take place during the year 2000. The year 2004, the final year of the Decade, would be the target for the achievement of generalized human rights education programmes through implementation of State action plans, as well as for completion of a comprehensive collection of human rights education materials and their broad distribution throughout all Member States. As follow-up to the Decade, the High Commissioner would issue a final report on the state of human rights education at the local, national, regional and international levels. Human rights educational materials developed under the Decade would be subject to periodic review, supplementation and revision.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/104.

United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education and public information activities in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Guided by the fundamental and universal principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, according to article 26 of which "education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms", and the provisions of other international human rights instruments, such as those of article 13 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 28 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, that reflect the aims of the aforementioned article,

Recalling the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights concerning the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights, the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, the project of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization entitled "Towards a culture of peace", the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, and the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Believing that the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights is a valuable complement to the activities of the United Nations aimed at the further promotion and protection of human rights, and recalling the importance attached by the World Conference on Human Rights to human rights education and information,

Convinced that human rights education should involve more than the provision of information and should constitute a comprehensive lifelong process by which people at all levels of development and in all societies learn respect for the dignity of others and the means and methods of ensuring that respect,

Recognizing that human rights education and information are essential to the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms and that carefully designed programmes of teaching, learning, training and sharing of experiences, materials and information can have a catalytic effect on national, regional and international initiatives to promote and protect human rights and prevent human rights violations,

Convinced that human rights education and information contribute to a concept of development consistent with the dignity of women and men of all ages which takes into account the diverse segments of society such as children, indigenous people, minorities and disabled persons,

Taking into account the efforts to promote human rights education made by educators and non-governmental organizations in all parts of the world, as well as by intergovernmental organizations, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Labour Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund,

Convinced that each woman, man and child, to realize their full human potential, must be made aware of all their human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recognizing the invaluable and creative role that non-governmental organizations and community-based organizations can play in disseminating public information and engaging in human rights education, especially at the grass-roots level and in remote and rural communities,

Aware of the potential supportive role of the private sector in implementing at all levels of society the Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, and the World Public Information Campaign, through creative initiatives and financial support for governmental and non-governmental activities,

Convinced that the effectiveness of existing human rights education and public information activities would be enhanced by better coordination and cooperation at the national, regional and international levels,

Recalling that it is within the responsibility of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to coordinate relevant United Nations education and public information programmes in the field of human rights,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the implementation of the Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education and of the report of the Secretary-General on the development of public information activities in the field of human rights, including the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights;

2. Welcomes the steps taken by Governments, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to implement the Plan of Action, as indicated in the report of the High Commissioner;

3. Urges all Governments to inform their communities about the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights and the Decade and to contribute further to the implementation of the Plan of Action, in particular by establishing, in accordance with national conditions, broadly representative national committees for human rights education and training centres for human rights education or, where such bodies exist, to strengthen them to work towards the elaboration and implementation of an action-oriented national plan for information and education in human rights;

4. Also urges Governments to encourage, support and involve national and local non-governmental organizations and community-based organizations in the implementation of their national action plans;

5. Appeals to Governments, in accordance with their national conditions, to accord priority to the dissemination in their relevant national and local languages of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments, human rights materials and training manuals, as well as reports of States parties under the human rights treaties, and to provide information and education in those languages on the practical ways in which national and international institutions and procedures may be utilized to ensure the effective implementation of those instruments;

6. Welcomes the efforts made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, together with the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to increase cooperation with the media, including by the provision of timely and relevant information on human rights issues;

7. Urges the Department of Public Information to continue to utilize United Nations information centres for the timely dissemination, within their designated areas of activity, of basic information, reference and audio-visual materials on human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the reports of States parties under human rights instruments and, to this end, to ensure that the information centres are supplied with adequate quantities of those materials;

8. Requests the office of the United Nations High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights to continue to coordinate the implementation of the Plan of Action to ensure maximum effectiveness and efficiency in the use, processing, management and distribution of information and educational materials and to continue to coordinate and harmonize human rights information strategies within the United Nations system;

9. Encourages the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights to continue the development of training courses and materials, including targeted training manuals for professional audiences, as well as the dissemination of human rights information materials as a component of technical assistance projects, supplemented by electronic means wherever possible, taking particular account of the human rights needs of women, children, remote or isolated communities and persons with low levels of literacy;

10. Requests the human rights mechanisms to place emphasis on the promotion and implementation of programmes of information and education on human rights;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights, to consider appropriate ways and means, including the possibility of establishing a voluntary fund, to support human rights activities, including those undertaken by non-governmental organizations;

12. Invites the specialized agencies and relevant United Nations programmes to contribute, within their respective spheres of competence, to the implementation of the Plan of Action and the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights;

13. Calls upon international, regional and national non-governmental organizations and intergovernmental organizations, in particular those concerned with women, labour, development, food, housing, education, health care and the environment, as well as all other social justice groups, human rights advocates, educators, religious organizations and the media, to undertake specific activities of formal, non-formal and informal education, including cultural events, alone and in cooperation with the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights, in implementing the Plan of Action;

14. Stresses the need for close collaboration between the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights and the Department of Public Information in the implementation of the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights and the Plan of Action and the need to harmonize their activities with those of other organizations such as the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the project entitled "Towards a culture of peace" and the International Committee of the Red Cross and relevant non-governmental organizations with regard to the dissemination of information on international humanitarian law;

15. Encourages the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights to consider the promotion of educational and cultural activities throughout the world in accordance with the Plan of Action and the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights when preparing for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all members of the international community and to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned with human rights education and public information and to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution for consideration under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 51/104

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 27 November (meeting 55); 59-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.70/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 110 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-53, 55; plenary 82.

Culture of peace

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/173 [YUN 1995, p. 717], the Secretary-

General, by a September note [A/51/395], transmitted a report on a UNESCO transdisciplinary project entitled "Towards a culture of peace".

The project constituted a coordinated effort to contribute to a global movement from a culture of war and violence to a culture of peace. It comprised four units: education for peace, human rights, democracy, international understanding and tolerance; promotion of human rights and democracy; struggle against discrimination; cultural pluralism and intercultural dialogue; and conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building. The report, by the UNESCO Director-General, emphasized education, which was considered the leading modality to promote a culture of peace.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/101.

Culture of peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the preamble to the Charter of the United Nations and the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling also its resolution 50/173 of 22 December 1995 entitled "United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education: towards a culture of peace", in which it expressed satisfaction with the transdisciplinary project adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization entitled "Towards a culture of peace", in particular unit 1, entitled "Education for peace, human rights, democracy, international understanding and tolerance",

Considering that the Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, will make a fundamental contribution to understanding and peace and is consistent with the transdisciplinary project entitled "Towards a culture of peace",

Taking note of the World Plan of Action on Education for Human Rights and Democracy, adopted by the International Congress on Education for Human Rights and Democracy convened by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at Montreal from 8 to 11 March 1993, the Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, and all relevant provisions included in the declarations and programmes of action adopted in the series of international conferences held under the auspices of the United Nations,

Emphasizing the need for a practical approach that can lead, through sustainable human development and the promotion of tolerance, dialogue and solidarity, to cooperation and the prevention of violence and thus to the consolidation of peace,

Considering the important results of the two international forums for a culture of peace hosted by El Salvador in February 1994 and the Philippines in November 1995,

Considering also the practical lessons learned from the national culture of peace programmes of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Burundi, the Congo, El Salvador, Guatemala, Mozambique, the Philippines, Rwanda and Somalia, whereby projects in the fields of competence of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in particular in education, have been planned and are being implemented through a process involving all parties concerned;

1. Welcomes the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on the transdisciplinary project entitled "Towards a culture of peace";

2. Expresses deep concern about the proliferation of violence and conflicts of a diverse nature in various parts of the world;

3. Calls for the promotion of a culture of peace based on the principles established in the Charter of the United Nations, respect for human rights, democracy, tolerance, dialogue, cultural diversity and reconciliation, and efforts to promote development, education for peace, the free flow of information and the wider participation of women, as an integral approach to prevent violence and conflicts and to contribute to the creation of conditions for peace and its consolidation;

4. Welcomes with satisfaction the memorandum of understanding between the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, signed in Paris on 19 October 1995;

5. Welcomes the establishment of the Felix Houphouët-Boigny Peace Prize by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-fifth session, the biennial prize awarded by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the teaching of human rights and the annual prize for peace education;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in coordination with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution and on the progress of educational activities within the framework of the transdisciplinary project entitled "Towards a culture of peace", including the preparation of elements for a draft provisional declaration and programme of action on a culture of peace;

7. Decides to continue its consideration of the question of a culture of peace at its fifty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 51/101

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 27 November (meeting 54); 75-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.60); agenda item 110 (b). Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-52, 54; plenary 82.

National institutions and regional arrangements

National institutions for human rights promotion and protection

Report of Secretary-General. In a January report with later addendum [E/CN.4/1996/48 & Add.1], the Secretary-General presented the views of nine Governments on possible forms of participation by national institutions in UN meetings dealing with human rights. He noted that progress was being made towards ensuring effective participation by national institutions in such meetings. The Secretary-General proposed that the Commission draw up recommendations to improve the action of national institutions in implementing their programmes for the promotion and protection of human rights, and mobilize financial resources for those activities. The Commission should encourage States and national institutions to observe the provisions contained in the Principles relating to the status of national institutions, adopted by the General Assembly in 1993 [GA res. 48/134], and to introduce those Principles into domestic legislation. The Commission should also encourage each country to devise an information strategy to raise awareness among the general public and among all elements of civil society on the need to promote and protect human rights.

Commission action. On 19 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/50)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to requests from Member States for assistance in establishing and strengthening national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights as part of the programme of advisory services and technical assistance in the field of human rights. It asked the Centre for Human Rights to continue to provide technical assistance for States wishing to establish or strengthen their national institutions and to organize training programmes for national institutions which requested them, and asked Governments to contribute additionally to the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights for those purposes.

The Secretary-General was asked to ensure that national institutions were informed of Centre activities involving national institutions; to continue to provide assistance for holding meetings during Commission sessions of the Coordinating Committee for national institutions, created in 1993 at the second International Workshop on National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights to promote the establishment and strengthening of national human rights mechanisms; and to invite Member States which had not done so to provide information concerning possible forms of participation by national institutions in meetings of the Commission and its subsidiary bodies and to report in 1997. He was also asked to convene, within existing resources, a fourth international workshop on national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, to be held, if possible, in Latin America during 1996 or 1997, and to invite Governments and intergovernmental organizations to contribute to the Voluntary Fund to finance, where necessary, the attendance by representatives of national institutions. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1997 on the implementation of the Commission's resolution.

The Commission's requests concerning assistance for meetings of the Coordinating Committee and a fourth international workshop were approved by the Economic and Social Council on 23 July by decision 1996/265.

Regional arrangements

In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly request [GA res. 49/189], the Secretary-General, reporting [A/51/480] in October on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights, concluded that cooperation of the United Nations human rights programme with regional intergovernmental organizations had proved to be substantial and supportive. The High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights, in cooperation with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and the Council of Europe, held a workshop on human rights monitoring for staff of the OSCE mission to Bosnia and Herzegovina. The High Commissioner/Centre supported the First Regional Conference of African National Human Rights Institutions, organized by the National Commission of Human Rights and Freedoms of Cameroon (Yaounde, 5-7 February). In cooperation with the Organization of African Unity and the Economic Commission for Africa, the High Commissioner/Centre organized a meeting of high-level government experts in the African region on the international human rights treaty regime (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 14-17 May).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/102.

Regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/127 of 16 December 1977 and all its subsequent resolutions concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/51 of 9 March 1993,

Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights concerning advisory services in the field of human rights, including its most recent resolution on that subject, 1996/55 of 19 April 1996,

Bearing in mind also the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Reaffirming that regional arrangements play a fundamental role in promoting and protecting human rights and should reinforce universal human rights standards, as contained in international human rights instruments, and their protection,

Recalling that the World Conference on Human Rights reiterated the need to consider the possibility of establishing regional and subregional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights where they do not already exist,

Recalling also that the World Conference on Human Rights recommended that more resources should be made available for the strengthening or the establishment of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights under the programmes of advisory services and technical assistance of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting the progress achieved so far in the promotion and protection of human rights at the regional level under the auspices of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and the regional intergovernmental organizations,

Noting also the growing exchanges between the United Nations and the bodies created by the United Nations, in accordance with the treaties dealing with human rights on the one hand and the regional intergovernmental organizations on the other, in order to promote the mutual exchange of information between these bodies and the conclusion of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Welcomes the continuing cooperation and assistance of the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights in the further strengthening of the existing regional arrangements and regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights, in particular with regard to advisory services and technical assistance, public information and education, with a view to exchanging information and experience in the field of human rights;
3. Welcomes also, in that respect, the close cooperation of the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights in the organization of regional and subregional training courses and workshops in the field of human rights, high-level government expert meetings and a regional conference of national human rights institutions, aiming at creating greater understanding of the promotion and protection of human rights issues in the regions, improving procedures and examining the various systems for the promotion and protection of universally accepted human rights standards and at identifying obstacles to ratification of the principal international human rights treaties and strategies to overcome them;
4. Stresses the importance of the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, renews its appeal to all Governments to consider making use of the possibilities offered by the United Nations, under this programme, of organizing information or training courses at the national level for government personnel on the application of international human rights standards and the experience of relevant international bodies, and notes with satisfaction, in that respect, the establishment of technical cooperation projects with several Governments of the region of Asia and the Pacific;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, as foreseen in programme 35 (Promotion and protection of human rights) of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, to continue to strengthen exchanges between the United Nations and regional intergovernmental organizations dealing with human rights;

6. Welcomes the growing exchanges between the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights and several regional intergovernmental organizations, as well as between the bodies created by the United Nations in accordance with the treaties dealing with human rights and the Council of Europe;

7. Invites States in areas where regional arrangements in the field of human rights do not yet exist to consider concluding agreements with a view to the establishment within their respective regions of suitable regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights;

8. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to pay special attention to the most appropriate ways of assisting, at their request, countries of the different regions under the programme of advisory services and to make, where necessary, relevant recommendations;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights and to include therein the results of action taken in pursuance of the present resolution;

10. Decides to consider this question further at its fifty-third session.

General Assembly resolution 51/102

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 27 November (meeting 54); 31-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.62), orally revised; agenda item 110 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-52, 54; plenary 82.

Asia and the Pacific

Reports of Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1995 Commission request [YUN 1995, p. 721], the Secretary-General submitted a January report [E/CN.4/1996/46] describing regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asia and Pacific region. He discussed technical cooperation efforts in Bhutan, Cambodia, China, Indonesia, Kuwait, Mongolia, Nepal, Pakistan, Palestine, Papua New Guinea and Viet Nam.

In an April addendum [E/CN.4/1996/46/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the fourth workshop on regional human rights arrangements in the Asia and Pacific region (Kathmandu, Nepal, 26-28 February). The workshop identified steps towards establishing a regional arrangement, with emphasis on regional cooperation on issues such as human rights education, ratification of human rights instruments, development of national action plans, and the role of national institutions and NGOs.

In an October report [A/51/480], the Secretary-General noted that the Australian Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission and the Human Rights Commission of New Zealand, in cooperation with the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights, organized the First Asia-Pacific Regional Workshop of National Human Rights Institutions (Darwin, Australia, 8-10 July). The meeting decided to establish an Asia-Pacific Forum of National Human Rights Institutions.

Commission action. On 23 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/64)], the Commission appealed to Governments in the Asia and Pacific region to consider making use of UN facilities, under the programme of advisory services and technical assistance for the promotion and protection of human rights, to organize information and/or training courses at the national or regional level for government personnel on the application of international human rights standards and the experience of relevant national and international organs.

The Secretary-General was asked to allocate more resources from existing UN funds to enable countries to benefit from the advisory services and technical assistance programme; and to establish, in accordance with the conclusions of the fourth workshop, an open-ended team, composed of representatives of interested Governments of the region and the Centre for Human Rights, to consult with NGOs and national institutions to prepare for the next workshop and facilitate the development of regional arrangements. The latter request was approved by the Economic and Social Council on 23 July by decision 1996/271. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1997 on progress made in implementing its resolution.

Cooperation with UN human rights bodies

Pursuant to a 1995 Commission request [YUN 1995, p. 721], the Secretary-General, in a February report [E/CN.4/1996/57], summarized information covering a variety of situations in which persons had been intimidated or suffered reprisals for having cooperated with UN human rights bodies; availed themselves of international procedures; provided legal assistance for that purpose; and/or been relatives of victims of human rights violations. He concluded that information received by different UN human rights bodies indicated that acts of intimidation and reprisals continued to occur.

On 23 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/70)], the Commission urged Governments to refrain from acts of intimidation or reprisal against: persons who sought to cooperate or had cooperated with representatives of UN human rights bodies, or who had provided testimony or information to them; individuals who availed themselves of UN procedures and those who had provided legal assistance to them for that purpose; those who submitted communications under procedures established by human rights instruments; and relatives of victims of human rights violations. It asked representatives of UN human rights bodies and treaty bodies monitoring the observance of human rights to help prevent the hampering of access to UN human rights procedures and to continue to take urgent steps to prevent the occurrence of intimidation or reprisal. It also asked them to include in their reports a reference to allegations of intimidation or reprisal, as well as an account of action taken. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to draw its resolution to the attention of UN human rights and treaty bodies and to report in 1997.

Chapter II

Protection of human rights

The United Nations in 1996 continued to seek ways to protect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all citizens of the world—from victims of violent conflicts, racial discrimination, intolerance and judicial inequities, to children, women and those living in extreme poverty.

Two major International Covenants—on Civil and Political Rights, and on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights—provided ongoing guidelines for those entrusted with safeguarding the situations of vulnerable individuals and groups. Special Rapporteurs of the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary body, the Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, examined such questions as contemporary forms of racism; religious intolerance; freedom of speech; extra-legal executions; the impunity of perpetrators of human rights violations; independence of judges and the judiciary; torture; the right to adequate housing; environmental issues; violence against women; sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography; protection of indigenous heritage, and matters concerning indigenous populations. In addition, an expert presented a major study on the protection of children in armed conflict and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General investigated situations of internally displaced persons.

During the year, working groups considered arbitrary detention, enforced or involuntary disappearances, including cases of missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, as well as the right to contemporary forms of slavery.

Racism and racial discrimination

Third Decade against racism

The General Assembly had proclaimed in 1993 the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1993-2003) and adopted the Decade's Programme of Action [YUN 1993, p. 853]. The goals and objectives of the Third Decade were those adopted by the Assembly in 1973 for the first Decade [YUN 1973, p. 524]. The revised Programme of Action for the Decade was adopted by the Assembly in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 988]. Support was given to the idea of convening another world conference on racism and racial discrimination.

The Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993) [YUN 1983, p. 806] had been carried out in accordance with the plan of activities for 1985-1989 [YUN 1984, p. 785], and the plan, approved by the Assembly in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 732], covering the remainder of the Decade (1990-1993).

Implementation of Decade programme

Reports of Secretary-General. In a January report [E/CN.4/1996/71] to the Commission on Human Rights, the Secretary-General summarized information provided by the General Assembly, Governments and a UN programme on measures taken to combat racism and racial discrimination.

In a March addendum [E/CN.4/1996/71/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted a report describing three consultations on racism and education (Geneva, 8-10 August 1995) organized by the Non-Governmental Organization (NGO) Sub-Committee on Racism, Racial Discrimination, Apartheid and Decolonization, in cooperation with the Centre for Human Rights and the UN Department of Public Information (DPI).

The Commission on Human Rights also had before it the annual reports on racial discrimination submitted by the International Labour Organization (ILO) [E/CN.4/1996/73] and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) [E/CN.4/1996/74].

Commission action. On 11 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/8)], the Commission declared that all forms of racism and racial discrimination were among the most serious violations of human rights and must be combated. Commending States that had ratified or acceded to the international instruments to combat racism and racial discrimination, the Commission appealed to those States that had not done so to ratify or accede to those instruments. It invited the Secretary-General to coordinate all the programmes being carried out by UN bodies with a view to achieving the objectives of the Third Decade and to establish a focal point within the Centre for Human Rights. He was also asked to continue the study on the effects of racial discrimination on the children of minorities and those of migrant workers in the areas of education, training and employment and to submit recommendations to combat such effects; and to publish and distribute the model legislation on racism and racial discrimination for the guidance of Governments in enacting further legislation against racial discrimination. Regretting that the resources to implement the 1994-1995 biennial programme for the Third Decade were not provided, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to include the Third Decade's activities not implemented in that biennium in the future programme for the Decade and to provide the necessary resources for it. It also asked him to ensure that the necessary resources were provided to implement the activities for the Decade during the 1996-1997 biennium. The Commission, strongly appealing to all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to contribute generously to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, asked the Secretary-General to continue to undertake contacts and initiatives to encourage contributions.

On 23 July, by decision 1996/255, the Council approved the Commission's requests to the Secretary-General to distribute the model legislation on racism and racial discrimination, include the Third Decade's activities not implemented in the 1994-1995 biennium in future programmes for the Decade and provide the necessary financial resources, and ensure that the necessary financial resources were provided to implement the Decade's activities during the 1996-1997 biennium.

Subcommission action. On 23 August [E/CN.4/1997/2 (res. 1996/8)], the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities asked the Secretary-General to ensure the establishment of a focal point on racism within the Centre for Human Rights to coordinate activities under the Third Decade.

Reports of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Assembly in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 853], the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council in July his annual report describing activities undertaken or planned by Governments, the UN system and intergovernmental organizations to implement the programme of the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination [E/1996/83]. Regarding the Trust Fund for the Programme of Action for the Third Decade, the Secretary-General noted that since contributions to the Fund remained below the levels hoped for, it was certain that, unless a supplementary financing effort was made, very few of the activities planned for 1994-1997 would be carried out. Annexed to the report was the statement of income and expenditure and changes in reserves and fund balances for the Trust Fund for the 1994-1995 biennium ended 31 December 1995.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/251, took note of the Secretary-General's July report.

In response to a 1994 Assembly request [YUN 1994, p. 988], the Secretary-General, in an October report [A/51/541], supplemented information contained in his July report to the Council. He described activities taken by the UN system, among them a seminar (Geneva, 9-13 September) to assess the implementation of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (see PART TWO, Chapter I) [GA res. 2106 A (XX)]. He also presented information provided by four Governments on their efforts regarding the Convention. The Secretary-General noted that on 15 August a joint meeting was held of the Bureaux of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. The two bodies agreed to undertake a joint study of article 7 of the Convention, which referred to measures that States parties agreed to adopt in the areas of teaching, education, culture and information with a view to combating racial discrimination.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/81.

Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the objectives set forth in the Charter of the United Nations of achieving international cooperation in solving problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming also its firm determination and its commitment to eradicate totally and unconditionally racism, in all its forms, and racial discrimination,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 14 December 1960,

Recalling also the outcome of the two World Conferences to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva in 1978 and 1983,

Welcoming the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, and, in particular, the attention given in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action to the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance,

Stressing the importance of the activities of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Recalling its resolutions 48/91 of 20 December 1993 and 49/146 of 23 December 1994, by which, respectively, it proclaimed the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and adopted the revised Programme of Action for the Third Decade,

Noting with grave concern that, despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the two previous Decades for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination have not been attained and that millions of human beings continue to this day to be the victims of varied forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Noting with great concern that, despite the efforts undertaken by the international community at various levels, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related forms of intolerance, ethnic antagonism and acts of violence are showing signs of increase,

Noting with concern that technological developments in the field of communications, including computer networks such as the Internet, have been used for dissemination of racist and xenophobic propaganda throughout the world,

Having considered the reports submitted by the Secretary-General within the framework of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Third Decade,

Firmly convinced of the need to take more effective and sustained measures at the national and international levels for the elimination of all forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Recognizing the importance of strengthening national legislation and institutions for the promotion of racial harmony,

Deeply concerned about the fact that the phenomenon of racism and racial discrimination against migrant workers continues to increase despite efforts undertaken by the international community to improve the protection of the human rights of migrant workers and members of their families,

Recalling the adoption of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families at its forty-fifth session,

Acknowledging that indigenous people are at times victims of particular forms of racism and racial discrimination,

1. Declares once again that all forms of racism and racial discrimination, whether in their institutionalized form or resulting from official doctrine of racial superiority or exclusivity, such as ethnic cleansing, are among the most serious violations of human rights in the contemporary world and must be combated by all available means;

2. Recalls with satisfaction the proclamation of the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, which began in 1993, and requests the Secretary-General to make a further review of the Programme of Action with a view to making it more effective and action-oriented;

3. Calls upon Governments to cooperate more closely with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance to enable him to fulfil his mandate;

4. Urges all Governments to take all necessary measures to combat new forms of racism, in particular by adapting constantly the means provided to combat them, especially in the legislative, administrative, educational and information fields;

5. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to give priority, through the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, to the follow-up of programmes and activities for combating racism and racial discrimination;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to accord special attention to the situation of migrant workers and members of their families and to include regularly in his reports all information on such workers;

7. Calls upon all Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families as a matter of priority;

8. Commends all States that have ratified or acceded to the international instruments to combat racism and racial discrimination;

9. Encourages the media to promote ideas of tolerance and understanding among peoples and between different cultures;

10. Recommends that a seminar be organized by the Centre for Human Rights in cooperation with the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Telecommunication Union and other relevant United Nations bodies, non-governmental organizations and Internet service providers, with a view to assessing the role of the Internet in the light of the provisions of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the study on the effects of racial discrimination on the children of minorities, in particular those of migrant workers, in the fields of education, training and employment and to submit, inter alia, specific recommendations for the implementation of measures to combat the effects of that discrimination;

12. Urges the Secretary-General, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, all Governments, intergovernmental organizations and relevant non-governmental organizations, in implementing the Programme of Action for the Third Decade, to pay particular attention to the situation of indigenous people;

13. Requests States to consider the relevant decisions of the Economic and Social Council on the integrated follow-up to previous world conferences and the need to make optimum use of all available mechanisms in the struggle against racism;

14. Strongly underlines the importance of education as a significant means of preventing and eradicating racism and racial discrimination and of creating awareness of principles of human rights, particularly among young people, and in this regard renews its invitation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to expedite the preparation of teaching materials and teaching aids to promote teaching, training and educational activities on human rights and against racism and racial discrimination, with particular emphasis on activities at the primary and secondary levels of education;

15. Considers that all the parts of the Programme of Action for the Third Decade should be given equal attention in order to attain the objectives of the Decade;

16. Regrets the lack of interest, support and financial resources for the Third Decade and its related Programme of Action, reflected in the fact that the Centre for Human Rights has been able to organize only one seminar since the adoption of resolution 48/91 in 1993, and notes that unless a supplementary financial effort is made very few of the activities planned for the period 1994-1997 will be carried out;

17. Considers that voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination are indispensable for the implementation of the Programme;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the necessary financial resources are provided for the implementation of the activities of the Third Decade during the biennium 1996-1997;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General to accord the highest priority to the activities of the Programme of Action for the Third Decade;

20. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit each year to the Economic and Social Council a detailed report on all activities of United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies, containing an analysis of information received on such activities to combat racism and racial discrimination;

21. Invites the Secretary-General to submit proposals to the General Assembly with a view to supplementing, if necessary, the Programme of Action for the Third Decade;

22. Invites all Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to participate fully in the Third Decade;

23. Strongly appeals to all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals in a position to do so to contribute generously to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and to this end requests the Secretary-General to continue to undertake appropriate contacts and initiatives to encourage contributions;

24. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to consider at its fifty-third session as a matter of priority the question of a possible world conference to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other related contemporary forms of intolerance and to make appropriate recommendations through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

25. Once again requests the Secretary-General to consult Member States and intergovernmental as well as non-governmental organizations on the possibility of holding a world conference to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other related contemporary forms of intolerance;

26. Decides to keep the item entitled "Elimination of racism and racial discrimination" on its agenda and to consider it as a matter of the highest priority at its fifty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 51/81

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/617) without vote, 22 November (meeting 49); draft by Costa Rica (for Group of 77 and China), Mexico, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Turkey (A/C.3/51/L.27/Rev.1); agenda item 108.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 24-28, 35, 49; plenary 82.

Contemporary forms of racism

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Maurice Glélé-Ahanhanzo (Benin) continued to examine incidents of contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination and any form of discrimination against blacks, Arabs and Muslims, xenophobia, negrophobia, anti-Semitism and related intolerance, as well as governmental measures to overcome them.

In 1996, the Commission on Human Rights considered a report [E/CN.4/1996/72] of the Special Rapporteur, in which he discussed his 1995 activities, including missions he had taken to Brazil, France, Germany and the United Kingdom (see below). He concluded that racist propaganda and incitement to ethnic and racial hatred were spreading. Racism was taking increasingly violent forms, including physical aggression, murder, attacks on the property of immigrants or people belonging to ethnic, racial or religious minorities, the desecration of cemeteries and the destruction of places of worship. The Special Rapporteur noted that his missions had enabled him to begin a dialogue with the Governments of the countries he had visited. He recommended that field missions be continued in Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean, Asia, Oceania and the Middle East. Annexed to his report were summaries of 15 allegations relating to racist incidents in Germany and observations made by the Government of Germany, and a report on anti-Semitism submitted by the Coordinating Board of Jewish Organizations, an NGO.

The Special Rapporteur had visited Brazil [E/CN.4/1996/72/Add.1] (6-17 June 1995) to obtain reliable information on the relations between the various ethnic and racial components of the country. It was generally stated officially that there was no racism or racial discrimination in Brazil because the Constitution explicitly prohibited it and because miscegenation was a fundamental aspect of the Brazilian population and an essential component of the country's multiracial democracy.

The Special Rapporteur observed that the appearance of ethnic and racial cohesion in Brazil concealed inequalities between whites, Indians, people of mixed parentage and blacks, which were a legacy of earlier times. The situation was exacerbated by the unequal distribution of wealth. He noted that the Brazilian authorities appeared to be resolved to tackle the ethnic and racial issue directly and to usher in a society based on the equal dignity of all of its members. The political will existed, and constitutional, legal and administrative steps had been taken, he stated.

Racism and racial discrimination were not easy to pin down, the Special Rapporteur went on, since they were subject to the vagaries of official statements and were concealed by biological and cultural intermingling. He noted, however, that everyday racism and racial discrimination took the form of acts of harassment which accentuated the perception of the inferiority of blacks, who were frequently harassed by military and civilian police or by other law enforcement agencies. Such practices could be explained by the generally negative image of blacks within Brazilian society; being black was synonymous with being poor or a criminal. Discrimination among blacks was evident in education, employment and housing. The Special Rapporteur described the situation of black women, who were mostly employed as domestic servants, nursemaids or nightclub dancers. More black women were sterilized than white women, which some people believed had contributed to the gradual whitening of Brazil's population. Violence against children, especially street children, and child labour were mostly evident among children of black and mixed parentage. Although he had been informed that there was no anti-Semitism in Brazil, the Special Rapporteur noted that in the States of Parana and Sao Paulo, violent neo-Nazi groups had existed, which were later disbanded by the police.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the 1980s had marked a genuine change in the Brazilian authorities' attitude to ethnic and racial issues. Though the singleness of the Brazilian people had not been called into question, the multiplicity of its component races and ethnic groups was acknowledged, the Rapporteur stated. The applications of provisions in the 1988 Federal Constitution concerning support for a multiracial democracy and a just and mutually supportive society—which primarily concerned Indians, persons of mixed parentage and blacks, the poorest among the poor—would eventually help to integrate them more effectively into Brazilian society, the Rapporteur declared.

He also pointed out that the 1988 Constitution contained strict provisions to punish racism. However, the effectiveness of the laws had yet to be demonstrated because the police received few complaints and there were few trials for racism or racial discrimination. The Special Rapporteur recommended that in the absence of special programmes for the benefit of disadvantaged ethnic and racial groups, priority should be given to educating the poorest Brazilians; studying the situation of street children in order to reintegrate them; taking a survey of the problem of the sterilization of black women; improving the image of blacks and giving them and Amerindians and people of mixed parentage an awareness of their human dignity; and taking action to eliminate racial discrimination in employment.

Reporting on his 1995 mission to Germany (18-27 September) [E/CN.4/1996/72/Add.2 & Corr.1], the Special Rapporteur recalled that reunification had been accompanied by violent outbursts of xenophobic sentiment and anti-Semitic acts fomented by extreme rightist organizations and neo-Nazi cells. He stated that reunification had exposed the formerly inward-looking inhabitants of the east of the country to things about which they had previously been ignorant. Economic and social change and unemployment had engendered disarray, and the inhabitants of eastern Germany perceived foreigners as competing for jobs and threatening any improvement in their economic and social situation. Other factors in the growth of xenophobia included the massive influx of asylum-seekers following political changes in Eastern Europe and the crisis in the former Yugoslavia, as well as the aggressiveness of the extreme right.

The Special Rapporteur declared that German authorities had worked hard to restore the image of a peaceful, liberal, cosmopolitan and democratic Germany. Large-scale action had been taken in prevention and punishment, and also in amending the law. Firm steps had been taken by both federal authorities and the authorities in the Lander against extreme rightist organizations and neo-Nazi cells. In addition, the society at large had rejected xenophobia, racism and rightist extremism; millions of demonstrators had marched in protest against these and other forms of discrimination.

Beyond steps taken to end racist and xenophobic violence, there remained the question of the integration of foreigners. Between 1955 and 1970, the Federal Republic of Germany used foreign labour to rebuild its economy, recruiting workers from Mediterranean countries, whom it called "guest workers" because the intention was that they would return home. Currently, Germany had 1,850,000 people from Turkey (28.6 per cent of the foreign population); 916,000 from the former Yugoslavia (14.1 per cent); 558,000 from Italy (8.6 per cent); 346,000 from Greece (5.3 per cent); 286,000 from Poland (4.4 per cent); 168,000 from Romania (2.6 per cent); and 134,000 from Spain (2.1 per cent). Some 60 per cent of the foreigners had lived in the Federal Republic of Germany for 10 years or more. The Special Rapporteur pointed out that while Europeans, particularly those from the European Union, were well integrated, the same was not true of people from Turkey, Poland and Romania, who faced discrimination in housing, employment, the provision of services and access to public places. The Government's policy on integration was recent and suffered from ambiguity, the Rapporteur stated, since Germany did not see itself as a country of immigration despite the realities of the situation. However, the country had considerable assets in the form of its Commissioners for Foreigners, working in favour of the integration of foreign population groups.

In his conclusions and recommendations, the Special Rapporteur stated that the integration of foreigners in Germany remained a problem and that the rigid official policy on immigration could profitably be reviewed. He proposed that: efforts be made to change mental attitudes in favour of accepting a multi-ethnic, multicultural society; consideration be given to applications for asylum; improvement be made in the living conditions of holding centres and a humane handling of the refoulement of supposedly illegal immigrants; a more humane solution than refoulement be sought for the Vietnamese and Mozambicans who used to work under contract in the former German Democratic Republic and whose status had been made precarious by reunification; and a law be passed against racism, anti-Semitism and xenophobia. Annexed to the report was the 9 October 1992 Declaration of Saarbrücken on tolerance and solidarity; Hamburg's policy on aliens and refugees; and measures to combat racism and animosity towards foreigners in Berlin.

As to the situation in France [E/CN.4/1996/72/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur stated that his visit to the country (29 September-9 October 1995) had been prompted by the multiplication, since 1990, of racist and xenophobic incidents targeting immigrants and of anti-Semitic acts, which the French National Consultative Commission on Human Rights had noted in its reports for 1991, 1992, 1993 and 1994. Other information received by the UN Centre for Human Rights included allegations of ill-treatment by the police of prisoners from some countries in the Maghreb (Algeria, Morocco, Tunisia), the Middle East and Africa.

Racial discrimination against persons of non-European origin was particularly evident in employment and housing. Immigration had been suspended since 1974, and each succeeding Government had opted for a policy composed of the control of migratory flows and limitation of so-called clandestine immigration, on the one hand, and integration of legal immigrants on the other. The French authorities were trying to strengthen anti-racist legislation. Economic and social measures had also been taken to encourage the gradual integration of immigrant populations, and appeals by associations for tolerance were helping to bring about a change in attitudes. Judicial measures to combat racism and xenophobia in France were annexed to the Special Rapporteur's report.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that France be more generous in granting entry visas for people from the South; expedite procedures for examining files of those detained in holding centres and improve the living conditions in the centres; study the feasibility of devising and disseminating a syllabus to teach human rights based on international declarations and conventions; and provide technical assistance and financial support to hold an international seminar on racism and xenophobia. Annexed to the report was documentation regarding manifestations of racism and anti-Semitism.

Following his visit to the United Kingdom (13-24 November 1995), the Special Rapporteur reported [E/CN.4/1996/72/Add.4] allegations of a multiplication of racist incidents due to the activities of movements of the far right and to the behaviour of the police towards certain ethnic minorities. Jewish organizations had warned of a resurgence of anti-Semitic acts, prompted by the propaganda of fundamentalist Islamic organizations and organizations of the far right. Harassment and racial violence emanated from the activities of small, extreme right-wing groups and neo-Nazi organizations, individual behaviour and police treatment of black communities and their members. The Government acknowledged the existence of problems and was trying to overcome them through legislative and administrative measures to eliminate economic and social disparities between the white majority and the ethnic minorities. Government action was supplemented by that of local communities, churches, trade unions and non-governmental associations and organizations.

The Special Rapporteur noted that remarkable progress had been achieved during the country's 30-year policy of racial equality, but increasingly subtle forms of discrimination had emerged. In recent years, the economic crisis and competition for increasingly scarce resources and jobs, as well as political activity by the far right and neo-Nazi movements and parties and violent police action against certain communities, had polarized social relations between rich and poor on the one hand, and between whites and blacks, on the other. The country's once-open immigration policy had become increasingly restrictive for people originating from African and Asian States members of the Commonwealth. The Government was of the view that its immigration policy was devoid of any discriminatory criteria. As to the right to asylum, government measures were intended to discourage the arrival of asylum-seekers, the great majority of whom were from countries in the southern hemisphere. Applications had risen from 4,000 in 1988 to 40,000 in 1995; 70,000 applications were currently pending. Further, some 700 asylum-seekers and immigrants without papers were being held in 37 prisons and detention centres.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government educate individuals to accept one another; improve training for the police force and incorporate into the police citizens from different ethnic communities; severely condemn police violence; be more respectful of human dignity in holding centres and in cases of refoulement or expulsion of illegal entrants and asylum-seekers; and review the law on incitement to racial hatred and create a specific offence of racist harassment and violence and an offence of defamation with respect to an ethnic group or minority.

By a note of 20 August [A/51/301], the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the Special Rapporteur containing the observations of Germany on matters relating to it, as discussed in a 1994 report [YUN 1994, p. 992], and comments by Italy on a 1995 progress report [YUN 1995, p. 727]. The Special Rapporteur discussed contemporary forms and manifestations of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia and measures taken by Governments and judicial bodies, as well as initiatives by civil society. He concluded that at the international level the question of racism and racial discrimination remained alarming. Increasingly restrictive and discriminatory regulations were undermining freedom of movement and residence and the right to live as a family. He recommended to the General Assembly that it should convene a world conference on racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia (see below), and suggested that it should explore the possibility of establishing a fund to assist ethnic or racial communities that were victims of racial discrimination.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/21], the Commission on Human Rights expressed its profound concern at and unequivocal condemnation of all forms of racism and racial discrimination and all racist violence. It supported the efforts of Governments in taking measures aimed at eradicating such practices and called on them to enact and enforce legislation to prevent and sanction acts of racism and racial discrimination. The Commission decided to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance for a three-year period and to have him report yearly beginning in 1997; and asked the Secretary-General to assist him. The Commission's decision and requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1996/259 of 23 July.

World conference

On 11 April, the Commission on Human Rights recommended [res 1996/8] that the Council request the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly the results of his consultations with Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on the possibility of holding a world conference to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related contemporary forms of intolerance.

On 23 July, the Council, by decision 1996/255, requested the Secretary-General to transmit to the Assembly in 1996 the results of his consultations.

By resolution 51/81 of 12 December, the General Assembly invited the Commission to consider the possibility of such a conference as a matter of priority at its 1997 session. It also requested the Secretary-General to consult with Member States and intergovernmental organizations regarding a possible conference.

On 23 August [res. 1996/8], the Subcommission, expressing its support for the convening of a world conference to combat racism and racial discrimination, called on Member States to respond positively to the proposal to convene the conference. It invited the Secretary-General to submit a concrete proposal for the convening of a world conference before the turn of the century.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/79.

Measures to combat contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/135 of 21 December 1995, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/21 of 19 April 1996,

Bearing in mind the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, and, in particular, the attention given in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action to the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance,

Aware that racism, being one of the exclusionist phenomena plaguing many societies, requires resolute action and cooperation for its eradication,

Having examined the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including his conclusions and recommendations,

Deeply concerned that, despite continuing efforts, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, as well as acts of violence, continue to persist and even grow in magnitude, incessantly adopting new forms, including tendencies to establish policies based on racial, religious, ethnic, cultural and national superiority or exclusivity,

Conscious of the fundamental difference between, on the one hand, racism and racial discrimination as governmental policy or resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity and, on the other hand, other manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance which are increasingly visible in segments of many societies and perpetrated by individuals or groups, some of which are directed against migrant workers and members of their families,

Taking note of the final report on freedom of opinion and expression submitted to the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its forty-fourth session by the Special Rapporteurs Mr. Louis Joinet and Mr. Danilo Turk, in which the Special Rapporteurs concluded that, under international law, racism is not an opinion but an offence,

Noting that the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, in its general recommendation XV (42) of 17 March 1993 on article 4 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, held that the prohibition of the dissemination of all ideas based upon racial superiority or racial hatred was compatible with the right to freedom of opinion and expression as outlined in article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in article 5 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Conscious that impunity for crimes motivated by racist and xenophobic attitudes plays a role in weakening the rule of law and tends to encourage the recurrence of such crimes,

Underlining the importance of creating conditions that foster greater harmony and tolerance within societies,

Regretting that the Special Rapporteur has continued to encounter difficulties in his efforts to fulfil his mandate, owing to the lack of necessary resources,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

2. Requests the Special Rapporteur to continue his exchange of views with Member States, relevant mechanisms, related United Nations organs and specialized agencies in order to further their effectiveness and mutual cooperation;

3. Takes note of the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur to convene, without further delay, a world conference on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and to include the question of immigration and xenophobia on its agenda;

4. Expresses its profound concern at and unequivocal condemnation of all forms of racism and all racist violence, including related acts of random and indiscriminate violence;

5. Expresses its deep concern at and condemnation of manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against migrant workers and members of their families and other vulnerable groups in many societies;

6. Encourages all States, in accordance with the conclusions and recommendations of the Special Rapporteur in his report, to include in their educational curricula and social programmes, at all levels as appropriate, knowledge, tolerance and respect for foreign cultures, peoples and countries;

7. Encourages the efforts of Governments to take measures aimed at the eradication of all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

8. Categorically condemns any role played by print, audio-visual or electronic media in inciting acts of violence motivated by racial hatred;

9. Recognizes that Governments should implement and enforce legislation to prevent acts of racism and racial discrimination;

10. Calls upon all Governments and intergovernmental organizations, with the assistance of non-governmental organizations, as appropriate, to continue to cooperate with and to supply relevant information to the Special Rapporteur;

11. Commends non-governmental organizations for their action against racism and racial discrimination and for their continuous support and assistance to the victims of racism and racial discrimination;

12. Urges all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur, with a view to enabling him to fulfil his mandate;

13. Once again requests the Secretary-General to provide, without any further delay, the Special Rapporteur, as in the case of other Special Rapporteurs, with all the necessary human and financial assistance to enable him to carry out his mandate efficiently, effectively and expeditiously and to submit, in a timely manner, an interim report on this question to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 51/79

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/617) without vote, 22 November (meeting 49); draft by Costa Rica, for Group of 77 and China, and Turkey (A/C.3/51/L.23/Rev.1); agenda item 8.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 24-28, 36, 49; plenary 82.

Other questions relating to intolerance

On 11 April [res. 1996/19], the Commission on Human Rights called on States to enhance tolerance, coexistence and harmonious relations between ethnic, religious, linguistic and other groups and to ensure that the values of pluralism, respect for diversity and non-discrimination were promoted. It asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Centre for Human Rights, through its programme of advisory services and technical cooperation, to advise or assist countries, on request, to put in place effective safeguards to guarantee the full enjoyment of all human rights by all segments of their populations, without discrimination. The Centre was asked to include the promotion of tolerance through workshops and seminars, using mass media and NGOs, and through its programme of advisory services and technical cooperation.

Follow-up to UN Year for Tolerance

In 1996, the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) transmitted to the Secretary-General of the United Nations a final report [A/51/201] concerning the United Nations Year for Tolerance, observed in 1995 and for which UNESCO was the lead agency. He stated that at its twenty-eighth session (October/November 1995), the General Conference of UNESCO had adopted a Declaration of Principles on Tolerance and a Follow-up Plan of Action for the Year [YUN 1995, p. 1126].

The six-article Declaration covered the meaning of tolerance, social dimensions, education and commitment to action, among other things. It also proclaimed 16 November as the annual International Day for Tolerance.

In its preamble, UNESCO member States expressed alarm at the current rise in acts of intolerance, violence, terrorism, xenophobia, aggressive nationalism, racism, anti-Semitism, exclusion, marginalization and discrimination directed again various groups within society, and against individuals. They also stressed their responsibility to develop and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, gender, language, national origin, religion or disability, and to combat intolerance.

The 32-paragraph Plan of Action to follow up the UN Year for Tolerance, also adopted at the General Conference, included sections on objectives, education and networking, mobilization of the UN system, and coordination, among other subjects. The Plan stated that, as modern societies become increasingly diverse and interdependent, tolerance becomes ever more essential for the survival and well-being of both individuals and communities. The overall objective of the Plan was to educate, inform and empower individuals to assume the responsibilities of dialogue, mutual respect, toleration and nonviolence, and to encourage pluralism and tolerance in the policies of Member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, having reviewed the final report of the UNESCO Director-General, and reconfirming that tolerance was the sound foundation of any civil society and of peace, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/95.

Follow-up to the United Nations Year for Tolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/124 of 18 December 1992, 48/126 of 20 December 1993 and 49/213 of 23 December 1994, by which it proclaimed and supported the United Nations Year for Tolerance,

Recalling also that the Charter of the United Nations affirms in its preamble that to practice tolerance is one of the principles to be applied to attain the ends pursued by the United Nations of preventing war and maintaining peace,

Stressing that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as set forth in the Charter, is the achievement of international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Bearing in mind the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reconfirming that tolerance is the sound foundation of any civil society and of peace,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the final report on the United Nations Year for Tolerance, including the Declaration of Principles on Tolerance and the Follow-up Plan of Action for the United Nations Year for Tolerance, submitted to him by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/213,

Taking note also of resolution 5.6 adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-eighth session,

1. Welcomes the role played by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the preparation for and implementation of the United Nations Year for Tolerance;

2. Takes note of the Declaration of Principles on Tolerance and the Follow-up Plan of Action for the United Nations Year for Tolerance, adopted by the States members of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 16 November 1995;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the contribution of the regional conferences on tolerance and other relevant activities organized during the United Nations Year for Tolerance at Rio de Janeiro (Brazil), Seoul (Republic of Korea), Sienna (Italy), Carthage (Tunisia), New Delhi (India), Moscow and Yakutsk (Russian Federation), Tbilisi (Georgia) and Istanbul (Turkey) to the Declaration of Principles and the Follow-up Plan of Action for the promotion of tolerance;

4. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to take appropriate initiatives, including holding regional meetings, to assure the follow-up and implementation of the outcome of the regional conferences organized during the United Nations Year for Tolerance and to promote further the spirit instigated by those conferences;

5. Invites Member States to consider applying the Declaration of Principles at the national level and to continue to undertake public information campaigns in connection with the Follow-up Plan of Action aimed at the realization of more tolerant societies;

6. Also invites Member States to observe the International Day for Tolerance annually on 16 November with appropriate activities directed towards both educational establishments and the wider public;

7. Encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue its activities aimed at reinforcing the struggle against the rise of intolerance;

8. Recommends that interested intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and specialized agencies exert efforts in their respective fields to contribute to the long-term follow-up programme for the United Nations Year for Tolerance, including celebration of the International Day for Tolerance, and to consider what further contributions they can make to implement and disseminate the standards affirmed in the Declaration of Principles;

9. Requests the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue to coordinate actions in support of tolerance promotion and education in partnership with other United Nations agencies and regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and to make reports available to the General Assembly on a biennial basis on the implementation of the Declaration of Principles and the Follow-up Plan of Action;

10. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to consider, at an appropriate time, the possibility of organizing an international conference to inform and mobilize public opinion, as well as the United Nations system, in this regard;

11. Decides to consider the question of the follow-up to the United Nations Year for Tolerance at its fifty-third session.

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote
Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 26 November (meeting 53); 47-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.50); agenda item 110 (b). Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-53; plenary 82.

Discrimination against minorities

Declaration

Report of Secretary-General. In a January report [E/CN.4/1996/88], the Secretary-General presented information received from Governments, UN organs and bodies, human rights treaty bodies, special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations as to how they promoted and gave effect to the 1992 Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities [GA res. 47/1351]. The Secretary-General concluded that in view of the few replies received, it was difficult to arrive at conclusions that accurately represented the measures taken to give effect to the Declaration by the international community.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1996/20], the Commission on Human Rights urged States and the international community to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as set out in the 1992 Declaration. It urged States to give effect to the Declaration and called on them and the Secretary-General to give due regard to the Declaration in their training programmes for officials. States, interested governmental and non-governmental organizations, special representatives, special rapporteurs and the Commission's working groups were invited to continue to submit contributions as to how they promoted and gave effect to the Declaration. The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights was called on to promote the implementation of the Declaration and to continue to engage in a dialogue with Governments concerned to that end. The Commission also asked the Subcommission to make available the annual report of the Working Group on Minorities. The Secretary-General was asked to provide assistance to the Working Group to fulfil its mandate; to provide resources for advisory services and technical assistance of the Centre to implement the Commission's present resolution; and to report on its implementation in 1997.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Minorities held its second session in 1996 (Geneva, 30 April-3 May) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/28], during which it decided that greater emphasis should be placed on arriving at solutions to problems involving persons belonging to minorities in order to promote their characteristics and thereby contribute to mutual tolerance, understanding and peace. It also decided to collect information on constitutions and legislation of States regarding the protection and promotion of minorities and to commission the preparation of short studies on the core principles of the Declaration [YUN 1992, p. 723], including the formulation of recommendations for different countries and regions. Other decisions related to establishing and strengthening monitoring mechanisms; focusing on themes and seminars dealing with multicultural education, language, culture, the media and the issue of minorities and territorial integrity; submission of information on national recourse and conciliation machineries; increasing cooperation with the High Commissioner for Human Rights; strengthening collaboration and cooperation with the specialized agencies and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), and establishing cooperation with the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund; encouraging Governments to establish mechanisms which could facilitate dialogue and conciliation between them and minorities; and encouraging wider participation in its next session, particularly by Governments and NGOs from developing countries. The Group presented a series of substantive guidelines for working papers.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/17], the Subcommission recommended that the Commission on Human Rights request the Economic and Social Council to authorize the extension of the Working Group's mandate for a further two years, with a view to its holding one session annually until 1999.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 729], the Secretary-General reported [A/51/536] in October on action to give due regard to the Declaration taken by Governments, UN bodies and organs, specialized agencies and other UN organizations, treaty bodies, special rapporteurs and representatives, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/91.

