Special operations accounted for some two thirds of UNHCR operational activities in 1996. Appeals were launched, in conjunction with DHA, for operations in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Afghan repatriation programme and the emergency in the Great Lakes region, as well as in the Horn of Africa and the republics of the former Soviet Union (see PART THREE, Chapter III). UNHCR issued its own appeals for Central America, repatriations in Angola and Myanmar, and a number of other operations. The lack of funding and the timing of pledges for operations in the Great Lakes region and in the territory of the former Yugoslavia were the Office's greatest challenges in 1996. The shortage of funding sometimes hampered field operations. The Office raised some $618 million for special operations, repatriations and emergencies, in addition to amounts under General Programmes.

A General Programmes budget target of $452.6 million was set for 1997, with Special Programme requirements estimated at $737.8 million, of which $230 million pertained to the operation in the Great Lakes region and $235.9 million to the territory of the former Yugoslavia.

In an October decision [A/51/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee approved the revised 1996 General Programmes budget amounting to $445,327,000. It also approved a 1997 total General Programmes budget of $452,612,000, i.e., country/area programmes, other programmes and the headquarters budgets amounting to $370,556,900, $25 million for the Emergency Fund, $20 million for the Voluntary Repatriation Fund and a Programme Reserve of $37,055,100. The Committee requested UNHCR to report on the increased total programme delivery and administrative support-costs measures, including a more precise definition of the various categories of costs, illustrating how they were reflected in the 1996 and 1997 budgets. UNHCR was also requested to prepare a consolidated paper on the proposed rental of its new headquarters premises in Montbrillant, Switzerland, for a decision by the Standing Committee before 31 December 1996.

The Standing Committee, on 11 December, endorsed [A/AC.96/879] the High Commissioner's proposal to enter into a formal agreement with the Swiss authorities, which would be re-examined in the final year of the initial five-year lease.

Accounts (1995)

The audited financial statements on funds administered by UNHCR for the year ending 31 December 1995 and the report of the Board of Auditors [A/51/5/Add.5] showed total expenditures of $1,142.9 million and total income of $1,034 million, with a reserve balance of $346.2 million.

The Board of Auditors noted that actual expenditures varied substantially from the budget estimates, sometimes more than 25 per cent in respect of field offices. There was also substantial underutilization of appropriations. Programme planning was deficient due to inaccurate estimations of availability of funds and of caseloads and inadequate needs assessment of refugees. There was insufficient preparatory work, the basis for the selection of beneficiaries was not adequately documented and work plans were not prepared by several field offices. There was widespread failure to include project specifications in sub-agreements with implementing partners. There were several deficiencies in the implementation of a project by an implementing partner in the United Republic of Tanzania, resulting in inefficient programme delivery and substantial financial loss to UNHCR. Project evaluation was also inadequate.

The Board recommended that the accounts of implementing partners be regularly audited and that audit certificates be obtained. The reasons for variations between initial and revised budgets and actual expenditures should be analysed and the findings submitted to the Executive Committee each year; inputs for budget estimation should be more reliable; a factor for inflation multipliers and exchange-rate variations should be included; and the method of computing the vacancy factor should be refined. The impact of uneven availability of funds on project formulation should be reviewed and criteria established for selecting project beneficiaries. The deficiencies in the implementation of the project in the United Republic of Tanzania should be investigated and remedial measures taken, including recovery of overpayments. Procedures should be established to evaluate programme achievements and outputs and the findings utilized in programme planning and implementation. Annual procurement plans should be obtained from all field offices and procurement planning strengthened.

ACABQ in a September report [A/AC.96/865/Add.4], stated that, given the size of the operational activities of UNHCR, prequalification and internal audits of NGO implementing partners would not be sufficient. It recommended that audit be enhanced and that the adequacy of covering 10 to 15 per cent of the total subprojects in any given area be reviewed. An increase of resources, proper planning and inspections were essential, given the level of resources and the complexity of the UNHCR Programme. ACABQ agreed that the resources for internal audit should be increased significantly. However, the placement of the audit function and the manner of providing audit services were policy issues to be considered by the General Assembly.

In its general decision on programme, administrative and financial matters [A/51/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee requested UNHCR to explore further with the Board of Auditors its proposal for the audit of implementing partners, particularly the scope of the proposed audit certification, taking into account the comments of ACABQ and the proposals of the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services. It noted the comments of ACABQ on issues related to internal audit and requested UNHCR to prepare a comprehensive paper on those issues for consideration by the Standing Committee in 1997.

ACABQ in an October report [A/51/533], stated that the situation concerning performance and accountability of implementing partners had not improved and it was essential for the administration to exercise greater oversight and control over those partners. The serious deficiencies identified by the Board of Auditors, especially those in the United Republic of Tanzania, required urgent attention, vigorous investigation and recovery of misused funds. ACABQ requested the Executive Committee to allow representatives of NGOs and other implementing partners to be available when accountability and performance were being discussed. It requested the High Commissioner, in her budget submission, to indicate the extent to which the Board's observations regarding budget changes and administrative support and operational delivery costs could be taken into account, particularly with respect to country programme budgets. On the question of training of personnel of implementing partners, it recommended that priority be given to redressing many of the shortcomings identified by the Board, such as administration, finance, procurement, audit and reporting on project implementation.

The General Assembly, in decision 51/460 of 18 December, decided that the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee should continue consideration of the item on the financial reports and audited financial statements and reports of the Board of Auditors at its resumed session in 1997.

Committee working methods

The Executive Committee had before it a review [A/AC.96/868] of its revised working methods agreed on in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1234]. Under a 1995 decision, a Standing Committee, empowered to adopt decisions and conclusions on matters included in the programme of work, replaced the Subcommittee of the Whole on International Protection, the Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters, and the informal meetings of the Executive Committee. According to the review, experience of the new Standing Committee process had been positive, allowing for rationalization of debates, more timely adoption of decisions and conclusions, and better linkage with work of the plenary. There had been a more rational distribution of documentation and streamlining of plenary discussions. Suggestions for amending the Executive Committee's rules of procedure were made, and it was proposed that the Committee establish a process for consultation with NGOs.

In October, the Executive Committee decided [A/51/12/Add.1] that the revised working methods provided a sound basis for the organization of the annual cycle of its meetings and those of the Standing Committee and should be adopted. The rules of procedure should be revised to reflect those changes, and consultations initiated among Executive Committee members on the participation of NGO observers in the work of the Committee and its Standing Committee, bearing in mind revised arrangements for NGO consultation with the Economic and Social Council and further discussions to take place at the fifty-first session of the General Assembly. The Executive Committee authorized the Standing Committee to review the results of those consultations in 1997.

Standing Committee

The Standing Committee held four meetings in 1996 (30-31 January; 10-11 April; 25-27 June; 16-17 September and 2 October) [A/AC.96/875] prior to the meeting of the Executive Committee and a fifth meeting on 11 December [A/AC.96/879]. It reviewed UNHCR programmes in different regions and adopted decisions on programmes and funding, the medium-term plan, UNHCR property, international procurement, UNHCR financial rules, support cost of international NGO partners, audit follow-up, programme and financial matters, documentation, amendments to its work programme, the annual theme of the 1996 session of the Executive Committee, lessons learned from the Rwanda emergency, internal oversight mechanisms, Project Delphi and the rental of UNHCR premises. The Standing Committee also prepared draft decisions and conclusions for submission to the Executive Committee.

The Standing Committee's programme of work for 1997 was adopted by the Executive Committee in October [A/51/12/Add.1].

Refugee protection and assistance

Protection issues

While international protection of refugees meant securing respect for their basic rights, ensuring favourable treatment in countries of asylum and promoting the ratification by States of relevant international instruments, it was also inextricably linked to the search for and attainment of durable solutions to the refugee problem. In addressing the problems of finding solutions and preventing forced displacements, UNHCR continued to be confronted by a number of protection issues, notably the international protection aspects of return and reintegration, particularly in situations emerging from conflict. In that regard, improved cooperation with humanitarian, human rights and development organizations was becoming an increasingly important facet of its operations. There was a growing awareness that lasting solutions to complex emergencies that gave rise to refugees required comprehensive approaches by the international community.

In a July note [A/AC.96/863], the High Commissioner analysed the use of comprehensive approaches in attempting to prevent, redress and resolve refugee situations, examined the positive contribution to such approaches of a consistent legal framework for protection, and explored UNHCR's role in securing and implementing those protection functions in cooperation with States. The High Commissioner noted that in a year when protection problems of massive refugee populations continued to dominate UNHCR's agenda, global refugee numbers were reduced. However, that was not accompanied by a positive change of perception regarding the scope of the problem, and the pressure to identify solutions was more acute than ever. Over the past year, hundreds of thousands of asylum-seekers were admitted and given refuge in many parts of the world. Elsewhere, however, attitudes to refugee protection and to refugees ranged from indifference to active hostility. Failure to address all aspects of refugee dilemmas led to a range of problems, from refolement at borders of refugees who risked death on their return, to elaborating institutional structures severely restricting admission. Current developments suggested the likelihood of continued ethnic regional conflicts. The need to mitigate refugee-producing conflicts and put in place preventive elements, while ensuring the observance of international standards in respect of persons in need of international protection, made the renewed analysis of comprehensive regional or subregional approaches timely. A protection perspective, emphasizing the basic human rights of individuals, was UNHCR's starting point for the identification of just, effective and permanent solutions. Comprehensive approaches did not necessarily overcome the need for refugee protection; rather, they placed the problem of lack of national protection in its broader context. Protection should govern the entire process towards finding solutions, which was the final purpose of protection. The international rule of law, including human rights and refugee law principles, should be seen as a positive and enabling component of any comprehensive approach.

In an October conclusion [A/51/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee reaffirmed the value of comprehensive approaches to the problems of refugees and displaced persons. It underlined the importance of regional cooperation, as illustrated by those approaches, in addressing involuntary displacement in a manner which encompassed the political dimension of causes. It encouraged States to adopt protection-based comprehensive approaches to particular problems of displacement. The principles of such approaches should be: protection of all human rights; promotion of the rule of law through national legal and judicial capacity-building; respect for the institution of asylum and ensuring international protection to those who needed it; measures to reinforce international solidarity and burden-sharing; support for long-term sustainable development; integration of developmental approaches into the relief stage by strengthening national capacities; support for rehabilitation, reintegration and reconstruction measures; public information to raise awareness about refugee and migration issues; the establishment and fostering of mechanisms to avoid or reduce the incidence of conflict, and of reconciliation measures to ensure durable solutions; and education for peace and human rights. The Committee invited UNHCR to support States in formulating comprehensive approaches and in exploring more systematically where and how they might be appropriate.

International instruments

As at 31 December 1996, the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] and its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 477] had 128 States parties, with Kyrgyzstan and South Africa becoming parties to both instruments during the year.

Other intergovernmental legal instruments of benefit to refugees included the 1969 Convention Governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa, of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the 1957 Agreement relating to Refugee Seamen and its 1973 Protocol, the 1959 European Agreement on the Abolition of Visas to Refugees, the 1980 European Agreement on Transfer of Responsibility for Refugees, and the 1969 American Convention on Human Rights, Pact of San Jose, Costa Rica.

As at 31 December 1996, there were 43 States parties to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons [YUN 1954, p. 416], with Azerbaijan and Brazil becoming parties during the year, and 19 States parties to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness [YUN 1961, p. 533], following the accession of Azerbaijan and Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Promotional activities

In 1996, UNHCR increased its promotional efforts at the regional level, participating in various seminars and conferences on refugee issues, and organizing refugee law and protection courses for government officials, implementing partners, academic institutions and NGOs. The second part of a training module on human rights and refugee protection was finalized and distributed. The Office continued to monitor the work of the treaty bodies, the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. Collaboration with the High Commissioner for Human Rights continued, particularly at the field levels, to enhance complementary action for monitoring human rights and for institution-building. The Office also continued to monitor contacts with human rights working groups, rapporteurs, experts and monitors, as an integral part of its approach to unite human rights concerns with refugee protection.

Assistance measures

No massive new refugee influxes were experienced in 1996; however, the conflict in eastern Zaire and the sudden and large-scale return of Rwandans from Zaire and the United Republic of Tanzania at the end of the year posed unprecedented challenges for UNHCR, in terms of both providing humanitarian assistance and supporting massive reintegration in a fragile post-conflict environment. While confronting ongoing emergencies in many parts of the world, the Office continued to promote and consolidate solutions to problems of displacement, and to develop and reinforce its emergency preparedness and response capacity.

Overall, UNHCR assisted some 26.1 million persons in 1996, of whom 13.2 million were refugees, 3.3 million were repatriated refugees in the early stages of their integration, 4.7 million were internally displaced persons and 4.9 million others were of humanitarian concern, for the most part victims of conflict.

UNHCR participated in activities to strengthen the coordination of UN emergency humanitarian assistance, while at the same time developing its own emergency preparedness measures through an increased emphasis on contingency planning, guidelines for which were finalized and distributed throughout UNHCR and shared with DHA, the World Food Programme (WFP), UNICEF and partner NGOs. Those guidelines became part of the basis for an inter-agency approach to contingency planning. Another important element in the enhanced emphasis on preparedness was emergency training. Emergency management training programmes were held in Ethiopia (for countries in the Horn of Africa), Guinea (for West Africa) and Kyrgyzstan (for Central Asian republics). A training programme in emergencies for UNHCR headquarters staff was also developed. Total expenditures on emergency assistance amounted to $77.6 million, of which $22 million was under General Programmes and $55.6 million under Special Programmes.

Following the emergency phase of an operation, the basic needs of refugees were covered by care and maintenance activities. In Africa, where the greatest percentage of such activities was implemented, sizeable programmes continued in Cote d'Ivoire, Ethiopia, the Great Lakes region, Guinea, Kenya and the Sudan. Elsewhere in the world, care and maintenance assistance was provided in South-East Asia to the remaining Vietnamese populations in the South-East Asian camps and Hong Kong, as well as in Algeria, the Central Asian republics, Georgia, the Russian Federation and Pakistan. Total expenditures for such assistance amounted to $243.2 million, well over half of UNHCR General Programmes expenditure. Some $400 million was also spent under Special Programmes.

Expenditures on local settlement projects to promote socio-economic self-reliance and local integration of refugees, enabling UNHCR gradually to phase out its care and maintenance, amounted to $136.8 million.

UNHCR continued to regard voluntary repatriation as the preferable durable solution to refugee situations. To enhance its approach, a Reintegration and Self-Reliance Unit was established to assist in the design of reintegration programmes. A policy and methodological framework for small-scale, community-based reintegration projects was developed and a manual on employment and micro-financing assistance prepared. In 1996, $ 196 million was spent on voluntary repatriation.

Global expenditures on resettlement in 1996 amounted to $5,768.8 million.

During the year, some 35,800 refugees were resettled with UNHCR assistance, including 925 women at risk and 560 medical cases.

Refugees and the environment

In June 1996, as a follow-up to the adoption in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1237] by the Executive Committee of its reformulated environmental policy, UNHCR published Environmental Guidelines, which identified measures applicable to all phases of its environmental operations, as well as environmental measures specific to refugee assistance operations. The guidelines elaborated environmental measures in relation to UNHCR activities, including the local environment and the protection of environmentally sensitive areas in site selection and camp planning; energy-saving stoves and cooking methods; economic and educational programmes designed to reduce firewood collection; and controlled firewood harvesting. A number of projects and activities were implemented and progress achieved in incorporating environmental considerations into related sectoral guidelines. A geographical information system environmental database was being developed and testing of other appropriate environmental technologies was under way. A major project was initiated in December to develop training materials for UNHCR and partner organizations aimed at promoting sound environmental practices in areas affected by refugees. Action to promote implementation of the guidelines was taken specifically in the Great Lakes region of Africa, as well as in Kenya, Uganda and Nepal.

Refugee women

In 1996, UNHCR integrated activities based on the strategic objectives of the Beijing Platform for Action, adopted at the 1995 World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1170], into the delivery of its multisectoral programmes for refugee women, particularly with regard to the problems of violence against women, women in armed conflict and the human rights of women. It also established a Reference Group for Refugee Women to advise and assist the High Commissioner in the implementation of UNHCR policy guidelines on refugee women, identifying obstacles to their implementation and recommending solutions. A major effort was under way to integrate the concerns and needs of refugee women into all protection and assistance programmes through training at the field level in people-oriented planning and the recently appointed four regional advisers on refugee women.

In September, activities commenced under the Bosnian Women's Initiative, designed to empower Bosnian women and provide opportunities for self-reliance and self-sufficiency. A similar initiative was started for the economic empowerment of women in Rwanda, thereby strengthening the social structure of the society and facilitating reconciliation and reintegration.

In response to an Executive Committee request that UNHCR support efforts to develop and implement criteria and guidelines on responses to persecution aimed at women, a symposium on gender-based persecution, to highlight the specific situation of female asylum-seekers, was convened (Geneva, 22-23 February). UNHCR also developed a human rights awareness training module targeted at refugee women and was drawing up guidelines on gender-based persecution.

In October [A/51/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee encouraged UNHCR to continue to strengthen efforts for the protection of women having a well-founded fear of persecution. It called on States to adopt an approach that was sensitive to gender-related concerns and that ensured that women whose claims to refugee status were based on a well-founded fear of persecution for reasons enumerated in the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] and its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 477], including persecution through sexual violence or other gender-related persecution, were recognized as refugees.

Refugee children

In 1996, UNHCR embarked on a comprehensive follow-up plan to the 1995 report on the impact of armed conflict on children [YUN 1995, p. 707], which involved support for the work of the Secretary-General's Special Representative on children and armed conflict (see PART TWO, Chapter II), and the preparation of a first-year work plan with UNICEF, the High Commissioner for Human Rights and other organizations.

In continuing its efforts to address the protection problems of refugee children, UNHCR organized a symposium (Geneva, 19-20 September) to discuss issues relating to unaccompanied children seeking asylum in Europe. Following the symposium, UNHCR finalized guidelines on unaccompanied children seeking asylum.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 50/150 [YUN 1995, p. 1239], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/51/329] in September on assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors. The report reviewed inter-agency cooperation; the provision of emergency kits to unaccompanied children; meeting their psychosocial well-being; their situation in countries practising individual refugee status determination; some persistent protection problems; and a community-based approach to assist them.

The Secretary-General reported that UNHCR and UNICEF had signed a memorandum of understanding in March to strengthen collaboration to develop, coordinate and apply policies, standards and strategies for the care and family reunification of unaccompanied children. Specific operational activities covered by the memorandum included: contingency planning; assessment and monitoring; support for unaccompanied children; promotion of psychosocial activities; and water and sanitation. UNICEF would assist national authorities of the country of origin to develop, coordinate and apply policies, standards and strategies, while UNHCR would take the lead in relation to unaccompanied children in exile. The two agencies would collaborate to develop further and use global programming guidelines and standards, ensure operational coordination and information-sharing between operations in countries of asylum and of origin, and develop guidelines and training materials to address the needs of children traumatized by exposure to armed conflict and extreme violence. In the Rwanda/Burundi emergency, collaboration between the two agencies resulted in more than 33,000 children being reunited with their families by 1 May 1996. They also developed jointly an emergency kit for unaccompanied children, to be deployed in emergency situations to facilitate coordination and enhance the quality of the response to the needs of separated children. Guidance on how to provide psychosocial support to unaccompanied children was part of the emergency kit. UNHCR included the re-establishment of a family and community-based psychosocial support system within the framework of its community services. In Rwanda and Zaire, UNICEF provided trauma counselling and a system for tracing, and foster care for separated children. In Burundi, it assisted in identifying 14,000 unaccompanied children.

Among persistent problems confronting unaccompanied children, the Secretary-General said, were military recruitment, sexual exploitation and evacuation of children from zones of conflict. Concerning unaccompanied children in countries practising individual refugee status determination, UNHCR prepared a draft position paper advocating a set of principles and recommendations for child care and protection, as contained in the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [GA res. 44/25], to be applied in conjunction with the UNHCR guidelines on refugee children. Advocating a community-based approach, the Secretary-General stated that communities and local authorities had the primary responsibility for assuring children's survival and well-being, and all efforts to assist unaccompanied children should be based on existing, positive cultural mechanisms within the refugee community. The community should be involved in all aspects of the care for and monitoring of unaccompanied children.

The Secretary-General concluded that the particular vulnerability of unaccompanied refugee children was widely recognized. Collaboration between UNHCR and UNICEF had prepared the ground for an improved emergency response, while at the same time ensuring compatibility with long-term solutions. It was hoped that collaboration, involving specialized NGOs, and the momentum created by the final phase of the expert study on the impact of armed conflict on children (see PART TWO, Chapter II) and its recommendations would further contribute to an improved response to the needs of unaccompanied refugee children.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/73.

Assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/172 of 23 December 1994 and 50/150 of 21 December 1995,

Aware of the fact that the majority of refugees are children and women,

Bearing in mind that unaccompanied refugee minors are among the most vulnerable and at risk of neglect, violence, forced military recruitment, sexual assault and other abuses and therefore require special assistance and care,

Mindful of the fact that the ultimate solution to the plight of unaccompanied minors is their return to and reunification with their families,

Noting the revised Guidelines on Refugee Children issued by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in May 1994 and the development of an emergency kit to facilitate coordination and to enhance the quality of responses to the needs of unaccompanied minors by the Office of the High Commissioner, the United Nations Children's Fund and non-governmental organizations,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the Office of the High Commissioner in the identification and tracing of unaccompanied refugee minors, and welcoming its effort in reunifying family members of refugees,

Welcoming the efforts exerted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the reunification of family members of refugees,

Noting the efforts of the High Commissioner to ensure the protection of and assistance to refugees, including children and unaccompanied minors, and that further efforts need to be exerted to this effect,

Recalling the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its deep concern at the continued plight of unaccompanied refugee minors, and emphasizes once again the urgent need for their early identification and for timely, detailed and accurate information on their number and whereabouts;
3. Expresses the hope that adequate resources will be provided for programmes of identification and tracing of unaccompanied refugee minors;
4. Calls upon the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in cooperation with other relevant United Nations bodies, to incorporate policies that aim at preventing refugee family separation into its programmes, conscious of the importance of family unity;
5. Calls upon all Governments, the Secretary-General, the Office of the High Commissioner, all United Nations organizations, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned to exert the maximum effort to assist and protect refugee minors and to expedite the return to and reunification with their families of unaccompanied refugee minors;
6. Urges the Office of the High Commissioner, all United Nations organizations, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned to take appropriate steps to mobilize resources commensurate to the needs and interests of the unaccompanied refugee minors and for their reunification with their families;
7. Condemns all acts of exploitation of unaccompanied refugee minors, including their use as soldiers or human shields in armed conflict and their forced recruitment into military forces, and any other acts that endanger their safety and personal security;

8. Calls upon the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, the United Nations Children's Fund and other United Nations organizations and international organizations to mobilize adequate assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors in the areas of relief, education, health and psychological rehabilitation;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/614) without vote, 13 November (meeting 35); 14-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.15/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 105.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 19-23, 27, 29, 31, 35; plenary 82.

In section III of resolution 51/77, the Assembly urged Governments to pay particular attention to the situation of refugee and internally displaced children by designing and improving the implementation of policies for their care and well-being with the necessary international cooperation, in particular that of UNHCR and UNICEF. It called on UN bodies and other organizations to ensure the early identification and registration of unaccompanied refugee and internally displaced children and to give priority to programmes for family tracing and reunification; for the continual monitoring of care arrangements; and on States and other parties to armed conflict to recognize the particular vulnerability of refugee and internally displaced children to recruitment into the armed forces, sexual violence, exploitation and abuse, and to enhance protection and assistance mechanisms.

Regional activities

Africa

In a September report [A/51/367], the Secretary-General stated that in early 1996 Africa had hosted some 9,145,400 refugees, internally displaced persons and other people of concern to UNHCR, about one third of the worldwide total. Their number dropped to 7,660,000 at year's end, according to UNHCR statistics quoted in a later report [A/52/360] of the Secretary-General. UNHCR expenditure in Africa totalled $474,357,600. The situation in the Great Lakes region remained a source of considerable concern, as initiatives to encourage voluntary repatriation did not result in any major return movements in the first part of the year.

The High Commissioner estimated [A/52/12] the number of refugees in the Great Lakes region at some 1.8 million at the beginning of the year. UNHCR activities for most of 1996 were broadly characterized by the continuous promotion of voluntary repatriation as the only durable solution for Rwandan refugees in the countries of asylum, and the provision of essential care and maintenance assistance in the refugee camps. Despite those efforts, large-scale returns did not occur until the repatriation of all Rwandan refugees from Burundi in July.

The Security Council, in a statement [S/PRST/1996/31] of 24 July, deplored the forced repatriation of Rwandan refugees from Burundi and called on the Government of Burundi to honour its obligations and desist from further refoulement. The Council expressed support for the UNHCR efforts and urged all parties to work with it to ensure that the rights of refugees were respected.

In eastern Zaire, the deteriorating security situation throughout 1996 compelled UN international staff and NGOs to vacate Bukavu on 25 October. On 15 November, fighting at Mugunga camp between the insurgents and the ex-Forces Armées Rwandaises prompted the refugees to leave; most returned to Rwanda, where by the end of December 720,900 had arrived, with more than half a million having returned during the first four days of the movement. Some 220,000 refugees remaining from the former Kivu camps dispersed towards Kisangani and were later located in other camps. A UNHCR office was established to provide emergency assistance and promote repatriation. On 9 November, the Security Council, by resolution 1078(1996), urged Member States, in cooperation with the Secretary-General and OAU, to allow the immediate return of humanitarian organizations and the safe delivery of humanitarian aid to displaced persons, refugees and civilians in eastern Zaire, and to help create the conditions for voluntary, orderly and secure repatriation of refugees. It requested the Secretary-General to draw up a concept of operations and a framework for a humanitarian task force, with military assistance to, inter alia, deliver humanitarian assistance and shelter to refugees and displaced persons in eastern Zaire; assist the High Commissioner with the protection and voluntary repatriation of refugees and displaced persons; and establish humanitarian corridors for the delivery of humanitarian assistance and to assist the voluntary repatriation of refugees.

During the massive repatriation of Rwandan refugees from Zaire in November and December, UNHCR worked to ensure the viability of humanitarian corridors from entry points to returnee communes of origin. Despite the scale and speed of the movement, which was in addition to the return of 500,000 Rwandan refugees from the United Republic of Tanzania in December, UNHCR, with other humanitarian agencies, was able to make arrangements to receive them. That caused a radical expansion of UNHCR assistance in Rwanda and a shift in emphasis towards reintegration and rehabilitation.

Encouraged by the massive repatriation from Zaire, authorities in the United Republic of Tanzania announced 31 December 1996 as the deadline for the repatriation of all Rwandan refugees. A massive return movement started on 14 December, with thousands walking back to Rwanda. However, the influx of Burundian refugees continued as a result of renewed conflict, necessitating the establishment of new camps and the expansion of an existing one. In November, following the rebel advance in eastern Zaire, Zairian refugees also started to arrive, at the rate of 1,000 per day (see PART ONE, Chapter II). Zairian refugees also crossed into Uganda.

In the absence of concrete confidence-building indicators in Angola, UNHCR did not promote or organize voluntary repatriation in 1996, but focused on strengthening basic facilities in returnee areas and building capacities for the reception of the large number of returnees expected to arrive once conditions improved. However, a significant number of Angolan refugees spontaneously and voluntarily returned home. In countries of asylum, primarily Zambia and Zaire, preparatory activities for the eventual repatriation of Angolan refugees were well advanced.

Mid-1996 marked the successful conclusion of the repatriation and reintegration programme that benefited more than 1.7 million Mozambican refugees who returned from six countries of asylum from 1993 to 1996. To make the voluntary repatriation of Mozambican refugees a truly durable solution, UNHCR implemented 1,575 quick-impact projects in water, health, transport and education.

In West Africa, as a result of peace accords concluded in November, the newly elected Government of Sierra Leone requested UNHCR assistance to repatriate some 380,000 Sierra Leonean refugees from the Gambia, Guinea, Liberia and other countries. In Liberia, an outbreak of renewed fighting in April resulted in thousands of Liberians fleeing the country. UNHCR activities were adversely affected by the prevailing insecurity, and access was limited to only 30,000 of an estimated refugee population of 120,000. Security conditions were also the reason that the voluntary repatriation of some 768,000 Liberian refugees in the subregion, scheduled to take place in December, failed to materialize. Food assistance to Sierra Leonean and Liberian refugees in Cote d'Ivoire and Guinea shifted from general distribution to targeted feeding. With the gradual restoration of peace and security in northern Mali, the rate of return of Malian refugees increased significantly. After the voluntary repatriation of some 80,000, their number in neighbouring countries decreased from 150,000 to 70,000. Having reinforced its presence in northern Mali, UNHCR began broader integration activities in 1996, focusing on the rehabilitation of basic services and launching a programme to support income-generating activities for women. Despite a reintegration programme in Mauritania in favour of local populations and refugees returning from Senegal and Mali, the number of refugees in Senegal and Mali remained at 60,000 and 15,000, respectively.

Following the normalization of the political situation in Togo in the course of 1995, a significant number of Togolese were reported to have returned from Ghana and Benin, reducing the caseload from 300,000 to fewer than 15,000.

In Central Africa, the 28,000 Sudanese refugees in the Central African Republic and the 96,500 in north-eastern Zaire had for the most part achieved self-sufficiency. In eastern Sudan, the number of Eritrean refugees was reduced by over 50 per cent, to 132,907. However, prospects for further repatriation were stalled due to rising tension between the Sudan and Eritrea and differences of approach between the two Governments. On the basis of bilateral arrangements with UNHCR, both countries confirmed their readiness to resume organized voluntary repatriation. Some 27,000 Ethiopian refugees were repatriated between 15 December 1995 and mid-1996. The repatriation of some 23,000 remaining in exile was expected to be completed by the end of 1997. By the end of 1996, the UNHCR-assisted refugee population in Kenya was reduced to 169,813, including 131,278 Somalis, 33,438 Sudanese and 4,533 Ethiopians. Those refugees benefited from care and maintenance programmes, and measures were taken to promote their self-sufficiency and rehabilitation of the environment. Uganda's continued generous policy of land allocation enabled the establishment of local settlements, but integration programmes were adversely affected by deteriorating security conditions in the northern part of the country. The conflict in southern Sudan resulted in an increase of Sudanese refugees in Uganda from 210,000 to 226,000, while the number of Zairian and Rwandan refugees rose from 12,000 to 27,000 and from 6,800 to 16,200, respectively.

In South Africa, there were over 20,000 asylum-seekers from 55 countries. UNHCR focused on activities to enable those who had received refugee status to achieve self-reliance and to encourage income-generating and vocational training. On 25 July, UNHCR signed a memorandum of understanding with the South African Development Community on cooperation in social, economic and political issues that had a bearing on the root causes of forced population displacement, refugee protection, provision of humanitarian assistance and the search for durable solutions.

The Council of Ministers of OAU (Yaounde, Cameroon, 1-5 July), in a resolution on refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa, called for generous assistance from the international community for the integration process in countries where large-scale voluntary repatriation was taking place, and for additional assistance to help alleviate the refugee situation and that of local populations in countries of asylum, especially in West Africa and the Great Lakes region.

On 19 July, by decision 1996/237, the Economic and Social Council took note of an oral report by UNHCR on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa [E/1996/SR.41].

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 50/149 [YUN 1995, p. 1242], the Secretary-General reported on 25 September [A/51/367] on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa. While UNHCR had a specific mandate to protect and assist refugees, returnees and displaced persons, he noted, those populations were, nevertheless, a growing proportion of the target beneficiaries of UNDP, UNICEF and WFP programmes, under the coordination of DHA, in countries in crisis or emerging from conflict. On behalf of the UN system, DHA issued coordination appeals for emergency assistance to populations affected by the political and humanitarian crises in Angola, Liberia, Sierra Leone, the Sudan and the Great Lakes region (see PART ONE, Chapter II, and PART THREE, Chapter III). WFP continued to be an essential part of the response to meeting the food needs of refugees, returnees and internally displaced persons in Africa. The memorandum of understanding between WFP and UNHCR was continually upgraded.

In March, UNICEF and UNHCR signed a memorandum of understanding delineating areas of collaboration in assisting refugees, returnees, internally displaced persons and affected host populations. The voluntary repatriation programme in Mozambique was a recent example of cooperation between UNDP and UNHCR. UNHCR and WFP support for care and maintenance continued for refugees and displaced victims of civil conflict in the Rwanda/Burundi regional operation, including the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire; the Liberia regional operation, including Cote d'Ivoire, Guinea and Sierra Leone; Somalia; southern Sudan; Ethiopia; Kenya; and Uganda. Stabilization of the political situation allowed a shift from relief to first-phase reconstruction and rehabilitation activities in Angola, Ghana, Mauritania, Mozambique, Rwanda and Somalia and repatriation from Benin, Burkina Faso, Djibouti, Eritrea, Ghana, Mauritania and the Sudan. UN agencies were continually adapting their structures to respond better to needs for rehabilitation and development in areas where internally displaced persons and refugees returned or settled. Other areas of cooperation included capacity-building, demobilization, mine clearance and environment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/71.

Assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/149 of 21 December 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Convinced of the necessity of strengthening the capacity within the United Nations system for the implementation of relief programmes for refugees, returnees and displaced persons,

Welcoming the ongoing process of voluntary repatriation of refugees in some parts of Africa,

Taking note of resolution CM/Res.1653(LXIV) on refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its sixty-fourth ordinary session, held at Yaounde from 1 to 5 July 1996,

Recalling the provisions of General Assembly resolution 2312(XXII) of 14 December 1967, by which it adopted the Declaration on Territorial Asylum,

Recognizing the need for States to create conditions conducive both to the prevention of flows of refugees and displaced persons and to solutions, especially voluntary repatriation,

Bearing in mind that the majority of refugees and displaced persons are women and children,

Noting with great concern that despite all the efforts deployed so far by the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity and others, the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Africa, especially in the West African and Great Lakes regions and in the Horn of Africa, remains precarious,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Notes with concern that the effects of political instability, internal strife, human rights violations and natural disasters such as drought have led to increased numbers of refugees and displaced persons in some countries of Africa;

3. Expresses deep concern at the serious and far-reaching consequences of large numbers of refugees and displaced persons in the receiving countries and the implications for security, long-term socio-economic development and the environment;

4. Expresses its appreciation and strong support for those African Governments and local populations which, in spite of the general deterioration of socio-economic and environmental conditions, as well as over-stretched national resources, continue to accept the additional burden imposed upon them by increasing numbers of refugees and displaced persons in compliance with the relevant principles of asylum;

5. Expresses concern at instances where the fundamental principle of asylum is jeopardized by the unlawful expulsion or refoulement, or the threat to life, physical security, integrity, dignity and the well-being of refugees;

6. Commends the Governments concerned for their sacrifices in providing assistance and protection to refugees, returnees and internally displaced persons and for their efforts to promote voluntary repatriation and other durable solutions;

7. Expresses its gratitude to the international community, and to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in particular, for the humanitarian assistance it has continued to render to refugees and displaced persons as well as to the countries of asylum;

8. Welcomes the strengthening of cooperation between the Office of the High Commissioner and the Organization of African Unity at all levels, and urges the two organizations, in conjunction with United Nations agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, the international community and the Governments concerned, to increase efforts aimed at facilitating voluntary repatriation in a dignified and orderly manner, as well as addressing the root causes of the refugee problem and working out modalities for a lasting solution;

9. Reiterates that the Plan of Action adopted by the Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region, held at Bujumbura from 15 to 17 February 1995, as endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/149, continues to be a viable framework for the resolution of the refugee and humanitarian problems in that region;

10. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner and other concerned entities to intensify protection activities by, inter alia, supporting the efforts of African Governments through appropriate capacity-building activities, including training of relevant officers, disseminating information about refugee instruments and principles and providing financial, technical and advisory services to accelerate the enactment or amendment and implementation of legislation relating to refugees;

11. Appeals to Governments, United Nations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international community to create conditions that can facilitate the voluntary return and the early rehabilitation and reintegration of refugees;

12. Appeals to the international community to respond positively to the third-country resettlement requests of African refugees in the spirit of solidarity and burden-sharing;

13. Commends the Governments of the Great Lakes and West African regions and the Office of the High Commissioner for their initiatives to promote repatriation within the framework of tripartite agreements on voluntary repatriation of refugees in the region;

14. Encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to continue to cooperate with the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in emergency humanitarian situations in Africa;

15. Welcomes the ongoing efforts undertaken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, with host Governments, United Nations and non-governmental organizations and the international community, in addressing the negative impact of large-scale refugee influxes and concentrations on the environment and ecosystems of countries of asylum;

16. Notes with satisfaction the voluntary return of millions of refugees to their homelands following the successful repatriation and reintegration operations carried out by the Office of the High Commissioner, with the cooperation and collaboration of many countries hosting refugees, and looks forward to other programmes to assist the voluntary repatriation of all refugees in Africa;

17. Expresses its concern about the long stay of refugees in certain African countries, and calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner to keep its programmes under review in conformity with its mandate in the host countries, taking into account the increasing requirements there;

18. Urges the international community to continue to fund the general refugee programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner, taking into account the substantially increased needs of programmes in Africa;

19. Calls upon Governments, United Nations agencies, non-governmental organizations and the international community as a whole to strengthen the emergency response capacity of the United Nations system on the basis of the experience of the emergency in the Great Lakes region and to continue to provide needed resources and operational support to refugees and countries of asylum in Africa until a permanent solution can be found;

20. Calls upon the international donor community to provide material and financial assistance for the implementation of programmes intended for the rehabilitation of the environment and infrastructure in areas affected by refugees in countries of asylum;

21. Requests all Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to pay particular attention to meeting the special needs of refugee women and children;

22. Calls upon the Secretary-General, the Office of the High Commissioner and intergovernmental, regional and non-governmental organizations to increase the capacity for coordination and delivery of humanitarian emergency assistance and disaster relief in general with States and others concerned in respect of asylum, relief, repatriation, rehabilitation and resettlement of refugees, returnees and displaced persons, including those refugees in urban areas;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive and consolidated report on the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, under the item entitled "Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, questions relating to refugees, returnees and displaced persons and humanitarian questions", and an oral report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1997.

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/614) without vote, 15 November (meeting 40); draft by Cameroon, for African Group (A/C.3/51/L.13/Rev.1); agenda item 105.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 19-23, 27, 29, 31, 35, 38, 40; plenary 82.

In resolution 51/30 H, the Assembly welcomed the manner in which Rwanda had handled the massive and sudden repatriation of refugees from eastern Zaire and Burundi and stressed the need for Rwanda to continue supporting the voluntary repatriation, resettlement and reintegration of returning refugees. It urged States, UN organizations and specialized agencies, NGOs, and multilateral financial and development institutions to continue assisting Rwanda in the resettlement and reintegration of refugees and other vulnerable groups.

In resolution 51/30 B, the Assembly called on States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide Liberia with technical, financial and other assistance for the repatriation and resettlement of Liberian refugees, returnees and displaced persons.

In resolution 51/30 D, the Assembly noted with satisfaction the successful completion of the repatriation, resettlement and reintegration of Mozambicans and expressed appreciation for the support of international and non-governmental organizations which, in close cooperation with the Government of Mozambique, had played an important role in that programme.

The Americas and the Caribbean

In a report on UNHCR activities [A/52/12], the High Commissioner stated that refugees, returnees and displaced persons of concern to UNHCR in the Americas and the Caribbean in 1996 stood at over 1.5 million. Of that number, only an estimated 47,000 were being assisted as refugees and some 34,000 as returnees. UNHCR expenditure in the Americas and the Caribbean amounted to $32,639,600 in 1996.

Two developments had paved the way for definitive solutions for the last major group of Central American refugees: the successful conclusion of the peace negotiations in Guatemala, culminating in the signing of a peace agreement in December (see PART ONE, Chapter III), and the launching of a migratory stabilization plan in respect of Guatemalan refugees in Mexico pursuant to a public announcement by the Government in August.

Some 4,086 Guatemalan refugees returned to Guatemala during the year, predominantly from Mexico, although the number of returnees in 1996 fell short of initial projections. UNHCR continued to support repatriation movements and initial socio-economic reintegration through community-based quick-impact projects. Some 30,000 Guatemalan refugees remained in the three southern Mexican states of Chiapas, Campeche and Quintana Roo. By the end of the year, 65 per cent of those who had requested an immigrant document had received it. UNHCR assisted in upgrading the infrastructure of basic services in the settlements and resolving the question of land titles.

In the rest of the subregion, with the exception of Belize, UNHCR promoted the rights of refugees, returnees and other uprooted populations. Support was given to strengthening national commitments and capacities to uphold the principles of asylum and international refugee law. In Belize, a quick-impact project facilitated the local integration of several thousand Central American refugees who had not opted to be repatriated. A regional forum on human rights, refugees and migration in Central America (San Jose, Costa Rica, October), convened by the Central American Council of Human Rights Ombudspersons and organized jointly by the Inter-American Institute for Human Rights, the International Labour Organization, the International Organization for Migration (IOM) and UNICEF, adopted a plan of action for the protection of the human rights of uprooted populations in Central America and a series of recommendations, calling on UNHCR and other organizations for support.

In South America and the Caribbean—of an estimated 50,900 refugees and persons of concern—some 7,100 benefited from UNHCR assistance. The trend in arrival of asylum-seekers stabilized, particularly in Brazil. The focus of UNHCR activities in the region was to strengthen the concept of an international protection framework as a key to both prevention and durable solutions. In October, Chile amended the chapter on refugees of its 1975 Migration Law, and in Brazil a refugee bill was awaiting final legislative approval. The repatriation of 50 Haitians, principally from the Dominican Republic, was assisted by UNHCR in 1996.

In September, the United States enacted new immigration legislation restricting access to asylum procedures, and, in November, Canada announced new measures to regularize the status of some undocumented refugees (Afghan and Somali refugees) who had been unable to become landed immigrants (permanent residents). Guidelines on child refugee claimants, issued by the Canadian Refugee Board, took effect on 30 September.

South Asia and Oceania

In South Asia, voluntary repatriation of refugees from Bangladesh to Myanmar was in its final stages. However, since not all of the remaining persons in the two camps in Bangladesh were expected to return, discussions were held to ensure a durable solution for any residual populations. UNHCR expanded its monitoring of returnees and Muslim populations in northern Rakhine state in Myanmar, and implemented small-scale assistance projects aimed at stabilizing economically vulnerable groups. Since the resumption of the conflict in 1995 between the Sri Lankan military and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, there had been no further voluntary repatriation of Sri Lankan Tamils from India. In January, UNHCR opened a field office in Kilinochchi, but a further escalation of the conflict forced it to evacuate its staff from the area. During the year, UNHCR provided over 6,000 earlier returnees from India and nearly 15,000 internally displaced persons with shelter and relief assistance. Some 150,000 to 200,000 internally displaced persons benefited from UNHCR-funded community-based micro-projects. Within the framework of promoting self-reliance, the rationalization of the assistance programmes for over 20,000 refugees and asylum-seekers in India (mostly Afghans) resulted in a reduction of the UNHCR-assisted caseload to a little over 10,000 persons by year's end; a further reduction was envisaged within the first quarter of 1997. New developments in Afghanistan led to a trickle of new arrivals in New Delhi. UNHCR expanded its refugee law promotion and dissemination activities in India, involving governmental bodies, educational institutions and NGOs.

With regard to the situation of some 91,000 Bhutanese refugees and asylum-seekers in Nepal, no significant developments took place in 1996. At the seventh round of bilateral talks in April 1996, the two Governments agreed to continue consultations. UNHCR reiterated its readiness to support the implementation of mutually acceptable durable solutions. During the last quarter of 1996, a number of demonstrations and marches were organized by refugee organizations to solicit support for the refugees' return to Bhutan.

In 1996, UNHCR's expenditure in Asia and Oceania amounted to $83,929,000.

Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees

The seventh and final meeting (Geneva, 5-6 March 1996) of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees reviewed the implementation of the 1989 Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees [YUN 1989, p. 707]. It noted that the objectives of the Plan of Action had been successfully met; clandestine departures from countries of origin had virtually ceased, the principle of asylum had been preserved, and effective screening procedures had been introduced in countries of first asylum, thus facilitating resettlement of refugees to third countries and the repatriation of those who did not qualify as refugees to their country of origin. The Steering Committee declared the formal completion, as of 30 June, of the Plan of Action in countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), noting that solutions for the relatively larger caseload in Hong Kong would take longer. Consequently, UNHCR progressively phased out its assistance in first-asylum camps in ASEAN countries, resulting in the closure of camps in Indonesia, Malaysia and Singapore. The Philippines determined that some 1,600 Vietnamese non-refugees would be permitted to remain, pending future repatriation or other solutions. During the year, some 29,217 Vietnamese non-refugees were repatriated to their country of origin. UNHCR continued to monitor the well-being of returnees, to provide repatriation grants to non-refugees who were voluntarily repatriated to Viet Nam and to support micro-projects to benefit returnee communities.

The Chinese authorities had advised that up to 15,000 of the 288,000 Indo-Chinese refugees in China wished to be repatriated to Viet Nam. A survey was initiated to gauge that number more definitely. UNHCR's assistance focused on the local settlement of refugees through a revolving credit mechanism to create employment opportunities. UNHCR phased out its assistance activities for Cambodian returnees. During 1996, 426 Cambodians were repatriated, mainly from Indonesia. The Office continued to monitor the welfare of some 101,000 refugees from Myanmar residing along the Myanmar/Thailand border.

Two major regional initiatives took place during the year concerning the promotion of refugee law in Asia and the Pacific: Australia and UNHCR co-hosted a conference (28-29 November) on regional approaches to refugees and displaced persons in Asia and the Pacific; and a commemorative seminar on refugees (Manila, Philippines, 11-13 December) was convened by the African-Asian Legal Consultative Committee and UNHCR.

Europe

According to the High Commissioner [A/52/12], the downward trend in the number of asylum-seekers in Western Europe continued, with 250,000 arriving during the year. While there were significant return movements from European host countries to Bosnia and Herzegovina, they were much smaller than expected, but were facilitated by an initiative among a number of Western European countries to make visa-free travel of refugees easier. UNHCR strategy in Western Europe was directed towards a gradual reduction of programmes and a shift of resources to the Baltic and CIS region.

In the former Yugoslavia, where the number of refugees and displaced persons totalled some 3.1 million at the beginning of 1996, UNHCR focused on promoting and identifying durable solutions. During the year, an estimated 250,000 returned to Bosnia and Herzegovina, but a further 80,000 were displaced after the transfer of territorial authority. A total of some 1.2 million refugees remained outside Bosnia and Herzegovina, principally in Western Europe. UNHCR's programme in Bosnia and Herzegovina was designed to foster significant return movements. That was hampered, however, by a lack of freedom of movement, security problems, housing shortages and significant unemployment. Some 22 target areas were identified where infrastructural capacity could be expanded to receive returnees.

Croatia continued to host 160,000 refugees from Bosnia and Herzegovina and 198,000 internally displaced persons. In Eastern Slavonia, UNHCR worked with the Croatian Government and the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium to monitor stability and prevent a further overflow of the population. In the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), there were some 560,000 refugees from Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, a sizeable number of whom were expected to require local settlement assistance, while the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Slovenia hosted 5,000 and 14,000 refugees, respectively.

As a result of the repatriation and resettlement of Bosnians from Bulgaria, the Czech Republic, Hungary and Slovakia, the number of de facto refugees was reduced, but asylum-seekers in Poland increased by 2,300 persons. Temporary protection status for Bosnians in Austria was extended for another year and redefined to include some individuals with no legal status. The lack of affordable housing remained an obstacle to rapid reintegration, encouraging movement towards Western Europe. In its endeavour to assist Governments in Central Europe, UNHCR started to sensitize institutions to the need to address certain aspects of asylum that were beyond its mandate. To sensitize States to the importance of comprehensively addressing the issue of integration of refugees in Central Europe, it organized a series of seminars. It also assisted some 2,500 Bosnians in Turkey, pending their repatriation.

In Eastern Europe, UNHCR assistance in Armenia aimed at supporting the settlement of some 150,000 particularly vulnerable refugees and promoted the establishment of legal procedures to allow refugees access to Armenian citizenship. In Azerbaijan, UNHCR addressed the needs of some 150,000 refugees and internally displaced persons identified as vulnerable. Another 150,000 internally displaced persons in Georgia, mainly from Abkhazia and South Ossetia, received UNHCR assistance. On 12 July, the Security Council, by resolution 1065(1996), demanded that the Abkhaz side accelerate significantly the voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons, by accepting the timetable proposed by UNHCR, and that it guarantee the safety of those returnees already in the area and regularize their status in cooperation with UNHCR.

UNHCR activities in the border areas of Chechnya (Russian Federation) were suspended in December for security reasons, but continued in neighbouring areas through local implementing partners. UNHCR expenditure in Europe totalled $320,264,200 in 1996.

Conference on refugees of CIS countries and neighbouring States

In a September report [A/51/341], the Secretary-General discussed the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States (Geneva, 30-31 May 1996). The Conference, which was held pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/151 [YUN 1995, p. 1235], was attended by 87 States, 27 international organizations, 2 governmental organizations and 77 NGOs. Preparations were coordinated by UNHCR, IOM and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). The three main objectives of the Conference were to provide a reliable forum for the countries of the region to discuss problems of population displacement in a humanitarian and non-political manner; review population movements in the region, and clarify categories of concern; and devise an integrated strategy to enable CIS countries to cope better with and prevent population displacement, as well as manage and regulate other types of migratory movements.

The Conference adopted a Programme of Action, which had been endorsed by a Preparatory Conference held in Minsk, Belarus, on 8 May. The Programme of Action consisted of two parts: a chapter on principles and a sequence of chapters on action (institutional framework, operational framework, prevention, cooperation and implementation/follow-up) to provide guidance to CIS countries in their handling of complex migratory movements and a basis for UNHCR's work there. Shortly after the Conference, UNHCR and IOM submitted to the international community for financial support a package of projects in three of the CIS countries. A wider review of priorities in all 12 countries was to form the basis for the formulation of the 1997-1998 programmes of those two organizations, which would be presented to the international community. UNHCR activities were to include those already approved under the 1997 General Programmes and Special Programmes and new activities designed through the Conference follow-up consultative process. As a result of the Conference, UNHCR activities would include assistance to solve the problems of formerly deported persons and those involuntarily relocating, both of which were highlighted by the Conference as groups of concern. The Programme of Action also provided for the establishment of a Steering Group to monitor the follow-up process. As part of the follow-up mechanism, UNHCR created a unit at headquarters to ensure implementation of the Programme of Action. On 31 October, a preliminary meeting of the Steering Group took place to set up modalities and procedures.

National implementation plans for 1997, reflecting the priorities of CIS Governments and the roles of various actors, were drawn up and formed the basis for UNHCR and IOM programmes for 1997, which were presented jointly in an appeal for funds in November 1996.

In an October conclusion [A/51/12/Add.1], the UNHCR Executive Committee approved the steps taken by the High Commissioner, in cooperation with IOM, to promote implementation of the Programme of Action. It underlined the urgent need to address the problems of those displaced, to implement measures to prevent situations leading to further involuntary population displacements and to manage other types of migratory flows in the region. The Committee urged CIS countries that had not done so to accede to and implement the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] and its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 477], and to strengthen their commitment to the principles underpinning the Programme of Action and ensure progress in its implementation. It called on other interested States to reaffirm their commitment to those principles and to support implementation of the Programme of Action. The Committee encouraged CIS countries and international organizations to strengthen cooperation with NGOs and to involve them in the Conference follow-up, and called on the High Commissioner to cooperate with IOM and OSCE in coordinating ongoing and future activities in CIS countries and in steering and monitoring progress through follow-up mechanisms.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/70.

Follow-up to the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/113 of 20 December 1993, 49/173 of 23 December 1994 and, in particular, 50/151 of 21 December 1995,

Taking note with satisfaction of the successful conclusion of the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States, held at Geneva on 30 and 31 May 1996,

Aware that involuntary, mass displacement, in addition to the human suffering involved, imposes significant economic and social burdens and may affect security and stability at the regional level,

Reaffirming the view of the Conference that, while the primary responsibility for tackling population displacement problems lies with the affected countries themselves, the serious challenges cannot be met by the limited resources and experience of the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States individually,

Recalling that the protection and promotion of human rights and the strengthening of democratic institutions are essential to prevent mass population displacement,

Mindful that effective implementation of the recommendations contained in the Programme of Action adopted by the Conference should be facilitated and can be ensured only through cooperation and co-ordinated activities undertaken in this respect by all interested States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other actors,

Welcoming the spirit of international solidarity and cooperation that made the preparatory process of the Conference and the Conference itself a success,

Reaffirming the importance of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and its 1967 Protocol,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the Government of Switzerland and other host States that made it possible to convene the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States and a series of preparatory meetings, as well as to those States that made voluntary contributions for this purpose;

3. Welcomes the Programme of Action adopted by the Conference on 31 May 1996;

4. Also welcomes the innovative approach and close cooperation of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organization for Migration and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, in initiating and supporting a multilateral constructive dialogue among a wide range of countries concerned that has brought agreement on guidelines for practical action;

5. Expresses its satisfaction with the work of the Conference, which laid down a solid foundation for further action by countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and States concerned and relevant international, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

6. Underlines the urgent need to address the problems of those displaced, implement measures to prevent situations leading to further involuntary population displacement and effectively manage other types of migratory flows in the region;

7. Urges all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to take further action with a view to the full implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

8. Invites all countries that have not yet done so to accede to and implement fully the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and its 1967 Protocol;

9. Calls upon the Governments of the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States to continue to strengthen their commitment to the principles underlying the Programme of Action and to ensure progress in its implementation;

10. Recognizes that implementation of the Programme of Action requires additional financial resources, and calls for international cooperation in order to assist the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States in the field of migration and related matters;

11. Welcomes the readiness of States and interested international organizations to provide appropriate forms and levels of support for the practical implementation of the Programme of Action in a spirit of solidarity and burden-sharing;

12. Invites international financial and other institutions to contribute to financing projects and programmes within the framework of the implementation of the Programme of Action;

13. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and invites the International Organization for Migration and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, to continue to steer in close coordination the ongoing and future activities ensuring progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action;

14. Calls upon all relevant United Nations organs, bodies and organizations to promote, within their respective mandates, the implementation of the Programme of Action of the Conference;

15. ### Central Asia, South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East

Continuing fighting and the change of authority in various regions of Afghanistan affected the rate of repatriation of Afghan refugees. In 1996, some 120,000 Afghan refugees were repatriated from Pakistan, where about 1.2 million Afghans remained. After Kabul came under Taliban control, some 50,000 Afghan refugees arrived in that country's north-west frontier province. UNHCR and WFP assisted a third of that group in Nasir Bagh village. UNHCR's reintegration programme in Afghanistan assisted local communities in receiving returnees, mainly in the fields of education, health, drinking water, irrigation, agriculture, road and bridge repair, income-generation and credit. Although UNHCR continued to facilitate voluntary repatriation, there was a need to envisage solutions other than repatriation, which had declined since 1993, as part of a comprehensive approach towards solutions.

UNHCR's work in the cities of Jalalabad and Kabul was disrupted, slowed down or cancelled as a result of regulations imposed by the new authorities in September 1996 abolishing the employment of women and the education of girls. At the end of the year, fighting north of Kabul created the displacement of some 110,000 persons, and in the north-west province of Badghis the fighting caused substantial displacements, including 27,000 persons relocated to Herat city. UNHCR responded to those emergency situations by providing expertise to the local authorities and relief to the displaced persons, in cooperation with other UN agencies and the International Committee of the Red Cross. Fewer than 10,000 Afghans returned from Iran, which continued to give asylum to some 1.4 million Afghan refugees and 500,000 Iraqi refugees. After fighting broke out in the Sulemaniya area of Iraq in September and October, 65,000 Iraqi refugees arrived in the western part of Iran.

Political instability in northern Iraq affected programmes and operations of UNHCR, which, nevertheless, assisted the refugees and returnees, as in the aftermath of the recapture of the town of Sulemaniya by the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan on 16 October, when most of those who had fled to Iran returned to northern Iraq. In November, UNHCR constructed a transit site at Muqibla to stimulate and assist the voluntary repatriation of Turkish refugees from Atroush camp in northern Iraq. However, efforts to resolve difficulties created by a group of activists in the camp continued to be of concern, and UNHCR announced on 21 December that it would phase out its assistance to Atroush.

The overall UNHCR strategy in Central Asia was to enhance the capacity of Governments in the region to manage refugee and forced population movements effectively. In addition, it promoted and facilitated voluntary repatriation to Tajikistan where, owing to the ongoing conflict, only 1,334 persons were repatriated during the year, and assisted needy and vulnerable refugees and asylum-seekers throughout the region. UNHCR advised Kazakhstan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan on draft legislation related to refugees and on the establishment of national administrative structures and procedures to manage refugee protection and assistance matters.

In 1996, UNHCR reviewed and updated the 1991 repatriation plan to prepare for the voluntary repatriation of some 105,000 refugees to Western Sahara. It continued its assistance programme for 80,000 vulnerable refugees in the Tindouf area, where its field office became operational.

UNHCR also assisted some 200 Palestinians stranded at Salloum on the border between Egypt and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya since September 1995, following the termination of their work contracts and rights of residence in Libya (see also PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Chapter XIII

Health, food and nutrition

The United Nations continued in 1996 its work in promoting human health, delivering and co-ordinating food aid and monitoring trends in nutrition.

United Nations efforts to combat AIDS were co-ordinated by the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome, which became fully operational on 1 January. Its main function was to strengthen national capacity to plan and implement financial and technical assistance in response to HIV/AIDS. Malaria became a more serious problem in 1996, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa, where a resistance to drugs had developed. The World Health Organization (WHO) led UN efforts to elaborate malaria control strategies. The situation of disabled persons, another major health concern of the United Nations, was reviewed in 1996, in particular the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, adopted in 1993.

Food security for all was the main goal of the World Food Summit, convened by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and held in Rome, Italy, in November. The Summit adopted a Plan of Action outlining a strategy for eradicating hunger in the world and ensuring universal food security. Welcoming the outcome of the Summit, the General Assembly called for implementation and follow-up of the Plan.

The World Food Programme (WFP)—a joint undertaking of the United Nations and FAO—continued to provide food aid to developing countries. In 1996, WFP provided 2.2 million tons of food to a total of 45.3 million people. With the support of donors, food aid was supplied to 84 countries at a cost of $1.2 billion, most of which went to relief operations in the Great Lakes region of Africa, Afghanistan, Angola, Iraq, Liberia, Sierra Leone and the nations of the former Yugoslavia.

Studies on nutrition were carried out by the Administrative Committee on Coordination's Subcommittee on Nutrition and the United Nations University, an autonomous academic institution within the UN system. The Subcommittee served as a point of harmonization for nutrition policies and activities of the system.

AIDS prevention and control

The Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (UNAIDS) became fully operational on 1 January 1996, following the 1994 endorsement of the Programme's establishment by the Economic and Social Council [YUN 1994, p. 1126]. The objectives, function, structure and organization of the Programme were developed by the six co-sponsors: the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the World Bank and the World Health Organization (WHO). Its main function was to strengthen national capacity to plan, coordinate, implement and monitor the overall response to HIV/AIDS, including technical and financial assistance, and to collaborate with Governments to mobilize a wide range of sectors and institutions, together with the most affected communities.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/211 of 9 February, decided to postpone to its 1996 substantive session the consideration of the report of the Executive Director of UNAIDS, as requested by the Council in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1252].

By a May note [E/1996/42], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council the report of the UNAIDS Executive Director describing recent developments in the activities of the Programme.

The Programme Coordinating Board, at its first meeting (Geneva, 13-14 July 1995), reviewed indicative budgetary proposals for the 1996-1997 biennium and requested that an overall budget be developed within an indicative range of $ 120 million to $140 million for the first biennium. It also authorized the Executive Director to proceed with the recruitment of staff. At its second meeting (Geneva, 13-15 November 1995), the Board adopted the strategic plan for UNAIDS for 1996-2000. It approved the proposed programme budget of the Programme for 1996-1997 in the amount of $120 million. In addition, the Board established two informal working groups, one to discuss innovative methods of resource mobilization, the other to work on indicators and evaluation. The Board's third meeting was scheduled to be held in Geneva on 10 and 11 June 1996 to discuss the UNAIDS 1996-1997 work plan, measures to minimize administrative costs, financial information and the reports of the two working groups, as well as the Executive Director's current report.

The Committee of Co-sponsoring Organizations, comprising the heads of the co-sponsoring organizations or their designated representatives, first met on 22 September 1995, and had since convened six more meetings, the most recent on 24 April 1996. At those meetings a memorandum of understanding was drafted and approved, the text of which was appended to the Executive Director's report.

Other legal and administrative arrangements concerned a letter of agreement between WHO and the Programme for the provision of administrative and financial services, and a working arrangement between UNDP and the Programme covering the provision of administrative support services by UNDP for the UNAIDS country-level activities, including the disbursements of funds for national HIV/AIDS activities.

As of mid-April 1996, 90 theme groups covering 107 countries had been established, compared with 35 at the end of 1995. The theme groups comprised, in any given country, representatives of the six co-sponsors, and other UN organizations active in HIV/AIDS activities. In addition, Governments were represented in most theme groups. Some 78 per cent of theme groups were chaired by WHO representatives and some 16 per cent by UNDP resident representatives. UNICEF and UNFPA held the Chair or the interim Chair in five countries, while none of the theme groups were currently chaired by either UNESCO or the World Bank. In approximately half of the theme groups, the office of Chairperson would be rotated.

Professional staff and country programme advisers were placed in specific countries after discussions with the theme groups. By mid-April 1996, advisers had been selected for 19 countries (7 in Africa and the Middle East and 10 in Asia and the Pacific, with 2 intercountry technical advisers in Europe). In countries where there would be no UNAIDS-funded advisers, the nomination of focal points would be encouraged. A series of country visits to over 50 countries, to take place over a six-month period, was started in the first quarter of 1996 with the aim of working with theme groups to clarify their action plans for supporting national efforts, administrative arrangements, staffing issues and the work of advisers and UNAIDS focal points. Such visits were conducted in collaboration with co-sponsors' staff and the representatives of bilateral agencies and national programmes. In addition, several subregional meetings with representatives of national programmes, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and UN partners were planned so as to develop methods of working in subregions in which a United Nations presence or strategic issues of common concern were limited.

UNDP/UNFPA action. At its second regular session of 1996 (New York, 25-29 March) [E/1996/33], the Executive Board of UNDP/UNFPA considered support for and collaboration with UNAIDS, and discussed 1995 reports [YUN 1995, p. 1252] of UNDP and UNFPA on the subject. The UNDP Assistant Administrator and Director of the Bureau for Policy and Programme Support stated that country-level activities were focused primarily on capacity-building, tailored to each country's needs. UNDP and UNAIDS were finalizing their working arrangements at the country level, in particular logistical and administrative support and financial services to be provided by UNDP. At the regional level, the first study of HIV/AIDS and development implications in the Pacific had been published in Fiji, under the title "Time to Act: the Pacific Response to HIV/AIDS".

For its part, UNFPA had supported HIV/AIDS prevention activities, including supply and distribution of condoms and HIV/AIDS training, and would continue to provide support in line with national AIDS prevention and control programmes and within the content of the theme group mechanisms being set up at the country level by UNAIDS. At the global level, UNFPA would not propose additional activities but rather looked to UNAIDS, in collaboration with the Reproductive Health Programme of WHO, to address the key policy, strategy, technical, research and development and training issues in regard to HIV/AIDS in the broader framework of reproductive health.

On 28 March [E/1996/33 (dec. 96/16)], the Executive Board requested UNDP to conclude arrangements with UNAIDS on financial, administrative and logistical support to work in the area of HIV/AIDS and to clarify the role and function of national programme officers appointed to support UNAIDS.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/47.

Report of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/ Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1994/24 of 26 July 1994, by which it endorsed the establishment of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human

Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome,

Taking note of the report of the Executive Director of the Programme,

Noting with satisfaction the progress achieved since 1 January 1996 in the implementation of the activities of the Programme,

Noting with concern that human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) has devastating social, economic and other related impacts on the population of the affected countries,

Noting also with concern the need for adequate resources to be made available by the six co-sponsoring organizations and the international community in the fight against HIV/AIDS,

Noting the need for more focused and in-depth consideration by the Council of the issue of HIV/AIDS and its impact,

1. Invites the Secretary-General to play an active advocacy role in regard to the serious threat posed by the spread of human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) in order to raise global awareness and thus help to prevent the further spread of HIV/AIDS;

2. Urges the Secretariat to be fully and effectively involved in the fight against HIV/AIDS;

3. Decides to review the operations and activities of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome by including in its agenda in alternate years, beginning in 1997, the item entitled "Report on the work of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on the Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome";

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Council, at its substantive session of 1997, a concise initial report of the Executive Director of the Programme, prepared in collaboration with all relevant specialized agencies, the Secretariat and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, and to submit thereafter to the Council, on a biennial basis, a comprehensive report on the progress made in the fight against HIV/AIDS and its impact on the countries affected, including the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Recommends that HIV/AIDS and its social, economic and related impacts on the overall development process be considered a possible future theme for the high-level segment of the Council;

6. Appeals to the six co-sponsoring organizations, the international community and the countries affected to increase substantially their contribution to the Programme and to the resources needed for the fight against HIV/AIDS.

Malaria

In September 1996, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a progress report [A/51/379] prepared by the WHO Director-General on preventive action and the struggle against malaria in developing countries, particularly in Africa, as requested in Assembly resolution 50/128 [YUN 1995, p. 1255].

According to the report, malaria continued to be a serious health problem especially in developing countries and a major obstacle to their social and economic development. Nearly 25 per cent of all childhood deaths in Africa were attributable to malaria. Major contributing factors to the increase in the incidence of malaria were land degradation and deforestation. Military conflicts, civil unrest and movements of populations into malarious areas were also factors. The global estimate of malaria mortality and morbidity was from 1.5 million to 2.7 million deaths and from 300 million to 500 million sick annually. The problem was greatest in sub-Saharan Africa, which accounted for an estimated 90 per cent of the total cases. Almost all those cases were in the Plasmodium-falciparum form, the parasite species associated with acute severity and mortality.

The situation had worsened owing to increasing drug resistance and the growing number of epidemics. Chloroquine-resistant Plasmodium-falciparum was intensifying and spreading in Africa, and rapid development of resistance to sulfadoxine/pyrimethamine had been documented in Malawi and the United Republic of Tanzania. The cost of treating malaria with anti-malarial drugs other than chloroquine, amodiaquine and sulfonamide-pyrimethamine was prohibitive for the majority of the population in Africa. New drugs were developed to treat malaria, and research continued in the use of pesticide-impregnated bednets and the development of a vaccine. Recently malaria had reappeared in areas where it had been practically eradicated, such as Azerbaijan and Tajikistan, and epidemics were reported in areas where the disease had been well under control, such as Iraq and Turkey. Those epidemics were the result of deterioration of malaria prevention and control operations owing to military conflicts followed by economic crisis.

Within the UN system, the Global Malaria Control Strategy had been formulated by WHO and endorsed by the Ministerial Conference on Malaria in 1992 (Amsterdam, Netherlands) [YUN 1992, p. 1120] and by the General Assembly in resolution 49/135 [YUN 1994, p. 1129]. The strategy emphasized the strengthening of local and national capabilities to analyse the malaria situation; to plan, implement and evaluate control interventions; and to contribute to health development in the context of primary health care. UN organizations were urged to ensure technical assistance to malaria endemic countries, and to help develop realistic and affordable plans of action. The WHO Action Plan for Malaria Control continued to serve as the basic document guiding international cooperation in malaria control for 1995-2000.

Preventive action at the national level included capacity-building, training and drug and vaccine development. The presence of a core group of health professionals in each malaria endemic country was considered a requirement for implementing national control programmes, and WHO had developed training materials and held international training courses for thousands of such professionals. WHO collaborated with UNDP and the World Bank in strengthening malaria programmes in a number of African countries. It helped prepare project proposals for submission to donors and provided technical and financial support. The funded activities included training of health workers at district level, production and distribution of health education materials, surveys to monitor efficacy of anti-malarial drugs and promotion of bednets impregnated with insecticide. A meeting on insecticide-impregnated materials was held at the WHO Regional Office for Africa in March. Results of studies on the use of bednets were reviewed and draft guidelines prepared on policy, technical, managerial and operational issues. Initial focus in implementation would be in six countries which had already incorporated that method in their malaria control plans. WHO, in cooperation with other organizations, provided technical and emergency assistance to countries/population groups facing epidemic/emergency situations. In 1996, WHO published guidelines concerning malaria control among refugees and displaced populations for use by organizations.

As to global policy developments, within the UN system of organizations, the Administrative Committee on Coordination launched in March 1996 the System-wide Special Initiative on Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III) which, among other goals, aimed to strengthen the capacity of health systems and communities to reduce major causes of morbidity and mortality, including malaria, and to intensify coordination of activities between UN organizations for malaria control. Cooperation intensified between WHO and UNICEF in malaria control. In addition, the Director-General established a task force to review the WHO Malaria Prevention and Control Programme and to recommend how the Programme could be strengthened.

The report stated that, while the Action Plan for Malaria Control was being implemented and coordination in the area had improved, malaria control remained vastly underfunded despite a political commitment to malaria control and development of national capacities aimed at reducing the disease. The objective of reducing malaria mortality by the year 2000 by 20 per cent compared with 1995, in at least 75 per cent of affected countries, would be seriously jeopardized without funding. The report concluded that at the intergovernmental level, especially regionally and globally, the commitment to a coordinated approach for combating malaria needed to be strengthened. It suggested that the General Assembly could help in that process by confirming the priority of malaria control.

Disabled persons

Standard Rules on Equalization of Opportunities

In December 1996, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the final report [A/52/56] by Special Rapporteur Bengt Lindqvist (Sweden), who was appointed in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1130] to monitor implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, which were adopted in 1993 [GA res. 48/96]. The Special Rapporteur had first reported in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1257]. The Secretary-General noted that the mandate of the Special Rapporteur would expire in 1997, and the Commission for Social Development, which monitored the Rules, would examine the possibility of either renewing the mandate, appointing a new Special Rapporteur or considering another monitoring mechanism, and make recommendations to the Economic and Social Council thereon. A key element in the monitoring exercise was a panel of experts, established by six major international NGOs in the disability field. The panel held its second meeting in June 1996, the first having been held in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1257], and discussed the outcome of a survey carried out by questionnaires (see below).

The final report emphasized recent activities, noting how widespread the Rules had become, and described UN actions to promote them. It highlighted the findings of a 1995-1996 survey carried out principally by questionnaires to which 83 Governments and 163 NGOs responded, providing information on 126 countries. The questionnaire covered general policy and legislation; accessibility to the physical environment and public information; organizations of persons with disabilities; coordination of work; education; and employment.

The Special Rapporteur described the Rules as very progressive and, in his view, no country had fully implemented them. Nonetheless, the Rules had been widely accepted and were being used as the main policy guidelines in disability by both Governments and NGOs. Governments used the Rules as a source for new legislation, guidelines for national plans of action and a basis for evaluating policies and programmes. The survey showed that a majority of Governments (85 per cent of those providing information) indicated that the Rules had led to a rethinking of policies. Among NGOs, the Rules were being used for advocacy, for new initiatives and in training programmes. The results indicated that measures to make the Rules known needed to be strengthened at both the national and international levels. At the international level, the role of the UN Secretariat as focal point in support of the Rules' implementation should be enhanced, the report stated, and cooperation between the Secretariat and the specialized agencies in efforts to guide Member States in policy development should be better coordinated.

The most telling confirmation of success in disability policy would be the achievement of employment rates similar to those for the general population, but that did not occur in any country. The employment situation indicated that current policies failed to create equal job opportunities.

The Rules were a useful tool in efforts to achieve full participation and equality for disabled persons. While not legally binding, they suggested principles while allowing for measures to adjust to varying conditions in countries. However, there were also shortcomings—Governments had no obligation to provide information to the United Nations for monitoring, and consequently little was known about several countries. Other areas that needed to be addressed were human rights of persons with disabilities (see PART TWO, Chapter II), the child and gender perspective, and housing and shelter.

UN Voluntary Fund on Disability

During 1996, the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability appraised some 50 project proposals. It approved co-financing grants to 10 projects in the amount of $207,600. Total expenditure on projects, from all sources, amounted to $1,978,590. Two grants involved support from the Arab Gulf Programme for UN Development Organizations. Nine of the grants were implemented by NGOs in cooperation with the Government concerned.

Interagency coordination in health policy

In 1996, UNDP and UNFPA considered whether their joint Executive Board should become a member of the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy (JCHP). UNFPA prepared a background note [DP/FPA/1996/5] on possible membership, reviewing the operation of JCHP and examining the issues it had addressed and actions taken. Having identified some advantages of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board becoming a member, it was recommended that the Board initiate actions towards that end. In the report, the UNFPA Executive Director advocated for a high-level, intergovernmental advisory mechanism that could address health policy issues common to all three organizations and recommend collaborative action. Such a mechanism would ensure agreement and a common understanding and commitment to an overall health policy framework, which in turn would ensure that policy strategies were complementary, in harmony and had a synergistic effect, especially at the country level. Common policy advice would help Governments to build sustainable health systems.

The governing bodies of UNICEF, WHO and UNFPA had stressed the importance of close collaboration and recognized that WHO provided leadership in, and set overall health policy on, all matters relating to health in the UN system and that WHO had a primary responsibility to support countries in implementing their national health programmes. In the areas of child health and of reproductive health, the objectives of WHO, UNICEF and UNFPA converged in relation to goals for women and children. UNICEF and UNFPA supported many similar activities in the health area, most notably at the country level, and both drew upon the technical and policy guidance provided by WHO. Collaboration at the headquarters level had taken place through a joint WHO/UNICEF/UNFPA working group, which had had only limited success in addressing pertinent issues in health policy and in sharpening the focus of collaborative activities.

JCHP could recommend mutual actions and policy to the respective Executive Boards but did not have decision-making power. Its principal areas of interest focused on strengthening child health activities. Examples of past activities included setting measurable and achievable goals in health care for children and proposing childhood immunization policy.

A tripartite intergovernmental committee on health policy would provide the only venue where all three Executive Boards could discuss common health policy issues. It would sharpen the focus of collaborative activities in the areas of child and reproductive health and enhance inter-agency collaboration in achieving the health and related social goals of recent international conferences and summits, including the 1990 World Summit for Children [A/45/625] and the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 955]. Another advantage would be an improvement in efficiency and effectiveness in the use of programme resources by using existing field structures and technical expertise to plan, deliver and monitor child and reproductive health services. No significant costs would be involved.

At its first regular 1996 session, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered membership in JCHP and, by a decision of 28 March [E/1996/33 (dec. 96/17)], reaffirmed the need for close collaboration among UNICEF, WHO and UNFPA on matters of mutual interest, including issues relating to ICPD follow-up. It encouraged the UNFPA Executive Director to explore ways to further strengthen inter-agency coordination in the area of health policy and programming, in particular with UNICEF and WHO, in order to develop coordinated health policies and programmes, including reproductive health.

In September, the UNFPA Executive Director, reporting orally to the Executive Board on inter-agency coordination in health policy, cited examples of strengthened cooperation at the operational level and proposed that, in order to strengthen coordination at the policy and strategy level, the Executive Board should join JCHP. She noted that at its special session in May 1996, JCHP had taken up topics such as maternal health and mortality, adolescent health, reproductive health and HIV/AIDS, which were of direct relevance to UNFPA.

The Executive Board, by a decision of 13 September [E/1996/33 (dec. 96/17)], reaffirmed the need for close collaboration among UNICEF, WHO and UNFPA in health policy and programming, including reproductive health, and invited JCHP to ensure that UNFPA could participate in its meetings. The President of the Board was requested to ascertain the views of the Executive Boards of WHO and UNICEF on possible membership, and to take action to enable the UNFPA secretariat to participate as an observer in JCHP in January 1997. The UNFPA Executive Director was requested to report in 1997 on JCHP observations and to make recommendations on action needed for the Executive Board of UNDP/UNFPA to obtain full membership.

Food and agriculture

Food aid

World Food Programme

On 1 January 1996, the Executive Board of the World Food Programme (WFP) became the decision-making body of the organization, having been reconstituted from the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA), the body that had been responsible for intergovernmental supervision and direction of WFP, including matters of policy, administration, operations and financing. That action was made in accordance with parallel 1995 resolutions adopted by the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) [YUN 1995, p. 1260] and the General Assembly [GA res. 50/8]. Another organizational change involving FAO and WFP was finalized in 1996. By resolution 50/227 of 24 May, the Assembly decided that the functions of the World Food Council would be absorbed by FAO and WFP, and consequently the Council was discontinued. In June 1996 [E/1996/73], the WFP Executive Board issued its annual report to the Economic and Social Council and the FAO Council on activities of CFA in 1995. By decision 1996/228 of 10 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report.

In 1996 [E/1997/34], the newly established 36-member Executive Board, elected by the Economic and Social Council and the FAO Council, held four sessions, all at WFP headquarters in Rome, as follows: the first regular session on 22 and 23 January, the second from 22 to 24 May and on 29 May, the annual session from 27 to 30 May and the third regular session from 21 to 24 October. The Board reviewed country strategy outlines (CSOs), country programmes (CPs) and projects. During the year, eight new CSOs were submitted to the Board for review and advice, bringing the number of CSOs considered by WFP's governing body to 22. The first four CPs (Bangladesh, Bolivia, India, Pakistan) were submitted to and approved by the Board; another 21 were planned or under preparation. The Board approved seven development projects and seven protracted relief operations, to assist 6.6 million people. A total of 726,500 tons of food was committed, at a cost of $366 million. In addition, the Board was informed of six development projects, six emergency operations and seven protracted relief operations approved by the WFP Executive Director. Ten emergency operations were jointly approved by the Executive Director and the Director-General of FAO. A total of 988,500 tons of food, at a cost of $542.3 million, assisting 12 million people, was committed for the 29 projects and operations.

Concerning policy issues, the Executive Board emphasized the importance of: ensuring that adequate resources were available, particularly for development activities but also for relief operations; continuing to focus on the poorest people in the neediest countries, particularly in countries emerging from disasters; developing further WFP partnerships with other UN agencies, bilateral donors, NGOs and local institutions; preserving the multilateral nature of WFP; giving greater importance to health and nutrition issues in WFP's development activities; and continuing its efforts in disaster prevention and preparedness.

Other matters considered by the Board included its methods of work and rules of procedure; the revision of WFP's General and Financial Regulations; WFP follow-up on the implementation of relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions; resource and financial matters; and WFP reform and revitalization measures.

WFP activities

During the year, WFP provided food to a total of 45.3 million people worldwide. With the support of its donors, the organization delivered 2.2 million tons of food aid to 84 countries at a cost of $ 1.2 billion. Seventy-three per cent of the funds went to relief operations, with more than two thirds of the aid going to the Great Lakes region of Africa, Afghanistan, Angola, Iraq, Liberia, Sierra Leone and the nations of the former Yugoslavia.

Relief and rehabilitation activities

In 1996, WFP supported 57 relief operations worldwide, providing relief assistance to 24.6 million people, about the same number of beneficiaries as in 1995. Of the total, 14.8 million were reached through emergency operations and 9.8 million through protracted relief operations. Eighty-four per cent of the recipients were victims of man-made disasters; the balance were affected by natural disasters such as droughts, floods and crop failure. Of the total of 2.2 million tons of food aid delivered by WFP in 1996, 1.5 million tons went to relief activities.

Africa. Africa received the largest proportion of WFP relief aid, as WFP increasingly concentrated resources on the poorest people in the neediest countries. More than half of its assistance went to sub-Saharan Africa, much of it in the form of emergency food aid. The Great Lakes region received 18 per cent of all WFP relief food distributed in 1996, Liberia 9 per cent and Angola 7 per cent. Faced with the increasingly dramatic situation of refugees in the Great Lakes region (see PART ONE, Chapter II, and PART THREE, Chapters III and XII), WFP provided some 300,000 tons of food assistance to more than 2 million refugees in Burundi, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and eastern Zaire during the year, often under complex and dangerous conditions. In the second half of 1996, a major humanitarian crisis arose with the outbreak of conflict in eastern Zaire and the dispersal of hundreds of thousands of people from refugee camps. WFP assisted in efforts to assess the dispersed populations and distributed food rations in the towns of Goma and Bukavu in Zaire. When more than 1 million refugees from Burundi, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire returned to Rwanda, WFP provided high-energy biscuits to people on both sides of the borders and at strategic way stations within Rwanda. Once refugees reached their home villages, WFP provided them with two-month food packages. By November, the focus of the relief effort in Rwanda had shifted, and 65 per cent of the WFP programme there was devoted to rehabilitation and reconstruction.

In Monrovia, Liberia, fighting that had erupted in April halted demobilization and resettlement activities in the country and created new emergency needs. WFP had a leading role in humanitarian relief operations, providing emergency assistance to more than 1 million internally displaced persons and 400,000 refugees. Working with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, NGOs and donors, WFP developed a strategy focused on saving lives and sustaining assistance to vulnerable groups. At the same time, it cut stores of food to the barest minimum to lessen the danger of expropriation and theft by armed gangs. Once stability returned to Liberia in November, WFP resumed efforts to help faction members, including child soldiers, readjust to civilian life.

In Angola, the emphasis was on long-term rehabilitation and resettlement. Programmes aimed at mine clearance, reconstruction and rehabilitation, raising agricultural output, improving nutrition and health and increasing food security. Beneficiaries were mostly returnees, displaced people and demobilized soldiers and their families, who received family rations for three months as they resettled.

Similar efforts were made in Mozambique where small farmers were able to produce again, but the economy was still suffering from the destruction of rural infrastructure as a result of many years of civil strife.

Asia and the Pacific. WFP provided emergency relief assistance to Asian and Pacific countries in 1996, especially to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), where a second year of flooding left agricultural land unproductive and damaged river embankments, irrigation systems, roads and bridges. WFP delivered some 18,200 tons of rice during the first half of 1996. In May, WFP and FAO issued a special alert, reporting that the food supply situation had deteriorated even more seriously than expected. WFP increased its assistance during the second half of the year, providing 41,600 tons of food aid to 1.6 million flood victims, children under 5 years of age, participants in food-for-work projects in flood-damaged areas, and farmers and their families. Having established an office in Pyongyang in November 1995, WFP was able to monitor food aid deliveries and provide information on the food security situation. Despite relief efforts, an FAO/WFP assessment made in December 1996 of the crop and food supply situation found that the DPRK faced an overall food deficit of 2.3 million tons and that food could run out in June 1997.

Mediterranean, Middle East and CIS region.

Twenty-eight per cent of WFP's operational expenses were directed to the region of the Mediterranean, the Middle East and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS). The nations of the former Yugoslavia received 16 per cent of WFP's relief food in 1996, second only to the Great Lakes region. In 1996, WFP provided emergency rations to 2.6 million refugees, returnees, displaced persons and other vulnerable groups, most of them in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

With reports that health and nutrition had deteriorated throughout Iraq in 1996, WFP increased its emergency assistance to that country to cover 2.15 million people in vulnerable groups. Under a Memorandum of Understanding signed by the Government of Iraq and the United Nations in May 1996 (see PART ONE, Chapter IV), general procedures were laid out for implementing Security Council resolution 986 (1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475], which allowed for the sale of up to $2 billion of Iraqi oil for a six-month period in exchange for its purchase of humanitarian items, including food, during a period when sanctions were imposed against the country. The oil-for-food arrangement was approved by the Secretary-General in July 1996, and WFP was given the responsibility of putting in place an observation system to assure the equity, efficiency and adequacy of food distribution to the Iraqi people on a countrywide basis. It also received food at selected hand-over points to transport and distribute to the populations in the three northern governorates.

In Afghanistan, WFP carried out rehabilitation activities for 1.2 million returnees and internally displaced persons, many of them war widows and orphans, in most of the country's war-affected communities. Under one programme, WFP supplied wheat flour to bakeries in urban areas, which then provided subsidized bread to some 350,000 people from the most vulnerable groups during the winter when bread was the mainstay of the diet. The proceeds were reinvested in the communities, mainly in programmes to teach trades to the handicapped, war widows and single heads of households. The fall of Kabul in September to the Taliban forces (see PART ONE, Chapter IV) and the restrictions they placed on women's activities outside their homes impaired WFP's rehabilitation work, most of which involved women and children. WFP's revised strategy in Afghanistan concentrated on humanitarian relief and life-sustaining rehabilitation activities in areas where both national and international WFP and NGO female staff were allowed to work and to monitor activities.

Development activities

By year's end, WFP had operational activities in 84 countries. The development portfolio comprised 174 projects, valued at $ 1.9 billion and representing a total commitment of 5.5 million tons of food. WFP development assistance reached 20.7 million people—58 per cent through infrastructure, agricultural or rural development projects and 42 per cent through human resource development projects. Some 40 per cent of the beneficiaries were in sub-Saharan Africa (18.4 million), 31 per cent in Asia and the Pacific (14.3 million), 17 per cent in the Mediterranean, Middle East and CIS region (8.4 million), and 8 per cent in Latin America and the Caribbean (4 million).

Development projects in Asia and the Pacific, aimed at helping poor rural people to improve their food security, included self-help training and credit schemes for poor women in Bangladesh; helping rural communities in China, India and Nepal to implement local infrastructure and income-generating schemes; and nutrition and health programmes for targeted vulnerable groups in India and Viet Nam. In Viet Nam, food-for-work projects included rehabilitation of sea dikes that protected farm land from the effects of cyclones and permitted planting of high-yielding rice. Most of WFP assistance to Cambodia was for development of rural infrastructure, including such projects as mine clearing and repairing or building roads, irrigation canals, small dams, dikes and wells.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, WFP provided dietary assistance through interventions in primary health care and pre-school and primary education. Assistance for resettlement of war-affected people was provided in Nicaragua and Guatemala. In Haiti, food assistance was provided for young children in areas where there was evidence of malnutrition. In Peru, a watershed management project in the Andean highlands benefited more than 56,000 families.

Resources and financing

For the 1995-1996 biennium, pledges for WFP activities were received from 57 countries totalling $829 million, which represented only 55 per cent of the approved target of $1.5 billion. The 1995-1996 figure confirmed the downward trend for development assistance experienced by WFP. For the 1997-1998 biennium, the target set was $1.3 billion, a reduction made to adjust the pledging target to the prevailing situation in which some major donors were experiencing economic constraints and budgetary cutbacks, resulting in lower levels of assistance for development.

By a January note [E/1995/131/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council a report of the CFA Formal Working Group on resource options and long-term financing of WFP. The Working Group was set up in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1133] to analyse the causes of the financial situation, identify constraints to resource mobilization, make proposals regarding a long-term solution to the resourcing situation, and make recommendations regarding bilateral services. The Working Group noted that the secretariat had undertaken various initiatives designed to overcome constraints to full cost recovery, such as improved strategic and financial planning processes; increased staff capacity in key areas (follow-up of audit recommendations, oversight, cash management); improved information (cost study, resource tracking system); and improved procedures (responsibility in budgeting, delegation of authority, performance management systems). In addition, WFP had initiated the Financial Management Improvement Programme, a multi-year project which would redesign key processes within WFP and enhance information systems to support those processes. The Group recommended a resource model aimed at overcoming external constraints, providing more predictable, flexible resources and ensuring full cost recovery, while preserving the multilateral nature of WFP over the long term.

The proposed resource model consisted of three dimensions: funding windows, programme categories and costs. The funding windows were multilateral, directed multilateral and bilateral. The programme categories were development/rehabilitation/disaster preparedness (development), protracted relief operations, emergencies and special operations. The costs arising from each programme category would be calculated separately. In the case of a sudden emergency, WFP would "lend" development resources to the emergency, provided that pledges had been confirmed to reimburse the development activities.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/213 of 9 February, took note of the Secretary-General's note on options for resource policies and long-term financing of WFP.

Food security

World Food Summit

The World Food Summit, convened by FAO (Rome, 13-17 November) [WFS 96/REP], adopted the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and a Plan of Action, which aimed at laying the foundation for diverse paths to a common objective—food security at the individual, household, national, regional and global levels. Of the 186 participating countries, 41 were represented at the level of head of State.

In the Declaration, the participating countries reaffirmed the right of everyone to have access to safe and nutritious food, consistent with the right to adequate food and the fundamental right of everyone to be free from hunger. They pledged their commitment to eradicating hunger, with an immediate view to reducing the number of undernourished people to half the current level no later than 2015. Affirming that a peaceful and stable political, social and economic environment was essential to enable States to give priority to food security and poverty eradication, they stated that democracy, promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, and the full and equal participation of men and women were essential for achieving sustainable food security for all.

The participants outlined seven commitments in the Declaration, and elaborated on specific objectives and actions to achieve those commitments in the Plan of Action. Those commitments were: to ensure an enabling political, social and economic environment designed to create conditions for the eradication of poverty; to implement policies aimed at eradicating poverty and inequality and improving access by all to nutritionally adequate food; to pursue participatory and sustainable food, agriculture, fisheries, forestry and rural development policies, which were viewed as essential to reliable food supplies; to ensure that food and trade policies were conducive to fostering food security through a fair and market-oriented world trade system; to endeavour to prevent and be prepared for natural disasters as well as man-made emergencies and to meet transitory requirements in ways that encouraged recovery and rehabilitation; to promote optimal allocation and use of investments to foster human resources, sustainable food, agriculture, fisheries and forestry systems, and rural development, in high- and low-potential areas; and to implement, monitor and follow-up the Plan of Action in cooperation with the international community.

In the Plan of Action, the participants recognized that Governments were responsible for creating an enabling environment for the attainment of sustainable food security. Poverty, hunger and malnutrition were some of the causes of migration from rural to urban areas in developing countries, and those problems needed to be addressed. Availability of enough food for all could be attained, the Plan of Action stated. It noted that harmful seasonal and inter-annual instability of food supplies could be reduced by minimizing vulnerability to, and the impact of, climate fluctuations and pests and diseases. To effect the timely transfer of supplies to deficit areas, use should be made of climate early-warning systems, transfer and utilization of appropriate agricultural (including livestock), fishery and forestry technologies, production and reliable trade, storage and financial mechanisms.

The follow-up to the World Food Summit included action at the national, intergovernmental and inter-agency levels. The FAO Committee on World Food Security would be responsible for monitoring the implementation of the Plan of Action.

Food and agricultural production

In response to General Assembly resolution 49/103 [YUN 1994, p. 1135], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/51/431] on the use of freshwater resources for food and agricultural production, as well as the implications of the results of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, concluded in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1474], for food production, including agro-industrial products, and for global food security in developing countries.

Worldwide, almost 70 per cent of water consumption was used in agriculture. However, the share of agriculture was constantly declining due to rising demands from other sectors. Per capita water utilization varied widely between continents, from 1,692 cubic metres in North America to 244 cubic metres in Africa per year. In many irrigation systems, water was lost at every stage between the source and the crop, with losses in irrigation projects estimated at between 5 and 50 per cent. When annual internal renewable water resources were less than 1,000 cubic metres per capita, water availability was considered a severe constraint on socio-economic development and environmental protection. More than 230 million people living in 26 countries—11 in Africa and 9 in the Near East—fell into that category. By the end of the 1990s, water availability was expected to fall below 2,000 cubic metres per capita in more than 40 countries. Africa and Asia were showing signs of a decline in freshwater availability, and water quality was also deteriorating. In contrast, South America was well supplied. The development of irrigated agriculture had provided most of the increase in production necessary to meet population demands during the previous four decades, and estimates suggested that the potential for irrigation expansion was considerable. Sustained production on both irrigated and rain-fed lands required optimal use of the physical environment in each soil-crop-climate ecosystem. In rain-fed areas, water conservation measures, such as fallow management, control of run-off and water harvesting, were of primary importance. Complementary practices included the selective development of high-yielding, drought-tolerant crop varieties; the efficient use of herbicides and fertilizers; crop rotation; and the use of optimal planting dates to maximize the probability of rainfall during critical periods of crop growth.

A growing need for measures to address urgent water problems that were often related to agricultural water uses, such as water scarcity and environmental degradation, had increased the demands for clear water policies and adequate institutional frameworks at the national level. FAO, together with UNDP and the World Bank and in collaboration with Governments, developed a methodology and published frameworks on approaches, processes and practices for water sector policy review at the national level. The purpose of the guides was to stimulate countries to undertake national water sector reviews; to elucidate water management measures available; and to promote national policy and legislative reform, planning and institutional development in the water sector. FAO established a programme on water-use efficiency, which focused on improving farm water management, improving irrigation scheme management, and assessing and disseminating intermediate water development techniques.

The report highlighted the problems arising from inappropriate soil and water management. Soil erosion, nutrient depletion, salinization and waterlogging all reduced productivity and jeopardized long-term sustainability. Understanding of the causes of those problems had increased and corrective measures were possible.

The Secretary-General concluded that population growth, migration and urbanization would continue to impact all aspects of development, including the demand for food. Water policies needed to be continually reviewed. The major challenge, however, was building capacity at all levels to achieve the efficient, highly productive management of water needed to secure sustainable, sufficient and low-priced food for the projected population.

which Governments agreed to fundamental reform and liberalization of world trade in agricultural products, the Secretary-General discussed its probable effects on global production of food and agricultural products, global food security, and the income and food import costs of developing countries. Studies attempting to quantify the impact of the Uruguay Round had yielded varying and not always compatible estimates, but quantitative studies suggested certain outcomes. It was expected that effects would include higher prices for affected agricultural products and shifts in production from subsidized production to competitive production, from which developing countries could benefit. The volume of trade would not rise significantly, and the net trade gains in the agricultural sector of some of the economically weaker developing countries were likely to be very small or even negative.

Trade liberalization was not likely to affect significantly the global availability of food because reduced output in high-cost countries would be generally replaced by increased output in other countries. The effect of trade liberalization on the stability of world food prices was uncertain. Provided domestic policies were in place to spread around the gains and/or to compensate the losers, trade liberalization could contribute to improving food security even though there might be problems of adjustment to the new trade regime. The difficulties that countries could face during the reform process had been recognized by the Uruguay Round and developing countries had been given special and differential treatment, mainly in the form of granting them longer periods to make adjustments and lower reduction commitments. The Secretary-General concluded that the Uruguay Round had many implications for national and international agricultural policy, which needed to be studied further to identify appropriate policy responses at both levels.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, by decision 51/443 of 16 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report. Also on 16 December, it adopted resolution 51/171.

Nutrition

ACC activities

The Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Subcommittee on Nutrition held its twenty-third session from 24 February to 1 March [ACC/1996/5], hosted by FAO at its regional office in Accra, Ghana. As part of the session, a symposium on the theme "Effective programmes in Africa for improving nutrition, including household food security, following the International Conference on Nutrition" [YUN 1992, p. 830] was held. Seven cross-cutting themes emerged from the presentation and discussion at the symposium which covered activities in different parts of Africa: community involvement and participation; capacity-building; the necessity of long-term investment; expanding small successes; the necessity of intersectoral and inter-agency collaboration and action; networking and regional cooperation; and advocacy and raising awareness on nutrition issues at all levels.

The Subcommittee, which served as a point of convergence and harmonization for nutrition policies and activities of the UN system, discussed preliminary results of analyses for the third Report on the World Nutrition Situation. The Technical Secretary stated that the two regions of greatest concern in regard to the prevalence and number of underweight children were sub-Saharan Africa, where there had been no improvement on average in the 1980s and an actual increase in prevalence between 1990 and 1995, and South Asia, which had the highest prevalence with little or no improvement seen from 1990 to 1995. Those trends had been corroborated by FAO reports.

The Subcommittee heard reports of its working groups, which presented results of their work on: the nutrition of refugees and displaced persons; household food security; nutrition education and behavioural change; nutrition and the school-age child; breastfeeding and complementary feeding; iodine deficiency disorders; iron, the most widespread nutritional deficiency; the control of vitamin-A deficiency; networks for research and training to improve nutrition programmes; and nutrition as a risk factor in the global burden of disease.

The Subcommittee proposed that its twenty-fourth session be held from 17 to 21 March 1997 in Asia, hosted by the UNICEF Regional Office for South Asia in Kathmandu, Nepal. In March [ACC/1996/7], the ACC Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions approved the agenda, date and venue of the Subcommittee's 1997 session.

UNU activities

In 1996, the United Nations University (UNU), an autonomous academic institution within the UN system, continued its food and nutrition programme aimed at solving human nutrition problems, as reported by the UNU Council on its 1996 activities [E/1997/7]. The International Network of Food Data Systems (INFOODS) project, developed by UNU and FAO, came close to achieving its goal of involving every country in the world in its network of regional food composition databases. The project developed standards and guidelines for generating, reporting and complying with food composition data. It would provide countries with access to information on food's nutritional content.

Researchers working on the "Overcoming Critical Micro-nutrient Deficiencies" project determined that a weekly dose of iron supplement was adequate to prevent iron-deficiency anaemia, whereas earlier a daily supplement had been recommended. UNU, UNICEF and WHO worked together to solve iron-deficiency and Vitamin-A problems through sustained preventive measures that included dietary changes and food fortification. Researchers worked on the "International Dietary Energy Consulting Group" project to determine how much lysine (an important amino acid) adults required daily; preliminary results suggested that the daily requirement was double the amount recommended in a 1985 FAO/WHO/UNU amino acid project. The research was particularly important for assessing the predominately cereal-based diets found in many developing countries.

Another project, aimed at preventing the problem of energy and protein malnutrition, resulted in the publication of a report on under-nutrition and behavioural development in children, as well as a workshop in Louisiana, United States, on causes and consequences of intra-uterine growth retardation. UNU and the International Union of Nutritional Sciences organized a workshop on capacity-building for research and training in food and nutrition in developing countries in Manila, Philippines, at which participants reached a consensus on two issues: that future assistance should be directed at university food and nutrition departments; and that priority must go to African institutions.

Chapter XIV

International drug control

During 1996, the General Assembly renewed its commitment to further strengthening international cooperation and substantially increasing efforts against the cultivation for illegal purposes, illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances, including synthetic drugs, and to controlling and preventing the diversion of precursors and essential chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic and psychotropic substances.

The Assembly also decided that it would hold a special session on drug control in 1998. The Economic and Social Council's high-level segment in 1996 was devoted to international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances and related activities.

A well-founded framework for government action and international cooperation to combat drug abuse continued to be provided by drug control treaties and the 1990 Global Programme of Action against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. The United Nations International Drug Control Programme, established in 1991, continued to pursue subregional, regional and interregional cooperation between Governments to generate and strengthen the transnational political commitment essential to effective action to counter the drug problem. It supported comprehensive programmes dealing with different aspects of the global drug scourge, as well as advisory services through its technical cooperation programmes.

The International Narcotics Control Board continued to oversee the implementation of the three major international drug-control conventions and analysed the drug abuse situation worldwide, drawing attention to gaps and weaknesses in national control and treaty compliance, and assisting Governments in implementing treaty obligations.

The UN Commission on Narcotic Drugs—the Organization's main policy-making body on drug control matters—addressed a number of issues, primarily the reduction of both the demand and the supply of illicit drugs, and issues of illicit trafficking.

International and regional cooperation

Conventions

Central to the international control system of narcotic drugs are three global conventions: the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, [YUN 1961, p. 382] which, with some exceptions of detail, replaced earlier narcotics treaties and was amended in 1972 by a Protocol [YUN 1972, p. 397] intended to strengthen the role of the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB); the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1971, p. 380]; and the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1988, p. 690], which entered into force in 1990.

As at 31 December 1996, 142 States were parties to the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, as amended by the 1972 Protocol. During the year, eight States—Bulgaria, Estonia, Gambia, the Russian Federation, Sao Tome and Principe, Switzerland, Turkmenistan and Yemen—became parties.

The Convention, as amended by the Protocol, established a dual drug-control obligation for Governments: to ensure adequate availability for narcotic drugs, including opiates, for medical and scientific purposes, while at the same time preventing the illicit production of, trafficking in and the use of such drugs. To implement those responsibilities, Governments enact laws and take administrative and enforcement measures. Each Government estimates annually the amount of narcotic drugs needed to satisfy all medical and scientific requirements in the country for the coming year. INCB evaluates, confirms and publishes the amount of narcotic drugs for each Government. Each Government may then manufacture or import narcotic drugs within that amount and distribute them to medical facilities for the treatment of patients. In case of unforeseen increases in medical demand, Governments may submit supplementary estimates to the Board at any time; requests for supplementary estimates are acted on expeditiously.

Under the Convention, INCB is responsible for ensuring that the supply of narcotic drugs for licit purposes is limited to the amount required for medical and scientific needs. To prevent and detect diversion of drugs from licit to illicit channels, the Board monitors the cultivation, manufacture, import, export and consumption of such drugs throughout the world. If the treaty requirements for drug control are implemented consistently, the potential for diverting narcotic drugs to illicit channels is reduced to a minimum without interfering with their availability for treatment of patients who need them. Given the large number of national and international transactions, the number of incidents involving diversion of narcotic drugs is considered to be small.

The number of parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances stood at 147 as at 31 December 1996. Seven States became parties during the year: Estonia, the Gambia, Indonesia, Sao Tome and Principe, Switzerland, Turkmenistan and Yemen.

As at 31 December 1996, 138 States and the European Union (EU) were parties to the 1988 Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances. Seventeen States—Belize, Botswana, Cuba, the Gambia, Hungary, Ireland, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malta, the Philippines, Sao Tome and Principe, Tajikistan, Tonga, Turkey, Turkmenistan, the United Republic of Tanzania and Yemen—became parties during 1996.

In April, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs urged [E/1996/27 (res. 3 (XXXIX))] all States to accede to the international drug-control treaties before the end of the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse (1991-2000), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1990. In its 1996 report, INCB noted with appreciation that the Secretary-General had sent letters to heads of States that had not ratified or acceded to the international drug-control conventions, encouraging them to do so. With regard to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances, the Board noted that Austria was the only highly industrialized State that had not become a party to the Convention. It took note of the April 1996 decision by the Government of Austria to accede to the Convention and urged the country to implement that decision and introduce an effective control system for all psychotropic substances. The Board welcomed the rapid growth of parties to the 1988 Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and noted that all the States in the Americas were parties to the Convention.

To encourage adherence and implementation of the international drug-control treaties, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) continued to provide States with legal assistance.

As requested by the General Assembly in 1994, the Secretary-General, in September, presented a report [A/51/437] on implementation of the 1988 Convention. The report reviewed activities undertaken by UNDCP and recommendations by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs for the implementation of the Convention, as well as activities undertaken by the United Nations Department of Public Information to disseminate information about the Convention.

In a March note [E/CN.7/1996/17], the Secretariat on Maritime Cooperation presented a report on the implementation of the international drug-control treaties and UNDP action to assist States. It also summarized the discussions and recommendations of an expert group convened by UNDCP in February to consider and advise on training and other forms of technical cooperation needed to strengthen the capability of Governments to combat illicit drug trafficking by sea.

International Narcotics Control Board

The International Narcotic Control Board met twice in 1996, for its sixtieth (13-24 May) and sixty-first (31 October-15 November) sessions. Its activities, observations and recommendations were reflected in its report for 1996 [E/INCB/1996/1].

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/247 of 23 July, took note of the summary [E/1996/38] of the report of the Board for 1995.

In carrying out its responsibilities under the international conventions, the 13-member Board maintains a continuous dialogue with Governments. The information provided by Governments enables the Board to study the licit movement of narcotic drugs, thereby ensuring that the provisions of the drug conventions are strictly observed. That information, published annually by the Board, is used by Governments to verify whether or not they have adequately applied the conventions' provisions. In its annual report, the Board draws attention to gaps and weaknesses in national control and treaty compliance, and makes suggestions and recommendations for improvements at both national and international levels.

The Board also cooperates with UNDCP, of which its secretariat forms a part, and with international bodies concerned with drug control, including the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and UN specialized agencies, particularly the World Health Organization (WHO), and other international bodies such as the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol) and the World Customs Organization (WCO).

On 6 November, UNDCP and WCO signed a memorandum of understanding establishing the basic principles of cooperation between the two organizations, aimed at enhancing the support provided to Governments in combating drug trafficking.

In 1996, the Board called on all Governments, when determining their national drug-control policies, to recognize the important contribution of criminal justice systems in preventing and controlling the illicit supply and consumption of drugs. The Board noted a significant increase in the amount of opiates, amphetamines, other psychotropic substances and cocaine seized in recent years, reflecting the increased efforts and resources devoted by many States to fighting the growing problem of illicit drug trafficking and drug abuse. Since 1980, global seizures of opiates had increased more than fivefold and seizures of cocaine had increased over tenfold.

Despite increased law enforcement efforts, illicit drug production, trafficking and abuse had expanded into regions not previously affected. A more strategic approach to tackling drug trafficking was needed to reduce supply more efficiently and to free the stretched resources of national criminal justice systems. The aim should be not only to arrest and try individuals suspected of having committed drug-related crimes, but also to disrupt the operations of entire drug trafficking gangs and eventually put them out of business. The report further addressed enhancing international cooperation against drug trafficking; strengthening national legislation; effective use of criminal justice systems; treatment of drug offenders; and professional training. It called on all Governments to address the problems faced by their criminal justice systems and to develop strategies and practical measures to make their systems more efficient. The impact that the criminal justice system could have on combating illicit trafficking and drug abuse justified Governments and the rest of the international community giving their full attention to those measures.

The Board concluded, among other things, that Governments should keep their laws under constant review to ensure compliance with the international drug-control conventions; adopt a more strategic approach to preventing and combating illicit trafficking, along with more severe penalties for serious offences, in order to disrupt the operations of trafficking groups; use legislation to target the investigation, prosecution and conviction of participants in organized trafficking groups, while balancing due process and democratic protections; and in the case of parties to the 1988 Convention [YUN 1988, p. 690], should use the Convention as an extradition and mutual legal assistance treaty.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/20.

Strengthening of the role of the International Narcotics Control Board and development of a unified information system for the collection and analysis of data concerning the nature, patterns and trends of the global problem of drug abuse

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions S-17/2 of 23 February 1990, 47/99 of 16 December 1992, 48/12 of 28 October 1993 and 50/148 of 21 December 1995, Economic and Social Council resolutions 1991/48 of 21 June 1991 and 1994/3 of 20 July 1994 and Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolutions 7(XXXVII) of 20 April 1994 on the role of the International Narcotics Control Board and 12(XXXVIII) of 23 March 1995 on scientific and technical cooperation in the control of drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Reaffirming the global nature of the problem of drug abuse and the principles of shared responsibility and solidarity accepted by the international community that have characterized the action taken by the United Nations to deal with that problem,

Reaffirming also the principles of sovereignty, equality of States, non-intervention in internal affairs and territorial integrity as the basis for individual and collective action to deal with drug abuse,

Taking into account that, in order to achieve the objectives of the international drug control treaties, there must be effective international cooperation between countries in combating the illicit consumption, production, traffic and distribution and in controlling the licit manufacture and marketing of narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and precursors, as well as in preventing their diversion,

Concerned about the increasing magnitude and extent of the drug problem worldwide and the fact that the international community needs a comprehensive, dynamic and continuously updated statistical system which would enable it to monitor global illicit demand, supply, traffic and distribution of drugs, whether of plant origin or synthetic, and the diversion of chemical substances that are frequently used in the illicit manufacture of such drugs, as well as the trends in, and evolution of, the situation, and which would assist the International Narcotics Control Board and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme in their periodic analysis of the problem and in preparing recommendations,

Considering that, in the context of the globalization of the drug problem and the principle of shared responsibility, the International Narcotics Control Board is the competent independent international authority, as specified in the international drug control treaties, for the evaluation, in an objective and balanced manner, of the efforts of States to facilitate the consolidation of a worldwide policy on drug control and the development of effective international cooperation,

Acknowledging the fundamental role of the Board as the control organ, recognized as such by the international community, for restricting the cultivation, production, manufacture and use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances to medical and scientific needs and also for preventing the illicit cultivation, production, manufacture, traffic and use of such substances, in accordance with the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971, the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol, the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 and other relevant instruments,

Highlighting the work done by the Board to achieve the objectives set out in the international drug control treaties, by indicating the gaps and deficiencies in the control system and recommending solutions to improve control nationally and internationally, including the strengthening of international cooperation,

Noting the Report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1995 and Precursors and Chemicals Frequently Used in the Illicit Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances: Report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1995 on the Implementation of Article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988,

1. Encourages the International Narcotics Control Board to continue to ensure the more effective implementation of the international drug control treaties, and in so doing, to evaluate the global drug problem and to cooperate with Governments in an ongoing dialogue;

2. Invites the Board, when monitoring the implementation of the international drug control conventions, also to take into account the related elements of the Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session, on 23 February 1990;

3. Requests States that have not already done so to accede to the international drug control treaties and to adopt the necessary measures to ensure their implementation and the strengthening of international cooperation;

4. Encourages the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to support the Board in its efforts to hold periodic consultations with Governments and to provide the Board with information on progress achieved and deficiencies noted in programmes to reduce the illicit demand for and supply of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, as well as in control measures governing their transit, in order to focus efforts and to promote the development of a more effective global drug-control strategy;

5. Requests the Executive Director to report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its fortieth session on current efforts to collect and analyse information on the nature and patterns of, and trends in the illicit consumption, cultivation, manufacture, traffic and distribution of drugs, whether of natural or synthetic origin, to improve the formulation of prevention and control policies both nationally and internationally in those fields, to enhance public awareness of the international drug control situation and to ensure that the activities of the Programme are based on comprehensive and relevant information and knowledge, with a view to unifying and simplifying the collection system for use by the Governments and the Programme, including the Board;

6. Also requests the Executive Director, when presenting the report referred to in paragraph 5 above, to take into account the experience gained by other information networks and the knowledge developed in this field by other international agencies and governmental and non-governmental organizations;

7. Further requests the Executive Director, in consultation with the Board, to present the information needs of the Programme, including the Board, to the Commission at its fortieth session;

8. Encourages the Board to intensify its programme of country missions, the objective of which is to monitor the implementation of the international drug control conventions, with the agreement of Governments, in order to gain a more comprehensive and direct awareness of the drug-control policies and programmes being carried out in the countries concerned, as well as to improve consultation with the national drug control authorities;

9. Requests the General Assembly to allocate sufficient resources, within the regular budget, to enable the Board to carry out the functions assigned to it, in accordance with the international drug control conventions;

10. Requests the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to take note of the present resolution when considering programme 17 (International drug control) of the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001.

United Nations action

High-level segment of the Economic and Social Council

In accordance with decision 1996/202 of 9 February, the Economic and Social Council held its high-level segment in New York (24-27 June), the theme of which was international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances and related activities. It included a high-level policy dialogue on major issues in the world economy between the Council, the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and representatives of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF). The Council noted with regret the absence of a representative of the World Trade Organization (WTO).

The Council had before it the June report [E/1996/57] of the Secretary-General on international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances and related activities. The Secretary-General described the economic dimensions of illicit drug production, trafficking and abuse; the social impact of drug abuse; and the global dimensions of drug abuse and trafficking. The report provided an overview of the extent of drug trafficking and abuse worldwide, as well as links to the problems of organized crime and money-laundering. It also reviewed critical issues facing the international community in its fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking; focused on the threat to the world economy posed by international drug trafficking and the impact of drug abuse on societies; recommended action to improve international cooperation in drug control; and examined the work of the United Nations in this field.

The Secretary-General stated that a true sense of global ownership of and participation in UNDCP could be ensured only if more countries assumed greater responsibility for funding the essential elements of the UNDCP mandate. He suggested that the Council might wish to recommend that all States in a position to do so implement a 1996 Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution [10(XXXIX)] which supported the proposal by UNDCP's Executive Director to extend the basis of the financing system to a much broader group of contributing States.

Summarizing the high-level segment, the Council President, in a July report [E/1996/89], stated that the policy dialogue with UNCTAD, the World Bank and IMF focused on trends in the world economy, the issue of globalization, trade, debt, resource flows, and cooperation and coordination within the UN system. It emphasized the need for a comprehensive and multidimensional approach to drug abuse control and the need to integrate the problem in the national and global policy agenda. The report also summarized the high-level segment's debate on international cooperation against illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances and related activities.

In its conclusions, the high-level segment confirmed the high priority assigned by States to international drug control; reaffirmed the commitment to retain drug control as one of the top priorities of the UN medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001; and reconfirmed the leadership and coordination role of UNDCP, especially within the UN system, and the provision to UNDCP of the resources required to fulfil its leadership and coordination function. The conclusions also supported improvement and enhancement of the intergovernmental system for evaluating the implementation of the drug control instruments; mobilization and forging of strong partnerships with all actors of civil society, particularly non-governmental organizations (NGOs), community-based and sports organizations and associations and the private sector; and adoption of national drug-control master plans.

Preparation for special session of General Assembly on drug control

In 1996, consideration of a special General Assembly session on drug control continued, with action taken by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

A February report [E/CN.7/1996/3] of the Executive Director of UNDCP discussed the implementation of General Assembly resolution 48/12 [YUN 1993, p. 1095] on strengthening international cooperation against illicit drug production, trafficking and demand. Recommendations related to the functioning of the international drug-control treaties, intergovernmental review of drug-control matters, activities of UNDCP and action by States.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/17.

Special session of the General Assembly devoted to the combat against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 13(XXXVIII) of 23 March 1995, in which the Commission decided to keep under consideration the proposal for the convening of an international conference to review progress made by Governments and the United Nations system in combating drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Recalling its resolution 1995/40 of 27 July 1995, in which it recommended that the General Assembly and the Commission give priority consideration to the proposal to convene an international conference for the purpose of evaluating the international situation and the status of international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities,

Taking into account General Assembly resolution 50/148 of 21 December 1995, in section IV of which the Assembly requested the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to discuss the proposal to hold a second international conference on drug abuse and illicit trafficking fully, as a matter of priority, at its thirty-ninth session, and to present its conclusions and suggestions through the Economic and Social Council to the Assembly at its fifty-first session,

Having considered the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control

Programme containing recommendations regarding the implementation by the Commission of General Assembly resolution 48/12 of 28 October 1993, as requested in paragraph 7 of its resolution 13(XXXVIII),

Having considered drug-control issues at its high-level segment of 1996 and having stressed the need for the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to take a leadership role in reaffirming the political commitment to the present resolution,

Conscious of the role of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs as the principal United Nations policy-making body on drug-control issues,

Reaffirming the leadership role of the Programme as the main focus for concerted international action for drug abuse control and as international coordinator for drug-control activities, especially within the United Nations system,

Fully sharing the deep concern expressed by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/148 about the magnitude of the rising trend in all manifestations of the drug problem despite the efforts of the international community,

Noting that in resolution 50/148 the General Assembly once again renewed its commitment to further strengthening international cooperation and substantially increasing efforts against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, based on the principle of shared responsibility and taking into account the experience gained,

Noting with satisfaction the support expressed in several regional and international conferences and meetings for the convening of an international conference to strengthen international cooperation against the scourge of drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Taking into account the opinions expressed by different Governments regarding the proposal to convene an international conference for that purpose,

Fully taking into account the fact that the General Assembly, in its resolution 50/148, stressed, inter alia, that when considering the proposal for holding an international conference, the Commission should take into account international drug-control priorities as well as ways and means to increase the implementation of existing international conventions and other international instruments for cooperation on drug control,

Stressing the importance of the General Assembly as the most democratic and representative organ of the United Nations, and, in this context, of the role that it is called upon to play in addressing global and interdependent questions of universal concern,

Convinced that the holding of a special session of the General Assembly devoted to the strengthening of international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities could make a significant contribution to the effectiveness of the actions of the United Nations and its Member States in the fight against this global threat,

1. Decides to recommend that the General Assembly convene a special session in order to consider the fight against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities, and to propose new strategies, methods, practical activities and specific measures to strengthen international cooperation in addressing the problem of illicit drugs;

2. Recommends that the General Assembly, at its special session devoted to assessing the existing situation, within the framework of a comprehensive and balanced approach that includes all aspects of the problem, with a view to strengthening international cooperation to address the problem of illicit drugs, and within the framework of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, and other relevant conventions and international instruments, should have the following objectives:

(a) To promote the adherence to and full implementation by all States of the Convention of 1988, the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971;

(b) To adopt measures to increase international cooperation to contribute to the application of the law;

(c) To adopt measures to avoid the diversion of chemicals used in illicit drug production, and to strengthen control of the production of and traffic in stimulants and their precursors;

(d) To adopt and promote drug abuse control programmes and policies and other measures, including those at the international level, to reduce the illicit demand for drugs;

(e) To adopt measures to prevent and sanction money-laundering, in order to implement the Convention of 1988;

(f) To encourage international cooperation to develop programmes of eradication of illicit crops and to promote alternative development programmes;

(g) To adopt measures to strengthen coordination within the United Nations system in the fight against drug trafficking and related organized crime, against terrorist groups engaged in drug trafficking and against illicit arms trade;

3. Also recommends that the General Assembly, at its special session, review its resolution S-17/2 of 23 February 1990, in particular the progress made in implementing the Global Programme of Action annexed thereto;

4. Further recommends that the General Assembly, at its special session, address the issues on the basis of the principle of shared responsibility and with full respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law, particularly respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States;

5. Decides to propose that the special session of the General Assembly be held for three days in 1998, immediately after all the necessary preparatory work has been done to ensure its success and ten years after the adoption of the Convention of 1988;

6. Requests that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs act as the preparatory body for the special session of the General Assembly, open to the participation of all States Members of the United Nations and of observers, in accordance with established practices;

7. Encourages the participation of developing countries and assistance to the least developed countries, in order to work actively towards the attainment of the objectives and goals of the special session;

8. Requests that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in its capacity as preparatory body for the special session, be mandated to present proposals, through the Economic and Social Council, for consideration by the Assembly regarding all organizational matters, including the agenda, dates, expected outcomes and other issues relevant to the successful preparations for, outcome of and follow-up to the special session;

9. Recommends that the preparatory process for the special session be funded through the regular budget of the United Nations, bearing in mind the need to keep the financial costs to a minimum, and that Governments be invited to make extrabudgetary contributions to meet those costs;

10. Recommends also that organs, organizations and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, as well as multilateral development banks, contribute fully to the preparations for the special session of the General Assembly, in particular by submitting to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, through the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, concrete recommendations on the issues to be addressed by the Assembly at that session;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report containing recommendations on the possible outcome of and organizational matters relating to the proposed special session of the General Assembly.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/17
23 July 1996 Meeting 45 Adopted without vote
Draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1996/27); agenda item 5 (h).

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to the Council's request, the Secretary-General, in October, presented a report [A/51/469] on preparations for and possible outcome of a special session of the General Assembly on international drug control. The Secretary-General discussed the possible outcome of a special session and its contribution to the effectiveness of international efforts to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking. He illustrated measures to strengthen international cooperation against drug abuse and illicit trafficking that could emerge from the special session. The Secretary-General provided an outline of preparatory work necessary to achieve the desired outcome, as well as proposals for the draft provisional agenda and a work plan for the sessions of the preparatory body.

The Secretary-General stated that high-level discussion of drug control issues could result in Governments reaffirming the political importance of drug control and in Member States renewing their commitment to the fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking. The special session would present an opportunity to review and assess the current status of international drug control and could lead to the adoption of practical measures to strengthen the effectiveness of international action against drug abuse and illicit trafficking. He discussed the possible outcome of the special session in terms of its impact on: reviewing international drug-control instruments; preventing diversion of chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of drugs; strengthening measures against the abuse of and trafficking in stimulants; reduction of the illicit demand for drugs; preventing and taking action against money-laundering; eradication of illicit crops and alternative development; judicial cooperation; coordination in the fight against drug trafficking and related organized crime against terrorist groups engaged in drug trafficking and against illicit arms trade; and strengthening of UN drug-control machinery.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/64.

International action to combat drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/168 of 23 December 1994 and 50/148 of 21 December 1995,

Gravely concerned that, despite increased efforts by States and relevant international organizations, there is a global expansion of illicit demand for, production of and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including synthetic and designer drugs, which threatens the health, safety and well-being of millions of persons, in particular young people, in all countries, as well as the political and socio-economic systems and the stability, national security and sovereignty of an increasing number of States,

Deeply alarmed by the growing violence and economic power of criminal organizations and terrorist groups engaged in drug trafficking activities and other criminal activities, such as money-laundering and illicit traffic of arms and precursors and essential chemicals, and by the increasing transnational links between them, and recognizing that enhanced international cooperation and effective strategies are required to achieve results against all forms of transnational criminal activities,

Convinced of the desirability of closer coordination and cooperation among States in combating drug-related crimes, such as terrorism, illicit arms trade and money-laundering, and bearing in mind the role that could be played by both the United Nations and regional organizations in this respect,

Fully aware that States, the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and multilateral development banks need to accord a higher priority to dealing with this scourge, which undermines development, economic and political stability and democratic institutions, and the combat against which entails increasing economic costs for Governments and the irreparable loss of human lives,

Reaffirming and stressing the need for increased efforts to implement the comprehensive framework for international cooperation in drug control provided by the existing drug control conventions, the Declaration of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, the Political Declaration and Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session devoted to the question of international cooperation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic and psychotropic substances, the Declaration adopted by the World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat, the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control, the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime and other relevant international standards,

Recognizing the efforts of countries that produce narcotic drugs for scientific, medicinal and therapeutic uses to prevent the diversion of such substances to illicit markets and to maintain production at a level consistent with licit demand in line with the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961,

Convinced that civil society, including non-governmental organizations, can make an effective contribution to address the illicit drug problem,

Acknowledging that there are links, under certain circumstances, between poverty and the increase in the illicit production of and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and that the promotion of the economic development of countries affected by the illicit drug trade requires appropriate measures, including strengthened international cooperation in support of alternative and sustainable development activities in the affected areas of those countries, which have as their objectives the reduction and elimination of illicit drug production,

Stressing that respect for human rights is and must be an essential component of measures taken to address the drug problem,

Emphasizing the need for an analysis of transit routes used by drug traffickers, which are constantly changing and expanding to include a growing number of countries and regions in all parts of the world,

Underlining the role of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs as the principal United Nations policy-making body on drug control issues, the leadership role and commendable work of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme as the main focus for concerted international action and the important role of the International Narcotics Control Board as an independent monitoring authority as set out in the international drug control treaties,

Recalling the important and central role of relevant United Nations bodies in evaluating the implementation by States parties of their obligations under the United Nations drug control treaties, as set out in those treaties,

Convinced that the holding of a special session of the General Assembly devoted to the strengthening of international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities could make a significant contribution to the effectiveness of the United Nations and its Member States in the fight against this global problem,

I

Respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law in the fight against drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking

1. Reaffirms that the fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking must be carried out in full conformity with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law, particularly respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and the non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations;

2. Calls upon all States to intensify their actions to promote effective cooperation in the efforts to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking, so as to contribute to a climate conducive to achieving this end, on the basis of the principles of equal rights and mutual respect;

II

International action to combat drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking

1. Renews its commitment to further strengthening international cooperation and substantially increasing efforts against the cultivation for illegal purposes, illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances, including synthetic drugs, and to controlling and preventing the diversion of precursors and essential chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic and psychotropic substances, in accordance with obligations of States under the United Nations drug control conventions, based on the principle of shared responsibility and taking into account experience gained;

2. Urges all States to ratify or accede to and implement all the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 as amended by the 1972 Protocol, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

3. Calls upon all States to adopt adequate national laws and regulations, to strengthen national judicial systems and to carry out effective drug control activities in cooperation with other States in accordance with those international instruments;

4. Requests the United Nations International Drug Control Programme:

(a) To continue to support the focus on regional, subregional and national strategies for drug abuse control, particularly the master-plan approach, and to complement those strategies with effective interregional strategies;

(b) To seek to strengthen the dialogue and cooperation with multilateral development banks so that they might undertake lending and programming activities related to drug control in interested and affected countries and to inform the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on further progress made in this area;

(c) To continue to provide legal assistance to Member States that request it in adjusting their national laws, policies and infrastructures to implement the international drug control conventions, as well as assistance in training personnel responsible for applying the new laws;

(d) To continue providing assistance to Member States requesting support in establishing or strengthening national drug detection laboratories;

(e) To continue to include in its report on illicit traffic in drugs an assessment of worldwide trends in illicit traffic and transit in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including methods and routes used, and to recommend ways and means for improving the capacity of States along those routes to deal with all aspects of the drug problem;

5. Reaffirms the danger and threat posed to civil society by drug trafficking and its links to terrorism, transnational crime, money-laundering and the arms trade, and encourages Governments to deal with this threat and to cooperate to prevent the channelling of funds to and between those engaged in such activities;

6. Acknowledges that there are links between the illicit production of, demand for and traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and the economic and social conditions in the affected countries and that there are differences and diversity in the problems of each country;

7. Calls upon the international community to provide increased economic and technical support to Governments that request it for programmes of alternative and sustainable development, which have as their objectives the reduction and elimination of illicit drug production and which take fully into account the cultural traditions of peoples;

8. Recalls that the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1995, stresses the importance of participation of youth organizations and youth in decision-making processes, in particular in relation to demand reduction programmes for illicit drugs;

9. Stresses the need for effective government action to prevent the diversion to illicit markets of precursors and essential chemicals, materials and equipment used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

10. Commends the International Narcotics Control Board for its valuable work in monitoring the production and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances so as to limit their use to medical and scientific purposes, and urges increased efforts to implement its mandate under article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 concerning the monitoring of the movement of precursors and essential chemicals;

11. Notes that the International Narcotics Control Board needs sufficient resources to carry out its mandate, including under article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, and therefore urges Member States to commit themselves in a common effort to assign adequate and sufficient budgetary resources to the International Narcotics Control Board, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/20 of 23 July 1996;

12. Calls upon States to increase efforts, with international cooperation, to reduce and eliminate illegal crops from which narcotics are obtained, as well as to prevent and reduce the demand for and the consumption of illicit drugs, in accordance with their obligations under the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

13. Underlines the need for Governments, with international cooperation, to increase and implement alternative development programmes with the objective of reducing and eliminating the production of illicit drugs, taking into account the economic, social, cultural, political and environmental aspects of the area concerned;

14. Emphasizes the need to maintain the capacity of the International Narcotics Control Board, including through the provision of appropriate means by the Secretary-General, within existing resources, and adequate technical support by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme;

15. Reaffirms the importance of achieving the objectives of the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse 1991-2000, under the theme "A global response to a global challenge", by Member States, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the United Nations system;

16. Calls upon Member States to continue to cooperate with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme by providing relevant information and their views on the draft declaration on the guiding principles of demand reduction being developed by the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme in consultation with Member States, with due regard to the linkages between demand and supply reduction activities, and reaffirms the importance of Economic and Social Council resolutions 1996/18 of 23 July 1996 on the draft declaration on the guiding principles of demand reduction and 1995/16 of 24 July 1995 on integration of demand reduction initiatives into a cohesive strategy to combat drug abuse;

17. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/29 of 24 July 1996 on action to strengthen international cooperation to control precursors and their substitutes used in the illicit manufacture of controlled substances, in particular amphetamine-type stimulants, and to prevent their diversion, and calls upon Member States to strengthen their efforts to control precursors and their substitutes in cooperation with the International Narcotics Control Board;

18. ## World drug situation

The International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) in 1996 provided an analysis [E/INCB/1996/1] of world drug abuse trends and current control efforts, so that Governments would be kept aware of existing and potential situations that might endanger the objectives of international drug-control treaties. A summary of the 1996 INCB report [E/1997/56] was also made available for consideration by the Economic and Social Council.

Africa

According to INCB, the cultivation of, illicit traffic in and abuse of cannabis were widespread in Africa, where it grew wild and was illicitly cultivated in many countries. Widespread cannabis abuse was reported in every subregion of the continent. While Morocco remained the main supplier of cannabis resin in illicit markets of Europe, there were reports of such activity in many parts of the continent. The extent of illicit cannabis cultivation in South Africa was estimated to be 82,000 hectares in 1995. Eastern and southern African seaports were often used for the transshipment of cannabis resin originating mainly in Asia and destined for Europe and North America. In 1995, destruction of some illicit cannabis fields was reported in several countries of the region, and 110 tonnes of cannabis resin were seized by the authorities in Morocco. In Egypt, increasing illicit cannabis and poppy cultivation was reported in the Sinai, but successful eradication campaigns were carried out by national authorities.

Africa continued to be used for the transshipment of large amounts of Asian heroin. Heroin transported to African seaports and airports and from there to Europe and North America contributed to the spread of heroin abuse in a few capital cities in Africa. Heroin abuse was already considered a serious problem by the authorities in Mauritius, Namibia and South Africa.

Increasing amounts of cocaine were smuggled out of South America (mainly Brazil) and transshipped through eastern, southern and western Africa to Europe. It was estimated that 60 per cent of the cocaine shipped to South Africa passed through that country and the rest was consumed locally. Crack was manufactured locally in South Africa and in some countries in western Africa, and its abuse was on the rise.

Large-scale illicit trafficking and abuse of stimulants appeared to continue in Africa, where the lack of proper control over the pharmaceutical supply system and the existence of street markets facilitated the free availability of stimulant tablets. The abuse of methaqualone was more prevalent in southern and eastern Africa than in other parts of the continent.

Americas

Central America and the Caribbean

Countries in Central America and the Caribbean suffered from increased transit traffic in illicit drugs. Cannabis, cocaine and heroin were transported from South America to North America through the region. The territories of the Caribbean States were used as transshipment points for cannabis and cocaine consignments from South America for Europe. These countries were also used to transship chemicals originating mainly in Europe or the United States to clandestine cocaine laboratories in South America, as well as for the smuggling of methamphetamine precursors out of Asia and Europe and into Mexico and the United States. Illicit traffickers often benefited from the relatively weak drug control structures in many countries in the region and the lack of experience in monitoring chemicals. Increasing drug-related crime, corruption, drug abuse and money-laundering were side effects and consequences of large-scale illicit drug trafficking.

The Board noted that cannabis continued to be cultivated in varying degrees for domestic abuse in most countries in Central America and the Caribbean. Eradication was regularly carried out in most Central American countries. In the Caribbean, 13 million cannabis plants covering more than 1,000 hectares were destroyed, and 127 tonnes of cannabis were seized in 1995. Illicit opium poppy cultivation and the eradication of cultivation sites were reported only in Guatemala. Despite the increasing illicit traffic in heroin through the region, there were no signs of heroin abuse. Large-scale illicit traffic in cocaine remained the biggest drug problem in the region. After cannabis, cocaine was the most frequently abused drug. In the Caribbean, laboratories engaged in the transformation of coca base or coca paste into crack had been detected in several countries. The abuse of psychotropic substances was not considered a major problem in most countries of the region.

North America

According to the Board, the extent of drug abuse was different in each of the three countries in North America: the prevalence of drug abuse cases was lowest in Mexico and highest in the United States, which had the biggest illicit drug market in the world. Efforts to reduce illicit drug demand and supply and the comprehensive drug strategy had led to positive results in the 1980s and early 1990s, but recently the incidence of abuse of cocaine, cannabis and hallucinogens among youth in the United States had been increasing. Illicit manufacture of amphetamine derivatives and increasing indoor cannabis cultivation affected the United States and Canada. In Mexico, the illicit cultivation of cannabis, manufacture of methamphetamine and transit traffic in cocaine and other drugs were problems to a large extent connected with the drug abuse situation in the United States.

Cannabis was cultivated to a large extent in the three North American countries and remained the main drug of abuse. The Board appreciated the successful efforts of the Government of Mexico, which in 1995 resulted in the eradication of about 21,600 of an estimated 32,000 hectares of cannabis in that country, and the report from the United States of the eradication of 373 million cannabis plants. The Board expressed its concern about the increase in domestic cannabis cultivation in Canada and the United States. About 50 per cent of the cannabis supply in Canada appeared to be from domestic, mainly hydroponic, cultivation.

Abuse of cannabis was most prevalent in the United States. According to estimates, 77 per cent of monthly abusers of illicit drugs were cannabis abusers, a figure 50 per cent lower than in 1979. The monthly abuse rate among youth, however, increased from 8.2 per cent in 1994 to 10.9 per cent in 1995.

In two states in the United States, referendums were approved in November 1996 which would, if implemented, permit a broad use of cannabis for alleged medical purposes. The Board noted with appreciation the firm stand of the authorities in the United States against such attempts to legalize cannabis and expressed its concern that well-financed non-profit organizations sponsored institutions that were developing strategies for the legalization of drugs.

The Board appreciated the eradication in 1995 of more than 15,000 hectares of poppy fields by Mexican authorities; total illicit poppy cultivation was estimated at 22,900 hectares. In the United States, 1,146 kilogrammes of heroin were seized in 1995, a significant decline from more than 2 tonnes in 1994. There were an estimated 200,000 monthly heroin abusers in the United States in 1995. This estimate was significantly higher than that for 1994, and did not include the marginalized population of the country, where the incidence of heroin abuse was the highest. The abuse of synthetic opioids was also reported.

In 1995, about the same amount of cocaine was seized as in the previous years in Mexico (approximately 22.5 tonnes) and the United States (approximately 100 tonnes). Some 1.45 million people abused cocaine on a monthly basis in the United States, a low figure compared with the 1979 figure of 5.7 million abusers. There was a significant increase in the monthly cocaine abuse rate among youth. Crack supplies remained abundant everywhere in the United States and an increase in the number of cocaine-related emergency cases was recorded.

The illicit manufacture and abuse of methamphetamine continued to create problems in Canada and the United States. Seizure of methamphetamine precursors more than tripled in 1995 in the United States, to more than 35 tonnes. Illicit methamphetamine manufacture also took place in Canada, where one of the largest and most sophisticated clandestine laboratories ever discovered in North America was dismantled by authorities in 1996; it had been producing substantial amounts of MDMA ("ecstasy") and lysergic acid diethylamide (LSD) for at least four years. In the United States, increasing abuse of LSD and other hallucinogens was reported; almost two thirds of LSD abusers seeking treatment in 1995 were under the age of 20. Widespread abuse of MDMA by young adults continued to be reported in many cities throughout the United States. The Board further noted that abuse of certain tranquilizers, particularly flunitrazepam and clonazepam, was rapidly spreading in the United States.

South America

In South America, illicit coca bush cultivation, illicit coca leaf production, the illicit manufacture of coca base, coca paste and cocaine hydrochloride, and cocaine abuse continued. South America remained the only region supplying cocaine to other parts of the world, above all the United States and Europe. In addition, large amounts of heroin were smuggled out of Colombia, where illicit opium poppy cultivation and the clandestine manufacture of opiates had become serious problems. Cannabis, the main drug of abuse, was cultivated mainly in Brazil and Colombia, and primarily for domestic consumption; however, substantial amounts of cannabis were smuggled out of South America into Europe and North America.

The Board encouraged countries of the region to ratify and implement as soon as possible the Inter-American Convention against Corruption, which was adopted at Caracas in March by the Specialized Conference of the Organization of American States against Corruption. It noted with satisfaction that in June the authorities of Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela agreed upon the creation of an Andean anti-drug intelligence unit, the exchange of information on precursor shipments and support for alternative development projects in South America.

Opium poppy was increasingly cultivated in Colombia after the late 1980s; in 1995, the area under poppy cultivation was estimated at 6,500 hectares, of which more than 5,000 hectares were subsequently eradicated. The amount of illicit opium produced in Colombia in 1995 was estimated at 65.5 tonnes, which was converted into morphine and heroin in clandestine laboratories. The abuse of opiates seemed to be limited in Colombia; most of the heroin was smuggled out of the country, mainly to the United States, where heroin of Colombian origin accounted for the main share of heroin seized.

Illicit coca bush cultivation continued in Bolivia, Colombia and Peru. Eradication efforts continued in all three countries. In the opinion of the Board, Peru, where coca bush eradication efforts focused almost exclusively on seedlings, needed to expand its efforts to include mature plantations as well. Peru remained the main producer of coca leaves.

Coca paste and coca base were produced mainly in Bolivia and Peru, but the illicit manufacture of cocaine hydrochloride was on the increase in those countries. A significant proportion of coca paste and base continued to be smuggled into Colombia for further processing. In 1995, more than 60 tonnes of coca base and cocaine were seized in Colombia.

The abuse of cocaine, mainly in the form of cocaine base, continued to create problems in South America. An increase of cocaine abuse was reported in Brazil and Chile.

The abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants continued in Brazil. The abuse of sedatives was reported in Brazil and Colombia only, but the Board estimated that it might be more widespread in the region.

Asia

East and South-East Asia

Illicit opium poppy cultivation, opium production, heroin manufacture and large-scale illicit trafficking in opiates constituted the greatest drug problems of South-East Asia. Myanmar remained one of the largest opium producers and heroin suppliers in the world. The surrender of Myanmar insurgent leader Khun Sa, considered the key person in the illicit trade in opiates, created a new situation in the Golden Triangle (Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar and Thailand), particularly in the Shan state, where most of the region's opium was produced. Opium smoking was diminishing but was being replaced by the far more dangerous practice of injecting heroin, a trend accompanied with increased needle-sharing and human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection. Illicit manufacture of amphetamine and traffic in that substance and its precursors were widespread in the region, as was abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants.

Cannabis grew wild and was also cultivated in many countries in South-East Asia, and its abuse was reported in most countries of the region. Some illicit opium poppy cultivation and opium production, mainly for domestic markets, was reported in Cambodia and in China along its borders with the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar and Viet Nam. A slight increase in opium production was reported in the northern part of the Lao People's Democratic Republic and a further decline in Viet Nam. No reliable estimates were available for Myanmar.

Illicit heroin laboratories were concentrated in the border areas between China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar and Thailand, which continued to supply most of the world's illicit heroin. The recent discovery of clandestine laboratories far from Shan state, the heroin shortage on the black market in Thailand and the drastic increase in the price of heroin along the border between Myanmar and Thailand might indicate that some clandestine heroin laboratories had discontinued their activity, INCB said. Eleven heroin laboratories were destroyed in Shan state and large quantities of chemicals used in illicit heroin manufacture were seized. The Board expected that those events would enable the Government of Myanmar to substantially reduce the illicit heroin manufacture in the country.

China reported the seizure of large consignments of acetic anhydride, the key chemical used in the illicit manufacture of heroin. Heroin was smuggled through China, though the most frequently used route continued to be through Thailand.

Illicit manufacture of, traffic in and abuse of amphetamines, particularly methamphetamines, were among the major drug problems in the region. There were reports in several countries of former heroin laboratories converting to methamphetamine production. Japan noted further propagation of methamphetamine abuse, even among teenagers; methamphetamine abuse was also reported in the Republic of Korea. Abuse of "ecstasy" and other hallucinogenic amphetamine derivatives was on the rise in Hong Kong, Indonesia and Singapore. The abuse of cough syrups containing codeine, especially in combination with ephedrine, was creating problems in South-East Asia, particularly in Malaysia and Myanmar.

South Asia

Drug abuse trends in 1996 reflected a shift from opium to heroin, and, more recently, to buprenorphine, a potent synthetic opioid manufactured in India. Ninety per cent of injecting drug abusers in Bangladesh abused buprenorphine. The Board reiterated its appeal to the World Health Organization (WHO) and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to review the status of international control of buprenorphine without further delay. Inhalation was the most frequent route of administration used by heroin abusers in Bangladesh, Nepal and Sri Lanka, while in India there were signs of increased use of injection techniques, which were a major factor contributing to the spread of HIV infection among drug abusers.

The abuse of codeine-based cough syrups reached substantial proportions in several parts of the region. The increase in the abuse of opioids (buprenorphine and codeine) was facilitated by weaknesses in the control over the licit drug supply system: pharmaceutical preparations containing narcotic drugs or psychotropic substances were available without medical prescription. Despite strengthened regulatory and control measures and law enforcement successes, the illicit manufacture of methaqualone and the smuggling of that substance into Africa continued.

Cannabis grew wild and was also illicitly cultivated in South Asia, where its abuse was widespread. Cannabis resin was produced mainly in Nepal and smuggled into India.

Licit opium poppy cultivation and opium production was under governmental control in India. Controls over production were strengthened after some diversion had occurred. Indian authorities detected and destroyed a number of laboratories manufacturing crude heroin. In 1995, there was an increase of more than 50 per cent in the total amount of heroin seized in India, while the amount of seized heroin originating in South-West Asia increased by over 300 per cent. Traditional abuse of opium still continued in some Indian provinces, while in many others the abuse of heroin or synthetic opioids was increasing, with continuing reports on an alarming increase in opiate dependence in the north-eastern part of the country.

India was the only country in South Asia in which the abuse of psychotropic substances was considered a major problem. The clandestine manufacture of methaqualone continued, and in 1995 four laboratories were destroyed, and 20 tonnes of methaqualone seized. Substantial amounts of methaqualone were smuggled out of India into eastern and southern Africa. There were a few reports in India on the abuse of amphetamine derivatives, including some cases involving the abuse of "ecstasy" in the tourist resort of Goa. The abuse of locally manufactured barbiturates and benzodiazepines was on the rise.

West Asia

The main sources of supply for illicit traffickers and local drug abusers in West Asia were: the illicit cultivation of cannabis and opium poppy in Afghanistan, and to some extent in central Asia, in the Caucasus and in Pakistan; the illicit production of cannabis resin in Afghanistan; and the clandestine manufacture of heroin in Afghanistan, Pakistan and Turkey. Due to the political turmoil and civil war in Afghanistan (see PART ONE, Chapter IV), implementation of drug control measures was impossible in that country, which was the main source of illicit opiates in the region. Combating drug smuggling out of Afghanistan depended mainly on the efforts of the law enforcement services of neighbouring States. The prevention of heroin manufacture was hindered by the flow of large amounts of acetic anhydride into the region, and several countries suffered from large-scale illicit trafficking in cannabis resin and heroin, destined for countries in the region or in Europe.

The Board noted with satisfaction the launching of a cooperation programme between Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan adopted at a ministerial summit held at Tashkent, Uzbekistan, in May, and welcomed a subregional arrangement between Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and Turkey to promote cross-border cooperation among their drug law enforcement agencies.

Cannabis grew wild in many countries in the region, above all in central Asia, and the abuse of cannabis was widespread. In central Asia, the Middle East and the Caucasus, cannabis was the most popular drug of abuse. Afghanistan and Pakistan continued to be major suppliers of the cannabis resin found in Europe, and significant seizures of cannabis resin in transit in Iran and Turkey illustrated the large extent of such traffic in those countries.

Opium poppy was illicitly cultivated and opium produced mainly in Afghanistan, in central Asian members of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), in Pakistan and, to a small extent, in Armenia and Azerbaijan. The Board noted with satisfaction the drastic decrease in illicit opium poppy cultivation in Pakistan and encouraged the Government of that country to continue its efforts to eliminate illicit opium production.

Heroin manufacture was taking place in Afghanistan, Pakistan and Turkey on a small scale, in Lebanon. In Kazakhstan, crude heroin was manufactured in clandestine laboratories; huge amounts of acetic anhydride were smuggled into the region from Asian countries and Europe.

Various routes for smuggling opiates were also used for smuggling cannabis resin. The most traditional route for heroin smuggling led from Afghanistan or Pakistan across Iran and Turkey to Europe. In the opinion of the Government of Turkey, 75 per cent of the heroin passing from the region to Europe transited Turkey.

Continuing opium abuse was reported in Iran. Heroin smoking was considered a major problem in the region, mainly in Pakistan, with reports of heroin abuse also coming from countries in the Persian Gulf and Israel. Injection of poppy straw extracts was a problem in the central Asian republics of the former USSR and Armenia. Cocaine abuse in the region was reported to be negligible but some increase had been observed recently.

The clandestine manufacture of, illicit trafficking in and abuse of stimulants constituted problems in several countries in West Asia. Stimulant abuse appeared to be on the rise in central Asia and the Caucasus. Some precursors for stimulants were smuggled out of Asia and Europe, through Israel, Lebanon and the United Arab Emirates, into countries outside the region. The Board reiterated that the Governments concerned should analyse the drugs seized, investigate drug trafficking routes and cooperate closely in investigations. Cases involving the abuse of LSD and "ecstasy" were reported in Israel.

The Board was aware of reports from CIS member States of the illicit manufacture of "synthetic drugs" and invited those States to forward more precise information about those drugs so that countermeasures might be developed.

Europe

The Board observed that although large amounts of heroin, cocaine and hashish were smuggled into the region from other continents, the prevalence of heroin and cocaine abuse in most Western European countries was declining. However, a rapid increase in the number of heroin abuse cases was reported in some Eastern European countries. There was a steady increase in the illicit traffic in and abuse of synthetic drugs manufactured in clandestine laboratories in Europe. Such laboratories supplied illicit drug markets in and outside Europe with amphetamines, with stimulant amphetamine derivatives (such as methamphetamine) and, above all, with hallucinogenic amphetamine derivatives (such as MDMA, or "ecstasy"). Besides illicit manufacture, illicit cultivation had become an important element of the European drug scene, including hydroponic indoor cultivation of potent cannabis varieties.

The Board noted that in CIS member States, and, to some extent, in the Baltic States (Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania) and some central and Eastern European countries, the new socio-economic frameworks required more rapid development of administrative and legal structures to prevent drug-related crime and to ensure more effective border controls.

Cannabis remained the main drug of abuse in Europe, with increasing abuse by young people in most countries of the region. Large-scale indoor cultivation of cannabis was limited to the Netherlands, but small-scale cultivation was spreading to other European countries, driven by the export of cannabis seeds. The Board noted the recent initiatives of the Government of the Netherlands to address more effectively illicit cannabis cultivation and the export of seeds. In more and more European countries, cannabis plants were being licitly cultivated for industrial purposes, encouraged by subsidies in member States of the European Union (EU). The Board reiterated its request to EU to provide information on the functioning of its requirements, including safeguards, and invited Governments to inform the Board of their experiences with the system, since it might lead to insurmountable problems regarding detection and elimination of illicit cannabis cultivation.

Illicit poppy cultivation was reported in Belarus, Latvia, Lithuania, the Russian Federation and Ukraine and the abuse of poppy straw extracts continued in countries of the former USSR and some countries in central and Eastern Europe. The most frequent form of administration of poppy straw extracts was intravenous injection, a major source of HIV infection among drug abusers in the region.

Reports on the availability of heroin hydrochloride in several States in Central and Eastern Europe and in CIS member States indicated a lower prevalence of abuse than in Western Europe. The Board noted that in most countries of Western Europe seizures had declined in recent years, while purity of seized heroin had increased as prices fell.

The Board stated that the Russian Federation was becoming a crossroads for illicit drug trafficking. The activity of organized criminal groups and the removal of customs barriers between CIS member States had made it possible for traffickers to transport illicit shipments from the Golden Crescent through central Asia, the Russian Federation and Belarus without being checked.

Illicit trafficking in and abuse of synthetic opioids were reported in several countries in Europe and increasing manufacture of such substances was reported in the Russian Federation, where clandestine laboratories were detected in Moscow and St. Petersburg.

In Europe as a whole, a decrease in seizures of cocaine was observed, while an increase in cocaine seizures was reported in Eastern European countries and CIS member States.

Illicit amphetamine laboratories were detected in several countries, including a laboratory in the United Kingdom capable of producing 600 kilograms per week. According to Interpol, the average increase in amphetamine seizures from 1994 to 1995 was about 18 per cent, but a greater increase was reported in some countries, including the two most important source countries, the Netherlands and Poland. The Board noted a drastic increase in the illicit manufacture and abuse of "ecstasy" in Europe. In the Netherlands, where most of the drug was manufactured, 20 clandestine laboratories were dismantled. In Austria, 10 times more "ecstasy" was seized in 1995 than in the previous year. The Board noted with concern that there had been very few reports on the seizures of precursors for MDMA in Europe. In the opinion of the Board, the link of "ecstasy" to a certain type of pop music, the toleration by national authorities of ambiguous messages about the apparent virtues of "ecstasy" and even the use of its name throughout Europe for an energy drink launched in Liechtenstein might have contributed to the rapid spread of its abuse.

Increasing abuse of LSD, which continued to be smuggled out of the United States and into countries in Europe, mainly the Netherlands, was noted in many countries of the region. There were few reports on the abuse of sedatives, but the Board believed that it continued to be underestimated in most countries.

Oceania

Most drug problems in Oceania were reported in Australia and New Zealand. The Pacific island countries did not appear to be seriously affected by illicit drug production, trafficking and abuse, with the exception of a few countries where illicit cannabis cultivation took place or whose territories were used as transit points for trafficking.

Cannabis grew wild in several countries in Oceania and was illicitly cultivated in Fiji, Papua New Guinea and Samoa. It was the most widespread drug of abuse in Australia, Fiji, New Zealand and Papua New Guinea. According to the Government of Australia, 15 per cent of the male population and 7 per cent of the female population were smoking cannabis on a weekly basis.

Only sporadic cases of abuse of cocaine or heroin were reported in countries of the region, except Australia, where the seriousness of the extent of heroin abuse was clearly reflected in the fact that there were more than 500 heroin-related deaths recorded in 1995. The illicit manufacture of amphetamine derivatives was also reported in Australia. The increasing abuse of stimulants (mainly methamphetamine), hallucinogenic amphetamine derivatives (such as MDMA and para-methylamphetamine) and LSD was reported in Australia and New Zealand. A large proportion of the hallucinogens reportedly originated in European countries or in the United States.

UN programmes to combat drug abuse

United Nations International Drug Control Programme

In 1990, the General Assembly had asked the Secretary-General to create a single drug control programme to be called the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), based in Vienna, integrating within it the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the UN Secretariat, the secretariat of the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) and the UN Fund for Drug Abuse Control [GA res. 45/179].

UNDCP, considered the main focus for concerted international action for drug abuse control, was established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 723, GA res. 46/104], with four main substantive components: treaty implementation and legal services, operational activities, technical services, and inter-organizational cooperation.

During 1996, UNDCP served as both an instrument of and reference for the international community in pursuing its drug control objectives under the international drug-control treaties. To support Governments in formulating policies and strategies, UNDCP consolidated its position as a centre of competence in drug control matters, generating and sharing knowledge on the evolving trends and nature of the drug problem. It supported the efforts of Governments to counter the drug problem by providing advisory services through its technical cooperation programmes. UNDCP led the implementation of an agreed strategy whose fundamental principles included a balanced approach whereby demand reduction and supply reduction were considered mutually reinforcing elements. The strategy also emphasized implementing the international drug-control treaties, suppressing illicit drug trafficking and mobilizing civil society, particularly NGOs, with a view to preventing and reducing drug abuse.

UNDCP activities

Activities of UNDCP in 1996 were under way at the national, regional and international levels. Efforts focused on the development of a global approach to drug control giving priority to the main regions affected by illicit cultivation, trafficking and abuse. The pursuit of subregional, regional and interregional cooperation between Governments remained one of the cornerstones of the UNDCP strategy.

Comprehensive programmes dealing with the different aspects of the drug problem were tailored to meet specific situations. To generate and strengthen the political commitment essential to counter the drug problem, UNDCP fostered subregional agreements and arrangements, particularly memoranda of understanding, between Governments in vulnerable areas, and galvanized political support for mutually supportive action. UNDCP furthered bilateral cooperation and understanding in the field of drug control by playing the role of an honest "broker", sponsoring direct consultations between concerned Governments, such as the programme for drug law enforcement cooperation in the border areas being carried out jointly by Iran, Pakistan and UNDCP, or the renewed cooperation between India, Pakistan and UNDCP.

Through its technical cooperation activities, mainly coordinated by its network of field offices, UNDCP continued to act as both catalyst and advocate in the area of drug control at the national level. In 1996, it supported national efforts and initiatives, giving particular attention to the establishment of coordinating and planning capacities, the adoption of legal frameworks to ensure implementation of the international drug-control treaties, and the strengthening of national capacities in demand reduction and law enforcement. In cooperation with INCB, UNDCP also assisted Governments in their efforts to prevent the diversion of drugs and their precursors into the illicit market. With the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the Secretariat, UNDCP launched a global programme valued at $ 4.3 million to support Governments in their efforts to counter money-laundering.

The operational focus of UNDCP included the development of a global approach and the strengthening of interregional links between ongoing regional and subregional cooperation programmes, particularly between programmes in countries in central and South-West Asia. In order to engage civil society in countering the drug problem, UNDCP strengthened its ties with NGOs; over 11 per cent of allocations from the Programme's Fund was disbursed through NGOs in 1996.

The Executive Director of UNDCP, in a report [E/CN.7/1997/2] to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, outlined UNDCP activities in 1996 on a regional basis, summaries of which follow.

Africa

In 1996, as a follow-up to a memorandum of understanding signed by UNDCP and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), UNDCP assisted the OAU secretariat in the preparation of the Plan of Action for Drug Control in Africa, through which African Governments reaffirmed their commitment to combat the drug problem. An expert forum on demand reduction in northern Africa was organized by UNDCP in Hammamet, Tunisia (1-5 July).

At the country level, UNDCP cooperated with 16 countries in western Africa, providing training, advisory assistance and equipment to support their national drug-control institutions. All but one of the western African countries had established inter-ministerial coordinating bodies entrusted with policy planning and coordination of national efforts, and more than 200 senior national officers benefited from training in legislation, law enforcement, health, social work and demand reduction. In eastern and southern Africa, UNDCP provided support to Kenya, Mauritius, Mozambique, Seychelles, Zambia and Zimbabwe in establishing or improving the functioning of national coordinating bodies or inter-ministerial bodies. In cooperation with the World Customs Organization (WCO), it provided training and equipment to Kenya, Madagascar, Malawi, Namibia, Swaziland and Zimbabwe to ensure the effective operation of the regional intelligence liaison office (RILO) network, which covered 15 countries in the subregion of eastern and southern Africa and improved the sharing and exchange of drug intelligence and the detection of new drug trafficking trends. UNDCP also provided support to Governments to enhance the effectiveness and capacity of law enforcement services, with particular emphasis given to Botswana, Malawi, Mozambique, South Africa, Swaziland and the United Republic of Tanzania.

In Ethiopia, a comprehensive drug abuse prevention pilot programme was launched, and in Zimbabwe, a UNDCP project on the development of a resource centre on drug and alcohol problems provided training to social workers and health-care personnel. To galvanize the support and involvement of civil society in drug control in Africa, UNDCP launched a special initiative to mobilize NGOs in eastern and southern Africa; to enhance the capacities of NGOs, a workshop was organized in Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania.

UNDCP contributed to the development of national drug-control master plans in Botswana, Burkina Faso, Ghana, Malawi, South Africa, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia. Morocco and Namibia approved their master plans in March.

Asia

A memorandum of understanding on drug control cooperation was signed in May by Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan, together with UNDCP, on the occasion of an inter-ministerial conference to establish drug control cooperation in central Asia.

Activities to strengthen surveillance capabilities of law enforcement agencies in the border areas of Iran and Pakistan were undertaken during the second year of a joint programme with UNDCP. The Governments of Iran and Pakistan proposed that the programme be extended to cover the border areas of Afghanistan, China and Pakistan and the border areas of Afghanistan, Iran and Turkmenistan.

As a follow-up to the memoranda of understanding signed by UNDCP and the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC), a regional workshop was held at the policy level in May in Sri Lanka, during which agreement was reached on a subregional strategy and on collaboration in the fields of drug law enforcement and demand reduction.

In its efforts to establish interregional linkages between subregional and regional cooperation programmes, UNDCP initiated a strategic link-up of five central Asian republics (Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan) with South-West Asia.

In 1996, national drug-control master plans were implemented by 11 States; UNDCP provided support to Bangladesh, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Nepal, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Viet Nam in the preparation and finalization of their master plans.

In August, at a UNDCP/INCB workshop for precursor control in Delhi, India, representatives of 13 countries in South and South-West Asia and the central Asian republics reviewed measures to prevent the diversion of precursors and considered ways to set up control and cooperation measures and procedures at the regional level.

UNDCP completed its second survey in Afghanistan on illicit opium cultivation and concluded that, with 55,000-58,000 hectares under opium poppy cultivation during the growing season 1995/96, the country continued to be one of the world's major producers of illicit opiates. UNDCP developed a four-year, $15.9 million drug control programme to provide assistance to Afghanistan and continued to assist the Government of Pakistan in the implementation of an alternative development programme to eliminate illicit poppy cultivation in the North-West Frontier province. Efforts to enhance the law enforcement capacities of Governments and support for national capacity-building programmes in the field of drug demand reduction in Bangladesh, India, Nepal and Pakistan continued.

Senior officials from Cambodia, China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, Thailand and Viet Nam met with representatives of UNDCP at Yangon, Myanmar, in May to review the progress made in implementing a 1995 sub-regional plan [YUN 1995, p. 1280]. UNDCP successfully completed its project on precursor control in South-East Asia in April, and initiated a sub-regional project to reduce drug abuse in the highlands of East Asia. It also provided assistance in law enforcement to China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar and Thailand.

Myanmar remained one of the world's major sources of illicit opiates, with opium production estimated to range from 1,000 to 2,500 tonnes in 1995/96. UNDCP approved a five-year alternative development programme, which included a strong mechanism for monitoring and verifying poppy cultivation and agreed drug control objectives.

Opium consumption in the rural areas of the Lao People's Democratic Republic decreased from 80 tonnes in 1995 to 50 tonnes in 1996; however, among resettled Lao refugees coming mainly from Thailand, a high rate of opium abuse was observed.

In Viet Nam, two of the six programmes referred to in the national drug-control master plan were launched with UNDCP support in 1996.

During the year, UNDCP supported the drug law enforcement training programme implemented by the South Pacific Forum. Training was provided to 100 police and customs officials from the area.

Europe and the Middle East

Following the signing of a memorandum of understanding in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1281], UNDCP provided assistance to strengthen the operational cross-border cooperation among drug law enforcement agencies in the Czech Republic, Hungary, Poland, Slovakia and Slovenia. At a follow-up meeting in October in Bratislava, Slovakia, ministers of those countries adopted a declaration in which they recognized the importance of the legal assistance provided by UNDCP.

At the country level, UNDCP promoted the upgrading of national licit drug control structures in 27 States. In the Balkans, where weakened judiciary and law enforcement agencies were facing strong pressure from criminal groups seeking to exploit the post-conflict situation by re-establishing drug trafficking routes, UNDCP provided, as a matter of priority, assistance to Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

In the Russian Federation, UNDCP initiated technical consultations on drug control cooperation in order to assess the current drug situation in the country, identify its priority needs and select areas for possible assistance.

An agreement on a two-year multi-sectoral drug control assistance package, aimed at upgrading the legal and institutional framework for drug control and enhancing operational drug law enforcement capacities, was signed by UNDCP and the Palestinian Authority in April. The second phase of an integrated area development programme in Lebanon's Beqa'a valley was initiated in October as part of a government programme which included the provision of large-scale assistance to the area following the successful eradication of illicit crops for four consecutive years.

Latin America and the Caribbean

In May, a number of Governments in Central America, including those of Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua and Panama, together with UNDCP, signed a memorandum of understanding on subregional drug-control cooperation. The parties agreed on the adoption and implementation of a common legal framework, the strengthening of the Permanent Central American Commission for the Eradication of the Illicit Production, Traffic, Consumption and Use of Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and the development of common subregional drug-abuse information systems.

As a follow-up to the memorandum of understanding adopted in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1237] by UNDCP and Argentina, Bolivia, Chile and Peru, advanced training courses were organized for senior law enforcement and judiciary officials from signatory States and observers from other countries. In May, the Regional Meeting on Drug Control Coordination in the Caribbean, organized by UNDCP, in conjunction with the Governments of Barbados and the EU, was held in Bridgetown, Barbados.

In the law enforcement sector, UNDCP supported operative and investigative training, providing equipment to law enforcement agencies and assisting in establishing and improving the functioning of national drug-control coordinating bodies, particularly in Brazil, Cuba and Ecuador. UNDCP provided support to Ecuador, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Peru and Uruguay in developing their national master plans.

In 1996, UNDCP continued to carry out its role as advocate, technical partner, coordinator and source of partial funding of alternative development interventions in the Andean subregion. UNDCP support contributed to the eradication of about 6,000 hectares of coca bush and the provision of services and alternative income-generating activities for about 30,000 farmers involved in illicit crop cultivation. In areas under coca bush cultivation in Bolivia and Peru, UNDCP was assisting in the formation of comprehensive alternative development activities.

With respect to preventive education programmes, in 1996 some 1.5 million youth in Latin America and the Caribbean were reached through campaigns to create awareness and the development of school curricula funded by UNDCP. In Colombia, UNDCP provided support to set up long-term national demand-reduction programmes within the ministries of health and education.

In the course of implementing the national demand-reduction plan of Brazil, five key areas (Ceara, São Paulo, Rio de Janeiro, Santa Catarina and Rio Grande do Sul) elaborated comprehensive demand-reduction plans, which emphasized drug abuse prevention among street children, intravenous drug abusers and women in urban slums.

In Mexico, there was further integration of programmes for the prevention of drug and alcohol abuse among workers and their families in the workplace. In the Bahamas, Barbados, Bolivia, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago and Venezuela, UNDCP made demand reduction programmes aimed at high-risk groups a priority, particularly children in especially difficult circumstances, street children, women in urban slums and intravenous drug abusers in major cities.

UNDCP cooperation with other bodies

Drug control in western and central Asia

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in an April resolution [E/1996/27 (res. 9(XXXIX))], requested UNDCP and donor countries to consider providing technical assistance in the development of special programmes, through bilateral and multilateral arrangements, for transit States in subregions affected by drug trafficking. It also requested them to consider further supporting their efforts to eliminate the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and chemical precursors through their territories, by extending to other countries of South-West Asia and to member States of CIS in central Asia the ongoing project designed to strengthen law enforcement in border areas of South-West Asia. It underlined the need to implement alternative development and crop substitution programmes to eliminate the production of illicit drugs, and requested UNDCP to seek the assistance of donor countries and to encourage multilateral development banks and international financial institutions to continue to assist countries producing drugs or affected by the drug problem to implement supply reduction programmes.

By the same resolution, the Commission welcomed the progress achieved by UNDCP in the development and implementation of regional strategies through close cooperation with regional and subregional organizations, including the 1995 memorandum of understanding between UNDCP and the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO) [YUN 1995, p. 1282], as well as various other memoranda of understanding between UNDCP and subregional organizations and groups of countries.

System-wide Action Plan

In 1989, the General Assembly asked [GA res. 44/141], the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), to coordinate, at the inter-agency level, the development of a United Nations system-wide action plan on drug abuse control, aimed at the full implementation of all existing mandates and subsequent decisions of intergovernmental bodies throughout the UN system, and using as a guide the Declaration of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, and the recommendations contained in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, both adopted in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 902, GA res. 42/112].

Following the consultations with UN bodies and agencies, the UN System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control was established in 1990 [E/1990/39, Corr.1,2]. It consisted of two main parts. Part One dealt with operational activities, in particular those of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC). Part Two outlined the role of the substantive drug control units of the UN Secretariat and of other UN entities and the specialized agencies. It focused on five areas: strengthening the licit drug control system; prevention and reduction of illicit demand for drugs; treatment and rehabilitation; elimination of the supply of drugs from illicit sources; and suppression of illicit drug traffic.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs in April [E/1996/27 (res. 8(XXXIX))] took note of the UNDCP Executive Director's report [E/CN.7/1996/14] on monitoring of the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control and other co-ordination matters. It noted with satisfaction the approach adopted by the Subcommittee on Drug Control of ACC in addressing the task of elaborating a revitalized System-wide Action Plan, as reflected in the initial version of the revised System-wide Action Plan, and requested the Executive Director of UNDCP to ensure that the work initiated by the Subcommittee was carried forward with as much determination and speed as possible.

In a May report [A/51/129- E/1996/53] on the implementation of the System-wide Action Plan, the Secretary-General presented a condensed version of the first six plans of action constituting the new Plan and addressing various aspects of demand reduction. The plans of action were: drug abuse prevention in the school environment; drug abuse prevention among children and youth in especially difficult circumstances; drug abuse prevention among rural youth; drug abuse prevention in the workplace; women and drug abuse: the gender dimension; and assessment of drug abuse: data collection.

The Secretary-General stated that the initial plans of action were all on demand reduction; themes on supply reduction and other sectors would follow in due course as the Plan developed. The constant updating of the Action Plan in the future would ensure that it became a living document rather than merely a status report. The plans of action reflected the different perspectives and priorities of the agencies involved, resulting in a blend that went beyond the mandates of UNDCP and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and would eventually contribute to a complete picture of drug abuse control, enriched by reference to related phenomena. The plans of action constituted the embryo of the new System-wide Action Plan; it was expected that agencies would use the Action Plan as a planning tool, helpful in assessing the level of activities in a given area and identifying priorities to be jointly addressed. As subsequent plans pertaining to various sectors were prepared, they would be grouped within a framework reflecting the areas of substantive concentration in international drug control. An annex to the report contained an overview of the interests and mandates of participating agencies.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/250, took note of the report of the Secretary-General.

The ACC Subcommittee on Drug Control, at its fourth session in Vienna (4-6 September) [ACC/1996/17], stated that considerable progress had been made in implementing the 1995 ACC decisions [YUN 1995, p. 1283] on system-wide cooperation and involvement in drug control matters, and emphasized the importance of agency involvement in preparing the envisaged special session of the General Assembly on drug control in 1998 (see above). More efforts would nevertheless be required, it reported, especially with regard to the establishment of country-level thematic groups on drug control and the integration of drug-related matters in the agendas of the agencies. The Subcommittee took note of the satisfaction expressed by Member States on progress made in implementing the revised arrangements for the Action Plan, and drew the attention of ACC to the low-cost methodology employed in the process.

The Subcommittee identified the themes to be developed in the second round of individual plans of action, and decided to ask the task force managers of the six individual plans of action of the first round to update them for fund-raising purposes. The new themes were: alternative development in zones of illicit crop cultivation; information management and data collection systems: their role in providing indicators of sustainable reductions in the production of illicit crops; drugs, imprisonment and alternative sentences; and drug abuse and trafficking in conflict and post-conflict situations. It also decided that the themes for the International Day against Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking in 1997 and 1998, respectively, would be "Mobilizing communities to prevent drug abuse" and "Youth uniting to prevent drug abuse".

The Subcommittee further dealt with a global overview of the situation regarding the illicit production of, trafficking in and demand for drugs; drug abuse and control issues related to major meetings and conferences; conclusions and decisions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its thirty-ninth (1996) session; review of progress in developing thematic plans of action; integration of drug abuse control issues into country strategy notes and other agency country programmes; collaboration with NGOs; and accessibility and exchange of information.

Global Programme of Action

The General Assembly, at its seventeenth special session in 1990, had adopted the Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action on international cooperation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances [GA res. S-17/2]. The Programme set out a comprehensive list of measures and activities to be undertaken by States and United Nations entities collectively and simultaneously in the fight against all aspects of drug abuse and illicit trafficking.

In the Political Declaration, the Assembly had declared the period from 1991 to the year 2000 as the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, to be devoted to effective and sustained national, regional and international actions to promote the implementation of the Global Programme.

Report of Secretary-General. In September, the Secretary-General reported [A/51/436] on the implementation of the Global Programme of Action, evaluating the progress made with regard to prevention and reduction of drug abuse with a view to eliminating the illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration of drug addicts; control and supply of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; suppression of illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; measures against the effects of money derived from, used in or intended for use in illicit drug trafficking, illegal financial flows and illegal use of the banking system; strengthening of judicial and legal systems, including law enforcement; measures against the diversion of arms and explosives and illicit drug trafficking by vessels, aircraft and vehicles; UN resources and structure for drug abuse control; and the UN Decade against Drug Abuse.

With respect to reducing the demand for illicit drugs, most Governments reported prevention and information campaigns on the dangers of drug abuse, most of which targeted young people. Although the number of Governments reporting the existence of a national strategy aimed at preventing and reducing the illicit demand for drugs was increasing, their overall number remained low. It was recommended that States draw up comprehensive and sustainable national demand-reduction strategies, carefully monitor their implementation and effectiveness and share their experiences with other States, either through UNDCP or bilaterally. The report said States should continue to count on NGOs as partners in drug abuse control, and, where feasible, extend cooperation to include other sectors of civil society. The report noted that the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1996/18, had requested that the UNDCP Executive Director continue to develop, in consultation with Member States, a draft declaration on the guiding principles of demand reduction (see below).

The Secretary-General stated that, while many Governments provided treatment for drug abusers, the number of facilities was often still insufficient, because of an upsurge in drug abuse, an increase in the number of abusers willing to undergo treatment or the absence of a national policy for the treatment, rehabilitation and social integration of drug abusers. He stated that States that were in the process of establishing specialized treatment facilities for drug abusers should ensure that programmes for treatment and rehabilitation were embedded in national policies. Governments should continue to involve NGOs in providing counselling and long-term support to former drug abusers.

Although some progress had been reported in certain areas, the eradication of illicit crops remained a daunting challenge, as illicit cultivation sites were often located in remote and mountainous areas. States should increase their efforts to eradicate illicit crops and, if necessary, request assistance for that purpose. There was a need to strengthen control mechanisms and operating procedures, particularly with a view to ensuring the timely relay of information relating to suspicious movements or transactions involving such substances.

Many States had concluded bilateral and regional agreements to facilitate operational cooperation in law enforcement matters, including cooperation in the execution or implementation of judicial processes such as extradition or mutual legal assistance, as set out in the 1988 United Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1988, p. 690]. States were invited to review their legislation with a view to ensuring that drug trafficking offences were defined as extraditable offences and included in existing or contemplated extradition treaties. States should also consider simplifying extradition proceedings.

In spite of efforts to strengthen interdiction capabilities in terms of resources allocated to suppression of illicit drug trafficking, there remained a need to strengthen the intelligence capacity of States. Governments should build intelligence systems and consider establishing a central entity responsible for the collection, analysis, research and dissemination of drug-related intelligence.

Several Governments reported preparing or enacting penal provisions on drug-related money-laundering offences and comprehensive legislation to enable investigation of such offences and provide for the confiscation of proceeds derived from illicit trafficking, in accordance with articles 3 and 5 of the 1988 Convention. In addition, States had implemented numerous measures to prevent criminal use of the banking system. As other institutions that handled large volumes of money were not always subject to the same stringent measures, States were encouraged to extend the measures to those institutions. Consideration should be given, the report said, to establishing systems to detect suspicious imports of cash at border crossings and to the possibility of using forfeited proceeds for drug control activities, including contributing to drug-related UN projects.

Implementation of resolution 48/12

In 1993, the General Assembly, at its forty-eighth session, convened four high-level plenary meetings on international cooperation in drug control, culminating in the adoption of resolution 48/12, which set out measures to strengthen international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances [YUN 1993, p. 1095].

Report of Executive Director. In response to a 1995 Commission on Narcotic Drugs request [YUN 1995, p. 1284], the Executive Director of UNDCP in February presented recommendations [E/CN.7/1996/3] on measures to strengthen international cooperation, reflecting comments and information provided by Governments. As at 1 February, substantive replies had been received from Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Colombia, Peru, South Africa and the United Kingdom. The recommendations emanating from the Executive Director's first report [YUN 1995, p. 1289] in 1995 were regrouped into four categories, taking into account, inter alia, the substantive content and the magnitude of programme budget implications. The recommendations concerned matters related to the functioning of the international drug control treaties, the convening of conferences or other meetings, additional activities undertaken by UNDCP and recommendations addressed to States or contained in reports of subsidiary bodies.

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs held its thirty-ninth annual session in Vienna from 16 to 25 April. It adopted 10 resolutions on various drug control issues.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/249 of 23 July, took note of the Commission's report [E/1996/27] on its thirty-ninth session.

On the same date, by decision 1996/246, the Council approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's fortieth (1997) session.

Major issues in 1996

Demand reduction

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its thirty-ninth session, considered reports concerned with the reduction of illicit demand for drugs. The Commission was informed, in a report [E/CN.7/1996/5] on the world drug abuse situation, that drug abuse was continuing to rise. Even in the few instances where a decrease had been reported, there was usually a commensurate rise in the abuse of another drug used as a substitute because its price was lower or the drug of choice was not available. Opiate abuse had continued to spread in Asia, was a problem in southern Africa and Europe and appeared to be gaining ground in many countries. While cocaine abuse continued to be a problem in countries in the Americas and some European countries, there were some reports of a decrease in its abuse; in some cases, amphetamines seemed to be replacing cocaine. Cannabis was abused virtually throughout the world. Patterns of abuse showed that the practice of abusing drugs by injection had continued to spread, together with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). The report also described problems in estimating the extent, patterns and trends of drug abuse, as data were derived from many different bases, making direct comparison difficult. Different countries had adopted different approaches in attempting to solve the problem.

The Commission had before it a report [E/CN.7/1996/7] by the UNDCP secretariat on regional cooperation in demand reduction. It informed the Commission regarding five subregional expert forums on demand reduction and two international private-sector conferences on drugs in the workplace and the community, held in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/35 [YUN 1993, p. 1101], which encouraged the establishment of a regional and international system for the regular exchange of information, experiences, training programmes and new ideas on demand reduction programmes and policies. The forums concluded that regional cooperation was a fundamental requirement for confronting the problem of drug abuse and that the business sector needed to be in partnership with the community if it was to be successful.

In February, the UNDCP Executive Director submitted, in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/16 [YUN 1995, p. 1286], a note [E/CN.7/1996/4] to the Commission on the draft declaration on the guiding principles of reduction of illicit demand for drugs. The Executive Director consulted with Governments and international organizations, and invited them to indicate the key elements and priorities for international drug demand reduction, which might, in their view, be usefully included in the draft declaration on the guiding principles of demand reduction. Action by the UNDCP secretariat and action required by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in preparing a draft declaration were described. A proposed outline of the draft declaration as well as preliminary comments and proposals for consideration in the preparation of the draft declaration were annexed to the note.

Pursuant to Council resolution 1995/16, the UNDCP Executive Director, in a March report [E/CN.7/1996/8], defined the UNDCP strategy for demand reduction. He identified three main objectives of the strategy: to provide Governments with information on the nature, patterns and trends in drug abuse, for use in formulating drug-control policy; to identify effective methodologies and programmes for demand reduction in different socio-economic and cultural contexts; and to increase the effectiveness of measures undertaken at the national level to prevent and reduce drug abuse. The report described implementation strategies for each objective.

The Commission also had before it an April report [E/CN.7/1996/6] by the UNDCP secretariat on primary and secondary prevention of drug abuse. Primary prevention approaches included awareness campaigns, perinatal and pre-school developmental interventions, in-school education, youth programmes and drug testing. Secondary prevention consisted of reducing drug abuse through different forms of treatment and rehabilitation. In many States, aspects of both primary and secondary prevention often operated parallel to, or in conjunction with, tertiary prevention approaches aimed at reducing health risks to persistent drug abusers. Evidence suggested that the efficacy of primary prevention was increasingly being called into question, while there appeared to be evidence that secondary prevention could reduce demand, and, under some conditions, result in abstinence.

A Commission resolution [4(XXXIX)] invited member States to take steps to draw up national plans on demand reduction which would be balanced with programmes on supply reduction and to enhance their primary and secondary prevention programmes directed at youth, who were the group most at risk, including by the establishment of national committees on "Sports against drugs". It requested the UNDCP Executive Director to consider organizing forums on demand reduction at the regional level, the agendas of which could include items dealing with the sharing of expertise, information on demand reduction, treatment and training arrangements, developing national databases and cooperation with law enforcement agencies in the region, as well as to examine the possibility of parallel but separate meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies.

In another resolution [res. 2(XXXIX)], the Commission invited UNDCP, in cooperation with the International Olympic Committee, to finalize a global programme on "Sport against drugs", designed to promote the use of sports to prevent drug abuse, and to that end, to adopt adequate measures to ensure the implementation of a February 1995 agreement between UNDCP and the International Olympic Committee. It encouraged Governments to establish national committees on "Sport against drugs", involving NGOs, national sports federations, national Olympic committees and individual athletes. It also requested UNDCP to consider extending its support and expertise to such committees, in the framework of the 1995 agreement with the International Olympic Committee. UNDCP was invited to disseminate messages related to the theme "Sport against drugs" at the Atlanta Olympic Games in the United States and at other major international sports events.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/18.

Draft declaration on the guiding principles of demand reduction

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1995/16 of 24 July 1995 on the integration of demand reduction initiatives into a cohesive strategy to combat drug abuse,

Recalling the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control adopted by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, and its resolution 1991/46 of 21 June 1991,

Acknowledging the Political Declaration and Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session, on 23 February 1990,

Reaffirming the importance of its resolution 1993/35 of 27 July 1993 on demand reduction as part of balanced national strategic plans to combat drug abuse and the need to ensure its implementation,

Recognizing that demand reduction encompasses prevention, treatment and rehabilitation, as well as social reintegration,

Believing that optimum effectiveness in drug abuse control would best be achieved through a balanced approach, applying the appropriate emphasis and resources to initiatives involving both demand and supply reduction and integrating such initiatives into a cohesive and comprehensive strategy,

Also believing that effectiveness in combating drug abuse is enhanced by cooperation and the combined efforts of all sectors of society, including those of voluntary and non-governmental organizations,

1. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to continue to develop a draft declaration on the guiding principles of demand reduction in consultation with Member States, with due regard to the linkages between demand and supply reduction activities;

2. Also requests the Executive Director to further develop such a draft declaration and, if necessary, to convene a working group with expertise in demand reduction to assist him in this task, using voluntary resources made available by Member States expressly for that purpose;

3. Further requests the Executive Director to report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its fortieth session on the progress made in developing the draft declaration and to submit a timetable leading to its adoption.

Supply reduction

Availability of opiates for licit needs

In 1996, INCB monitored the availability of opiates for medical and scientific needs, and published a special report entitled Availability of Opiates for Medical Needs [Sales No. E.96.XI.6], based on the findings of its study [YUN 1995, p. 1287] initiated in 1995. The report also evaluated the extent to which the recommendations contained in its 1989 report [E/INCB/1989/1/Suppl.] on the availability of narcotic drugs, including opiates, had been implemented.

Based on responses from Governments, the World Health Organization (WHO) and professional organizations, the Board concluded that the recommendations contained in its 1989 special report were far from having been implemented, and though there had been efforts by some Governments to ensure the availability of narcotic drugs for medical and scientific purposes, it appeared that many others had yet to focus on that obligation.

The Board believed that an efficient national drug-control regime should involve not only a programme to prevent illicit trafficking and diversion, but should also ensure the adequate availability of narcotic drugs for medical and scientific purposes. Governments that had done little or nothing to remove obstacles to the legitimate use of narcotic drugs should, in line with the recommendations contained in the Board's 1989 report, critically examine their methods for assessing medical needs for narcotic drugs and take measures to ensure their availability. It maintained that, if the recommendation contained in its special report on the availability of opiates for medical needs were implemented, significantly more progress would be achieved towards ensuring adequate availability of narcotic drugs for medical and scientific purposes.

The Board noted that among those Governments that did not respond to its survey questionnaire were most of the developing and least developed countries (LDCs), as well as those Governments that frequently failed to submit their annual estimates of narcotic drug requirements as required by the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs [YUN 1961, p. 382]. While fully aware of the difficulties facing LDCs in meeting basic health-care needs, the Board encouraged Governments of such countries to make efforts to examine their medical needs for narcotic drugs, as well as the impediments to their availability, to advise the Board of the results of those efforts and to inform it of any assistance required.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/19.

Demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/8 of 9 May 1979, 1980/20 of 30 April 1980, 1981/8 of 6 May 1981, 1982/12 of 30 April 1982, 1983/3 of 24 May 1983, 1984/21 of 24 May 1984, 1985/16 of 28 May 1985, 1986/9 of 21 May 1986, 1987/31 of 26 May 1987, 1988/10 of 25 May 1988, 1989/15 of 22 May 1989, 1990/31 of 24 May 1990, 1991/43 of 21 June 1991, 1992/30 of 30 July 1992, 1993/37 of 27 July 1993, 1994/5 of 20 July 1994 and 1995/19 of 24 July 1995,

Emphasizing that the need to balance the global licit supply of opiates against the legitimate demand for opiates for medical and scientific purposes is central to the international strategy and policy of drug abuse control,

Noting the fundamental need for international cooperation and solidarity with the traditional supplier countries in drug-abuse control in general and in the universal application of the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 in particular,

Having considered the Report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1995, in which it is stated that in 1994 global consumption of opiates exceeded the production of opiate raw materials, and that in 1995 increased licit production in the two traditional producing countries, India and Turkey, maintained, together with the other producing countries, the balance between supply and demand,

Noting the importance of opiates in pain relief therapy as advocated by the World Health Organization,

1. Urges all Governments to continue contributing to the maintenance of a balance between the licit supply of and demand for opiates for medical and scientific needs, the achievement of which would be facilitated by maintaining, in so far as their constitutional and legal systems permit, support to the traditional supplier countries, and to cooperate in preventing the proliferation of sources of production and manufacture for export;

2. Urges Governments of all producing countries to adhere strictly to the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and to take effective measures to prevent illicit production or diversion of opiate raw materials to illicit channels;

3. Urges consumer countries to assess and communicate to the International Narcotics Control Board their real needs for opiates to ensure easy supply;

4. Commends the International Narcotics Control Board for its efforts in monitoring the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the Economic and Social Council and, in particular:

(a) In urging the Governments concerned to adjust global production of opiate raw materials to a level corresponding to the actual licit needs and to avoid any proliferation of production;

(b) In convening meetings during sessions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to enable the main States importing and producing opiate raw materials to discuss maintaining a balance between licit demand for and supply of opiates;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

Diversion of psychotropic substances for illicit use

In its 1996 report [E/INCB/1996/1], INCB stated that significant quantities of psychotropic substances were diverted from licit domestic distribution channels into illicit traffic. The substances were sold by traffickers for local abuse or were smuggled into other countries where illicit markets for the substances existed. In 1996, for example, several million tablets containing diazepam and chlordiazepoxide manufactured in Asia were seized in Nigeria during smuggling attempts. Similarly, large quantities of flunitrazepam tablets originating in some countries in Latin America were seized in the United States.

The Board encouraged all Governments to cooperate closely to identify the companies and individuals involved in the diversion of psychotropic substances from domestic distribution channels. Governments of countries where large seizures were made should always provide relevant information to the Government of the country where the diversion originally took place, in conformity with the provisions of article 21 of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1971, p. 380]. Governments should endeavour to obtain the cooperation of pharmaceutical manufacturers and distributors in the prevention of diversion and the investigation of diversion cases.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/30.

Measures to combat diversion of psychotropic substances and to establish effective control over operations carried out by intermediaries in international trade in psychotropic substances

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the need to give full effect to the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971, in order to effectively combat diversion and abuse of psychotropic substances,

Noting that difficulties encountered by certain countries in introducing control measures provided for in the 1971 Convention have been central to the problem of diversion of psychotropic substances involving intermediaries,

Recalling its resolutions 1991/44 of 21 June 1991 and 1993/38 of 27 July 1993 on measures to enhance controls of international trade in psychotropic substances,

Noting that intermediaries have been involved in major cases of diversion and attempted diversion of psychotropic substances,

Noting also that the situation is further exacerbated by the fact that some countries complying with the requirements of the 1971 Convention and of its resolutions are allowing the export of psychotropic substances to countries in which effective import or export controls have not yet been implemented,

Recalling that in its resolution 1993/38 on measures to prevent substances listed in Schedules III and IV of the 1971 Convention from being diverted from international trade into illicit channels, it invited Governments, inter alia, to exercise continuing vigilance to ensure that operations of brokers and transit operators are not used for the diversion of psychotropic substances into illicit channels,

Noting with satisfaction the relevant activities carried out jointly by the International Narcotics Control Board and the Pompidou Group of the Council of Europe and, in particular, the conclusions and recommendations of the International Narcotics Control Board/Pompidou Group Expert Consultation on Control of Brokers and Transit Operators Handling Psychotropic Substances and Precursors, held at Vienna from 3 to 5 May 1995, as well as those of their Conference on Control of International Trade in Psychotropic Substances in Europe, held at Strasbourg, France, from 18 to 20 October 1995,

Recognizing the increasingly important role of the International Narcotics Control Board in facilitating the detection and interdiction of the suspected diversion of psychotropic substances,

1. Invites Governments that have not already done so to establish, as a matter of priority, competent authorities for the control of psychotropic substances and to notify the Secretary-General of the identity of those authorities, including details of addresses;

2. Also invites Governments to take appropriate measures, with the assistance of the International Narcotics Control Board, to prevent shipments of psychotropic substances in excess of the annual domestic requirements for licit purposes to countries which have not yet implemented effective controls over international trade in those substances;

3. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to establish assessments of annual licit domestic requirements of psychotropic substances for countries that have not yet submitted such assessments;

4. Invites Governments of exporting countries to exercise the utmost vigilance over import orders for psychotropic substances received from countries considered to have deficient control regimes, particularly in order to prevent uncontrolled re-exports, and to ensure that exports to free ports and free trade zones are avoided if controls over re-exports have not been established;

5. Calls upon all Governments which do not yet control international trade in all psychotropic substances listed in Schedules III and IV of the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 by using the system of import and export authorizations urgently to consider the establishment of such a system;

6. Also calls upon all Governments for which it is not immediately feasible to control the export of substances listed in Schedules III and IV of the 1971 Convention by means of the system of export authorizations to make use of other mechanisms, such as the system of pre-export declarations;

7. Calls upon all Governments to consider the establishment of control measures for intermediaries, including registration on licensing and record-keeping requirements, as well as the enactment of regulatory and criminal sanctions for intermediaries facilitating diversions;

8. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to study, in consultation with Governments, the feasibility of formulating specific guidelines for use by Governments on the control of intermediaries involved in international trade in psychotropic substances, on the basis of the conclusions and recommendations of the International Narcotics Control Board/Pompidou Group Expert Consultation on Control of Brokers and Transit Operators Handling Psychotropic Substances and Precursors, held at Vienna from 3 to 5 May 1995;

9. Invites Governments of exporting countries, in seeking to verify the legitimacy of suspicious export transactions, to establish or reinforce bilateral contacts with Governments of importing countries and, if necessary, to request the assistance of the International Narcotics Control Board;

10. Invites all Governments and relevant international bodies to ensure the rapid flow of communications, including the use of electronic means of data exchange;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to propose to the General Assembly, in order to implement the present resolution, any modification in the programme of work of the Secretariat that may be necessary for the allocation of adequate resources to the United Nations International Drug Control Programme in the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

Stimulants and the use of their precursors in the illicit manufacture of and trafficking in drugs

Expert meetings. Pursuant to a 1995 Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/20 [YUN 1995, p. 1289] requesting a thorough study of stimulants and the use of their precursors in illicit trafficking, two expert meetings were held in 1996 on amphetamine-type stimulants (ATS), one in Vienna (16-25 April) and the other in Shanghai, China (25-29 November). In April, the UNDCP secretariat issued a report [E/CN.7/1996/12] outlining the first phase of implementation of the resolution, describing approaches adopted in the study by UNDCP, as well as an overview of the principal findings of the study and the Vienna expert meeting.

The first meeting was conceived as a technical fact-finding exercise, aimed at defining the problem in terms of its magnitude, characteristics, trends and social and economic implications, and at comparing it to problems involving opiates and heroin. The approach was determined by the complex scientific nature of the subject-matter to be covered. The expert group considered a study by the UNDCP secretariat entitled "Amphetamine-type stimulants; a global review". One of the principal findings of the study was that the control system worked well on the licit side of the equation. On the illicit side, by contrast, the control system was far more limited, since illicit production of and trafficking in ATS had increased over the last two decades and had even surpassed the corresponding rates for cocaine and heroin in the 1990s. That general trend was an aggregation of trends for individual substances within the group and for different parts of the world. The report concluded that it was apparent that traditional drug-control approaches to this enormously flexible clandestine industry offered limited chances of success, and even might have contributed, quite inadvertently, to the shifts from the licit to the illicit areas of manufacture, as well as to the capacity of illicit markets to stay one step ahead of controls. It appeared that synthetic drugs, particularly ATS, would be a problem of the twenty-first century. The evidence in the study seemed to show that synthetic drugs had the potential to become a global problem of a magnitude greater than that posed by the plant-based narcotic drugs.

The second meeting [E/CN.7/1997/6] was conceived as a policy-oriented undertaking. It reviewed national and international regulatory regimes pertaining to ATS and their precursors and recommended policies and countermeasures. The meeting's conclusions and recommendations focused on four main issues: reversing the trend of ATS abuse becoming a part of mainstream consumer culture; the dilemma of controlling the exchange of information about ATS; reducing economic incentives and limiting the availability of precursors for clandestine manufacture; and closing legislative and regulatory gaps.

The meeting recognized and drew attention to the grave threat posed by the abuse of ATS, which had begun as a localized phenomenon but had spread to all regions of the world. Several factors contributed to the surge in ATS abuse. On the supply side, economic incentives were powerful. In some countries, clandestine manufacture of methamphetamine could lead to profits of nearly 3,000 per cent of the cost of raw material. Such profitability derived from several factors: the accessibility and abundance of precursors, which suggested that clandestine manufacture could be carried out by non-specialists and close to the points of final consumption; fewer stages in the chain of distribution and the involvement of fewer individuals; and shorter distances, reducing the scope for effective interdiction. In addition, detailed information about the manufacture of ATS was available to the public through the Internet and other such networks. In nearly every region of the world, demand was strongly driven by social, cultural and economic forces that had come together during the past few decades. Compared with cocaine, ATS was less expensive, had a longer effect and carried a relatively benign image. That image was not only common among the general public, but also in institutions handling substance-abuse problems. The drug control focus at both the national and international levels was still overwhelmingly on the plant-based narcotic drugs, and the threat of ATS was often underestimated.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/29.

Action to strengthen international cooperation to control precursors and their substitutes used in the illicit manufacture of controlled substances, in particular amphetamine-type stimulants, and to prevent their diversion

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned about the economic and social consequences of the rapid and widespread increase in illicit manufacturing, trafficking and use of amphetamine-type stimulants throughout the world,

Concerned about the continued availability of chemicals listed in tables I and II of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 to drug traffickers for use in the illicit clandestine production of controlled substances,

Alarmed that in some cases traffickers have swiftly and successfully sought non-scheduled substitute chemicals for those scheduled chemicals that have become more scarce as a result of international control,

Concerned that clandestine laboratory operators are seeking international sources for substances listed in table I of the 1988 Convention, which are often contained in tablets and capsules, thus undermining the effectiveness of international controls of those products and thwarting the goals of article 12 of the Convention and of the international community,

Dismayed that, despite concerted international control efforts, listed chemicals continue to be accessible to traffickers through the activities of producers of illicit drugs or unscrupulous brokers and intermediaries, who facilitate trade but are not themselves end-users,

Aware that many Governments lack adequate resources to enable them to conduct the in-depth investigations that may be needed to determine the legitimate need for an intended export or import of a listed chemical,

Aware of the progress in control of chemical shipments resulting from cooperation between competent national authorities in a number of countries, and with the assistance of the International Narcotics Control Board,

Recognizing the need for the international community to strengthen countermeasures against the illicit manufacturing, trafficking and use of amphetamine-type stimulants and their precursors,

Noting with appreciation the results of the expert forum on amphetamine-type stimulants held at Vienna from 12 to 16 February 1996,

Recognizing the important role of the Board in monitoring and facilitating implementation of the measures to strengthen international cooperation to prevent diversion of substances listed in table I of the 1988 Convention and used in the illicit manufacture of stimulants and other psychotropic substances, as detailed in its resolution 1995/20 of 24 July 1995,

Noting also with appreciation the publications entitled Report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1995 and Precursors and Chemicals Frequently Used in the Illicit Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances: Report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1995 on the Implementation of Article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988,

Recalling its resolution 1995/20,

Realizing that it may not be practical to schedule all chemicals and substances used to produce illicit drugs,

I

Special surveillance of scheduled and non-scheduled substances

1. Calls upon all States parties to the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 to enact any legislation necessary to provide their competent authorities with the legal basis fully to implement the chemical controls required or recommended by the Convention and all related resolutions;

2. Calls upon the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the International Narcotics Control Board, drawing upon the expertise of competent national authorities as needed, to establish a limited international special surveillance list of non-scheduled substances for which substantial information exists of their use in illicit drug trafficking, in order to allow, according to the nature and trade patterns of each product, for appropriate measures to prevent use by traffickers of those substances;

3. Urges all States parties to the 1988 Convention to establish arrangements, whether voluntary, administrative or legislative, whereby their domestic exporters, importers and distributors of the chemicals and substances included in the special surveillance list will report suspicious orders or thefts of such chemicals and cooperate with national enforcement and control authorities with regard to those chemicals and substances;

4. Urges States parties to the 1988 Convention, subject to their legal provisions, to take civil, criminal or administrative action, as appropriate, against suppliers of scheduled substances or, where possible, substances included in the special surveillance list for failure to cooperate with the authorities with regard to those substances;

5. Strongly urges States that export scheduled chemicals not to permit exports of such chemicals listed in tables I and II of the 1988 Convention in sensitive cases which may be identified by the Board, or to brokers or intermediaries who facilitate trade, but are not themselves end-users, unless prior identification of any genuine consignee and such inquiries as may be appropriate are also made;

6. Further urges States, in accordance with their legal provisions, not to permit the importation of chemicals listed in tables I and II of the 1988 Convention where a risk of diversion exists, until evidence establishes the legitimacy of the importer and the purpose of the chemical import;

7. Urges States, except in cases where a known risk of diversion exists, and prior to permitting the importation of chemicals listed in tables I and II of the 1988 Convention, to require, in accordance with their legal provisions, evidence of legitimacy of importers and domestic distributors of those chemicals which are intended for subsequent sale or delivery to bulk domestic distributors;

8. Urges Governments to consider ways of reinforcing international cooperation, including, where appropriate, bilateral and multilateral arrangements or agreements against the diversion of scheduled substances and their substitutes;

9. Invites Governments that have not yet done so to designate, as a matter of priority, authorities competent for the control of scheduled substances, to inform the Secretary-General that they have taken such action and to enhance the establishment of bilateral relations between importing, exporting and transit countries.

II

Recommendations for action

1. Urges Governments to implement specific actions to control scheduled chemicals as requested in its resolution 1995/20;

2. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to collect and compile data that would establish a pattern of trade in chemicals listed in tables I and II of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, including any significant volume of transactions, to draw the attention of the competent authorities of countries concerned to any irregularities that the Board, in its judgement, may identify, and to invite those authorities to provide the Board with any additional information, as necessary, and to take appropriate action, especially preventive action; such action by Governments, both importing and exporting, ought to include:

(a) Consulting with and providing relevant data to the Board in conformity with legal requirements of confidentiality and data protection, where concern exists that an export or transshipment of such chemicals or substances may be diverted to the illicit traffic;

(b) Verification by the importing country of the legitimacy of transactions on the basis of pre-export notifications of such substances to be sent by the exporting countries as provided for in article 12 of the Convention of 1988;

(c) Not permitting the export of substances listed in tables I and II of the 1988 Convention, and, where possible, substances included in the special surveillance list, to areas of special risk where it is known that they are commonly used to produce illicit drugs, until information is available to establish the legitimate purpose of the chemicals or substances to be imported;

3. Requests that, pursuant to the initiatives taken by the International Narcotics Control Board in accordance with paragraph 2 above, the Governments of exporting and importing countries and territories verify the legitimacy of the individual transactions concerned and prevent the release of such shipments until the competent authority of the importing country or territory has, in compliance with the time constraints of the exporting country, indicated that it has no objection to the transaction in question;

4. Recommends that, wherever possible, Governments should obtain early notification from operators of all proposed transactions of substances listed in table I of the 1988 Convention in order to check their legitimacy, and inform other countries and territories accordingly, in compliance with the provisions of that Convention;

5. Requests all Governments of countries and territories to alert other Governments, as appropriate, through the Board, as soon as diversion attempts are identified, and to cooperate in controlled deliveries, if necessary, in order to prevent traffickers from turning to other countries or regions to obtain the precursors they require;

6. Urges Governments with free ports and free trade zones to closely monitor, in particular, the movement of amphetamine-type stimulants and scheduled substances under the 1988 Convention through such trading centres, pursuant to the Convention, and to provide for a mechanism to seize consignments when adequate grounds for suspicion have been established;

7. Requests Governments with free ports and free trade zones to provide information as requested by the Board in order to strengthen measures to monitor the movement of the amphetamine-type stimulants and scheduled substances under the 1988 Convention in those ports and zones;

8. Encourages Governments of countries and territories to examine the scope of their current controls over domestic distribution in order to prevent internal diversion of scheduled substances under the 1988 Convention, which could be subsequently smuggled to neighbouring countries where illicit manufacture of drugs takes place;

9. Invites Governments to consider monitoring the intermediaries and brokers who facilitate trade but are not themselves end-users by appropriate measures, such as applying the current control procedures and resorting to the sanctions applicable to other operators that handle or use controlled substances;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to convene, in accordance with the mandate established in Council resolution 1995/20, a second expert meeting of drug-control authorities and policy-making representatives of interested Governments in order to propose comprehensive countermeasures against illicit manufacturing, trafficking and use of amphetamine-type stimulants and their precursors;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and in consultation with the International Narcotics Control Board, to seek the views of interested Governments on the nature and content of the comprehensive countermeasures prior to the second expert meeting;

12. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to examine the proposed comprehensive countermeasures at its fortieth session, on the basis of the results of the second expert meeting;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to propose to the General Assembly, in order to implement the present resolution, any modification in the programme of work of the Secretariat that may be necessary for the allocation of adequate resources to the United Nations International Drug Control Programme in the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General, having in mind the recommendations of the Chemical Action Task Force established by the heads of State or Government of the seven major industrialized countries and the President of the Commission of the European Communities to consult in writing with the parties concerned:

(a) To examine to what extent those recommendations have been implemented;

(b) To suggest further measures to prevent diversions to the illicit manufacture of stimulants;

15. Further requests the Secretary-General to prepare a summary of the replies received and to submit a report, if possible, to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its fortieth session;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

Crop-based drugs

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs had before it a report [E/CN.7/1996/11] on crops from which drugs were extracted and appropriate strategies for their eradication. It described trends in hectareage of global illicit cultivation, examined eradication efforts and their impact on illicit cultivation at the national and global levels and provided figures on illicit cultivation and eradication. The report also reviewed the distinction between alternative development efforts, on the one hand, and both crop substitution and more general economic development efforts on the other. The report stated that only two instances of absolute reductions in illicit cultivation had been recorded at the national level, in Thailand and Turkey, both cases occurring prior to recent severalfold increases in global cultivation of opium poppy. The reduction in opium poppy cultivation in Turkey coincided with increases in the opium supply from Mexico (for the heroin market in the United States) and from parts of Asia. The reduction in opium cultivation in Thailand was more than accounted for at the global level by increases in neighbouring Myanmar. Hence, even the impact of those cases of absolute reduction at the national level was greatly diluted at the global level. The other major supplier that came close to absolute reductions at the national level due to intense eradication efforts was Mexico in the mid-1970s, which by 1994 had substantial areas of illicit cultivation. Large increases in illicit cultivation in Afghanistan might partly account for reductions in illicit cultivation in Pakistan. At both the national and global levels, the adaptability of the illicit market caused by robust economic incentives was reflected in the "balloon effect", or the displacement or replacement of illicit crops, and had served to reduce the overall efficacy of measures to reduce illicit cultivation. Nevertheless, successful efforts at the national level to eliminate or reduce illicit cultivation might have helped to curb the rise in total global production.

In three of the five Asian countries where opium cultivation was tackled by UN alternative development efforts, partial reductions were recorded in some instances. In Thailand, the major reduction occurred before the bulk of UN drug-control investment in alternative development was made, and decreases in Pakistan were largely due to law enforcement and reduced opium prices, although alternative development might have sustained reduction efforts in some areas. Of the two programmatic activities in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, one recorded no reduction in illicit cultivation, and the other recorded some decrease within the context of general reductions for the country as a whole.

There was no evidence that the progressive limited reduction of coca bush within project areas in Latin America had had an effect in the aggregate. In Lebanon, illicit cultivation of opium poppy and cannabis was reduced in the 1990s through eradication, whereas alternative development efforts in Morocco did not reduce cannabis cultivation. Lack of a clear emphasis on drug control at the project level until the early 1990s, combined with the lack of parallel implementation of drug control legislation, might have contributed to the failure to achieve measurable success in some areas.

The report concluded that the last two decades had seen significant progress in developing an understanding of the dynamics of illicit crop cultivation and related drug control strategies. Experience had shown that some programmes might be effective in promoting development, encouraging the growth of licit agricultural and other economic activities, and reducing the level of illicit cultivation in targeted areas. In addition to implementing the provisions of the international drug-control treaties, such programmes might benefit from having a national and regional focus which could improve the prospect of their achieving a substantial reduction in the cultivation of illicit crops over the long term.

Illicit trafficking

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs continued in 1996 to consider various aspects of illicit drug trafficking. It examined a report [E/CN.7/1996/9] concerning global trends and recent developments regarding illicit traffic in opiates, cocaine, cannabis, psychotropic substances and precursors. The report stated that trafficking in both heroin and cocaine had increased rapidly in the 1980s, appeared to stabilize in the early 1990s, but increased again in 1993 and 1994. While trafficking in cannabis herb still dominated the global situation with regard to trafficking in cannabis, trafficking in cannabis resin had been increasing and indoor cannabis cultivation continued to rise in many developed countries. It was possible that international trafficking in cannabis could decline if indoor hydroponic cultivation of cannabis for domestic consumption continued to increase. In other areas, there had been a strong increase in trafficking in stimulants in the 1990s. Trafficking in certain precursors might have declined in recent years, perhaps as a result of improved drug control efforts since the adoption of the 1988 Convention [YUN 1988, p. 690]. There was a strong possibility, however, that the apparent decline reflected a shift towards the use of substitute products or other manufacturing techniques. Regarding action against drug trafficking, the report stated that the global interdiction rate for cocaine was significantly above that for heroin, reversing the pattern for the early 1980s, a development almost certainly due to greater law enforcement efforts. However, the mechanisms of the illicit market were such that the high seizure rate did not cause a proportionate reduction in consumption. Further investigation of such issues might assist the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in its efforts to monitor the implementation of those aspects of the international drug-control treaties that related to illicit drug trafficking. There had been a dramatic increase in seizures of methaqualone and other depressants, which might indicate increased trafficking in those substances. The seizures were concentrated among a small number of countries. In 1994, India reported having seized 45 tonnes of methaqualone, 85 per cent of the total amount reported seized worldwide. The Philippines reported having seized 7 tonnes of methaqualone in 1994, 13 per cent of the global total. The remainder of the world accounted for only 2 per cent of the methaqualone seized worldwide. For depressants other than methaqualone, in 1994 the United States reported the most units seized: over 25 million units, or 95 per cent of the total number of units seized worldwide. While the extent to which different illicit drugs competed with one another was largely unknown, it was possible that increasing trafficking in substances in the ATS group could have an impact upon cocaine trafficking in the longer term.

Emphasizing that the 1988 Convention required each party to make money-laundering a criminal offence, the Commission, in April [res. 5(XXXIX)], urged States to prohibit banks and other financial institutions from offering accounts identified only by number, anonymous accounts or accounts in obviously false names, and recommended that States require banks and other financial institutions to take reasonable measures to determine the true identity of persons on whose behalf an account was opened or a transaction was conducted. It urged States to broaden money-laundering countermeasures, combined with various effective administrative, civil and criminal measures, to include the transit, conversion or other disposition of illegal proceeds from serious crime.

Subsidiary bodies

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs had before it a note by the UNDCP secretariat [E/CN.7/1996/10] on reports from subsidiary bodies, containing a synopsis of recent action by Governments to improve regional and subregional cooperation in drug control activities in regions where meetings of subsidiary bodies had been held since the thirty-eighth (1995) session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. The following meetings of the heads of national drug law enforcement agencies (HONLEA) took place in 1995: Eighth Meeting of HONLEA, Africa (Kampala, Uganda, 23-27 October); Twentieth Meeting of HONLEA, Asia and the Pacific (Jakarta, Indonesia, 18-22 November); and Seventh Meeting of HONLEA, Latin America and the Caribbean (Havana, Cuba, 9-13 October). The working groups established by the Meetings addressed urgent issues arising in each region, and, in line with the objective of countering illicit drug traffic worldwide, recommended measures to facilitate the implementation of specific provisions of the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN1988,p.690]. Although some of the topics discussed were specific to particular regions, the working group recommendations reflected two major recurring themes: the need to establish national drug-related intelligence systems and the need for adequate training for drug law enforcement personnel. The traditional agenda item on the current situation and most recent trends in illicit drug traffic in the respective regions was replaced by a new agenda item entitled "Current situation with respect to regional and subregional cooperation". The HONLEA Meetings also reviewed government action to implement the recommendations adopted at previous Meetings. As had often been the case in the past, only a small number of Governments responded to the UNDCP questionnaires. Considering that the low response rate might be due to the fact that the time-lag between the adoption of the recommendations and their implementation was too limited to permit Governments to commence implementation and to report thereon, HONLEA, Africa, and HONLEA, Asia and the Pacific, decided that the status of implementation would henceforth be examined not one year but two years after the adoption of the recommendations.

A later addendum [E/CN.7/1996/10/Add.1] reflected the situation with respect to agreements and arrangements concerning cooperation in the region of the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East, which held its thirty-first session in 1996 (Amman, 9-13 March) [UNDCP/SUBCOM/1996/6]. It also reported on the status of the implementation of the Tehran Declaration [YUN 1993, p. 1092], adopted by the 1993 Ministerial-level Conference held at the Subcommission's twenty-ninth session.

On 23 July, by decision 1996/248, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of the relevant part of the report [E/1996/27] of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on its thirty-ninth session, decided to approve the applications for membership in the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan and Turkmenistan.

Chapter XV

Statistics

In 1996, the United Nations continued its work programme in the area of statistics. In April, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination reviewed, among other things, the work of the inter-agency task forces established by the Statistical Commission in 1993 in eight subject areas; followed up on the implementation of the System of National Accounts, also adopted in 1993; and discussed proposals on various statistical issues.

In May, the Administrative Committee on Coordination Subcommittee on Statistical Activities considered technical as well as policy and coordination issues. The Statistical Commission, which meets biennially, did not meet in 1996.

UN statistical bodies

Statistical Commission

The statistical activities of the United Nations and its specialized agencies were guided by the Statistical Commission, a functional commission of the Economic and Social Council, which first met in 1947. It was composed of 24 members elected for four-year terms by the Council.

The Commission did not meet in 1996, but was scheduled to hold its twenty-ninth session in 1997. The Council had approved in 1995 [YUN 1995,p.1292]the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's 1997 session.

Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination

At its eighteenth session (New York, 16-18 April) [E/CN.3/1997/19], the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination was briefed on the implications for statistics of the UN financial crisis; followed up on the implementation of the System of National Accounts, 1993; reviewed the work of the inter-agency task forces that had been established by the Statistical Commission in eight subject matters (national accounts, international trade statistics, services statistics, finance statistics, industrial and construction statistics, environment statistics, price statistics including the International Comparison Programme, and measurement of poverty); considered proposals concerning critical problems in economic statistics;

reviewed proposals concerning the statistical implications of UN summit meetings; examined proposals for future work on international statistical classifications; reviewed work done to measure the flows of technical cooperation in statistics; considered proposals for strengthening the role of the regional commissions in the area of statistics; evaluated efforts made to coordinate statistical data-collection activities; considered proposals for gender-related topics for inclusion in national publications; reviewed a survey of country views on the holding of a world statistics day; and finalized the provisional agenda and documentation for the twenty-ninth (1997) session of the Statistical Commission.

With regard to the work of the task forces, the Working Group expressed regret that several of them had provided only oral reports to it, and requested that, in future, they submit written reports that, while brief, would indicate progress in the tasks that had been assigned to them by the Commission or its Working Group. It restated its previous requests to the Secretariat to submit integrated reports that systematically addressed all the issues relevant to a particular agenda item in a single document, and decided that, for the 1997 session of the Commission, an overall assessment should be carried out of the results of the task force initiative, in relation to the terms of reference of the task forces.

The Working Group recommended that its nineteenth session be held from 10 to 13 February 1998 in New York and approved a provisional agenda for the session.

Economic statistics

Critical problems in economic statistics

The Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination agreed with the proposal of the Expert Group on Critical Problems in Economic Statistics to initiate informal consultation groups to address issues such as problems that affected the confidence of users in official economic statistics. It also decided that their continued existence would depend on decisions of the Statistical Commission. After assessing the need for a comprehensive review of the International Comparison Programme (ICP), it asked the UN Statistics Division to work with the World Bank and a number of countries to elaborate suitable terms of reference for one or several consultants to conduct such a review.

The Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Subcommittee on Statistical Activities, at its thirtieth session (New York, 7-9 May) [ACC/1996/9], noted that a number of groups constituted along the lines of the Voorburg Group on Service Statistics, whose members were predominantly national statistical agencies but also included international organizations, had been enlisted by the Working Group to address specific critical issues. The Voorburg Group was a cooperative effort by volunteer statistical agencies to address problems associated with data gaps and conceptual issues. The Subcommittee was informed that those groups had been invited to present progress reports at the 1997 session of the Commission. It also received clarification that the role of the Statistics Division was limited to facilitating the workings of the groups and making their outputs widely accessible.

By a note of 25 October 1996 [E/CN.3/1997/2], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission the report of the Expert Group on Critical Problems in Economic Statistics on its 1995 meeting [YUN 1995, p. 1292]. It was submitted in response to a 1996 Working Group request, by which it asked the Expert Group to redraft its report on the 1995 meeting in order to reflect discussions and decisions taken by the Working Group. The report detailed the findings of that meeting and incorporated decisions agreed upon at the 1996 meeting of the Working Group (see above). The Expert Group focused on problems that affected user confidence in official economic statistics; fundamental principles of official statistics; and user confidence in the coverage, periodicity and timeliness and in the quality and relevance of official economic statistics.

The Expert Group elaborated proposals for further activities and recommended mechanisms for carrying them out. The 14 issues and the processes associated with them, as agreed by the Working Group, were: good behaviour on the part of national statistical agencies; effective communication for statistical institutions with providers of basic information and the users of their statistical products; devolution and deregulation policies; balancing the need for data among the regional, State and national levels; the need to measure the informal sector of the economy; the statistical consequences of the globalization of the world economy; measuring capital stocks; resource accounting; measuring price change; the quality of labour; labour and compensation; economics of intangibles; ICP; and short-term economic indicators.

National accounts and balances

In April, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination considered a report by the Inter-Secretariat Working Group on National Accounts (ISWGNA) on national accounts and balances. The Working Group welcomed the elaboration by ISWGNA of a set of milestones as useful criteria against which progress in the implementation of the System of National Accounts, 1993 (1993 SNA) [YUN 1993, p. 1112] at the country level could be judged. It also took note of the work already undertaken by the UN Statistics Division and the regional commissions to use those milestones in assessing the current state of SNA implementation in individual countries. The Working Group asked ISWGNA to provide in its report to the Statistical Commission the updated results of the country assessment exercise to determine the current state of national accounting, paying attention to different needs and priorities of subregional country groupings. It furthermore asked ISWGNA to formulate a range of options for accelerating the process for the Commission to consider; those options would refer to targets for SNA implementation to be pursued at the global and regional levels, thereby identifying more clearly the anticipated implications for statistical support, while recognizing that SNA implementation remained a matter for individual countries.

Industrial and construction statistics

In April, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination considered an oral report by a representative of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), Convener of the Task Force on Industrial and Construction Statistics, on the accomplishments in relation to the requests of the Statistical Commission at its 1995 session [YUN 1995, p. 1294].

The Working Group noted the progress of the Statistics Division on drafting operational guidelines to link time-series based on the International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities, Revision 2 (ISIC, Rev.2) and ISIC, Rev.3, with the help of volunteer countries; and also noted that the Task Force would prepare a progress report on its work, including, if possible, the results of a survey of country practices on the classification of the statistical unit, for submission to the Commission in 1997.

In May [ACC/1996/9], the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities noted the work done by the Task Force, and agreed with its 1995 conclusion [YUN 1995, p. 1293] on the importance and difficulties of monitoring the implementation of ISIC, Rev.3. The Subcommittee also noted with satisfaction the completion of the draft revision of the International Recommendations for Construction Statistics in accordance with a 1995 Commission request.

International trade statistics

The Task Force on International Trade Statistics met in Geneva from 19 to 21 March. An oral report was made to the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination in April by a representative of the World Trade Organization (WTO), Convener of the Task Force. The Working Group welcomed the results achieved by the Task Force; urged it, in the interest of ensuring more consistent international trade data, to promote greater standardization in the treatment of confidentiality, exchange-rate conversions and the basis for designating partners in international trade; requested the Task Force to identify appropriate and practical ways to present the revised concepts and definitions, and to provide compilation advice to countries; encouraged it to provide input into the revision of the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System to ensure that statistical concerns were adequately being taken into account; and endorsed the outline of the proposed report to the Statistical Commission in 1997.

In September [E/CN.3/1997/10], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission the report of the Task Force. It outlined actions taken by the Task Force, namely, increased cooperation among its members to share data and reduce reporting burdens on countries; completion of a review of questionnaires and publications by the organizations in international trade statistics; exchange of information by Task Force members on methods used to prepare estimates of trade flows in cases where countries did not report their national data; review of the technical cooperation arrangements that were in place and the continuation of those efforts; agreement on the need for information on international subcontracting and on intra-firm trade; and consideration of its functioning at its 1995 session.

Also in September, the Secretary-General submitted a report on the revised concepts and definitions for international merchandise trade statistics [E/CN.3/1997/11]. It contained, in an annex, the main conclusions of the Expert Group on International Trade Statistics at its 1996 meeting (New York, 20-24 May). The meeting was attended by 33 participants representing 18 countries, including developed and developing countries and countries in transition, and by six international organizations that were members of the Task Force. In 1995, the Commission had endorsed [YUN 1995, p. 1294] the plan of action and outline proposed by the Task Force for the revision of the 1982 International Trade Statistics: Concepts and Definitions [Sales No. E.82.XVII.14]. The revision was carried out by the Task Force, with the UN Statistics Division as coordinator, and with the involvement of countries at all stages of the work. Following the preparation of an integrated draft of the revision in August 1995, a further draft was completed in January 1996, taking into account the comments of countries and Task Force members, and was circulated to approximately 190 countries for comment; comments were provided by 30 countries.

At its March 1996 meeting, the Task Force engaged in an extensive discussion of the draft revision, considering in particular the principle of "crossing the border" as compared to the principle of "change of ownership" as a basis for international trade statistics; the work on rules of origin that was being carried out in the World Customs Organization and WTO; and the general layout of the draft. To review the draft further, the Task Force held a special meeting in May 1996. The draft revision, along with a document summarizing the 30 country comments, was considered at the May meeting of the Expert Group, which requested the Statistics Division to revise the draft in the light of its recommendations. The resulting revised draft was circulated to members of the Expert Group for comments, and a final draft revision was prepared to reflect those comments as far as possible.

Finance statistics

In an oral report to the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination in April, a representative of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the Convener of the Task Force on Finance Statistics, reported on progress made in addressing the 1995 recommendations of the Statistical Commission [YUN 1995, p. 1294].

The Task Force, in consultation with countries, had found that problems of overlapping and duplication in the reporting of data by countries to international organizations were limited. Joint reporting of balance-of-payments statistics and coordination between OECD and IMF on government revenue statistics were two areas where that problem had been addressed; the need for consistent standards in methodology between the 1993 SNA and the specialized statistical systems maintained by IMF had been partially met with the revision and publication of the fifth edition of the IMF Balance of Payments Manual; work by IMF on its new Manual on Monetary and Financial Statistics was at an advanced stage; and harmonization between government finance statistics and the SNA was also a priority, but that work was at a less advanced stage—it involved revising the existing Manual on Government Finance Statistics, which needed to take into account some changes in the basis of recording.

The Working Group approved the work done by the Task Force and requested it to submit a further progress report to the Commission in 1997.

In May, the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities noted the progress report given by the Convener of the Task Force. In particular, the Convener indicated that, in presenting a report at the 1997 session of the Commission, the Task Force would re-examine issues of coordination in finance statistics. If that review demonstrated that the Task Force had fulfilled its mandate, the Task Force would recommend that it be discontinued.

Price statistics

In April, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination considered the discontinuance of the Task Force on Price Statistics, including ICP.

In response to the 1995 Statistical Office of the European Communities (Eurostat) proposal to discontinue the work of the Task Force and the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities agreement thereto [YUN 1995, p. 1295], the Working Group concluded that the Task Force had fulfilled its mandate and agreed that it should be discontinued. It noted that remaining issues of interest in price statistics and the evaluation of progress in ICP had been taken up by the Expert Group on Critical Problems in Economic Statistics.

Service statistics

The Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination, in April, considered an oral report by a representative of OECD, Convener of the Task Force on Service Statistics.

The Convener reported that the Task Force had decided that current circumstances did not favour proceeding with the production of a year-book on trade in services, but that it would produce instead a manual on the topic and had agreed on an outline. The Working Group welcomed the results achieved by the Task Force and emphasized the need for the manual, stressing that it should be consistent with IMF's Balance of Payments Manual. It also requested the Task Force to report to the Statistical Commission in 1997 on each of the requests that the Commission had made in 1995, and noted that the Task Force intended to make a recommendation to the Commission on future arrangements for work in its area of expertise.

In May, the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities noted the work accomplished by the Task Force, and welcomed the progress being made by the UN Statistics Division on statistics on the domestic (within country) sector in developing countries.

At the fifth meeting of the Task Force on Service Statistics (Paris, 21-22 May) [E/CN.3/1997/7], an inventory of the activities and requirements of international institutions relating to trade-in-services statistics by WTO, IMF, the World Bank, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, OECD and Eurostat was presented. It was decided that a regular update of the inventory would be carried out. WTO and OECD were jointly contributing resources to the preparation of a draft manual on trade in services, which would be presented at the 1997 Task Force meeting.

Environment statistics

The second meeting of the Task Force on Environment Statistics, planned for February 1996 to review the Statistics Division's 1995 draft framework on planned activities, as well as common objectives, priorities and cooperation, was cancelled, since the majority of the members of the Task Force were unable to attend. Despite the cancellation, the Statistics Division would continue its efforts to obtain the information requested by the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination. An analysis of the priorities and activities of the respective organizations would be prepared by the Division and would be made available to the Working Group, as would an updated version of the synopsis of programmes and activities in environmental statistics, indicators and accounting.

The Working Group, in its discussion of the work of the Task Force, stressed the importance of environment statistics as a high-priority topic. It endorsed the proposed outline for the report to the Statistical Commission in 1997, and stressed that the report should present the work programmes of the different organizations, identify gaps and describe major strategic dimensions or goals of international work in the field of environment statistics. The report should also provide milestones against which progress could be measured.

In May, the Convener of the Task Force (UN Statistics Division) informed the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities of the efforts under way to obtain information by correspondence from the members of the Task Force on their planned activities and priorities, and, as requested by the Commission, to define and provide milestones against which each organization could measure progress in a particular activity and in the whole programme. The Subcommittee expressed support for those efforts, and requested the members of the Task Force to supply the relevant information for inclusion in its report to the Commission in 1997.

International economic and social classifications

In April, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination, during its consideration of international economic and social classifications, commended the Statistics Division for the work completed, and considered that the initiatives planned were consistent with the decisions taken by the Statistical Commission in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1296]. It endorsed the work programme on international economic and social classifications, and requested the Division to submit the report of the second meeting of the Expert Group on International Classifications (see below) to the Commission for its review. The Working Group also agreed that the work of the Division on the revised list of products and materials based on the Classification of the New European Industrial Production Statistics for the collection of industrial commodity production statistics should continue.

In November [E/CN.3/1997/4], the Secretary-General provided an overview of how the 1995 recommendations of the Commission concerning international statistical classifications had been addressed. It described the status of the recommendations and additional work accomplished in the field of international statistical classifications since the Commission's 1995 session, and included points for discussion. An annex to the report contained a list of the family of international economic and social classifications; a further annex contained the report of the second meeting of the Expert Group on International Classifications (New York, 24-26 June).

At that meeting, the Expert Group, in accordance with its 1994 plan for improving the coordination of future work on international classifications [YUN 1994, p. 1261], considered the conceptual linkages of a network of classifications; coordinating mechanisms in a setting of linked and interrelated classifications; and where social statistics fitted into the picture. The Expert Group did not consider it useful or necessary to create a new coordinating body and agreed instead on a new coordinating mechanism in which the Statistics Division would play a pivotal role. It stressed the importance of the Division's coordination role in resolving differences and in harmonizing classifications, including further work on the development of correspondence tables, and, where appropriate, in assisting in the identification of classification commonalities. The Expert Group also stressed the need for increased opportunities for the exchange of information on existing economic and social classifications.

Five major roles were identified for the Statistics Division in the resolution of problems, which would be usefully supported by an inventory of classifications: providing a central point for registering both existing and proposed classifications; increasing access to the classifications by the international community and national statistical offices through a full display and wide provision of information; identifying the custodians of classifications and the official points of contact and encouraging the exchange of information between them; providing notice of the revision process and the implications of changes being made, and assisting in identifying potential problems with proposed modifications with respect to the consistency and harmonization of existing classifications; and proactive signalling to the Commission of issues requiring a larger forum for solutions. The Expert Group recommended that its name be changed to Expert Group on International Economic and Social Classifications so as to reflect the conclusions of the second meeting.

Social and demographic statistics

Demographic, social and migration statistics

In April [E/CN.3/1997/19], the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination considered a list of gender-related topics of broad national and international interest that might be covered in national publications on a rotating basis. The topics dealt with population, families and households; political and governmental leaders; decision makers in public and private enterprise, public order and security and violence against women; education; health; housing, human settlements and the environment; working and the economy; and special subjects, including the girl child, aged persons and persons with disabilities. The Working Group expressed its appreciation for the comprehensiveness of the topics listed. It noted that the topics would present varying degrees of difficulty and priority in country work, and suggested that any future version of the list might note some of the differences.

In a November report [E/CN.3/1997/15/Add.2.], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Statistical Commission the results of the review of the draft recommendations on statistics of international migration by the joint Economic Commission for Europe (ECE)/Eurostat work session on migration statistics (Geneva, 30 September-2 October). The proposed recommendations were viewed as a major step forward in the development of a new set of recommendations on international migration statistics. They were seen as a valuable tool for improving migration statistics in some countries, and as providing a basis for improving international comparability in the field. The meeting agreed that the important conceptual and measurement difficulties that statistical offices throughout the region encountered in the field of migration statistics warranted that a further meeting be organized to discuss priority topics. It recommended that a further ECE/Eurostat joint meeting be convened, preferably in the last half of 1997.

Population and housing censuses

An Expert Group on the 2000 World Population and Housing Census Programme was convened (New York, 9-13 September) [E/CN.3/1997/14] to review the draft revised Principles and Recommendations for Population and Housing Censuses [ST/ESA/STAT/SER.M/67/Rev.1]. The Group made a number of suggestions to improve the manuscript and strongly supported most of the changes proposed by the Secretariat. It recommended some refinements, clarifications and additions, and stressed the importance of maintaining the right balance between the sometimes conflicting needs for continuity and change in census operations. A new section on strategic objectives was proposed. The Group supported the inclusion of new sections on quality control and databases, and expressed agreement with the revisions to the sections on data processing, dissemination and evaluation of results. It furthermore proposed strengthening and simplifying the section on topics to be investigated, and provided advice on the treatment of the topics proposed.

Poverty measurement

In April, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination agreed with the 1995 conclusion [YUN 1995, p. 1298] of the Task Force on the Measurement of Poverty that it was not the function of the Statistical Commission to develop international standards for the definition of poverty and therefore accepted the Task Force recommendation that the Task Force be discontinued. It considered, however, that further technical work could and should be done at the regional and international levels on the various methods used to measure poverty and on the data requirements that the various approaches implied. It therefore agreed to recommend the formation of an expert group on poverty statistics, and welcomed the offers of Brazil to serve as chair and of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to serve as secretariat.

UN conferences statistics

Regarding the Expert Group on the Statistical Implications of Recent Major United Nations Conferences, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination supported strengthening national capacities for collecting and reporting social statistics and indicators in general, in the context of ensuring the availability of appropriate statistics and indicators for monitoring implementation of the social programmes of action adopted at recent major UN conferences. It agreed that the Expert Group should submit a report to the Statistical Commission in 1997, and recommended that the Commission adopt the minimum national social data set, which consisted of 15 items: population estimates by sex, age and, where appropriate and feasible, ethnic group; life expectancy at birth, by sex; infant mortality, by sex; child mortality, by sex; maternal mortality; percentage of infants weighing less than 2,500 grams at birth, by sex; average number of years of schooling completed, by sex and, where possible, by income class; gross domestic product per capita; household income per capita (level and distribution); monetary value of the basket of food needed for minimum nutritional requirements; unemployment rate, by sex; employment-population ratio, by sex, and by formal and informal sector, where appropriate; access to safe water; access to sanitation; and number of people per room, excluding kitchen and bathroom. The Working Group requested the Statistics Division to work with the regional commissions to arrange for pilot studies in each region on the availability and quality of the statistics called for in the minimum national social data set. The Division was to report to the Working Group before the Commission's 1997 session on progress towards completing the pilot studies.

Technical cooperation

In April [E/CN.3/1997/19], the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination discussed the steps that had been taken to prepare a report on technical cooperation in statistics for the Statistical Commission in 1997. The Working Group noted the difficulties faced by the Statistics Division in preparing the report and was disappointed to learn that the response rate to the request for information had been low. It decided that the Division should continue preparing the report and should submit it to the Commission in 1997. It requested Statistics Canada, Eurostat and IMF to work with the Division to include in that report coverage of crucial issues related to technical cooperation.

Other statistical activities

Inter-agency coordination

The ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities, at its thirtieth session (New York, 7-9 May) [ACC/1996/9], discussed matters arising from its 1995 session [YUN 1995, p. 1299]; coordination tools; coordination of ongoing statistical programmes; coordination of the follow-up of statistical activities related to international conferences; the UN Common Data Systems Task Force; and matters arising from the work of the Statistical Commission and its Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination.

The Subcommittee brought five matters to the attention of the ACC Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions: the establishment of a firmer basis for discussing the coordination of international statistical work in the Subcommittee in order to promote more effective coordination, and the establishment of an integrated presentation of work programmes along the lines of the approach being used in the ECE region; issues related to the minimum national social data set, for example the formation of an expert group on poverty statistics; the groups that had been established by countries, in cooperation with international organizations, to carry out work on several critical problems in economic statistics; chairmanship of the Committee; and the dates, venue and agenda of its thirty-first session.

The Subcommittee recommended that its thirty-first session be held from 16 to 18 September 1997 in Geneva.

Coordination of statistical data collection

In April, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination noted with satisfaction the work done by the Statistics Division in updating the inventory of statistical data-collection activities, which was important for coordination.

UN common data system

At its 1996 meeting (New York, 14-15 February), the UN Common Data System Task Force adopted the Common Code of Statistical Practice in the United Nations System. The Code constituted a series of guidelines to be voluntarily applied to the extent possible rather than a set of obligatory standards.

In May, the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities endorsed the Common Code and encouraged organizations to distribute it within their organizations, and to apply the practices that it contained to the extent possible. It welcomed the intention of the Statistics Division and IMF to promote coordination between the Common Code and the IMF data dissemination standards.

World statistics day

The Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination in April considered the holding of a world statistics day and requested the Statistics Division to prepare a document to reflect the range of views expressed during the discussion of the subject and to submit it to the Statistical Commission in 1997.

In May, the ACC Subcommittee reconfirmed its previous conclusion that, while it recognized the value of national statistical days in those countries that had them, it had reservations on the potential value of and support for holding a world statistics day, especially in the light of the resources needed and the absence of well-developed objectives. The Subcommittee noted that the Statistics Division, as requested by the Working Group, would prepare a draft report for the Commission and circulate it to members of the Subcommittee for comments and input.

Legal questions

Chapter I

International Court of Justice

In 1996, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) delivered two Judgments, two Advisory Opinions and nine Orders. It had pending before it 10 contentious and two advisory cases. One case was removed from its list. In another, a request for the indication of provisional measures was made.

On 28 February, the General Assembly and the Security Council elected Gonzalo Parra-Aranguren of Venezuela to fill a vacancy resulting from the death in 1995 of Judge Andres Aguilar Mawdsley. On 6 November, the Assembly and the Council extended the terms of three judges and elected two new ones for nine-year terms beginning 6 February 1997.

On 15 October, the President of the Court addressed the General Assembly on "The Limitations on the Contribution by the International Court of Justice to the Maintenance of Peace".

During the year, Paraguay and Poland deposited with the Secretary-General declarations recognizing as compulsory the jurisdiction of the Court; in the case of Poland, to replace and terminate its previous declaration of 25 September 1990. As a result, the number of States which had made such declarations rose to 60.

Judicial work of the Court

During 1996, the Court rendered Judgments on preliminary objections in the cases concerning Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)) and Oil Platforms (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America). It delivered Advisory Opinions in the cases concerning the Legality of the Use by a State of Nuclear Weapons in Armed Conflict and the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons.

The Court further made an Order indicating provisional measures in the case concerning the Land and Maritime Boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria (Cameroon v. Nigeria) and an Order recording the discontinuance and directing the removal from the Court's list of the case concerning the Aerial Incident of 3 July 1988 (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America). The Court or its President also made several Orders on the conduct of the proceedings in the cases concerning Maritime Delimitation and Territorial Questions between Qatar and Bahrain (Qatar v. Bahrain), Oil Platforms (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America), Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)), Land and Maritime Boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria (Cameroon v. Nigeria), Fisheries Jurisdiction (Spain v. Canada) and Kasikili/Sedudu Island (Botswana/Namibia).

The activities of ICJ were covered in two reports to the General Assembly, for the periods from 1 August 1995 to 31 July 1996 [A/51/4] and from 1 August 1996 to 31 July 1997 [A/52/4]. By decision 51/405 of 15 October 1996, the Assembly took note of the report on the Court's 1995/96 activities.

Aerial incident of 3 July 1988 (Iran v. United States)

Iran had instituted proceedings against the United States in 1989, referring to the destruction of an Iranian aircraft on 3 July 1988 and the killing of its 290 passengers and crew by missiles launched in Iranian airspace from the United States guided-missile cruiser USS Vincennes. The time-limits for written proceedings, fixed in a December 1989 Court Order [YUN 1989, p. 816], were extended by an Order in June 1990. The Memorial of Iran was filed within the prescribed time-limit.

In March 1991, within the time-limit fixed for its Counter-Memorial, the United States filed certain preliminary objections to the Court's jurisdiction. By an April 1991 Order [YUN 1991, p. 818], the Court fixed 9 December of that year as the time-limit within which Iran might present a written statement of its observations and submissions on those objections. As requested by Iran, and after the view of the United States had been ascertained, the President of the Court, by Orders of 18 December 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 818] and 5 June 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 980], extended the time-limit to 9 June and 9 September 1992, respectively. Iran's written statement was filed within the prescribed time-limit and was communicated to the Secretary-General of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), together with the written pleadings previously filed. Following the submission of written observations by the ICAO Council within the time-limit of 9 December 1992, fixed by the President of the Court, the Court announced that hearings in the case would open on 12 September 1994. At the joint request of the Parties, made in 1994, those hearings were postponed sine die.

By a letter of 22 February 1996, the Agents of the two Parties jointly notified the Court that their Governments had agreed to discontinue the case because they had entered into "an agreement in full and final settlement of all disputes, differences, claims, counter-claims and matters directly or indirectly raised by or capable of arising out of, or directly or indirectly related to or connected with, this case". By an Order of the same day [Aerial Incident of 3 July 1988 (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America), Order of 22 February 1996, I.C.J. Sales No. 674], the Court placed on record the discontinuance and directed that the case be removed from the list.

Maritime delimitation and territorial questions (Qatar v. Bahrain)

Qatar instituted proceedings in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 820] against Bahrain in respect of disputes relating to sovereignty over the Hawar islands, sovereign rights over the shoals of Dibal and Qit'at Jaradah and the delimitation of the maritime areas of the two States.

In August 1991, Bahrain contested the basis of jurisdiction invoked by Qatar. By an October 1991 Order [YUN 1991, p. 820], the President of the Court decided that written proceedings should first be addressed to the questions of the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the dispute and of the admissibility of the Application, and fixed the time-limits for the filing of a Memorial by Qatar and a Counter-Memorial by Bahrain, which were filed accordingly in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 982]. Also in 1992, Qatar and Bahrain filed their respective Reply and Rejoinder within the time-limits fixed by a June 1992 Order [YUN 1992, p. 982]. Qatar chose Jose Maria Ruda and Bahrain chose Nicolas Valticos to sit as judges ad hoc in the case.

Following hearings held in February and March 1994, the Court delivered on 1 July 1994 a Judgment [YUN 1994, p. 1279], by which it found that the exchanges of letters between the King of Saudi Arabia and the Amir of Qatar, dated 19 and 21 December 1987, and between the King of Saudi Arabia and the Amir of Bahrain, dated 19 and 26 December 1987, and the document headed "Minutes", signed in Doha on 25 December 1990 by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Bahrain, Qatar and Saudi Arabia, were international agreements creating rights and obligations for the Parties; and that, by the terms of those agreements, the Parties had undertaken to submit to the Court the whole of the dispute between them, as circumscribed by the Bahraini formula. Having noted that it had before it only an Application from Qatar setting out that State's specific claims in connection with that formula, the Court decided to afford the Parties the opportunity to submit to it the whole of the dispute. It fixed 30 November 1994 as the time-limit within which the Parties were jointly or separately to take action to that end and reserved any other matters for subsequent decision.

On 30 November 1994, the Court received a letter from Qatar transmitting an "Act to comply with paragraphs (3) and (4) of the operative paragraph 41 of the Judgment of the Court dated 1 July 1994". On the same day, Bahrain transmitted a "Report of the State of Bahrain to the International Court of Justice on the Attempt by the Parties to Implement the Court's Judgment of 1 July 1994". In view of those communications, the Court resumed dealing with the case.

At a public sitting held on 15 February 1995, the Court delivered a Judgment on jurisdiction and admissibility [YUN 1995, p. 1305], by which it found that it had jurisdiction and that the Application of Qatar as formulated on 30 November 1994 was admissible.

Judge ad hoc Valticos resigned as of the end of the jurisdiction and admissibility phase of the proceedings.

By an Order of 28 April 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1306], the Court, having ascertained the views of Qatar and having given Bahrain an opportunity to state its views, fixed 29 February 1996 as the time-limit for the filing by each of the Parties of a Memorial on the merits. By an order of 1 February 1996 [Maritime Delimitation and Territorial Questions between Qatar and Bahrain (Qatar v. Bahrain), Order of 1 February 1996, I.C.J. Sales No. 673], that time-limit was extended to 30 September 1996. The two Memorials were filed within that extended time-limit. By an Order of 30 October 1996 [Maritime Delimitation and Territorial Questions between Qatar and Bahrain (Qatar v. Bahrain), Order of 30 October 1996, I.C.J. Sales No. 682], the President of the Court fixed 31 December 1997 as the time-limit for the filing by each of the Parties of a Counter-Memorial on the merits.

Bahrain chose Mohamed Shahabuddeen to sit as judge ad hoc.

Questions of interpretation and application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the aerial incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom) and (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States)

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya instituted separate proceedings in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 982] against the United Kingdom and the United States in respect of a dispute over the interpretation and application of the 1971 Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation [YUN 1971, p. 739], which arose from its alleged involvement in the crash of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, on 21 December 1988.

In the Applications, Libya referred to the charging and indictment of two of its nationals, by the Lord Advocate of Scotland and by a United States Grand Jury, with having caused a bomb to be placed aboard Pan Am flight 103. The bomb subsequently exploded, causing the aircraft to crash, killing all persons aboard. Libya requested the Court to adjudge and declare that it had complied fully with all of its obligations under the Montreal Convention, which it claimed to be the only appropriate Convention in force between the Parties, and which required it to establish its own jurisdiction over alleged offenders present in its territory and submit the case to its authorities for prosecution, as there was no extradition treaty between it and the other Parties; that the United Kingdom and the United States were in breach of the Convention by rejecting Libya efforts to resolve the matter within the framework of international law and placing pressure on it to surrender the two Libyan nationals for trial; and that the United Kingdom and the United States were under a legal obligation to cease and desist from such breaches and from the use of force or threats against Libya and from all violations of its sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence.

It also made two separate requests for an indication of provisional measures in each case. By two Orders of 14 April 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 982], the Court found that the circumstances of the case were not such as to require the exercise of its power to indicate provisional measures. By Orders of 19 June 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 982], the Court fixed 20 December 1993 as the time-limit for the filing of a Memorial by Libya and 20 June 1995 for Counter-Memorials by the United Kingdom and the United States. Libya filed its Memorial within the prescribed time-limit, and chose Ahmed S. El-Kosheri to sit as judge ad hoc in the case.

On 16 and on 20 June 1995, respectively [YUN 1995, p. 1306], the United Kingdom and the United States filed preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the Applications of Libya. By virtue of Article 79, paragraph 3, of the Rules of the Court, the proceedings on the merits were suspended when preliminary objections were filed; proceedings then had to be organized for the consideration of those preliminary objections in accordance with the provision of that Article.

Following a meeting on 9 September 1995 between the President of the Court and the Agents of the Parties to ascertain the Parties' views, the Court, by Orders of 22 September 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1306], fixed, in each case, 22 December 1995 as the time-limit within which Libya might present a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by the United Kingdom and the United States, respectively. Libya filed such statements within the prescribed time-limits.

The ICAO Secretary-General, which had, in accordance with article 34, paragraph 3 of the Court's Statute, been informed that the interpretation of the 1971 Montreal Convention was in issue in the two cases, and been communicated copies of the proceedings, informed the Court that ICAO had "no observation to make for the time being", requesting, however, to be kept informed of the developments of the two cases, in order to determine whether it would be appropriate to submit observations at a later stage.

The public sittings to hear the oral arguments of the Parties on the preliminary objections raised by the United Kingdom and the United States, respectively, were scheduled to open on 13 October 1997.

Oil platforms (Iran v. United States)

Proceedings against the United States were instituted by Iran in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 983] regarding a dispute in which Iran alleged that the destruction by United States warships, on 19 October 1987 and 18 April 1988, of three offshore oil production complexes owned and operated by the National Iranian Oil Company constituted a breach of international law and the 1955 Iran/United States Treaty of Amity, Economic Relations and Consular Rights. Iran requested the Court to rule on the matter.

By an Order of December 1992, the time-limits were fixed at 31 May 1993 for the filing of a Memorial by Iran and 30 November 1993 for a Counter-Memorial by the United States. By an Order of 3 June 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1138], the time-limits were extended to 8 June and 16 December 1993, respectively. Iran, which chose François Rigaux to sit as judge ad hoc, filed its Memorial within the prescribed time-limit, while the United States filed certain preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court. In accordance with the Rules of the Court (see above, under section on Libya v. United Kingdom/United States), the proceedings on the merits were suspended. By an Order of 18 January 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1280], the Court fixed 1 July 1994 as the time-limit within which Iran could present a written statement of its observations and submissions.

sions on the United States objections. The written statement was filed within the prescribed time-limit.

After hearings had been held between 16 and 24 September 1996, the Court, at a public sitting on 12 December, delivered its Judgment on the preliminary objection [Oil Platforms (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America), Preliminary Objection, Judgment of 12 December 1996, I.C.J. Sales No. 683], the operative paragraph of which read as follows:

For these reasons,

The Court,

(1) rejects, by 14 votes to 2, the preliminary objection of the United States of America according to which the Treaty of 1955 does not provide any basis for the jurisdiction of the Court;

In favour: President Bedjaoui; Judges Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Weeramantry, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Koroma, Vereshchetin, Ferrari Bravo, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren; Judge ad hoc Rigaux;

Against: Vice-President Schwebel; Judge Oda;

(2) finds, by 14 votes to 2, that it has jurisdiction, on the basis of Article XXI, paragraph 2, of the Treaty of 1955, to entertain the claims made by the Islamic Republic of Iran under Article X, paragraph 1, of that Treaty.