Effective promotion of the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/135 of 18 December 1992, as well as its subsequent resolutions on the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities,

Concerned by the growing frequency and severity of disputes and conflicts concerning minorities in many countries and their often tragic consequences, and concerned also that persons belonging to minorities are particularly vulnerable to displacement through, inter alia, population transfers, refugee flows and forced relocation,

Considering that the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities contribute to political and social stability and peace and enrich the cultural heritage of society as a whole in the States in which such persons live,

Noting that the Working Group on Minorities of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities held its second session from 30 April to 3 May 1996 and that its report will be made available to the Commission on Human Rights,

Acknowledging that the United Nations has an increasingly important role to play regarding the protection of minorities,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms the obligation of States to ensure that persons belonging to minorities may exercise fully and effectively all human rights and fundamental freedoms without any discrimination and in full equality before the law in accordance with the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities;

3. Urges States and the international community to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as set out in the Declaration, including through the facilitation of their participation in all aspects of the political, economic, social, religious and cultural life of society and in the economic progress and development of their country;

4. Recognizes that respect for human rights and the promotion of understanding and tolerance by Governments as well as between and among minorities is central to the protection and promotion of the rights of persons belonging to minorities;

5. Urges States to take, as appropriate, all the necessary constitutional, legislative, administrative and other measures to promote and give effect to the principles contained in the Declaration;

6. Appeals to States to make bilateral and multilateral efforts, as appropriate, in order to protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities in their countries, in accordance with the Declaration;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to make available, at the request of Governments concerned, qualified expertise on minority issues, including the prevention and resolution of disputes, to assist in existing or potential situations involving minorities;

8. Welcomes the activities of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights relating to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities, and, in accordance with his mandate, calls upon him to promote the implementation of the Declaration and to continue to engage in a dialogue with Governments concerned for that purpose;

9. Requests the High Commissioner to continue his efforts to improve the coordination and cooperation of United Nations programmes and agencies which deal with minority issues in activities related to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities;

10. Urges all treaty bodies to give due regard, within their respective mandates, to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities;

11. Calls upon States to continue to include in their reports to treaty bodies, in accordance with the relevant conventions, information on measures taken for the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities;

12. Calls upon all special representatives, special rapporteurs and working groups of the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give attention, within their respective mandates, to situations involving minorities;

13. Encourages intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to contribute to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 51/91

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 26 November (meeting 53); 49-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.45); agenda item 110 (b). Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-53; plenary 82.

Preventing minority discrimination

As requested by the Subcommission in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 730], Special Rapporteur Asbjørn Eide (Norway) presented a second working paper [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/30] containing further suggestions for a comprehensive programme for the prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities, including proposals for examining thematic issues relating to racism, xenophobia, minorities and migrant workers. His first paper was submitted in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1008].

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/17], the Subcommission asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to pursue the implementation of his programme for the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities.

Religious intolerance

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In 1996, the Commission on Human Rights considered a report [E/CN.4/1996/95] of the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance, Abdelfattah Amor (Tunisia). He updated the status of communications sent to Governments containing allegations of intolerance or discrimination based on belief and their replies thereto. Since the Commission's 1995 session, he had sent communications to 46 States and had made three urgent appeals to two States. The communications concerned violations of: the principle of non-discrimination in religion and belief; the principle of tolerance; freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief; freedom to manifest one's religion; freedom of disposal of religious property; and attacks on the right to life, physical integrity and security of person (clergy and believers). As to States' replies, the deadline had not yet expired for 29 States, and of the 18 for which the deadline had expired, the Special Rapporteur had received seven replies. There had been no replies to his urgent appeals.

In separate addenda to his report, the Special Rapporteur described his visits in 1995 to Pakistan (12-22 June) [E/CN.4/1996/95/Add.1] and to Iran (15-22 December) [E/CN.4/1996/95/Add.2]. Both visits were made at the invitation of the Governments concerned.

Concerning Pakistan, the Special Rapporteur noted, following a review of legislation in the country, that the present State laws related to religious minorities—and more generally on the subject of tolerance and non-discrimination based on religion or belief—were likely to favour or foster intolerance. The Special Rapporteur noted that existing legislation and the way it was applied had been inherited from the past, particularly from periods of dictatorship. Asserting that applying the death penalty for blasphemy appeared disproportionate and even unacceptable, he endorsed a government proposal to amend procedural aspects of the blasphemy law. With regard to proselytism, conversion and apostasy, the Special Rapporteur drew attention to the need to abide by international human rights standards, and considered that no mention of religion should be included on passports, on identity card application forms or any other administrative documents.

With regard to society, the Special Rapporteur remained concerned at manifestations of intolerance and, more generally, at the limited expression of the culture of tolerance. A limited rate of literacy, rigid social structures, authoritarian education, political militancy, media frenzy and politically inclined religious practices were not conducive to reducing tensions, nor to developing a culture of tolerance. As to religious extremism, the Special Rapporteur encouraged the Government to restrain it and take measures in conformity with the law.

The Special Rapporteur considered that it would be appropriate to implement the Centre for Human Rights programme of advisory services, notably for training police and administrative staff in human rights, especially religious freedom. He stated that places of worship should be reserved for religious and not political matters, and also recommended combating illiteracy and advocating values based on human rights and tolerance; duly punishing cases of abuse or rape against girls and women, especially those belonging to minorities, and informing victims of the proceedings and guarantees provided by law; and making a special effort with regard to legislation applying to places of worship, education and political parties. The Special Rapporteur asked that the authorities in all circumstances ensure the serene operation of justice by protecting the courts from the pressures of demonstrations and crowds. Annexed to the report was a list of cases concerning members of the Christian and the Ahmadi minorities.

In his second report, the Special Rapporteur considered Iran's legislation in the field of tolerance and non-discrimination based on religion or belief, and the implementation of that legislation and the policy in force. In addition, he analysed the situation of the non-Muslim minorities and the Sunni Muslims.

Regarding legislation, the Special Rapporteur indicated that a State religion was not, in itself, in contradiction with human rights; however, it should not be exploited at the expense of the rights of minorities and the rights associated with citizenship, which implied that citizens should not be discriminated against on grounds such as religion or belief. Concerning the situation of recognized minorities, as provided for in the Constitution, the Special Rapporteur emphasized that it should be understood that what were meant were inherent rights of minorities, not privileges that had been granted. He noted that the right to conversion—the right to change one's religion—was recognized in international human rights standards.

The Special Rapporteur believed that the situation of recognized non-Muslim religious minorities—the Zoroastrian, Jewish, Assyro-Chaldean and Armenian minorities—was satisfactory except in respect of some specific problems. He recommended ensuring correct transcription of religious beliefs in instruction manuals; not submitting specific types of expression, such as religious publications, to prior scrutiny, but initiating action after publication, if and when required; collaboration by minorities in the development of education programmes through written contributions; eliminating the obligation of grocery store owners to indicate their religious affiliation in front of their shops; applying the Centre for Human Rights programme of advisory services for the training of judicial and administrative personnel in human rights; and respecting freedom of access to places of worship.

The Special Rapporteur expressed concern about the other non-Muslim (Baha'i and Protestant) minorities. With regard to the Baha'is, he hoped that a distinction would be drawn between questions of belief and those of a political nature. It should not be presumed, he stated, that the entire community had been politicized or engaged in political or espionage activities. He believed that there should not be any controls on the Baha'is that might, through prohibition, restrictions or discrimination, jeopardize the right to freedom of belief or the right to manifest one's belief. He recommended that the ban on the Baha'i organization be lifted to enable it to organize itself freely. The Special Rapporteur emphasized that no discrimination should impede access by the Baha'is to higher educational establishments or to employment, and called on the authorities to review or set aside death sentences passed on Baha'is and to promulgate amnesties or other measures to prevent the enforcement of the penalties imposed. As for the Protestants, the Special Rapporteur recommended that the ban on the Bible Society of Iran and on the Garden of Evangelism be lifted, and that freedom to write, print and disseminate religious publications should be fully respected. He noted the severe traumatism caused by the murders of Protestant pastors who were defenders of tolerance and non-discrimination based on religion or belief. He advocated the lifting of all bans and restrictions on places of worship and access thereto and respect for the freedom to change one's religion and freedom to manifest one's religion or belief.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/231, the Commission on Human Rights, noting with grave concern the continuing instances of hatred and intolerance, including acts of violence based on religious intolerance, condemned all acts motivated by religious intolerance in all its forms. It urged States to: provide adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief; ensure that no one, because of religion or belief, was deprived of the right to life or the right to liberty and security of person, or was subjected to torture or arbitrary arrest or detention; combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence; promote and enhance tolerance relating to religion or belief; and ensure that members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials respected different religions and beliefs. The Commission called on States to recognize, as provided in the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief [GA res. 36/55], the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief and to establish and maintain places for those purposes. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur to enable him to carry out his mandate, submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its 1996 session and report to the Commission in 1997. Those requests to the Secretary-General were approved by the Economic and Social Council on 23 July by decision 1996/260.

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. By an October note [A/51/542], the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report updating the status of communications since the beginning of the Commission's 1996 session (18 March-26 April). He had sent communications to 35 States and an urgent appeal to one country. The deadline for receiving replies had not expired for 21 States, and of the 13 States for which it had expired, 5 had replied.

The Special Rapporteur expressed grave concern at the problem of sects. During the year, an increasing number of cases involving criminal acts, including murders, directly linked to groups identified as sects came to light in many countries. He felt that an international high-level governmental conference should be held to study and decide on a common approach to sects and religions that would respect human rights, and also recommended that the Subcommission authorize a study of the phenomenon of sects and religious freedom. He further recommended that a department on religious freedom and human rights be set up within the Centre for Human Rights. The Special Rapporteur stressed that places of worship should be reserved for religious, non-political uses, and that schools should be protected from ideological, political or partisan indoctrination.

By notes dated 7 and 11 November, respectively, the Secretary-General transmitted reports on the Special Rapporteur's visits to Greece (18-25 June) [A/51/542/Add.1] and the Sudan (19-24 September) [A/51/542/Add.2].

With regard to Greece, the Special Rapporteur focused on legislation in the area of tolerance and non-discrimination based on religion or belief and on its implementation, and on the laws and policies currently in force. In addition, he analysed the situations of both the religious minorities and the dominant Orthodox Church and their relations with the State. Although freedom of conscience was guaranteed, the Special Rapporteur noted that there were limitations on freedom of worship which were inconsistent with internationally established human rights norms. The Constitution limited freedom of worship to "known" religions but lacked a legal definition of the concept. He considered Constitutional provisions prohibiting proselytism to be inconsistent with the 1981 Declaration [YUN 1981, p. 881]. He also mentioned legislation governing places of worship, and supported the abolition of the mention of religion on identity cards.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the Christian minorities were facing a challenge to their legal recognition regarding their places of worship and right to conscientious objection. The status of the Jewish minority in the religious and other spheres was entirely satisfactory. However, among the Muslim minority in Thrace, he noted a static, unsatisfactory and prejudicial situation, especially in the religious sphere.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Greek State involve representatives of human rights organizations and lay and religious representatives from all religious minorities and the Orthodox Church in its religious affairs policy on a consultative basis; adopt and apply measures to forestall and penalize acts of intolerance or discrimination on the part of the authorities; make efforts to promote and develop a culture of tolerance and human rights; make use of the Centre for Human Rights programme of advisory services; establish a permanent interfaith dialogue between religious minorities and the Orthodox Church; and shield religious matters from political tensions and struggles.

By a letter of 22 November [A/C.3/51/18], Greece transmitted its reply to the Special Rapporteur's report. It stated that the various aspects of religious freedom had a sound legal foundation in the Greek Constitution, and Greece was deeply committed to the effective respect of its international undertakings in this area. There was a distinction between religious beliefs to which everyone had access and dogmas or sects whose activities were clandestine or even dangerous. Greece maintained that all relevant international instruments provided for the possibility of limiting religious freedoms for reasons of public policy.

Greece was gratified to note the positive statements by the Rapporteur about Christian and Jewish minorities. In the case of the Muslim minority, Greece was scrupulously respecting its international commitments deriving from the 1923 Treaty of Lausanne and was continually seeking to improve the situation of the Muslim minority in a spirit of tolerance, non-discrimination and the rule of law.

During his visit to the Sudan, the Special Rapporteur studied legislation concerning tolerance and non-discrimination based on religion or belief, and the implementation of that legislation and the policy in force, examining the situation of both non-Muslims and Muslims. He stressed that the State religion was not inherently incompatible with human rights; however, he stressed that the State should not take religion under its protection in order to define its content, concepts or limits, except as was strictly necessary and provided for under the 1981 Declaration and the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Concerning the concept of jihad, which had implications that were both offensive (holy war against infidels) and defensive (response to an attack), the Special Rapporteur recommended clarification of the defensive meaning of the term in order to make sure that it was compatible with the international norms to which the Sudan had committed itself. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the authorities ensure the compatibility of legislation on hudud offences (drinking alcohol, apostasy, adultery, false accusation of unchastity, armed robbery, capital theft) with human rights, and urged that hudud penalties, which included flogging and amputation, because they were exclusively of Islamic origin, should not be applied to persons who were non-Muslims. On the subject of proselytism, conversion and apostasy, the Special Rapporteur emphasized the need to respect internationally established norms, including the freedom to change one's religion and the freedom to manifest one's religion or belief. He urged that dress should not be the subject of political regulation and recommended that the State, through the school system, promote the development of a culture of tolerance and non-discrimination.

With respect to the situation of the non-Muslim communities, the Special Rapporteur expressed concern for limitations and constraints on officials of religion, believers and places of worship and the infringement of belief and the freedom to manifest one's belief; conversion to another religion by constraint, instead of free choice; limitations on the construction of new places of worship; and threats to the physical and moral integrity of individuals, particularly on grounds of faith or belief. Concerning the situation of Muslims, the Special Rapporteur appealed for the various Muslim brotherhoods to be respected, and recommended that their religious activities be conducted in full freedom.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1997/91/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur described the situation in India based on his visit to the country (2-14 December). He studied legislation concerning tolerance and non-discrimination based on religion or belief and its implementation, as well as current policies in respect of religious matters. His analysis covered the Christian, Muslim and Sikh minorities in the religious field and their relationships with society and the State. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the situation in India regarding tolerance and non-discrimination based on religion was satisfactory. Regarding Jammu and Kashmir, and Punjab, the Special Rapporteur urged all the parties concerned to refrain from exacerbating religious problems to ensure that religious principles were not affected by political considerations at the expense of the religious rights of the communities. (See also PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/93.

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling that all States have pledged themselves, under the Charter of the United Nations, to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming that discrimination against human beings on the grounds of religion or belief constitutes an affront to human dignity and a disavowal of the principles of the Charter,

Reaffirming its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Emphasizing that the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is far-reaching and profound and that it encompasses freedom of thought on all matters, personal conviction and the commitment to religion or belief, whether manifested individually or in community with others,

Reaffirming the call of the World Conference on Human Rights for all Governments to take all appropriate measures in compliance with their international obligations and with due regard to their respective legal systems to counter intolerance and related violence based on religion or belief, including practices of discrimination against women and the desecration of religious sites, recognizing that every individual has the right to freedom of thought, conscience, expression and religion,

Calling upon all Governments to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief to enable him to carry out his mandate fully,

Alarmed that serious instances of intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief, including acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious intolerance, occur in many parts of the world and threaten the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply concerned that, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, the rights violated on religious grounds include the right to life, the right to physical integrity and to liberty and security of person, the right to freedom of expression, the right not to be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and the right not to be arbitrarily arrested or detained,

1. Reaffirms that freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is a human right derived from the inherent dignity of the human person and guaranteed to all without discrimination;

2. Urges States to ensure that their constitutional and legal systems provide adequate and effective guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, including the provision of effective remedies in cases where the right to freedom of religion or belief is violated;

3. Also urges States to ensure, in particular, that no one within their jurisdiction is, because of their religion or belief, deprived of the right to life or the right to liberty and security of person or subjected to torture or arbitrary arrest or detention;

4. Further urges States, in conformity with international standards of human rights, to take all necessary action to prevent such instances, to take all appropriate measures to combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious intolerance and to encourage, through the educational system and by other means, understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

5. Recognizes that legislation alone is not enough to prevent violations of human rights, including the right to freedom of religion or belief;

6. Emphasizes that, as underlined by the Human Rights Committee, restrictions on the freedom to manifest religion or belief are permitted only if limitations are prescribed by law, are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others and are applied in a manner that does not vitiate the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

7. Urges States to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs;

8. Calls upon all States to recognize, as provided in the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief and to establish and maintain places for those purposes;

9. Expresses its grave concern at any attack upon religious places, sites and shrines, and calls upon all States, in accordance with their national legislation and in conformity with international human rights standards, to exert utmost efforts to ensure that such places, sites and shrines are fully respected and protected;

10. Recognizes that the exercise of tolerance and non-discrimination by persons and groups is necessary for the full realization of the aims of the Declaration;

11. Encourages the continued efforts on the part of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief, appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate;

12. Encourages Governments to give serious consideration to inviting the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries so as to enable him to fulfil his mandate even more effectively;

13. Also encourages Governments, when seeking the assistance of the United Nations programme of advisory services and technical assistance in the field of human rights, to consider, where appropriate, including requests for assistance in the field of the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

14. Welcomes and encourages the efforts of non-governmental organizations and religious bodies and groups to promote the implementation of the Declaration, and invites them to consider what further contribution they could make to its implementation and dissemination in all parts of the world;

15. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration;

16. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Special Rapporteur receives the necessary staffing, financial and material resources to enable him to discharge in full and on time his mandate;

18. Decides to consider the question of the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 51/93

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 26 November (meeting 53); 56-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.47), orally revised; agenda item 110 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-53; plenary 82.

HIV- and AIDS-related discrimination

Report of Secretary-General. In a January report [E/CN.4/1996/44], the Secretary-General reviewed progress in the development of a human rights component in the work plan of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (UNAIDS) (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII). He summarized comments, information and materials on ways to keep under review the protection of human rights in the context of HIV/AIDS received from Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs; and reported on the status of the task of elaborating guidelines for States on promoting and protecting respect for human rights in the context of HIV/AIDS.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/43], the Commission on Human Rights called on States to ensure that their laws, policies and practices, including those concerning HIV/AIDS, respected human rights standards, prohibited HIV/AIDS discrimination and did not inhibit programmes for the prevention of HIV/AIDS and for the care of persons infected with HIV. It also called on them to introduce protective legislation and appropriate education to combat discrimination, prejudice and stigma, to ensure the full enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights by people living with HIV/AIDS, their families and associates, and people presumed to be at risk of infection. Relevant professional bodies were called on to re-examine their codes of professional practice with a view to strengthening respect for human rights and dignity in the context of HIV/AIDS, and relevant authorities were called on to develop training for that purpose. The High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to continue his efforts, in cooperation with UNAIDS and NGOs, as well as with groups of people living with HIV/AIDS, towards the elaboration of guidelines on promoting and protecting respect for human rights in the context of HIV/AIDS, to ensure sufficient support to the Centre for Human Rights to address such issues and to incorporate them, as appropriate, in all the Centre's activities. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1997 on the development of the guidelines.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/33], by a roll-call vote of 13 to 2, with 6 abstentions, the Subcommission called on States to ensure that their legislation, policies and practices, including those in the context of HIV/AIDS, respected international human rights standards, prohibited HIV/AIDS-related discrimination and did not have the effect of inhibiting HIV/AIDS prevention and care programmes, in particular with respect to women, children, indigenous people, minorities, refugees, migrants, sex workers, men who were homosexual, injecting drug users and prisoners. It also called on them to advance the legal, economic and social status of women, children, minorities, indigenous peoples, migrants and other groups suffering lack of full enjoyment of their fundamental human rights and freedoms, so as to reduce their vulnerability to HIV infection and to the adverse socioeconomic consequences of the AIDS pandemic. The High Commissioner was asked to continue his efforts to ensure sufficient resources within the Centre to address HIV/AIDS-related issues and to incorporate those issues, as appropriate, in all the Centre's activities. The Subcommission stressed the importance of organizing a second international expert consultation on human rights and HIV/AIDS, with a view to developing guidelines for States on the promotion and protection of fundamental human rights and freedoms in the context of HIV/AIDS. UNAIDS was asked to continue the integration of a strong human rights component in all its activities. The Commission was strongly urged to keep under review the issue of HIV/AIDS-related human rights violations and discrimination.

Second Consultation. The Second International Consultation on HIV/AIDS and Human Rights (Geneva, 23-25 September) [E/CN.4/1997/37] concluded that the pandemic was continuing to spread throughout the world at an alarming rate. Close in its wake was the widespread abuse of human rights and fundamental freedoms associated with HIV/AIDS in all parts of the world. The first Consultation was held in 1989 [YUN 1989, p.482].

The Consultation adopted 12 Guidelines for States to protect HIV-related human rights and to achieve public health goals. They dealt with an effective national framework; community consultation in HIV/AIDS policy design, programme implementation and evaluation; public health laws; review and reform of criminal laws and correctional systems; anti-discrimination and other protective laws; enactment of legislation to provide for the regulation of HIV-related goods, services and information; support for legal aid services; a supportive and enabling environment for women, children and other vulnerable groups; creative education, training and media programmes to change attitudes of discrimination and stigmatization; codes of conduct that translated human rights principles into codes of professional responsibility and practice; monitoring and enforcement mechanisms to guarantee the protection of HIV-related human rights; and sharing of knowledge and experience concerning HIV-related human rights issues between States and all relevant programmes of the UN system. Annexed to the report was the full text of the Guidelines.

Civil and political rights

The right to self-determination

During the year, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people [res. 1996/5]. Under the item, it also adopted resolutions pertaining to Western Sahara [res. 1996/6] and to the Middle East peace process [res. 1996/7], and considered information provided by the Special Rapporteur on the question of the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination (see below).

In a September report [A/51/414], the Secretary-General summarized action taken by the Commission on the right of peoples to self-determination.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/84.

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of an increasing number of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third, forty-fourth, forty-fifth, forty-sixth, forty-seventh, forty-eighth, forty-ninth, fiftieth, fifty-first and fifty-second sessions,

Reaffirming its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981, 37/42 of 3 December 1982, 38/16 of 22 November 1983, 39/18 of 23 November 1984, 40/24 of 29 November 1985, 41/100 of 4 December 1986, 42/94 of 7 December 1987, 43/105 of 8 December 1988, 44/80 of 8 December 1989, 45/131 of 14 December 1990, 46/88 of 16 December 1991, 47/83 of 16 December 1992, 48/93 of 20 December 1993, 49/148 of 23 December 1994 and 50/139 of 21 December 1995,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the right of peoples to self-determination,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention in and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, particularly the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of those acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts, and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this question to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

General Assembly resolution 51/84

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/618) without vote, 14 November (meeting 38); 26-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.28); agenda item 109.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 24-28, 35, 38; plenary 82.

Middle East peace process

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1996/7], the Commission on Human Rights, stressing the importance of achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, emphasized that the achievement of such a peace was vital to the full implementation of human rights in the area. It called on the Centre for Human Rights to make available, on request, its programme of advisory services and technical assistance to the Palestinian Authority, and invited Governments to contribute to the programme.

Subcommission action. On 19 August [res. 1996/1], the Subcommission endorsed the achievements of the peace process in the Middle East and called on all parties to continue their efforts. It also expressed support for the active role that the United Nations was playing in the peace process. (For details of political developments in the Middle East, see PART ONE, Chapter VI.)

Rights of Palestinians

On 11 April [res. 1996/5], the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 28 to 1, with 23 abstentions, reaffirmed the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination without external interference and called on Israel to comply with its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, and to withdraw from the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, in accordance with UN resolutions. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit its resolution to Israel and all other Governments, to distribute it as widely as possible, and to make available to the Commission, prior to its 1997 session, information pertaining to its implementation by the Government of Israel.

Pursuant to a 1995 Commission request [YUN 1995, p. 735], the Secretary-General stated [E/CN.4/1996/26] in January that he had received no reply to his request to Israel for information on implementation of the Commission's 1995 resolution on the situation in occupied Palestine.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/82.

The right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Aware that the development of friendly relations among nations, based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, is among the purposes and principles of the United Nations, as defined in its Charter,

Recalling the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted at the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Noting the developments in the Middle East peace process, including the mutual recognition and the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements in Washington on 13 September 1993 by the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, and the Government of Israel, as well as the ensuing implementation agreements, in particular the interim agreement of 28 September 1995,

Affirming the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized borders,

1. Reaffirms the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination;
2. Expresses the hope that the Palestinian people will soon be exercising their right to self-determination in the current peace process;
3. Urges all States and the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system to continue to support and assist the Palestinian people in their quest for self-determination.

General Assembly resolution 51/82

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 159-3-12 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/618) by recorded vote (138-2-11), 18 November (meeting 42); 65-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.25); agenda item 109.

Abstaining: Argentina, Congo,* Estonia, Georgia, Latvia, Lithuania, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Norway, Republic of Moldova, Uzbekistan, Zaire.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Western Sahara

On 11 April [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/6)], the Commission on Human Rights, noting with concern the insufficient progress made towards the settlement plan for Western Sahara, called on the two parties concerned, Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Rio de Oro (POLISARIO), to work with the Secretary-General and the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) to implement the settlement plan in accordance with relevant Security Council resolutions. It took note of a Council decision to review the arrangements for the completion of the identification process requested in resolution 1017(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 255], and to consider any further measures that might need to be taken to ensure the prompt completion of the process and of all other aspects relevant to the fulfilment of the settlement plan.

(See also PART ONE, Chapter II.)

Mercenaries

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/138 [YUN 1995, p. 737], the Secretary-General, by a September note [A/51/392], transmitted a report prepared by Enrique Bernales Ballesteros (Peru), the Special Rapporteur on the question of the use of mercenaries. The Special Rapporteur described his activities and the current situation regarding the use of mercenaries. He stated that mercenary activities were not only continuing but were reported to be evolving and acquiring characteristics that made them more of a threat to the enjoyment of human rights and the right of peoples to self-determination.

Considering that mercenary activities had increased, had become diversified and were becoming more of a threat, the Special Rapporteur recommended that the General Assembly: reaffirm its condemnation of mercenary activities; suggest to States that they incorporate measures in their legislation to prohibit the use of their territory for the recruitment, training, assembly, transit, financing and use of mercenaries; appeal to States to ratify or accede to the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries [YUN 1989, p. 825, GA res. 44/34]; and reaffirm its recommendation regarding the convening of a meeting of experts on the subject. He also recommended that mercenary activities should be condemned, banned and characterized as illegal.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1997/24], the Special Rapporteur discussed his 1996 activities, including a visit to South Africa (20-30 October). He stated that mercenaries, whose activities were linked to apartheid, were no longer present. The South African authorities were studying ways to legally prohibit the presence of individual mercenaries and to regulate the provision of military assistance to foreign Governments by private service companies. In his conclusions and recommendations, the Special Rapporteur stated that the Commission on Human Rights and the Special Rapporteur should investigate more closely any mercenary implications of the international sale of military assistance and security, with a view to making proposals for a better legal classification of private companies that offered those services internationally.

As at 31 December, the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries [GA res. 44/34] had been ratified or acceded to by 11 States and had a total of 16 signatories. The Convention was to enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the twenty-second instrument of ratification or accession.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/83.

Use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/150 of 23 December 1994 and 50/138 of 21 December 1995,

Recalling also all of its relevant resolutions in which, inter alia, it condemned any State that permitted or tolerated the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations, especially those of developing countries, or of fighting against national liberation movements, and recalling further the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Organization of African Unity,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations concerning the strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples,

Alarmed and concerned about the danger which the activities of mercenaries constitute to peace and security in developing countries, particularly in Africa and in small States, where democratically elected Governments have been overthrown by mercenaries or through mercenary international criminal activities,

Deeply concerned about the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the negative effects on the polity and economies of affected countries resulting from mercenary aggression and criminal activities,

Convinced that it is necessary for Member States to ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, adopted by the General Assembly in 1989, and to develop and maintain international cooperation among States for the prevention, prosecution and punishment of mercenary activities,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination concerning the use of mercenaries and mercenary-related activities to topple sovereign Governments and to violate the human rights of peoples and impede the exercise of self-determination despite resolution 50/138;

2. Reaffirms that the use of mercenaries and their recruitment, financing and training are causes for grave concern to all States and violate the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Urges all States to take the necessary steps and to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to take necessary legislative measures to ensure that their territories and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries for the planning of activities designed to destabilize or overthrow the Government or threaten the territorial integrity and political unity of sovereign States or to promote secession or fight the national liberation movements struggling against colonial or other forms of alien domination or occupation;

4. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to consider taking necessary action to sign or to ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries;

5. Urges all States to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur in the fulfilment of his mandate;

6. Requests the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, as a matter of priority, to publicize the adverse effects of mercenary activities on the right to self-determination and, when requested where necessary, to render advisory services to States that are affected by the activities of mercenaries;

7. Requests the Special Rapporteur to report, with specific recommendations, his findings on the use of mercenaries to undermine the right of peoples to self-determination to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session.

Democratic processes

Establishment of a democratic society

Report of Secretary-General. At its 1996 session, the Commission on Human Rights considered a report [A/50/332 & Corr.1] of the Secretary-General on UN system support for the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies. It also had before it a note by the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/1996/49] describing action taken by the General Assembly, the Commission and the Subcommission on the subject of democracy and the establishment of a democratic society.

Subcommission action. As requested by the Subcommission in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 741], Osman El-Hajjé (Lebanon) in May submitted a working paper on democracy and the establishment of a democratic society [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/7]. The working paper presented possible elements for a study on the subject.

On 29 August [dec. 1996/117], the Subcommission decided to ask Mr. El-Hajjé to prepare an expanded working paper, to be presented in 1997, on ways to promote democracy; ensure economic, social, cultural and political rights through democracy; and overcome obstacles to democracy.

Freedom of speech

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a March report [E/CN.4/1996/39], the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Abid Hussain (India), described his activities and summarized the texts of communications he had sent to 43 States, pointing out that the adequacy of the protection of the right was, however, of concern in 103 States and territories.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that violations of the right to freedom of expression occurred in all parts of the world. He expressed concern about the continued intimidation, harassment and use of violence against writers, press professionals and other persons seeking to exercise that right. He also expressed concern over cases relating to the right to freedom of opinion and expression of women, and that private individuals regularly resorted to acts of violence, threats and intimidation against other private persons to settle religious or ideological disputes. The Special Rapporteur regretted the existence of sometimes prolonged crises in which violations of the right to freedom of opinion and expression were justified on the basis of outmoded notions of national security, manipulation by authoritarian regimes and the view expressed by some Governments that human rights were part of an alien culture not suited to being transposed to the countries they governed.

In separate addenda, the Special Rapporteur reported on his visits to the Republic of Korea (1995) [E/CN.4/1996/39/Add.1] and to Iran (1996) [E/CN.4/1996/39/Add.2].

Regarding the Republic of Korea, the Special Rapporteur stated that many measures had been taken by the Government to strengthen the protection and promotion of human rights in general. Still, he had been informed of a number of controversies that had arisen over the exercise of the right to freedom of opinion and expression as related to the safeguarding of the national security of the country. It was brought to his attention that prisoners who allegedly held particular political convictions were asked by prison authorities to renounce those convictions. Issues relating to the freedom of expression of detainees were also of concern, as were a number of problems concerning that right in the workplace. Performing artists were required to submit the text or recording of their performance, prior to its publication, to the Performance Ethics Committee.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government repeal the National Security Law and consider other means to protect its national security; cease the practice of requesting prisoners who allegedly held political opinions repugnant to the establishment to renounce their opinions; release unconditionally prisoners who were held for their exercise of the right to freedom of opinion and expression; facilitate legitimate trade union activities; continue its efforts to align its national law with the provisions relating to freedom of opinion and expression of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [YUN 1966, p. 423]; enhance the systematic application of international human rights law in the national legal system; bring its prison regime into accordance with established international principles on the administration of justice; and limit administrative interference with the right to freedom of expression.

As to the situation in Iran, the Special Rapporteur expressed concern at the extent of limitations on the right to freedom of opinion and expression, as well as on the interlinked right to freedom of assembly and association. Press professionals had been subjected to harassment and violence, prison sentences and corporal punishment. Among other things, the Special Rapporteur was informed that: certain bureaucratic elements had expressed their support for the use of violence and harassment; press and media professionals, academics and others had been summoned to report in person to government organs in connection with their exercise of the right to freedom of expression; it was prohibited by law to import, distribute, possess or use satellite antennae; State agencies exercised elaborate direct and indirect control on the press, the media and publications, and prior authorization was required to publish, bind and distribute books, newspapers, magazines and other forms of printed as well as audio and visual materials; and printed media regularly reported on the existence of censorship and self-censorship. With regard to film production, he said that scenarios, funding, production and distribution all required authorization by the Government.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government ensure the right to freedom of opinion and expression as enunciated in the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; repeal the law prohibiting the use of satellite antennae; limit legal and administrative regulation of and interference with the right to freedom of opinion and expression; substitute public legal procedure for administrative action; cease the practice of summoning persons to present themselves at government offices to instruct or warn them not to continue to seek to exercise their right to freedom of opinion and expression; take measures to prevent officials from encouraging or supporting private persons who resorted to illegal action against persons seeking to exercise the right; review cases of persons who were detained on charges or accusations emanating from their opinions or activities in seeking to exercise the right; review cases of prisoners who had been tried by courts of law whose competence had not been unequivocally established or who had been convicted in application of laws or regulations incompatible with the protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression under the 1966 International Covenant; continue and strengthen its cooperation with the Commission on Human Rights and relevant NGOs; and prevent any negative consequences for the effective enjoyment by women of the right that might arise from the implementation of gender-specific legislation.

The Special Rapporteur said that his report was an earnest attempt to assist Iran in its endeavour to ensure the freedom of opinion and expression of its citizens.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1997/31/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur described the situation in Turkey, based on his visit to the country in September 1996. He stated that in recent history the Government had taken steps aimed at strengthening the protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression. He noted, however, from consistent and credible reports, the death or torture of press professionals while in police custody; the subjection to threats and harassment of writers, journalists and human rights advocates and their persecution, in certain cases, for the expression of non-violent opinions; the use of disproportionate violence against journalists and protestors during demonstrations; the intimidation of human rights advocates and victims of and witnesses to alleged human rights violations; the regular occurrence of suspension of the media and seizure of newsprint; and the lack of precision of various national laws and rules of proof on the basis of which courts justified restrictions on the right to freedom of opinion and expression.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government amend legislation and adopt measures requiring the courts to explain more explicitly the motivation for any judgement that restricted the right to freedom of opinion and expression; annul convictions of persons sentenced to a fine or term of imprisonment for the peaceful expression of their opinions; justify in court proceedings the banning of books, the seizure of newsprint, the closure of media outlets and the punishment of persons held responsible for threatening national security through the exercise of their right to freedom of opinion and expression; demonstrate the maximum possible degree of openness in its policies aimed at protecting the right; and consider promoting a national debate on freedom of expression, underlining its relevance to all people in the country.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/53], the Commission on Human Rights expressed its concern at the extensive occurrence of detention of, as well as discrimination, threats and acts of violence and harassment against, persons who exercised the right to freedom of opinion and expression and the intrinsically linked rights to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, of peaceful assembly and freedom of association and the right to take part in the conduct of public affairs.

The Commission decided to renew the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the subject for a three-year period, which the Economic and Social Council approved on 23 July by decision 1996/266. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to report in 1997 and asked the Secretary-General to consider ways of publicizing the Special Rapporteur's work.

Administration of justice

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/32], the Commission on Human Rights, reaffirming the importance of the full implementation of all relevant United Nations standards on human rights in the administration of justice, called on Member States to spare no effort in providing for effective legislative and other mechanisms and procedures, as well as adequate resources, to ensure full implementation of those standards. It appealed to Governments to include in their national development plans the administration of justice as an integral part of the development process and to allocate adequate resources for the provision of legal-aid services. The Commission asked Governments to provide training in human rights and the administration of justice, including juvenile justice, to judges, lawyers, prosecutors, social workers and other professionals, including police and immigration officers, and called on special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups of the Commission to continue to give special attention to the effective protection of human rights in the administration of justice and to provide specific recommendations, including proposals for concrete measures of advisory services and technical assistance. The High Commissioner for Human Rights was urged to consider favourably requests by States for assistance in the administration of justice and to strengthen system-wide coordination in that field, particularly between the UN human rights programme of advisory services and technical assistance and the technical cooperation and advisory services of the UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme (see PART THREE, Chapter IX).

Working Group activities. The five-member sessional Working Group on the administration of justice and the question of compensation held three meetings in 1996, on 7, 9 and 13 August in Geneva [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/16]. The Subcommis-sion had decided to establish the Working Group on 6 August [dec. 1996/103].

The Working Group considered a revised set of basic principles and guidelines on the right to reparation for victims of gross violations of human rights and humanitarian law [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/17]. On 29 August [res. 1996/28], the Subcommission decided to transmit the revised principles and guidelines to the Commission on Human Rights, together with the comments of the Working Group and the comments of the Subcommission during its 1996 session. It asked the former Special Rapporteur on the subject to prepare a note, taking into account the comments of the Group and the Subcommission, to facilitate the Commission's examination of the revised principles and guidelines.

The Group also considered a preliminary draft international convention on the prevention and punishment of enforced disappearances, abolition of the death penalty, habeas corpus as a non-derogable right and as one of the requirements for the right to a fair trial, and juvenile justice. It postponed to its 1997 session consideration of the item concerning proposals for the effective implementation of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide [GA res. 260 A (III)].

Compensation for victims

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1995 Commission request [YUN 1995, p. 744], the Secretary-General submitted a report with later addenda [E/CN.4/1996/29 & Add.1-3] describing legislation adopted or planned by States relating to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of grave violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Secretary-General summarized replies received from 17 States.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/35], the Commission on Human Rights called on the international community to give increased attention to the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of grave violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It encouraged the Subcommission to continue to give consideration to the proposed basic principles and guidelines (see above). The Commission asked States that had not done so to provide information to the Secretary-General on the legislation adopted or in the process of being adopted relating to the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of grave violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1997.

Rule of law

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/56], the Commission on Human Rights, affirming that the High Commissioner, with the assistance of the Centre for Human Rights, remained the focal point for coordinating system-wide attention for human rights, democracy and the rule of law, asked him to continue to explore the possibility of obtaining from all relevant UN institutions, including financial institutions, technical and financial means to strengthen the Centre's capacity to provide assistance to national projects aiming at the realization of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law. It asked the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly in 1996 on the results of any contacts established by the High Commissioner. The Commission's request to the Secretary-General was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1996/267 of 23 July.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1995 General Assembly request [YUN1995, p. 744], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/51/555] in which he outlined support offered by the Centre for Human Rights to States to strengthen the rule of law. Under the programme of advisory services and technical cooperation in the field of human rights, States could avail themselves of assistance in the areas of constitution-making; the legal framework under the constitution, including penal law and the administration of justice, which protected human rights and democracy; electoral assistance; and institution-building and training.

The High Commissioner had initiated a series of consultations and contacts with other partners in the UN system to enhance inter-agency cooperation and coordination, including meetings with executive heads of UN agencies and programmes on matters of policy and coordination, meetings and working-level contacts with agencies and programmes on thematic issues and field-level cooperation. A seminar of the World Bank and the Centre (Washington, D.C., 24-25 July) discussed possible cooperation between the two institutions. The High Commissioner and the World Bank President stressed the need for close contacts and mutual support in envisaging and implementing programmes for strengthening the rule of law. In addition, the High Commissioner had explored possibilities for obtaining from relevant UN agencies and financial institutions technical and financial assistance to support efforts to promote human rights and the rule of law.

The Secretary-General recommended the convening by the High Commissioner of a high-level meeting of UN agencies and programmes in-involved in the promotion of human rights and of sustainable development, in order to analyse means, modalities, financing and allocation of responsibilities to implement a comprehensive UN programme of assistance for the rule of law; developing a structural framework to facilitate ongoing cooperation between UN agencies and programmes involved in the promotion of human rights and of sustainable development, aimed at strengthening the rule of law; and strengthening the technical cooperation programme of the Centre.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/96.

Strengthening of the rule of law

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, by adopting the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Member States have pledged themselves to achieve, in cooperation with the United Nations, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Firmly convinced that the rule of law is an essential factor in the protection of human rights, as stressed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and should continue to attract the attention of the international community,

Convinced that through their own national legal and judicial systems States must provide appropriate civil, criminal and administrative remedies for violations of human rights,

Recognizing the importance of the role that can be played by the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat in supporting national efforts to strengthen the institutions of the rule of law,

Bearing in mind that, in its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, the General Assembly entrusted the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with, inter alia, providing through the Centre and other appropriate institutions advisory services and technical and financial assistance in the field of human rights, enhancing international cooperation for the promotion and protection of all human rights and coordinating human rights activities throughout the United Nations system,

Recalling the recommendation of the World Conference on Human Rights that a comprehensive programme be established within the United Nations and under the coordination of the Centre with a view to helping States in the task of building and strengthening adequate national structures that have a direct impact on the overall observance of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law,

Recognizing that the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights remains the focal point for coordinating system-wide attention for human rights, democracy and the rule of law,

Recalling its resolution 50/179 of 22 December 1995, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/56 of 19 April 1996,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Takes note with interest of the proposals contained in the report of the Secretary-General for strengthening the programme of advisory services and technical assistance of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat in order to comply fully with the recommendations of the World Conference on Human Rights concerning assistance to States in strengthening their institutions which uphold the rule of law;

3. Praises the efforts made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Centre to accomplish their ever-increasing tasks with the limited financial and personnel resources at their disposal;

4. Expresses its deep concern at the scarcity of means at the disposal of the Centre for the fulfilment of its tasks;

5. Notes that the programme of advisory services and technical assistance does not have assistance funds sufficient to provide any substantial financial assistance to national projects that have a direct impact on the realization of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law in countries that are committed to those ends but that face economic hardship;

6. Welcomes the consultations and contacts initiated by the High Commissioner with other relevant bodies and programmes of the United Nations system aiming at the enhancement of inter-agency coordination and cooperation in providing assistance for the strengthening of the rule of law;

7. Encourages the High Commissioner to pursue these consultations, taking into account the need to explore new synergies with other organs and agencies of the United Nations system with a view to obtaining increased financial assistance for human rights and the rule of law;

8. Also encourages the High Commissioner to continue to explore the possibility of further contact with and support of financial institutions, acting within their mandates, with a view to obtaining technical and financial means to strengthen the capacity of the Centre to provide assistance to national projects aiming at the realization of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law;

9. Requests the High Commissioner to accord high priority to the technical cooperation activities undertaken by the Centre with regard to the rule of law;

10. Takes note with appreciation of the proposal of the High Commissioner to convene a high-level meeting of relevant United Nations agencies and programmes, in order to analyse means, modalities, financing and allocation of responsibilities for the implementation of a comprehensive United Nations programme of assistance for the rule of law, taking into account the experience of the technical cooperation programme of the Centre;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the results of the contacts established in accordance with the present resolution, as well as on any other developments pertaining to the implementation of the above-mentioned recommendation of the World Conference on Human Rights.

General Assembly resolution 51/96

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 26 November (meeting 53); 63-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.52); agenda item 110 (b). Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-53; plenary 82.

State of siege or emergency

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/36], the Commission on Human Rights, endorsing a 1995 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1995, p. 749], recommended a draft text for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/21.

Question of human rights and states of emergency

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/36 of 19 April 1996 and resolution 1995/33 of 24 August 1995 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

1. Approves the request of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on human rights and states of emergency, Mr. Leandro Despouy, to fulfil his mandate, notably relating to the updating of the lists of States that have proclaimed, extended or terminated a state of emergency, the submission of conclusions and recommendations concerning non-derogable rights in states or situations of emergency, and the continuation of his consultations on the establishment of a database on states of emergency and related human rights questions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with the necessary human and material resources to fulfil his mandate.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/21

23 July 1996 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1996/23); agenda item 5 (d). Meeting numbers. ESC 44, 46.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In June, the Special Rapporteur on the question of human rights and states of emergency, Leandro Despouy (Argentina), submitted his ninth annual report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/19 & Corr.1], containing information on 87 States or territories which, since 1 January 1985, had proclaimed, extended or terminated a state of emergency. In a December addendum [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/19/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur updated his report, adding three States or territories in which measures had been taken that constituted the proclamation, introduction, extension, maintenance or termination of emergency regimes in various forms.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/30], the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur to update the list of States that had proclaimed, extended or terminated a state of emergency for its consideration in 1997, and to submit final conclusions on the protection of human rights during states of emergency, together with specific recommendations as to how the question should be dealt with in future.

Humanitarian standards

Reports of Secretary-General. The Commission on Human Rights had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/1996/80 & Add.1,2] summarizing comments on the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by a group of experts (Turku, Finland, December 1990) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1991/55], received from Governments, UN specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

Commission action. On 11 April [dec. 1996/106], the Commission on Human Rights, noting a 1995 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1995, p. 759] and a 1995 Commission decision [YUN 1995, p. 749], decided not to forward to the Economic and Social Council the Subcommission's draft decision authorizing a study on the implications for human rights of UN action, including humanitarian assistance, in addressing international humanitarian problems and in the promotion and protection of human rights.

On 19 April [res. 1996/26], the Commission invited all States to consider reviewing their national legislation pertaining to situations of public emergency with a view to ensuring that it met the requirements of the rule of law and that it did not discriminate on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion or social origin. The Commission welcomed an offer made by Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden to organize, in cooperation with the International Committee of the Red Cross, a workshop to which governmental and non-governmental experts from all regions would be invited to consider the issue. The Secretary-General was asked to transmit the Commission's resolution to Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their comments for submission in 1997.

Detention

Arbitrary detention

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/28], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention to: continue to seek and gather information from Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as from the individuals concerned, their families or their legal representatives; consider the distinction between detention and imprisonment and to submit conclusions and recommendations thereon (see below); apply the treaties relevant to the case under consideration only to the States that were parties to them; and report in 1997. The Commission expressed concern that most cases of arbitrary deprivation of liberty were motivated by denial of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, and recalled the need to pay attention to cases of arbitrary detention motivated by violation of other human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Commission noted with concern that, according to the Working Group, the practice of arbitrary detention was facilitated and aggravated by factors such as abuse of states of emergency, exercise of the powers specific to states of emergency without a formal declaration, non-observance of the principle of proportionality between the gravity of the measures taken and the situation concerned, too vague a definition of offences against State security and the existence of special or emergency jurisdictions. The Secretary-General and the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur responsible for studying the question of human rights and states of emergency were asked to extend their assistance to Governments that wished to receive it, as well as to special rapporteurs and working groups. The Secretary-General was further asked to provide the Working Group with all the assistance it needed.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Arbitrary Detention held its fifteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth sessions in Geneva in 1996 (15-20 May, 16-20 September, 17-27 November) [E/CN.4/1997/4]. During the year, the five-member Working Group transmitted 30 communications concerning 205 new cases of alleged arbitrary detention to 24 Governments, of which 12 had provided information. The Group noted that of the 205 individual cases, 10 were based on information communicated by members of the families or relatives of the detained persons, 91 on information communicated by local or regional NGOs, and 104 on information provided by NGOs in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council. As to urgent appeals, the Group transmitted 75 such communications to 35 Governments and to the Palestinian Authority, to which 19 of the Governments and the Palestinian Authority replied. A description of the cases transmitted, the contents of the Governments' replies and decisions adopted in November and December 1995 and in May and September 1996 were contained in a separate addendum to the Group's report [E/CN.4/1997/4/Add.1].

Regarding the Commission's request to consider the distinction between detention and imprisonment, the Working Group examined the interpretation of the term detention in relation to the scope of the Group's mandate, analysed positions adopted by the Commission and addressed the implications of limiting the Group's mandate to pre-trial detention only. The Group concluded: that its 1991 mandate [YUN 1991, p. 557] covered both administrative and judicial detentions and, among the latter, those prior to, during and after trial; that a 1988 General Assembly resolution [YUN 1988, p. 510] had sought to make a terminological distinction between detention and imprisonment only as an aid to construction, solely for the purposes of the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment contained therein; and that the Commission had accepted that approach for the past five years. The Group recommended that the Commission renew the mandate assigned to it in 1991, so that it might continue to consider any alleged arbitrary deprivation of liberty, regardless of whether or not it followed a conviction.

In 1996, the Group carried out missions to Nepal (22-26 April) [E/CN.4/1997/4/Add.2], Bhutan (29 April-6 May) [E/CN.4/1997/4/Add.3] and China (14-21 July).

At both the constitutional and the legislative levels, the Group reported, Nepal had gradually established a system governed by the rule of law which was among the most advanced of the region. However, the implementation of the legislation was problematic and slow, because of the low standard of living of a large part of the population and because of the weight of previous practices and attitudes. The main difficulties identified by the Working Group were related to arrests and custody; the infrequency of free legal aid and assistance of an officially appointed lawyer; ill-treatment during investigation; conditions of application of the Public Offence Act; habeas corpus and states of emergency; military courts; forensic investigations; overcrowding in prisons for procedural reasons; standardization of the presentation and keeping of records in places of detention; and legislation concerning aliens. The Group recommended to Nepal measures to reduce overcrowding in prisons and to monitor the lawfulness of detention, ensure the right to a defence, prosecute those guilty of ill-treatment and torture, reform emergency legislation and promote human rights.

The Working Group's objective in Bhutan was to ensure the implementation of recommendations made during its 1994 visit [YUN 1994, p. 1021], which had been requested by the Bhutanese authorities in order to draw up an inventory of existing problems in the administration of justice and to make recommendations thereon. The Group concluded that its recommendations had generally been implemented and almost all the cases of detention considered during its 1994 visit to be irregular or arbitrary had been rectified. Recommendations to Bhutan following the 1996 visit were to adopt as early as possible a draft law reforming the Code of Criminal Procedure; implement the technical cooperation programme in the field of the administration of justice that was agreed upon by Bhutan and the Centre for Human Rights, giving high priority to training judges and Jabmis (substitute lawyers), whose function was insufficiently known to the public; and appoint Jabmis to assist persons who lacked financial means.

The Group's 1996 visit to China was preparatory to its projected 1997 visit. The formal confirmation of the 1997 visit was still pending. In China, the Group held talks with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and professional groups, including the National Association of Lawyers and the China Society for Human Rights Studies. It visited prisons and centres for re-education through labour. The Group concluded that it was very important that China undertake the modernization of its legislative system.

Juvenile detention

Report of Secretary-General. In January, the Secretary-General reported [E/CN.4/1996/31 & Add.1] on the promotion and protection of all rights of the child and juveniles in the administration of justice, providing replies received from Governments, UN human rights treaty bodies, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/32], the Commission on Human Rights called on States to give high priority to the promotion and protection of all rights of the child and juveniles in the administration of justice. It urged them to take into account in their national legislation, and to disseminate widely, the 1985 United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules) [GA res. 40/33], the 1990 United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines) [GA res. 45/112], and the 1990 United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty [GA res. 45/113]. States were also urged to take steps to ensure compliance with the principle that depriving children and juveniles of their liberty should be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, in particular before trial, and to ensure that if they were arrested, detained or imprisoned, children and juveniles were separated from adults. The Commission recommended that States ensure that all structures, procedures and programmes in the administration of justice with regard to child offenders promoted assistance to allow children to take responsibility for their actions and to encourage reparation, mediation and restitution, especially for the direct victim of the crime.

The High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to continue to pay special attention to the subject of juvenile justice and, in close cooperation with the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the UN Secretariat, develop strategies to ensure effective coordination of juvenile justice technical-cooperation programmes. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1997.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1996/13, asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to pay attention to the subject of juvenile justice and, in close cooperation with the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the Secretariat, UNICEF and CRC, develop strategies to ensure effective coordination of juvenile justice technical-assistance programmes.

The Secretary-General was asked to organize, in cooperation with the Government of Austria, a meeting of an expert group on the elaboration of a programme of action to promote the effective use and application of international standards and norms in juvenile justice (see PART THREE, Chapter IX).

Detained UN staff members

Report of Secretary-General. In February, the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.4/1996/32] updating developments pertaining to the detention of international civil servants and their families. He stated that, over the past two years, there had been a decrease in the number of staff members arrested or detained; however, that trend had been reversed by the situation in Rwanda (see PART ONE, Chapter II). Annexed to the report were a consolidated list of staff members under arrest and detention or missing and a list of the status of signatures and ratifications of the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel [GA res. 49/59] (see PART FOUR, Chapter III).

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/29], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to request the UN organs concerned to submit to him their views and comments on the recommendations contained in a 1992 report [YUN 1992, p. 739] of the Special Rapporteur on the protection of the human rights of UN staff members, and to submit a report evaluating the measures proposed for the implementation of those recommendations. It also asked him to: continue his efforts to ensure that the human rights, privileges and immunities of UN staff members, experts and their families were fully respected and to seek redress and compensation for the damage caused to them; prepare a document containing the relevant principles of protection found in the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel for use as guidelines in bilateral negotiations of headquarters agreements and mission agreements with concerned Governments; and report in 1997 on the status of the Convention, on the situation of UN staff members, experts and their families detained, imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will, on cases that had been successfully settled since the presentation of his last report, and on the implementation of its current resolution.