In favour: President Bedjaoui; Judges Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Weeramantry, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Koroma, Vereshchetin, Ferrari Bravo, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren; Judge ad hoc Rigaux;

Against: Vice-President Schwebel; Judge Oda.

Judges Shahabuddeen, Ranjeva, Higgins and Parra-Aranguren and Judge ad hoc Rigaux appended separate opinions to the Judgment of the Court; Vice-President Schwebel and Judge Oda appended dissenting opinions.

By an Order of 16 December 1996 [Oil Platforms (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America), Preliminary Objection, Order of 16 December 1996, I.C.J. Sales No. 684], the President of the Court, taking into account the agreement of the Parties, fixed 23 June 1997 as the time-limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of the United States.

Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia)

In 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1138], Bosnia and Herzegovina instituted proceedings against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) for alleged violations of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide [GA res. 260 A (III)].

Bosnia and Herzegovina requested the Court to adjudge and declare that Yugoslavia had violated and was continuing to violate several provisions of the Genocide Convention, as well as of the Charter of the United Nations, the 1949 Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims and their 1977 Additional Protocol I [YUN 1977, p. 706], the 1907 Hague Regulations on Land Warfare and the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights [GA res. 217 A (III)]; that Yugoslavia was using force and the threat of force against Bosnia and Herzegovina; that Bosnia and Herzegovina had the sovereign right under the Charter and customary international law to defend itself and to request assistance of any State in doing so, which was not to be impaired by Security Council resolution 713(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 215] and subsequent resolutions imposing and reaffirming an arms embargo on the former Yugoslavia; that those resolutions should not be construed as imposing an arms embargo on Bosnia and Herzegovina; that, pursuant to the right to collective self-defence, other States had the right to come to the immediate defence of Bosnia and Herzegovina at its request; that Yugoslavia should cease and desist immediately from its breaches of the foregoing legal obligations; and that Yugoslavia should pay reparations for damages sustained by Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Bosnia and Herzegovina also requested the Court to indicate provisional measures to the effect that Yugoslavia should, inter alia, cease and desist immediately from all acts of genocide against the people and State of Bosnia and Herzegovina. By an Order of 8 April 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1138], the Court indicated that Yugoslavia should immediately take all measures within its power to prevent commission of the crime of genocide; and should ensure in particular that any armed units under its control did not commit any acts of genocide or acts leading up to genocide. The Court also indicated that neither of the Parties should in any way aggravate or extend the dispute. The time-limits for the filing of the Memorial by Bosnia and Herzegovina and a Counter-Memorial by Yugoslavia were fixed at 15 October 1993 and 15 April 1994, respectively, by an Order of 16 April 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1138], and were extended to 15 April 1994 and 15 April 1995, respectively, by an Order of 7 October 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1139].

In July 1993, Bosnia and Herzegovina made a second request for indication of provisional measures, while Yugoslavia, in August, requested the Court to indicate provisional measures requiring Bosnia and Herzegovina to prevent acts of genocide against the Bosnian Serbs. Acting on those requests, the Court, by an Order of 13 September 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1139], held that the situation demanded the immediate implementation of provisional measures indicated in its April 1993 Order rather than an indication of additional measures. In declining Bosnia and Herzegovina's requests related to the partition and annexation of its territory and the means of preventing acts of genocide and partition, the Court pointed out that such claims were beyond the scope of its jurisdiction in that case, conferred on it by the Genocide Convention.

The Memorial of Bosnia and Herzegovina was filed within the prescribed time-limit. Bosnia and Herzegovina chose Elihu Lauterpacht and Yugoslavia chose Milenko Kreca to sit as judges ad hoc in the case.

By an Order of 21 March 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1307], the President of the Court, upon a request of the Agent of Yugoslavia and after the views of Bosnia and Herzegovina had been ascertained, extended to 30 June 1995 the time-limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Yugoslavia. Within that extended time-limit Yugoslavia filed certain preliminary objections. The objections related, first, to the admissibility of the Application and, second, to the jurisdiction of the Court to deal with the case. By virtue of the Rules of Court (see above, under section on Libya v. United Kingdom/United States), the proceedings on the merits were suspended.

By an Order of 14 July 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1307], the President of the Court fixed 14 November 1995 as the time-limit within which Bosnia and Herzegovina might present a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by Yugoslavia. Bosnia and Herzegovina filed such a statement within the prescribed time-limit.

After hearings had been held between 29 April and 3 May 1996, the Court, at a public sitting on 11 July, delivered its Judgment on the preliminary objections [Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, Preliminary Objection, Judgment of 11 July 1996, I.C.J. Sales No. 680], by which it rejected the objections raised by Yugoslavia, finding that, on the basis of article XI of the Genocide Convention, it had jurisdiction; dismissed the additional bases of jurisdiction invoked by Bosnia and Herzegovina; and found that the Application was admissible.

Judge Oda appended a declaration to the Judgment of the Court; Judges Shi and Vereshchetin appended a joint declaration; Judge ad hoc Lauterpacht also appended a declaration. Judges Shahabuddeen, Weeramantry and Parra-Aranguren appended separate opinions to the Judgment; Judge ad hoc Kreca appended a dissenting opinion.

By an Order of 23 July 1996 [Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, Preliminary Objection, Order of 23 July 1996, I.C.J. Sales No. 681], the President of the Court fixed 23 July 1997 as the time-limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Yugoslavia.

Gabcíkovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia)

In 1992, Hungary applied to the Court in a dispute with the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic concerning the projected diversion of the Danube River, inviting the Republic to accept the Court's jurisdiction.

Following negotiations between Hungary and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic, which dissolved into two States on 1 January 1993, Hungary and Slovakia—the sole successor State of the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic with respect to the project dispute—on 2 July 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1139], requested the Court to decide whether Hungary had been entitled to suspend and subsequently abandon in 1989 the work on the Nagymaros Project and on the part of the Gabcíkovo Project for which it was responsible under the 1977 Budapest Treaty on the Construction and Operation of the Gabcíkovo-Nagymaros Barrage System; and whether the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic had been entitled to execute, in 1991-1992, the "provisional solution"—a system damming up the Danube on Czechoslovak territory. The Court was also requested to determine the legal effects of the termination of the Treaty by Hungary in 1992 and the legal consequences of the Court's Judgment in that case.

Each Party filed a Memorial and a Counter-Memorial within the time-limits of 2 May and 5 December 1994, respectively, fixed by an Order of 14 July 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1139]. By an Order of 20 December 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1281], the President of the Court fixed 20 June 1995 as the time-limit for the filing of a Reply by each of the Parties. Those Replies were filed within the prescribed time-limit. Slovakia chose Krzysztof J. Skubiszewski to sit as judge ad hoc.

Land and maritime boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria

On 29 March 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1281], Cameroon instituted proceedings against Nigeria in a dispute concerning the question of sovereignty over the peninsula of Bakassi, and requested the Court to determine the course of the maritime frontier between the two States in so far as that frontier had not already been established in 1975.

In its Application, Cameroon referred to "an aggression" by Nigeria, whose troops were "occupying" several Cameroonian localities on the Bakassi peninsula, resulting "in great prejudice to Cameroon", and requested the Court to adjudicate and declare that sovereignty over the Bakassi peninsula was Cameroonian; that Nigeria had violated and was violating the fundamental principle of respect for frontiers inherited from colonization and its obligations under international law by using force against Cameroon and by militarily occupying the Bakassi peninsula; and that Nigeria should withdraw its troops and pay reparation. Cameroon also asked the Court to prolong the course of its maritime boundary with Nigeria up to the limit of the maritime zones of the two States.

On 6 June 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1281], Cameroon filed an Additional Application for the purpose of extending the subject of the dispute to a further dispute described as relating essentially to the question of sovereignty over a part of the territory of Cameroon in the area of Lake Chad, while also asking the Court to specify definitively the frontier between Cameroon and Nigeria from Lake Chad to the sea. It further requested the Court to examine the two Applications as one case. On 14 June, Nigeria indicated that it had no objection to that request.

By an Order of 16 June 1994 [YUN 1994, 1282], the Court fixed 16 March and 18 December 1995 as the time-limits for the filing of Cameroon's Memorial and Nigeria's Counter-Memorial, respectively. The Memorial was filed within the prescribed time-limit.

On 13 December 1995, within the time-limit for the filing of its Counter-Memorial, Nigeria filed certain preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court and to the admissibility of the claims of Cameroon. By virtue of the Rules of Court (see above, under section on Libya v. United Kingdom/United States), the proceedings on the merits were suspended.

By an Order of 10 January 1996 [Land and Maritime Boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria (Cameroon v. Nigeria), Order of 10 January 1996, I.C.J. Sales No. 672], the President of the Court fixed 15 May 1996 as the time-limit within which Cameroon might present a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by Nigeria. Cameroon filed such a statement within the prescribed time-limit.

On 12 February 1996, Cameroon, referring to "serious armed incidents" which had taken place between Cameroonian and Nigerian forces in the Bakassi peninsula beginning on 3 February, requested the Court to indicate the following provisional measures:

- "(1) the armed forces of the Parties shall withdraw to the position they were occupying before the Nigerian armed attack of 3 February 1996;
- "(2) the Parties shall abstain from all military activity along the entire boundary until the judgment of the Court is given;
- "(3) the Parties shall abstain from any act or action which might hamper the gathering of evidence in the present case."

After hearings had been held between 5 and 8 March 1996, the Court, by an Order of 15 March 1996 [Land and Maritime Boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria (Cameroon v. Nigeria), Order of 15 March 1996, I.C.J. Sales No. 675], indicated that "both Parties should ensure that no action of any kind, and particularly no action by their armed forces, is taken which might prejudice the rights of the other in respect of whatever judgment the Court may render in the case, or which might aggravate or extend the dispute before it"; that they "should observe the agreement reached between the Ministers for Foreign Affairs in Kara, Togo, on 17 February 1996, for the cessation of all hostilities in the Bakassi Peninsula"; that they "should ensure that the presence of any armed forces in the Bakassi Peninsula does not extend beyond the positions in which they were situated prior to 3 February 1996"; that they "should take all necessary steps to conserve evidence relevant to the present case within the disputed area"; and that they "should lend every assistance to the fact-finding mission which the Secretary-General of the United Nations has proposed to send to the Bakassi Peninsula".

Judges Oda, Shahabuddeen, Ranjeva and Koroma appended declarations to the Order of the Court; Judges Weeramantry, Shi and Vereshchetin appended a joint declaration; Judge ad hoc Mbeye also appended a declaration. Judge ad hoc Ajibola appended a separate opinion to the Order.

Fisheries jurisdiction (Spain v. Canada)

On 28 March 1995, Spain instituted proceedings against Canada in a dispute relating to the Canadian Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, as amended on 12 May 1994, and to the implementing regulations of that Act, as well as to certain measures taken on the basis of that legislation, more particularly the boarding on the high seas, on 9 March 1995, of a fishing boat, the Estai, sailing under the Spanish flag.

The Application indicated, inter alia, that by the amended Act "an attempt was made to impose on all persons on board foreign ships a broad prohibition on fishing in the Regulatory Area of the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization (NAFO), that is, on the high seas, outside Canada's exclusive economic zone"; that the Act "expressly permits (article 8) the use of force against foreign fishing boats in the zones that article 2.1 unambiguously terms the 'high seas'"; that the implementing regulations of 25 May 1994 provided, in particular, for "the use of force by fishery protection vessels against the foreign fishing boats covered by those rules . . . which infringe their mandates in the zone of the high seas within the scope of those regulations"; and that the implementing regulations of 3 March 1995 "expressly permit [. . .] such conduct as regards Spanish and Portuguese ships on the high seas". The Application alleged the violation of various principles and norms of international law and stated that there was a dispute between Spain and Canada which, going beyond the framework of fishing, seriously affected the very principle of the freedom of the high seas and, moreover, implied a very serious infringement of the sovereign rights of Spain.

Spain requested the Court to declare that the legislation of Canada, in so far as it claimed to exercise a jurisdiction over ships flying a foreign flag on the high seas, outside the exclusive economic zone of Canada, was not opposable to Spain; to adjudge and declare that Canada was bound to refrain from any repetition of the acts complained of and to offer reparation to Spain; and to declare that the boarding on the high seas, on 9 March 1995, of the ship Estai flying the flag of Spain and the measures of coercion and the exercise of jurisdiction over that ship and over its captain constituted a concrete violation of the principles and norms of international law.

By a letter dated 21 April 1995, the Ambassador of Canada to the Netherlands informed the Court that, in the view of his Government, the Court manifestly lacked jurisdiction to deal with the Application filed by Spain by reason of paragraph 2 (d) of the Declaration, dated 10 May 1994, whereby Canada accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court.

Taking into account an agreement concerning the procedure reached between the Parties at a meeting with the President of the Court, held on 27 April 1995, the President, by an Order of 2 May 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1309], decided that the written proceedings should first be addressed to the question of the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the dispute, and fixed 29 September 1995 as the time-limit for the filing of the Memorial of Spain and 29 February 1996 for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Canada. The Memorial and Counter-Memorial were filed within the prescribed time-limits.

Spain chose Santiago Torres-Bernárdez and Canada Marc Lalonde to sit as judges ad hoc.

The Government of Spain subsequently expressed its wish to be authorized to file a Reply; the Government of Canada opposed that. By an Order of 8 May 1996 [Fisheries Jurisdiction (Spain v. Canada), Order of 8 May 1996, I.C.J. Sales No. 676], the Court, considering that it was "sufficiently informed, at this stage, of the contentions of fact and law on which the Parties rely with respect to its jurisdiction in the case and whereas the presentation by them, of other written pleadings on that question therefore does not appear necessary", decided by 15 votes to 2 not to authorize the filing of a Reply by the Applicant and a Rejoinder by the Respondent on the question of jurisdiction.

Judge Vereshchetin and Judge ad hoc Torres-Bernárdez voted against; the latter appended a dissenting opinion to the Order.

Kasikili/Sedudu Island (Botswana/Namibia)

On 29 May 1996, Botswana and Namibia jointly submitted to the Court a dispute concerning the boundary around Kasikili/Sedudu Island and the island's legal status.

A Special Agreement, signed between them for the submission of the dispute, referred to a Treaty between the United Kingdom and Germany respecting the spheres of influence of the two countries, signed on 1 July 1890, and to the appointment, on 24 May 1992, of a Joint Team of Technical Experts "to determine the boundary between Namibia and Botswana around Kasikili/Sedudu Island" on the basis of the Treaty and of the applicable principles of international law. Unable to reach a conclusion on the question, the Joint Team recommended "recourse to the peaceful settlement of the dispute on the basis of the applicable rules and principles of international law". At a summit meeting held in Harare, Zimbabwe, on 15 February 1995, President Masire of Botswana and President Nujoma of Namibia agreed "to submit the dispute to the International Court of Justice for a final and binding determination".

The Special Agreement was signed in Gaborone, Botswana, on 15 February 1996. Under its terms, the Parties asked the Court to "determine, on the basis of the Anglo-Germany Treaty of 1st July 1890 and the rules and principles of international law, the boundary between Namibia and Botswana around Kasikili/Sedudu Island and the legal status of the island".

By an Order of 24 June 1996 [Kasikili/Sedudu Island (Botswana/Namibia), Order of 24 June 1996,

I.C.J. Sales No. 677), the Court fixed 28 February and 28 November 1997, respectively, as the time-limits for the filing by each of the Parties of a Memorial and a Counter-Memorial.

Legality of the use by a State of nuclear weapons in armed conflict

In 1993, the World Health Organization (WHO) requested an advisory opinion from the Court on whether the use of nuclear weapons by a State in war or other armed conflict would be a breach of its obligations under international law in view of the health and environmental effects.

By an Order of 13 September 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1139], the Court fixed 10 June 1994 as the time-limit within which WHO and its member States entitled to appear before the Court might submit written statements on the question.

By an Order of 20 June 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1282], the President of the Court extended the time-limit to 20 September 1994. By the same Order, the President fixed 20 June 1995 as the time-limit within which States and organizations having presented written statements might submit written comments on the other written statements.

Written statements were filed by Australia, Azerbaijan, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Finland, France, Germany, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Lithuania, Malaysia, Mexico, Nauru, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, the Republic of Moldova, the Russian Federation, Rwanda, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Uganda, Ukraine, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Written comments were filed by Costa Rica, France, India, Malaysia, Nauru, the Russian Federation, Solomon Islands, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Public sittings to hear oral statements or comments on the request for an advisory opinion made by WHO were held between 30 October and 15 November 1995. The oral proceedings also covered the request for an advisory opinion submitted by the General Assembly on the legality of the threat or use of nuclear weapons (see below). During the hearings, statements were made by WHO, Australia, Costa Rica, Egypt, France, Germany, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, the Marshall Islands, Mexico, New Zealand, the Philippines, the Russian Federation, Samoa, Solomon Islands, the United Kingdom, the United States and Zimbabwe.

At a public sitting on 8 July 1996, the Court delivered its Advisory Opinion [Legality of the Use by a State of Nuclear Weapons in Armed Conflict, Advisory Opinion of 8 July 1996, I.C.J. Sales No. 678], the final paragraph of which was as follows:

For these reasons,

The Court,

By 11 votes to 3,

Finds that it is not able to give the advisory opinion which was requested of it under World Health Assembly resolution WHA 46.40 dated 14 May 1993.

Infavour: President Bedjaoui; Vice-President Schwebel; Judges Oda, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Ferrari Bravo, Higgins.

Against: Judges Shahabuddeen, Weeramantry, Koroma.

Judges Ranjeva and Ferrari Bravo appended declarations to the Advisory Opinion; Judge Oda appended a separate opinion; Judges Shahabuddeen, Weeramantry and Koroma appended dissenting opinions.

Legality of the threat or use of nuclear weapons

On 15 December 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 157], the General Assembly requested the Court urgently to render its advisory opinion on whether the threat or use of nuclear weapons in any circumstance was permitted under international law. The request was transmitted to the Court by the Secretary-General on 19 December 1994.

By an Order of 1 February 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1310], the Court decided that States entitled to appear before it and the United Nations might furnish information on the question and fixed 20 June 1995 as the time-limit within which written statements might be submitted, and 20 September 1995 as the time-limit within which States and organizations having presented written statements might present written comments on the other written statements.

Written statements were filed by Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ecuador, Egypt, Finland, France, Germany, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Lesotho, Malaysia, the Marshall Islands, Mexico, Nauru, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Qatar, the Russian Federation, Samoa, San Marino, Solomon Islands, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Written comments were filed by Egypt, Nauru and Solomon Islands. Nauru subsequently withdrew its comments.

Public sittings to hear oral statements or comments on the request for an advisory opinion were held between 30 October and 15 November 1995. The oral proceedings also covered the request for an advisory opinion submitted by WHO on the question of the legality of the use by a State of nuclear weapons in armed conflict (see above). During the hearings, statements were made by Australia, Costa Rica, Egypt, France, Germany, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, the Marshall Islands, Mexico, New Zealand, the Philippines, Qatar, the Russian Federation, Samoa, San Marino, Solomon Islands, the United Kingdom, the United States and Zimbabwe.

At a public sitting on 8 July 1996, the Court delivered its Advisory Opinion [Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Advisory Opinion of 8 July 1996, ICJ. Sales No. 679], the final paragraph of which was as follows:

For these reasons,

The Court

(1) By 13 votes to 1,

Decides to comply with the request for an advisory opinion;

In favour: President Bedjaoui; Vice-President Schwebel; Judges Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Weeramantry, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Koroma, Vereshchetin, Ferrari Bravo, Higgins; Against: Judge Oda.

(2) Replies in the following manner to the question put by the General Assembly:

(a) Unanimously,

There is in neither customary nor conventional international law any specific authorization of the threat or use of nuclear weapons;

(b) By 11 votes to 3,

There is in neither customary nor conventional international law any comprehensive and universal prohibition of the threat or use of nuclear weapons as such;

In favour: President Bedjaoui; Vice-President Schwebel; Judges Oda, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Ferrari Bravo, Higgins;

Against: Judges Shahabuddeen, Weeramantry, Koroma.

(c) Unanimously,

A threat or use of force by means of nuclear weapons that is contrary to Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations and that fails to meet all the requirements of Article 51 is unlawful;

(d) Unanimously,

A threat or use of nuclear weapons should also be compatible with the requirements of the international law applicable in armed conflict, particularly those of the principles and rules of international humanitarian law, as well as with specific obligations under treaties and other undertakings which expressly deal with nuclear weapons;

(e) By 7 votes to 7, by the President's casting vote,

It follows from the above-mentioned requirements that the threat or use of nuclear weapons would generally be contrary to the rules of international law applicable in armed conflict, and in particular the principles and rules of humanitarian law;

However, in view of the current state of international law, and of the elements of fact at its disposal, the Court cannot conclude definitively whether the threat or use of nuclear weapons would be lawful or unlawful in an extreme circumstance of self-defence, in which the very survival of a State would be at stake;

In favour: President Bedjaoui; Judges Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Ferrari Bravo; Against: Vice-President Schwebel; Judges Oda, Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Weeramantry, Koroma, Higgins.

(f) Unanimously,

There exists an obligation to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control".

President Bedjaoui, Judges Herczegh, Shi, Vereshchetin and Ferrari Bravo appended declarations to the Advisory Opinion of the Court; Judges Guillaume, Ranjeva and Fleischhauer appended separate opinions; Vice-President Schwebel, Judges Oda, Shahabuddeen, Weeramantry, Koroma and Higgins appended dissenting opinions.

Organizational questions

Elections

The General Assembly, on 28 February 1996, by decision 50/319, and the Security Council, acting on the same date by secret ballot, proceeded independently of one another to elect a member of the Court for a term of office expiring on 5 February 2000, to fill a vacancy resulting from the death in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1311] of Judge Andres Aguilar Mawdsley. Gonzalo Parra-Aranguren was elected.

By notes of 6 September, the Secretary-General circulated a list of candidates nominated by national groups for the election of five judges of the Court [A/51/334-S/1996/723 & Rev.1 & Rev.1/Corr.1] and their curricula vitae [A/51/335-S/1996/724 & Corr.1]. The General Assembly, by decision 51/308 of 6 November 1996, and the Security Council, on the same date, proceeded independently of one another to fill vacancies to occur on 6 February 1997, with the expiration of the terms of office of the following judges: Mohammed Bedjaoui (Algeria), Luigi Ferrari-Bravo (Italy), Mohamed Shahabuddeen (Guyana), Vladlen S. Vereshchetin (Russian Federation) and Stephen M. Schwebel (United States).

Three sitting judges were re-elected for a term of office ending on 5 February 2006: Mr. Bedjaoui, Mr. Schwebel, and Mr. Vereshchetin. Two new judges were elected: Pieter H. Kooijmans (Netherlands) and José Francisco Rezek (Brazil).

As a result, the Court was to be composed, as of 6 February 1997, as follows: Stephen M. Schwebel (United States), President; Christopher G. Weeramantry (Sri Lanka), Vice-President; Shigeru Oda (Japan), Mohammed Bedjaoui (Algeria), Gilbert Guillaume (France), Raymond Ranjeva (Madagascar), Geza Herczegh (Hungary), Shi Jiuyong (China), Carl-August Fleischhauer (Germany), Abdul G. Koroma (Sierra Leone), Vladlen S. Vereshchetin (Russian Federation), Rosalyn Higgins (United Kingdom), Gonzalo Parra-Aranguren (Venezuela), Pieter H. Kooijmans (the Netherlands), and José Francisco Rezek (Brazil).

Fiftieth anniversary of the Court

In April 1996, the Court celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. On 18 April, the anniversary of its inaugural sitting in 1946, a ceremonial sitting was held in the presence of Her Majesty Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands. Addresses were given by Diogo Freitas do Amaral, President of the General Assembly, by Hans van Mierlo, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands and by the President of the Court, Judge Mohammed Bedjaoui. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice of the Netherlands also attended the sitting, as well as former members of the Court and judges ad hoc, members of the diplomatic corps, special emissaries of States (including many legal advisers), representatives of UN organs, authorities of the host country and representatives of the press.

Prior to the sitting, a two-day colloquium had been organized in cooperation with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research on the theme "Increasing the effectiveness of the International Court of Justice". During the week of the ceremonial sitting, combined sessions of the Telders Moot Court Competition/Concours Rousseau (for students) were held.

Chapter II

International tribunals

During the year, two international courts created by the United Nations to prosecute war criminals—one for the former Yugoslavia, one for Rwanda—continued to indict persons accused of genocide and other violations of international humanitarian law.

The International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, located in The Hague, Netherlands, continued to confirm public indictments and issue arrest warrants against the accused. On 7 May, the Trial Chambers commenced its first trial and had two other cases before it in the pre-trial phase.

The International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994, with its headquarters located in Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, and its Office of the Prosecutor in Kigali, Rwanda, had indicted 14 suspects and held deferral hearings. In addition, three of the accused had made initial appearances before it.

International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia

By a note of 16 August [A/51/292-S/1996/665], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council the third annual report of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 (International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia), which had been established under Security Council resolution 827(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 440]. At that time, the Council reaffirmed that persons who committed or ordered the commission of grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims were individually responsible in respect of such breaches.

By decision 51/409 of 19 November, the General Assembly took note of the report, which covered the activities of the Tribunal from the period 31 July 1995 to 31 July 1996.

The Tribunal comprised three organs: its judiciary, consisting of 11 Judges assigned to two Trial Chambers and one Appeals Chamber; the Office of the Prosecutor; and the Registry. The Appeals Chamber served both the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the International Tribunal for Rwanda. The Prosecutor, who was based in The Hague, also served both Tribunals.

On 1 October 1996, Louise Arbour (Canada) replaced Richard J. Goldstone (South Africa) as Prosecutor. She was appointed by the Security Council on 29 February by resolution 1047(1996).

On 6 August, Judge Saad Saood Jan (Pakistan) was appointed to replace Judge Rustam Sidhwa (Pakistan), who had resigned for health reasons on 15 July.

The report of the Tribunal stated that, since its first annual report [YUN 1994, p. 506], the Tribunal had moved from the "drawing board" to the operational stage. It had taken positive steps forward and its procedures had been thoroughly tested. The Trial Chambers had become increasingly active, having forgone the traditional arrangement of three judicial sessions, and had instead been sitting continuously since May 1996. The Tribunal had been created by the Security Council in order to contribute to the restoration of peace and security by putting an end to impunity and bringing to trial those persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. The report said that it was imperative that the international community impress upon States and Entities the need to support and fully cooperate with the Tribunal; otherwise, the aims of the Security Council pursued in establishing the Tribunal would be defeated. In this context, the President of the Tribunal cited the words of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Jose Ayala Lasso, as apt: "We must rid this planet of the obscenity that a person stands a better chance of being tried and judged for killing one human being than for killing 100,000."

The Chambers

During the reporting period, 10 public indictments against a total of 33 individuals were confirmed and arrest warrants issued against those accused of war crimes. Six of the newly indicted persons, in addition to one indicted during the previous year, were in the custody of the Tribunal at the UN Detention Unit in The Hague. The first trial, of Dusko Tadic, began on 7 May. Tadic was indicted in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1314] on charges that included genocide. The trial lasted for 23 weeks and ended on 28 November; a final judgement was to be rendered in 1997.

Newly indicted persons. The trial of Drazen Erdemovic, one of the six newly indicted persons in custody, began on 31 May. Erdemovic pleaded guilty to one count of a crime against humanity for his participation in the summary execution of approximately 1,200 unarmed civilian Muslim men in eastern Bosnia and Herzegovina in July 1995. On 29 November, the Trial Chamber sentenced Erdemovic to 10 years' imprisonment. On 18 December, Erdemovic appealed the sentencing judgement, requesting that it be suspended or significantly reduced.

In the case of Tihofil Blaskic, the indictee made his first appearance before a Trial Chamber on 3 April. The charges against General Blaskic related to "ethnic cleansing" of the Bosnian Muslim population of the Lasva river valley area in central Bosnia and Herzegovina between May 1992 and May 1993. Pre-trial motions were filed by the accused relating to the indictment, provisional release, modification of his conditions of detention, the protection of victims and witnesses and disclosure of evidence.

The case of the four other newly indicted persons in custody—Zejnil Delalic, Hazim Delic, Esad Landzo and Zdravko Mucic—concerned the issue of command responsibility, and was the first joint trial to be held before a Trial Chamber of the Tribunal. The indictment was confirmed on 21 March; it alleged numerous grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and violations of the laws and customs of war perpetrated against Bosnian Serb detainees at the Celibaci camp in central Bosnia in 1992. The case was in the pre-trial phase during 1996.

In addition to the 33 persons indicted were two persons indicted a second time during the year. Radovan Karadzic and Ratko Mladic, respectively the President and the Commander of the Army of the Bosnian Serb administration in Pale (Bosnia and Herzegovina), had been indicted in 1995

[YUN 1995, p. 1314] for, inter alia, genocide and crimes against humanity, for the atrocities perpetrated against the civilian population of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the sniping campaign against civilians in Sarajevo and other areas [YUN 1995, p. 527], and the taking, in 1995, of UN peacekeepers as hostages and their use as human shields [YUN 1995, p. 536]. On 16 November 1995, an additional indictment was confirmed against them for, inter alia, genocide following the takeover of one of the six designated "safe areas"—Srebrenica—in July 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 562].

In total, 18 public indictments had been submitted by the Office of the Prosecutor and confirmed by the Judges of the Tribunal, with a total of 75 indictees. To those 18 indictments was added one which remained subject to an order for non-disclosure, giving a total of 19 indictments. Of the 19 indictments, 8 were confirmed in the period covered by the second annual report [YUN 1995, p. 1313]—covering the period from mid-1994 through mid-1995—and 11 under the third covering mid-1995 through mid-1996. Of the 75 published indictees, 42 had been indicted in 1994/95, and 33, of whom one was deceased, in the reporting period of 1995/96. Annexed to the third annual report of the Tribunal was a list of indictments confirmed prior to and including the reporting period, and a detailed survey of all arrest warrants addressed to the parties concerned, as well as the action, if any, taken by the party on whom an arrest warrant had been served.

The indictments fell into seven broad categories: alleged offences relating to the destruction of the city of Vukovar (Croatia) by Yugoslav People's Army forces in November 1991; alleged offences relating to the occupation of towns or villages in Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1992 by Bosnian Serb forces [YUN 1992, pp. 348 & 797] (the Bosanski Samac, Brcko and Foca indictments), and associated killings, rapes and inhumane acts, and/or the later concentration of Bosnia citizens in camps—the Tadic (Omarska, Keraterm and Trnopolje camps), Nikolic (Susica camp) and Omarska camp and Keraterm camp indictments; offences allegedly committed in a camp in which Serbs were detained in 1992 (the Celebici indictment); offences allegedly committed in 1993 when Bosnian Croat forces had "ethnically cleansed" areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina, notably the Lasva river valley area [YUN 1993, p. 945] (Kordic et al., Mrainic and Kupreskic et al. indictments), as well as the village of Stupni Do [YUN 1993, p. 461] (Rajic indictment); events in the former Serbian Krajina region of Croatia (those involved in the Milan Martić indictment) [YUN 1995, p. 809], namely the firing of Orkan rockets by Croatian Serbs into the centre of Zagreb in May 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1314]; the Bosnian Serb leadership, which was the focus of the first indictment against Messrs. Karadzic and Mladic [YUN 1995, p. 1314], and included a discontinued case on the siege of Sarajevo [YUN 1995, p. 527], and events surrounding the fall of Srebrenica [YUN 1995, p. 529], which were dealt with in the Karadzic and Mladic indictment, as well as the Erdemovic indictment of 29 May 1996.

The Chambers were also busy with cases in which it had not been possible to serve warrants of arrest issued by the Tribunal on the accused. To remedy the problem, the Chambers, in five cases, issued international arrest warrants sent to each Member State, as well as to other States and Entities, following a procedure under rule 61 of the Tribunal's Rules of Procedure and Evidence. As a result, the charges and evidence against the accused in those cases were made public, international arrest warrants issued and, in most cases, a report made to the Security Council that the failure to execute the warrants was due to the non-compliance of one or other State or Entity.

In addition, the Appeals Chamber ruled on a number of important legal issues, such as the legality of the establishment of the Tribunal and its subject-matter jurisdiction.

During the reporting period, the Appeals Chamber sat for the first time, rendering a judgement on an interlocutory (i.e. pre-trial) appeal in which a defence counsel had argued before the Chamber that the Tribunal had been unlawfully established; did not have primacy over competent domestic courts; and lacked jurisdiction over the subject matter, such as grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims and the Additional Protocols thereto of 1977 [YUN 1977, p. 706]. The Appeals Chamber dismissed those grounds of appeal: its decision marked the first time that an international appeals body had made a pronouncement on the current status of international criminal law and humanitarian law.

As to regulatory activities, the Tribunal's Rules of Procedure and Evidence were amended by a plenary of Judges. Rule 70 was amended in order to allow the Prosecutor to use as evidence information provided to him on a confidential basis, while at the same time protecting the source by restricting the power of a Trial Chamber to order the source to produce additional evidence or to summon a representative of the source as a witness. The Judges adopted a new rule—90 bis—which allowed the Tribunal to obtain the transfer of a person who was required by the Tribunal as a witness and who had been detained in criminal proceedings in a State. They also amended the rules relating to arrest warrants, and rule 61 was amended so as to allow the Judge who had confirmed an indictment to invite the Prosecutor to report on the measures taken by him to serve the accused. Another newly adopted rule—40 bis—gave the Prosecutor the authority to request an order from a Judge for the transfer and provisional detention of a suspect to the Detention Unit in the Hague. The other amendments adopted were not extensive.

Office of the Prosecutor

During the period under review, the Office of the Prosecutor continued to submit indictments for confirmation—11 in total, 10 of which were public.

The field work of the Office of the Prosecutor was enhanced by the signing in 1995 by Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY) of the Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544], which gave its staff the freedom of movement necessary to carry out investigations in areas which, until then, had been inaccessible. The Prosecutor's Office coordinated its efforts with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Implementation Force (IFOR) in such areas as transferring indictees and other individuals and securing mass grave sites and their exhumations. IFOR assisted the Tribunal continuously throughout the year.

On 9 May, a memorandum of understanding between the Tribunal and the Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe was signed by both parties, spelling out the practical arrangements for support to the Tribunal and the detention and transfer of indictees to the Tribunal.

The first exhumations of mass graves began on 7 July 1996, at Cerska, near Srebrenica, where 155 bodies were found, many with their hands and feet tied. The second site, exhumed in late July at Nova Kabasa, revealed fewer bodies, but they were found in a similar condition.

In Rome, on 18 February, it was agreed by the parties to the Peace Agreement that persons other than those already indicted by the Tribunal might be arrested and detained for serious violations of international humanitarian law only pursuant to a previously issued order, warrant or indictment that had been reviewed and deemed consistent with international legal standards by the Tribunal. It was further agreed that procedures for expeditious decision-making by the Tribunal would be developed and would take effect immediately. The work emanating from the Agreement was referred to as the "Rules of the Road" project.

The Office of the Prosecutor was asked to review 40 cases of individuals who were being held as prisoners of war or suspected war criminals by the parties to the Rome Agreement. Following the review, 11 of the 40 cases were found to contain evidence sufficiently in accordance with international legal standards for the national courts to continue to investigate, and the remainder were found to contain insufficient evidence or to be outside the scope of the review. In the spring of 1996, the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina informed the Prosecutor that it had some 1,500 cases to be reviewed by the Office. Croatia submitted over 100 cases for review.

Due to the enlarged role of the Office, the Prosecutor expanded the Sarajevo field office and created the Fugitive Intelligence Support Team, which was meant to assist in apprehending persons accused by the Tribunal through its coordination of various national and international law enforcement agencies.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 February, the Security Council adopted resolution 1047(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 808(1993) of 22 February 1993, 827(1993) of 25 May 1993, 936(1994) of 8 July 1994 and 955(1994) of 8 November 1994,

Noting with regret the resignation of Mr. Richard J. Goldstone taking effect 1 October 1996,

Having regard to Article 16(4) of the Statute of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and Article 15 of the Statute of the International Tribunal for Rwanda,

Having considered the nomination by the Secretary-General of Mrs. Louise Arbour for the position of Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia and the International Tribunal for Rwanda, Appoints Mrs. Louise Arbour as Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia and the International Tribunal for Rwanda with effect from the date on which Mr. Goldstone's resignation takes effect.

Security Council resolution 1047(1996)

29 February 1996 Meeting 3637 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/139).

The Registry

The Registry, in addition to its responsibility for court management functions, managed a legal aid system of assigning defence counsel to indigent accused, supervised the Detention Unit and the Victims and Witnesses Unit, and maintained diplomatic contacts with States and embassies. The Registry operated under the supervision of the Registrar and the Deputy Registrar.

Cooperation of States

On 28 March [S/1996/223], Bosnia and Herzegovina brought to the Security Council's attention its Government's request to the Prosecutor that he forward to the Council a review of the cooperation that his Office had received from Member States regarding the turning over of individuals indicted by the Tribunal. On 18 April [S/1996/300], Bosnia and Herzegovina forwarded to the Council the Prosecutor's reply, in which he stated that it would not be appropriate for him to make any formal approach to the Council, and that the Tribunal was making efforts to ensure that persons who had been indicted were arrested and surrendered for trial.

On 19 April [S/1996/306], Croatia notified the Council that it had adopted a constitutional law which would allow the Government to cooperate with the Tribunal, effective immediately. In a letter dated 16 September [S/1996/763], the President of the Tribunal, after consulting with the Presiding Judges of the Chambers, informed the Council of the systematic failure by Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina to cooperate with the Tribunal and to comply with its orders.

On 20 September [S/PRST/1996/39], the President of the Council, on behalf of Council members, reminded the Government of Croatia of its obligation to cooperate with the Tribunal and, in particular, to execute the arrest warrants issued by it regarding individuals under Croatian jurisdiction and to transfer all indicted persons to the Tribunal (see PART ONE, Chapter V, for full text of the Presidential statement concerning Croatia's failure to execute International Tribunal arrest warrants).

By a letter of 24 April [S/1996/319], the President of the Tribunal informed the Council that FRY had refused to cooperate with the Tribunal, specifically citing that country's failure to execute arrest warrants against three persons who were in its territory and who were charged with the murder of 260 civilians and other unarmed men following the fall of Vukovar in November 1991. By a letter of 8 May [S/1996/339], FRY described steps it had taken to cooperate with the Tribunal, notably, holding talks between the Tribunal President and the country's Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Justice and the Foreign Minister; its willingness to allow the Tribunal's Bureau to open in Belgrade; and handing over witnesses to the Tribunal for a 60-day period.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 8 May 1996 to consider the text of the letter dated 24 April [S/1996/319] from the President of the Tribunal concerning allegations of non-compliance with Tribunal orders by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). Following consultations among its members, the President of the Council was authorized to make a statement [S/PRST/1996/23] on the Council's behalf, as follows:

The Security Council expresses its profound concern at recent instances of failure to cooperate with the International Tribunal established pursuant to resolution 827(1993) of 25 May 1993, and in particular the failure of cooperation by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia described in the letter of 24 April 1996 from the President of the Tribunal to the President of the Council.

The Security Council recalls its decision in resolution 827(1993) that all States shall cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and its organs in accordance with that resolution and the Statute of the Tribunal and that consequently all States shall take any measures necessary under their domestic law to implement the provisions of the resolution and the Statute, including the obligation of States to comply with requests for assistance or orders issued by Trial Chamber under Article 29 of the Statute. The Council underlines the importance of these obligations, as well as the obligations undertaken by the parties to the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal.

The Security Council deplores the failure to date of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to execute the arrest warrants issued by the Tribunal against the three individuals referred to in the letter of 24 April 1996, and calls for the execution of those arrest warrants without delay.

The Security Council calls upon all States and others concerned to comply fully with their obligations with respect to cooperation with the Tribunal, and in particular their obligation to execute arrest warrants transmitted to them by the Tribunal. It recalls the provisions of its resolution 1022(1995) of 22 November 1995 which notes inter alia that compliance with the requests and orders of the Tribunal constitutes an essential aspect of implementing the Peace Agreement. The Council calls upon all States which have not already done so to make provision in their domestic law enabling them to comply fully with their obligations with respect to cooperation with the Tribunal.

The Security Council will remain seized of the matter.

Meeting number: SC 3663.

The President of the Tribunal, in a letter [S/1996/364] of 22 May, notified the Council that, according to reliable information, General Ratko Mladic had been present in Belgrade on 21 May 1996. He pointed out that General Mladic had not been arrested by the authorities of FRY, which was further evidence of the blatant failure of that country to comply with its legal obligation to execute orders of the Tribunal. The Tribunal President also pointed out that another indictee was seen on the same date in Belgrade.

Non-compliance by FRY and Republika Srpska was the subject of a letter [S/1996/556] of 11 July from the Tribunal President to the Council. He stated that on 11 July a Trial Chamber had delivered a decision under rule 61 in the case of Radovan Karadzic and Ratko Mladic, having found that there were reasonable grounds for believing that the two parties were individually responsible for planning, instigating or ordering the commission of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes. Consequently, the Trial Chamber had issued international arrest warrants against the two accused. Furthermore, he stated that failure to execute the initial arrest warrants issued in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1314] against those two parties was wholly due to the refusal of FRY and Republika Srpska to cooperate with the Tribunal. The Council also considered a July report [S/1996/542] submitted by the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina (see PART ONE, Chapter V), which described implementation activities, and also drew attention to the lack of cooperation with the International Tribunal. He reported that no State or Entity in the area had been able or willing to comply fully with the terms of the Peace Agreement regarding war crimes and cooperation with the Tribunal. The report further stated that there could be no exceptions to the obligation to surrender persons indicted by the Tribunal. In addition, the Council had before it five other communications, all submitted in July. On 2 July [S/1996/510], Bosnia and Herzegovina, noting that it was the only Government that had fully complied with Tribunal orders, asked the Council promptly to sanction the parties that had not complied with Tribunal orders, and to call on IFOR to arrest and extradite indicted war criminals to The Hague. The letter further stated that it must be made clear that elections could not be considered as legal, nor as free and fair, while the Tribunal's orders were ignored. On 8 July [S/1996/535], the Islamic Conference Contact Group on Bosnia and Herzegovina endorsed that letter and expressed concern over the continuing presence and political roles of Radovan Karadzic, Ratko Mladic and others indicted by the Tribunal. In another letter [S/1996/523], Bosnia and Herzegovina drew the Council's attention to a law, passed by what it termed the "self-appointed and de facto assembly of the Republika Srpska", creating its own war crimes tribunal. Bosnia and Herzegovina, in a letter of 18 July [S/1996/565], stated that regardless of the success or failure of efforts to remove indicted war criminals from public and political office, the Council must move to compel their arrest and extradition. In the last letter [S/1996/576], Bosnia and Herzegovina noted the removal of Radovan Karadzic from his post as party leader of the ruling Bosnian Serb party. However, it stated that his removal did not satisfy the demands of the International Tribunal, the Council or the Peace Agreement.

On 8 August [S/PRST/1996/34], the Council President, on behalf of Council members, referring to the refusal of Republika Srpska and FRY to cooperate with the Tribunal in executing arrest warrants issued against Messrs. Karadzic and Mladic, condemned the failure to execute the warrants. The Council demanded the full cooperation of all parties in the execution of all arrest warrants and the transfer to the Tribunal of all persons indicted. It further condemned any attempt to challenge the authority of the Tribunal (see PART ONE, Chapter V, for full text of the statement made by the President of the Security Council regarding compliance with the Peace Agreement in Bosnia and Herzegovina).

In the light of Council deliberations regarding human rights abuses in Srebrenica, Zepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most, Bosnia and Herzegovina, in a letter of 8 October [S/1996/834], asked the Council to take into consideration the third annual report of the International Tribunal [A/51/292-S/1996/665]. It quoted the report's statement that Bosnia and Herzegovina had been by far the most cooperative party, and, on the other side of the spectrum, that Republika Srpska had failed to execute any of the scores of arrest warrants which had been addressed to it, or to explain its inability or failure to do so. In addition, the letter pointed to the Tribunal's report that FRY, which was responsible for Republika Srpska's cooperation and compliance as well as its own, had failed to arrest any indictees in its territory; in the Tribunal's view, the arrest and transfer of major indictees was a forlorn hope. As to Croatia, the report stated that it was cooperating in part, but must exercise its authority and influence over Bosnian Croats to effect the arrest of indictees.

On 10 October [S/PRST/1996/41], the President of the Security Council, on behalf of the Council members, issued a statement reaffirming that violations of international law throughout the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina must be properly investigated and that all States and concerned parties had an obligation to cooperate fully with the Tribunal and to comply with requests for assistance or orders issued by a trial chamber (see PART ONE, Chapter V, for full text of the statement made by the Council President).

Enforcement of sentences

The Tribunal's statute (article 27) prescribed that sentences of imprisonment imposed on a convicted person be served in a State designated by the Tribunal from a list of States that had indicated to the Security Council their willingness to accept such persons. Efforts to obtain indications from States of their willingness to accept convicted persons revealed that only six States agreed without reservation to imprison persons convicted by the Tribunal (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Iran, Finland, Norway and Pakistan). An additional five States agreed to accept prisoners with the reservation that the prisoners were their own nationals or residents (Denmark, Germany, Netherlands, Spain and Sweden). Ten States indicated that they were not in a position to accept prisoners (Bahamas, Belarus, Belize, Burkina Faso, Ecuador, France, Liechtenstein, Malaysia, Poland and Slovenia).

Given that the Tribunal's first trial had started and five additional accused (Blaskic, Delalic, Delic, Landzo and Mucic; see above) awaited trial at the Detention Unit, in addition to which there was one accused who had pleaded guilty and was awaiting sentencing (Erdemovic; see above), there was an urgent need for prison facilities to enforce sentences handed down by the Tribunal.

Financing the Tribunal

During the year, the General Assembly continued to consider the financing of the International Tribunal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 April, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/212 B.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991,

Recalling its resolution 50/212 A of 23 December 1995, by which it appropriated to the Special Account for the International Tribunal an amount of 8,619,500 United States dollars gross (7,637,500 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 31 March 1996 to allow the Tribunal to continue its activities through 31 March 1996, without prejudice to recommendations the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions might make to the General Assembly at its resumed fiftieth session,

1. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in the additional amount of 8,619,500 dollars gross (7,637,500 dollars net) for the period from 1 April to 30 June 1996 to allow the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 to continue its activities, pending a detailed report of the comments and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Decides also, as an ad hoc and exceptional arrangement, that Member States shall waive their respective shares in the credits arising from previous budgets of the United Nations Protection Force in the total amount of 4,309,750 dollars gross (3,818,750 dollars net) and hence accept an equivalent increase in the assessments for a future budget period of the Force in the same amount, to be transferred to the Special Account for the International Tribunal from the Special Account for the United Nations Protection Force established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 46/233 of 19 March 1992;

3. Decides further to apportion 4,309,750 dollars gross (3,818,750 dollars net) for the period from 1 April to 30 June 1996 among Member States in accordance with the scale of assessments for the year 1996;

4. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 491,000 dollars for the International Tribunal for the period from 1 April to 30 June 1996.

General Assembly resolution 50/212 B

11 April 1996 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/849/Add.1) without vote, 4 April (meeting 55); draft by Austria (A/C.5/50/L.35); agenda item 136.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 42, 43, 53, 55; plenary 104.

ACABQ report. In an April report [A/50/925], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) presented its comments and recommendations on a 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 1319] of the Secretary-General concerning the requirements of the Tribunal for 1996. It recommended approval of an appropriation of $32,908,122 (net) for 1996 operations of the Tribunal. The amount recommended for appropriation would be in addition to $8,619,500 gross ($7,637,500 net) appropriated by the General Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1320] for the period from 1 January to 31 March 1996.

The Committee recalled that the Assembly had decided to review in 1997 the mode of financing of the Tribunal. It believed that, given the need to prepare for the long-term implications of the Tribunal's work and the requirements that might develop in 1996, the date of the review should be advanced.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/242 B [YUN 1995, p. 1318], the Secretary-General submitted in May a performance report [A/C.5/50/69] of the International Tribunal for the 1994-1995 biennium. An amount totalling $43,715,400 gross ($38,819,700 net) was approved by the Assembly for the operation of the Tribunal from 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1995. During that period, expenditures totalled $35,868,109, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $2,951,591.

The General Assembly was asked, in financing the International Tribunal, to credit the unencumbered balance against the Tribunal's 1996 budget, and to assess Member States for the balance, according to the 50/50 cost-sharing methodology determined by the Assembly in 1995 [res. 49/242 B].

General Assembly resolution 50/212 C

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/849/Add.2) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.62), orally revised; agenda item 136.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 50/212 C, the Secretary-General, in a November report [A/C.5/51/30], presented the 1997 resource requirements of the Tribunal. The report detailed 1995 extrabudgetary expenditures and related 1996 and 1997 estimates by programme, together with information on seconded personnel and the status of cash contributions.

By the same resolution, the Assembly had also requested the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) to evaluate the resource requirements of the Tribunal and to report at the Assembly's current session. However, pending the issuance of the report (see below, under "OIOS review") and to ensure the continued operation of the Tribunal without disruption in 1997, the Secretary-General proposed that real resources for 1997 be kept at the 1996 level, to be augmented solely by additional resources to meet immediate and non-deferrable exigencies of the ongoing work of the Tribunal.

The resources requested for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1997 amounted to $53,475,800 net ($58,863,500 gross), reflecting a net increase of $18,045,178 and an additional 36 posts over the 1996 appropriation and staffing level.

ACABQ report. In December [A/51/7/Add.5], ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly appropriate the amount of $47,377,100 gross ($42,293,800 net) for 1997 for the Tribunal. It noted that the assessment of the amounts could take into account the unencumbered balance as at 31 December 1996, which was estimated at $5 million.

The Committee recommended that the Secretary-General, after consulting with the UN Legal Counsel, report to the Assembly on how to deal with the issue of Judges whose terms were expiring in 1997, some of whom might not seek reappointment. It also recommended that he prepare a comprehensive performance report for 1996, and issue specific guidelines on the requirements for receipt of contributions and application of funds. As to the question of gratis personnel, ACABQ was not in a position to complete its consideration of the subject before the end of 1996.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/214 A.

Financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling its resolution 50/212 C of 7 June 1996, in which it requested the Secretary-General to entrust the Office of Internal Oversight Services to undertake, without prejudice to its programme of work, an inspection of the International Tribunal, with a view to identifying problems and recommending measures to enhance the efficient utilization of resources, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session,

Noting that the Secretary-General intends to submit revised budget proposals for 1997 following the finalization at the end of 1996 of the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his revised budget proposals detailed explanations regarding the rental conditions of office and parking space referred to in paragraph 89 of his report and the efforts to find subtenants for the available office and parking space, taking into account paragraph 10 of General Assembly resolution 48/251 of 14 April 1994;

3. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 a total amount of 23,655,600 United States dollars gross (21,146,900 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1997;

4. Decides also that the appropriation for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1997 under the Special Account referred to in paragraph 3 above shall be financed according to the methodology established by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/242 B of 20 July 1995, taking into account the anticipated availability of an unencumbered balance of 5 million dollars for 1996, as detailed in the annex to the present resolution;

5. Decides further that Member States shall waive their respective shares in the remaining credits arising from previous budgets of the United Nations Protection Force in the amount of 9,327,800 dollars gross (8,073,450 dollars net), to be transferred to the Special Account for the International Tribunal from the Special Account for the United Nations Protection Force established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 46/233 of 19 March 1992;

6. Decides to apportion the amount of 9,327,800 dollars gross (8,073,450 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the scale of assessments for the year 1997;

7. 8. Decides further to revert to the consideration of the financing of the International Tribunal for the year 1997 at the first part of its resumed fifty-first session on the basis of the revised budget proposals to be submitted by the Secretary-General and the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, which was requested with a view to identifying problems and recommending measures to enhance the efficient utilization of resources, to be submitted to the General Assembly.

OIOS review

In accordance with the request of the General Assembly in resolution 50/212 C, the Secretary-General transmitted a report [A/51/824], conveyed to him by the Under-Secretary-General of OIOS, on the review of the 1997 resource requirements for the Tribunal, which took place between September and December. The original budget proposal totalled $68.7 million net for the three organs of the Tribunal, which reflected an increase of $33.3 million (94 per cent) and an additional 197 posts over the 1996 appropriation and authorized staffing level.

In the evaluation of the resource requirements, OIOS identified at least $6 million in reductions, consisting of 39 unsubstantiated and duplicate post requests, as well as instances of non-essential expenditure projections. An examination of alternatives to the construction of a second courtroom, costing some $5.5 million, could result in additional savings, it was stated. Further budget reductions could be achieved through more efficient ways of operating, such as outsourcing, cost-sharing and pooling administrative functions.

The OIOS report confirmed that the requisite budget methodology had been followed and that supporting documentation was available to substantiate most Tribunal requests. However, management information on the work in progress of each investigation team within the Office of the Prosecutor was not always available. OIOS endorsed the assignment of additional investigative resources to individual teams, but expressed reservations about establishing posts unlikely to have a measurable effect on the progress of individual investigations, as well as concern over possible duplication of functions. In addition, OIOS reported, the high level of vacancies did not appear to have been a factor in forecasting staffing needs. Historic financial data were sometimes unreliable and the forecasted uses of voluntary contributions remained unquantified. Cost projections for the field offices were not consolidated and transparent.

Recommendations concerning the future staffing needs of the Office of the Prosecutor included the following: formulating certain benchmarks for investigations as judicial precedent and work processes became more defined; establishing an institutionalized assignment tracking system; monitoring extra coverage afforded by additional staff; and more adequate justification of the size of the Strategy Team in the Investigation Section. Other recommendations advocated exploring less expensive staffing arrangements in the field; clearly defining the responsibilities for certain posts and seconded personnel in the Office of the Prosecutor and the Registry; weighing the proposed construction of a second courtroom against less expensive alternatives; revising downward expenditure projections for travel, rental, electronic data-processing equipment and the Detention Unit; restricting technical equipment needs to basic operational requirements; pooling administrative and support functions for Tribunal organs; and exploring outsourcing and cost-sharing arrangements to minimize unnecessary expenditures. Appended to the report was a table reflecting what OIOS considered unjustified post and resource requirements.

International Tribunal for Rwanda

The terms of reference for the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 were established under Security Council resolution 955(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 299].

The headquarters of the Tribunal was located in Arusha (United Republic of Tanzania), and the Office of the Prosecutor in Kigali (Rwanda).

First annual report

On 16 September, the General Assembly, by decision 50/495, decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-first (1996) session the item, "Report of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994".

By a note of 24 September [A/51/399-S/1996/778], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council the first annual report of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, submitted by the Tribunal's President. The report described the activities of the Tribunal, which comprised the Chambers, consisting of two Trial Chambers and an Appeals Chamber; the Office of the Prosecutor; and the Registry, servicing both the Chambers and the Office of the Prosecutor. The Appeals Chamber served the Tribunals both of the former Yugoslavia and of Rwanda, as did the Office of the Prosecutor.

The period covered by the report corresponded to the establishment of the Tribunal's material and legal infrastructure and to the commencement of its judicial activities.

The report stated that the selection and recruitment of staff for the Office of the Prosecutor had been a long and complex process. The Office comprised four main sections, devoted to investigations, prosecution, legal services and administration and records, with the investigations section being the largest. Because of the generous contribution of the Netherlands, which had seconded 21 investigators in September 1995, the Office of the Prosecutor had had the minimum organizational resources needed to concentrate on its priority tasks.

The secretariat, common to the two International Tribunals, was established in The Hague to increase the efficiency of the Prosecutor. Some members of the secretariat had gone on mission to Kigali, Rwanda, in order to assist the Deputy Prosecutor and the chief of the investigations section in implementing the strategy adopted by the Prosecutor, which was to give priority to investigating and prosecuting individuals who had held important responsibilities in the events that occurred in Rwanda.

All of the Tribunal's organs played an active role in its development. Despite various difficulties encountered, and although the Judges were not officially regarded as having taken office until 19 June 1996, they endeavoured to initiate the Tribunal's judicial activities as swiftly as possible.

On 10 December, the General Assembly, by decision 51/410, took note of the first annual report.

The Chambers

The Chambers consisted of the First and Second Trial Chambers, staffed by three Judges each, and an Appeals Chamber composed of five Judges.

The judicial action taken by the Tribunal on 30 June 1996 included the confirmation of six indictments (or conduct of the pre-trial phase of the proceedings in respect of 14 individuals), review of three requests for deferral to the Tribunal's competence, proceedings relating to the detention of suspects, and the initial appearances of the accused in the framework of three trials.

Regarding the indictments, the first reviewed by the Tribunal concerned eight individuals suspected of having committed crimes allegedly perpetrated in the Kibuye prefecture in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 291]. That indictment was confirmed on 28 November 1995. Two further indictments, each in respect of one individual, were confirmed on 16 February 1996; one of them dealt with massacres committed in April 1994 in the Kigali and Gitarama prefectures [YUN 1994, p. 282]. On 19 and 20 June, three more indictments were confirmed which dealt with mass killings in the Butare and Kibuye prefectures and made it possible to charge five further individuals. As each indictment was confirmed, an arrest warrant was issued against the accused and transmitted by the Registrar to the competent State authorities.

In May, three accused persons appeared for the first time before the Tribunal, marking the first time an international criminal tribunal was sitting in Africa. On 30 May, Georges Anderson Rutaganda and Jean-Paul Akayesu appeared before the First Trial Chamber. Akayesu was the former burgomaster of the Taba district, Gitarama prefecture. Rutaganda was charged with participating in the massacres committed in the Kigali and Gitarama prefectures; the violations indicated in the indictment were genocide, crimes against humanity and serious violations of the Geneva Conventions of 1949. On 31 May, Clement Kayishema appeared before the Chamber. He had been charged in relation to the Kibuye indictment (see above).

Regarding regulatory activities, the Judges of the Trial Chambers and the Appeals Chamber had held the Tribunal's first plenary session from 26 to 30 June 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1322] at The Hague, as the Tribunal's premises in Arusha were not ready.

At their second plenary session, held from 8 to 12 January in Arusha, the Judges adopted amendments to the rules of procedure and evidence, as well as two texts drawn up by the Registrar dealing with the rules of detention and the directive for the assignment of defence counsel. The Judges decided to appoint an independent authority to inspect conditions in the Tribunal's Detention Unit.

In accordance with the rules of procedure and evidence, the officers of the Chambers met from 13 to 15 March and decided to enter into an agreement with the International Committee of the Red Cross, which was to become the independent authority for inspecting detention conditions.

Office of the Prosecutor

The precarious financial situation of the Tribunal, within the overall context of the financial crisis of the United Nations, seriously jeopardized the start of the activities of the Office of the Prosecutor. Given the limited financial and human resources available to it, the Office of the Prosecutor had no choice but to concentrate its efforts on individuals who had been in positions of responsibility during the events which occurred in Rwanda in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 281].

The Tribunal held its first public hearing on 11 January, when the Second Trial Chamber reviewed a deferral request filed by the Prosecutor relating to investigations and proceedings instituted in respect of three individuals who had been detained in Belgium. The Chamber approved the Prosecutor's request and asked the Belgian authorities to defer to the Tribunal's competence. On 12 March, the First Trial Chamber approved two other deferral requests filed by the Prosecutor; a further two requests were presented and approved on 17 May. On 17 May, four decisions were rendered following consideration of four requests filed by the Prosecutor under rule 40 bis of the rules of procedure and evidence, which had been adopted by the Judges on 15 May. (By rule 40 bis, a Judge could order the provisional detention of a suspect and his or her transfer to the Detention Unit, in situations where the suspect had already been arrested provisionally or otherwise detained and where the Judge considered that there was a reliable and consistent body of material that tended to show that the suspect might have committed a crime over which the Tribunal had jurisdiction and in which the Judge also considered provisional detention necessary to prevent the escape of the suspect, injury to or intimidation of a victim or witness or the destruction of evidence, or to be otherwise necessary for the conduct of the investigation.) In response to those requests, provisional detention for a 30-day period and the transfer of four suspects imprisoned by the Cameroonian authorities was ordered. On 18 June, following an inter partes hearing involving the Prosecutor and the four suspects, four more decisions were rendered, extending their provisional detention for a period not exceeding 30 days, until 16 July, in order to enable the Prosecutor to prepare indictments.

In view of the importance of cooperation between the Tribunal and United Nations Member States, particularly with States neighbouring Rwanda and having large numbers of refugees in their territory, the Prosecutor and Deputy Prosecutor travelled in 1995 to meet with representatives of the Governments of Kenya, South Africa, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire and Zambia. They also met with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity. In May 1996, the Prosecutor met in The Hague with a representative of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to discuss cooperative measures. Additional efforts were taken to enlist and strengthen the support of Member States and international and non-governmental organizations.

The Registry

The Registry was entrusted with the day-to-day management of the judicial activities of the Tribunal, which included the preparation of legal documents, ensuring the proper functioning of the hearings, managing the Detention Unit, and transmitting arrest warrants and other documents pertaining to the judicial files and following up with regard to files. It also managed the Witness Unit, which was established on 24 June and assisted both prosecution and defence witnesses.

Financing the Tribunal

Report of Secretary-General. In a March report [A/C.5/50/54], the Secretary-General presented the requirements of the Tribunal for 1996, which amounted to $38,770,900 and included proposals for 404 posts. The estimate included the amount of $7,609,900 gross ($7,090,600 net) authorized by the General Assembly in 1995 [res. 50/213 A]. An additional amount of $2,459,700 would be required for staff assessment, to be offset by income from staff assessment of the same amount.

The Assembly decided in 1995 [res. 49/251] that appropriations for the 1996-1997 biennium under the Special Account for the Tribunal should be financed equally through a cost-sharing arrangement in accordance with Member States' scale of assessments for 1996 and the credits arising from the budget of the UN Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR) (see PART ONE, Chapter II). The Secretary-General stated that it was assumed that the 50/50 cost-sharing arrangement for the financing of the Tribunal would continue to be operative until reviewed by the Assembly.

Tables annexed to the report included a summary of estimates for the period 1 January to 31 December 1996 by object of expenditure.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 April, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/213 B.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994,

Recalling its resolution 50/213 A of 23 December 1995, by which it appropriated to the Special Account for the International Tribunal for Rwanda an amount of 7,609,900 United States dollars gross (7,090,600 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 31 March 1996, pending the submission to the General Assembly of the requirements of the Tribunal for the full year 1996,

1. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the continued operation of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 for the period from 1 April to 30 June 1996 up to the amount of 7,609,900 dollars gross (7,090,600 dollars net), pending a detailed report of the comments and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Decides also, as an ad hoc and exceptional arrangement, that, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 12 of its resolution 49/20 B of 12 July 1995, Member States shall waive their respective shares in the credits arising from previous budgets of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda in the total amount of 3,804,950 dollars gross (3,545,300 dollars net) and hence accept an equivalent increase in the assessments for a future budget period of the Assistance Mission in the same amount, to be transferred to the Special Account for the International Tribunal for Rwanda from the Special Account for the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda;

3. Decides further to apportion the amount of 3,804,950 dollars gross (3,545,300 dollars net) for the period from 1 April to 30 June 1996 among Member States in accordance with the scale of assessments for the year 1996;

4. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 259,650 dollars approved for the International Tribunal for Rwanda for the period from 1 April to 30 June 1996.

General Assembly resolution 50/213 B

11 April 1996 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by the Fifth Committee (A/50/852/Add.1) without vote, 4 April (meeting 55); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.36); agenda item 160.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 42, 43, 53, 55; plenary 104.

Report of ACABQ. In April, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) submitted comments [A/50/923] on the Secretary-General's March report detailing requirements for the Tribunal for 1996.

The Committee pointed out that, of the $12,914,900 appropriated for the Tribunal in 1995, only $1,645,000 was utilized. Therefore, it said, of the $38,770,900 being requested for 1996, the amount of $11,269,900 was available from the previous period. ACABQ also noted a number of differences between the presentation of the budgets of the International Tribunal for Rwanda and that of the Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, and emphasized the need for uniformity and comparability in the presentation of the budgets of the two Tribunals.

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly approve $32,552,000 gross ($29,404,100 net) for the maintenance of the Tribunal for 1996, in addition to the amount of $7,609,900 gross ($7,090,600 net) appropriated by the Assembly in 1995 [res. 50/213 A] for the period 1 January to 31 March 1996.

ACABQ, recalling that in 1995 the Assembly had decided [res. 49/251] to review the mode of financing of the Tribunal at its fifty-second (1997) session, stated that it believed that, given the need to prepare for the long-term implications of the Tribunal's work and the requirements that might develop in 1996, the review should be advanced.

Report of Secretary-General. In May, the Secretary-General submitted the performance report [A/C.5/50/70] of the International Tribunal covering 1995. An amount totalling $13,467,300 gross ($12,914,900 net) had been approved by the General Assembly in 1995 [res. 49/251] for the operation of the Tribunal. During the period, expenditures totalled $2,202,900, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $10,712,000. The Assembly was requested to credit the unencumbered balance against the Tribunal budget for 1996 and to assess Member States for the balance according to the 50/50 cost-sharing method determined by the Assembly in the same resolution.

Annexed to the report were tables reflecting receipts and expenditures from the Voluntary Fund to support the activities of the International Tribunal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 June, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/213 C.

5. Decides to apportion the amount of 6,904,818 dollars gross (5,800,769 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the scale of assessments for the year 1996;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report fully on both the receipt and application of extrabudgetary funds when preparing future budget proposals for the International Tribunal for Rwanda so as to ensure transparency with regard to the purpose and use of such funds;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit the budget for the International Tribunal for Rwanda for 1997 no later than 1 November 1996;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to entrust the Office of Internal Oversight Services with undertaking, without prejudice to its programme of work, an inspection of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, with a view to identifying problems and recommending measures to enhance the efficient utilization of resources, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

10. Decides to revert to the issue of voluntary contributions in the context of the budget proposals for 1997.

General Assembly resolution 50/213 C

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by the Fifth Committee (A/50/852/Add.2) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.63), based on informal consultations, orally revised by Canada; agenda item 160.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 42, 43, 53, 55, 57, 58, 64 (resumed); plenary 120.

Report of Secretary-General. In a November report [A/C.5/51/29 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General presented the 1997 resource requirements for the International Tribunal. Pending issuance of an evaluation of resource requirements by the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) (see below, under "OIOS review"), the Secretary-General proposed that real resources for 1997 be kept at the 1996 level, to be augmented solely by those additional resources required to meet the immediate and non-deferrable exigencies of the Tribunal. The amount of resources for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1997 amounted to $46,732,700 net ($51,415,200 gross) and reflected a net increase of $10,238,000 and an additional 21 posts over the 1996 appropriation and authorized staffing level.

Report of ACABQ. In December, ACABQ recommended [A/51/7/Add.5] that, pending the receipt of revised estimates for 1997 for the Tribunal, the General Assembly maintain for 1997 the same appropriation levels approved for 1996 but with existing staff calculated at full cost, actual 1997 rental cost and deletion of non-recurrent 1996 costs. Upon its request, the Committee was informed that requirements for the Tribunal for 1997 would amount to $46,229,900 gross ($41,742,200 net). It recommended that the Assembly appropriate that amount. The assessment of the amount could take into account the unencumbered balance in respect of 1996, which totalled $ 12 million.

The Committee also recommended that the Secretary-General prepare a comprehensive performance report for 1996, indicating how resources were utilized, including assessed and voluntary contributions. It stated that it would continue to consider in 1997 the issue of personnel provided free of charge to the United Nations to occupy posts that would otherwise have been funded from assessed contributions.

OIOS review

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/213 C, the Secretary-General transmitted a report [A/51/789] on the audit and investigation of the Tribunal, conveyed to him by the Under-Secretary-General of OIOS.

A team of auditors and investigators assembled by OIOS conducted the review in Arusha and Kigali and at UN Headquarters. The team examined Tribunal records, interviewed senior officials and other staff members as well as seconded experts, and conducted on-site inspections of property and facilities. Subsequently, it conducted additional interviews with Secretariat officials at Headquarters and with current and former Tribunal officials. Complaints from staff members and from Member States concerning perceived abuses in the Tribunal were examined. The evidence did not confirm allegations of corrupt practices or misuse of funds. However, the review disclosed mismanagement in almost all areas of the Tribunal and frequent violations of UN rules and regulations.

The review revealed that in the Tribunal Registry not a single administrative area functioned effectively. Finance had no accounting system and could not produce allotment reports; lines of authority were not clearly defined; internal controls were weak; personnel in key positions did not have the required qualifications; there was no property management system; procurement procedures deviated from UN procedures; UN rules and regulations were widely disregarded; the Kigali office had not received the necessary administrative support; and construction work of the second courtroom had not started.

The Office of the Prosecutor in Kigali had administrative, leadership and operational problems, OIOS stated. Functions were hampered by a lack of experienced staff as well as a lack of vehicles, computers and other office equipment and supplies. Lawyer posts were vacant and, of the nearly 80 investigator posts, only 30 had been filled. Prosecution strategy deficiencies were noted, and witness-related programmes had not been fully developed. The report said that the Deputy Prosecutor had been encouraged by the former Prosecutor to focus on national figures, recognizing that the time needed to develop such cases could take many months. The Deputy Prosecutor, OIOS said, continued to follow the initial prosecution strategy, and did not redirect the limited resources of the Office of the Prosecutor to pursue key figures in the genocide, nor did the former Prosecutor take steps to ensure this new focus. Those assigned to investigative teams advised OIOS that the teams had been setting their own plans and strategies.

OIOS concluded that the effective establishment of the Tribunal had been affected by short-term funding arrangements, by geographical separation of the Prosecutor's Office from the Tribunal's other entities, and by lack of adequate infrastructure at both Arusha and Kigali.

The Under-Secretary-General of OIOS recommended that the Registry: conduct regular meetings with the President of the Tribunal and Deputy Prosecutor; establish internal controls to ensure that UN rules and regulations were enforced; fill key positions with qualified staff, with the support and guidance of the UN Department of Administration and Management (DAM); give more attention to recruiting staff who had language skills in English and French, the Tribunal's working languages; seek, with the assistance of the Office of Legal Affairs (OLA), a written agreement with the host Government stipulating the detailed terms and conditions for construction and use of detention facilities; establish procedures to ensure that contributions in kind were accounted for and utilized in conformity with UN rules and regulations and with donors' intentions, and with the Registrar and Prosecutor having knowledge of the agreements; operate dollar bank accounts in Arusha and Kigali to minimize cash payments and cash holdings by issuing cheques to staff and vendors; take immediate measures to ensure that accounts were corrected, backlogs in financial reporting settled and all staff entered into the payroll system; initiate recovery of overpaid salaries and entitlements; return borrowed posts to the Office of the Prosecutor; give priority to security in Kigali and Arusha; and establish a post-trial programme, given that the first witnesses had testified in the first trial. The report also recommended: designating DAM as the Secretariat department to support and guide the Registry; having the Tribunal, with the assistance of OLA, set forth the role, scope and reporting relationship of the Registrar; appointing a Deputy Registrar experienced in court management; supervision of the activities of the Registry by the President of the Tribunal; and having the Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia serve as a model and contact for unresolved issues in the Registry in Arusha.

As to the Prosecutor, the Under-Secretary-General recommended that: a Deputy Prosecutor be selected who had leadership skills and experience in running a prosecutorial office and directing significant criminal investigations; experienced criminal trial lawyers should be recruited and the current senior trial attorneys sufficiently trained; and experienced investigators should be selected. The decision to share the few forensic investigators with the Office of the Prosecutor for the Former Yugoslavia should be reconsidered, he said, as that might delay the substantial work still to be done in Rwanda, and the services of experienced intelligence analysts should be enlisted to coordinate the strategy so that leads were developed, assessed and prioritized. He also proposed that the Victims and Witnesses Unit, currently in the Registry, be located within the Office of the Prosecutor, and that, given the difficulties caused by the absence of law office resources in Kigali, the Office of the Prosecutor in The Hague and OLA should provide more structured support while the Registry sought additional funding. The OIOS Under-Secretary-General noted that the Administrative Office in Kigali should be upgraded and authority delegated to enable the Administrative Officer to provide day-to-day administrative services to the Office of the Prosecutor.

Regarding the Tribunal, the Under-Secretary-General stated that the Tribunals for Rwanda and for the Former Yugoslavia should facilitate and foster their relationship. He noted that the Tribunal for Rwanda, with the assistance as needed of OLA, should set forth clearly the role, scope and reporting relationships of the Registrar so that the independence of the Chambers and the Office of the Prosecutor were fully recognized and the service function of the Registry was emphasized and guided.

Functioning of Tribunals

On 13 February, the Judges of the Tribunals for both Rwanda and the Former Yugoslavia requested the Security Council to consider proposed amendments to their statutes that had been agreed to at their respective plenary meetings [S/1996/475].

The proposals addressed the Judges' concern that there was an insufficient number of Judges, in view of the fact that the workload of the Chambers of both Tribunals was expected to increase dramatically in the coming months. The Judges suggested increasing the number of Judges available or keeping the number constant while expanding their judicial responsibilities by increasing flexibility of assignment. The Judges felt that it would be appropriate to allow Judges to be temporarily assigned from one Tribunal to the other and from all Trial Chambers to the joint Appeals Chamber on an ad hoc basis, as required. The Judges favoured the latter as the most efficient and cost-effective option.

The Judges suggested that if the Council felt that the amendments were not appropriate, two additional Judges should be appointed to each Tribunal as soon as possible to ensure that both Tribunals continued to function.

On 27 June, the President of the Council replied [S/1996/476], stating that, following a review of the matter, the Council members did not believe that the situation required amending the Tribunals' statutes. However, recognizing that increased judicial activity in the coming months might raise problems regarding the availability of Judges, the Council members examined alternative proposals. They considered that adequate solutions might be achieved under the rules of procedure and evidence of both Tribunals. They also noted that cautious use of the provisions of rule 61 (see above, under "The Chambers", International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia) might provide an additional solution.

Chapter III

Legal aspects of international political relations

In 1996, the United Nations continued work on issues dealing with the legal aspects of international political and State relations.

The International Law Commission, at its forty-eighth session, continued work on the progressive codification of international law. In December, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Commission; expressed its appreciation for the completion of the final draft articles on the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind and the provisional draft articles on State responsibility; requested the Secretary-General to solicit from Member States written comments and observations on possible actions regarding the draft Code; and recommended that the Commission continue its work on those topics.

The Assembly decided to convene in 1998 a diplomatic conference of plenipotentiaries in order to finalize and adopt a convention on the establishment of an international criminal court; and took note of the report of its Working Group of the Whole on the proposed convention on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses.

With regard to measures to eliminate international terrorism, the Assembly strongly condemned all acts, methods and practices of terrorism as criminal and unjustifiable; called on all States to adopt measures to prevent it and to strengthen international cooperation to that end; and decided to establish an ad hoc committee to elaborate an international convention for the suppression of terrorism.

As to measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, the Assembly, inter alia, strongly condemned acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as against missions and representatives of international intergovernmental organizations. States that had not done so were urged to ratify, accept, approve or accede to the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel; and an appeal was launched to all States to consider becoming parties to the additional Protocols to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts.

International Law Commission

The International Law Commission, at its forty-eighth session (Geneva, 6 May-26 July 1996) [A/51/10 & Corr.1], held 48 public meetings. It completed final draft articles for a Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind and provisional draft articles on State responsibility for wrongful acts. It also considered State succession and its impact on the nationality of natural and legal persons; draft articles on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law; and the law and practice relating to reservations to treaties. As to its long-term programme of work, the Commission proposed a general scheme which would help integrate in a global review of the main fields of international law some possible topics for future studies. A general outline was prepared of the main legal problems raised by three possible future topics which, in the Commission's view, were ready for codification and development, namely, diplomatic protection, ownership and protection of wrecks beyond the limits of national maritime jurisdiction and unilateral acts of States. The Commission also continued to cooperate with the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, the European Committee on Legal Cooperation and the Inter-American Juridical Committee.

In compliance with General Assembly resolution 50/45 [YUN 1995, p. 1326], the Secretariat prepared for the Commission's attention a topical summary [A/CN.4/472 & Add.1] of the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee discussion of the Commission's 1995 report.

The thirty-second session of the International Law Seminar for postgraduate students, young professors or government officials dealing with international law was held (Geneva, 17 June-5 July) with 24 participants of different nationalities, mostly from developing countries. The participants attended meetings of the Commission as well as lectures organized for them. Cyprus, Denmark, Finland, Hungary, Iceland, Japan, Norway and Switzerland made voluntary contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Law Seminar, thus making it possible to award 10 full and 6 partial fellowships. Since the first seminar in 1965, fellowships had been awarded to 389 of the 714 participants representing 140 nationalities.

In June, the thirteenth Gilberto Amado Memorial Lecture, created in 1971 by the Commission to honour one of its former members, was delivered by Professor Celso Lafer of Brazil.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/160.

Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-eighth session

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-eighth session,

Emphasizing the importance of furthering the progressive development of international law and its codification as a means of implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Emphasizing also the role of the International Law Commission in the fulfilment of the objectives of the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Recognizing the desirability of referring legal and drafting questions to the Sixth Committee, including topics that might be submitted to the International Law Commission for closer examination, and of enabling the Sixth Committee and the Commission further to enhance their contribution to the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling the need to keep under review those topics of international law which, given their new or renewed interest for the international community, may be suitable for the progressive development and codification of international law and therefore may be included in the future programme of work of the International Law Commission,

Stressing the usefulness of structuring the debate on the report of the International Law Commission in the Sixth Committee in such a manner that conditions are provided for concentrated attention to each of the main topics dealt with in the report,

Wishing to enhance further the interaction between the Sixth Committee as a body of government representatives and the International Law Commission as a body of independent legal experts, with a view to improving the dialogue between the two organs,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-eighth session;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the International Law Commission for the work accomplished at its forty-eighth session, in particular for the completion of the final draft articles on the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind and the provisional draft articles on State responsibility, and draws the attention of the States participating in the Preparatory Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court to the relevance of the draft Code to their work;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments to submit, before the end of the fifty-third session of the General Assembly, their written comments and observations on action which might be taken in relation to the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind;

4. Recommends that, taking into account the comments of Governments, whether in writing or expressed orally in debates in the General Assembly, the International Law Commission should continue its work on the topics in its current programme;

5. Draws the attention of Governments to the importance, for the International Law Commission, of having their views on the draft articles on State responsibility adopted on first reading by the Commission, and urges them to submit their comments and observations in writing by 1 January 1998, as requested by the Commission;

6. Encourages Governments that may wish to do so to provide, in writing, their comments and observations on the report of the Working Group on International Liability for Injurious Consequences Arising out of Acts not Prohibited by International Law, annexed to the report of the International Law Commission, in order that the Commission may, in the light of the report of the Working Group and such comments and observations as may be made by Governments and those that have been made in the Sixth Committee, consider at its forty-ninth session how to proceed with its work on the topic and make early recommendations thereon;

7. Invites States and international organizations, particularly those that are depositaries, to answer promptly the questionnaire prepared by the Special Rapporteur on the topic concerning reservations to treaties;

8. Notes the completion of the preliminary study of the topic "State succession and its impact on the nationality of natural and legal persons", requests the International Law Commission to undertake the substantive study of the topic "Nationality in relation to the succession of States" in accordance with the modalities provided for in paragraph 88 of its report, and invites Governments to submit comments on the practical problems raised by the succession of States affecting the nationality of legal persons;

9. Takes note with appreciation of paragraphs 143 to 244 of the report of the International Law Commission concerning its procedures and working methods;

10. Takes note of the comments of the International Law Commission on the question of a split session, as presented in paragraphs 228 to 233 of its report;

11. Encourages the International Law Commission, in relation to its internal matters, to take decisions which could contribute to its efficiency and productivity;

12. Takes note of the decision of the International Law Commission contained in paragraph 256 of its report on the duration of its next session;

13. Invites the International Law Commission further to examine the topics "Diplomatic protection" and "Unilateral acts of States" and to indicate the scope and the content of the topics in the light of the comments and observations made during the debate in the Sixth Committee on the report of the Commission and any written comments that Governments may wish to submit;

14. Requests the International Law Commission to continue to pay special attention to indicating in its annual report, for each topic, those specific issues, if any,

on which expressions of views by Governments, either in the Sixth Committee or in written form, would be of particular interest in providing effective guidance for the Commission in its further work;

15. Reaffirms its previous decisions concerning the role of the Codification Division of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat and those concerning the summary records and other documentation of the International Law Commission;

16. Once again expresses the wish that seminars will continue to be held in conjunction with the sessions of the International Law Commission and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries will be given the opportunity to attend those seminars, appeals to States that can do so to make the voluntary contributions that are urgently needed for the holding of the seminars, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the seminars with adequate services, including interpretation, as required;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the International Law Commission, for its attention, the records of the debate on the report of the Commission at the fifty-first session of the General Assembly, together with such written statements as delegations may circulate in conjunction with their oral statements, and to prepare and distribute a topical summary of the debate, following established practice;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General to make appropriate arrangements to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the International Law Commission through a colloquium on the progressive development and codification of international law, to be held during the consideration in the Sixth Committee of the report of the Commission on the work of its forty-ninth session;

19. Recommends that the debate on the report of the International Law Commission at the fifty-second session of the General Assembly commence on 27 October 1997.

16 December 1996 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/51/626) without vote, 27 November (meeting 48); draft by Chairman (A/C.6/51/L.17); agenda item 146.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: Sixth Committee 31-42, 48; plenary 85.

Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind

In 1996, the International Law Commission completed its work on the second reading of the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind. The draft Code, originally prepared in 1954 [YUN 1954, p. 408] and provisionally adopted by the Commission on first reading in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 823], defines offences that are crimes under international law and for which the responsible individual is to be punished.

The Commission decided to refer to its Drafting Committee a working group text which called for the inclusion of a reference to wilful and severe damage to the environment as a war crime. Following consideration of the Drafting Committee report [A/CN.4/L.522 & Corr.1], the Commission adopted the final text of a set of 20 draft articles constituting the Code, with the understanding that the inclusion of certain crimes did not affect the status of others under international law, and that adoption of the Code did not preclude the further development of that important area of law.

The Code was divided into two parts, with part I containing general provisions relating primarily to principles of individual criminal responsibility (articles 1-15), and part II containing the definitions of the crimes covered by the Code, namely, aggression, genocide, crimes against humanity, crimes against UN and associated personnel, and war crimes (articles 16-20). The Commission considered the various forms which the Code could take—an international convention adopted by a plenipotentiary conference or by the General Assembly; incorporation in the statute of an international criminal court; or a declaration by the Assembly—and recommended that the Assembly adopt the most appropriate form for the Code which would ensure its widest possible acceptance.

By a July note [A/51/332 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General submitted the draft Code to the General Assembly.

In resolution 51/160 (see above), the Assembly expressed its appreciation to the Commission for the completion of the final draft articles on the draft Code; drew the attention of the States participating in the Preparatory Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court (see below) to the relevance of the draft Code to their work; and requested the Secretary-General to invite Governments to submit, before the end of the fifty-third session (1998) of the Assembly, written comments and observations on action which might be taken in relation to the draft Code. The Assembly also recommended that the Commission continue its work on the topic, taking into account the comments of Governments.

International criminal jurisdiction

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/46 [YUN 1995, p. 1328], the Preparatory Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court met (New York, 25 March-12 April and 12-30 August 1996) to consider further the major substantive and administrative issues arising out of the draft statute for an international criminal court [YUN 1994, p. 1285] prepared by the International Law Commission, and to prepare a widely acceptable consolidated text of a convention that could be considered by a conference of plenipotentiaries.

The Committee held discussions on, inter alia, the establishment of the court and its relationship with the United Nations; composition and administration matters; the scope of the court's jurisdiction and definition of crimes; its trigger mechanism; complementarity; general principles of criminal law; procedural questions, fair trial and rights of the accused; appeal and review procedures; cooperation between States and the court; international cooperation and judicial assistance; and enforcement mechanisms.

In a report [A/51/22, vols. I & II] to the General Assembly, the Preparatory Committee recommended that the Assembly reaffirm its mandate and give it specific directions with regard to the mandate and its work methods; and considered realistic, on the basis of its scheme of work, the possibility of holding a diplomatic conference of plenipotentiaries in 1998.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/207.

Establishment of an international criminal court

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/33 of 25 November 1992 and 48/31 of 9 December 1993,

Recalling also that the International Law Commission adopted at its forty-sixth session a draft statute for an international criminal court and decided to recommend that an international conference of plenipotentiaries be convened to study the draft statute and to conclude a convention on the establishment of an international criminal court,

Recalling further its resolution 49/53 of 9 December 1994, in which it decided to establish an ad hoc committee, open to all States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies, to review the major substantive and administrative issues arising out of the draft statute prepared by the International Law Commission and, in the light of that review, to consider arrangements for the convening of an international conference of plenipotentiaries,

Recalling its resolution 50/46 of 11 December 1995, in which it decided, in the light of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, to establish a preparatory committee, open to all States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency, to discuss further the major substantive and administrative issues arising out of the draft statute prepared by the International Law Commission and, taking into account the different views expressed during the meetings, to draft texts, with a view to preparing a widely acceptable consolidated text of a convention for an international criminal court as a next step towards consideration by a conference of plenipotentiaries, and also decided that the work of the Preparatory Committee should be based on the draft statute prepared by the International Law Commission and should take into account the report of the Ad Hoc Committee and the written comments submitted by States to the Secretary-General on the draft statute for an international criminal court pursuant to paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 49/53 and, as appropriate, contributions of relevant organizations,

Noting that the Preparatory Committee continued the discussion of the major substantive and administrative issues arising out of the draft statute and initiated consideration of draft texts, with a view to preparing a widely acceptable consolidated text of a convention for an international criminal court,

Noting also that major substantive and administrative issues remain to be resolved,

Noting further that the Preparatory Committee, in the light of the progress made and deeply aware of the commitment of the international community to the establishment of an international criminal court, recommended that the General Assembly reaffirm the mandate of the Preparatory Committee and give further directions to it,

Recalling that in its resolution 50/46 it resolved to decide, in the light of the report of the Preparatory Committee, on the convening of an international conference of plenipotentiaries to finalize and adopt a convention on the establishment of an international criminal court, including on the timing and duration of the conference,

Noting that the Preparatory Committee, recognizing that this is a matter for the General Assembly, and on the basis of its scheme of work, considered that it was realistic to regard the holding of a diplomatic conference of plenipotentiaries in 1998 as feasible,

Aware of the necessity to maintain some flexibility in the organization of future work in order to ensure the success of the conference of plenipotentiaries,

Expressing deep appreciation for the renewed offer of the Government of Italy to host a conference on the establishment of an international criminal court in June 1998,

1. Takes note of the report of the Preparatory Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, including the recommendations contained therein, and expresses its appreciation to the Preparatory Committee for the useful work done and the progress made in fulfilling its mandate;

2. Takes note also of the various views of Governments expressed during the consideration of the report of the Preparatory Committee in the Sixth Committee during the fifty-first session of the General Assembly;

3. Decides to reaffirm the mandate of the Preparatory Committee, and directs it to proceed in accordance with paragraph 368 of its report;

4. Decides also that the Preparatory Committee shall meet from 11 to 21 February, 4 to 15 August and 1 to 12 December 1997, and from 16 March to 3 April 1998, in order to complete the drafting of a widely acceptable consolidated text of a convention, to be submitted to the diplomatic conference of plenipotentiaries, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the Preparatory Committee with the necessary facilities for the performance of its work;

5. Decides further that a diplomatic conference of plenipotentiaries shall be held in 1998, with a view to finalizing and adopting a convention on the establishment of an international criminal court;

6. Urges participation in the Preparatory Committee by the largest number of States so as to promote universal support for an international criminal court;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a special fund for the participation of the least developed countries in the work of the Preparatory Committee and in the diplomatic conference of plenipotentiaries, and calls upon States to contribute voluntarily to that special fund;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Establishment of an international criminal court" in order to have the necessary arrangements made for the diplomatic conference of plenipotentiaries to be held in 1998, unless the General Assembly decides otherwise in view of relevant circumstances.

17 December 1996 Meeting 88 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/51/627) without vote, 29 November (meeting 50); draft by Chairman (A/C.6/51/L.10); agenda item 147.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/51/733; S-G, A/C.6/51/L.22.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 44; 6th Committee 26-30, 48-50; plenary 88.

International liability

During its forty-eighth session, the International Law Commission considered the twelfth report [A/CN.4/475 & Corr.1 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1] of the Special Rapporteur on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law, which reviewed the various liability regimes proposed in his previous reports, as well as a Secretariat survey on the question [A/CN.4/471]. A Working Group established by the Commission reviewed the topic in all its aspects. In its report, which was annexed to the Commission's report [A/51/10 & Corr.1], the Working Group presented a complete picture of the topic relating to the principle of prevention and that of liability for compensation or other relief. The Commission regarded the report as a substantial advance on the subject and, although it had not been able to examine the draft articles, felt that, in principle, they provided a basis for examination by the General Assembly.

Non-navigational uses of international watercourses

The Sixth (Legal) Committee's Working Group of the Whole for the elaboration of a convention on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses met from 7 to 25 October 1996 [A/C.6/51/L.3]. The Group held 14 meetings, while its Drafting Committee held 19 meetings. A substantial number of draft articles had been worked out in the Drafting Committee, but a number of core issues remained to be resolved. Accordingly, the Working Group was not able to complete its work and requested that the Assembly convene, as soon as possible, a second session.

Report of Secretary-General. In 1994, by resolution 49/52 [YUN 1994, p. 1287], the General Assembly had invited States to submit, not later than 1 July 1996, written comments and observations on the draft articles on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses. In an August report and later addenda [A/51/275 & Corr.1 & Add.1-3], the Secretary-General reported that, as of 9 October, comments and observations had been received from 14 States (Colombia, Ethiopia, Finland, Guatemala, Hungary, Italy, Niger, Portugal, Spain, Sudan, Turkey, United States, Venezuela, Switzerland). The replies were reproduced in the report and grouped under three categories: general comments and observations; suggestions concerning a preamble to the draft articles; and comments and observations relating to specific draft articles.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/206.

Convention on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind Article 13, paragraph 1 (a), of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its resolution 49/52 of 9 December 1994, by which it decided that the Sixth Committee should convene, at the beginning of the fifty-first session, as a working group of the whole to elaborate a framework convention on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses on the basis of the draft articles adopted by the International Law Commission,

Noting that some progress was achieved in the elaboration of the convention, but that the Working Group of the Whole will need more time to complete its mandate,

1. Takes note of the report of the Working Group of the Whole;

2. Decides to convene a second session of the Working Group of the Whole, for a period of two weeks from 24 March to 4 April 1997, to elaborate a framework convention on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses;

3. Also decides that on the completion of its mandate the Working Group of the Whole shall report directly to the General Assembly;

4. Further decides that the provisions of paragraph 5 of resolution 49/52 shall continue to apply and that the methods of work and procedures outlined in the annex to the present resolution shall be followed.

ANNEX

Methods of work and procedures

1. The Working Group of the Whole shall continue its work building on the work already carried out by the Drafting Committee and the Working Group as reflected in their reports, including the oral report of the President of the Drafting Committee.

2. The Working Group of the Whole shall maintain its Drafting Committee which shall consider the provisions of the draft articles prepared by the International Law Commission that it was unable to consider in its previous meetings, as well as the draft preamble and the set of final clauses.

3. Other issues arising from the reports referred to in paragraph 1 of the present annex, including those between brackets and with footnotes, shall be discussed in the Working Group of the Whole. The Working Group of the Whole may decide to refer to the Drafting Committee aspects of drafting related to those issues.

4. The Working Group of the Whole shall endeavour to adopt all texts by general agreement. Failing such an agreement within a reasonable period of time, it will take its decisions in accordance with the rules of procedure of the General Assembly.

17 December 1996 Meeting 88 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/51/624) without vote, 27 November (meeting 48); draft by Chairman (A/C.6/51/L.16), based on informal consultations on drafts by Egypt and France (A/C.6/51/L.4) and by Brazil (A/C.6/51/L.5); agenda item 144.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/51/733; S-G, A/C.6/51/L.24. Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 44; 6th Committee 12-25, 48, 50; plenary 88.

On 18 December, the General Assembly decided that the item on a convention on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses remained for consideration during the resumed fifty-first session in 1997 (decision 51/462).

State succession

In 1996, the International Law Commission considered the second report [A/CN.4/474] of its Special Rapporteur on the impact of State succession on the nationality of natural and legal persons. The report, submitted in compliance with General Assembly resolution 49/51 [YUN 1994, p. 1283], was divided into three substantive sections, and was designed, in particular, to facilitate the task of the Working Group on the topic in its preliminary consideration of the question, the choices open to the Commission in its deliberations and a possible timetable.

The Working Group held five meetings between 4 June and 2 July, focusing on the problem of the nationality of legal persons, the form that the work on the topic should take and the calendar of work. It also embarked on a more in-depth analysis of the question of the nationality of natural persons in situations of State succession. The Working Group recommended to the Commission that consideration of the question of the nationality of natural persons be separated from that of legal persons, as they raised issues of a very different order; considered that the question of the nationality of natural persons should be addressed as a matter of priority; and concluded that the result of the work should take the form of a non-binding instrument consisting of articles with commentaries. The Working Group further recommended that the Commission undertake a substantive study of the subject under the title "Nationality in relation to the succession of States".

On the basis of the recommendations of the Working Group, the Commission proposed that the Assembly take note of the completion of the preliminary study of the topic and that the Commission be requested to undertake the substantive study.

State responsibility for wrongful acts

The Commission continued in 1996 consideration of draft articles on State responsibility for wrongful acts, based on the eighth report dealing with the subject [A/CN.4/476 & Corr.1 & Add.1] submitted by its Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur, who later resigned, dealt with, inter alia, problems relating to the regime of internationally wrongful acts singled out as "crimes" based on article 19 of Part One of the draft articles. The Commission considered the report of its Drafting Committee, following the Committee's first reading of draft articles of Parts Two and Three on State responsibility; and transmitted the draft articles, through the Secretary-General, to Member States for comments and observations, with a reply deadline of 1 January 1998.

International State relations and international law

Safety and security of UN and associated personnel

The 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel [YUN 1994, p. 1289, GA res. 49/59], which was opened for signature at UN Headquarters on 15 December 1994 and remained open until 31 December 1995, was ratified in 1996 by Panama, Slovakia and Sweden and acceded to by Singapore and Uzbekistan, bringing the total number of State parties to nine. The Convention was to enter into force 30 days after 22 instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession had been deposited with the Secretary-General. Forty-three States signed the Convention.

In a May report [A/51/130 & Corr.1], the UN Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, expressed its grave concern at all attacks and acts of violence against UN peacekeeping and associated personnel and, while taking note of the growing number of signatories to the Convention, called on those States that had not done so to ratify the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/137.

Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/59 of 9 December 1994, by which it adopted the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel,

Gravely concerned by the continuing attacks and acts of violence against United Nations and associated personnel that have caused death or serious injury,

Conscious of the need effectively to promote and protect the safety and security of the personnel who act on behalf of the United Nations, attacks against whom are unjustifiable and unacceptable,

Recognizing that United Nations and associated personnel, while carrying out their activities in support of the fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation, are acting in the common interests of the international community,

Considering that the entry into force of the Convention would strengthen arrangements for the protection of personnel who act on behalf of the United Nations,

Noting, however, that only a small number of States have become parties to the Convention,

Recalling the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, in which, in particular, the Committee called upon Member States to ratify the Convention so as to ensure its early entry into force,

1. Welcomes all signatures, ratifications, acceptances and approvals of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel and accessions thereto;

2. Urges all States that have not yet done so to consider ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to the Convention, to bring about its entry into force at the earliest possible date;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary steps to facilitate the dissemination of information relating to the Convention and to promote its wider appreciation;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to inform the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the status of the Convention and on the steps taken pursuant to paragraph 3 above.

General Assembly resolution 51/137

13 December 1996 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/593 & Corr.1) without vote, 20 November (meeting 18); 39-nation draft (A/C.4/51/L.10), orally revised; agenda item 86.

Measures to eliminate terrorism

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/53 [YUN 1995, p. 1330], the Secretary-General, in a September report with a later addendum [A/51/336 & Add.1], presented information on the implementation of the 1994 Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism [GAres. 49/60] received from 12 Member States, 3 specialized agencies and 2 regional organizations.

The report, on the application of paragraph 10 of the Declaration, consisted of an analytical review of existing international instruments relating to international terrorism; measures taken at the national and international levels regarding the prevention and suppression of international terrorism and information on incidents caused by such terrorism; a review of existing possibilities within the UN system for organizing workshops and training courses on combating crimes connected with international terrorism; and an update on the publication of a compendium of national laws and regulations regarding the prevention and suppression of international terrorism in all its forms and manifestations.

Communication. In an August letter [A/51/261] to the Secretary-General, France transmitted the text of an official document adopted at the Ministerial Conference on Terrorism (Paris, 30 July) by the Foreign Ministers and the Ministers responsible for security of the countries of the Group of Seven and the Russian Federation. The document invited all States to adopt measures to prevent terrorism and to strengthen international cooperation to that end.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/210.

Measures to eliminate international terrorism

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/60 of 9 December 1994, by which it adopted the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, and its resolution 50/53 of 11 December 1995,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Deeply disturbed by the persistence of terrorist acts, which have taken place worldwide,

Stressing the need further to strengthen international cooperation between States and between international organizations and agencies, regional organizations and arrangements and the United Nations in order to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomsoever committed,

Mindful of the need to enhance the role of the United Nations and the relevant specialized agencies in combating international terrorism,

Noting, in this context, all regional and international efforts to combat international terrorism, including those of the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of American States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation, the European Union, the Council of Europe, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the countries of the group of seven major industrialized countries and the Russian Federation,

Taking note of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on educational activities under the project entitled "Towards a culture of peace",

Recalling that in the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism the General Assembly encouraged States to review urgently the scope of the existing international legal provisions on the prevention, repression and elimination of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, with the aim of ensuring that there was a comprehensive legal framework covering all aspects of the matter,

Bearing in mind the possibility of considering in the future the elaboration of a comprehensive convention on international terrorism,

Noting that terrorist attacks by means of bombs, explosives or other incendiary or lethal devices have become increasingly widespread, and stressing the need to supplement the existing legal instruments in order to address specifically the problem of terrorist attacks carried out by such means,

Recognizing the need to enhance international cooperation to prevent the use of nuclear materials for terrorist purposes and to develop an appropriate legal instrument,

Recognizing also the need to strengthen international cooperation to prevent the use of chemical and biological materials for terrorist purposes,

Convinced of the need to implement effectively and supplement the provisions of the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General,

I

1. Strongly condemns all acts, methods and practices of terrorism as criminal and unjustifiable, wherever and by whomsoever committed;

2. Reiterates that criminal acts intended or calculated to provoke a state of terror in the general public, a group of persons or particular persons for political purposes are in any circumstance unjustifiable, whatever the considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other nature that may be invoked to justify them;

3. Calls upon all States to adopt further measures in accordance with the relevant provisions of international law, including international standards of human rights, to prevent terrorism and to strengthen international cooperation in combating terrorism and, to that end, to consider the adoption of measures such as those contained in the official document adopted by the group of seven major industrialized countries and the Russian Federation at the Ministerial Conference on Terrorism, held in Paris on 30 July 1996, and the plan of action adopted by the Inter-American Specialized Conference on Terrorism, held at Lima from 23 to 26 April 1996 under the auspices of the Organization of American States, and in particular calls upon all States:

(a) To recommend that relevant security officials undertake consultations to improve the capability of Governments to prevent, investigate and respond to terrorist attacks on public facilities, in particular means of public transport, and to cooperate with other Governments in this respect;

(b) To accelerate research and development regarding methods of detection of explosives and other harmful substances that can cause death or injury, undertake consultations on the development of standards for marking explosives in order to identify their origin in post-blast investigations, and promote cooperation and transfer of technology, equipment and related materials, where appropriate;

(c) To note the risk of terrorists using electronic or wire communications systems and networks to carry out criminal acts and the need to find means, consistent with national law, to prevent such criminality and to promote cooperation where appropriate;

(d) To investigate, when sufficient justification exists according to national laws, and acting within their jurisdiction and through appropriate channels of international cooperation, the abuse of organizations, groups or associations, including those with charitable, social or cultural goals, by terrorists who use them as a cover for their own activities;

(e) To develop, if necessary, especially by entering into bilateral and multilateral agreements and arrangements, mutual legal assistance procedures aimed at facilitating and speeding investigations and collecting evidence, as well as cooperation between law enforcement agencies in order to detect and prevent terrorist acts;

(f) To take steps to prevent and counteract, through appropriate domestic measures, the financing of terrorists and terrorist organizations, whether such financing is direct or indirect through organizations which also have or claim to have charitable, social or cultural goals or which are also engaged in unlawful activities such as illicit arms trafficking, drug dealing and racketeering, including the exploitation of persons for purposes of funding terrorist activities, and in particular to consider, where appropriate, adopting regulatory measures to prevent and counteract movements of funds suspected to be intended for terrorist purposes without impeding in any way the freedom of legitimate capital movements and to intensify the exchange of information concerning international movements of such funds;

4. Also calls upon all States, with the aim of enhancing the efficient implementation of relevant legal instruments, to intensify, as and where appropriate, the exchange of information on facts related to terrorism and, in so doing, to avoid the dissemination of inaccurate or unverified information;

5. Reiterates its call upon States to refrain from financing, encouraging, providing training for or otherwise supporting terrorist activities;

6. Urges all States that have not yet done so to consider, as a matter of priority, becoming parties to the Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft, signed at Tokyo on 14 September 1963, the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft, signed at The Hague on 16 December 1970, the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation, concluded at Montreal on 23 September 1971, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents, adopted in New York on 14 December 1973, the International Convention against the Taking of Hostages, adopted in New York on 17 December 1979, the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, signed at Vienna on 3 March 1980, the Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts of Violence at Airports Serving International Civil Aviation, supplementary to the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation, signed at Montreal on 24 February 1988, the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation, done at Rome on 10 March 1988, the Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Fixed Platforms located on the Continental Shelf, done at Rome on 10 March 1988, and the Convention on the Marking of Plastic Explosives for the Purpose of Detection, done at Montreal on 1 March 1991, and calls upon all States to enact, as appropriate, domestic legislation necessary to implement the provisions of those Conventions and Protocols, to ensure that the jurisdiction of their courts enables them to bring to trial the perpetrators of terrorist acts and to provide support and assistance to other Governments for those purposes;

II

7. Reaffirms the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism contained in the annex to resolution 49/60;

8. Approves the Declaration to Supplement the 1994 Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution;

III

9. Decides to establish an Ad Hoc Committee, open to all States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency, to elaborate an international convention for the suppression of terrorist bombings and, subsequently, an international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism, to supplement related existing international instruments, and thereafter to address means of further developing a comprehensive legal framework of conventions dealing with international terrorism;

10. Decides also that the Ad Hoc Committee will meet from 24 February to 7 March 1997 to prepare the text of a draft international convention for the suppression of terrorist bombings, and recommends that work continue during the fifty-second session of the General Assembly from 22 September to 3 October 1997 in the framework of a working group of the Sixth Committee;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Ad Hoc Committee with the necessary facilities for the performance of its work;

12. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on progress made towards the elaboration of the draft convention;

13. Recommends that the Ad Hoc Committee be convened in 1998 to continue its work as referred to in paragraph 9 above;

IV

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Measures to eliminate international terrorism".

ANNEX

Declaration to Supplement the 1994 Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism adopted by the General Assembly by its resolution 49/60 of 9 December 1994,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Deeply disturbed by the worldwide persistence of acts of international terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, including those in which States are directly or indirectly involved, which endanger or take innocent lives, have a deleterious effect on international relations and may jeopardize the security of States,

Underlining the importance of States developing extradition agreements or arrangements as necessary in order to ensure that those responsible for terrorist acts are brought to justice,

Noting that the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, done at Geneva on 28 July 1951, does not provide a basis for the protection of perpetrators of terrorist acts, noting also in this context articles 1, 2, 32 and 33 of the Convention, and emphasizing in this regard the need for States parties to ensure the proper application of the Convention,

Stressing the importance of full compliance by States with their obligations under the provisions of the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, including the principle of non-refoulement of refugees to places where their life or freedom would be threatened on account of their race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group or political opinion, and affirming that the present Declaration does not affect the protection afforded under the terms of the Convention and Protocol and other provisions of international law,

Recalling article 4 of the Declaration on Territorial Asylum adopted by the General Assembly by its resolution 2312(XXII) of 14 December 1967,

Stressing the need further to strengthen international cooperation between States in order to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism in all its forms and manifestations,

Solemnly declares the following:

1. The States Members of the United Nations solemnly reaffirm their unequivocal condemnation of all acts, methods and practices of terrorism as criminal and unjustifiable, wherever and by whomsoever committed, including those which jeopardize friendly relations among States and peoples and threaten the territorial integrity and security of States;

2. The States Members of the United Nations reaffirm that acts, methods and practices of terrorism are contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations; they declare that knowingly financing, planning and inciting terrorist acts are also contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations;

3. The States Members of the United Nations reaffirm that States should take appropriate measures in conformity with the relevant provisions of national and international law, including international standards of human rights, before granting refugee status, for the purpose of ensuring that the asylum-seeker has not participated in terrorist acts, considering in this regard relevant information as to whether the asylum-seeker is subject to investigation for or is charged with or has been convicted of offences connected with terrorism and, after granting refugee status, for the purpose of ensuring that that status is not used for the purpose of preparing or organizing terrorist acts intended to be committed against other States or their citizens;

4. The States Members of the United Nations emphasize that asylum-seekers who are awaiting the processing of their asylum applications may not thereby avoid prosecution for terrorist acts;

5. The States Members of the United Nations reaffirm the importance of ensuring effective cooperation between Member States so that those who have participated in terrorist acts, including their financing, planning or incitement, are brought to justice; they stress their commitment, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law, including international standards of human rights, to work together to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism and to take all appropriate steps under their domestic laws either to extradite terrorists or to submit the cases to their competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution;

6. In this context, and while recognizing the sovereign rights of States in extradition matters, States are encouraged, when concluding or applying extradition agreements, not to regard as political offences excluded from the scope of those agreements offences connected with terrorism which endanger or represent a physical threat to the safety and security of persons, whatever the motives which may be invoked to justify them;

7. States are also encouraged, even in the absence of a treaty, to consider facilitating the extradition of persons suspected of having committed terrorist acts, insofar as their national laws permit;

8. The States Members of the United Nations emphasize the importance of taking steps to share expertise and information about terrorists, their movements, their support and their weapons and to share information regarding the investigation and prosecution of terrorist acts.

Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions

In response to General Assembly resolution 49/48 [YUN 1994, p. 1296], the Secretary-General submitted a report in July with a later addendum [A/51/215 & Corr.1 & Add.1] on information received from 11 Member States on the status of the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims [YUN 1977, p. 706]. As at 18 June 1996, 144 States had ratified or acceded to Protocol I (on protection of victims of international armed conflicts); nine States—Cape Verde, Dominica, Honduras, Micronesia, Mongolia, Panama, South Africa, Swaziland, Zambia—had done so since the submission of the Secretary-General's report in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1296]. All of those parties, except 10, also adhered to Protocol II (on protection of victims of non-international conflicts). Two States adhered only to Protocol II.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/155.

Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/44 of 8 December 1977, 34/51 of 23 November 1979, 37/116 of 16 December 1982, 39/77 of 13 December 1984, 41/72 of 3 December 1986, 43/161 of 9 December 1988, 45/38 of 28 November 1990, 47/30 of 25 November 1992 and 49/48 of 9 December 1994,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts,

Convinced of the continuing value of established humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts and the need to respect and ensure respect for these rules in all circumstances within the scope of the relevant international instruments, pending the earliest possible termination of such conflicts,

Recalling the possibility of making use of the International Fact-Finding Commission in relation to an armed conflict, pursuant to article 90 of Protocol I,

Stressing the need for consolidating the existing body of international humanitarian law through its universal acceptance and the need for wide dissemination and full implementation of such law at the national level,

Mindful of the role of the International Committee of the Red Cross in offering protection to the victims of armed conflicts,

Noting with appreciation the continuing efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross to promote and disseminate knowledge of the two additional Protocols,

Noting that the Twenty-sixth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent was held at Geneva from 3 to 7 December 1995,

1. Appreciates the virtually universal acceptance of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the increasingly wide acceptance of the two additional Protocols of 1977;

2. Appeals to all States parties to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the additional Protocols at the earliest possible date;

3. Calls upon all States that are already parties to Protocol I, or those States not parties, on becoming parties to Protocol I, to make the declaration provided for under article 90 of that Protocol;

4. Calls upon all States parties to the additional Protocols to ensure their wide dissemination and full implementation;

5. Notes with satisfaction that the Twenty-sixth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent endorsed the Final Declaration of the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, adopted on 1 September 1993, which reaffirms the necessity of making the implementation of international humanitarian law more effective;

6. Notes that the Twenty-sixth International Conference also endorsed the recommendations elaborated by an intergovernmental group of experts which aim at translating the Final Declaration into concrete measures, including the recommendation that the depositary of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 organize periodic meetings of States parties to these Conventions to consider general problems regarding the application of international humanitarian law;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the status of the additional Protocols based on information received from Member States;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts".

16 December 1996 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/51/622 & Corr.1) without vote, 26 November (meeting 47); 24-nation draft (A/C.6/51/L.9/Rev.1); agenda item 142.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: Sixth Committee 45-47; plenary 85.

Diplomatic relations

Protection of diplomats

As at 31 December 1996, the number of parties to the various international instruments relating to the protection of diplomats and diplomatic and consular relations was as follows: 177 States were parties to the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations [YUN 1961, p. 512], 48 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning acquisition of nationality [YUN 1961, p. 516], and 61 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes [YUN 1961, p. 516]. Andorra, Tajikistan and Turkmenistan acceded to the Convention in 1996.

The 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations [YUN 1963, p. 512] had 156 parties, with those same three States acceding in 1996; 36 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning acquisition of nationality [YUN 1963, p. 512], and 44 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes [YUN 1963, p. 512].

The 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents [GA res. 3166(XXVIII)], had 92 States parties, with Colombia and Kazakhstan acceding in 1996.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/49 [YUN 1994, p. 1297], the Secretary-General invited Member States to communicate their views on measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as provided for in a 1987 Assembly resolution [YUN 1987, p. 1068, GA res. 42/154]. In a July report with a later addendum [A/51/257 & Add.1], the Secretary-General presented the texts and analytical summary of the information received. A total of six new cases of violations and additional information on previous cases were reported by States during the reporting period, 19 August 1995 to 1 October 1996. In connection with four reported cases in respect of which no information had been received within a reasonable period of time, the Secretary-General addressed reminders to the States concerned. Two follow-up reports were received in response to those reminders. Two States submitted views regarding the enhancement of diplomatic relations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/156.

Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Conscious of the need to develop and strengthen friendly relations and cooperation among States,

Convinced that respect for the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations is a basic prerequisite for the normal conduct of relations among States and for the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Dismayed by the recent acts of violence against diplomatic and consular representatives, as well as against representatives of international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, which have endangered or taken innocent lives and seriously impeded the normal work of such representatives and officials,

Concerned at the failure to respect the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, Recalling that, without prejudice to their privileges and immunities, it is the duty of all persons enjoying such privileges and immunities to respect the laws and regulations of the receiving State,

Recalling also that diplomatic and consular premises must not be used in any manner incompatible with the diplomatic or consular functions,

Emphasizing the duty of States to take all appropriate measures as required by international law, including measures of a preventive nature, and to bring offenders to justice,

Welcoming measures already taken by States to this end in conformity with their international obligations,

Convinced that the role of the United Nations, which includes the reporting procedures established under General Assembly resolution 35/168 of 15 December 1980 and further elaborated in later Assembly resolutions, is important in promoting efforts to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Strongly condemns acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as against missions and representatives of international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, and emphasizes that such acts can never be justified;
3. Urges States to strictly observe, implement and enforce the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations and, in particular, to ensure, in conformity with their international obligations, the protection, security and safety of the missions, representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above officially present in territories under their jurisdiction, including practical measures to prohibit in their territories illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts against the security and safety of such missions, representatives and officials;
4. Also urges States to take all necessary measures at the national and international levels to prevent any acts of violence against the missions, representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above and to bring offenders to justice;
5. Recommends that States should cooperate closely through, inter alia, contacts between the diplomatic and consular missions and the receiving State with regard to practical measures designed to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives and with regard to the exchange of information on the circumstances of all serious violations thereof;
6. Urges States to take all appropriate measures, in accordance with international law, at the national and international levels to prevent any abuse of diplomatic or consular privileges and immunities, in particular serious abuses, including those involving acts of violence;
7. Recommends that States should cooperate closely with the State in whose territory abuses of diplomatic and consular privileges and immunities may have occurred, including by exchanging information and providing assistance to its judicial authorities in order to bring offenders to justice;
8. Calls upon States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the instruments relevant to the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;
9. Also calls upon States, in cases where a dispute arises in connection with a violation of their international obligations concerning the protection of the missions or the security of the representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above, to make use of the means for the peaceful settlement of disputes, including the good offices of the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General, when he deems it appropriate, to offer his good offices to the States directly concerned;

10. Requests all States to report to the Secretary-General in accordance with paragraph 9 of resolution 42/154 of 7 December 1987;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to issue a report on the item, in accordance with paragraph 12 of resolution 42/154, containing also an analytical summary of the reports received under paragraph 10 above, on an annual basis, as well as to proceed with his other tasks pursuant to the same resolution;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives".

Treaties and agreements

Reservations to treaties

In 1996, the International Law Commission had before it the second report [A/CN.4/477 & Corr.2 & Add.1] of its Special Rapporteur, Alain Pellet (France), on the law and practice relating to reservations to treaties. The report, which consisted of two chapters, dealt with the future course the Commission might take in its study of the topic, and proposed a provisional general outline of the study (chapter I). In chapter II, under the heading "Unity or diversity of the legal regime of reservations to treaties", the Special Rapporteur discussed the legal regime for reservations and substantive rules applicable to reservations in general, and the application of that general regime to human rights treaties. Annexed to the report was a bibliography on reservations to treaties. A draft resolution on reservations to normative multilateral treaties was addressed, in the report, to the General Assembly for the purpose of drawing attention to clarifying the legal aspects of the matter. However, owing to lack of time, the Commission was unable to consider the report and the draft resolution; it decided to defer debate on the item to its 1997 session.

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/160, invited States and international organizations, particularly those that were depositaries, to answer promptly the questionnaire [YUN 1995, p. 1332] that had been prepared by the Special Rapporteur in 1995 on reservations to treaties.

Treaties involving international organizations

The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations [YUN 1986, p. 1006], which had not yet entered into force, had 23 States parties as at 31 December 1996.

Registration and publication of treaties by the United Nations

During 1996, some 1,197 international agreements—including 4 multilateral treaties deposited with the Secretary-General and 28 multilateral treaties registered with the United Nations—and 1,033 subsequent actions were received by the Secretariat for registration or filing and recording.

The texts of international agreements registered or filed and recorded were published in the United Nations Treaty Series in the original languages, with translations into English and French where necessary. In 1996, the following volumes of the Treaty Series covering treaties registered or filed in 1981, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1991 were issued:

1291, 1367, 1373, 1381, 1389, 1405, 1409, 1410, 1411, 1427, 1431, 1432, 1433, 1614/1615, 1618, 1619, 1620, 1621, 1622, 1623, 1624, 1625, 1626/1627, 1628, 1629, 1630/1631, 1634/1635.

Multilateral treaties

New multilateral treaties concluded under UN auspices

The following treaties, concluded under UN auspices, were deposited with the Secretary-General during 1996:

Agreement on the Establishment of the International Vaccine Institute, opened for signature at New York on 28 October 1996

Agreement establishing the Bank for Economic Cooperation and Development in the Middle East and North Africa, done on 28 August 1996

Chapter IV

Law of the sea

The implementation of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea continued to receive major attention in 1996. The provisions of the Convention had been further developed in two implementing agreements: the Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the Convention, which was adopted in 1994 and entered into force on 28 July 1996; and the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the Convention relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, adopted in 1995.

During 1996, the States parties to the Convention held their fourth (4-8 March) and fifth (24 July-2 August) meetings; the Assembly of the International Seabed Authority, at its second session (11-22 March and 5-16 August), elected Satya N. Nandan (Fiji) as the Secretary-General of the Authority. The selection process for judges of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea was completed and the first executive session was held in October. At its regular session, the General Assembly granted observer status to the Seabed Authority and to the International Tribunal (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV).

UN Convention on the Law of the Sea

Signatures and ratifications

In 1996, the number of parties to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea rose to 110. During the year, Algeria, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, China, the Czech Republic, Finland, France, Haiti, Ireland, Japan, Malaysia, Mauritania, Monaco, Mongolia, Myanmar, Nauru, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Slovakia and Sweden ratified the Convention and Georgia and Palau acceded to it.

The Convention, which was adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 178], entered into force on 16 November 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1301]. It was closed for signature in 1984, having received 159 signatures [YUN 1984, p. 108].

Meetings of States parties. The fourth (4-8 March) [SPLOS/8] and fifth (24 July-2 August) [SPLOS/14] meetings of States parties to the Convention, both held in New York, considered matters relating to the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, including its budget and a draft agreement on its privileges and immunities. With regard to the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, the election of its 21 members was scheduled for 1997 (see below for details).

Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the Convention

During the year, the number of States parties to the Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the Convention, which was adopted in 1994 [GA res 48/263], reached 71. In accordance with the provisions of its article 6, the Agreement entered into force on 28 July, 30 days following the receipt of its fortieth ratification, which was deposited by the Netherlands [A/51/645]. As a result, a feature of the Agreement which enabled States that were not parties to apply it provisionally—aimed at promoting the viability of the International Seabed Authority and universal acceptance of the Convention—was terminated. However, States and entities that were applying the Agreement provisionally and for which it was not in force on the date of termination could continue to participate as members of the Authority on a provisional basis by notifying the depositary to that effect. Eighteen States and the European Community (EC) notified the depositary of such intention and were allowed to continue participation in the Authority until 16 November. The Agreement empowered the Council of the Authority to extend, at the request of the State or entity concerned, such membership beyond 16 November for a further period or periods not exceeding a total of two years, provided that the Council was satisfied that the State or entity concerned had been making efforts to become a party to the Agreement and the Convention. At the resumed second session of the International Seabed Authority (5-16 August 1996), the Council decided to extend the provisional membership of four States for a two-year period as from 16 November 1996, and for one for a one-year period. With regard to such extensions beyond 16 No-member for the remaining 13 States and the EC, the Council decided that those States or entities which submitted requests for an extension of such membership prior to the next session of the Council should be deemed to be members of the Authority on a provisional basis until the end of that session in March 1997.

Agreement on the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks

As at 31 December 1996, the 1995 Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks had been ratified by seven States (Fiji, Norway, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sri Lanka, Tonga, United States). It had been signed by 59 States, the period of signature having ended on 4 December. The Agreement was to enter into force 30 days after the date of deposit of the thirtieth instrument of ratification or accession.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 50/24 [YUN 1995, p. 1335], the Secretary-General presented in an October report [A/51/383] information provided by States, specialized agencies and other UN bodies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in response to his request for information covering developments relating to the conservation and management of straddling and highly migratory fish stocks.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/35.

Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/192 of 22 December 1992, concerning the United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, and 50/24 of 5 December 1995, concerning the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks,

Recalling also resolutions I and II adopted by the Conference,

Noting the opening for signature of the Agreement on 4 December 1995,

Recognizing the importance of the Agreement for the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks and the need for the regular consideration and review of developments relating thereto, Recognizing also the importance of artisanal and subsistence fishers,

Noting with appreciation the information provided by States, relevant specialized agencies, international organizations, intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations in accordance with resolution 50/24,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Recognizes the significance of the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks as an important contribution to ensuring the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks;

2. Emphasizes the importance of the early entry into force and effective implementation of the Agreement;

3. Calls upon all States and other entities referred to in article 1, paragraph 2 (b), of the Agreement that have not done so to ratify or accede to it and to consider applying it provisionally;

4. Takes note with concern that many commercially important straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks have been subject to heavy and little-regulated fishing efforts and that some stocks continue to be overfished;

5. Welcomes the fact that a growing number of States and other entities, as well as regional and subregional fishery management organizations and arrangements, have adopted legislation, established regulations or taken other measures to implement the provisions in the Agreement, and urges them to enforce those measures fully;

6. Calls upon States and other entities and regional and subregional fishery management organizations and arrangements that have not done so to consider taking measures to implement the provisions of the Agreement;

7. Urges States, relevant specialized agencies, international organizations, intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations that have not yet done so to provide information to the Secretary-General to ensure as comprehensive a report as possible;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session and biennially thereafter on further developments relating to the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, including the status and implementation of the Agreement, taking into account information provided by States, relevant specialized agencies, in particular the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and other appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and subregional organizations and arrangements for the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, as well as other relevant intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that reporting on all major fishery-related activities and instruments is effectively coordinated and duplication of activities and reporting minimized, and that relevant scientific and technical studies are disseminated to the international community, and invites the relevant specialized agencies, including the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, as well as regional and subregional fishery organizations and arrangements, to cooperate with the Secretary-General to that end;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session, under an item entitled "Oceans and law of the sea", the sub-item entitled "Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks".

9 December 1996 Meeting 77 Adopted without vote

23-nation draft (A/51/L.28 & Add.1); agenda item 24 (b), Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: plenary 76, 77.

Other developments relating to the Convention

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/28 [YUN 1994, p. 1314], the Secretary-General submitted in November his annual report [A/51/645] on developments relating to the implementation of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea.

The Secretary-General presented information on actions taken by States regarding maritime limits; deposit of charts and lists of geographical coordinates and compliance with the obligation of due publicity; national legislation; and access to and from the sea. He described activities he had taken in the development of information systems and databases and support for dispute settlement mechanism, including the procedures for conciliation, arbitration and special arbitration.

Concerning legal developments under related treaties and instruments and related actions of international organizations and bodies, the Secretary-General reviewed conventions and instruments adopted by the International Maritime Organization (IMO); rules regarding navigation; offshore installations and structures, including their removal and disposal and pollution from their activities; legal issues relating to archaeological and historical objects at sea; the removal of wrecks; conservation and management of living marine resources; and developments in international environmental law and policy.

Other subjects discussed dealt with maritime disputes and conflicts; crimes at sea, such as illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, smuggling aliens and piracy and armed robbery; the development of non-living marine resources; marine science and technology; and technical cooperation and capacity-building in the law of the sea and ocean affairs.

An addendum to the Secretary-General's report [A/51/645/Add.1] contained a letter from China dated 27 December and the Secretary-General's reply to it on 30 December. China claimed that the Secretary-General's report contained errors related to the coverage of a maritime dispute between it and Japan over a group of five islets and barren rocks known in Japan as Senkaku and in China as the Diaoyu. China stated that the islands were part of its territory but that the report described them as under Japan's "effective control". It also disagreed with the location of the islands as described in the report and the fact that the report noted that possible large oil reserves might have drawn attention to the area. China believed that attention was drawn to the islands because of actions by a group of people from Japan, notably the setting up of a lighthouse and the flying of the Japanese flag.

In his reply, the Secretary-General stated that he took note of China's position on the issue and emphasized that the purpose of the report, which referred to eight different maritime disputes, was to provide information on the existence of the disputes and not to take a position thereon.

Institutions created by the Convention

International Seabed Authority

Through the International Seabed Authority, established by the Convention on the Law of the Sea, its members organize and conduct activities of exploration for, and exploitation of, the resources of the seabed and ocean floor and subsoil thereof beyond the limits of national jurisdiction. In 1996, it was fully functioning, with all its principal organs—the Assembly, the 36-member Council and the secretariat—and subsidiary expert bodies. During the year, the Assembly held its second session in two parts (Kingston, Jamaica, 11-22 March and 5-16 August). It elected the Council, on the basis of equitable geographical distribution and representing four sets of interests: consumers/importers of the minerals that could be supplied from deep seabed sources (4 seats); investors in deep seabed mining (4 seats); producers/exporters of such minerals from land-based sources (4 seats); and developing States representing special interests (6 seats). A further 18 seats were allocated to meet the requirements of equitable geographical distribution.

In addition, a 22-member Legal and Technical Commission and a 15-member Finance Committee were established. The Assembly adopted a $4.1 million budget for the Authority for 1997, and dealt with a number of organizational matters, including the election of Satya N. Nandan of Fiji as the Secretary-General of the Authority.

On 24 October, by resolution 51/6, the General Assembly invited the Authority to participate in its deliberations in the capacity of observer.

International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea

The fourth and fifth meetings of the States parties to the Convention were held during the year and dealt primarily with the judicial elections for and the budget of the International Tribunal and with the establishment of the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf. The fourth meeting (New York, 4-8 March) [SPLOS/8] was devoted to the approval of the budget for the period 1 August 1996-31 December 1997 and the start of consideration of the draft agreement on the privileges and immunities of the Tribunal. At the fifth meeting (New York, 24 July-2 August) [SPLOS/14], the States parties elected the 21 judges of the Tribunal. The judges were elected from the five geographical groups established by the General Assembly. Seven judges were elected to three-year terms; seven more were elected to six-year terms; and the remaining members were elected to full nine-year terms. Judges could be re-elected and were required to continue to discharge their duties after their terms of office had expired until the vacancies had been filled. Even after they were replaced, they were expected to finish any proceeding which they had begun before the date of replacement.

The Tribunal received authorization to undertake negotiations with the United Nations and the International Seabed Authority on relationship arrangements and with Germany on a headquarters agreement. In addition to approving the 1996-1997 budget, the States parties established a timetable for payments of assessed contributions and made provisions to adjust the scale of assessments as the number of States parties to the Tribunal increased. The Tribunal was further instructed to draft its own administrative guidelines for future consideration by the States parties, and to apply for membership with the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund and for observer status with the UN General Assembly.

No decision was taken on the draft agreement on the privileges and immunities of the Tribunal, pending the resolution of several issues related to the headquarters agreement under consideration between the Tribunal and Germany as the host country.

On 17 December, by resolution 51/204, the General Assembly granted observer status to the International Tribunal.

Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf

The purpose of the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, which was to be established at the sixth (1997) meeting of States parties to the Convention, was to facilitate the implementation of the Convention in respect of the establishment of the outer limits of the continental shelf beyond 200 nautical miles from the baselines from which the breadth of the territorial sea was measured. The Commission was to consist of 21 members who were experts in geology, geophysics or hydrography. At the request of the fifth meeting of States parties, the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of the Office of Legal Affairs (OLA) issued in July the Commission's draft rules of procedure.

On 9 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/34.

Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea

During 1996, the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of OLA continued to fulfil its role as the substantive unit of the Secretariat responsible for carrying out the functions entrusted to the UN Secretary-General by the Convention on the Law of the Sea. To that end, it established facilities for the custody of charts and lists of geographical coordinates deposited, and adopted a system for their recording and publicity, using an internal computerized data record and its "Maritime Zone Notification" and the Law of the Sea Information Circular, to keep States parties to the Convention informed of the deposits. The Division sought to assist States with other due publicity obligations related to legislation and charts concerning navigation.

The computer-generated information system on national legislation relating to the law of the sea contained legislation from 144 States and was continuously updated. Data from the system was used to assist States in preparing their legislation. In response to General Assembly resolution 49/28 [YUN 1994, p. 1314], the Division began consultations with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and IMO on the development of a centralized database system on legislation and marine policy, and had already taken steps to that effect. In addition, it went from using the UN Gopher on the Internet—where information on the Convention, the 1994 Agreement on Part XI and the 1995 Agreement on fish stocks, including their current status, could be accessed—to establishing its own home page within the UN home page. The change was intended to provide more graphics as well as more interactive usage.

Furthermore, the Division continued to support the maintenance and development of the Aquatic Sciences and Fisheries Abstracts, an international bibliographical information service. In that capacity, it monitored documents and publications related to the law of the sea and other marine activities.

The United Kingdom again made a special contribution to fund a fellowship under the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, established in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 139]. The tenth annual award was granted to Alisi-Numia Tamoepeau, Acting Solicitor-General of Tonga.

Chapter V

Other legal questions

In 1996, the United Nations continued to work on various aspects of international law, including international economic law.

In December, the General Assembly, taking note of the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, requested that body to continue to consider maintenance of international peace and security, the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, proposals concerning the Trusteeship Council, including its possible abolition, and the question of assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The Assembly discussed a report on the programme of activities for the third term (1995-1996) of the United Nations Decade of International Law (1990-1999) and approved a programme for the final term (1997-1999). In anticipation of the centennial in 1999 of the first International Peace Conference, the Assembly considered it desirable to draft a programme of action dedicated to the centennial and invited preliminary discussions to that end.

The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) continued work towards the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law. It finalized the Notes on Organizing Arbitral Proceedings and completed and adopted the Model Law on Electronic Commerce.

The Assembly noted with appreciation the efforts of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country, which had contributed to a decrease in the amount of diplomatic indebtedness, and welcomed its efforts to identify affordable health care programmes for the diplomatic community. The Committee continued to discuss travel restrictions imposed by the host country and the parking situation for diplomatic vehicles.

During the year, the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs took measures to expedite the publication of the United Nations Treaty Series and to provide electronic access to the publication Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General through the Internet. In December, the Assembly endorsed the establishment of an electronic treaty database.

Strengthening the role of the United Nations

Special Committee on UN Charter

At its 1996 session (New York, 21 February-5 March) [A/51/33], the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization continued to consider proposals for the maintenance of international peace and security, the peaceful settlement of disputes between States and the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in those contexts, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 50/52 [YUN 1995, p. 1342]. The Committee also considered proposals concerning the Trusteeship Council, the status of the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council, and new subjects for consideration in its future work.

In connection with the maintenance of international peace and security, the Special Committee had before it a working paper by the Russian Federation on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter (see below), a revised proposal presented by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya [A/AC.182/L.90] and a revised working paper submitted by Cuba in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1341] for strengthening the role of the United Nations and enhancing its effectiveness.

With regard to the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, the Committee considered a proposal to establish a dispute settlement service which would offer or respond with its services early in disputes, submitted by Sierra Leone in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1342], as well as an annotation [A/50/403] to the proposal.

In accordance with a 1995 Assembly request [GA res. 50/52], the Special Committee considered several proposals concerning the Trusteeship Council, including one which stated that the Council, having fulfilled its mandate, should be abolished. However, there was also a view that there existed no legal, political or practical reasons for amending in any respect the provisions of the UN Charter, a necessary step for abolishing the Council. Malta proposed [A/50/142] that the Council be designated as the trustee of the common heritage of mankind, a task that was viewed as better suited to other international bodies.

Several delegations felt that it was premature for the Special Committee to engage in detailed discussions or take decisions on the Council's future status in the light of provisions of Assembly resolution 50/55 [YUN 1995, p. 266], inviting Member States to submit written comments on the subject by 31 May 1996. In addition, some aspects of the question were linked, as noted in that resolution, to the overall restructuring process of the Organization, which fell within the mandate of the High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System.

Others, while agreeing that it might be premature to take decisions on the various proposals, expressed the view that the Special Committee could nonetheless address the limited question of the abolition of the Council following the procedures outlined in Article 108 of the Charter, as recommended by the Secretary-General in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 8] (see also PART ONE, Chapter VIII).

With respect to the identification of new subjects for its consideration, the Special Committee had before it a working paper by the Russian Federation on a draft declaration on the basic principles and criteria for the work of UN peace-keeping missions and mechanisms for the settlement of crises and conflicts [A/AC.182/L.89].

With regard to the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council, the Special Committee reviewed a note by the Secretariat [A/AC.182/L.87] which outlined the background of both publications, the difficulties encountered in their production and possible courses of action for their updating. The Special Committee, noting the value of the publications to the Organization and others, invited the General Assembly to request the Secretary-General to expedite their preparation and publication and to submit a progress report on the matter to the Assembly before its fifty-second session in 1997.

Assistance to third States affected by Chapter VII sanctions

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/51 [YUN 1995, p. 1348], the Secretary-General submitted in August a report [A/51/317] on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter. The report highlighted appropriate arrangements in the Secretariat as well as possible guidelines on technical procedures to be used by the Secretariat, including the provision of better information and early assessments for the Security Council and its organs about actual or potential effects of sanctions on third States which invoked Article 50 of the Charter; the development of a possible methodology for assessing the consequences incurred by third States as a result of the implementation of preventive or enforcement measures; and coordination of information about international economic or other assistance potentially available to third States.

Sixth Committee action. In its report to the Assembly [A/51/33], the Special Committee on the Charter had invited the Assembly to consider the question of an appropriate organizational framework for addressing further the implementation of the provisions of the Charter relating to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions. In response, the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee decided on 1 November to establish a Working Group to consider the issue. The Group held four meetings between 18 and 26 November and invited the Security Council to consider establishing further mechanisms or procedures aimed at increasing the review process of requests for assistance submitted by affected States, in the context of Article 50 of the Charter. Towards that end, it was strongly recommended that the Council continue to enhance the functioning of its sanctions committees, to streamline their working procedures and to facilitate access to them.

The Secretary-General was requested to continue his efforts towards the development of a possible methodology for assessing the adverse consequences of sanctions on third States, to make it available to interested States and to continue to gather, on a regular basis, information about available international assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/208.

Implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions

The General Assembly,

Concerned about the special economic problems confronting certain States arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures taken by the Security Council against other States, and taking into account the obligation of Members of the United Nations under Article 49 of the Charter of the United Nations to join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council,

Recalling the right of third States confronted with special economic problems of that nature to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems, in accordance with Article 50 of the Charter,

Recognizing the desirability of the consideration of further appropriate procedures for consultations to deal in a more effective manner with the problems referred to in Article 50 of the Charter,

Recalling:

(a) The report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular paragraph 41 thereof;

(b) Its resolution 47/120 A of 18 December 1992, entitled "An Agenda for Peace: preventive diplomacy and related matters", and its resolution 47/120 B of 20 September 1993, entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular section IV thereof entitled "Special economic problems arising from the implementation of preventive or enforcement measures";

(c) The position paper of the Secretary-General entitled "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace";

(d) The statement by the President of the Security Council of 22 February 1995;

(e) The report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to the note by the President of the Security Council regarding the question of special economic problems of States as a result of sanctions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter;

(f) The reports of the Secretary-General on economic assistance to States affected by the implementation of the Security Council resolutions imposing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro);

(g) The 1994, 1995 and 1996 reports of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization containing sections on the consideration by the Committee of the proposals submitted on the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter;

(h) The report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/51 of 11 December 1995,

Recalling that the question of assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions has been addressed recently in several forums, including the General Assembly and its subsidiary organs and the Security Council,

Recalling also the measures taken by the Security Council in accordance with the statement by the President of the Security Council of 16 December 1994 that as part of the Council's effort to improve the flow of information and the exchange of ideas between members of the Council and other States Members of the United Nations, there should be increased recourse to open meetings, in particular at an early stage in its consideration of a subject,

Stressing that in the formulation of sanctions regimes, due account should be taken of the potential effects of sanctions on third States,

Stressing also, in this context, the powers of the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter and the Council's primary responsibility under Article 24 of the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security in order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations,

Recalling that, under Article 31 of the Charter, any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected,

Recognizing that the imposition of sanctions under Chapter VII has been causing special economic problems in third States,

Recognizing also that assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions would further contribute to an effective and comprehensive approach by the international community to sanctions imposed by the Security Council,

Recognizing further that the international community at large and, in particular, international institutions involved in providing economic and financial assistance should continue to take into account and address in a more effective manner the special economic problems of affected third States arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures taken by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter, in view of their magnitude and of the adverse impact on the economy of those States,

Recalling the provisions of resolution 50/51,

1. Underlines the importance of consultations under Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations, as early as possible, with third States which are or may be confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures imposed by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter and of early and regular assessments, as appropriate, of their impact on such States;

2. Invites the Security Council to consider the establishment of further mechanisms or procedures, as appropriate, for such consultations with regard to a solution of those problems, including appropriate ways and means for increasing the effectiveness of its working methods and procedures applied in the consideration of the requests by the affected countries for assistance, in the context of Article 50 of the Charter;

3. Welcomes the further measures taken by the Security Council since the adoption of General Assembly resolution 50/51 and aimed at increasing the effectiveness and transparency of the sanctions committees, and strongly recommends that the Council continue its efforts further to enhance the functioning of those committees, to streamline their working procedures and to facilitate access to them by representatives of States which find themselves confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of sanctions;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the competent units within the Secretariat that he designated to carry out the functions stipulated in paragraph 3 of resolution 50/51 develop the capacity and modalities for providing better information and early assessments for the Security Council and its organs, at their request, about actual or potential effects of sanctions on third States which invoke Article 50 of the Charter; such assessments should, as appropriate, identify specific problems and needs of those States and suggest specific ways and means for their alleviation to be included in the recommendations of the Council and appeals by the Secretary-General to the donor community for assistance to the adversely affected States;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue, on the basis of the work already done, efforts with a view to developing a possible methodology for assessing the adverse consequences actually incurred by third States as a result of preventive or enforcement measures, and to utilize for this purpose all the expertise available throughout the United Nations system, including that of the international financial and trade institutions; that methodology, upon appropriate approval, should be made available to interested States which may wish to use it in preparing the data to be annexed to their applications under Article 50, as well as to the United Nations system, the international financial institutions and the donor community for use in considering requests for assistance;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue, on a regular basis, to collate and coordinate information about international assistance available to third States affected by the implementation of sanctions and to initiate action to explore innovative and practical measures of assistance to the affected third States, inter alia, through cooperation with relevant institutions and organizations inside and outside the United Nations system;

7. Reaffirms the important role of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee for Programme and Coordination in mobilizing and monitoring, as appropriate, the economic assistance efforts by the international community and the United Nations system to States confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures imposed by the Security Council and, as appropriate, in identifying solutions to the special economic problems of those States;

8. Invites the organizations of the United Nations system, international financial institutions, other international organizations, regional organizations and Member States to continue to address more specifically and directly, where appropriate, special economic problems of third States affected by sanctions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter and, for this purpose, to consider improving procedures for consultations to maintain a constructive dialogue with such States, including through regular and frequent meetings as well as, where appropriate, special meetings between the affected third States and the donor community, with the participation of United Nations agencies and other international organizations;

9. Requests the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, at its session in 1997, to continue to consider on a priority basis the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter, taking into consideration all the related reports of the Secretary-General, the proposals submitted on this subject, the debate on this question which took place in the Sixth Committee at the fifty-first session of the General Assembly and the debate in the sub-group on sanctions of the Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Peace during the fiftieth session of the General Assembly, and also the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution;

UN Decade of International Law

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/44 [YUN 1995, p. 1353], the Secretary General submitted in August 1996 a report, followed by an October addendum [A/51/278 & Add.1], on the United Nations Decade of International Law (1990-1999), which the Assembly had declared in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 848, GA res. 44/23]. The Decade's aims were to promote the acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law; to promote the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice; to encourage the progressive development of international law and its codification; and to encourage the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law. The Assembly had adopted the programme of activities for the third term of the Decade (1995-1996) in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1323, GA res. 49/50].

In his report, the Secretary-General summarized information received from Member States and organizations on steps taken to implement the programme and views on possible activities for the fourth and final term (1997-1999). He described recent activities of the United Nations in the progressive development of international law and its codification in such areas as human rights, disarmament, outer space, economic development, international trade, crime prevention and criminal justice, environment and the law of the sea. The report also dealt with the work of the International Law Commission, the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization and the Sixth Committee.

Sixth Committee consideration. The Sixth Committee reconvened its Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law on 23 September. It held seven meetings from 1 October to 26 November and made an oral report [A/C.6/51/SR.48] to the Sixth Committee in which it outlined the programme for the final term (1997-1999) of the Decade. The new programme included provisions to take into account the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and a number of new activities put forward by Nigeria to encourage wider appreciation of international law and to celebrate the end of the Decade. Also proposed by the Working Group were initiatives aimed at the centennial in 1999 of the first International Peace Conference, as well as the need to implement the computerization programme in the Treaty Section of the Office of Legal Affairs (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

9. Encourages States to disseminate at the national level, as appropriate, information contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

10. Appeals to States, international organizations and non-governmental organizations working in the field of international law and to the private sector to make financial contributions or contributions in kind for the purpose of facilitating the implementation of the programme;

11. Once again requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of States and international organizations and institutions working in the field of international law the programme annexed to the present resolution;

12. Notes with appreciation the activities undertaken by the International Committee of the Red Cross in the field of international humanitarian law, including with regard to the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "United Nations Decade of International Law".

ANNEX

Programme for the activities for the final term (1997-1999) of the United Nations Decade of International Law

I. Promotion of the acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law

1. The General Assembly, bearing in mind that maintenance of international peace and security is the underlying condition for the success of the implementation of the programme for the United Nations Decade of International Law, calls upon States to act in accordance with international law, and in particular the Charter of the United Nations, and encourages States and international organizations to promote the acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law.

2. States are invited to consider, if they have not yet done so, becoming parties to existing multilateral treaties, in particular those relevant to the progressive development of international law and its codification. International organizations under whose auspices such treaties are concluded are invited to indicate whether they publish periodic reports on the status of ratifications of and accessions to multilateral treaties and, if they do not, to indicate whether in their view such a process would be useful. Consideration should be given to the question of treaties that have not achieved wider participation or entered into force after a considerable lapse of time and the circumstances causing the situation.

3. States and international organizations are encouraged to provide assistance and technical advice to States, in particular to developing countries, to facilitate their participation in the process of multilateral treaty-making, including their adherence to and implementation of multilateral treaties, in accordance with their national legal systems.

4. States are encouraged to report to the Secretary-General on ways and means provided for in the multilateral treaties to which they are parties, regarding the implementation of such treaties. International organizations are similarly encouraged to report to the Secretary-General on ways and means provided for by the multilateral treaties concluded under their auspices regarding the implementation of such treaties. The Secretary-General is requested to prepare a report on the basis of this information and to submit it to the General Assembly.

5. The General Assembly, recognizing the importance of the protection of cultural property in the event of armed conflict, takes note of the efforts under way to facilitate the implementation of existing international instruments in this field.

U. Promotion of means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice

6. States, the United Nations system of organizations and regional organizations, including the Asian-

African Legal Consultative Committee, as well as the International Law Association, the Institute of International Law, the Hispano-Luso-American Institute of International Law and other international institutions working in the field of international law, and national societies of international law, are invited to study the means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice, and to present suggestions for the promotion thereof to the Sixth Committee.

7. Noting the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea in October 1996 in accordance with the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, States and other entities referred to in article 20 of annex VI of the Convention are encouraged to consider making use of the Tribunal for the peaceful settlement of disputes in accordance with article 21 of annex VI of the Convention.

8. Taking into account the suggestions mentioned in paragraph 6 of the present section and with due regard to the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", the Sixth Committee should consider, where appropriate, on the basis of a report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, or of the Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law, the following questions:

(a) Strengthening the use of means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes, with particular attention to the role to be played by the United Nations, as well as methods for early identification and prevention of disputes and their containment;

(b) Procedures for the peaceful settlement of disputes arising in specific areas of international law;

(c) Ways and means of encouraging greater recognition of the role of the International Court of Justice and its wider use in the peaceful settlement of disputes;

(d) Enhancement of cooperation of regional organizations with the United Nations system of organizations in respect of the peaceful settlement of disputes;

(e) Wider use of the Permanent Court of Arbitration.

III. Encouragement of the progressive development of international law and its codification

9. International organizations, including the United Nations system of organizations and regional organizations, are invited to submit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations summary information regarding the programme and results of their work relevant to the progressive development of international law and its codification, including their suggestions for future work in their specialized field, with an indication of the appropriate forum to undertake such work. Similarly, the Secretary-General is requested to prepare a report on the relevant activities of the United Nations, including those of the International Law Commission. Such information should be presented in a final report by the Secretary-General to the Sixth Committee.

10. On the basis of the information mentioned in paragraph 9 above, States are invited to submit suggestions for consideration by the Sixth Committee and, as appropriate, recommendations. In particular, efforts should be made to identify areas of international law that might be ripe for progressive development or codification.

11. The Sixth Committee should study, taking into account General Assembly resolution 684(VII) of 6 November 1952, its coordinating role with respect to, inter alia, the drafting of provisions of a legal nature and the consistent use of legal terminology in international instruments adopted by the General Assembly. States are invited to present proposals in this regard to the Sixth Committee.

12. The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization should continue to study possible measures to strengthen the United Nations system for the maintenance of international peace and security. In that context, the Special Committee should bear in mind the debate within the United Nations, in particular in the General Assembly, on the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace".

IV. Encouragement of the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law

13. Within the context of considering appropriate activities to mark the final term of the Decade's programme, States, the United Nations system of organizations and regional organizations and institutions referred to in the programme should encourage:

(a) The publication of essays on subjects of international law written by legal advisers of States and international organizations, scholars and other legal practitioners providing a useful perspective on international law as viewed from their standpoint;

(b) The organization at the national, regional and international level of symposia, conferences, seminars, lectures and meetings on selected topics or themes of international law during the remaining years of the Decade to celebrate the end of it. Topics for consideration could include, without limiting other suggestions, the contribution of the United Nations to international law; more effective means of implementing the rules of international law; merits or otherwise of treaties and other forms of instruments such as resolutions, declarations and so on; future topics for the International Law Commission; and the role of the International Court of Justice in the settlement of disputes and advisory opinions.

14. The Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law should, in the context of the Decade, continue to formulate, as appropriate and in a timely manner, relevant guidelines for the Programme's activities and report to the Sixth Committee on the activities carried out under the Programme in accordance with such guidelines. Special emphasis should be given to supporting academic and professional institutions already carrying out research and education in international law, as well as to encouraging the establishment of such institutions where they might not exist, in particular in the developing countries. States and other public or private bodies are encouraged to contribute to the strengthening of the Programme.

15. States and law faculties of higher educational institutions are encouraged to include international law as a core subject in their curricula. They are also encouraged to introduce courses in international law for students studying law, political science, social sciences and other relevant disciplines; they should study the possibility of introducing topics of international law in the curricula of schools at the primary and secondary levels. They should also consider introducing public international law courses geared towards career training and the establishment of clinical programmes in various areas of international law. Cooperation between institutions at the university level among developing countries, on the one hand, and their cooperation with those of developed countries, on the other, should be encouraged.

16. States should consider convening conferences of experts at the national and regional levels in order to study the question of preparing model curricula and materials for courses in international law, training of teachers in international law, preparation of textbooks on international law and the use of modern technology to facilitate the teaching of and research in international law.

17. States, international organizations and professional and academic institutions should consider making available materials to the United Nations audiovisual library on international law proposed by the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law.

18. States are encouraged to organize special training in international law for legal professionals, including judges, and personnel of ministries of foreign affairs and other relevant ministries as well as military personnel. The United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Hague Academy of International Law, the International Institute of Humanitarian Law, regional organizations and the International Committee of the Red Cross are invited to continue cooperating with States in this respect.

19. In connection with training of military personnel, States are encouraged to foster the teaching and dissemination of the principles governing the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict and should consider the possibility of making use of the guidelines for military manuals and instructions prepared by the International Committee of the Red Cross.

20. Cooperation among developing countries, as well as between developed and developing countries, in particular among those persons who are involved in the practice of international law, for exchanging experience and for mutual assistance in the field of international law, including assistance in providing textbooks and manuals of international law, is encouraged.

21. In order to make better known the practice of international law, States and international and regional organizations should endeavour to publish, if they have not yet done so, summaries, repertories or yearbooks of their practice. They should also endeavour to place this material on computer networks for wider and instant distribution. The Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat is encouraged to continue its efforts in this regard, including through its participation in the Global Legal Information Network project.

22. The Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Registry of the International Court of Justice, is encouraged to publish, to the extent feasible and in a timely manner, the publication updating the Summaries of the Judgments, Advisory Opinions and Orders of the International Court of Justice (1948-1991), at present under preparation, in all official languages of the Organization.

23. Other international courts and tribunals, including the European Court of Human Rights and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, are invited to disseminate more widely their judgements and advisory opinions and to consider preparing thematic or analytical summaries thereof.

24. International organizations are encouraged to publish treaties concluded under their auspices, if they have not yet done so. Timely publication of the United Nations Juridical Yearbook is also encouraged.

V. Procedures and organizational aspects

25. The Sixth Committee, working primarily through its Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law and with the assistance of the Secretariat, will be the coordinating body of the programme for the Decade. The question of the use of an intra-sessional, inter-sessional or existing body to carry out specific activities of the programme may be considered by the General Assembly.

26. States are encouraged to establish, as necessary, national, subregional and regional committees, which may assist in the implementation of the programme for the Decade. Non-governmental organizations are encouraged to promote the purposes of the Decade within their fields of activity, as appropriate.

27. Voluntary contributions from Governments, international organizations and other sources, including the private sector, would be useful and are strongly encouraged in order to implement the programme for the Decade. To that end, the establishment of a trust fund to be administered by the Secretary-General might be considered by the General Assembly.

Action to be taken in 1999 dedicated to the centennial of the first International Peace Conference and to the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law

The General Assembly,

Noting that the year 1999 will mark the one-hundredth anniversary of the historic first International Peace Conference, held at The Hague on the initiative of Russia,

Recalling its resolution 44/23 of 17 November 1989, by which it proclaimed the United Nations Decade of International Law, to begin in 1990 and conclude in 1999, marking the centennial of the first International Peace Conference,

Recognizing that the first and the second International Peace Conference, as well as the League of Nations and the United Nations subsequently, have significantly encouraged the progressive development and codification of international law and thereby contributed to the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recognizing also the invaluable contribution of the first International Peace Conference to the settling or resolving of international disputes or situations which can cause the infringement of peace, by its adoption of the Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes and the establishment of the Permanent Court of Arbitration,

Recalling that the Final Act of the second International Peace Conference incorporated a proposal to convene a third international peace conference,

Recalling that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to maintain international peace and security, inter alia, by means of adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace,

Recalling that, according to its resolution 44/23, one of the main purposes of the Decade of International Law is to promote means and methods for the settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice,

Recalling also that, at the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly, the Sixth Committee convened the Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law with a view to preparing generally acceptable recommendations on the programme of activities for the Decade, and that the Working Group has been reconvened at all subsequent sessions of the General Assembly and was requested at the fiftieth session to continue its work,

Stressing the need for the international community to continue efforts with a view to strengthening international peace and security, achieving full compliance with international law and promoting its progressive development,

Recalling that in its resolution 44/23 it requested the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States and appropriate international bodies, as well as of non-governmental organizations working in the field, on the programme for the Decade and on appropriate action to be taken during the Decade, including the possibility of holding a third international peace conference or other suitable international conference at the end of the Decade,

Noting that the heads of State or Government of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries at their ninth summit meeting reaffirmed General Assembly resolution 44/23 and the strong support of the Movement for the programme of the United Nations Decade of International Law, including the recommendation of holding a third international peace conference at the conclusion of the Decade on the occasion of the one-hundredth anniversary of the first International Peace Conference,

Noting also the proposal by the Russian Federation for a third international peace conference with a view to considering international law and order in the post-cold-war world at the threshold of the twenty-first century,

Convinced that the United Nations could assist significantly with its expertise and knowledge with the development of such a proposal,

1. Considers it desirable to draft a programme of action dedicated to the centennial of the first International Peace Conference and to the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law in 1999;

2. Invites the Governments of the Russian Federation and the Netherlands to arrange, as a matter of urgency, a preliminary discussion with other interested Member States on the substantive content of action to be taken in 1999 and to seek, in this respect, the cooperation of the International Court of Justice, the Permanent Court of Arbitration, relevant intergovernmental organizations, as well as other relevant organizations;

3. Calls upon the competent United Nations organs, programmes and specialized agencies to study the possibilities of providing assistance to that end;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session, under the item entitled "United Nations Decade of International Law", a sub-item entitled "Action to be taken in 1999 dedicated to the centennial of the first International Peace Conference and to the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law".

Electronic treaty database

In an August 1996 report [A/51/278] on the United Nations Decade of International Law, the Secretary-General stated that the Treaty Section of the Office of Legal Affairs had continued to provide advice and assistance to Member States and multilateral agencies on issues relating to treaty law and technical aspects of treaties. In order to facilitate the dissemination of information from the United Nations treaty database, which currently numbered 474 multilateral treaties deposited with the Secretary-General and more than 40,000 treaties submitted for registration, the Section was progressively implementing a comprehensive computerization programme which would provide on-line access and retrieval capabilities on the computer system of the United Nations and on the Internet.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/158.

Electronic treaty database

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the obligations resulting from Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations and the importance of treaties in the development of international law and the international legal order,

Noting that the recent expansion of the membership of the Organization, combined with an increase in international treaty-making activity, has led to the growth in the volume of work carried out by the Treaty Section of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat and contributed to the accumulation of unpublished treaties,

Recognizing, consistent with the obligation contained in Article 102 of the Charter, the importance of the expeditious processing, registration and publication of treaties and treaty-related actions,

Welcoming the range of measures already taken by the Treaty Section to expedite the publication of the United Nations Treaty Series and to provide electronic access to the publication Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General through the Internet,

Desiring that all efforts are made to ensure that the Treaty Section develops a comprehensive electronic database containing all treaty depositary and registration information,

Noting the steps taken by the Ad Hoc Open-Ended Working Group on Informatics established by the Economic and Social Council to harmonize and improve United Nations information systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all Member States,

Noting also that the existing and proposed Internet access to United Nations treaty publications is and will be in addition to the hard-copy printed versions of such publications,

1. Welcomes the statement of objective of developing a comprehensive electronic database containing all depositary and registration information and disseminating electronically treaties and treaty law-related information from the database, including through on-line access, as contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Decade of International Law;

2. Recalls the request of the Legal Counsel that in order to expedite the registration and publication of treaties all Member States should submit treaty texts in disk or other electronic format in addition to the certified print copy;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to give priority to the implementation of the computerization programme in the Treaty Section of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure that all necessary support is provided to expedite the publication of the printed version of the United Nations Treaty Series through the prompt provision of the necessary equipment and translation services;

5. Endorses the proposed Internet dissemination of the United Nations Treaty Series, following the same rules applicable to the printed version of the publication, in addition to the current access to the Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General, and recognizes that Internet access to treaties and treaty law-related information is particularly valuable in countries where the cost of maintaining complete collections of treaties in bound volume form is relatively high;

6. Also endorses the Secretary-General's exploring of the economic and practical feasibility of recovering the costs of providing such Internet access to the United Nations Treaty Series and the Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General, subject to Member States, organizations of the United Nations system, other international organizations and other non-commercial users not being charged a user fee, and presenting his findings to Member States;

7. Invites the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of translating the list of titles of treaties appearing in the publication Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General into the other official languages of the United Nations and disseminating such lists via the Internet, and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

8. Invites the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, other international organizations and Member States with depositary functions for multilateral treaties to use their best endeavours to provide Internet access to treaties and treaty law-related information as soon as practicable.

Cooperation with the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

On the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (AALCC) in 1981, the General Assembly had requested [YUN 1981, p. 1269, GA res. 36/38] the Secretary-General of the United Nations to hold consultations with the Secretary-General of AALCC with a view to further strengthening and widening the scope of cooperation between the two organizations. The item, considered biennially since 1988, was last taken up by the Assembly in 1994 when the Assembly noted its satisfaction at the progress made [YUN 1994, p. 1327].

In September 1996, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/51/360] to the Assembly covering such areas as the cooperative framework agreed upon by the two organizations; representation of AALCC at 1995 meetings and conferences, including, inter alia, its participation at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations, at the United Nations Congress on Public International Law, and at the twenty-eighth session of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law; AALCC's contribution towards the strengthening of the role of the United Nations and the UN Decade of International Law; its efforts in promoting wider use of the International Court of Justice; ratification and promotion of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea; and international economic cooperation for development. AALCC also dealt with the questions of refugees, mine clearance, peacemaking, peacekeeping, humanitarian activities and the safety of UN personnel, as well as launching preparations to commemorate its fortieth anniversary.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/11.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

The General Assembly,

Host country relations

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/49 [YUN 1995, p. 1352], the Committee on Relations with the Host Country continued to consider various aspects of relations between the United Nations diplomatic community and the United States—the host country. The Committee held six meetings between 14 February and 22 November 1996 [A/51/26] during which it considered the question of the security of missions and the safety of their personnel; acceleration of immigration and customs procedures; exemption from taxation; the responsibilities of permanent missions to the United Nations and their personnel in relation to financial indebtedness; and matters related to the use of motor vehicles and parking.

Security of missions and safety of their personnel

The Committee was informed by Cuba in February [A/AC.154/285, A/AC.154/286] of two incidents pertaining to the security of Cuban diplomatic personnel, and in May [A/AC.154/289] of the installation, within the security zone surrounding the Cuban Mission, of a street sign reading "Brothers to the Rescue Corner". Cuba alleged that the placing of the sign had had an adverse impact on the security, dignity and integrity of the Cuban Mission and its personnel. Moreover, that act on the part of the authorities constituted a violation of, and failure to comply with, the legal obligations of the United States as host country under the 1947 Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations [YUN 1947-48, p. 199, GA res. 169(II)], the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations and other relevant instruments and, Cuba said, had created a potential focal point for conflicts and provocations against its Mission.

The United States clarified that the naming of streets in the United States was the province of local authorities and that the actions had been taken by the City of New York, acting entirely on its own initiative without any involvement of the Federal Government or of the host country Mission. The United States took its responsibilities as host country to the United Nations very seriously, balancing those responsibilities with its constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech and assembly. The United States had, upon learning of the proposed event, met with Cuban officials to discuss their security concerns and had made arrangements to ensure that the Mission was not prevented from carrying out its functions. In addition, the Cuban Mission continued to receive 24-hour daily police protection and immediate attention to its security and safety concerns. The United States said it found the Cuban protest perplexing, particularly since there was a large sign in plain view of the United States Office in Havana expressing derogatory statements against the United States.

Considering that the security of the missions accredited to the United Nations and the safety of their personnel were indispensable for their effective functioning, the Committee appreciated the efforts of the host country to that end and anticipated that the host country would continue to take all measures necessary to prevent any interference with the functioning of missions.

Acceleration of immigration and customs procedures

At a meeting of the Committee, Portugal spoke of difficulties encountered by members of the diplomatic community with regard to the established immigration and customs procedures at Kennedy International Airport. Members of the diplomatic corps had repeatedly been told to join the general line of incoming passengers. The Russian Federation echoed Portugal's concerns, observing that the Delta Airline terminal had been one specific source of the problem. The representative of the United States recalled that representatives of the Committee had visited Kennedy Airport and, in particular, the Delta terminal; the airline had, at that time, promised to rectify the situation. The United States Mission had since contacted airport officials who had assured it that special lines for diplomats were in place. Missions were invited to report to the host country Mission any difficulties they might encounter on the arrival of their diplomats.

The Committee noted with satisfaction that the host country had taken certain measures to accelerate immigration and customs procedures for diplomatic personnel arriving in New York City, and urged the host country to continue to improve those procedures and to act decisively to ensure their proper application in observance of the agreements in force.

Exemption from taxation

With regard to tax exemption matters, Portugal expressed concern that, apart from neighbourhood stores in the vicinity of the United Nations in Manhattan, many businesses located in other boroughs of New York City were not aware of tax exemption cards issued to diplomats by the State Department. It suggested using the business licensing mechanism as a means of informing stores of the tax exemption system, and better coordination with the financial departments of other states in the United States. The Russian Federation voiced similar concerns, adding that, in addition to stores, problems of taxation existed with the local telephone company.

The United States confirmed that, occasionally, sales tax exemption cards were not being honoured by stores and it informed the Committee that when the decision was taken to issue the federal card, all States had been informed accordingly and provided with a sample. In some instances, store owners decided on their own not to honour the cards. It was hoped that the New York Office of Foreign Missions would raise the issue in Washington, D.C., in order to explore possible solutions to the problem. The United States also observed that, on occasion, service charges which diplomats were obliged to pay were being mistaken for taxes.

The Committee took careful note of problems relating to exemption from taxation, in particular outside New York City, and requested the host country to take necessary measures to ensure that diplomats were exempt from sales taxes everywhere in the United States.

Financial indebtedness

The Committee's Working Group on Indebtedness reported that a review of data provided by the host country Mission regarding the amount of financial debts of certain missions in New York indicated that, in some cases, missions did not feel that they were bound to comply, inter alia, with fiscal and tax regulations of the host country in connection with their taxable commercial activities.

In the view of Switzerland, debts of missions accredited to international organizations had a direct detrimental impact on the prestige and image of diplomatic communities in host States. Switzerland reported that total debts of missions accredited to the UN Office at Geneva was slightly more than $4.6 million and a cause of serious concern in Geneva, and it hoped that the United Nations would continue to review the issue from a global perspective.

The United States viewed the lack of affordable health care and health insurance as a major factor contributing to the indebtedness problem, and proposed a survey of local health care needs as well as interest in a primary health care insurance system for permanent missions, with the Working Group on Indebtedness as the focal point for the survey. The aim of the survey was to identify reputable and affordable health care providers for the diplomatic community.

The Committee approved a questionnaire [A/AC.154/INF/1] which was circulated to all Member States. Preliminary analysis of responses indicated that a majority of missions had expressed an interest in possible alternative medical insurance coverage, with the overwhelming majority favouring a group health insurance plan. The Committee decided that the responses should be further analysed by the Working Group and expressed its gratitude to the missions that had responded.

Transportation issues

The Russian Federation drew the attention of the Committee to the problem of tickets and fines issued for parking, an issue which had been repeatedly raised in the past. Portugal and Costa Rica recalled instances when legally parked diplomatic cars were ticketed while other cars were not, and suggested that the traffic police be given appropriate clarification of the scope of privileges enjoyed by diplomats.

The United States responded that the problem was a complex one and that diplomatic immunities did not allow diplomats to violate traffic laws and regulations. The United States acknowledged that a parking problem might exist in the vicinity of the Russian Mission, since there were six other missions located in the vicinity, and suggested that missions lacking sufficient parking spaces might wish to consider alternative modes of transportation, such as private bus services or public transportation.

The New York City Commissioner for the United Nations and Consular Corps informed the Committee that the Commission had received several complaints on the issue, most of which had been resolved, and suggested that a meeting with the New York City Police Department should be convened with potentially positive results.

The Committee requested the host country to take steps, in conjunction with the City of New York, to resolve the problem of the parking of diplomatic vehicles, respond to the growing needs of the diplomatic community in that regard and consult with the Committee on those issues.

Communications. In a 12 November letter to the Committee [A/AC.154/299], Greece drew the attention of the Committee to the removal of signs providing parking spaces for the diplomatic license-plated cars of its mission, which it considered as a case of discrimination against the Permanent Mission of Greece to the United Nations.

By a note verbale dated 31 December 1996 from Belarus [A/AC.154/301], and a letter of the same date from the Russian Federation [A/AC.154/300], the two Member States informed the Committee of a 29 December incident during which two members of their respective diplomatic missions had been arrested and allegedly assaulted by members of the New York City Police Department. The Russian Federation also requested an urgent meeting of the Committee to discuss the incident.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/163.

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Recalling Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, and the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, and the responsibilities of the host country,

Recognizing that effective measures should continue to be taken by the competent authorities of the host country, in particular to prevent any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel,

Noting the spirit of cooperation and mutual understanding that has guided the deliberations of the Committee on issues affecting the United Nations community and the host country,

Welcoming the increased interest shown by Member States in participating in the work of the Committee,

1. Endorses the recommendations and conclusions of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 65 of its report;

2. Considers that the maintenance of appropriate conditions for the normal work of the delegations and the missions accredited to the United Nations is in the interests of the United Nations and all Member States, and requests the host country to continue to take all measures necessary to prevent any interference with the functioning of missions;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts made by the host country, and hopes that the concerns raised at the meetings of the Committee will continue to be resolved in a spirit of cooperation and in accordance with international law;

4. Notes with appreciation the efforts of the Committee which have contributed to a decrease in the amount of diplomatic indebtedness, stresses that existing indebtedness continues to be a matter of significant concern to the United Nations and that non-payment of just debts tarnishes the image of the Organization itself, and reaffirms that non-compliance with contractual obligations cannot be condoned or justified;

5. Welcomes the efforts of the Committee aimed at identifying affordable health care programmes for the diplomatic community;

6. Once again urges the host country to consider lifting travel controls with regard to certain missions and to staff members of the Secretariat of certain nationalities, and in this regard notes the positions of the affected States, the Secretary-General and the host country;

7. Notes with satisfaction the steps taken by the host country at John F. Kennedy International Airport with regard to special passages for members of the United Nations community, and urges the host country to continue to take appropriate action in this regard to ensure application of those procedures;

8. Calls upon the host country to review measures and procedures relating to the parking of diplomatic vehicles, with a view to responding to the growing needs of the diplomatic community, and to consult with the Committee on these issues;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of the relations of the United Nations with the host country;

10. Requests the Committee to continue its work, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country".

International economic law

In 1996, legal aspects of international economic law continued to be considered by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and by the Sixth (Legal) Committee of the General Assembly. Among major actions were the adoption of the UNCITRAL Model Law on Electronic Commerce and the UNCITRAL Notes on Organizing Arbitral Proceedings.

International trade law

At its twenty-ninth session (New York, 28 May-14 June), UNCITRAL adopted the Model Law on Electronic Commerce, which it annexed to its report on the session [A/51/17], the Notes on Organizing Arbitral Proceedings, and completed its consideration of the Guide to Enactment of the Model Law. The Commission also considered build-operate-transfer projects (BOT); receivables financing; cross-border insolvency; legislative implementation of the 1958 Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards; case-law on UNCITRAL texts (CLOUT); training and technical assistance; status and promotion of UNCITRAL legal texts; and relevant General Assembly resolutions.

As in previous years, UNCITRAL's annual report was forwarded to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for comments or recommendations.

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/47 [YUN 1995, p. 1365], the Secretary-General reported [A/51/382] in September 1996 on granting travel assistance to delegates of developing countries that were members of the Commission to attend meetings of UNCITRAL and its working groups. The Secretary-General said he was responsible for the use of the trust fund established in 1994 for that purpose. The fund would be administered, in accordance with its terms of reference, by the Legal Counsel as its programme manager. As at 1 September 1996, a total of $3,000 in contributions had been received from Cambodia and Kenya.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/161.

Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-ninth session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Reaffirming its conviction that the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would significantly contribute to universal economic cooperation among all States on a basis of equality, equity and common interest and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and thereby to the well-being of all peoples,

Stressing the value of participation by States at all levels of economic development and with different legal systems in the process of harmonizing and unifying international trade law,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-ninth session,

Mindful of the valuable contribution to be rendered by the Commission within the framework of the United Nations Decade of International Law, particularly as regards the dissemination of international trade law,

Concerned that activities undertaken by other bodies of the United Nations system in the field of international trade law without coordination with the Commission might lead to undesirable duplication of efforts and would not be in keeping with the aim of promoting efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law, as stated in its resolution 37/106 of 16 December 1982,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of paragraph 9 of General Assembly resolution 50/47,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-ninth session;

2. Notes with satisfaction the completion and adoption by the Commission of the Model Law on Electronic Commerce;

3. Commends the Commission for the finalization of the Notes on Organizing Arbitral Proceedings;

4. Expresses its appreciation for the progress made in its work on the subjects of receivables financing and cross-border insolvency;

5. Welcomes the decision of the Commission to request the Secretariat to review, with the assistance of experts and in cooperation with other international organizations having expertise in build-operate-transfer arrangements, issues on which legislative guidance might be useful, and to commence the preparation of a legislative guide on build-operate-transfer projects;

6. Reaffirms the mandate of the Commission, as the core legal body within the United Nations system in the field of international trade law, to coordinate legal activities in this field and, in this connection:

(a) Calls upon all bodies of the United Nations system and invites other international organizations to bear in mind the mandate of the Commission and the need to avoid duplication of effort and to promote efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law;

(b) Recommends that the Commission, through its secretariat, continue to maintain close cooperation with the other international organs and organizations, including regional organizations as well as other bodies such as the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law, which are active in the field of international trade law and other related areas;

7. Also reaffirms the importance, in particular for developing countries, of the work of the Commission concerned with training and technical assistance in the field of international trade law, such as assistance in the preparation of national legislation based on legal texts of the Commission;

8. Expresses the desirability for increased efforts by the Commission, in sponsoring seminars and symposia, to provide such training and technical assistance, and in this connection:

(a) Expresses its appreciation to the Commission for organizing seminars and briefing missions in Belarus, Chile, Colombia, Gabon, Greece, Guinea, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Kazakhstan, New Zealand, Paraguay, Slovenia, Turkey and the United Arab Emirates;

(b) Expresses its appreciation to the Governments whose contributions made it possible for the seminars and briefing missions to take place, and appeals to Governments, the relevant United Nations organs, organizations and institutions and individuals to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law trust fund for symposia and, where appropriate, to the financing of special projects, and otherwise to assist the secretariat of the Commission in financing and organizing seminars and symposia, in particular in developing countries, and in the award of fellowships to candidates from developing countries to enable them to participate in such seminars and symposia;

9. Appeals to the United Nations Development Programme and other bodies responsible for development assistance, such as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, as well as to Governments in their bilateral aid programmes, to support the training and technical assistance programme of the Commission and to cooperate and coordinate their activities with those of the Commission;

10. Appeals to Governments, the relevant United Nations organs, organizations and institutions and individuals, in order to ensure full participation by all Member States in the sessions of the Commission and its working groups, to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund for travel assistance to developing countries that are members of the Commission, at their request and in consultation with the Secretary-General;

11. Decides to include the trust funds for symposia and travel assistance in the list of funds and programmes that are dealt with at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

12. Also decides, in order to ensure full participation by all Member States in the sessions of the Commission and its working groups, to continue its consideration in the competent Main Committee during the fifty-first session of the General Assembly of granting travel assistance to the least developed countries that are members of the Commission, at their request and in consultation with the Secretary-General;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the effective implementation of the programmes of the Commission;

14. Stresses the importance of bringing into effect the conventions emanating from the work of the Commission for the global unification and harmonization of international trade law, and to this end urges States that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to those conventions.

16 December 1996 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/51/628) without vote, 26 November (meeting 47); 55-nation draft (A/C.6/51/L.7), orally revised; agenda item 148.

Model Law on Electronic Commerce

In 1996, UNCITRAL had before it the report of the thirtieth session (Vienna, 26 February-8 March 1996) of the Working Group on Electronic Data Interchange [A/CN.9/421]. The Group discussed the issues of transferability of rights in the context of transport documents and approved the text of draft statutory provisions dealing with the specific issues of contracts of carriage of goods involving the use of data messages; the latter was annexed to the Group's report.

On 12 June, the Commission adopted the UNCITRAL Model Law on Electronic Commerce; requested the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the Model Law, together with the Guide to Enactment of the Model Law, to Member States and other interested bodies; and recommended that favourable consideration be given by all States to the Model Law when enacting or revising their laws, in order to ensure uniformity.

On 16 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/162.

Model Law on Electronic Commerce adopted by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Noting that an increasing number of transactions in international trade are carried out by means of electronic data interchange and other means of communication, commonly referred to as "electronic commerce", which involve the use of alternatives to paper-based methods of communication and storage of information,

Recalling the recommendation on the legal value of computer records adopted by the Commission at its eighteenth session, in 1985, and paragraph 5 (b) of General Assembly resolution 40/71 of 11 December 1985, in which the Assembly called upon Governments and international organizations to take action, where appropriate, in conformity with the recommendation of the Commission, so as to ensure legal security in the context of the widest possible use of automated data processing in international trade,

Convinced that the establishment of a model law facilitating the use of electronic commerce that is acceptable to States with different legal, social and economic systems could contribute significantly to the development of harmonious international economic relations,

Noting that the Model Law on Electronic Commerce was adopted by the Commission at its twenty-ninth session after consideration of the observations of Governments and interested organizations,

Believing that the adoption of the Model Law on Electronic Commerce by the Commission will assist all States significantly in enhancing their legislation governing the use of alternatives to paper-based methods of communication and storage of information and in formulating such legislation where none currently exists,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law for completing and adopting the Model Law on Electronic Commerce contained in the annex to the present resolution and for preparing the Guide to Enactment of the Model Law;

2. Recommends that all States give favourable consideration to the Model Law when they enact or revise their laws, in view of the need for uniformity of the law applicable to alternatives to paper-based methods of communication and storage of information;

3. Recommends also that all efforts be made to ensure that the Model Law, together with the Guide, become generally known and available.

2. Paragraph 1 does not affect any right that may exist to modify by agreement any rule of law referred to in chapter II.

Chapter II. Application of legal requirements to data messages

Article 5

Legal recognition of data messages

Information shall not be denied legal effect, validity or enforceability solely on the grounds that it is in the form of a data message.

Writing

1. Where the law requires information to be in writing, that requirement is met by a data message if the information contained therein is accessible so as to be usable for subsequent reference.

2. Paragraph 1 applies whether the requirement therein is in the form of an obligation or whether the law simply provides consequences for the information not being in writing.

3. The provisions of this article do not apply to the following: [ . . . ].

Article 7

Signature

1. Where the law requires a signature of a person, that requirement is met in relation to a data message if:

(a) A method is used to identify that person and to indicate that person's approval of the information contained in the data message; and

(b) That method is as reliable as was appropriate for the purpose for which the data message was generated or communicated, in the light of all the circumstances, including any relevant agreement.

2. Paragraph 1 applies whether the requirement therein is in the form of an obligation or whether the law simply provides consequences for the absence of a signature.

3. The provisions of this article do not apply to the following: [ . . . ].

Article 8

Original

1. Where the law requires information to be presented or retained in its original form, that requirement is met by a data message if:

(a) There exists a reliable assurance as to the integrity of the information from the time when it was first generated in its final form, as a data message or otherwise; and

(b) Where it is required that information be presented, that information is capable of being displayed to the person to whom it is to be presented.

2. Paragraph 1 applies whether the requirement therein is in the form of an obligation or whether the law simply provides consequences for the information not being presented or retained in its original form.

3. For the purposes of subparagraph (a) of paragraph 1:

(a) The criteria for assessing integrity shall be whether the information has remained complete and unaltered, apart from the addition of any endorsement and any change which arises in the normal course of communication, storage and display; and

(b) The standard of reliability required shall be assessed in the light of the purpose for which the information was generated and in the light of all the relevant circumstances.

4. The provisions of this article do not apply to the following: [ . . . ].

Article 9

Admissibility and evidential weight of data messages

1. In any legal proceedings, nothing in the application of the rules of evidence shall apply so as to deny the admissibility of a data message in evidence:

(a) On the sole ground that it is a data message; or

(b) If it is the best evidence that the person adducing it could reasonably be expected to obtain, on the grounds that it is not in its original form.

2. Information in the form of a data message shall be given due evidential weight. In assessing the evidential weight of a data message, regard shall be had to the reliability of the manner in which the data message was generated, stored or communicated, to the reliability of the manner in which the integrity of the information was maintained, to the manner in which its originator was identified, and to any other relevant factor.

Article 10

Retention of data messages

1. Where the law requires that certain documents, records or information be retained, that requirement is met by retaining data messages, provided that the following conditions are satisfied:

- (a) The information contained therein is accessible so as to be usable for subsequent reference; and
- (b) The data message is retained in the format in which it was generated, sent or received, or in a format which can be demonstrated to represent accurately the information generated, sent or received; and
- (c) Such information, if any, is retained as enables the identification of the origin and destination of a data message and the date and time when it was sent or received.

2. An obligation to retain documents, records or information in accordance with paragraph 1 does not extend to any information the sole purpose of which is to enable the message to be sent or received.

3. A person may satisfy the requirement referred to in paragraph 1 by using the services of any other person, provided that the conditions set forth in subparagraphs (a), (b) and (c) of paragraph 1 are met.

Chapter III. Communication of data messages

Article 11

Formation and validity of contracts

1. In the context of contract formation, unless otherwise agreed by the parties, an offer and the acceptance of an offer may be expressed by means of data messages. Where a data message is used in the formation of a contract, that contract shall not be denied validity or enforceability on the sole ground that a data message was used for that purpose.

2. The provisions of this article do not apply to the following: [ . . . ].

Article 12

Recognition by parties of data messages

1. As between the originator and the addressee of a data message, a declaration of will or other statement shall not be denied legal effect, validity or enforceability solely on the grounds that it is in the form of a data message.

2. The provisions of this article do not apply to the following: [ . . . ].

Article 13

Attribution of data messages

1. A data message is that of the originator if it was sent by the originator itself.

2. As between the originator and the addressee, a data message is deemed to be that of the originator if it was sent:

- (a) By a person who had the authority to act on behalf of the originator in respect of that data message; or
- (b) By an information system programmed by or on behalf of the originator to operate automatically.

3. As between the originator and the addressee, an addressee is entitled to regard a data message as being that of the originator, and to act on that assumption, if:

- (a) In order to ascertain whether the data message was that of the originator, the addressee properly applied a procedure previously agreed to by the originator for that purpose; or

- (b) The data message as received by the addressee resulted from the actions of a person whose relationship with the originator or with any agent of the originator enabled that person to gain access to a method used by the originator to identify data messages as its own.

4. Paragraph 3 does not apply:

- (a) As of the time when the addressee has both received notice from the originator that the data message is not that of the originator and has had reasonable time to act accordingly; or

- (b) In a case within paragraph 3 (b), at any time when the addressee knew or should have known, had it exercised reasonable care or used any agreed procedure, that the data message was not that of the originator.

5. Where a data message is that of the originator or is deemed to be that of the originator, or the addressee is entitled to act on that assumption, then, as between the originator and the addressee, the addressee is entitled to regard the data message as received as being what the originator intended to send, and to act on that assumption. The addressee is not so entitled when it knew or should have known, had it exercised reasonable care or used any agreed procedure, that the transmission resulted in any error in the data message as received.

6. The addressee is entitled to regard each data message received as a separate data message and to act on that assumption, except to the extent that it duplicates another data message and the addressee knew or should have known, had it exercised reasonable care or used any agreed procedure, that the data message was a duplicate.

Acknowledgement of receipt

1. Paragraphs 2 to 4 of this article apply where, on or before sending a data message, or by means of that data message, the originator has requested or has agreed with the addressee that receipt of the data message be acknowledged.

2. Where the originator has not agreed with the addressee that the acknowledgement be given in a particular form or by a particular method, an acknowledgement may be given by:

- (a) Any communication by the addressee, automated or otherwise; or

- (b) Any conduct of the addressee, sufficient to indicate to the originator that the data message has been received.

3. Where the originator has stated that the data message is conditional on receipt of the acknowledgement, the data message is treated as though it has never been sent, until the acknowledgement is received.

4. Where the originator has not stated that the data message is conditional on receipt of the acknowledgement, and the acknowledgement has not been received by the originator within the time specified or agreed or, if no time has been specified or agreed, within a reasonable time the originator:

- (a) May give notice to the addressee stating that no acknowledgement has been received and specifying a reasonable time by which the acknowledgement must be received; and

- (b) If the acknowledgement is not received within the time specified in subparagraph (a), may, upon notice to the addressee, treat the data message as though it had never been sent, or exercise any other rights it may have.

5. Where the originator receives the addressee's acknowledgement of receipt, it is presumed that the related data message was received by the addressee. That presumption does not imply that the data message corresponds to the message received.

6. Where the received acknowledgement states that the related data message met technical requirements, either agreed upon or set forth in applicable standards, it is presumed that those requirements have been met.

7. Except insofar as it relates to the sending or receipt of the data message, this article is not intended to deal with the legal consequences that may flow either from that data message or from the acknowledgement of its receipt.

Article 15

Time and place of dispatch and receipt of data message

1. Unless otherwise agreed between the originator and the addressee, the dispatch of a data message occurs when it enters an information system outside the control of the originator or of the person who sent the data message on behalf of the originator.

2. Unless otherwise agreed between the originator and the addressee, the time of receipt of a data message is determined as follows:

(a) If the addressee has designated an information system for the purpose of receiving data messages, receipt occurs:

- (i) At the time when the data message enters the designated information system; or
- (ii) If the data message is sent to an information system of the addressee that is not the designated information system, at the time when the data message is retrieved by the addressee;

(b) If the addressee has not designated an information system, receipt occurs when the data message enters an information system of the addressee.

3. Paragraph 2 applies notwithstanding the fact that the place where the information system is located may be different from the place where the data message is deemed to be received under paragraph 4.

4. Unless otherwise agreed between the originator and the addressee, a data message is deemed to be dispatched at the place where the originator has its place of business, and is deemed to be received at the place where the addressee has its place of business. For the purposes of this paragraph:

(a) If the originator or the addressee has more than one place of business, the place of business is that which has the closest relationship to the underlying transaction or, where there is no underlying transaction, the principal place of business;

(b) If the originator or the addressee does not have a place of business, reference is to be made to its habitual residence.

5. The provisions of this article do not apply to the following: [ . . . ].

Part two. Electronic commerce in specific areas

Chapter I. Carriage of goods

Article 16

Actions related to contracts of carriage of goods

Without derogating from the provisions of part one of this Law, this chapter applies to any action in connection with, or in pursuance of, a contract of carriage of goods, including but not limited to:

- (a) (i) Furnishing the marks, number, quantity or weight of goods;
- (ii) Stating or declaring the nature or value of goods;
- (iii) Issuing a receipt for goods;
- (iv) Confirming that goods have been loaded;
- (b) (i) Notifying a person of terms and conditions of the contract;
- (ii) Giving instructions to a carrier;
- (c) (i) Claiming delivery of goods;
- (ii) Authorizing release of goods;
- (iii) Giving notice of loss of, or damage to, goods;
- (d) Giving any other notice or statement in connection with the performance of the contract;
- (e) Undertaking to deliver goods to a named person or a person authorized to claim delivery;
- (f) Granting, acquiring, renouncing, surrendering, transferring or negotiating rights in goods;
- (g) Acquiring or transferring rights and obligations under the contract.

Article 17

Transport documents

1. Subject to paragraph 3, where the law requires that any action referred to in article 16 be carried out in writing or by using a paper document, that requirement is met if the action is carried out by using one or more data messages.

2. Paragraph 1 applies whether the requirement therein is in the form of an obligation or whether the law simply provides consequences for failing either to carry out the action in writing or to use a paper document.

3. If a right is to be granted to, or an obligation is to be acquired by, one person and no other person, and if the law requires that, in order to effect this, the right or obligation must be conveyed to that person by the transfer, or use of, a paper document, that requirement is met if the right or obligation is conveyed by using one or more data messages, provided that a reliable method is used to render such data message or messages unique.

4. For the purposes of paragraph 3, the standard of reliability required shall be assessed in the light of the purpose for which the right or obligation was conveyed and in the light of all the circumstances, including any relevant agreement.

5. Where one or more data messages are used to effect any action in subparagraphs (f) and (g) of article 16, no paper document used to effect any such action is valid unless the use of data messages has been terminated and replaced by the use of paper documents. A paper document issued in these circumstances shall contain a statement of such termination. The replacement of data messages by paper documents shall not affect the rights or obligations of the parties involved.

6. If a rule of law is compulsorily applicable to a contract of carriage of goods which is in, or is evidenced by, a paper document, that rule shall not be inapplicable to such a contract of carriage of goods that is evidenced by one or more data messages by reason of the fact that the contract is evidenced by such data message or messages instead of by a paper document.

7. The provisions of this article do not apply to the following: [ . . . ].

<sup>a</sup> The Commission suggests the following text for States that might wish to limit the applicability of this Law to international data messages: "This Law applies to a data message as defined in paragraph 1 of article 2 where the data message relates to international commerce."

<sup>b</sup> This Law does not override any rule of law intended for the protection of consumers.

<sup>c</sup> The Commission suggests the following text for States that might wish to extend the applicability of this Law: "This Law applies to any kind of information in the form of a data message, except in the following situations: [. . .]."

The term "commercial" should be given a wide interpretation so as to cover matters arising from all relationships of a commercial nature, whether contractual or not. Relationships of a commercial nature include, but are not limited to, the following transactions: any trade transaction for the supply or exchange of goods or services; distribution agreement; commercial representation or agency; factoring; leasing; construction of works; consulting; engineering; licensing; investment; financing; banking; insurance; exploitation agreement or concession; joint venture and other forms of industrial or business cooperation; carriage of goods or passengers by air, sea, rail or road.

16 December 1996 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/51/628) without vote, 26 November (meeting 47); 34-nation draft (A/C.6/51/L.8); agenda item 148.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 6th Committee 3, 4, 47; plenary 85.

International commercial arbitration

UNCITRAL in 1996 had before it a revised version of the draft Notes on Organizing Arbitral Proceedings [A/CN.9/423], prepared by the Secretariat in the light of the Commission's consideration of the topic in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1363]. The Commission approved the substance of the draft Notes as modified at the 1996 session and decided that the adopted text should be entitled "UNCITRAL Notes on Organizing Arbitral Proceedings". It requested the Secretariat to edit the final text in accordance with decisions taken at the session; to revise the language versions; to align the use of technical terms with other UNCITRAL texts; to produce the Notes as a separate publication; and to disseminate the publication widely. In addition, the Commission expressed its appreciation to the International Council for Commercial Arbitration and others for their contributions to the project.

Foreign arbitral awards

In 1996, the Commission considered a project relating to the legislative implementation in the contracting States of the Convention on Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards (New York, 1958). The primary objective of the project was to publish the findings of the survey of legislation. The Secretariat had sent to the States parties to the Convention a questionnaire designed to obtain information relating to its implementation, so as to be able to prepare a report for consideration by the Commission. As at 12 June 1996, some 32 replies to the questionnaire had been received. UNCITRAL called on States parties that had not done so to reply to the questionnaire and requested the Secretariat to prepare a note presenting the findings based on the analysis of the information gathered for consideration by the Commission at a future session.

Build-operate-transfer projects (BOT)

In response to a request of the Commission, the Secretariat in 1996 prepared a report [A/CN.9/424] with information on work being undertaken by other organizations on BOT; an outline of issues covered by national laws on BOT and proposals for work by the Commission. The Commission took note of the report and endorsed the work proposal set out therein, in particular with regard to the preparation of a legislative guide that would provide guidance to States preparing or modernizing their legislation on BOT.

Assignment in receivable financing

The Commission had before it the report of the Working Group on International Contract Practices on its November 1995 session [YUN 1995, p. 1362], in which the Secretariat was requested to prepare a revised version of the draft uniform rules on assignment in receivables financing for consideration at the next session of the Working Group. The Commission expressed its appreciation for the work accomplished and requested the Working Group to proceed with its work expeditiously.

Cross-border insolvency

The Working Group on Insolvency Law, formerly known as the Working Group on the New International Economic Order, reported to UNCITRAL on the work of its eighteenth (Vienna, 30 October-10 November 1995) [YUN 1995, p. 1364] and nineteenth (New York, 1-12 April 1996) [A/CN.9/422] sessions. The Commission was pleased with the progress made by the Working Group, and noted that the project had aroused much interest and that the uniform text which would be the result was eagerly awaited. The Commission therefore expressed the hope that the Working Group would be able to submit a draft legislative text for its consideration in 1997.

Case-law on UNCITRAL texts (CLOUT)

The Commission noted with appreciation the publication, since its 1995 session, of a set of abstracts on the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration, and a set of abstracts and a thesaurus on the United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods. It also noted the preparation of a thesaurus on the Model Law, which the Secretariat was requested to expedite. The Commission further expressed its appreciation to the National Correspondents for their work, and urged States to cooperate with the Secretariat in the operation of CLOUT and to facilitate the carrying out of the tasks of the National Correspondents. The Commission welcomed the steps taken by the Secretariat to establish a database with Internet access, encouraged further progress to that end and requested that adequate resources be made available for the effective operation of CLOUT.

Training and technical assistance

In 1996, UNCITRAL had before it a Secretariat note [A/CN.9/427] on training and technical assistance activities—seminars, briefing missions, conferences, workshop and internships—that had taken place since its 1995 session and on the direction of future activities. As at 17 April, 14 seminars and briefing missions had been held, while others were being planned for Africa, Asia and Latin America in the remainder of 1996 and 1997. The Commission took note of the various forms of assistance that could be provided by the Secretariat, such as review of preparatory drafts of legislation, assistance in the preparation of drafts, comments on reports of law reform commissions and briefings for legislators, judges, arbitrators and other end-users of UNCITRAL legal texts. The Commission emphasized the importance of cooperation and coordination between development assistance agencies providing or financing legal technical assistance and the Secretariat, to avoid situations that might lead to the adoption of national laws that did not represent internationally agreed standards. The Commission noted with appreciation the contributions made by States and organizations to the seminars and other programmes of training and assistance and appealed for contributions to the UNCITRAL Trust Fund for Symposia.

New international economic order

With regard to the progressive development of the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order, the General Assembly decided on 16 December to resume consideration of the legal aspects of international economic relations at its fifty-fifth (2000) session (decision 51/441).

PART FIVE

Institutional, administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

United Nations reform

In 1996, in the context of the rapidly evolving world situation, the United Nations was undergoing comprehensive change to meet new and emerging problems and tackle persistent problems in new ways. Institutional reform continued on three levels: intergovernmental, organizational and managerial. Reform was high on the Secretary-General's agenda, as well as on the agenda of the intergovernmental machinery, in particular through the work programme of the General Assembly. Five working groups of the Assembly were addressing major aspects of reform.

Further concrete reform measures were introduced in 1996, and substantial progress continued to be made in strengthening administrative procedures, adapting peacekeeping to new circumstances and improving the effectiveness and coherence of development operations.

In May, the Assembly set the stage for further streamlining and strengthening of the intergovernmental machinery in the economic and social fields. The Economic and Social Council responded by initiating a review of the mandate, composition, functions and working methods of its functional commissions and expert bodies. It also reviewed the agenda of its general segment and requested the regional commissions to continue undertaking their own review. In support of the follow-up to major conferences and implementation of their results, coordinating inter-agency mechanisms were set up and closer links were being established between the Council and its subsidiary bodies.

Managerial reform was also well under way in 1996, accompanied by simplification of Secretariat structures, rationalization of both the multiplicity of programmes and funds and their relationships with the Secretariat, and a reduction in high-level posts. Significant progress was made in each of three strategic areas: human resources, cost structure, and information and technology. Efficiency reviews were carried out resulting in a 10 per cent budget reduction, as well as improved services and operations.

As part of the Secretariat reform, efforts to strengthen internal and external oversight mechanisms continued. In carrying out its monitoring, internal audit, inspection and evaluation, as well as investigation functions, the Office of Internal Oversight Services increasingly contributed to better programme design and delivery. In order to improve its external oversight, inspection and evaluation functions, the Joint Inspection Unit strengthened its cooperation with the legislative bodies and secretariats of participating organizations and developed a revised set of internal standards and guidelines for its work.

Despite the ongoing reform of the Organization, there were indications of a diminished willingness to deal with critical issues on the international agenda through the United Nations, according to the Secretary-General. Most notable was the ongoing financial crisis which remained a matter of urgent concern. As the flow of resources continued to decline, new ways to raise funds were being sought. The Economic and Social Council discussed innovative funding mechanisms for development activities, underlining the role of private investment in financing development, but stressing that such resources should not replace official development assistance and should be distinct from funding the regular and the peacekeeping budgets.

With regard to intergovernmental reform, responsibility for which lay primarily with the Member States, three interrelated objectives were, explicitly or implicitly, being pursued, the Secretary-General said in his annual report on the work of the Organization [A/51/1]. The objectives were: improvements in the effectiveness and functioning of the principal organs; better balance of authority between the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as envisioned in the UN Charter; and streamlining of the subsidiary machinery—an important condition for effective overall reform, particularly in the economic and social fields.

As for the General Assembly, improvements in its functioning were a major focus in the programme of the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System. Equally important, the stage had been set by the Assembly for a further streamlining and strengthening of the intergovernmental machinery in the economic and social fields.

High-level Working Group. The Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System, established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1369, GA res. 49/252], held three organizational meetings from 14 September to 1 December 1995, and 44 substantive meetings, organized as seven substantive sessions, between 15 January and 25 July 1996. The Working Group decided that, following an orientation discussion in January, the first specific areas for discussion would be the General Assembly and the Secretariat. During its deliberations, the Working Group considered a conference room paper and its addenda, prepared by the Secretariat, which comprised a compendium of recommendations drawn from the views of Member States, the Secretary-General, and from studies and reports on subjects relating to the revitalization, strengthening and reform of the UN system prepared by independent experts and commissions.

In April, the Working Group addressed the feasibility of holding public hearings on issues with which it dealt; it was noted with regret that due to limitations of time and financial resources, it was not possible to hold hearings for public input during 1996, but the matter would be reconsidered.

Annexed to the Working Group's report to the Assembly's resumed fiftieth session [A/50/24] was a revised conference room paper which reflected the Group's debate and was to constitute the basis for further discussion in the Group during the Assembly's fifty-first session. Among the issues on which further discussion was required were four items referred to the Group by the Assembly in its 24 May resolution on further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields (see below). These were: (1) in the context of the debate on the Assembly's Main Committees, the use of innovative mechanisms such as panel discussions with delegations and interactive debates with Secretariat and agency representatives and outside experts; (2) the role and working methods of the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC); (3) the structure and functioning of the Secretariat, including the economic and social departments and the question of establishing a post of Deputy Secretary-General for International Cooperation and Development; and (4) uniform and maximum terms of service for heads of programmes and funds and other Economic and Social Council and General Assembly bodies, as well as implementation of Article 101 of the UN Charter (stipulating the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity in the employment of staff and determination of the conditions of service, as well as underlining the importance of recruiting staff on a wide geographical basis) and relevant Assembly resolutions in connection with the recruitment and appointment of staff.

On 16 September, the General Assembly, by decision 50/491, took note of the Working Group's report and decided that it should continue its work on the basis of the mandate contained in the 1995 resolution under which the Group was established and, taking into account views expressed by Member States, submit a report to the Assembly at its fifty-first session.

Review of Security Council membership and related matters

Open-ended Working Group. The Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council stated in a 1996 report [A/50/47 & Add.1] that its work during the fiftieth session of the General Assembly had taken place against the background of the special commemorative meeting of the General Assembly celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations and the Declaration [YUN 1995, p. 289] adopted on that occasion on 24 October 1995. The Declaration stated that Member States and UN observers would give to the twenty-first century a United Nations equipped, financed and structured to serve effectively the peoples in whose name it was established. It further stated that the Security Council should be expanded and its working methods should continue to be reviewed in a way that would further strengthen its capacity and effectiveness, enhance its representative character and improve its working efficiency and transparency. The agreement to expand the Council membership and review its working methods, as well as other matters related to its functioning, reflected in the Working Group's 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 1371], had thus been unanimously reaffirmed at the highest political level, the report stated, although it was also recognized that important differences on key issues remained.

During the fiftieth and resumed fiftieth Assembly session, the Working Group held 39 formal meetings and 17 informal consultations between 28 November 1995 and 13 September 1996. The President of the General Assembly served as Chairman of the Working Group.

On 1 and 2 February 1996, the Group discussed its draft programme of work for the fiftieth session [A/AC.247/6]. On 26 February, it adopted a more detailed draft programme of work for February and March [A/AC.247/7]. During those two months, it held 19 formal meetings, addressing the following: proposals on rotation or shared seats, including Article 23, paragraph 2, of the UN Charter; working methods of the Council and the relationship between the Council and the Assembly as well as other principal UN organs; the decision-making process in the Council, including the veto; proposals for an increase in the Council's non-permanent membership; proposals for an increase in the permanent membership; and other matters.

Based on discussions in February and March and requests by delegations, the Working Group Bureau prepared a "non-paper" on the Council's working methods and procedures; it described measures already adopted by the Council to enhance its working methods and procedures, and listed proposals aimed at enhancing the application of those measures, as well as additional proposals for further improvements.

Following informal consultations, the Group approved in April a new draft programme of work for the months April to June. In 16 meetings during that period, it addressed, taking a more issue-oriented approach, the following topics: composition and size of the Council; decision-making, including the veto; working methods and transparency; and other matters. A large number of oral proposals were made, some of which were subsequently submitted in written form and annexed to the Working Group's September report [A/50/47/Add.1]. In addition, the Working Group had before it three conference room papers prepared by the Secretariat: a compilation of the views expressed by Member States during the general debate and the debate on agenda item 47 (question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council and related matters) at the fiftieth Assembly session; a summary of views expressed by Member States during consideration of the Security Council report at the fiftieth session; and an inventory of measures taken by the Council to enhance its working methods and procedures.

It was again affirmed that the final agreement on the issues of composition and size of the Council; decision-making, including the veto; working methods and transparency; and other matters, should comprise a comprehensive package, that work on those issues should be allowed to proceed concurrently and that progress on one issue should not be impeded by lack of progress on the other. As was evident from the summary of Group discussions, as reflected in its report, a convergence of views had emerged on a number of issues, while important differences still existed on many others.

The Working Group also discussed the possibility of periodic reviews of the composition and size of the Council and other related matters. The point was made, in a working paper by Germany [A/50/47/Add.1, annex XIV], that providing for such periodic reviews could be an important element in facilitating efforts towards reaching a final agreement on the issues within the Group mandate. Others thought that such a provision was unnecessary.

Council working methods. The Group deepened its consideration of the Council's working methods and transparency of its work, as well as the relationship between the Council and the general membership and other principal UN organs. It was suggested that improvement of the Council's methods and transparency of work would enhance effectiveness and efficiency. The Working Group noted that the Council had continued to take steps in that regard, largely encouraged by Group discussions. It was, however, noted that the measures adopted had not been fully and effectively implemented. While strong support was expressed for formalizing and institutionalizing the measures taken to improve working methods and transparency, some States expressed opposition or reservations.

A large number of delegations stressed the need for the Council to improve further its working methods and transparency with regard, inter alia, to Council reports to the Assembly; briefings to non-members of the Council; consultations with current and potential troop-contributing countries; the work of the Sanctions Committee; effective flow of information and exchange of views between Council and Assembly; and participation of non-members in Council discussions.

Discussions focused on a number of specific proposals introduced by Member States regarding the Council's working methods, among them proposals [A/49/965] by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries submitted to the Assembly in September 1995, and working papers by the Czech Republic and by Argentina and New Zealand, both annexed to the Working Group's report [A/50/47/Add.1]. Those proposals received wide support in the Working Group, although some delegations expressed opposition or reservations.

Council size and composition. The Working Group reaffirmed the agreement reached earlier that the Council should be expanded, ensuring equitable geographical distribution and taking account of the substantial increase in UN membership, especially of developing countries, as well as important changes in international relations. As to the overall size and composition of an expanded Council, the need to ensure the Council's representative character without impairing the efficiency and effectiveness of its work was underlined. Views on how to bring about an expansion continued to differ. It became clear also that a number of Member States were not ready to take final positions because of interlinkages between size and composition and other matters in the mandate of the Working Group. The view was expressed that expansion of the Council should also take into account the increase in UN membership by countries in Eastern Europe.

Proposals to increase the non-permanent membership only, including suggestions for more frequent elections, received both support and objections, as did proposals for an increase in permanent membership and the view that there was a need to redress the existing imbalance in the composition of the Council by adding permanent members representing developing countries. The concept of regional rotation of permanent seats was introduced, and that of shared seats was discussed. The Working Group also discussed criteria for non-permanent members, including a more frequent rotation system. There was wide support for the proposal [A/49/965] that, in case of no agreement on the increase of other categories of membership, expansion should take place only, for the time being, in the non-permanent category; nevertheless, some regarded such expansion as insufficient. The Working Group also addressed the issue of possible wider implications of permanent Council membership on the membership of other principal organs and bodies.

Decision-making, including veto. Decision-making in the Council, including the question of the veto, continued to be an important element in Working Group discussions. Several proposals were made on that issue during the fiftieth Assembly session. In a position paper presented by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries [A/50/47/Add.1], it was suggested that the veto be curtailed and rationalized and that the Charter be amended so that, as a first step, the veto power should only apply to actions taken under Chapter VII of the Charter (see APPENDIX II). Amendments were proposed—as in a working paper by Mexico—to articles 4, 5, 6, 27, 97, 108 and 109 of the Charter, seeking to limit the use of the veto. It was also proposed—in a working paper by Uruguay—that the right of veto be subject to suspension on specific occasions, as defined by a prescribed qualified majority of the General Assembly. Those proposals to limit the scope and use of the veto were widely supported; however, there was also opposition to such limitation. The question of the extension of the veto to possible new permanent members was also discussed and both support and objections were voiced. While objections were made to any extension of the veto, some delegations expressed the opinion that such an extension, if agreed, should be done in a non-discriminatory manner.

The Working Group exchanged views on the effects, in broader terms, of enlarging the Council on its decision-making procedures, addressing such issues as the de facto blocking power of developing countries that were non-permanent members, and the number of affirmative votes required for Council decisions on both substantive and procedural matters—the so-called "action threshold"—as mentioned, for example, in a working paper by Ukraine. It was felt that discussions on those topics should continue, while bearing in mind that the final outcome would be dependent on the results of consideration on other issues.

Charter amendments. As stated in the Working Group's report, enlargement of the Council would necessitate amendments to the Charter. The view was expressed that, in some instances, improvement of Council working methods and transparency might be done through such amendments. However, a number of improvement measures, as well as those affecting the Council's relationship with non-members and other principal UN organs, could come into effect through changes in the Council's provisional rules of procedure or otherwise; those changes, among others, could be the result of formal recommendations of the Assembly to the Council, subject to consideration and adoption by the Council itself. The relative merits of resorting to provisions in Articles 108 and 109 of the Charter in amending it were also discussed.

Concluding its work on 13 September, the Working Group recommended that its discussions should continue during the Assembly's fifty-first session, building on the work done in the course of the forty-eighth, forty-ninth and fiftieth sessions. Future work should take into account all oral and written submissions so far presented to it, as well as any new proposals that might be introduced.

The Assembly, by decision 50/489 of 16 September, took note of the Working Group's report and decided that the Group should continue its work, taking into account the progress achieved at earlier sessions and the views to be expressed during the fifty-first session. The Working Group was also to submit a report at that session, including any agreed recommendations.

Ukraine, the only speaker during the Assembly's debate on the agenda item, stated that while it had evaluated the Group's work positively, it was among the last to drop its opposition to the content of the Group's report. In its view, the conclusion of the Group, as presented in paragraph 23 (on the size and composition of the Council), lacked impartiality and balance and reflected only part of the truth. Ukraine was deeply concerned that logic and common sense were still rare during the Group's discussions; it strongly believed that deliberate attempts not to take notice of the legitimate interests of Member States from all regions and groups could be, and were, detrimental to the goal of the exercise. It had dropped its objection to paragraph 23 in the spirit of compromise, in view of the positive response by other countries to the Eastern European group interpretation. At the same time, Ukraine would continue to insist during the Group's future work on explicit recognition of the significant increase in the number of the Eastern European regional group members in the context of the expansion of the Council and the overall equitable geographical distribution of all regions in that important body. Ukraine also underlined that it would be in a position to support the reform of the Council, specifically its expansion, only if the representation of all regional groups, including the Eastern European group, was increased.

Revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields

The year 1996 saw a continuation of the ongoing process of restructuring and revitalization of the economic, social and related fields of the United Nations, which began in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 749]. In a 1993 resolution [YUN 1993, p. 1118, GA res. 48/162], the General Assembly had called for further efforts in that regard. The results of a comprehensive review of that resolution, carried out from November 1995 onwards, were embodied in Assembly resolution 50/227 adopted in May 1996 (see below). The Secretary-General welcomed the adoption of the resolution, stressing that it was the first to have emerged from a number of Assembly working groups examining a wide range of issues relating to the reform and renewal of the Organization. Member States, he noted, had reached agreement on measures that reconfirmed the validity of the United Nations role in operational activities for development, fostered greater harmonization of the work of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) and Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committees, strengthened the Economic and Social Council's role, and further reinforced cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions. The Secretary-General also stressed the significance of the initiative embodied in the resolution of launching a series of reviews to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of Council subsidiary bodies.

The Economic and Social Council, on 24 July, agreed to consider during its substantive session the question of the implementation of the Assembly resolution 50/277 in terms of its provisions pertaining to the Council and, by resolution 1996/41 of 26 July, decided to consider as a matter of priority before the end of 1996, at its resumed substantive session, possible changes in and/or adjustments to its agenda with a view to ensuring that all issues included in resolution 50/227 would be examined by the Council. Taking up the question at its resumed substantive session, the Council, by decision 1996/320 of 20 November, postponed consideration of implementation of resolution 50/227 until 1997.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (May)

On 24 May, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/227.

Further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1997, on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Invites the specialized agencies, organizations and other bodies of the United Nations system to implement the measures for restructuring within their respective areas of competence, as appropriate;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields".

ANNEX I

Further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields

I. Funding of Operational Activities for Development of the United Nations System

1. There is a need for a substantial increase in resources for operational activities for development, on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, commensurate with the increasing needs of developing countries, in accordance with resolutions 48/162 of 20 December 1993 and 50/120 of 20 December 1995.

2. Efforts to mobilize the political will should be intensified in order to achieve the objectives outlined in the present section regarding funding of operational activities for development.

3. There is an urgent need to strive for the fulfilment of the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance as soon as possible.

4. The fundamental characteristics of the operational activities of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality and their multilateralism, as well as their ability to respond to the needs of developing countries in a flexible manner. The operational activities of the United Nations system should be carried out for the benefit of the developing countries, at the request of those countries and in accordance with their own policies and priorities for development.

5. There is a need for priority allocation of scarce grant resources to programmes and projects in low-income countries, in particular the least developed countries.

6. The United Nations development system should take into account the specific needs and requirements of the countries with economies in transition.

7. Developing countries are responsible for their development processes and operational activities for development are a joint responsibility of all countries. Partnership between developed and developing countries should be based on agreed mandates, principles and priorities of the United Nations system in the development field. All countries should demonstrate their commitment to the funds and programmes, and in this regard the importance of equitable burden sharing among developed countries is recognized.

8. Many donor and recipient countries have made sustained contributions to the operational activities for development in the spirit of partnership.

9. Within the context of the efforts to provide the operational activities of the United Nations system with resources, in particular core resources, on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, and taking into account that voluntary contributions from official sources should remain the main source for funding of those activities, all aspects of funding of United Nations operational activities, and options presented in the reports of the Secretary-General and other reports subsequently presented, which include the three funding mechanisms (voluntary, negotiated and assessed), as well as their expected impact, should be examined by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in accordance with their respective mandates.

10. Overall policy issues regarding modalities of funding of operational activities for development should be considered by the General Assembly as the highest intergovernmental mechanism for the formulation and appraisal of policy matters relating to the economic, social and related fields, under the item on operational activities for development, in particular in the context of the triennial policy review, including the relationship between funding and programmes.

11. In order to fulfil its coordination role, and in accordance with the policies formulated by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council should consider, on an annual basis in the operational activities segment, the overall financial picture of the funds and programmes, including the availability of resources, the priorities and programmes agreed upon in the funds and programmes, the adopted targets and further guidance on priorities, and make recommendations thereon to the General Assembly and the funds and programmes.

12. The governing bodies of each programme and fund coordinated by the Economic and Social Council (United Nations Development Programme, United Nations Children's Fund, United Nations Population Fund and World Food Programme) shall adopt, in the context of their programme arrangements and financial plans, a specific and realistic target for core resources, based on the needs arising from their agreed programmes and priorities, as well as the specific mandates of each programme and fund. On this basis, and in accordance with relevant decisions taken by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, the governing bodies of each programme and fund shall take decisions on their own funding arrangements. The importance of non-core resources as a mechanism to enhance the capacity of the United Nations development system and to supplement the means available for operational activities for development is also recognized.

13. The importance of continuing to improve ways in which Member States are kept informed of the impact of operational activities for development and of the financial picture of the programmes and funds coordinated by the Economic and Social Council should be stressed, as well as the relationship between programming requirements and available funding.

14. The recommendations and priorities set out in General Assembly resolution 50/120, regarding measures to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, should be fully implemented, including, inter alia, programmes focused on meeting the specific needs of developing countries, giving priority allocation to developing countries, in particular the least developed countries and Africa, appropriate cooperation among United Nations programmes, and keeping administrative costs to a level that allows effective programme delivery.

15. All organizations of the United Nations development system should focus their efforts at the field level on priority areas in accordance with the priorities identified by recipient countries and the mandates, mission statements and relevant decisions of their governing bodies in order to avoid duplication and enhance the complementarity and impact of their work.

16. By its fifty-second session, the General Assembly should review the above-mentioned funding modalities. A decision regarding the future of the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities will be postponed pending the results of this review. In the event that this review is not completed by the end of the fifty-second session of the General Assembly, a decision on whether to effect changes in the scheduling of the Pledging Conference for the fifty-second session will then be made.

17. The Secretary-General is requested to prepare a report on new and innovative ideas for generating funds, to be considered by the General Assembly, on a priority basis, not later than at its fifty-first session, taking into account the discussions at the substantive session of 1996 of the Economic and Social Council, analysing various proposals that have been advanced on innovative funding sources and modalities for operational activities, including national, international and private sources, and setting forth his views on the advantages and disadvantages associated with each. Innovative funding sources could be an additional element for the provision of resources for operational activities for development.

II. General Assembly

18. The General Assembly should exert greater policy leadership on development issues inasmuch as the Charter of the United Nations provides the Assembly with broad mandates concerning these issues. The General Assembly is the highest intergovernmental mechanism for the formulation and appraisal of policy on matters relating to the economic, social and related fields, in accordance with chapter IX of the Charter. It is the main forum where Governments pursue the development dialogue, which includes all these issues, in its political context. The purpose of the dialogue is to take an integrated view of matters relating to the economic, social and related fields in order to build and deepen the political understanding required for enhanced international development cooperation, to generate impulses for action and to launch initiatives.

19. The High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System should be encouraged to consider, in the context of the debate on all the Main Committees of the General Assembly, promoting the use of innovative mechanisms, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, such as panel discussions with delegations and interactive debates, with the active participation of Secretariat and agency representatives, as well as outside experts.

20. The Secretary-General is requested to provide information on the total cost associated with the reports submitted annually to the General Assembly under current mandates, so that the General Assembly may review and take appropriate action on them.

A. Coherence of the work of the Second and Third Committees

21. There is a need to promote greater coherence and complementarity between the work of the Second and Third Committees. For this purpose the General Committee of the General Assembly should ensure better coordination of the agendas of the Second and Third Committees; the two bureaux should review their respective programmes of work in order to exchange information on the issues discussed in each, identify potential areas of overlap or duplication and examine means of considering in a more coordinated manner issues related to the follow-up of the major United Nations conferences, and make recommendations thereon to their respective Committees.

22. There is a need to consider possible measures to allow for the coordinated consideration of the report of the Economic and Social Council during the General Assembly session.

23. To the extent feasible, the discussions in the Second and Third Committees should not commence until after the end of the general debate in the plenary meetings of the General Assembly.

24. For issues of a procedural nature, decisions, instead of resolutions, should be used to the maximum extent possible. Resolutions should be shorter, in particular as regards preambular parts. The bureaux, in reviewing the respective agendas, could identify and recommend those individual items or clusters of related items that could be effectively considered in omnibus resolutions.

B. Programme of work of the Second and Third Committees

25. The arrangements in the General Assembly and in the Economic and Social Council for considering the coordination of humanitarian assistance and special economic assistance to individual countries and regions should be reviewed during the fifty-first session of the General Assembly.

26. In order to ensure, whenever possible, a common approach and clear system-wide mandate for issues dealing with special economic assistance to individual countries, each resolution could contain, to the extent possible and as appropriate, a common preambular section, while specificity (individual needs) would be maintained within a number of operative paragraphs.

27. To facilitate discussions based on an integrated approach to development issues, the possibility of choosing a principal theme or themes should be explored to focus substantive debate under each "cluster" in the agenda without prejudice to the right of delegations to raise any other specific issue in the debates.

28. Consultations should be held at an early stage, in an organizational session of the Committee, before the start of its general debate, based on proposals from the bureau for decision, on clustering of the agenda, and, where possible, themes and focus for these clusters, taking into account the content of reports presented, as well as on items to be included for discussion or items for decisions and resolutions without formal debate.

29. The agenda of the Second Committee is set out in annex II. This is without prejudice to the current arrangements on the biennialization and triennialization of items, as decided by the General Assembly in resolution 48/162.

30. The agenda of the Third Committee is structured in accordance with General Assembly decision 50/465 of 22 December 1995 (see annex III).

III. Documentation and related matters

31. The Secretariat and representatives of the specialized agencies are requested to provide executive briefings, as appropriate, on the matters to be covered under the items on the agenda, at least a week prior to the opening of the General Assembly. The Second Committee should, in accordance with resolution 48/162, look early in the session into all aspects related to the improvement of the working methods of the Committee.

32. There should be greater use of relevant background documents in the Second Committee such as the World Economic and Social Survey, the Trade and Development Report, the World Development Report and the World Economic Outlook; in the preparation of the first two reports, cooperation and coordination between the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis and the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should be enhanced to ensure more complementarity between the reports.

33. There should be continued improvement of other reports to make them more concise and action-oriented, by highlighting the critical areas requiring action by the General Assembly and, as appropriate, by making specific recommendations. All documentation should be provided within the specified timetables and page limits and in all official United Nations languages. Efforts should also continue to be made to have all documentation available in electronic form, in particular for distribution on the Internet, in a timely manner and within existing resources.

34. In order to rationalize and simplify reporting procedures, the Second and Third Committees shall, at the end of their sessions, while reviewing their draft programmes of work for the next sessions, consider procedural decisions regarding requests for reports, including where possible integrated reports on closely related items, as well as items to be inscribed on the agendas for the next sessions. This exercise shall be based on the lists of reports mandated from decisions taken by the present and previous sessions of the General Assembly, which are included in the draft programmes of work, as well as suggestions from the Secretary-General on reporting arrangements.

35. It is noted that the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to prepare proposals, for consideration by the Council in 1996 and by the General Assembly at its fifty-first session, on the simplification of existing reporting requirements, taking into account the reports that will be required for the follow-up to United Nations conferences.

IV. Economic and Social Council

36. In accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, the Economic and Social Council must continue to strengthen its role as the central mechanism for coordination of the activities of the United Nations system and its specialized agencies and supervision of subsidiary bodies, in particular its functional commissions, in the economic, social and related fields. It should provide overall guidance and coordination to the United Nations development system. It must also promote a coordinated follow-up to the outcomes of major international conferences in the economic, social and related fields.

37. The Council should fully implement its authority to take final decisions on the activities of its subsidiary bodies and on other matters relating to its system-wide coordination and overall guidance functions in the economic, social and related fields, as appropriate.

38. The Council should continue to consider reports of intergovernmental and inter-agency bodies and mechanisms for coordination and recommend ways to enhance their interaction and complementarity of efforts.

39. In the follow-up to United Nations conferences, the Council shall ensure the harmonization and coordination of the agendas and work programmes of the functional commissions by promoting a clearer division of labour among them and providing clear policy guidance to them. To this end, better preparation of the meetings of the Council should be ensured. The Council could periodically organize meetings on specific issues to allow for more dialogue with the chairpersons and the secretariats, as appropriate, of the functional commissions, other subsidiary and related bodies and the relevant executive boards. If an effective and coordinated follow-up process suggests the need, then the consolidation of activities of subsidiary bodies may be considered, as appropriate. The aim of sustaining and strengthening the quality and impact of the output of these bodies must be assured.

40. The Council shall hold a shorter, focused substantive session for four weeks in July. Efforts shall be made, therefore, to improve preparedness of the session through the effective use of the organizational session of the Council and, as appropriate, open-ended informal consultations in order to conduct preliminary consultations among delegations on matters to be dealt with at the substantive session. This may involve, as appropriate, dialogues with the chairpersons and the secretariats, as appropriate, of the functional commissions, other subsidiary and related bodies and executive boards relevant to these issues, among others, in order to identify problems, avoid overlaps and fill gaps.

41. In accordance with the provision of the Charter and its rules of procedure, the Council may convene special sessions to address urgent developments in the economic, social and related fields that may require guidance and coordination by the Council.

42. In scheduling the above-mentioned sessions and consultations, the Council should take into consideration meetings of other bodies dealing with economic and social issues to avoid unnecessary overlapping and overburdening.

43. The Secretary-General is requested to prepare a study with a comprehensive assessment of the present arrangements for the Council's sessions.

44. The outcome of each segment of the Council should be strengthened and made more action-oriented. Resolutions, decisions and agreed conclusions should be implemented and followed up fully by all relevant parts of the United Nations system. This process should be monitored by the Council and the General Assembly on a regular basis, as appropriate.

45. Panel discussions and interactive debates, with the participation of outside experts, non-governmental organizations and the business and academic communities, where appropriate, and in accordance with the rules of procedure of the Council, should be encouraged in parallel to the formal meetings of the Council, taking into account any relevant outcome of the Open-ended Working Group on the Review of Arrangements for Consultations with Non-Governmental Organizations that the Council adopts.

A. Preparation of the sessions of the Economic and Social Council

46. The organizational session of the Council should continue to be the appropriate framework for transparent discussion and approval of the agenda items of the substantive session, as well as of its annual basic programme of work, taking into account the rules of procedure of the Council and relevant General Assembly resolutions, in particular resolutions 45/264 of 13 May 1991 and 48/162.

47. The Bureau of the Council should convene open-ended informal consultations of the Council to improve organizational and procedural as well as substantive aspects of the Council's sessions, with a view to highlighting the issues and recommendations that require consideration and action by the Council. In order to have more focused and well-prepared substantive sessions of the Council, the Bureau should be encouraged to continue to exercise its role as facilitator.

48. The Bureau of the Council should meet on a regular basis and may consider issues such as recommendations on agenda items and subjects, the structure of meetings and lists of guest participants for panel discussions, and should be kept informed, where appropriate, and in the context of its organizational efforts, of the deliberations of relevant intergovernmental mechanisms outside the United Nations system. The Bureau shall brief the Council on its deliberations and shall not have the authority to make decisions on any substantive matters.

49. The Bureau should also assist the Council in identifying economic, social and related issues for discussion at its sessions, maintain contacts with the bureaux of the functional commissions and other subsidiary bodies, as well as with those of the specialized agencies and the executive boards of the funds and programmes, and thus allow for a better interaction between the Council and those bodies and contribute by assisting the Council to better fulfil its role.

50. The Bureau shall monitor the state of preparedness of documentation for the Council and take necessary measures to facilitate its timely issuance in all official languages.

51. Based on proposals by Member States, recommendations in the reports of the Secretary-General as well as in the reports of the Council's subsidiary bodies and the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes, the Bureau shall identify areas for possible action by the Council, with a view to improving the proceedings of the Council.

52. Members of the Bureau should be entrusted with safeguarding and passing on to the next session of the Council the working methods that have proved successful and the overall experience acquired in implementing resolution 48/162 and the present resolution, taking into account the rules of procedure of the Council.

B. High-level segment

53. The theme for the general debate of the high-level segment shall be determined by the Economic and Social Council. In this connection, the President of the Council, following consultations with Member States and, through the Secretary-General, with members of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, should present a proposal for a topical theme for the following year at the annual substantive session of the Council. At such session, the Council shall undertake consultations on the theme for the high-level segment with a view to reaching a decision, if possible, during the substantive session, but not later than at a resumed session in the autumn following the annual session. In the event a matter of high urgency and priority subsequently emerges that would qualify as a theme for the high-level segment, the Council, at its organizational session, may, as appropriate, consider that theme as an additional topic for discussion at the high-level segment.

54. The Secretary General is requested to include in his report for this segment all relevant issues that could be discussed during the session, on the basis of the theme or themes chosen, making use of inputs from the various pertinent bodies of the United Nations system, including concrete recommendations on the matters under discussion.

55. In order to better focus the policy dialogue, the possibility of having joint reports, prepared by the secretariats of the United Nations, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization, should be explored.

56. The outcome of the high-level segment should normally be in the form of agreed conclusions and should be followed up by all relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system.

C. Coordination segment

57. The agreed conclusions of the Council concerning the selection of cross-cutting themes common to major international conferences and/or the contribution to an overall review of the implementation of the programme of action of a United Nations conference should be implemented. At the organizational session of the Council, consideration should be given to choosing a second theme dealing with concrete sectoral issues. The Council should develop a focused dialogue on the chosen theme or themes with the funds and programmes, the regional commissions and the relevant specialized agencies, including the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as the World Trade Organization, as appropriate.

58. The functions of the present joint meetings of the Administrative Committee on Coordination and the Committee for Programme and Coordination, which are hereby discontinued, should be assigned to this segment.

59. The implementation of the agreed conclusions of this segment should be followed up in the general segment of the following year.

D. Operational activities for development segment

60. The role of the Council in providing overall coordination and guidance for operational development programmes and funds on a system-wide basis should be reinforced, including objectives, priorities and strategies in the implementation of the policies formulated by the General Assembly, as well as concentrating on cross-cutting and coordination issues related to operational activities, including through a high-level meeting, in order to provide an opportunity for policy makers to engage in discussion on the broader issues for development cooperation.

61. Efforts should focus on improving the overall impact of operational activities of the United Nations system in development cooperation by, inter alia, implementing the set of measures agreed upon in this framework and ensuring a more coordinated implementation at the field level.

62. With a view to avoiding repetition of discussions, the governing boards should be requested to highlight in their respective reports to the Council the issues requiring examination and identify action to be taken.

63. National officials directly involved in the implementation of national development strategies in recipient countries, as well as field-level representatives of the United Nations system, should be encouraged to participate in this segment.

64. The debates with the heads of agencies should focus on concrete topics of common concern and, with the consent of the countries concerned, use should be made of national and regional case-studies. The annual discussion of policy for operational development programmes should be broadened, focusing on support for country-driven processes, so as to include the status of collaboration with other multilateral and bilateral donors, especially the Bretton Woods institutions.

65. Contributions to the preparations for the triennial policy review of operational activities conducted by the General Assembly should be continued.

E. General segment

66. The primary function of this segment as that of an action-oriented review of the activities, reports and recommendations of the Council's subsidiary bodies should be consolidated, avoiding a repetition of the debates held in those bodies and focusing attention on major policy issues that require a prioritized and coordinated response from the United Nations system as a whole.

67. The Council should regularly review the agenda of its general segment with a view to discontinuing consideration of items that are not relevant to the work of its subsidiary machinery or are duplicative of items on the agenda of the General Assembly, and distinguish more clearly between items on the agenda requiring decisions and those for information only.

68. The subsidiary bodies should be requested to include in their reports an executive summary, and the reports should be concise, identifying clearly their conclusions and recommendations and the issues that may require attention and/or action by the Council. The Secretariat should consolidate these issues in a single document for consideration and action.

69. Provision should be made for the integration and coordination of humanitarian and emergency assistance activities with medium- and long-term rehabilitation and development efforts and programmes.

V. Functional and regional commissions and expert groups

A. Functional commissions and expert groups

70. The Council shall undertake, taking into account recent decisions regarding the mandates, functions and composition of the Commissions on Population and Development, Social Development and the Status of Women, as well as the discussions during the special session of the General Assembly in 1997 on the future role of the Commission on Sustainable Development, including its relationship with the United Nations Environment Programme, a review of the mandates, composition, functions and working methods of its functional commissions and expert groups and bodies, ensuring more effective and coordinated discussions and outcomes of their work. In the case of functional commissions with the primary responsibility for the follow-up and review of the implementation of a major conference, the Council shall ensure the coordination of their multi-year programmes, in accordance with the agreed conclusions adopted by the Council at its substantive session of 1995 on the coordinated follow-up of the results of major international conferences. Such a review should be completed by the fifty-second session of the General Assembly.

71. The review should, as a matter of priority, consider the role, working methods and relationship with other bodies of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the Committee for Development Planning, the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development and the Committee on Natural Resources.

72. The functions of the World Food Council shall be absorbed by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Food Programme, and consequently the World Food Council is discontinued.

73. The role and the working methods of the Committee for Programme and Coordination should be considered by the High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System within the context of General Assembly decision 47/454 of 23 December 1992, with a view to finding ways of improving programme coordination functions throughout the United Nations system. In this context, consideration should be given, inter alia, to the roles and responsibilities of the Economic and Social Council and the Committee for Programme and Coordination with respect to coordination.

B. Regional commissions

74. The Council shall provide for the review of the regional commissions, with a view to strengthening and enhancing their effectiveness as action- and policy-oriented bodies in the economic and development fields with better response to the conditions and environments unique to the specific regions; improving their coordination with the entire United Nations system, including the specialized agencies, the Bretton Woods institutions and the regional development banks; strengthening their active participation relating to the implementation at the regional level of the re-suits of major United Nations conferences; and shall encourage them also to undertake their own management and functional assessments towards these ends.

75. One of the major purposes of the above reviews should be to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of these bodies by eliminating unnecessary duplication or overlapping of work and by ensuring a better structural relationship among these bodies and with the Economic and Social Council.

VI. Governing bodies of the United Nations development programmes and funds

76. Efforts should continue to be made to reduce the proliferation and overlapping of formal and informal meetings of the same bodies throughout the year, to improve the setting of agendas and to delineate the subjects for allocation for consideration at their annual and regular sessions; where possible, the overlapping of such meetings with other meetings should be eliminated. In this context, the executive boards should, on a continuous basis, consider adjustments to their agendas, reporting procedures and format, as well as reviewing the number and scheduling of meetings and sessions, with a view to continuing the rationalization of the working methods of the boards.

77. While recognizing that governing bodies in the context of their specific mandates deal with policy issues that pertain to their own institutions, they should also describe in their reports how the overall policy guidance and coordination provided by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council have been implemented, as well as their specific recommendations for further action.

78. The effective participation of observer member States and observer States in the sessions of the executive boards should be facilitated. To this end, the executive boards should review their arrangements and working methods and, where applicable, their rules of procedure. Documentation of the executive boards should be made accessible to all member States of the funds and programmes.

VII. Inter-agency coordination

79. In the context of the discussions on an agenda for development, a close review shall be made of the relationship of the Economic and Social Council with the specialized agencies. The Council, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, shall provide overall guidance and coordination, identify points of duplication with funds and programmes, and make recommendations, as appropriate and necessary.

80. The Administrative Committee on Coordination should have an enhanced function for inter-agency coordination purposes for the United Nations system, and continue to meet for this purpose on a regular basis under the chairmanship of the Secretary-General, at the head-of-agency level, to review and advise on coordination matters; it should continue to report to the Council, and continue to make use of small task forces at the operational levels to develop joint inter-agency programmes, as appropriate.

81. The Administrative Committee on Coordination should present the thematic aspects of its report to the Council at its coordination segment and the remaining parts at the general segment; the members of the Administrative Committee on Coordination should engage in an active dialogue with the Council on ways to improve inter-agency coordination.

82. The periodic meetings of all concerned senior secretariat officials in the economic and social sectors, under the authority of the Secretary-General, should continue to be used to improve coordination and performance; the outcomes of these meetings should be presented on a regular basis to the Economic and Social Council.

83. While recognizing the importance and the necessity of adapting the United Nations to new realities and challenges, it is also important that sufficient time be accorded to the implementation of reforms undertaken in order to provide necessary stability in the functioning of United Nations organs and bodies, hence allowing for the building of experiences for any future reforms.

VIII. Relationship between the United Nations and international finance and trade institutions

84. The issues relating to the strengthening of the relationship between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions, and possibly also the World Trade Organization, shall be particularly considered in the context of the deliberations on an agenda for development, as foreseen in resolution 47/181 of 22 December 1992.

85. In general, there should be greater interaction and cooperation between the Bretton Woods institutions and other parts of the United Nations system and between their secretariats; a first practical step could be to request the Bretton Woods institutions to furnish special reports and studies to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly on issues falling within their competence, in accordance with article V of the Agreement between the United Nations and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

86. There is a need for an early exploratory review to be prepared jointly by the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions to assess mechanisms, programmes and relationships at the field, headquarters and intergovernmental levels, with a view to identifying areas in which communication, cooperation and coordination could be improved. The review should produce a report and recommendations on how the respective institutions can improve their own efforts and effectively complement one another's efforts, particularly in the context of the priorities established by their respective member States, in relation to the implementation of the results of United Nations conferences, the collection and dissemination of data analyses and reports, the use of existing resources in the transition from emergency relief to rehabilitation and development, the provision of technical assistance operations in the field, intergovernmental and secretariat consultations, and policy dialogues.

87. The General Assembly and the respective governing bodies of the Bretton Woods institutions, based on the conclusions of the above review, should consider concrete areas and forms of collaboration in the field of development-related activities.

88. In order to improve communication and cooperation at the intergovernmental level between the Council and the international financial and trade institutions, to facilitate an exchange of views with regard to global issues of high priority and relevance and to consider how the Economic and Social Council and the international financial and trade institutions could mutually support their respective efforts in promoting and coordinating programme activities within their purviews relating to these issues, the Council should schedule periodically a high-level special meeting at a time proximate to the semi-annual meetings of the Bretton Woods institutions with a view to benefiting, to the extent possible, from high-level ministerial participation and the participation of heads of financial and trade institutions and other relevant organizations. A theme and agenda for this Council meeting should be prepared collaboratively, sufficiently in advance to permit preparation and consultations, and the financial and trade institutions should be invited, as and when appropriate, to prepare reports and studies to enhance the discussions. In order to secure an effective outcome of such meetings, the Secretary-General is requested to consult the heads of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, in order to explore possibilities and practical modalities for such meetings and to inform the Council thereon.

IX. Secretariat

89. The present structure and functioning of the Secretariat, including the economic and social departments and the question of establishing a post of Deputy Secretary-General for International Cooperation and Development, shall be considered in the High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System and in the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Development.

90. In the context of the High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System, uniform and maximum terms of service for heads of programmes and funds and other Economic and Social Council and General Assembly bodies should be considered. In connection with the recruitment and appointment of staff, there is a need to implement the provisions of Article 101 of the Charter of the United Nations and relevant General Assembly resolutions.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (July)

The Economic and Social Council, on 26 July, adopted resolution 1996/41.

Follow-up to General Assembly resolution 50/227:

The Economic and Social Council,

Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/41

26 July 1996 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Draft by Vice-President (E/1996/L.50), based on informal consultations on draft by Canada, Norway and Russian Federation (E/1996/L.21); agenda item 3 (b).

Meeting numbers. ESC 23, 31, 35, 47, 51, 52.

Reports of Secretary-General (September/October). Pursuant to the Council's July resolution, the Secretary-General in September provided [E/1996/97] updated information on the establishment, terms of reference, membership and composition, term of office of members, reporting procedure and frequency of meetings of subsidiary bodies of the Council and the Assembly in the economic, social and related fields.

In an October report [A/51/501], the Secretary-General provided information on developments since the adoption of Assembly resolution 50/227, especially steps taken by the Economic and Social Council to implement it, including resolution 1996/41. Dealing with other aspects of the Assembly resolution, the Council, also in July, adopted resolution 1996/42 on progress in implementing Assembly resolution 50/120 [YUN 1995, p. 883] on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system; resolution 1996/43 on strengthening collaboration between the UN development system and the Bretton Woods institutions; and resolution 1996/36 on follow-up to the major international UN conferences and summits (see below).

Another part of the report focused on the work of the Executive Boards of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) (see PART THREE, Chapters II and VIII) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) (see PART THREE, Chapter XI), as well as on the activities of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes, which had been reconstituted as the Executive Board of the World Food Programme (WFP) (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII) on 1 January 1996.

In his concluding remarks, the Secretary-General reiterated a number of views he had shared with delegations when addressing the Economic and Social Council on 24 July. He stated that enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations required further improvement in the coordination and focus of its development activities, and that it was essential that this effort be guided by clear priorities and strategies, identified by the Assembly with the Council's support and incorporating the outcome of recent major international conferences. Steps had to be taken to enhance the Assembly's ability to generate substantive solutions to specific policy problems and to further a comprehensive approach to development. A more focused general debate, but also a more thorough examination of a reduced number of themes by Assembly committees, would facilitate an integrated consideration of development issues. A necessary corollary to revitalizing the Assembly's role was to assess possibilities to increase the involvement of relevant non-State actors in its work. With such improvements, better use would be made of the Assembly as a forum to deal with major economic, social or other issues, which were now largely addressed by separately organized major international conferences.

In recognizing that the ongoing efforts to reform the Economic and Social Council had already produced significant improvements in its functioning, the Secretary-General emphasized that further efforts were required to increase the Council's capacity to monitor and coordinate the work of the UN system. He attached special importance to the Council's role in promoting a coordinated and integrated follow-up to major international conferences and was confident that the Council's work in 1996 would further enhance its responsibility to draw together in a coherent framework the results of all major UN conferences to ensure that they guided the activities of the UN system. Reference was made to the need for a better balance in the functioning, responsibilities and authority of the Security Council, the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as required by the Charter. With regard to the Economic and Social Council, two priority requirements for its revitalization were emphasized: ministerial participation and increasing involvement of the new players on the global scene in the high-level segment; and further action to enable the Council to exercise an effective role of governance over all the operational funds and programmes of the Organization.

Assembly resolution 50/227 and Council discussions on the modalities for its implementation represented, in the Secretary-General's view, definite progress in those directions, and he trusted that progress would continue. A significant strengthening of the Council's role in both the policy and the operational areas was not only essential to provide the necessary underpinnings for efforts under way at the Secretariat level to enhance the coherence and improve the functioning and structure of the economic and social sectors of the Organization, but was also a crucial requirement for the strengthening of the system as a whole and for the ultimate success of the overall reform effort.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (November)

At its resumed substantive session, the Economic and Social Council considered the question of implementation of General Assembly resolution 50/227. The Council had before it a background note by the Secretariat on implementation of the resolution and a Secretariat note containing an analysis of the agenda items of the Council and comparison with items considered by the Assembly's Second and Third Committees. On 20 November, the Council, by decision 1996/320, postponed consideration of the agenda item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 50/227: further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields" until its organizational session for 1997.

Global conferences

Reports of Secretary-General. In his annual report on the work of the Organization [A/51/1], the Secretary-General stated that the centuries-old practice of convening international conferences was being transformed into a new mechanism for international cooperation. The new conferences were revolutionary in both form and focus and, while keeping costs to the minimum, they were producing concrete and far-reaching results.

The series of new global conferences—from New York in 1990 to Istanbul, Turkey, in 1996 (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII)—were democratic in form, bringing together, on a basis of equality, representatives of Governments from throughout the world, often at the highest political level. At the same time, these meetings had brought together world leaders with representatives of women's groups, professional associations, local authorities and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) of all types, and of civil society, from academics and business people to trade unionists.

The conferences also had been democratic in focus, and were linked so as to foster global consensus on specific, interlocking global issues by considering their impact on the human person and human communities. A great many of his efforts, the Secretary-General said, had been devoted to ensuring that each conference—on children, the environment and development, human rights, the sustainable development of small island States, natural disaster reduction, population and development, social development, the advancement of women, international trade and development, and human settlements—would build on its predecessors and carry forward a common human thrust. They were producing cumulative results, offering all development actors—North and South, governmental and non-governmental, public and private—a pragmatic, cooperative and comprehensive approach to the key challenges faced by every nation and by all nations together.

For all development actors, the Secretary-General stated, the entire conference series had provided an opportunity to forge durable and productive partnerships in the face of new challenges. For the United Nations in particular, they had produced a comprehensive agenda, giving new direction to its work and to the reform and strengthening of its development machinery, which had been supported by new arrangements for inter-secretariat coordination, agreed to by the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC). The conferences had also helped promote the revitalization of the Economic and Social Council as the key intergovernmental body for coordination. As part of the reform and revitalization process, the intergovernmental structure of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), its secretariat and work programme, had been streamlined and given sharper focus, and cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions (see PART THREE, Chapter II) had been deepened further, as reflected in the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative for Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III). A leaner, more focused and better coordinated UN development system was coming into being, according to the Secretary-General, oriented towards implementing programmes that reflected a broad political consensus on development priorities.

In May, the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/1996/59] on the coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other bodies of the UN system, specifically regarding the implementation of the Economic and Social Council's agreed conclusions 1995/1, approved by the Council at its substantive session of 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1435], on coordinated follow-up by the UN system and implementation of the results of major international conferences organized by the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields. The Secretariat representative introducing the report to the Council said that progress had been made in establishing closer linkages between the work of the Council and that of its subsidiary bodies, such as the Commission for Social Development, the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Sustainable Development. The Council decision to hold a debate on poverty (see PART THREE, Chapter I) also followed from the agreed conclusions. Substantial progress had been made by ACC, which had begun discussions on the United Nations Systems-wide Special Initiative on Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III) and had established the Inter-Agency Committee on Women (see PART THREE, Chapter X). A large number of thematic inter-agency groups, set up to monitor work at the country level, were providing input to the Council. The report should be viewed as complementary to the Secretary-General's report [E/1996/61] on poverty eradication (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and the background paper on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 50/227 (see above).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/36.

1. Decides that the Economic and Social Council shall continue to ensure, on a regular basis, the harmonization and coordination of the multi-year work programmes of relevant functional commissions by promoting a clear division of labour among them and providing clear policy guidance to them;

2. Invites the Administrative Committee on Coordination to take into consideration the decisions, resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Council and its functional commissions as the basis for inter-agency follow-up of the major United Nations conferences in the economic, social and related fields, including the selection of cross-cutting themes for its work;

3. Also invites the Administrative Committee on Coordination to present the reports on the work of its task forces on an enabling environment for economic and social development, basic social services for all and employment and sustainable livelihoods, as well as inter-agency committees on sustainable development and women and gender equality to the substantive session of 1997 of the Council and to identify policy and coordination issues to be addressed by the Council and the General Assembly;

Organizational and managerial reform

A joint responsibility of the Secretary-General and Member States, organizational reform concerned the simplification of Secretariat structures and the rationalization of both the multiplicity of programmes and funds and their relationships with the Secretariat. The reorganization introduced by the Secretary-General soon after his taking office in 1992—involving a drastic reduction in high-level posts and a significant simplification in Secretariat structures—had been consolidated during the 1994-1995 programme budget biennium. That reorganization, in turn, made it possible to achieve zero growth for the 1996-1997 biennium and made way for a further phase of reform, involving not only the central Secretariat but also all the programmes and funds comprising the Organization.

Complementing the intergovernmental and organizational reform, managerial reform, primarily the responsibility of the Secretary-General, was well under way in 1996. Progress during the year, the Secretary-General stated in his report on the work of the Organization [A/51/1], had been significant in relation to each of the strategic areas of management: human resources, cost structure, and information and technology.

With respect to human resources, the system of accountability and responsibility was further consolidated. As an integral part of the system, the Code of Conduct of the International Civil Service was being strengthened and updated. A new work planning and appraisal system had been introduced at all duty stations and comprehensive management training had been instituted and had already been completed by over 300 senior managers. The number of women in posts subject to geographical distribution had reached the highest point in United Nations history, and recruitment costs had been reduced by 30 per cent.

As for cost management, the current approved budget represented a 10 per cent reduction in real terms, the Secretary-General noted, and included cost cuts mandated by the Assembly of $154 million, beyond the $98 million already indicated in his budget submission. That new budget reduced the total number of staff posts by 12 per cent, as compared to 10 years earlier. At the same time, the new Integrated Management Information System (IMIS) had enhanced the use of financial, human resource and procurement information, and had strengthened internal controls and accountability.

Progress in technology management had also been significant and had affected a wide range of Secretariat operations, from remote translation and text processing to high-speed electronic access to UN documents through the new optical disk system, which served to reduce by thousands the number of documents to be printed and distributed.

Cutting across those three areas, the Secretary-General said managerial reform had been accelerated by the work of the Efficiency Board, established in November 1995. With guidance from the Board and support from a working group of experts contributed by Member States, every Secretariat office had carried out efficiency reviews, involving some 400 projects to enhance management efficiency in the Secretariat. The results achieved to date had contributed to the savings mandated by the Assembly and to improvements in Secretariat services and operations, and also had served to identify a number of areas where further systemic efficiency changes were needed, which were currently being addressed by the Board.