The Commission appealed to Member States to respect and ensure respect for the rights of staff members and others acting under United Nations authority, and their families. Regarding detained staff, it urged States to provide adequate and prompt information concerning their arrest or detention; grant immediate access to detainees by representatives of international organizations; allow independent medical teams to investigate the health of detained staff members, experts and their families and afford them medical assistance; allow representatives of international organizations to attend hearings; and ensure the speedy release of detained UN staff members, experts and members of their families.

Impunity

As requested by the Subcommission in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 745], the Special Rapporteur on the question of the impunity of perpetrators of violations of human rights (civil and political), Louis Joinet (France), submitted his final report in June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/18]. He presented a set of principles intended to strengthen action to combat impunity, which rested on three fundamental rights of victims: the right to know, the right to justice and the right to reparation. Those rights comprised three of the five parts of the set of principles, and were the main substance of the text. The other two parts included a preamble and definitions essential for the interpretation of the principles. The Special Rapporteur proposed that the Subcommission transmit the report to the Commission, with comments for submission to the Economic and Social Council and to the General Assembly. Annexed to the report was a synoptic table of the set of principles for the protection and promotion of human rights through action to combat impunity, as well as the set of principles itself.

On 29 August [dec. 1996/119], the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur to submit in 1997 a revised version of the set of principles for the protection and promotion of human rights through action to combat impunity.

In July, the Special Rapporteur on the question of the impunity of perpetrators of human rights violations (economic, social and cultural), El Hadji Guissé, submitted his second interim report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/15]. The report focused on recent violations of economic, social and cultural rights and their consequences, and the mechanism of and events leading to such violations. It also dealt with the campaign against impunity for violations of those rights, encompassing both preventive action, which included political, economic, legislative and administrative measures, and repressive and/or remedial action that aimed at penalizing violations that had already been committed.

The Special Rapporteur suggested cancelling all or part of the debt and debt servicing of the States that were colonized or subjected to slavery as compensation for the injury suffered; declaring violations of economic, social and cultural rights to be international crimes; drawing up an optional protocol on economic, social and cultural rights requiring States to report on measures adopted or planned for a genuine implementation and improved protection of those rights; proposing more sophisticated standards to States to combat impunity in cases of corruption, misappropriation of public or private funds, abuse of trust by public officials, and tax and customs fraud, and giving greater consideration to the harm suffered by victims; and establishing and improving machinery for monitoring the management of public affairs. He also suggested the holding of a high-level international meeting on the impunity of perpetrators of violations of economic, social and cultural rights.

On 29 August [res. 1996/24], the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur to submit his final report in 1997. The Secretary-General was asked to provide any assistance required by the Special Rapporteur.

Independence of the judicial system

Report of Special Rapporteur. In March, the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, Dato'Param Cumaraswamy (Malaysia), submitted his second report [E/CN.4/1996/37], in which he discussed his mandate, methods of work and 1995 activities.

The Special Rapporteur reviewed various issues which he considered important for the development of an independent judiciary. He concluded that the use of "faceless" judges to combat terrorism in Colombia and Peru violated the principle of the independence of the judiciary, restricted the defendant's right of due process, and violated the right to a fair trial in a systematic way; welcomed the proposal to establish an International Criminal Court, and the 1995 adoption by a group of experts in international law of the Johannesburg Principles on National Security, Freedom of Expression and Access to Information; and expressed concern about the relationship between the media and the judiciary. He observed that the 1995 adoption of the Beijing Statement of Principles of the Independence of the Judiciary in the LAWASIA (Law Association of Asia and the Pacific) Region would be an invaluable supplement to existing standards. Other subjects dealt with in the report were mechanisms for the appointment of judges; conflicts between the legal profession and the judiciary; the commercialization of the legal profession; and the 1995 Cairo Declaration adopted at the Third Conference of Francophone Ministers of Justice. The Special Rapporteur provided an analysis of information received concerning attacks on the judiciary, a summary of allegations transmitted to Governments, information received from Governments in response to his initial communications and in response to the allegations transmitted, as well as follow-up with authorities and sources, and specific comments, conclusions and observations. He summarized his communications with international organizations, including the World Bank, and with the Council of Europe.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the independence of judges and lawyers remained a serious concern. Nonetheless, he observed that currently there was greater awareness of the importance of judicial independence for maintaining the rule of law and protecting human rights. Judicial independence was threatened not only by the executive arms of Governments and legislatures, but by organized crime, powerful businessmen, corporate giants and multinational corporations. The Special Rapporteur stated that he intended to observe certain specific trials of particular interest to his mandate, either personally or through a representative appointed by him. He called on Governments to respond to his interventions promptly, and, in cases where missions were sought, he called on them to respond without delay. In the absence of a monitoring mechanism, the Special Rapporteur sought the cooperation of NGOs and other organizations to provide him with timely information on any attacks on the independence of judges and lawyers in their respective countries or neighbouring countries.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/34], the Commission on Human Rights invited the High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to provide technical assistance to train judges and lawyers and to assist the Special Rapporteur in developing a manual on the training of judges and lawyers in human rights. It asked the Special Rapporteur to report in 1997 and the Secretary-General to assist him.

Right to a fair trial

On 29 August [res. 1996/29], the Subcommission, recalling a 1994 resolution [YUN 1994, p. 1029] in which it expressed its appreciation to Special Rapporteurs Stanislav Chernichenko (Russian Federation) and William Treat (United States) for their final report on the right to a fair trial and a remedy, and approved their proposal to compile the entire study so that it could be published in one volume in the UN Human Rights Study Series, asked Mr. Chernichenko and David Weissbrodt (United States), having recognized the completion of Mr. Treat's term as a Subcommission member, to compile and update the study so that it could be published in that series in all official UN languages.

Capital punishment

In 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 747], the Secretary-General submitted his fifth quinquennial report on capital punishment, containing information on the implementation of safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty. A 1996 report [E/CN.15/1996/19] covered 12 additional replies from Governments. On 23 July, in resolution 1996/15, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report (see PART THREE, Chapter IX).

Other issues

Terrorism

Report of Secretary-General. By a February note [E/CN.4/1996/43], the Secretary-General presented views concerning terrorism submitted by Governments and regional and intergovernmental organizations. As requested by the General Assembly in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1112], the views of Governments on the establishment of a UN voluntary fund for victims of terrorism were also presented.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/47], the Commission on Human Rights condemned all acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, as well as incitement to ethnic hatred, violence and terrorism. Noting that a 1994 Subcommission decision [YUN 1994, p. 1112] concerning the preparation of a working paper on human rights and terrorism had not yet been implemented, it called on the Subcommission to report on the matter in 1997. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to collect information on terrorism and to make it available for consideration by special rapporteurs and working groups concerned and to the Commission.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/20], the Subcommission condemned all acts, methods and practices of terrorism, regardless of their motivation, in all forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomever committed. It called on Governments to take measures to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism, and urged the international community to enhance cooperation at the national, regional and international levels. The Subcommission decided to entrust Kallopi K. Koufa (Greece) with the task of preparing a working paper on terrorism and human rights, for submission in 1997.

Hostage-taking

On 23 April [res. 1996/62], the Commission on Human Rights, emphasizing that the taking of hostages constituted a serious obstacle to the full enjoyment of all human rights and was, under any circumstances, unjustifiable, demanded that all hostages be released immediately and without any preconditions. It called on States to take all measures necessary to prevent, combat and punish acts of hostage-taking, and asked relevant NGOs to bear in mind, where appropriate, the problem of hostage-taking in their deliberations. All thematic special rapporteurs and working groups were urged to address, as appropriate, the consequences of hostage-taking in their forthcoming reports to the Commission.

Extra-legal executions

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Commission on Human Rights had before it in 1996 a report [E/CN.4/1996/4] submitted by its Special Rapporteur on summary or arbitrary executions, Bacre Waly Ndiaye (Senegal), updating his activities since the submission of his 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 750]. He discussed his mandate and activities undertaken to promote it, and described situations where urgent appeals and other communications alleging violations of the right to life had been transmitted to Governments, together with replies or observations received from them. Issues of special concern to the Special Rapporteur related to violations of the right to life of women; violations of the right to life of persons under 18 years of age; massive displacement of populations; violations of the right to life against persons exercising their right to freedom of opinion and expression; the protection of human rights in the administration of justice; violations of the right to life of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities; violations of the right to life of staff members of the United Nations and specialized agencies; violation of the right to life and terrorism; violations of the right to life committed by civil defence forces; deaths caused by land-mines; cooperation with the High Commissioner for Human Rights; and safeguards and guarantees to protect the right to life.

The Special Rapporteur's conclusions and recommendations dealt with capital punishment and the desirability of the abolition of the death penalty; impunity, including legislation exempting perpetrators of human rights abuses from prosecution and failure to pursue or conclude investigations; the rights of victims; and allegations received and acted upon by the Special Rapporteur, including death threats, deaths in custody, deaths due to abuse of power by law enforcement officials, violations of the right to life by paramilitary groups, violations of the right to life in armed conflict and expulsion of persons to countries where their lives might be at risk.

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/74], the Commission on Human Rights, strongly condemning all extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, demanded that Governments ensure that those practices were ended and that they should take action to combat and eliminate them. It asked the Special Rapporteur to continue examining situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary detention and to report annually; respond to information he received; enhance his dialogue with Governments and follow up on his recommendations after country visits; continue to pay special attention to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions of children and women and to allegations concerning the right to life; pay special attention to executions where the victims were carrying out peaceful activities in defence of human rights and fundamental freedoms; continue monitoring the implementation of existing international standards on safeguards and restrictions relating to the imposition of capital punishment; and apply a gender perspective in his work.

The Secretary-General was asked to inform the Commission on the implementation of a 1995 Economic and Social Council decision [YUN 1995, p. 750]; to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 9, 14 and 15 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [YUN 1966, p. 423] appeared not to be respected; and to continue to ensure that personnel specialized in human rights and humanitarian law issues formed part of UN missions, where appropriate, in order to deal with serious human rights violations, such as extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1996. The Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur was approved by the Council by decision 1996/279 of 24 July.

Report of Special Rapporteur. By an October note [A/51/457], the Secretary-General transmitted an interim report of the Special Rapporteur covering the period from 20 July 1992 to 1 September 1996, the time during which the current Special Rapporteur had been in office. The Special Rapporteur offered an interpretation of his mandate and the legal framework within which it had been implemented and covered his methods of work and activities. He discussed various situations involving violations of the right to life and presented an account of issues requiring his special attention.

The Special Rapporteur's recommendations related to the death penalty, death threats, death in custody, excessive use of force by law enforcement officials, violations of the right to life during armed conflict, genocide, imminent expulsion of persons to countries where their lives were in danger, impunity and the rights of victims.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/92.

Extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions

The General Assembly,

Considering that the subject of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions has been discussed in the United Nations for many years within the framework of discussions on human rights based on the general recognition of the right to life of every person as guaranteed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and a large number of other international human rights instruments, that extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions can be fought effectively only through a genuine will on the part of Governments to enforce the safeguards and guarantees for the protection of the right to life of every person, that declarations of commitment to the protection of the right to life by Governments are only effective if they are translated into practice and respected by all and that, if the aim is protection of the right to life, the emphasis must be on prevention of all forms of violations of this fundamental right,

1. Strongly condemns once again all the extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions that continue to take place throughout the world;

2. Demands that all Governments ensure that the practice of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions be brought to an end and that they take effective action to combat and eliminate the phenomenon in all its forms;

3. Reiterates the obligation of all Governments to conduct exhaustive and impartial investigations into all suspected cases of extrajudicial, arbitrary or summary executions, to identify and bring to justice those responsible, to grant adequate compensation to the victims or their families and to adopt all necessary measures to prevent the recurrence of such executions;

4. Reiterates also that the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions needs to be able to respond effectively to credible and reliable information that comes before him, and invites him to continue to seek the views and comments of all concerned, including Member States, in the elaboration of his report;

5. Reaffirms Economic and Social Council decision 1995/284 of 25 July 1995, in which the Council approved the decision of the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1995/73 of 8 March 1995 to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions for a three-year period, and recommends that the Commission at its fifty-fourth session continue his mandate;

6. Takes note of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur;

7. Notes the important role the Special Rapporteur has played towards the elimination of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions;

8. Notes that the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1996/74, requested the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate:

(a) To continue to examine situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and to submit his findings, together with conclusions and recommendations, to the Commission, as well as such other reports as the Special Rapporteur deems necessary in order to keep the Commission informed about such serious situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions that warrant its immediate attention;

(b) To respond effectively to information that comes before him, in particular when an extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary execution is imminent or threatened, or when such an execution has occurred;

(c) To enhance further his dialogue with Governments, as well as to follow up on recommendations made in reports after visits to particular countries;

(d) To continue to pay special attention to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions of children and women and to allegations concerning violations of the right to life in the context of violence against participants in demonstrations and other peaceful public manifestations or against persons belonging to minorities;

(e) To pay special attention to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions where the victims are individuals who are carrying out peaceful activities in the defence of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(f) To continue monitoring the implementation of existing international standards on safeguards and restrictions relating to the imposition of capital punishment, bearing in mind the comments made by the Human Rights Committee in its interpretation of article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as the Second Optional Protocol thereto;

(g) To apply a gender perspective in his work;

9. Strongly urges all Governments to respond to the communications transmitted to them by the Special Rapporteur, and urges them and all others concerned to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur so that he may carry out his mandate effectively, including, where appropriate, by issuing invitations to the Special Rapporteur when he so requests;

10. Encourages Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to organize training programmes and to support projects with a view to training or educating military forces, law enforcement officers and government officials, as well as members of the United Nations peacekeeping or observer missions, in human rights and humanitarian law issues connected with their work, and appeals to the international community to support endeavours to that end;

11. Urges the Special Rapporteur to continue to draw to the attention of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights such situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions as are of particularly serious concern to him or where early action might prevent further deterioration;

12. Welcomes the cooperation established between the Special Rapporteur and other United Nations mechanisms and procedures in the field of human rights, as well as with medical and forensic experts, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue efforts in this regard;

13. Encourages the Governments of all States in which the death penalty has not been abolished to comply with their obligations under the relevant provisions of international human rights instruments, taking into account the safeguards and guarantees referred to in Economic and Social Council resolutions 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and 1989/64 of 24 May 1989;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Commission on Human Rights of the implementation of Economic and Social Council decision 1995/284, keeping in mind the comments on this matter by the Special Rapporteur in his report, in order to enable him to carry out his mandate effectively, including through country visits;

15. Again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 9, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights appears not to have been respected;

16. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session an interim report on the situation worldwide in regard to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and his recommendations for more effective action to combat that phenomenon.

General Assembly resolution 51/92

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 26 November (meeting 53); 50-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.46), orally revised; agenda item 110 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-53; plenary 82.

Freedom of movement

On 6 August [dec. 1996/102], the Subcommission decided to add to its agenda a new sub-item entitled "The right to leave any country, including one's own, and to return to one's own country".

On 22 August [dec. 1996/109], the Subcommission decided to entrust Volodymyr Boutkevitch (Ukraine) with preparing a working paper on the right to freedom of movement and related issues for submission in 1997.

Mass exoduses

Report of Secretary-General. In a February report [E/CN.4/1996/42], the Secretary-General provided information and views on solutions that Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations had found to be effective in the area of mass exoduses. He also presented a compilation of information and recommendations from human rights mechanisms on problems resulting in mass exoduses of populations or impeding their voluntary return home, and his views on those matters.

The Secretary-General noted that the problem of mass exoduses, both internal and external, had grown over the last few years to alarming dimensions. In the overwhelming majority of cases, they were caused by human rights violations and abuses, including in the context of armed conflict. They were also frequently prompted by deliberate measures to remove a population from its area of origin. The grave human rights violations and humanitarian issues called for substantially increased levels of international cooperation and solidarity that implied action at the level of Governments, the Commission on Human Rights, human rights bodies and mechanisms, UN specialized agencies and the non-governmental community. Human rights elements must be further integrated into the work of relief agencies, as well as in peacekeeping operations, the Secretary-General said. He emphasized the importance of specific information and recommendations in the areas of prevention, protection and solutions in cases of mass exoduses. He stressed the need for an early warning focus and for particular attention to be paid to vulnerable groups, including women, children and the elderly. It was most fundamental, he said, to call on all States to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms and to refrain from denying them to individuals in their population because of nationality, ethnicity, race, religion or language.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/51], the Commission on Human Rights, strongly deploring ethnic and other forms of intolerance as one of the major causes of migratory movements, urged States to ensure respect for human rights. It invited special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups of the Commission and UN human rights treaty bodies, acting within their mandates, to seek information on problems resulting in mass exoduses of populations or impeding their voluntary return home, and to include such information, together with recommendations thereon, in their reports, and to bring that information to the attention of the High Commissioner for Human Rights. All UN bodies, the specialized agencies and governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations were asked to cooperate with all Commission mechanisms and to provide them with information on human rights situations creating or affecting refugees and displaced persons. The Commission asked the High Commissioner to pay attention to situations which caused or threatened to cause mass exoduses and to address them effectively through emergency preparedness and response mechanisms. The High Commissioner was also asked to invite Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide information and to prepare for the Commission's 1997 session an update of the Secretary-General's report (see above). Welcoming the contributions of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees to the deliberations of international human rights bodies and mechanisms, the Commission invited her to address the Commission in 1997 (see also PART THREE, Chapter XII).

Internally displaced persons

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/52], the Commission on Human Rights, emphasizing the need for better implementation of existing international law applicable to internally displaced persons, asked the Secretary-General to publish the compilation and analysis of legal norms (see below) [E/CN.4/1996/52/Add.2] prepared by his representative and to disseminate it widely. It called on the representative to continue, on the basis of his compilation and analysis, to develop an appropriate framework for the protection of internally displaced persons and to report thereon in 1997. Governments were called on to continue to facilitate the activities of the Secretary-General's representative and encouraged to consider inviting him to visit their countries to study and analyse the issues involved.

The Commission encouraged the Secretary-General's representative and the High Commissioner for Human Rights, as well as the High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA), the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and all other relevant humanitarian assistance and development organizations to strengthen their cooperation further. It called on those organizations and agencies to develop, in cooperation with the Secretary-General's representative, a more comprehensive and coherent system of data collection on the situation of and protection of internally displaced persons. The Commission urged those organizations to establish, in particular through the Inter-Agency Standing Committee and its Task Force on Internally Displaced Persons, frameworks of cooperation with the Secretary-General's representative. The Secretary-General's representative and regional intergovernmental organizations were called on to intensify their cooperation with a view to enhancing their support for the representative and strengthening their initiatives to facilitate assistance to and protection of internally displaced persons. The Commission called on the High Commissioner for Human Rights to develop projects, in cooperation with Governments, relevant international organizations and the Secretary-General's representative, to promote the human rights of internally displaced persons, as part of the programme of advisory services and technical cooperation. The Secretary-General was asked to assist his representative, and the representative was encouraged to continue to seek the contribution of local, national and regional institutions.

Reports of Secretary-General's representative. In a February report [E/CN.4/1996/52], the Secretary-General's representative, Francis M. Deng (Sudan), discussed situations of internal displacement, the extent to which internally displaced persons were covered by international human rights and humanitarian law, and the question of institutional arrangements for providing protection and assistance to the internally displaced. As to his activities, the representative stated that country visits and dialogue with Governments were the cornerstone of his mandate. During his missions he had noted that children and women accounted for most inhabitants of displaced or returnee communities. The strategy required that the internally displaced focus on measures aimed at prevention, protection and assistance, and a secure process of return or permanent settlement in another area, rehabilitation, reintegration and sustainable development.

The representative concluded that the development of a legal framework that would provide an explicit, adequate and firm basis for protection of and provision of assistance to the internally displaced was imperative, although views still differed as to the form such an instrument might take. No institution existed with an exclusive or full mandate for the internally displaced. Country visits helped raise the level of awareness of the problem inside a country and provided opportunities for a constructive exchange of views. They also offered an opportunity for fact-finding on the particular problems of the situation as well as the generic problems of internal displacement worldwide.

By an October note [A/51/483], the Secretary-General transmitted his representative's report on recent developments covering his main areas of work, namely, the development of an appropriate framework for meeting the needs of the internally displaced; promoting effective institutional arrangements for protecting and assisting them; and undertaking visits to countries with serious internal displacement problems.

In addenda to his report [A/51/483/Add.1,2], the representative described his mission to Tajikistan (1-12 June), where the main cause of displacement had been the civil war in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 394]. The representative presented an overview of the crisis that had generated internal displacement in the country and discussed patterns of displacement, the return of the displaced, and the response of the international community. He addressed the reintegration of returned internally displaced persons and described steps the international community had taken to promote sustainable development and the protection of human rights. He also described initiatives taken by the international community to further the peace process through peacekeeping, political negotiations and other reconciliatory activities.

In his conclusions, the representative stated that the conflict remained unresolved, having flared up very seriously during the summer (see PART ONE, Chapter IV). The ongoing conflict rendered long-term planning difficult and inhibited foreign investment, since the current economic crisis exacerbated political and economic instability. He proposed strengthening Tajikistan's economy, strengthening the rule of law and promoting and protecting human rights, as well as developing an effective judicial system and strengthening compliance with international human rights standards. Expanded monitoring was needed to address abuses along the border with Afghanistan and in the areas of renewed fighting to which international agencies had had limited access. The Government would also benefit from cooperating with UN organizations, which could provide human rights monitoring, advisory services and institution-building.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1997/43/Add.1], the Secretary-General's representative discussed his visit to Mozambique (21 November-3 December), where one of Africa's largest displacements of population caused by armed conflict, compounded by drought, had taken place between 1977 and 1992. Some one third of the population had been forced to move either inside the country or into one of six neighbouring States. Given the fact that the country had experienced displacement in all its aspects, and that the return process had been described as an overall success, the representative considered that a visit could provide useful insights into the problems of displacement and ways to address them constructively. He presented an overview of the context in which internal displacement occurred, as well as initiatives taken by the international community to further the peace process through political negotiations, peacekeeping and other activities to support social stability. The representative discussed patterns of displacement and the steps taken to protect and assist the displaced, and described the conditions under which return took place, efforts made to ensure a durable reintegration of the internally displaced, and current challenges. In conclusion, the representative noted that the Government had demonstrated a responsive attitude towards its citizens and actively sought the support of the international community in providing assistance and protection to the war-affected population and in its search for a peaceful solution to the conflict. He emphasized that the first condition of a durable solution to displacement was agreement between the parties on a framework for a peaceful resolution to the conflict and their continued commitment to support the peace process.

Population transfer

Commission action. On 19 April [dec. 1996/108], the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of a 1995 decision [YUN 1995, p. 755] and a 1994 resolution [YUN 1994, p. 1028] of the Subcommittee, decided to endorse a request that the Special Rapporteur submit his final report in 1996 and that the Secretary-General provide him with all assistance needed to complete his work. The Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision on 24 July by decision 1996/292.

Note by Secretary-General. In a 9 August note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/29], the Secretary-General stated that he had not been in a position to put into effect a 1993 Subcommittee request [YUN 1993, p. 887] to organize a seminar, prior to the preparation of the Special Rapporteur's final report, in order to formulate appropriate final conclusions and recommendations. Because the seminar had not taken place, the Special Rapporteur was not in a position to submit his final report, but would do so in 1997 provided the necessary conditions existed.

Subcommission action. On 23 August [res. 1996/9], the Subcommission reiterated its request to the Secretary-General that he convene the expert seminar on population transfer, in cooperation with relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, in time for its conclusions to be of use for the Special Rapporteur's final report, and strongly requested the Special Rapporteur to submit his final report in any case in 1997.

Disappearance of persons

Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances

On 19 April [res. 1996/30], the Commission on Human Rights deplored the fact that some Governments had never provided substantive replies concerning cases of enforced disappearances in their countries or acted on the recommendations concerning them made by the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, established in 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 843]. Governments were urged to cooperate with and assist the Group.

The Commission asked the Group to pay particular attention to cases of children subjected to enforced disappearance and children of disappeared persons, and to cooperate with the Governments concerned to search for and identify those children. It asked the Group to continue to consider the question of impunity; to identify obstacles to the realization of the 1992 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance [GA res. 47/133]; and to report in 1997. The Secretary-General was asked to keep the Group and the Commission informed of steps taken widely to disseminate and promote the Declaration, and to compile observations from Governments on possible measures they had carried out to take the Declaration into account.

Working Group activities. In 1996, the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances held three sessions: its forty-eighth in New York (3-7 June) and its forty-ninth and fiftieth in Geneva (19-23 August, 13-22 November) [E/CN.4/1997/34]. In addition to its original mandate, which was to act as a channel of communication between families of disappeared persons and Governments concerned, with a view to en-sureing that sufficiently documented and clearly identified individual cases were investigated and the whereabouts of the disappeared persons clarified, the Working Group monitored States' compliance with the 1992 Declaration.

The total number of cases under active consideration stood at 43,980 in 1996. Although many of those cases occurred more than 10 years earlier, there had been no major progress in their clarification. The number of countries with outstanding cases of alleged disappearance was 63. During the period under review—up to 22 November, the last day of the Group's third annual session—the Group had received some 551 new cases of disappearance in 28 countries. The Group sent urgent action appeals to Governments regarding 97 cases.

With a view to making the 1992 Declaration better known and in order to draw Governments' attention to their responsibilities, the Group continued to adopt general comments on specific provisions. The Group adopted general comments on article 10, considered a most practical and valuable tool for ensuring compliance by States with their general commitment not to practise, permit or tolerate enforced disappearances, and to take effective legislative, administrative and judicial measures to prevent and terminate such acts.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Group reminded Governments that authentic co-operation was based on effective action to clarify outstanding cases and prevent new ones. In that respect, results were very poor, and progress in implementing the 1992 Declaration seemed to be extremely slow. The Group stated that it was essential to its activities to continue receiving co-operation from NGOs, but noted with concern that in some cases they had failed to maintain contact with their source, and, in others, had relegated cases to their archives, thus seriously affecting efforts by the Group to follow up on individual cases.

Report of Secretary-General. In an October report [A/51/561], the Secretary-General described action he had taken to disseminate and promote the 1992 Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/94.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the other relevant international human rights instruments,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 concerning disappeared persons and its resolutions 46/125 of 17 December 1991, 47/132 of 18 December 1992 and 49/193 of 23 December 1994 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Recalling also its resolution 47/133 of 18 December 1992 proclaiming the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance as a body of principles for all States,

Expressing concern that, according to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, the practice of a number of States can run counter to the Declaration,

Deeply concerned, in particular, by the intensification of enforced disappearances in various regions of the world and by the growing number of reports concerning harassment, ill-treatment and intimidation of witnesses of disappearances or relatives of persons who have disappeared,

Convinced that further efforts are needed to promote wider awareness of and respect for the Declaration, and taking note in this regard of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/30 of 19 April 1996,

1. Reaffirms that any act of enforced disappearance is an offence to human dignity and a grave and flagrant violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and reaffirmed and developed in other international instruments in this field, as well as a violation of the rules of international law;

2. Reiterates its invitation to all Governments to take appropriate legislative or other steps to prevent and suppress the practice of enforced disappearances, in keeping with the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, and to take action to that end at the national and regional levels and in cooperation with the United Nations, including through technical assistance;

3. Calls upon Governments to take steps to ensure that, when a state of emergency is introduced, the protection of human rights is ensured, in particular as regards the prevention of enforced disappearances;

4. Reminds Governments of the need to ensure that their competent authorities conduct prompt and impartial inquiries in all circumstances, whenever there is reason to believe that an enforced disappearance has occurred in territory under their jurisdiction, and that, if allegations are confirmed, perpetrators should be prosecuted;

5. Once again urges the Governments concerned to take steps to protect the families of disappeared persons against any intimidation or ill-treatment to which they might be subjected;

6. Encourages States, as some have already done, to provide concrete information on measures taken to give effect to the Declaration, as well as obstacles encountered;

7. Requests all States to consider the possibility of disseminating the text of the Declaration in their respective national languages and to facilitate its dissemination in the national and local languages;

8. Notes the action taken by non-governmental organizations to encourage implementation of the Declaration, and invites them to continue to facilitate its dissemination and to contribute to the work of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for its humanitarian work;

10. Requests the Working Group, in the continued exercise of its mandate, to take into account the provisions of the Declaration and to modify its working methods, if necessary;

11. Recalls that the primary role of the Working Group, as described in its reports, is to act as a channel of communication between the families of disappeared persons and the Governments concerned, with a view to ensuring that sufficiently documented and clearly identified individual cases are investigated, and to ascertain whether such information falls under its mandate and contains the required elements, and invites the Group to continue to seek the views and comments of all concerned, including Member States, in preparing its report;

12. Invites the Working Group to identify obstacles to the realization of the provisions of the Declaration, to recommend ways of overcoming those obstacles and, in this regard, to continue a dialogue with Governments and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

13. Further encourages the Working Group to continue to consider the question of impunity, in close collaboration with the rapporteur appointed by the Subcommission and with due regard for the relevant provisions of the Declaration;

14. Requests the Working Group to pay the utmost attention to cases of children subjected to enforced disappearance and children of disappeared persons and to cooperate closely with the Governments concerned to search for and identify those children;

15. Appeals to the Governments concerned, in particular those which have not yet replied to the communications transmitted by the Working Group, to cooperate fully with it and, in particular, to reply promptly to its requests for information so that, while respecting its working methods based on discretion, it may perform its strictly humanitarian role;

16. Encourages the Governments concerned to give serious consideration to inviting the Working Group to visit their countries so as to enable the Group to fulfil its mandate even more effectively;

17. Expresses its profound thanks to the many Governments that have cooperated with the Working Group and replied to its requests for information, and to the Governments that have invited the Group to visit their countries, asks them to give all necessary attention to the recommendations of the Group, and invites them to inform the Group of any action they take on those recommendations;

18. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study this question as a matter of priority and to take any steps it may deem necessary to the pursuit of the task of the Working Group and to the follow-up of its recommendations when it considers the report to be submitted by the Working Group to the Commission at its fifty-third session;

19. Renews its requests to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all the facilities it requires to perform its functions, especially for carrying out missions and following them up;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to keep it informed of the steps he takes to secure the widespread dissemination and promotion of the Declaration;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-third session a report on the steps taken to implement the present resolution;

22. Decides to consider the question of enforced disappearances, and in particular the implementation of the Declaration, at its fifty-third session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

General Assembly resolution 51/94

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 26 November (meeting 53); 56-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.48/Rev.1); agenda item 110(b).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-53; plenary 82.

Missing persons in the former Yugoslavia

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/71], the Commission on Human Rights commended the expert member of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for his report [E/CN.4/1996/36] describing the situation in 1995 concerning the special process on missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. It asked for the coordination of efforts by the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 [YUN 1993, p. 440] (see PART FOUR, Chapter II), the High Representative appointed in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 511], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the state of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and ICRC, particularly through the Expert Group on Exhumations and Missing Persons established under the authority of the High Representative (see PART ONE, Chapter V). They were also asked to prepare a plan for dealing with the issue in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as in the Republic of Croatia. The Commission underlined the need for the establishment of an ante-mortem database to assist with the identification of the dead before large-scale exhumations could be considered, and demanded that all parties refrain from any action intended to destroy, alter, conceal or damage any evidence of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law and that they preserve such evidence. It also demanded that all parties cooperate fully with the expert for the special process, the Expert Group and the ICRC Working Group on Missing Persons by providing information to aid in determining the fate of missing persons, in conformity with their obligations under the 1995 Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544].

The Commission asked the expert for the special process to assume responsibility for securing support for the activities of the Expert Group and asked the international community to make available the necessary means to that end; it also recommended that the High Commissioner for Human Rights provide means to assist the expert to secure the necessary financial assistance. The Secretary-General was also asked to continue to provide necessary resources. The Commission decided to extend the expert's mandate for one year, a decision endorsed by the Economic and Social Council on 23 July by decision 1996/276, and asked him to continue to report on the subject.

Report of expert. In a report to the Commission [E/CN.4/1997/55], the expert stated that he had spent between one and two weeks in the region each month, primarily in Sarajevo. He had met regularly with representatives of Governments, NGOs and the international community, as well as family members of missing persons. During 1996, a total of 3,058 cases had been received through NGOs and field offices, which were considered, processed and transmitted to the authorities allegedly held responsible.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, some 20,000 persons were still missing, the majority of whom were Bosnian men of Muslim origin. In Croatia, some 5,000 persons were missing. The expert deeply regretted the uncooperative attitude of the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) towards the problem of many thousands of missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia for whom it bore the main responsibility under international law.

The ante-mortem database (AMDB), a joint project coordinated by the Expert Group on Exhumations and Missing Persons and carried out under the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, started in July. During its initial phase, the project focused on collecting data on some 6,500 Bosnian Muslims missing from the region of Srebrenica. Since the majority of their families lived in and around Tuzla, it was decided to establish the AMDB headquarters there. Following a request from the authorities of the Republika Srpska, it was also decided to establish an office in Banja Luka to collect data on missing persons of Serb origin. Physicians for Human Rights, an NGO, was responsible for the establishment and maintenance of AMDB, and another NGO, the Association for the Promotion of the Ludwig Boltzmann Institute, was responsible for collecting relevant data by conducting interviews with family members of missing persons.

The expert welcomed the United States initiative to establish the International Commission on Missing Persons in the Former Yugoslavia since it comprised, for the first time, high-level representatives of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), Croatia and all Bosnian parties, in addition to a number of well-known personalities. It was his conviction that only a high-level multilateral commission comprising all relevant parties and enjoying the support of the international community would be in a position to exert sufficient pressure on all authorities concerned to disclose relevant information and to proceed with the excavation of mass graves.

Forensic science

Report of Secretary-General. In March, the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.4/1996/41] containing comments received from Governments and NGOs on measures taken to introduce into their rules and practices the international standards set forth in the 1989 Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions [YUN 1989, p. 627], as well as the model autopsy protocol set out in the Manual on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions [Sales No. E.91.IV.1]. The Secretary-General discussed guidelines for investigations for which there were no or few procedures already in place, which were contained in a booklet prepared by the Legal Counsel of the United Nations entitled Guidelines for the conduct of United Nations inquiries into allegations of massacres [DPI/1710]. Annexed to the report were names of forensic experts and experts in related fields recommended by Governments and NGOs, as well as the standard cooperation service agreement to be used in the event that a Member State or NGO provided the services of a forensic scientist and the standard special service agreement to be used in the event that the services of a forensic expert were engaged directly by the United Nations.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/31], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to consult with Governments, relevant UN bodies, professional organizations of forensic experts, the organizations mentioned in his 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 884], 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1024] and 1996 reports, as well as other interested institutions, with a view to: identifying experts who might be asked to join forensic teams or to provide advice or assistance to thematic or country mechanisms, advisory services and technical assistance programmes; submitting biographical data on experts; and seeking their further advice as to development of principles, guidance, procedures, mechanisms, practical experience and training, in addition to the Manual.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue efforts to establish a list of forensic experts and experts in related fields who could be asked to help international mechanisms in the field of human rights, Governments and the Centre for Human Rights in providing technical and advisory services, advice regarding the monitoring of human rights violations and training of local teams or assistance in the reunification of families of persons who had disappeared. The Commission's request was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1996/262 of 23 July. The Commission also asked the Secretary-General to update annually the list of forensic experts and to make it available to working groups, special rapporteurs and experts of UN human rights mechanisms; to ensure that the forensic experts abided by the 1989 Principles [YUN 1989, p. 627]; to provide resources to fund the Centre in implementing the Commission's resolution (a request approved by the Council by decision 1996/262); and to report in 1998 on progress made. It invited the Centre and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the Secretariat to consider the possibility of revising the Manual.

Torture and cruel treatment

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In January, Special Rapporteur Nigel S. Rodley (United Kingdom) submitted his annual report [E/CN.4/1996/35] to the Commission on Human Rights concerning torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. He made urgent appeals on behalf of persons who were allegedly being tortured or whom it was feared might be. The Special Rapporteur transmitted 113 urgent appeals to 43 Governments concerning some 410 individuals, of which at least 31 were known to be women, as well as several groups of persons, with regard to whom fears of torture had been expressed. He also sent 55 letters to 48 Governments containing some 750 cases or incidents of alleged torture, about 120 of which concerned women. If the information received from the sources contained a critical analysis of a more general nature regarding the phenomenon of torture, that information was also brought to the attention of the Governments concerned. Some 41 countries provided the Special Rapporteur with replies on approximately 330 cases for 1995, whereas 26 did so regarding some 330 cases submitted in previous years. The Special Rapporteur provided brief summaries of general allegations, statistics of numbers of individual cases transmitted and responses received, as well as his observations where applicable. More complete summaries were contained in an addendum to his report [E/CN.4/1996/357Add.1 & Corr.1]. The Special Rapporteur urged Governments to do their utmost to provide the information he sought in order to enable him to improve his capacity to assess situations accurately.

Pakistan. In 1996, the Special Rapporteur visited Pakistan (23 February-3 March) [E/CN.4/1997/7/Add.2], where he held meetings with government officials and representatives of human rights NGOs. He also visited detention centres in Lahore and Karachi, but was not allowed to enter a centre in Islamabad, which was operated by the Federal Intelligence Agency. The Special Rapporteur stated that Pakistan was racked by inter-communal and inter-sect strife, and politics took the form of hostile, confrontational and self-interested manoeuvring. Under those circumstances, it was difficult to install a culture of respect for the rule of law. Torture, including rape, and similar cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, were rife in Pakistan, although those with important family, political or international connections were somewhat less likely to suffer the most extreme forms of torture. Torture was most frequently used to secure confessions or information relating to suspected crimes. It was also used, like arrest and detention, as a means of extorting bribes. Jails were overcrowded and had inadequate medical facilities. The prison regimes appeared to be arbitrary, brutal and oppressive.

The Special Rapporteur welcomed the Abolition of the Punishment of Whipping Act, 1996, as it promised to end judicial sentences of corporal punishment. He recommended that Pakistan become a party to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [GA res. 39/46] (for details see PART TWO, Chapter I); abolish the remaining use of corporal punishment; terminate the use of bar fetters and similar restraining instruments; recognize as a criminal offence the unlawful detention of any person and the detention of any person in a place of detention not officially designated as such; remove police service from the ambit of political patronage and manipulation and ensure that the recruitment, promotion and deployment of officers were based on professional merit; improve police remuneration and training; establish independent complaints bodies and bodies with authority to inspect any place of detention; and expand special police stations for female suspects. He also advocated the establishment of an independent monitoring system for prisons, with an NGO component.

Venezuela. During his visit to Venezuela (7-16 June) [E/CN.4/1997/77Add.3 & Corr.1], the Special Rapporteur met with high-level government officials, torture victims and their families and human rights NGOs, and visited detention centres in Caracas and Maracaibo. He was of the opinion that torture and similar ill-treatment were perpetrated on persons in the hands of all the law enforcement bodies with powers of arrest, detention or interrogation. It was an available technique resorted to at will if there was felt to be an imperative need to secure a confession or information relevant to the task of repressing crime, whether it was common or politically motivated crime. Sometimes it was used to "settle scores", elicit bribes or "teach a lesson" on behalf of those adversely affected by the victim's suspected criminal activities, the Special Rapporteur said. He noted that the constitutional and legal prohibition against incommunicado detention seemed often not complied with. Access to courts for a remedy was seriously hampered by the lack of free legal advice to persons without the means to pay for it. Describing the three detention centres he visited, the Special Rapporteur stated that they were incompatible with the international prohibition of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and ranged from anarchic to grossly overcrowded and exiguously restrictive. In two of them, there was no separation of convicted and unconvicted persons, nor between those held in respect of graver or lesser crimes. Most of the problems were blamed on the inadequacy of resources, including undertrained and underpaid police, overworked judges and shortages in the prison system such as insufficient space, insufficient and inadequately paid and trained guards, insufficient and inadequate food, and inadequate medical, recreational, educational and work facilities.

The Special Rapporteur made a series of recommendations pertaining to the rights of detainees, law enforcement and military personnel, prison conditions and reform of the system of criminal procedure and the judiciary. He stated that serious attention should be given to proposals for establishing a national institution for the promotion and protection of human rights.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/33 B], the Commission on Human Rights stressed that no one should be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and all allegations of those practices should be promptly and impartially examined by the competent national authority. Those who encouraged, ordered, tolerated or perpetuated such acts must be held responsible and severely punished, and national legal systems should ensure that victims should obtain redress, be awarded fair and adequate compensation and receive socio-medical rehabilitation. The Commission reminded States that prolonged incommunicado detention might facilitate the perpetration of torture and could in itself constitute a form of cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment. Commending the Special Rapporteur for his report, the Commission invited him to examine questions concerning torture directed against women and children and conditions conducive to such torture, and to make recommendations on the prevention of gender-specific forms of torture and the torture of children. It approved the methods of work used by the Special Rapporteur and called on him to include in his report information on the follow-up by Governments to his recommendations, visits and communications. The Secretary-General was asked to provide assistance to the Special Rapporteur to enable him to report in 1997.

Voluntary Fund for torture victims

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/33 A], the Commission on Human Rights called on the Board of Trustees of the Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, established in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 906], to present in 1997 an updated assessment of the global need for rehabilitation services for torture victims and of any need for international funding in that regard. Expressing appreciation for previous contributions to the Fund, it appealed to all Governments, organizations and individuals to respond favourably to requests for contributions. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to include the Fund among the programmes receiving donations at the annual UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities; transmit to Governments Commission appeals for contributions; assist the Board of Trustees in its efforts to make the Fund and its humanitarian work better known and in its appeal for contributions; ensure strict and transparent project management rules for the Fund and arrange for the holding of annual information meetings; ensure the provision of an adequate level of staffing and technical facilities for the Fund; and continue to keep the Commission informed of the Fund's operations on an annual basis.

By decision 1996/263 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request that the Secretary-General ensure strict and transparent project management rules for the Fund and arrange for the holding of annual information meetings, and ensure an adequate and stable level of staffing and technical facilities.

Report of Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General presented his annual report on the status of the Fund [A/51/465]. Contributions received between November 1995 and September 1996 totalled $3,194,396; 26 countries contributed, and 5 regular donor countries discontinued their support.

The Board of Trustees held its fifteenth session in Geneva (20-31 May). The total amount then available for grants to assist victims of torture came to $2,535,500, of which $100,000 was earmarked for an emergency fund for crisis situations outside the Board's annual session. The amount of assistance totalled more than $5 million in 1996, representing 96 projects or sub-projects in 54 countries. On 21 June, the High Commissioner for Human Rights, on behalf of the Secretary-General, approved the Board's recommendations on grants to 96 projects submitted by 92 humanitarian organizations. Grants totalling $2,435,500 were distributed in Asia and the Middle East (17 projects, 10 countries, $564,500); Western Europe (26 projects, 10 countries, $564,500); Latin America and the Caribbean (18 projects, 10 countries, $525,000); Africa (16 projects, 15 countries, $396,000); North America (11 projects, 2 countries, $277,000); and Central and Eastern Europe (8 projects, 7 countries, $108,500). Annexed to the report was a list of contributions and pledges made by Governments from February 1982 to September 1996, and a list of humanitarian organizations receiving the Fund's assistance.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1997/27 & Add.1], the Secretary-General stated that by year's end the Fund had received additional contributions totalling $74,076. He reported that since the Board's May session, two emergency grants had been made—one for $10,000, to provide medical, psychological and social assistance to torture victims from Latin America, the other for $1,500, to provide medical treatment for a torture victim from an African country.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/86.

Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, its resolution 39/46 of 10 December 1984, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading

ing Treatment or Punishment and all its subsequent relevant resolutions,

Recalling its resolution 36/151 of 16 December 1981, in which it noted with deep concern that acts of torture took place in various countries, recognized the need to provide assistance to the victims in a purely humanitarian spirit and established the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture,

Recalling the recommendation in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, that high priority should be given to providing the necessary resources for assistance to victims of torture and effective remedies for their physical, psychological and social rehabilitation, inter alia, by additional contributions to the Fund,

Noting with satisfaction the existence and rapid expansion of an international network of centres for the rehabilitation of torture victims, which plays an important role in providing assistance to victims of torture, and the collaboration of the Fund with the centres,

1. Welcomes the report of the Committee against Torture, submitted in accordance with the provision of article 24 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

2. Notes with appreciation that during the present reporting period eight States have become parties to the Convention, increasing the number of States parties to one hundred;

3. Urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority;

4. Invites all States ratifying or acceding to the Convention and those States which are parties to the Convention and which have not yet done so to consider joining the States parties that have already made the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 of the Convention and to consider the possibility of withdrawing their reservations to article 20;

5. Urges States parties to comply strictly with their obligations under the Convention, including their obligation to submit reports in accordance with article 19 of the Convention, in view of the high number of reports not submitted;

6. Calls upon all Governments to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the question of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in the performance of his task, to supply all necessary information requested by him and to react appropriately to his urgent appeals;

7. Approves the methods of work employed by the Special Rapporteur, in particular as regards urgent appeals, reiterates his need to be able to respond effectively to credible and reliable information that comes before him, invites him to continue to seek the views and comments of all concerned, including Member States, in the elaboration of his report, and expresses its appreciation of the continuing discrete and independent way in which he carries out his work;

8. Stresses the need for regular exchanges of views between the Committee against Torture, the Special Rapporteur and other relevant United Nations mechanisms and bodies, with a view to enhancing further their effectiveness and cooperation on issues relating to torture, inter alia, by improving their coordination;

9. Commends the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights for the support given to States in the preparation of national reports to the Committee;

10. Urges States parties to take fully into account the conclusions and recommendations made by the Committee after its consideration of their reports;

11. Urges all States parties to the Convention to notify the Secretary-General of their acceptance of the amendments to articles 17 and 18 of the Convention as soon as possible;

12. Encourages the open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights on the elaboration of a draft optional protocol to the Convention to intensify its deliberations with a view to an early conclusion of its work;

13. Expresses its gratitude and appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have already contributed to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture;

14. Appeals to all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to respond favourably to requests for contributions to the Fund, if possible on a regular basis and annually before the meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Fund and if possible also with a substantial increase in the level of contributions, so that consideration may be given to the ever-increasing demand for assistance;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to all Governments the appeals of the General Assembly for contributions to the Fund;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to include the Fund on an annual basis among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

17. Expresses its appreciation to the Board of Trustees of the Fund for the work it has accomplished;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to assist the Board of Trustees of the Fund in its appeal for contributions and its efforts to make better known the existence of the Fund and the financial means currently available to it, as well as in its assessment of the global need for international funding of rehabilitation services for torture victims and, in this effort, to make use of all existing possibilities, including the preparation, production and dissemination of information materials;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of adequate staff and facilities for the bodies and mechanisms that combat torture, corresponding to the strong support expressed by Member States for combating torture;

20. Invites donor countries and recipient countries that so agree to consider including in their bilateral programmes and projects relating to the training of armed forces and police personnel, as well as health-care personnel, matters relating to the protection of human rights and the prevention of torture;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-third session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the status of the Convention as well as a report on the operations of the Fund;

22. Decides to consider the reports of the Secretary-General and the Committee against Torture at its fifty-third session under the sub-item entitled "Implementation of human rights instruments".

General Assembly resolution 51/86

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.1) without vote, 22 November (meeting 49); 37-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.33), orally revised; agenda item 110 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 36, 37, 42, 43, 45, 46, 49; plenary 82.

Anti-personnel landmines

On 23 August [res. 1996/15], the Subcommission, reaffirming its support for a total ban on the production, marketing and use of anti-personnel landmines, urged States that had not done so to sign and ratify the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and the Protocols thereto [YUN 1980, p. 76]. It urged States to modify, where necessary, their legislation in order to prohibit the production, marketing and use of anti-personnel landmines in and from their territories. The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to transmit to Governments its appeal for voluntary contributions to the mine-clearance programme and to the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance established in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 172].

Weapons of mass destruction

On 23 August [res. 1996/14], the Subcommission affirmed that weapons of mass destruction, particularly nuclear weapons, should have no role to play in international relations and therefore should be eliminated. It recommended that relevant international forums, particularly the Conference on Disarmament (see PART ONE, Chapter VII), should start negotiations on nuclear disarmament to reduce nuclear weapons globally within a phased programme, thus contributing to the enhancement of international peace and security and the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

On 29 August [res. 1996/16], the Subcommission, by a roll-call vote of 15 to 1, with 8 abstentions, asked the Secretary-General to collect information from Governments, UN bodies and agencies and NGOs on the use of nuclear weapons, chemical weapons, fuel-air bombs, napalm, cluster bombs, biological weaponry and weaponry containing depleted uranium, on their consequential and cumulative effects, and on the danger they represented to life, physical security and other human rights. It also asked him to report in 1997 on the information gathered, together with recommendations and views which he might have received on ways of eliminating those weapons.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Right to development

Reports of Secretary-General. In 1996, the Commission on Human Rights considered a January report [E/CN.4/1996/25] of the Secretary-General describing measures taken to implement its 1995 resolution on the right to development [YUN 1995, p. 757]. The Secretary-General stated that the High Commissioner for Human Rights had given particular attention to the right to development in the restructuring of the Centre for Human Rights, with a new branch responsible for promoting respect for that right. In addition, the High Commissioner was developing a strategy relating to the right to development and economic, social and cultural rights. The elements of the strategy included identifying ways to improve implementation of those rights, including human rights aspects of a lasting solution to the debt crisis of developing countries; considering the application of findings and recommendations of the Working Group on the Right to Development; promoting the right to development and economic, social and cultural rights at the national level, including pilot projects; identifying further social and economic indicators which should facilitate assessing the progressive realization of those rights; preparing procedures for communications regarding economic, social and cultural rights; identifying international action necessary to promote the right to development; cooperating with international/regional financial and development organizations and with the regional economic commissions; and involving NGOs and grass-roots organizations active in development and human rights in the implementation of the 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development [GA res. 41/128]. The Secretary-General stated that he had drawn the General Assembly's attention to the reports of the Working Group on the Right to Development.

In an October report [A/51/539], the Secretary-General described activities taken by the UN system to implement the 1986 Declaration, possible cooperation with regional economic commissions, consultations between the High Commissioner and the President of the World Bank, and the right to development and the restructuring process of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Centre for Human Rights.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1996/15], the Commission on Human Rights decided to establish for a two-year period an intergovernmental working group of experts to develop a strategy for implementing and promoting the right to development, as set forth in the 1986 Declaration. The group would develop practical measures to implement and promote the right to development, and submit reports and consult with treaty bodies and with the High Commissioner for Human Rights on all issues related to the implementation of the right to development. The group was to be composed of 10 experts, and members would be appointed on the basis of equitable geographical representation. The Commission also asked the High Commissioner to continue his dialogue with appropriate specialized agencies and UN bodies regarding the impact of their programmes on the implementation of the right to development. The Secretary-General was called on to ensure that the working group receive all the assistance it needed and to report in 1997.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/258, endorsed the Commission's decision to establish the working group and approved the terms of its establishment set out by the Commission. The Council decided to consider how best to promote system-wide action to promote and protect the right to development and to deepen the review of all issues relevant to the implementation of that right, including the promotion of a favourable international and national economic environment.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/22], the Subcommission decided to continue consideration of questions related to the right to development and to review annually the progress made in international cooperation towards the implementation of the right to development in the context of human rights and the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) (see PART THREE, Chapter I), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 844]. The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to invite all relevant UN bodies and specialized agencies to step up their action aimed at international cooperation for the realization of the right to development in the context of the Decade and to provide him with information thereon, and also asked him to transmit annually the information received.

Intergovernmental Group of Experts. The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the Right to Development held its first session in Geneva from 4 to 15 November [E/CN.4/1997/22]. The Group made a series of proposals for measures to implement and promote the right to development for future consideration. It agreed that it would address four broad categories of issues: economic, social, cultural and civil rights or political aspects related to the right to development. The Group entrusted its Chairman with compiling information on work undertaken in the UN system on indicators for development and human rights and on early warning mechanisms and methods. An expert member of the Group was entrusted with preparing a study on the promotion and implementation of the right to development by the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, in line with relevant provisions of the African Charter of Human and Peoples' Rights [YUN 1981, p. 942]. The Group felt it necessary to hold an additional two-week session in 1997 and requested the Commission to consider that recommendation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/99.