Report of Efficiency Board. In September 1996, the seven-member Efficiency Board presented to the Secretary-General a progress report [Sales No. E.96.I.28] recording actions taken or under way and challenges ahead to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of the management of the Secretariat. These steps, the Board noted, lay largely within the Secretary-General's authority, but required the active cooperation of member Governments and their representatives if they were to succeed. Genuine reform and renewal of the United Nations was inevitably a long-term, incremental and continuing process, the Board stressed; for that reason, it had kept very much in mind the long-term factors essential in maintaining the effectiveness of the Secretariat—and of the performance of the Organization—at the highest possible level.

Among the early results achieved in the effort to accelerate change in the management of the Secretariat, the Board reported that starting in February 1996, every department and office had carried out efficiency reviews and identified 400 projects to deliver both better service and better value to Member States; the Secretariat had already completed more than 20 per cent of projects, with the rest under way. Among other measures, the volume of documentation and publications printed in the Secretariat had been cut by 13 per cent since January, through tighter print runs and distribution patterns and the use of more advanced technological alternatives. A new, easier-to-use UN Home Page was now on the Internet; by late autumn, it was to make more than 270,000 UN documents in all official languages electronically available in 157 countries and to the majority of missions to the United Nations in New York. Through a combination of efficiency measures and budget cuts, travel expenses were reduced by more than 25 per cent in the first six months of 1996, and the cost of administrative travel was also being cut. Multiple projects in offices from Bangkok, Thailand, to Santiago, Chile, were streamlining administrative processes, outsourcing routine services, expanding the use of information technology, improving cash management and taking other steps to reduce the cost of administration and enhance management.

The Board noted that incrementally many initiatives, although modest individually, were contributing to a major shift in how the Organization conducted its operations, raising awareness of the need for continued commitment to efficiency, and identifying additional opportunities for efficiency improvements and for necessary major systemic changes. Through enhanced efficiency, reduced staff levels and increased staff productivity, the Secretariat had identified the savings needed to finance the 1996-1997 budget of $2.608 billion set by the General Assembly; in the same period, the Secretariat had achieved zero budget growth and reduced staff numbers by nearly 10 per cent, to the lowest level since the 1980s. By identifying specific savings and mitigating the impact of budget cuts on programme delivery, efficiency measures contributed to that budget situation.

Although there had been many calls for UN reform, the current efficiency effort included a number of elements not found in previous efforts; it focused on achieving early results rather than on making recommendations, and its success would hinge on the active participation and innovation of Secretariat managers and staff. Hundreds of efficiency projects were proposed by staff members, with each project to have a Secretariat Action Manager responsible for implementation. Member States were contributing to the effort with resources and expertise, based on their experience with the reform of public-sector institutions and working with the Secretariat to analyse problems and identify solutions. Ongoing financial constraints and the desire for enhanced performance meant that the search for efficiency would continue into the next biennium, the Board said. If the Organization was to be more results-oriented, more effective and efficient, with managers entrusted with greater responsibility and authority to fulfil the mandates given, significant changes would be required in its management systems and culture. As a next step, the partnership of Member States and Secretariat would work to complete the 400 current efficiency projects and to conduct a series of cross-cutting efficiency reviews of the Organization's management systems and administrative processes, such as human resources, publications and procurement.

The Board concluded that even under the current constraints, it was possible for effective managers to do a great deal, but even more could be accomplished. The successful first phase of the efficiency exercise left the Board confident that the Organization and its Members could meet the commitment made by the heads of State and Government at the fiftieth anniversary session of the United Nations to "give to the twenty-first century a United Nations equipped, financed and structured to serve effectively the peoples in whose name it was established".

Accountability, management improvement and oversight

Notes by Secretary-General. On 5 June, the Secretary-General submitted his comments [A/50/503/Add.2] on a 1995 report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) [YUN 1995, p. 1375] on accountability, management improvement and oversight in the UN system—a topic which, he said, was of particular interest at a time when he was pursuing a comprehensive management reform, with the aim of transforming the United Nations into a mission-driven, results-oriented Organization with heightened productivity, improved quality of services and enhanced cost-effectiveness.

Many ideas proposed by JIU for modernizing management practices and strengthening oversight dovetailed, the Secretary-General said, with measures he had taken to establish a transparent and cogent system of accountability and responsibility, which was being instituted as one step in the evolution of a new management culture and which spearheaded similar efforts currently being made by UN organizations. The managerial reform aimed to achieve an optimal decentralization of authority, along with defining clear responsibility for programme delivery and strengthening the accountability for effective management of financial and human resources.

Commenting on nine major JIU recommendations, the Secretary-General expressed doubts about the effectiveness of centralizing the functions of strategic planning, performance management, effective accountability and management improvement in a single organizational unit, which would also be charged with addressing specific managerial techniques and contingencies (JIU recommendation 1). He stated that such excessive centralization could entail a confusion of strategic perspective with micromanagement issues, while depriving the lower levels of management of necessary initiative. The Secretary-General preferred using different organizational vehicles and relying on specialized expertise for pursuing strategic imperatives, advancing managerial reform in specific functional areas, and enacting changes in concrete technical activities and procedures. The Advisory Panel on Management and Finance, created in January 1994, had become a strategic centre in advising him on policy issues relating to the effectiveness and efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations, with a view to ensuring a coherent and unified management policy within the Organization. It was assisted by the Efficiency Board which, in collaboration with programme managers, focused on specific activities where efficiency and cost-effectiveness could be enhanced without affecting mandated programme deliveries. The Board also had the task of recommending to the Secretary-General, for his consideration and referral to Member States, those areas where mandated programmes returned questionable value to Member States.

In specific functional areas, the Secretary-General reported, the ongoing improvement of management and accountability was pursued through continuous interaction between senior management; that purpose was served by his Task Force on United Nations Operations, periodic meetings of programme managers in the economic and social fields convened by him, as well as "down-the-line" monthly meetings of senior administrative staff. In concrete technical areas, the problems of improvement in management and accountability were addressed by specialized working groups, whose task it was to introduce adjustments in procedures and techniques and to provide recommendations to the Efficiency Board on changes of a systemic nature. Such work was ongoing in the areas of procurement reform, contracting-out options in printing, documentation and other conference services, performance evaluation and human resource planning, elimination of duplication and overlap in programme delivery, deployment of advanced technology, and other areas.

The Secretary-General considered improvement of management and accountability in procurement to be one of the most important reform tasks. On the recommendations of the High-level Group of Experts on Procurement (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV), the Procurement and Transportation Division had been restructured into a commodity-based system, sustained by a section providing centralized support and management, in line with modern management practice. The new structure not only concentrated expertise where it belonged, but also reduced layers of supervision and released personnel for actual procurement functions. The High-level Group of Experts continued to work directly with management and staff members of the Procurement and Transportation Division in order to bring about reforms expeditiously. One of the Group's current priorities was preparing draft policies and procedures concerning procurement for consideration by the Secretariat, expected to be finalized during 1996.

To help improve management and oversight in the Office of Conference Services, a network of focal points in various units and eight action teams responsible for specific improvement projects had been established; that network, monitored by an executive team including the Director of Conference Services, the two Division Directors, selected managers and a representative of the staff, had produced some valuable results, the Secretary-General noted.

The merits of increased reliance on contractual services for translation had been recognized and the share of contractual translation had risen to some 17 per cent in 1995; the financial appropriation for that purpose was increased by about 30 per cent in the programme budget for 1996-1997. At the same time, the Secretary-General noted, the market for qualified conference translators was limited and highly competitive, and quality considerations could not be dismissed on the basis of cost-effectiveness alone. Parliamentary documents had to be translated with short deadlines, while requiring extensive referencing work, and thus could not be sent for contractual translation.

In connection with the enhancement of management and accountability in the area of technical cooperation activities, measures were taken during 1994-1995 to improve liaison between requisitioning and procurement staff of the Department for Development Support and Management Services on the one hand and with technical and substantive staff on the other. Ongoing efforts were aimed at improving the flow of communications, eliminating bottlenecks and enhancing procurement planning through a working group on procedures, procurement seminars and the issuance of further guidelines related to the procurement process.

In the course of reform, the Department of Development Support and Management Services had sharpened its focus on the issues of measurability, accountability, overview and feedback in the management of technical cooperation activities. The internal reform process included an ongoing critical review of the Department's internal capacities to ensure that skills and experience at hand could respond to evolving needs, and developing towards that end a broad-based, flexible and responsive cadre of substantive specialists. Prominent features of the reform of development assistance provided by the Department included greater priority given to the national execution of projects, emphasis on technical support services at the programme and project levels, and scaling down of administrative and operational support services to projects.

As to JIU recommendation 2 (on strengthening and consolidating internal audit, evaluation and inspection functions), the Secretary-General said it had been effectively implemented by the establishment of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) (see below); he believed that improving coordination between the Board of Auditors, OIOS and JIU would enhance the efficiency of oversight.

The Secretary-General concurred with JIU recommendation 3 (on internal control systems and accountability), stating that measures for establishing financial liability of staff and consequential enforcement actions were being examined with a view to modifying existing provisions contained in the Financial Regulations and Rules and Staff Regulations and Rules. It was also intended to define clearly the types of violations that might entail financial liability, and specific regulations and rules were required to establish a complete system for administration of the proposed recovery action. A code of conduct was being prepared, establishing the fundamental duties and obligations of staff members and holding them accountable for full compliance.

With regard to recommendation 4 (on establishing a comprehensive information systems strategy for programming, management and decision-making), the Secretary-General said that he had pursued the recommended course of action since the beginning of the 1990s through the development and implementation of the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS) (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV). Another important component of his information systems strategy was implementation of the optical disk system for the storage of UN documents, which had achieved noticeable results, and other means of electronic production and transmission of documents, which had contributed to strengthening management, accountability and oversight.

The Secretary-General noted that the thrust of JIU recommendation 5—to strengthen management development and training—coincided with his own strategy. He stated that the JIU report did not properly reflect the actual situation regarding management training, as a comprehensive management development programme had been inaugurated and other training programmes—on procurement, project design and in connection with the implementation of IMIS—had been carried out. He concurred with recommendation 6—to encourage and support the recent management, accountability and oversight improvement efforts of the interagency bodies—adding that in his capacity as Chairman of ACC, he would continue to support those efforts system-wide. He supported recommendations 7 (on sharing information, findings and recommendations among external system-wide oversight bodies) and 8 (on a more assertive leadership role for the oversight governing bodies of UN organizations). He also concurred with the thrust of recommendation 9 (that each UN organization report annually to its primary oversight governing body on the issues of accountability, management improvement and oversight), subject to earlier comments regarding excessive centralization (see above), adding that the specific modalities and periodicity of such reporting were decided by the General Assembly.

Further specific comments in the report referred to "benchmarking", i.e., regularly reviewing work plans, workloads and work flows, as had been suggested by JIU. Those proposals, the Secretary-General said, were of direct relevance to the efforts currently under way in the Secretariat; a network action team in Conference Services had initiated the development of a methodology for benchmarking by unit and by sets of units, including cost as a performance indicator. With regard to the Inspectors' remark that the new Information Systems Coordination Committee (ISCC) and its task forces on strategic planning and information access and documentation seemed to have started slowly, the Secretary-General noted that standard interagency procedures had been followed in appointing the Professional staff for the Committee, whose Secretary was appointed and took office in May 1995. The strategic planning task force had completed its work on schedule and presented its report to the second meeting of ISCC in April 1995 and subsequently to ACC.

In October 1996, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the comments of ACC [A/51/522] on the JIU report.

CPC consideration. The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) considered the JIU report during its 1996 annual session, on 6 and 7 June [A/51/16, Part I]. It expressed appreciation for the report and endorsed recommendations 2 to 6, subject to certain reservations expressed. Some delegations expressed reservations on the other recommendations. The Committee regretted that the comments of the Secretary-General and of ACC were not available at the time it began consideration of the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 50/503 of 17 September, the General Assembly took note of the 1994 report of the Secretary-General [YUN 1994, p. 1358] on jurisdictional and procedural mechanisms for the proper management of resources and funds of the United Nations and the related report [YUN 1994, p. 1358] of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts established by the Assembly in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 187, GA res. 48/218 A, sect. III]. It also took note of the Secretary-General's October 1994 note [YUN 1994, p. 1365] transmitting the views of the Board of Auditors on improving oversight functions, and his November 1994 report [YUN 1994, p. 1365] on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations. The Assembly deferred consideration of those documents until its fifty-first session.

External oversight mechanisms

In November, the Secretary-General transmitted a note of JIU containing its updated and additional views on strengthening external oversight mechanisms [A/51/674], which supplemented its earlier views presented in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1365]. Reflecting the greatly increased concern of Member States about the need for effective oversight, the General Assembly stressed in resolution 50/233 of 7 June 1996 that the impact of JIU on the cost-effectiveness of activities within the UN system was a shared responsibility of the Member States, JIU and secretariats of the participating organizations. While the resolution specifically concerned JIU, the note stated, the general application of the concept of shared responsibility clearly would apply to the impact or effectiveness of external oversight mechanisms as a whole, and was not restricted only to the Unit. JIU believed that the Assembly's assertion in resolution 50/233, in connection with other developments since 1994, set the proper context for a renewed consideration of requirements for strengthening external oversight mechanisms.

Within the context of shared responsibility for the impact or effectiveness of those mechanisms, Member States—the intended beneficiaries of UN activities and programmes—clearly played an essential leading role. Determining whether those activities and programmes were conducted as efficiently and effectively as possible to meet the interests of Member States was the ultimate reason for having external oversight mechanisms. For meaningful, effective and strong external oversight, legislative organs needed to provide leadership, guidance and targeting on issues of particular concern to Member States, JIU stated. It was of paramount importance that Member States give a clear message to the secretariats of participating organizations that the external oversight mechanisms enjoyed their strong support, as well as that those mechanisms be assured operational independence from the secretariats. In order for external oversight units to exercise the role expected of them, Member States had to provide the appropriate resource requirements in view of their mandate and scope of activities. Individual Member States that proposed Inspectors to JIU and the Assembly, which selected them, needed to ensure that they met the necessary qualifications. Also, the independence of JIU staff assisting the Inspectors should be secured.

Indispensable to strengthening the effectiveness and impact of JIU was the unreserved cooperation of the secretariats of participating organizations in the formulation of its work programme, the preparation of its reports and their presentation to legislative organs, as well as in the implementation of JIU recommendations. Improved coordination within the secretariats of the individual organizations, as well as within ACC, would help to further assure the relevance of its work programme to the priorities of the common system, JIU believed.

While calling for leadership and support from Member States and cooperation from the secretariats of participating organizations, the Inspectors stated that they were fully aware that such support needed to be earned through the relevance of their work and the contributions their reports made to improving the management effectiveness and efficiency of the UN system. JIU had taken measures towards that end and continued to seek further improvements; it said that it would like to continue to work with Member States and the secretariats to make further improvements in the process of selecting subjects for its work programme. The Unit had revised and updated its internal standards and guidelines in order to ensure that inspections, evaluations and investigations were conducted as effectively as possible.

In order to avoid duplication, JIU endeavoured to coordinate its work programme with other external and internal oversight bodies; it believed that more attention and effort should be devoted to developing practical cooperation, coordination and mutual support. As called for by the Assembly in 1993 [GA res. 48/221], the Unit sought to maintain close cooperation with CPC, the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), the Board of Auditors, the Panel of External Auditors and UN organizations and bodies in order to ensure greater and more cost-effective coordination of their activities for the promotion of management efficiency, greater accountability and transparency. JIU felt that cooperation among external oversight bodies should be defined more precisely and that those bodies should undertake complementary projects and consider implementing larger, more complex projects with shared responsibilities. What was needed, JIU said, was to move from the current approach, stressing and protecting each oversight body's independence and separate mandate, to a culture of positive cooperation.

JIU concluded that the "added-value" of its recommendations, and those of other oversight mechanisms, could be measured only through their implementation, which depended on their approval by the legislative organs and actual implementation by the secretariats. It reiterated that fragmented, unclear and weak provisions for compliance with and follow-up on approved recommendations were a general weakness of oversight mechanisms, a matter which JIU believed required urgent attention. The Unit looked forward to working together with Member States and secretariats of the participating organizations on that urgent matter and other measures to increase further the impact of oversight mechanisms on the cost-effectiveness of UN activities.

JIU activities

The Joint Inspection Unit, in its twenty-eighth annual report to the General Assembly [A/51/34], gave an overview of its activities from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996. During that period, it had issued 10 reports on the following topics: management in the United Nations [A/50/507]; the advancement of women through and in the programmes of the UN system [A/50/509]; the relationship between humanitarian assistance and peacekeeping operations [A/50/572]; the military component of UN peacekeeping operations [A/50/576]; the involvement of the UN system in providing and coordinating humanitarian assistance [A/50/687]; travel in the United Nations: issues of efficiency and cost savings [A/50/692]; UN system support for science and technology in Asia and the Pacific [A/50/721]; strengthening the UN system capacity for conflict prevention [A/50/853]; evaluation of the United Nations New Agenda for Development in Africa in the 1990s: towards a more operational approach [A/50/885]; and United Nations Conference on Trade and Development: review of institutional and programme issues [A/51/152]. During the second half of 1996, six JIU reports were issued: a feasibility study on the relocation of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to the Turin Centre [A/51/642]; Part II of a report on the inspection of the application of United Nations recruitment, placement and promotion policies [A/51/656]; a report on common services at UN Headquarters [A/51/686]; a comparison of methods of calculating equitable geographical distribution within the UN common system [A/51/705]; a report on the coordination of policy and programming frameworks for more effective development cooperation [A/51/636-E/1996/104]; and a review of financial resources allocated by the UN system to activities of NGOs [A/51/655-E/1996/105].

The work programme of the Unit for 1996-1997, the indicative list of potential items for 1997-1998 and beyond and the internal roster of subjects suggested to the Unit for consideration were transmitted to the Assembly by an October note [A/51/559] of the Secretary-General.

JIU continued to strive towards improving its performance, effectiveness and efficiency, developing a revised set of internal standards and procedures, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 50/233, adopted in June (see below). Those standards and procedures were attached to its annual report, to allow Member States, other expert bodies and secretariats of participating organizations to gain a better understanding of how JIU fulfilled its mandate; they were to be supplemented by more detailed working procedures intended to help the Unit improve its internal functioning and increase the quality of its work. JIU was also developing an internal technological information system, a key element of which—the information and documentation centre—was expected to be formally and functionally established by the end of 1996; once in place, the centre was expected to increase the research capacity of JIU.

The Unit made further efforts in 1996 to strengthen its cooperation and coordination with both the legislative bodies and secretariats of participating organizations. New procedures and techniques of questionnaire preparation and data collection were being developed to facilitate the provision of information by secretariats.

The Unit continued its good working relations and practical cooperation with external oversight bodies, and participated in twenty-seven meetings of representatives of internal audit services of UN organizations and multilateral financial institutions. Its working relations with OIOS were further strengthened, and OIOS was active in making suggestions on issues to be included in the JIU programme of work; together, they were formulating a procedure to facilitate, as requested in Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362] on the establishment of OIOS, the Office's determination of compliance with approved recommendations emanating from external oversight bodies, including JIU.

Having developed over the years relations with bodies outside the UN system, including governmental institutions, regional organizations, NGOs and research institutions, the Unit was taking steps to increase and develop further relations with specialized institutions, such as the International Organization of Supreme Audit Institutions.

With regard to implementation of its recommendations, JIU compiled specific information on delays for submitting comments on individual reports, as part of a follow-up system aimed at tracking actions taken on its reports and approved recommendations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 7 June, adopted resolution 50/233.

Joint Inspection Unit

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its previous relevant resolutions on the Joint Inspection Unit, in particular resolution 48/221 of 23 December 1993, and on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also paragraph 6 of section II of its resolution 48/218 A of 23 December 1993,

Having considered the annual reports of the Unit for the periods from 1 July 1993 to 30 June 1994 and 1 July 1994 to 30 June 1995, and its related work programmes, as well as the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Unit,

Reaffirming the statute of the Unit, the only independent system-wide inspection, evaluation and investigation body,

Stressing that the impact of the Unit on the cost-effectiveness of activities within the United Nations system is a shared responsibility of the Member States, the Unit and the secretariats of the participating organizations,

Noting with concern that some reports of the Unit have dealt with political matters,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the annual reports of the Joint Inspection Unit on its activities during the periods from 1 July 1993 to 30 June 1994 and 1 July 1994 to 30 June 1995, of its work programmes for 1994, 1995 and 1995-1996 and of the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Unit;

2. Endorses the observations and recommendations on the operation of the Unit contained in the annual report of the Unit for the period from 1 July 1994 to 30 June 1995, subject to the provisions of the present resolution, without prejudice to its consideration of the thematic reports of the Unit;

3. Decides to consider the appropriate periodicity of the Unit agenda item in the context of the review called for in its decision 47/454 of 23 December 1992;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, and invites the executive heads of organizations participating in the Unit, to take the necessary measures to ensure that the thematic reports of the Unit are listed under the appropriate substantive agenda items of the work programmes of the General Assembly, other pertinent organs and bodies of the United Nations and the appropriate legislative organs of the other participating organizations;

5. Takes note of the thematic reports of the Unit submitted to it for action, and decides to continue their consideration, where appropriate, under the relevant agenda items;

6. Requests the Unit to seek a more reader-friendly and uniform format of reports, taking into account new publishing technologies, which would include sections containing the objectives of the report, an executive summary, the conclusions drawn and, as appropriate, the action required to be taken by the organizations, in order to make reports as concise as possible and to comply with the existing page limit of thirty-two pages;

7. Also requests the Unit to report to it at its fifty-first session on measures taken to develop a set of internal standards and guidelines for inspection, evaluation and investigation;

8. Invites the legislative organs of other participating organizations to take concrete action on the recommendations of the Unit;

9. Reminds the Unit of its functions and powers as set out in chapter III of its statute, in particular article 5, paragraphs 1 to 3 and 5, and article 7, and requests the Unit to prepare its programme of work accordingly, bearing in mind the interests of participating organizations and the paramount need to ensure efficiency of services and proper use of funds;

10. Invites the Unit to continue to take full advantage of its system-wide competence in undertaking comparative analysis of trends and problems faced by various organizations and to propose harmonized, practical and concrete solutions;

11. Requests the executive heads of participating organizations to comply fully with the statutory reporting procedures for the consideration of the reports of the Unit, and requests the Unit to report to the competent legislative organs on compliance by the secretariats concerned;

12. Requests the Unit to continue to focus its reports on important priority items, identifying concrete managerial, administrative and programming questions aimed at providing the General Assembly and other legislative organs of participating organizations with practical and action-oriented recommendations on precisely defined issues;

13. Also requests the Unit to issue its reports well in advance of meetings of the legislative organs of participating organizations so that the reports can be thoroughly and effectively utilized by these organs;

14. Requests the Secretary-General and the other executive heads of participating organizations to assist the Unit fully, with timely provision of all information requested by it;

15. Decides to consider the issue of the mobility of the staff of the Unit in the context of the review called for in its decision 47/454;

16. Encourages the Unit to continue to take the necessary steps to achieve a punctual and systematic follow-up of its recommendations as approved by the legislative organs of participating organizations;

17. Urges Member States to pay special attention to the importance of the selection of qualified inspectors.

Internal oversight

Office of Internal Oversight Services

The Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) was established by General Assembly resolution 48/218 B in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1362] with the intention of enhancing oversight functions within the UN system, in view of the increased importance, cost and complexity of the Organization's activities, through intensified evaluation, audit, inspection, investigation and compliance monitoring. Under the new concept, programme managers were required to implement OIOS recommendations fully and to report quarterly on the status of implementation. OIOS, for its part, closely monitored implementation and reported regularly to the Secretary-General.

Draft guidelines for OIOS activities—covering institutional arrangements for oversight, minimum common standards of departmental oversight, and training and other services to be provided by the Office—were annexed to a March report [A/51/88] of OIOS, which reviewed the role of in-depth and self-evaluations in various departments and offices, and recommended a strengthening of programme oversight, especially of the link between programme performance monitoring and self-evaluation systems. In a note transmitting the report to the Assembly, the Secretary-General expressed concurrence with the OIOS approach and said he had asked the Office and the Department of Administration and Management to discuss ways to strengthen the linkages between evaluation on the one hand and the programme planning and budgetary process on the other.

OIOS activities

Report of Secretary-General. In September 1996, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the second annual report of OIOS [A/51/432], covering its activities for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996. He underlined that the strengthening of the monitoring, internal audit, inspection and evaluation, and investigation functions, as provided for in the 1994 resolution establishing the Office, was an important and integral part of his management plan, and was all the more essential at a time of major resource constraints.

In the exercise of those functions, the Secretary-General said, OIOS was increasingly making a distinct contribution to the overall management and organizational reform effort, coordinated by the Department of Administration and Management. Continuing close collaboration between the Office and the Department was therefore important to maximize the coherence and impact of that effort and to avoid duplication in demands for reporting by senior programme managers. The Office's ongoing efforts to coordinate its programme with other oversight bodies, including the Board of External Auditors and JIU, would be helpful in ensuring the full cooperation and contribution of all programme managers.

During the reporting period, OIOS had taken a number of steps, both internally and client-related, to promote the idea that the benefit of oversight was not in the recommendations made but in their effective implementation. Furthermore, measures had been taken to enhance the monitoring mechanisms within departments and offices, and to facilitate and institutionalize reporting procedures.

To increase management's capacity to follow up on OIOS recommendations, the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services suggested to the Secretary-General that he advise heads of departments and offices to designate a reference person, reporting directly to the head, to assist in coordinating oversight-related activities. In particular, that person was to monitor implementation of agreed recommendations, facilitate and coordinate the flow of oversight-related information within departments, prepare quarterly compliance reports to OIOS and maintain liaison with the Office. The Secretary-General immediately instructed departments to designate reference persons.

OIOS also took steps internally to refine and rationalize its monitoring machinery. Among them was the introduction of a recommendation code as at 1 January 1996 to facilitate reference to individual recommendations.

Since the introduction of systematic monitoring by OIOS, some 4,000 audit recommendations had been issued; of those, almost two thirds (62 per cent) had been fully implemented, while the remaining third was in the process of being implemented. Eighty-four per cent of all recommendations during the first six-month period had been implemented by 30 June 1996. A qualitative analysis of recommendations implemented or outstanding basically confirmed the positive overall picture; the Office continued to focus its efforts on further improving that trend, communicating the message to management that swift implementation of its recommendations was critical.

The first (1995) annual report of OIOS [A/50/459; see YUN 1995, p. 1374] had identified three priority areas for oversight: peacekeeping, humanitarian and related activities, and procurement. During the reporting period covered by the second report, the problem of establishing new bodies was also treated as a priority matter. The report gave an overview of OIOS activities in those priority areas and responses to its recommendations. Among them were an in-depth evaluation of peacekeeping operations, a report [E/AC.51/1996/3] on which was presented to the Committee for Programme and Coordination in May, containing findings and recommendations on translating the lessons of experience into practice; audit coverage of 17 peacekeeping operations; audit of the administration and headquarters operations, as well as of country programmes of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR); and an inspection review of the management and administrative practices of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA). An in-depth evaluation of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA) was begun by OIOS, for review by CPC in 1997.

As part of its monitoring function, OIOS prepared the Secretary-General's report [A/51/128 & Add.1] on the programme performance of the United Nations for the 1994-1995 biennium (see PART FIVE, Chapter II). As follow-up to a 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 1457] of the High-level Group of Experts on Procurement, OIOS conducted an audit of procurement management; it also audited procurement for technical cooperation projects in UNHCR and at the United Nations Office at Geneva. It provided advisory services in several procurement cases and offered recommendations concerning the management of substantial commercial contracts for the provision of services and goods to peacekeeping operations.

The Office audited management of the administration of cargo insurance and third-party liability motor vehicle insurance, and reviewed the Organization's shipping and freight forwarding activities. Audits were ongoing of outsourcing practices and of the management of the catering facilities at Headquarters.

Special audit attention was given to newly established bodies in order to identify problems and weaknesses at the earliest possible stage and permit immediate remedial action. OIOS conducted a comprehensive audit of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, a first review of the administrative aspects of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, and an assessment of the administrative set-up of the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories.

During the reporting period, the Office's Audit and Management Consulting Division identified $ 12 million in potential recoveries and savings, almost $9 million of which were realized from actions recommended by the Division. The 131 audit assignments opened between 1 July 1995 and 30 June 1996 resulted in 260 audit communications containing 2,105 recommendations on compliance with rules, regulations and policies; economic and efficient use of resources; protection of assets; adequacy of internal controls; and achievement of objectives.

The OIOS Investigations Section received 205 complaints during the reporting period, ranging from matters affecting only a few staff members to those which affected the Organization's policies. Of total complaints, 107 were in the Americas, 50 in Europe, 36 in Africa, 9 in Asia and 3 in the Middle East. The Section issued 13 reports and 46 communications and sent 37 referrals to appropriate UN administrators.

By an October note [A/51/530], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the comments of JIU on 11 final OIOS reports.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the first annual report of OIOS and other reports pertaining to specific items dealt with by the Office in 1995, as well as an April 1996 report [A/50/945] on a 1995 audit of procurement, the General Assembly, on 7 June, adopted resolution 50/239.

Activities of the Office of Internal Oversight Services

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/218 B of 29 July 1994, in which it decided to establish an Office of Internal Oversight Services under the authority of the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the annual report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, and notes the views expressed by Member States;

2. Takes note of the reports of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, and decides to consider them under the relevant item of the agenda;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to entrust the Office of Internal Oversight Services, in line with General Assembly resolution 48/218 B, with the maintenance of close cooperation with the Joint Inspection Unit and the Board of Auditors, so that the comments of those two bodies on the reports of the Office, and the comments of the Secretary-General thereon, may be considered, as appropriate, by the Assembly, together with the reports of the Office;

4. Reaffirms that procedures for recruitment and promotion applied to personnel of the Office of Internal Oversight Services should be consistent with those applied to the Secretariat.

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/973) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.45), based on informal consultations; agenda item 149.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: Fifth Committee 29, 31, 64; plenary 120.

On 18 December, by decision 51/458 A, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, decided to continue consideration of the second annual report on OIOS activities during its resumed session. By the same decision, the Assembly reaffirmed its decision in resolution 50/239 that the Office's reports should be considered under the relevant agenda items.

Innovative funding mechanisms

By a letter of 6 February [E/1996/14], Australia requested the inclusion of an additional item on innovative funding mechanisms, for consideration in the general segment, on the provisional agenda of the substantive session of the Economic and Social Council (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV). In its explanatory memorandum, Australia said that recent major UN conferences in the economic, social and related fields had agreed that innovative funding, including new ways of generating public and private financing resources, should be explored. Following a recommendation by the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113], the General Assembly, in 1995 resolution 50/161 [YUN 1995, p. 1122], requested the Economic and Social Council to consider new and innovative ideas for generating funds and to offer for that purpose any useful suggestions. Australia proposed that the Council should have a preliminary exchange of views on all aspects related to innovative funding mechanisms, including modalities for further consideration of the subject. In proposing the item, Australia said it was conscious of the importance of securing sufficient and reliable sources of funding to address globally agreed priorities.

Taking note of the letter, the Council, by decision 1996/210 of 9 February, included the item "New and innovative ideas for generating funds" in the provisional agenda of its 1996 substantive session. On 11 and 26 July, the Council considered the question; it had before it a conference room paper prepared by the Secretariat, which gave an overview of reports on the topic by the Secretary-General on the issue, as well as reports and studies prepared by non-UN institutions or individuals in their private capacity.

Reports of Secretary-General. The conference room paper summarized two reports of the Secretary-General, issued in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1268] and 1995 [A/49/834], on funding operational activities for development within the UN system. The first report covered major funding mechanisms, including pledging conferences, assessing contributions, replenishment systems, negotiated pledges and mixed funding mechanisms. It contained a comparative analysis of advantages of various funding mechanisms and proposed two steps: the first, to agree on a system of relatively firm, three-year resource targets, with Member States indicating their intentions on resources within such a time frame; the second, to deal with losses as a result of exchange-rate fluctuations, perhaps by making contributions in special drawing rights (SDR).

The 1995 report addressed assessment of funding options and possible alternative funding modalities. Among the alternatives was one based on a continuation of voluntary contributions as the primary funding modality; another was based on negotiated contributions, with a formula to be developed by Member States; still others would have added elements of assessment. For some options, particularly negotiated pledges, the following elements were important: a projection of collective and global resource requirements, presented by organizations to their respective governing bodies, based on approved and planned programmes and taking into account the needs of developing countries, their absorptive capacity, themes and programmes of action agreed on at world conferences and other forums, and the organization's ability to deliver the proposed programmes; and Member States' agreement to the programmes, including the assured provision of resources covering the planning period. Once approved, programmes would be guaranteed and Member States would have to provide resources to meet programme needs.

The report suggested that possible changes to the existing system, as well as a new system based on negotiated pledges, might be explored further. It put forward a series of possible changes to the existing system, among them the following: (a) Based on the multi-year programmes agreed upon by Member States, organizations would produce annual projections indicating the level of pledges needed each year to support the approved programme. A rolling three-year programming cycle was considered by the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and later implemented. (b) Member States would be asked to provide firm pledges for which the use of relatively firm multi-year targets, establishing minimum levels of pledges, would be beneficial. Governments should be in a position to indicate multi-year pledges based on those targets and timeframes or to agree that their first-year pledges would be maintained at the same level for the second and third years. (c) If the level of resources subsequently made available to an organization were insufficient to meet the requirements of approved programmes, the shortfall should be reviewed at meetings of governing bodies and practical steps should be identified to meet the programme levels, including through non-core and supplementary funding.

Once the programmes for the specified period were approved, said the report, distribution of programme costs could be agreed by Member States on the basis of a formula determined by them. Firm multi-year commitments could be entered into by each country.

Other proposals. Proposals for alternative funding for the United Nations were also advanced by non-UN institutions or individuals, based on the proposition that the current funding system did not provide sufficient volume, predictability, stability and fair burden-sharing. Among others, the Nordic countries suggested a revised funding system including assessed contributions, based on Member States' capacity to pay; they proposed that assessed contributions constitute 10 per cent of total funding for the administrative budget, while negotiated pledges (similar to the replenishment process of international financial institutions, with burden-sharing defined within the context of specific objectives) would make up 60 per cent of programme resources and voluntary contributions from Member States about 30 per cent.

Other proposals included consolidation of trust funds provided by Governments for specific projects into a single "super" trust fund, the operation of which would be under the Secretary-General's authority. It was suggested that the integration of non-governmental and private-sector organizations into select UN activities might also lead to mobilization of resources in relevant sectors, as was the case with the International Telecommunication Union and the World Intellectual Property Organization, which were partly financed by fees for services rendered to member Governments. Proposals were identified for modest charges on various transactions of the global financial markets, levies on certain international activities, such as international trade, as well as other possibilities for international taxation, including compensation measures for marine pollution or charges for fishing rights. A related proposal was for a general UN fund based on monies generated by new global sources; UN agencies would submit requests and the Organization would assess them based on available resources and in harmony with agreed political priorities.

A number of specific proposals were also put forward on financing social development and environmental protection and management.

Commission on Sustainable Development. In a February report [E/CN.17/1996/4 & Add.1] to the Commission on Sustainable Development, the Secretary-General provided an overview of current issues and developments relating to financial resources and mechanisms for sustainable development. The Commission, in a decision of 3 May [E/1996/28 (dec. 4/14)], welcomed the Secretary-General's report as well as the decision of the Economic and Social Council to include an item on new and innovative funding in the provisional agenda for its substantive session, and recommended that the report [E/CN.17/1996/28] of the Third Expert Group Meeting on Financial Issues of Agenda 21 be made available to the Council (for further details, see PART THREE, Chapter I).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, on 26 July, adopted resolution 1996/48.

New and innovative ideas for generating funds

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, in which relevant United Nations bodies, in particular the Economic and Social Council, were requested to consider new and innovative ideas for generating funds and to offer any useful suggestions for this purpose,

Noting discussions in intergovernmental bodies, such as the Commission on Sustainable Development, statements made at the special commemorative meeting of the General Assembly on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations and during the general debate at the fiftieth session of the Assembly, and activities undertaken in this area by United Nations bodies, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, and other entities,

Taking note of previous reports of the Secretary-General relevant to the issue,

Conscious of the importance and urgency of securing sufficient and reliable sources of funding to address globally agreed commitments and priorities, in particular those established at recent United Nations conferences and summits,

Recognizing that the authority to levy taxes is the prerogative of sovereign States,

1. Reaffirms the commitments and targets made with regard to official development assistance, and stresses in this context that funds generated by new and innovative ideas should not replace official development assistance;

2. Emphasizes that new and innovative funding should be distinct from funding the regular budget and the peacekeeping budgets of the United Nations, and should be part of global partnership and interdependence;

3. Stresses the role of private investment in financing development;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report, to be prepared in cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme, on all aspects of new and innovative ideas for generating funds for globally agreed commitments and priorities, in particular those established at recent United Nations conferences and summits, including in particular a review of their feasibility and possible modalities, as well as the costs and benefits of their implementation;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General, in the preparation of the above-mentioned report, to consult and build upon work of relevant parts of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, and to draw upon relevant external expertise from the private and public sectors and the academic community;

6. Invites voluntary contributions for this purpose, including possible contributions from the private sector;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit his report for discussion to the Council at its substantive session of 1997 and to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to organize briefings, as appropriate, for the Council's substantive session of 1997 in order to keep Member States informed of progress being made on the subject;

9. Invites Governments to submit their written views on new and innovative ideas for generating funds to the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General, in a supplement to his report, to communicate those views to the Council at its substantive session of 1997 and to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/48

26 July 1996                      Meeting 52                      Adopted without vote

Chapter II

United Nations financing and programming

In 1996, the United Nations financial crisis remained precarious, with unpaid contributions totalling some $2.2 billion, bringing the Organization to the edge of insolvency. A High-level Working Group established in 1994 to search for solutions to the financial difficulties facing the Organization continued its efforts, and the Secretary-General presented proposals for possible savings of $140 million, through reduced staffing and other economy measures.

The General Assembly in December adopted revised budget appropriations of $2.6 billion for the 1996-1997 biennium, about $5 million less than it had originally approved. A negative growth rate budget was being prepared for the 1998-1999 biennium, totalling about $2.5 billion and focusing on the following priorities: maintenance of international peace and security; promotion of sustained economic growth and sustainable development; development of Africa; promotion of human rights, and of justice and international law; humanitarian assistance coordination; disarmament; and drug control, crime prevention and the fight against international terrorism.

A special session of the Committee on Contributions was convened in 1996 to consider whether certain Member States in arrears should be allowed to continue to vote in the Assembly. The Assembly decided that the failure of four countries—the Comoros, Liberia, Rwanda and Tajikistan—to pay the minimum amount necessary to retain their voting rights was beyond their control, and that they should be permitted to vote through its fifty-first session.

The Committee on Contributions, at its regular session, continued its comprehensive review of all aspects of the methodology of the scale of assessments of Member State contributions to the UN budget, including factors which determined States' capacity to pay, repeatedly reaffirmed as the fundamental criterion for apportioning the Organization's expenses. The Assembly decided to continue its consideration of the scale as a matter of priority at its resumed fifty-first session and to approve, no later than 31 March 1997, methodology that would instruct the Committee on recommending a scale for the period 1998-2000.

The United Nations Board of Auditors transmitted 14 financial reports and audited financial statements for the biennium 1994-1995, on the United Nations itself, on UN peacekeeping operations and on 12 UN entities, having carried out "horizontal" audits of programme planning, performance, monitoring, budgetary assumptions, programme budget reporting and internal audit functions. In line with the trend towards greater harmonization in budgetary and financial matters, the Secretary-General, in October, presented revised accounting standards for the UN system.

The General Assembly in December adopted the medium-term plan for 1998-2001, reaffirming it as the principal policy directive of the United Nations and as a framework for the formulation of the biennial programme budgets. Another useful tool for improving the programme planning and budgetary process was the Secretary-General's report on programme performance of the United Nations for the 1994-1995 biennium, the findings of which were to provide feedback for the formulation of programmes and for enhancing their implementation. The importance of the role of evaluation in programme design, delivery and policy directives was underlined in a report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services.

Financial situation

In 1996, the United Nations financial crisis remained at an impasse, with unpaid contributions totalling some $2.2 billion. Despite a zero growth budget since 1994 and negative nominal growth projected for the 1998-1999 budget, the Organization's financial situation showed no significant improvement. The negative cash flow made it necessary to borrow extensively from peacekeeping funds to maintain basic operations. In a 6 February statement before the High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations, the Secretary-General warned that the financial crisis had brought the Organization, which was totally dependent on cash inflows from Member States to provide liquidity, to the edge of insolvency.

Reports of Secretary-General. In March, the Secretary-General reported [A/50/666/Add.4 & Corr.1] that the financial position remained critical, as total unpaid contributions continued to be at perilously high levels. Although the payment of regular budget assessments during 1996 had made it possible to repay the amounts borrowed from peacekeeping operations by the end of February, and the cash position for the regular budget was expected to be positive through June, it was expected that by year's end the negative cash balance would stand at $424 million. Without a significantly greater commitment by Member States to honour their obligations, the Secretary-General noted, the time for finding a solution to the grave situation was running out.

In May, the Secretary-General reported [A/50/666/Add.5] a projected improvement in the cash position of the Organization, based on anticipated payments from the United States and the Russian Federation. Even if those contributions forecast for 1996 were actually received, however, they would only mitigate the precarious situation, not restore financial viability. The combined General Fund—consisting of the regular budget, the Working Capital Fund and the Special Account—was still estimated to end the year in a negative position of $198 million, and outstanding contributions would total approximately $2.1 billion, of which $1.3 billion would be owed by a single Member State. Further efforts were clearly required, the Secretary-General concluded; in that connection, Member States with significant arrears had been contacted and urged to make payments immediately or indicate a schedule of when such payments might be expected.

In an August report [A/50/666/Add.6], the Secretary-General noted further projected improvements, with a combined cash position at 31 December estimated at $550 million, based on a negative balance of $287 million for the combined General Fund and a positive balance of $837 million for peacekeeping operations; that, he said, reflected an overall improvement compared with an earlier estimate of $388 million, but a worsening of the regular budget position. Even if all expected contributions were received, the combined General Fund would end the year seriously in deficit, dependent on financially imprudent borrowing from peacekeeping accounts. Furthermore, the Secretary-General added, the level of peacekeeping assessments was being reduced and would diminish even more should the General Assembly decide to apply available credits against future assessments. As a result, the level of peacekeeping balances could be expected to decline and, with them, the financial cushion which, together with the debt owed to troop- and equipment-contributing countries, had allowed the Organization to continue its basic functions despite the unhealthy cash situation. It remained imperative, the Secretary-General declared, that concerted efforts continue to reduce the level of unpaid assessed contributions so as to strengthen the Organization's overall financial situation and the capacity to carry out its mandated activities effectively.

Reporting again in September [A/50/666/Add.7], the Secretary-General said that 88 Member States had paid their regular budget assessments, but outstanding contributions as at 31 August totalled $772.8 million, of which 73 per cent represented contributions outstanding from the Member State with the highest rate of assessment. The cash position of the combined General Fund was anticipated to remain negative through the end of the year. The cash position of the Organization was forecast at $623 million by the end of December, with a positive balance in peacekeeping accounts of $866 million and a negative balance for the General Fund of $243 million. Although that reflected some improvement over earlier estimates, it still included a persistent and growing cash deficit under the regular budget, which would have to be covered through borrowing from peacekeeping accounts. It also depended crucially on peacekeeping cash flow projections, which were subject to significant uncertainty.

Even if all receipts were received as forecast, the Secretary-General, estimating that total unpaid contributions would be $2.2 billion at the end of the year, said the United Nations would still depend for its financial survival on an unacceptably high level of debt to those Member States participating in peacekeeping activities. Nothing in the current situation warranted complacency, and it remained crucially important that Member States meet their obligations promptly and in full, the Secretary-General stressed.

In October, the Secretary-General reported [A/51/515] that the combined cash position would be $692 million at the end of 1996, with a General Fund cash deficit of $103 million and a positive balance of $795 million in the combined peacekeeping accounts. Despite the fact that 91 Member States had paid their regular budget assessments as at 30 September, unpaid assessments amounted to $2.7 billion, far too high for the financial health and viability of the Organization, which still was obliged to borrow from peacekeeping accounts to maintain its basic operations. Such inherently poor financial practice probably would have to continue to some degree in 1997, while the level of peacekeeping balances was quite likely to decline in the immediate future, depending on the level of new assessments to be approved by the General Assembly. There was also a clear danger, the Secretary-General warned, that the ongoing financial crisis would continue to divert attention from, and impact negatively on, efforts for internal reform and renewal of the Secretariat.

Despite the relative improvement foreseen, the Secretary-General stressed that the overall financial situation remained precarious. Past due assessments were estimated at $2.1 billion, about 65 per cent of which would be owed by the United States. The Secretary-General continued to appeal to all Member States to emulate the growing number that had made efforts to meet their obligations.

In a December report [A/51/515/Add.1], the Secretary-General projected a further improvement in the Organization's cash position by the end of the year, estimated at $715 million, with the combined General Fund expected to show a cash deficit of $ 195 million and a positive balance of $910 million in the peacekeeping accounts. However, the anticipated relative improvement in the outlook for the regular budget had not been realized, and the United Nations would be obliged to continue to borrow from peacekeeping accounts, an inherently poor financial practice that was expected to continue to some degree in the upcoming year, despite a likely decline in the level of peacekeeping balances in the immediate future. At a time when all efforts should be focused on the Organization's reform and renewal, the Secretary General said, the continuing financial crisis undermined those efforts and distracted from the implementation of Member States' programme priorities.

In a later report [A/51/515/Add.2], the Secretary-General presented an end-of-year review of the financial situation, noting that unpaid assessed contributions totalled somewhat less than $2.2 billion, a slight decrease from the all-time high of $2.3 billion at the end of 1995. However, the level of unpaid contributions was $400 million higher than in 1994 and $600 million higher than in 1993. Outstanding contributions to the regular budget totalled $511 million, compared with $564 million at the end of the previous year. The year 1996 was the first for some time during which the amount of regular budget collections significantly exceeded new assessments. The number of Member States that had paid their regular budget assessments in full also increased, to 98, as compared to 94 at the end of 1995 and 75 at the end of 1994. The number of countries not making any payment to the regular budget fell to 12, in contrast to 22 in 1995 and 39 in 1994. The number of States owing more than their 1996 assessment at the end of the year was reduced to 61, compared to 71 in the previous year and 75 in 1994.

Aggregate peacekeeping assessments outstanding at the end of 1996 totalled $1.6 billion, against $1.7 billion a year earlier—the first reduction since 1991. The overall improvement was the result of a decrease of over $200 million outstanding for Member States other than the United States, and, for the latter, an increase of more than $110 million. Nevertheless, the Secretary-General expressed disappointment at the modest overall decrease in unpaid contributions to peacekeeping activities; given the lesser demands on Member States in 1996, as compared to the three peak years of such activities—1993, 1994 and 1995—it had been hoped that payments would greatly exceed assessments.

Turning to the Organization's cash situation, the Secretary-General reported that it had worsened in 1996 and the pattern begun in 1995 continued. During the year, it had been necessary to borrow from peacekeeping funds for eight months, with a peak borrowing level of over $300 million; 1996 ended with just under $200 million borrowed, virtually the same as at 31 December 1995.

Prompt payment of 1996 peacekeeping assessments by many Member States made possible periodic reimbursements of $350 million for troops and equipment throughout the year. Arrearage payments by the Russian Federation allowed for a further $200 million reimbursement at the end of the year; nevertheless, a substantial amount of debt was owed to 69 Member States. Any further reduction in the year-end level of obligations would depend on substantial arrearage payments, primarily for peacekeeping, but also regular budget arrears, given the need to retain peacekeeping cash balances as a safety valve for regular budget cash shortfalls.

Concluding, the Secretary-General emphasized that the Organization depended on prompt assessments and payments to achieve financial viability; therefore, he appealed to all Member States to put forward their best efforts to place the Organization back on a solid and reliable financial footing.

High-level Working Group. The High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations, established in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1336], held 30 meetings between 28 November 1995 and 4 June 1996, considering (a) the cash-flow situation, including mounting debts to Member States, as well as financial mechanisms to prevent recurrent cycles of financial crisis; (b) payment of contributions in full and on time, increase in unpaid contributions, and the issues of arrears, incentives and disincentives; and (c) the scale of assessments. An extensive exchange of views took place and working papers were submitted by individual Members and groups of States.

During the session, it was once again the view of a large number of Member States that the fundamental cause of the serious financial situation was the failure in particular of some major contributors to meet their financial obligations in full, on time and without conditions. Some Members thought that, while the failure of a large number of States to meet their financial obligations was indeed a major cause of the current crisis, a thorough examination of all the issues on the Group's agenda was necessary to achieve a long-term solution that would place the Organization on a sound financial basis. Others expressed the view that the fundamental cause of the situation was the failure of the scales of assessment to apportion the expenses of the United Nations fairly among Member States.

There was agreement in the Working Group on the urgent need to find a solution to the current financial situation and that further in-depth consideration of the issues was required.

It was also noted that Working Group activities had helped to increase awareness of the dimensions of the financial situation and had facilitated the ongoing efforts of the General Assembly President and the Secretary-General to encourage the timely payment of contributions.

The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee noted the Working Group's report [A/50/43] on 12 September, and transmitted it to the General Assembly for action. On 16 September, by decision 50/487, the Assembly took note of the Fifth Committee's report [A/50/1038] transmitting the Working Group's report. By decision 50/488 of the same date, the Assembly noted the Group's work, deciding that it should continue, taking into account, inter alia, Assembly consideration during the forty-ninth and fiftieth sessions and the views expressed at the fifty-first session. At that session, the Group was to submit, through the Fifth Committee, a report on its work, including any possible recommendations. Also on 16 September, the Assembly, by decision 50/496, included in the draft agenda of its fifty-first session the item on improving the financial situation of the United Nations.

The Working Group met again on 23 October and was to continue its work during the Assembly's resumed fifty-first session in 1997. By decision 51/462 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that the item on improving the financial situation of the United Nations should remain for consideration during its resumed fifty-first session.

In a statement to the Assembly, Ireland, speaking on behalf of the European Union (EU), as well as Bulgaria, Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Iceland, Liechtenstein, Lithuania and Slovenia, said that those countries attached the highest importance to the Group's work and to its efforts to achieve a comprehensive, consensus solution to the financial difficulties confronting the Organization. They regretted, however, that after almost two years, the Group could not agree on concrete measures to ameliorate that situation, despite its urgency. At the end of August, Member States owed $2.9 billion in unpaid contributions, while, at the same time, troop contributors, including EU members—collectively the largest financial contributor to the UN regular and peacekeeping budgets—and others associated with the statement, were owed more than $1 billion. The failure to achieve substantial progress was disappointing in view of the widespread recognition, at the fiftieth anniversary special commemorative meetings of the General Assembly in 1995, of the urgent need for Member States to agree on how to secure a sound financial basis for the Organization and strengthen its capacity to fulfil vital tasks. At the same time, the EU believed that considerable common ground had been reached on many key issues confronting the Group, and the stage was set for a productive and decisive stage of its work, with Member States working to reach agreement on those key elements which had to form the basis for comprehensive financial reform.

In the opinion of the EU, a solution to the financial crisis had to include the following elements: first and foremost, a commitment by all those in arrears to pay what they owed and, in future, to honour their financial obligations on time, in full and without conditions; secondly, implementation of a system of incentives and disincentives to ensure that Member States observed their legal obligations to pay; thirdly, a reform of the scale of assessments in order to produce a simpler, fairer and more transparent scale which reflected the principle of "capacity to pay" as the primary measure of the level of each Member's contribution and which, at the same time, gave adequate consideration to the needs of countries with low per capita income. Those proposals, the EU felt, remained the best basis for a negotiated solution. The EU urged all Member States to intensify efforts to arrive at a comprehensive agreement during the fifty-first Assembly session; only in that way could the United Nations financial future and well-being be safeguarded.

Measures to improve the Organization's financial management and at the same time increase efficiency were considered by the Efficiency Board, set up by the Secretary-General in November 1995, as well as by the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System (see FART FIVE, Chapter I).

UN budget

Budget for 1996-1997

Appropriations

In 1996, the General Assembly adopted revised budget appropriations of $2,603,280,900 for the 1996-1997 biennium—$4,993,100 less than the allocation of $2,608,274,000 originally approved in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1393]. It reduced approved income estimates by $23,664,100, to $447,737,600.

Reductions were made in most budget areas, including common support services ($44,803,600); regional cooperation for development (including regional commissions) ($26,206,600); international cooperation for development ($18,232,400); human rights and humanitarian affairs ($16,588,300); public information ($5,267,200); capital expenditures ($3,636,000); international justice and law ($2,704,600); jointly financed administrative activities and special expenses ($1,782,500); overall policy-making, direction and coordination ($999,000); and Office of Internal Oversight Services ($705,000).

Report of Secretary-General (March). On 28 March, the Secretary-General presented an interim report [A/C.5/50/57] containing proposals for possible savings of $140 million—less than the $154 million mandated by the Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1386]—through reduced staffing and other cuts. The reductions were to be achieved through changes in the estimated average vacancy rate of 9 per cent for Professional posts and 7 per cent for General Service posts, as well as through changes in programme delivery and services and efficiency gains related to procedural simplification. The Secretary-General pointed out, however, that those reductions would inevitably result in some service reductions, as well as delays and postponements in programme delivery. Further, any new mandate adopted during the biennium would require new funding.

All possible steps were being taken, he said, to mitigate any negative impact on the staff. As submitted, the 1996-1997 programme budget entailed the abolition of some 200 posts. Under the budget as approved, an estimated 800 vacancies would have to occur during the biennium. Separations, on a voluntary basis if at all possible, would be required. Care was being taken to avoid prolonged uncertainties that could affect the morale and productivity of the staff. Substantial expenditures might also be required to meet termination costs. While several aspects of the process were still uncertain, a basis had been set for reaching mandated cost reductions. As requested by the Assembly, the Secretary-General would make further proposals to improve efficiency, contain administrative costs and achieve savings, to adhere fully to the approved appropriation level.

ACABQ report (May). Commenting on the Secretary-General's March report, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) concluded that reductions of the magnitude called for could not be achieved without service reductions, delays and postponements. ACABQ believed that the most important fact to be considered was the difficulty in fully implementing, as envisaged, General Assembly resolution 50/214 [YUN 1995, p. 1386] on questions relating to the proposed 1996-1997 programme budget.

Moreover, ACABQ felt that the projected $140 million in savings forecast by the Secretary-General might not actually be achieved. If the paramount goal was to achieve cost reductions of the magnitude specified, a programme review had to begin to allow priority activities to be carried out and to ensure programme quality. ACABQ believed that relevant intergovernmental bodies should review the work programme for 1996-1997 so that the Secretary-General had clear guidance for his next report.

The Advisory Committee noted that projected requirements for additional expenditures related to peace and security were significant. Additional requirements for the effects of currency fluctuation and inflation could have a major impact on the current budget, and on the outline and budget for 1998-1999 and the future.

Introducing the ACABQ report [A/50/7/Add.16] to the Assembly's Fifth Committee, the ACABQ Chairman doubted whether even the lower target of projected savings of $140 million could be achieved unless more was done. The programme budget was linked to the level of services, programmes and activities. The Assembly had changed the resource side of the equation, but had nevertheless demanded that services should be delivered and programmes implemented fully. Under those conditions, programmes had to be reviewed to allow priority activities to be carried out and, for that exercise to have meaning, the relevant intergovernmental machinery charged with programme formulation and approval had to be involved, as ACABQ had continually stated for decades.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

Following consideration of the reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ, the General Assembly on 7 June adopted resolution 50/230.

Progress report on the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the budgetary process as adopted in its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and subsequent relevant resolutions,

Recalling its resolutions 50/214 and 50/215 of 23 December 1995,

Reaffirming also that changes in mandated programmes and activities are the prerogative of the General Assembly,

Reaffirming further regulation 5.2 of the Regulations Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, as adopted in its resolution 37/234 of 21 December 1982,

Noting that the Secretary-General, taking into account the views of the competent intergovernmental bodies, may present proposals for changes to mandated programmes and activities for consideration and approval by such bodies,

Noting also that Member States can present proposals for changes to mandated programmes and activities in the context of the relevant negotiations,

Reaffirming its decision that savings in the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997 will not affect the full implementation of mandated programmes and activities,

Having considered the interim report of the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, through the Advisory Committee, a report containing proposals for achieving savings as called for in resolution 50/214 in the manner indicated in paragraph 16 of the report of the Advisory Committee, no later than 1 September 1996;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that, until the above-mentioned report is considered by the General Assembly, all mandated programmes and activities are implemented in full;

4. Notes that the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997 was adopted in resolution 50/214 under unique circumstances and, as such, does not constitute a precedent;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that productivity gains will not have a negative impact on his obligations, under Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations, to recruit staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible, even on a temporary basis;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General not to take any measures that do not respect the prerogatives of the General Assembly;

7. Decides to revert to this question at its fifty-first session upon receipt of the report of the Secretary-General.

General Assembly resolution 50/230

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/842/Add.3) without vote, 31 May (meeting 64); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.61); agenda item 116.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 56-58, 60-64; plenary 120.

Explaining the position of the Group of 77 developing countries and China in the Fifth Committee, Costa Rica acknowledged the fundamental importance of the budget process, as approved by the Assembly in its 1986 resolution 41/213 [YUN 1986, p. 1024] on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations, and that Member States could propose changes to mandated programmes and activities only in the context of intergovernmental negotiations. Paragraph 5 of resolution 50/230 implied that the Secretariat would maintain existing hiring practices, including the hiring of short-term personnel, which meant that the principle of equitable geographical distribution would be guaranteed. The Fifth Committee, Costa Rica said, had recognized that the 1996-1997 programme budget did not constitute a precedent; it hoped that budget proposals for the following biennium would adhere to the guidelines of resolution 41/213.

Cost of additional mandates

In the course of 1996, subsequent to approving the 1996-1997 programme budget, the General Assembly adopted additional mandates giving rise to extra requirements in respect of UN operations in El Salvador, Guatemala and Haiti (see PART ONE, Chapter III) and for the International Commission of Inquiry for Rwanda (see PART ONE, Chapter II). For those additional mandates, the Assembly approved a commitment authority of $28.7 million net of staff assessment, an amount which was later reduced to $25.3 million. Additional requirements for the 1997 sessions of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (see PART THREE, Chapter VII), for which the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General in June to enter into commitments up to $5.5 million, were estimated at $3.1 million. The total additional costs for those various activities, amounting to $30.9 million (including $2.5 million for staff assessment), were to be absorbed from savings of $60.1 million resulting from more favourable exchange rates than anticipated.

Report of Secretary-General (May). In response to requests of the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General reported [A/C.5/50/67] on 14 May that commitments in respect of new mandates to be carried out in El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti and Rwanda totalled $24.7 million. In the case of the UN Office of Verification in El Salvador, the UN Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala and the UN share of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, the General Assembly mandated that required activities be implemented from within existing resources. The Secretary-General was requested to submit proposals on possible means of absorbing the cost of the new mandates within the 1996-1997 programme budget, notwithstanding his written statements that extra funding would be required and ACABQ's opinion that he could not reasonably be expected to absorb the entire amounts in question. At the same time, the Fifth Committee had reaffirmed that the Secretary-General had no authority to curtail or terminate mandated programmes and activities.

In his May report, the Secretary-General once more examined the possibilities for absorption. To provide him with suggestions for changes in mandated programmes and activities that might release resources for reallocation to support the new mandates, the General Assembly President had convened two meetings with representatives of Member States, at which divergent views were expressed. On the one hand, it was stressed that the Secretary-General had no authority to reduce mandated activities; on the other, some suggestions were made regarding possible reductions in conference-servicing and travel costs, public information, subventions, and intergovernmental and Secretariat structures. It was apparent, the Secretary-General noted, that there was no agreement on the question of additional resources for new activities.

He concluded that the ability to absorb new programme mandates during the biennium should be considered within the general perspective of certain budget figures: initial budget proposals incorporating a reduction of $98 million; subsequent additional reductions mandated by the Assembly amounting to $154 million; and new mandates requiring an additional $120 million over the biennium.

Efforts continued to be made to identify efficiencies that might increase productivity, but it was unlikely that the efficiency reviews being conducted would yield savings in excess of the total required reduction of $154 million, the Secretary-General stated. Rather, it was anticipated that those savings would mitigate the impact on activities and services. Further, the identification of additional efficiencies and reductions in mandated programmes agreed on by Member States might not have the same effect as the immediate realization of reductions in the 1996-1997 budget. Member States might, therefore, wish to reflect on whether it was feasible for him to meet the objectives of both delivering all mandated programmes and containing expenditure levels within existing resources. In that context, he reiterated that new mandates could be implemented within existing appropriations only if the Assembly were to decide which programmes should be terminated or eliminated. He anticipated that the first performance report on the 1996-1997 budget (see below) would reflect expenditures deriving from the relevant commitment authorities, estimated at $51 million in 1996, and take into account all other relevant factors.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 June, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/231.

Proposals on possible means of absorption of the cost of new mandates within the programme budget for 1996-1997

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the budgetary process as adopted in its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and subsequent relevant resolutions,

Recalling its resolutions 50/214 and 50/215 of 23 December 1995,

Reaffirming also that changes in mandated programmes and activities are the prerogative of the General Assembly,

Recalling its authorizations for the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in 1996 in respect of newly mandated activities in Haiti, Guatemala, El Salvador and Rwanda,

Recalling also its requests that the Secretary-General provide a report, no later than 15 May 1996, on possible means of absorption of the related costs within the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997,

Recognizing that the expenditures relating to the newly mandated activities in Haiti, Guatemala, El Salvador and Rwanda are extraordinary in nature and are governed by the procedures specified in paragraph 11 of annex I to resolution 41/213,

Noting that it has approved commitment authority amounting to 24.7 million United States dollars for activities in Haiti, Guatemala, El Salvador and Rwanda in 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on possible means of absorption,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Notes that the Secretary-General stated in his report that he could not absorb any additional amount beyond the reductions of 154 million dollars required to maintain expenditures within the approved appropriations and that he anticipated that new approved and prospective mandates might require an additional 120 million dollars during the course of the biennium;

3. Reiterates that the authority of the Secretary-General to implement any proposal to change mandated programmes and activities is subject to the prior approval of the General Assembly;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, subject to the full implementation of all mandated programmes and activities as required by its resolution 50/214, to submit a report to the General Assembly no later than 1 September 1996 containing proposals on possible means of absorption in the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997, including, inter alia, in part II thereof and in the area of staff costs where savings might arise from the implementation of the early separation programme during the biennium;

5. Decides to revert to the issue of appropriations in the context of the first performance report;

6. Authorizes the Secretary-General, in responding to the requirements of resolution 50/86 B of 3 April 1996 concerning Haiti, to enter into further commitments of 1,767,300 dollars gross (1,606,200 dollars net of staff assessment) for the period from 1 June to 31 August 1996;

7. Also authorizes the Secretary-General, should the General Assembly decide to extend the mandate of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti beyond 31 August 1996, to enter into commitments up to the end of December 1996 in an amount not exceeding a monthly level of 627,900 dollars gross (567,700 dollars net of staff assessment).

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/842/Add.3) without vote, 31 May (meeting 64); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.66); agenda item 116. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 56-58, 60-64; plenary 120.

In the Fifth Committee, the United States expressed serious reservations about the text, on the grounds that it contained no detailed proposals on how the additional expenditure of $25 million for new activities would be absorbed. It could not accept any measures resulting in an increase in already approved expenditures for 1996-1997; the Secretary-General should therefore propose savings to offset the proposed $25 million expenditure as soon as possible, without waiting until 1 September. The United States would be unable to pay its contributions unless the budget ceiling was respected.

Italy, speaking on behalf of the EU, and supported by Canada, said that, with regard to the United States statement, it should be recalled that all Member States were obliged to pay their contributions in full, on time and without conditions.

Costa Rica, on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, voiced regret that the Fifth Committee had not approved the amounts requested for activities in El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti and Rwanda; it hoped that the necessary appropriations would be approved in the context of the performance report and that in the future, when new expenditures were to be authorized, due account would be taken of their nature. As the Secretary-General had stated, if the Secretariat was to achieve further savings, it would be unable to fulfil its functions, and that was unacceptable.

Report of Secretary-General (August). As requested by the General Assembly in June, the Secretary-General on 28 August presented a report [A/C.5/50/57/Add.1] identifying further savings of $ 14.1 million, as a result of a higher-than-anticipated staff vacancy rate which, he said, would in all likelihood be sustained throughout the biennium. The higher vacancy levels as at the end of July—900 total (466 Professional and 434 General Service staff)—reflected the impact of both the 1995 and 1996 early separation programmes. By freezing the 438 posts vacated as a result of early separations, as well as other vacant posts, higher savings had been realized. Further vacancies were expected to be realized through full use of attrition; strict enforcement of retirement age; a freeze in recruitment, subject to limited exceptions; introduction of a lateral redeployment programme; and, should those measures prove insufficient, the involuntary separation of staff. Additional reductions were anticipated in the areas of travel and consultants, temporary assistance and general operating expenses.

While post reductions had had a direct impact on the delivery of some services and outputs, reductions in non-post items had, in most cases, had an indirect impact, potentially affecting mainly intermediate activities as opposed to final outputs, the Secretary-General noted. It was anticipated that efficiency gains resulting from the review process initiated to improve the Organization's performance (see PART FIVE, Chapter I)—with 400 specific initiatives having been identified so far—would ameliorate in part the effect on programme delivery arising from reductions due to savings measures. Thus, the Assembly requirement that savings not affect the full implementation of mandated programmes and activities would be facilitated as a result of the efficiency review.

ACABQ report (October). The Advisory Committee, in a 9 October report [A/51/7/Add.1], noted that, despite the $14 million in savings as indicated by the Secretary-General, which brought total savings to $154 million in reductions as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 50/214 [YUN 1995, p. 1386], the basic dilemma, though not entirely the Secretary-General's fault, still existed: namely, the need to achieve substantial savings without affecting the full implementation of mandated programmes and activities.

According to the Secretary-General, the Advisory Committee noted, savings were to be achieved through programme changes and staff reductions, while the effect on the quality of programme delivery could be mitigated through efficiency gains. In the opinion of ACABQ, however, the Secretary-General had not substantiated that view and had not adequately addressed a number of specific questions, including those concerning vacancies, their composition and how they had been achieved; the extent of the intergovernmental review; additional mandates; and deferred or postponed programmes.

In its conclusions, ACABQ pointed out that, as a result of the first performance report on the 1996-1997 budget, which was being prepared, the distribution of appropriations among budget sections would be different from that reflected in the Secretary-General's August report. Under the circumstances, it did not consider it necessary for the Assembly to take action on revising appropriations for the time being. Rather, it recommended that the Secretary-General update his estimates in the context of the first performance report and that the Assembly approve revised appropriations at that time.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In his first performance report on the 1996-1997 budget [A/C.5/51/38], formally presented on 5 December 1996, the Secretary-General identified adjustments to the budget owing to variations in the rates of inflation and exchange and in standards assumed in the calculation of the initial appropriations. Those adjustments had yielded a reduction of $5,580,200, for a budget total of $2,602,693,800. The performance report also took into account additional mandates for UN operations in El Salvador, Guatemala and Haiti, and for the International Commission of Inquiry for Rwanda, which the Assembly had approved subsequent to adopting the programme budget. Revised estimated requirements for those additional mandates amounted to $25.3 million net of staff assessment. Extra requirements for the 1997 sessions of the Conference of the Parties to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change—which the Assembly, by resolution 50/115 [YUN 1995, p. 1071], had decided to include in the biennial calendar of conferences and meetings, and for which it had authorized the Secretary-General, in resolution 50/232 of 7 June 1996, to enter into commitments up to $5.5 million—were estimated at $3.1 million, resulting in total additional requirements of $30.9 million, including $2.5 million for staff assessment.

The Secretary-General did not put forward additional changes to his previous proposals for achieving the mandated cost reductions, on the grounds that the assumptions made in his August report remained valid and that there had been no significant developments to warrant further revisions.

ACABQ report (December). Commenting on the first performance report, the Advisory Committee, in an 11 December report [A/51/7/Add.6], noted that the $5.6 million reduction reflected the combined effect of an anticipated savings of $60.1 million, owing to more favourable rates of exchange, which were largely offset by the $30.9 million needed for additional mandates; $3 million related to commitments under the terms of Assembly resolution 50/217 on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses [YUN 1995, p. 1396]; $5.1 million for changes in inflation assumptions; $3.2 million owing to adjustments for standard salary costs; and $12.3 million in connection with recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission (see PART FIVE, Chapter III).

The Advisory Committee pointed out that specific issues raised previously in connection with the Secretary-General's August report—regarding vacancies, the intergovernmental review, additional mandates, and deferred or postponed programmes and activities—remained almost entirely to be answered. Under the circumstances, ACABQ recommended that the Assembly adopt the revised appropriations after those issues had been addressed by the Secretary-General and considered by the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 51/221 A, section IV, approved a net decrease of $5.6 million in appropriations for the 1996-1997 programme budget, as indicated by the Secretary-General.

Other questions relating to the 1996-1997 programme budget

Contingency fund

The Fifth Committee on 17 December considered a report [A/C.5/51/44] of the Secretary-General containing a consolidated statement of all programme budget implications and revised estimates subject to criteria for the use of the contingency fund, as set out in General Assembly resolution 42/211 [YUN 1987, p. 1099]. The consolidated amount of $4,068,800 fell within the available balance of the fund of $19,427,000. The Committee approved the required amounts under the relevant budget sections: $501,000 for crime control; $817,300 for international drug control; and $2,750,500 for the International Seabed Authority.

In resolution 51/221 A, section V, adopted on 18 December, the General Assembly noted that a balance of $15,358,200 remained in the contingency fund, created to accommodate additional expenditures relating to each biennium that were derived from legislative mandates not provided for in the proposed programme budget. The fund had been established by Assembly resolution 41/213 in 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 1024].

Revised estimates resulting from Economic and Social Council decisions

In a 4 November report [A/C.5/51/20], the Secretary-General presented requirements of $1,096,200 resulting from 1996 resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council. Additional amounts of $501,000 and $595,200 were required under the budget sections relating to crime control and international drug control respectively.

The ACABQ Chairman introduced the Committee's oral report on the revised estimates, noting that additional conference-servicing requirements would amount to $110,100. ACABQ recommended that the Fifth Committee note the estimates, on the understanding that additional appropriations that might be necessary would be determined in accordance with contingency fund procedures. In addition, ACABQ believed that certain activities might be of a continuing nature and would therefore need to be integrated into the relevant work programmes under the programme budget for 1998-1999.

The General Assembly, by resolution 51/221 A, section I, of 18 December, took note of the estimates, on the understanding that additional appropriations would be determined in accordance with contingency fund procedures, taking into account the results of the Secretary-General's first performance report [A/C.5/51/38] on the 1996-1997 programme budget.

Subvention to UNIDIR

By a 21 November note [A/C.5/51/33], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly for approval the recommendation of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) for a subvention of $213,000 from the regular UN budget to the Institute's 1997 work programme.

In an oral report to the Fifth Committee, the ACABQ Chairman recommended approval of the subvention. Agreement was reached in informal consultations to take note of the Secretary-General's note and the ACABQ recommendation. The Assembly accordingly approved the subvention in resolution 51/221 A, section II, of 18 December.

Before the Fifth Committee adopted its decision, the United States said it had hoped to wean UNIDIR from its subventions, but had been persuaded that mid-biennium was not the appropriate time; nevertheless, it would welcome some indication of that in the budget resolution.

International Seabed Authority

By a 4 November note [A/C.5/51/21], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the budget for the International Seabed Authority, as approved by the Authority, totalling $4,150,500 for 1997. Of that amount, $2,750,500 was to cover administrative expenses of the Authority secretariat, and $1,400,000 was for conference-servicing costs. According to Assembly resolution 48/263 [YUN 1994, p. 130], the Authority's administrative expenses were to be met through a subvention to be charged to the regular UN budget until the end of the year following the year during which the Agreement relating to the implementation of Part XI of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 entered into force. According to the Secretary-General, it was anticipated that the amount indicated for conference services could be provided from within the overall resources available under the programme budget.

In a report of 15 November [A/51/7/Add.2], ACABQ noted that the Agreement entered into force on 28 July 1996 (see PART FOUR, Chapter IV) and, therefore, 1997 would be the last year in which the Authority's budget would be funded from the UN budget. The Advisory Committee recommended approval of $2,750,500 for the Authority's administrative expenses in 1997. With regard to conference-servicing costs, ACABQ reported that the schedule of meetings for 1996-1997 provided for four weeks of conference services for the Authority in 1997.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/221 A, section III.

International Seabed Authority

[The General Assembly . . .]

Recalling its resolution 48/263 of 28 July 1994, in which it decided to fund the administrative expenses of the International Seabed Authority until the end of the year following the year during which the Agreement relating to the implementation of Part XI of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 entered into force,

Recalling also its resolution 50/214 of 23 December 1995, in which it made provision for the budget of the Authority for 1996,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the budget of the Authority for 1997,

1. Approves the recommendation thereon of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report;

2. Requests the International Seabed Authority to take all necessary action to ensure that its budget for 1997 is implemented with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

3. Authorizes the Secretary-General to provide conference services for the meetings of the Authority to be held from 17 to 28 March and from 18 to 29 August 1997 from the resources available under section 26E (Conference services) of the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997;

4. Decides to make a provision of 2,750,500 dollars for the Authority for its administrative expenses in 1997 under section 33 (International Seabed Authority) of the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997;

5. Decides also that the provision for 1997 should be charged to the contingency fund;

General Assembly resolution 51/221 A, section III

18 December 1996 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/750) without vote, 17 December (meeting 46); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.39); agenda item 116. Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 7-9, 11-15, 17, 20, 23, 25, 33, 46; plenary 89.

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses

Under certain conditions, the Secretary-General was authorized by the General Assembly, in biennial resolutions, to incur expenditures for activities of an urgent nature, without reverting to the Assembly for approval. In a November 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 1396], the Secretary-General had recommended that his commitment authority be increased to $7 million for activities related to peace and security, and that he be granted authority to incur expenditures up to $3 million, without the prior concurrence of ACABQ, for immediate requirements of the start-up phase of peacekeeping operations or for unforeseen extensions of mandates.

ACABQ, in a 12 March 1996 report [A/50/7/Add.14], stated there was not sufficient justification for changing the current procedures for meeting expenses to implement unforeseen activities, as total peacekeeping expenditures appeared to have peaked in 1994-1995 at $3.2 billion, while $1.5 billion was forecast for 1996. The Advisory Committee also pointed out that the biennial Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses had been applied in the past to a number of activities that were not unforeseen, but of an ongoing nature. Stressing that proper planning was essential with regard to the management of the Secretary-General's authority, and that the Advisory Committee was in session for most of and available throughout the year, ACABQ believed that the level of commitment authority should remain at $5 million, as the Assembly had authorized in resolution 50/217 [YUN 1995, p. 1396]. The Committee recommended, however, that the amounts to be authorized for immediate requirements of the start-up phase of peacekeeping operations would revert to the relevant peacekeeping budget when commitment authority or approval was given by the Advisory Committee or the Assembly, thus replenishing the level of commitment authority available to the Secretary-General. On a related matter, the Advisory Committee stated, the Secretary-General might wish to review the terms of resolution 50/217 under which he was authorized to enter into certain commitments for the International Court of Justice (ICJ).

After informal consultations, the Fifth Committee recommended that the Assembly defer consideration of the matter until the second part of its resumed fiftieth session, in May. The Assembly followed that recommendation in decision 50/480 A of 11 April.

Again on the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly, by decision 50/480 B of 17 September, deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's November 1995 report until its fifty-first session, as well as of reports on construction projects in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, and Bangkok, Thailand [A/C.5/50/17], and on special representatives, envoys and related positions [A/C.5/50/72].

In his first performance report [A/C.5/51/38] on the 1996-1997 programme budget, the Secretary-General informed the Fifth Committee that, under resolution 50/217 on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, he had entered into commitments totalling $3,010,600, of which $2,852,800 was for activities he had certified as relating to the maintenance of peace and security; $111,300 for commitments certified by the ICJ President as relating to unforeseen Court expenses; and $46,500 for the UN share in the financing of inter-organizational security measures.

With regard to the $2.8 million relating to the maintenance of peace and security, ACABQ, in an 11 December report [A/51/7/Add.6], expressed the view that when requirements resulted from recourse to the provisions of the Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, it should be incumbent upon the Secretary-General to make appropriate budgetary proposals if such requirements were later deemed to be of a continuing nature. As for the additional requirements of $46,500 for inter-organizational security measures, ACABQ pointed out that, as an exception to previous resolutions on the subject, resolution 50/217 for the 1996-1997 biennium did not contain provisions that would allow the Secretary-General to authorize such commitments without ACABQ's prior concurrence; the Committee expected that its concurrence would be requested by the Secretary-General in respect of all 1996-1997 requirements for such measures.

Programme budget outline for 1998-1999

Report of Secretary-General. In an August report [A/51/289], the Secretary-General presented a proposed programme budget outline for 1998-1999, which contained preliminary estimates of resources needed to accommodate the proposed programme of activities; an indication of priorities; an outline of real—positive or negative—growth, compared with the previous budget; and the size of the contingency fund expressed as a percentage of the overall level of resources. Preliminary estimates for the biennium amounted to $2,429.4 million, expressed at 1996-1997 rates; if recosted at 1998-1999 prices, the level of resources was expected to be around $2,559 million.

The Secretary-General recalled that, in the proposed programme budget for 1996-1997, new posts were not fully funded, but were costed at 50 per cent at the Professional level and 65 per cent in the General Service category. Full biennial provision in 1998-1999 for those partially funded posts would require an additional $7 million; on the other hand, a provision of $8 million relating to one-time costs in 1996-1997 would not be required.

Intensified efforts for increased productivity, accompanied by streamlined structures and work processes, resulted in reductions in the 1996-1997 budget and were expected to lead to reduced requirements in the long run. In the circumstances, a reduction of $204.7 million, including the deletion of some 1,000 posts, could be anticipated. With the maintenance of a 6.4 per cent vacancy rate, as budgeted for 1996-1997, the average number of posts occupied in 1998-1999 would be around 8,500.

In the proposed programme budget for 1996-1997, no provision was made for the extension of existing special missions or for the potential establishment of new ones, which had been traditionally secured through additional appropriations approved by the General Assembly. In the light of the decisions taken by the Assembly in 1996 in that regard, it appeared advisable, the Secretary-General said, to include a provision in the outline. While appropriations for 1996-1997 included $15 million for special missions, an additional $70 million was included in the preliminary estimate for 1998-1999, for a total of $85 million.

Changes in estimated resources also reflected provisions on a net rather than gross basis for the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) and its secretariat, the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) and its secretariat, and the services provided by the United Nations at the Vienna International Centre. Such changes in presentation, the Secretary-General stated, reflected more accurately the true level of expenditures and would lead to a reduction of $43.2 million.

The Secretary-General said he was confident that the programme priorities reflected in the proposed medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001 (see below) could be pursued in 1998-1999 within the overall level of resources as outlined. As was the case with the 1996-1997 budget, the 1998-1999 programme budget would be subject to the most intense scrutiny within the Secretariat.

The preliminary estimate for 1998-1999 represented a reduction of $178.9 million, or 6.9 per cent, as compared with the initial appropriations for 1996-1997.

As to the size of the contingency fund, the Secretary-General noted that it was set at 0.75 per cent of the overall level of resources. It had proved to be adequate to accommodate additional expenditures derived from legislative mandates not provided for in the proposed programme budget. In the first year of the 1996-1997 biennium, the level of drawdown against the fund, which for 1996-1997 was set at $20.6 million, had so far been $1.1 million. The Secretary-

General recommended that the level be set at 0.25 per cent for the 1998-1999 biennium, representing $6 million.

Report of CPC. The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) discussed the proposed programme budget outline in September. Taking note of the preliminary estimates, the breakdown by parts of the budget and the proposed size of the contingency fund, CPC recommended [A/51/16 (Part II)] that the Assembly give further consideration to all the elements in the outline, taking into account divergent views of Member States as reflected in the CPC discussion.

Report of ACABQ. The Advisory Committee, in an 11 December report [A/51/720], pointed out that the Secretary-General's August report had attempted to change existing methodology and practice in a number of areas; that had not been fully explained and had made it difficult for the Committee to arrive at definitive recommendations without further policy proposals from the Secretary-General and guidance from the General Assembly. Moreover, some projections appeared arbitrary and lacked adequate justification.

With regard to the Secretary-General's preliminary estimates of $2,559 million, ACABQ said they could be recosted at the latest rates for 1998-1999, reducing the total to $2,498.5 million. As to his proposal to include an amount of $85 million for the continuation of existing special missions or for the establishment of new ones in the 1998-1999 budget, the Advisory Committee noted that additional appropriations for such purposes had traditionally been secured through Assembly vote; under the circumstances, the Committee had not pronounced itself on the issue for the time being, but requested that the Secretary-General present policy proposals prior to his proposed programme budget. It also requested him to detail implications of his proposal to change the presentation of the budgets of ICSC and JIU.

As to the proposed deletion of 1,000 posts, ACABQ pointed out that the bulk of them had been kept vacant and were already unfunded and, therefore, very little resources would be released. It also noted that the Secretary-General's representatives had not been able to justify the level of resources to be realized through intensified efforts for increased productivity, streamlined structures and work processes that had been pursued on a sustained basis. Despite several requests, ACABQ had not been provided with a breakdown of the items comprising the anticipated savings of $204.7 million. It requested that the Assembly be provided with the specific components of further reductions, as well as an explanation of their practical implications on mandated programmes.

Noting that the Secretary-General had stated that the one-time provision of $8 million in the 1996-1997 budget—for the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII) and for equipment for the UN Department of Administration and Management—would not be required in 1998-1999, ACABQ pointed out that expenditures for equipment as well as for conferences, while non-recurrent for a specific biennium, would invariably reappear in another; every budget contained a non-recurrent element and it was unrealistic not to factor that into the budget outline.

With regard to the proposal to lower the level of the contingency fund to 0.25 per cent of overall resources for 1998-1999, the Advisory Committee questioned the validity of using the experience of only the first year of the 1996-1997 biennium, as the Secretary-General had done in his report, and recommended that the original level of 0.75 per cent be maintained.

ACABQ further pointed out that the Secretary-General had not addressed the impact on the level of resources of activities that had been curtailed, deferred or postponed during 1996-1997; it was especially concerned at the impact of reduction of resources for construction, alteration, improvement and maintenance, and requested that those issues be taken up in the context of the proposed 1998-1999 programme budget as a matter of urgency.

Based on its observations, the Advisory Committee recommended that the Assembly take note of the proposed budget outline, requesting the Secretary-General at the same time to address certain questions that it considered of immediate relevance, including: rates of exchange and inflation used in the outline; outputs deferred, postponed or curtailed; a breakdown of the anticipated overall reduction in resources of $204.7 million and of activities related to the $8 million provision for one-time costs; amounts related to the proposed 6.4 per cent vacancy rate; and the impact of activities approved in 1996-1997 and continuing in 1998-1999.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/220.

Proposed programme budget outline for the biennium 1998-1999

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, in which it requested the Secretary-General to submit in off-budget years an outline of the proposed programme budget for the following biennium,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, the related recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Reaffirms that the outline of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 shall contain an indication of:

(a) A preliminary estimate of resources to accommodate the proposed programme of activities during the biennium;

(b) Priorities reflecting general trends of a broad sectoral nature;

(c) Real growth, positive or negative, compared with the previous budget;

(d) The size of the contingency fund expressed as a percentage of the overall level of resources;

2. Also reaffirms that the outline should provide a greater level of predictability of resources required for the following biennium, promote a greater involvement of Member States in the budgetary process and thereby facilitate the broadest possible agreement on the programme budget;

3. Takes note of the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to prepare his proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 on the basis of a total preliminary estimate of 2,512 million United States dollars at initial 1996-1997 rates, re-costed to 2,480 million dollars at revised 1996-1997 rates;

5. Decides that the contingency fund shall be set at the level of 0.75 per cent of the preliminary estimate at 1998-1999 rates, namely at 19 million dollars;

6. Also decides that the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 shall contain provisions for recosting on the basis of the existing methodology;

7. Further decides that the preliminary estimate of resources for the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 does not include a provision for special missions for which there are no legislative mandates;

8. Decides that the priorities for the biennium 1998-1999 are the following:

(a) Maintenance of international peace and security;

(b) Promotion of sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences;

(c) Development of Africa;

(d) Promotion of human rights;

(e) Effective coordination of humanitarian assistance efforts;

(f) Promotion of justice and international law;

(g) Disarmament;

(h) Drug control, crime prevention and combating international terrorism in all its forms and manifestations;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, in the context of his proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, the following information:

(a) Outputs deferred, postponed or curtailed in 1996-1997 and their disposition in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999;

(b) Number of posts for the biennium by section and by category;

(c) Proposed vacancy rate for the Professional and the General Service categories for budgetary purposes;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive policy paper which will examine all issues related to the question of all additional expenditures referred to in paragraphs 10 and 11 of annex I to General Assembly resolution 41/213, including those relating to the maintenance of peace and security, inflation and currency fluctuation, and to submit that report to the Assembly, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, no later than 31 May 1997 with a view to finding a comprehensive solution to such questions.

18 December 1996 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/751) without vote, 18 December (meeting 47); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.40), orally revised; agenda item 112.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 42, 43, 46, 47; plenary 89.

In the light of the adoption of the text by the Fifth Committee, Costa Rica withdrew a draft resolution [A/C.5/51/L.31] that it had introduced on behalf of the Member States of the Group of 77 and China. By the withdrawn text, the Assembly, among other provisions, would have invited the Secretary-General to prepare his proposed programme budget for 1998-1999 on the basis of the total preliminary estimate of $2,608,274,000 at initial 1996-1997 rates, re-costed to $2,574,366,000 at revised 1996-1997 rates. It would have noted that the proposed provision of $85 million for special missions represented a serious departure from budgetary practice, and decided that no provision for mandates yet to be approved should be included in the budget outline.

Explaining its position in plenary, Costa Rica, speaking also on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, said they had joined in the consensus despite their belief that the Assembly should approve preliminary estimates of $2.608 billion, i.e., at the same level as the allocations for 1996-1997. They considered it fundamental that the decisions on the outline be fully in line with Assembly resolution 41/213 [YUN 1986, p. 1024] on the review of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations, which set out criteria for the budget process; consequently, they believed that the draft programme budget for 1998-1999 should not include budgetary provisions for non-mandated activities. They also hoped that activities which had been suspended or cancelled for the next biennium would be fully reflected in the Secretary-General's budgetary requests for the following biennium.

Ireland, speaking on behalf of the EU, regretted that it had not been possible to include as part of the budget outline the contingency provision for special missions, in order to provide for their assured funding. The EU believed that the Secretary-General's proposal represented a potentially useful innovation and looked forward to his comprehensive policy paper on the issue. The preliminary estimate of resources approved by the Assembly, higher than the level of resources the Secretary-General had requested, provided him with the potential to absorb costs up to $70 million, relating to new and unforeseen mandates in the area of international peace and security; the EU expected him to take due account of that additional capacity when framing his programme budget. In terms of additional costs arising beyond that, the provisions of resolution 41/213 clearly applied.

Similarly, Australia, speaking also on behalf of Canada and New Zealand, believed that the proposal to include a provision for special missions represented a welcome effort to address the fact that significant charges to the regular budget were not included in the initial appropriations, a situation which was not in the best interest of sound budgetary planning and control.

India expected that the proposed 1998-1999 budget would adhere strictly to the resolution just adopted. It had joined the consensus on the resolution on the understanding that the proposed budget would not include any provision for special missions which had no legislative mandates until the Assembly had found a comprehensive solution to the problem of all additional expenditures. Current budgetary procedures made adequate provision for meeting such expenditures; in fact, the Assembly had, for that reason, disallowed a proposal by the Secretary-General for special missions in the 1994-1995 budget.

Egypt shared the view that the 1998-1999 programme budget should be based on the resolution just adopted.

Although joining the consensus, Cuba regretted that the resolution, which was fully consistent with the budget process established in resolution 41/213, did not provide for a higher level of resources for the Secretariat, especially in view of the negative impact of savings measures on the Organization's functioning. However, Cuba welcomed the recognition in paragraph 6 that the existing methodology for recosting should be maintained. It also attached great importance to the request for information in paragraph 9 and hoped that the Secretary-General would take into account, in his proposed 1998-1999 programme budget, the negative impact of the savings measures on activities and programmes approved by the Assembly.

Contributions

Unpaid assessed contributions from Member States to the UN budget totalled $2.2 billion at the end of 1996, aggravating the serious financial situation of the Organization. Although a slight decrease from the all-time high of $2.3 billion at the end of 1995, the level of unpaid contributions was $400 million higher than in 1994 and $600 million higher than in 1993. Outstanding contributions to the regular budget totalled $511 million in 1996, compared to $564 million at the end of the previous year.

On the other hand, 1996 was the first year for some time during which the amount of regular budget collections significantly exceeded new assessments. The number of Member States that had paid their regular budget assessments in full also increased, to 98, as compared to 94 at the end of 1995 and 75 at the end of 1994. The number of countries not making any payment to the regular budget fell to 12, against 22 in 1995 and 39 in 1994. The number of those owing more than their 1996 assessment at the end of the year was reduced to 61, compared to 71 in the previous year and 75 in 1994.

Aggregate peacekeeping assessments outstanding at the end of 1996 totalled $1.6 billion, against $1.7 billion a year earlier—the first reduction in outstanding peacekeeping assessments since 1991. The overall improvement was the result of a decrease of over $200 million in amounts outstanding for Member States other than the United States, and for the latter an increase of over $110 million.

Assessments

Special session of Committee on Contributions. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/207 A [YUN 1995, p. 1398], a special session of the Committee on Contributions was convened (New York, 26 February-1 March 1996) [A/50/11/Add.1 & Corr.1] to consider representations from Member States with respect to the application of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations, which stipulates that a Member shall lose its vote in the Assembly if the amount of its arrears equals or exceeds the amount of contributions due from it for the preceding two full years; nevertheless, the Assembly may permit such a Member to vote if it is satisfied that the failure to pay is due to conditions beyond the Member's control.

During its discussion of general issues, the Committee agreed that, as a technical body, its main task in advising the Assembly on action to be taken with regard to the application of Article 19 was to consider whether the failure of a particular Member State to pay the amount needed to avoid the loss of the right to vote was due to conditions beyond its control.

The Committee noted that the Assembly had waived the application of Article 19 in relatively few cases and that, generally, such waivers had been short and were followed by the receipt of the necessary minimum payments within a limited time. The Committee stressed the need to apply a stringent standard to requests under Article 19 for permission to vote. It also emphasized the importance of the obligation to pay all assessed contributions in full and on time.

The Committee had before it written representations from the Dominican Republic, Georgia, Iraq, Latvia, Liberia, the Republic of Moldova, Rwanda, Tajikistan and Yugoslavia. It received and granted requests for oral representations from Georgia, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Liberia and Tajikistan. In addition, the Secretariat provided statistical data on Member States whose requests were being considered. The Committee received a written representation from the Comoros on the last day of its special session and, consequently, was unable to consider it.

The Committee noted that Azerbaijan and Turkmenistan, although mentioned in resolution 50/207 A as having requested that any arrears be treated as attributable to conditions beyond their control, had not made written or oral representations, but had meanwhile made payments sufficient to avoid the application of Article 19 in 1996. No representation had been received from Sao Tome and Principe, which had also been mentioned in resolution 50/207 A; therefore, the Committee was not in a position to advise the Assembly with regard to application of Article 19 in that case.

Turning to the individual countries that had submitted representations, the Committee, with regard to the Dominican Republic, recognized that country's burdens resulting from the sanctions against Haiti, but concluded that the information available did not provide a basis on which it could advise the Assembly that the Dominican Republic's failure to pay the minimum amount required to avoid the loss of its vote under Article 19 was due to conditions beyond its control. As to the country's request that the Assembly waive the application of Article 19, pending a decision by the Security Council regarding compensation under Article 50 of the Charter—which specifies that a State, which finds itself confronted with special economic problems arising from preventive or enforcement measures taken by the Council against another State, has the right to consult the Council with regard to a solution of those problems—the Committee again stressed that the question of compensation under Article 50 was beyond its competence.

The Committee noted with appreciation Georgia's declared intention, despite severe problems, to make within a few months the minimum payment necessary to regain the right to vote. It recalled that the Assembly had, on a number of occasions, temporarily waived the application of Article 19 for countries in similar situations.

In the case of Iraq, which had indicated that it was unable to pay its contributions owing to the imposition of comprehensive sanctions and the freezing of its foreign assets, Committee members continued to express divergent views and the Committee was thus unable to recommend action to the Assembly.

Having heard an oral representation by Kyrgyzstan, which, in spite of its serious financial difficulties, had made the necessary payment to avoid the application of Article 19, but foresaw future problems and alluded to the possible submission of a multi-year plan for paying its arrears, the Committee noted that the case did not fall under Article 19 and, therefore, no action was required. A similar conclusion was reached in the case of the Republic of Moldova.

Latvia proposed a payment plan under which it estimated that it would settle its arrears within seven years. The Committee did not reach agreement on a recommendation to the Assembly that Latvia's failure to pay the necessary amount to avoid application of Article 19 was due to conditions beyond its control.

The Committee agreed, however, that the failure of Liberia and Rwanda to pay the necessary amounts was due to conditions beyond their control; it therefore recommended that they be permitted to vote for a limited time period, with the waiver extending through the fifty-first Assembly session, subject to review before any further extension.

Divergent views were expressed in the case of Tajikistan, and the Committee was unable to recommend any action. It agreed, however, that the country's situation should be reviewed at its fifty-sixth session (see below) on the basis of new information that might be available.

The Committee decided to defer action on Yugoslavia until such time as the pending succession issues with respect to its representation in the United Nations had been resolved.

As a number of States, in their representations before the Committee, indicated their commitment to pay their arrears and included proposals to do so over a number of years, the Committee discussed the question of multi-year payment plans as a means of reducing the problem of arrears. It noted that several UN organizations had made formal provision for such payment plans with the specific approval of their governing bodies. The Committee recognized that such payment plans could prove valuable in reducing the number of Members falling under the provisions of Article 19, as well as in improving the financial situation of the Organization. It also recognized, however, that the question of payment plans and terms and conditions to be applied to them went beyond its terms of reference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 April, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/207 B.

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 50/207 A of 23 December 1995,

Noting the number of requests by Member States to avoid the application of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee on Contributions on its special session held at Headquarters from 26 February to 1 March 1996;

2. Decides that the failure of Liberia and Rwanda to pay the minimum amount necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations is due to conditions beyond their control and that, accordingly, they shall be permitted to vote through the fifty-first session of the General Assembly and that any extension shall be subject to review by the Committee on Contributions;

3. Welcomes the intention of Georgia to make within a few months the minimum payment necessary to regain its right to vote and to pay its debt completely within the next three years;

4. Decides, pending receipt of this minimum payment, to permit Georgia to vote through the fiftieth session of the General Assembly;

5. Takes note of paragraph 40 of the report of the Committee on Contributions and of the new information presented to the General Assembly regarding the situation in Tajikistan, which was not available to the Committee on Contributions at its special session;

6. Decides that the failure of Tajikistan to pay the minimum amount necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 of the Charter is due to conditions beyond its control and that, accordingly, it shall be permitted to vote through the fifty-first session of the General Assembly and that any extension shall be subject to review by the Committee on Contributions;

7. Notes that the Committee on Contributions was unable to consider the representation from the Comoros during its special session;

8. Requests the Committee on Contributions to consider the representation from the Comoros at its fifty-sixth session and to report thereon to the General Assembly;

9. Decides that, pending consideration of that report by the General Assembly and as an exceptional measure, the Comoros should be permitted to vote through the main part of the fifty-first session of the Assembly;

10. Reaffirms the obligation of Member States under Article 17 of the Charter to bear the expenses of the Organization as apportioned by the General Assembly;

11. Requests the Committee on Contributions to review the procedural aspects of consideration of requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter and to convey its observations thereon to the General Assembly not later than the end of the fifty-first session of the Assembly;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the earliest possible notification of Member States liable to fall under the provisions of Article 19 of the Charter in the following year;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to inform the President of the General Assembly of Member States subject to the provisions of Article 19 of the Charter as soon as possible after 1 January of each year, and also to ensure that a list of such Member States is made available to Member States at least seven days in advance of the first formal meeting of the General Assembly in each year.

General Assembly resolution 50/207 B

11 April 1996 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/843/Add.1) without vote, 4 April (meeting 55); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.38), orally revised; agenda item 120.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 48, 49, 55; plenary 104.

Mexico, explaining its position, said it had not opposed the consensus on exempting the countries indicated in the draft resolution; nevertheless, it was paradoxical that the Assembly should grant so many exemptions in such a serious payment crisis as that being experienced by the Organization. The granting of such exemptions, without uniform or defined criteria and without payment plans to meet the debts, ran counter to the spirit of Article 19.

Similarly, Singapore pointed to the danger of granting large numbers of waivers to the application of Article 19—the sole mechanism to ensure payment of assessed contributions. Each time a Member State was exempted from its provisions, the United Nations was brought one step closer to financial ruin. Exemptions should be granted only in truly exceptional circumstances; they should not become commonplace or a convenient way out of paying assessed contributions.

Regular annual session of Committee on Contributions. The fifty-sixth session of the Committee on Contributions was held in New York from 10 to 28 June 1996 [A/50/11/Add.2]. As requested by the General Assembly in April, the Committee held a general discussion on questions of procedure, including the need to make timely recommendations or decisions, based on adequate information, with respect to requests under Article 19 of the Charter for permission to vote. The Committee decided to continue its review of the question in 1997 and to report to the Assembly before the end of the fifty-first session.

The Committee took up the question of the Comoros, which it had not been able to consider at its special session due to time constraints. The Committee had before it two notes verbales, dated 23 February and 10 June, from the Comoros to the Secretary-General. Additional information, including statistical data, was provided by the UN Secretariat. The Committee agreed that, as a result of the extraordinary circumstances related to the mercenary invasion in 1995, the failure of the Comoros to pay the amount necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 was attributable to conditions beyond its control. The Committee, therefore, recommended to the Assembly that the Comoros be permitted to vote through the fifty-first session and that that waiver be subject to review before any further extension. The Committee suggested that the Assembly might wish to take into account any further indications concerning the Comoros' intention to resume payments of its assessed contributions.

In accordance with Assembly decision 50/471 B [YUN 1995, p. 1397], the Committee reconsidered the inclusion of Turkey in the list of countries falling under paragraph 2 of resolution 48/223 B on assessments [YUN 1993, p. 1204], in which the Assembly had stipulated that in phasing out the scheme of limits, the allocation of additional points resulting therefrom to developing countries benefiting from its application should be limited to 15 per cent of the effect of the phase-out. The Committee in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1397] had not been able to find grounds for adjusting Turkey's rate of assessment for 1995-1997. In reconsidering the matter, the Committee had before it a letter from Turkey to its Chairman dated 20 May 1996. Turkey emphasized that the purpose of paragraph 2 of resolution 48/223 B was to provide some relief to developing countries facing a sharp increase in their contributions during the period 1995-1997, and that previous scales were not and should not be the issue. After reviewing the question again, the Committee concluded that the Assembly had established three criteria to determine which Member States would benefit from the 15 per cent limitation on the effect of the phasing out of the scheme of limits on the scale of assessments for 1995-1997: that the Member State was a developing country; that its rate of assessment for 1995-1997 would be increased as a result of the phasing out of the scheme of limits; and that the Member State was benefiting from the scheme of limits under the scale of assessments for 1992-1994. Accordingly, while the Committee sympathized with Turkey's concerns about the increase in its rate of assessment, it found no basis to conclude that that rate should be adjusted during 1995-1997.

The Committee continued its comprehensive review of all aspects of the methodology for determining the scale of assessments and, in doing so, also considered the various proposals, suggestions and recommendations contained in the 1995 report of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the Implementation of the Principle of Capacity to Pay [YUN 1995, p. 1399]. Discussing a number of general issues related to the scale, the Committee recognized that part of its mandate was to promote stability in the scale methodology; at the same time, the Committee agreed that stability should not imply rigidity, since future changes, such as evolving economic trends, or changes in the comparability, reliability and availability of data, might call for further adjustments.

The Committee also discussed the extent and timing of proposed changes in the scale methodology. While some members argued for the earliest possible implementation of measures that would bring the scale more closely into line with Member States' current capacity to pay, others preferred a phased implementation of any alterations proposed to the methodology. The Committee understood that its recommendations on individual elements of the methodology were made in the context of a thorough and comprehensive review of all aspects, rather than in the context of any specific scale, and that the Assembly, when mandating a new scale, would take into account the possible interactions between individual elements.

The Committee recalled that the Assembly had repeatedly reaffirmed Member States' capacity to pay as the fundamental criterion for apportioning the Organization's expenses, and that comparative estimates of national income would appear prima facie to be the fairest guide to measuring such capacity, subject to adjustments for factors identified by the Assembly. Some members emphasized that the number and complexity of such adjustments were in conflict with the goal of a simpler and more transparent scale methodology, and that, in some cases, the effects of such adjustments resulted in large deviations from basic income measures. Others held opposite views, stating that many of those adjustments brought fairness and equity to the scale of assessments and prevented anomalous fluctuations in the rates of a large number of Member States; in their opinion, the cumulative effect of such adjustments was minimal in relation to Member States' capacity to pay. The Committee agreed that those and other general issues should continue to be discussed at future sessions.

Recalling that the Working Group had recommended the use of estimates of gross national product (GNP) as a first approximation of capacity to pay, based on data reliability, availability, comparability and simplicity, the Committee noted that, while the currently used measurement, i.e., net national income (NNI), might in principle be a better guide to measuring capacity to pay, it involved an adjustment to GNP for depreciation, for which estimates were generally less reliable and comparable, as they were often based on varying assumptions about the rate at which the capital stock was depleted. Accordingly, the Committee recommended that future scales should be based on estimates of GNP.

The Committee recalled that the Working Group had recommended that it address the issue raised by the situation of a number of countries whose economies were formerly centrally planned and other countries that might adopt the 1993 system of national accounts (SNA) in advance of other countries; that might have the result that the GNP estimates for such countries would be inflated relative to those which continued to use the 1968 SNA. The Committee was informed that the question had been considered by the Inter-secretariat Working Group on National Accounts in April 1996. The United Nations, the Statistical Office of the European Communities and the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development were continuing to request their members to provide gross domestic product (GDP)/GNP estimates according to the 1968 SNA until all countries had converted to the 1993 SNA. Accordingly, a study was being undertaken by the GNP Committee of the European Union with a view to establishing a simplified standard procedure for converting GDP/GNP estimates from the 1993 to the 1968 SNA for those countries which had implemented the new system earlier than others. The Committee agreed to keep the question under review, pending the results of that study.

With regard to the base period, the Committee reiterated its view that it should be a multiple of the scale period so that data from some years would not be used more frequently than data from others; in that connection, base periods of three, six and nine years were considered. While some members argued that a three-year base period would have the advantage of providing the most recent, and therefore more realistic, approximation of Member States' current capacity to pay, others felt that longer base periods, such as six or nine years, would reduce excessive volatility in the scale, which was particularly significant with regard to the prospective phasing out of the scheme of limits. Some members considered annual recalculations of the scale as a useful tool for the Committee in keeping under review the evolution of national incomes in successive years. The Committee reiterated that, under its terms of reference, once a scale had been fixed by the Assembly, it should not be subject to a general revision for at least three years, unless it was clear that there had been substantial changes in relative capacities to pay. The Committee also was of the view that, in the long run, the base period should be kept constant in successive scale periods.

As a crucial step in determining Member States' capacity to pay, the Committee emphasized the importance of realistic exchange rates; in that context, it considered comparative per capita income data that had been converted at market exchange rates (MERs) and purchasing power parities (PPPs). The Committee agreed to keep the question of conversion rates under review, including the use of price-adjusted rates of exchange (PAREs); in the meantime, it agreed that MERs should be used for purposes of the scale, except where that caused excessive fluctuations or distortions in the income of some Member States, when PAREs or other appropriate conversion rates should be employed. The Committee also agreed to keep under review the question of criteria for replacing MERs as a conversion factor for the scale. It requested the Secretariat to provide to it in 1997 comprehensive information on the practice of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank in choosing appropriate conversion rates to deal with cases of excessive fluctuations or distortions in the income of Member States.

In considering debt-burden adjustment, another element of the scale, the Committee had before it information from the World Bank on debt stock, principal repayments, the ratio of debt to national income and the ratio of debt service to export earnings for a number of Member States. Some members continued to question the rationale for that adjustment, while others regarded it as a necessary step in determining Member States' capacity to pay. Should the Assembly decide to retain that element of the scale methodology, the Committee agreed that debt information available from the World Bank should be the basis for future calculations to measure debt-adjusted income because of better comparability and consistency. In that event, and notwithstanding the view of some members that the overall level of debt itself constituted a significant burden, the Committee also agreed that the adjustment should be based on data on actual principal repayments, rather than on a proportion of debt stocks, as in the current scale of assessments.

With regard to low per capita income adjustment, the Committee recalled that its original terms of reference had recognized comparative income per head of population as a main factor to be taken into account in order to prevent anomalous assessments resulting from the use of comparative estimates of national income, a principle that had been frequently reaffirmed by the Assembly. The Committee noted that the related adjustment for Member States with per capita incomes below the "threshold" of the world average per capita income remained one of the largest adjustments under the current methodology, and that the cost of the current adjustment, as well as of some alternatives, was shifted to Member States not benefiting from the adjustment in direct proportion to their relative shares of national income; there was also a discontinuity for Member States moving up, between scales, through the adjustment threshold, in contrast to the adjustment formula prior to 1979, which had produced no such discontinuity but had distributed the cost of the adjustment to all Member States. A number of members considered that a return to that practice would involve an unacceptable transfer of costs from high-income to low-income countries. The Committee also discussed a proposal that would apply progressive positive and negative adjustments to national income figures, above as well as below the threshold; in that way, the problem of discontinuity would be overcome. However, some members felt that the proposal as presented would introduce excessive progressivity above the threshold, which would mean an excessive reliance on the contributions of a relatively small number of Member States; others noted that the degree of progressivity could be adjusted in order to yield a more balanced result. The Committee agreed to keep under review the discontinuity experienced by Member States rising, between scales, through the threshold level of per capita income.

The Committee reiterated its agreement with the recommendation of the Working Group that per capita national income be calculated annually and averaged over the base period. Concerning the current floor assessment rate of 0.01 per cent, the Committee agreed that it resulted in a serious departure from the principle of capacity to pay for a number of smaller Member States; in order to apportion their share of the Organization's expenses according to their capacity to pay and reduce the number of countries affected, the Committee recommended that, in future assessment scales, all Member States whose share of adjusted national income was less than the current 0.01 per cent floor should be assessed their actual share of adjusted income, subject to a minimum assessment rate of 0.001 per cent. Consistent with its recommendation that, in future scales, the minimum assessment rate should be set at 0.001 per cent, the Committee recommended carrying the scale to three decimal places, to make it more precise and fairer, especially for Member States with smaller assessment rates.

Under the Committee's terms of reference, it was specified that, if a ceiling was imposed on contributions, it should not be such as seriously to obscure the relation between a nation's contribution and its capacity to pay; for example, the ratio of the 1997 assessment for the one Member State subject to the ceiling to its share of world national income was 91 per cent. The Committee recalled that, by resolution 48/223 B [YUN 1993, p. 1204], the Assembly had decided that individual assessment rates for the least developed countries should not exceed their current level of 0.01 per cent. One member referred to a recent suggestion that the ceiling be reduced; it also suggested that two ceilings be set up, i.e., a higher ceiling for the permanent members of the Security Council and a lower one for other UN Members. A number of members disagreed and considered that the suggestion fell outside the Committee's terms of reference.

The Committee recalled that, as mandated by resolution 48/223 B, the scheme of limits would be completely phased out in connection with the adoption of the scale for 1998-2000. Some members, however, felt strongly that the Assembly should consider the heavy burden on some developing countries that would result from the complete elimination of the scheme.

The Committee agreed that the process of mitigation had nothing to do with the principle of capacity to pay. It noted that the process depended on Member States making points available for distribution and that the number of points distributed in that manner had declined in recent years. Some members considered that the process was essentially political and questioned whether the Committee, as a technical body, should be involved. Others felt that, when available, mitigation points could facilitate the process of agreeing on a scale.

The Committee took note of a report of the Secretary-General which indicated that, at the conclusion of its current session, 20 Member States would be in arrears in the payment of their assessed contributions under Article 19 of the Charter and would have no vote in the Assembly: Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Central African Republic, Chad, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Gambia, Grenada, Guinea, Iraq, Latvia, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Niger, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Yugoslavia. The Committee also noted that five Members were in arrears under Article 19, but had been permitted to vote pursuant to resolution 50/207 B: Georgia, through the fiftieth session; the Comoros, through the main part of the fifty-first session; and Liberia, Rwanda and Tajikistan, through the fifty-first session. The Committee further noted that eight Member States had availed themselves, under resolution 49/19 B [YUN 1994, p. 1353], of the opportunity of paying altogether $2.8 million in contributions in currencies other than United States dollars.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the Fifth Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly, by decision 50/471 C of 17 September, took note of the report of the Committee on Contributions on its June session [A/50/11/Add.2] and deferred consideration of it until its fifty-first session.

Following a discussion in the Fifth Committee, the Assembly, by decision 51/454 A of 18 December, decided to continue its consideration of the agenda item on the scale of assessments as a matter of priority at its resumed fifty-first session, and to approve no later than 31 March 1997 the methodology that would instruct the Committee on Contributions to recommend to the Assembly at its fifty-second (1997) session a scale for the period 1998-2000.

The Fifth Committee postponed a decision on a draft resolution [A/C.5/51/L.21] introduced by Mexico, by which the Committee on Contributions would be asked to recommend to the Assembly a scale for 1998-2000 on the basis of elements on which there appeared to be broad agreement, such as estimates of GNP as a first approximation of capacity to pay and subject to adjustments for factors identified by the Assembly; a statistical base period of six years; uniform exchange rates; the debt adjustment approach used in preparation of the scale of assessments for 1995-1997; a low per capita income allowance formula with a per capita income limit of the average world per capita income for the statistical base period and a gradient of 85 per cent; a floor rate of 0.001 per cent; a ceiling rate of 25 per cent; the phase out of the scheme of limits; and the scale expressed in three decimal places of a percentage point. The Assembly would further decide that in phasing out the scheme of limits, the resulting allocation of additional points to developing countries benefiting from its application should be limited to 15 per cent of the effect of the phase out, and that individual rates for least developed countries should not exceed 0.01 per cent.

Supporting the proposal to defer consideration of the text, Singapore said it should be taken as a basis on which to build consensus before 31 March 1997. When introducing the draft, Mexico noted that on a number of occasions the scale of assessments was at variance with the current financial situation, which derived primarily from the failure of certain Member States to make their financial contributions on time and in full, as well as with the reform of the Organization. Japan hoped that some progress could be achieved on the scale of assessments in the very near future; it also felt that all decisions on the scale should be taken by consensus.

Also on 18 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/212 A, exempting the Comoros from Article 19 of the Charter and allowing it to vote through the fifty-first session.

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 50/207 B of 11 April 1996 concerning the application of Article 19 of the Charter,

1. Notes that the Committee on Contributions will report to the General Assembly on the procedural aspects of the consideration of requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations before the end of its fifty-first session;

2. Endorses the conclusion of the Committee on Contributions that the failure of the Comoros to pay the minimum amount necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 of the Charter was attributable to conditions beyond its control;

3. Decides that, as a result, the Comoros should be permitted to vote through the fifty-first session of the General Assembly and that any extension that may be requested shall be subject to review by the Committee on Contributions.

General Assembly resolution 51/212 A

18 December 1996 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/747) without vote, 17 December (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.25), based on informal consultations; agenda item 119.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 3, 5-9, 44, 46; plenary 89.

Throughout the year, the Secretary-General reported to the President of the Assembly on the payments certain Member States had made to reduce their arrears below the amount specified in Article 19, so that they would continue to be permitted to vote in the Assembly. On 28 February [A/50/888 & Add.1-12], 38 Member States were in arrears under the terms of Article 19. As at 17 September, nine remained below the gross amount owed for the preceding two full years (1994-1995), according to a letter from the Secretary-General of that date [A/51/366]. Of those, five later made the necessary payments, as documented in letters [A/51/366/Add.1-4] between 20 September and 16 October.

Accounts and auditing

On 31 July 1996, the Chairman of the United Nations Board of Auditors transmitted to the General Assembly 14 financial reports and audited financial statements for the biennium 1994-1995, on the United Nations itself [A/51/5, vol. I], on UN peacekeeping operations [A/51/5, vol. II] and on the following UN entities: the International Trade Centre (ITC) [A/51/5, vol. III], the United Nations University (UNU) [A/51/5, vol. IV], the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) [A/51/5/Add.1], the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) [A/51/5/Add.2], the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) [A/51/5/Add.3], the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) [A/51/5/Add.6], the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) [A/51/5/Add.7], the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation (UNHHSF) [A/51/5/Add.8] and the Fund of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) [A/51/5/Add.9]. Also transmitted were Board reports on the accounts of the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees [A/51/5/Add.5], the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) [A/51/5/Add.4] and the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) [A/51/5/Add.10].

Introducing the reports to the Fifth Committee, the Chairman of the Board said it had conducted "horizontal" audits by which selected topics in the areas of programme planning, performance, monitoring, budgetary assumptions, programme budget reporting and internal audit had been examined in most of the 14 organizations and entities concerned. The Board's Audit Operations Committee had maintained a continuing dialogue with the administrations of those organizations and entities and had worked closely with their internal audit services and the Office of Internal Oversight Services. The Committee had also exchanged information on issues of mutual interest with the Joint Inspection Unit.

Turning to some of the Board's main findings and recommendations, the Chairman noted that the Board had qualified its audit opinion on the financial statements of six organizations and on those of the peacekeeping financial statements. In respect of UNDP, UNFPA, UNDCP and UNEP, the Board had been unable to obtain sufficient evidence in the form of audit certificates from Governments and non-governmental organizations to confirm that funds advanced to them for technical cooperation projects had been expended for the purposes intended. The Board had also noted significant growth in the level of expenditures on nationally executed projects and made recommendations for improving auditing arrangements in that area.

The Board had found material uncertainty about the valuation placed on outstanding assessed contributions receivable and had therefore qualified its opinion on the financial statements of the UN peacekeeping operations, since it believed that the realization of a proportion of those assessments was doubtful. The Board recommended that the Administration find appropriate solutions to the valuation placed on outstanding assessed contributions. It was not, however, suggesting that long-outstanding contributions be cancelled. Provision should therefore be made in the accounts for such receivables.

In the case of UNHHSF, the Board qualified its audit opinion on the financial statements because of non-compliance with the format of presentation approved by the General Assembly and the overstatement of income by $1.17 million.

With regard to the accounting standards of the UN system (see below), the Board observed that organizations had generally complied with the common accounting standards in presenting financial statements. Further work needed to be done, however, in some areas, to bring the statements more closely into line with those standards. The main areas for attention included disclosure of valuation of non-expendable property, cash held in non-convertible currencies and disclosure of end-of-service liability for termination benefits.

At the end of the biennium, the Board noted a decline in the liquidity position of the United Nations, UNEP, UNRWA and UNHHSF, which called for more effective working capital management. Furthermore, the Board observed that expenditures had exceeded income in UNICEF by

$5.4 million, in UNDCP by $6.9 million and in UNITAR by $111,585.

On management issues, while the Board saw improvements in overall budgetary control in the United Nations, it also felt that there was a need for more rigorous control over the budgetary performance of trust funds. It noted that budget allotments had been exceeded in UNU, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and UNEP, and recommended that the systems and procedures for budget estimation and budgetary control in those entities be reviewed to ensure that actual expenditures were within allotments.

The Board welcomed the reforms initiated to improve the procurement process (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV), but noted that certain shortcomings persisted. It recommended that more attention be paid to the management of the liquidation of peacekeeping operations (see PART ONE, Chapter I).

As for programme management, the Board noted that self-evaluation of subprogrammes had been declining, and observed deficiencies in project planning and implementation in UNHCR, UNEP, UNRWA, UNHHSF and UNU.

Concerning UNICEF, the Board felt that the inability of many assisted countries to discharge their basic obligations under cooperation agreements cast doubt on whether the organization could achieve its goals of sustainability and capacity-building through its projects. In UNDP and UNFPA, the Board found weaknesses in the way national execution projects were delivered, particularly in the assessment of countries' capacities to undertake such projects.

With regard to budget formulation, the Board found that the United Nations and UNICEF used the most recent available exchange rates to compute standard cost tables and suggested that an exchange rate based on the average of the actual rates of the preceding year would be more accurate, since it would eliminate fluctuations in the monthly rates. In the United Nations, the projection of the inflation rate based on the consumer price index for non-post items should be reviewed, since that index did not represent the price trend of all goods and services procured by the duty stations.

The Board found the effectiveness of the internal audit function in many organizations and entities deficient, owing to inadequate coverage of activities, insufficient staff resources and delays in the implementation of internal audit recommendations.

Among other issues dealt with by the Board in its audits were the overpayment for construction contracts, consultancies, UNICEF policy with regard to doubtful receivables, inter-fund borrowing, expenditures incurred or authorized prior to the receipt of funds, training for peacekeeping personnel involved in procurement, and UNU training of scholars from developing countries.

In a 22 October report [A/51/533], ACABQ submitted its supplementary comments and recommendations. It noted that even though the Board had qualified its opinion on the financial statements of six administrations and on those of the peacekeeping financial statements, it had found that the United Nations and its funds and programmes were generally complying with the accounting standards noted by the General Assembly in resolution 48/216 C [YUN 1993, p. 1208]. Differences had arisen in the application of articles 32 and 33 concerning the treatment of delays in income from assessed and voluntary contributions. Representatives of the Secretary-General had informed the Advisory Committee that the Secretariat did not consider article 32 mandatory. In ACABQ's view, however, regardless of the length of time the amounts had not been paid, assessed contributions were collectible unless the Assembly decided otherwise.

The Advisory Committee requested that action be taken to avoid, in the future, having the Board qualify its opinion on the financial statements of a number of organizations because of deficiencies in certification.

In ACABQ's opinion, the Board's findings should be considered collectively, preferably in the context of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC). Organizations should share experiences and compare the various actions taken to address the deficiencies identified by the Board. The system as a whole needed to cooperate at the country level to create capacity through a variety of means, including coordinated assistance to enhance the capacity of implementing and executing agencies and bodies. It was important that the United Nations and its funding programmes identified areas that required intervention well in advance of their implementation, as it was a waste of resources to conclude agreements only to discover that the implementing partner was incapable of delivering, and it was equally counter-productive to enforce agreements when the other party lacked the capacity to comply.

The Advisory Committee was particularly concerned at the lack of commitment by the management of some funds and programmes to pay more attention to internal audits and to implement the recommendations thereof in a timely manner; it had identified some areas where it was necessary for certain administrations to devote more resources and attention to internal audits. The Committee also considered that procurement reform deserved top priority, in view of the volume of resources expended on procurement and the extent of irregularities uncovered.

With respect to trust funds where, in a number of cases, administrative instructions were not being followed, ACABQ noted that the Assembly had already concurred with its recommendation that, where donor terms and demands were incompatible with UN financial rules and procedures, the latter must prevail. It was necessary to devise satisfactory procedures for remedy in cases of mismanagement, to complement the procedures already in place for fraud and embezzlement; if the administrations did not give that issue due priority, ACABQ warned, legislative bodies might become involved in an area which was and should remain the prerogative of the Secretary-General and the executive heads of funds and programmes.