Right to development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on the Right to Development, which it proclaimed at its forty-first session,

Noting that 4 December 1996 marked the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Right to Development, which represents a landmark and a meaningful instrument for countries and people worldwide,

Reaffirming the commitment contained in the Charter of the United Nations to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Recalling its resolutions 45/97 of 14 December 1990, 46/123 of 17 December 1991, 47/123 of 18 December 1992, 48/130 of 20 December 1993, 49/183 of 23 December 1994 and 50/184 of 22 December 1995 and those of the Commission on Human Rights relating to the right to development, and taking note of Commission resolution 1996/15 of 11 April 1996,

Recalling also the report on the Global Consultation on the Realization of the Right to Development as a Human Right,

Recalling further the principles proclaimed in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development of 14 June 1992,

Mindful that the Commission on Human Rights continues to consider this matter, which is directed towards the implementation and further enhancement of the right to development,

Noting the need for coordination and cooperation throughout the United Nations system for a more effective promotion of the right to development,

Recognizing that the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat have important roles to play in the promotion and protection of the right to development,

Reaffirming the need for action at the national and international levels by all States to realize all human rights and the need for relevant evaluation mechanisms to ensure the promotion, encouragement and reinforcement of the principles contained in the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Welcoming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, which reaffirms the right to development as a universal and inalienable right and an integral part of all fundamental human rights and reaffirms that the human person is the central subject of development,

Recalling that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action examined the relationship between democracy, development and human rights, and recognizing the importance of creating a favourable environment in which everyone may enjoy their human rights as set out in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

Recalling also that, in order to promote development, equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, and recognizing that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the universality, objectivity, impartiality and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues must be ensured,

Noting that aspects of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, adopted by the Conference on 13 September 1994, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, adopted by the World Summit on 12 March 1995, the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, and the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), held at Istanbul, Turkey, from 3 to 14 June 1996, are relevant to the universal realization of the right to development, within the context of promoting and protecting all human rights,

Expressing concern that obstacles to the realization of the right to development still exist, at both the national and international levels, ten years after the adoption of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Noting that the first session of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts established by the Commission on Human Rights to elaborate a strategy for the implementation and promotion of the right to development, as set forth in the Declaration on the Right to Development, in its integrated and multidimensional aspects, was held at Geneva from 4 to 15 November 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/184,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the right to development for every human person and all peoples in all countries, in particular the developing countries, as an integral part of fundamental human rights;

2. Urges States to pursue the promotion and protection of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights and the implementation of comprehensive development programmes, integrating these rights into development activities;

3. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Reiterates its commitment to implementing the results of the World Conference on Human Rights, which reaffirm that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-third session a report on the implementation of Commission resolution 1996/15;

6. Reiterates that lasting progress towards the implementation of the right to development requires effective development policies at the national level, as well as equitable economic relations and a favourable economic environment at the international level;

7. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to consider carefully the report of the first session of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts to elaborate a strategy for the implementation and promotion of the right to development, as set forth in the Declaration on the Right to Development, in its integrated and multi-dimensional aspects, bearing in mind the conclusions of the Working Group on the Right to Development established by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1993/22 of 4 March 1993 and the conclusions of the World Conference on Human Rights and of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women and the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II);

8. Notes the efforts made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights within his mandate, and encourages him to continue the coordination of the various activities with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development, including a programmatic follow-up to the establishment in the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat of a new branch, the primary responsibilities of which include the promotion of the right to development, as part of the effort to implement the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

9. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, within his mandate, to continue to take steps for the promotion and protection of the right to development by, inter alia, working in conjunction with the Centre for Human Rights and drawing on the expertise of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system related to the field of development;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-third session and the General Assembly at its fifty-second session of the activities of the organizations, funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system for the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development, as well as obstacles identified by them to the realization of the right to development;

11. Calls upon all Member States to make further concrete efforts at the national and international levels to remove the obstacles to the realization of the right to development;

12. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to make proposals to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council, on the future course of action on the question, in particular on practical measures for the implementation and enhancement of the Declaration on the Right to Development, including comprehensive and effective measures to eliminate obstacles to its implementation, taking into account the conclusions and recommendations of the Global Consultation on the Realization of the Right to Development as a Human Right, the reports of the Working Group on the Right to Development and the report of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts to elaborate a strategy for the implementation and promotion of the right to development;

13. Calls upon all States to address, within the declarations and programmes of action adopted by the relevant international conferences convened by the United Nations, the elements for the promotion and protection of the principles of the right to development as set out in the Declaration on the Right to Development;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

15. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-second session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

General Assembly resolution 51/99

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 26 November (meeting 53); draft by Colombia for Non-Aligned Movement and 16 other nations (A/C.3/51/L.57); agenda item 110 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-53; plenary 82.

Right to work

On 23 April [res. 1996/60], the Commission on Human Rights called on States to adopt measures to ensure that all persons had the right to equal pay for equal work, without discrimination of any kind, and to consider taking initiatives to secure that the right to work was recognized by their national/federal legislation as a human right. It called on the international community, relevant institutions and Member States to assist and co-operate with countries that had undertaken programmes to promote and protect the rights of workers and the elimination of child labour.

Effects of debt on living standards

Report of Secretary-General. In a February report [E/CN.4/1996/22], the Secretary-General discussed ways to carry out a political dialogue between creditor and debtor countries in the UN system, based on the principle of shared responsibility. He described general principles upon which the conduct of such a dialogue should be based and presented guidelines for the formulation of an equitable and durable solution to the problem of foreign debt. He noted that the problem of foreign debt was one of the most acute factors adversely affecting economic and social development in many developing countries, as well as their full enjoyment of all human rights. As to sharing responsibility for a solution, the Secretary-General examined the responsibility of States at the national level, the duty of States to cooperate with each other at the international level, and the duty of international financial institutions.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1996/12], by a roll-call vote of 34 to 16, with 1 abstention, the Commission on Human Rights stressed the importance of continuing to implement immediate actions for alleviating the debt and debt-service burdens of developing countries within the framework of the realization of economic, social and cultural rights. It asked the Intergovernmental Group of Experts to pay special attention to the social repercussions of the policies adopted to face the effects of external debt on the realization of those rights and to make recommendations. The Commission considered that to find a durable solution to the debt crisis, a political dialogue within the UN system was needed between creditor and debtor countries, based on the principles of shared responsibility. It asked the Secretary-General to continue efforts to carry out such a dialogue and to report in 1997, following a high-level consultation process with Governments, heads of multilateral financial institutions and specialized agencies, as well as with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, on measures to be implemented to solve the debt crisis. The Commission asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to pay particular attention to the problem of the debt burden of developing countries. The Secretary-General was asked to establish a programme unit in the Centre for Human Rights to promote economic, social and cultural rights, in particular those related to the debt burden of developing countries and the implementation of the right to development.

On 11 April [dec. 1996/103], the Commission, taking note of a 1995 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1995, p. 761], decided, by a vote of 34 to 16, with 1 abstention, to establish an open-ended working group of the Commission, to meet for a period of one week prior to its 1997 session, to develop guidelines based on the preliminary set of basic policy guidelines on structural adjustment programmes and economic, social and cultural rights contained in a 1995 report of the Secretary-General [YUN 1995, p. 760], in close cooperation with the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. It also decided to invite Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the Committee, to contribute to the development of the draft policy guidelines by providing comments for consideration by the working group.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1996/257.

Effects on the full enjoyment of human rights of the economic adjustment policies arising from foreign debt and, in particular, on the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 23 July 1996, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/12 of 11 April 1996, approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to establish a programme unit in the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat for the promotion of economic, social and cultural rights, in particular those related to the debt burden of developing countries and the implementation of the right to development.

Economic and Social Council decision 1996/257

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1996/289.

Effects of structural adjustment programmes on the full enjoyment of human rights

At its 47th plenary meeting, on 24 July 1996, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights decision 1996/103 of 11 April 1996, and resolution 1995/32 of 24 August 1995 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, endorsed the Commission's decision to establish an open-ended working group of the Commission to meet for a period of one week prior to its fifty-third session to elaborate, on the basis of the preliminary set of basic policy guidelines on structural adjustment programmes and economic, social and cultural rights and in close cooperation with the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, policy guidelines on the subject matter and requested the Secretary-General to provide all the assistance necessary to enable the working group to carry out its work. The Council also endorsed the Commission's decision to invite Governments, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, as well as the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, to contribute to the elaboration of draft policy guidelines by providing their comments on the preliminary set of basic policy guidelines for consideration by the working group.

Against: Australia, Belarus, Bulgaria, Canada, Czech Republic, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Poland, Romania, Russian Federation, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Income distribution

Report of Special Rapporteur. In June, Special Rapporteur Jose Bengoa (Chile) submitted a provisional report on the relationship between the enjoyment of human rights, in particular economic, social and cultural rights, and income distribution [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/14]. He analysed income distribution at the international level and reported a growing trend towards the concentration of wealth within a small group of countries. He analysed international cooperation policies, the alleged purpose of which was to ensure that the ever-widening gap did not widen further. The Special Rapporteur also provided an analysis of income distribution at the national level, which attempted to reveal main trends, develop an indicator whereby it was possible to list countries on the basis of their domestic income distribution, and provide a theoretical classification of countries in accordance with the manner in which income was distributed internally. He outlined the relationship between income distribution, at the international and national levels, and education and poverty. The report stated that two simultaneous processes of concentration of wealth were under way, one of them at the world level, between rich and poor countries, and the other at the regional level, between large and small countries. In addition, the Special Rapporteur analysed the value of the concept of equal opportunities as a means of more fully ensuring the fulfilment of economic, social and cultural rights. Annexed to the report was an income distribution index in relation to per capita gross domestic product in selected countries.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [(res. 1996/26)], the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur to pay particular attention to the impact of the enjoyment of human rights on income distribution; to take special care to analyse the indicators needed to monitor the full satisfaction of human rights; and to submit his final report in 1997. It asked the Secretary-General to organize a seminar of experts to develop appropriate indicators and to monitor the implementation of commitments made by Governments; to invite Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide the Special Rapporteur with information related to the preparation of his report; and to assist the Special Rapporteur.

Transnational corporations

Report of Secretary-General. In a July report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/12 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General discussed the impact of the activities and working methods of transnational corporations (TNCs) on the enjoyment of human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights and the right to development, based on information received from Governments, specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. The Secretary-General considered human rights issues related to the transfer of technology and information, the international legal framework relating to TNCs, the need for a new international regulatory framework and relevant norms related to international cooperation. He also discussed the need for a people-centred approach to address the negative consequences of international technology transfers, such as social problems, deterioration of the human environment and potential use as an instrument of domination.

Subcommission action. In a 30 August resolution [res. 1996/39], the Subcommission stated that it considered it useful for the Commission on Human Rights to establish for a three-year period a five-member working group of experts, nominated by Governments, to be appointed by the Commission Chairman in 1997, which would identify and examine the effects of the methods of work and activities of TNCs and business entities with franchises and licences from such corporations on economic, social and cultural rights and the right to development. The mandate of the group would be to investigate, monitor, examine and receive communications and gather information on the effects of the methods of work and activities of TNCs on those rights; to make recommendations and proposals aimed at regulating the methods of work and activities of TNCs to ensure that they were in keeping with the economic and social objectives of the countries in which they operated; to promote economic, social and cultural rights and the right to development; and to prepare annually a list of countries and TNCs, indicating their gross national product or financial turnover, respectively. The Commission was requested to ask the Secretary-General to invite Governments, UN bodies and specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to submit information on the effects of the working methods and activities of TNCs, particularly on economic, social and cultural rights and the right to development.

Unilateral coercive measures

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1995 request of the Commission on Human Rights [YUN 1995, p. 762], the Secretary-General in January submitted a report [E/CN.4/1996/45 & Add.1] containing replies received from Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies, and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations concerning coercive measures unilaterally implemented against developing countries.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 32 to 14, with 7 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights on 11 April [res. 1996/9] called on States to refrain from adopting or implementing any unilateral measures not in accordance with international law and the UN Charter, particularly those of a coercive nature with extraterritorial effects, that created obstacles to trade relations among States. Rejecting the application of such measures as tools for political or economic pressure against any country, particularly against developing countries, the Commission urged the Working Group on the Right to Development to take into account the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures in its work on the implementation of the right to development. The Commission asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to give urgent consideration to its resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/103.

Human rights and unilateral coercive measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the pertinent principles and provisions contained in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States proclaimed by the General Assembly by its resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, in particular article 32 thereof, in which it is declared that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Taking note of the report submitted by the Secretary-General pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/45 of 3 March 1995,

Recognizing the universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated character of all human rights, and, in this regard, reaffirming the right to development as an integral part of all human rights,

Recalling that the World Conference on Human Rights called upon States to refrain from any unilateral coercive measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations that creates obstacles to trade relations among States and impedes the full realization of all human rights,

Bearing in mind all the references to this question in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development, adopted by the World Summit for Social Development on 12 March 1995, the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, and the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) on 14 June 1996,

Deeply concerned that, despite the recommendations adopted on this issue by the General Assembly and recent major United Nations conferences, and contrary to general international law and the Charter of the United Nations, unilateral coercive measures continue to be promulgated and implemented with all their extraterritorial effects, inter alia, on the economic and social development of targeted countries and peoples and individuals under the jurisdiction of other States,

1. Urges all States to refrain from adopting or implementing any unilateral measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, in particular those of a coercive nature with all their extraterritorial effects, which create obstacles to trade relations among States, thus impeding the full realization of the rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international human rights instruments, in particular the right of individuals and peoples to development;

2. Rejects unilateral coercive measures with all their extraterritorial effects as tools for political or economic pressure against any country, in particular against developing countries, because of their negative effects on the realization of all the human rights of vast sectors of their populations, in particular children, women and the elderly;

3. Calls upon Member States that have initiated such measures to commit themselves to their obligations and responsibilities arising from the international human rights instruments to which they are party by revoking such measures at the earliest time possible;

4. Reaffirms, in this context, the right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

5. Urges the Commission on Human Rights to take fully into account the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures, including enactment of national laws and their extraterritorial application, in its task concerning the implementation of the right to development;

6. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in discharging his functions relating to the promotion, realization and protection of the right to development, to give urgent consideration to the present resolution in his annual report to the General Assembly;

7. Requests Member States to notify the Secretary-General about the implications and negative effects of such measures on their populations in the various aspects referred to in the present resolution;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to examine this question, on a priority basis, at its fifty-second session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Extreme poverty

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1996/10], the Commission on Human Rights, reaffirming that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constituted a violation of human dignity and that urgent action was required to eliminate them, asked the Special Rapporteur on the subject, Leandro Despouy (Argentina), to continue to give special attention to the following: the effects of extreme poverty on the enjoyment and exercise of all human rights and fundamental freedoms of those affected; efforts by the poorest to exercise their rights and participate fully in the development of their society; conditions in which the poorest could convey their experience and ideas and become partners in the realization of human rights; and means of promoting a better understanding of the experiences and ideas of the poorest and those working alongside them. It also asked him to suggest follow-up measures. The Secretary-General was asked to provide the Special Rapporteur with the assistance he needed and to make the Special Rapporteur's second (1995) interim report [YUN 1995, p. 764] available to the special session of the Commission for Social Development and to the next substantive session of the Economic and Social Council, at which the coordination segment was to be devoted to activities taken to eradicate poverty.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In June, the Special Rapporteur submitted his final report on human rights and extreme poverty [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/13]. He stated that at least 1.1 billion people lived in extreme poverty, and some believed that, if properly re-evaluated, the figure might be as high as 2 billion. It was estimated that the number was increasing by 25 million a year. The Special Rapporteur described activities relating to poverty, including those of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, as well as the outcome of the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113]. He discussed the impact of extreme poverty on human rights, such as the right to a decent standard of living, the right to housing, the right to education, the right to work, the right to health, the right to protection of the family, the right to privacy, the right to recognition as a person before the law and to be officially registered, the right to life and the right to physical integrity, the right to justice, the right to take part in political affairs, and the right to participate in social and cultural life. The Special Rapporteur underlined the need for a change in the way people perceived those living in extreme poverty, whom he said were viewed with fear and contempt. He presented methods for reaching the poorest that focused on involving the poor themselves in designing, implementing and evaluating programmes.

At the international level, the Special Rapporteur recommended that the subject be dealt with in the context of the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) [YUN 1995, p. 844] (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and the agendas of the General Assembly, the Commission and the Subcommission; and by human rights treaty bodies, UN bodies and institutions, and technical and economic cooperation bodies and institutions. He also discussed the important role of human rights education and the mass media. At the national level, he stated that Governments had to draw up a definition of extreme poverty, improve conventional indicators and devise methods of measuring all forms of poverty, as well as develop national anti-poverty programmes. The Special Rapporteur outlined the machinery necessary to implement the Programme of Action [YUN 1995, p. 1115] adopted in 1995 at the World Summit for Social Development.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/23], the Subcommission, expressing deep satisfaction to the Special Rapporteur for having prepared his study in consultation with people living in extreme poverty, hoped that his final report would be published by the United Nations in all official languages.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/97.

Human rights and extreme poverty

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and other human rights instruments adopted by the United Nations,

Considering the relevant provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, and of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, adopted by the World Summit on 12 March 1995,

Recalling its resolutions 44/148 of 15 December 1989, 44/212 of 22 December 1989, 45/199 of 21 December 1990, 49/179 of 23 December 1994 and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also its resolutions 47/196 of 22 December 1992, by which it declared 17 October International Day for the Eradication of Poverty, 48/183 of 21 December 1993, by which it proclaimed 1996 International Year for the Eradication of Poverty, and 50/107 of 20 December 1995, by which it proclaimed the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006),

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1992/11 of 21 February 1992, 1993/13 of 26 February 1993, 1994/12 of 25 February 1994, 1995/16 of 24 February 1995 and 1996/10 of 11 April 1996, as well as resolution 1996/23 of 29 August 1996 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Recalling its resolution 47/134 of 18 December 1992, in which it reaffirmed that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constituted a violation of human dignity and stressed the need for a complete and in-depth study of extreme poverty, based on the experience and the thoughts of the poorest,

Recognizing that the existence of widespread extreme poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and might, in some situations, constitute a threat to the right to life,

Deeply concerned that extreme poverty continues to spread in all countries of the world, regardless of their economic, social and cultural situation, and seriously affects the most vulnerable and disadvantaged individuals, families and groups, who are thus hindered in the exercise of their human rights and their fundamental freedoms,

Recognizing that the elimination of widespread poverty and the full enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights are interrelated goals,

Welcoming the work of the Special Rapporteur on the question of human rights and extreme poverty, and taking into account his final report,

1. Reaffirms that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constitute a violation of human dignity and that urgent national and international action is therefore required to eliminate them;

2. Reaffirms also that, in accordance with the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, it is essential for States to foster participation by the poorest people in the decision-making process in the communities in which they live, in the promotion of human rights and in efforts to combat extreme poverty;

3. Notes with satisfaction that the Special Rapporteur, in the process of preparing his final report, has implemented the recommendations of the Commission on Human Rights by paying special attention to the efforts of the poorest themselves and the conditions in which they can convey their experiences;

4. Again calls upon States, the specialized agencies, United Nations bodies and other international organizations, including intergovernmental organizations, to give the necessary attention to this problem and to the necessary follow-up to the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur as contained in his final report;

5. Invites the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, within the framework of the implementation of the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty, to give appropriate attention to the question of human rights and extreme poverty;

6. Notes with appreciation the specific action taken by the United Nations Children's Fund to mitigate the effects of extreme poverty on children and the efforts of the United Nations Development Programme to give priority to the search for some means of alleviating poverty within the framework of the relevant resolutions, and urges them to continue in this work;

7. Decides to consider this question further at its fifty-third session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

General Assembly resolution 51/97

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) without vote, 26 November (meeting 53); 45-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.54); agenda item 110 (b). Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-53; plenary 82.

Right to adequate housing

A July note of the Secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/10] described activities taken regarding the right to adequate housing, which included an expert group meeting (Geneva, 18-19 January) on the human right to adequate housing, convened in preparation for the 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) to be held in Istanbul, Turkey, in June (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII). In addition, action had been taken by the Commission, the Subcommission and the High Commissioner for Human Rights, and the final (1995) report [YUN 1995, p. 764] of the Special Rapporteur on the right to adequate housing had been published in all the UN official languages.

Forced evictions

Commission action. On 11 April [dec. 1996/104], the Commission on Human Rights, by a vote of 22 to 18, with 9 abstentions, decided to recommend that the Economic and Social Council authorize the holding, following Habitat II, of an expert seminar on the practice of forced evictions, with a view to developing human rights guidelines on development-based displacement.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1996/290.

Forced evictions

At its 47th plenary meeting, on 24 July 1996, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights decision 1996/104 of 11 April 1996 and resolution 1995/29 of 24 August 1995 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, and bearing in mind the conclusions of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), which was held in Istanbul, Turkey, from 3 to 14 June 1996, authorized the holding of an expert seminar on the practice of forced evictions, with a view to developing comprehensive human rights guidelines on development-based displacement.

Economic and Social Council decision 1996/290

25-20-5 (recorded vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1996/23); agenda item 5 (d). Meeting numbers. ESC 44, 47.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Gabon, Ghana, Guyana, Indonesia, Jamaica, Jordan, Lebanon, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Paraguay, Philippines, Senegal, South Africa, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belarus, Bulgaria, Canada, Czech Republic, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, India, Ireland, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Poland, Romania, Russian Federation, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Bangladesh, Brazil, Malaysia, Portugal, Thailand.

Report of Secretary-General. In a July report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/11], the Secretary-General updated information contained in his 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 764] concerning guidelines on international events and forced evictions. He stated that good location of the relocation site was one of the most critical aspects of resettlement, as it was the key to access to income-earning opportunities. When relocation was unavoidable, a relocation/resettlement plan should be prepared and implemented that would ensure sufficient resources to fairly compensate and rehabilitate those affected. The parties benefiting from the development causing the relocation should pay full relocation costs. Legislation was required to provide for fair compensation to the affected population; it should specify regulations for the valuation of lost assets, and provide for compensation through the substitution of the lost asset by another of comparable productive capacity. The role of NGOs in the prevention and elimination of forced evictions was of great importance, the report said, because they acted as intermediaries between policy makers and affected persons for the mutual benefit of all those involved, and especially to defend the interests of the victims. The Secretary-General noted that developing guidelines on forced evictions could only be a partial solution. They were important, but should not be allowed to be used as a rationale for encouraging the eviction process.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/27], the Subcommission, reaffirming that the practice of forced eviction constituted a gross violation of a broad range of human rights, strongly urged Governments to take immediate measures to eliminate the practice. It asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to pay attention to the practice and to take measures to persuade Governments to halt planned forced evictions, as well as to ensure the provision of adequate compensation when evictions had already occurred. The Subcommission asked the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements to do everything it could to prevent the practice of forced evictions by using the good offices of the Secretary-General to persuade Governments to refrain from carrying out forced evictions and by compiling annual lists of all eviction cases brought to its attention. The Secretary-General was asked to convene an expert seminar on the practice of forced evictions and the relationship of that practice to internationally recognized human rights, with a view to developing a set of comprehensive human rights guidelines on forced evictions, and to report on the seminar and on the guidelines in 1997.

Right to food

On 29 August [res. 1996/25], the Subcommission appealed to the world's leaders who were to assemble for the World Food Summit in Rome in November 1996 (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII) to reaffirm the right of everyone to be free from hunger; to propose ways in which the right to food could be further clarified and implemented; and to ensure that due advantage be taken of the work of the Commission and the Subcommission, as well as of the UN treaty bodies monitoring the relevant international human rights legal instruments regarding the right to adequate food and other rights relevant to satisfying the nutritional needs of the human being for survival, development, productivity and well-being.

Scientific concerns

Human rights and the environment

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 762], the Secretary-General, in a January report with later addenda [E/CN.4/1996/23 & Add.1,2], summarized the views of eight Governments, as well as of specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, on the final (1994) report of the Special Rapporteur on human rights and the environment [YUN 1994, p. 1123].

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1996/13], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to renew his request for the opinions of Governments, specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on issues raised in the Special Rapporteur's 1994 report, and to report thereon in 1997.

Note by Secretary-General. By a note of 10 July [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/31], the Secretary-General stated that, pursuant to a 1995 Subcommission request [YUN 1995, p. 762], the Commission, in a resolution adopted on 11 April (see above), had extended the time by which it asked the Secretary-General to report on opinions based on the Special Rapporteur's report until at least one session following the report's publication.

Toxic wastes

Report of Special Rapporteur. In February, Special Rapporteur Fatma Zohra Ksentini (Algeria), appointed in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 763] to investigate and examine the effects of the illicit dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes in African and other developing countries on the enjoyment of human rights, submitted a preliminary report [E/CN.4/1996/17]. She noted that the volume of wastes produced by industrialized countries continued to rise, with public opposition having brought about a virtual moratorium on the treatment and disposal of waste in some of those countries. Those difficulties had increased incentives for companies to find outlets for wastes in poor, less industrialized countries. The difference in domestic legal standards and the relative costs of disposing of toxic wastes had provoked multiple movements of wastes across frontiers. Despite general awareness that the transboundary movement of hazardous wastes had become a global problem demanding global solutions, and despite efforts of developing countries to halt international movements of wastes, there had been an increase in their export from industrialized countries towards the developing world, mainly owing to the proliferation of waste

"recycling" programmes, which allowed waste traders to adapt to changing conditions. Other problems were the transfer of polluting industries, industrial activities and technologies that generated hazardous wastes to less industrialized countries, and the production and export to developing countries of products that had been banned, withdrawn, severely restricted or not approved in industrialized countries.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that all States adopt and implement existing conventions relating to the dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes and cooperate in the prevention of illicit dumping.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1996/14], by a roll-call vote of 32 to 16, with 3 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that illicit traffic and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes constituted a serious threat to the human rights to life and good health. It asked the Special Rapporteur, in preparing her next report, to consult all relevant bodies, particularly the secretariat for the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420], and to continue to undertake a study of illicit traffic in, transfer to and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes in African and other developing countries, with a view to making recommendations in her next report on measures to control, reduce and eradicate those phenomena. The Rapporteur intended to include in her next report information on countries and enterprises engaged in the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes in African and other developing countries and information on persons killed, maimed or otherwise injured in developing countries through those acts. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur.

Scientific progress and human rights

On 23 August [dec. 1996/110], the Subcommission decided to entrust Osman El-Hajjé (Lebanon) with the task of preparing a working paper on the potentially adverse consequences of scientific progress, and its applications for the integrity, dignity and human rights of the individual, and called on the international scientific community and the international organizations concerned to cooperate with him.

Slavery and related issues

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/61], the Commission on Human Rights, expressing grave concern at manifestations of contemporary forms of slavery, asked the Secretary-General to invite eligible States that had not ratified or acceded to the three slavery conventions—the 1926 Slavery Convention, the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others [GA res. 317(IV)], and the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery [YUN 1956, p. 228]—to consider doing so. It asked Member States to consider the possibility of taking action to protect particularly vulnerable groups, such as children and migrant women, against exploitation by prostitution and other slavery-like practices. Governments were asked to pursue a policy of information, prevention and rehabilitation of children and women victims of the exploitation of prostitution and to take the necessary economic and social measures. The Commission approved the draft programme of action for the prevention of traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others [YUN 1995, p. 766], while taking note of differences between States in the scope of applicability of their criminal legislation with regard to prostitution and the production, distribution and possession of pornographic material.

The Commission also asked the Secretary-General to examine, in cooperation with relevant UN agencies, particularly the World Health Organization (WHO), as well as the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol) and all relevant NGOs, the reliability of allegations regarding the removal of organs and tissues of children and adults for commercial purposes, in order to enable the Commission to decide on follow-up to the matter. The Secretary-General was asked to designate the Centre for Human Rights as the focal point for the coordination of activities in the UN system for the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its twenty-first session (Geneva, 17-26 June) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/24 & Corr.1], reviewed developments in the area of contemporary forms of slavery and measures to prevent and repress all its forms. It examined the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others, illegal adoptions, traffic in human organs and tissues, bonded labour and child labour, forced labour, migrant workers, and other matters such as early marriages, incest and detained juveniles. The Working Group also addressed the activities of the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women. The review of information provided to the Working Group showed that despite progress made in protecting human rights and preserving human dignity, various forms of slavery still existed and new, insidious forms of slavery were emerging. The Group adopted a series of recommendations on the issues it had considered.

Reports of Secretary-General. In a June report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/1996/4], the Secretary-General provided replies received from Governments and UN organizations and bodies in response to his request for information concerning their investigation of allegations that children were victims of, or even killed for, the removal of organs for commercial transplants and measures taken to counteract that practice wherever it existed.

By another June report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/1996/1], the Secretary-General presented the views of Governments, UN organs and bodies and intergovernmental bodies concerning action taken to combat the sexual exploitation of children.

Subcommission action. On 23 August [res. 1996/12], the Subcommission adopted a resolution on issues considered by the Working Group. The subjects addressed included: prevention of traffic in persons; the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography; traffic in human organs and tissues; eradication of child labour and bonded labour; forced labour; migrant workers; and violence against women.

Fund on slavery

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/61], the Commission on Human Rights, noting with concern that, since its 1991 establishment by the General Assembly [YUN 1991, p. 563], the UN Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, as a result of its continuing difficult financial situation owing to a lack of contributions, could not be used for the purposes for which it was established. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit once again to all Governments the Commission's appeal for contributions to the Fund, and commended the Fund's Board of Trustees for its efforts to remedy the Fund's continuing financial difficulties. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to examine the feasibility of alignment and harmonization of the procedures and mechanisms of the Fund with other existing procedures and mechanisms and to report thereon in 1997.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/18], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to make available to the Working Group the report he had been asked to prepare by the Commission concerning the feasibility of alignment and harmonization of the procedures and mechanisms of the Fund with other existing procedures and mechanisms. It urged Governments and intergovernmental organizations, private institutions and private individuals to respond favourably to requests for contributions to the Fund.

Report of Secretary-General. In a December report [E/CN.4/1997/76], the Secretary-General noted that on 10 December the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights sent a letter drawing the attention of Governments to a Commission appeal for contributions to the Fund. The High Commissioner also sent a letter to the five-member Board of Trustees of the Fund explaining the process of restructuring the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights. In that regard, on 30 September, a provisional team was established to manage five UN trust and voluntary funds dealing with human rights. Therefore, the Secretary-General determined, all matters regarding the UN Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery had been studied and carried out in line with those of other human rights trust funds. It was estimated that the amount available for grants in 1997 totalled $27,524, which might not be sufficient to allow the Board to make recommendations for travel grants to allow a few NGO representatives to participate in the Working Group's 1997 session, or to recommend a few other grants for NGO programmes to be developed in 1997.

Sexual exploitation during periods of armed conflict

Commission action. On 11 April [dec. 1996/107], the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of a 1995 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1995, p. 766], decided to endorse the Subcommission's decision to appoint Linda Chavez (United States) as Special Rapporteur with the task of undertaking an in-depth study of the situation of systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during periods of armed conflict. It also decided to invite Governments, UN bodies, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to provide information on the subject.

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/291, approved the Commission's decision.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In July, Special Rapporteur Linda Chavez submitted her preliminary report on the situation of systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during periods of armed conflict [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/26]. She outlined the purpose and scope of the study and provided a historical overview of the use of systematic rape as an instrument of policy during the First and Second World Wars and in the conflict in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. She reviewed forums with potential jurisdiction to try perpetrators; described possible sanctions against violators of the international law on the subject; identified possible forms of reparations, including compensation, rehabilitation and restitution; and discussed methods of deterrence and prevention. The Special Rapporteur concluded that there was a substantial body of international law relating to systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during wartime, including internal armed conflict. Nonetheless, there was a need for further inquiry as to how those international legal standards could be disseminated broadly, used to prevent further violations, applied to past misconduct, and invoked to provide remedies for victims. She presented an outline of issues for consideration in her final report, scheduled to be made in 1997.

Subcommission action. On 23 August [res. 1996/11], the Subcommission, welcoming the preliminary report of the Special Rapporteur, asked her to submit her final report in 1997.

Vulnerable groups

Women

Violence against women

Report of Special Rapporteur. In February, the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, Radhika Coomaraswamy (Sri Lanka), submitted a report [E/CN.4/1996/53] examining domestic violence as a violation of international human rights law, as well as the question of domestic violence and other forms of violence against women in the family. She presented a checklist of existing national legislation on domestic violence as reported by Governments and analysed the legal mechanisms available in various countries, in connection with which she submitted a framework for model legislation on domestic violence [E/CN.4/1996/53/Add.2]. The Special Rapporteur outlined strategies for States to prevent violence against women, urging them to ratify international human rights instruments; withdraw their reservations to all human rights instruments, particularly the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [GA res. 34/180]; comply with reporting requirements of human rights instruments, ensuring the inclusion of gender-specific information; establish special units or procedures in hospitals to identify women victims of violence and counsel them; define the powers of the police regarding violence against women and provide training to all police; undertake legal literacy campaigns to inform women of their legal rights; ensure that family laws were just and that they provided for the equal protection of women, men and children; ensure women's economic empowerment through equal remuneration for equal work and increased job opportunities; provide a mechanism through which victim-survivors could invoke State protection to enforce their desire to separate; grant full child custody to women in cases of domestic violence; protect the safety of women by allowing them to leave the State or country regardless of whether they had children; recognize the nexus between domestic violence and homelessness; conduct coordinated outreach efforts in various marginalized communities where there were domestic violence problems; broaden refugee and asylum laws to include gender-based claims of persecution, including domestic violence; foster cooperative relationships between State organs and NGOs; collect up-to-date statistical data; reform all laws, practices, policies and procedures that sanctioned the practice of son preference; make easily accessible in written form official policies that affected, restricted or influenced individuals in the family sphere; adopt legislation making female genital mutilation a crime and implement education programmes to prevent the practice; prevent, prosecute and punish perpetrators of incest; recognize marital rape as a crime; and ratify and comply with ILO conventions on the rights of migrant workers to reduce violence against women migrant workers and take an active stance against their abuse. At the international level, the Special Rapporteur recommended adoption and ratification of an optional protocol to the 1979 Convention allowing women the right to seek redress for the violation of their rights; adoption of an international convention on the elimination of violence against women; examination by the Commission of reports prepared by NGOs to assess the response to and inclusion of gender-specific information in their work; expansion of the mandates of thematic mechanisms that lacked specificity regarding violence against women; and the allocation of resources to human rights bodies and mechanisms specifically to address violations of the human rights of women.

Military sexual slavery

In an addendum to her report on violence against women [E/CN.4/1996/53/Add.1 & Corr.1], the Special Rapporteur described her 1995 visit to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), the Republic of Korea and Japan on the issue of military sexual slavery in wartime, notably the provision of women for members of the Japanese Imperial Army during the Second World War.

During the mission, the Special Rapporteur, among other things, attempted to clarify the demands of former "comfort women" and to understand what remedies the Government of Japan was proposing to resolve the matter. The Special Rapporteur summarized some of the 16 testimonies she heard in all three countries and discussed the compensation sought by the women, including their reaction to a proposed settlement by Japan by way of the Asian Peace and Friendship Fund for Women. Japan had established the Fund, to compensate the women with contributions from civilians.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the DPRK had requested Japan to "accept full responsibility under international law for the crimes it committed and, on the basis of that responsibility, apologize for all its acts"; pay compensation to the surviving women; and identify and prosecute under national law all persons involved in the comfort women establishment. The Special Rapporteur presented the DPRK's legal interpretation with regard to Japan's liabilities under international law.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the position of the Republic of Korea was different from that of the DPRK, in that a 1965 bilateral treaty between the Republic of Korea and Japan had settled property claims resulting from the Japanese occupation, but not personal damages. No demands for financial compensation had been made by the Republic of Korea; however, it supported the activities of NGOs and women's groups defending the rights of the surviving victims.

The Special Rapporteur said that Japan had argued that the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims and other instruments of international law did not exist during the period of the Second World War and, therefore, the Government was not responsible for violating international humanitarian law. Japan had admitted that the "then Japanese military was directly or indirectly involved in the establishment and management of comfort stations and the transfer of comfort women", and that military personnel had taken part directly in the recruitment, which was carried out against the will of the women. The Special Rapporteur stated that the Government of Japan had not accepted legal responsibility, but in many statements appeared to accept moral responsibility.

The Special Rapporteur saw the Fund as an expression of the Government's moral concern for the fate of comfort women.

The Special Rapporteur made a series of recommendations for action by Japan, including that Japan should pay compensation to individual victims and set up a special administrative tribunal for that purpose with a limited time-frame, since many of the victims were of a very advanced age; ensure a full disclosure of documents and materials relating to the situation; make a public apology in writing to individual women who had come forward and could be substantiated as victims; amend educational curricula to reflect historical realities; and identify and punish perpetrators. In addition, she proposed that international NGOs continue to raise awareness of the issues within the United Nations; that an attempt be made to seek an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice (ICJ); and that the Governments of the DPRK and the Republic of Korea consider requesting the help of ICJ to resolve the legal issues concerning Japanese responsibility and payment of compensation to the women.

Other reports

Later reports of the Special Rapporteur discussed her mission to Poland (24 May-1 June) on the issue of trafficking and forced prostitution of women; to Brazil (15-26 July) on the issue of domestic violence; and to South Africa (11-18 October) on the issue of rape in the community.

Poland. Concerning her visit to Poland, the Special Rapporteur stated that her report [E/CN.4/1997/47/Add.1] on trafficking and forced prostitution of women was intended as a case study of a phenomenon that affected many countries of origin in Central and Eastern Europe in addition to Poland, such as Belarus, the Czech Republic, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, as well as a number of countries of destination, such as Austria, Belgium, Germany, the Netherlands and Switzerland. In addition, Poland, owing to its geographical location in Central Europe, was not only a country of origin for trafficking, but also a transit country for those women who moved from Eastern Europe to the West.

The Special Rapporteur stated that there was a strong correlation between trafficking and unemployment. It was also contended, the Special Rapporteur said, that economic liberalization brought with it organized enterprises involved in sex and pornography.

The Special Rapporteur identified the most common types of prostitution and enumerated ways to combat the problem. She stated that the international framework governing trafficking and forced prostitution was the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others [GA res. 317(IV)], which she noted established no mechanism to oversee the Convention's implementation. Mistrust of the police was seen as a major obstacle, especially in countries of destination.

Recommendations included increased cooperation, regionally and internationally, to combat trafficking, and to exchange information among the police and the judiciary; revision of the immigration policies of countries of destination; expanding the Human Rights, Ethics and Law Network of the HIV/AIDS and Development Programme of UNDP to include a focus on women victims of forced prostitution and trafficking; formulating a national policy to eliminate the problem of forced prostitution and trafficking; constructing social policy to ensure that marginalized women were given alternative avenues for their vocations and livelihood; and putting forward educational material that combated negative stereotypes of women. The Special Rapporteur also proposed that NGOs and women's groups attempt to set up at local levels organizations and groups to help women victims of trafficking and prostitution.

Brazil. The Special Rapporteur visited Brazil [E/CN.4/1997/47/Add.2] to study the issue of domestic violence against women. She explained that intimacy complicated and obscured the criminality of the use of physical violence in cases of domestic violence. Economic independence was a crucial factor affecting women's response to domestic violence, as most victims did not have alternative accommodation, independent livelihoods or the means to pay for legal proceedings. Many people with whom the Special Rapporteur met noted the importance in Brazilian society of machismo—the notion of male superiority—which was said to result in extreme male dominance. She stated that although many cultures shared a sense of male superiority, machismo legitimized not only male superiority but the use of violence against women. There existed a general perception that black women were more susceptible to violence, and that violence in upper-class families was less reported because of the stigma attached to reporting to the police.

Regarding combative and preventive measures, the Special Rapporteur stated that Brazil was a State party to the 1979 Convention [YUN 1979, p. 895] and had withdrawn all of its reservations. At the regional level, it was a signatory to the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence against Women and was bound to its obligations. The Government had developed a plethora of programmes aimed at raising awareness with regard to violence against women, and the Brazilian legislature had taken many initiatives at federal and state levels. As to the judiciary, according to an expert, only 2 per cent of male perpetrators were actually convicted, and sentences in cases of domestic violence were often for less than one year. The Ministry of Justice was trying to promote alternative sentences and rehabilitation programmes for perpetrators, since such actions were felt to be more effective than imprisonment.

The Special Rapporteur recommended disseminating ideas and concepts contained in the 1993 Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women [GA res. 48/104]; establishing a clearing house for information on ways to combat domestic violence; devising an integrated strategy aimed at eliminating violence against women in all parts of the country; establishing shelters for victims and rehabilitation programmes for perpetrators; and creating specialized domestic violence courts.

South Africa. At the invitation of the Government of South Africa, the Special Rapporteur visited [E/CN.4/1997/47/Add.3] Pretoria, Johannesburg and Cape Town to study the issue of rape in the community. The Special Rapporteur concluded that, in addition to the inherently violent character of the society, the status, real and perceived, of South African women greatly contributed to their victimization through rape and sexual violence. She stressed that the measures taken by the Government to eliminate violence against women, particularly rape, had only been in place for a very short time and their effectiveness could not be fully evaluated. She recommended that South Africa ratify the human rights instruments to which it was a signatory; take measures to accede to the First [YUN 1966, p. 423] and Second [YUN 1989, p. 484] Optional Protocols to the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and to the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families [GA res. 45/158]; re-define and develop the criminal justice system; increase the number of female officers in the police services; amend rules of evidence regarding sexual violence; ensure for the whole police force mandatory programmes of awareness-raising and training regarding gender issues and problems associated with investigating and prosecuting violence against women; and introduce changes in school and university curricula to teach a balanced gender perspective, and mandatory gender-sensitization training in medical and legal schools.

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/49], the Commission on Human Rights condemned all acts of gender-based violence against women, and emphasized the duty of Governments to refrain from engaging in violence against women and to prevent, investigate and punish such acts. It also condemned all violations of the human rights of women in situations of armed conflict and called for an effective response to those violations, particularly murder, systematic rape, sexual slavery and forced pregnancy. Stressing the Special Rapporteur's conclusions and recommendations, the Commission called on States to ratify and implement relevant international human rights instruments; include in reports information pertaining to violence against women and measures taken to implement the 1993 Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women [GA res. 48/104]; enact or reinforce penal, civil, labour and administrative sanctions in domestic legislation to punish and redress the wrongs done to women and girls who were subjected to violence; create, improve or develop, and fund training programmes for judicial, legal, medical, social, educational and police and immigrant personnel; enact and enforce legislation against perpetrators; condemn violence against women and not invoke custom, tradition or practices in the name of religion to avoid obligations to eliminate such violence; promote research, collect data and compile statistics relating to the prevalence of different forms of violence against women and encourage research into the causes, nature, seriousness and consequences of violence against women; cooperate with special rapporteurs; and enact and enforce legislation protecting girls from all forms of violence, including female infanticide and prenatal sex selection, genital mutilation, incest, sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, child prostitution and child pornography. The Commission asked Governments to support initiatives of women's organizations and NGOs to raise awareness of the problem and to contribute to its elimination. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to assist the Special Rapporteur and provide adequate assistance for periodic consultations with the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) (see PART THREE, Chapter X). He was also asked to ensure that the Special Rapporteur's reports were brought to the attention of the Commission on the Status of Women and of CEDAW.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1996/12, urged Member States to undertake strategies, develop policies and disseminate materials to promote women's safety in the home and in society at large, including specific crime prevention strategies that reflected the realities of women's lives and addressed their distinct needs concerning social development, environmental design and educational programmes in crime prevention.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/21], the Subcommission asked that, where appropriate, studies submitted at its 1997 session include gender-disaggregated statistics and discuss ways in which gender affected the various forms of abuse to which women were subjected, the consequences of those abuses, the availability and accessibility of remedies, the relationship between the abuses suffered by women and the subordinate status of women in public and private life, any gaps in existing international standards of protection, and gender-specific recommendations to remedy those violations.

The Secretary-General was asked to ensure that UN human rights and humanitarian relief personnel received training to enable them to recognize and address human rights violations directed at women and to carry out their work without gender bias.

Violence against women migrant workers

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1996/17], the Commission on Human Rights called on States to adopt measures for the effective implementation of the 1993 Declaration, including applying them to women migrant workers, as well as all relevant measures emanating from recent world conferences. It asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Centre for Human Rights and the Special Rapporteur on violence against women as well as all relevant UN bodies and programmes, to give particular attention to the issue of violence perpetrated against women migrant workers. It welcomed the UN expert group meeting on the issue of violence against women migrant workers (see below), which had been asked to submit to the General Assembly in 1996 recommendations for improving coordination of the various efforts of UN agencies on the issue of violence against women migrant workers and to develop concrete indicators as a basis for determining the situation of women migrant workers. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to consider reporting in 1997 on the issue of violence against women migrant workers.

Expert group meeting. In September, the Secretary-General presented the conclusions and recommendations [A/51/325] of the expert group meeting on violence against women migrant workers (Manila, Philippines, 27-31 May) and the actions taken throughout the UN system on the situation of women migrant workers, as well as comments from Governments describing approaches in dealing with the issue.

The expert group meeting focused on the development of indicators and on improving coordination among UN organizations with respect to the problem of violence against women workers. The meeting made extensive recommendations on the types of indicators that might be used; they covered the issues both of violence against women and of tracking international migration conditions. The meeting recommended that the appropriate UN body undertake as soon as possible studies in selected sending and receiving countries to obtain valid basic data on the extent and nature of violence against women migrant workers and to gain an in-depth understanding of the impact of violence on women migrant workers, their families and their communities. Concerning coordination within the United Nations, the meeting recommended that the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) serve as the focal point responsible for coordinating initiatives on the problem. The report said that ACC, its task forces and the Inter-Agency Committee on Women should examine the mandates and policies of UN agencies and bodies to identify where their work could be enhanced, as well as undertake a review of the effectiveness of existing policies on migration, women and violence against women to identify gaps in addressing issues related to violence against women migrant workers.

On 12 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 51/65, asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur on violence against women and all relevant UN bodies, when addressing the issue of violence against women, to give particular attention to the issue of violence perpetrated against women migrant workers.

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and children

Report of Special Rapporteur. In June, the Special Rapporteur on traditional practices affecting the health of women and children, Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco), submitted a report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/6] containing information received from Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on progress achieved and obstacles encountered in implementing the 1994 Plan of Action for the Elimination of Harmful Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children [YUN 1994, p. 1123].

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/19], the Subcommission regretted the lack of information from Governments on the implementation of the Plan of Action. It stressed the importance of continuing to monitor measures taken by Governments towards the elimination of those practices, particularly through the Plan of Action. The Subcommission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for two additional years and called on the Centre for Human Rights to assist her. The Secretary-General was asked to transmit the Special Rapporteur's final report to the Commission.

Traffic in women and girls

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/24], the Commission on Human Rights called on Governments of origin, transit and destination, and regional and international organizations, to implement the Platform for Action of the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1170] by: ratifying and enforcing international conventions on trafficking in persons and on slavery; addressing the root factors of traffic in women and girls; stepping up cooperation and concerted action by relevant law enforcement authorities; allocating resources to provide programmes to heal and rehabilitate into society victims of trafficking; and developing educational and training programmes and policies and considering enacting legislation aimed at preventing sex tourism and trafficking. It asked the Subcommission to encourage its Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery to continue to address the issue of traffic in women and girls.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1189], the Secretary-General in August reported [A/51/309] on traffic in women and girls. He described the problem and reviewed national and international laws and treaties, and discussed approaches and measures to address trafficking taken by the Commission on the Status of Women, the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as well as measures taken at the national level.

The Secretary-General presented a series of recommendations on possible measures to improve reporting on the implementation of international instruments concerned with the problem.

On 12 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 51/66, called on Governments to criminalize trafficking in women and girls and to condemn and penalize all offenders.

Women in the UN

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/48], the Commission on Human Rights called for intensified effort at the international level to integrate the equal status and human rights of women into the mainstream of UN system-wide activity and to address those issues throughout relevant UN bodies and mechanisms. Welcoming the report of the 1995 expert group meeting on the development of guidelines for the integration of a gender perspective into human rights and programmes [YUN 1995, p. 767], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to distribute the report widely. The Commission encouraged the further strengthening of cooperation and coordination between the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on the Status of Women (see PART THREE, Chapter X) and between the Centre for Human Rights and the United Nations Division for the Advancement of Women, and requested that the joint work plan of the Centre and the Division be made available to the Commission on Human Rights and to the Commission on the Status of Women in 1997. It urged relevant UN entities and human rights bodies, as well as the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, to provide training in the human rights of women for all UN personnel and officials, especially those in human rights and humanitarian relief activities, and promote their understanding of the human rights of women. States and relevant UN bodies were asked to include in their human rights education activities information on the human rights of women. The Commission asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to consider assigning a high-level staff member within his Office the task of providing advice on integrating the human rights of women throughout the Centre, as well as liaison with other relevant UN bodies on the matter. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1997.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/21], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to ensure the reinforcement and further development of the integration of women's human rights into the mainstream of UN activities; to establish the post of focal point on women in the Centre for Human Rights and to ensure that women's human rights were effectively supported at all levels in the UN system; and to fulfil his target of having women hold 50 per cent of managerial and decision-making positions by the year 2000.

Children

Sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a January report [E/CN.4/1996/100], the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, Ofelia Calcetas-Santos (Philippines), discussed developments occurring during the period October 1994 to November 1995 concerning trafficking in minors, and their sale for commercial adoption, prostitution, pornography, the exploitation of child labour, use of children in armed conflicts, organ transplants and other purposes, including early marriages and blood donation. Based on information received from Governments and NGOs, the Special Rapporteur reviewed developments in the three catalysts for instituting reforms to benefit children, namely, the justice system, the educational system and the media.

The Special Rapporteur's recommendations at the international level were to establish an inventory of UN and civilian initiatives and programmes; hold various topical international conferences; review legislation with a view to harmonization; impose extremely severe penalties on those convicted of child abuse; improve communication and coordination between UN entities concerned with child abuse; and devise a quick-action standard operating procedure to respond to urgent cases. At the national and local levels, the Special Rapporteur recommended building a network of contacts for standardized gathering of data, as well as a network to gather evidence on specific cases, with the assistance of UN specialized agencies; designating a focal point to coordinate network construction; and reviewing national laws to determine if they conformed to international standards. As for child sex tourism, the Special Rapporteur stated that Governments—not only national tourism administrations—as well as the operational sector of tourism should define responsibilities and identify possibilities for joint action. That action, she stated, should be coupled with monitoring mechanisms for effectively imposing sanctions.

Commission action. On 24 April [res. 1996/85], the Commission on Human Rights, welcoming the Special Rapporteur's report, asked the Secretary-General to assist her to discharge her mandate fully and to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1996 and to the Commission in 1997. It welcomed the convening in August of the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (see below).

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/288 of 24 July, approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General.

On the same date, the Council, by resolution 1996/26, invited interested Governments fighting illicit trafficking in children to collect, wherever possible, data and other information on the problem in accordance with national legislation, and to furnish the information to the UN Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (see PART THREE, Chapter IX).

World Congress. By a letter of 20 September [A/51/385], Sweden transmitted the text of the Declaration and Agenda for Action adopted on 28 August by the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Stockholm, 27-31 August). The Congress was organized by the Government of Sweden, in cooperation with UNICEF, End Child Prostitution in Asian Tourism, and the NGO Group for the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The Declaration outlined the challenge to protect children from commercial sexual exploitation and the commitment of the Congress against such exploitation. The Agenda aimed at highlighting existing international instruments, identifying priorities for action and assisting in implementing relevant international instruments. It called for action from States, all sectors of society, and national, regional and international organizations.

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. By an October note [A/51/456], the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report. Having participated in various seminars and conferences during the year on the issue of trafficking in children and child prostitution and pornography, the Special Rapporteur noted that the main concern was the problem of sexual exploitation of children and its escalation; therefore, she had focused her report on the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

The Special Rapporteur cited causes of the problem: population growth; the erosion of the family structure, and of societal and spiritual values; and the low priority given to development and protection of children in the political sphere, especially in terms of budgetary allocations. Characteristics typifying most commercial sexual exploitation of children were that it was invisible, mobile, global, escalating and highly profitable. The Special Rapporteur presented profiles of victims and abusers, and examined motivations for child sexual abuse and effects on children.

In considering the justice system, the Special Rapporteur focused on problems associated with law enforcement, prosecution of cases, children appearing before a court of law, and recovery and reintegration programmes. She recommended appointing special police officers to look into cases involving children; conducting information campaigns in cases of perceived police corruption or inefficiency; setting up mobile units for surveillance of places where children were at greater risk; enforcing laws aimed at protecting children; community involvement in the law enforcement process; safeguarding the rights of children during criminal court proceedings; ensuring confidentiality of records; utilizing sight-separation procedures (closed-circuit television testimony, video monitors, deposition) during hearings to protect a child victim from confronting the accused; improving access to legal and other remedies; and promoting dialogue between the relevant agencies involved in the justice system.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the prosecution of international crimes against children was extremely difficult, expensive and time-consuming. Not only were substantive and procedural issues endemic, but national concerns and priorities might also be dissimilar. Differences in language and legal systems and the need to bring witnesses from abroad further complicated the issue. The Special Rapporteur recommended that cooperative efforts be made by countries and outlined a series of measures for establishing them.