The Advisory Committee recommended that administrations should indicate, in their next budget submissions, the extent to which the Board's recommendations could be taken into account, and cautioned that care should be taken to avoid introducing procedures that were not cost-effective. The environment in which some organizations operated should be taken fully into account, particularly in assessing levels of initial and actual expenditure. In the future, the Board should not be burdened with requests to audit areas such as the budget process, which was regulated by intergovernmental directives and constantly monitored, and it should not be asked to undertake tasks with the hope that the results would resolve political differences among Member States.

By a 13 August note [A/51/283], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a concise summary of the Board's principal findings, conclusions and recommendations of common interest, classified by audit area. In October, he reported [A/51/488 & Add.1,2] on measures taken or envisaged to implement the Board's recommendations, with timetables where appropriate.

The Assembly did not take any action in 1996 on the financial reports and audited financial statements, but, by decision 51/462 of 18 December, deferred their consideration until its resumed fifty-first session in 1997.

Common accounting standards

United Nations system common accounting standards were developed in 1993 under the auspices of the ACC Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Financial and Budgetary Questions) (CCAQ(FB)). The General Assembly, by resolution 48/216 C [YUN 1993, p. 1208], requested the Secretary-General and the executive heads of UN organizations and programmes to take those standards into account when preparing their financial statements.

On 18 October 1996, the Secretary-General reported [A/51/523] on the further development of the standards in 1994 and 1995. CCAQ(FB) entrusted the task to a Working Party on Financial Statements, which was open to participation by accounting specialists from all organizations. The Working Party held three meetings in 1994 and 1995, with the aim of developing agreed formats for financial statements and of making consequent changes to the provisions of the standards. The Working Party was assisted by the Technical Group of the Panel of External Auditors of the United Nations, the Specialized Agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency. The final draft revised accounting standards prepared through that process were approved by CCAQ(FB) at its second session in 1995. The formats were designed not only to ensure that similar accounts were treated in the same way in the various organizations, but also to facilitate comparison between financial statements and to bring out the full range of an organization's activities. The Panel, which participated in the session, indicated that in its opinion the amended text, including the format of statements, represented a sound set of accounting standards for the UN system.

The Secretary-General noted that UN organizations had made significant efforts to take the revised standards into consideration in preparing their financial statements for financial periods ending in 1995. However, organizations had reported some problems with their application and there were a few areas in which clarification of the standards was needed, particularly with regard to the harmonization of presentation using the agreed formats. Further work was also necessary on the cash-flow statement in order to enhance its utility. In some cases, the organizations' financial regulations and rules had not been brought into line with the standards. Discussion of those issues with external auditors was ongoing in a number of organizations. CCAQ(FB) had already identified several subjects, such as currency transactions and treatment of voluntary contributions in kind, that called for further study, while the Panel indicated that it would assist in clarifying some of those issues.

As to future development, the Secretary-General said the reactions of governing bodies to the introduction of new formats for financial statements and reports would be of importance in evaluating the new formats. A number of governing bodies had not had an opportunity to express any opinion, but the reactions of those that had been positive. CCAQ(FB) planned to begin the next stage of work on the standards as soon as all governing bodies had examined the latest statements. The process of full adaptation to the common standards was likely to extend over several years, as changes in financial practices, procedures and systems would have to be made in a number of instances, and several governing bodies would need to consider changes in financial policies and/or the amendment of financial regulations.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General believed that the revised standards, set out in the annex to his report, represented a positive response to the Assembly's requests and an important advance for the UN system. He welcomed the constructive contributions of the Panel of External Auditors and invited the Assembly to take note of the standards and of the organizations' plans for their application and future development.

ACABQ, in an October report [A/51/533], welcomed the results of the exercise, progress in the area being in line with the trend towards greater harmonization in budgetary and financial matters. It noted in particular the information in the Secretary-General's report regarding the application of the standards by the organizations and the changes, if any, in the financial policies and/or amendments to the financial regulations that might have to be considered by the governing bodies.

The Advisory Committee was informed by representatives of the Secretary-General that there was no difficulty in applying the standards in the United Nations itself, although a revision to the financial regulations might need to be considered at a later date to allow for a minor technical change owing to currency transactions. That information, ACABQ noted, was in keeping with the information provided by the Board of Auditors that organizations had generally complied with the common accounting standards in presenting the financial statements for 1994-1995. However, the Advisory Committee said, further work needed to be done in 1996-1997 to bring the financial statements fully in line with those standards.

With regard to the application of article 32 of the accounting standards, on the treatment of delays in income from assessed contributions, ACABQ was informed that the Administration interpreted that article as optional rather than mandatory and that, unless instructed otherwise by the Assembly, no provision would be made to take account of uncollected funds.

As the Secretary-General was to report to the Assembly should implementation of the accounting standards require it to consider further changes, the Advisory Committee said it would remain seized of the matter in the context of its examination of the reports of the Board of Auditors.

The Fifth Committee considered the Secretary-General's report on accounting standards together with the statistical report of ACC on the budgetary and financial situation of organizations of the UN system [A/51/505 & Corr.1]. The report contained tables grouped under three subject headings: regular budgets and assessed contributions; working capital funds; and expenditure and receipts of voluntary contributions.

Acting on the Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly, by decision 51/453 of 18 December, took note of both reports.

Programme planning

Medium-term plan 1998-2001

During May and June 1996, the Secretary-General submitted the programme sections of the proposed medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001, the principal directive of the Organization which also served as a framework for the preparation of the biennial programme budgets [A/51/6 (Progs. 1-25)]. Developed through joint efforts of the Member States and the Secretariat, the plan comprised two parts: the first provided broad directions for action in line with legislative intent and reflected the orientations and expectations of Member States; the second part comprised the framework for all programmes under the responsibility of UN offices.

On 16 May, outlining the plan's perspective [A/51/6 (Perspective)], the Secretary-General said it was designed to enable the United Nations to address major global trends and problems that were likely to persist well into the next millennium. Globalization, fragmentation, democratization and marginalization would all have profound effects, both on the state of the world and on the role, expectations and activities of the Organization; they provided a challenging context for the UN programme of work for the medium term. Nevertheless, in an era of unprecedented change, the next few years could not be foreseen with precision and the Organization therefore had to have the capacity to adjust flexibly to the demands placed on it.

In the period covered by the medium-term plan, the United Nations would strengthen action in the areas of international economic relations, international environmental management, global information flows and cooperation with new global actors, in particular to ensure full consideration of the concerns of developing countries. The Organization would extend its central role in collecting and providing global development data and developing universal standards and methods for measuring progress in the human dimensions of development that had been the focus of recent global conferences.

Some of the growing spectrum of global issues were within the purview of other international institutions in the UN system, noted the Secretary-General. Because of the inseparability of many of the issues needing to be addressed, a major objective for the period covered by the plan had to be to enhance cooperation between the United Nations and those other bodies, at the intergovernmental as well as secretariat levels. In most of those areas, the Organization would have to cooperate with other global actors and develop a framework that provided for all concerned to participate individually as well as collectively.

Achieving sustained growth and sustainable development had to remain a major global objective, the Secretary-General stressed, due to the persistence of such problems as the lack of safe water, threats to biological diversity, ozone loss, global warming, declining land productivity, desertification and reduced food security. The Organization should contribute to raising international awareness of environmental trends and their negative consequences, since, in the absence of international understanding, environmental disputes would become more prevalent. Particular attention would have to be given to the negative aspects of globalization, including financial and economic disturbances, refugee flows, drug trafficking, terrorism, global health threats, illicit flows of arms, international crime and money-laundering. The further development of international law, including international trade law and the law of the sea, and the establishment of norms and standards would be a central pillar of many of those activities.

The United Nations would continue to develop and maintain international norms and standards for drug control and to monitor, promote and coordinate international drug control efforts. The Organization should also develop, in close cooperation with the concerned agencies, its response to newly emerging diseases and the global HIV/AIDS pandemic through policies designed to increase awareness and address the socio-economic consequences of the spread of the disease. The struggle against HIV/AIDS would, according to the Secretary-General, be integrated into all relevant UN work programmes, including peacekeeping and humanitarian activities, as well as development cooperation.

In response to the information revolution and its increasing importance for the foundations of peace and development, the United Nations had to be an active partner with media and communications channels, not only as an outreach to the peoples of the world, but also as a means of influencing decision-making. In the Secretary-General's opinion, one of its challenges would be to capitalize on the media-heightened awareness of some crises while also ensuring that resources and energies were not diverted from areas not in the spotlight but of equal need.

The Organization should expand its cooperation with regional organizations and arrangements and identify regional actors, the Secretary-General believed. By ensuring the complementarity of regionalism and its own multilateral approach, the United Nations would serve not only practical purposes but also the democratization of the international system.

United Nations efforts towards disarmament must be sustained, according to the Secretary-General, despite the end of the cold war and the relaxation in international tensions. The Organization had to continue its long-term global efforts to remove landmines, as well as to establish a total ban on their production and trade. The United Nations role in providing and mobilizing humanitarian relief was expected to increase, and would need to be more effectively combined with peace-building, social and economic reintegration of refugees and disaster preparedness.

During the plan period, strengthening public administration and enhancing the institutions of civil society would be major aspects of the Organization's activities to counter increasing tendencies towards fragmentation. Beyond its work in individual countries, UN work in democratization should include, in the Secretary-General's view, a more proactive and consistent approach to human rights abuses and universal standards of human rights. The United Nations had to strive for universal ratification of human rights treaties, the integration of women's rights into all human rights procedures, the promotion of the right to development and an end to impunity.

Along with other international organizations, the Secretary-General felt that the United Nations had to play the lead role in analysing the particular needs of the most marginalized countries, in galvanizing the international community regarding their concern, and in providing a framework for issues of marginalization to be addressed on a global scale. The programmes of action that had emerged from recent world conferences and summits illustrated the Organization's role in forging a consensus on those issues. The United Nations had to ensure that those agreements were translated into practice. Within those overall efforts, the development of Africa had to become an even greater priority, and the Organization would be a central actor in that respect.

Beyond the issue of marginalized countries, the United Nations had to address the marginalization of groups and individuals within their own societies, including girls and women, certain ethnic and religious groups, indigenous peoples, refugees, migrant workers, people with disabilities, the ageing, ex-combatants, mine victims and orphans. The global problem of poverty—the single most important factor causing such marginalization—had to be addressed in all its dimensions, and the United Nations and its partner agencies had to sustain developing countries in their efforts to build indigenous capacities to combat poverty and deprivation. It also had to enhance its capacity to prevent disputes among groups within a society from escalating into armed conflict. During the plan period, said the Secretary-General, the Organization must enhance both its peacemaking methodologies and the capabilities of its staff, and the resources of the UN system must be brought together in peace-building programmes.

Concluding, the Secretary-General pointed out that the effort to ensure that the United Nations of the twenty-first century was equipped to rise to its challenges was a joint responsibility and depended, above all, on predictable and assured political and financial support from Member States. Uncertainties of either kind not only would have a deleterious effect on the activities outlined in the medium-term plan, but would also inhibit the continuous reform and restructuring process. In endorsing the plan, Member States would convey their willingness to confront together, through their United Nations, current and future challenges.

CPC consideration (June). The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC), at the first part of its thirty-sixth session in June, after considering and analysing all 25 programmes of the proposed medium-term plan, decided to revert to their consideration at the second part of the session.

The Committee reiterated the importance Member States attached to the plan as the principal policy directive and the framework for the biennial programme budgets. It stressed the importance of ensuring that the plan reflected all mandated programmes and activities, and agreed that legislative mandates for the work to be carried out should be included in the plan's approved version.

The Committee further agreed that if the new plan format were adopted, it would be necessary, as recommended by ACABQ, to amend the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation. It concurred with the Secretary-General's view that efforts to ensure that the United Nations was equipped to rise to the challenges of the twenty-first century depended above all on Member States' continuous, predictable and assured political and financial support.

Being unable to reach agreement on the content of the document outlining the plan's perspective, CPC was not able to consider it, as submitted, as an integral part of the plan. It therefore requested that the Secretary-General be asked to present to the General Assembly, through CPC, a short and concise document outlining the plan's broad areas of priority, based on the relevant resolutions and decisions of UN intergovernmental bodies and taking into account the views expressed by Member States during the CPC discussion. An overview of that discussion, as well as CPC's conclusions, were presented in its annual report [A/51/16 (Part I)].

Note of Secretary-General (August). In accordance with CPC's request, the Secretary-General, by a 19 August note [A/51/6 (Note)], presented a report based on agreements reached by the intergovernmental bodies, including the 1995 Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations [GA res. 50/6], in which Member States had declared their determination that the United Nations of the future would work with renewed vigour and effectiveness to promote peace, development, equality, justice and understanding among the peoples of the world, and that they would give to the twenty-first century a United Nations equipped, financed and structured to serve effectively the peoples in whose name it had been established.

In response to those commitments, the Secretary-General said, the work of the Organization during the medium-term plan period 1998-2001 would take into account persistent problems prevailing, as well as emerging trends and challenges. Among the persistent problems, he cited inter-State and intra-State conflicts and tensions; the absence of a clearer definition of the scope and limits of the United Nations political role in the post-cold-war era; Governments' reluctance to accept UN involvement in an internal conflict until it was too late for preventive action; the tendency of public opinion to assume that the United Nations could always play a useful role in any conflict; the scarcity of resources available to the Organization; imbalances and uncertainties in the global economy; poverty; the critical situation of least developed countries; the critical socio-economic situation in Africa; massive human rights violations; and inequalities between men and women.

The trends that had emerged since the end of the cold war were likely to continue during the years 1998-2001, the Secretary-General believed. A growing number of conflicts were taking place within States, and throughout the world serious threats would continue to be posed by terrorism, international organized crime, and illicit drug and arms trafficking. He noted a global trend towards democratization and increased empowerment of the individual and groups within society, and globalization and growing interdependence in the world economy, and with regard to such issues as environmental hazards, population movement and disease. As interdependence had been deepening, regional economic groupings and arrangements were recognized as important catalysts for economic growth and trade expansion.

Political instability, internal conflicts and environmental degradation were likely to contribute to an increase in the number and magnitude of man-made and natural emergencies, the Secretary-General warned. He expressed concern at the overall decline in official development assistance, and noted that respect for human rights was now recognized as an important element in long-term economic and social development.

In response to the need to address persistent problems and emerging trends and to meet the challenges of the future, the Secretary-General outlined the role of the Organization and directions to be pursued in the four major areas—peace, development, equality and justice—and cited certain priorities: maintenance of peace and security; promotion of sustained economic growth and sustainable development of developing countries; development of Africa; promotion of human rights; effective response to humanitarian emergencies; and promotion of justice and international law. Concluding, he pointed out that the effort to ensure that the United Nations was able to fulfil its considerable potential into the twenty-first century was a joint responsibility of Member States and himself. He would uphold high standards of management and continue to improve the Organization's administrative and financial functioning, which would require the maintenance of a strong independent civil service of the highest calibre. At the same time, Member States had to ensure continuous and predictable political and financial support in order for the Organization to meet its challenges.

CPC consideration (September). CPC, at the second part of its thirty-sixth session in September, took note of the Secretary-General's note and welcomed the strict observance of the format that it had recommended. The Committee was able to present conclusions and recommendations on 21 of the 25 proposed programmes of the medium-term plan, with certain modifications. It could not reach agreement on four programmes: political affairs; trade and development; human settlements; and human rights. The Committee recommended that they be considered by the General Assembly, taking into account the views expressed and amendments proposed by Member States. CPC discussions, conclusions and recommendations were reflected in its report [A/51/16 (Part II)].

Programme performance for 1994-1995

In May, the Secretary-General reported [A/51/128 & Add.1] on programme performance of the United Nations for the 1994-1995 biennium. The report captured the wide range of the Organization's activities identified in the programme budget for those years and reflected the degree of their implementation. It also indicated the extent to which programmed activities had been modified during implementation, along with explanations for the modifications and an indication of attendant resources. It did not attempt to assess the quality of outputs and services produced. The information presented distinguished between four groups of activities: the first covered outputs and services specifically indicated and quantified in the programme budget; the second corresponded to activities described in the budget in general terms, with little or no indication of the quantities; operational activities were subject to a third format of reporting; and conference and administrative services were reported through relevant workload indicators.

The report contained an overview of programme performance, a summary of resource utilization, findings and conclusions and a set of annexed tables summarizing implementation and the reasons for changes made during the biennium. The findings provided feedback for improving the formulation of programmes and for enhancing implementation. An addendum to the report highlighted the factors that affected programme deliveries during the biennium by section of the programme budget, including a brief report on the activities undertaken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) that did not fit under the standardized presentation of the other programme budget sections.

Of the 6,497 final outputs specifically identified in the 1994-1995 programme budget, 4,888, or 75.2 per cent, were actually implemented during the biennium. The outputs specifically identified mainly fell under the major categories of parliamentary services, published material, and information material and services, which accounted for a large part of the work of the Organization, notably in the economic and social sectors, and utilized 62 per cent of Professional staff work-months.

"Non-outputs/services"—such as intergovernmental negotiations, good offices, promotion of legal instruments, and coordination and consultation with governmental and non-governmental organizations—were less measurable and not precisely quantified in the programme budget. Nevertheless, they were considered essential for the functioning of the Organization and involved the use of resources. In the 1994-1995 budget, they appeared under two major categories, i.e., international cooperation and coordination, harmonization and liaison. Operational activities—which also did not fall within standard categories of outputs mentioned in rule 104.4 (setting out standards for programme narratives for substantive activities in the programme budget) of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation—comprised advisory services, training seminars, workshops and field projects.

A distinction was made in the report between outputs implemented as programmed and those that were reformulated, i.e., their description had been modified as compared with the programme budget narrative, while continuing to address the same subject matter.

The overall level of implementation in 1994-1995 (73 per cent) was slightly lower than that of the previous biennium (74 per cent). However, the implementation of highest-priority outputs was substantially lower (66.4 per cent in 1994-1995, as against 81.7 per cent in 1992-1993). Of the 1,609 programmed outputs that were not implemented during the biennium, 590, or 9.1 per cent, were postponed and 1,019, or 15.7 per cent, were terminated. The postponed outputs were essentially published material (420, or 71 per cent).

In addition to the 6,497 programmed outputs, 1,226 outputs were added to the programme budget during the biennium, either by intergovernmental bodies or at the initiative of the Secretariat. The number of outputs added by legislation in 1994-1995 was lower than in 1992-1993, whereas the number of those added at the Secretariat's initiative was substantially larger.

A total of 52,029 Professional work-months, including consultant services, were reported available to programme managers for implementation of the 1994-1995 work programme. Of those, an estimated 13,730, or 26 per cent, were funded from extrabudgetary resources. Sixty-two per cent of the total, i.e., 32,483 work-months, were committed to the implementation of activities that generated final outputs under the major categories of parliamentary services, published material and information services. The proportion of resources committed to activities that did not generate "final outputs" in the fields of international cooperation and coordination, harmonization and liaison was 14 per cent, or 7,505 work-months; of those, 62 per cent were utilized to implement activities of the Centre for Human Rights, the Department of Political Affairs (DPA), the Office of Legal Affairs, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA) and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations.

Operational activities—concentrated in the economic and social sectors with six entities, namely, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the Centre for Human Rights, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), and the Department for Development Support and Management Services (DDSMS)—accounted for the balance of 12,041 work-months (23 per cent).

Summarizing his findings, the Secretary-General said that the balance sheet of what had been delivered appeared largely positive in terms of quantity of outputs and services produced, despite the various constraints resulting from the degree of programmatic details in the programme budget document, the need to respond to the multitude of new demands and the challenging requirements of delivering while simultaneously reforming the structures and methods of work through an ongoing process of streamlining and reorganization. However, the picture became blurred when the aspect of redundancy and duplication of many of the activities reported implemented was taken into account. The monitoring exercise covering the biennium suggested that legislative bodies had often been seized with a wide range of documentation and reports, the purpose of which was not clear other than their general information nature. Duplication was also widely found among publications.

According to the Secretary-General, there was little evidence of any concerted efforts on the part of programme managers to use the programming and budgeting process more effectively in addressing additional mandates. Necessary adjustments in response to changing demands and emerging needs were translated more often than not into new activities, in addition to ongoing, mandated ones.

The Secretary-General noted that 181 outputs carried over from the previous biennium had been further postponed; nearly 73 per cent of that total consisted of publications, with the remainder being documentation and background material programmed under parliamentary services, as well as some information material. In the absence of further justification warranting their continuation, he recommended that those outputs be terminated.

Financial constraints required a more focused programme and greater integration of the work into fewer mutually supporting activities, the Secretary-General felt. They also required addressing, at the programme formulation stage, issues of duplication and complementarities within the same programme, as well as with others.

Based on problems found relating to a low implementation rate (below 70 per cent), outputs and subprogrammes designated as high priority, outputs added, or postponed and terminated, as well as resource utilization, the Secretary-General believed that inspection reviews were warranted for UNEP, Habitat, crime prevention, ESCAP, the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, DDSMS and DHA. By and large, he said, the findings suggested that a tangible improvement in the quality of the monitoring and reporting exercise would always depend on the commitment of programme managers to institutionalize monitoring and evaluation as an integral part of their managerial practices. The quality of department submissions received within the 1994-1995 programme performance exercise clearly indicated that, in many departments and offices, there was an inadequate commitment to oversight and no coordinating or managerial mechanism for routinely collecting and analysing information on the progress made and results achieved under various activities and programmes. Many departments did not have a senior planning and coordinating function located in the office of the head of department or office to provide coordinated feedback on successes and shortfalls, to ensure coherent strategies and minimize duplication.

Concluding, the Secretary-General said that through its work in audit, inspection and evaluation, the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) (see PART FIVE, Chapter I) would continue to emphasize the need for adequate mechanisms and systems of programme oversight and control at the departmental level. To that end, OIOS would ensure that such mechanisms were established in various organizational units and used as a management tool.

CPC conclusions and recommendations. CPC considered the Secretary-General's report on 4 and 5 June. It commended its quality, expressed appreciation for its clarity and format of presentation and called it a useful contribution to the improvement of the programme planning and budgetary process. The Committee acknowledged the inherent limits of any purely quantitative approach to programme performance and the margin of error implied in such an exercise. It realized that a systematic exercise of measurement was the only opportunity for systematic control of the effectiveness of implementation of mandated activities to be carried out under a programme budget, and the only tool of control available to some programme managers.

CPC expressed concern at the overall low level of implementation, as compared to the previous biennium, in particular the decline in the implementation of high-priority designated activities. Recognizing that the current methodology did not do justice to the departments affected by decisions taken during the biennium by intergovernmental bodies, the Committee requested the Secretary-General to refine the reporting methodology for the next programme performance report, so as to reflect better both the extent to which activities had been mandated throughout the period concerned and the extent to which they had actually been implemented.

CPC recommended that measures be taken to ensure that programme managers adhered to the priorities mandated by the Assembly. In that connection, it stressed the need for continued efforts to improve the rate of implementation of the programme of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA); while noting the detrimental effect on ESCWA's performance of the continuing high number of vacancies, CPC was nevertheless of the view that the vacancy situation appeared to be chronic and deserved urgent attention, and requested that immediate action be taken to face problems in that regard as they affected programme performance.

The Committee voiced concern over the relatively large number of instances in which programme managers did not provide adequate reasons for outputs that were terminated; it reiterated that all changes and additions introduced by programme managers in the course of implementation should be submitted to the appropriate intergovernmental bodies for consideration and approval, and stressed the need for programme budget implication statements whenever additional activities were mandated. Those statements should indicate whether an activity of equivalent cost could be deleted or postponed within the same programme. The Committee stressed the need to ensure fully effective implementation of all mandated activities and reiterated the central role of the Assembly in changing or postponing activities and programmes, notwithstanding the discretion granted to the Secretary-General through rule 105.2 of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation.

CPC noted that a substantial amount of regular budget resources was being used to fund operational activities. It also noted that an increasing proportion of extrabudgetary resources was being used to fund activities of a non-operational nature. The Committee felt that a clearer organizational distinction between those two areas of work would provide more transparency in resource utilization and ensure that regular budget resources were used to address the mandates for which they had been appropriated.

The Committee expressed concern at the findings on publications and documentation, noting that a number of departments were increasingly involved in producing and disseminating information material and services. It recommended rationalization in order to avoid duplication and to ensure that information activities were undertaken in close coordination with the Department of Public Information (DPI).

CPC noted that more than 80 per cent of outputs terminated had occurred in DPA, the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, UNCTAD and the five regional commissions combined.

The Committee endorsed the Secretary-General's findings and conclusions and courses of action prescribed. It noted that his report had indicated that 181 outputs carried over from the 1992-1993 biennium had been further postponed to the biennium 1996-1997; CPC recommended that the Assembly consider the issue in the context of its consideration of the programme performance report at its fifty-first session.

Evaluation and programme planning

In April 1996, the Secretary-General transmitted a March report [A/51/88] of OIOS on strengthening the role of evaluation findings in programme design, delivery and policy directives. The report contained a review of in-depth and self-evaluations during 1994-1995, information pertinent to General Assembly decisions on future topics for in-depth evaluations, and on strengthening programme oversight in departments and offices and, in that context, strengthening the link between the programme performance monitoring and self-evaluation systems.

In-depth evaluations had been conducted of UNEP, of peacekeeping operations and of DPI. For future in-depth evaluations, several considerations were pertinent, such as major events; the need to examine a successful programme in order to learn lessons applicable to related programmes; significant recent expansion of a programme or changes in problems addressed by it; and the need to cover substantive programmes not yet subject to in-depth evaluation or covered by an OIOS inspection.

In UN work involving large-scale field operations, such as peacekeeping, humanitarian activities and refugees, the evaluation function was either well established or in the process of becoming properly established. Other activities in the political, economic and social, and public information fields had a mixed record, according to the report, with some solid evaluation being conducted and some procedures in place for reporting on results. Findings of recent inspections indicated that oversight functions in certain regional commissions, the Centre for Human Rights and UNCTAD were diffused among several units, and that performance monitoring and self-evaluation functions had been poorly conducted. Corrections of those weaknesses recommended by the inspection reports had, by and large, been put into effect, but similar problems probably existed in less extreme forms in other departments and offices. The practical conclusion to be drawn was that appropriate institutional settings needed to be in place as prerequisites to improved departmental oversight.

The OIOS guidelines on departmental oversight should cover the following issues: institutional arrangements for oversight; minimum common standards; and training and other services to be provided by the Office. To assist departments and offices in their oversight functions, OIOS would provide training, a manual and a bi-annually issued bulletin.

CPC conclusions and recommendations. Considering the report in June, CPC commended it as comprehensive and objective. It noted that the compressed cycle of the in-depth evaluation had increased evaluation coverage without sacrificing quality. It recommended to the General Assembly that the crime prevention and criminal justice and international drug control programmes be the subject of in-depth evaluations, and that reports thereon be presented to it in 1998. CPC encouraged OIOS to develop guidelines on internal oversight within each unit at the departmental level, covering institutional arrangements for oversight, minimum common standards, and training and other services provided by OIOS.

In this respect, the medium-term plan constitutes the principal policy directive of the United Nations.

2. In response to the need to address efficiently and effectively persistent problems, as well as to respond to emerging trends and challenges of the future, the Organization will, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, give priority to the following areas of work during the implementation of the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001:

(a) Maintenance of international peace and security;

(b) Promotion of sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences;

(c) Development of Africa;

(d) Promotion of human rights;

(e) Effective coordination of humanitarian assistance efforts;

Replace the last sentence with the following:

Contact with relevant regional organizations, non-governmental organizations and other private and academic research institutes, without compro-

Paragraphs 1.13 to 1.18

Replace the text of the paragraphs with the following, as a separate programme:

1.13. The mandate for the programme on disarmament stems from the Charter of the United Nations and from the aims and purposes proclaimed by the General Assembly. The implementation of this programme should be guided by the priorities established in the relevant General Assembly resolutions and decisions. The Centre for Disarmament Affairs is responsible for implementing this programme.

1.14. The first objective of this programme is to provide organizational and substantive secretariat support to multilateral bodies entrusted with deliberation and/or negotiations on disarmament issues, including the meeting of States parties and other international meetings related to multilateral disarmament agreements.

1.15. The second objective is to follow and assess current and future trends in the field of disarmament and international security in order to assist Member States, and to enable the Secretary-General also to assist them, in their search for agreement. Apart from substantive issues involved in the deliberative and/or negotiating process, this activity should address the challenges arising from the implementation of the relevant General Assembly resolutions as well as relevant treaties.

1.16. The third objective will be to support and promote regional disarmament efforts and initiatives using approaches freely among the States of the region and taking into account the legitimate requirements of States for self-defence and specific characteristics of each region. Regional solutions will be more vigorously pursued as regional conflicts increasingly pose a threat to peace and security. Regional dialogue on crucial disarmament and security issues will be advanced through, inter alia, the organization of conferences.

1.17. The fourth objective consists of providing impartial, factual information on the disarmament efforts of the United Nations to Member States, parliamentarians, research and academic institutions and specialized non-governmental organizations through the disarmament information programme and by providing Member States with full access to all relevant databases, including on disarmament. This would include, as appropriate, organizing open-ended conferences, seminars and workshops for informal exchanges of views on arms control, disarmament and international security issues. The disarmament fellowship programme will continue to be pursued with the primary objective of promoting further the disarmament expertise of Member States, particularly in the developing countries. Member States will be assisted in addressing specific disarmament concerns through the provision of training and advisory services.

1.18. The fifth objective would be to continue to inform the public on an objective and updated basis of the United Nations disarmament activities. In this context, the three regional centres for peace and disarmament established in Nepal, Peru and Togo should be utilized. These centres should address the important security problems in their respective regions and subregions in a balanced manner.

1.19. This programme is expected to enable Member States to conduct deliberations and negotiations on disarmament issues in a smooth and efficient manner; facilitate the task of the Secretary-General in the conduct of his relations with Member States on disarmament matters; contribute to an integrated approach to issues relating to the maintenance of peace and security; and facilitate the exchange of ideas between governmental and non-governmental sectors with a view to promoting a better understanding of United Nations endeavours in the field of disarmament.

Paragraph 1.19

The General Assembly approves the proposal contained in paragraph 46 (v) of the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination, with the following modification:

18 December 1996 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/748) without vote, 18 December (meeting 47); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.37), orally revised; agenda item 114.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 10, 12, 14, 15, 18-20, 22, 26-29, 47; plenary 89.

Introducing the draft in the Fifth Committee, Bangladesh said CPC had been unable to reach consensus on the programme planning item, nor had it agreed on the structure or priority of the different programmes. The draft was nevertheless a milestone because it proved that Member States could ultimately agree on some of even the most contentious issues. The text envisaged a total of 26 programmes, disarmament having become an independent programme and decolonization a separate subprogramme; a separate programme would be devoted to OIOS activities. A total of eight priorities were envisaged, and the section of the annex entitled "Introduction and priorities" embodied an integrated view of the planning process and thus avoided linkage to any specific opinion with regard to the document on the plan's perspective and the August note by the Secretary-General.

Explaining the position of the Group of 77 and China, Costa Rica said the text reflected the fact that, for the developing countries, sustained economic growth and sustainable development were of paramount importance. In accepting the consensus language used in documents emanating from earlier UN conferences, the commitment to growth and development had been reinforced.

Chapter III

United Nations staff

In 1996, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Security Council, appointed Kofi Annan of Ghana to a five-year term as Secretary-General of the United Nations beginning on 1 January 1997. He was to become the seventh Secretary-General since the establishment of the Organization. The General Assembly expressed its appreciation to outgoing Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali of Egypt for his contribution to international peace and security and development, his services in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and his commitment towards a just and peaceful world.

Mr. Annan, a United Nations staff member for more than 30 years, has had a remarkably varied career, focusing not only on questions of management—administration, budget, finance and personnel—but also on refugee issues and peacekeeping. He has also carried out a number of sensitive diplomatic assignments, including negotiating the repatriation of over 900 international staff and the release of Western hostages in Iraq following that country's invasion of Kuwait in 1990; initiating discussions on the "oil-for-food" formula to ease the humanitarian crisis in Iraq; and overseeing the transition from the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) in the former Yugoslavia to the multinational Implementation Force led by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), following the 1995 Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement.

In 1996, the General Assembly also considered a number of questions related to the conditions of service of United Nations staff members. The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) made recommendations to the Assembly on the common scale of staff assessment used to determine pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories and General Service categories; level of dependency allowances; level of education grant; and mobility and hardship allowance. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to limit to a minimum the designation of special representatives, envoys and related positions and to avoid overlapping of their responsibilities; and invited the Sixth (Legal) Committee to examine, as a matter of priority, the legal implications of reform of the internal justice system of the UN Secretariat. The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General and the heads of UN organizations to submit proposals on the introduction of a system of performance awards and bonuses and requested ICSC to review all issues relating to the post adjustment system. On the question of employment of retirees, the Assembly increased the remuneration ceiling across the board to $22,000, and $40,000 for language-service staff, and limited such employment in all cases to no more than six months per calendar year.

The principal of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund increased to $16.9 billion during the year. In December, the Assembly decided to admit the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea to membership in the Fund as of 1 January 1997.

Appointment of Secretary-General

Kofi Annan of Ghana was appointed Secretary-General of the United Nations on 17 December 1996 for a five-year term beginning on 1 January 1997. He was to succeed Boutros Boutros-Ghali of Egypt, who completed his five-year term on 31 December 1996.

Mr. Annan, at the time of his appointment, was Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations of the United Nations. Prior to that, he held the positions of Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Assistant Secretary-General for Programme Planning, Budget and Finance and Controller, Assistant Secretary-General in the Office of Human Resources Management, and Security Coordinator, Director of Budget and Deputy Director of Administration and Head of Personnel in the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

He had also served as the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to the former Yugoslavia and Special Envoy to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Ghana, in its letter [S/1996/1021] to the Security Council President nominating Mr. Annan, said that he was a proud son of Africa who had lived, studied and worked in Ghana, Ethiopia and Egypt and was sensitive to the problems faced by developing countries. Ghana stated that Mr. Annan was singularly placed to lead the United Nations in all the priority tasks facing the new Secretary-General.

Nominations

The candidates nominated by their Governments for the post of Secretary-General were: Amara Essy (Cote d'Ivoire); Boutros Boutros-Ghali (Egypt); Kofi Annan (Ghana); Hamid Algabid (Niger); and Ahmedou Ould-Abdallah (Mauritania).

A draft resolution [S/1996/952] sponsored by Botswana, Chile, China, Egypt, France, Germany, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Indonesia and the Russian Federation, recommending the appointment of Mr. Boutros-Ghali for a second term of office, was considered by the Security Council in closed session on 19 November. In a communique issued on the same date, it was reported that the draft resolution had received 14 votes in favour to 1 against. Since the negative vote had been cast by a permanent member, the draft resolution was not adopted, and the Council continued its consultations on the matter.

The Chairman of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), in a letter of 29 November [S/1996/997] addressed to OAU heads of State, said that, as far as he was aware, the Council still appeared to favour the idea of Africa being represented for a second term in the position of Secretary-General, and he invited African States to put forward other suitable candidates, in addition to Mr. Boutros-Ghali.

Subsequently, Mr. Essy, Mr. Annan, Mr. Algabid and Mr. Ould-Abdallah were also nominated.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

At a meeting held in private on 13 December, the Security Council adopted resolution 1090 (1996).

The Security Council,

Having considered the question of the recommendation for the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations,

Ukraine, in a 10 December letter [A/51/727] addressed to the Security Council President, referred to the President's statement of 4 December on behalf of the Council, pointing out the right of the African Group and individual African countries to recommend their candidatures for the post of Secretary-General, thus confirming the existence de facto of the rotation principle. Since the Eastern European Group had never had its representative elected to the post, Ukraine was proceeding from the understanding that at the next elections of the Secretary-General, to be held in 2001, the Council would show its consistency and reconfirm the right of the Eastern European Group of countries to submit their candidatures.

On 13 December, the Security Council adopted resolution 1091(1996).

Conditions of service

International Civil Service Commission

In 1996, the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), a 15-member body established by the General Assembly in 1974 [GA res. 3357(XXIX)], continued to regulate and coordinate the conditions of service of the UN common system. Thirteen organizations had accepted the ICSC statute: the United Nations; the International Labour Organization; the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; the World Health Organization; the International Civil Aviation Organization; the Universal Postal Union; the International Telecommunication Union; the World Meteorological Organization; the International Maritime Organization; the World Intellectual Property Organization; the United Nations Industrial Development Organization; and the International Atomic Energy Agency. Two other organizations—the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the World Trade Organization—had not formally accepted the statute of ICSC, but participated fully in the Commission's work.

In 1996, the Commission held its forty-third (Vienna, 10 April-7 May) and forty-fourth (New York, 31 July-13 August) sessions. It examined issues that derived from decisions and resolutions of the General Assembly, as well as from its own statute. A summary of the Commission's deliberations, recommendations and decisions was provided in an addendum to its twenty-first annual report [A/50/30/Add.1] and in its twenty-second annual report [A/51/30], on which the Assembly acted in September and December.

Noblemaire principle

In 1995, the General Assembly had considered the Commission's in-depth review of the Noblemaire principle and had requested it to re-examine the manner in which net remuneration comparisons were made with the current comparator, the United States federal civil service, and to clarify outstanding difficulties in making comparisons with the German civil service. In response to those requests [GA res. 50/208], the Commission, in a 20 June 1996 addendum [A/50/30/Add.1] to its 1995 report, reviewed the cases raised by the Assembly and reaffirmed its decisions on the reduction of dominance in margin comparisons through the use of the equal weighting method, and the inclusion in those comparisons of all bonuses and performance awards of the various pay systems except the distinguished and meritorious awards granted to senior executive services staff. Concerning comparisons with the German civil service, the Commission reported that the total compensation levels of the German civil service continued to be superior to the current comparator. However, it would not be possible to narrow existing differences on the scope of the study or the applicability of the Master Standard to the German civil service without substantially modifying the current methodology. The Commission did not consider a modification of the approved methodology justified. It also did not consider it opportune to recommend a change of comparator.

The General Assembly, by decision 50/504 of 17 September, took note of the addendum to ICSC's report for 1995 entitled "Conditions of service of the Professional and higher categories: examination of the Noblemaire principle and its application" and deferred its consideration until the fifty-first session.

Structure of salary scale

In resolution 47/216 [YUN 1992, p. 1055], the General Assembly had requested that the Commission continue to keep under review the structure of the salary scale at all levels of the Professional and higher categories, taking into account, inter alia, the overall United Nations/United States pay relativities as established by the Assembly and the imbalance of those relativities at different Professional grade levels.

The Commission recommended revised staff assessment rates for the determination of gross salaries for application to the net salaries of the Professional and higher categories, effective 1 March 1997. It also recommended, in the context of its 1995 recommendations, that the desirable mid-point of 115 for the United Nations/United States net remuneration margin should be restored in 1997, through: application of an across-the-board increase of 3.089 in the current base/floor salary scale, without consolidation; a further differential increase of 1 per cent (on average) at various grades/steps of the base/floor salary scale resulting from the across-the-board increase to implement the scale-restructuring proposals made by the Commission in 1995; a consolidation of 2.51 per cent of post adjustment on a no-loss no-gain basis into the base/floor salary scale to reflect a corresponding increase in net salaries of the comparator effective 1 January 1996; and implementation of the base/floor salary scale effective 1 March 1997. The Commission established a working group to review the General Service salary methodologies for headquarters and non-headquarters duty stations, and another working group to review the non-pensionable component of the survey methodologies. It recommended salary scales for General Service and related categories at Vienna and at the International Maritime Organization in London.

The Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Personnel and General Administrative Questions) (CCAQ(PER)) of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), at its eighty-fifth session (New York, 22-26 July) [ACC/1996/14], considered the question of the evolution of the margin between the net remuneration of the United States federal civil service and that of the UN system and the base/floor salary scale, and recommended a draft statement to ACC for adoption.

The Secretary-General, in a 12 November note [A/C.5/51/25 & Corr.1], transmitted to the Assembly the ACC statement on UN conditions of service adopted at its second 1996 regular session (New York, 25-26 October). ACC recommended that the Assembly pursue efficiency, enhanced performance and structural and managerial reform, as well as measures to restore competitive conditions of service through the rebuilding of the Noblemaire principle.

On 12 November, the Secretary-General stated [A/C.5/51/24] that there would be an increase of $15.7 million in the regular budget for the 1996-1997 biennium, net of staff assessment, should the Assembly adopt the Commission's recommendations.

The Special Adviser to the Secretary-General, in a statement before the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 25 November, reiterated the views of ACC, and stated that by taking action on the Commission's recommendations the Assembly would give renewed impetus to the ongoing processes to reform management and maximize efficiency, productivity and cost-effectiveness. He also stated that at a time of budgetary cutbacks and other measures affecting job security and conditions of service, the concerns of staff must be articulated at all levels, including that of ICSC. The absence of dialogue with duly recognized staff representatives in the Commission was a major gap and an obstacle to reform of the common system.

Functioning of ICSC

ICSC considered the point raised by CCAQ about difficulties resulting from the inclusion of disparate views in the body of the ICSC report. CCAQ felt that the Commission should consider altering the manner in which its reports were presented, since the inclusion of dissenting views in the body of the report created complications for delegations in the Fifth Committee.

The Commission concluded that minority views should normally be reflected in the body of its report, while retaining the balance between the majority and minority views; exceptionally, individual views might be annexed; and draft reports should be prepared by the secretariat, which was responsible for ensuring that balance and for verifying that texts faithfully reflected the discussion.

Remuneration issues

In April, at its resumed fiftieth session, the General Assembly considered the 1994 report of the Secretary-General concerning the designation of special representatives, envoys and related positions [YUN 1994, p. 1390] and the comments and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) thereon [YUN 1995, p. 1408].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 April, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/219.

Special representatives, envoys and related positions

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 48/259 of 14 July 1994,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Advisory Committee as contained in its report;

3. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that the number of special envoys, special representatives and other special high-level positions is kept at a minimum, that their functions and responsibilities are more clearly defined and streamlined, avoiding any possible duplication, and that current financial regulations and budgetary procedures are fully complied with, and requests him to report on the action he has taken in this regard to the General Assembly at its resumed fiftieth session.

General Assembly resolution 50/219

3 April 1996 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/834/Add.1) without vote, 26 March (meeting 48); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.31), based on informal consultations; agenda items 116, 138 (a) & 159.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 40, 42, 46, 48; plenary 103.

In response to the Assembly's request, the Secretary-General, in a 20 September report [A/C.5/50/72], stated that as of 31 July the number of special representatives and envoys stood at 32: 5 at the Under-Secretary-General (USG) and 11 at the Assistant Secretary-General (ASG) levels assigned to peacekeeping or observer missions; 8 USGs, 1 ASG and 2 Directors performing good offices and related functions; and 4 USGs and 1 ASG assisting the Secretary-General in various capacities. The reduction in the number of special representatives and envoys compared to 1994 (44) was attributable for the most part to the decreasing number of peacekeeping missions. The report described how the rank and type of appointment for special representatives and envoys were generally determined. Annexed to the report were the draft guidelines governing the use of "when actually employed" contracts for special representatives and envoys and other high-level positions, to be issued in a Secretary-General's bulletin; a list of special representatives and envoys in the various categories as at 31 July, including funding source and contractual status; and a historical breakdown of appointments in each category since 1991.

The Assembly, in decision 50/480 B of 17 September, deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report to its fifty-first session.

ACABQ, in a 4 November report [A/51/646], reiterated its concern regarding any flexible interpretation of the guidelines for the use of funds appropriated from general temporary assistance and the avoidance of review by ACABQ and the Assembly of the functional responsibilities of such posts.

In 1995, the General Assembly had taken note of the report of the Secretary-General on conditions of service and compensation for ICSC members and the ACABQ Chairman [GA res. 50/216, section VI] and requested ACABQ to report thereon at its resumed fiftieth session. In an exchange of letters [A/C.5/50/55] between them, the Chairman of ACABQ informed the Chairman of the Fifth Committee of the ACABQ recommendation that the Assembly should take up the matter directly because of the inherent conflict of interest in taking up the Secretary-General's proposals, even as they related to the Commission, since each and every member of ACABQ was a potential chairman there.

On 4 April, the Fifth Committee had before it a draft resolution [A/C.5/50/L.43] submitted by its Chairman, in which the Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General to implement fully paragraphs 3 and 4 of section III of Assembly resolution 46/192 [YUN 1991, p. 908] with regard to the pensionable remuneration of the full-time members of ICSC and the Chairman of ACABQ. The United Nations Controller informed the Committee that the Secretariat was guided in the matter by that Assembly resolution, which provided that the pensionable remuneration and pensions of the officials in question should be adjusted between comprehensive reviews in accordance with the procedure applicable for adjustment of the scale of pensionable remuneration of staff of the Professional and higher categories. The Committee, by a vote of 46 to 1, with 1 abstention, agreed to take no action on the draft resolution. After the vote, the United States representative explained that his delegation reserved its position, since the Secretary-General's relevant report seemed to indicate that there was no clear source of funding to meet the financial implications.

Post adjustment

The Commission considered the report of the working group on the operation of the post adjustment system, which had been established to identify the elements of pay (expenditure) that should not be indexed for local price changes; evaluate their relative importance as percentage of pay; and study the appropriateness of applying the out-of-area index to some of those elements.

The Commission decided to inform the General Assembly that effective 1 March 1997 expenditures corresponding to a minimum amount of 20 per cent of net remuneration (net base salary plus post adjustment) at the duty station, which would be added to 5 per cent of the net base salary for the non-consumption component, would be considered to have been incurred outside the duty station. That would constitute the out-of-area expenditure weight to be used in the calculation of post adjustment indices. Pension contribution would continue to be taken into account as under the current system.

The Commission considered the 1995 Assembly request [GA res. 50/208] to establish a single post adjustment index in 1996 for Geneva that would be fully representative of all staff working at that duty station. In that regard, it had sought the advice of its Advisory Committee on Post Adjustment Questions, which had pointed out several technical difficulties with respect to data collection and analysis. Moreover, there were policy, administrative and legal ramifications to the matter. The Commission decided to inform the Assembly that a combination of those factors militated against establishing in 1996 a single post adjustment index for Geneva, reflecting the cost of living of all staff working at the duty station. The Commission would continue consideration of the matter and report to the Assembly at the earliest opportunity on its progress in resolving the various issues.

The Commission approved the results of the comprehensive place-to-place surveys conducted in 1995 for Geneva, London, Montreal, Paris, Rome, Vienna and Washington, D.C. It decided that the survey results for London, Montreal, Paris, Rome, Vienna and Washington should be taken into account for determining their respective post adjustment classification from 1 May 1996, and those for Geneva for determining that duty station's post adjustment classification from 1 June 1996. The existing gap between the post adjustment index resulting from the survey plus 5 per cent and the pay index for Geneva should be adjusted at the time of the next review of the post adjustment classification for cost-of-living increases.

Common staff assessment scale

In response to General Assembly resolution 48/225 [YUN 1993, p. 1229], the Commission, assisted by a working group, developed a common scale of staff assessment to determine the pensionable remuneration for the Professional and higher categories and the General Service and related categories. In developing the scale, ICSC addressed, inter alia, the main cause of the phenomenon of income inversion (significantly higher levels of pensionable remuneration for General Service than for Professional staff with the same or even higher net remuneration levels). In addition to inputs from the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, the Commission considered that the income inversion phenomenon should be addressed particularly at net income levels applicable to both Professional and General Service staff; that low net income levels should not be adversely affected; and that high net income levels should receive no additional benefit as a result of the adoption of a common scale of staff assessment.

The Commission concluded that the tax systems at the seven headquarters duty stations should be equally weighted in aggregating the net-to-gross tax relationships among them, and should be based on employee deductions at each duty station. The same regression analysis method should be used in smoothing the net-to-gross tax relationship for married and single staff for application to the Professional and higher categories and the General Service and related categories, respectively. The Commission recommended to the Assembly the common scale of staff assessment for the Professional and higher categories and the General Service and related categories, and agreed, with regard to the General Service and related categories, that the 1992 modalities should be used. With regard to the Professional and higher categories, the Commission agreed that the scale should be effective from 1 March 1997.

The Commission did not recommend any modification of the major components for calculating the special index for pensioners.

The Commission considered the methodology for determining pensionable remuneration and recommended to the Assembly that income replacement in New York should continue to be used as the basis for doing so for the Professional and higher categories. The methodology used to establish the current scale of pensionable remuneration should continue to be used; and the current interim adjustment procedure for adjusting pensionable remuneration between comprehensive reviews should continue.

The Assembly approved the revised common scale of staff assessment with effect from 1 January 1997 (resolution 51/216).

Other remuneration matters

Dependency allowances

As part of its biennial review of the level of dependency allowances, the Commission recommended to the Assembly an increase of 7.98 per cent of the children's allowance (including that for disabled children) and secondary dependant's allowance, with effect from 1 January 1997, for the Professional and higher categories of staff to reflect an increase in the value of tax abatement and payments under social legislation at the seven headquarters duty stations that occurred between 1993 and the current review.

Education grant

Under the methodology approved by General Assembly resolution 47/216 [YUN 1992, p. 1055], a review of education grant levels was warranted whenever 5 per cent or more of the cases in a given currency area exceeded the existing maximum admissible expenditure levels. The Commission recommended increases in the maximum reimbursement levels in seven currency areas (Swiss franc, pound sterling, Italian lira, Netherlands guilder, Norwegian krone, Swedish krona and United States dollar) in a range of between 5 and 12.1 per cent. Pending the in-depth review of the education grant scheduled for 1997, it also recommended that the amount of additional reimbursement of boarding costs for staff at designated duty stations be increased for three currency areas (pound sterling, Italian lira and United States dollar) where it was lower than the normal reimbursement. The amount of the special education grant for each disabled child was reconfirmed at an amount equal to 100 per cent of the revised amount of maximum allowable expenses for the regular education grant. The Commission requested the Assembly to delegate to the Chairman of ICSC the authority to approve a special measure for Beijing that allowed reimbursement of expenditure up to the approved level of maximum allowable expenses for the United States dollar/United States area.

Those measures, applicable from the school year in progress on 1 January 1997, were endorsed by the General Assembly (resolution 51/216).

Mobility and hardship scheme

In response to General Assembly resolution 47/216 [YUN 1992, p. 1055], the Commission reviewed the operation of the mobility and hardship scheme [YUN 1989, p. 886] which had been introduced with effect from 1 July 1990, and noted the unanimous satisfaction among the member organizations with the functioning of the scheme, which was found to be a useful and cost-efficient management tool. ICSC concluded that current hardship levels and the structure of the mobility element were working well and should continue in their existing form. With respect to the non-removal element, a time limitation for a period of five years at one duty station, to be extended for up to seven years on an exceptional basis, would be introduced as of 1 January 1997. The Commission also reviewed the linkage between the base/floor salary and the mobility and hardship allowance, and concluded that there was no technical reason to depart from the current adjustment procedure.

In compliance with Assembly resolution 49/223 [YUN 1994, p. 1374], the Commission reconsidered its 1994 decision to increase the level of hazard pay for international staff from a flat amount and to link its future movements to the base/floor salary. It decided to delink hazard pay for Professional and higher category staff from the base/floor salary, and to review the amounts every two years. As for locally recruited staff, hazard pay would continue to be linked to the local salary scale and paid at the rate of 20 per cent of the mid-point of the relevant scale. The Assembly endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Commission.

5. Decides that the requests contained in section I.C above, paragraphs 6, 7 and 8, shall also apply in respect of staff in the General Service and other locally recruited categories;

III

Common staff assessment scale

Recalling that, in section I, paragraph 4, of its resolution 48/225 of 23 December 1993, it approved the procedure in paragraph 44 of the nineteenth annual report of the International Civil Service Commission for determining the common staff assessment scale, with two separate sets of rates (single and dependent), and recalling also that, in paragraph 5 of its resolution 48/225, it requested the Commission, in close cooperation with the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, as part of the comprehensive review of the methodology for determining the scale of pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories scheduled for 1996, to develop a common staff assessment scale for the determination of the pensionable remuneration of all categories of staff using the above-mentioned procedure and reflecting the latest available tax rates,

Noting with satisfaction that the close cooperation between the Commission and the Board has resulted in agreement between the two bodies, inter alia, on the methodology and its application for the common staff assessment scale for all categories of staff, as reflected in their respective reports,

Noting that the Commission, in accordance with article 10 (a) of its statute, has developed the common staff assessment scale for pensionable remuneration purposes contained in annex IV to the report of the Commission, taking into account the views of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board set out in paragraphs 152 to 159 of its report, and the considerations set out in paragraphs 83 to 89 of the report of the Commission,

Recalling also section V of its resolution 47/216, by which it took note of the intention of the Commission to review the operation of the mobility and hardship scheme after more experience had been gained in its operation and requested the Commission to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session,

Recalling further section VI, paragraph 2, of its resolution 49/223, by which it requested the Commission to reconsider its decision to link hazard pay to the base/floor salary scale for internationally recruited staff and its decision on the level of hazard pay and to propose alternative approaches to hazard pay and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session,

1. Takes note of the conclusions of the International Civil Service Commission in respect of the operation of the mobility and hardship scheme as contained in chapter VII of its report;

4. Requests the Commission to review further the linkage between the base/floor salary scale and the mobility and hardship allowance, taking into account the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee of the General Assembly;

VII

Staff participation in the work of the Commission

D = Rate applicable to staff members with a dependent spouse or child.

S = Rate applicable to staff members with no dependent spouse or child.

<sup>a</sup> This scale will be implemented in conjunction with a consolidation of 5.26 per cent of post adjustment. There will be consequential adjustments in the post adjustment indices and multipliers at all duty stations, effective 1 January 1997. Thereafter, changes in post adjustment classifications will be effected on the basis of the movements of the consolidated post adjustment indices.

Personnel policies

Staff redeployment

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 50/214 [YUN 1995, p. 1386], submitted on 28 March, in his proposed programme budget for the 1996-1997 biennium [A/C.5/50/57], proposals for possible savings to achieve the $ 154 million of additional cost reductions required by the Assembly (see PART FIVE, Chapter II). Those reductions were to be achieved through reduced staff and other savings. The Assembly had decided on a vacancy rate of 6.4 per cent for both Professional and General Service posts. However, the Secretary-General anticipated that an average biennial vacancy rate of 9 per cent for Professional posts and 7 per cent for General Service posts could be realized in 1996-1997. The increase in vacancies was expected to be realized through full use of attrition in 1996-1997; strict enforcement of retirement age; freeze in recruitment, subject to limited exceptions; implementation of an early separation programme; introduction of a programme for lateral redeployment of staff; and involuntary separation of staff if those measures did not prove sufficient. The Secretary-General had issued an administrative instruction setting out the consequences of budgetary reductions for staff members. Involuntary reductions in staff would be achieved through a mechanism that would ensure that affected staff were considered for all available vacancies. That mechanism, which was designed to protect the rights of staff and to ensure their retention on the basis of relative competence, was being established in consultation with staff representatives Secretariat-wide. An early separation programme for 1996 had been offered worldwide, with the expectation that voluntary buyouts would have a significant effect on achieving the overall reduction target. Outplacement and job search support would be needed for those losing their employment. The Secretary-General said the human dimension of the process deserved the most serious concern and attention.

In a 28 August addendum [A/C.5/50/57/Add.1], the Secretary-General identified reductions to bring the 1996-1997 programme budget to $2,608 million. The additional $14.1 million in reductions identified related to the higher than anticipated vacancies. The higher vacancy levels experienced as of the end of July (900 total: 466 Professional and 434 General Service) reflected the impact of the 1995 and 1996 early separation programmes. Some 290 Professional and 148 General Service staff had been granted early separation. By freezing posts vacated as a result of those separations, as well as other vacant posts, higher levels of savings had been realized.

The Assembly, in decision 50/506 of 17 September, noted the decision of the Secretary-General to defer action related to the involuntary separation of staff to achieve the objectives of resolution 50/214 until the Assembly had considered his report, it being understood that, in the meantime, efforts would continue to be made to find appropriate placement for them.

In a 9 October report [A/51/7/Add.1], ACABQ advised that the Secretary-General should not carry out any involuntary separations solely to achieve budget savings, since no decision had been taken by the Assembly to abolish posts and the Assembly was still to consider the Secretary-General's proposals on budget reductions, including an increase of the vacancy rate for Professionals above 6.4 per cent. In that regard, the Advisory Committee recommended that staff regulation 9.1 should be clarified to ensure that "reduction of staff" was used only as a consequence of abolition of posts, it being further understood that any changes in the number of posts under the regular budget required the specific approval of the Assembly. In seeking to create a certain level of vacancies in established posts, the Secretary-General should avoid creating a situation leading to the de facto existence of supernumeraries. Decisions to effect involuntary separation of staff should be taken with due regard to the accountability of senior officials for the implications—financial or otherwise—of their actions, should those actions be subject to judicial or administrative review.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/221 B.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling its resolution 50/214, in which it decided, inter alia, that the vacancy rate would be 6.4 per cent for both Professional and General Service posts, and its resolutions 50/215 A to C and 50/216 of 23 December 1995 and 50/230 of 7 June 1996,

Recalling also the request made to the Secretary-General in section II, paragraph 7, of resolution 50/214 to submit, as soon as possible, and no later than 31 March 1996, to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee, a report containing proposals of possible savings for its consideration and approval,

Reaffirming the role of the current intergovernmental process in reviewing the efficiency and reform of the programmes and activities and the need to avoid duplication,

General Assembly resolution 51/221 B

18 December 1996 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/750) without vote, 17 December (meeting 46); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.33); agenda item 116. Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 7-9, 11-15, 17, 20, 23, 25, 32, 33, 39, 40, 42-46; plenary 89.

Human resources management issues

The Secretary-General submitted a 19 August report on implementation of his strategy for the management of the Organization's human resources and other human resources management issues [A/C.5/51/1], endorsed by the General Assembly in 1994 [GA res. 49/222 A]. The report reflected the challenges confronted over the past 18 months and the efforts to effect the human resources measures required in implementing the 1996-1997 programme budget, including areas where delays occurred in the delivery of strategy components. It highlighted successes, where adjustments needed to be made, where action could perhaps not have been taken and the need for guidance and support from Member States. The report showed how implementation of the strategy focused on facilitating action and encouraging change through increased delegation to programme managers of authority for human resources and benefits administration. The report also described the evolving role of human resources management, and the search for support and guidance from Member States in setting a strategic vision for the future and continued advancement of human resources management as perhaps the most critical element of management reform.

On 5 November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the application of UN recruitment, placement and promotion policies [A/51/656]. The Inspectors recommended that the Secretary-General urgently review and improve all personnel policies and procedures. He should, in particular, emphasize the authority of the Office of Human Resources Management (OHRM) to enforce recruitment, placement and promotion policies throughout the Secretariat; ban the practices of granting temporary appointments at the P-2 and P-3 levels for periods longer than three months (if they were not related to replacement of staff serving on mission); ensure strict implementation of the policy of entry-level appointments exclusively through competitive examinations and G-to-P promotion; forbid the "regularization" of temporary contracts; ban the placing of staff on vacant posts which were at a higher level for more than three months and consider those staff placed for longer periods as non-eligible for promotion against them; cancel automatic preferences in recruitment, placement or promotion based on gender as contradicting Articles 8 and 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter and staff regulation 4.2; ensure strict application of the requirements concerning education standards in recruitment for posts in the Professional category; and introduce specific criteria for accelerated promotion. The Secretary-General should explain to the Assembly why a career development plan had been neither put in place nor included in the proposed medium-term plan, and inform the Assembly on what policies, staffing and programmes would replace a comprehensive career development system, with time-limited objectives for achieving those actions. The Secretary-General should issue specific guidance to establish clearly responsibility and accountability of programme managers for proper use of human resources, as well as sanctions for non-performance. Those sanctions should include reimbursement for any financial loss suffered by the United Nations as a result of gross negligence, such as improper motivation, wilful violation or reckless disregard of Staff Regulations, Staff Rules and established policies regulating recruitment, placement and promotion.

In a 9 December addendum [A/51/656/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted his comments on the JIU report. He explained that due to the financial crisis and the mandated regular and extrabudgetary reductions, resulting in the loss of some 40 staff in OHRM, as well as increased departmental activity, the degree of focus and the level of activity needed to progress with implementation of his 1994 strategy for the management of human resources as thoroughly and as quickly as desired had decreased. Delays in introducing measures to modernize and improve the Secretariat's human resources management policies and practices had also delayed implementation of JIU's recommendations on recruitment. He noted that fuller implementation of his strategy would have addressed a number of the major JIU concerns. The Secretary-General regretted that the report missed the interrelationship between individual elements of policy and procedural change and their collective importance in implementing a human resources management strategy. Some of the conclusions and factual information utilized in the report did not serve well JIU's efforts to address the inadequacies of the current system. Nevertheless, he could support a number of the Inspectors' recommendations, in particular those which closely correlated with the course of the Secretariat initiatives in the implementation of his human resources management strategy.

The Assembly, in decision 51/456 of 18 December, deferred to its 1997 resumed fifty-first session consideration of the JIU report.

Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request [GA res. 49/222 A, section II], the Secretary-General submitted a 22 November report on the ratio between career and fixed-term appointments [A/C.5/51/34]. The report traced the evolution of the distinction between "career" and "fixed-term" appointments and provided data on staff in posts subject to geographical distribution and the proportion of fixed-term appointments for all staff. The report explained that the fixed-term appointment, which traditionally applied to staff who were not expected to remain beyond a limited number of years, after which they would leave the Organization, had evolved over the years to such an extent that that type of appointment could no longer be usefully contrasted to career appointments, because all staff on fixed-term appointments were potentially on a career track, as a result of Assembly resolution 37/126 [YUN 1982, p. 1455] and other factors.

Against that background, the Secretary-General proposed to the Assembly three possible approaches, which could be adopted individually or in combination. First, a desirable proportion of career appointments could be set, with no change to the existing types or conditions of appointments. The Assembly might establish that proportion on the basis of the number of established posts in the regular budget, so as to relate to the long-term resources of the Organization the overall number of long-term contractual appointments given to staff members. Within that limit, most staff members would be placed against extrabudgetary posts when consistent with the nature of the functions and the funding of the posts in question. Second, resolution 37/126 could be clarified to specify that staff members would be entitled to consideration for conversion to career appointment, not only when staff members completed five years of continuing good service, but also when the work and functions to be performed were of a continuing nature. If the Assembly decided to set a desirable proportion as proposed, resolution 37/126 should be further elaborated to specify that the number of career appointments should not exceed the resulting overall limit. Third, building on the best attributes of both proposals, a dual-track system of career and non-career appointments could be introduced, with new types of appointment better suited than the existing ones to the current and future needs of the Organization. The Secretary-General felt that the third approach would reinforce and refocus the concept of career service, making it more responsive to ongoing mandates and programme needs; allow for a more effective application of the applicable standards of performance and a better management of human resources; and ensure that the current and future needs of the Organization and its constraints were taken into account, while protecting the legitimate rights and expectations of the staff.

In a 4 December note [A/51/705], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the JIU report on comparison of methods of calculating equitable geographical distribution within the UN common system. The Inspectors recommended that, in the interest of a fairer interpretation and application of the principle of geographical equity in the staffing of the organizations, current use of the basic principles, such as membership and contributions, should at least be allocated on a fixed basis. More consideration should be given to demographic profile and post-level weighting principles. In the cases where applying such principles for each member State raised technical or statistical difficulties, more emphasis should be given to regional and subregional groupings. At the very least, high-level managerial posts should be distributed equally among the geographical regions of the world, as determined by each organization. Given the dwindling number of top administrative posts, the application of a principle of rotation, particularly in the higher categories, was desirable. Bearing in mind those considerations, a post at one grade in a given category could not be compared to one at a different grade in that category, and far less to one in a different category. It was thus desirable to adopt a principle of weighting, thereby assigning a certain coefficient to each grade in each category of post. The system currently applied in the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations merited consideration, without prejudice to any other similar, equitable system. An equitable system of grade weighting would rationalize the practice of high-level appointments in large part, as already empirically applied within the UN organizations. To preserve the universality and objectivity of international organizations, voluntary contributions from member States should not be accompanied by pressure or stipulations regarding the recruitment of nationals from a particular country or region to carry out the projects or programmes thus financed. To avoid overrepresentation, the secretariats of international organizations should be cautious in accepting nationals from any country provided free of charge to perform tasks normally assigned to staff recruited by the organizations themselves. Such an assignment might be considered as an exceptional measure only when a full- or part-time international civil servant was not justified by programme implementation requirements, and should not be allowed as an indirect way of integrating such contractees into the category of staff member. The Inspectors also recommended the use of a factor of "time a post is occupied" by a staff member of a given nationality: instead of measuring the geographical distribution of posts year by year, post distribution should preferably be considered over a certain number of years. That would give a truer indication of how the principle of equitable geographical distribution was really being applied. The Inspectors felt that it would be necessary to initiate a follow-up study to develop viable options for methodologies for calculating geographical distribution formulas.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted decision 51/456.

Human resources management

At its 89th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1996, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee:

(a) Decided to defer until the first part of its resumed fifty-first session consideration of agenda item 120, entitled "Human resources management", and the reports submitted under that item, including the reports of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled "Inspection of the application of United Nations recruitment, placement and promotion policies (Part II—Placement and promotions)" and "Comparison of methods of calculating equitable geographical distribution within the United Nations common system" and the outstanding report of the Unit entitled "Management-Staff Union relationships in the United Nations system", and to consider the agenda item as a priority item;

(b) Requested the Secretary-General, pending that consideration and on an interim basis:

- (i) To review the need for the general recruitment freeze and to oversee and monitor all recruitments, appointments, placements and promotions through the Office of Human Resources Management of the Secretariat, taking into account the need to recruit from unrepresented and under-represented Member States and to achieve gender balance;
- (ii) Not to expand arrangements that exist with regard to delegation of authority in recruitment, appointment, placement and promotion matters;
- (iii) To limit short-term appointments against regular budget posts to temporary replacements in case of mission service and leave;
- (iv) To limit exceptions to regular rules and procedures to the recruitment, appointment, placement and promotion of under-secretaries-general, assistant secretaries-general, special envoys at all levels and staff of the Executive Office of the Secretary-General;
- (v) To continue not to convert fixed-term contracts into permanent contracts until the General Assembly has taken action on the relevant report;
- (vi) To report to the General Assembly at the first part of its resumed fifty-first session on all recruitment, appointment, placement and promotion activities after 1 November 1996.

General Assembly decision 51/456

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/643/Add.1) without vote, 17 December (meeting 46); draft by Rapporteur (A/C.5/51/L.30), based on informal consultations; agenda item 120.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 21, 23, 25, 26, 30, 31, 34, 37, 46; plenary 89.

Gratis personnel

Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request [GA res. 48/226 C], the Secretary-General submitted a report on the question of gratis personnel provided to the Secretariat by Governments and other entities [A/51/688 & Corr.1]. The Assembly had requested the report in relation to the secondment, at no cost to the Secretariat, of military and civilian personnel to the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) and the establishment of guidelines for that purpose. However, the number of such personnel had significantly increased, and the scope of their functions had expanded to backstopping of peacekeeping operations, disarmament and humanitarian assistance, and to other areas such as economic and social research, internal oversight services, and administration and management. Consideration of policies and procedures for accepting gratis personnel could not be separated from the overall financial situation of the Organization and the current environment of increasing demands coupled with growing budgetary constraints. In some parts of the Organization, certain areas of Secretariat work were becoming increasingly dependent on the provision of gratis personnel. That raised such questions as the impact of the practice on the international character of the Secretariat and its ability to service impartially the activities of the Organization, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter and the Staff Rules and Regulations; its impact on the international civil service and the composition of the Secretariat; the implications for the principle of collective responsibility of Member States for financing the Organization's mandates, programmes and activities; and the financial implications, including ways to meet programme support costs connected with gratis personnel. Annexed to the report were: guidelines for the acceptance of gratis personnel; number and distribution of gratis personnel in the Secretariat; their number and nationality; number and nationality of military officers, including gratis military officers, in DPKO; distribution of gratis military officers in DPKO; and estimated annual costs of backstopping gratis military officers charged to the UN budget.

In its conclusions, the report stated that gratis personnel should be accepted on an exceptional basis, for a defined, limited period and in accordance with guidelines that preserved the international character of the responsibilities of the Organization. In keeping with the requirement that budgeted resources from assessed contributions should not be used to support staff or activities financed by voluntary contributions, the charge for programme support costs to support gratis personnel should be enforced. The report invited the Assembly to reaffirm the principle that Member States collectively should provide the necessary staffing resources to implement UN programmes and activities, and to note the conditions and guidelines under which gratis personnel might be accepted by the Secretary-General. The Assembly was also invited to reaffirm the policy concerning the financial liability of the Organization in accepting gratis personnel.

Employment of retirees

The General Assembly, in resolution 49/222 B [YUN 1995, p. 1412], had granted a temporary derogation to the rule that no former staff member who was in receipt of a pension benefit from the United Nations should receive more than $ 12,000 in total in any calendar year, pending the development by the Secretary-General of a comprehensive policy on the use of retirees. That derogation, which was granted with a view to maintaining the effectiveness of conference services, was due to lapse in mid-September 1996. The Secretary-General, in a 7 May report [A/C.5/50/61], recommended that the temporary derogation granted to conference-servicing staff be extended to 31 December.

On 7 June, the General Assembly in decision 50/485 extended the derogation until 30 October 1996 and decided that no further extension should be granted beyond that date. It also decided to consider as a matter of priority and not later than 15 October the Secretary-General's report on the subject of the use of retirees, and requested ACABQ to report by 1 October. It invited the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to examine at its July session the possibility of suspending pension benefits for periods of less than six months.

In a 16 August report [A/C.5/51/2], the Secretary-General discussed the general policy regarding the use of retirees and the concerns of Member States. He examined the employment of retirees for administrative, peacekeeping, humanitarian, development and other functions and for conference services; presented a cost-benefit analysis of their employment and proposed arrangements to govern their hiring; and discussed the control and monitoring aspects and the decision of the Pension Board.

The Secretary-General concluded that, while he was mindful of the concerns of the Assembly and the need to control the employment of retirees, imposing too stringent a limit on their employment would be costly and detrimental to the Organization in quantitative budgetary terms and in qualitative servicing and programme delivery terms. He therefore proposed the establishment of a six-month ceiling per calendar year for short-term retiree staff, with a modified earnings limit under Special Service Agreements (SSAs), and without the obligation to re-enter the Pension Fund. Assignments for six months or longer, without a 30-day break in service, would require mandatory re-entry into the Fund, in line with the Fund's regulations. That would also require exceptional approval by OHRM, which would grant it only after the requesting department had presented proof that all other alternatives either were not feasible or were more costly. An SSA earnings ceiling would be set at the equivalent of three months of gross salary at the mid-point of the salary scale. For conference service language staff, the limit would be set at six months' gross salary.

The Secretary-General recognized that the formula did not address the concerns of Member States with respect to "double dipping" by those retirees in receipt of a contributory and earned UN pension or to the related concern that the same proscriptions did not apply to the earnings of a freelancer who might be receiving a pension from a non-UN source, including national civil service or private-sector sources.

Concerning control and monitoring, the Secretary-General undertook to ensure that all programme managers were aware of the responsibility to ensure that retirees were employed only as a last resort, after all other options had been explored and rejected for good reason. In addition, close cooperation would be maintained with the Pension Fund to ensure that all recipients of a UN pension were properly identified. In that regard, consideration was being given to establishing an interface between the Integrated Management Information System and the Fund's computer system.

ACABQ, in an 8 October report [A/51/475], proposed that the arrangements currently in place should continue, but updated to take account of inflation, since the $12,000 limit was set by the Assembly in 1982. It believed that those retirees employed for conference services should be exempt from the earnings limitation, but the six-month limit during any calendar year should apply to all retirees temporarily hired by the Organization.

ACABQ recommended that the Assembly set a ceiling across the board of $22,000 per calendar year for the employment of retired staff in receipt of a pension benefit from the Pension Fund, with the exception of staff used in conference servicing. However, no retired staff should be employed for more than six months per year. It also recommended that the Secretary-General be requested to report every two years on the use of such personnel, providing information on retirees recruited on a short-term basis, at all categories and levels, as well as under SSAs; the next report, on the period from 1 January 1995 to 31 December 1996, should be submitted to the Assembly's fifty-second session. The Assembly should request the Pension Board to make its recommendations, as requested in its June decision.

On 4 November, the General Assembly in decision 51/408 endorsed the recommendations and observations of ACABQ and set a ceiling across the board of $22,000 per calendar year, representing an amount updated from the $12,000 limit set in 1982, for the employment of retired staff in receipt of a pension benefit from the Pension Fund, with the exception of language-services staff for whom the ceiling would be $40,000 per calendar year, and to limit such employment in all cases to no more than six months per calendar year. The Assembly also decided that no former staff member in receipt of a pension benefit should be reemployed at a level higher than that at which he or she separated from the organization concerned, nor should be remunerated at a level higher than that at which regular staff were remunerated for the same function at the same duty station. It requested the Secretary-General, in employing retirees, to continue to seek geographical and gender balance and to observe the current practice whereby retirees must be medically cleared before re-employment.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to report to it every two years on all aspects of the use of retired personnel, including possible revision of the limits and providing information concerning retirees recruited on a short-term basis in all categories and at all levels as well as under SSAs. The first report should exceptionally cover the period from 1 January 1995 to 31 December 1997 and be transmitted through ACABQ to the Assembly at its fifty-third session, in 1998. The Assembly also requested the UN Joint Staff Pension Board to re-examine the request made in its decision 50/485 of 7 June and to report to the Assembly in 1998. It further requested the Office of Internal Oversight Services to audit the compliance of recruitment of retirees in the Secretariat and to report thereon in 1998.

By decision 51/460 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item "Human resources management" at its resumed fifty-first (1997) session.

Staff composition

On 27 September, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report [A/51/421] on staff composition of the UN Secretariat, by nationality, gender, grade and type of appointment. The total number of staff as at 30 June 1996 was 14,166, of whom 8,781 were paid from the regular budget and 5,385 from extra-budgetary sources. There were 4,387 in the Professional category and above, 9,214 in the General Service and related categories and 565 project personnel.

Staff in posts subject to geographical distribution numbered 2,514. As at 30 June, there were 23 unrepresented Member States, compared to 25 at 30 June 1995, and 22 under-represented Member States, compared to 25 the year before. Changes in representation derived not only from staff appointments and separations from service, but also from such factors as adjustments in desirable ranges resulting from an increase or decrease in the number of posts subject to geographical distribution, changes in the number of Member States, variations in assessed contributions or population of individual Member States, and changes in the status of some staff members. The report also provided information on groupings of Member States, representation of developing and other countries among staff at the senior levels, representation of women and recruitment activities.

Between 1 July 1995 and 30 June 1996, 129 appointments were made to posts subject to geographical distribution. Of those, 5 (3.9 per cent) were nationals of unrepresented Member States; 20 (15.5 per cent) of under-represented Member States; 99 (76.7 per cent) of within-range Member States; and 5 (3.9 per cent) of over-represented Member States.

Status of women in the Secretariat

In 1996, the Secretary-General submitted two reports on improving the status of women in the Secretariat.

In a 7 March report [E/CN.6/1996/7] to the Commission on the Status of Women, he provided statistical data and described developments that had taken place since June 1995. The overall level of representation within the global Secretariat rose 0.5 per cent to reach 34.6 per cent at the end of 1995, falling only 0.4 per cent short of the 35 per cent target set by the Assembly. As of that date, 16.9 per cent of posts at the D-1 level and above were encumbered by women. However, the number of women promoted within the Professional and higher levels had generally declined, except for the D-1 level, which showed an increase from 29.2 per cent to 31.4 per cent. The percentage of promotions of women to the P-3, P-4 and P-5 levels decreased from 60 per cent to 48.6 per cent, from 47.3 per cent to 41 per cent, and from 58.9 per cent to 52.5 per cent, respectively. There was a small increase in the percentage of women appointed to the lower and middle Professional levels. The Secretary-General said that it was to be expected that the mandated increase in vacancy rates and cost reductions in the 1996-1997 programme budget would have a direct impact on the availability of placement opportunities for all staff and on those to improve the representation of women in the Secretariat. However, guidelines for dealing with the human resources aspect of any downsizing exercise would be developed in the context of ensuring full compliance with the Charter.

To consolidate all policy issuances on achieving gender balance, the Secretariat had issued two documents: "Policies to achieve gender equality in the United Nations" and "Special measures for the achievement of gender equality". The new Steering Committee for the Advancement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat, appointed by the Secretary-General, was expected to focus its attention on developing its role in monitoring progress towards achieving the goals of the Secretary-General's strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000). Under that plan, the Secretariat had received a grant to finance the development of a questionnaire to gauge the degree to which harassment, including sexual harassment, existed in the Secretariat.

In a 13 September report [A/51/304] to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General provided statistics as at 30 June 1996 and described the achievements and challenges in meeting the prescribed gender-distribution goals. The percentage of women in posts subject to geographical distribution stood at 35.1 per cent, compared with 23.1 per cent in 1985, an increase of 12 per cent over the last 11 years. The percentages of women at the D-1 and D-2 levels were 19.3 and 19.7, respectively. The percentages of women at the Assistant Secretary-General and Under-Secretary-General levels decreased to 6.7 and 4.8, compared to 14.3 and 10 in 1995. Between 30 June 1995 and 30 June 1996, a total of 196 staff members, 41.32 per cent of whom were women, were promoted. At every level, from P-3 to D-1, more men than women were promoted.

The Secretary-General stated that he would continue to pursue the goal set by the Assembly with respect to the improvement of the status of women. The target of 35 per cent overall representation in posts subject to geographical distribution had been achieved, but in view of the financial crisis the goal of 50/50 gender distribution by the year 2000 was not realistic. The Assembly might wish to set more realistic goals, such as 37 per cent by 1997 and 41 per cent by 1999. While the target of 25 per cent for women in senior decision-making levels had not been achieved, it should continue to be a guiding factor. The next century should find the United Nations at the forefront of gender issues. Member States needed to collaborate with the United Nations and demonstrate their commitment to gender equality, and to identify the means and resources for achieving those objectives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/67.

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling Articles 1 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as Article 8, which provides that the United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs,

Recalling also its resolutions 45/125 of 14 December 1990 and 45/239 C of 21 December 1990, as well as the relevant paragraphs of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995,

Concerned at the serious and continuing under-representation of women in the Secretariat, particularly at the D-1 level and above, where the numbers of women remain unacceptably low,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Also welcomes the achievement of the goal of 35 per cent overall participation rate of women in posts subject to geographical distribution;
3. Reaffirms the goal of 50/50 gender distribution by the year 2000, and expresses its concern that this goal may not be met, especially at policy-making and decision-making levels (D-1 and above);
4. Calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure full and urgent implementation of the strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000) in order to achieve the goal contained in the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women for overall gender equality, particularly at the Professional level and above, by the year 2000;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that individual managers are held accountable for implementing the strategic plan within their areas of responsibility;
6. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his work to create a gender-sensitive work environment, including through training and implementation of all appropriate administrative procedures, in particular the special measures outlined in his report, and through further development of a policy on sexual harassment;
7. Further requests the Secretary-General to enable the Focal Point for Women within the Secretariat effectively to monitor and facilitate progress in the implementation of the strategic plan;
8. Strongly encourages Member States to support the strategic plan and the efforts of the United Nations and the specialized agencies to increase the percentage of women in Professional posts, especially at the D-1 level and above, by identifying and regularly submitting more women candidates and by encouraging women to apply for posts within the Secretariat, the specialized agencies and the regional commissions;
9. Urges the Secretary-General to increase the number of women employed in the Secretariat from developing countries, including at the D-1 level and above, particularly those that are unrepresented or under-represented and from countries that have a low representation of women, including countries with economies in transition;
10. Requests the Secretary-General to report on progress made on the status of women in the Secretariat to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-first session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session.

12 December 1996 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/51/612) without vote, 18 November (meeting 42); 112-nation draft (A/C.3/51/L.19), orally revised; agenda item 103.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 3rd Committee 13-18, 29, 35, 42; plenary 82.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/310 of 13 November, decided that the coordination segment of its 1997 substantive session would be devoted to consideration of mainstreaming of a gender perspective into all policies and programmes of the UN system.

Staff rules and regulations

In a 10 October report [A/C.5/51/7], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly amendments to the Staff Rules under the 100 series, amending the terminology of the rule on the Appointment and Promotion Board to refer to "subsidiary panels" rather than "working groups" and to simplify the process under which cases were considered by the Appointment and Promotion Committees; the rule on special leave by the addition of a new paragraph to allow, for the 1996-1997 biennium, the granting of special leave for pension purposes, at no cost to the Organization, to protect the pension benefits of staff who were within two years of achieving age 55 and 21 years of service, or who were 55 years of age and within two years of 25 years of service; the rule on termination indemnity by the addition of new paragraphs to implement the new special leave for pension purposes; and the rule on appeals to broaden the scope of conciliation procedures and introduce a simplified and expedited procedure to handle small claims. Other amendments concerned rules in the 200 series relating to pensionable remuneration and compensation for death, injury or illness attributable to service.

The General Assembly, by decision 51/455 of 18 December, took note of the amendments to the 100 and 200 series of the Staff Rules, without prejudice to the consideration of agenda item 120, entitled "Human resources management", at the first part of its resumed (1997) fifty-first session.

Staff representation

On 10 May, the Secretary-General reported [A/C.5/50/64] on the question of the definition of "reasonable time" for staff representational activities. The report described the quantifiable definition of reasonable time for staff representational activities, as recommended by the Staff-Management Coordination Committee in 1995 and subsequently endorsed by the Secretary-

General. The definition stipulated full-time release for the President or Chairman of the Executive Committee/Council representing staff in the range of 1,000, and 60 per cent release if that number was smaller. At duty stations other than New York and Geneva, release for the First and Second Vice-Presidents was 3 days per week or 96 hours per month if the staff represented was 1,000, and 1.5 days per week (or 48 hours per month) if it was smaller. Members of the Executive Committee would be allowed 32 hours per month release, except for New York, where 44 hours per month would apply, and members of the Staff Council would be allowed 10 hours per month, with those at New York being allowed 15 hours and those on field missions an average of 5 hours. Annexed to the report was a breakdown of "reasonable time" to be granted per duty station for the conduct of staff representational activities.

The Assistant Secretary-General for Human Resources Management informed the Fifth Committee on 15 May that the preliminary estimate of the indirect cost of applying the "reasonable time formula" was $2.4 million at 1996 rates. At its reconvened session on 3 June, the Fifth Committee decided that, pending consideration of the Secretary-General's relevant report at the Assembly's fifty-first session, the proposals concerning the number of hours and the full-time secondment of the Second Vice-Chairman of the Staff Committee in New York would not be implemented. The Secretary-General would submit a detailed report indicating the direct and indirect costs of those activities.

The General Assembly, by decision 50/483 of 7 June, deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report on the costs and modalities of staff representational activities until its fifty-first session.

In response to the Fifth Committee's request, the Secretary-General submitted an 8 October report [A/C.5/51/6] on cost and modalities of staff representational activities: financial data pertaining to UN staff associations and unions. Direct costs for 1994 amounted to $441,900 and indirect costs to $576,400. Annexed to the report were information and data by staff associations and unions throughout the global Secretariat on their paying membership levels, assets, expenditures and activities.

The General Assembly, in decision 51/456 of 18 December, deferred consideration of the item "Human resources management" until its resumed (1997) session.

Privileges and immunities

The General Assembly, by decision 50/484 of 7 June, took note of the Secretary-General's note [YUN 1995, p. 1419] on respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and specialized agencies and related organizations and the statement by the UN Security Coordinator on 14 December 1995, and requested the Secretary-General to report on the question to the Assembly at its fifty-first session.

In response to the Assembly's request, the Secretary-General submitted a 30 September report on behalf of and with the approval of ACC [A/C.5/51/3] containing updated information on respect for the privileges and immunities of officials as well as their security and safety for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996. The Secretary-General said that 10 civilian staff members belonging to different organizations had lost their lives in performance of their duties during the reporting period, while others were subjected to attack, injury, abuse or harassment. In Liberia in April and in the Central African Republic in May 1996, it had become necessary to relocate dependants and/or non-essential staff to safe havens as a result of a serious deterioration in the security situation. As part of the effort to further improve staff security and security management in the field, the Office of the UN Security Coordinator convened an ad hoc inter-agency meeting on security (Geneva, 8-9 May), followed by a working group on technical security issues (New York, 5-7 June) to review security matters of concern to organizations of the UN system. Issues considered included the need for security training for all staff, hostage crisis management and strengthening of inter-agency cooperation in the area of security. The meeting concluded that the issue of the costs of providing security for staff had to be addressed with renewed urgency, and stressed the need for sufficient resources to be allocated to implement the required security measures (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV, for details). The arrest and detention of staff members continued to be a major issue, particularly in the case of Rwanda, where numerous locally recruited UN staff continued to be detained. As at 30 June 1996, 27 staff members of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East remained in detention. The report also discussed the issue of taxation of UN officials by host countries and restrictions on their official travel.

UN Joint Staff Pension Fund

During 1996, the number of participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (UNJSPF) decreased from 68,708 to 67,997, or by 1.03 per cent; the number of periodic benefits in award increased from 38,914 to 41,433, or by 6.47 per cent. On 31 December, the breakdown of the periodic benefits in award was as follows: 13,356 retirement benefits, 8,115 early retirement benefits, 6,196 deferred retirement benefits, 5,842 widows' and widowers' benefits, 7,130 children's benefits, 745 disability benefits and 49 secondary dependants' benefits. In the course of the year, 5,622 lump-sum withdrawal and other settlements were paid.

The Fund was administered by the 33-member United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, which held its forty-seventh session in Turin, Italy, from 8 to 19 July [A/51/9 & Corr.1]. Major items considered at the session were: actuarial matters including, in particular, the twenty-third actuarial valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1995; management of the Fund's investments and membership of the Investments Committee; the Fund's financial statements; transfer agreements between the Fund and the former USSR, Ukrainian SSR and Byelorussian SSR; and amendments to the Fund's Regulations, Administrative Rules and Pension Adjustment System. The Board reviewed the interest rate used to determine lump-sum commutations and held a preliminary discussion on the entitlement to survivors' benefits of spouses and former spouses. In close cooperation with ICSC, the Board carried out a comprehensive review of the pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions for all categories of staff, as requested by the General Assembly in 1990, 1992 and 1994 [GA res. 45/242, 47/203 and 49/224]. Also, at the request of the General Assembly in 1996 (decision 50/485), the Board reviewed the issue of suspension of benefits in cases of re-employment of UNJSPF retirees in member organizations of the Fund.

The Board recommended to the General Assembly that the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea be admitted as a member organization of the Fund.

ACABQ submitted, in October, its comments on the Board's report [A/51/644], and the Assembly acted on the Board's recommendations in December (see below).

Pension Fund investments

The market value of UNJSPF assets as at 31 December 1996 was $16,913 million, an increase of $1,725 million over the previous year. The total investment return for the year was 12.1 per cent, which, after adjusting for inflation, represented a "real" rate of 8.5 per cent. Investment income from interest and dividends amounted to $609 million in 1996. New funds which became available for investment (contributions plus investment income, less benefit payments and administrative expenses) totalled $644 million, while realized capital gains amounted to $171 million.

The Fund remained one of the most diversified pension funds in the world, as the proportion of its assets exposed to currencies other than the United States dollar, which was the Fund's unit of account, as well as the ratio of equities to total assets, continued to increase. The value of the development-related investments was $1,755 million as at 31 December 1996. Close contacts were maintained with international organizations, regional development institutions, Governments and private sources to ensure full awareness of investment opportunities in developing countries.

Arrangements for new advisory services were completed in November, and the Fund then had three regional advisers representing North America, Europe and Asia and the Pacific. That arrangement provided the Fund with additional diversification of advice. The custody arrangement implemented in 1994 was fully operational and working efficiently. The diversification of the custodians had provided the Fund with better safety and security of the assets. Both arrangements had resulted in substantial savings.

In a 20 September report on the Fund's investments for the period from 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1996 [A/C.5/51/4], the Secretary-General noted that economic activity had improved worldwide during most of that period, but had slowed down in most major industrialized countries towards the end of the period. The period had been dominated by extensive structural reforms in most countries to liberalize trade and investments and reduce budget deficits, and by the continued struggle by the European Union to meet the convergence criteria for economic and monetary union. The currency and financial markets were relatively volatile; hence the extensive diversification of the Fund was beneficial, as economic cycles and market movements were not synchronized. The markets in which the Fund had investments, the strength of the major currencies against the United States dollar and the level of investments in those markets contributed more to the total return of the Fund during the year ended 31 December 1996. Equity investment was the key contributor, notably the commitment to the United States and Europe. The contributions from fixed income were mainly the result of exposure to securities denominated in currencies other than the United States dollar due to significant investments in those markets. However, exposure to the deutsche mark and yen was favourable. After doing very poorly over the last two years, the real estate portfolio had a total return of 11.6 per cent. Over the longer periods, three and five years, equity also did better than other assets, particularly United States equities.

Admission of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea

The fifth meeting of the States parties to the International Convention on the Law of the Sea (New York, 24 July-12 August) instructed the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea to apply for membership in UNJSPF.

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/217, admitted the Tribunal to membership of UNJSPF, in accordance with article 3 of the Regulations of the Fund, with effect from 1 January 1997.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/217.

United Nations pension system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/242 of 21 December 1990, 46/192 of 20 December 1991, 47/203 of 22 December 1992, 48/224 and 48/225 of 23 December 1993 and 49/224 of 23 December 1994, as well as section VII of its resolution 50/216 of 23 December 1995 and its decision 50/485 of 7 June 1996,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board for 1996 to the General Assembly and to the member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, chapter III of the report of the International Civil Service Commission for the year 1996, the report of the Secretary-General on the investments of the Fund and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

I

Actuarial matters

Recalling section II of its resolutions 47/203 and 48/225 and section I of its resolution 49/224,

Having considered the results of the valuation of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund as at 31 December 1995 and the observations thereon of the Consulting Actuary of the Fund, the Committee of Actuaries and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board,

1. Takes note of the decrease in the actuarial imbalance from 1.49 to 1.46 per cent of pensionable remuneration, reflected in the valuation of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund as at 31 December 1995, and, in particular, of the opinions provided by the Consulting Actuary and the Committee of Actuaries, as reproduced in annexes IV and V, respectively, to the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, that there was no requirement, as at 31 December 1995, for deficiency payments under article 26 of the Regulations of the Fund and that the current contribution rate of 23.7 per cent of pensionable remuneration could be maintained for funding purposes, pending a review at the time of the next valuation, as at 31 December 1997, and in the light of future developments;

2. Takes note also of the reviews by the Standing Committee of the Board in 1995 and the Board in 1996 of the interest rate used to determine lump-sum commutations, and of the decision by the Board, under article 11 of the Regulations of the Fund, to retain the current 6.5 per cent interest rate, which would be reviewed again by the Board in 1998;

3. Takes note further of the review by the Board of further amendments required to article 28 of the Regulations of the Fund as a consequence of the increase in the maximum number of years of creditable contributory service that had been adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/224 and had entered into effect on 1 July 1995;

4. Approves, with retroactive effect as from 1 July 1996, amendments to paragraphs (d) and (g) of article 28 of the Regulations of the Fund, as set out in annex I to the present resolution.

II

Pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories and in the General Service and related categories

Recalling section I, paragraph 3, of its resolution 45/242 and section I, paragraph 3, of its resolution 47/203 concerning its request to the International Civil Service Commission to undertake, in full cooperation with the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, a further comprehensive review of the methodology for the determination of the scale of pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories, for monitoring the level of the scale and for its adjustment between comprehensive reviews, and to submit recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session, in 1996,

Recalling also section I of its resolution 48/225, in which it approved (a) the use of the income replacement approach to determine the pensionable remuneration of staff in the General Service and related categories; (b) the application of an interim adjustment procedure similar to that applicable to staff in the Professional and higher categories, namely, on the basis of a 1:1 relationship to increases in the net salaries; and (c) the procedure recommended by the Commission for determining a common staff assessment scale, with two separate sets of rates (single and dependent), for introduction in 1997,

Recalling further its request to the Commission, in the same resolution, in close cooperation with the Board and as part of the comprehensive review in 1996 of the methodology to determine the pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions of staff in the Professional and higher categories, to develop a common staff assessment scale for the determination of the pensionable remuneration of all categories of staff using the approved procedure and reflecting the latest available tax rates,

Noting with satisfaction that the close cooperation between the Commission and the Board has resulted in agreement between the two bodies on the methodologies for determining the pensionable remuneration of all categories of staff and on the development and application of a common staff assessment scale for pensionable remuneration purposes, as reflected in their respective reports,

Noting that the Commission, in accordance with article 10 (d) of its statute, has developed the common staff assessment scale for pensionable remuneration purposes, contained in annex IV to the report of the Commission, taking into account the views of the Board as set out in paragraphs 152 to 159 of its report and the considerations set out in paragraphs 83 to 89 of the report of the Commission,

Recalling its decision in section III of its resolution 51/216 of 18 December 1996 that the common staff assessment scale recommended by the Commission should be applied in determining the pensionable remuneration of all categories of staff, with effect from 1 January 1997, subject, in the case of staff in the General Service and related categories, to the procedure set out in paragraph 107 of the report of the Commission,

1. Decides, as regards staff in the Professional and higher categories, that:

(a) Income replacement in New York should continue to be used as the basis for the methodology for the determination of the pensionable remuneration of such staff;

(b) The methodology to determine the current scale of pensionable remuneration, described in annex I to the report of the International Civil Service Commission, should continue to be used in the future;

(c) The current interim adjustment procedure for adjusting pensionable remuneration of such staff between comprehensive reviews should be continued, as described in annex I to the report of the Commission;

(d) The monitoring of pensionable remuneration and the United Nations/United States income replacement ratios should be carried out on the occasion of periodic comprehensive reviews of the pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions of such staff; between comprehensive reviews, the Commission should review every two years the factors affecting the comparisons of pensionable remuneration and income replacement ratios and, if necessary, submit a report thereon to the General Assembly;

2. Takes note of the decision of the Commission to carry out, in close cooperation with the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, on the occasion of future comprehensive reviews of the pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories, actuarial analyses of the pension benefits from the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund scheme and those applicable to the staff of the comparator service, and to report thereon to the General Assembly;

3. Amends, with effect from 1 January 1997, article 54 (b) of the Regulations of the Fund, as set out in annex I to the present resolution, to incorporate the revised scale of pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories, using the approved common staff assessment scale;

4. Decides, as regards staff in the General Service and related categories, that:

(a) The income replacement approach and the methodology related thereto should continue to be used for the determination of pensionable remuneration of such staff, including the use of 66.25 per cent of the net pensionable salary for grossing-up purposes;

(b) The current interim adjustment procedure should continue to be used in the future;

5. Takes note of the decision of the Commission to establish a working group to review the methodology for identifying and quantifying the non-pensionable components of the salaries of staff in the General Service and related categories, as part of the Commission's review of the General Service salary-setting methodologies for headquarters and other duty stations scheduled for 1997;

6. Requests the Commission, in full cooperation with the Board, to undertake in 2002 further comprehensive reviews of the methodologies for the determination of the pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories and in the General Service and related categories, and for the adjustment of pensionable remuneration between comprehensive reviews, and to submit recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session.

Pension adjustment system

Recalling section IV of its resolution 46/192, section V of its resolution 47/203, section I of its resolution 48/225 and section III of its resolution 49/224,

1. Takes note of the reviews carried out by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, as described in section VII of its report, on various aspects of the pension adjustment system;

2. Takes note also of the results of the monitoring of the costs/savings of recent modifications of the two-track feature of the pension adjustment system and of the intention of the Board to continue to monitor those costs/savings every two years, on the occasion of the actuarial valuations of the Fund;

3. Approves changes in the pension adjustment system, as set out in annex II to the present resolution, (a) to include, without creating a precedent for other situations, with retroactive effect from 1 January 1996, a special measure for determining local currency track pension amounts for beneficiaries residing in countries where a new currency unit has been introduced that significantly strengthens the relationship of the local currency to the United States dollar, subject to the eligibility criteria set out in paragraph 208 of the report of the Board, and (b) to provide greater specificity in the criteria set out in paragraph 26 of the pension adjustment system for discontinuing the local currency track pension amounts when they lead to aberrant results in a particular country;

4. Takes note of the further review carried out by the International Civil Service Commission and the Board of the provisions of the special index for pensioners, which are used to reduce or eliminate the compensation made for cost-of-living differences in the determination of the initial local currency track pensions under the two-track feature of the pension adjustment system whenever beneficiaries have a tax advantage in an otherwise high-cost country of retirement, and approves the agreed recommendation of the Commission and the Board that the current provisions of the special index for pensioners should be maintained.

Activities related to resolving problems concerning the implementation of the transfer agreements between the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund and the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the former Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and the former Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic. Recalling its resolutions 48/225 and 49/224,

Noting that the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund had transferred to the Social Security Fund of the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics the actuarial value of the pension rights accrued by individual former participants, as required under the relevant transfer agreements with the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the former Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and the former Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic,

1. Takes note of the legal opinion of the Legal Counsel of the United Nations set out in paragraph 124 of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session;

2. Notes that the proposed agreement between the Government of the Russian Federation and the Board, as set out in annex VI to the report of the Board, does not give rise to any rights or entitlements of any kind for any person under the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, and that the provisions of the proposed agreement are not incorporated in any way in the Regulations or Administrative Rules of the Fund;

3. Concurs with the proposed agreement, which would represent the first step in resolving the problems that have arisen with respect to the application of the transfer agreements;

4. Notes that some Member States have expressed concern that the proposed agreement only covers certain former Fund participants who are now citizens of the Russian Federation;

5. Endorses the further steps envisaged in the proposed agreement and in paragraph 246 of the report of the Board, as endorsed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph 32 of its report, and, towards this end, urges the Governments of the Member States concerned to undertake direct discussions aimed at resolving the financial issues involved in respect of those former participants who are their citizens or permanent residents;

6. Requests the Board to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the developments in respect of the further steps mentioned in paragraph 5 above and to submit to it recommendations related thereto, as appropriate.

V

Financial statements of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund and report of the Board of Auditors

2. Takes note of the measures taken and under consideration by the secretariat of the Fund to improve the procedures for verifying continuing eligibility for benefits from the Fund;

3. Takes note also of the arrangements made for internal audits of the Fund, to be carried out by the United Nations Office of Internal Oversight Services;

VII

Administrative expenses of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

Recalling section VII of its resolution 50/216 and its request, made on the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, that the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board review the additional staffing proposals for the Investment Management Service that had been presented to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session in the budget proposals for the biennium 1996-1997,

Having considered the observations of the Board on the staffing of the Investment Management Service and on other requests for additional resources, as set out in paragraphs 313 to 328 of its report,

Approves the additional staffing and other resources recommended by the Board, in paragraphs 330 and 332 of its report, involving expenses amounting to 1,187,200 United States dollars net for the biennium 1996-1997, chargeable directly to the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, for the administration of the Fund.

Other matters

Recalling its decision 50/485 concerning the provisions of the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund governing the suspension of benefits in cases of re-employment of retirees in a member organization of the Fund and, in particular, its invitation to the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to examine the possibility of suspending benefits in cases of re-employment for periods of less than six months,

1. Takes note of the review carried out by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, as set out in paragraphs 252 to 261 of its report, and of its decision to defer consideration of a possible amendment of article 40 (a) of the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, pending action by the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the report it had requested from the Secretary-General on the question of the employment of retirees by the United Nations;

2. Recalls its decision 51/408 of 4 November 1996, in which it decided, inter alia, to set a ceiling on the amount that retired staff in receipt of a pension benefit from the Fund who are re-employed by the United Nations may earn per calendar year and to limit such employment to no more than six months per calendar year;

3. Requests the Board to continue its consideration of an amendment of article 40 (a) of the Regulations of the Fund in respect of the re-employment of retirees in receipt of benefits from the Fund under appointments of more than two but less than six months, and to submit a recommendation thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

4. 5. Notes the other matters dealt with in section IX of the report of the Board.

I. Payment of the benefit

1. In paragraph 26, replace subparagraph (a) with the following:

"(a) For countries where the application of the local currency track would lead to aberrant results, with wide fluctuations depending on the precise commencement date of the underlying benefit entitlement, establishment of a local currency base amount in accordance with section C may be discontinued by the Secretary of the Pension Board. In such cases, the Secretary shall duly inform the Board or the Standing Committee of this action, as soon as feasible;"

2. In paragraph 26, add a new subparagraph (b) reading:

- "(i) A very high inflation rate and an exchange rate which either remained fixed or whose fluctuation was very limited in relation to the level of the inflation rate;
- "(ii) The 36-month average of exchange rates covered different currency units or included a currency unit that was no longer applicable;

3. Renumber paragraph 26 (b) as 26 (c).

4. Add a new section Q reading:

"Q. Special measure for determination of the local currency base amount in certain countries with a new currency unit

- "(i) For beneficiaries separating before or during the month of introduction of the new currency unit: by applying to the dollar base amount, as adjusted under section H above to the date of introduction of the new local currency unit, the United Nations operational exchange rate in effect as of such date;
- "(ii) For beneficiaries separating after the end of the month of introduction of the new currency unit: by applying to the dollar base amount the average of the United Nations operational exchange rates for the new local currency unit over the period from the effective month of introduction of the new currency unit to the month of separation, up to a maximum of 36 months;

"(b) This special measure shall apply to all beneficiaries who have provided, or will provide in future, proof of residence in a country which meets the criteria in subparagraph (a) above;

"(c) (i) The local currency base amount determined in accordance with subparagraph (a) (i) above shall be adjusted by the consumer price index movement, in accordance with section H above, as from the date of introduction of the new currency unit;

"(ii) The local currency base amount determined in accordance with subparagraph (a) (ii) above shall be adjusted by the consumer price index movement, in accordance with section H above;

"(d) The local currency amount calculated under this special measure will be paid only with effect from the first day of the quarter following submission of proof of residence, or, in cases where proof of residence had been submitted earlier, as from the first day of the quarter following the date of introduction of the new local currency unit, with retroactive effect only as from 1 January 1996;

"(e) Should the new local currency unit depreciate against the United States dollar by 50 per cent or more from its value on the date of introduction, beneficiaries covered by the special measure may exercise an option, within two years as from the date of implementation of the special measure, 1 January 1997, to withdraw their proof of residence and to have their pension benefits paid thereafter solely on the United States dollar track. Such reversion to the dollar track alone would be effective as from the first quarter following receipt of the beneficiary's withdrawal of proof of residence by the Fund secretariat."

Travel-related matters

On 17 September 1996, the General Assembly, by decision 50/505, deferred consideration of 1992, 1993, 1994 and 1995 reports of the Secretary-General on standards of accommodation for air travel until its fifty-first session. By the same decision, it deferred consideration of his 1992, 1993 and 1994 reports on review of travel and related entitlements for members of organs and subsidiary organs and staff members of the United Nations. It also deferred consideration of 1992 and 1994 reports of ACABQ on those two topics. The Assembly also postponed consideration of the Secretary-General's 1995 report on the lump-sum option for air travel, his 1993 report on granting travel assistance to least developed and other developing countries that are members of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, and a 1995 JIU report on efficiency and travel cost.

On 24 October, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/C.5/51/18] on exceptions to the standards of accommodation for air travel for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996.

On 27 November, he submitted a further report on standards of accommodation for air travel [A/C.5/51/35] which addressed concerns of ACABQ [YUN 1995, p. 1421] with respect to the nine-hour threshold, the definition of the standards of accommodation on aircraft and innovative techniques employed by the Secretariat for procuring air services. He believed that the nine-hour threshold for providing accommodation in a class just below first class for travel on official business for staff members below the level of Assistant Secretary-General achieved an optimal balance between savings to the Organization and efficiency considerations. That allowed staff to perform their duties on arrival at their destination by being in a physical condition conducive to work. Considering the desirability of harmonizing travel standards throughout the UN system, the Secretary-General recommended that the matter be referred to ICSC for review and recommendations.

With regard to the term "the class immediately below first class" used for determining the standards for accommodation, the Secretary-General stated that the term in use appeared to be more precise and practical than the terms "business class" or "class of service" used by some other organizations. Concerning innovative techniques for procuring air services, the Secretariat had obtained, through preferred carrier agreements with major airlines, system-wide volume-based rebates in the range of 8 to 12 per cent of flown revenue, resulting in reimbursements to the United Nations of almost $6 million to date. The Secretariat had also negotiated additional special agreements for most of its top destinations in Europe, Asia and Africa, resulting in discounts of up to 47 per cent on the normally applicable low-cost economy-class fare and up to 51 per cent for business-class fares. The Secretariat would continue to explore all possible means to reduce travel expenses while ensuring expedient and reliable transportation.

Efficiency and cost savings

The Secretary-General, in a 9 September note [A/50/692/Add.1], submitted to the General Assembly his comments on the JIU report on "Travel in the United Nations: issues of efficiency and cost savings" [YUN 1995, p. 1422]. Responding to the Inspectors' comment that the Secretariat was not properly equipped to face the challenges or to profit from the opportunities of the travel market, the Secretary-General stated that the Secretariat's travel operations had been significantly modified to allow for managing a travel volume that had more than doubled as a result of peacekeeping operations, without increasing staff. It had aggressively negotiated with the airlines and developed the concept of preferred carrier agreement, which had allowed the Organization to obtain cash rebates of more than $5 million. An additional net saving of $2.5 million over the past two years had been realized from negotiations with airlines in connection with conference, peacekeeping and election-monitoring travel. Those agreements were appraised by independent experts as being among the most cost-effective in the industry. In addition, the staff of the Travel Unit frequently participated in training offered by rate audit companies and rate desks of many international airlines.

In another 9 September note [A/50/692/Add.2], the Secretary-General submitted the comments of ACC on the JIU report.

Administration of justice

In its annual note [A/INF/51/5] to the General Assembly, the United Nations Administrative Tribunal reported that it had delivered 62 judgments during the year. They related to cases brought by staff against the Secretary-General or the executive heads of other UN bodies to resolve disputes involving terms of appointment and related issues and regulations.

The Tribunal met in plenary in New York on 22 November and also held two panel sessions (Geneva, 1 July-2 August; New York, 21 October-22 November).

Reform of the internal justice system

The General Assembly, by decision 50/454 [YUN 1995, p. 1425], had deferred to its 1996 resumed fiftieth session consideration of the reports of the Secretary-General on the reform of the internal justice system in the UN Secretariat and the observations of ACABQ thereon [YUN 1995, pp. 1423-1425].

On 7 June, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/240.

Reform of the internal system of justice in the United Nations Secretariat

The General Assembly

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the reform of the internal system of justice in the United Nations Secretariat and the observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions thereon;

2. Invites the Sixth Committee to examine, as a matter of priority, at the beginning of the fifty-first session of the General Assembly, the legal implications of the proposals of the Secretary-General contained in his reports on the reform of the internal system of justice in the United Nations Secretariat;

3. Requests the Fifth Committee, in the light of the above, to revert to the question of the reform of the internal system of justice in the United Nations Secretariat during the main part of the fifty-first session of the General Assembly.

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/834/Add.2) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.46), based on informal consultations; agenda item 159.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 60, 64; plenary 120.

As requested by the Assembly, the Sixth (Legal) Committee discussed the legal implications of the Secretary-General's proposals on 30 September and 1 October [A/C.6/51/7]. There was general support for reform of the internal justice system; however, there were many critical comments relating to the proposals to replace the Joint Appeals Board and the Joint Disciplinary Committee. The contention that participation of members elected by the staff to those bodies was a source of inefficiency and delay, because not enough staff members were available and they frequently lacked the necessary capacity or objectivity, was rejected as a reason for replacing those bodies. With regard to replacing the Joint Appeals Board by an arbitration board, it was contended that arbitration as a system depended on a background of equality between the parties, which was absent from the relations between the Administration and the staff, since the applicable rules and regulations were already determined; the procedure for choice of arbitrators was not evenly balanced, with consequent concerns about their independence and perceptions as to their impartiality; and the Secretary-General was responsible, under the Charter, for administrative and disciplinary decisions and accountable to the Member States in respect of them. Serious doubts were expressed about recruiting arbitrators from outside the United Nations because they would lack the benefit of familiarity with the special regime pertaining to UN staff. Concern was also expressed about the adequacy of arrangements for legal representation of staff members.

Concerning the proposed replacement of the Joint Disciplinary Committee by a disciplinary board, doubt was expressed with regard to the desirability of externally recruited arbitrators acting as chairmen of the board, and objection was raised to the proposal that staff members should be selected for the board rather than being elected. It was suggested that the role of the Administrative Tribunal should also be considered in the context of the reform.

Chapter IV

Institutional and administrative matters

In 1996, a number of institutional and administrative matters remained of concern to the United Nations. The General Assembly held its fifty-first session and its resumed fiftieth session. The Assembly granted observer status to the International Seabed Authority, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol).

During the year, the Security Council held 114 formal meetings to deal with regional conflicts, peacekeeping operations and a wide variety of other issues related to the maintenance of international peace and security. The Council announced changes concerning its documentation and other procedural matters, including procedures for deleting items from the annual list of matters of which the Council was seized. It also strengthened measures on consultation and exchange of information with troop-contributing countries. The General Assembly called on the Council to adopt measures concerning the content of its future reports to the Assembly.

The Economic and Social Council held its 1996 organizational session in January, February, April and May, and its substantive session in June, July, October and November. The Council adopted several resolutions on a wide range of economic, social and related issues. It also granted consultative status in various categories to a number of non-governmental organizations.

Other UN bodies concerned with administrative and coordination matters, including the Administrative Committee on Coordination, the Committee on Programme and Coordination and the Joint Inspection Unit, also continued their work in 1996.

The Committee on Conferences examined requests for changes to the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1996. It recommended measures to improve the utilization of conference-servicing resources, including the introduction of new technologies, and to limit and control documentation, particularly in the light of the UN reform process. In the area of information systems and telecommunications, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution on the need to harmonize and improve UN informatics systems. Progress was also reported in the implementation of the Integrated Management Information System.

Institutional machinery

General Assembly

During 1996, the General Assembly met throughout the year—to resume and conclude its fiftieth session, and to hold the major part of its fifty-first session. The fiftieth session was resumed in plenary meetings on 28 February, 6 March, 3, 11, 19, 23 and 25 April, 10 and 24 May, 7 June, 16 July, 29 August, and 9, 10, 16 and 17 September.

The fifty-first (1996) session opened on 17 September and continued until its suspension on 18 December.

Organization of Assembly sessions

On 20 September, by decision 51/401, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee as set forth in its first report [A/51/250], adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the fifty-first session.

The Committee's recommendations concerned rationalization of the Assembly's work; closing date of the session; schedule of meetings; general debate; explanations of vote, right of reply, points of order and length of statements; records of meetings; concluding statements; resolutions; documentation; questions related to the programme budget; observances and commemorative meetings; special conferences; and meetings of subsidiary organs.

The General Committee made observations and proposals on the organization of future sessions of the Assembly. At the suggestion of the Secretary-General, it recommended to the Assembly that it consider a possible rationalization of its meetings between January and August to allow advance planning for delegations and the UN Secretariat. The Assembly had met frequently during that period in the past few years and, during its fiftieth session, it convened every month between February and September. As those meetings were not envisaged in the calendar of meetings, ad hoc arrangements had to be made to provide adequate Secretariat services at the expense of other requirements, the Committee noted.

By decision 51/403 A of 17 September, the General Assembly authorized the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the Committee on Conferences, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations to hold meetings during its fifty-first session. On 20 September, by decision 51/403 B, the Assembly authorized the Committee on Relations with the Host Country and the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Work Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to hold meetings during that session.

In a 4 October letter [A/51/525] to the Secretary-General, Iraq complained that since 1990 the Assembly had ignored its requests to speak during the first week of the general debate. It wanted to draw attention to the unfairness of that treatment, since Secretariat bodies were required to apply impartially the principle of the equal rights and prerogatives of States under the Charter of the United Nations.

Credentials

On 11 October, at its first meeting [A/51/548] of the fifty-first session, the Credentials Committee had before it a memorandum by the Secretary-General indicating that, as at 9 October, 118 Member States had submitted formal credentials of their representatives. Subsequently, six other States submitted their credentials. The Committee decided to defer any decision on the credentials of the representatives of Afghanistan until a later meeting.

At its second meeting [A/51/548/Add.1], on 12 December, the Committee examined a memorandum by the Secretary-General which stated that 42 additional Member States had submitted formal credentials. In addition, information regarding the appointment of representatives to the fifty-first session had been communicated to the Secretary-General from 17 Member States.

Concerning the credentials of the representatives of Afghanistan, the Committee Chairman reported the two views that had emerged from contacts with certain Committee members: one, that those representatives currently in New York should continue to occupy the seat of the Member State concerned, with their credentials approved; and the second, that no further decision was necessary or appropriate. He proposed that the Committee take a decision on the matter by consensus. Since there was no consensus, the Committee adopted the Chairman's proposal to defer a decision on the question.

The Committee Chairman proposed that the Committee accept the credentials of all those Member States, including those communicated by facsimile, letter or note verbale, on the understanding that the latter would submit formal credentials as soon as possible.

At each meeting, the Committee adopted a resolution accepting the credentials received. The Committee also recommended to the General Assembly two draft resolutions. On 29 October and 17 December, the Assembly, by resolutions 51/9 A and B, respectively, approved the first and second reports of the Credentials Committee.

Agenda

At its resumed fiftieth session, by decision 50/402 B of 28 February, the General Assembly, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, included the following items on its agenda: financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina; financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium; and financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force. It also decided to reopen consideration of the item on financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors.

On 6 March, by the same decision, the Assembly, on a request by Cuba, reopened for consideration, in plenary, the item on the United Nations Decade for International Law (1990-1999). On 3 April, the Assembly, on a request by Venezuela, reopened consideration of the sub-item on trade and development and, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, the sub-item on the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and the item on the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, questions relating to refugees, returnees and displaced persons and humanitarian questions.

On 23 April, by the same decision, the Assembly, on a request by Colombia, reopened consideration of the situation in the Middle East. On a proposal by the Secretary-General, the Assembly, on 10 May, by the same decision, reopened consideration of the sub-item on appointment of members of the Committee on Contributions. On 16 July, by the same decision, the Assembly, on a request by Belgium, reopened consideration of the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, and, on a proposal by its President, the item on building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic Ideal. At the request of Australia, on 9 September, the Assembly resumed consideration of the comprehensive test-ban treaty.

By a 17 July letter [A/51/142], 16 Member States (Burkina Faso, Central African Republic, Dominica, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Gambia, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Nicaragua, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Senegal, Solomon Islands, Swaziland) requested that the Assembly include an item entitled "Consideration of the exceptional situation of the inability, resulting from General Assembly resolution 2758(XXVI), of the 21.3 million people of Taiwan, Republic of China, to participate in the activities of the United Nations". China, in a 23 July letter [A/51/223], expressed its opposition to inclusion of the item. The General Committee did not recommend inclusion of the item.

By decision 51/402 A, on the recommendation of the General Committee [A/51/250 & Add.1-3], the Assembly on 20 September, 11 October, 29 November and 10 December adopted the agenda for its fifty-first session and the allocation of agenda items to the plenary or appropriate Main Committee [A/51/252 & Add.1-3].

On 11 October, by the same decision, the Assembly decided to include in the agenda an item on observer status for the International Seabed Authority in the General Assembly. On 29 November, by the same decision, it decided to include in the agenda two more items, on cooperation between the United Nations and the International Organization for Migration and on the proclamation of 7 December as International Civil Aviation Day. On 10 December, by the same decision, the Assembly included in the agenda items on observer status for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and on proclamation of 21 November as World Television Day. It also decided, on a request by Italy, to consider the latter item before the session's recess in December.

By the same decision, on 20 September, the Assembly decided to defer consideration of the following items and to include them in the agenda of its fifty-second (1997) session—the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India and the question of East Timor. Also deferred were: question of the Falklands Islands (Malvinas) (decision 51/407 of 25 October); the situation in the occupied territories of Croatia (decision 51/428, 13 December); declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the aerial and naval attack against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the present United States Administration in April 1986 (decision 51/432, 16 December); armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security (decision 51/433, 16 December); consequences of the Iraqi occupation of and aggression against Kuwait (decision 51/434, 16 December); implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations (decision 51/435, 16 December); question of the Comoran island of Mayotte (decision 51/436, 16 December); and launching of global negotiations on international economic cooperation for development (decision 51/452, 17 December).

The Assembly also decided, on 10 December, to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session items on the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and of vehicles for their delivery in all its aspects (decision 51/414) and on review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security (decision 51/415). On 13 December, it deleted from its agenda the item on the question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations (decision 51/429).

On 18 December, by decision 51/462, the Assembly retained 53 items or sub-items for consideration during the resumed fifty-first session, and, by decision 51/460, decided to continue consideration of 28 items or sub-items.

Third Committee

The Secretariat, in a 26 November note [A/C.3/51/L.72], presented measures on the organization of work and the draft biennial programme of work of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee for the biennium 1997-1998. The organizational measures related to guidelines concerning time-limits of statements, draft resolutions on reports of treaty bodies and reports of the Secretary-General on the status of treaties and draft proposals emanating from subsidiary organs of the Economic and Social Council.

On 12 December, by decision 51/425, the General Assembly approved the organization of work of the Third Committee and its 1997-1998 programme of work.

Second and Fifth Committees

In a 26 November note [A/C.2/51/L.40], the Secretariat submitted the draft biennial programme of work of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee for 1997-1998.

On 16 December, by decision 51/449, the General Assembly approved the 1997-1998 programme of work of the Second Committee.

On 18 December, the Assembly, by decision 51/461, approved the biennial programme of work of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee for 1997-1998.

Security Council

In 1996, the Security Council held 114 formal meetings, adopted 57 resolutions and issued 49 presidential statements. It considered 33 agenda items (see APPENDIX IV for agenda). In a 30 January note [A/50/442/Add.1], the Secretary-General, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the UN Charter and with the consent of the Security Council, notified the Assembly of the removal of an item relating to the maintenance of international peace and security from the list of matters of which the Council was seized. On 10 May, the Assembly, by decision 50/458 B, took note of the Secretary-General's note.

On 17 October, the Secretary-General notified [A/51/521] the General Assembly of 30 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security that the Council had discussed since its previous annual notification [YUN 1995, p. 1429]. He also listed 12 matters that had been deleted from the list of matters of which the Council was seized, and 94 matters not discussed during the period of which the Council remained seized. By decision 51/416 of 12 December, the Assembly took note of the matter.

On 13 November [S/1996/935], the Security Council adopted its draft report covering the period from 16 June 1995 to 16 June 1996 [A/51/2].

Documentation

On 24 January, the Security Council President stated [S/1996/54] that members of the Council had agreed to the proposal that the chairman of each sanctions committee should give an oral briefing to interested UN Members after each meeting, in the same way as the Council President gave oral briefings following informal consultations of Council members. The chairman of each committee should bring to the attention of its members and UN Members the improvements in procedures of the committees agreed on in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1429].

The Council President, in a note [S/1996/55] of the same date, indicated that the Council had reviewed the list of matters of which it was seized [S/1996/15] and had decided to delete from the list items on the statute and rules of procedure of the Military Staff Committee, reports on the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the question of Haiti and rule 18 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure concerning its presidency. That decision was taken after extensive consideration and consultation by an informal working group of the Council concerning Council documentation and other procedural questions.

In a 30 July note [S/1996/603 & Corr.1], the Council announced changes concerning its documentation and other procedural matters. As of 15 September 1996, matters that had not been considered by the Council in the preceding five years would be automatically deleted from the list of matters of which it was seized. As a result, in the next summary statement issued after that date, the matters listed in the annex to the note would be deleted. A matter would, however, be provisionally retained for a period of one year if a UN Member notified its objection to the deletion before 15 September 1996. If, at the end of one year the matter had still not been considered by the Council, it would be automatically deleted. The removal of such matters had no implication for the substance of the matter and would not affect the exercise by Member States of their right to bring matters to the attention of the Council under Article 35 of the Charter. The Council might at any time decide to include any matter in the agenda of a Council meeting, whether or not it was on the list.