In later reports, the Special Rapporteur described her visits to the Czech Republic (20-25 May) [E/CN.4/1997/95/Add.1] and the United States (9-20 December) [E/CN.4/1997/95/Add.2], which were made at the request of those Governments.

Czech Republic. During her visit to the Czech Republic (Prague, Plzen, Brno, Usti nad Labem, Teplice), the Special Rapporteur met with governmental and non-governmental organizations and concerned individuals, and visited some field projects assisting children.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the general picture in the Czech Republic was encouraging. Police officers, social workers and NGOs in Prague, Teplice and Usti stated that they had never come across any case of the sale of babies. Nothing concrete was reported to the Special Rapporteur concerning trafficking in organs. Cross-border trafficking of children occurred in such areas as North Bohemia in the north-east of the country, bordering Germany. Police officers stated that there was considerable trafficking of prostitutes across the border involving children between the ages of 15 and 18, but that children under 15 were not involved. The Special Rapporteur noted that under Czech law, with respect to sexual consent and sexual relations, a child was a person under 15. Therefore, persons from ages 15 to 18 were considered as minors, but were no longer children. Some NGOs reported cases of young girls and women wanting to work in Germany who often had accepted dubious job offers, and who most of the time ended up in situations of sexual exploitation. According to the Czech authorities, in recent years the number of children involved in prostitution and pornography, both girls and boys, had increased steeply, mostly in Prague and North Bohemia.

NGOs working in the street reported that there were hundreds of boy prostitutes in Prague, the majority boys ages 14 to 20 who had run away from home. Some were homosexuals, but the majority were heterosexual. Most came from dysfunctional families; they either were runaway boys or had been rejected by their parents. Child pornography, which in the Czech Republic mainly referred to pornography involving boys, was a growing concern. It was reported that pornography in the country was usually backed by foreign companies. Sex tourism was described by both governmental and non-governmental sources as a growing phenomenon, with children among its main victims.

The Special Rapporteur expressed concern over minority groups in the Czech Republic, particularly the Gypsy community. She was of the impression that children belonging to those groups were further marginalized because of the attitude in some sectors that the problems of children in prostitution and pornography were not very serious.

The Special Rapporteur recommended, among other things, establishing a focal point to coordinate the concerns of children; adopting a non-punitive approach to children involved in prostitution; patrolling known areas where boys were available as prostitutes; enhancing cooperation between government agencies and NGOs dealing with children; instituting control measures to prevent the use of children for pornography; installing greater control and monitoring mechanisms in border regions to prevent trafficking; and reviewing programmes and initiatives to ensure that they did not result in unforeseen adverse effects.

United States. In the United States, the Special Rapporteur visited Washington, D.C., New York, Tucson, Phoenix and San Francisco, where she met with high-level government officials and representatives of non-governmental and children's organizations. She said she had decided to visit the country on the basis of information and materials submitted to her pointing to the existence of child prostitution and child pornography. She also wished to explore the phenomenon of child pornography and the impact of the Internet in that area in a developed country. In addition, the Special Rapporteur was interested in studying the many initiatives undertaken in the United States, by both Government and NGOs, to combat those problems.

Most experts the Special Rapporteur interviewed believed that broken families and child abuse within families were the main reasons why children ran away from home. In addition, there were children living on the street who had been thrown out of their homes. She was concerned that statistics and data seemed to be lacking across the country as to the extent of the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

With the exception of a few cases, she said, commercial sexual exploitation of children seemed to be concentrated in certain areas of the Texas-Mexico border and the California-Mexico border. Customs officials stated that the transportation of children from Mexico to the United States for prostitution by wealthy citizens was a concern. Child prostitutes in San Francisco came from all racial, ethnic and social backgrounds and were as young as nine years old. According to the police, there were 4,000 to 7,000 street children in the city, of whom an estimated 45 to 50 per cent did not want to return home. Police experts were on 24-hour call for cases involving child prostitution and pornography, and investigations followed an approach instituted in 1984 whereby a social worker, a doctor or nurse therapist and a police officer immediately attended to the child victims.

In San Francisco, lifetime probation for convicted child-sex offenders was obligatory; registration was required both yearly, on their birthdays, and when they changed residences. Currently, there were 3,000 registered child molesters, of whom some 200 were paedophiles.

As to child pornography and the Internet, the Special Rapporteur noted that computer networks led paedophiles to contact like-minded individuals, with such communications often constituting a support basis for their actions. As paedophiles preferred moving images and video sound to computer images, their use of the Internet was limited mainly to communication, with videos being sent by mail. The Special Rapporteur stated that a development which had overtaken legislation was the "morphing" of children's bodies and images to create a "virtual child". She felt strongly that whether the image was real or imaginary, the effects remained the same. As for the accessibility of child pornography by children, the Special Rapporteur stated that parents and family must take responsibility.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the United States Supreme Court, in December, agreed to study the Communications Decency Act to decide, in 1997, whether Congress had violated constitutional rights of free speech by attempting to restrict indecency on the Internet.

In her conclusions and recommendations, the Special Rapporteur urged the United States Government systematically to gather information and data on the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and called on the United States to ratify the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [GA res. 34/180] and the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [GA res. 44/25]. She was encouraged by the many federal and state initiatives to investigate commercial sexual exploitation and recommended that successful investigations be publicized nationwide to raise public awareness and to act as a deterrent to potential perpetrators.

Child labour

Commission action. On 24 April [res. 1996/85], the Commission on Human Rights called on Governments to take measures to ensure the protection of children from economic exploitation, and urged them to eliminate extreme forms of child labour, such as forced labour, bonded labour and other forms of slavery.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 704], the Secretary-General reported [A/51/492] in October on UN initiatives and programmes, and those of its affiliated agencies, addressing the exploitation of child labour. He noted the provisions of various international human rights instruments, International Labour Organization (ILO) mechanisms, activities of the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission, the work of the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), and UNICEF-supported country-specific programmes that addressed child labour.

The Secretary-General proposed national and international measures aimed at improving cooperation to address child labour issues.

Programme of Action

In a June report with a later addendum [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/25 & Add.1], the Secretary-General provided information received from Governments on measures they had adopted to implement the Programme of Action for the Elimination of the Exploitation of Child Labour [YUN 1993, p. 965], adopted by the Commission on Human Rights in 1993.

Children and armed conflict

Report of Secretary-General. In a February report [E/CN.4/1996/110], the Secretary-General updated information on a study by expert Graça Machel (Mozambique) on the protection of children in armed conflict, as called for by the General Assembly in 1993 [GA res. 48/157]. The study was being undertaken with the support of the UN Centre for Human Rights and UNICEF.

The Secretary-General stated that the expert had made field visits to countries affected by armed conflicts, notably Angola, Cambodia, Lebanon, Rwanda and Sierra Leone. Three regional consultations were held: on the impact of armed conflict on children in the Horn of and eastern, central and southern Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, April 1995); on the impact of armed conflict on children in the Arab region (Cairo, Egypt, August 1995); and on the impact of armed conflict on children in West and Central Africa (Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire, November 1995). The World Conference on Religion and Peace (Geneva, August 1995) also discussed the issue at a special seminar which adopted statements [E/CN.4/1996/110/Add.1].

Expert study. By a note of 26 August [A/51/306], the Secretary-General transmitted the expert's study on the impact of armed conflict on children to the Assembly.

The expert documented some of the most grave impacts of armed conflict on children, stating that one of the most alarming trends was the participation of children as soldiers. They usually had served in supporting roles, such as cooks, porters, messengers and spies, but increasingly were being conscripted as soldiers. Most child soldiers were adolescents, though many were 10 years old or younger, and while the majority were boys, girls also were recruited. The expert discussed the recruitment of children, how they were used, their demobilization and reintegration into society, and steps to prevent recruitment. She recommended the launching of a global campaign aimed at eradicating the problem; quiet diplomacy by UN bodies, specialized agencies and international civil society with government and non-State forces to encourage the demobilization of child soldiers; including demobilization and reintegration measures in peace agreements; and ensuring the conclusion of the drafting of the optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on involvement of children in armed conflicts (see PART TWO, Chapter I).

Noting that at least half of all refugees and displaced people were children, the expert stated that in the course of displacement, millions of children had been separated from their families, physically abused, exploited and abducted into military groups, or had perished from hunger and disease. She discussed the vulnerability of children in flight, unaccompanied children who had been separated from both parents and not in the care of another adult, children whose parents decide to evacuate them from an area of armed conflict by sending them to friends or relatives or having them join large-scale programmes, children in refugee and displacement camps, the situation of internally displaced children, children seeking asylum and children returning to their home communities. She recommended adopting procedures to ensure the survival and protection of unaccompanied children; caring for unaccompanied children in their extended family or the community rather than in institutions; prioritizing measures, in all assistance programmes in refugee and displacement camps, to prevent sexual violence, discrimination in delivery of relief materials, and the recruitment of children into the armed forces; addressing the assistance and protection needs of internally displaced children; developing a legal framework to increase protection for internally displaced persons, emphasizing the concerns of children; and supporting Governments in strengthening national legislation challenging any aspect of discrimination against women, girls and child-headed households, particularly with respect to custody, inheritance and property rights. The expert urged UNICEF, UNHCR, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and ILO to give urgent attention to the situation of child-headed households, and to develop policy and programme guidelines to ensure their protection and care.

The report stated that rape posed a continual threat to women and girls during armed conflict, as did other forms of gender-based violence, including prostitution, sexual humiliation and mutilation, trafficking and domestic violence. Boys were also affected, and cases of young boys who had been raped or forced into prostitution, according to the expert, were underreported. She described situations of child victims of prostitution and sexual exploitation during wartime and the failure to denounce and prosecute wartime rape and other gender-based violence in armed conflict, and discussed preventing gender-based violence. The expert recommended emphasizing, in humanitarian responses in conflict situations, the reproductive health needs of women and girls, which included the issues of access to family planning services, pregnancy as a result of rape, sexual mutilation, childbirth at an early age or infection with sexually transmitted diseases, and the psychosocial needs of mothers who had been subjected to gender-based violence. She also recommended training for military personnel, including peacekeeping personnel, on their responsibilities towards civilian communities, particularly towards women and children; establishing reporting systems for sexual abuse; treating rape as a war crime; improving security in refugee and displaced persons camps for women and girls; and establishing support programmes for victims of sexual abuse and gender-based violence.

As to the threat of landmines and unexploded ordnance, the expert stated that currently children in at least 68 countries lived amid the contamination of 110 million landmines, added to which were millions of items of unexploded ordnance, bombs, shells and grenades that had failed to detonate on impact. She discussed the special danger of landmines and unexploded ordnance to children; mine clearance; mine awareness and rehabilitation programmes that helped children recover; and the need for an international ban on the use of landmines. Her recommendations dealt with enacting legislation to ban the production, use, trade and stockpiling of landmines; establishing humanitarian mine clearance as part of all peace agreements; government provision of resources to support long-term humanitarian mine clearance; and the holding of a technical workshop on mine clearance by the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs, UNICEF, UNESCO and involved NGOs.

The expert observed that an issue closely related to armed conflict was the serious impact on children of the imposition of economic sanctions. Most sanctions exempted critical humanitarian supplies from general embargoes, but those exemptions tended to be ambiguous and were interpreted both arbitrarily and inconsistently. They often caused resource shortages; disrupted the distribution of food, pharmaceuticals and sanitation supplies; and affected the quality of food, water, air and medicine. The expert proposed ensuring that sanctions provided for humanitarian, child-focused exemptions; exempting UN specialized agency and NGO humanitarian assistance programmes from approval by the Security Council Sanctions Committee; minimizing, in the planning of a targeted sanctions regime, impact on vulnerable groups, particularly children; and monitoring by the Security Council Sanctions Committee of the humanitarian impact of sanctions and amending them if they caused undue suffering to children.

Concerning health and nutrition, the expert pointed out that many current armed conflicts took place in some of the world's poorest countries, where children were already acutely vulnerable to malnutrition and disease. The increased spread of communicable diseases, insufficient attention to reproductive health issues, the destruction of health facilities, the disruption of food supplies and malnutrition were other health and nutrition hazards of armed conflict. The expert recommended ensuring the maintenance of basic health systems and services and water supplies by all parties to a conflict; carrying out child-focused basic health needs assessments by organizations working in conflict situations; government facilitation of "days of tranquillity" or "corridors of peace" to ensure continuity of basic child-health measures and delivery of humanitarian relief; and a consolidated approach by UN agencies to ensure that emergency food and other relief distribution was structured to strengthen family unity, integrity and coping mechanisms. She proposed that parties in conflict refrain from destroying food crops, water sources and agricultural infrastructure, and urged the World Health Organization (WHO), in collaboration with professional, humanitarian and human rights organizations, to encourage doctors, paediatricians and other health workers to disseminate child rights information and to report human rights violations.

Apart from direct violence, children were under stress from other dimensions of armed conflict, including destroyed homes, splintered communities, and the breakdown of trust among people. There were also psychosocial concerns such as loss, grief and fear. The expert suggested taking into account psychosocial considerations in all phases of emergency and reconstruction assistance programmes; focusing programmes on supporting the healing process and re-establishing a sense of normalcy; and preventing the institutionalization of children.

The expert noted that education gave shape and structure to children's lives, and while all around might be in chaos during periods of armed conflict, schooling could represent normality. She proposed making efforts to maintain education systems during conflicts; making preparations to sustain education outside formal school buildings; extending emergency donor funding to include support for education; bringing children together for educational activities as soon as refugee or displaced persons camps were established; and prioritizing support for the re-establishment and continuity of education by donors and NGOs. The expert urged CRC to issue strong guidance to States parties on the interpretation of articles of the Convention on the Rights of the Child [GA res. 44/25] relating to their responsibility to provide education to children.

The expert highlighted relevant features of humanitarian and human rights law, and discussed the reconstruction of war-torn societies in terms of children and their families.

The expert recommended the establishment of a Special Representative of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict who would act as a standing observer, assessing progress achieved and difficulties encountered in implementing the recommendations of the study. She proposed that the Special Representative would raise awareness of the plight of children affected by armed conflict; promote information collection, research, analysis and dissemination; encourage the development of networking to exchange experiences and facilitate the adoption of measures to improve the situation of children; contribute to coordination efforts; report annually to the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights; work closely with CRC, relevant UN bodies, specialized agencies and other bodies, including NGOs; and maintain contact with the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs and the Inter-Agency Standing Committee. The expert made a series of recommendations for action by Governments, UN bodies, programmes and funds, specialized agencies and other bodies.

A separate addendum [A/51/306/Add.1] to the expert's report contained statements adopted at the three regional consultations and seminar held in 1995 (see above), as well as those adopted in 1996 at the regional consultation on the impact of armed conflict on children in Asia and the Pacific (Manila, 13-15 March); the regional consultation on the impact of armed conflict on children in Latin America and the Caribbean (Santa Fé de Bogota, Colombia, 17-19 April); and the regional consultation on the impact of armed conflict on children in Europe (Florence, Italy, 10-12 June). The addendum also contained a bibliography on children and armed conflict.

The rights of the child

On 12 December, the General Assembly, after considering a wide range of issues relating to children's rights (see also preceding chapter and PART THREE, Chapters X and XI), adopted resolution 51/77.

The rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/153 of 21 December 1995, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/85 of 24 April 1996,

Encouraged by the widespread commitment and political will shown by the unprecedented number of States that have become parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, while noting that the goal of achieving universal ratification by 1995 was not reached,

Seriously concerned about those reservations to the Convention which are contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention or otherwise contrary to international treaty law, and recalling that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, urges States to withdraw such reservations,

Reaffirming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, which states that national and international mechanisms and programmes should be strengthened for the defence and protection of children, in particular the girl child, abandoned children, street children, economically and sexually exploited children, including through child pornography, child prostitution or sale of organs, children victims of diseases, including acquired immunodeficiency syndrome, refugee and displaced children, children in detention, children in armed conflict and children victims of famine, drought and other emergencies, and also requires measures against female infanticide and harmful child labour,

Reaffirming also that the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration in all actions concerning children,

Noting with appreciation the important work carried out by the United Nations, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and the expert designated by the Secretary-General to undertake the study on the impact of armed conflict on children,

Recognizing the valuable work done by relevant inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations for the promotion and protection of the rights of the child,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of inadequate social and economic conditions, poverty, natural disasters, armed conflicts, displacement, exploitation, racism and all forms of intolerance, unemployment, rural-to-urban migration, illiteracy, hunger, disability and drug abuse, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Recognizing that legislation per se is not enough to prevent violations of the rights of the child, that stronger political commitment is needed and that Governments should implement their laws and complement legislative measures with effective action, inter alia, in the fields of law enforcement and the administration of justice and in social, educational and public health programmes,

Recalling the recommendation made by the World Conference on Human Rights that matters relating to human rights and the situation of children be regularly reviewed and monitored by all relevant organs and mechanisms of the United Nations system and by supervisory bodies of the specialized agencies in accordance with their mandates,

I

Implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child

1. Welcomes the unprecedented number of one hundred and eighty-seven States that have ratified or acceded to the Convention on the Rights of the Child as a universal commitment to the rights of the child;

2. Urges once again all States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority, with a view to reaching the goal of universal adherence established by the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, and reiterated in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

3. Reaffirms that all States have a duty to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments, and, in this regard, emphasizes the importance of the full implementation by States parties of the provisions of the Convention;

4. Urges States parties to the Convention which have made reservations to review the compatibility of their reservations with article 51 of the Convention and other relevant rules of international law, with the aim of withdrawing them;

5. Also urges States parties to the Convention to accept the amendment to paragraph 2 of article 43 of the Convention, which would increase the membership of the Committee on the Rights of the Child from ten to eighteen experts;

6. Welcomes the report of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, submitted pursuant to article 44, paragraph 5, of the Convention, and notes with appreciation the constructive role played by the Committee in creating awareness of the principles and provisions of the Convention and in providing recommendations to States parties on its implementation;

7. Calls upon States parties to the Convention to ensure that the education of the child shall be carried out in accordance with article 29 of the Convention and that the education be directed, inter alia, to the development of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, for the Charter of the United Nations and for different cultures and to the preparation of the child for responsible life in a free society, in the spirit of understanding, peace, tolerance, equality of the sexes and friendship among peoples, ethnic, national and religious groups and persons of indigenous origin;

8. Also calls upon States parties to the Convention, in accordance with their obligation under article 42 of the Convention, to make the principles and provisions of the Convention widely known to adults and children alike;

9. Stresses that the implementation of the Convention contributes to the achievement of the goals of the World Summit for Children as emphasized in the report of the Secretary-General on the progress at mid-decade on implementation of General Assembly resolution 45/217 of 21 December 1990 on the World Summit for Children;

II

Protection of children affected by armed conflict

10. Invites all States to accede to relevant international human rights and humanitarian instruments, and urges them to implement those to which they are parties;

11. Urges States and other parties to armed conflict to respect international humanitarian law;

12. Calls upon States fully to respect the provisions contained in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto of 1977, as well as those contained in the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which accord children affected by armed conflict special protection and treatment;

13. Welcomes the report of the expert of the Secretary-General on the impact of armed conflict on children, and takes note with appreciation of the recommendations included therein which address the prevention of the involvement of children in armed conflict, the reinforcement of preventive measures, the relevance and adequacy of existing standards, the measures required to improve the protection of children affected by armed conflict and the actions needed to promote the physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration of children affected by armed conflict;

14. Notes with interest the participatory process through which the report of the expert was prepared in close collaboration with Member States and United Nations bodies and organizations, as well as other relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the report of the expert is disseminated as widely as possible among Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as within the United Nations system;

16. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the Rights of the Child and the recommendations contained therein concerning the situation of children affected by armed conflict;

17. Welcomes resolution CM/Res.1659(LXIV) on the plight of African children in situations of armed conflict adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its sixty-fourth ordinary session, held at Yaounde from 1 to 5 July 1996;

18. Recommends that States parties to the Convention promote wide dissemination and awareness of relevant standards on the rights of the child and develop education and training activities on the rights of the child as a measure to ensure the protection of children affected by armed conflict;

19. Calls upon States and United Nations bodies and organizations to treat children in situations of armed conflict as a priority concern in human rights, humanitarian and development activities, including in field operations and country programmes, to enhance coordination and cooperation throughout the United Nations system and to ensure effective protection for children affected by armed conflict;

20. Calls upon the executive boards of relevant United Nations funds and programmes, the specialized agencies and other competent bodies to explore ways and means by which they can contribute more effectively to the protection of children in armed conflict;

21. Recommends that the humanitarian concerns relating to children affected by armed conflict and their protection be fully reflected in United Nations field operations, which, inter alia, promote peace, prevent and resolve conflicts and implement peace agreements;

22. Underlines the importance of including measures to ensure respect for the rights of the child, including in the areas of health and nutrition, education, physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration, within emergency and other humanitarian assistance policies and programmes;

23. Stresses the need for Governments and other parties to armed conflict to take measures, including the establishment, for example, of "days of tranquility" and "corridors of peace", to ensure humanitarian access, the delivery of humanitarian relief and the provision of services, such as education and health, including immunization of children affected by armed conflict;

24. Supports the work of the open-ended inter-sessional working group of the Commission on Human Rights on the elaboration of a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child related to the involvement of children in armed conflict, and expresses the hope that it will make further progress prior to the fifty-third session of the Commission with a view to finalizing this work;

25. Urges States and all other parties to armed conflict to adopt all necessary measures to end the use of children as soldiers and to ensure their demobilization and reintegration into society, including through adequate education and training, in a manner that fosters their self-respect and dignity, and invites the international community to assist in this endeavour;

26. Calls upon all States and relevant United Nations bodies, including the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance, to contribute on an ongoing basis to international mine-clearance efforts, and urges States to take further action to promote gender and age-appropriate mine-awareness programmes and child-centred rehabilitation, thereby reducing the number and the plight of child victims;

27. Welcomes international efforts aimed at restricting and prohibiting the indiscriminate use of anti-personnel mines;

28. Reaffirms that rape in the conduct of armed conflict constitutes a war crime and that under certain circumstances it constitutes a crime against humanity and an act of genocide as defined in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, and calls upon all States to take all measures required for the protection of women and children from all acts of gender-based violence, including rape, sexual exploitation and forced pregnancy, and to strengthen mechanisms to investigate and punish all those responsible and bring the perpetrators to justice;

29. Stresses the need for all humanitarian responses in conflict situations to emphasize the special reproductive health needs of women and girls, including those that arise from pregnancy as a result of rape, sexual mutilation, childbirth at an early age or infection with sexually transmitted diseases, as well as human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome, and their access to family planning services;

30. Urgently requests that appropriate measures be taken by Member States and United Nations agencies, within the scope of their respective mandates, to ensure humanitarian access to children affected by armed conflict, to facilitate the extension of humanitarian assistance, including education, and to ensure the physical and psychological recovery and reintegration into society of child soldiers, victims of landmines and victims of gender-based violence;

31. Recommends that whenever sanctions are imposed their impact on children be assessed and monitored and that humanitarian exemptions be child-focused and formulated with clear application guidelines;

32. Recalls the importance of preventive measures such as early warning systems, preventive diplomacy and education for peace to prevent conflicts and their negative impact on the enjoyment of the rights of the child, and urges Governments and the international community to promote sustainable human development;

33. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with Member States, international organizations and relevant non-governmental organizations, to consider modalities for organizing regional training programmes for members of the armed forces relating to the protection of children and women during armed conflict;

34. Invites Governments to integrate into their military programmes, including those for peacekeeping personnel, instruction on their responsibilities towards civilian communities and in particular towards women and children;

35. Recommends that the Secretary-General appoint for a period of three years a Special Representative on the impact of armed conflict on children and ensure that the necessary support is made available to the Special Representative for the effective performance of his/her mandate, encourages the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights to provide support to the Special Representative, and calls upon States and institutions concerned to provide voluntary contributions for that purpose;

36. Recommends that the Special Representative:

(a) Assess progress achieved, steps taken and difficulties encountered in strengthening the protection of children in situations of armed conflict;

(b) Raise awareness and promote the collection of information about the plight of children affected by armed conflict and encourage the development of networking;

(c) Work closely with the Committee on the Rights of the Child, relevant United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other competent bodies, as well as non-governmental organizations;

(d) Foster international cooperation to ensure respect for children's rights in these situations and contribute to the coordination of efforts by Governments, relevant United Nations bodies, notably the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Children's Fund, the specialized agencies and the Committee on the Rights of the Child, relevant special rapporteurs and working groups, as well as United Nations field operations, regional and subregional organizations, other competent bodies and non-governmental organizations;

37. Requests the Special Representative to submit to the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights an annual report containing relevant information on the situation of children affected by armed conflict, bearing in mind existing mandates and reports of relevant bodies;

38. Requests Governments, the specialized agencies, relevant United Nations organs and regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the Committee on the Rights of the Child, other relevant human rights treaty bodies and human rights mechanisms, to cooperate with the Special Representative and to provide information on the measures adopted to ensure and respect the rights of children affected by armed conflict;

39. Calls upon Member States and relevant United Nations bodies and non-governmental organizations to consider how the impact of armed conflict on children can best be integrated into events designed to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the World Summit for Children and the entry into force of the Convention;

III

Refugee and internally displaced children

40. Urges Governments to pay particular attention to the situation of refugee and internally displaced children by continuing to design and improve the implementation of policies for their care and well-being with the necessary international cooperation, in particular that of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Children's Fund;

41. Calls upon States and United Nations bodies, in recognizing the particular vulnerability of refugee and internally displaced children, to protect both their safety and their developmental needs, including health, education and psychosocial rehabilitation;

42. Calls upon States and United Nations bodies and other organizations to ensure the early identification and registration of unaccompanied refugee and internally displaced children and to give priority to programmes for family tracing and reunification;

43. Calls for the continual monitoring of the care arrangements of unaccompanied refugee and internally displaced children;

44. Calls upon States and other parties to armed conflict to recognize the particular vulnerability of refugee and internally displaced children to recruitment into the armed forces and to sexual violence, exploitation and abuse and to enhance protection and assistance mechanisms;

45. Calls upon the United Nations Children's Fund and other relevant United Nations bodies and agencies and governmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to adopt all necessary measures to ensure the survival, assistance and protection of internally displaced children;

46. Stresses the special vulnerability of households headed by children, and calls upon Governments and United Nations bodies to give urgent attention to their situation and to develop policy and programme guidelines to ensure their protection and care, in the best interests of the child;

47. Also stresses that women and youth be fully involved in the design, delivery, monitoring and implementation of measures to protect them from sexual violence and from the recruitment of children into the armed forces;

IV

Prevention and eradication of the sale of children and of their sexual exploitation, including child prostitution and child pornography

48. Welcomes the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography;

49. Expresses its support for the work of the Special Rapporteur appointed by the Commission on Human Rights to examine, all over the world, the question of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography;

50. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary human and financial assistance to make the full discharge of the mandate possible and to enable her to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session and a report to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-third session;

51. Supports the work of the open-ended inter-sessional working group of the Commission on Human Rights on the elaboration of a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child related to the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and expresses the hope that it will make further progress prior to the fifty-third session of the Commission with a view to finalizing this work;

52. Calls upon all States parties to fulfil their obligation under article 34 of the Convention, and also calls upon all States to support efforts in the context of the United Nations system aimed at adopting effective national, bilateral and multilateral measures for the prevention and eradication of the sale of children and of their sexual exploitation, including child prostitution and child pornography, in particular by criminalizing the sexual exploitation of children;

53. Welcomes the convening of the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, held at Stockholm from 27 to 31 August 1996, and expresses its appreciation to the Government of Sweden for organizing it, in cooperation with the United Nations Children's Fund, End Child Prostitution in Asian Tourism and the Non-Governmental Organizations Group for the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

54. Welcomes with satisfaction the adoption and dissemination of the Declaration and Agenda for Action of the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, which constitutes an important contribution to the global efforts aimed at the eradication of such practices;

55. Requests all States to implement on an urgent basis measures to protect children from all forms of sexual exploitation, including measures in line with those outlined in the Declaration and Agenda for Action;

56. Calls upon States to criminalize the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the other forms of sexual exploitation of children and to condemn and penalize all those offenders involved, whether local or foreign, while ensuring that children victims of this practice are not penalized;

57. Also calls upon States to review and revise, where appropriate, laws, policies, programmes and practices to eliminate the commercial sexual exploitation of children;

58. Further calls upon States to enforce relevant laws, policies and programmes to protect children from sexual exploitation, in particular by penalizing all those offenders involved, and to strengthen communication and cooperation between law enforcement authorities;

59. Stresses the need to combat the existence of a market that encourages such criminal practices against children;

60. Urges States, in cases of sex tourism, to develop or strengthen and to implement laws to criminalize the acts of nationals of the countries of origin when committed against children in the countries of destination, to ensure that a person who exploits a child for sexual abuse purposes in another country is prosecuted by competent national authorities, either in the country of origin or in the country of destination, to strengthen laws and law enforcement, including confiscation and seizure of assets and profits and other sanctions, against those who commit sexual crimes against children in countries of destination and to share relevant data;

61. Requests States to step up cooperation and concerted action by all relevant law enforcement authorities and institutions with a view to dismantling national, regional and international networks in trafficking in children;

62. Invites States to allocate resources to provide comprehensive programmes designed to heal and to rehabilitate into society child victims of trafficking and sexual exploitation, including through job training, legal assistance and confidential health care, and to take all appropriate measures to promote their physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration;

63. Stresses the need to strengthen partnerships between Governments, international organizations and all sectors of civil society, in particular non-governmental organizations, in order to achieve these objectives;

V

Elimination of exploitation of child labour

64. Encourages Member States that have not yet done so to ratify and implement the conventions of the International Labour Organization relating to the elimination of exploitation of child labour, in particular those concerning the minimum age for employment, the abolition of forced labour and the prohibition of particularly hazardous work for children;

65. Calls upon Governments to take legislative, administrative, social and educational measures to ensure the protection of children from economic exploitation, in particular protection from performing any work that is likely to be hazardous or to interfere with the child's education or be harmful to the child's health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development;

66. Urges Governments to take all necessary measures, as a matter of priority, to eliminate all extreme forms of child labour, such as forced labour, bonded labour and other forms of slavery;

67. Encourages, in particular, Governments to take the necessary legislative, administrative, social and educational measures to provide for a minimum age or minimum ages for admission to employment, appropriate regulations of the hours and conditions of employment and appropriate penalties or other sanctions to ensure the effective enforcement of these measures;

68. Invites Governments, in accordance with the commitments made at the World Summit for Social Development held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, to set specific target dates for eliminating all forms of child labour which are contrary to accepted international standards, to ensure the full enforcement of relevant existing laws and, where appropriate, to enact the legislation necessary to implement obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and International Labour Organization standards ensuring the protection of working children;

69. Encourages Member States to strengthen international cooperation, including through the United Nations programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, the International Programme on the Elimination of Child Labour of the International Labour Organization and the activities of the United Nations Children's Fund, as a means of assisting Governments in preventing or combating violations of the rights of the child, including the exploitation of child labour;

70. Recognizes the measures taken by Governments to eliminate the exploitation of child labour, and calls upon relevant United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund and the International Labour Organization, to support national efforts in this regard;

71. Requests that measures be taken by Governments, at the national and international levels, within the framework of multisectoral approaches, to end the exploitation of child labour in line with the commitments undertaken at the World Summit for Social Development and at the Fourth World Conference on Women, held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, and taking into account the results of other relevant United Nations conferences;

72. Calls upon Governments to translate into concrete action their commitment to the progressive and effective elimination of child labour and to implement, inter alia, national action plans and the International Labour Organization resolution on the elimination of child labour, adopted on 18 June 1996 by the International Labour Conference at its eighty-third session at Geneva, as well as other relevant resolutions on the subject adopted by the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights;

73. Requests the Secretary-General, when reporting on the implementation of the present resolution, to cooperate closely and at an early stage with relevant actors and United Nations organizations and bodies, in particular the International Labour Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, in order to provide information on initiatives aimed at eliminating exploitation of child labour and to recommend ways and means of improving cooperation at the national and international levels in this field;

VI

The plight of street children

74. Expresses grave concern at the continued growth in the number of incidents worldwide and at reports of children living or working on the streets being involved in and affected by serious crime, drug abuse, violence and prostitution;

75. Urges Governments to continue actively to seek comprehensive solutions to tackle the problems of children living or working on the streets, to take measures to ensure their reintegration into society and to provide, inter alia, adequate nutrition, shelter, health care and education, taking into account the fact that such children are particularly vulnerable to all forms of abuse, exploitation and neglect;

76. Strongly urges all Governments to guarantee the respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, particularly the right to life, to take urgent measures to prevent the killing of street children and to combat torture and violence against them and to ensure that legal and juridical processes respect children's rights in order to protect them against the arbitrary deprivation of liberty, maltreatment or abuse;

77. Emphasizes that strict compliance with the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and other relevant human rights instruments constitutes a significant step towards solving the problems of children living or working on the streets, including problems of exploitation, abuse and abandonment of children, and recommends that the Committee on the Rights of the Child and other relevant treaty monitoring bodies give attention to this growing problem when examining reports of States parties;

78. Calls upon the international community to support, through effective international cooperation, the efforts of States to improve the situation of children in need of special protection measures, including child well-being in urban settlements, in accordance with the Habitat Agenda adopted by the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), held at Istanbul, Turkey, from 3 to 14 June 1996, and encourages States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, in preparing their reports to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, to bear this problem in mind and to consider requesting technical advice and assistance for initiatives aimed at improving the situation of street children, in accordance with article 45 of the Convention;

VII

79. Invites Governments, United Nations bodies and organizations, including the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, relevant mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to cooperate with one another to ensure greater awareness and more effective action to solve the problem of children living in exceptionally difficult conditions by, among other measures, initiating and supporting development projects that can have a positive impact on the situation of those children;

80. Requests the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

81. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the rights of the child to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, containing information on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the problems of exploitation of child labour, its causes and consequences, in accordance with paragraph 73 above;

82. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of the rights of children".

General Assembly resolution 51/77

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/615) without vote, 22 November (meeting 49); draft by Jamaica, for Latin American and Caribbean Group, and 86 other nations (A/C.3/51/L.37), orally revised; agenda item 106.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 30, 32-35, 45, 46, 49; plenary 82.

Indigenous populations

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/40], the Commission on Human Rights expressed its appreciation to the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission for its valuable work and asked the Economic and Social Council to authorize the Group to meet for five working days prior to the Subcommission's 1996 session. The Council did so on 23 July by decision 1996/264. The Commission welcomed the Group's proposal to highlight in 1996 the question of indigenous people and health and the Group's recommendation that the Chairman/Rapporteur address the concept of "indigenous people" [YUN 1995, p. 771]. It invited the Group to continue its consideration as to whether there were ways in which the contribution of expertise from indigenous people to the work of the Working Group might be enhanced and to include in its future work a review of international activities taken during the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (1994-2004), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1993 [GA res. 48/163], and to receive information from Governments on the implementation of Decade goals in their countries. The Commission asked the Group to include in its 1996 agenda the question of how it would contribute to the Secretary-General's review of existing mechanisms, procedures and programmes concerning indigenous people (see below, under "Permanent forum for indigenous people"), providing information in that regard on its mandate and current work programme.

The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Group; transmit the Group's reports to Governments, organizations of indigenous people and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for specific comments and suggestions; and ensure that the Group's 1996 meetings were provided with interpretation and documentation.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations, at its fourteenth session (Geneva, 29 July-2 August) [E/CN.4/1996/21 & Corr.1], recommended that the Subcommission transmit the working paper on the concept of "indigenous people" [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1996/2 & Add.1] of its Chairman/Rapporteur, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), to Governments, intergovernmental organizations and indigenous peoples for comments, and request that she prepare for 1997 a supplementary working paper based on the information received. It also recommended that the Subcommission request the Centre for Human Rights to organize with WHO, and with the participation of governmental health officials, indigenous health experts and others, meetings to develop projects and programmes within the framework of the Decade; seek information regarding the question of "indigenous peoples: land and environment" from Governments, specialized agencies, the United Nations Environment Programme, intergovernmental organizations and indigenous and non-governmental organizations to be made available in a background paper in 1997; and request the Secretary-General to consult with the indigenous people represented at the Group's 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1004], 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 771] and 1996 sessions on whether the commemoration of the International Day of the World's Indigenous People (9 August) should be brought forward to 1 August to coincide with the Group's annual sessions. The Working Group recommended that a special rapporteur be appointed to conduct a study of the problem of recognition of and respect for indigenous land rights.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/31], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to transmit the Working Group's report on its 1996 session to indigenous organizations, Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, as well as to all thematic rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit the working paper on the concept of "indigenous people" to Governments, intergovernmental organizations and indigenous peoples' organizations for comments, for submission to the Group in 1997, and asked the Chairman/Rapporteur to prepare a supplementary note, taking into account comments and relevant views she might receive. The Subcommission recommended that, at its future sessions, the Group continue to address health and other issues, including education, development, environment and land.

Concerning the Working Group's fifteenth (1997) session, the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to invite Governments, intergovernmental organizations and indigenous and non-governmental organizations to provide information and data, particularly on matters relating to "indigenous peoples: environment, land and sustainable development", which would be the principal item of the Group's 1997 agenda, as well as "indigenous health", to be made available as background papers at the session. It also asked him to prepare an annotated agenda for that session, to include: standard-setting activities, including a sub-item on the concept of indigenous peoples; review of developments, including sub-items on "indigenous peoples: environment, land and sustainable development" and "indigenous health"; a permanent forum for indigenous people; the International Decade; and the study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous peoples. The Subcommission asked the Group's Chairman/Rapporteur to inform the Board of Trustees of the UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations that the Group would highlight land and environmental issues in 1997, so that the Board could bear that in mind when it met for its tenth (1997) session.

The Subcommission recommended that the Commission request the Economic and Social Council to authorize the Working Group to meet for five days prior to the Subcommission's 1997 session.

International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/39], the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the recommendations and requests contained in a 1995 General Assembly resolution [YUN 1995, p. 773], and asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Coordinator of the Decade to implement them and to provide informal briefings on UN system-wide activities undertaken for the Decade, and to report in 1997. The recommendations dealt with UN mechanisms, procedures and programmes for indigenous people, a permanent forum for indigenous people, activities for and objectives of the Decade, a unit within the Centre for Human Rights to support activities related to indigenous peoples, and the appointment of a fund-raiser for the Decade. The Commission also welcomed the establishment by the Decade Coordinator of an advisory body to provide guidance with regard to projects and programmes financed by the Voluntary Fund; and appealed to Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support the Decade by identifying resources for activities designed to implement Decade goals, in cooperation with indigenous people. The Commission asked that the High Commissioner give due regard to the dissemination of information on the situation, cultures, languages, rights and aspirations of indigenous people.

Centre for Human Rights. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations had before it a June report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1996/4] describing activities carried out for the Decade by the Centre for Human Rights covering the period July 1995 to June 1996, in accordance with 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 865] and 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1001] General Assembly resolutions (48/63 and 49/214).

The Centre was represented at meetings and international conferences held to promote the Decade's aims and issues. Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution 50/157, the first meeting of the Advisory Group of the Voluntary Fund for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People was held during the year (Geneva, 29 April-1 May). The Advisory Group drew up guidelines for the Fund and a questionnaire for applicants, which were annexed to the report. The Group also decided to consider projects put forward by and on behalf of indigenous people. Depending on the availability of resources from the Fund, the Advisory Group recommended that the Centre give priority to: organizing an international workshop on a permanent forum for indigenous peoples; developing a project for short-term scholarships to provide indigenous leaders with training and practical experience on human rights and the United Nations, in conjunction with indigenous peoples' organizations and NGOs at Geneva; sponsoring, in conjunction with UNESCO, a human rights training programme for indigenous representatives and official delegates of the Governments of Ecuador and Peru; and providing technical support for an information workshop on the draft declaration on the rights of the indigenous people of the Pacific and Asia region, proposed by the Government of Fiji. It also recommended the provision of the necessary assistance to an indigenous project of the East Africa Regional Information Office.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/34], the Subcommission recommended that special attention be given to improving the extent of indigenous peoples' participation in planning and implementing Decade activities. It also recommended that the Centre for Human Rights organize a workshop of indigenous journalists, with the participation of the United Nations and other relevant institutions and persons, to improve dissemination of information about the United Nations and its activities relating to indigenous peoples. The Secretary-General was asked to include in his report to the Assembly the suggestions and recommendations made during the debate on the Decade at the Working Group's 1996 session. The Working Group was asked to include in its 1997 agenda a separate item entitled "Review of the activities carried out under the programme of activities for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People during the period 1994-1996".

On the same date [res. 1996/32], the Subcommission, noting the concern expressed by some indigenous and governmental delegations at the Working Group's 1996 session about the need for transparency in the management of the Voluntary Fund for the International Decade and the Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations, recommended that the relevant UN departments establish separate accounts and separate bodies for the two funds and, if possible, transfer the financial management of the funds from New York to Geneva.

Report of Secretary-General. In an October report [A/51/499], the Secretary-General highlighted action taken to implement the programme of activities for the Decade adopted by the Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 772]. He also described the observance of the International Day of the World's Indigenous People (9 August) at Headquarters and at Geneva. The Decade had been observed as part of the proceedings of various international conferences concerned with its objectives and themes.

An Advisory Group had been established for the Voluntary Fund for the Decade (see above), and the Fund, administered by the Secretary-General, had available resources, as of 12 September 1996, amounting to $274,772. The UN Office at Geneva planned to implement in 1997 a pilot programme of short-term fellowships for indigenous peoples, to be granted to representatives of three different regions, selected by the Advisory Group. A UNESCO delegation had met with the High Commissioner for Human Rights and officials of the Centre for Human Rights to consider carrying out joint activities under the Decade. An Expert Seminar on Practical Experiences Regarding Indigenous Land Rights and Claims (Whitehorse, Canada, 24-28 March) took place at the invitation of the Government of Canada and the Centre (see below). Forty representatives of indigenous organizations took part in a workshop for indigenous peoples of the Pacific on the UN draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples (Suva, Fiji, 2-4 September). It was organized by the Government of Fiji and supported by UNDP, the European Union, the American Friends Service Committee and the Centre. The Centre also held an Inter-Agency Consultation on Indigenous Peoples on 26 July to discuss UN activities relating to indigenous peoples.

The Secretary-General presented information on the activities of regional organizations, Member States, organizations of indigenous people, NGOs and other interest groups, including education establishments, the media and business.

The report's recommendations included: establishing national committees with indigenous participation and regional, national and local focal points to help implement plans of action; appointing Erica-Irene Daes as Special Rapporteur to conduct a comprehensive study on indigenous land rights; more generous donations to the Voluntary Fund for the Decade; expanding the fellowship programme; promoting knowledge and appreciation of the cultures of indigenous people and preparing teaching material thereon; organization, by the Centre, of a workshop for indigenous journalists; further technical meetings on indigenous land rights and claims; a communications network guaranteeing the prompt distribution of information about the Decade; giving more time at conferences to discussing matters relating to Decade objectives; a second workshop on a permanent forum for indigenous peoples, in early 1997; adoption of the draft UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples during the observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1998 (see PART TWO, Chapter I); a review of projects supported by the Voluntary Fund; and a report on activities carried out under the Decade programme during the period 1994 to 1996.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/78.

International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as set forth in the Charter, is the achievement of international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, as well as those of the Commission on Human Rights,

Recalling also that the goal of the Decade is to strengthen international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous people in such areas as human rights, the environment, development, education and health and that the theme of the Decade is "Indigenous people: partnership in action",

Recognizing the importance of consultation and co-operation with indigenous people in planning and implementing the programme of activities for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, the need for adequate financial support from the international community, including support from within the United Nations and the specialized agencies, and the need for adequate coordination and communication channels,

Recalling Economic and Social Council decision 1992/255 of 20 July 1992, in which the Council requested United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies to ensure that all technical assistance financed or provided by them was compatible with international instruments and standards applicable to indigenous people and encouraged efforts to promote coordination in this field and greater participation of indigenous people in the planning and implementation of projects affecting them,

Recalling its resolution 50/156 of 21 December 1995,

1. Affirms its conviction of the value and diversity of the cultures and forms of social organization of indigenous people and that the development of indigenous people within their countries will contribute to the socio-economic, cultural and environmental advancement of all the countries of the world;

2. Notes that the programme of activities for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People may be reviewed and updated throughout the Decade and that at the mid-point of the Decade the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly should review the results of the activities in order to identify obstacles to the achievement of the goals of the Decade and to recommend solutions for overcoming those obstacles;

3. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the programme of activities for the Decade;

4. Welcomes the resolve of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to strengthen efforts to achieve the goals of the programme of activities for the Decade;

5. Reaffirms the adoption of a declaration on the rights of indigenous people as a major objective of the Decade, and notes that there have been two sessions of the open-ended inter-sessional working group of the Commission on Human Rights established pursuant to Commission resolution 1995/32 of 3 March 1995 with the sole purpose of elaborating a draft declaration, considering the draft United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples annexed to resolution 1994/45 of 26 August 1994 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

6. Underlines the importance of effective participation by indigenous representatives in the working group, and encourages organizations of indigenous people that are not already registered to participate and wish to do so to apply for authorization in accordance with the procedure set out in the annex to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/32;

7. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the existing mechanisms, procedures and programmes within the United Nations concerning indigenous people, and requests the Secretary-General to transmit the review, prior to the fifty-third session of the Commission on Human Rights, to Governments, indigenous people and relevant international organizations for their comments;

8. Recognizes amongst the objectives of the Decade, as listed in the programme of activities, the consideration of the establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people within the United Nations system;

9. Recalls its recommendation contained in resolution 50/157 of 21 December 1995 that the Commission on Human Rights, drawing on the results of the workshop on the possible establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people within the United Nations system, held at Copenhagen from 26 to 28 June 1995, and the Secretary-General's review, consider the convening of a second workshop;

10. Recommends in the light of the review that efforts be made to ensure that relevant United Nations organs, organizations and bodies take part in any further consultations on the issue, and welcomes the offer of the Government of Chile to host a second workshop on the possible establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people within the United Nations system;

11. Emphasizes the important role of international cooperation in promoting the goals and activities of the Decade and the rights, well-being and sustainable development of indigenous people;

12. Reaffirms the importance of strengthening the human and institutional capacity of indigenous people to develop their own solutions to their problems and, for these purposes, its recommendation that the United Nations University consider the possibility of sponsoring, in each region, one or more institutions of higher education as centres of excellence and the diffusion of expertise, and invites the Commission on Human Rights to recommend appropriate means of implementation;

13. Emphasizes the importance of action at the national level for the implementation of the goals and activities of the Decade;

14. Encourages Governments to support the Decade by:

(a) Contributing to the United Nations Trust Fund for the Decade;

(b) Preparing relevant programmes, plans and reports in relation to the Decade, in consultation with indigenous people;

(c) Seeking means, in consultation with indigenous people, of giving indigenous people greater responsibility for their own affairs and an effective voice in decisions on matters that affect them;

(d) Establishing national committees or other mechanisms involving indigenous people to ensure that the objectives and activities of the Decade are planned and implemented on the basis of full partnership with indigenous people;

15. Also encourages Governments and other donors to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations in order to assist indigenous representatives in participating in the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and the open-ended inter-sessional working group of the Commission on Human Rights charged with elaborating a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous people;

16. Appeals to Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support the Decade by identifying resources for activities designed to implement the goals of the Decade, in cooperation with indigenous people;

17. Invites the United Nations financial and developmental institutions, operational programmes and the specialized agencies, in accordance with the existing procedures of their governing bodies:

(a) To give increased priority and resources to improving the conditions of indigenous people, with particular emphasis on the needs of those people in developing countries, including by preparation of specific programmes of action for the implementation of the goals of the Decade, within their areas of competence;

(b) To launch special projects through appropriate channels and in collaboration with indigenous people for strengthening their community-level initiatives and to facilitate the exchange of information and expertise amongst indigenous people and other relevant experts;

(c) To designate focal points for coordination with the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat of activities related to the Decade;

18. Recommends that the Secretary-General ensure coordinated follow-up to the recommendations concerning indigenous people of relevant world conferences, namely, the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 3 to 14 June 1992, the International Conference on Population and Development, held at Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994, the Fourth World Conference on Women, held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, and the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995;

19. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, when developing programmes within the framework of the United Nations Human Rights Education Decade, to give due regard to the dissemination of information on the situation, cultures, languages, rights and aspirations of indigenous people;

20. Encourages Governments to consider contributing, as appropriate, to the Fund for the Development of Indigenous Peoples in Latin America and the Caribbean, in support of the achievement of the goals of the Decade;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Programme of activities of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People".

General Assembly resolution 51/78

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/616) without vote, 18 November (meeting 42); 35-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.30), orally revised; agenda item 107.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 29, 31, 40, 42; plenary 82.

On the same date, the Assembly, by decision 51/424, requested the Secretary-General to submit in 1997 a report on the Decade programme of activities.

Draft declaration

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/38], the Commission on Human Rights recommended that the Working Group to elaborate a draft UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples meet for 10 working days prior to the Commission's 1997 session, and asked the Group to submit a progress report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/23.

Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights to elaborate a draft declaration in accordance with paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 49/214

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/38 of 19 April 1996,

1. Authorizes the open-ended inter-sessional Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights established in accordance with Commission resolution 1995/32 of 3 March 1995 to meet for a period of ten working days prior to the fifty-third session of the Commission, the costs of the meeting to be met from within existing resources;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all necessary facilities, within existing United Nations resources, to the Working Group for its meetings.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/23
23 July 1996 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1996/23); agenda item 5 (d).
Meeting numbers. ESC 44, 46.

The Council, by decision 1996/218 of 2 May, approved the participation in the Working Group of 12 organizations of indigenous people not in consultative status with the Council.

On 10 October and 14 November, the Council, by decision 1996/309 A, approved the participation in the Working Group of 15 indigenous peoples' organizations not in consultative status with the Council.

On the same dates, the Council, by decision 1996/309 B, provisionally approved the participation in the Working Group of an additional indigenous peoples' organization, pending receipt of the views of the Government concerned.

Working Group activities. The Working Group established to consider a UN draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples met in Geneva from 21 October to 1 November [E/CN.4/1997/102]. The report of the Group summarized statements by various representatives of delegations on articles of the draft, contained in a 1994 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1994, p. 999].

Voluntary Fund

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/40], the Commission, expressing its appreciation to the Governments and organizations that had made contributions to the UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations, appealed to them and to individuals in a position to do so to consider requests for further contributions.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/32], the Subcommission, noting the concern expressed by some indigenous and governmental delegations at the Working Group's 1996 session about the need for transparency in the management of the Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations and the Voluntary Fund for the Decade, recommended that the relevant UN departments establish separate accounts and separate bodies for the two funds and, if possible, transfer the financial management of the funds from New York to Geneva.

Report of Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General reported [A/51/565] on the activities of the Board of Trustees of the UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations on its eighth (24-28 April 1995) and ninth (22-26 April 1996) sessions, both held in Geneva. The Fund provided financial assistance to representatives of indigenous communities and organizations who wished to participate in the deliberations of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and the Working Group to elaborate a UN draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples.

At its 1995 and 1996 sessions, the Board examined requests for financial assistance for 91 and 171 indigenous representatives, respectively. In the light of the funds available, it recommended, in 1995, the awarding of 53 travel and subsistence grants to beneficiaries from 31 countries and, in 1996, the awarding of 22 travel and subsistence grants for representatives from 17 countries to attend the 1996 session of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations. In addition, the Board recommended that four travel and subsistence grants be awarded to representatives to attend the Working Group on the draft declaration.

The Secretary-General stated that between 1 May 1994 and 21 April 1996, the Fund had received contributions totalling $308,723, of which $266,563 had been received from seven Governments and $42,160 from four non-governmental sources.

Permanent forum for indigenous people

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/41], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to transmit to relevant inter-governmental organizations the report of the first workshop (Copenhagen, Denmark 1995) held on the possible establishment of a permanent forum [YUN 1995, p. 779], and comments thereon received by the Centre for Human Rights. It noted a 1995 Assembly recommendation that the Commission consider the convening of a second workshop, and decided to continue consideration of a second workshop in 1997 under the agenda item "Indigenous issues", which it had added to its provisional agenda on 1 April [dec. 1996/102].