On 9 August, Djibouti, on behalf of the Arab Group, recorded [S/1996/655] its opposition to those measures, particularly as they related to Arab issues. The Arab Group urged that the arrangements be reconsidered; that there was need for prior consultation and the highest degree of transparency with the State or States that originally requested the inclusion of an item; and that the principle of automatic deletion should be completely abandoned.

On 13 August, Pakistan, in a letter [S/1996/649] to the Council President, requested the Council to review and rescind its decision on the simplification of the list of matters of which it was seized, with recourse to the principle of prior consultations with the concerned Member States. Pakistan pointed out that matters should normally be taken off the list only when the issue was resolved, or with the consent of the parties concerned, and the termination of their consideration should require a formal decision of the Council. Although the Council decision allowed a Member State to object to the deletion of an item, it also imposed an untenable limitation of retention for only a year. The automatic cut-off period of five years also raised questions as to the distinction between "consideration" in formal and informal meetings. There were different ways in which the Council responded to the several issues brought to its attention and such a distinction would erode the importance of the work of the Council.

The Sudan, on 15 August, expressed [S/1996/666] its concern about the Council decision, particularly the automatic deletion as of 15 September 1996 of matters not considered in the preceding five years, which, it said, had no legal standing since it was not taken at any formal Council meeting. The Sudan objected to the deletion of an item relating to a border dispute it claimed to have with Egypt, and requested that it be retained. It was of the view that no item should be deleted without prior consultations and with the consent of the country or countries concerned, and deletion based on a criterion unilaterally established by the Council might result in serious implications. The Sudan requested that all items be retained indefinitely, if a UN Member objected to the Council's proposal for deletion.

In a 16 August letter [S/1996/667] to the Council President, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People conveyed the Committee's objection to the decision to delete items related to the exercise of those rights, the Palestine question and the Middle East problem. The Committee believed that those items should remain on the list of matters of which the Council was seized, and expressed the hope that decisions of such fundamental importance would be taken in consultation with all the parties concerned.

The United Arab Emirates, on 26 August, informed [S/1996/693] the Council President of its objection to the proposed procedures and to the deletion of an item relating to the Iranian occupation of the islands of the Greater Tunb, the Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa. It expressed the hope that the Council would retain the item on the list and requested that it be informed of any Council decision to retain or delete the item at some future time to allow it the opportunity to participate in the discussions in the Council's formal meetings.

Also on 26 August, the Syrian Arab Republic communicated [S/1996/695] its objection to the deletion of the items relating to Israel's practice of State terrorism, the Palestine question and the Middle East problem. It was of the view that the retention of an item for one year after objection to its deletion before 15 September 1996 was unacceptable. The automatic deletion provision might motivate States to insist on raising issues that would otherwise be deleted from the list of matters of which the Council was seized and might be a disservice to its work. It requested the Council to reconsider its decision in the interests of international peace and security.

On 29 August, the Council further announced [S/1996/704] that no item would be deleted without the prior consent of the Member States concerned in accordance with the following procedure: the annual summary statement issued in January of each year by the Secretary-General on matters of which the Council was seized would identify the items to be deleted in the absence of any notification by a Member State by the end of February of the year in question; an item would be retained if a Member State so notified the Secretary-General; and the notification would remain in effect for one year, subject to annual renewal. Notifications received by 15 September 1996 would remain in effect until the issuance of the January 1998 summary statement.

Cuba, in an 11 September letter [S/1996/747], informed the Secretary-General of its interest in retaining four items indicated in the list. On 12 September, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya notified [S/1996/748] him of seven items it wished to be retained, and, on 13 September, Tunisia informed [S/1996/751] the Security Council President of its opposition of the automatic deletion of matters from the list, and affirmed its commitment to maintaining the principle of prior consultations between the Council and the States concerned. It requested that two items be retained.

17 December 1996 Meeting 87 111-4-41

Draft by Colombia for Non-Aligned Movement (A/51/L.64); agenda item 11.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: plenary 65, 66, 87.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstentions: Andorra, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina,* Bulgaria, Canada, China, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, Georgia, Germany, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Monaco, Netherlands, Norway, Palau, Poland, Portugal, Romania, San Marino, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Tajikistan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Speaking before the vote, the representatives of France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States expressed their disagreement with the intent of the draft resolution.

France said the request that the annual report should include information on the Council's informal consultations would require that there be an official account of work that had to be done informally if it were to be effective. That was a contradiction in terms and materially impossible to satisfy.

The Russian Federation stated that the sponsors of the draft resolution did not carry out the necessary serious consultations with all interested parties, including all the members of the Council, and the resolution would weaken the relationship between the Assembly and the Council set forth in the Charter.

The United Kingdom said the draft preempted discussion in a variety of working groups.

The United States said that the text of the draft resolution raised problems, which could have been resolved or mitigated. Unfortunately, the text did not reflect a common basis or even an attempt to reach one, and parts of it were distinctly ill-advised.

Working methods and procedure

The Security Council, in order to bring about transparency and increased consultation in matters related to peacekeeping operations, on 28 March [S/PRST/1996/13] set out the procedures to improve arrangements for consultations and exchange of information with troop-contributing countries. These included the holding of meetings between members of the Council, troop-contributing countries and the Secretariat for consultations and the exchange of information and views. (For further details, see PART ONE, Chapter I.)

Membership

In 1996, the General Assembly continued to consider the issue of expanding the membership of the Security Council, and received the report [A/50/47 & Corr.1 & Add.1] of its Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council, established under Assembly resolution 48/26 in 1993 [YUN 1993, p.212] (see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

On 16 September, the General Assembly, by decision 50/489, took note of the Working Group's report, and decided that it should continue its work and report before the end of the fifty-first session with any agreed recommendations.

Economic and Social Council

In 1996, the Economic and Social Council held in New York its organizational session on 25 January and 9 February, its resumed organizational session on 2 April and on 2 and 3 May, its substantive session from 24 June to 26 July and its resumed substantive session on 10 October and on 13, 14 and 20 November.

On 25 January, the Council elected five members to its Bureau—the President for 1996 and four Vice-Presidents (see APPENDIX III). On the same date, it adopted the agenda of its organizational session [E/1996/2 & Add.1,2]. By decision 1996/203 of 9 February, it approved the provisional agenda of the 1996 substantive session.

On 24 June, by decision 1996/224, the Council adopted the agenda of its substantive session [E/1996/100] and approved the organization of work of the session [E/1996/L.16]. On 2 July, by the same decision, it approved requests by non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to be heard by the Council [E/1996/78].

On 26 July, by decision 1996/300, the Council decided to resume its substantive session later in the year at a date to be determined. On 10 October, it adopted the agenda for the resumed substantive session.

(For agenda lists, see APPENDIX IV.)

Sessions and segments

During its 1996 substantive session (24 June–26 July), the Economic and Social Council adopted 50 resolutions and 84 decisions. At the resumed substantive session, it adopted 1 resolution and 13 decisions.

In accordance with General Assembly resolutions 45/264 [YUN 1991, p. 749] and 48/162 [YUN 1993, p. 1118], the Council's substantive session was divided into a high-level segment (24–27 June), an operational activities segment, a coordination segment and a general segment. The Council, by decision 1996/202 of 9 February, had decided that the high-level segment should be devoted to the consideration of the major theme "International cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances and related activities" (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV). The coordination segment was devoted to the coordination of UN system activities for poverty eradication (see PART THREE, Chapter I). At the operational activities segment, the Council considered the follow-up to policy recommendations of the General Assembly.

The work of the Economic and Social Council at its resumed substantive session of 1995 was summarized in its report to the Assembly [A/50/3/Rev.1]. On 3 April, the Assembly by decision 50/478 took note of the Council's report.

By decisions 51/426 of 12 December, 51/437 and 51/448 of 16 December, and 51/450 of 17 December, the General Assembly took note of various chapters of the Council's report on its 1996 session [A/51/3/Rev.1].

Work programme

On 9 February, the Economic and Social Council considered its proposed basic programme of work for 1996 and 1997, submitted by the Secretary General in January [E/1996/1 & Add.1]. By decision 1996/204, the Council took note of the list of questions for inclusion in the programme of work for 1997.

1997 sessions

On 25 July, by decision 1996/299, the Economic and Social Council approved changes in the dates of its sessions and those of some of its subsidiary bodies in 1997.

On 13 November, by decision 1996/310, the Council decided that the high-level segment of the substantive session of 1997 should be devoted to the theme "Fostering an enabling environment for development: financial flows, including capital flows; investment; trade". Its coordination segment would be devoted to the cross sectoral theme "Mainstreaming of a gender perspective into all policies and programmes of the United Nations system", and the sectoral theme "Freshwater, including clean and safe water supply and sanitation". The operational activities segment (high-level meeting) would be devoted to the theme "Funding for operational activities for development: implementation of General Assembly resolution 50/227".

Restructuring issues

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/227 of 24 May entitled "Further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields", adopted a number of measures regarding improvement of the functioning of the substantive sessions of the Economic and Social Council (see PART FIVE, Chapter I). The Council agreed to consider during its substantive session the question of the implementation of that resolution in terms of its provisions pertaining to the Council, and, by resolution 1996/41 of 26 July, decided to consider as a matter of priority before the end of 1996, at its resumed substantive session, possible changes in and/or adjustments to its agenda, with a view to ensuring that all issues included in resolution 50/227 would be examined by the Council. At its resumed substantive session, the Council, by decision 1996/320 of 20 November, postponed consideration of the issue.

Coordination, monitoring and cooperation

Institutional mechanisms

Activities of ACC

In 1996, the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) continued to address main policy issues facing the international community and to promote and organize joint initiatives towards common objectives. It reported [E/1997/54 & Corr.1] that it had devoted special attention to the reform and strengthening of the UN system, recognizing that, at the inter-agency level, it had a lead role to play in that process. Its main contribution should be to help clarify, from a system-wide perspective, the issues to be addressed at the intergovernmental level; to promote a clear delineation of responsibilities among the organizations of the system as part of the overall effort to enhance the system's cost-effectiveness; to strengthen inter-agency coordination and cooperation in relation to activities of common concern; and, further, to develop flexible modalities for joint actions on cross-cutting issues. It also identified a number of broad objectives around which it intended to focus its contribution to the reform process.

Concerning African economic recovery and development, on 15 March, ACC launched the UN System-wide Special Initiative on Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III). ACC ensured that, in the execution of the Initiative, an effective division of labour had been established within the UN system and that implementation strategies for achieving the best results had been developed, in close cooperation with African Governments, at the national and regional levels. It also recognized that further programme development was required in a number of areas of the Initiative, including sustainable livelihoods in environmentally marginal areas, poverty alleviation, human rights, population and gender issues.

In the coordination of follow-up to recent major international conferences, ACC kept under review the three inter-agency task forces—on the enabling environment for social and economic development, on employment and sustainable livelihood, and on basic social services for all—established in 1995. It established an Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality to address all aspects of the implementation of the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World (1995) Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1169] and gender-related recommendations emanating from other international conferences, as well as questions relating to the improvement of the status of women within the UN system.

In 1996, ACC also took measures to integrate the outcome of the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) into the work of the three task forces, in particular the Task Force on Basic Social Services for All. It directed that arrangements be put in place within its subsidiary machinery to sustain the improvements in inter-agency collaboration achieved through those task forces and to monitor the use being made at the country level of the task forces' end products after completion of their work (see below).

ACC requested the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development to complete a joint statement to be addressed by the UN system to the 1997 special session of the General Assembly on Agenda 21. It strengthened the responsibilities of task managers, in respect of the formulation of common approaches to the implementation of specific programme areas of Agenda 21 and the development of joint policy proposals for consideration by the Commission on Sustainable Development. It also promoted greater interaction with inter-agency arrangements established to follow up other recent UN conferences.

With regard to operational activities for development, ACC, through its Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions, gave priority attention to the improvement of the coherence, efficiency and effectiveness of the operational activities of the UN system. ACC adopted a common advocacy statement underlining the importance of the effective and coherent implementation of Assembly resolution 50/120 [YUN 1995, p. 883] and Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/42 on the review of operational activities for development. It endorsed the plan for the implementation of the 1995 resolution, which was submitted to the Council.

ACC reviewed the experience with the principles and guidelines, adopted in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1129], governing its functioning, mandate and methods of work, as well as the structure of its subsidiary bodies. Measures were also set in motion to provide more integrated secretariat support for the entire ACC machinery. The ACC Subcommittee on Rural Development was discontinued and replaced by flexible arrangements for system-wide coordination, with a focus on the country level.

Other issues considered by ACC included management reform, the common system of organizations of the UN system, the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), security of the staff and associated personnel of the UN system, and financial and budgetary issues.

By decision 51/453 of 18 December, the General Assembly took note of the ACC report on the budgetary and financial situation of organizations of the United Nations system [A/51/505 & Corr. 1].

During the year, ACC held two regular sessions, in Nairobi, Kenya (28-30 April), and in New York (25-26 October). Its principal subsidiary bodies met as follows:

Organizational Committee (Geneva, 9-12 April, and New York 30 September-3 October); Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Financial and Budgetary Questions), eighty-fourth (Rome, Italy, 12-16 February) and eighty-fifth (New York, 26-30 August) sessions; Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions, eighth (Geneva, 11-15 March) and ninth (New York, 16-20 September) sessions.

Bodies on specific subjects met as follows:

Information Systems Coordination Committee, fourth session (Geneva, 7-9 October); Joint United Nations Information Committee, twenty-second session (Geneva, 3-5 July); Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development, seventh (New York, 5-6 and 8 February) and eighth (New York, 10-12 July) sessions; Subcommittee on Oceans and Coastal Areas, fourth session (London, 28-30 May); twenty-first Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Women (New York, 6-8 March); Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality, first session (New York, 22-23 October); Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Security (Geneva, 8-9 May); Subcommittee on Nutrition, twenty-third session (Accra, Ghana, 24 February-1 March); Subcommittee on Statistical Activities, thirtieth session (New York, 7-9 May); Subcommittee on Drug Control, fourth session (Vienna, 4-6 September); Subcommittee on Demographic Estimates and Projections, nineteenth session (Geneva, 25-27 June); Subcommittee on Rural Development, twenty-fourth session (Geneva, 15-17 May); Subcommittee on Water Resources, seventeenth session (Paris, 9-11 October).

Report for 1995

ACC's annual overview report [E/1996/18 & Add.1] for 1995 was considered on 10 June by the Committee for Programme and Coordination, which stressed the need for ACC documentation to be submitted in a more timely fashion and to include more information on achievement of ACC objectives to permit a better assessment of its effectiveness. The Committee expressed the hope that the inter-agency task forces established to improve coordination of the follow-up to international conferences would take the UN System-wide Special Initiative on Africa into consideration in the implementation of their work. Stressing the importance of the continued attention by the Secretary-General to assisting countries invoking Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Committee requested that information continue to be provided to it on the subject in the future. It also stressed the need to provide organizations of the UN system with adequate resources to implement their programmes of work, and the legal obligation of all Member States to fulfil their financial commitments on time and in full.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/312 of 14 November, took note of the annual overview report of ACC for 1995.

Programme coordination

In 1996, the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) held an organizational meeting on 3 May and its thirty-sixth session [A/51/16 (Parts I & II)] from 3 to 28 June and from 26 August to 6 September, all in New York.

The Committee reviewed the UN programme performance for the 1994-1995 biennium and examined the medium-term plan for 1998-2001. It also discussed strengthening the role of evaluation findings in programme design, delivery and policy directives; in-depth evaluation of public information and of the termination phase of peacekeeping operations; and the triennial review of the in-depth evaluation of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. Coordination issues considered included the annual report of ACC for 1995 (see above) and preparation for the joint meetings of ACC and CPC (see below); implementation of the System-wide Plan of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development; the proposed system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, 1996-2001; and JIU reports.

On 14 November, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/312, took note of the CPC report on its thirty-sixth session.

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/227 of 24 May, stated that the role and working methods of CPC should be reviewed by the High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System to find ways of improving programme coordination.

Joint meetings of CPC and ACC

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/227 of 24 May, stated that the functions of the joint meetings of ACC and CPC, which were discontinued, should be assigned to the coordination segment of the Economic and Social Council.

On 14 November, by decision 1996/312, the Council took note of the report of the twenty-ninth series of joint meetings of CPC and ACC, held in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1433].

Joint Inspection Unit

On 7 June, the General Assembly, in resolution 50/233, requested the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) to report at its fifty-first (1996) session on measures taken to develop internal standards and guidelines for inspection, evaluation and investigation, and invited legislative organs of other participating organizations to take concrete action on the JIU recommendations.

JIU, in its twenty-eighth annual report [A/51/34] to the Assembly, gave an overview of its activities from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996. The Secretary-General also transmitted to the Assembly the JIU work programme for 1996-1997 and the indicative list for 1997-1998 [A/51/559 & Corr.1].

The annual report examined measures to enhance JIU functioning; relations and cooperation with participating organizations, external oversight bodies and other relevant bodies within the UN system; and follow-up and implementation of JIU recommendations. In response to the Assembly's June request, JIU approved a revised set of internal standards and procedures for planning, designing, conducting and reporting on inspections, evaluations and investigations. It also continued to develop an internal technological information system.

The Unit continued to strengthen its cooperation and coordination with legislative bodies and the secretariats of participating organizations. Its relations with ACC and its subsidiary bodies continued to be constructive and pragmatic. Nevertheless, the six-month period for ACC to produce comments on JIU reports had too often not been observed, hindering meaningful consideration of the reports by the legislative organs. The Unit was developing new procedures and techniques of questionnaire preparation and data collection to facilitate the provision of information by the secretariats of participating organizations. The Unit continued its good relations and practical cooperation with other external oversight bodies, especially with the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), CPC, the Panel of External Auditors and the UN Board of Auditors. It strengthened relations with the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS); they were working out a procedure, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362], whereby OIOS was to ascertain compliance with recommendations emanating from external oversight bodies, including JIU. JIU was further developing relations with specialized institutions such as the International Organization of Supreme Audit Institutions. It was also developing a follow-up system to track actions taken on its reports and recommendations. In that regard, it would request heads of organizations to provide a timetable for the implementation of JIU recommendations.

ACABQ report

The General Assembly, by decision 50/476 of 3 April, took note of the report of ACABQ on its activities during the forty-ninth session of the Assembly [A/50/489].

Other coordination matters

Follow-up to international conferences

ACC consideration. At its first regular session of 1996 (Nairobi, 28-30 April) [ACC/1996/4], ACC noted that the arrangements initiated by it for the integrated follow-up, at the country level, to global conferences—in particular the establishment of three thematic task forces (Task Force on Basic Social Services for All, Task Force on Employment and Sustainable Livelihoods, Task Force on the Enabling Environment for Economic and Social Development)—had been received well at the intergovernmental level. It emphasized the importance of close substantive links between the task forces and the standing committees of ACC to ensure continuity in inter-agency cooperation relating to conferences follow-up once the task forces had completed their work. However, there was a need for close interaction among the task forces themselves and the development of a common format for reporting to ACC. ACC stressed that policy objectives and cross-cutting issues should be pursued by each task force in the context of the theme or themes assigned to it. The outcome of the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII) would similarly need to be integrated into the work of the task forces. In addition, close inter-linkages should be established between the task forces and the inter-agency arrangements for the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1169], as well as the Steering Committee on the UN System-wide Special Initiative on Africa. To avoid duplication of work, ACC invited the three task forces to have common working groups for similar areas of work and to utilize ongoing work in the ACC subsidiary machinery and elsewhere that was relevant to their respective areas of competence. It encouraged organizations to promote collaborative actions at the country level, under the leadership of the resident coordinators, who should keep organizations fully informed of developments at that level.

Economic and Social Council consideration.

The Secretary-General, in a May report [E/1996/59], presented the follow-up to the 1995 agreed conclusions [YUN 1995, p. 1435] of the Economic and Social Council on coordinated follow-up by the UN system and implementation of the results of the major international conferences organized by the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields.

The Council, in resolution 1996/36 of 26 July, invited ACC to take into consideration the decisions, resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Council and its functional commissions as the basis for inter-agency follow-up of those conferences, including selection of cross-cutting themes for its work.

Further consideration by ACC. At its second regular session of 1996 (New York, 25-26 October), ACC decided [ACC/1996/20] to undertake in 1997 a first comprehensive assessment of overall progress within the system to promote the coordinated follow-up to recent global conferences. This included assessing the effectiveness of new inter-agency mechanisms, and considering further arrangements for such work, with the aim of maintaining and strengthening the momentum that had been created in galvanizing the system around priority goals and objectives. ACC's three task forces were called upon to contribute to that review. ACC requested the Task Force on Basic Social Services for All to integrate relevant aspects of the outcome of Habitat II in its work, and invited the other two task forces, the Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions and the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development to consider the implications of Habitat II for their respective work programmes and to make recommendations thereon.

ACC included in the agenda of its 1997 second regular session an item on the preparations for the five-year review of the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Conference on Human Rights and the observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter I). It authorized the convening of inter-agency consultations during 1997 to prepare for its consideration of both events.

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/202 of 17 December, welcomed the initiative of ACC to establish inter-agency task forces on follow-up to international conferences, and emphasized the importance of continued and enhanced cooperation and coordination by relevant organs of the UN system and the specialized agencies in the implementation of the programmes of action that emerged from the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] and other recent UN conferences.

Communication for UN development programmes

The Secretary-General submitted an August 1996 report [A/51/314] on communication for development programmes in the UN system, in response to General Assembly resolution 50/130 [YUN 1995, p. 1438]. The report gave an overview of the coordination arrangements and activities of organizations and agencies of the UN system in the field of communication for development programmes. The Secretary-General concluded that those arrangements indicated that the programmes and funds of the UN system paid considerable attention to the key dimension of success in development programmes. A variety of working arrangements had been devised for cooperation and coordination, particularly the inter-agency round tables, such as the one organized by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), at Harare, Zimbabwe (2-5 September), and bilateral arrangements, such as those between the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to establish linkages between their information networks on environment and sustainable development. System-wide inter-agency mechanisms were also in place to promote coordination, including the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC).

At the country level, the resident coordinator system and JUNIC field arrangements provided mechanisms for promoting the integration of communication in development projects. However, a number of gaps remained. To address those gaps, the Secretary-General recommended that the system develop a common working definition and understanding of communication for development at the country level in order to define more clearly the goals, processes and technologies to be pursued and shared among concerned UN agencies and other development partners so as to maximize the impact of development programmes at all levels. That could be facilitated by the resident coordinator system in collaboration with JUNG arrangements, taking into account the result of the round tables. The round-table mechanism should be used more systematically with the participation of international financial institutions at the country level. The experience gained should be disseminated more widely within and among regions to enhance the application of communications as an essential tool for development. Organizations of the UN system should assist Governments to analyse and assess the impact of new and appropriate technologies on and innovative methods for communication for development, with a view to developing sound application of such technologies and methods. Coordinated support and assistance should be provided under the auspices of ACC, through inter-agency mechanisms such as ad hoc task forces for the follow-up to major UN conferences. Resource mobilization for capacity-building should be pursued as an integral component of the mobilization of resources for development programmes in general, as well as for humanitarian activities. At the headquarters level, the inter-agency mechanisms for the coordination of programmes and operational activities, and for follow-up to major UN conferences, should incorporate the communications dimension in their efforts to coordinate the work of the UN system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/172.

Communication for development programmes in the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, as well as the report prepared by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on the sixth Inter-Agency Round Table on Communication for Development, held at Harare from 2 to 5 September 1996, and the report of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled "Communication for development programmes in the United Nations system" and the comments of the Administrative Committee on Coordination thereon,

1. Recalls its resolution 50/130 of 20 December 1995;
2. Considers that informal round tables, such as the sixth Inter-Agency Round Table on Communication for Development, organized at Harare by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, can constitute a notable mechanism of inter-agency cooperation and coordination for promoting and advancing communication for development, owing, inter alia, to their openness to partners outside the United Nations system and the outreach of their outcomes;
3. Recognizes the importance of addressing the issue of communication for development within the inter-governmental processes of the United Nations system, according to the respective mandates of the agencies concerned;

4. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and invites the agencies, organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to take the recommendations contained in the report into consideration when planning and implementing relevant projects and programmes, with the cooperation of the resident coordinator;

5. Recognizes the relevance for concerned actors in development at the country level, including policy makers and decision makers at all levels, to attribute increased importance to communication for development, and encourages them to include it, in an appropriate manner, as an integral component in the development of projects and programmes;

6. Stresses the need to support two-way communication systems that enable dialogue and that allow communities to speak out, express their aspirations and concerns and participate in the decisions that relate to their development;

7. Acknowledges the interest in holding the next informal round table in the Latin American and Caribbean region, to build upon the meetings held in Asia and Africa, and invites interested States to cooperate with the relevant agencies, organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations system in the convening of these informal round tables on communication for development, with the participation of the international financial institutions and the regional banks, at the country level;

8. Reaffirms the importance of resource mobilization, including financial cooperation, the transfer of technology and capacity-building for communication in development programmes and projects, and calls upon the international community and organizations of the United Nations system to assist developing countries in introducing technologies and innovative methods for enhancing communication for development;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in accordance with the agency's mandate, to inform the General Assembly officially, at its fifty-third session, under an appropriate agenda item, on the implementation of the present resolution, in accordance with the periodicity that was agreed upon in Assembly resolution 50/130.

The UN and other organizations

Cooperation with organizations

In 1996, the General Assembly reviewed cooperation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, the Caribbean Community, the Economic Cooperation Organization, the International Organization for Migration, the Inter-Parliamentary Union, the League of Arab States, the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of American States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. It granted observer status to the International Seabed Authority, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol).

Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

The Secretary-General submitted, in response to General Assembly resolution 49/8 [YUN 1994, p. 1327], a report [A/51/360] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee. The report highlighted activities undertaken by the two organizations in areas of cooperation, which included the United Nations Decade of International Law (1990-1999); promoting wider use of the International Court of Justice; measures for the promotion of ratification and implementation of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea; international economic cooperation for development; and the question of refugees (see also PART FOUR, Chapter V).

The General Assembly, by resolution 51/11 of 4 November, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Caribbean Community

As requested by the Assembly in 1994 [res. 49/141], the Secretary-General reported [A/51/299] in August 1996 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community (CARICOM). The report described consultations and information exchanges between the two organizations, held since 1994, and provided information on collaborative activities undertaken with CARICOM by the UN Secretariat and other UN bodies and organizations (see PART ONE, Chapter III).

The General Assembly, by resolution 51/16 of 11 November, took note of the Secretary-General's report and his efforts to strengthen cooperation.

Economic Cooperation Organization

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/1 [YUN 1995, p. 1025], the Secretary General submitted an August report with later addendum [A/51/265 & Add.1] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO). The report focused on cooperation between ECO and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, and developments pertaining to cooperation between ECO and other UN bodies and specialized agencies.

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/21 of 27 November, took note of the Secretary-General's report and invited him to promote and expand cooperation and coordination between the two secretariats.

International Organization for Migration

In 1992, the General Assembly granted observer status to the International Organization for Migration (IOM). In an 18 July 1996 note [E/1996/90], the Secretary-General brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council the cooperation agreement signed in Geneva on 25 June between the United Nations and IOM. The agreement provided for cooperation and consultations, exchange of information and documentation, administrative and technical cooperation, and joint action.

On 24 July, by decision 1996/296, the Council took note of the note by the Secretary-General.

On 11 November, Bangladesh, Nicaragua, Pakistan and the Philippines requested [A/51/232] the inclusion in the agenda of the fifty-first session of the General Assembly of an item on cooperation between the United Nations and IOM. In an explanatory memorandum, they said IOM was committed to the principle that humane and orderly migration benefited migrants and society, and acted with its partners in the international community to assist in meeting the operational challenges of migration. Its activities and functions had also changed to meet the new and evolving needs and challenges faced by the international community. The conclusions [YUN 1994, p. 956] of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development on issues related to migration were an important element in planning the organization's strategic direction towards the next century. Its cooperation with the United Nations on concrete initiatives had experienced considerable growth over recent years. Its work was centred around humanitarian migration, migration for development, technical cooperation, and the migration debate, research and information. IOM maintained a revolving fund for emergency assessment use and for initial start-up of emergency operations.

On 2 December [A/51/702], the Russian Federation brought to the attention of the Secretary-General the 29 November opinion of IOM Director-General James N. Purcell. It concerned the statement in the explanatory memorandum which indicated that IOM's independent status had occasionally permitted it to operate in such areas as "in Chechnya, at a time when the United Nations was unable to gain access". According to the Director-General, that sentence might have conveyed the impression that the Russian Federation had prevented the United Nations from acting in the Chechen Republic of the Russian Federation. That had not been the intention of IOM. It had been able, it said, to count on the support of the Russian authorities to start its activities in Chechnya at a time when the United Nations, at the invitation of the Russian Federation, was still considering possible operations inside Chechnya.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/148.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the International Organization for Migration

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/4 of 16 October 1992, by which it granted observer status to the International Organization for Migration,

Recalling also that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international cooperation in addressing international issues of an economic, social or humanitarian nature,

Recalling further that the International Organization for Migration assists in meeting the operational challenges of migration and that it is committed to the principle that humane and orderly migration benefits migrants and society, advancing understanding of migration issues, encouraging social and economic development through migration and to working towards effective respect of the human dignity and well-being of migrants,

Affirming the need to strengthen the cooperation that already exists between the two organizations in matters of common interest,

Noting the desire of both organizations to consolidate and enhance the cooperation existing between them in the economic, social, humanitarian and administrative fields,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the conclusion, on 25 June 1996, of the Cooperation Agreement between the United Nations and the International Organization for Migration;

2. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations to take the appropriate measures, in consultation with the Director-General of the International Organization for Migration, to ensure that the needed effective cooperation and liaison between the secretariats of the two organizations is undertaken in order to ensure complementary actions between the two organizations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Director-General of the International Organization for Migration, to foster systematic consultations on matters of common interest;

4. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to cooperate with the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the International Organization for Migration, in order to initiate, maintain and increase consultation and programmes with the International Organization for Migration in the attainment of their objectives;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that, in the context of the report to be submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/123 of 20 December 1995 under the agenda item entitled "International migration and development, including the convening of a United Nations conference on international migration and development", the Assembly is informed of the co-operation between the United Nations and the International Organization for Migration as it develops under the Cooperation Agreement.

General Assembly resolution 51/148

13 December 1996 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote
27-nation draft (A/51/L.53 & Add.1); agenda item 161.

Inter-Parliamentary Union

The Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/51/402] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union, in response to General Assembly resolution 50/15 [YUN 1995, p. 1443]. He reported that on 24 July a cooperation agreement had been signed between the United Nations and the Union, aimed at strengthening relations between the two organizations by facilitating mutually complementary activities and undertaking joint efforts in particular areas for the benefit of mankind. It provided for the holding of regular consultations between the two organizations and the initiation of joint projects and programmes, as well as for the exchange of information and documentation. A meeting (New York, 5-6 September 1996) on follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] was organized jointly by the Union, the UN Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development and UNDP.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/7.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/15 of 15 November 1995, in which it requested the Secretary-General to conclude an agreement on cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, transmitting the text of the cooperation agreement signed on 24 July 1996,

Stressing its desire to strengthen existing cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union and of giving it a new and adequate framework,

1. Welcomes the conclusion on 24 July 1996 of the co-operation agreement between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union;

2. Considers that the signature of the agreement constitutes an important step for increased and strengthened cooperation between the two organizations;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union";

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on various aspects of cooperation that have taken place between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union in implementation of the cooperation agreement.

General Assembly resolution 51/7

25 October 1996 Meeting 41 Adopted without vote
82-nation draft (A/51/L.6 & Add.1); agenda item 29.

League of Arab States

In September, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/51/380 & Add.1] on cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, as requested in General Assembly resolution 50/16 [YUN 1995, p. 1440]. He stated that the secretariats of the two organizations continued to maintain close contact on matters of mutual concern. His report summarized the action taken by UN bodies and organizations in follow-up to previous joint meetings of the two organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/20.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Recalling the decision of the Council of the League of Arab States that it considers the League a regional organization within the meaning of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that the maintenance and further strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States contribute to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Convinced also of the need for more efficient and co-ordinated utilization of available economic and financial resources to promote common objectives of the two organizations,

Recognizing the need for closer cooperation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in realizing the goals and objectives of both organizations,

Welcoming the second meeting on cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations, held on 15 and 16 February 1996,

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the follow-up action taken by him to implement the proposals adopted at the meetings between the representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, including the last meeting held at Vienna in 1995;

4. Requests the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States, within their respective fields of competence, to intensify further their cooperation towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the strengthening of international peace and security, economic development, disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to strengthen cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and other organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in order to enhance their capacity to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social, humanitarian, cultural and administrative fields;

Organization of African Unity

The Secretary-General, as requested in General Assembly resolution 50/158 [YUN 1995, p. 416], in September submitted a report [A/51/386] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU). He discussed consultations and exchange of information and reported on action by UN bodies, agencies and programmes in the field of economic and social development. Meetings between the two organizations were held in New York and during the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, held in Yaounde, Cameroon, from 8 to 10 July (see PART ONE, Chapter II).

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/151 of 13 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Organization of American States

The Secretary-General, responding to General Assembly resolution 49/5 [YUN 1994, p. 435], submitted a report [A/51/297 & Add.1] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States (OAS). Following a meeting of representatives of the UN system and OAS (New York, 17-18 April 1995), a cooperation agreement was signed between the two secretariats. In 1996, after a review of methods, a more flexible mechanism of cooperation and coordination was introduced to facilitate more pragmatic and cost-effective cooperation. It provided for focal points within the departments, offices, programmes and agencies of the UN system, allowing for direct contacts between the two organizations. The Secretary-General also summarized information from agencies, programmes and offices of the UN system on their relations with OAS (see PART ONE, Chapter III).

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/4 of 24 October, expressed the hope that the Secretary-General would continue to strengthen the mechanism for cooperation between the two organizations.

Organization of the Islamic Conference

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/17 [YUN 1995, p. 1441], the Secretary-General in September reported [A/51/381] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC). He reported that regular consultations were held and information exchanged between the secretariats of the United Nations and OIC, with regard to ongoing peacemaking efforts of the two organizations, particularly in Afghanistan, Tajikistan and Somalia. Periodic consultations were also held between the Head of the UN Special Mission to Afghanistan and senior OIC officials on promoting closer coordination and cooperation to bring peace to Afghanistan. Regular information was also exchanged with regard to their efforts to bring about peace and national reconciliation in Somalia.

A general meeting on cooperation between the representatives of the United Nations and OIC and its specialized institutions was held in Geneva from 26 to 28 June. The meeting endorsed proposals on ways to enhance cooperation between the two organizations and urged that the follow-up action be taken by mechanisms set up for that purpose. The meeting also reviewed proposals for strengthening cooperation in the political field and identified modalities for enhancing UN/OIC information exchange, consultations and coordination, and agreed that those modalities would apply to areas of mutual interest. It was agreed that further high-level consultations on the identified modalities would be held between the representatives of the two secretariats during annual sessions of the Assembly.

The Secretary-General's report also summarized action taken by UN organizations and agencies serving as focal points for cooperation with OIC to follow up the recommendations of previous meetings.

Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe

The Secretary-General, as requested in General Assembly resolution 50/87 [YUN 1995, p. 623], submitted an October report [A/51/489 & Add.1] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). ### Granting of observer status

International Seabed Authority

The Council of the International Seabed Authority, at its resumed second session (Kingston, Jamaica, 5-16 August), recognizing [ISBA/C/10] that a relationship agreement between the Authority and the United Nations should identify areas of mutual interest and facilitate close cooperation between the two organizations, requested the Secretary-General of the Authority to negotiate with the UN Secretary-General a relationship agreement.

In an explanatory memorandum, they said that the Authority was an autonomous intergovernmental organization established under the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea [YUN 1982, p. 178]. At its August 1996 session, the Assembly of the Authority decided to seek observer status for the Authority at the United Nations to enable it to participate in the deliberations of the General Assembly, and requested the Secretary-General of the Authority to take the necessary measures towards that end.

Participation of organizations in UN work

Intergovernmental organizations

On 24 June, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/225, having considered the application of the Union of Economic and Social Councils of Africa, decided that the organization might participate on a continuing basis, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Council on questions within the scope of its activities.

Non-governmental organizations

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/297, reaffirmed the importance of the contributions of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to the work of the United Nations and, taking into account their contributions to recent international conferences, recommended that the General Assembly examine, at its fifty-first session, the participation of NGOs in all areas of UN work, in the light of the experience gained through the arrangements for consultation between NGOs and the Council (see below).

Update of consultation arrangements

At its third session (New York, 10-23 January and 3 May 1996) the Open-ended Working Group on the Review of Arrangements for Consultation with Non-Governmental Organizations had before it a statement [E/AC.70/1996/NGO/1] submitted by the World Federation of United Nations Associations; and a statement [E/AC.70/1996/NGO/2] by the World Wide Fund for Nature International, the Anti-Slavery Society for the Protection of Human Rights, the Habitat International Coalition, the International Commission of Jurists, International Service for Human Rights, the Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, the Netherlands Organization for International Development Cooperation, OXFAM (United Kingdom and Ireland) Service, Justice and Peace in Latin America, the World Student Christian Federation, the Asian Cultural Forum on Development, the International Movement against Racism and Racial Discrimination, and Women's Environment and Development Organization.

On 3 May, the Working Group decided to transmit to the Economic and Social Council a text reflecting the current status of negotiations on arrangements for consultation with NGOs, which was annexed to its report [E/1996/58], and that the entire results of its work would be transmitted on an ad referendum basis.

In a 21 June letter [E/1996/92] to the President of the Council, the Chairman of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations stated that the Committee had considered the report of the Working Group and it expressed its support and encouragement to the Chairman of the Group, and hoped that the matter would be resolved before the end of the 1996 substantive session of the Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Consultative relationship between the United Nations and non-governmental organizations

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling also its resolution 1993/80 of 30 July 1993, in which it requested a general review of arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations, with a view to updating, if necessary, Council resolution 1296(XLIV) of 23 May 1968, as well as introducing coherence in the rules governing the participation of non-governmental organizations in international conferences convened by the United Nations, and also an examination of ways and means of improving practical arrangements for the work of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations and the Non-Governmental Organizations Section of the Secretariat,

Recalling further its decision 1995/304 of 26 July 1995,

Confirming the need to take into account the full diversity of the non-governmental organizations at the national, regional and international levels,

Acknowledging the breadth of non-governmental organizations' expertise and the capacity of non-governmental organizations to support the work of the United Nations,

Taking into account the changes in the non-governmental sector, including the emergence of a large number of national and regional organizations,

Calling upon the governing bodies of the relevant organizations, bodies and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to examine the principles and practices relating to their consultations with non-governmental organizations and to take action, as appropriate, to promote coherence in the light of the provisions of the present resolution,

Approves the following update of the arrangements set out in its resolution 1296(XLIV):

Arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations

Part I

Principles to be applied in the establishment of consultative relations

The following principles shall be applied in establishing consultative relations with non-governmental organizations:

1. The organization shall be concerned with matters falling within the competence of the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies.

2. The aims and purposes of the organization shall be in conformity with the spirit, purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

3. The organization shall undertake to support the work of the United Nations and to promote knowledge of its principles and activities, in accordance with its own aims and purposes and the nature and scope of its competence and activities.

4. Except where expressly stated otherwise, the term "organization" shall refer to non-governmental organizations at the national, subregional, regional or international levels.

5. Consultative relationships may be established with international, regional, subregional and national organizations, in conformity with the Charter and the principles and criteria established under the present resolution. The Committee, in considering applications for consultative status, should ensure, to the extent possible, participation of non-governmental organizations from all regions, and particularly from developing countries, in order to help achieve a just, balanced, effective and genuine involvement of non-governmental organizations from all regions and areas of the world. The Committee shall also pay particular attention to non-governmental organizations that have special expertise or experience upon which the Council may wish to draw.

6. Greater participation of non-governmental organizations from developing countries in international conferences convened by the United Nations should be encouraged.

7. Greater involvement of non-governmental organizations from countries with economies in transition should be encouraged.

8. Regional, subregional and national organizations, including those affiliated to an international organization already in status, may be admitted provided that they can demonstrate that their programme of work is of direct relevance to the aims and purposes of the United Nations and, in the case of national organizations, after consultation with the Member State concerned. The views expressed by the Member State, if any, shall be communicated to the non-governmental organization concerned, which shall have the opportunity to respond to those views through the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations.

9. The organization shall be of recognized standing within the particular field of its competence or of a representative character. Where there exist a number of organizations with similar objectives, interests and basic views in a given field, they may, for the purposes of consultation with the Council, form a joint committee or other body authorized to carry on such consultation for the group as a whole.

10. The organization shall have an established headquarters, with an executive officer. It shall have a democratically adopted constitution, a copy of which shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, and which shall provide for the determination of policy by a conference, congress or other representative body and for an executive organ responsible to the policy-making body.

11. The organization shall have authority to speak for its members through its authorized representatives. Evidence of this authority shall be presented, if requested.

12. The organization shall have a representative structure and possess appropriate mechanisms of accountability to its members, who shall exercise effective control over its policies and actions through the exercise of voting rights or other appropriate democratic and transparent decision-making processes. Any such organization that is not established by a governmental entity or intergovernmental agreement shall be considered a non-governmental organization for the purpose of these arrangements, including organizations that accept members designated by governmental authorities, provided that such membership does not interfere with the free expression of views of the organization.

13. The basic resources of the organization shall be derived in the main from contributions of the national affiliates or other components or from individual members. Where voluntary contributions have been received, their amounts and donors shall be faithfully revealed to the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations. Where, however, the above criterion is not fulfilled and an organization is financed from other sources, it must explain to the satisfaction of the Committee its reasons for not meeting the requirements laid down in this paragraph. Any financial contribution or other support, direct or indirect, from a Government to the organization shall be openly declared to the Committee through the Secretary-General and fully recorded in the financial and other records of the organization and shall be devoted to purposes in accordance with the aims of the United Nations.

14. In considering the establishment of consultative relations with a non-governmental organization, the Council will take into account whether the field of activity of the organization is wholly or mainly within the field of a specialized agency, and whether or not it could be admitted when it has, or may have, a consultative arrangement with a specialized agency.

15. The granting, suspension and withdrawal of consultative status, as well as the interpretation of norms and decisions relating to this matter, are the prerogative of Member States exercised through the Economic and Social Council and its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations. A non-governmental organization applying for general or special consultative status or a listing on the Roster shall have the opportunity to respond to any objections being raised in the Committee before the Committee takes its decision.

16. The provisions of the present resolution shall apply to the United Nations regional commissions and their subsidiary bodies mutatis mutandis.

17. In recognizing the evolving relationship between the United Nations and non-governmental organizations, the Economic and Social Council, in consultation with the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, will consider reviewing the consultative arrangements as and when necessary to facilitate, in the most effective manner possible, the contributions of non-governmental organizations to the work of the United Nations.

Part II

Principles governing the nature of the consultative arrangements

18. A clear distinction is drawn in the Charter of the United Nations between participation without vote in the deliberations of the Council and the arrangements for consultation. Under Articles 69 and 70, participation is provided for only in the case of States not members of the Council, and of the specialized agencies. Article 71, applying to non-governmental organizations, provides for suitable arrangements for consultation. This distinction, deliberately made in the Charter, is fundamental and the arrangements for consultation should not be such as to accord to non-governmental organizations the same rights of participation as are accorded to States not members of the Council and to the specialized agencies brought into relationship with the United Nations.

19. The arrangements should not be such as to overburden the Council or transform it from a body for co-ordination of policy and action, as contemplated in the Charter, into a general forum for discussion.

20. Decisions on arrangements for consultation should be guided by the principle that consultative arrangements are to be made, on the one hand, for the purpose of enabling the Council or one of its bodies to secure expert information or advice from organizations having special competence in the subjects for which consultative arrangements are made, and, on the other hand, to enable international, regional, subregional and national organizations that represent important elements of public opinion to express their views. Therefore, the arrangements for consultation made with each organization should relate to the subjects for which that organization has a special competence or in which it has a special interest. The organizations given consultative status should be limited to those whose activities in fields set out in paragraph 1 above qualify them to make a significant contribution to the work of the Council and should, in sum, as far as possible reflect in a balanced way the major viewpoints or interests in these fields in all areas and regions of the world.

Part III

Establishment of consultative relationships

21. In establishing consultative relationships with each organization, regard shall be given to the nature and scope of its activities and to the assistance it may be expected to give to the Economic and Social Council or its subsidiary bodies in carrying out the functions set out in Chapters IX and X of the Charter of the United Nations.

22. Organizations that are concerned with most of the activities of the Council and its subsidiary bodies and can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Council that they have substantive and sustained contributions to make to the achievement of the objectives of the United Nations in fields set out in paragraph 1 above and are closely involved with the economic and social life of the peoples of the areas they represent and whose membership, which should be considerable, is broadly representative of major segments of society in a large number of countries in different regions of the world shall be known as organizations in general consultative status.

23. Organizations that have a special competence in and are concerned specifically with only a few of the fields of activity covered by the Council and its subsidiary bodies, and that are known within the fields for which they have or seek consultative status shall be known as organizations in special consultative status.

24. Other organizations that do not have general or special consultative status but that the Council, or the Secretary-General in consultation with the Council or its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, considers can make occasional and useful contributions to the work of the Council or its subsidiary bodies or other United Nations bodies within their competence shall be included in a list (to be known as the Roster). This list may also include organizations in consultative status or a similar relationship with a specialized agency or a United Nations body. These organizations shall be available for consultation at the request of the Council or its subsidiary bodies. The fact that an organization is on the Roster shall not in itself be regarded as a qualification for general or special consultative status should an organization seek such status.

25. Organizations to be accorded special consultative status because of their interest in the field of human rights should pursue the goals of promotion and protection of human rights in accordance with the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993.

26. Major organizations one of whose primary purposes is to promote the aims, objectives and purposes of the United Nations and a furtherance of the understanding of its work may be accorded consultative status.

Part IV

Consultation with the Economic and Social Council

Provisional agenda

27. The provisional agenda of the Economic and Social Council shall be communicated to organizations in general consultative status and special consultative status and to those on the Roster.

28. Organizations in general consultative status may propose to the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations that the Committee request the Secretary-General to place items of special interest to the organizations in the provisional agenda of the Council.

Attendance at meetings

29. Organizations in general consultative status and special consultative status may designate authorized representatives to sit as observers at public meetings of the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies. Those on the Roster may have representatives present at such meetings concerned with matters within their field of competence. These attendance arrangements may be supplemented to include other modalities of participation.

Written statements

30. Written statements relevant to the work of the Economic and Social Council may be submitted by organizations in general consultative status and special consultative status on subjects in which these organizations have a special competence. Such statements shall be circulated by the Secretary-General to the members of the Council, except those statements that have become obsolete, for example, those dealing with matters already disposed of and those that had already been circulated in some other form.

31. The following conditions shall be observed regarding the submission and circulation of such statements:

(a) The written statement shall be submitted in one of the official languages;

(b) It shall be submitted in sufficient time for appropriate consultation to take place between the Secretary-General and the organization before circulation;

(c) The organization shall give due consideration to any comments that the Secretary-General may make in the course of such consultation before transmitting the statement in final form;

(d) A written statement submitted by an organization in general consultative status will be circulated in full if it does not exceed 2,000 words. Where a statement is in excess of 2,000 words, the organization shall submit a summary which will be circulated or shall supply sufficient copies of the full text in the working languages for distribution. A statement will also be circulated in full, however, upon a specific request of the Council or its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations;

(e) A written statement submitted by an organization in special consultative status or on the Roster will be circulated in full if it does not exceed 500 words. Where a statement is in excess of 500 words, the organization shall submit a summary which will be circulated: such statements will be circulated in full, however, upon a specific request of the Council or its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations;

(f) The Secretary-General, in consultation with the President of the Council, or the Council or its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, may invite organizations on the Roster to submit written statements. The provisions of subparagraphs (a), (b), (c) and (e) above shall apply to such statements;

(g) A written statement or summary, as the case may be, will be circulated by the Secretary-General in the working languages, and, upon the request of a member of the Council, in any of the official languages.

Oral presentations during meetings

32. (a) The Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations shall make recommendations to the Economic and Social Council as to which organizations in general consultative status should make an oral presentation to the Council and on which items they should be heard. Such organizations shall be entitled to make one statement to the Council, subject to the approval of the Council. In the absence of a subsidiary body of the Council with jurisdiction in a major field of interest to the Council and to organizations in special consultative status, the Committee may recommend that organizations in special consultative status be heard by the Council on the subject in its field of interest;

(b) Whenever the Council discusses the substance of an item proposed by a non-governmental organization in general consultative status and included in the agenda of the Council, such an organization shall be entitled to present orally to the Council, as appropriate, an introductory statement of an expository nature. Such an organization may be invited by the President of the Council, with the consent of the relevant body, to make, in the course of the discussion of the item before the Council, an additional statement for purposes of clarification.

Part V

Consultation with commissions and other subsidiary organs of the Economic and Social Council

Provisional agenda

33. The provisional agenda of sessions of commissions and other subsidiary organs of the Economic and Social Council shall be communicated to organizations in general consultative status and special consultative status and those on the Roster.

34. Organizations in general consultative status may propose items for the provisional agenda of commissions, subject to the following conditions:

(a) An organization that intends to propose such an item shall inform the Secretary-General at least sixty-three days before the commencement of the session and before formally proposing an item shall give due consideration to any comments the Secretary-General may make;

(b) The proposal shall be formally submitted with the relevant basic documentation not later than forty-nine days before the commencement of the session. The item shall be included in the agenda of the commission if it is adopted by a two-thirds majority of those present and voting.

Attendance at meetings

35. Organizations in general consultative status and special consultative status may designate authorized representatives to sit as observers at public meetings of the commissions and other subsidiary organs of the Economic and Social Council. Organizations on the Roster may have representatives present at meetings concerning matters within their field of competence. These attendance arrangements may be supplemented to include other modalities of participation.

Written statements

36. Written statements relevant to the work of the commissions or other subsidiary organs may be submitted by organizations in general consultative status and special consultative status on subjects for which these organizations have a special competence. Such statements shall be circulated by the Secretary-General to members of the commission or other subsidiary organs, except those statements that have become obsolete, for example those dealing with matters already disposed of and those that have already been circulated in some other form to members of the commission or other subsidiary organs.

37. The following conditions shall be observed regarding the submission and circulation of such written statements:

(a) The written statement shall be submitted in one of the official languages;

(b) It shall be submitted in sufficient time for appropriate consultation to take place between the Secretary-General and the organization before circulation;

(c) The organization shall give due consideration to any comments that the Secretary-General may make in the course of such consultation before transmitting the statement in final form;

(d) A written statement submitted by an organization in general consultative status will be circulated in full if it does not exceed 2,000 words. Where a statement is in excess of 2,000 words, the organization shall submit a summary, which will be circulated, or shall supply sufficient copies of the full text in the working languages for distribution. A statement will also be circulated in full, however, upon the specific request of the commission or other subsidiary organs;

(e) A written statement submitted by an organization in special consultative status will be circulated in full if it does not exceed 1,500 words. Where a statement is in excess of 1,500 words, the organization shall submit a summary, which will be circulated, or shall supply sufficient copies of the full text in the working languages for distribution. A statement will also be circulated in full, however, upon the specific request of the commission or other subsidiary organs;

(f) The Secretary-General, in consultation with the chairman of the relevant commission or other subsidiary organ, or the commission or other subsidiary organ itself, may invite organizations on the Roster to submit written statements. The provisions in subparagraphs (a), (b), (c) and (e) above shall apply to such statements;

(g) A written statement or summary, as the case may be, will be circulated by the Secretary-General in the working languages and, upon the request of a member of the commission or other subsidiary organ, in any of the official languages.

Oral presentations during meetings

38. (a) The commission or other subsidiary organs may consult with organizations in general consultative status and special consultative status either directly or through a committee or committees established for the purpose. In all cases, such consultations may be arranged upon the request of the organization;

(b) On the recommendation of the Secretary-General and at the request of the commission or other subsidiary organs, organizations on the Roster may also be heard by the commission or other subsidiary organs.

Special studies

39. Subject to the relevant rules of procedure on financial implications, a commission or other subsidiary organ may recommend that an organization that has special competence in a particular field should undertake specific studies or investigations or prepare specific papers for the commission. The limitations of paragraphs 37 (d) and (e) above shall not apply in this case.

Part VI

Consultations with ad hoc committees of the Economic and Social Council

40. The arrangements for consultation with ad hoc committees of the Economic and Social Council authorized to meet between sessions of the Council and organizations in general consultative status and special consultative status and on the Roster shall follow those approved for commissions of the Council, unless the Council or the committee decides otherwise.

Part VII

Participation of non-governmental organizations in international conferences convened by the United Nations and their preparatory process

41. Where non-governmental organizations have been invited to participate in an international conference convened by the United Nations, their accreditation is the prerogative of Member States, exercised through the respective preparatory committee. Such accreditation should be preceded by an appropriate process to determine their eligibility.

42. Non-governmental organizations in general consultative status, special consultative status and on the Roster that express their wish to attend the relevant international conferences convened by the United Nations and the meetings of the preparatory bodies of the said conferences shall as a rule be accredited for participation. Other non-governmental organizations wishing to be accredited may apply to the secretariat of the conference for this purpose in accordance with the following requirements.

43. The secretariat of the conference shall be responsible for the receipt and preliminary evaluation of requests from non-governmental organizations for accreditation to the conference and its preparatory process. In the discharge of its functions, the secretariat of the conference shall work in close cooperation and coordination with the Non-Governmental Organizations

Section of the Secretariat, and shall be guided by the relevant provisions of Council resolution 1296(XLIV) as updated.

44. All such applications must be accompanied by information on the competence of the organization and the relevance of its activities to the work of the conference and its preparatory committee, with an indication of the particular areas of the conference agenda and preparations to which such competence and relevance pertain, and should include, inter alia, the following information:

(a) The purpose of the organization;

(b) Information as to the programmes and activities of the organization in areas relevant to the conference and its preparatory process and the country or countries in which they are carried out. Non-governmental organizations seeking accreditation shall be asked to confirm their interest in the goals and objectives of the conference;

(c) Confirmation of the activities of the organization at the national, regional or international level;

(d) Copies of the annual or other reports of the organization with financial statements and a list of financial sources and contributions, including governmental contributions;

(e) A list of members of the governing body of the organization and their countries of nationality;

(f) A description of the membership of the organization, indicating the total number of members, the names of organizations that are members and their geographical distribution;

(g) A copy of the constitution and/or by-laws of the organization.

45. In the evaluation of the relevance of applications of non-governmental organizations for accreditation to the conference and its preparatory process, it is agreed that a determination shall be made based on their background and involvement in the subject areas of the conference.

46. The secretariat of the conference shall publish and disseminate to Member States on a periodic basis the updated list of applications received. Member States may submit comments on any of the applications on the list fourteen days from receipt of the above-mentioned list by Member States. The comments of Member States shall be communicated to the non-governmental organization concerned, which shall have the opportunity to respond.

47. In cases where the secretariat of the conference believes, on the basis of the information provided in accordance with the present resolution, that the organization has established its competence and the relevance of its activities to the work of the preparatory committee, it shall recommend to the preparatory committee that the organization be accredited. In cases where the secretariat does not recommend the granting of accreditation, it shall make available to the preparatory committee its reasons for not doing so. The secretariat should ensure that its recommendations are available to members of the preparatory committee at least one week prior to the start of each session. The secretariat must notify such applicants of the reasons for non-recommendation and provide an opportunity to respond to objections and furnish additional information as may be required.

48. The preparatory committee shall decide on all recommendations for accreditation within twenty-four hours after the recommendations of the secretariat have been taken up by the preparatory committee in plenary meeting. In the event of a decision not being taken within this period, interim accreditation shall be accorded until such time as a decision is taken.

49. A non-governmental organization that has been granted accreditation to attend a session of the preparatory committee, including related preparatory meetings of regional commissions, may attend all its future sessions, as well as the conference itself.

50. In recognition of the intergovernmental nature of the conference and its preparatory process, active participation of non-governmental organizations therein, while welcome, does not entail a negotiating role.

51. The non-governmental organizations accredited to the international conference may be given, in accordance with established United Nations practice and at the discretion of the chairperson and the consent of the body concerned, an opportunity to briefly address the preparatory committee and the conference in plenary meetings and their subsidiary bodies.

52. Non-governmental organizations accredited to the conference may make written presentations during the preparatory process in the official languages of the United Nations as they deem appropriate. Those written presentations shall not be issued as official documents except in accordance with the rules of procedure of the United Nations.

53. Non-governmental organizations without consultative status that participate in international conferences and wish to obtain consultative status later on should apply through the normal procedures established under Council resolution 1296(XLIV) as updated. Recognizing the importance of the participation of non-governmental organizations that attend a conference in the follow-up process, the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, in considering their application, shall draw upon the documents already submitted by that organization for accreditation to the conference and any additional information submitted by the non-governmental organization supporting its interest, relevance and capacity to contribute to the implementation phase. The Committee shall review such applications as expeditiously as possible so as to allow participation of the respective organization in the implementation phase of the conference. In the interim, the Economic and Social Council shall decide on the participation of non-governmental organizations accredited to an international conference in the work of the relevant functional commission on the follow-up to and implementation of that conference.

54. The suspension and withdrawal of the accreditation of non-governmental organizations to United Nations international conferences at all stages shall be guided by the relevant provisions of the present resolution.

Part VIII

Suspension and withdrawal of consultative status

55. Organizations granted consultative status by the Economic and Social Council and those on the Roster shall conform at all times to the principles governing the establishment and nature of their consultative relations with the Council. In periodically reviewing the activities of non-governmental organizations on the basis of the reports submitted under paragraph 61 (c) below and other relevant information, the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations shall determine the extent to which the organizations have complied with the principles governing consultative status and have contributed to the work of the Council, and may recommend to the Council suspension of or exclusion from consultative status of organizations that have not met the requirements for consultative status as set forth in the present resolution.

56. In cases where the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations has decided to recommend that the general or special consultative status of a non-governmental organization or its listing on the Roster be suspended or withdrawn, the non-governmental organization concerned shall be given written reasons for that decision and shall have an opportunity to present its response for appropriate consideration by the Committee as expeditiously as possible.

57. The consultative status of non-governmental organizations with the Economic and Social Council and the listing of those on the Roster shall be suspended for up to three years or withdrawn in the following cases:

(a) If an organization, either directly or through its affiliates or representatives acting on its behalf, clearly abuses its status by engaging in a pattern of acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations including unsubstantiated or politically motivated acts against States Members of the United Nations incompatible with those purposes and principles;

(b) If there exists substantiated evidence of influence from proceeds resulting from internationally recognized criminal activities such as the illicit drugs trade, money-laundering or the illegal arms trade;

(c) If, within the preceding three years, an organization did not make any positive or effective contribution to the work of the United Nations and, in particular, of the Council or its commissions or other subsidiary organs.

58. The consultative status of organizations in general consultative status and special consultative status and the listing of those on the Roster shall be suspended or withdrawn by the decision of the Economic and Social Council on the recommendation of its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations.

59. An organization whose consultative status or whose listing on the Roster is withdrawn may be entitled to reapply for consultative status or for inclusion on the Roster not sooner than three years after the effective date of such withdrawal.

Part IX

Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations

60. The members of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations shall be elected by the Economic and Social Council on the basis of equitable geographical representation, in accordance with the relevant Council resolutions and decision and rules of procedure of the Economic and Social Council. The Committee shall elect its Chairman and other officers as necessary.

61. The functions of the Committee shall include the following:

(a) The Committee shall be responsible for regular monitoring of the evolving relationship between non-governmental organizations and the United Nations. With a view to fulfilling this responsibility, the Committee shall hold, before each of its sessions and at other times as necessary, consultations with organizations in consultative status to discuss questions of interest to the Committee or to the organizations relating to the relationship between the non-governmental organizations and the United Nations. A report on such consultations shall be transmitted to the Council for appropriate action;

(b) The Committee shall hold its regular session before the substantive session of the Council each year and preferably before the sessions of functional commissions of the Council to consider applications for general consultative status and special consultative status and for listing on the Roster made by non-governmental organizations and requests for changes in status, and to make recommendations thereon to the Council. Upon approval by the Council, the Committee may hold other meetings as required to fulfil its mandated responsibilities. Organizations shall give due consideration to any comments on technical matters that the Secretary-General may make in receiving such applications for the Committee. The Committee shall consider at each such session applications received by the Secretary-General not later than 1 June of the preceding year on which sufficient data have been distributed to the members of the Committee not later than six weeks before the applications are to be considered. Transitional arrangements, if possible, may be made during the current year only. Reapplication by an organization for status or a request for a change in status shall be considered by the Committee at the earliest at its first session in the second year following the session at which the substance of the previous application or request was considered, unless at the time of such consideration it was decided otherwise;

(c) Organizations in general consultative status and special consultative status shall submit to the Committee through the Secretary-General every fourth year a brief report of their activities, specifically as regards the support they have given to the work of the United Nations. Based on findings of the Committee's examination of the report and other relevant information, the Committee may recommend to the Council any reclassification in status of the organization concerned as it deems appropriate. However, under exceptional circumstances, the Committee may ask for such a report from an individual organization in general consultative status or special consultative status or on the Roster between the regular reporting dates;

(d) The Committee may consult, in connection with sessions of the Council or at such other times as it may decide, with organizations in general consultative status and special consultative status on matters within their competence, other than items on the agenda of the Council, on which the Council or the Committee or the organization requests consultation. The Committee shall report to the Council on such consultations;

(e) The Committee may consult, in connection with any particular session of the Council, with organizations in general consultative status and special consultative status on matters within the competence of the organizations concerning specific items already in the provisional agenda of the Council on which the Council or the Committee or the organization requests consultation, and shall make recommendations as to which organizations, subject to the provisions of paragraph 32 (a) above, should be heard by the Council or the appropriate committee and regarding which subjects should be heard. The Committee shall report to the Council on such consultations;

(f) The Committee shall consider matters concerning non-governmental organizations that may be referred to it by the Council or by its commissions;

(g) The Committee shall consult with the Secretary-General, as appropriate, on matters affecting the consultative arrangements under Article 71 of the Charter of the United Nations, and arising therefrom;

(h) An organization that applies for consultative status should attest that it has been in existence for at least two years as at the date of receipt of the application by the Secretariat. Evidence of such existence shall be furnished to the Secretariat.

62. The Committee, in considering a request from a non-governmental organization in general consultative status that an item be placed on the agenda of the Council, shall take into account, among other things:

(a) The adequacy of the documentation submitted by the organization;

(b) The extent to which it is considered that the item lends itself to early and constructive action by the Council;

(c) The possibility that the item might be more appropriately dealt with elsewhere than in the Council.

63. Any decision by the Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations not to grant a request submitted by a non-governmental organization in general consultative status that an item be placed on the provisional agenda of the Council shall be considered final unless the Council decides otherwise.

Part X

Consultation with the Secretariat

64. The Secretariat should be so organized as to enable it to carry out the duties assigned to it concerning the consultative arrangements and the accreditation of non-governmental organizations to United Nations international conferences as set forth in the present resolution.

65. All organizations in consultative relationship shall be able to consult with officers of the appropriate sections of the Secretariat on matters in which there is a mutual interest or a mutual concern. Such consultation shall be upon the request of the non-governmental organization or at the request of the Secretary-General.

66. The Secretary-General may request organizations in general consultative status and special consultative status and those on the Roster to carry out specific studies or prepare specific papers, subject to the relevant financial regulations.

67. The Secretary-General shall be authorized, within the means at his disposal, to offer to non-governmental organizations in consultative relationship facilities that include:

(a) Prompt and efficient distribution of such documents of the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies as shall in the judgement of the Secretary-General be appropriate;

- (b) Access to the press documentation services provided by the United Nations;
- (c) Arrangement of informal discussions on matters of special interest to groups or organizations;
- (d) Use of the libraries of the United Nations;
- (e) Provision of accommodation for conferences or smaller meetings of consultative organizations on the work of the Council;
- (f) Appropriate seating arrangements and facilities for obtaining documents during public meetings of the General Assembly dealing with matters in the economic, social and related fields.

Part XI

Secretariat support

68. Adequate Secretariat support shall be required for fulfilment of the mandate defined for the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations with respect to carrying out the wider range of activities in which the enhanced involvement of non-governmental organizations is envisaged. The Secretary-General is requested to provide the necessary resources for this purpose and to take steps for improving the coordination within the Secretariat of units dealing with non-governmental organizations.

69. The Secretary-General is requested to make every effort to enhance and streamline as appropriate Secretariat support arrangements, to improve practical arrangements on such matters as greater use of modern information and communication technology, establishment of an integrated database of non-governmental organizations, wide and timely dissemination of information on meetings, distribution of documentation, provision of access and transparent, simple and streamlined procedures for the attendance of non-governmental organizations at United Nations meetings and to facilitate their broad-based participation.

70. The Secretary-General is requested to make the present resolution widely known, through proper channels, to facilitate the involvement of non-governmental organizations from all regions and areas of the world.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/31
25 July 1996 Meeting 49 Adopted without vote
Draft by President (E/1996/L.25 & Corr.1), based on informal consultations; agenda item 10.
Meeting numbers. ESC 48, 49.

Committee on NGOs

The Committee on NGOs, at its resumed 1995 session (New York, 29 January-2 February 1996) [E/1996/17], considered two applications for consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and reviewed the quadrennial reports submitted by NGOs in categories I and II consultative status on their activities over the periods 1988-1991 and 1990-1993. It approved the provisional agenda for its 1996 session and recommended four draft decisions for adoption by the Council.

On 2 May, the Council, by decision 1996/216, approved category II consultative status for ISIS International (Chile) and ISIS International Women's Information and Communication Service. By decision 1996/217 of the same date, the Council decided that the consultative status of 12 organizations in categories I and II that had failed to report on their activities for 1988-1991 be withdrawn. It also approved the 1996 provisional agenda of the Committee (decision 1996/219).

In accordance with decision 1996/209 of 9 February, the Committee on NGOs met for its 1996 session [E/1996/102 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1] in New York from 13 to 17 May, from 26 to 30 August and on 2 October. It considered applications for consultative status and reviewed the quadrennial reports [E/C.2/1996/3] submitted by NGOs in categories I and II consultative status with the Council. It also considered implementation of a 1995 Economic and Social Council decision [YUN 1995, p. 1445] on review of arrangements for consultation with NGOs and of decision 1996/302 on NGOs on the Roster for the purposes of the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development. The Committee also considered the format of documentation for its 1997 session (see below). It recommended four draft decisions for adoption by the Council.

The Council, by decisions 1996/313 and 1996/314 of 14 November, approved the Committee's recommendations that 11 NGOs be granted general consultative status (formerly category I), 62 be granted special consultative status (formerly category II) and 83 be listed on the Roster.

On 20 November, the Council, by decision 1996/319, took note of the report of the Committee on NGOs on its 1996 session.

The Council, by decision 1996/316 of 14 November, decided that the 1997 session of the Committee, which was to have been held in New York from 31 March to 11 April, should be held from 5 to 16 May.

Committee documentation

The Committee on NGOs considered the format of documentation for its 1997 session and agreed that information submitted by NGOs relating to applications for consultative status and requests for reclassification would be circulated in the language of submission, and only certain questions of the application questionnaire would be translated. The questionnaire would also be revised. The Committee, noting that its documentation was issued only in English, French and Spanish, recommended to the Economic and Social Council that it be issued in all six official languages of the Council, from within existing resources.

In a November statement [E/1996/L.58] on programme budget implications of a draft decision on the subject [E/1996/L.57], the Secretary-General stated that it would not be possible to accommodate the $860,700 in additional conference-servicing requirements from within the resources budgeted for conference services. Accommodation of those requirements would be reviewed by the General Assembly at its fifty-first (current) session.

By decision 1996/318 of 20 November, the Council postponed consideration of the question of Committee documentation to its 1997 organizational session.

Requests for hearings

The Committee on NGOs met in New York on 21 June to hear requests from NGOs in category I consultative status to address the Council in connection with items on its agenda. The Committee recommended that 18 NGOs be heard by the Council at its 1996 substantive session [E/1996/78].

On 2 July, by decision 1996/224, the Council approved that recommendation.

Participation of NGOs not in consultative status

On 9 February, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1996/208, invited all NGOs that were accredited to participate in the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women and the 1995 World Summit for Social Development and that were not in consultative status with the Council to participate, respectively, at the fortieth (1996) session of the Commission on the Status of Women and the special (1996) session of the Commission for Social Development; those NGOs should be accorded rights of participation equivalent to NGOs with Roster status, but that would in no way confer on them Roster or any other consultative status with the Council and its subsidiary bodies.

On 14 November, the Council, by decision 1996/315, decided, as an interim measure and in conformity with paragraph 53 of resolution 1996/31, to invite those NGOs accredited to the Fourth World Conference on Women or the World Summit for Social Development to attend only the forty-first (1997) session of the Commission on the Status of Women or the thirty-fifth (1997) session of the Commission for Social Development, provided they had started the process of applying for consultative status no later than one month prior to the relevant session. It also requested the Secretary-General to draw to the attention of those NGOs accredited to the two conferences to the decision of the Council and to the process established under resolution 1996/31.

At meetings on 29 January [E/1996/17] and 2 October [E/1996/102/Add.1 & Corr.1], the Committee on NGOs recommended that the Council authorize 28 NGOs of indigenous people not in consultative status with it to participate in the open-ended inter-sessional Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights to elaborate a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples (see PART TWO, Chapter II). On 2 May, 10 October and 14 November, the Council approved those requests in decisions 1996/218 and 1996/309 A and B, respectively.

On 26 July, the Council, by decision 1996/302, confirmed that the NGOs referred to in a 1993 Council decision [YUN 1993, p. 668] were on the Roster for the purposes of the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development. It decided that those NGOs wishing to expand their participation in other Council work should so inform the Committee on NGOs. The Council also decided to place the item on the agenda of the Committee for the second part of its 1996 session and requested the Secretary-General to inform those NGOs of the Council's decision.

Conferences and meetings

In 1996 [A/51/32], the Committee on Conferences examined requests for additions and changes to the approved calendar of conferences and meetings for 1996 [A/AC.172/1996/2] and adopted a draft revised calendar for 1997. The Committee considered matters related to, and inter-sessional departures from, the approved calendar for 1996; improved utilization of conference-servicing resources, including consultations with UN bodies concerning utilization of conference services and facilities available to them, provision of interpretation services to meetings of regional and other major groupings and a cost-accounting system for conference services; control and limitation of documentation; UN publications policy; and review of the programme performance for the 1994-1995 biennium. Other matters considered by the Committee included the subprogramme on conference services of the medium-term plan for 1998-2001; the impact on conference services of the Secretary-General's report on the proposed programme budget for 1996-1997; host country agreements; audio-recording of informal consultations; and an e-mail address for transmission of requests for meeting rooms for the convening of bilateral meetings.

The Committee held an organizational session on 1 February, its substantive session on 19, 20, 22 and 23 August and its resumed substantive session on 19 September.

The Committee approved requests for changes in venue made by the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters, to meet from 1 to 5 July in Geneva rather than in New York; by the Panel of External Auditors of the United Nations and the United Nations Board of Auditors, to meet in Vienna; and by the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names, to meet in Geneva from 12 to 23 August rather than in New York from 10 to 21 June. It considered, but did not approve, the proposed convening by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples of a seminar in Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea, from 12 to 14 June, to review the political, economic and social conditions in small island Non-Self-Governing Territories.

The Committee on Conferences recommended that the General Assembly adopt the draft revised calendar of conferences and meetings for 1997 as amended, and authorize the Committee to make adjustments to that calendar as a result of action by the Assembly. It invited bodies not to hold meetings on 10 February or 17 April 1997, in accordance with a 1995 Assembly decision [YUN 1995, p. 1449] to avoid holding meetings on those two Muslim holy days (Id al-Fitr and Id al-Adha), and requested the Secretariat to make similar arrangements when drafting the biennial calendar for 1998-1999. The Committee recommended that the Assembly grant waivers to the headquarters rule requiring bodies to meet at their established headquarters solely on the basis of a recommendation of the Committee. It also recommended that the Assembly invite all its subsidiary bodies authorized to meet away from their established headquarters to review the exception to the headquarters rule in the light of the current situation of their work, and to make recommendations thereon, through the Committee on Conferences, to the Assembly at its fifty-second (1997) session. The Economic and Social Council's subsidiary bodies should also be invited to carry out the same review. The Committee further recommended that the Assembly request those bodies that had not fully utilized their meeting entitlements, including the duration of their sessions, to review their meeting entitlements. The Assembly should also consider the budgetary impact of any meetings added to the calendar of conferences and meetings for the 1996-1997 biennium, taking into account the letter [A/C.5/50/66] of the Chairman of the Committee on Conferences (see below) to the Chairman of the Fifth Committee, to the effect that available resources would be sufficient to service only those meetings approved in the calendar, and no additional meetings requested by any intergovernmental organ could be accommodated without additional resources.

With regard to requests for exceptions to be made to a 1985 General Assembly resolution [YUN 1985, p. 1256], which stated that no subsidiary organ of the Assembly should meet at Headquarters during a regular session of the Assembly unless so authorized, the Committee recommended that the Assembly authorize the following bodies to meet in New York during the fifty-first session: the Committee on Relations with the Host Country; the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees in the Near East; the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund; the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations; and the Committee on Conferences.

The Committee requested the Secretariat to continue to include data, in the letters of authorization, on their past utilization of conference-servicing resources during the General Assembly, and to encourage them to inform the Secretariat of the anticipated duration of meetings in order to achieve maximum utilization of conference-servicing resources.

Intergovernmental meetings

At the request of the host Governments of several intergovernmental conferences in 1996, the main documents of those meetings were transmitted to the Secretary-General for circulation as documents of the General Assembly, the Security Council or both, as follows:

Sixty-fourth regular session of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) Council of Ministers (Yaoundé, Cameroon, 1-5 July) [S/1996/569]; thirty-second session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Yaoundé, 8-10 July) [A/51/229]; Annual Coordination Meeting for the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) (New York, 2 October) [A/51/773-S/1997/43]; twenty-fourth session of the Conference of Foreign Ministers of OIC (Jakarta, Indonesia, 9-13 December) [A/51/774-S/1997/45]; Ministerial Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council, fifty-eighth session (Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, 16-17 March) [A/51/119-S/1996/305], fifty-ninth session (Riyadh, 1-2 June) [A/51/158-S/1996/409], sixtieth session (Riyadh, 7-8 September) [A/51/387-S/1996/767]; seventeenth session of the Supreme Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council (Doha, Qatar, 7-9 December) [A/51/717-S/1996/1030]; Tenth Summit of the Heads of State and Government of the Rio Group (Cochabamba, Bolivia, 3-4 September) [A/51/375]; Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 25

September) [A/51/473-S/1996/839]; twentieth annual meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 (New York, 27 September) [A/51/471]; and twenty-seventh South Pacific Forum (Majuro, Marshall Islands, 3-5 September) [A/51/357].

Use of conference services

As requested in General Assembly resolution 50/206 A [YUN 1995, p. 1449], the Secretary-General submitted in July 1996 a report [A/51/253] on the results of the active dialogue between the Office of Conference and Support Services and the substantive secretariats of intergovernmental bodies on measures to enhance the utilization of conference services. The Secretary-General said that a series of consultations were held on 30 January, 19 March and 24 May with the secretariats of all intergovernmental bodies meeting in New York in 1996, including sessional bodies. During those consultations, emphasis was placed on the need for secretariats regularly to apprise their bodies of the critical financial situation of the Organization and of the consequences for provision of conference services. It was agreed that intergovernmental bodies should realistically reassess their need for meeting and documentation services in the light of the cost-saving measures taken by the Organization.

Consultations were also held in Geneva between the Conference Services Division and secretariats of intergovernmental bodies meeting there. Emphasis was placed on the principal causes of underutilization, such as late starts, early adjournments and cancellations involving resources that could not be reassigned. Bodies concerned were urged to assess their need for conference-servicing resources with a view to shortening their sessions. The rules and regulations on control and limitation of documentation were also reviewed.

The consultations held in Vienna focused on ways to make the most cost-effective use of reduced conference resources. As a result of those consultations, a note to secretaries of meetings was updated, which highlighted issues such as the reduction of the number of copies of documents distributed and not redistributing pre-session documentation; not extending meetings without Assembly approval; and the costliness to the Organization of the cancellation of interpretation services once contracts had been issued.

The Chairman of the Committee on Conferences, as requested by the Committee in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1449], reported on 19 August to the Committee on consultations held with the Chairmen of the Committee on Information and the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, bodies that had consistently used less than the applicable benchmark figures of their allocated resources in 1993-1995. He also reported on replies he had received from chairmen of subsidiary bodies that had utilized less than 80 per cent of their conference-servicing resources in 1994, in response to the Committee's request for reports on measures to improve their utilization of conference-servicing resources and to assess their need for such resources, with a view to reducing the conference resources requested. The Chairman reported further on consultations with various bodies and committees to ensure rational allocation and capacity utilization of all UN conference facilities at Headquarters and other duty stations to address the imbalance to enhance capacity utilization and cost-effectiveness of facilities.

In August, the Secretary-General reported [A/AC.172/1996/3] on the improved utilization of conference servicing and provided statistics for 1995 on the planned and actual use of UN conference resources allocation to a sample of bodies, as well as an analysis of the statistics, including the overall and average utilization factors, and a breakdown in terms of percentages of the meetings ratio and planning accuracy factor of the bodies in the sample. The average utilization factor for 1995 was 78 per cent, down 4 per cent from 1994 [YUN 1995, p. 1449].

In a 6 September letter [A/C.4/51/6] to the Chairman of the Assembly's Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee, the Chairman of the Committee on Conferences stated that the demand for services by intergovernmental bodies continued to grow, even as the Organization endeavoured to cut back in response to its increasingly severe financial constraints. He said that the cost to the Secretariat of producing a single page of documentation in the six official languages was $916, of which $602 stemmed from translation, while the average cost of one meeting was $4,553, of which $4,194 was for interpretation. In 1995, the overall utilization rate of allocated conference resources at Headquarters, Geneva and Vienna had been 76 per cent, compared to the benchmark figure of 80 per cent, owing to the late starting and early ending of meetings and sessions and repeated cancellations.

The Chairman proposed that bodies review their needs with a view to rationalizing requests for services. To save time, experience showed that the chairman's presence in a conference room set an example for delegations to arrive punctually. Full use of meeting time could be ensured if meetings were convened only when an adequate number of speakers were inscribed on the list and if several items were placed on the agenda. Sessions could be shortened if a time limit for speakers were set. During the planning stage, arrangements could be made to dovetail brief sessional meetings with those of a body's regional groups or other bodies meeting on an "as available" basis. If Conference Services were informed at least a day in advance of a cancellation, the resources thus released could be "recycled" to other groups. Bodies could review their recurrent documentation and eliminate those deemed unnecessary; some reports could be considered on a biennial or triennial basis; agenda items could be merged and reports consolidated accordingly; bodies could request oral reports rather than written reports; and restraint could be exercised in making requests for new reports.

The Committee on Conferences noted with concern that the overall and average utilization factors (76 and 78 per cent, respectively) of the core sample of bodies included in the Secretary-General's report were below the benchmark figure of 80 per cent.

The Committee requested its Chairman to continue to consult with the chairmen of bodies that had consistently utilized less than the applicable benchmark figure of their allocated resources for the past three sessions and to make recommendations to achieve the optimum utilization of conference-servicing resources. He should invite those bodies that had utilized less than 80 per cent of their resources in 1995 to report on measures taken to improve their utilization of those resources and to assess their need for such resources, with a view to reducing the resources requested. It endorsed the idea that the Secretariat make the active dialogue between Conference Services and the secretariats of intergovernmental bodies a permanent coordination feature and directed that action be taken in that regard at Headquarters, in Geneva and in Vienna, where it had noted a need for improved coordination, including between the Secretariat and Member States, in the scheduling of meetings. The Chairman of the Committee, with the assistance of the Secretariat, should emphasize to intergovernmental bodies the importance of starting meetings in a timely manner, indicating the costs of conference servicing and measures that could be taken to improve utilization of conference-servicing resources.

The Committee recommended that Member States be informed of the existence of the model host country agreement contained in an administrative instruction of 8 May 1987 [ST/AI/342] in order to make them aware of the arrangements required in hosting a conference or meeting. It also recommended that the body accepting the invitation be kept informed of the progress made in negotiating the host country agreement in the course of preparation for a conference with a view to encouraging the timely conclusion of a host country agreement before the conference took place.

Budget impact on conference services

Following the issuance of a 28 March report [A/C.5/50/57] of the Secretary-General on the proposed programme budget for the 1996-1997 biennium, the Committee on Conferences on 30 April considered the impact of the proposals therein on conference services. In his report, the Secretary-General proposed to achieve the budgetary savings of $140 million out of the $154 million mandated by the General Assembly [GA res. 50/214] in 1995, including a cost reduction resulting from a vacancy rate of 6.4 per cent, changes in programme delivery and efficiency gains related to procedural simplification (for details, see PART FIVE, Chapter II).

The Committee authorized its Chairman to send a letter to the Chairman of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee apprising that Committee of its concerns and views. In a 9 May letter [A/C.5/50/66], the Chairman of the Committee on Conferences stated that the proposals involved a major exercise for Conference Services, which kept its core staff at a lower level than necessary to cover requirements and relied heavily on temporary assistance. To achieve the required targets, it was necessary to reduce temporary assistance, increase the use of self-revision and postpone the purchase of computerized systems for use by Translation Services, as well as other technological innovations, thereby deferring anticipated productivity gains. No additional meetings could be accommodated without additional resources. Document-processing capacity would be reduced, with priority being given to parliamentary documents rather than meeting records.

The Committee on Conferences expressed concern at the impact of those measures on the capacity of Conference Services to meet mandated activities, in terms of both servicing meetings and processing documentation. It stressed that the concurrence of the body concerned had to be sought before any action was taken to alter entitlements to meetings; that increased reliance on self-revision should not impair translation quality; and that all official languages must receive equal treatment. It noted that the deferral of technological innovations, including the modernization of the text-processing services in Vienna, would be counterproductive in terms of cost-effectiveness. More information on the impact of the measures must be provided to enable the Assembly to take an informed decision. That was provided in an August report of the Secretary-General [A/C.5/50/57/Add.1], in which he proposed measures to realize additional savings of $14.1 million.

In September, the Committee on Conferences recommended that the Assembly consider the budgetary impact of any meetings added to the approved calendar for 1996-1997, taking into account the statement in the 9 May letter of the Chairman of the Committee regarding resources available for servicing additional meetings requested by intergovernmental organizations.

In a 4 November note [A/C.5/51/22], the Secretariat submitted a list of bodies that had requested additional meetings in 1997, with an indication as to whether those meetings could be accommodated; otherwise, possible alternative dates for doing so were suggested. Further proposals were submitted in addenda of 3 and 12 December [A/C.5/51/22/Add.1,2].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/211 A on the pattern of conferences.

The General Assembly,
Having considered the report of the Committee on Conferences,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 40/243 of 18 December 1985, 43/222 B of 21 December 1988, 47/202 A to D of 22 December 1992, 48/222 A and B of 23 December 1993, 49/221 A to D of 23 December 1994 and 50/206 A to F of 23 December 1995,

1. Notes with appreciation the work of the Committee on Conferences, and takes note of its report;
2. Approves the draft revised calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations for 1997 as submitted and amended by the Committee on Conferences, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;
3. Authorizes the Committee on Conferences to make adjustments in the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1997 that may become necessary as a result of actions and decisions taken by the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all the conference services required as a result of decisions taken by the General Assembly at its fifty-first session, taking into account, as necessary, the procedures established in Assembly resolutions 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and 42/211 of 21 December 1987;
5. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in the list of official holidays of the United Nations Id al-Fitr and Id al-Adha;
6. Decides that no United Nations meetings shall be held on Id al-Fitr and Id al-Adha, which occur in 1997 on 10 February and 17 April, respectively, and requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements to ensure strict implementation of this decision when preparing all future draft calendars of conferences and meetings of the United Nations;

7. Decides also that requests for waivers to the headquarters rule contained in General Assembly resolution 40/243 shall be reviewed by the Committee on Conferences prior to consideration by the Assembly;

8. Invites all its subsidiary bodies that are authorized to meet away from their established headquarters to review, in the interest of improved efficiency and cost-effectiveness, the exception to the headquarters rule in the light of the current situation of their work and to make recommendations thereon, through the Committee on Conferences, to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

9. Invites the Economic and Social Council to request all its subsidiary bodies to carry out the review referred to in paragraph 8 above;

10. Requests the bodies that have not fully utilized their meeting entitlements, including the duration of their sessions, to review their entitlements and to report the results of their review to the General Assembly through the Committee on Conferences;

11. Expresses concern that the overall and average factors for the utilization of conference services have fallen further and were below the established benchmark figure of 80 per cent in 1995;

12. Reiterates its request to the Committee on Conferences, in consultation with the organs concerned, to examine the cases where the utilization factor is lower than the established benchmark figure for at least three sessions, with a view to reporting on problems and factors that have given rise to such a situation, and to make appropriate recommendations in order to achieve the optimum utilization of conference-servicing resources;

13. Expresses concern about the underutilization of conference facilities at duty stations outside Headquarters, and emphasizes the need to make the most effective use possible of such facilities;

14. Endorses the initiatives taken by the Chairman of the Committee on Conferences with a view to assisting bodies to achieve the optimum utilization of conference-servicing resources and, to that effect, to assess realistically their need for such resources;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure closer cooperation between Headquarters, the United Nations Office at Geneva, the United Nations Office at Vienna and the United Nations Office at Nairobi in order to improve the coordination of conference services;

16. Requests the Secretariat to engage on a regular basis in an active dialogue with Member States as a permanent feature at Headquarters, as well as at the United Nations Office at Geneva, the United Nations Office at Vienna and the United Nations Office at Nairobi, in order to improve the coordination of conference services;

17. Expresses concern that 35 per cent of requests were denied for interpretation services for meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States, in view of the importance of these meetings for the smooth functioning of sessional bodies, while recognizing that meetings of Charter and mandated bodies must be serviced as a priority;

18. Urges intergovernmental bodies to spare no effort at the planning stage to take into account meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States, to make provision for such meetings in their programme of work and to notify Conference Services well in advance of any cancellations so that unutilized conference-servicing resources may, to the extent possible, be reassigned to meetings of regional and other major groupings of States;

19. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to provide, within the resources requested for conference services for the biennium 1998-1999, interpretation services for meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States upon request by those groupings, taking into account the priority due to meetings included in the calendar of conferences and meetings, and to submit a report on the implementation of this decision to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session through the Committee on Conferences;

20. Reaffirms that, in the use of conference rooms, priority should be given to meetings of Member States;

21. Decides that bodies which accept invitations to convene conferences and meetings in host countries should be kept informed, as appropriate, of the progress made in negotiating the host country agreement in the course of preparations for such a conference or meeting, with a view to encouraging the timely conclusion of such an agreement before the conference or meeting takes place.

General Assembly resolution 51/211 A

18 December 1996 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/742) without vote, 17 December (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.17), based on informal consultations; agenda item 118.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 7, 8, 10, 13, 15, 17, 46; plenary 89.

Bilateral and informal meetings

The Committee on Conferences considered establishment of an e-mail address for the transmission of requests for meeting rooms for the convening of bilateral meetings.

The Committee commended the Secretariat for its implementation of General Assembly resolutions [49/221 D and 50/206 F] requesting improved meeting arrangements during Assembly sessions. It recommended that the Secretariat proceed with the establishment of an e-mail capacity through which delegations could make requests for the use of meeting rooms for convening bilateral meetings and contacts among Member States during the general debate of the General Assembly.

As to audio-recording of bilateral consultations, the Committee noted the assurances by the Secretariat that the practice of making audio-recordings of the informal consultations of intergovernmental bodies would be discontinued and recommended that recordings of informal consultations of those bodies should not be made unless the body concerned decided otherwise.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/211 E.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 49/221 D of 23 December 1994 and 50/206 F of 23 December 1995,

Expresses its appreciation once again to the Secretary-General and the Secretariat for the proper and timely implementation of resolutions 49/221 D and 50/206 F.

General Assembly resolution 51/211 E

18 December 1996 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/742) without vote, 17 December (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.17), based on informal consultations; agenda item 118.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 7, 8, 10, 13, 15, 17, 46; plenary 89.

Regional groups

On 19 April [A/51/125], Cuba, on behalf of the Group of Latin American and Caribbean States, protested the non-granting of certain services by the Secretariat for a meeting of the Group held on 18 April in New York. It referred to General Assembly resolution 50/206 A [YUN 1995, p. 1449] which dealt with the provision of interpretation services to meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States, and expressed confidence that the situation would not be repeated in the future. The Secretary-General was urged to ensure that all countries could hold their exchanges on important issues for the Organization's work in an adequate manner.

On 19 August, the Committee on Conferences considered the question of the provision of interpretation services to meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States. The Committee expressed concern that 35 per cent of requests for such services had been denied. It urged intergovernmental bodies to spare no effort in the planning stage to take into account meetings of their regional and other major groupings of Member States, and to dovetail such meetings with those of the sessional body. They should notify Conference Services well in advance of any cancellations so that unutilized conference-servicing resources could, to the extent possible, be reassigned to meetings of regional and other major groupings of States.

Document control

In response to 1995 General Assembly requests [res. 50/206 B, C and D], the Secretary-General submitted in August a report [A/51/268] on the control and limitation of documentation.

The report examined compliance with and review of the page limits for documentation; format of reports of subsidiary bodies; responses by intergovernmental organizations to a 1995 Assembly request for information on presentation of reports; the provision of written meeting records; and access to the optical disk system.

The Secretary-General reported that 83 per cent of the documents subject to control by the Secretariat complied with the 24-page limit, with an average length of 8.4 pages. In 1995, some 71 documents had exceeded that limit. He stated that considerable progress had been made in improving the format of documentation in all languages and, at the same time, in achieving economies by eliminating almost entirely the use of external typesetting and reducing the use of paper. That was made possible through the installation of advanced word-processing and desktop publishing equipment, respectively, in the text-processing and copy preparation units of the Office of Conference and Support Services. As to control and limitation of documentation, responses from intergovernmental bodies indicated that the Committee on Natural Resources had decided to eliminate from its report to the Economic and Social Council summaries covering the general debate and other statements. It also reduced the number of resolutions recommended for adoption by the Council and the number of reports from the Secretariat. The Committee on Relations with the Host Country had also decided to shorten its report to the General Assembly, without affecting the substance of the topics covered. The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) concluded that, beyond the restraint it was already exercising, no additional measures of the kind suggested could be taken without adversely affecting the fulfilment of its mandate. With regard to the provision of unedited transcripts in place of verbatim records, that had already been implemented in the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space.

The Secretary-General also reported that the Working Group on the need to harmonize and improve UN information systems (see below) was of the view that the future development of information services to Member States should focus on the use of Internet technology, and emphasized the need for Member States to have all official documents available via the Internet. To that end, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) were providing, at their request, Internet connectivity to all permanent and observer missions in New York and Geneva, respectively. The UN Office of Conference and Support Services was in the process of linking the optical disk system to the UN Web server to make all documents available to Member States on the Internet in all languages. Direct connections to the optical disk system would remain available. Training in information retrieval and downloading was also being provided.

The Committee on Conferences recommended that the General Assembly reiterate its recommendations to intergovernmental bodies on the control and limitation of documentation and request them to report on measures taken to exercise that control. The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space should keep the Assembly informed, through the Committee on Conferences, of its experience with the use of unedited verbatim transcripts. The Committee on Conferences should inform those intergovernmental bodies that received written meeting records of the relevant discussion in the Committee and of the notional costs of written meeting records and unedited verbatim transcripts, and invite them to request the Secretariat to issue unedited transcripts of one meeting for comparison purposes, with a view to the possible substitution of such transcripts for their usual records in the future. The Committee further recommended that the Assembly stress again the need for strict compliance with the existing limits of 24 and 32 pages; request the Secretariat to submit to it, every two years through the Committee, updated information on the number and length of documents. The Secretariat should inform bodies, at the time they requested reports, whether the documents could be produced within established page limits. The Assembly should also request the Secretariat to improve the quality in the substance and presentation of documentation, applying new publishing techniques to enhance readability and reduce paper consumption. Working documents in all languages on the daily list of documents or in the Journal introduced into the optical disk system should be so identified. During the transitional period, the use of such technologies as the optical disk system and the Internet should not constitute an alternative to traditional documents. The Assembly should request the Secretariat to make proposals on facilitating access by developing countries to the optical disk system in all official languages.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/211 B.

The General Assembly,

13. Reaffirms its decision that, should a report be issued late, the reasons for the delay should be indicated when the report is introduced;

14. Reiterates its request to the Joint Inspection Unit to conduct a comprehensive survey of the role publications play in implementing mandates of intergovernmental bodies and the extent to which recurrent publications could be made more cost-effective in this regard, and to submit a report on this matter no later than the end of the fifty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 51/211 B

18 December 1996 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/742) without vote, 17 December (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.17), based on informal consultations; agenda item 118.

Also on 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/211 C.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/206 D of 23 December 1995,

Stressing the need to provide Member States and United Nations bodies with more comprehensive and accurate information on the costs of meetings and documentation,

Noting that the introduction of new technologies enhances the quality, cost-effectiveness and efficiency of conference services,

Stressing the importance of equal access to, and benefit from, the optical disk system and other new technologies in all six official languages by all Member States and the need to overcome the difficulties faced by some Member States, in particular developing countries, in acquiring the technology to access the optical disk system, as well as other available technologies,

Welcoming the actions taken by the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics of the Economic and Social Council to expand and improve connectivity between United Nations databases and those of Member States, including through their permanent missions, and the training programmes initiated to that end,

Appreciating the relevance of these actions as part of the effort to increase efficiency and to decrease costs,

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report, through the Committee on Conferences, to each subsidiary organ of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on the cost of conference services it utilized in the year concluded in order to enable those organs to plan more effectively;

3. Decides that, in the absence of a General Assembly decision to the contrary, the use of such technologies as the optical disk system and the Internet shall not constitute an alternative to traditional documents;

4. Strongly urges the Secretary-General, as a matter of priority, to provide proposals to the Fifth Committee at the first part of the resumed fifty-first session, in accordance with paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 50/206 D, on facilitating access by developing countries to the optical disk system in all six official languages, taking into account the possible savings from reduced reproduction and distribution costs;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the texts of all new public documents, in all six official languages, and information materials of the United Nations are made available through the United Nations Web site daily and are accessible to Member States without delay;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to complete the task of uploading all important older United Nations documents on the United Nations Web site on a priority basis, so that these archives are also available to Member States through that medium.

Translation services

In 1995, the General Assembly had requested [res. 50/206 E] the Secretary General to report to the Committee on Conferences on actions taken to improve the quality of translations into all official languages, in particular the efforts of the Arabic Translation Service.

The Committee on Conferences in 1996 commended the translation services for the efforts made to improve the quality of translation of documents in all official languages and encouraged those services to continue to spare no effort to that end.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/211 D.

2. Requests the Secretary-General to pay due attention to the rules of management in translation-related matters.

General Assembly resolution 51/211 D

Cost-accounting system

The Committee on Conferences took note of a Secretariat paper [A/AC.172/1996/CRP.3] on a cost-accounting system for conference services and requested it to continue to develop the system as a priority and to report thereon to the 1997 substantive session of the Committee. It regretted that the Secretariat had not been able to devise such a system as requested by the Assembly [res. 50/206 D], and expressed the view that in-house resources should be utilized to develop the system without recourse to outside consultants.

UN information systems

As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1995 [res. 1995/61], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [E/1996/81] on international cooperation in the field of informatics. The report examined the work of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on the need to harmonize and improve UN information systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States; actions taken by the Secretariat and UNDP in response to concerns raised in the Working Group; and video conferencing plans for the UN system.

The Open-ended Working Group addressed the issue of how Member States could be provided with unhindered access to UN data and identified the problems experienced in so doing, including the lack of a comprehensive policy for the Organization in that area and budgetary constraints. As a result, new computer technologies had not been adopted rapidly by the United Nations and the corresponding benefits could not therefore be fully realized by Member States. However, the Secretariat and UNDP had started to address the concerns of Member States, in particular through the capabilities of the Internet. The Working Group was of the view that future development of information services to Member States should be focused using Internet technology. It also examined a number of issues that needed to be addressed by the Secretariat.

In response to those concerns, a focal point (the Director of Information Technology within the Office of Conference and Support Services of the Secretariat) was appointed to address issues related to the provision of information in electronic format to Member States; to collate the needs of missions for UN information; and to co-ordinate actions to ensure that missions could easily connect to electronic sources of data. The Secretariat established a dedicated help desk for permanent and observer missions to handle any technical problems. UNDP also embarked on an accelerated programme to provide Internet connectivity to missions in New York. Similar services were being provided by ITU in Geneva. Concerning information access and dissemination, UNDP worked closely with UN information centres and UN organizations and agencies on information dissemination at the country level, in support of the UN resident coordinator system. A major thrust of its country information access was in sub-Saharan Africa, Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States. Partnerships and cost-sharing arrangements to promote information access and extend the Internet to country locations were made with donor and UN organizations. A $5 million project to promote the introduction and utilization of information and communication technologies in support of sustainable human development at country locations was approved at the end of the year.

The United Nations and its specialized agencies disseminated information over the Internet through the World Wide Web server and the Gopher server. The Secretariat was expanding the amount of information on its Web server in New York, including press releases and summaries, and other features that made the site more attractive and user-friendly. It initiated an interdepartmental group to expand the Web service to include information prepared by all substantive departments. Many offices in Vienna also took advantage of the potential of the Internet to disseminate information to Member States as well as information provided by Member States themselves, through the United Nations Office at Vienna World Wide Web server. The information available on the UN Web server had been substantially revised, with a new multilingual home page introduced in September. Guidelines to standardize the presentation of information on the Internet were elaborated, and guidelines on electronic publishing drawn up.

In addition, the Secretariat linked the optical disk system to the UN Web server to ensure that Member States had unimpeded Internet access to documents on the system. The use of the UN electronic mail network by permanent and observer missions was expanded during the year, allowing them to communicate with UN and UNDP offices worldwide. Training was also provided for those missions on the use of the Internet. With regard to access by permanent and observer missions to the UN mainframe computer, initiatives were taken to convert applications from older mainframe formats to newer technology. A considerable amount of information was also available on CD-ROM.

A video teleconferencing capability at Headquarters was first used on 26 February. Given its potential usage for conferences and the reduction in funds needed for travel to conferences, the Secretariat prepared a proposal, in the 1998-1999 programme budget, to equip the eight major duty stations with that facility.

The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its fourth session (18 April-3 May), requested [E/1996/28 (dec. 4/5)] the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, in cooperation with other organizations of the UN system, to establish a sustainable development home page on the World Wide Web, with "hot links" to relevant databases throughout the UN system, to facilitate access by countries to sources of information relevant to sustainable development. It also requested the Working Group on informatics to give particular attention to devising a means of facilitating the access of Member States to environmental databases throughout the UN system, within available resources.

On 16 July, the Chairman of the Working Group, speaking before the Economic and Social Council, stated that the Group had achieved significant progress in ensuring that Member States had easy, economical and unhindered access through their permanent missions to UN computerized databases and information systems. Its immediate objective included providing connectivity to all 185 Member States, working towards a uniform e-mail system to which all permanent missions could have easy access, establishing connectivity between the optical disk system and the UN Web site, and encouraging the posting of information on the World Wide Web server in a systematic and computer-literate manner. The Secretariat would have to give greater priority to the question of effecting savings by employing information technology to a much fuller degree. The Working Group had concluded that the importance of informatics to Member States had not been fully grasped by the Secretariat, which would have to demonstrate greater keenness and technical cooperation if the Group was to accomplish its tasks.

Inter-agency cooperation. The ACC Information Systems Coordination Committee (ISCC) held its fourth session in Geneva from 7 to 9 October [ACC/1996/18]. It urged the widest participation by libraries of its member agencies in the United Nations Shared Cataloguing and Public Access System, once the pilot project had been completed and determined to be a success by the Task Force on Inter-Library Cooperation, Standards and Management. The Internet was to be the primary but not sole technology for electronic access and dissemination for external clients. Each UN body should establish an information dissemination policy. ISCC needed to create, promulgate and maintain system-wide standards, and recommended best practices for electronic information access and dissemination. UN bodies should adopt best practices for information access and dissemination to promote non-duplication and a consistent orientation. Agencies were to be required to register their main Internet universal resource locators with ISCC, and to notify it of any changes for reflection on the official locator. Web sites of individual UN bodies should contain a link to the official Web site locator, to encourage wide navigability and knowledge of the location of the official home page for the UN system as a whole and to provide easy access to other UN system information sources. Common searching and indexing mechanisms were required, and UN standard subject-searching mechanisms should be used, commencing in the 1998-1999 biennium.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) was selected as the lead agency for the Task Force on Document Management Technology. An ISCC working group on Internet security should be set up and charged with Internet domain-naming for the UN system. The ISCC secretariat should implement at the International Computing Centre in Geneva a restricted Web site, available only to ISCC focal points under password control, to contain information on desktop migration. ISCC members should be encouraged to share information about client server projects and associated external consultants. Taking into account the work of the Inter-Agency Telecommunication Coordination Group, the Task Force on Information Management and Standards should recommend best practices on electronic conferencing, with the initial priority being video conferencing. The Chairman of the Task Force had been requested to write to the ACC Organizational Committee concerning the creation of a standing committee on classification to review and amend its outdated scheme and to provide a solid basis for ISCC to develop recommended practices on access and dissemination in a harmonized manner, specifically for subject search mechanisms.

In July [A/50/1005], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the management audit of electronic mail at UN Headquarters.

Telecommunications

In 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1455], the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) had submitted a report reviewing telecommunications and related information technologies in the UN system. In a February 1996 report [A/C.5/51/46] on telecommunications in the United Nations, the Secretary-General addressed the concerns JIU had expressed. He examined the status of communications in the United Nations and changes that had occurred since his original proposals [YUN 1993, p. 1239], reassessed the UN global network and discussed a UN corporate network. He said that a wide range of telecommunications services were provided to the Secretariat, its programmes and funds and the specialized agencies. Dedicated telecommunications links existed between UN Headquarters in New York and seven other principal offices (Addis Ababa, Amman, Bangkok, Geneva, Nairobi, Santiago, Vienna). Services to those offices were carried over terrestrial circuits leased from commercial service providers or national postal, telephone and telegraph companies. In addition, the United Nations maintained satellite-based services to all major peacekeeping missions. The UN global network was used primarily by the Secretariat and by specialized agencies on a cost-recovery basis.

Significant changes had occurred in the telecommunications industry and in the UN system, which called for a re-evaluation of the Secretary-General's original proposals for a telecommunications network owned and operated by the United Nations. High-speed digital telecommunications services were increasingly available to corporate clients at favourable rates, and in many countries there had been a rapid development of telecommunications infrastructures. The result for organizations such as the United Nations had been the possibility for high-speed digital communications at commercially competitive prices. Eventually, the network services required by the Organization would be available commercially, relieving it of the need to invest heavily in equipment and related technology. Given the concerns raised by Member States, the changing climate in the telecommunications industry and a more constrained funding situation in the United Nations, the Secretary-General's original proposals were being revised, and the strategic direction of telecommunications in the United Nations reviewed, in the current climate of improving the cost-benefit ratio of Secretariat programmes. It was concluded that the former strategy for the United Nations to own and operate its own telecommunications facilities was now outdated, since many of those services could be procured less expensively through commercial suppliers. Although the General Assembly had approved the establishment of a European telecommunications hub facility, such large capital expenditures were now considered unnecessary. Improvements continued to be made to the New York facility to meet peacekeeping requirements. However, the Secretary-General was of the opinion that, given the lower cost of leasing circuits from commercial sources, it was no longer necessary to purchase and operate earth stations for each of the UN offices away from Headquarters, except where commercial service providers could not provide high-speed digital circuits or it was too expensive. He proposed to continue to investigate the increased use of outsourcing for telecommunications operations, maintenance and other related functions to achieve further cost benefits. Proposals would be solicited from vendors in operational areas where outsourcing could be used effectively. The Secretary-General also intended to integrate the UN global network with the Mercure satellite network (see PART THREE, Chapter VII) of the United Nations Environment Programme, with a view to achieving economies.

Concerning the UN corporate network, comprising the Organization's own internally supported network and the telecommunications networks of all specialized agencies, funds and programmes, the UN Office of Legal Affairs had been providing advice on the setting up of the network. A memorandum of understanding between the World Bank and the United Nations, providing for shared use of telecommunications facilities, had been signed. The Inter-Agency Telecommunications Advisory Group, formed to address issues related to use of the UN corporate network, had taken up a number of issues of concern to organizations that were represented, including the concept of sharing telecommunications resources and facilities. A database had been established to report on common requirements for telecommunications services and to coordinate the use of new or existing facilities. The Group considered the setting up of telecommunications facilities quickly in an emergency, particularly the use of on-demand satellite-based voice communications. Similar arrangements for data communications were being established with another global service provider that would allow the United Nations and all participating agencies, funds and programmes to benefit from special pricing arrangements for data communications services worldwide. The Group would also provide a forum for coordination of the introduction to the United Nations of new technologies and services.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General stated that additional efforts would be made to bring further efficiencies in the operations of the UN global network, utilizing further opportunities for outsourcing and establishing cooperative arrangements with specialized agencies. For the 1998-1999 biennium, he proposed to continue to request resources for telecommunications as part of the regular programme of activities under the proposed programme budget, while resources for telecommunications as they related to peace-keeping would continue to be incorporated into those budgets.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1996/35.

The need to harmonize and improve United Nations informatics systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States

The Economic and Social Council,

Conscious of the deep interest of Member States in harnessing the benefits of new information technologies for furthering the objectives of the United Nations, including the objectives of economic and social development,

Recalling its resolutions 1991/70 of 26 July 1991, 1992/60 of 31 July 1992, 1993/56 of 29 July 1993, 1994/46 of 29 July 1994 and 1995/61 of 28 July 1995 on the need to harmonize and improve United Nations information systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States, with due regard to all official languages,

Recalling also that in its resolution 1995/61 it requested the President of the Economic and Social Council to convene, initially for one year, an ad hoc open-ended working group, from within existing resources, to make appropriate recommendations for the due fulfilment of the provisions of previous resolutions on this item,

Welcoming the oral report presented by the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on the need to improve United Nations information systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States on the progress achieved so far by the Working Group in fulfilling its mandate,

Appreciating that the work of the Working Group has not involved any additional expenditures and that its needs have been met from within existing resources,

Appreciating also the actions taken by the Working Group significantly to expand and improve the connectivity between United Nations databases and those of Member States, including their permanent missions, and the training programme initiated to that end,

Taking note with interest of the proposed initiatives, including the setting up of videoconferencing rooms that the permanent missions could use, and the updating of the connection between the United Nations Internet facility and its optical disk system,

Taking note of the request made by the Commission on Sustainable Development in its decision 4/5 of 3 May 1996 that the Working Group give particular attention to devising a means of facilitating the access of Member States to environmental databases throughout the United Nations system,

Agreeing with the assessment contained in the report of the Working Group that further work needs to be done by the Working Group to fulfil its mandate,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on follow-up action taken,

1. Reiterates, once again, the high priority it attaches to easy, economical, uncomplicated and unhindered access for States Members of the United Nations and for observers, through, inter alia, their permanent missions, to the growing number of computerized databases and information systems and services of the United Nations;

2. Calls for the urgent and continued implementation of measures required to achieve these objectives;

3. Stresses the continuing need for representatives of States to be closely consulted and actively associated with the respective executive and governing bodies of United Nations institutions dealing with informatics within the United Nations system, so that the specific needs of States as internal end-users can be given due priority;

4. Decides that the action programme to harmonize and improve United Nations informatics systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States should continue to be implemented from within existing resources and in full consultation with the representatives of States;

5. Commends the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on the need to improve United Nations information systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States for the concrete actions it has taken in pursuance of its mandate;

Integrated Management Information System (IMIS)

The Secretary-General submitted a November report [A/C.5/51/23] on the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS) to the Fifth Committee. The purpose of IMIS, launched in 1990, was to provide all major duty stations with a modern administrative system. In 1996, major steps were achieved towards the completion of the development and implementation of the system and the establishment of a maintenance structure. The project had also emerged as one of the major components of the reform process in the United Nations (see PART FIVE, Chapter I). Because of its complexity and the broad range of activities it covered, difficulties common to that kind of undertaking were being faced and dealt with. During the year, the human resources applications had been installed at six offices away from Headquarters and implemented at two of them. At Headquarters, the new financial systems, including procurement, were implemented, together with a new account code structure, a funds sufficiency checking mechanism and a new cheque printing system; The difficulties encountered should not hide the fact that the system generally worked satisfactorily, was stable and reliable, and that the integration between the various applications had been successful.

ACABQ recommended [A/51/7/Add.4] that the Secretary-General exercise greater efforts to coordinate with all organizations, agencies, funds and programmes of the UN system a broader and more extensive use of IMIS applications, with a view to realizing long-term economies in the development, utilization and maintenance of computer-based information systems that adhered to common standards. It also recommended that the General Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report on IMIS.

Other matters

Common services

In May [A/51/124-E/1996/44], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly the comments of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) on the report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on UN system common premises and services in the field [E/1996/43] (see PART THREE, Chapter II).

The Council, by decision 1996/227 of 10 July, took note of the JIU report and the comments of ACC. In resolution 1996/42 of 26 July, the Council expressed concern at the lack of progress made towards the use of common administrative services. It requested the funds and programmes of the UN system to simplify and harmonize administrative and financial procedures so that common administrative services could be established where feasible, and to set measurable targets and time-frames for the achievement of those services, including the identification of priority areas, such as telecommunications and financial- and personnel-related services.

In November [A/51/686], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a JIU report on common services at UN Headquarters, which presented an overview of those services (telecommunications, IMIS, legal services, conference services, public information, medical services, procurement, travel, buildings management, security and safety, pouch and mail, and insurance) as well as of their organization and management. JIU also proposed a new framework for such services.

JIU found that although a number of services were provided by the United Nations on a reimbursable basis to the programmes and funds, only a few qualified as a genuine common service. Barely 3 per cent of the combined administrative and programme support resources at the common headquarters of the organizations concerned had been brought under common services arrangements. In addition, their role as instruments for achieving a cohesive and cost-effective UN system had still to be properly recognized and established within the Secretariat.

JIU recommended that the General Assembly provide policy guidance on the question of common services and endorse the new framework for common services, requiring the organizations concerned to pool progressively most of their non-statutory or non-core functions under common services arrangements within a five-year period. The Assembly should include in its agenda a regular item on common services and require the Secretary-General to report every two years on progress made in that area. The executive boards of the programmes and funds should also require their respective secretariats to report every two years on progress in strengthening common services at Headquarters and in field locations. The Secretary-General and executive heads should formulate and agree on a plan of action for the progressive implementation of common services at Headquarters, including a list of those services to be shared by all Headquarters organizations, and those to be shared only by the programmes and funds; measures for upgrading the quality and efficiency of existing common services; establishment of interdependent linkages between common services at Headquarters and in other duty stations; and standardization of operational policies, administrative rules and procedures and technical specifications. Those common services managed by Headquarters that had broad system-wide responsibilities should be enhanced and properly established within the Secretariat to ensure that: their budgetary and staff resources were fully commensurate at all times with their common system responsibilities and tasks; and they were self-supporting and had the authority and autonomy to manage their budgetary and staff resources efficiently.

UN insurance programmes

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362], the Secretary-General transmitted a August report [A/51/302] by the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the management audit of UN global cargo and motor vehicle insurance programmes. Those programmes—the global cargo insurance policy, which insured UN shipments worth more than $100 million annually, and the global third-party vehicle liability insurance policy, which provided third-party liability coverage for some 20,000 UN-owned and military contingent-owned vehicles worldwide—were of special relevance to peacekeeping operations. The audit confirmed that the global insurance programmes were an effective means of protecting the Organization against unexpected losses. However, there were several areas where the administration of those policies required improvement to reduce costs and provide for the insurance coverage to be taken out in an efficient and coherent manner.

OIOS recommended that a task force be established under the leadership of the Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Accounts to develop formal policy guidelines for the insurance of UN shipments. Other recommendations were aimed at establishing clear lines of responsibility for insurance matters at Headquarters and peacekeeping missions, improving the procedures and work flow for arranging insurance and filing claims, and exploring self-insurance as an alternative to commercial insurance coverage. To improve the administration of the global motor vehicle insurance policy, OIOS recommended that the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Insurance, Claims and Compensation Section of the Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Accounts improve the monitoring of vehicle fleets and the reporting of fleet data to the insurance broker.

Procurement reform

The Secretary-General, responding to General Assembly resolution 49/216 C [YUN 1994, p. 1369], submitted to the Fifth Committee a February report [A/C.5/50/13/Rev.1] on procurement reform in the UN Secretariat. That process had been reviewed by a high-level group of experts, and the Secretary-General had accepted most of its recommendations. The report provided information and details on action taken or planned to implement the reform measures, including training of procurement officers, delegation of procurement authority, systems contracts, updating and enhancing the supplier roster, revamping the Headquarters Committee on Contracts, designation of a supplier relations officer, defining responsibilities and streamlining procedures, reviewing relevant financial regulations and rules, publicizing contract activities and awards, and developing information technology in support of procurement activities.

The Secretary-General said that the heavy workload within the Procurement and Transportation Division had restricted the speed with which some of the recommendations could be implemented. However, there was a renewed determination and commitment to implement the reforms. The Procurement and Transportation Division had been structured to ensure a modern, commodity-based procurement. It also provided a "flatter" structure that would ensure maximum productivity from all staff members concerned. The new structure concentrated expertise where it belonged and reduced the need for layers of unnecessary supervisors. Work had also started on providing a firm foundation upon which further changes could be implemented by improving specifications, establishing a comprehensive supplier database and reviewing documentation to achieve greater standardization and simplification. The new procurement policy would include revised procedures to provide for a truly competitive, fair and transparent process, including the establishment of clear lines of responsibility, authority and accountability, and inherent control mechanisms.

In March, ACABQ recommended [A/50/7/Add.13] that: more vigorous efforts be made by the Procurement and Transportation Division in cooperation with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations to identify the goods and services that might be appropriate for system/requirement contracts; concerted efforts be made by the parties involved so that sufficient time was allowed to research the market properly and ensure that as many suppliers as possible were invited to bid; high priority be accorded to the establishment of full inventory systems of existing assets so that UN assets were identified and their location and condition established, and the Secretary-General be requested to report on steps taken in that regard; in all cases, the reasons for seeking exception from competitive bidding be adequately documented by the requisitioning unit at the time of requisition, and that aspect of the procurement process be monitored by the Board of Auditors; the terms of reference of the Headquarters Committee on Contracts and its composition and procedures be issued at once; and the participation by an OIOC staff member in meetings of the Contracts Committee as an observer be discontinued immediately, as that might compromise the role of the internal audit of procurement operations at Headquarters.

The General Assembly, in decision 50/479 of 11 April, took note of the report of the Secretary-General and the related report of ACABQ, and requested him to submit to the Assembly at its fifty-first session a comprehensive report on the implementation of procurement reform.

In response to that request, the Secretary-General reported in November [A/C.5/51/9] that, effective 1 October, the Commodity Procurement Section was divided into two separate sections. The number of clusters had been consolidated and reduced from 11 to 8, with each Chief of Section responsible for four clusters. The new structure and organization of the Procurement and Transportation Division would enhance internal supervision, strengthen control mechanisms and provide lines of responsibility, authority and accountability. The Headquarters Committee on Contracts had also achieved the necessary authority and confidence to assert itself independently and to demand full compliance with regulations and rules and established procedures. There had been an improvement in the coordination of procurement efforts between the Division, the Field Administration and Logistics Division and the Office of Legal Affairs, effectively creating economies of scale and achieving savings for the Organization, as well as improving delivery rates.

In December, ACABQ submitted its comments [A/51/7/Add.3] on the report of the Secretary-General.

UN access control system

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 48/218 [YUN 1994, p. 1362], the Secretary-General transmitted an OIOS report [A/51/467] on the investigation of the UN access control system. The United Nations had spent $ 1.5 million on the system, which was never activated. Only a small component of the system—the video imaging badge system—was being utilized by the Security and Safety Service. Following the audit of the system in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1458] by OIOS, a review was conducted to determine whether the project had been properly planned and managed; and whether the contract award and acceptance and payment were in compliance with UN rules and regulations. The investigation concluded that responsibility for the financial loss sustained by the Organization could not be attributed to any acts of any particular staff member either individually or collectively. OIOS reiterated its recommendations that feasibility studies be performed whenever projects were undertaken involving new technology or whenever no in-house expertise was available; and that management ensure that the interests of the United Nations were safeguarded in all contracts. Contract terms regarding performance of contractors should be standardized and be required on all service contracts. The United Nations should immediately establish a security working group made up of security professionals from various government agencies to evaluate current physical security and procedural policies with a view to identifying the deficiencies and needs of the Organization, especially in the light of the recent wave of terrorist attacks worldwide and the vulnerability of the UN Headquarters facilities. Senior management should ensure that a responsible experienced manager was assigned to each project and that a chain of command was established and adhered to. The access control system contract should be reviewed by the Purchase and Transportation Division in the same fashion as that of the Lessons-Learned Group in the Department of Peace-keeping Operations, with the expectation that there should be no further occurrence of such a case. The Office of Legal Affairs and the Purchase and Transportation Division should conduct training exercises in how to prepare requests for proposals in order to eliminate the need for contract amendments and protracted negotiations. They should also consult in the development of rules, regulations and procedures specific to requests for proposals.

Inter-agency security

The Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Security of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) met in Geneva on 8 and 9 May [ACC/1996/21] to discuss the report of the UN Security Coordinator on security developments; issues raised by the World Food Programme (WFP) related to field security coordination; policy issues regarding inter-agency security coordination; and training.

It recommended to the ACC Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) that greater flexibility be given to staff members in the choice of the security improvements available to them to enable them to select electronic security equipment. It agreed that recommendations on possible system-wide changes to the malicious acts insurance policy that were being developed by WFP and other interested organizations would be forwarded to CCAQ for consideration.

The meeting decided that an informal working group would be convened to review some elements of the unified inter-agency security system with a view to further strengthening it and increasing its flexibility, taking into account the experience gained (see below). It recommended the Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Security Meeting be convened every year. It endorsed the proposals for streamlining the recruitment and assignment of field security officers and requested the Office of the United Nations Security Coordinator (UNSECOORD) to examine further the possibility of allowing implementing partners to execute a global arrangement for including staff within the UN security umbrella instead of on an individual duty-station basis. The meeting also recommended that, in situations where there was no law and order and it was not possible to sign a contract with a duly registered company providing licensed armed guards, alternative methods of providing security be considered, in consultation with UNSECOORD. With regard to locally recruited staff, care needed to be exercised to prevent the special measures designed to assist local staff from promoting the voluntary self-evacuation of large numbers of local staff and their families during a crisis. Instructions issued by one agency, programme or fund to provide assistance to its own staff should not be provided to staff of other organizations, unless so authorized by that agency, programme or fund concerned, to avoid problems for the latter. The meeting also recommended that agencies, programmes and funds instruct their representatives at the country level to share security-related information with the designated official and to participate fully in the activities of the security management team; a standardized system-wide security training programme be implemented as soon as possible using the UNSECOORD/Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees training package; methods of monitoring and evaluating officials responsible for security be developed; and that the International Civil Aviation Organization explore further the area of security-related implications for UN staff who were obliged to fly in aircraft whose safety standards might be unacceptable.

An informal working group of the Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Security met in New York from 5 to 7 June. The group made recommendations for the approval of ACC relating to security coordination at Headquarters and in the field, security management and preparedness, and the provision of adequate resources for security.