Welcoming a 1995 Assembly recommendation [GA res. 50/157] that the Secretary-General review existing mechanisms, procedures and programmes within the United Nations concerning indigenous people and that he report to the Assembly in 1996, the Commission asked him to ensure implementation of the review so it could be completed and circulated to Governments, relevant intergovernmental organizations and organizations of indigenous people for their comments in advance of the Assembly's 1996 session.

The Commission asked the Working Group on Indigenous Populations at its 1996 session to continue to give priority consideration to the possible establishment of a permanent forum and to submit further comments and suggestions in 1997. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1997 on the activities undertaken and information received pursuant to its resolution.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/35], the Subcommission welcomed an offer by Chile to host the second workshop on the possible establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people. It recommended that such a forum be established in the early part of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People and that its mandate include questions relating to all areas included in the Decade programme of activities.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 772], the Secretary-General reported [A/51/493] in October on existing mechanisms, procedures and programmes within the United Nations concerning indigenous people.

The Secretary-General discussed the participation of indigenous people in UN meetings on indigenous issues; formulation of policy guidelines and research activities related to indigenous people; and the work of UN bodies and entities, including the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Sustainable Development, UNESCO, Habitat, UNDP, ILO, CRC, the United Nations Population Fund, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the United Nations Environment Programme, UNICEF, the High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, the Department of Public Information, the United Nations Non-Governmental Liaison Service, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, the United Nations Division for Sustainable Development, the United Nations Under-Secretary-General for Development Support and Management Services, the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. The Secretary-General described funding available for indigenous people and future activities and presented the views of indigenous people on existing procedures, mechanisms and programmes. A permanent forum for indigenous people within the United Nations was also considered.

The Secretary-General concluded that, on the positive side, it might be suggested that UN efforts had contributed to generating widespread public interest in the issue of indigenous people, renewed national commitment to improving their conditions, and international initiatives to support those activities. On the other hand, there were inconsistencies on the issue within the UN system. He noted that there were no internationally accepted guidelines on the rights of indigenous peoples. Among the UN agencies, there were wide divergences in approach and level of involvement. In addition, different UN organizations related to indigenous people in distinct ways; some UN meetings, even those dealing directly with indigenous matters, offered relatively open participation, while others were almost completely closed to indigenous organizations. There were virtually no mechanisms that gave the nominated representatives of indigenous organizations or peoples an opportunity to provide expert advice or take part in decision-making.

The Secretary-General stated that at a time of financial stringency, it might be prudent to consider measures that helped to avoid duplication and strengthened cooperation and consistency of approach. He suggested that it might be important to establish procedures that helped to avoid projects and programmes in indigenous areas that were unwelcome by the supposed beneficiaries.

Study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements

Commission action. On 19 April [dec. 1996/109], the Commission, taking note of a 1995 Subcommission decision [YUN 1995, p. 780], endorsed the Subcommission recommendation to request Special Rapporteur Miguel Alfonso Martínez (Cuba) to submit in 1996 a third report on the study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations to the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and to the Subcommission, and, in 1997, a final report to both bodies.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur, in particular by providing specialized research assistance and with regard to visits to Geneva to consult with the Centre for Human Rights, as well as resources to carry out a mission to examine in situ the contemporary significance of a historic treaty in one country, to be determined in consultation with the Government concerned, as a practical example for inclusion in the final report. The Commission's request to the Secretary-General was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1996/293 of 24 July.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In August, the Special Rapporteur submitted his third report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/23], in which it was stressed that the bulk of the data had come from extensive research conducted in 1993, 1994 and early 1995 by him and his consultant. Thus, he stated, the report did not entirely reflect the realities of mid-1996.

The report analysed diverse cases in North America, Central and South America and Northern Europe, which illustrated the reversal undergone by the original juridical condition of sovereign entities enjoyed by indigenous peoples at the start of their political and economic relations with other non-indigenous peoples, from the time that the latter had arrived on the ancestral lands of indigenous peoples.

The Special Rapporteur reserved his conclusions and recommendations for inclusion in his final report.

Protection of indigenous heritage

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/63], the Commission on Human Rights recommended to the Economic and Social Council a draft resolution for adoption (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/24.

Protection of the heritage of indigenous people

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/63 of 23 April 1996 and resolution 1995/40 of 25 August 1995 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the final report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the protection of the heritage of indigenous people, Mrs. Erica-Irene A. Daes, with its annex, as soon as possible to Governments, the specialized agencies, indigenous people's communities and organizations and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, for their comments;

2. Requests the Special Rapporteur to prepare a supplementary report on the basis of the comments and information received from Governments, indigenous people's communities and other organizations concerned and to include in it a chapter concerning relevant activities undertaken in other forums, such as the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Intellectual Property Organization and the World Trade Organization, and to take into consideration, inter alia, the Convention on Biological Diversity, the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa and other relevant international instruments;

3. Also requests the Special Rapporteur to submit her supplementary report to the Subcommission at its forty-eighth session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the necessary assistance to enable her to carry out her mandate and to complete the study successfully;

5. Decides that the basic and comprehensive study prepared by the Special Rapporteur on the protection of the cultural and intellectual property of indigenous people shall be published in all official languages and disseminated widely.

Meeting 46

Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1996/23); agenda item 5 (d).

Meeting numbers. ESC 44, 46.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In June, Special Rapporteur Erica-Irene Daes submitted a supplementary report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/22] on the protection of the heritage of indigenous people, taking into account additional comments and information received from Governments, UN specialized agencies and organizations of indigenous peoples. She had submitted a preliminary report in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1003] and a final report in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 780].

The Special Rapporteur summarized and analysed the additional information received and presented relevant aspects of recent environmental treaties and the implications of recent trade agreements. She noted that parallel efforts to reach an intergovernmental consensus on protection of the heritage of indigenous peoples were being undertaken by several UN organs and specialized agencies. She pointed to an urgent need for communication and coordination to ensure consistent and mutually reinforcing results. She also proposed entrusting to a member of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, with the approval of the Economic and Social Council, a mandate to: exchange information with all parts of the UN system concerned with the issue; facilitate cooperation and coordination; promote the greatest level of participation by indigenous people; and report to the Council through the Subcommission and the Commission. States should give urgent consideration to providing special funds for the participation of indigenous people in relevant international meetings, she added.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/37], the Subcommission decided to transmit to the Commission principles and guidelines for the protection of the heritage of indigenous people, annexed to the Special Rapporteur's final report, with the recommendation that they be adopted. It endorsed the Special Rapporteur's recommendation that a member of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations should be entrusted with the mandate contained in her supplementary report.

The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to convene a technical meeting, with the Special Rapporteur, of representatives of the World Intellectual Property Organization, UNESCO, UNEP, UNDP, FAO and the World Trade Organization to consider how they could contribute to her work, and also to transmit the report of that meeting to the Subcommission and the Commission.

Indigenous land rights

Expert seminar. As part of the activities for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, which was approved by the Assembly in 1994 [GA res. 49/214], the Expert Seminar on Practical Experiences Regarding Indigenous Land Rights and Claims (Whitehorse, Canada, 24-28 March) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1996/6] was held.

Among the issues addressed were: the obligation of countries to recognize, demarcate and give legal protection to indigenous lands and resources; the problems of claims processes; the colonial concept of extinguishment of inherent rights; the link between land rights and self-determination and the experience of indigenous peoples with colonialism; and the loss of lands and resources for military purposes. It also examined the negotiation process and legal arrangements for the demarcation, titling and protection of indigenous lands; sustainable development and arrangements concerning the use and sharing of natural resources; and the role of intergovernmental organizations.

The Seminar recommended that Governments renounce discriminatory legal doctrines and policies which denied human rights or limited land and resource rights; adopt corrective legislation and policies; establish fair procedures for reviewing situations and for taking corrective action in cases in which indigenous land or resources had been taken or extinguished through processes that were claimed or found to be unfair or discriminatory; ensure indigenous people access to adequate resources to research and negotiate their claims; hold negotiations on a basis of equality, acknowledging indigenous leadership, structures, languages and social and legal systems; recognize land rights and titles and implement effective and appropriate procedures and mechanisms; guarantee access to land of indigenous peoples deprived of land or lacking sufficient land; review their laws and policies; establish impartial mechanisms to oversee and facilitate fair and equitable conclusions to land claims processes and implement land agreements; and encourage trade among indigenous peoples and other parties from different countries. It was proposed that the United Nations consider whether a permanent forum for indigenous people could play a constructive role regarding land rights problems; prepare a study, with the participation of indigenous experts, on the extinguishment of land rights and its implications, with a view to recommending new approaches; consider, with its specialized agencies, providing technical assistance to States and indigenous peoples to resolve land claims; before funding demarcation projects, provide for adequate consultative mechanisms at all stages of planning and implementation of projects; consider holding further consultations, workshops and seminars on the subject; consider ways of harmonizing existing guidelines relating to indigenous peoples; emphasize comparative policy work relating to indigenous land titling; consider creating indigenous advisory councils at all levels; organize training workshops for representatives of indigenous organizations, particularly on land questions; and consider how the 1995 Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples [YUN 1995, p. 436] could provide guidance in other situations. It was suggested that the Centre for Human Rights consider collecting examples of indigenous land agreements to facilitate the promotion of technical cooperation. The seminar also proposed that military and occupation practices carried out by Governments, which had an impact on the ways of life of indigenous peoples, should be open to international consideration in accordance with international human rights standards, and that international cooperation supporting the administrative management of their lands and resources should include full cooperation with indigenous peoples. Participation by indigenous peoples in decision-making and policy regarding land resources and development at all levels, and the provision by States and intergovernmental organizations of development assistance through organizations of indigenous peoples, were also recommended.

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1996/6/Add.1] contained background papers for the seminar.

Subcommission action. On 29 August [res. 1996/38], the Subcommission recommended that the Commission on Human Rights authorize the Subcommission to appoint Erica-Irene A. Daes as Special Rapporteur to conduct a comprehensive study on the problem of recognition of and respect for indigenous land rights, which would, among other things, update the status of efforts to secure indigenous land rights and detail problems that continued to exist in that regard, as well as catalogue existing national laws, policies and procedures concerning indigenous land rights.

Sacred sites and religious freedom

On 29 August [res. 1996/36], the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance to take into account the specific problems faced by indigenous people relating to the destruction and violation of their sacred sites and religious ceremonies. It also asked him to take into account the spiritual relationship the indigenous communities had with the land and the significance of traditional lands for the practice of their religion, and to examine the history of events that were responsible for violating their right to freedom of religion and religious practice. The Subcommission recommended that the Special Rapporteur explore in depth the impact that outside influences had on indigenous communities' ability to practise their religion.

Migrant workers

On 23 August [res. 1996/10], the Subcommission urged countries of employment to review and adopt measures to prevent the use of force against migrant workers, and to ensure that police forces and migration authorities complied with basic standards relating to decent treatment of all migrant workers. It urged States to sanction employers for the confiscation of passports belonging to migrant workers, particularly migrant domestic workers. Member States were asked to sign and ratify or accede to the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families [GA res. 45/158] as a matter of priority (for status of Convention, see PART TWO, Chapter I).

Family reunification

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/89.

Respect for the right to universal freedom of travel and the vital importance of family reunification

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Recalling the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Stressing that, as stated in the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, family reunification of documented migrants is an important factor in international migration and that remittances by documented migrants to their countries of origin often constitute a very important source of foreign exchange and are instrumental in improving the well-being of relatives left behind,

Recalling its resolution 50/175 of 22 December 1995,

1. Once again calls upon all States to guarantee the universally recognized freedom of travel to all foreign nationals legally residing in their territory;

2. Reaffirms that all Governments, particularly those of receiving countries, must recognize the vital importance of family reunification and promote its incorporation into national legislation in order to ensure protection of the unity of families of documented migrants;

3. Calls upon all States to allow, in conformity with international legislation, the free flow of financial remittances by foreign nationals residing in their territory to their relatives in the country of origin;

4. Also calls upon all States to refrain from enacting, and to repeal if it already exists, legislation intended as a coercive measure which discriminates against individuals or groups of legal migrants by adversely affecting family reunification and the right to send financial remittances to relatives in the country of origin;

5. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 51/89

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 89-4-76 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.2) by recorded vote (79-3-75), 26 November (meeting 53); draft by Cuba (A/C.3/51/L.36); agenda item 110 (b).

Persons with disabilities

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1996/27], the Commission on Human Rights called on the Secretary-General to maintain the integrity of programmes within the United Nations relating to persons with disabilities, and asked him to ensure support for the effective functioning of the Long-term Strategy to Implement the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons to the Year 2000 and Beyond [YUN 1995, p. 1256]. It also asked him to report biennially to the Assembly (a request approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1996/261 of 23 July) and to make available to the Commission in 1997 the latest report of the Special Rapporteur on disability of the Commission for Social Development on his monitoring of the 1993 Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities [GA res. 48/96].

Report of Secretary-General. In a July report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/27], the Secretary-General summarized replies received from treaty-monitoring bodies, UNESCO and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission for Social Development on disability, in response to his request for information on coordination endeavours affecting persons with disabilities (see also PART THREE, Chapter XIII).

Other issues

The Olympic Ideal

On 19 April [res. 1996/45], the Commission on Human Rights, recalling the value of the equal rights of men and women to the enjoyment of all economic, social and cultural rights and the recognition of the right of everyone to take part in cultural life, reaffirmed that sports might contribute to the promotion and social integration of certain target groups, such as women and youth. The Commission, recognizing that the Olympic Games had exemplified excellence through education and cultural expression, reaffirmed the valuable contribution of the Olympic Movement to the promotion, protection and implementation of human rights and to the creation of global friendship and the maintenance of world peace.

Chapter III

Human rights violations

Alleged violations of human rights in 1996 were examined in the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, as well as by special bodies, special rapporteurs and independent experts.

General aspects

Under a procedure established by the Economic and Social Council in 1970 to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights [YUN 1970, p. 530, ESC res. 1503(XLVIII)], the Commission on Human Rights held closed meetings to study confidential documents and a confidential report by a working group set up in 1990 [ESC res. 1990/41]. The documents dealt with human rights situations in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Chad, Mali, Nepal, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Slovenia, Thailand and Uzbekistan. The Commission decided to discontinue consideration of the human rights situations in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Mali, Nepal, Slovenia and Thailand.

As to the recognition of gross and large-scale human rights violations as an international crime, the Commission, on 19 April [E/1996/23 (dec. 1996/105)], noting a 1995 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1995, p. 783], decided to postpone the decision on forwarding to the Economic and Social Council a draft decision of the Subcommission authorizing the preparation of a report on the subject, so that it could take into account the work of other UN bodies.

On 29 August [E/CN.4/1997/2 (dec. 1996/116)], the Subcommission requested Stanislav Cher-nichenko (Russian Federation) to prepare an expanded working paper on the recognition of gross and massive violations of human rights perpetrated on the orders of the Governments or sanctioned by them as an international crime, and to submit it for consideration in 1997. Previous working papers were submitted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 810] and in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 962].

Africa

Burundi

Report of Special Rapporteur. In February, Special Rapporteur Paulo Sergio Pinheiro (Brazil) submitted a report [E/CN.4/1996/16/Add.1] covering the human rights situation in Burundi from 1 November 1995 to 15 February 1996. His second visit to the country took place from 9 to 16 January.

The Special Rapporteur described the overall situation in Burundi, including the state of the Government, the bias and laxity of the judiciary, challenges facing the army and security forces, the collapse of the economy and the stalling of the democratization process. He observed that the dangers facing the country remained considerable, entailing unbearable consequences for the population and uncontrollable mass movements within the country and at its borders. There was a rapid succession of deliberate criminal acts, committed by rebels and by certain units of the army, from which both of Burundi's two main ethnic communities—the Hutus and the Tutsis—were suffering equally.

The Special Rapporteur urged the Burundi authorities to take action concerning the army and security forces; the judicial system; primary and secondary education; trade in and sale of arms; the media; promotion and protection of human rights; and fostering a culture of human rights, reconciliation and peace. At the international level, he proposed action towards a strategy to restore the rule of law in Burundi and conformity with the country's democratic institutions. The other key element of the international community's commitment was the immediate deployment of human rights observers. Other suggestions included restriction of travel abroad by Burundian leaders, the heads of political parties and their relatives, as well as by known rebels who advocated genocide; an immediate embargo on the sale and supply of arms to Burundi; and freezing the assets in European or American banks of Burundians involved in arms traffic.

Commission action. On 27 March [E/1996/23 (res. 1996/1)], the Commission on Human Rights took note of a February report [S/1996/116] of the Secretary-General on the situation in Burundi (see PART ONE, Chapter II), the Special Rapporteur's report (see above) and the report of the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions on his 1995 mission to Burundi [YUN 1995, p. 750]. It condemned all threats to the democratic process in the country and demanded an immediate end to human rights violations and to acts of violence and intimidation. It welcomed the Tunis Declaration on the Great Lakes Region, of 18 March 1996 (see PART ONE, Chapter II), and the proposal by the Government for the establishment of an independent national human rights commission, for which the High Commissioner for Human Rights was urged to provide support. The Commission also urged the High Commissioner, in cooperation with the Government, to increase the number of human rights observers deployed throughout the country to monitor the human rights situation, and asked him to set up a human rights assistance programme. The Secretary-General was asked to strengthen the office of the Centre for Human Rights in Bujumbura and to intensify cooperation between UN agencies in the field. The Commission decided to renew for one year the Special Rapporteur's mandate and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 1996 and to the Commission in 1997.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/254, approved the Commission's decision to renew the Special Rapporteur's mandate and endorsed its requests for reports.

Subcommission action. On 19 August [res. 1996/4], the Subcommission called on the Burundian authorities to ensure the security of all Burundian citizens wishing to live in peace and appealed to them to spare no effort in banishing the spectre of genocide, creating mutual trust and encouraging peaceful coexistence between ethnic groups.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the Special Rapporteur's report [A/51/459] covering the period from 16 February to 30 September 1996, which reflected the Special Rapporteur's findings regarding the Burundi crisis during his third visit to the country from 1 to 17 July.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the human rights situation had assumed catastrophic proportions, with its endless stream of targeted assassinations, arbitrary arrests, forced disappearances, looting, crime and the destruction of private property. He noted that the Government and its armed forces had played a major role in perpetrating those acts, particularly the massacre of civilians. Armed Hutu gangs and Tutsi militia often were implicated in deadly encounters that resulted in grave violations of international humanitarian law and human rights. The Special Rapporteur described the worsening situation in Burundi following the coup d'etat of 25 July. He expressed dismay at the resurgence of massacres which seemed to have occurred since the coup, noting claims of more than 6,000 deaths. He regretted that the International Commission of Inquiry in its report of 22 August [S/1996/682] had not provided new ideas on impunity and genocide in Burundi (see PART ONE, Chapter II).

The Special Rapporteur proposed a series of actions at the national level, among them: initiating a political dialogue between all parties to the conflict under the aegis of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU); the prompt return of Burundi refugees; setting a timetable for holding free and fair legislative elections; an immediate halt to the violence and massacres, and arrest and trial of the perpetrators; ensuring that the Burundi army did not carry out extrajudicial or summary executions, forced disappearances or arbitrary arrests accompanied by ill treatment; an independent and comprehensive inquiry into the murder in June of three delegates of the International Committee of the Red Cross; providing non-governmental organizations (NGOs) with adequate security conditions; and the abolition of the practice of indefinite detention without formal accusation or prosecution. He asked the international community to remain united behind the efforts being made by the United Nations, OAU and African countries as a group; to maintain pressure by means of economic sanctions; to demand from the de facto authorities evidence of their intention to conclude a ceasefire; to increase the number of human rights observers in Burundi; and to support the international legal assistance project, the request for which the Burundi authorities and the Burundi Bar Association had submitted to the United Nations in April. The Security Council and the Secretary-General were asked to concern themselves with the lack of attention which the problem of impunity had received from the International Commission of Inquiry. The Special Rapporteur expressed support for a proposal made by the Special Rapporteur on the human rights situation in Zaire to the Commission on Human Rights to devote a special session in 1997 to the problems of the Great Lakes region.

The Special Rapporteur commended the first group of human rights observers deployed in Bujumbura for their courage in conducting sensitive investigations into serious human rights violations.

On 12 December, the General Assembly, by decision 51/422, took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the report of the Special Rapporteur.

Equatorial Guinea

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a January report [E/CN.4/1996/67], Special Rapporteur Alejandro Artucio (Uruguay) described the human rights situation in Equatorial Guinea based on his visits to the country in 1995 (30 April-7 May and 19-26 November). He noted positive and negative developments concerning the situation of prisoners and detainees; acts of repression against leaders and activists of the opposition parties; and progress towards democracy through municipal elections held on 17 September 1995.

In a March addendum to his report [E/CN.4/1996/67/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur updated his assessment of the human rights situation based on events surrounding the presidential elections of 25 February. He stated that the elections did not constitute the free expression of the political will of citizens and that measures adopted by the Government had robbed the electoral process of its pluralist nature. He had received well-founded complaints of irregularities during the electoral process. In addition, several dozen members of legally recognized political parties had been arrested and detained for several days, with some subjected to physical punishment for seeking to exercise their political rights.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission on Human Rights express to the Government its concern regarding the way in which the presidential elections had been carried out; insist that the Government reform the electoral law; and continue monitoring the situation in Equatorial Guinea.

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/66], the Commission on Human Rights called on the Government to promote the harmonious coexistence of all ethnic groups making up the society of Equatorial Guinea; to continue improving the conditions of prisoners and detainees; and to ensure that the police and security forces and other officials vested with authority put a stop to human rights violations. It decided to renew the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and asked him to report in 1997; those actions were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1996/273 of 23 July. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue to provide Equatorial Guinea with the technical assistance and advisory services necessary to implement the Special Rapporteur's recommendations and to provide him with the assistance he needed to discharge his mandate.

Great Lakes region

By a February note [E/CN.4/1996/69], the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights transmitted to the Commission a report on a coordination and consultation meeting of the Special Rapporteurs on Burundi, Rwanda and Zaire (Geneva, 18-19 January). The Special Rapporteurs discussed the human rights situation in the three countries and observed that the common aspects in the region were mass population movements, illegal arms sales and incitement to racial hatred by the media.

The most important types of violation were the serious and massive infringements of the right to life, physical integrity and personal security and the right to own property. Those violations were the result of conflicts related to the struggle for political and economic power.

The Special Rapporteurs made recommendations concerning the establishment of the rule of law; the armed forces; reorganization of the administration and public services; functioning of the national judicial system; return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes and the principles of non-refoulement and voluntary return; condemnation of the incitement to racial or ethnic hatred; extending the operations of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to the three countries of the region; and the inadequacy of resources granted to the United Nations Commission of Inquiry. They also proposed the establishment of a coordination unit within the Centre for Human Rights linking more closely the professional officers assigned to them under their mandates and promoting the exchange of information. Accordingly, they requested the High Commissioner to instruct the officers to assist them and to appoint a coordinator. The Special Rapporteurs wished to meet at least twice yearly for consultations, an exchange of views and coordination of their activities and to participate in conferences, seminars, symposia and other activities relating to the Great Lakes region.

Liberia

On 24 April [E/1996/23], the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights read a statement stating, among other things, that the Commission viewed with grave concern the deterioration of the political, economic and social situation in Liberia, and deplored the indiscriminate destruction of life, limb and property.

(For details of the political situation in Liberia, see PART ONE, Chapter II.)

Nigeria

Fact-finding mission. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/199 [YUN 1995, p. 785], the Secretary-General, following consultations, on 19 March informed the President of the Assembly of his decision to send a three-member fact-finding mission to Nigeria [A/50/896]. The mission visited Abuja from 29 to 31 March and on 1, 2 and 11 April; Lagos on 3, 4, 12 and 13 April; Borno State on 5 April; Enugu and Osun States on 6 April; Kano on 7 April; and Rivers State from 8 to 10 April [A/50/960 & Corr.1]. Its mandate was to examine the judicial procedures of the trial of Ken Saro-Wiwa, an activist in the Ogoni community, and others, and the plans of the Government to implement its declared commitment to restore the country to democratic rule.

The Ogonis, one of the ethnic minority groups living in the Niger delta region, had had grievances concerning their economic and social conditions. Leaders of the Ogoni communities in 1990 established the Movement for the Survival of the Ogoni People (MOSOP). In 1993, MOSOP became divided between tribal youths (who declared their support for Mr. Saro-Wiwa), on the one hand, and the traditional rulers, on the other. The events of 21 May 1994, when four prominent Ogoni leaders were killed, constituted the basis for the prosecution of Mr. Saro-Wiwa and the other persons accused with him.

Among other things, the mission noted that the special tribunal that tried Mr. Saro-Wiwa was established without a report by a duly constituted investigation committee and had no jurisdiction to try him and others. It also observed that the procedures followed in the course of the trials were not fair; that there was insufficient time for the convicted persons to submit a petition for clemency; and that the composition of the special tribunal was not in conformity with the standard of impartiality and independence set out in national and international instruments owing to the presence of a military officer on the tribunal. The mission recommended that offences of the type in question be tried by ordinary criminal courts and that a series of amendments be made to the Civil Disturbances (Special Tribunal) Act. It also recommended the constitution of a committee composed of representatives of the Ogoni community and other minority groups in the region to introduce improvements in socio-economic conditions, to enhance employment opportunities, health, education and welfare services and to act as ombudsman in complaints or allegations of harassment by authorities.

As to the restoration of democracy, the mission discussed the plans for transition to civil and democratic rule. The discussions showed a sharp division of views on the issue. The opposition, represented by a number of political associations, human rights activists and individuals, considered the transition programme a ploy by the military leadership to maintain power. On the other hand, some of the opposition groups called for the handing over of power to an interim national Government which would immediately hold a national conference of all political forces to address issues such as the federation, the distribution of resources and institutions dealing with the democratization process, and to draft a new constitution. Among other things, the mission recommended strengthening existing committees and commissions established to usher in democratic civil rule by incorporating persons holding different opinions; inviting an international team to Nigeria, composed of UN and/or OAU observers, to monitor the implementation of the remaining stages of the transition programme, including elections; designating a review committee under the chairmanship of a judge to examine decrees promulgated by the military Government; granting amnesty to persons convicted for political offences; removing restrictions on the right of freedom of expression of the press, releasing journalists and refraining from harassing the media; and giving wide publicity to and making available copies of the 1995 draft constitution. It also recommended that the Secretary-General continue the dialogue with the head of the Federal Republic of Nigeria to create conditions for the restoration of civil democratic rule.

Annexed to the report of the fact-finding mission was the interim response of the Government of Nigeria. It stated that members of the armed forces would be excluded from serving on the tribunal and that its verdict and sentence would be subject to judicial review; ecological and environmental problems in the Ogoni area would be investigated with a view to their amelioration; and cases of persons being detained under a 1984 decree would be reviewed, with a view to releasing such persons based on an assessment of the individual merit of each case. An additional amendment to the 1984 decree would allow for the periodic review of cases of detention of persons suspected of engaging in acts prejudicial to State security. A 1994 decree which precluded courts from issuing the writ of habeas corpus to persons detained under the 1984 decree, as amended, would be repealed. Other aspects of the report of the fact-finding mission were under consideration and the Government would convey its decisions on them.

Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights on 23 April [res. 1996/79] called on the Government of Nigeria to ensure the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Taking note of the request made by the Special Rapporteurs on the independence of judges and lawyers and on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions to undertake a joint investigative mission to Nigeria, the Commission called on the Government to accede to the request. It asked the two thematic Special Rapporteurs to report in 1997, and to submit an interim report to the General Assembly. Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1996/284 on 24 July.

Report of Special Rapporteurs. By an October note [A/51/538], the Secretary-General transmitted the joint report on the situation of human rights in Nigeria prepared by the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, Bacre Waly Ndiaye (Senegal), and the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, Param Cumaraswamy (Malaysia).

Mr. Ndiaye remained concerned about the application of the death penalty in Nigeria; the use of force by law enforcement officials; the continuing occurrence of communal violence and apparent lack of preventive measures; and extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the large number of deaths in detention and the high rate of impunity.

Mr. Cumaraswamy expressed grave concern that substantial judicial power, especially in the administration of criminal justice, was vested in the military and special ad hoc tribunals to the exclusion of the ordinary courts. The tribunals, which he stated could not possibly be independent and impartial and did not appear to apply the universally accepted principles of due process in the administration of justice, seemed to exercise unbridled judicial power.

The Special Rapporteurs appealed to the Government to implement the recommendations made by the Secretary-General's fact-finding mission, as well as the recommendations made by the Human Rights Committee following examination of the initial report of Nigeria under article 40 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter I). They urged the Government to take measures to prevent the occurrence of intercommunal violence and asked it to ensure that their upcoming mission (see below) could be carried out without hindrance.

In a separate addendum [A/51/538/Add.1], the Special Rapporteurs described their communications with the Government of Nigeria in October and November concerning their proposed mission to the country. They stated that the conditions attached to the acceptance of the proposed mission, as well as the lack of reply to correspondence, had resulted in a situation in which it was impossible for them to carry out a mission. They pointed out that if they were unable to carry out the mission, they would have to submit their final report to the Commission based on information received on the human rights situation in Nigeria from third-party sources. The Special Rapporteurs called on the General Assembly to adopt measures commensurate to expressing deep concern at the recalcitrant attitude of the Government.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/109.

Situation of human rights in Nigeria

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, and other human rights instruments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have the duty to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Recalling that Nigeria is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights and to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Recalling its resolution 50/199 of 22 December 1995, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/79 of 23 April 1996 on the situation of human rights in Nigeria, including the absence of representative government in Nigeria contrary to the popular support for democratic government as evidenced in the 1993 elections,

Also recalling the announcement made by the Government of Nigeria on 1 October 1995, in which it affirmed the principle of multi-party democracy, the principle of power-sharing and its intention to lift the ban on political activities and the press, to devolve power to the local levels of government and to subordinate the military to civilian authority,

Welcoming the report of the mission sent to Nigeria by the Secretary-General pursuant to resolution 50/199, and noting the interim response of the Government of Nigeria to that mission,

Welcoming also the resumption of dialogue between Nigeria and the Commonwealth,

Noting the action taken to date to move towards a system of multi-party democracy, including the registration of five political parties and the intention to hold elections, on a party basis, to the local councils in December 1996, as well as the release of a number of detainees and the repeal or amendment of measures which were seen as obstacles to human rights,

Regretting, however, that a number of political associations have been instructed to disband on the grounds that they did not meet the requirements stipulated in the transition process,

Taking note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the independence of judges and lawyers and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions,

Noting with deep concern reports of grave violations of human rights, including extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and arbitrary detention, and failure to respect due process of law, as described in, inter alia, reports submitted by the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers and the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, as well as in the concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee,

Stressing the importance of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers and the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions to undertake a joint investigative mission to Nigeria, as requested by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1996/79,

Concerned that, despite a number of legislative and procedural measures taken to reform the system of administration of justice, persons in detention in Nigeria continue to face a flawed judicial process, and recalling in this regard the arbitrary execution of Ken Saro-Wiwa and his associates,

1. Expresses its deep concern about violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Nigeria, and calls upon the Government of Nigeria urgently to ensure their observance, including by releasing all political prisoners, trade union leaders, human rights advocates and journalists who are at present detained, guaranteeing freedom of the press and ensuring respect for the rights of all individuals, including persons belonging to minorities;

2. Calls upon the Government of Nigeria to ensure that trials are held strictly in conformity with the international human rights instruments to which Nigeria is a party;

3. Also calls upon the Government of Nigeria to abide by its freely undertaken obligations under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other human rights instruments, including the African Charter of Human and Peoples' Rights, and notes with interest in this regard the recommendations of the Human Rights Committee to the Government of Nigeria [CCPR/C/79/Add.65];

4. Further calls upon the Government of Nigeria to implement fully its interim undertakings to the Secretary-General without further delay and to respond in full to the recommendations of the Secretary-General's mission to Nigeria;

5. Regrets that the Government of Nigeria has not enabled the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the independence of judges and lawyers and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions to visit the country before presentation of their report to the General Assembly, and urges the Government of Nigeria to cooperate fully with them during the joint investigative mission to Nigeria mandated by the Commission on Human Rights and with the relevant mechanisms of the Commission;

6. Notes the declared commitment of the Government of Nigeria to civilian rule, and urges it to take further concrete steps to restore democratic government;

7. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to pursue his good offices, and requests the Secretary-General in the discharge of his good offices mandate and in cooperation with the Commonwealth to continue to undertake further discussion with the Government of Nigeria and to report on progress in the implementation of the present resolution and on the possibilities for the international community to offer practical assistance to Nigeria to achieve the restoration of democratic rule and the full enjoyment of human rights in Nigeria;

8. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Rwanda

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/76], the Commission on Human Rights condemned in the strongest terms acts of genocide, violations of international humanitarian law and all violations and abuses of human rights in Rwanda. It asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the activities of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda to the Commission in 1997 and to the General Assembly in 1996, and recommended the continuation of the Operation presence throughout Rwanda, as well as adequate funds for that purpose. States were called on to contribute to the costs of the Operation and the Secretary-General was asked to propose steps to place it on a more secure financial basis. The Secretary-General was also asked to ensure adequate financial and human resources and logistical support for the Operation, especially for the administration of justice. The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional year and asked him to make recommendations on situations in which technical assistance might be appropriate; it also asked him to report to the Assembly in 1996 and to the Commission in 1997.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/281 of 24 July, endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and approved its requests to him.

Subcommission action. On 19 August [res. 1996/3], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with any assistance he might need and to arrange for inquiries to establish responsibility for the attack of 6 April 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 276] against the aircraft carrying the Presidents of Rwanda and Burundi, which had been the starting point of massacres and genocide.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. By a November note [A/51/657], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of Special Rapporteur Rene Degni-Ségui (Cote d'Ivoire) describing the situation of human rights in Rwanda and his visits to the country in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 786].

In a later report [E/CN.4/1997/61], the Special Rapporteur described his visits to Rwanda from 18 to 21 October 1996, as part of the follow-up to his missions, and from 6 to 10 December to investigate the human rights situation following the mass return of refugees. He discussed genocide in the country and its causes, as well as the situation of vulnerable groups, particularly women, children and the minority Twas. The International Tribunal for Rwanda and national courts were making efforts to carry out proceedings against persons suspected of genocide (for details of the work of the International Tribunal, see PART FOUR, Chapter II). Current human rights violations included violations of property rights, freedom of expression, the right to personal security and the rights to physical integrity and to life.

As to the refugee crisis, the Special Rapporteur stated that it had degenerated into an armed conflict that threatened the security and stability of the Great Lakes region. He discussed the consequences of the continued presence of Rwandan refugees in neighbouring countries, incursions by refugees against the Rwandan Government and the failure of strategies carried out by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to settle the crisis. (See also PART THREE, Chapter XII.)

The Special Rapporteur made recommendations concerning the prosecution of persons suspected of genocide, the cessation of human rights violations, social reintegration and a comprehensive settlement of the Great Lakes crisis.

Human Rights Field Operation

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/200 [YUN 1995, p. 787], the High Commissioner for Human Rights reported in April on the activities of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda (HRFOR) [E/CN.4/1996/111]. The Operation was the key response to the massacres and massive human rights violations in 1994 (April-July) which, he said, were perpetrated in a pre-planned, organized and systematic manner by extremist Hutu militia. The exodus of millions of refugees into neighbouring countries generated an immediate need to assist the Government that took power in Rwanda in mid-July 1994 in creating the necessary conditions of law and order to encourage the early return of refugees and internally displaced persons.

The objective and functions of the Operation, first deployed in September 1994, were: investigating violations of human rights and humanitarian law, including possible acts of genocide; monitoring the ongoing human rights situation and helping to prevent violations through the presence of human rights field officers; cooperating with other international agencies to re-establish confidence and facilitate the return of refugees and internally displaced persons and the rebuilding of civil society; and implementing programmes of human rights technical cooperation, particularly in the area of the administration of justice. The High Commissioner presented an overview of the functions of the Operation and discussed servicing and coordination of HRFOR with bodies established by the Security Council and the Commission on Human Rights.

The High Commissioner stated that HRFOR had made a significant contribution to human rights protection and promotion efforts in Rwanda. However, in view of financial constraints, it had not been possible to proceed with the recruitment of staff necessary to maintain and strengthen that process. He referred to a Security Council resolution of 8 March (resolution 1050(1996)), which called on States to contribute urgently to the costs of HRFOR and encouraged the Secretary-General to consider steps to place the Operation on a more secure financial basis.

As requested by the Commission on Human Rights [res. 1996/76], the High Commissioner, in an October report [A/51/478], noted that HRFOR continued to build upon a strong working relationship with the Government of Rwanda, which was essential for the effective carrying out of its mandate. It had taken a three-pronged approach to confidence-building with a view to eventual national reconciliation. That approach included investigating acts of genocide, monitoring and confidence-building, and the promotion of human rights and efforts to rehabilitate the justice system. In the area of monitoring, the High Commissioner pointed out that the human rights situation of refugees and the conditions of detention remained of particular concern. Technical cooperation projects focused on rehabilitation of the justice system, the situation in prisons and detention centres, and human rights education and promotion, particularly with regard to minority and vulnerable groups.

As to the financing of HRFOR, the High Commissioner created a yearly human rights fund for field activities to minimize the instability and uncertainty that had complicated current field operations.

(For details of political developments in Rwanda, see PART ONE, Chapter II.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/114.

Situation of human rights in Rwanda

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and other applicable standards of human rights and humanitarian law,

Recalling its resolutions 50/57 of 12 December 1995 and 50/200 of 22 December 1995, and taking note of Security Council resolutions 1050(1996) of 8 March 1996, 1078(1996) of 9 November 1996 and 1080(1996) of 15 November 1996, and of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/76 of 23 April 1996,

Deeply concerned by the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights and of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda that genocide and systematic and widespread violations of international humanitarian law, including crimes against humanity and grave violations and abuses of human rights, were committed in Rwanda,

Recognizing that effective action must be taken to ensure that the perpetrators of genocide and crimes against humanity are promptly brought to justice, and noting in this regard that legislation to govern the prosecution of those accused of genocide or crimes against humanity entered into force on 1 September 1996,

Noting with concern the implications of the current humanitarian crisis in the region,

Welcoming the fact that considerable numbers of refugees have recently returned to Rwanda, and affirming the readiness of the international community to assist the Government of Rwanda in reintegrating these returnees,

Recognizing that effective action to prevent further violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms must be a central and integral element of the overall Rwandan and United Nations responses to the situation in Rwanda and that a strengthened human rights component is indispensable to the peace process and post-conflict reconstruction of Rwanda,

Welcoming contributions made by Member States and the European Union to the costs of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda,

Welcoming also the commitment of the Government of Rwanda to protect and promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, to eliminate impunity and to facilitate the process of the voluntary and safe return, resettlement and reintegration of refugees, as reaffirmed in the agreements reached at Nairobi, Bujumbura and Cairo in 1995 and at Tunis and Arusha in 1996, and urging Governments in the region to work, in cooperation with the international community, to find durable solutions to the refugee crisis,

Stressing its concern that the United Nations should continue to play an active role in assisting the Government of Rwanda in facilitating the voluntary and orderly return of refugees and the reintegration of returnees, in promoting reconciliation, in consolidating a climate of confidence and stability and in promoting the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Rwanda,

Reaffirming the link between the voluntary return of refugees to their homes and the normalization of the situation in Rwanda, and concerned that acts of intimidation and violence directed against refugees, particularly by the former Rwandan authorities, have prevented refugees from returning to their homes,

Noting the United Nations support for all efforts to reduce tension and restore stability in the Great Lakes region, including initiatives of the Organization of African Unity, States in the region and international organizations, and reiterating the urgent need for an international conference on peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region, under the auspices of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, to address the problems of the region in a comprehensive manner,

1. Welcomes the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda and the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights;

I

2. Condemns in the strongest terms the acts of genocide, violations of international humanitarian law and all violations and abuses of human rights that have taken place in Rwanda, as well as cross-border violence in the region;

3. Expresses its deep concern at the intense suffering of the victims of genocide and crimes against humanity, recognizes the ongoing suffering of their survivors, particularly the extremely high number of traumatized children and women victims of rape and sexual violence, and urges the international community to provide adequate assistance to them and to note the priorities identified by the Government of Rwanda in this area;

4. Reaffirms that all persons who committed or authorized acts of genocide or other grave violations of international humanitarian law and those who are responsible for grave violations of human rights are individually responsible and accountable for those violations and that the international community must exert every effort, in cooperation with national and international tribunals, to bring those responsible to justice, in accordance with international principles of due process;

5. Urges all States to cooperate fully, without delay, with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994, taking into account the obligations contained in Security Council resolutions 955(1994) of 8 November 1994 and 978(1995) of 27 February 1995, and encourages the Secretary-General to facilitate the activities of the Tribunal to the greatest extent possible;

II

6. Encourages the further efforts of the Government of Rwanda to reconstruct the civil administration and the social, legal, economic and human rights infrastructure of Rwanda, and in this regard welcomes the commitments made by the Government of Rwanda to restore the rule of law and protect and promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

7. Invites all States, the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue and to intensify their contributions of financial and technical support to accelerate the efforts of the Government of Rwanda to, inter alia, restore the judicial system, promote reconciliation through the recently established Commission for National Reconciliation and safely reintegrate returning refugees in conditions of safety and dignity, including addressing competing claims to housing and property;

8. Notes with concern the human rights situation in Rwanda as described in the report of the Special Rapporteur, and urges the Government of Rwanda to take all necessary measures in response to the recommendations therein;

9. Expresses grave concern at reports from the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda of killings of civilians during attacks on survivors and witnesses of genocide, apparently by militias and insurgents opposed to the Government of Rwanda, and at the reports of the Field Operation which state that civilians have been killed during military search operations by the Rwandese Patriotic Army;

10. Encourages the Government of Rwanda to continue in its efforts to further strengthen the judicial system, including its independence, and urges in particular that the processing of the cases of those in detention be brought to a conclusion expeditiously;

11. Notes with deep concern the reports of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda which state that government officials without legal authority to arrest or imprison continue to do so in several parts of the country, that detainees are held for very long periods before trial and that acute overcrowding threatens the safety of those in detention;

12. Invites the Government of Rwanda to continue efforts to involve, without any discrimination, all citizens not responsible for genocide or other grave violations of international humanitarian law in its administrative, judicial, political and security structures;

13. Emphasizes the importance it attaches to the safety and security of all people in Rwanda, including United Nations personnel and other international staff serving in the country;

14. Welcomes the efforts of the Government of Rwanda, neighbouring countries, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the international community to resolve the ongoing humanitarian crisis, and calls upon all parties to take all appropriate measures to ensure the return, resettlement and reintegration of former refugees in conditions of safety and dignity;

15. Commends and encourages the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees as well as the United Nations Development Programme and other United Nations offices and organizations to coordinate their efforts to ensure respect for and protection of the human rights of refugees during their return, resettlement and reintegration;

III

16. Welcomes the measures taken by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, working in cooperation with and assisting the Government of Rwanda, to put in place the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda, the objectives of which were described in resolution 50/200, and requests the High Commissioner to continue to report regularly on the activities of the Field Operation and to continue to cooperate and share information with the Special Rapporteur, in order to assist him in fulfilling his mandate;

17. Welcomes also the cooperation the Government of Rwanda has extended to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur and the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda and the acceptance by the Government of Rwanda of the deployment of human rights field officers throughout the country and, with a view to further strengthening a climate of mutual confidence and enabling authorities in Rwanda to take immediate action on the findings of the Field Operation, encourages dialogue on human rights issues between the Field Operation and the appropriate authorities at the level of commune, prefecture and relevant government ministries;

18. Commends the contribution of human rights officers and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to the promotion and protection of human rights in Rwanda, recognizes that a strong human rights component is an integral and indispensable element of the United Nations response to the situation in Rwanda, and encourages all agencies and organizations of the United Nations system active in Rwanda to coordinate closely with the Field Operation;

19. Recognizes the importance of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda in contributing to reconciliation and the establishment of confidence in the country, recommends the strengthening of its presence throughout Rwanda as well as the allocation of sufficient funds and logistical support for that purpose, taking into account the need to train local human rights observers and deploy a sufficient number of human rights field officers, recognizes also the need for programmes of technical assistance and advisory services for and in consultation with the Government of Rwanda and for Rwandan human rights organizations, and notes in particular the importance of strengthening the institutional capacity of the Rwandan judiciary and the urgent need for adequate resources in this area;

20. Calls upon all States to respond to the appeal of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and contribute urgently to the costs of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda and to work for lasting solutions to its financing problems, including through the regular budget of the United Nations;

21. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the activities of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-third session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 51/114

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.3 & Add.3/Corr.1) without vote, 27 November (meeting 55); 41-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.64/Rev.1); agenda item 110 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-52, 55; plenary 82.

The Sudan

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a February report [E/CN.4/1996/62], Special Rapporteur Gáspár Bíró (Hungary) described human rights violations by the Government of the Sudan, including extrajudicial killings and summary executions, enforced or involuntary disappearances, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, arbitrary arrest and detention, due process of law, penal legislation, and slavery, servitude, the slave trade and forced labour. He also noted violations of freedom of thought, conscience and religion, freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly, freedom of movement and residence, and the rights of children and women. In addition, relief activities were severely hampered by flight restrictions imposed by the Government. The Special Rapporteur pointed to incidents of abuses by parties to the conflict in southern Sudan other than the Government.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that grave and widespread human rights violations by government agents, as well as abuses by members of parties to the conflict in southern Sudan other than the Government, continued to take place in the zones controlled by them. He also concluded that the abduction of persons belonging to racial, ethnic and religious minorities from southern Sudan, the Nuba Mountains and the Ingassema Hills areas, their subjection to the slave trade, including traffic in and sale of children and women, slavery, servitude, forced labour and similar practices were taking place with the knowledge of the Government. Women and children continued to be among the most vulnerable groups targeted deliberately by agents acting for and in the name of the Government. Atrocities against the indigenous population in the Nuba Mountains intensified. On the positive side, he mentioned the family reunification process in southern Sudan with the assistance of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), as well as a series of training courses and seminars held with UNICEF/Operation Lifeline Sudan assistance. Also, a vaccination campaign against Guinea-worm disease was carried out during a ceasefire in large areas of southern Sudan.

The Special Rapporteur made recommendations to the Government of the Sudan, including complying with its human rights obligations under international law and taking steps to give effect to General Assembly and Commission on Human Rights resolutions; ceasing aerial bombardments of civilian targets; releasing all political detainees and prisoners, ceasing torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment, closing down secret detention centres, ensuring accused persons due process of law, allowing them visits by lawyers and family members, and ratifying, acceding to or signing UN human rights instruments; ensuring proper training for security, armed and police forces and paramilitary or civil defence groups; stopping the rounding up of children from the streets, releasing children from special camps and other places of involuntary detention and making efforts to reunite them with their families; providing free access to all areas of the country to humanitarian organizations and representatives of human rights organizations; carrying out investigations into human rights violations in the Nuba Mountains and other government-controlled areas in southern Sudan; agreeing on a ceasefire; and addressing the problem of displaced persons. The Special Rapporteur proposed that the human rights situation in the Sudan be kept under continuous and intensified monitoring, and stated that monitors should be placed in locations which would facilitate improved information flow and assessment and would help in the independent verification of reports on the situation.

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/73], the Commission on Human Rights expressed deep concern at continued human rights violations in the Sudan and, among other things, called on the Government to comply with applicable international human rights instruments and to bring its national legislation into accordance with the instruments to which the Sudan was a party, and to ensure that individuals in its territory and subject to its jurisdiction fully enjoyed the rights recognized in those instruments.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year and asked the Secretary-General to assist him. It encouraged the Special Rapporteurs on religious intolerance and on freedom of expression to consult with the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan and to accept the invitations of the Government. The Commission recommended that priority be given to the placement of human rights field officers to monitor the situation of human rights and asked the Special Rapporteur to report on the future need for such field officers. It also asked him to report to the Assembly in 1996 and to the Commission in 1997.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/278, endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and approved its request for him to report to the Assembly and the Commission.

Report of Special Rapporteur. By an October note [A/51/490], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Special Rapporteur describing consultations he had held with government officials during his visit to the Sudan from 1 to 6 August.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the armed conflict was affecting most of the population, with children and women most exposed to human rights violations. He noted violations of freedom of conscience and religion, continuing harassment of some of the released political detainees, and an increasing number of reports of arrests, detention without trial and summary executions carried out in eastern Sudan. The situation in certain universities in northern Sudan was also of concern, as well as reports on reprisals and atrocities committed against students by the police and security forces. A positive step forward concerning slavery and similar practices was the creation of the Special Investigation Committee on Allegations of Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and Reported Cases of Slavery. Regarding the situation of children, he pointed to the efforts made towards a larger degree of cooperation between the Government and international organizations, particularly the UNICEF office in Khartoum.

Recommendations to the Government included ensuring that the Consultative Council for Human Rights addressed all allegations on human rights violations brought to its knowledge and made public its methods of work, rules of procedure and the results of the investigations made, and ensuring that those providing information would not suffer reprisals. As to the Special Investigation Committee, he proposed that its terms of reference be defined more precisely, its activities and findings be given wide publicity, and full transparency be ensured by encouraging representatives of interested civic groups to participate and help the fact-finding activities of the Committee. Other recommendations dealt with free access to international human rights and humanitarian organizations and independent observers to areas where enforced or involuntary disappearances or cases of slavery, slave trade and similar institutions and practices had been reported; international participation in addressing cases of enforced or involuntary disappearances in the Nuba Mountains area; making public the list of camps where children had been kept and the names of children living in the camps; enhancing cooperation with international humanitarian organizations; and giving free access to human rights organizations and independent observers.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the General Assembly and the international community give priority to supporting effective measures taken by the Government of the Sudan to investigate reported human rights violations and to make their results public, and to improve the flow of information between UN bodies and agencies. He also suggested that they give priority to the placement of human rights field officers to monitor the human rights situation; support concrete steps needed to improve the situation of the most vulnerable groups; urge the Government to cooperate with UN agencies, international humanitarian, human rights organizations and independent observers; and continue to consider the human rights situation in the Sudan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/112.

Situation of human rights in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to comply with the obligations laid down in the various instruments in this field,

Recalling the obligation of all parties to respect international humanitarian law,

Recalling also its resolution 50/197 of 22 December 1995, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/73 of 23 April 1996,

Noting with deep concern reports of grave human rights violations in the Sudan, in particular summary executions, detentions without trial, forced displacement of persons and torture, as described in reports submitted to the Commission on Human Rights by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the question of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief,

Welcoming the fourth and latest interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, and noting with concern the continuing violations of human rights in the Sudan,

Concerned about continuing deliberate and indiscriminate aerial bombardments by the Government of the Sudan of civilian targets in southern Sudan, in clear violation of international humanitarian law, which have added to the suffering of the civilian population and resulted in casualties to civilians, including relief workers involved in Operation Lifeline Sudan and with international private voluntary agencies,

Welcoming the lifting, in July 1996, of restrictions on aircraft employed to deliver humanitarian assistance, yet deeply concerned by the continued denial of flight clearances to affected areas, which exacerbates the threat to human life,

Alarmed by the large number of internally displaced persons and victims of discrimination in the Sudan, including members of ethnic minorities who have been forcibly displaced in violation of their human rights and who are in need of relief assistance and protection,

Noting that the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan and the Special Rapporteur on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief carried out missions to the Sudan in 1996, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/197,

Deeply concerned by the conclusion of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, also stated in his previous reports, that grave and widespread violations of human rights by government agents, as well as abuses by members of parties to the conflict in southern Sudan other than the Government of the Sudan, continue to take place in the zones controlled by them, including extrajudicial killings, enforced or involuntary disappearances, abductions, slavery, systematic torture and widespread arbitrary arrests of suspected political opponents, as well as restrictions on religious minorities,

Welcoming the establishment by the Government of the Sudan of the Special Investigation Committee on Allegations of Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and Reported Cases of Slavery,

Alarmed by the continuing failure of the Sudanese authorities to investigate human rights violations and abuses brought to their attention over the past years,

Gravely alarmed that since February 1994 there have been increasing reports from a wide variety of sources indicating that atrocities by the Government of the Sudan against the local population in the area of the Nuba Mountains have intensified,

Welcoming the commitment of the Government of the Sudan to facilitate the improved flow of information, as well as its stated strong commitment to cooperate with the competent United Nations bodies and agencies, as well as with the Special Rapporteur;

Concerned by reports of religious persecution in areas of the conflict zone controlled by the Government of the Sudan and of discrimination based upon religion in the provision of shelter and relief,

Deeply concerned by the Special Rapporteur's conclusion that the abduction of persons, mainly women and children belonging to ethnic and religious minorities from southern Sudan, the Nuba Mountains and the Ingassena Hills area, and their subjection to the slave trade, servitude and forced labour are taking place with the knowledge of the Government of the Sudan,

Welcoming the dialogue and contacts between non-governmental organizations and the religious minorities in the Sudan aimed at improving relations between the Government of the Sudan and the religious minority groups,

Noting that the Government of the Sudan has taken steps towards a larger degree of cooperation with some international organizations, with special attention to the rights of Sudanese children, and hoping that these efforts will be enhanced in the future,

Deeply concerned about the problem of unaccompanied minors and the use of children as soldiers by all parties, despite repeated calls from the international community to put an end to this practice, as described in the report of the Special Rapporteur,

1. Expresses deep concern at the serious, widespread and continuing human rights violations in the Sudan, including extrajudicial killings and summary executions, detentions without due process, violations of the rights of women and children, forced displacement of persons, enforced or involuntary disappearances, torture and other forms of cruel and unusual punishment, slavery, practices similar to slavery and forced labour, denial of the freedoms of expression, association and peaceful assembly and discrimination based on religion;

2. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan to comply with applicable international human rights instruments to which the Sudan is a party, in particular the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Slavery Convention, as amended, and the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices

Similar to Slavery, to implement those instruments to which it is a party and to ensure that all individuals in its territory and subject to its jurisdiction, including members of all religious and ethnic groups, enjoy fully the rights recognized in those instruments;

3. Urges the Government of the Sudan to ensure that all cases of slavery, servitude, slave trade, forced labour and similar practices brought to its attention are investigated and all appropriate measures are implemented to put an immediate end to these practices;

4. Expresses its hope that the Special Investigation Committee on Allegations of Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and Reported Cases of Slavery will contribute effectively to improving the human rights situation in the Sudan;

5. Welcomes the statement by the Government of the Sudan, as reported by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, in which it pledged its logistical support to national, regional and international organizations that join the investigations of alleged cases of involuntary disappearance and slavery, and, accordingly, calls upon the Government to grant international human rights and humanitarian organizations and independent observers free and unimpeded access to all areas where these violations have been reported;

6. Welcomes the interim report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan to the General Assembly and his recent report to the Commission on Human Rights, and expresses its continuing support for his work;

7. Continues to urge the placement of human rights monitors in such locations as will facilitate improved information flow and assessment and independent verification of reporting, with particular attention to violations and abuses of human rights in areas of armed conflict, as recommended by the Special Rapporteur;

8. Urges the Government of the Sudan to cease immediately all aerial attacks on civilian targets and other attacks that are in violation of international humanitarian law;

9. Calls upon parties to the hostilities to respect fully the applicable provisions of international humanitarian law, including article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population and to protect all civilians, including women, children and members of ethnic and religious minorities, from violations, including forcible displacement, arbitrary detention, ill-treatment, torture and summary executions, and deplores the consequences for innocent civilians of the use of landmines by government and rebel forces alike;

10. Again calls upon the Government of the Sudan and all parties to allow Operation Lifeline Sudan, international agencies, humanitarian organizations and donor Governments unimpeded access to the civilian population so as to permit the delivery of humanitarian assistance to all persons in need;

11. Welcomes the reported release of female detainees with children and any other activities designed to assist such persons, and encourages the Government of the Sudan to work actively for the eradication of practices that are directed against and in particular violate the human rights of women and girls, in full cooperation with the international organizations active in the Sudan and focusing on the question, including the office of the United Nations Children's Fund in Khartoum;

12. Urges the Government of the Sudan to take all steps necessary to improve the situation of the most vulnerable groups of the society, the women, children and ethnic and religious minorities living in the conflict zones, as recommended by the Special Rapporteur;

13. Urges all parties to the civil war in the Sudan to seek a negotiated settlement to the conflict immediately, and encourages the parties to cooperate with efforts by the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development to assist the warring parties to put an end to the conflict and hasten a return of Sudanese refugees residing in neighbouring countries;

14. Reiterates its call upon the Government of the Sudan to ensure a full, thorough and prompt investigation by an independent judicial commission of inquiry into the killings of Sudanese nationals employed by foreign relief organizations and foreign Governments;

15. Urges the Government of the Sudan to cooperate fully with all United Nations agencies, international humanitarian organizations, human rights organizations and independent observers to improve the situation of human rights in the Sudan, as recommended by the Special Rapporteur;

16. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for an additional year;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary assistance in the discharge of his mandate;

18. Welcomes the approaches to the Special Rapporteurs of the Commission on Human Rights by the Government of the Sudan, and again calls upon the Government of the Sudan to extend its full and unreserved cooperation to the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan and to the thematic Special Rapporteurs, to assist them in the ongoing discharge of their mandates and, to this end, to take all necessary steps to ensure that the Special Rapporteurs have free and unlimited access to the whole territory of the Sudan and to any person in the Sudan with whom they wish to meet, with no threats or reprisals;

19. Recommends the continued monitoring of the serious human rights situation in the Sudan and of the regional efforts to end the hostilities and human suffering in the south, and invites the Commission on Human Rights, at its fifty-third session, to give urgent attention to the situation of human rights in the Sudan;

20. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-second session.

Zaire

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a January report [E/CN.4/1996/66], Special Rapporteur Roberto Garreton (Chile) described the human rights situation in Zaire and his visit to the country (Kinshasa, Goma, Bukavu, 10-21 November 1995).

Regarding ethnic and regional rivalries, ethnic conflicts continued in Northern Kivu and a new conflict arose with the Banyamulenge in Southern Kivu. Ethnic cleansing of the Kasai people in Shaba had culminated in 1995. New conflicts were reported, attributed to incitement by the authorities, as members of the Bakongo and Basolongo ethnic groups attacked other groups in Moanda, Bas-Zaïre. In addition, a regional conflict broke out between inhabitants of the north and the south of Shaba, and a political-tribal conflict started by the Mouvement populaire de la révolution affected the Balubas of Haut-Zaïre. (For details, see PART ONE, Chapter II.)

The Special Rapporteur discussed the problems of refugees in Zaire (see PART THREE, Chapter XII) and noted reports of the introduction of weapons into refugee camps through Goma airport.

Concerning violations of civil and political rights, the Special Rapporteur regretted that of 102 cases transmitted to the Government, which had been the most serious and substantiated, he had received replies to only three. He examined alleged violations of the right to life, the right to security, the right to physical and mental integrity and not to be subjected to torture, the right to nationality, the right to liberty of person, the right to a fair trial, the right to freedom of assembly, the right to freedom of association and the right to freedom of opinion and expression. With respect to economic, social and cultural rights and the right to development, the Special Rapporteur noted that no progress had been made concerning the right to work and to housing, that health conditions had deteriorated considerably and the right to education had also been seriously violated. He also described the ill-treatment of children and women.

Recommendations to the Zairian authorities dealt with democracy and human rights; civil and political rights; economic, social and cultural rights; society at large; tolerance; the right to nationality; refugees; the trial of persons accused of genocide; the rights of women; the installation in Zaire of an office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights; and transparency in the newly created Zairian National Commission on Human Rights. The Special Rapporteur reiterated the appeal by international NGOs for assistance to Zairian NGOs working in the area of human rights, development, gender and victims. He recommended that the international community keep a close watch on the deteriorating human rights situation and continue to provide assistance for refugees. He stressed the need for active and preventive diplomacy to avert the horrors that had occurred in Rwanda and Burundi.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1997/6/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur described his visit to Rwanda (6-14 July). His mission was limited to Rwanda, as the Zairian Ministry of Foreign Affairs informed him that it would be unable to receive him on the dates proposed owing to preparations for forthcoming elections and the fact that two large UN missions would be there at the same time.

The Special Rapporteur stated that he was informed by Zairian refugees, humanitarian organizations and various reports of violent incidents that left many people wounded, causing violations of people's safety, property and other rights and population displacements in 1996. He enumerated those incidents. In addition, he pointed out three areas in which Zaire had failed to honour its obligation to respect the rights recognized in the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)]: incitement to violence and racial or national hatred; direct involvement by the military and security forces in attacks, pillaging and setting fires; and impunity of the Zairian military and security forces. Zaire also was in violation of its obligation to guarantee the rights recognized in the Covenant. The Special Rapporteur noted that all the incidents related in his report were based on legislation, attitudes and actions rooted in discrimination. The main rights violated were the right to life, the right to physical and mental integrity, the right to nationality, the right to live in one's own country, the right to choose one's own place of residence, and the right to security.

The Special Rapporteur presented a series of recommendations to the Zairian authorities and people, concerning the armed forces and security services; tolerance; nationality; removal of all intimidators from the area; the repatriation of refugees; and respect for Rwandan refugees.

(For details of the political situation in Zaire, see PART ONE, Chapter II.)

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/77], the Commission on Human Rights deplored the continuing violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Zaire. It decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year and asked him to report in 1997 on how the Government of Zaire had taken into account his recommendations. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/282 of 24 July, endorsed the extension of the mandate and approved the submission of a report in 1997.

Asia and the Pacific

Afghanistan

Report of Special Rapporteur. In February, Special Rapporteur Choong-Hyun Paik (Republic of Korea) submitted a report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan [E/CN.4/1996/64]. He presented a brief outline of the political situation in the country, the rebuilding of its society and his 1996 visits to Afghanistan (18-23 January) and Pakistan (15-17 and 24 January).

The Special Rapporteur stated that despite sporadic disturbances, peace was gaining ground in Kabul and other areas controlled by local authorities. However, a resumption of hostilities had once more jeopardized the return to normalcy. People were deprived of the right to life, the right to be free from torture and the right to be free from cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. The presence of landmines posed a grave danger to the right to life. The Special Rapporteur noted violations of the rules of war and disregard of international norms, difficulty in redressing human rights violations as required by the rules of international law, the collapse of an impartial judicial system, private vengeance, death sentences and a case of capital punishment, difficulty in realizing fully the rights of women, an overwhelming lack of resources to provide basic needs such as safe water, food and sanitation, disruption of health services, deprivation of education, and the destruction of the cultural heritage of Afghanistan.

Recommendations emphasized humanitarian assistance, peace-building, the rebuilding of society, and protection of vulnerable populations and of cultural property.

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/75], the Commission on Human Rights called on all Afghan parties to respect fully all human rights and fundamental freedoms. It decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional year, and asked him to report in 1997 and to consider submitting a report to the General Assembly in 1996. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/280 of 24 July, endorsed the Commission's decision and approved its request to the Special Rapporteur. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to continue to apply a gender perspective in his reporting.

Report of Special Rapporteur. By an October note [A/51/481], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report in which the Special Rapporteur described his visits in July to Afghanistan, Iran and Pakistan.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the armed conflict in Afghanistan continued and had intensified significantly immediately prior to the finalization of his report. Hundreds of lives had been lost and numerous injuries inflicted, and significant destruction to property had occurred. Landmines threatened the right to life, death sentences had been passed and public executions had continued. Some 3 million Afghan refugees continued to live in Pakistan and Iran. The Special Rapporteur noted a grave deterioration in the area of women's rights.

Recommendations emphasized the immediate cessation of armed hostilities; efforts by the international community to bring a peaceful solution to the conflict; continuation of mine-awareness and mine-clearance programmes; the establishment of a coherent system of administration of justice; restoring the basic rights of women; giving priority to efforts to preserve and protect the cultural patrimony; increased humanitarian assistance to Afghan refugees and displaced persons to encourage voluntary repatriation; concerted efforts by the international community to suppress illegal narcotics trafficking in areas neighbouring Afghanistan; and requesting the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance to Afghanistan to assist the Special Rapporteur by ensuring support for his mission through follow-up on specific issues.

(For details of the political situation in Afghanistan, see PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/108.

Situation of human rights in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and accepted humanitarian rules, as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Recalling that Afghanistan is a party to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Convention on the Rights of the Child and that it has signed the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, as well as the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and the decisions of the Economic and Social Council,

Welcoming the special emphasis that the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan has placed on human rights issues in its discussions with the Afghan parties,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan and of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Expresses concern at the numerous and consistent reports of human rights abuses and violations of humanitarian law and human rights, including the rights to life, liberty and security of person, freedom from torture and from other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and freedom of opinion, expression and association;

3. Expresses its deep concern at the intensification of armed hostilities in Afghanistan, and calls on all parties involved immediately to cease such hostilities and to engage in a political dialogue aimed at achieving national reconciliation;

4. Calls on all the Afghan parties fully to respect and act in accordance with all human rights and fundamental freedoms, regardless of gender, ethnicity or religion, in particular the right to life, liberty and security of person and freedom of opinion and expression;

5. Urges all the Afghan parties fully to respect accepted humanitarian rules and act in accordance with all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the rights of women and children, and calls upon the Afghan authorities to take measures to ensure the effective participation of women in social, political and cultural life throughout the country;

6. Deeply deplores the grave deterioration of the human rights of women noted by the Special Rapporteur in his report, and urges the Afghan authorities immediately to restore respect for all human rights of women, including the right of women to work and the right of girls to education without discrimination, and calls upon Afghanistan to ratify the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, to which it is a signatory;

7. Urges all the Afghan parties to work closely with the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan with a view to achieving a comprehensive political solution leading to the eventual establishment of a democratic Government elected through free and fair elections based on the right to self-determination of the peoples of Afghanistan;

8. Demands that all Afghan parties fulfil their obligations and commitments regarding the safety of United Nations personnel and other international personnel as well as their premises in Afghanistan and co-operate fully with the United Nations and associated bodies as well as with other humanitarian organizations and agencies;

9. Strongly urges all parties to the conflict to take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of all personnel of humanitarian organizations and representatives of the media in Afghanistan;

10. Endorses the Special Rapporteur's condemnation of the abduction from United Nations premises of the former President of Afghanistan, Mr. Najibullah, and of his brother, and of their subsequent summary execution;

11. Urges the Afghan authorities to provide efficient and effective remedies to the victims of grave violations of human rights and of accepted humanitarian rules and to bring their perpetrators to trial in accordance with internationally accepted standards;

12. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to entrust the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation with the mandate, upon the invitation and with the cooperation of the Afghan authorities, of examining ways and means to restore the Kabul Museum, including through the tracing of the country's stolen articles, to propose measures aimed at preventing the illicit import, export and transfer of ownership of artefacts belonging to the Kabul Museum and to report thereon to the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

13. Appeals to Member States and to the international community to provide adequate humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan and to the Afghan refugees in the neighbouring countries, pending, and with a view to encouraging, their voluntary repatriation;

14. Urges the authorities in Afghanistan to continue to extend their cooperation to the Commission on Human Rights and to its Special Rapporteur;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

16. Decides to keep the situation of human rights in Afghanistan under consideration at its fifty-second session, in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

General Assembly resolution 51/108

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.3 & Add.3/Corr.1) without vote, 26 November (meeting 53); draft by Chairman (A/C.3/51/L.49); agenda item 110 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-53; plenary 82.

Cambodia

For details on the human rights situation in Cambodia, see PART TWO, Chapter I.

China

The Commission considered a draft resolution [E/CN.4/1996/L.90] by which it would have, among other things, recognized the significant transformation Chinese society had undergone since the introduction of reform policies and China's success in reducing the number of its people living in extreme poverty, thus enhancing the enjoyment of economic rights, and welcomed certain recent positive developments taking place with regard to its legal system. Nevertheless, by the text, it would have expressed concern at the continuing reports of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms; and called on China to ensure full implementation of its obligations under human rights conventions to which it was a party.

China moved that the Commission take no action on the draft resolution. It stated that before 1949, of a population of 500 million, 400 million had not had enough to eat, whereas today the overwhelming majority of the population of 1.2 billion was free from hunger and cold. In the last six years, improvements had taken place in many fields, particularly with regard to economic growth and human rights.

By a roll-call vote of 27 to 20, with 6 abstentions, the Commission accepted China's motion that no action be taken on the draft.

East Timor

Report of Secretary-General. In a February report [E/CN.4/1996/56], the Secretary-General updated his good-offices activities aimed at achieving a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable settlement of the question of East Timor. Two new rounds of talks with the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia and Portugal were held in Geneva on 9 July 1995 and in London on 16 January 1996. Another was scheduled for 27 June in Geneva. The Secretary-General described action taken in 1995 by the Special Rapporteurs on the question of torture [E/CN.4/1996/35/Add.1] and on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions [E/CN.4/1996/4], and by the Working Groups on Arbitrary Detention [YUN 1995, p. 749] and on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances [YUN 1995, p. 755].

Annexed to the report was information provided by the Government of Indonesia regarding the human rights situation in East Timor; information provided by the Government of Portugal concerning self-determination in East Timor; and information provided by NGOs on alleged human rights violations in East Timor.

(See also PART ONE, Chapter VIII.)

Commission action. On 23 April, the Chairman of the Commission made a statement in which the Commission asked the Secretary-General to keep it informed of the human rights situation in East Timor [E/1996/23].

Iran

Report of Special Representative. In a March report [E/CN.4/1996/59], the Special Representative of the Commission, Maurice Copithorne (Canada), discussed the human rights situation in Iran. He visited the country from 10 to 16 February, when he met with many senior officials.

Concerning the legal system in Iran, the Special Representative noted that there continued to be reports of prolonged pretrial detention. There appeared to be many judicial and quasi-judicial tribunals. He believed that further inquiry was warranted into the subject of the death penalty and to determine whether the Independent Bar Association was playing a significant role in establishing and maintaining the integrity of the legal system. The Special Representative was of the opinion that it was too soon to say that a fully defined credible legal system was in place, with a truly independent judiciary and true respect for the rights of individuals, particularly at the pretrial phase. He continued to receive reports concerning disappearances and deaths under suspicious circumstances and information concerning allegedly politically motivated violence against Iranians outside the country. In further visits to Iran, the Special Representative wished to continue inquiries into Iran's legal system, including concepts such as the "prestige of the clergy", "insulting the leaders" and "economic sabotage or terrorism", the death penalty and the legal status and treatment of children.

He stated that there seemed to be some areas where an improvement in the status of women was actively being discussed. He noted the widespread condemnation of the threat on the life of British writer Salman Rushdie in effect since 1989. While there appeared to be some improvement in the situation of the Baha'is, there continued to be grave breaches of human rights. A number of human rights organizations had been established, which the Special Representative believed had potential for improving the human rights situation in Iran.

Annexed to the report were information on executions published in the Iranian and international press during 1995; letters from the Permanent Representative of Iran to the UN Office at Geneva containing information on some prisoners mentioned in previous reports; a letter from the Director of the Human Rights Department of the Iranian Ministry of Foreign Affairs concerning the Special Representative's investigation into the deaths of a number of individuals and another containing information about an alleged clandestine group; and information on that Department and on the Islamic Human Rights Commission. (See also PART TWO, Chapter II, for information on the visits to Iran by the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance and by the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression.)

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 24 to 7, with 20 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights on 24 April [res. 1996/84] expressed concern at the continuation of human rights violations in Iran and deplored the continuing violence against Iranians outside the country. It welcomed the invitation extended by the Government to the Special Representative and called on the Government to continue to cooperate with the mechanisms of the Commission, including by allowing them continued free access to the country. The Commission decided to extend the Special Representative's mandate for an additional year and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 1996 and to the Commission in 1997. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

Note by Secretary-General. In a June note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/9], the Secretary-General informed the Subcommission of the relevant reports issued in 1995 and 1996 and UN measures to prevent human rights violations in Iran.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1996/287 in July.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

At its 47th plenary meeting, on 24 July 1996, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/84 of 24 April 1996, endorsed the Commission's decision to extend for a further year the mandate of the Special Representative on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, as contained in Commission resolution

1984/54 of 14 March 1984, and approved the Commission's request to the Special Representative to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, and to report to the Commission at its fifty-third session.

Economic and Social Council decision 1996/287

28-8-15 (recorded vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1996/23); agenda item 5 (d). Meeting numbers. ESC 44, 47.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, Czech Republic, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Guyana, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, South Africa, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Bangladesh, China, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan, Sudan.

Abstaining: Belarus, Central African Republic, Colombia, Cote d'Ivoire, Egypt, Gabon, Jordan, Lebanon, Philippines, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zimbabwe.

Subcommission action. By a secret ballot vote of 12 to 6, with 6 abstentions, the Subcommission on 20 August [res. 1996/7] requested the Government of Iran to investigate fully a number of alleged human rights violations in order to end them. It asked the Secretary-General to continue to keep it informed of relevant reports and UN measures to prevent human rights violations in Iran.

Interim report of Special Representative. By an October note [A/51/479], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the interim report of the Special Representative. He updated developments in the human rights situation in Iran concerning democracy, the social climate, judicial, legal and penal practices, reports of harassment or intimidation of relatives in Iran of political dissidents or sympathizers living abroad, politically motivated violence against Iranians outside the country, the situation of Iranian refugees and asylum-seekers abroad, the situation of the Baha'is, the threat against the life of Salman Rushdie, information on prisoners, prisoners of war and the status of women. Annexed to the report were three letters from the Permanent Representative of Iran to the Special Representative concerning the fate of a number of individuals, and information on executions published in the Iranian and international press during the period 1 January to 31 August 1996.

An addendum to the Special Representative's report [A/51/479/Add.1] contained his statement before the General Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee on 15 November, identifying situations that had come to his attention since he completed his interim report. He stated that the creation of a commission on women's affairs had been voted on and that a senior government official had asked for UN assistance to improve the scientific and cultural standards of Iranian women. In October, the Government had advised him of the names of 224 prisoners who had benefited from a clemency decree. Also in October, 150 Iraqi prisoners of war had been released by Iran. The burden on the country in terms of refugees had grown, with some 60,000 refugees having crossed the Iranian border from Iraq as a result of political disturbances in northern Iraq. The addendum also contained the comments of the Government of Iran on the Special Representative's interim report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/107.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, reaffirmed that human rights and fundamental freedoms were the birthright of all human beings and that their protection and promotion was the first responsibility of Governments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have a duty to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that the Islamic Republic of Iran is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling the appointment by the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights of Mr. Maurice Danby Copithorne as Special Representative of the Commission on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran,

Recalling its previous resolutions expressing concern at the violations of human rights by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the most recent, resolution 50/188 of 22 December 1995, the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, including the most recent, resolution 1996/84 of 24 April 1996, and those of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, including the most recent, resolution 1996/7 of 20 August 1996,

Welcoming the cooperation extended by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on freedom of opinion and expression, who have been able to visit the Islamic Republic of Iran, and bearing in mind the reports of those Special Rapporteurs on their visits,

Taking note of the interim report of the Special Representative, and noting that he will present a further report to the Commission on Human Rights,

Welcoming the requests by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran for technical assistance and advisory services from the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, as well as from the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the Secretariat, and taking note with interest of the observation by the Special Representative in this regard,

Taking note with interest of certain recent developments in the Islamic Republic of Iran which, in the view of the Special Representative, are indicators of potential improvement of the status of women in that country,

Considering that continued international scrutiny of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the Islamic Republic of Iran is warranted and that the subject should remain on the agenda of the General Assembly,

1. Expresses its concern at the continuing violations of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, in particular the high number of executions in the absence of internationally recognized safeguards, cases of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the failure to meet international standards with regard to the administration of justice and the absence of due process of law, violations of the right to peaceful assembly and restrictions on the freedom of expression, thought, opinion and the press;

2. Also expresses its concern at the grave breaches of human rights of the Baha'is in the Islamic Republic of Iran and situations of discrimination against the members of this religious community, as well as at the discriminatory treatment of minorities by reason of their religious beliefs, including lack of adequate protection for the Christian minorities, some members of which have been the target of intimidation and assassination;

3. Further expresses its concern at the widespread discrimination against women in the Islamic Republic of Iran and the lack of full and equal enjoyment by women of human rights, and calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to take effective measures to eliminate all discrimination against women;

4. Urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, as a State party to the International Covenants on Human Rights, to abide by its freely undertaken obligations under the Covenants and under other international instruments on human rights and to ensure that all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction, including members of religious groups and persons belonging to minorities, enjoy all the rights enshrined in those instruments;

5. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to implement fully the conclusions and recommendations of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief relating to the Baha'is and to other minority religious groups, including Christians;

6. Expresses its grave concern at indications, according to the information received by the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, of a significant toughening of criminal legislation and its application in the Islamic Republic of Iran and in par-particular at the incidence of capital punishment imposed for apostasy and non-violent crimes, in violation of the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and United Nations safeguards;

7. Expresses its concern at the harassment and persecution of persons, including writers and members of the press, seeking to exercise their freedom of expression;

8. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to implement existing agreements with international humanitarian organizations;

9. Expresses its grave concern that there are continuing threats to the life of Mr. Salman Rushdie, as well as to individuals associated with his work, which appear to have the support of the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, notes in this regard that efforts aimed at obtaining satisfactory written assurances from the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran that it does not support these threats have so far been unsuccessful, and calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to provide such assurances;

10. Deplores the politically motivated continuing violence against Iranians outside the Islamic Republic of Iran, and urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to refrain from activities against members of the Iranian opposition living abroad and the harassment of their relatives within the Islamic Republic of Iran and to cooperate wholeheartedly with the authorities of other countries in investigating and punishing offences reported by them;

11. Welcomes the cooperation extended by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to the Special Representative, who has been able to conduct a preliminary visit to the Islamic Republic of Iran;

12. Expresses its hope that the Special Representative will again be allowed to visit the Islamic Republic of Iran in the discharge of his mandate;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative to enable him to discharge his mandate fully;

14. Decides, on the basis of the report of the Special Representative and in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council, to continue the examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, during its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Iraq

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a March report on the human rights situation in Iraq [E/CN.4/1996/61], Special Rapporteur Max van der Stoep (Netherlands) stated that he had found no evidence of significant change in areas on which he had reported in 1995 and that the conclusions reached in his 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 800] were still valid. Overall, he concluded that the structure of power in Iraq was such that human rights violations were inevitable, since guarantees for protection were absent and the scope for abuse of power was enormous. The Special Rapporteur stated that there was no doubt as to the responsibility of the State of Iraq for systematic human rights violations. He repeated the recommendations he had made in 1995.

By a letter of 23 September [A/C.3/51/3], Iraq transmitted its reply to the Special Rapporteur's report.

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/72], the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 30 to none, with 21 abstentions, expressed its strong condemnation of the massive and extremely grave human rights violations for which the Government of Iraq was fully responsible. It regretted the failure of the Government to provide satisfactory replies concerning human rights violations brought to the attention of the Special Rapporteur, and called on the Government to reply without delay in a comprehensive and detailed manner to enable him to draw up appropriate recommendations to improve the human rights situation in the country. The Commission called on the Government to resolve the cases of disappearances of Kuwaitis and nationals of other States by providing information on all persons deported from or arrested in Kuwait between 2 August 1990 and 26 February 1991 and on those who were executed or died in detention during or after that period. The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year, and asked him to report to the Commission periodically and to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1996 and a report to the Commission in 1997. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur and to take measures needed to send a team of human rights monitors to such locations as would facilitate improved information flows and assessment and would help in the independent verification of reports on the human rights situation in Iraq. He was also asked to provide additional resources, from within existing UN resources, to fund the sending of human rights monitors.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1996/277 in July.

Situation of human rights in Iraq

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 23 July 1996, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/72 of 23 April 1996, endorsed the Commission's decision to extend for a further year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Iraq, as contained in Commission resolutions 1991/74 of 6 March 1991, 1992/71 of 5 March 1992, 1993/74 of 10 March 1993, 1994/74 of 9 March 1994 and 1995/76 of 8 March 1995, approved the Commission's requests to the Special Rapporteur to report periodically to the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Iraq and to submit an interim report on the situation of human rights in Iraq to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session and a report to the Commission at its fifty-third session, and also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide appropriate additional resources, from within existing overall United Nations resources, to fund the sending of human rights monitors for the purpose set out in paragraph 8 of Commission resolution 1996/72.

Economic and Social Council decision 1996/277

33-0-18 (recorded vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1996/23); agenda item 5 (d).
Meeting numbers. ESC 44, 46.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Belarus, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Czech Republic, Finland, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guyana, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, Senegal, South Africa, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Bangladesh, Central African Republic, China, Cote d'Ivoire, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Jordan, Lebanon, Malaysia, Pakistan, Philippines, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zimbabwe.

Subcommission action. On 19 August [res. 1996/5], the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 11 votes to 6, with 7 abstentions, strongly condemned the violation of human rights by the Government of Iraq and what it termed the horrible deterioration of social conditions. It asked the Secretary-General to provide assistance to the Special Rapporteur and to call on the Government of Iraq to cooperate with him.

On 20 August [dec. 1996/107], the Subcommission, expressing deep concern at the serious consequences that the embargo imposed on Iraq for the past six years was having on civilians, appealed to the international community to facilitate the supply of food and medicines.

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the Special Rapporteur's interim report on the situation of human rights in Iraq [A/51/496].

The Special Rapporteur described alleged violations of civil and political rights based on information received during a visit to Jordan (4-10 April) by two staff members from the Centre for Human Rights and allegations received by the Centre. The alleged violations concerned personal security and due process of law, freedom of opinion and expression, and freedom of movement. The Special Rapporteur described the nature of the political regime in the country as dictatorial. In the prevailing regime, he said, there was no place for criticism or dissenting views, not even at the highest level. In addition, there was no rule of law. He presented information about the elections for the renewal of the four-year term of the National Assembly, which had taken place on 24 March. The elections were described as a farce, especially as far as actual voting was concerned; no electoral programme had been published or debated. In addition, there was a widespread prevalence of administrative corruption which had been allowed by the regime as a means of weakening the population and maintaining control. Contact with the administrative authorities increasingly involved corruption and bribery.

As to the rights to food and health care, the Special Rapporteur stated that he had observed the constantly deteriorating situation endured by the population. He noted that on 20 May the United Nations and the Government had concluded a memorandum of understanding, which set forth the arrangements for implementing Security Council resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475] authorizing States to permit the limited import of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people, also known as the oil-for-food agreement. He stated that while the public rationing system under the memorandum had reportedly so far functioned quite efficiently, the procedure for obtaining a rationing card was onerous and often arbitrary. Moreover, it was evident that the system was easily susceptible to manipulation for political purposes. There were many allegations that the system of rationing was unfair, corrupt and arbitrary. As a consequence of the Government's long intransigence on the oil-for-food formula, the economic situation continued to deteriorate and prices of essential food items and basic living commodities had become even further out of reach for a large part of the population. As for the health situation, there was a lack of minimum health-care facilities, pharmaceutical and other related equipment and appliances; access to health care was extremely limited.

The Special Rapporteur described the situation in northern Iraq. Large-scale Iraqi military operations, which began on 31 August in the predominantly Kurdish region, included the use of tanks, heavy artillery and helicopters. There was renewed indiscriminate shelling of civilian settlements, summary executions and arbitrary arrests. The outbreak of hostilities had resulted in the displacement of 20,000 people within northern Iraq and caused the departure of some 39,000 people to Iran. The Government of Iraq imposed a severe internal blockade on the import of food, fuel and medicines, a blockade it denied existed.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the overall human rights situation in Iraq had not improved and, in addition to his previous recommendations, he recommended that the Government abrogate all laws and decrees which prescribed cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and that it refrain from actions which contributed to insecurity affecting the population.

In a November addendum to his report [A/51/496/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur described the results of a mission, based on information received during the visit (14-24 October) to Iran by two staff members of the Centre for Human Rights. The staff members visited five refugee camps and received testimony from 50 refugees from northern Iraq. They also met with representatives of intergovernmental and non-governmental humanitarian organizations. Interviews concentrated on information pertaining to the situation in northern Iraq following fighting between the main factions there. The interviewees cited alleged extrajudicial executions, the use of excessive force and confiscation and destruction of private property, arbitrary arrest and forced relocation.

The Special Rapporteur stated that on 11 September the Revolution Command Council issued Decree No. 97, granting a full and comprehensive amnesty to all Iraqi citizens in the Kurdish Autonomous Region. However, he noted that the decree included exclusions that were cause for concern among the intended beneficiaries, specifically persons accused of having looted State property or spied for the benefit of foreigners. On 12 October [A/C.3/51/8], Iraq transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of Decree No. 97.

(For political developments in Iraq, see PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/106.

Situation of human rights in Iraq

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and the duty to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that Iraq is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international human rights instruments, and to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Recalling its resolution 50/191 of 22 December 1995, in which it expressed its strong condemnation of the massive violations of human rights of the gravest nature in Iraq, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/72 of 23 April 1996,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 688(1991) of 5 April 1991, in which the Council demanded an end to the repression of the Iraqi civilian population and insisted that Iraq cooperate with humanitarian organizations and ensure that the human and political rights of all Iraqi citizens were respected,

Recalling Security Council resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, by which the Council authorized States to permit imports of Iraqi oil up to the amount of one billion United States dollars every ninety days, on a renewable basis, to be used, inter alia, to purchase essential food and medical supplies for humanitarian purposes,

Deplored the refusal of the Government of Iraq to cooperate with the United Nations human rights mechanisms, in particular by not receiving a return visit of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Iraq and not allowing the stationing of human rights monitors throughout Iraq pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report on the situation of human rights in Iraq submitted by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Iraq and the observations, conclusions and recommendations contained therein, and noting his dismay that there has been no improvement in the situation of human rights in the country;

2. Expresses its strong condemnation of the massive and extremely grave violations of human rights for which the Government of Iraq is responsible, resulting in an all-pervasive order of repression and oppression which is sustained by broad-based discrimination and widespread terror;

3. Expresses its condemnation with regard to the violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, in particular of:

(a) Summary and arbitrary executions, including political killings;

(b) The widespread routine practice of systematic torture in its most cruel forms;

(c) The enactment and implementation of decrees prescribing cruel and unusual punishment, namely mutilation, as a penalty for certain offences and the abuse and diversion of medical-care services for the purpose of such mutilations;

(d) Enforced or involuntary disappearances, routinely practised arbitrary arrests and detention and consistent and routine failure to respect due process and the rule of law;

(e) Suppression of freedom of thought, information, expression, association and assembly through fear of arrest, imprisonment and other sanctions, including the death penalty, as well as harsh limitations to freedom of movement;

4. Welcomes the memorandum of understanding reached in May 1996 between Iraq and the Secretary-General to implement Security Council resolution 986(1995) and to respond to the serious humanitarian situation in Iraq perpetuated by the non-compliance of the Government of Iraq with various Security Council resolutions;

5. Urges the Government of Iraq to cooperate with the United Nations with a view to ensuring the implementation of Security Council resolution 986(1995), in accordance with the agreement reached in May 1996 that medicines, health supplies, foodstuffs and other humanitarian supplies purchased with the proceeds of the sale of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products be distributed to the Iraqi population equitably and on a non-discriminatory basis;

6. Again expresses its special alarm at the policies of the Government of Iraq, which discriminate between regions and prevent the equitable enjoyment of basic foodstuffs and medical supplies, and calls upon Iraq, which has sole responsibility in this regard, to take steps to cooperate with international humanitarian agencies in the provision of relief to those in need throughout Iraq;

7. Calls once again upon Iraq, as a State party to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to abide by its freely undertaken obligations under the Covenants, under other international instruments on human rights and under international humanitarian law and, particularly, to respect and ensure the rights of all individuals, irrespective of their origin, within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction;

8. Demands that the Government of Iraq restore the independence of the judiciary and abrogate all laws granting impunity to specified forces or persons killing or injuring individuals for any purpose beyond the administration of justice under the rule of law as prescribed by international standards;

9. Also demands that the Government of Iraq abrogate any and all decrees that prescribe cruel and inhuman punishment or treatment and take every step necessary to ensure that the practice of torture and cruel and unusual punishments and treatment no longer occur;

10. Urges the Government of Iraq to abrogate all laws and procedures, including Revolution Command Council decree No. 840 of 4 November 1986, that penalize the free expression of competing views and ideas and to ensure that the genuine will of the people shall be the basis of authority in the State;

11. Also urges the Government of Iraq to improve its cooperation within the framework of the Tripartite Commission and its technical subcommittee with a view to establishing the whereabouts or resolving the fate of the remaining several hundred missing persons and prisoners of war, Kuwaitis and third-country nationals victims of the illegal Iraqi occupation of Kuwait;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary assistance in carrying out his mandate and to approve the allocation of sufficient human and material resources for the sending of human rights monitors to such locations as would facilitate improved information flow and assessment and help in the independent verification of reports on the situation of human rights in Iraq;

13. Decides, in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council, to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights in Iraq during its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Myanmar

Report of Special Rapporteur. In February, Special Rapporteur Yozo Yokota (Japan) reported [E/CN.4/1996/65] on the human rights situation in Myanmar based on his 1995 visit (8-17 October) to the country.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the Government had continued to release political detainees but expressed concern that there were still hundreds of such persons. The non-acceptance of the customary procedures of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) for visits to places of detention was a negative step. He noted problems in the area of the administration of justice with regard to fair trials, free access to defence lawyers, prescription of disproportionate penalties and time for careful examination of cases by the courts. There were indications that the practices of forced labour, forced portering, torture and arbitrary killings were still widespread. As to the enjoyment of civil and political rights, people did not enjoy the freedoms of opinion, expression, publication and peaceful assembly and association. There were clear violations in Myanmar law and practice of the freedoms of movement and residence, including the right to leave and re-enter one's own country.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government fulfil its obligations under Articles 55 and 56 of the United Nations Charter; consider acceding to the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights [YUN 1966, pp. 419-423], the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [YUN 1984, p. 813], and the 1977 Protocols to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 [YUN 1977, p. 706]; bring Myanmar law concerning the protection of the right to physical integrity into line with accepted international standards; try all political leaders and others arrested or detained under martial law after the 1988 and 1990 demonstrations or as a result of the 1993 National Convention by an independent civilian court in an open and internationally accessible judicial process; repeal or amend the relevant provisions that prevented ICRC from carrying out its humanitarian activities regarding prison visits; take steps to facilitate and guarantee the freedoms of opinion, expression and association; permit the formation of independently organized trade unions; remove restrictions on freedom of movement, association and assembly and on those relating to the entry and exit of citizens into and out of the country, as well as their movement within the country; cease discriminatory policies which interfered with the free and equal enjoyment of property; prohibit the practice of forced portering and forced labour; accelerate the process of transition to democracy; continue its co-operation with UNHCR concerning the voluntary and safe return of Rakhine Muslims from Bangladesh; abolish its burdensome requirements for citizenship; bring the acts of soldiers into line with accepted international human rights and humanitarian standards; train military and law enforcement personnel as to their responsibilities in accordance with standards set out in international human rights instruments and under humanitarian law; condemn acts by authorities involving human rights violations; and continue its cooperation with UN organs and international NGOs. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission on Human Rights request the High Commissioner for Human Rights to consider placing a team of human rights field officers in Myanmar to facilitate improved information flow and assessment and help in the independent verification of reports on the human rights situation there.

Report of Secretary-General (April). Pursuant to a 1995 General Assembly resolution [YUN 1995, p. 804], the Secretary-General in April reported [E/CN.4/1996/157] on the good-offices activities he had undertaken to assist Myanmar to respond to concerns with respect to the human rights situation and to achieve national reconciliation. The Secretary-General's representative had met with the Foreign Minister of Myanmar in New York on 4 April. The discussions focused on the lack of a substantive dialogue between the State Law and Order Restoration Council and the principal political leaders; the composition, procedures and functioning of the National Convention; restrictions on freedom of assembly and other basic political freedoms; political prisoners; reports of attacks by the Myanmar armed forces on the Karens and the Karennis, resulting in further refugee outflows; and the reintegration of the national races into the political life of the country.

The Secretary-General presented the views of the Government on those issues. He regretted that it was not possible for his representative to visit Yangon prior to the submission of the report and expressed disappointment at the lack of substantive steps towards alleviating the concerns expressed in the 1995 Assembly resolution.

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/80], the Commission on Human Rights deplored continuing serious human rights violations in Myanmar. The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year and asked him to report to the Assembly in 1996 and to the Commission in 1997. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. The decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and the requests to him and the Secretary-General were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1996/285 of 24 July.

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted the interim report [A/51/466] of Special Rapporteur Rajsoomer Lallah (Mauritius), who was appointed following the resignation in May of the previous Special Rapporteur.

The Special Rapporteur retraced the recent political history of Myanmar and discussed the impact of Myanmar law on human rights. He observed that the absence of respect for the rights pertaining to democratic governance was at the root of all the major human rights violations in Myanmar. He reported he had received information on allegations of human rights violations concerning extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions; torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; arbitrary arrest and detention; due process and the rule of law; prison conditions; freedom of opinion; freedom of assembly and association; freedom of movement and forced relocation; and forced labour.

The Special Rapporteur reiterated the recommendations made by his predecessor (see above), adding that steps should be taken to allow all citizens to participate freely in the political process. The Government of Myanmar was urged to take measures to accelerate the process of transition to democracy and to subject all officials committing human rights abuses and violations to strict disciplinary control and punishment.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In a November report [A/51/660], the Secretary-General updated his good-offices activities. He regretted that no progress had been achieved since the submission of his last report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/117.

Situation of human rights in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Aware that, in accordance with the Charter, the Organization promotes and encourages respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government,

Recalling its resolution 50/194 of 22 December 1995,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/58 of 3 March 1992, in which the Commission, inter alia, decided to nominate a special rapporteur to establish direct contacts with the Government and with the people of Myanmar, including political leaders deprived of their liberty, their families and their lawyers, with a view to examining the situation of human rights in Myanmar and following any progress made towards the transfer of power to a civilian Government and the drafting of a new constitution, the lifting of restrictions on personal freedoms and the restoration of human rights in Myanmar,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/80 of 23 April 1996, in which the Commission decided to extend for one year the mandate of its Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar,

Noting with concern that the Government of Myanmar has not yet agreed to visits by a representative of the Secretary-General and by the Special Rapporteur,

Gravely concerned that the Government of Myanmar still has not implemented its commitment to take all necessary steps towards democracy in the light of the results of the elections held in 1990,

Recalling the release without conditions of Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Aung San Suu Kyi on 10 July 1995,

Gravely concerned at the travel and other restrictions placed on Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders and at the recent mass arrests of members and supporters of the National League for Democracy for peacefully exercising their right to freedom of expression, assembly and association, and alarmed by the attack, on 9 November 1996, on Aung San Suu Kyi and other members of the National League for Democracy,

Recalling the withdrawal and subsequent exclusion from the National Convention of members of the National League for Democracy in late 1995,

Regretting the failure of the Government of Myanmar to open a political dialogue with Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders, including representatives of ethnic groups,

Gravely concerned at the continued violations of human rights in Myanmar, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, including extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, killings of civilians, torture, arbitrary arrest and detention, deaths in custody, absence of due process of law, severe restrictions on freedoms of opinion, expression, assembly and association, violations of freedom of movement, forced relocation, forced labour and portering and the imposition of oppressive measures directed in particular at ethnic and religious minorities,

Recalling the observation made by the Special Rapporteur that the absence of respect for the rights pertaining to democratic governance is at the root of all the major violations of human rights in Myanmar,

Recalling also the conclusion of ceasefire agreements between the Government of Myanmar and several ethnic groups,

Noting that the human rights situation in Myanmar has resulted in flows of refugees to neighbouring countries, thus creating problems for the countries concerned,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Myanmar for his interim report, and urges the Government of Myanmar to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur;

2. Abo expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report;

3. Deplores the continued violations of human rights in Myanmar;

4. Requests the Government of Myanmar to permit unrestricted communication with and physical access to Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders by members and supporters of the National League for Democracy and to protect their physical well-being;

5. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to release immediately and unconditionally detained political leaders and all political prisoners, to ensure their physical integrity and to permit them to participate in the process of national reconciliation;

6. Urges the Government of Myanmar to engage, at the earliest possible date, in a substantive political dialogue with Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders, including representatives of ethnic groups, as the best means of promoting national reconciliation and the full and early restoration of democracy;

7. Welcomes the discussions between the Government of Myanmar and the Secretary-General, and further encourages the Government of Myanmar to allow a visit by the representative of the Secretary-General, as soon as possible, in order to allow for a broader dialogue in Myanmar;

8. Again urges the Government of Myanmar, in conformity with its assurances given at various times, to take all necessary steps towards the restoration of democracy in accordance with the will of the people as expressed in the democratic elections held in 1990 and to ensure that political parties and non-governmental organizations can function freely;

9. Expresses its concern that most of the representatives duly elected in 1990 are still excluded from participating in the meetings of the National Convention, created to prepare basic elements for the drafting of a new constitution, and that one of the objectives of the Convention is to maintain the participation of the armed forces in a leading role in the future political life of the State, and notes also with concern that the working procedures of the National Convention do not permit the elected representatives of the people freely to express their views;

10. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to take all appropriate measures to allow all citizens to participate freely in the political process, in accordance with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and to accelerate the process of transition to democracy, in particular through the transfer of power to democratically elected representatives;

11. Also strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to ensure full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression and assembly, the right to fair trial and the protection of the rights of persons belonging to ethnic and religious minorities, and to put an end to violations of the right to life and integrity of the human being, to the practices of torture, abuse of women, forced labour and forced relocations and to enforced disappearances and summary executions;

12. Appeals to the Government of Myanmar to consider becoming a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

13. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to fulfil its obligations as a State party to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), and to the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87), of the International Labour Organization, and encourages the Government of Myanmar to cooperate more closely with the International Labour Organization;

14. Stresses the importance for the Government of Myanmar to give particular attention to conditions in the country's jails and to allow the International Committee of the Red Cross to communicate freely and confidentially with prisoners;

15. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar and other parties to the hostilities in Myanmar to respect fully the obligations under international humanitarian law, including article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population, to protect all civilians, including children, women and persons belonging to ethnic or religious minorities, from violations of humanitarian law and to avail itself of such services as may be offered by impartial humanitarian bodies;

16. Encourages the Government of Myanmar to create the necessary conditions to ensure an end to the movements of refugees to neighbouring countries and to create conditions conducive to their voluntary return and their full reintegration, in conditions of safety and dignity;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his discussions with the Government of Myanmar in order to assist in the implementation of the present resolution and its efforts for national reconciliation and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-third session;

18. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-second session.

Europe and the Mediterranean

Cyprus

Pursuant to a 1995 decision of the Commission on Human Rights [YUN 1995, p. 807], the Secretary-General in February 1996 submitted a report on the question of human rights in Cyprus [E/CN.4/1996/54]. He described action taken by him in response to Security Council requests and activities of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP).

On 23 April [dec. 1996/112], the Commission decided to retain the item on its agenda, on the understanding that action required by previous resolutions would continue to remain operative, including its request to the Secretary-General to provide a report on their implementation.

The former Yugoslavia

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/71], the Commission on Human Rights condemned in the strongest terms all violations of human rights and humanitarian law during the conflict in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and expressed its concern over continuing human rights violations within the state of Bosnia and Herzegovina and delays in fully implementing the human rights provisions of the 1995 Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544] (see also PART ONE, Chapter V). It fully supported the efforts of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 (see PART FOUR, Chapter II), established by Security Council resolution 827(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 440], and demanded that all States and parties to the Peace Agreement meet their obligations to cooperate fully with the Tribunal.

Stressing that the primary responsibility for the promotion of free, fair and democratic elections, to be held under the auspices of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and other international organizations, lay with the people of the state of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Commission insisted that the parties abide by their commitments to promote and protect democratic institutions of government, to ensure freedom of expression and of the press, to allow and encourage freedom of association and to ensure freedom of movement. It urged the Governments of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the authorities of its entities—the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska—to facilitate the safe and dignified return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes. The Commission called on the Government of the Republic of Croatia to respect fully the rights of the local Serb population and strongly urged the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to revoke all discriminatory legislation and to apply all other legislation without discrimination, release all political detainees, and take measures to respect fully all human rights and fundamental freedoms. It called on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina to ensure full and free access to their territories to all institutions concerned with the implementation of the current resolution.

As for missing persons, the Commission commended the expert member of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for his report on the special process on missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia [E/CN.4/1996/36] (see PART TWO, Chapter II), and asked him, in conjunction with his mandate, the International Tribunal, the High Representative appointed in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 511], the Special Rapporteur and ICRC, to prepare a comprehensive plan for dealing with the question of missing persons in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in Croatia.

The Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the former Yugoslavia was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1996/276 of 23 July. The Special Rapporteur was asked to continue her efforts, especially by carrying out missions to Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in particular to Kosovo, as well as to Sandjak and Vojvodina, and that she continue to submit periodic reports to the Commission and the General Assembly. The Secretary-General was asked to make the Special Rapporteur's reports available to the Security Council and to OSCE. He was urged to make all necessary resources, from within existing resources, available for the Special Rapporteur to carry out her mandate successfully.

Periodic reports of Special Rapporteur. In a July report [E/CN.4/1997/5], Special Rapporteur Elisabeth Rehn (Finland) described human rights and preparations for elections scheduled for September in Bosnia and Herzegovina, based on a mission she conducted to Sarajevo, Tuzla, Travnik and Vitez from 26 to 28 June (for information relating to the political aspects of the elections, see PART ONE, Chapter V). Her report was also based on a mission conducted from 2 to 8 May and on investigations carried out by field staff, including in-depth examination of the situation in locations such as Doboj/Teslic, Bugojno, Banja Luka and Bihac.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the central Government in the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina was not opposed to holding free and fair elections. Nevertheless, conditions in Bosnia and Herzegovina were not conducive to the democratic operation of the electoral process. In both the Federation and Republika Srpska there were violations of the rights of freedom of association and assembly, and freedom of movement for campaigners and candidates, restrictions on freedom of expression and abuses of the media, and violent attacks on politicians and their supporters. Governments, local authorities and police forces continued to fail to take action to counter those practices. The failure to permit significant voluntary return to areas where returnees were part of the minority population was another impediment to the electoral process, as were incidents of ongoing displacement. The problems were most acute in Republika Srpska where the culpability of the authorities was further compounded by the ongoing political leadership exercised by indicted war criminals. Within the Federation, the greatest cause for concern was presented by an entirely anti-democratic regime in areas controlled by Croatia. In Bosniac-majority locations, attention was drawn to regions such as the Bihac area and to a range of discriminatory practices found in almost all population centres. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the authorities of Republika Srpska immediately halt election-related and other human rights abuses. The authorities in the Federation should ensure the eradication of all discriminatory practices by public officials, as well as by the police. The Special Rapporteur also recommended that the authorities in both entities take immediate action to achieve de facto freedom of movement country-wide and to create conditions for inter-entity campaigning. OSCE, under whose auspices the elections were to be held, should ensure that voting regulations would not preclude from voting those who were obstructed by the authorities from going to their place of voting. The Special Rapporteur supported the recommendation of the Chairman-in-Office of OSCE that the mandates of all the elected authorities expire in two years and that further elections take place then. That proposal would allow for further consolidation of the democratic process and the opportunity for a free and fair expression of the will of the people within a reasonable period of time.

Annexed to the report were provisions of international instruments pertaining to elections. On 4 November, the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report to the General Assembly, the Security Council and OSCE [A/51/651-S/1996/902].

October report. The Special Rapporteur in October submitted a periodic report describing the human rights situation in the territory of the former Yugoslavia [E/CN.4/1997/9], based on missions to the area and from gathering information from the Field Operation of the High Commissioner for Human Rights with its headquarters in Sarajevo and offices in Zagreb, Vukovar, Belgrade, Banja Luka, Mostar and Skopje.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, elections for national and entity institutions were held on 14 September, with municipal elections delayed until 23 and 24 November due to concern that the vast majority of Serbian refugees and displaced persons had registered as voters of municipalities in which they had never lived—and to which they allegedly had no intention of moving—at the expense of Bosniacs displaced from the same locations. The September elections suffered owing to, among other reasons, restrictions on free political expression, free association and free movement, it was reported. The Special Rapporteur stated that freedom of movement had deteriorated in recent months; there had been no organized return of large numbers of refugees and displaced persons; persons residing in areas dominated by members of another national group continued to face threats of harassment, assault, forcible eviction and even mortal injury because of their nationality; persons were still being detained in violation of their human rights; and many children had been left homeless and sometimes orphaned. In addition, she observed the phenomenon of "silent emergencies", which were crises not connected exclusively to the war, but which had developed from the region's poor economic conditions. Another silent emergency was the fate suffered by victims of rape, of both sexes and including many children. The Special Rapporteur concluded that authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina had not provided adequate security for the population.

In Croatia, positive developments had taken place, including the closure of the Kupljensko refugee camp in August and the resettlement of some of its inhabitants in Croatia and in third countries, while others had returned voluntarily to Bosnia and Herzegovina; the signing on 23 August of the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia [A/51/318-S/1996/706 & A/51/351-S/1996/744] (see PART ONE, Chapter V), which contained important human rights commitments; and the adoption on 25 September of a new Law on Amnesty. Some positive measures were taken with respect to the peaceful reintegration of the region of Eastern Slavonia into Croatia, and the provision of humanitarian assistance to vulnerable populations in the country. Initiatives were being taken to resolve the fate of missing and disappeared persons. However, the human rights situation of the Serb population remained a serious cause for concern despite a decrease in the number of incidents of physical assault, looting and harassment. The Special Rapporteur expressed concern over the rearrest of some seven Croatian Serbs within days of their release under the new Law on Amnesty. The forcible and unlawful eviction of persons from State-owned apartments continued, as did the abuse of freedom of expression through incitement to hatred.

As to the region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, the Special Rapporteur noted that on 15 January the Security Council (resolution 1037(1996)) decided to establish, for an initial period of 12 months, a peacekeeping operation with both military and civilian components under the name United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) (see PART ONE, Chapter V). She stated that the situation in the region had improved dramatically over that which had prevailed during the war years. The plight of displaced persons, Serbs and Croats alike, was one of the most pressing problems in Eastern Slavonia.

In the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the Special Rapporteur continued to receive reports of ill-treatment and torture of suspects in police custody. She identified concerns regarding the media situation in Serbia and Montenegro and recommended that the Government ensure that State-controlled electronic media provide balanced and equal coverage both to the ruling party and to the opposition. As to the situation of refugees, she stated that Montenegro had continued to adopt an open-door policy; however, Serbia's approach reportedly had been more restrictive. Exclusion criteria appeared to have included national background and, in contravention of international law, refugee legislation in both Serbia and Montenegro subjected registered refugees to military service. The Special Rapporteur received numerous reports regarding problems of minorities, particularly in Kosovo and Sandjak. In Kosovo, she continued to receive allegations of serious human rights abuses, such as arbitrary arrests, ill-treatment and torture, attributed to the Serbian police authorities; much of the local population was distrustful of medical personnel of Serbian nationality and had avoided treatment by them, placing the health of children at particular risk; and there were silent emergencies manifest in abandoned children who had been left in the children's hospital by their mothers, often due to pressures from family. The security situation in Sandjak appeared to have improved significantly in the last year. However, there were problems of displaced persons, and a series of abductions of Sandjak Muslims in 1992 and 1993 in locations close to Priboj, which, according to the Government, were carried out by Bosnian Serb paramilitaries, remained uninvestigated.

On 12 November, the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's October report to the General Assembly, the Security Council and OSCE [A/51/663-S/1996/927].

Report on minorities. Also in October, the Special Rapporteur submitted a special report on minorities [E/CN.4/1997/8]. In that report, all population figures and percentages were based on a census taken in 1991. The Special Rapporteur considered that progress in the protection of minorities was one of the most urgent human rights needs in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. Describing the situation in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), she stated that in the Republic of Serbia, the largest minority groups lived in three areas: the great majority of the estimated 1.5 million ethnic Albanians were concentrated in Kosovo, while others lived nearby in other areas of southern Serbia; most members of the Muslim minority of some 237,000 persons lived in Sandjak; the province of Vojvodina was the most mixed region, with a population of 2 million comprising 26 different ethnic, national or linguistic groups. In the Republic of Montenegro, there were small Albanian and Croat minority communities in addition to the Sandjak Muslims.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia must take immediate and stronger action to stop the trend of violent human rights abuses by Serbian security forces against the Kosovo Albanian population. Schools and homes should be secure from arbitrary and illegal searches and political prisoners should be released. The Kosovo Albanian leadership must recognize that special measures should be taken by provincial authorities to safeguard the human rights of the local Serb minority. She proposed that Kosovo's Albanian leadership acknowledge the legitimacy of the Federal Republic's interest in defending the integrity of the State. In Sandjak, the Special Rapporteur observed that, although violent human rights abuses against the Muslim minority had significantly declined, there remained an urgent need to clarify the grave incidents that had occurred and to punish those responsible. Official policies and practices implemented by the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia were inconsistent with their obligations under international and national law and required urgent revision. She proposed that the authorities should reinforce the improving climate by undertaking new measures, including ending discrimination against Muslims in public employment and ensuring their meaningful participation in local government. As to Vojvodina, where the Serbs made up a slim majority (57 per cent) and Hungarians constituted the largest minority group (some 17 per cent), followed by Croats at 3.7 per cent, the Special Rapporteur noted that some success had been achieved in advancing the interests of the different minority groups, including through the provision of education in minority languages and the use of different official languages for administrative business. The revision of Vojvodina's provincial status in 1990, however, had resulted in some unsatisfactory consequences, including the removal of control over some administrative matters from local authorities to central authorities in Belgrade, who had on occasion taken decisions incompatible with local needs. The passage by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of an amnesty law in June 1996 benefiting persons who avoided military service was a welcome development. Concerning the Bulgarian community in Serbia, which made up about 0.3 per cent of the total population, the Special Rapporteur stated that the main allegations and complaints on human rights issues focused on education.

As for Montenegro, the predominantly Muslim community of ethnic Albanians constituted some 7 per cent of the population. Most of their complaints concerned the educational system, particularly the curricula which included few references to Albanian culture and history. While Albanian-language primary schools did exist in municipalities which were predominantly Albanian, secondary and higher education existed only in the majority language. Local Albanians reportedly felt that Albanian-language broadcasts of State television and radio merely represented the views of the central government in Podgorica, rather than the particular interests and concerns of their minority group. The Croats, who made up some 1 per cent of the population of Montenegro, were mostly concerned with job discrimination.

The Republic of Croatia was a multi-ethnic society, with Croats constituting some 84 per cent of the country's total population of 4,780,000, followed by Serbs (12 per cent), Muslims (0.9 per cent), Slovenians (0.5 per cent), Hungarians (0.5 per cent), Italians (0.4 per cent), Czechs (0.3 per cent) and smaller numbers of Montenegrins, Albanians, Germans, Romany and other groups. The Special Rapporteur stated that, despite measures which the Government said had been taken, violent incidents against Croatian Serbs in former Sectors—areas defined as UN Protected Areas and subject to UN protection and monitoring—had continued to be reported up to September. She noted other areas of concern, including the question of property rights. Muslims had encountered problems in acquiring Croatian citizenship and the Special Rapporteur had received reports of discrimination in employment. On the positive side, special curricula were available for members of the Italian, Hungarian, Czech, Slovak, Ruthenian and Ukrainian minorities. Numerous publications and radio programmes were available to minority communities in their own languages, and the State television occasionally broadcast programmes about or for minority communities. On 12 November, the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's special report to the General Assembly, the Security Council and OSCE [A/51/665-S/1996/931].

Further report. In a later report [E/CN.4/1997/56], the Special Rapporteur stated that in October she visited the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, the region of Eastern Slavonia in Croatia and Sarajevo; in November, Zagreb and destinations in both entities of Bosnia and Herzegovina; and on 7 and 8 December, Sarajevo.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Special Rapporteur observed that human rights continued to be violated frequently and systematically. The country remained deeply divided with great hostility among its people. She stated that freedom of movement must be vastly improved and greater attention had to be paid to the proper functioning of the court system. The apprehension of indicted war-crime suspects should receive the highest priority. As to the media, the Special Rapporteur recommended that publications and broadcasts from both sides be made easily available in each entity, and that telephone communications be improved between them. Children should benefit from human rights education programmes in schools and efforts should be pursued to develop educational exchange programmes, cultural activities and sports events to bring children and youth together.

As for Croatia, the human rights situation of the Croatian Serb population remained a serious cause for concern, with numerous cases of looting, violent harassment and discriminatory treatment reported in the former Sectors. There was little evidence of investigation and redress of past abuses. Property issues and the restoration of access to public services were not being addressed equitably. The Special Rapporteur was disturbed by what appeared to be a lack of real willingness by the Government to protect the welfare and guarantee the security of the Croatian Serbs. She had been encouraged by preliminary contacts with the new Croatian Ombudsman, but emphasized that the independence of that Office must be maintained. The resettlement of Croatian refugees and displaced persons had advanced, but additional progress was needed in the return of Croatian Serb refugees in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Bosnia and Herzegovina. In view of information she had received indicating a possible weakening of judicial independence in Croatia, the Special Rapporteur recommended strengthening the judiciary through training programmes for new judges and continuing judicial education for experienced judges. She expressed concern about recent decisions and public statements of government officials which indicated an underlying hostility to alternative points of view.

In the region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (Croatia), the Special Rapporteur was disturbed by the depth of hatred and by recent violent demonstrations of intolerance. Little concrete action had been taken by the Government of Croatia to foster a true sense of security in the region. Concerning the process of reintegration, UNTAES, in cooperation with the Government of Croatia and local Serb authorities, had initiated a series of programmes to speed up the process, which had met with moderate success. The Special Rapporteur noted that on 15 November the Security Council had extended the mandate of UNTAES (resolution 1079(1996)).

Regarding the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the Special Rapporteur noted that at the end of 1996 human rights concerns were dominated by events surrounding the holding of federal and municipal elections in Serbia. The second round of municipal elections held in Serbia on 17 November sparked widespread protests in which demonstrators voiced discontent with what they and many international observers saw as the Government's manipulation of election results. Specifically, the Government annulled results in Belgrade and 14 other major cities won by the opposition coalition Zajedno. The Special Rapporteur expressed serious concern that standards for free and fair elections were not met as provided for by the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)]. There was a virtual total lack of independent electronic media in the country to provide fair and balanced reporting, an issue which she proposed be addressed in the period preceding the 1997 republic elections in Serbia. She also proposed that the Government consider inviting or permitting international observers to monitor those elections. The Special Rapporteur was deeply disturbed by continuing reports of serious and widespread human rights violations by Serb police forces in Kosovo, including torture, ill-treatment and arbitrary detention, and urgently called on the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to end those abuses.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/116.

Situation of human rights in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and all other human rights instruments and instruments of international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as well as the principles and commitments undertaken by participating States of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil their obligations under the human rights instruments to which they are party, and reaffirming also the obligation of all to respect international humanitarian law,

Reaffirming also the territorial integrity of all States in the region, within their internationally recognized borders,

Welcoming the entry into force and implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto, initialled at Dayton, Ohio, on 21 November 1995 and signed by Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), representing also the Bosnian Serb party, in Paris on 14 December 1995 (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), which, inter alia, committed the parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina to respect fully human rights,

Welcoming also the efforts of Member States in assisting in the implementation of the Peace Agreement through their participation in the Implementation Force and other activities directed at resolving the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, and commending the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe for the implementation of the mandates with which it was entrusted by the Peace Agreement,

Welcoming further the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (the "Basic Agreement"), signed on 12 November 1995 by the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the local Serb representatives, which created conditions permitting the establishment of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, and Security Council resolution 1037(1996) of 15 January 1996, by which the Council established the Transitional Administration,

Welcoming the participation of Member States in the Transitional Administration and other activities intended to facilitate implementation of the Basic Agreement and the transition of the region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium from local Serb control to control by the Republic of Croatia,

Recognizing the positive effects that the implementation of the Peace Agreement and the Basic Agreement have had on the region since their respective entry into force, in particular the return of peace to the region and the increasing normalization of social, political and economic life.

Taking note of the Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), in particular article 7 thereof, which, inter alia, ensures conditions for the return of refugees and displaced persons and the return of their property or a just compensation, and in that context stressing the positive impact of mutual recognition agreements among successor States of the former Yugoslavia,

Welcoming the holding of elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina on 14 September 1996 with the assistance of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and other organizations,

Gravely concerned nonetheless at the continuing evidence of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms taking place in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Stressing the importance of an effective functioning of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, established pursuant to Security Council resolutions 808(1993) of 22 February 1993 and 827(1993) of 25 May 1993, for the positive development of the situation of human rights in the region,

Acknowledging the progress made by the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina towards ethnic reconciliation in the region,

Calling upon all parties to the Peace Agreement to implement the necessary measures in the furtherance of ethnic reconciliation in their respective territories,

Encouraging the international community, acting through the United Nations and other international organizations as well as bilaterally, to enhance significantly humanitarian support for the people of the region and to promote human rights, economic reconstruction, the repatriation of refugees and the holding of free elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Welcoming the efforts of the European Union to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and endorsing the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur that economic and other aid must be made conditional on meaningful progress on human rights,

Underlining the relationship between the fulfilment by the parties of their human rights commitments and the readiness of the international community to commit resources for reconstruction and development,

Dismayed by the large number of missing persons still unaccounted for, particularly in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the Republic of Croatia, and noting with approval the establishment of the International Commission on Missing Persons in the Former Yugoslavia and the efforts of the expert member of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and of the working and expert groups on the missing, chaired respectively by the International Committee of the Red Cross and the High Representative,

Expressing its particular concern for the situation of women and also that of children, the elderly and refugees, internally displaced persons and minorities, as well as other vulnerable groups in the region,

Calling attention to the reports and recommendations of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, Mrs. Elisabeth Rehn, on the situation of human rights in the territories of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), including her most recent reports of 4 November 1996 and 12 November 1996, and especially the recommendations set forth therein,

Acknowledging efforts made by the Governments of the region to meet the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur, which have yet to be implemented fully,

Recalling the report on the situation of human rights in Croatia [S/1996/691] submitted to the Security Council in pursuance of Council resolution 1019(1995) of 9 November 1995,

Recalling also its resolutions 50/192 and 50/193 of 22 December 1995, Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/71 of 23 April 1996 and all relevant resolutions of the Security Council, especially resolutions 1009(1995) of 10 August 1995 and 1079(1996) of 15 November 1996,

1. Expresses its serious concern about continuing human rights violations within Bosnia and Herzegovina and the delays in fully implementing the human rights provisions of the Peace Agreement;

2. Condemns in the strongest terms the continued forcible expulsion of individuals from their homes in Bosnia and Herzegovina, such as has happened recently in Banja Luka and Mostar, and the practice of destroying the homes of those previously forcibly expelled, and calls for the immediate arrest and punishment of individuals engaged in these actions;

3. Condemns the continuing restrictions on freedom of movement within the Republika Srpska, within some parts of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and between the Republika Srpska and the Federation;

4. Expresses concern for women and children, especially in Bosnia and Herzegovina, who were victims of rape used as a weapon of war, and calls for the perpetrators of rape to be brought to justice while ensuring that victims and witnesses receive adequate assistance and protection;

5. Insists that all parties implement fully the commitments made in the Peace Agreement to protect human rights, and also insists that the parties act to promote and protect democratic institutions of government at all levels in their respective countries, to ensure freedom of expression and of the media, to allow and encourage freedom of association, including with respect to political parties, and to ensure freedom of movement and that the parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina comply with the human rights provisions of their national Constitution;

6. Welcomes the conclusions of the meeting of the ministerial Steering Board and the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina, held in Paris on 14 November 1996 [S/1996/968], in order to define the guiding principles of the civilian consolidation plan of the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular in the field of human rights;

7. Calls upon the participants in the Peace Implementation Meeting, to be held in London on 6 December 1996, to ensure that the promotion of human rights, including the fulfilment of their respective human rights obligations by the parties to the Peace Agreement, as well as the strengthening of national institutions, will be a central element in the new civilian structure implementing the Peace Agreement;

8. Calls upon the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to undertake substantially greater efforts to institute democratic norms, especially in regard to the protection of free and independent media, and full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

9. Strongly urges the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to revoke all discriminatory legislation and to apply all other legislation without discrimination and to take urgent action to prevent arbitrary evictions and dismissals and discrimination against any ethnic or national, religious or linguistic group;

10. Urgently demands that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) take immediate action to put an end to the repression of, and to prevent violence against, non-Serb populations in Kosovo, including acts of harassment, beatings, torture, warrantless searches, arbitrary detention and unfair trials, and also to respect the rights of persons belonging to minority groups in the Sandjak and Vojvodina and of persons belonging to the Bulgarian minority;

11. Calls upon the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to act immediately to allow all residents in Kosovo to participate freely and fully in the political, economic, social and cultural life of the region, particularly in the areas of education and health care, and to ensure that all the residents of the region are guaranteed equal treatment and protection regardless of ethnic affiliation;

12. Calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia to fully respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the rights of persons belonging to any national, ethnic, religious or linguistic minority;

13. Also calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia to undertake greater efforts to adhere to democratic norms, especially in regard to the Zagreb city council and the protection of free and independent media, and to cooperate fully with the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium to assure that the reintegration of Eastern Slavonia occurs peacefully and with respect for the human rights of all residents and returning displaced persons and refugees, including their right to remain, leave or return in safety and dignity;

14. Calls for the full and consistent implementation of the Peace Agreement and the Basic Agreement by all the parties to them;

15. Urges all the parties to the Peace Agreement to create the necessary political, social and economic conditions for the return of refugees and displaced persons in safety and dignity;

16. Insists that all authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina cooperate fully with the Commission on Human Rights for Bosnia and Herzegovina, created under annex 6 of the Peace Agreement, in particular by providing information requested by the Human Rights Ombudsman and by participating in hearings before the Human Rights Chamber, and demands that the Re-

publika Srpska cease its pattern of non-cooperation with the Commission;

17. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights for Bosnia and Herzegovina to intensify its activities concerning alleged or apparent violations of human rights, or alleged or apparent discrimination of any kind;

18. Welcomes the commitments of the international community for post-war reconstruction and development assistance, and encourages the expansion of this assistance, while noting that such assistance should be conditioned on full compliance by the parties with agreements that have been made;

19. Urges the parties to create the necessary conditions for free and fair municipal elections to be held as soon as possible and as envisaged in the Peace Agreement, under the supervision of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;

20. Welcomes the enactment by the Republic of Croatia on 20 September 1996 of a new general amnesty law, intended in part to promote confidence on the part of the local Serb population, and calls for the proper implementation of that law;

21. Calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia to allow the expeditious return of all refugees and displaced persons and to use all available means to secure their safety and human rights, and to investigate and arrest those responsible for acts of violence and intimidation aimed at driving people away;

22. Strongly condemns the continuing refusal of the authorities of the Republika Srpska, the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), certain other elements within the Federation and to some extent the Government of the Republic of Croatia to arrest and surrender indicted war criminals known to be present in their territories, as they have agreed to do under the Peace Agreement;

23. Urgently calls upon all States and all parties to the Peace Agreement to meet their obligations to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, as required by Security Council resolution 827(1993), including with respect to surrendering persons sought by the International Tribunal, and urges all States and the Secretary-General to support the Tribunal to the fullest extent possible, in particular, by helping to ensure that persons indicted by the Tribunal stand trial before it;

24. Demands that the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular the authorities of the Republika Srpska, and the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) ensure full and free access to their territories to all institutions and organizations concerned with the implementation of the present resolution, including non-governmental organizations;

25. Welcomes the interim reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territories of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and commends the Special Rapporteur and the Human Rights Field Operation in the former Yugoslavia for their continuing efforts;

26. Urges all parties to implement fully the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights;

27. Calls upon the authorities of the States and entities within the mandate of the Special Rapporteur to cooperate with her and to provide her on a regular basis with information about the actions they are taking to implement her recommendations;

28. Reaffirms, as recommended previously by the Special Rapporteur, that major reconstruction aid must be made conditional on demonstrated respect for human rights, emphasizes in that context the necessity of cooperation with the International Tribunal, and welcomes in this regard the conclusions of the meeting of the ministerial Steering Board and the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina, held in Paris on 14 November 1996;

29. Welcomes the efforts of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Council of Europe, the European Community Monitoring Mission and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in monitoring and strengthening the respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the region;

30. Calls upon the parties to the Peace Agreement to take immediate steps to determine the identity, the whereabouts and the fate of missing persons, in particular near Srebrenica, Zepa, Prijedor, Sanski Most and Vukovar, including through close cooperation with the International Commission on Missing Persons in the Former Yugoslavia, other international humanitarian organizations and independent experts, and commends the work undertaken by the expert member of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances of the Commission on Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur, the Working Group on the Process for Tracing Persons Unaccounted For, chaired by the International Committee of the Red Cross, and the Expert Group on Exhumation and Missing Persons, chaired by the High Representative, and stresses the importance of coordinating work in this area;

31. Encourages all Governments to respond favourably to appeals for voluntary contributions for the benefit of the Commission on Human Rights for Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees for Bosnia and Herzegovina, the International Commission on Missing Persons in the Former Yugoslavia, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights and other institutions of reconciliation, democracy and justice in the region;

32. Decides to continue its examination of this question at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 51/116

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 136-1-28 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.3 & Add.3/Corr.1) by recorded vote (131-1-20), 29 November (meeting 56); 46-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.68), orally revised; agenda item 110 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-52, 55, 56; plenary 82.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Cambodia, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Palau, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Saints Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela.

Against: Russian Federation.

Abstaining: Angola, Belarus, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, China, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, India, Kenya, Liberia, Mali, Namibia, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Togo, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

In the Third Committee, the Russian Federation proposed the insertion of a new third preambular paragraph, by which the Assembly would have reaffirmed the territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, within the internationally recognized borders. The Committee rejected the amendment by a recorded vote of 90 against to 4 in favour, with 43 abstentions.

Kosovo

Commission action. On 23 April [res. 1996/71], the Commission on Human Rights urgently demanded that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) take immediate action to end the repression of and prevent violence against non-Serb populations in Kosovo, and that ethnic Albanians in Kosovo be allowed to participate fully in the life of Kosovo without discrimination and to enjoy political and educational rights. It urged the authorities to revoke all discriminatory legislation and to apply all other legislation without discrimination, release all political detainees, allow the free return of ethnic Albanian refugees to Kosovo and take measures to respect fully all human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Subcommission action. On 19 August [res. 1996/2], by a secret ballot vote of 15 to 4, with 5 abstentions, the Subcommission strongly condemned the large-scale repression, measures and practices of discrimination and violation of human rights committed against the ethnic Albanian population by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. It asked the Secretary-General to seek ways to establish an international monitoring presence in Kosovo and to report thereon to the General Assembly. The Special Rapporteur was called on to continue to monitor closely the human rights situation in Kosovo and to pay special attention to the matter.

Report of Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General presented an overview of access granted or denied by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to United Nations human rights missions [A/51/556].

On 23 February, the Federal Republic notified the Special Rapporteur that it had approved the establishment of an office of the Centre for Human Rights in Belgrade. Requests for the establishment of the office were first made in 1992. The Government had declined repeated requests and recommendations to establish a UN human rights field presence on its territory. Although the Special Rapporteur had visited the country and travelled to the area of Kosovo, as had the Belgrade staff of the Centre for Human Rights, permission to visit the country had been denied to the expert member of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances on the special process on missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. The High Commissioner for Human Rights visited the country on 10 and 11 May when he met with leading government officials, academic authorities and representatives of human rights NGOs.

The Secretary-General discussed the reinstatement of the OSCE mission, which had ceased in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 495]. The mission had maintained its presence in Kosovo for 10 months.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/111.

Situation of human rights in Kosovo

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Taking note with concern of the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, which describe the continuing grave human rights situation in Kosovo, including in particular police brutality, killings resulting from such violence, arbitrary searches and arrests, torture and ill-treatment of detainees, the deliberate maltreatment, persecution and imprisonment of political and human rights activists, the mass dismissals of civil servants and discrimination against pupils and teachers, acts which are mainly perpetrated against ethnic Albanians,

Welcoming, as a first step, the recent signature of a memorandum of understanding concerning the educational system in the Albanian language in Kosovo, and calling for the proper implementation of that memorandum,

Appreciating efforts to monitor the situation in Kosovo, but at the same time expressing regret that the establishment of an adequate international monitoring presence in Kosovo has not yet been achieved,

Recalling its resolution 50/190 of 22 December 1995 and other relevant resolutions, and taking note of the resolutions on the matter adopted by the Commission on Human Rights and the resolution adopted by the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its forty-eighth session,

1. Condemns all violations of human rights in Kosovo, in particular repression of the ethnic Albanian population and discrimination against them, as well as all acts of violence in Kosovo;

2. Demands that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro):

(a) Take all necessary measures to bring to an immediate end all human rights violations against ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, in particular the discriminatory measures and practices, arbitrary searches and detention, the violation of the right to a fair trial and the practice of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and to revoke all discriminatory legislation, in particular that which has entered into force since 1989;

(b) Release all political prisoners and cease the persecution of political leaders and members of local human rights organizations;

(c) Allow the establishment of genuine democratic institutions in Kosovo, including the parliament and the judiciary, and respect the will of its inhabitants as the best means of preventing the escalation of the conflict there;

(d) Allow the reopening of educational, cultural and scientific institutions of the ethnic Albanians;

(e) Pursue constructive dialogue with the representatives of ethnic Albanians of Kosovo;

3. Welcomes the visits to Kosovo of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and her relevant reports, and calls upon her to continue to monitor closely the human rights situation in Kosovo and to continue to pay due attention to this matter in her reporting;

4. Urges the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to allow the immediate unconditional return of the mission of long duration of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to Kosovo, called for in Security Council resolution 855(1993) of 9 August 1993;

5. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to resolution 50/190, and requests him to continue his efforts to seek ways and means, including through consultations with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and relevant regional organizations, to establish an adequate international monitoring presence in Kosovo and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

6. Encourages the Secretary-General to pursue his humanitarian efforts in the former Yugoslavia, in liaison with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Children's Fund and other appropriate humanitarian organizations, with a view to taking urgent practical steps to tackle the critical needs of the people in Kosovo, especially of the most vulnerable groups affected by the conflict, and to assist in the voluntary return of displaced persons to their homes in conditions of safety and dignity;

7. Emphasizes the importance of laws and regulations concerning citizenship applied by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) being in accordance with the standards and principles of non-discrimination, equal protection before the law and the reduction and avoidance of statelessness, as set out in the relevant international human rights instruments;

8. Decides to continue examination of the human rights situation in Kosovo at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 51/111

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 114-2-48 (recorded vote)

Rape and abuse of women

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/192 [YUN 1995, p. 818], the Secretary-General submitted in October a report on the rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia [A/51/557]. He presented efforts to end those practices made by the Commission on Human Rights, its Subcommission, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, ICRC and the European Community Task Force.

The Secretary-General stated that sporadic cases of rape and sexual violence had occurred since his 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 817], and it appeared that those cases did not fall within the context of systematic and concerted practices. He pointed out that although the international community had responded to the need for investigation, continuing attention must be given to preventive and curative measures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/115.

Rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and other instruments of human rights and international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Recalling its resolution 3074(XXVIII) of 3 December 1973, entitled "Principles of international cooperation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity", as well as Commission on Human Rights resolution 1994/77 of 9 March 1994, General Assembly resolutions 48/143 of 20 December 1993, 49/205 of 23 December 1994 and 50/192 of 22 December 1995, and relevant resolutions of the Commission on the Status of Women,

Reaffirming the relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular resolution 798(1992) of 18 December 1992, in which, inter alia, the Council strongly condemned those acts of unspeakable brutality,

Welcoming the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, signed in Paris on 14 December 1995, as a key mechanism for achieving a durable and just peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Taking note of the previous report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, regarding rape and abuse of women in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, particularly in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which, inter alia, states that only sporadic cases of rape and sexual violence have occurred since the previous report of the Secretary-General,

Convinced that the heinous practice of rape, in fulfilling the policy of ethnic cleansing, constitutes a deliberate weapon of war, and recalling its resolution 47/121 of 18 December 1992, in which it stated, inter alia, that the abhorrent policy of ethnic cleansing was a form of genocide,

Desirous of ensuring that persons accused of authorizing, aiding and perpetrating rape and sexual violence as a weapon of war in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia will be brought to justice without further delay by the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, where appropriate,

Underlining, in this context, the need for the protection of the rape victims and the provision of effective guarantees of privacy and confidentiality of the rape victims, and desirous of facilitating their participation in the proceedings of the International Tribunal and ensuring that further traumatization will be prevented,

Deeply alarmed at the situation facing victims of rape in armed conflicts in different parts of the world and any use of rape as a weapon of war, in particular in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of Governments and the work of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, humanitarian organizations and non-governmental organizations aimed at supporting the victims of rape and abuse and alleviating their suffering,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 25 October 1996, submitted pursuant to resolution 50/192,

1. Strongly condemns the abhorrent practice of rape and abuse of women and children in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, which constitutes a war crime;

2. Expresses its outrage that the deliberate and systematic practice of rape has been used as a weapon of war and an instrument of ethnic cleansing against women and children in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

3. Reaffirms that rape in the conduct of armed conflict constitutes a war crime and that under certain circumstances it constitutes a crime against humanity and an act of genocide as defined in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, and calls upon States to take all measures required for the protection of women and children from such acts and to strengthen mechanisms to investigate and punish all those responsible and bring the perpetrators to justice;

4. Also reaffirms that all persons who perpetrate or authorize crimes against humanity or other violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for those violations and that those in positions of authority who have failed to ensure that persons under their control comply with the relevant international instruments are accountable, together with the perpetrators;

5. Reminds all States of their obligation to cooperate with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of using rape as a weapon of war;

6. Calls upon States to put experts, including experts in the prosecution of crimes of sexual violence, as well as adequate resources and services, at the disposal of the International Tribunal;

7. Urges all States and relevant organizations to continue to give serious consideration to the recommendations in the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia, in particular the recommendation concerning provision for the continuation of necessary medical and psychological care to victims of rape within the framework of programmes to rehabilitate women and children traumatized by war, as well as the provision of protection, counselling and support to victims and witnesses;

8. Recognizes the extraordinary suffering of the victims of rape and sexual violence and the necessity for an appropriate response to provide assistance to those victims, and expresses its concern, in particular, for the welfare of those victims who are currently among the internally displaced or otherwise affected by the war and who have experienced severe trauma and require psychosocial and other assistance;

9. Also urges all States and all relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization, to continue to provide to the victims of such rape and abuse appropriate assistance for their physical and mental rehabilitation and to extend their support to the community-based assistance programmes;

10. Demands that the parties cooperate fully with the International Committee of the Red Cross, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights and her staff, as well as other mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the monitoring and other missions of the European Union and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, including by providing full access;

11. Encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue to pay particular attention to this question, particularly in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 51/115

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/619/Add.3 & Add.3/Corr.1) without vote, 27 November (meeting 55); 73-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.66), orally revised; agenda item 110 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 38-52, 55; plenary 82.

Estonia and Latvia

On 12 December, the General Assembly, by decision 51/421, having concluded consideration of the human rights situation in Estonia and Latvia, welcomed and encouraged the activities undertaken by regional and international organizations, including OSCE, as well as the measures by the Governments of Estonia and Latvia in implementing the recommendations of those organizations.

Russian Federation

Republic of Chechnya

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 820], the Secretary-General submitted a report in March 1996 on the human rights situation in Chechnya [E/CN.4/1996/13], based on information submitted by the Russian Federation; information available under UN human rights mechanisms and procedures; and that received from UN bodies and programmes, and from intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

The Secretary-General described the activities of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the visit (20-30 May 1995) of the High Commissioner's envoy to the Russian Federation, including the Republics of Chechnya and Ingushetia, as well as appeals to the country sent by the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture and the Representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons. He stated that the Government of the Russian Federation had responded to those appeals and thanked it for its constructive cooperation.

The Secretary-General discussed information received from the Commissioner for Human Rights of the Russian Federation and action taken concerning the conflict by the Subcommission, the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, as well as other UN bodies, specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and other organizations. Reports transmitted by NGOs suggested large numbers of fatalities resulting from the conflict, many cases of summary executions, attacks by Federal forces on Chechen towns and villages which had been characterized as indiscriminate, disproportionate and deliberate, the use of explosive devices, the alleged use of chemical weapons, systematic beatings, torture and other forms of ill-treatment, involuntary disappearances, arbitrary detention on a mass scale, and violations of the right to an adequate standard of living and the right to freedom of movement. The conditions in which internally displaced persons lived were reported to be alarming, particularly concerning shelter, health care, nutrition and sanitation. Reports indicated that a large number of children, including some as young as 11, served in the armed forces fighting in Chechnya.

In an April addendum to his report [E/CN.4/1996/13/Add.1], the Secretary-General described the second visit (28-30 March 1996) of the High Commissioner's envoy to the Russian Federation, during which he held talks in Moscow concerning a UN presence to promote and protect human rights in Chechnya. He stated that the Russian authorities had expressed their wish to coordinate with the High Commissioner their own efforts to restore respect for the human rights and freedoms of those affected by the conflict in Chechnya. He noted that the High Commissioner had welcomed the comprehensive programme of peaceful settlement of the Chechen crisis, put forward on 31 March by Boris Yeltsin, President of the Russian Federation. The report contained information regarding that programme, provided by the Government.

Commission action. On 24 April [E/1996/23], the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights read out a statement indicating the Commission's agreement in connection with the situation of human rights in Chechnya. The Commission expressed deep concern that, in spite of its urgent call, the disproportionate use of force by the Russian Federation armed forces was continuing to lead to grave violations of human rights and international humanitarian law. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report on the situation in 1997.

Subcommission action. On 21 August [dec. 1996/108], the Subcommission, by a vote of 17 to 2, with 4 abstentions, called urgently for an immediate and lasting cessation of hostilities, other acts of violence and violations of human rights.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Colombia

Commission action. On 23 April [E/1996/23], the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights read a statement on the human rights situation in Colombia, which stated that the Commission was deeply concerned that the situation of endemic violence affecting many parts of the country had resulted in serious consequences for human rights. The Commission also expressed deep concern about violations of the right to life and the persistence of the practice of torture. It acknowledged the efforts carried out by the Government in the area of human rights and its willingness to cooperate with special rapporteurs and working groups, and noted the establishment of a follow-up commission in charge of analysing and promoting the fulfilment of recommendations of UN thematic rapporteurs and working groups, as well as of other international and regional organizations.

The Commission asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to proceed, upon the initiative of the Government and the identification of adequate sources of financing, to establish a permanent office in Colombia to assist the Colombian authorities in human rights and to observe human rights violations in the country. It also asked him to report on the setting up of the office and its activities.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to the Chairman's statement, the High Commissioner submitted a report on negotiations leading to the conclusion and signing, on 29 November, of an agreement on the establishment of an office in Colombia [E/CN.4/1997/11]. He estimated that the office, which was to be located in Santa Fé de Bogota, would be open by mid-March 1997.

Cuba

Report of Special Rapporteur. In February, Special Rapporteur Carl-Johan Groth (Sweden) reported [E/CN.4/1996/60] on the human rights situation in Cuba. In view of the fact that he had received no invitation to visit the country from the Government in response to his request to do so, he expanded his contacts with Cuban citizens living outside the country.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the human rights situation continued to be characterized by severe restrictions on the rights to freedom of expression and association, the right to form and join trade unions and the right to strike, and strong official control over the individual activities of citizens, including the need for a permit from the Ministry of the Interior for citizens to be able to travel freely abroad, strong repression by the security forces, and a system of administration of justice in criminal matters which, to a large extent, was in the service of the prevailing political regime. Those factors, combined with the serious economic crisis of recent years and external factors, had led to a situation in which some 10 per cent of the population resided outside the country. A large number of people saw emigration as the only hope for a better future and were prepared to abandon the country by any means, said the Special Rapporteur.

On the positive side, the Special Rapporteur expressed satisfaction with certain measures taken by the Government in the area of human rights, namely, its decision to ratify the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [GA res. 39/46]; the decision to permit a visit by representatives of four human rights NGOs in order to meet a group of political prisoners; and the convening in 1995 of a conference in Cuba on the nation and emigration. The economic situation in Cuba differed from that of recent years in that a new readiness had emerged to evaluate previous policies and solutions that had proved to be unfeasible. The previous resistance that characterized Cuban economic policy seemed to have given way to a new, more pragmatic phase. In addition, attitudes had changed; not only were materialistic lifestyles taking hold, but new opportunities for public involvement were emerging.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that Cuba cease persecution for reasons related to the exercise of freedom of peaceful expression and association; release persons serving sentences for offences against State security and for trying to leave the country unlawfully; permit legalization of independent groups without interference from authorities; ratify the principal human rights instruments to which it was not a party; delete from penal legislation offences for which citizens might be tried for exercising their right to freedom of expression and association; review legal provisions relating to the concept of "dangerousness", defined in Cuba's Penal Code as a state of habitual inebriation and dipsomania, drug addiction or antisocial behaviour, which might warrant security measures involving therapy, re-education or surveillance by the National Revolutionary Police; repeal legal provisions which implied discrimination between citizens on political grounds, and which barred citizens from exercising their right to enter and leave the country freely; ensure the guarantees of due process; investigate the events surrounding the sinking of the tugboat 13 de Marzo in the Straits of Florida on 13 July 1994, resulting in fatalities, with a view to punishing those responsible and providing compensation to victims' relatives; ensure greater transparency and guarantees in prisons; and allow human rights NGOs to enter the country more frequently. The Special Rapporteur urged the Government to consider the possibility of requesting the establishment of a programme of advisory services and technical assistance.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 20 to 5, with 28 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights on 23 April [res. 1996/69] regretted profoundly the numerous reports of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms that were described by the Special Rapporteur and expressed particular concern that the Government of Cuba had failed to carry out its commitment to cooperate with the Commission, in conformity with Articles 55 and 56 of the United Nations Charter.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year, and asked him to maintain direct contacts with the Government and citizens of Cuba, to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1996 and to report to the Commission in 1997. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1996/275.

Situation of human rights in Cuba

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 23 July 1996, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/69 of 23 April 1996, endorsed the Commission's decision to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Cuba, and approved the Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session and to report to the Commission at its fifty-third session on the results of his endeavours pursuant to Commission resolution 1996/69.

Economic and Social Council decision 1996/275
20-8-22 (recorded vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1996/23); agenda item 5 (d).
Meeting numbers. ESC 44, 46.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Czech Republic, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Portugal, Romania, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: China, Ghana, India, Indonesia, South Africa, Sudan, United Republic of Tanzania, Zimbabwe.

Abstaining: Argentina, Bangladesh, Belarus, Brazil, Central African Republic, Colombia, Cote d'Ivoire, Egypt, Guyana, Jamaica, Jordan, Lebanon, Malaysia, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Russian Federation, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Venezuela.

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. By an October note [A/51/460], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the Special Rapporteur's interim report on the human rights situation in Cuba. The Special Rapporteur stated that he had asked the Government for the opportunity to visit the country but that his request had remained unanswered. He based his report on visits to New York and Washington, D.C. (26 and 29 August), where he met with experts in various professional circles, people who had recently left the country and representatives of organizations and groups, and on communications from individuals sent from both Cuba and abroad.

The Special Rapporteur continued to receive information about instances of persons who had been imprisoned and harassed and subjected to house searches, threats, temporary arrest, loss of employment or other kinds of reprisal connected with exercising the freedom of expression and association or due to discrimination on political grounds. During 1996, the pattern described in earlier reports had changed only slightly and remained virtually the same as before.

Recent information hardly suggested improvement in the treatment of detainees in prisons and detention centres, which included overcrowding, unsanitary conditions, inadequate and substandard food, limited medical care, beatings, restrictions on family visits, common criminals sharing living quarters with political prisoners, and the jailing of many political prisoners far from their home towns, which made contact with their families extremely difficult.

The authorities maintained their policy of forcing dissidents out of the country by threatening them with prosecution or releasing them on the condition that they left the country immediately. The Special Rapporteur also received information on cases in which people were denied permission to leave the country to join relatives who had left Cuba by legal means and had decided not to return.

The severity of the economic crisis continued to have a serious effect on the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights, with the health and housing sectors having been particularly hard hit. The level and quality of employment had also declined, as a result of the closing or low-level operation of obsolete enterprises, accompanied by other related factors.

As to violations of the right to life, the Special Rapporteur expressed serious concern over the lack of investigation into the case of the sinking of the tugboat 13 de Marzo, in which 37 people had died. He referred to an incident which occurred on 24 February when Cuban Air Force pilots shot down two civil aircraft, registered in the United States, which were on a mission for Brothers to the Rescue, a volunteer organization based in Miami, Florida (for Security Council action, see PART ONE, Chapter III). The Special Rapporteur considered that the shooting was premeditated and constituted a violation of the right to life.

The Special Rapporteur reiterated the recommendations made in his earlier report (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/113.

Situation of human rights in Cuba

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Noting that Cuba is a party to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Reaffirming also that all States have an obligation to fulfil the commitments they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Taking particular note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/69 of 23 April 1996, in which the Commission recognized with deep appreciation the past efforts of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Cuba and extended his mandate for one year,

Expressing concern about continuing serious violations of human rights in Cuba, the majority of which are violations of civil and political rights, as outlined in the interim report on the situation of human rights in Cuba submitted to the General Assembly by the Special Rapporteur,

Deploring, in this regard, the arbitrary arrest, detention and harassment of Cuban citizens, particularly members of the Concilio Cubano, a group coordinating the activities of dozens of human rights groups, seeking to exercise their human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the continued refusal of the Government of Cuba to cooperate with the Commission on Human Rights with regard to its resolution 1996/69, including its repeated opposition to a visit to Cuba by the Special Rapporteur,

1. Commends the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights for his interim report on the situation of human rights in Cuba;

2. Expresses its full support for the work of the Special Rapporteur;

3. Calls once more upon the Government of Cuba to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur by permitting him full and free access to establish contact with the Government and the citizens of Cuba so that he may fulfil the mandate entrusted to him;

4. Regrets profoundly the numerous violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Cuba, as described in the report of the Special Rapporteur to the Commission on Human Rights and in his interim report;

5. Urges the Government of Cuba to ensure freedom of expression and assembly and the freedom to demonstrate peacefully, including by allowing political parties and non-governmental organizations to function freely in the country and by reforming legislation in this area;

6. Calls especially upon the Government of Cuba to release the numerous persons detained for activities of a political nature, including those specifically mentioned in the report of the Special Rapporteur, who suffer from inadequate medical care while imprisoned or whose rights as journalists or jurists are impeded or denied;

7. Calls upon the Government of Cuba to carry out the recommendations contained in the interim report of the Special Rapporteur to bring its observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Cuba into conformity with international standards and applicable international human rights instruments and to end all violations of human rights including, in particular, the detention and imprisonment of human rights defenders and others who are engaged in the peaceful exercise of their rights, and to grant access to its prisons to non-governmental humanitarian organizations and international humanitarian agencies;

8. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-second session.

Middle East

Lebanon

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 50 to 1, with 2 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights on 23 April [res. 1996/68] deplored continued Israeli violations of human rights in southern Lebanon and West Bekaa and called on Israel to end practices which led to such violations. It asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to Israel's attention and to invite Israel to provide information on its implementation. He was also asked to report to the General Assembly in 1996 and to the Commission in 1997.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1996/274.

Human rights situation in southern Lebanon and West Bekaa

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 23 July 1996, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/68 of 23 April 1996, approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General:

(a) To bring the resolution to the attention of the Government of Israel and to invite that Government to provide information concerning the extent of its implementation thereof;

(b) To report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-third session on the results of his efforts in that regard.

Economic and Social Council decision 1996/274

49-1-2 (recorded vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1996/23); agenda item 5 (d).

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bangladesh, Belarus, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Czech Republic, Egypt, Finland, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Paraguay, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, Senegal, South Africa, Sudan, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Argentina, Cote d'Ivoire.

Reports of Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 824], the Secretary-General reported [E/CN.4/1996/55] in January that he had asked Israel for information on the implementation of the Commission's 1995 resolution on the human rights situation in southern Lebanon, but had received no reply.

In October, the Secretary-General stated that he had asked Israel for information on the implementation of the Commission's 1996 resolution and had received no reply [A/51/507].

On 12 December, the General Assembly, by decision 51/422, took note of the Secretary-General's October report.

Occupied territories

During the year, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices) and other bodies (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to a 1995 request of the Commission on Human Rights [YUN 1995, p. 826], the Secretary-General reported [E/CN.4/1996/19] that he had brought the Commission's 1995 resolution concerning the occupied Syrian Golan to the attention of all Governments, the Committee on Israeli practices, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations. In addition, UN press coverage was provided for all meetings of the Committee on Israeli practices, and information was distributed through documents, press releases and UN information centres and services.

In another report [E/CN.4/1996/20], the Secretary-General stated that, as requested by the Commission in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 825], he had brought the resolution on the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories to the attention of the Government of Israel and all other Governments, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations, international humanitarian organizations, the Special Committee on Israeli practices, the Committee on Palestinian rights and UNRWA. Information had also been disseminated through UN press releases, documents and UN information centres and services. The Secretary-General had received no reply from Israel concerning the implementation of the Commission's 1995 resolution.

The Secretary-General also submitted to the Commission in February 1996 a list of all General Assembly and other reports issued since 12 March 1995 on the situation of the population of the occupied Arab territories [E/CN.4/1996/21].

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a March report [E/CN.4/1996/18], Special Rapporteur Hannu Halinen (Finland) discussed the human rights situation in the occupied Palestinian territories. He had asked the Government of Israel to allow him to visit the country, but was informed that Israel was not in a position to receive him. The Special Rapporteur visited Gaza from 2 to 4 March where he met with the President of the Palestinian Authority, Yasser Arafat, and other high-level Palestinian leaders. Although he had received valuable information in Gaza, the Special Rapporteur believed it was not sufficient to write a comprehensive and balanced report; his report was therefore incomplete in view of the constraints imposed on him.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the first measure imposed on the occupied territories after terrorist incidents in Israel was usually their complete closure, sealing the Gaza Strip and West Bank from each other as well as from East Jerusalem and Israel. That policy amounted to collective punishment and had resulted in severe restriction on the freedom of movement. The restrictions on that freedom resulting from closure denied people access to medical services; had an adverse effect on the already fragile economic situation and led to further deterioration in living conditions; affected freedom of education; and weakened further fragile Palestinian institutions. In view of mass arrests carried out in the wake of recent suicide bomb attacks in Israel, fears had been expressed that both Israel and the Palestinian Authority might be subjecting detainees to torture and ill-treatment. The Special Rapporteur was informed that in Israel many persons arrested were reported to be held incommunicado for long periods, and that the General Security Service systematically used interrogation methods that constituted torture and ill-treatment. Similarly, he had received information that persons arrested in the areas controlled by the Palestinian Authority had also been subjected to torture and mistreatment. Regarding land confiscation and settlements, the Special Rapporteur's attention was drawn to the continued policy of confiscation of Palestinian-owned land. The expropriated land was used mostly for the expansion of existing Israeli settlements and the building of bypass roads around them, which cantonized Arab population areas in the occupied territories.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that Israel reconsider its policy of full-scale closure and that the use of torture, whether by Israelis or Palestinians, be prohibited. He also recommended putting an end to current interrogation practices and granting rehabilitation and compensation to victims; providing a fair trial or release to persons placed in administrative detention by Israel; and halting both the confiscation of Palestinian-owned land and the construction or expansion of settlements. The Special Rapporteur presented proposals to the Commission for amending his mandate.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1996/3], the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 27 to 2, with 23 abstentions, deeply regretted the continued human rights violations in the occupied Palestinian territory since the signing in 1993 of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements by the Government of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization [YUN 1993, p. 521], and called on Israel to desist from all such violations in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories and to respect the bases of international law, the principles of international humanitarian law and its commitments to the UN Charter and UN resolutions. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of the Government of Israel and all other Governments, concerned UN organs, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to disseminate it as widely as possible and to report in 1997 on its implementation by Israel. He was also asked to provide the Commission with all UN reports issued between its sessions that dealt with conditions in which the Palestinians were living under Israeli occupation.

Also on 11 April [res. 1996/2], by a roll-call vote of 22 to 1, with 29 abstentions, the Commission called on Israel to comply with UN resolutions on the Syrian Golan and demanded that it rescind its decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that occupied territory. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of all Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to give the resolution wide publicity and to report in 1997.

On the same date [res. 1996/4], by a roll-call vote of 49 to 1, with 3 abstentions, the Commission reaffirmed that the installation of Israeli civilians in the occupied territories was illegal and constituted a violation of the relevant provisions of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention). It urged Israel to abstain from and prevent any installation of settlers in the occupied territories.

Subcommission action. On 20 August [res. 1996/6], the Subcommission, by a secret ballot vote of 15 to 4, with 5 abstentions, called on Israel to comply with its international obligations, respect the rules of international law and apply the fourth Geneva Convention to the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories; to desist from establishing Israeli settlements; to comply with relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions; and to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan and from imposing Israeli citizenship and identity cards on the Syrian citizens there, and to desist from its repressive measures against them. The Secretary-General was asked to provide in 1997 an updated list of reports, studies, statistics and other documents relating to the question of Palestine and other occupied Arab territories, with the texts of the most recent relevant UN decisions and resolutions and the report of the Committee on Israeli practices, and with all other information relevant to the implementation of the Subcommission resolution.

PART THREE

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic cooperation

The rates of economic growth of both the developed and developing countries rose in 1996, while the rate of economic contraction slowed in the Commonwealth of Independent States. In many cases, however, output per person was rising only slowly and lacked the dynamism—and poverty reduction—that would come from high levels of investment, capacity expansion, rapid productivity increase and rising employment. Indeed, the risk of marginalization remained high for low-income countries that depended largely on commodity exports for foreign exchange earnings and official development assistance for foreign capital inflows.

Through the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group of the General Assembly on an Agenda for Development, work continued throughout the year on the elaboration of the concept of an agenda for development—an integrated approach to a wide range of economic and social issues originally proposed by the Secretary-General in 1992. Following a review of the implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (the 1990s), both adopted in 1990, the Assembly, in a December resolution, called for the review and appraisal of the Declaration and the Strategy, to be coordinated with the follow-up work on major UN conferences and the ongoing discussion on an agenda for development.

The Commission on Sustainable Development considered a number of substantive issues at its April/May session, including changing consumption and production patterns and capacity-building in developing countries. A three-day high-level meeting with ministerial participation discussed preparations for the special session of the Assembly to be held in 1997 to discuss the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. In December, the Assembly decided to convene the special session from 23 to 27 June 1997 at the highest political level of participation.

In the context of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty, which was observed in 1996, the Commission on Sustainable Development and the Commission for Social Development discussed strategies and actions for the eradication of poverty. In his annual report, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) described the Programme's efforts to sharpen its focus on poverty eradication in 1996, while the Economic and Social Council adopted agreed conclusions on coordination of poverty eradication activities. In a December resolution, the Assembly decided that the theme for the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) would be "Eradicating poverty is an ethical, social, political and economic imperative of humankind".

At its resumed fiftieth session from 15 to 19 April, the Assembly held plenary meetings devoted to public administration and development at which it considered the reports of a number of regional meetings on the subject. The Assembly requested the United Nations to develop strategies for rebuilding a viable public administration in countries undergoing post-conflict rehabilitation and reconstruction, and invited the Bretton Woods institutions and all relevant UN agencies and bodies to assist Member States involved in economic restructuring programmes to pursue national policies aimed at improving the development and management of their human resources.

The implementation of the 1994 Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States was reviewed by the Commission for Sustainable Development and by the Assembly, which invited the Commission to continue its support for the Programme of Action as an integral part of the preparations for the Assembly's 1997 special session.

International economic relations

Development and international economic cooperation

A number of United Nations bodies, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, discussed development and international economic cooperation issues during 1996.

The Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee discussed matters relating to macroeconomic policy questions and international economic cooperation and made recommendations on a number of topics. By decision 51/444 of 16 December, the Assembly took note of Part One of the Committee's report on sustainable development and international economic cooperation [A/51/604].

By decision 51/452 of 17 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the launching of global negotiations on international economic cooperation for development and decided to include an item on the subject in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second (1997) session.

Economic and Social Council consideration. During its high-level segment (24-27 June) [A/51/3/Rev.1], the Economic and Social Council held an intensive policy dialogue on major issues in the world economy with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (Rubens Ricupero), a Deputy Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) (Prabhakar R. Narvekar) and a Managing Director of the World Bank (Sven Sandstrom). The dialogue covered trends in the world economy (see below); globalization, trade, debt and resource flows (see PART THREE, Chapter IV); and cooperation and coordination within the UN system.

In a summary of the segment, the Council President stated that progress had been made in cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank group and IMF) in a number of economic, social and environmental areas. Further development of the cooperation, a closer policy dialogue at the intergovernmental level on global macroeconomic policy issues and promotion of cooperation at the country level were called for.