In October, ACC agreed [ACC/1996/20] that staff security should remain a standing issue on its agenda, with preparations being undertaken through the Ad Hoc Meeting on Security, which would be convened on an annual basis. In the intervals between meetings, informal working groups would be convened to resolve security issues. ACC shared the concern that that priority be given to providing adequate resources to ensure effective security arrangements at the inter-agency level, especially in the field.

UN premises and property

Addis Ababa and Bangkok conference facilities

In a December report [A/C.5/51/37] to the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General stated that substantial completion and handover of the project for the construction of additional conference facilities at the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, had been achieved on 21 and 22 April, respectively. As at 31 August, disbursements amounted to $98,970,026. Preliminary estimates indicated that the final project cost would amount to $114,213,588, an increase of $6,636,688 above the approved level of the project of $107,576,900.

The conference centre in Bangkok, Thailand, inaugurated in 1993, was the site of 156 major meetings in the first six months of 1996. In 1995, the revised estimated cost of the project was $48,540,000. It was expected that there would be additional charges against the project for minor retrofit of the main vehicular entrance and final finishes before the exact total project cost could be known. However, it was anticipated that the cost would be within the level approved by the General Assembly.

UN Gift Centre

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in July a report [A/50/1004] of the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services on the investigation of alleged misappropriation of UN assets at the UN Gift Centre. The review, which concerned the operation of the Centre from 1 January 1992 to 30 June 1994, was conducted following a report that mismanagement by the General Manager had resulted in the misappropriation of UN assets at the Centre and in a decrease of its profits. Irregularities in the internal controls of the Centre had also been recorded by the External Auditors and the Audit and Management Consulting Division of OIOS in the form of audit observations.

The capital, assets and revenue of the Centre were owned by the United Nations, while personnel were provided under a labour contract with Ogden Allied Building and Airport Services Inc. (Ogden). That contract expired on 14 February 1995, and since then it had been renewed on a month-to-month basis pending further review of the Centre's operation by the Commercial Activities Service, Office of Conference and Support Services, which had been responsible for the operations of the Gift Centre since 1993. OIOS reported that because of inadequate, missing or non-existent documentation of Gift Centre activities as managed by Ogden, it was not possible to confirm that either funds or other assets had been misappropriated, but neither had they been safeguarded. The United Nations had allowed deviations from its financial rules and from sound retail management practices by failing to monitor Ogden's management, which received substantially increased fees without being held to any industry standards. Serious doubts were created regarding the General Manager's competence and good faith to continue in that position because of his non-compliance with his duties as General Manager.

OIOS recommended that the Commercial Activities Service should request the replacement of the General Manager, whose duties and responsibilities should be segregated from those of other personnel; procedures established for the Gift Centre should be adhered to; a buying plan should be formulated to control the buying process and set limits to the quantities purchased; an adequate computer system should be purchased to meet the Centre's operational needs and provide the tools to monitor and handle Centre resources effectively and efficiently; monthly financial statements should be prepared and passed on to the Accounts Revenue Unit; attempts should be made to recover a $3,000 double payment to a vendor; controls should be implemented to secure the cash handling process; and there should be increased supervision of the Centre by the Commercial Activities Service. The majority of the recommendations had been implemented, except for the replacement of the Centre's General Manager, and the request for the formalization of a buying plan and investment in a computer system.

The Commercial Activities Service indicated that the Organization had the option to undertake the entire operation itself, identify and enter into contract with an experienced labour broker, or farm out the entire operation. It had requested bids from contractors to operate the Centre and pay the United Nations a rental fee plus a percentage of the receipts.

Management of facilities and artworks

The General Assembly, in decision 50/503 of 17 September, took note of the Secretary-General's 1995 report on facilities management [YUN 1995, p. 1457], and his note on the report of JIU entitled "Managing works of art in the United Nations" [YUN 1995, p. 1457].

UN Postal Administration

In 1996, the gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration (UNPA) from the sale of philatelic items both at Headquarters and at overseas offices totalled more than $11 million. Revenue from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes was retained by the United Nations. Under the terms of an agreement between the Organization and the United States, revenue from the sale of United States dollar-denominated stamps used for postage from Headquarters was reimbursed to the United States Postal Service. Similarly, postal agreements between the United Nations and the Governments of Switzerland and Austria required that revenue derived from the sale of Swiss franc-denominated stamps and Austrian schilling-denominated stamps for postage be reimbursed to the Swiss and Austrian postal authorities, respectively.

During the year, UNPA released six commemorative stamp issues, six definitive stamps, two souvenir cards and nine maximum cards.

The first set of three commemorative stamps was issued on 2 February to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the World Federation of United Nations Associations. A souvenir card accompanied the issue. Six definitive stamps were issued on the same day.

On 14 March, the fourth set of 12 stamps in UNPA's multi-year Endangered Species Series was released. Each year, 12 endangered species of fauna or flora are featured on stamps to highlight the need for the protection of endangered species throughout the world. Three maximum cards accompanied the issue.

The United Nations issued three se-tenant strips of five stamps on 3 June on the theme City Summit (Habitat II) to commemorate the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII, and artwork on cover of dust-jacket).

Sport and the Environment was the theme of a set of six stamps and three souvenir sheets which were issued on 19 July to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the modern Olympic Games. Six maximum cards accompanied the issue.

On 17 September, UNPA issued a set of six stamps on the theme "A plea for peace" to draw attention to UNICEF's continuing commitment to assist children ravaged by war emergencies across the globe as well as UNICEF's work towards the goal of reducing child mortality, disease and illiteracy.

The fiftieth Anniversary of UNICEF was commemorated on 20 November by a set of six stamps created exclusively for the United Nations by the Walt Disney Company. A souvenir card was released on the same day.

The General Assembly in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1194, GAres.48/219B, 23 Dec. 1993] had resolved that direct expenses of UNPA, which were not provided for under the budget appropriations, should be charged against the income derived from its activities.

Intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations

Chapter I

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), established in 1957 to promote the peaceful uses of atomic energy, continued its efforts in 1996 to improve the impact and efficiency of its activities, which dealt with nuclear power, waste management, nuclear and radiation safety, international safeguards, and the use of nuclear techniques to improve human health, food supply and environmental protection.

The fortieth session of the IAEA General Conference (Vienna, 16-21 September) adopted resolutions to strengthen international safeguards and global cooperation in the areas of nuclear safety and technical assistance. The Conference also addressed nuclear inspections in Iraq, implementation of IAEA safeguards in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) and in the Middle East, establishment of an African nuclear-weapon-free zone, prevention of illicit trafficking in nuclear materials, nuclear desalination of sea water to produce potable water, and nuclear techniques for water resources management. The African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Pelindaba), aimed at establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the continent, was signed in Cairo, Egypt, in April. The Treaty entrusted IAEA with the task of verifying compliance with the peaceful use undertakings of the signatories (see PART ONE, Chapter VII).

In 1996, IAEA membership increased to 124, with the admission of Georgia.

Nuclear safety

The Agency's nuclear safety efforts concentrated in 1996 on supporting intergovernmental action to strengthen nuclear safety worldwide through the exchange of information, development of common safety standards, provision of expert services, and support for coordinated research.

The 1994 Convention on Nuclear Safety entered into force on 24 October 1996. The Convention, which binds countries to basic principles covering the regulation, management and operation of land-based civil nuclear power plants, lays down a number of fundamental safety principles and establishes a procedure under which parties must report on the safety of nuclear power plants on their territory, for review by the contracting parties. By the end of the year, 65 countries had signed the Convention and 32 had ratified it.

Negotiations on a convention covering the safety of spent fuel and waste management continued during the sixth session (Pilansberg, South Africa, November) of an open-ended group of legal and technical experts.

During the year, the Operational Safety Review Team undertook 11 missions to assess nuclear power plants in Bulgaria, China, France (2), Mexico, Pakistan, Slovakia (2), Switzerland, Ukraine (2). Assessment of Safety Significant Events Teams carried out seven training seminars (China, Finland, Russian Federation, Slovakia, Slovenia, Switzerland, Ukraine) and four peer reviews (Czech Republic, Russian Federation, Slovenia, Sweden).

Preparations were made to launch an Incident Reporting System for Research Reactors to promote the exchange of experience on the safety of some 270 such reactors in operation worldwide. Safety-related advisory missions visited research reactors in Colombia, Egypt, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand and Zaire.

During the year, 59 countries provided information on 66 incidents—3 of which were classified as serious—to the International Nuclear Event Scale (INES), a seven-level classification tool which identifies and ranks the severity of nuclear incidents and accidents.

Nuclear power

The IAEA nuclear power programme in 1996 emphasized information exchange and provision of technical assistance in the field of nuclear power plant planning and implementation. The Agency's sixteenth Fusion Energy Conference, held in Montreal, Canada, reviewed the status of research and of recent progress in relation to various fusion reactor concepts. The Power Reactor Information System database was made available on the Internet, providing easier access to that information resource for the statistical analysis of nuclear power plant performance indicators. In 1996, the database was accessed by 280 users in 54 member States and eight international organizations, representing a growth of 25 per cent over 1995.

During the year, technical assistance was provided to Belarus, Brazil, Colombia, Pakistan, Peru, Poland and Romania to assess the role of nuclear power in the future expansion of electrical supply systems. Assistance was also given to Albania, Armenia, Estonia, Iran, Latvia, Lithuania, the Republic of Moldova, Slovakia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, and Viet Nam for projects on energy, electricity and nuclear power planning. In addition, technical support continued to be provided to Indonesia on various aspects of nuclear power.

The Agency's main activities with regard to small and medium-size reactors (SMRs) in 1996 included a second Advisory Group Meeting (Tunis, Tunisia, September) on the status and introduction of SMRs in developing countries. The overall market for SMRs was estimated at about 70-80 units, to be implemented up to the year 2015. About one third of SMRs were expected to supply heat or electricity or both to integrated sea water desalination plants.

Nuclear fuel cycle

After falling nearly 50 per cent from 1988 to 1994, world uranium production totalled 34,000 tonnes, representing the first increase in production since 1988. Worldwide power reactor requirements were estimated at about 62,000 tonnes per year, which was some 28,000 tonnes greater than world uranium production. While 55 per cent of the demand was met by production, the balance was filled by inventory drawdowns. Some 90 per cent of world uranium production was supplied by Australia, Canada, France, Kazakhstan, Namibia, the Niger, the Russian Federation, South Africa, the United States and Uzbekistan.

During 1996, IAEA carried out several comprehensive studies related to the nuclear fuel cycle. It also published the first global edition of a report known as the "Red Book", with information on uranium resources, production and demand in 54 countries.

At a technical meeting held in Vienna, experts from 30 countries discussed the application of geoscientific research to such problems as the high concentration of radio-elements in some buildings and the rapid detection of isotopes resulting from nuclear power plant failures.

Radioactive waste management

The Agency's 1996 programme on radioactive waste management focused on the establishment of international principles and standards for the safe management of wastes; preparations for a convention on the safe management of radioactive waste; development of infrastructures and tools for strengthening and solving waste management problems in developing member States; and assessing waste management situations and needs as a consequence of past practices. New advisory committees were established to deal with Agency activities related to waste technology and safety.

Progress was made with regard to providing guidance on waste minimization methods applicable at different nuclear facilities. A three-year assessment study of the radiological impact of high-level radioactive waste dumping in the Arctic seas was completed. A Global Marine Radioactivity Database (GLOMARD) was established to provide member States with information on radioactivity baselines and records for radiological assessments and international and national monitoring programmes.

Environment

The Agency's activities related to sustainable energy programmes sought to merge health, environmental, technical and economic factors into planning and decision-making for the electricity sector, since all fuel chains for electricity generation involved some health risks and involved certain environmental consequences.

IAEA continued to contribute to the work of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, providing information on the potential role of nuclear power in reducing global greenhouse gas emissions from the energy sector. In that connection, two advisory group meetings were held in 1996—on greenhouse gas emissions from hydro-power, and on wind and solar technologies.

The IAEA/United Nations Environment Programme/United Nations Industrial Development Organization/World Health Organization project on risk management in large industrial areas was completed. Two documents were prepared, providing risk classification and guidelines for integrated risk assessments and management. The Agency carried out radiological assessments of nuclear test sites. An assessment of the Semipalatinsk site in Kazakhstan, where nuclear weapons had been tested for years, provided assurance that radiation levels in surrounding villages were very low. An assessment was carried out of the radiological situation on Bikini atoll in the Marshall Islands, and a study was initiated on conditions at the Mururoa and Fangataufa atolls in French Polynesia.

Food and agriculture

In 1996, technologies developed through the Agency's food and agriculture programme, operated jointly with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), were increasingly applied to improve food security and assist member States in meeting international agricultural standards. Examples included the use of mutation breeding and biotechnology to support crop improvement and biodiversity under the Leipzig Declaration on Plant Genetic Resources, as well as the increasing use of FAO/IAEA-developed diagnostic tests, the sterile-insect technique, and food irradiation to assist member States to meet international standards.

Through plant breeding and genetics projects, including the use of induced mutations, promising results were obtained to help improve basic food crops in Africa. To determine ways of increasing livestock productivity, radio-immunoassay laboratories for animal steroid hormone determinations were established in more than 60 countries. Insect and pest control activities included a model project for applying the sterile-insect technique to eradicate the tsetse fly from the island of Zanzibar, United Republic of Tanzania, where the last wild fly was captured in September 1996. As a result, trypanosomiasis in cattle declined rapidly, reaching the lowest levels recorded since routine blood sampling was established. Other IAEA projects aimed at finding nuclear techniques for preserving food and reducing the impact of agrochemicals and residues.

Physical and chemical sciences

Agency activities in the physical and chemical sciences involved the applications of nuclear and atomic data, nuclear instrumentation, utilization of research reactors and low-energy accelerators for a variety of applications, and radiochemical applications relevant to nuclear medicine and industry.

During 1996, the availability of nuclear and atomic data libraries for users worldwide was enhanced through the introduction of an Internet interface. New projects concerned nuclear instrumentation and the application of the X-ray fluorescence technique. The main focus of radiochemical applications was on the development of new radiopharmaceuticals for the diagnosis of neurological disorders.

IAEA's Analytical Quality Control Service continued efforts to improve the accuracy of analytical and radiometric measurements in member States' laboratories, to ensure the international acceptance of such measurements.

Human health

Activities in the area of human health concentrated on applications of nuclear and radiation techniques, especially those suitable for the diagnosis and treatment of diseases prevalent in developing countries. Also emphasized were aspects of preventive medicine, such as early detection of neonatal hypothyroidism, hepatitis and other communicable diseases, evaluation of nutritional deficiencies in children and pregnant women, and diagnosis of common hereditary diseases. Agency work on the use of in vitro radio-nuclide methods to diagnose diseases yielded significant results: over 1.5 million newborn babies were screened for neonatal hypothyroidism in 14 Latin American countries; 650 were found to be suffering from the disease, enabling prompt and effective treatment. About 150,000 people in 10 Asian countries, mostly from high-risk groups such as pregnant women and blood donors, were screened for hepatitis B.

Activities aimed at reducing the cost of nuclear medicine practices in developing countries continued. Coordinated research programmes and new regional radiotherapy projects focused on improving cure rates of cancer of the cervix.

To establish a link to the International Measurement System, the Agency's laboratories in Seibersdorf, Austria, calibrated 18 reference ionization chambers and dosimeters for 12 laboratories. A total of 27 ionization chambers had been calibrated.

The Agency greatly expanded its work in the area of micronutrient malnutrition, with attention directed to the use of isotopic techniques to identify populations at risk and to monitor and improve the effectiveness of dietary intervention programmes.

Technical cooperation

To improve the overall efficiency and effectiveness of the technical cooperation programme, greater attention was paid to pre-project preparation. During 1996, the Agency continued to improve guidance and training in project planning and formulation, along with related actions to automate and streamline project implementation in order to facilitate staff redeployment in support of pre-project activities. Efforts to streamline and simplify operations and improve management were aided by the introduction of new information systems and technology.

An additional 36 model projects were approved. One of the largest-ever technical cooperation projects, aimed at upgrading radiation safety infrastructures in developing countries, progressed significantly; by year's end, more than 90 per cent of the participating countries had endorsed their safety action plans. The project, covering some 50 countries, would bring national laws and regulations in line with international safety standards. In 1996, technical cooperation resources amounted to $63.3 million.

Agency safeguards responsibilities

During 1996, 2,476 safeguards inspections were performed, compared with 2,285 inspections in 1995. IAEA continued to monitor and verify Iraq's compliance with relevant Security Council resolutions through the resident inspectors of the Nuclear Monitoring Group. During the year, IAEA resident inspectors conducted 354 inspections at some 107 facilities in Iraq, 34 of which were inspected for the first time. No instances of activities, equipment or materials proscribed by the relevant Security Council resolutions were detected (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

The Agency maintained a continuous presence of inspectors in the DPRK and continued to monitor the freeze on the DPRK's graphite moderated reactors and related facilities. While the safeguards agreement between the DPRK and IAEA remained in force, the Agency was still unable to conclude that there had been no diversion of nuclear material in the country (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

As at 31 December 1996, 214 safeguards agreements were in force with 131 States, compared with 207 agreements with 125 States at the end of 1995. Safeguards agreements pursuant to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) [GA res. 2373(XXII)] entered into force with Dominica and Saint Kitts and Nevis in May and with Monaco in June. Safeguards agreements pursuant to NPT and the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) [YUN 1967, p. 13] entered into force with Grenada in July, with Barbados in August and with Antigua and Barbuda in September.

Safeguards agreements were in force with 115 States pursuant to NPT as at 31 December 1996. For 64 non-nuclear-weapon States party to NPT, there were no safeguards agreements in force; safeguards were being applied in four of the five States with significant nuclear activities.

NPT safeguards agreements were in force with all 11 signatories of the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Rarotonga Treaty); safeguards were applied in one of those States (Australia). Safeguards agreements pursuant to the Treaty of Tlatelolco were in force with 23 States. Safeguards agreements pursuant to Additional Protocol I of the Treaty of Tlatelolco were in force with two States with territories in the zone of application of the Treaty (Netherlands and the United States).

In September 1996, a trilateral initiative between the Agency, the Russian Federation and the United States was launched related to verification of fissile material from nuclear weapons. In November, a trilateral visit took place to sites in the United States at which fissile material excess to United States defence requirements was under Agency safeguards. The General Conference in 1996 requested the Director General to continue consultation with States in the Middle East to facilitate the early application of full-scope IAEA safeguards to all nuclear activities in the region, as a necessary step towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone.

Nuclear information

During 1996, the range of information available on the Agency's publicly accessible Internet site was significantly expanded with the addition of information circulars, the IAEA publications catalogue, new booklets on radiation safety, IAEA activities in the field of nutrition, and status reports on international conventions and treaties.

There were 99 States and 17 international organizations participating in the International Nuclear Information System (INIS) by the end of 1996. A total of 80,516 records of published literature were added to the INIS database, bringing the total number of records available to 1,936,722. In addition, IAEA published more than 170 books, reports, journal issues or booklets in English, as well as two publications in Chinese, eight in French, seven in Russian and seven in Spanish.

Secretariat

At the end of 1996, the IAEA secretariat had 2,202 staff members, including 906 in the Professional and higher categories and 1,296 in the General Service category. Ninety nationalities were represented in posts subject to geographical distribution.

Budget

The regular budget for 1996 amounted to $256.4 million, of which $246.2 million was to be financed from contributions by member States on the basis of the 1996 scale of assessment, $7.4 million from income from reimbursable work for others and $2.8 million from other miscellaneous income. Actual expenditures from the regular budget amounted to some $250 million, of which $243 million was related to the Agency's programmes. The unused budget from Agency programmes amounted to $5.9 million. A total of $29.3 million in extrabudgetary funds was provided by member States, the United Nations, international organizations and other sources.

The target for voluntary contributions to the Technical Cooperation Fund for 1996 was established at $64.5 million, of which $50.5 million was pledged by member States.

Chapter II

International Labour Organization (ILO)

In 1996, the International Labour Organization (ILO) continued to promote social justice and economic stability and to improve labour conditions. Established in 1919 as an autonomous institution associated with the League of Nations, ILO has three primary objectives: promoting democracy and human rights; fighting unemployment and poverty; and ensuring equality and adequate protection for all categories of workers.

ILO membership in 1996 increased to 174, with the admission of Saint Kitts and Nevis.

Meetings

The eighty-third session of the International Labour Conference (Geneva, 4-20 June) considered the annual report of the ILO Governing Body and the report of the Director-General. The Conference adopted a resolution on the elimination of child labour, as well as a new international convention on home work, which calls for the adoption of national policies aimed at improving the situation of home workers. General discussions were held on employment policies in a global context and on tripartite (Government/employer/worker) consultations at the national level on economic and social policy. An informal meeting of labour ministers at the Conference addressed the problem of child labour.

The eighty-fourth (maritime) session of the Conference (Geneva, 8-22 October) adopted three conventions and nine other international instruments pertaining to the working and living conditions of seafarers.

The following sectoral and other meetings were convened during 1996 in Geneva: the Tripartite Meeting on Social and Labour Issues concerning Migrant Workers in the Construction Industry (4-8 March); the Joint Meeting on the Impact of Structural Adjustment on Educational Personnel (22-26 April); the Tripartite Meeting on Social and Labour Problems caused by Structural Adjustments in the Port Industry (20-24 May); the Tripartite Meeting on Improving the Conditions of Employment and Work of Agricultural Wage Workers in the Context of Economic Restructuring (23-27 September); the Meeting of Experts on Workers' Privacy (1-7 October); the Tripartite Meeting on the Globalization of the Footwear, Textiles and Clothing Industries: Effects on Employment and Working Conditions (28 October-1 November); and the Enterprise Forum (7-21 November).

International standards

ILO activities concerning Conventions and Recommendations during 1996 included standard-setting and the supervision and promotion of the application of standards. Supervisory bodies engaged in a review of existing procedures and standard-setting policy, coinciding with the implementation of simplified reporting on ratified Conventions.

Standard-setting

In June 1996, the International Labour Conference adopted the Home Work Convention (No. 177) and Recommendation (No. 184) aimed at improving the situation of home workers. In October, it adopted the Labour Inspection (Seafarers) Convention (No. 178) and Recommendation (No. 185), the Recruitment and Placement of Seafarers Convention (No. 179) and Recommendation (No. 186), the Seafarers' Hours of Work and the Manning of Ships Convention (No. 180) and Recommendation (No. 187), and an optional Protocol to the 1976 Merchant Shipping (Minimum Standards) Convention (No. 147).

During the year, 65 ratifications of ILO Conventions by 33 member States were registered, resulting in the further increase of total ratifications of many important instruments, including those on basic human rights (freedom of association, discrimination, forced labour and child labour) and other issues, such as labour inspection, tripartite consultation and employment policy.

Supervision of standards

The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, at its sixty-seventh session (Geneva, 28 November-13 December), dealt with a total of 245 observations from employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee noted 25 instances in which Governments changed their law and practice to conform with ratified Conventions, following the Committee's earlier comments.

The Committee carried out a general survey on the application by member States of selected international labour standards. The survey at the 1996 session dealt with reports submitted by States which had not ratified the 1978 Labour Administration Convention (No. 150) and Recommendation (No. 158) [YUN 1978, p. 1083].

The Governing Body Committee on Freedom of Association met three times in 1996 to examine complaints of violations of freedom of association received from employers' and workers' organizations.

Promotion

Specialists on international labour standards were included on multidisciplinary teams set up in various developing regions to help Governments and employers' and workers' organizations with standard-setting and supervisory procedures and to assist in the integration of standards into ILO operational activities.

Employment and development

In 1996, ILO published World Employment 1996/97, the second of a new series of ILO reports offering an international perspective on current employment issues. The report concluded that the concept of full employment, updated to reflect changing labour market structures and to include a qualitative dimension, was still a viable policy objective.

As a follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113], a number of country employment policy reviews were carried out under the auspices of ILO and other UN organizations, and a synthesis report was prepared by ILO.

ILO's analytical and technical advisory activities focused on labour market policies, training policies and systems, the protection of international labour migrants and the rehabilitation of workers exposed to disability and drug and alcohol abuse.

Working environment

The Meeting of Experts on Workers' Privacy (Geneva, October) adopted a Code of Practice on the Protection of Workers' Personal Data, which contained specific provisions regarding the collection, security, storage, use and communication of such data, as well as guidance on individual and collective rights and the role of employment agencies.

During the year, a series of stress-prevention studies in different occupations—air traffic control, oil and gas exploration, nursing, blue-collar workers in assembly-line production, and bus drivers—was published. Studies on trade unions and child labour and on quality of work and performance in flexible organizations were also completed. Within the framework of technical cooperation activities in Asia, Latin America and Africa, training workshops and materials focused on improving conditions of work and productivity in small and medium-sized enterprises.

ILO's International Programme for the Elimination of Child Labour was implementing more than 700 projects on child labour in more than 40 countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America. Programme activities concentrated on building and strengthening national capacities and resources.

During the year, ILO launched an Action Programme on Safety in the Use of Chemicals at Work and began preparatory work on a major international conference on dust-related diseases. ILO publications produced in 1996 included six issues of the bulletin Safety and Health at Work, a modular training package entitled Your Health and Safety at Work, a code of practice on the recording and notification of occupational accidents and diseases, an updated code of practice on accident prevention on board ships, and Ergonomic Checkpoints, a manual of ideas to improve conditions in the workplace.

Field activities

In 1996, expenditure on operational activities, under all sources of funding, totalled $98.2 million, representing a 13 per cent decrease from the 1995 expenditure of $112.9 million. The three leading programmes in terms of annual expenditure were in enterprise and cooperative development ($23.3 million), development policies ($22.8 million) and employment and training ($18.6 million). Another significant programme dealt with working conditions and environment ($11.6 million), which included the International Programme for the Elimination of Child Labour. Interregional and global activities accounted for $17.8 million. In terms of regional distribution, Africa accounted for over 37 per cent of total expenditure ($36.7 million), Asia and the Pacific for 25 per cent (nearly $25 million), and Latin America and the Caribbean for 10 per cent (more than $10 million). Expenditure in Europe decreased from $8.8 million in 1995 to $6 million in 1996, and the Arab States programme remained at $2.6 million.

Educational activities

The ILO International Institute for Labour Studies continued to undertake research, policy forums, courses, seminars and other activities on emerging issues of concern to ILO, particularly related to the interaction between labour institutions, development and civil society in a global economy. The Institute examined labour institutions in the context of global production and market systems and, through a series of meetings, brought project findings on the patterns and causes of social exclusion to the attention of policy makers, practitioners and academics. Research continued on the strategic behaviour of enterprises in order to map the labour policy options available to countries wishing to enter or to expand in international markets. A new project was begun to identify the market preconditions that would enable developing countries to move to higher value-added production with improved labour and working conditions. Educational activities focused on capacity-building among ILO's tripartite constituents.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1996, the total number of full-time staff under permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments at ILO headquarters and elsewhere was 2,286. Of those, 925 were in the Professional or higher categories and 1,361 were in the General Service or Maintenance categories. Of the Professional staff, 270 were assigned to technical cooperation projects.

Budget

In June 1995, the International Labour Conference adopted a budget of $579.5 million for the 1996-1997 biennium.

Chapter III

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

In 1996, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), which was established in 1945, continued to work towards improving the nutrition, agricultural productivity and living standards of rural populations by assisting farmers, fishermen and foresters to produce more food using techniques that did not degrade the environment. FAO's primary objective remained the achievement of global food security, a situation where everyone would have access at all times to the food needed for an active and healthy life. Among its major activities, FAO provided early warning of potential food shortages, whether due to man-made or natural disasters, and brought food insecurity and nutrition problems to world attention through conferences, meetings and information campaigns.

During the year, FAO membership remained at 174 nations in addition to the European Community as a member organization.

FAO hosted the World Food Summit in Rome, Italy, from 13 to 17 November 1996, bringing together world leaders from 186 countries, including 41 presidents and 41 prime ministers. It was the first major gathering to discuss the problem of hunger since the 1974 World Food Conference [YUN 1974, p. 488]. Participants approved the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and a Plan of Action aimed at reducing undernutrition, afflicting some 840 million people worldwide, by at least half by 2015. The Plan of Action called for national commitments and international cooperation for collective solutions to global food security issues. (See also pp. 1129-31.)

World food situation

In 1996, global food production expanded by just 2.6 per cent, according to preliminary estimates, similar to the stagnating rate recorded in 1995. However, world production of staple foods increased appreciably in 1996 compared with disappointing crop harvests in several regions the preceding year. As a result, the global supply situation improved, prices fell and aggregate cereal carryover stocks were expected to increase modestly for the first time in four years. Despite the positive developments, food shortages continued to grip a number of low-income food-deficit countries, especially in sub-Saharan Africa and in some Asian countries, mainly due to civil unrest and unfavourable weather conditions.

As the only comprehensive international source of data and analysis of food supply situations worldwide, FAO's Global Information and Early Warning System (GIEWS) continued to provide early warnings of imminent food crises to ensure timely interventions in countries affected by natural and/or man-made disasters. In 1996, the System carried out a total of 30 crop- and food-assessment missions and participated in several inter-agency missions. Monitoring of the food situation in the countries of Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union was intensified, while GIEWS continued to monitor intensively the food situation in several parts of Africa, including the Great Lakes region, the Horn of Africa, Angola, Liberia, Mozambique and Sierra Leone. FAO undertook, jointly with the World Food Programme, a number of crop- and food supply-assessment missions in response to a worsening food supply situation in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. As a result, a joint one-year emergency operation amounting to some $25.9 million was initiated to benefit about 4.7 million people. In all, there were 27 countries worldwide facing food emergencies by the end of 1996, of which 13 were in sub-Saharan Africa.

Activities

Emergency assistance

The FAO Special Relief Operations Service approved 58 new projects in 31 countries during 1996, for a total of $26,269,188, of which 5 per cent was for countries in Latin America and the Caribbean, 7 per cent for Asia and the Pacific, 18 per cent for the Near East, 26 per cent for Africa and 44 per cent for Europe.

International appeals for $94.5 million were issued for emergency agriculture and livestock assistance to Angola, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, the Central African Republic, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Dominica/Antigua/Saint Kitts and Nevis, Ethiopia, the Great Lakes region and eastern Zaire, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Sudan and Tajikistan.

FAO's major activities in 1996 were in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Iraq and the Great Lakes region (Burundi and Rwanda). In addition to the delivery of agricultural inputs such as seed, fertilizer and hoes, FAO provided emergency assistance to the agricultural sector by sending emergency coordinators to Angola, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Iraq, Liberia, Rwanda, Sierra Leone and Somalia.

Field programmes

In 1996, FAO provided technical assistance and support through 1,850 field projects, totalling $240.4 million, in all areas of food and agriculture, fisheries, forestry and rural development. They were financed through trust funds provided by donor countries and other international sources ($158 million), the United Nations Development Programme ($43.4 million), and the Technical Cooperation Programme under FAO's regular budget ($36.2 million).

During the year, international financing institutions approved some $1.5 billion in funding for 41 agricultural and rural development projects, prepared with the assistance of FAO's Investment Centre. Total investments in those projects, including contributions from recipient Governments, amounted to $2.5 billion.

Crops

Seeking to ensure that agricultural production met expanding human needs, FAO continued in 1996 a range of activities related to the conservation and use of plant biological diversity, crop management and diversification, seed production and improvement, crop protection, agricultural engineering, and food and agricultural industries. FAO's Integrated Pest Management programmes emphasized biological control methods and sought to introduce responsible limits to pesticide use. The Special Programme for Food Security continued to grow, with programmes designed to increase food production and productivity under way in 15 countries. The Programme promoted widespread adoption by farmers of improved production technologies, with emphasis on high-potential areas.

Also during the year, FAO's Emergency Prevention System for Transboundary Animal and Plant Pests and Diseases (EMPRES) continued efforts to protect crops and livestock, concentrating on desert locust and rinderpest, a fatal disease occurring in livestock. Progress was made in improving the exchange of information among locust-affected countries, in detecting important locust infestations at an earlier stage, and in strengthening the capacity of locust-control services to react quickly and effectively. Desert locust outbreaks in Eritrea, Saudi Arabia and the Sudan were brought under control in late 1995 and early 1996.

Livestock

FAO's ongoing livestock activities addressed the improvement of feed resources and feeding systems, animal health, genetic resources and production systems, including both the meat and dairy sectors.

Sustainable feeding systems were given high priority in 1996. In semi-arid and arid zones, FAO focused on improving fodder conservation, fodder trees and grazing systems; and in humid and sub-humid regions, on providing high-quality feed from nitrogen-fixing legumes adapted to local means of production. Through an integrated programme of livestock, agriculture and forestry projects, FAO was spearheading the development of sustainable farm settlements in areas of the Volta basin recently freed of "river blindness" (onchocerciasis).

In July, experts attending a technical consultation in Rome adopted a blueprint for the global eradication of rinderpest by 2010. It was confirmed that control efforts had succeeded in clearing the disease from Egypt, the Gambia, Guinea, Togo and most of India.

Fisheries

In June 1996, FAO established EASTFISH, the first fish marketing and information service designed to assist Central and Eastern European countries. Based in Copenhagen, the $3.5 million Danish Government-funded project was to assist those countries with the complex problems of fishing industries in transition as they competed with Western and developing-world fisheries. EASTFISH was to provide a source for marketing information, as well as managerial expertise in business procedures, in price and cost calculations, and in the preparation of investment proposals, feasibility studies and business plans.

Food standards and nutrition

During the year, FAO continued efforts to promote better nutrition by providing member countries with advice, information and technical assistance in three broad areas: formulation and implementation of national food policies and nutrition programmes; provision of technical and legislative advice on measures to ensure the quality and safety of food supplies; and assessment and monitoring of nutrition situations, including monitoring the effects of food and agricultural policies and development activities on nutrition. FAO also promoted community-level action programmes to analyse and deal with the causes of malnutrition.

FAO jointly organized the First World Congress on Calcium and Vitamin D in Human Life, held in Rome in October. The Congress discussed ways to improve the intake of those nutrients among all population groups in order to promote proper growth during childhood and adolescence and reduce diseases such as osteoporosis, cancer and hypertension.

Natural resources

FAO continued activities aimed at achieving more productive and efficient utilization of the earth's natural resources to meet current and future food and agricultural needs on a sustainable basis. Natural resources projects focused on six main areas: natural resources assessment and planning; farming systems development; plant nutrition development and management; water development, management and conservation; soil management, conservation and reclamation; and sustaining natural resources potential. Major programmes included Integrated Plant Nutrition Systems, promoting the use of all available plant nutrients to achieve sustainable crop production and protect the environment, and Farming Systems Development, a holistic and participatory approach to improving the situation of farm households and rural communities.

Plant and animal genetic resources

In June 1996, participants in the Fourth International Technical Conference on Plant Genetic Resources, held in Leipzig, Germany, adopted the first Global Plan of Action for the conservation and better use of those plant genetic resources important to food and agriculture. The Plan addressed the increasing loss of plant genetic resources, critical to future breeding of more productive varieties or to improving resistance to pests.

Through its comprehensive five-year programme for the conservation and sustainable use of animal genetic resources, launched in 1992, FAO continued activities to identify and preserve endangered breeds, promote conservation programmes, improve livestock breeding capacities in the developing world and establish an international legal framework on global trade in animals and their germ plasm. The World Information and Early Warning System on Plant Genetic Resources, established in 1995, contained information on about 4.8 million germ plasm accessions held in some 1,220 gene banks or botanical gardens. A primary goal of the System was the as-essment of plant genetic resources erosion in seed collections and natural stands.

Commodities and trade

In 1996, FAO continued to assist countries to adjust trade regimes to conform with the new provisions of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations. In July, FAO convened the first International Consultation on Tropical Fruits, in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, to discuss current and future trends of that growing industry, which generated trade worth $1.3 billion in 1995. The Consultation was attended by 22 major producing and consuming countries.

Information

FAO continued to function as an information centre—collecting, analysing, interpreting and disseminating information through various media, including print, radio, television, video, film, photo displays and exhibitions. Materials produced included information booklets, technical documents, reference papers and reports of meetings, training manuals and audio-visuals.

Major regular periodicals included the annual State of Food and Agriculture, the FAO Quarterly Bulletin of Statistics, the annual Food and Agricultural Legislation, the forestry quarterly Unasylva, the quarterlies World Animal Review and Plant Protection Bulletin, and the annual Rural Development. FAO yearbooks were issued on rural development, trade, fertilizers, forest products, field projects, fishery statistics and animal health.

AGROSTAT PC, a user-friendly electronic version of FAO's statistical yearbooks, provided updated figures on all agriculture-related topics in six files: population, land use, production, trade, food balance sheets and forest products. Other important statistical information produced by FAO included the Fisheries Statistical Database, the Globefish Databank and Electronic Library, the Forest Resources Information System and the Geographic Information System. FAO compiled an extensive range of international databases, including AGRIS (the International Information System for the Agricultural Sciences and Technology) and CARIS (the Current Agricultural Research Information System). In addition, FAO operated the World Agricultural Information Centre (WAICENT), designed to improve access to agricultural data, particularly to external users, via the Internet, floppy disks and CD-ROMs.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1996, the number of staff employed at FAO headquarters was 2,437, of whom 919 were in the Professional or higher categories and 1,518 in the General Service category. Field project personnel and those in regional and country offices numbered 1,549. There were also 217 Associate Professional officers, paid for by their Governments, working at headquarters, regional or country offices and in the field. During 1996, FAO opened new subregional offices in Tunis, Tunisia, and Bridgetown, Barbados. The offices would assist the countries of the subregions to reinforce their agriculture sectors through expert advice on general policy, on strengthening institutions and on better use of human resources.

Budget

The FAO Conference in 1995 approved a working budget for the 1996-1997 biennium of $650 million. The largest appropriation was $299 million for technical and economic programmes, followed by $ 113 million for development services to member nations.

Chapter IV

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), which was established in 1946, continued in 1996 to promote cooperation among nations in education, science, culture and communication.

The UNESCO General Conference, which meets biennially to decide on policy, programme and budgetary matters, was scheduled to hold its twenty-ninth session in 1997. The Executive Board, consisting of members elected by the General Conference, held two sessions during 1996.

The membership of UNESCO increased to 185 in 1996, with the admission of Nauru.

Education

In 1996, UNESCO activities continued to promote the goal of education for all (EFA). The basic EFA programme focused on the expansion and diversification of the provision of basic education, so that the largest number of potential learners, especially girls and women and certain disadvantaged groups, was reached. UNESCO assisted member States in the construction and equipment of affordable educational buildings and libraries. Particular emphasis was placed on literacy and adult education. In cooperation with intergovernmental and non-governmental partners, UNESCO organized regional conferences and technical meetings to prepare for the fifth International Conference on Adult Education in 1997.

During the year, the report of the International Commission on Education for the Twenty-first Century—Learning: The Treasure Within—was published in five languages, and preparations were made for more than 20 other language versions. To give new impetus to the international movement launched at the 1990 Jomtien Conference on Education for All, the Mid-Decade Review Meeting on Education for All (Amman, Jordan, 16-19 June) adopted the Amman Affirmation.

Learning Without Frontiers, a global effort to rethink some of the basic assumptions and approaches underlying traditional education systems, undertook activities aimed at creatively constructing new learning systems that were more responsive to the diversity of learning needs, styles and cultures throughout the world.

UNESCO promoted the renovation and reform of education at all levels from the perspective of lifelong education, including secondary, technical and vocational education, teacher education and higher education. During the year, a broadened and integrated approach to science and technology education, encompassing concerns including the environment, health and nutrition, was adopted. Through a network of centres of the International Project on Technical and Vocational Education, training workshops and seminars were organized to facilitate, in particular, the access of girls and women to scientific, technical and vocational education.

In the area of preventive education against drug abuse and AIDS, activities focused on the foundation, by mobilizing education decision makers, of national action plans for integrating prevention issues into school curricula and teacher training. UNESCO activities in population and environment education focused on fostering integrated approaches in different regions.

Through the Associated Schools Project—a network encompassing 4,057 schools in 136 countries—emphasis was placed on creating a culture of peace and non-violence in educational institutions, and new practical teaching materials on tolerance and human rights were initiated. A 1991 initiative to foster inter-university cooperation (UNITWIN) had launched the UNITWIN/UNESCO chairs programme, comprising 186 established chairs and 36 inter-university networks, and linking higher education institutions and research centres in more than 90 member States.

UNESCO supported 40 countries in their efforts to elaborate educational policies and action plans, with particular attention to least developed countries. The emerging States of Central Asia and Eastern Europe received technical support and access to information useful for rebuilding their educational systems. Assistance for the education of refugees was expanded in all regions.

Sciences

In 1996, UNESCO's activities in the natural, social and human sciences, while retaining their identities, were brought together within a single major programme called "The sciences in the service of development". Its aim was to create a synergy between different disciplines in order to promote the advancement, transfer and sharing of knowledge and its application to development. Activities under the programme sought to heighten the relevance of university education and research and to foster cooperation in the collection and dissemination of scientific and technical information.

Natural sciences

UNESCO enhanced human resources development and capacity-building related to the natural sciences through fellowships, grants, workshops, seminars and production of training tools.

In 1996, UNESCO assumed administrative responsibility for the International Centre for Theoretical Physics (ICTP), which it operated together with the International Atomic Energy Agency, in Trieste, Italy. ICTP provided research opportunities and advanced training in physics and applied mathematics to some 2,000 scientists from developing countries. UNESCO and Iowa State University (United States) continued to support the International Institute of Theoretical and Applied Physics in Ames, Iowa, in training and research benefiting developing-country scientists. UNESCO, the International Organization for Chemical Sciences in Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued to carry out the international programme "Chemistry for life".

Through its Biotechnology Action Council and the global network of Microbial Resources Centres, UNESCO supported the training of young researchers. New Biotechnology Education and Training Centres were established in China, Hungary, Mexico, South Africa and Palestine.

During the year, UNESCO set up an International Scientific Advisory Board as an open-ended body to advise it on strategic issues of science, and on the service science offered for development and environmental protection. The second World Science Report, a biennial account of the state of science and technology worldwide, was published in English, French and Spanish. UNESCO sponsored seven conferences on the topic of university-industry cooperation, including the World Congress of Engineering Educators and Industry Leaders (Paris, 2-5 July), organized in cooperation with UNIDO.

The International Geological Correlation Programme (IGCP) continued to foster international cooperation in the earth sciences through 56 projects worldwide. Under the Man and the Biosphere Programme, emphasis was given to the World Network of Biosphere Reserves, comprising 337 sites in 85 countries, as a means for reconciling conservation of biological diversity with regional development. The Intergovernmental Council of the International Hydrological Programme (IHP), at its twelfth session (Paris, 23-28 September), reviewed the completion of the fourth phase of IHP (1990-1995), and considered the activities for its fifth phase (1996-2001).

UNESCO's Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission gave particular attention to preparations for the 1998 International Year of the Oceans; development of the Global Ocean Observing System, jointly with the World Meteorological Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme and the International Council of Scientific Unions; establishment of the Global Coral Reef Monitoring Network; implementation of the Harmful Algae Blooms programme; and strengthening of capacity-building activities in marine sciences, services and observations. Emphasis was also given to strengthening coastal zone activities, regional actions and data exchange.

The new transdisciplinary project on environment and development in coastal regions and small islands undertook cross-sectoral activities aimed at achieving environmentally sound, socially equitable and culturally appropriate development in those areas. UNESCO also organized the international academic conference "Ten Years after the Chernobyl Catastrophe" (Minsk, Belarus, 7-12 October) to assess scientific work carried out with regard to the ecological and social impacts of that nuclear accident.

Social and human sciences

UNESCO activities in the social and human sciences focused on the strengthening of research and training capacities, mainly through the establishment of UNESCO chairs, networks and mechanisms for inter-university cooperation. The international Management of Social Transformations (MOST) programme sought to improve the formulation of social development policies through social science research findings, focusing on data related to policy-making. MOST projects addressed population and migration, multicultural societies, participation of citizens in development efforts, and the revitalization of historic city centres, as well as improving conditions in rural and urban areas, combating social exclusion, and fostering the participation of young people in social and economic life.

The network of UNESCO chairs on human rights expanded to 25 throughout Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America. A series of expert meetings at the international, regional and national levels were organized to continue implementation of the recommendations of the UNESCO Advisory Committee on Education for Peace, Human Rights, Democracy, International Understanding and Tolerance, established in 1994.

UNESCO undertook public information campaigns aimed at encouraging more tolerant societies. In line with the follow-up programme of the United Nations Year for Tolerance (1995), it submitted in December to the General Assembly a Declaration of Principles and Follow-up Plan of Action to promote tolerance. The first two regional networks against intolerance, discrimination and violence were established in the Mediterranean and Black Sea region and in the Asia and Pacific region.

During the year, UNESCO became the lead agency for the Inter-Agency Working Group on Basic Education established by the Task Force on Basic Social Services for All, which met in Paris on 29 April. Cross-cultural comparative research on poverty was promoted in Asia and Africa through regional social sciences organizations. The UNITWIN/UNESCO chairs network on sustainable development and the social sciences was extended, with six new chairs (Hungary, Jordan, Kenya, Lebanon, Palestine and the Russian Federation). The INFOYOUTH network was also extended, holding its first training seminars for coordinators in Africa and Asia. UNESCO's International Bioethics Committee at its fourth session (Paris, 3-5 October) discussed the moral issues of genetic research and examined a draft universal declaration on the human genome.

Culture

UNESCO's cultural activities in 1996 continued to focus on integrating a cultural dimension into development policies and projects, protecting cultural heritage, and promoting cultural identities and intercultural dialogue. Activities implemented under the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997) aimed primarily at promoting culturally sensitive sustainable development through seminars, research and projects in the fields of culture and health; culture and the environment; cultural industries; investing in culture; and culture and tourism. The World Day for Cultural Development was marked by an International Conference on the theme "Culture and Health" (Chiang Mai, Thailand, 27-31 May), co-organized by UNESCO and the World Health Organization. The report of the World Commission on Culture and Development, Our Creative Diversity, was presented in October to the General Assembly.

A UNESCO Mayors for Peace Prize was created in recognition of actions by municipalities leading to social cohesion, the improvement of living standards, and the creation of an urban environment respectful of cultural diversity while fostering neighbourhood solidarity and active citizenship. The routes that linked cultures and civilizations throughout history and consequent interactions and impact on world culture were the focus of a series of projects to revive intercultural dialogue.

Activities aimed at safeguarding, revitalizing and enhancing sites, monuments and traditional forms of cultural expression continued, with emphasis placed on encouraging the application of relevant international standards, coordination of safeguarding operations and promotion of the ideals of heritage conservation, particularly among young people. Special attention was given to underwater archaeological heritage. In 1996, UNESCO's list of protected cultural and natural sites included 506 outstanding sites in 107 countries that were to be preserved as the heritage of all humankind. These had been selected by the World Heritage Committee on the basis of proposals made by 149 States parties to the 1972 Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage [YUN 1972, p. 759].

Meetings at UNESCO headquarters during 1996 included the International Forum on Communication and Copyright in the Information Society (March); the International Meeting of Book Promotion Networks (May), which created a new mechanism, INTERBOOK, for coordinating international cooperation in that field; an international round table on culture, tourism and development (June); and UNESCO's Intergovernmental Committee on the Return of Cultural Property, which at its biennial meeting (September) discussed new ways of combating illicit international traffic in cultural property. The Danube International Folklore Conference (Budapest and Kalocsa, Hungary, 6-10 July) adopted recommendations on safeguarding and developing traditional culture and folklore in Central and Eastern Europe. A new International Centre for the Promotion of Crafts was established in September 1996 in Fez, Morocco. A UNESCO prize for the promotion of the performing arts was awarded to the Tapiola Choir of Finland.

Communication

UNESCO continued to encourage and support the free flow of information and to help developing countries build up their communication, information and informatics capacities. A United Nations/UNESCO seminar on promoting independent and pluralistic Arab media (Sana'a, Yemen, January) adopted a declaration emphasizing the need for economic and legal support for media independence. The International Freedom of Expression Exchange network increased to 260 subscribers, individuals and media organizations. UNESCO's network of chairs in communication expanded to 15 in all regions of the world.

The International Programme for the Development of Communication held its sixteenth session (Paris, 22-26 January), approving $2.3 million in funding for 36 communication development projects. UNESCO hosted the Sixth Inter-Agency Round Table on Communication for Development (Harare, Zimbabwe, 2-5 September), with the participation of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Children's Fund, and the United Nations Population Fund. On the basis of the round-table report, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/172, which recognized the importance of participatory communication as a major development factor (see text, p. 1352).

UNESCO continued to provide support for regional information networks and the restoration and revival of selected major libraries, such as the Library of Alexandria in Egypt, the Bosnia and Herzegovina National and University Library in Sarajevo, and the Russian State Library. The UNESCO Network of Associated Libraries expanded to more than 300 libraries worldwide.

In 1996, UNESCO published 142 titles and produced 10 CD-ROMs. A new quarterly magazine, World Heritage Review, was published in English, French and Spanish. Also published in 1996 was an overview of the process of reforms begun in 1988 in programming and evaluation, management style and effectiveness, entitled UNESCO: The Will to Reform.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1996, UNESCO had a full-time staff of 2,405, of whom 1,016 were in the Professional or higher categories, drawn from 153 nationalities; 1,389 staff members were in the General Service category.

Budget

The General Conference of UNESCO, at its 1995 session, approved a budget of $518.4 million for the 1996-1997 biennium. The level of the Working Capital Fund was fixed at $25 million and the total assessment on member States after deducting miscellaneous income was $516.4 million.

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

Established in 1948 as the directing and coordinating authority on international health, the World Health Organization (WHO) in 1996 remained committed to the goal of "Health for all", representing, at a minimum, a level of health for all people, enabling them to work productively and to participate actively in the life of the community in which they live. WHO activities focused in particular on disease prevention and control; primary health care and nutrition; the health of specific population groups; health aspects of the environment, development and lifestyle; and support for health care, organization and management worldwide. Priorities for action included chronic conditions that were major causes of death or avoidable ill-health and disability.

The World Health Assembly, the governing body of WHO, at its forty-ninth session (Geneva, 20-25 May 1996), adopted 29 resolutions on, inter alia, malaria prevention and control; destruction of the smallpox virus; the WHO revised drug strategy; prevention and control of iodine deficiency disorders; infant and young child nutrition; strengthening nursing and midwifery; the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS; prevention of violence; assistance for health needs of the Arab population in the occupied Arab territories; and tobacco or health. The World Health Report 1996 focused on non-communicable chronic diseases.

As of 31 December 1996, WHO membership remained at 190 members and two associate members.

Health policy

The Global Strategy for Health for All by the Year 2000, founded on primary health care and adopted by the World Health Assembly in 1981, continued to provide the policy framework for WHO's work programme and for worldwide health activities. In 1996, country consultations took place regarding a policy on health for all for the twenty-first century, to be presented to the World Health Assembly in 1998. The year 1996 was the first in WHO's ninth general programme of work for 1996-2001, which had four interrelated policy orientations: integrating health and human development in public policies; ensuring equitable access to health services; promoting and protecting health; and preventing and controlling specific health problems.

In 1996, a WHO conference on health care reform in Europe (Ljubljana, Slovenia), attended by 45 countries, adopted the Ljubljana Charter, which emphasized developing health care systems governed by the principles of human dignity, equity, solidarity and professional ethics. Also during the year, the WHO Centre for Health Development opened in March in Kobe, Japan, with the objective of undertaking multisectoral research in support of health policy decisions. In addition, WHO provided support to more than 50 countries, covering all elements of national drug policies; formulated guidelines as a basis for globally recognized norms and standards related to biotechnology; and prepared documents and guidelines concerning national policy on and regulation of traditional medicine.

Chronic conditions

During 1996, WHO took action on a wide range of chronic diseases, which were responsible for the deaths of more than 24 million people each year, equal to almost half of all deaths worldwide. Through the INTERHEALTH project, WHO adopted an integrated approach to the prevention of common risk factors, such as genetic factors. Integrated programmes were set up in all regions, including the integrated non-communicable diseases intervention (CINDI) programme, comprising 24 countries in Europe; the integrated chronic disease prevention project known as CARMEN, in the Americas; and, in the western Pacific, two integrated prevention and control programmes in China, which stressed tobacco control and hypertension. A series of national training workshops for health workers in Fiji focused on methods and skills for reducing risk factors.

Cancer continued to be a major threat to health worldwide. During the year, more than 10 million people developed cancer, and at least 6 million people who already had the disease died from it. Among WHO efforts to combat cancer was a multinational study in China, Japan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Viet Nam which investigated workers' knowledge of cancer pain relief, with a view to developing an approach for training. Cancer pain relief methods were introduced in Fiji, Mongolia and Samoa. In order to prevent liver cancer, the Gambia and Zimbabwe were administering systematic immunization programmes against hepatitis B.

The 10-year-old, 26-country MONICA project continued to monitor trends and determinants of circulatory diseases. In 1996, WHO disseminated the first five-year trend data on risk factors and incidence of heart attacks and strokes. It also made available a set of protocols and a training manual for monitoring cardiovascular disease risk factors in developing countries, as well as guidelines for promoting physical activity as part of a prevention strategy. A variety of regional initiatives related to the prevention and control of circulatory and cardiovascular diseases were also undertaken.

WHO conducted a study to determine the worldwide prevalence of diabetes mellitus, and set up a computerized information system known as DIABCARE, which processed data provided by countries. Diabetes liaison offices were in place in all European member States; 46 per cent of countries had a national diabetes programme, 80 per cent had a national diabetes task force, and 85 per cent had a diabetes patient organization.

WHO published a landmark technical report on the control of hereditary diseases, and addressed other chronic conditions, including: asthma; arthritis; mental and neurological disorders; nicotine, alcohol and psychoactive drug dependence; blindness and deafness; and oral disease. Injury prevention and community-based rehabilitation were also promoted.

Health of specific populations

WHO continued to emphasize the concept of healthy ageing and stressed the need to avoid compartmentalizing older persons in "the elderly" category. It issued the first of a series of guidelines on the concept, which focused on active ageing. WHO also developed a conceptual framework for establishing priority areas for research on ageing and health worldwide. A joint conference with the United Nations, held at UN Headquarters in April, focused on the priority research topics of healthy ageing, policy development and ageing-related conditions. WHO also coordinated an international conference in July, sponsored by the Brazilian Government, which culminated in the Brasilia Declaration on Ageing. Among specific issues related to older populations, WHO activities during the year highlighted prevention of cataracts and early diagnosis of dementia.

Regarding the health of adults and women, WHO emphasized reproductive health and family planning programmes, as well as occupational health. It assisted countries in implementing national plans for safe motherhood, and maintained databanks on maternal mortality and other issues related to the health of women. Reports were issued in 1996 on an informal consultation on hookworm infection and anaemia in girls; on assessing and preventing iron deficiency; and on menopause in the 1990s. Draft guidelines were being prepared on the preclinical evaluation of and clinical trials on drugs being considered to combat osteoporosis. WHO held a consultation on violence against women, and the WHO Global Commission on Women's Health addressed that issue at its April meeting.

Programmes for adolescents, which included the global school health initiative for health promotion through schools, provided youth with support and opportunities to acquire accurate information, as well as access to health services and counselling. Jointly with the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), WHO developed a human resources roster for adolescent health, aimed at helping countries to identify and deploy people with expertise in all aspects of programme development and delivery. WHO also focused on activities to prevent rheumatic fever/rheumatic heart disease, which often resulted in significant chronic morbidity for schoolchildren and young adults. Nutrition in school feeding was emphasized, as was preventing substance abuse and providing access to reproductive health services for young people.

The WHO/UNICEF integrated management of childhood illness strategies continued to provide a systematic process for diagnosing and treating five conditions affecting children: diarrhoea, acute respiratory infections, malnutrition, measles and malaria, which together were responsible for some 70 per cent of all child deaths. WHO activities also resulted in some 500 million immunization contacts a year with children. By the end of 1996, more than 7,700 hospitals in 171 countries had been designated as "baby-friendly". In addition, support was channelled, particularly to the least developed countries, to prevent malnutrition, which caused more than half of child deaths in developing countries. WHO maintained a global database on child growth and malnutrition, and began work on the development of new standards as international reference values for the growth of children. The WHO global data bank on breastfeeding was updated with new definitions and indicators; other activities focused on the nutritional status of mothers during pregnancy.

Infectious diseases

WHO was one of six co-sponsors of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), which became operational on 1 January 1996 (see pp. 1121-1123). WHO action included providing epidemiological and technical support by maintaining the epidemiological surveillance and tracking of HIV/AIDS and sexually transmitted diseases. In the fight against tuberculosis, WHO continued to promote the adoption and implementation of the directly observed treatment short course, which was in use in some 80 States and had resulted in an increase in cure rates of up to 90 per cent in some countries. In addition to providing training and technical assistance for malaria prevention and control, WHO issued guidelines for malaria control among refugees and displaced populations. In January, a new African Programme for Onchocerciasis Control was started, covering 19 African countries where "river blindness" affected some 15 million people. WHO continued activities to eliminate leprosy, mobilizing resources, helping to define high-priority zones and collecting global information. In relation to the eradication of smallpox, the World Health Assembly recommended in 1996 that the world's remaining stocks of variola virus should be destroyed on 30 June 1999, with the smallpox vaccine seed virus maintained in the WHO collaborating centre on smallpox vaccine in Bilthoven, Netherlands. WHO also remained active in tropical disease research.

Health protection and promotion

WHO continued to encourage the adoption of healthy lifestyles by focusing on advocacy for health, empowerment of communities and design of media strategies for health. To achieve that goal, a five-year action plan intended to lead health promotion into the twenty-first century was launched. Safe food and good nutrition were promoted by a variety of WHO activities and publications. During the year, WHO also produced information on environmental health hazards, ranging from climate change to water supply. A project to provide national training for developing countries on toxic chemicals, environment and health was launched in 15 countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America.

Secretariat

At the end of 1996, WHO had a staff of 3,865, including 1,332 posts in the Professional and higher categories, and 2,533 in the General Service category.

Budget

The forty-eighth (1995) World Health Assembly adopted a budget of $842,654,000 for the 1996-1997 biennium.

Chapter VI

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), established in 1945, continued to promote economic and social progress in developing nations by helping to raise productivity. In 1996, poverty reduction and sustainable development remained the Bank's central objectives. Together with one of its affiliates, the International Development Association (IDA), the Bank provided loans to the developing world, as well as assistance in designing and implementing policies to expand markets and strengthen the economies of developing countries. Several initiatives were launched during the fiscal year 1996 (1 July 1995-30 June 1996) to strengthen the Bank's development effectiveness and to focus Bank efforts on client services.

In particular, the Bank's ability to respond quickly to the needs of its clients was being strengthened. For example, the Bank set up a $150 million Trust Fund for Bosnia and Herzegovina soon after the signing of the Peace Agreements in December 1995 (see PART ONE, Chapter V). A field office was opened in Sarajevo in early January 1996 to coordinate the Bank's reconstruction effort, and by the end of fiscal 1996, seven projects had been financed through the new Trust Fund. These addressed emergency needs in the areas of water, sanitation and solid waste urgent works; farm, transport, power and education reconstruction; and war victims rehabilitation.

The Debt-Reduction Facility continued to provide heavily indebted, low-income countries with grants to buy back their commercial debt at deep discounts. The Facility was financed by both the Bank's net income and contributions from donors. During 1996, the Facility advanced grants totalling $77 million to Albania, Ethiopia, Mauritania and Nicaragua, which, combined with $135 million in co-financing, extinguished a total of $1.7 billion in eligible principal debt.

The International Finance Corporation (IFC), another Bank affiliate, approved $3.2 billion for 264 projects during fiscal 1996 to stimulate private-sector investment in developing countries. The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA), the newest member of the World Bank Group, continued to encourage direct foreign investment in developing countries by protecting investors from non-commercial risk. The International Center for Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID), which with IBRD, IDA, IFC and MIGA forms the World Bank Group, since 1966 has mediated disagreements between Governments and private foreign investors.

At the end of fiscal 1996, World Bank membership increased to 180, with the admission of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Brunei Darussalam.

Lending operations

Gross disbursements by the Bank totalled $13.3 billion in fiscal 1996, an increase of 5.5 per cent over fiscal 1995. Bank commitments totalled $14.6 billion in 129 loans to 45 countries. The largest increase was in the Middle East and North Africa region, where 21 projects totalling $1.5 billion were approved, compared with 14 projects totalling $979 million in fiscal 1995. Lending volume also increased in Africa; the sharpest drop occurred in Latin America and the Caribbean.

The three largest borrowers of Bank funds were China ($2.4 billion), the Russian Federation ($1.8 billion) and Argentina ($1.5 billion). Two projects in the West Bank and Gaza, totalling $60 million, were funded from the Trust Fund for Gaza. Lending for electric power projects ($3.2 billion) led all sectors by volume, followed by transportation ($2.7 billion) and agriculture ($2.5 billion).

Lending for human capital development was one of the fastest growth areas of Bank activities during the 1990s, increasing more than fivefold since the early 1980s. Loans totalling $35 billion had been extended to more than 100 countries for education, health, population and nutrition programmes; the first loan in support of human capital development was approved in 1962. Lending for such programmes increased to 18 per cent of total Bank lending in the five-year period from fiscal 1992 to 1996. Average yearly lending amounts during that period totalled more than $4 billion. Human capital development lending was also a central component of the Bank's poverty reduction strategy, along with broad-based growth and safety nets. Assistance to the poorest countries—those with a per capita gross national product of $765 or less (in terms of 1995 United States dollars)—totalled $9.8 billion. Some 32 per cent of total Bank investment during the year was directly targeted to the poor, the same as in fiscal 1995.

In fiscal 1996, the Bank mounted a diverse programme of assistance to continue its support of private-sector development in member countries. More than $5.6 billion in funds was provided through 51 projects in the financial, power, telecommunications/information/technology, oil and gas, and industry and mining sectors, supporting the structural changes needed to attract private funding to productive enterprises. Operations were designed in many cases to leverage substantial private capital flows. Lending in the financial sector supported banking reform in Argentina, Ghana, India, Moldova, Morocco, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Viet Nam.

Demand was increasing for Bank assistance to mitigate the economic, social and environmental consequences of the degradation and depletion of natural resources. Priority concerns included urban growth, increasing motorization, and a recent lack of attention to rural development, as well as the need to address the extension of basic services in water, sanitation and transport in environmentally sustainable ways. The Bank's portfolio of loans under its Environmentally Sustainable Development Programme accounted for about half of total lending.

Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency

The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA), established in 1988, continued to help promote investment for economic development in member countries, through guarantees to foreign investors against losses caused by non-commercial risks and through advisory and consultative services. MIGA had its own operating and legal staff, but drew on the Bank for administrative and other services.

In fiscal 1996, six additional countries became members of MIGA, bringing its total membership to 134. An additional 21 developing countries and economies in transition were in the process of fulfilling membership requirements.

During the year, MIGA issued its first guarantees in Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Mali, Nepal and Papua New Guinea. Sixty-eight contracts totalling $862 million in coverage were issued, raising the outstanding maximum contingent liability to $2.3 billion. MIGA's net income before provisioning increased to $20.7 million in fiscal 1996. Since its inception, MIGA had considered a total of 215 projects.

During fiscal 1996, MIGA launched its Investment Promotion Agency Electronic Network, an on-line marketing, communications and information network linking private investors with investment intermediaries and technology providers worldwide to share information and promote foreign direct investment via the Internet.

Economic Development Institute

The Economic Development Institute (EDI) continued to work with a growing network of Bank and external partners to share knowledge about best practices in policy design and implementation through seminars and training programmes, publications and outreach. During fiscal 1996, EDI conducted 358 conferences, seminars and workshops in all regions, reaching nearly 7,000 people directly. It also trained some 600 trainers and worked with partners from more than 150 organizations. EDI resources were concentrated in sub-Saharan Africa and countries of the former Soviet Union, with the remainder in other developing nations. EDI curricula covered four broad areas: macroeconomic management and policy; environment and natural resources; human resources and poverty; and regulatory reform of private and public sectors.

Co-financing

During the year, the Bank continued to facilitate the flow of financial resources to developing countries by carrying out activities related to co-financing, project finance and guarantees, private-sector development and technical assistance financing.

The volume of co-financing anticipated in support of World Bank projects approved in fiscal 1996 was $8.35 billion, which helped finance 131 Bank-assisted projects, or about half the total projects approved during the year. About 86 per cent of co-financing came from official sources, both bilateral and multilateral. Japan remained the most important source of bilateral co-financing, providing a total of $1.1 billion for 10 projects. Other important bilateral sources were Germany ($394 million), France ($217 million), the United Kingdom ($159 million), and the United States ($96 million). The Inter-American Development Bank remained the largest multilateral source, providing $1.6 billion in co-financing during the year.

The largest share of co-financing, 75 per cent, went to investment loans. By sector, infrastructure (power, energy, telecommunications, transportation, water supply) continued to attract the most co-financing, amounting to $3.8 billion, or 45 per cent of the total. Co-financing in the social sectors rose significantly, mainly due to large loans to Argentina, Brazil and Egypt. Regionally, the largest amount of co-financing ($2.1 billion) continued to go to Latin America.

Financing activities

During fiscal year 1996, the Bank raised $10.9 billion through medium- and long-term borrowings in 15 currencies. The Bank also contracted $4.7 billion of currency swaps and a notional par volume of $6.1 billion of interest-rate swaps. After swaps, most of the year's funding was denominated in United States dollars and deutsche mark, with minor amounts in French and Luxembourg francs. The cost of new medium- and long-term borrowings after swaps decreased to 5.28 per cent, from 6.31 per cent in fiscal 1995.

As at 30 June 1996, short-term borrowings outstanding were $4.3 billion, comprising $2.6 billion from official sources through the Bank's central facility, $1.4 billion from market funding in United States dollar discount notes, and $400 million from short-term notes issued under the Bank's global multicurrency note programme. The cost of those borrowings was 5.4 per cent, compared with 5.85 per cent at the end of fiscal 1995.

Scholarships

In fiscal 1996, the joint Japan/World Bank Graduate Scholarship Programme provided funding to support graduate studies for 310 mid-career officials of member countries.

Capitalization

As at 30 June 1996, the total subscribed capital of the Bank was $180.6 billion, or 96 per cent of authorized capital of $188 billion. The permissible increase of net disbursements was $90.8 billion, 45 per cent of the Bank's lending limit.

Income, expenditures and reserves

The Bank's gross revenues totalled $8.7 billion in fiscal 1996, a decrease of $642 million from 1995. Net income was nearly $1.2 billion, down from $1.3 billion in fiscal 1995. Expenses decreased to $7.4 billion, from $7.8 billion a year earlier. Administrative costs amounted to $846 million, a 12 per cent reduction from $961 million in fiscal 1995. As at 30 June 1996, the Bank's reserves amounted to $17.1 billion, and the reserves-to-loan ratio stood at 14.1 per cent.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1996, World Bank regular and fixed-term staff numbered 5,681.

Chapter VII

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC), which was established in 1956 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), continued in 1996 to promote economic development by encouraging the growth of productive enterprise and efficient capital markets in developing countries. As the largest multilateral source of loan and equity financing for private-sector projects in the developing world, IFC helped to stimulate private investment in developing countries by demonstrating that investments there could be profitable. Through its advisory work, IFC also helped Governments create conditions that would stimulate the flow of both domestic and foreign private savings and investment.

During the 1996 fiscal year (1 July 1995-30 June 1996), IFC membership increased to 170, with the admission of Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Eritrea, and Saint Kitts and Nevis.

Financial and advisory services

Record levels of $3.2 billion in financing were approved for 264 new projects during fiscal 1996, reflecting strong growth over the $2.9 billion approved for 213 projects in 1995. The total cost of IFC-financed projects was $19.6 billion. In the 40 years since its founding, IFC had provided more than $18.8 billion in total financing for 1,706 companies in 125 developing countries. In fiscal 1996 alone, new investments were approved in 68 countries and eight regions, including first investments in Albania, Angola, Croatia, Maldives, Samoa, Slovakia and Vanuatu.

Financing approved for IFC's own account included $2.5 billion in loans, $618.8 million in equity and quasi-equity investments, and $147.3 million in guarantees, swaps and stand-by arrangements. By sector, IFC investments ranged broadly from capital markets and infrastructure to agribusiness, extractive industries and general manufacturing. In particular, agribusiness and food processing continued to increase strongly, with IFC approving over $379 million for its own account in 51 projects.

IFC's technical assistance and advisory services continued to facilitate the growth of efficient and competitive private business activity, focusing on the areas of privatization, private infrastructure and capital market activities and development. In fiscal 1996, more than 60 technical assistance assignments were conducted in nearly 50 countries. Since its founding, IFC had undertaken a total of 800 assignments in some 95 countries and/or regions.

The Technical Assistance Trust Funds Programme (TATF)—created through a strategic alliance with the donor community—continued to support IFC's developmental and operational work. In fiscal 1996, TATF secured funding for some 83 technical assistance projects totalling some $10 million in commitments in more than 50 countries. New trust funds were established with Ireland, Israel and Japan; replenishments were secured from Australia, Denmark, Finland, Italy, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States. Since inception, TATF had mobilized more than $45 million through 23 trust funds established with 16 donors and 330 technical assistance projects involving more than $33 million in commitments.

IFC continued to offer risk-management services to private-sector clients in developing countries to reduce their exposure to interest rate, currency and/or commodity price risks. In fiscal 1996, IFC approved a record number of 23 risk-management projects, due to favourable market conditions, strong customer demand, and a more efficient streamlined processing procedure. In total, 57 risk-management projects had been approved between 1990 and 1996, representing an overall exposure of some $390 million for clients in 20 countries.

Under a joint programme of IFC and the Global Environment Facility (GEF), mechanisms were being developed to provide financing to small and medium-sized enterprises to address GEF initiatives on biodiversity conservation and global warming. IFC also approved projects totalling $4.8 million to assist private-sector firms in complying with the requirements of the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, aimed at phasing out the use of ozone-depleting substances.

IFC continued to promote index funds, as an alternate method for investors to access emerging markets, by developing an Asian index fund. That fund had had two successful predecessors, a Latin American index fund launched in fiscal 1995, and a global index fund that had grown from $45 million in 1994 to nearly $2.8 billion in 1996.

Regional projects

IFC approved projects in 76 countries and regions in fiscal 1996, up from 67 in 1995. The number of projects in each region increased, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa, as well as in Central Asia, the Middle East, and North Africa (known as CAMENA). The volume of investments expanded in Asia, in CAMENA countries and in Latin America and the Caribbean, but declined in sub-Saharan Africa and, to a lesser extent, in Europe.

IFC continued to place special emphasis on sub-Saharan Africa during 1996, approving more than one of every four IFC-wide investments in the region. Because the region's economies were small, IFC invested in few large projects and concentrated instead on small and medium-sized companies, which accounted for about 60 per cent of the regional total. In fiscal 1996, IFC approved 71 projects in 20 countries in sub-Saharan Africa, as well as one with regional scope, a 40 per cent increase over 51 projects in 1995. As at 30 June 1996, IFC's committed portfolio included loans and investments for 224 companies in 30 countries, compared with 212 companies in 35 countries a year earlier.

In Asia, IFC approved 53 projects in 12 countries, plus three with regional scope, compared with 45 projects in 1995. As at 30 June, IFC's committed portfolio included loans and investments for 213 companies in 19 countries, compared with 191 companies in 17 countries a year earlier. To help Asian companies modernize and internationalize their businesses, IFC supported international joint ventures that brought in strong foreign partners with state-of-the-art technology, international marketing skills and strong capital bases throughout the region. In the transition economies of China and Viet Nam, IFC supported the development of basic industries and services and provided environmental assessments of large industrial investments. In the emerging economies of South Asia, IFC continued to focus on strengthening the private sector by supporting projects in power, telecommunications and textiles, as well as in housing finance and leasing.

In CAMENA countries, IFC approved 38 projects in nine countries, and two at the regional level, compared with 34 projects in 1995. As at 30 June, IFC's total committed portfolio included loans and investments for 114 companies in 12 countries in the region, compared with 104 companies in 11 countries a year earlier. Sixty per cent of investment approvals in the region were directed to capital markets during fiscal 1996. IFC helped to establish institutions that were new to local financial markets, including a regional investment bank in the Middle East, a discount house in Morocco, and a regional direct-equity fund for Central Asia and the Middle East. In the transition to market economies, the republics of Central Asia required support in privatizing and restructuring assets in many sectors.

In Europe, 24 countries were members of IFC during 1996, more than double the number in 1993. IFC approved 36 projects in 13 countries, plus two with a regional focus, compared with 28 projects in 1995. As at 30 June, IFC's committed portfolio included investments in 142 companies in 16 countries, compared with 140 companies in 16 countries a year earlier. Capital-market development continued to be a crucial part of IFC strategy to assist Europe's transition economies. During the year, IFC and a leading Austrian commercial bank jointly established the Intraregional Trade Enhancement Facility, a $60 million guarantee facility for the confirmation of documentary credits issued by banks from Central and Eastern Europe in support of intraregional trade.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, IFC approved 63 projects in 14 countries and two with a regional focus, compared with 53 projects in 1995. As at 30 June, IFC's committed portfolio included loans and investments for 282 companies in 21 countries in the region, compared with 282 companies in 25 countries a year earlier. Argentina, Brazil and Mexico received the largest number of regional investment approvals, averaging some $20 million per project. In other South American countries and in Central America and the Caribbean, investments averaged about $10 million. Private infrastructure received 25 per cent of regional investment, while domestic capital-market operations accounted for 20 per cent of total regional investments.

Foreign Investment Advisory Service

The Foreign Investment Advisory Service (FIAS), created in 1986, continued to help Governments fill long-term development needs by obtaining the greatest possible benefit from private foreign direct investment, including capital, technology and managerial expertise. In fiscal 1996, FIAS completed 27 new advisory projects in 25 countries and regions, and followed up on projects in four countries. Most were complex projects on topics such as attracting foreign direct investment in infrastructure, increasing backward linkages, and designing promotion strategies. FIAS also conducted three multi-country conferences: one on foreign investment policy and competition for foreign direct investment in Asia, and two on foreign direct investment in infrastructure in Africa and Eastern Europe.

Financial performance

In fiscal year 1996, IFC's net income reached $346 million, an 84 per cent increase over 1995. The loan portfolio generated $86 million, while net income from the equity and quasi-equity portfolio was $146 million. Net income from invested net worth and treasury activities totalled $181 million.

IFC's total committed portfolio at the end of fiscal 1996 was $9.8 billion, a 4 per cent increase over 1995. The portfolio consisted of loans and equity investments in 985 companies in 98 countries. IFC added 129 companies to its portfolio, and removed 83 companies as a result of loan repayments, equity or investment write-offs.

Capital and retained earnings

As at 30 June 1996, IFC's net worth reached $4.1 billion, compared with $3.6 billion at the end of fiscal 1995.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1996, there were 842 regular staff at IFC, representing 105 countries.

Chapter VIII

International Development Association (IDA)

An affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), the International Development Association (IDA) provides concessionary assistance to low-income developing countries in keeping with the Bank's goals of poverty reduction and economic development. In 1996, IDA assistance continued to be concentrated mainly on countries with an annual per capita gross national product of less than $865 (in 1994 United States dollars); about 70 countries were eligible. In fiscal year 1996 (1 July 1995-30 June 1996), IDA loans to those countries totalled $6,327 million.

In 1996, donor country representatives (IDA Deputies) reaffirmed a special commitment to Africa; emphasized that private sector-led growth and social and environmental sustainability were the foundations of effective poverty reduction; and called on recipient countries to improve governance and broaden participation by the poor in development. The Deputies called for IDA to continue to support strongly primary education, clean water, health services and basic infrastructure, and to help Governments restructure public spending towards those sectors.

IDA membership in 1996 increased to 159, with the admission of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Financing

The funds used by IDA—called credits, to distinguish them from World Bank loans—were derived mostly in the form of contributions from its richer members, as well as transfers from World Bank net earnings. Credits, which were made only to Governments, had 35- to 40-year maturities and were interest-free.

Fiscal year 1996 was the third and final year of the Tenth Replenishment of IDA (IDA-10), the agreed size of which was 13 billion special drawing rights (SDR). As at 30 June 1996, the donor funds made available for the IDA-10 period (fiscal 1994-1996) totalled SDR 11,036 million. During 1996, formal notifications to contribute to IDA-10 were received from Greece and Italy, which increased commitment authority to SDR 273 million. Part of the third tranche of IDA-10 contributions was not yet available, as the United States contribution was not made on the agreed schedule, and another donor, Germany, exercised its right to withhold its contribution proportionately to the shortfall of the United States payment. Other resources made available during the year included the transfer of SDR 161 million from the World Bank's fiscal 1995 net income and SDR 942 million of commitment authority against current and future repayments of past credits. Therefore, the total available resources for the entire IDA-10 period increased to SDR 14.9 billion in fiscal 1996.

Against those resources, the Association made IDA-10 commitments of SDR 4.6 billion during the year. Of that amount, 40 per cent went to Africa, 26 per cent to South Asia, 17 per cent to East Asia and the Pacific, 7 per cent to Europe and Central Asia, 6 per cent to Latin America and the Caribbean, and 5 per cent to the Middle East and North Africa. The three largest borrowers of IDA credits were India ($1.3 billion), Viet Nam ($502 million) and China ($480 million). Sectorially, agriculture received the highest amount ($1.4 billion), followed by public-sector management ($943 million), population, nutrition and health ($858 million) and education ($785 million).

Eleventh replenishment

In March 1996, representatives of more than 30 donor countries endorsed a new package of funding which would allow concessional lending of $22 billion to poor countries over the 1997-1999 fiscal period. Although the level of donor funding was half that of IDA-10, it was expected that the total available resources would be adequate to meet foreseen needs, due to a large carry-over of funds from IDA-10.

The three-year package was to begin with a one-year Interim Trust Fund of about $3 billion, running from 1 July 1996, with decision-making and procurement limited to contributing donors and developing countries. In each of the two subsequent years, starting 1 July 1997, all IDA donors would contribute about $4 billion to the Eleventh Replenishment of IDA.

Chapter IX

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

Established in 1944 to help ensure a stable international economic and financial environment, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) continued in 1996 its efforts to promote international monetary cooperation and exchange stability, facilitate the balanced growth of trade, and lessen the degree of disequilibrium in the international balances of payments of its members.

During the year, the Fund further reviewed its surveillance operations, including in the areas of banking soundness, data dissemination and good governance. It also continued to adapt its financing instruments and procedures in the light of the challenges posed by growing economic integration, and to examine the adequacy of its quota resources while augmenting its capacity to borrow in special circumstances. The Fund's fiscal year covered 1 May 1995 to 30 April 1996.

During 1996, IMF membership remained at 181 States.

IMF facilities and policies

IMF continued to provide financial assistance to its members through several facilities and policies to help them achieve sustainable economic growth and balance-of-payments viability and to establish normal relations with their creditors. Credit for longer periods was made available under the extended funding facility (EFF).

The Fund provided concessional financial support to low-income countries under the structural adjustment facility (SAF) and the enhanced structural adjustment facility (ESAF). During 1996, the IMF Executive Board took new steps to address the problems faced by low-income countries, by endorsing continuation of ESAF operations beyond 2000 and, in conjunction with the World Bank, developing an initiative to help resolve the pressing problems of the heavily indebted poor countries.

The Fund also provided assistance through special facilities, including the compensatory and contingency financing facility (CCFF) and the buffer stock financing facility, which had not been utilized since 1983; the systemic transformation facility (STF) ceased to be in effect at the end of December 1995. During fiscal 1996, only one country (Rwanda) made use of CCFF, with a drawing of 9 million special drawing rights (SDR), the unit of account for Fund operations, whose exchange rate was about SDR 1 = $1.45 at the end of fiscal 1996. From the inception of STF in April 1993 to its expiration at the end of 1995, 20 countries purchased a total of SDR 4 billion under the facility, including 17 countries that made two drawings each.

Financial assistance

During fiscal 1996, the provision of financial assistance to member countries rose to a record level, mainly due to the augmented access (of SDR 6.8 billion) under Mexico's stand-by arrangement, and the approval in March of a three-year extended arrangement for the Russian Federation totalling SDR 6.9 billion (about $10 billion)—the largest such arrangement in the Fund's history. Total new commitments during the year totalled SDR 19.7 billion, including SDR 9.6 billion in stand-by arrangements for 19 countries, SDR 8.4 billion for four extended arrangements, and SDR 1.7 billion in nine new SAF and ESAF arrangements.

As at 30 April 1996, there were 57 arrangements in effect, for a total commitment of SDR 27.9 billion, compared with SDR 23.4 billion a year earlier. They comprised 21 stand-by arrangements (Argentina, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Cameroon, Costa Rica, Djibouti, El Salvador, Estonia, Hungary, Kazakhstan, Latvia, Lesotho, Mexico, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Romania, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Yemen); 7 EFF arrangements (Algeria, Egypt, Gabon, Jordan, Lithuania, Philippines, Russian Federation); 1 SAF arrangement (Zambia); and 28 ESAF arrangements (Albania, Armenia, Benin, Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Chad, Cote d'Ivoire, Georgia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Togo, Uganda, Viet Nam, Zambia).

Liquidity

The Fund's liquidity position declined further during fiscal 1996, primarily due to the record high level of demand for IMF resources for the second year in a row, with particularly large purchases made by the Russian Federation and Mexico. The Fund's liquid resources declined to SDR 56.4 billion as at 30 April 1996 from SDR 61.6 billion a year earlier. Uncommitted and adjusted usable liquid resources totalled SDR 33.5 billion, compared with SDR 42.5 billion at the end of fiscal 1995.

The Fund's liquid liabilities at the end of fiscal 1996 amounted to SDR 37.3 billion, consisting entirely of reserve tranche positions; the Fund had no outstanding borrowing for the first time since the fiscal year ending in April 1974, having repaid all its remaining debt to lenders by the end of March 1996. The ratio of the Fund's uncommitted and adjusted usable resources to its liquid liabilities—the liquidity ratio—decreased from 126.1 per cent at the end of fiscal 1995 to 89.8 per cent at the end of fiscal 1996.

SDR activity

In fiscal 1996, total transfers of SDRs rose to a new record level of SDR 27.4 billion, surpassing the previous record level of SDR 20.3 billion set in fiscal 1995. That was due to a sharp increase in the use of SDRs by member countries to discharge their financial obligations to the Fund, combined with a substantial growth in transfers among participants and prescribed holders, as well as a very high level of transfers from the General Resources Account (GRA) to participants. Total transfers from participants to GRA more than doubled, from SDR 2.9 billion in fiscal 1995 to SDR 7.7 billion in fiscal 1996, while transfers among participants and prescribed holders increased, from SDR 9.6 billion to SDR 11.9 billion, during the same period. Transactions by agreement totalled SDR 8.9 billion during fiscal 1996, only marginally less than the record level of SDR 9 billion in fiscal 1995. Those transactions continued to be conducted, for the most part, with the assistance of 12 countries that had established standing arrangements with the Fund to buy or sell SDRs for one or more freely usable currencies at any time, provided that their SDR holdings remained within certain limits.

Transfers of SDRs during fiscal 1996 resulted in a further redistribution of SDR holdings. As at 30 April 1996, the holdings of GRA amounted to SDR 0.8 billion, slightly below the level of a year earlier. In terms of net cumulative allocations, the SDR holdings of the developing countries increased from 60.4 per cent to 67.9 per cent during fiscal 1996. In contrast, the SDR holdings of the industrial countries declined from 105.1 per cent to 102.4 per cent. The SDR holdings of prescribed holders increased slightly to SDR 1.1 billion as of 30 April 1996, representing largely the Fund's investments of SAF and ESAF resources in official SDRs maintained with the Bank for International Settlements.

Policy on arrears

The level of outstanding overdue obligations to the Fund declined significantly during fiscal 1996, from SDR 3 billion on 30 April 1995 to SDR 2.2 billion on 30 April 1996, largely due to the clearance of arrears by two countries (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Zambia). There were no new cases of protracted overdue obligations to the Fund in fiscal 1996, and the number of countries in arrears by six months or more decreased from eight to six.

As at 30 April 1996, four countries (Liberia, Somalia, Sudan, Zaire) remained ineligible to use the Fund's general resources, accounting for 96 per cent of total overdue obligations. Declarations of non-cooperation, a step further under the Fund's arrears policy, remained in effect with respect to three countries (Liberia, Sudan, Zaire).

Technical assistance and training

The volume and complexity of the Fund's technical assistance continued to increase in 1996, with a broad range of assistance and training offered in areas of macroeconomic management covering monetary, fiscal and related statistical, legal and information technology areas. The Fund continued to provide technical assistance in the field through missions by Fund staff and the assignment of short- and long-term advisers. Courses and seminars were given at headquarters and in member countries. During fiscal 1996, technical assistance and training accounted for some 15 per cent of the Fund's total administrative expenditures.

During fiscal 1996, the IMF Institute provided training to 696 people through 16 courses and five seminars at its headquarters and to 569 people through three courses and 18 seminars at the Joint Vienna Institute. In addition, 37 courses and high-level seminars were organized for about 1,115 participants at short overseas training courses and seminars for senior officials at national or regional centres.

Secretariat

As at 30 April 1996, there were 2,198 full-time staffmembers from 121 countries employed at IMF.

Budget

The Fund's administrative budget for fiscal 1996 was $475.1 million, while $125.2 million was approved for projects beginning in fiscal 1996 for the capital budget. Actual administrative expenses during fiscal 1996 totalled $470.8 million and capital project disbursements totalled $34.8 million, including $19.8 million for major building projects.

Chapter X

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) continued during 1996 to promote the safety and efficiency of civil air transport by prescribing standards and recommending procedures for facilitating civil aviation operations. Its objectives were set forth in annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, adopted in Chicago, Illinois, United States, in 1944.

In 1996, domestic and international scheduled traffic of the world's airlines increased to some 315 billion tonne-kilometres. The airlines carried a total of about 1.38 billion passengers and some 23 million tonnes of freight. The passenger load factor on total scheduled services in 1996 increased by one percentage point over 1995, to 68 per cent, while the overall weight load factor remained at 60 per cent. Air freight rose by 7 per cent to 88.8 billion tonne-kilometres, and airmail traffic increased by about 5 per cent to 5.9 billion tonne-kilometres. Overall passenger/freight/mail tonne-kilometres increased by 7 per cent, and international tonne-kilometres by 8 per cent.

The Council of the ICAO held three regular sessions in 1996. In March, the Council directed the UN Secretary-General to investigate the shooting down of two United States-registered private civil aircraft by Cuban military aircraft on 24 February 1996. In June, following the completion of the investigation, the Council adopted a resolution reaffirming the principle that each contracting State should take appropriate measures to prohibit the deliberate use of any civil aircraft registered in that State for any purpose inconsistent with the aims of the Chicago Convention. It also reaffirmed its condemnation of the use of weapons against civil aircraft in flight as being incompatible with elementary considerations of humanity and the rules of customary international law. In November, the Council invited the United States and Cuba to resume direct negotiations with respect to the right of Cuban-registered aircraft to overfly United States territory on flights to and from Canada (see also pp.196-98).

On 6 December, the UN General Assembly proclaimed 7 December as International Civil Aviation Day [General Assembly res. 51/33]. In SO doing, it noted that 7 December marked the anniversary of the signing of the Chicago Convention, and welcomed the 1992 resolution by the ICAO Assembly declaring 7 December as International Civil Aviation Day.

In 1996, ICAO membership increased to 185, with the admission of Samoa.

Activities in 1996

Air navigation

In 1996, ICAO continued to focus on updating and implementing the International Standards and Recommended Practices contained in 18 technical Annexes to the 1944 Chicago Convention and Procedures for Air Navigation Services (PANS), as well as regional plans covering air navigation facilities and services required for international air navigation in ICAO regions. Specific emphasis was placed on the introduction of communications, navigation and surveillance/air traffic management systems.

Four air navigation meetings, convened in Montreal in 1996, made recommendations to amend ICAO specifications. Among them were the ninth meeting on the Review of the General Concept of Separation Panel (6-17 May) and the second meeting of the Aeronautical Telecommunication Network Panel (4-15 November). In addition, the Council adopted amendments to four technical Annexes to the Chicago Convention and two PANS documents. Other project areas that were given special attention included: accident investigation and incident data reporting; aerodrome rescue and fire-fighting; audio-visual aids; aviation medicine; bird strikes to aircraft; a common geodetic reference system; communications, navigation and surveillance/air traffic management; controlled flight into terrain; flight safety and human factors; future larger airplanes; meteorology; personnel licensing and training; safety oversight; and units of measurement.

The Limited Middle East (Communications/Meteorology/Rules of the Air and Air Traffic Control) Regional Air Navigation Meeting (Cairo, Egypt, 7-17 January) reviewed the Middle East Air Navigation Plan, and prepared recommendations to the ICAO Council related to air navigation and air traffic control systems, based on new satellite-based technologies that were to be introduced on a global scale and progressively replace the current system over the next 10 to 15 years.

Air transport

In 1996, ICAO continued its work in regulatory studies; economic research, analysis and forecasting; air transport statistics; airport and route facility management; and promotion of air transport. In June, the ICAO Council adopted a revised and updated code for the regulation and operation of computer reservation systems. The new code took effect on 1 November 1996 and replaced the one adopted by the Council in 1991.

The Air Transport Regulation Panel (Montreal, March) developed guidance material arising from certain regulatory policy tasks requested by the 1994 World-wide Air Transport Conference. The Air Navigation Services Economics Panel (Montreal, May) completed the revision and expansion of the Manual on Air Navigation Services Economics, and completed its report on the financial and related organizational and management aspects pertaining to the provision and operation of the global navigation satellite systems. The Statistics Panel (Montreal, November) reached a number of conclusions regarding adjustments to the ICAO statistics programme. The Asia/Pacific Area Traffic Forecasting Group (Bangkok, Thailand, May) continued to expand the databases used to develop traffic forecasts for the Asia/Pacific region to assist in the development of air navigation systems planning. A traffic forecasting task force, established to support the planning of air navigation services in the Caribbean/South America regions, held its first meeting (Lima, Peru, September). During the year, ICAO held five workshops in the areas of forecasting and economic planning, air transport regulatory policy, and airport and route facility management.

ICAO continued to provide secretariat services to three independent regional civil aviation bodies—the African Civil Aviation Commission, the European Civil Aviation Conference, and the Latin American Civil Aviation Commission.

ICAO maintained its responsibilities for the administration of the Danish and Icelandic Joint Financing Agreements, to which 23 Governments were contracting parties in 1996. The two agreements, which were signed in 1956 and amended in 1982, concerned the provision in Greenland and Iceland of air traffic control, communications and other facilities and services to North Atlantic flights.

Legal matters

The ICAO Secretariat Study Group on the Modernization of the "Warsaw System" held two meetings in 1996 (Montreal, 12-13 February and 10-12 June). The Panel of Legal and Technical Experts on the Establishment of a Legal Framework with regard to Global Navigational Satellite Systems, established in December 1995, held its first meeting (Montreal, 25-30 November 1996).

The following ratifications, adherences or successions were registered in 1996 to the 1944 Convention on International Civil Aviation, ICAO's constituent instrument, and to conventions and protocols on international air law concluded under ICAO auspices:

- Convention on International Civil Aviation (Chicago, 1944) Samoa
- Convention on the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air (Warsaw, 1929) Maldives
- Convention on the International Recognition of Rights in Aircraft (Geneva, 1948) Tajikistan
- Protocol to Amend the Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air signed at Warsaw on 12 October 1929 (The Hague, 1955) Maldives

- Convention on the Marking of Plastic Explosives for the Purpose of Detection (Montreal, 1991) Algeria, Bahrain, Canada, Estonia, Jordan, Kuwait, Lithuania, Panama, Peru, Saudi Arabia

Technical cooperation

ICAO undertook technical cooperation projects in 64 countries in 1996. The organization's technical cooperation programmes, financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), trust funds, management service agreements and the Civil Aviation Purchasing Service, had total expenditures in 1996 of $59.3 million. Some 89 per cent of that amount was provided by Governments to fund their own projects on the basis of cost-sharing with UNDP.

ICAO had resident missions in 44 countries, and 64 others received assistance through fellowships and visits from experts assigned to intercountry and subcontractual arrangements. A total of 732 fellowships were awarded in 1996, of which 693 were implemented. ICAO employed 284 experts from 36 countries during all or part of 1996, of whom 144 were on assignment under UNDP and 140 worked on trust fund projects.

In addition, there were 81 Governments and organizations registered with ICAO in 1996 under its Civil Aviation Purchasing Services. Equipment purchases during the year totalled $26.9 million.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1996, there were 736 staff employed in the ICAO secretariat, including 295 in the Professional or higher categories and 441 in the General Service and related categories. Of the total, 195 were employed in regional offices.

Budget

Appropriations for the ICAO budget in 1996 totalled $50,340,000. Appropriations for 1997 were set at $52,191,000.

Chapter XI

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU), established in 1874 under the Treaty of Berne to regulate international postal services, became a United Nations specialized agency in 1948. The postal services of its 189 member countries formed the largest physical distribution network in the world, with some 6.2 million postal employees working in more than 700,000 post offices worldwide, handling an annual total of more than 400 billion letters and parcels within nations and 10 billion more internationally. In 1996, UPU continued to promote international collaboration to provide rapid, cost-effective and reliable postal service, to promote postal development in all nations, and to foster closer ties with postal customers.

In 1996, UPU membership remained at 189, with no new accessions or admissions.

Activities of UPU organs

Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, UPU's supreme legislative authority, meets every five years; the last time it met was for the twenty-first Congress, held in Seoul, Republic of Korea, in 1994. In 1996, preparatory work continued for the twenty-second Congress, to be held in Beijing, China, from 23 August to 15 September 1999.

Council of Administration

The Council of Administration held its annual session from 17 to 25 October. Among its resolutions and decisions, the Council adopted a new procedure for approving the report on the work of the Union; approved memoranda of understanding on cooperation with Interpol and the World Bank; and discussed the high-level meeting for heads of postal administrations to provide input to the Union's strategic planning process, scheduled for October 1997. The Council also considered a report on the UPU language system; the continued recasting of the UPU Acts; common rules for the development of European Union postal services; and relations between corporatized postal administrations.

Postal Operations Council

The Postal Operations Council held its annual session in Berne, Switzerland—site of the UPU headquarters—from 15 to 26 April. The session was devoted primarily to following up the work programme decided by the Seoul Congress for 1994-1999, particularly related to: letter post; parcel post; postal financial services; development of rapid/time-certain services; quality of service; marketing; telematics development; modernization; and postal development and implementation of the Seoul Postal Strategy. The Postal Security Action Group recommended measures related to mail loss reporting; improvement of mail security at major airports; development of electronic data interchange messages for security purposes; and introduction of advanced postal security training for postal managers.

International Bureau

The International Bureau, which is under the general supervision of the Council of Administration, is the UPU secretariat, serving the postal administrations of member countries as an organ of execution, support, liaison, information and consultation. The Bureau continued to act as a clearing house for the settlement of accounts between postal administrations for various inter-administration charges related to the exchange of postal items and international reply coupons. In 1996, as part of its ongoing activities in monitoring the quality of postal service on a global scale, the Bureau organized six quality-of-service tests and 12 consultant missions in international postal service quality. Two pilot Quality-of-Service Contact Groups were created, one in a developing country and the other in an industrialized country. During the year, postal marketing development activities increased, with emphasis on the preparation of customer relations strategies and on strengthening alliances with key partners.

As at 31 December 1996, there were 153 permanent and temporary staff members employed by the Bureau, including 63 in the Professional or higher categories (drawn from 44 countries), and 90 in the General Service category. French remained the sole official language of UPU. English was introduced as a second working language, beginning on 1 January 1996. The Bureau employed 11 officials in Arabic, English and Portuguese translation services.

Technical cooperation

UPU technical cooperation, which was financed by the United Nations Development Programme, amounted to $690,891 in 1996. The UPU Special Fund, including voluntary contributions in cash and in kind from member countries, and the regular budget also provided assistance, for a total of $1.7 million. The major thrust of UPU technical assistance was to help postal services to function as viable business entities. Consequently, a major effort was being made to assist them in the fields of postal reform, legislation and restructuring, as well as to improve the quality of service and marketing.

In 1996, UPU conducted interregional projects in 22 countries, and regional projects in seven countries. In addition, postal projects were undertaken on behalf of Egypt, Haiti, Turkmenistan, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yemen. UPU continued to participate in special international programmes, such as those for the Second United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1991-2000), phase II (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, technical cooperation among developing countries, and the least developed countries.

Budget

At its 1995 session, the Council of Administration approved the 1996 budget of 33,376,400 Swiss francs, to be financed by contributions from member States. At its 1996 session, the Council fixed the 1997 budget of net expenditures at 34,545,000 Swiss francs. Under the Union's self-financing system, contributions were payable in advance based on the following year's budget.

NOTE: For details of UPU activities, see Report on the Work of the Union, 1996, published by UPU.

Chapter XII

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

In 1996, the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), which was founded in 1865 as the International Telegraph Union and became a specialized agency of the United Nations in 1947, continued to promote the development and efficient operation of telecommunication facilities, to provide technical assistance in telecommunications and to encourage adoption of a broader approach to telecommunications in the global information economy and society.

At its annual session (Geneva, 19-28 June 1996), the ITU Council decided to convene two conferences in Geneva in 1997—the World Radiocommunication Conference (WRC-97) (27 October-21 November) and the Radiocommunication Assembly (RA-97) (20-24 October). It also decided to hold the World Telecommunication Development Conference (WTDC-98) in Malta for eight working days starting on 23 March 1998. It further decided that the next ordinary Plenipotentiary Conference would take place in Minneapolis, Minnesota, United States, from 12 October to 6 November 1998. The Council also addressed procedures on international telecommunication networks and other issues related to ITU activities, policies and finances.

ITU membership increased to 187 in 1996, with the admission during the year of Dominica, the Marshall Islands and Tuvalu.

A major effort in 1996 was the organization of Americas TELECOM 96, which took place in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 10 to 15 June. With 412 exhibitors from 25 countries, the event was the largest regional one held to date in terms of space sold. The Forum, which ran parallel with the exhibition, was split into Strategies and Technology Summits. A telecommunications development workshop also took place.

Conferences

The World Telecommunication Standardization Conference 1996 (WTSC-96) (Geneva, 9-18 October), which is held every four years, reviewed all the activities of ITU study groups and approved the work programme for the next four years. It established a new study group on multimedia services and systems and discontinued two groups. The first World Telecommunication Policy Forum (WTPF-96) (Geneva, 21-23 October) discussed the theme "Global Mobile Personal Communications by Satellite (GMPCS)". It was the first ITU event open to participation by member States and sector members on an equal footing and reached consensus on a set of voluntary principles to guide national policy makers and regulators, as well as GMPCS system operators and service providers, in implementing such systems.

During the year, ITU also convened the second African Regional Telecommunication Development Conference (Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire, 6-10 May) and a Regional Telecommunication Development Conference for the Arab States (Beirut, Lebanon, 11-15 November).

Radiocommunication sector

In 1996, the ITU Radiocommunication Bureau continued to provide services to administrations and users in application of the Radio Regulations, including the coordination and registration of radio-frequency assignments and satellite orbits. It also allocated international identification series, provided maritime mobile information services, and conducted seminars and training sessions for national frequency management requirements. Its main activities in 1996 included processing notifications for space and terrestrial radiocommunication services; preparing for radiocommunication conferences, especially WRC-97; and providing support for ITU study groups on: spectrum management; radiowave propagation; fixed-satellite service; science services; mobile radiodetermination, amateur and related satellite service; fixed service; sound broadcasting service; and television broadcasting service.

The Bureau responded to numerous requests for assistance from administrations, including 35 cases in the terrestrial and 40 in the space radiocommunication domains. Assistance was also provided to bilateral space systems coordination meetings; training missions were undertaken on space systems matters; and regional seminars were organized on space or earth station coordination and maritime radiocommunications. The Bureau also provided support for the Radio Regulations Board, which held four meetings during 1996, and for the Radiocommunication Advisory Group, which held its fourth meeting from 19 to 23 February.

By the end of 1996, the Master International Frequency Register contained particulars of 1,211,275 assignments to terrestrial stations, representing 5,580,720 line entries, which were published in the International Frequency List at periodic intervals. For space services, the Master Register contained 324,083 assignments to 1,406 satellite networks and 4,262 Earth stations.

Telecommunication standardization sector

During 1996, the ITU Telecommunication Standardization Bureau was charged with preparations for WTSC-96 (see above) and supported the activities of 16 study groups on the following topics: service definition; network operation; tariff and accounting principles; network maintenance; protection against electromagnetic environment; outside plant; data networks and open system communications; terminals for telematic services; television and sound transmission; languages for telecommunication applications; switching and signalling; end-to-end transmission performance of networks and terminals; general network aspects; modems and transmission techniques for data, telegraph and telematic services; transmission systems and equipment; and multimedia services and systems. The Bureau was also entrusted with the new responsibility of serving as registrar for universal international freephone numbers.

The Telecommunication Standardization Advisory Group held two meetings in 1996.

Telecommunication development sector

In addition to preparing for the two regional telecommunication development conferences held in 1996, the ITU Telecommunication Development Bureau completed the second year of implementation of the Buenos Aires Action Plan adopted at the World Telecommunication Development Conference in 1994. The Bureau also continued to support vigorously the efforts of developing countries to improve and develop telecommunications. In particular, services and experience were offered in the policy, regulatory, financing, tariffs and technical fields, as well as in frequency management and human resources development. The Bureau conducted a total of 465 technical assistance missions during 1996, as well as 71 seminars, workshops and meetings on a variety of subjects. It also granted 1,387 fellowships and undertook 18 sectoral studies.

In Africa, special consideration was given to the least developed countries (LDCs), particularly Liberia, Rwanda and Somalia. In May, the second African Regional Telecommunication Development Conference adopted eight resolutions and seven recommendations related to the development of regional telecommunication networks.

Regional projects included support for digitization and improvement of traffic flow in West Africa; a submarine fibre-optic cable project; and support of telecommunication development in southern Africa. Four national projects were under implementation using international experts, training and equipment components. A total of 564 fellowships were awarded and 86 expert missions conducted in the region during the year.

In the Americas, activities included assistance in the field of policies and strategies; telecommunications financing policy/strategies/economics; human resources management and development; development of maritime radiocommunication planning; computerized network planning; frequency management; integrated rural development; and information services. A total of 30 national projects addressed the strengthening of national technical and administrative telecommunication services. During 1996, 211 fellowships were awarded and 123 expert missions and 8 workshops were organized for the region.

In the Arab States, ITU gave special consideration to LDCs and Palestine. Activities to strengthen national technical and administrative telecommunication services totalled 25, including 13 for Palestine. Five national projects were under implementation using international experts, training and equipment components. During the year, 155 fellowships were awarded for the region. In addition, 41 expert missions and 22 workshops or seminars were organized.

In Asia and the Pacific, a set of guidelines was prepared in connection with the development of regional telecommunication networks; topics dealt with sector reform, corporate planning, network planning, traffic engineering, tariff reform and procurement. For 13 countries of the South Pacific, master plans for development of maritime radiocommunication services were prepared. During 1996, 22 national and regional projects were under implementation, the main fields of focus of which were technology transfer, human resources development, quality assurance and sector reform. In order to strengthen national technical and administrative telecommunication services, 13 workshops and meetings were held and 33 activities for the benefit of individual countries were carried out. In addition, 265 fellowships were arranged and 71 expert missions were fielded for the region.

In Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States, assistance was provided in the field of broadcasting marketing and the promotion of new technologies in sound and television broadcasting. In 1996, ITU initiated a project to create a regional advisory unit for policy/regulation in the region. During the year, five national projects were under implementation, 192 fellowships were accorded, and 20 expert missions were undertaken.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1996, 699 permanent and fixed-term staff were employed in the ITU secretariat, including 264 in the Professional and higher categories and 435 in the General Service category.

Budget

The adjusted budget for ITU for the 1996-1997 biennium amounted to 303,346,196 Swiss francs (SwF). Actual income in 1996 totalled SwF 164,834,059, while actual expenditure totalled SwF 157,945,242.

Chapter XIII

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

The World Meteorological Organization (WMO) was founded in 1950 to facilitate worldwide cooperation in the establishment and maintenance of systems for making, exchanging and standardizing weather-related information, and to further the application of meteorology to aviation, shipping, water problems, agriculture and other activities to benefit mankind. In 1996, environmental issues continued to be at the forefront of WMO activities. Continuing its leadership role on climate issues, WMO promoted the "Climate Agenda", a framework for coordinating the climate-related programmes and initiatives of international organizations.

The WMO Executive Council, at its forty-eighth session (Geneva, 11-21 June), undertook implementation of WMO programmes and allocation of budgetary resources approved in 1995 by the World Meteorological Congress, the WMO governing body which meets once every four years.

WMO membership increased to 179 States and six territories during 1996, with the admission of three States (Monaco, Niue and Tonga) and one territory (Macau).

World Weather Watch Programme

As the core activity of WMO, the World Weather Watch (WWW) Programme continued in 1996 to collect, analyse and disseminate meteorological information from data-processing centres, observing systems and telecommunication facilities—operated by member countries—in order to provide efficient meteorological and hydrological services within countries. WWW consisted of the Global Observing System (GOS), the Global Telecommunication System (GTS), the Global Data-processing System (GDPS) and Data Management, collectively known as the basic systems. The WWW Programme also included the WMO Satellite Activities, the Tropical Cyclone Programme, and the Instruments and Methods of Observation Programme.

World Weather Watch implementation

As the main source of observational data for WWW, the GOS surface network comprised some 10,100 land stations, 6,700 voluntary observing ships, 1,500 drifting or moored buoys at sea, and 3,000 aircraft. In addition, the GOS space-based subsystem—a nominal constellation of five geostationary and two polar-orbiting satellites—continued to provide imagery, soundings, and other data for collection and distribution. A major achievement during 1996 was the design of a worldwide network of some 1,000 stations, selected from the GOS surface network, to serve as the Global Climate Observing System surface network. Arrangements were also concluded to provide the observational capacity for environmental emergency response activities, such as those following nuclear accidents.

In 1996, attention was given to the development of improved operational arrangements and procedures for the routing of GTS traffic, the format of messages, and GTS monitoring. In Africa, steady progress was made in upgrading low-speed circuits, implementing satellite/cable-based circuits and introducing medium-to-high data-signalling rates and digital circuits. In North and Central America and the Caribbean, the new Regional Meteorological Telecommunication Network, based on two-way, multi-point telecommunication services via an INTELSAT satellite, became fully operational and replaced the previous network.

GDPS activities in 1996 were focused on the future of Local Area Models versus Variable Resolution Models, computer hardware, and the best use of computer resources in general. GDPS services continued to be enhanced through improved extended- and long-range weather forecasting capabilities; provision of services to UN humanitarian missions; designation of new Regional Specialized Meteorological Centres; and organization of regional training seminars.

Instruments and methods of observation

WMO continued to work through its Instruments and Methods of Observation Programme to standardize data, evaluate new techniques and review the cost-effectiveness of observing systems. In 1996, the seven-year WMO Solid Precipitation Measurement Intercomparison project was concluded, with plans for publication of a final report and generation of a complete solid precipitation data set for research purposes. A Radiosonde Humidity Sensor Inter-comparison was also completed, providing specific information on the stability and accuracy of those sensors. A regional training workshop for instrument specialists was held in Melbourne, Australia, in May.

Tropical Cyclone Programme

In 1996, each of the five regional tropical cyclone centres (Miami, Florida (United States) Nadi (Fiji), New Delhi (India), Reunion and Tokyo (Japan)) strengthened facilities and services within their respective regions. Progress was made in implementing the coordinated plans for future development of services by national meteorological and hydrological services and national agencies involved in disaster prevention and preparedness. The establishment of satellite ground-reception stations at national meteorological centres was emphasized, in view of their importance in detecting and tracking tropical cyclones. Particular attention was given to technology transfer and human resources development; five regional training courses were organized for 141 participants from 39 developing countries.

World Climate Programme

The Coordinating Committee for the World Climate Programme (CCWCP), at its fifth session (Geneva, 5-7 March), considered the terms of reference for the Inter-Agency Committee on the Climate Agenda [YUN 1995, p. 1077], which was to replace CCWCP in 1997 in overseeing and managing Programme activities. The Climate Agenda was presented to the UN Commission on Sustainable Development, which supported the initiative by a number of international organizations to establish an integrated framework for their climate-related programmes, particularly those of WMO, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the World Health Organization (WHO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and its Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC), and the International Council of Scientific Unions (ICSU).

World Climate Research Programme

Undertaken jointly by WMO, IOC/UNESCO and ICSU, the World Climate Research Programme (WCRP) continued activities aimed at developing the fundamental understanding of the physical climate system and climate processes needed to predict climate variations, and to assess the extent of human influence on climate. Much attention was given to planning a major conference of WCRP, scheduled to take place in Geneva in August 1997. The conference would give research scientists, policy-makers and technical experts the opportunity to review the accomplishments of WCRP, and help steer a course for it over the next 10 to 15 years, particularly in the light of the role of WCRP as the research thrust of the Climate Agenda.

The Global Energy and Water Cycle Experiment continued to give high priority to the assembly of research climatological data sets from a combination of in situ measurements and remotely sensed data. Activities included the International Satellite Cloud Climatology Project, the Global Precipitation Climatology Project, the Water Vapour Project, the Baseline Surface Radiation Network, and the Cloud System Study.

Atmospheric Research and Environment Programme

As the main component of the Atmospheric Research and Environment Programme, the WMO Global Atmosphere Watch continued during 1996 to enhance its network of observing stations and to refine central facilities and arrangements to deal with the measurement and scientific assessment of the chemical composition and related physical characteristics of the atmosphere.

The Commission for Atmospheric Sciences took steps to establish a World Weather Research Programme to develop improved and cost-effective techniques for forecasting high-impact weather and to promote their applications among member States. High-impact weather was defined as weather that affected the quality of life, was economically disruptive, or was life-threatening and prominent among the concerns of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction.

Applications of meteorology

Agricultural meteorology

During 1996, the WMO agricultural meteorology programme continued activities emphasizing sustainable agricultural development; combating drought and desertification were of particular concern. In June, joint WMO/FAO/UNEP roving seminars on the use of meteorological data for the planning and management of water for irrigated crop production were held in China and Senegal, and a training workshop on drought preparedness and management was held in Casablanca, Morocco, for northern African countries. The Working Group on Validation of Information Requirements on Arable Crops of the Commission for Agricultural Meteorology (Geneva, October) recommended that practical applications be generated from successful case studies on the validation of information require-merits, taking fully into account matters of environment and sustainable development.

Aeronautical meteorology

Implementation of the World Area Forecast System was nearing completion in 1996, with full compatibility between the World Area Forecast Centres in London and Washington, D.C. A ceremony in San Juan, Puerto Rico, in May marked the fully operational status of the United States International Satellite Communication System (ISCS). In March, the second ISCS broadcast for the Pacific Ocean region became operational. Satellite terminals were installed at 21 sites in Central America and the Caribbean, while installation of terminals at 19 additional sites, in South America and in the Pacific region, was to be completed in 1997.

Work continued on the automated production of significant weather forecasts. A seminar on updated aeronautical meteorological codes was held in Niamey, Niger, in March. With the implementation of the new codes, which were introduced in 1993 and slightly amended in 1995, all WMO members would for the first time be using a single global standard for aeronautical meteorological codes.

Marine meteorology

The Data Buoy Cooperation Panel, which was established by WMO and IOC in 1985 to facilitate the global coordination of individual buoy deployment programmes, in 1996 fulfilled all its initial objectives, including establishment of the new International Buoy Programme for the Indian Ocean. During the year, the Panel formulated, revised and adopted a Global Implementation Programme as a coordination mechanism for the various regional programmes.

Meteorological and oceanographic observations from WMO Voluntary Observing Ships continued to constitute a unique and invaluable source of climate data. The Marine Climatological Summaries Scheme constituted a successful globally coordinated mechanism for the collection, collation, quality control and archiving of data for use in global climate studies and in the provision of a wide range of marine services.

Public weather services

A major WMO achievement in 1996 was the publication of a preliminary version of the Guide to Public Weather Services Practices, designed to help national meteorological services develop and improve their public weather services. During the year, emphasis was placed on training activities to strengthen the abilities of the national services to provide weather services for the general public. Natural disaster reduction was also given high priority, in that it was a major objective of the WMO Public Weather Services Programme to ensure the safety of life and property.

Hydrology and water resources

The World Hydrological Cycle Observing System—a programme launched in 1993 to improve water resources assessment and management worldwide—continued to be strengthened during 1996. A number of regional and subregional components, based on improved cooperation among the participating countries, were developed.

A regional conference on water resources assessment and management strategies in Latin America and the Caribbean was convened in May in San Jose, Costa Rica. The second WMO conference for that region, it aimed to explore strategies that would ensure that national water resources agencies played a full part in national and regional development.

By the end of 1996, 123 WMO members were participating in the Hydrological Operational Multi-purpose System, the WMO mechanism for technology transfer in operational hydrology. Data from more than 3,500 stations were held by the Global Runoff Data Centre, which was established under WMO auspices in 1988 to support studies of regional and global water problems and assist the development of more accurate models of the world's climate.

Education and training

A total of 345 persons participated in 1996 in 13 training events in 11 countries, organized as part of the WMO Education and Training Programme. WMO also co-sponsored or supported 22 training events organized by national institutions in member countries. In addition, WMO awarded 46 long-term and 187 short-term fellowships.

During 1996, the WMO Training Library continued to expand its capabilities through increased use of its databases, upgrading of its video equipment, and expansion of its audio-visual and computer-aided training media. The Library made available 196 copies of video films, 27 sets of slides and 172 software packages in response to requests from members, training institutions and other users.

Technical cooperation

In 1996, some 137 countries received technical assistance from WMO valued at $16,040,000, financed heavily by trust funds, and the WMO Voluntary Cooperation Programme, with additional funding from UNDP and the WMO regular budget.

In accordance with the decisions of the twelfth WMO Congress in 1995, the activities of WMO regional offices were being harmonized with those of the Technical Cooperation Department. To facilitate that process, subregional offices were being established on a trial basis. By the end of 1996, formal arrangements had been made for establishing a subregional office in Lagos, Nigeria, to serve western Africa, and another in San José, Costa Rica, for northern and Central America and the Caribbean. Plans were also proceeding for the establishment of a third subregional office to serve countries in the south-west Pacific.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1996, the total number of full-time staff employed by WMO (excluding four professionals on technical assistance projects) was 264. Of those, 120 from 46 countries were in the Professional or higher categories, and 144 were in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

The year 1996 was the first of the twelfth financial period (1996-1999) for which the 1995 WMO Congress approved a maximum expenditure of 255 million Swiss francs, less than the "zero real growth" level for the period. Within that amount, the WMO Executive Council approved appropriations of 124.4 million Swiss francs for the 1996-1997 biennium. At the end of 1996, total unpaid contributions, including arrears, stood at 32 million Swiss francs.

Chapter XIV

International Maritime Organization (IMO)

The International Maritime Organization (IMO), which began work in 1959 as the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization, continued in 1996 to make steady progress in preparing, adopting and implementing measures to improve maritime safety and prevent pollution from ships.

At its forty-second session in June, the IMO Technical Cooperation Committee approved the integrated technical cooperation programme for 1996-1998. The $72.5 million programme, designed to help developing countries strengthen their institutional, legal, managerial, scientific, technical and training capability, concentrated on maritime safety, marine environment protection, maritime legislation and facilitation of international maritime traffic.

During the year, IMO membership increased to 155 States, with the admission of Mongolia and Samoa.

Activities in 1996

In June 1996, the IMO Council awarded the International Maritime Prize for 1995 to Georgy Ivanov, Permanent Representative of the Russian Federation to IMO. A professor of international private maritime law, Mr. Ivanov participated in several negotiations of international maritime treaties, also serving as chairman of IMO committees and bodies and as president of international conferences and institutes. The Prize is awarded annually to the person, organization or other entity judged to have done the most towards advancing the objectives of IMO.

World Maritime Day was celebrated at IMO headquarters on 26 September, focusing on the theme "IMO: Seeking excellence through cooperation".

Prevention of pollution

An international convention on liability and compensation for damage in connection with the carriage of hazardous and noxious substances by sea was adopted on 3 May. The new convention would make it possible for victims of accidents involving substances such as those contained in the International Maritime Dangerous Goods Code and other internationally agreed lists to be adequately compensated. It introduced strict liability for the shipowner, higher limits of liability than the current general limitation regimes, and a system of compulsory insurance and insurance certificates. The convention would enter into force 18 months after the date by which 12 States had accepted it, provided they met certain other criteria. A new Protocol to the 1976 Convention on Limitation of Liability for Maritime Claims was also adopted, substantially increasing the compensation payable for loss of life or personal injury and property damage.

The IMO Marine Environment Protection Committee agreed at its thirty-eighth session (1-10 July) to hold a conference to adopt new measures to prevent air pollution from ships. The main task of the conference, which was expected to be held in the second half of 1997, would be to adopt a new annex VI to the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, as modified by the Protocol of 1978 relating thereto (MARPOL 73/78).

On 14 July, the 1989 International Convention on Salvage entered into force. It replaced a 1910 convention on the law of salvage, which incorporated the "no cure, no pay" principle under which a salvor was rewarded for his services only if the operation was successful. The Convention, taking account of the need to prevent pollution, specified that salvors would receive compensation if they prevented or minimized damage to the environment, even if they did not manage to save the ship or the cargo.

In November, a Protocol to the 1972 Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter was adopted. The Protocol required stricter preventative measures, introduced the "polluter pays" principle, and expanded the list of restricted wastes and other materials that should not be dumped at sea. It would enter into force 30 days after ratification by 26 countries, 15 of which must be contracting parties to the 1972 Convention.

Ship security and safety at sea

In January, major changes to the 1974 International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea (SOLAS) entered into force. The amendments, which had been adopted in May 1994, included the addition of two new chapters dealing with the International Code of Safety for High Speed Craft as well as special measures to enhance maritime safety. In July, a number of amendments to SOLAS, which had been adopted in December 1994, entered into force. Those amendments made mandatory the Code of Safe Practice for Cargo Stowage and Securing, which was adopted as a recommendation in 1991.

Further amendments to SOLAS were adopted during the year by the Maritime Safety Committee, IMO's senior technical body. At its sixty-sixth session in June, the Committee adopted amendments including one replacing an existing chapter on life-saving appliances and arrangements, taking into account changes in technology that had occurred since the chapter was rewritten in 1983. At the Committee's sixty-seventh session in December, amendments were adopted affecting three chapters of the Convention, as well as the International Bulk Chemicals Code and the International Gas Carrier Code, the observance of which were mandatory under SOLAS. It was expected that the amendments would enter into force on 1 July 1998 under the SOLAS Convention's tacit acceptance procedure.

Amendments to the 1978 International Convention on Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Seafarers entered into force on 1 January 1996. The amendments, which had been adopted in 1994, dealt with special training requirements for personnel on tankers.

World Maritime University

On 18 March, the World Maritime University launched its Class of 1997, bringing together 75 students from 42 nations, two of which (Nepal and Slovakia) were represented for the first time. The new class brought the total number of students enrolled at the University to 1,233, representing 130 countries. Located in Malmö, Sweden, the University was established by IMO in 1983 to provide advanced postgraduate training in maritime administration, environmental protection, port and shipping management, maritime education and training, and maritime safety administration.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1996, IMO had 283 staff members, of whom 105 were in the Professional and higher categories and 178 in the General Service category.

Budget

The IMO Assembly, at its nineteenth biennial session in 1995, approved budgetary appropriations of 36,612,200 pounds sterling (about $56.3 million) for the 1996-1997 biennium.

Chapter XV

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

In 1996, the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) continued development cooperation, norm-setting and registration activities to promote respect for the protection and use of intellectual property. The organization's main areas of work continued to focus on strengthening the intellectual property systems of developing countries; promoting new or revised norms for the protection of intellectual property at the national, regional and multilateral levels; and facilitating the acquisition of intellectual property protection through international registration systems.

The governing bodies of WIPO and the Unions administered by the organization held their twenty-eighth series of meetings from 21 to 22 May, and twenty-ninth series from 23 September to 2 October, both in Geneva.

During 1996, WIPO membership increased to 158 States, with the accession of Mozambique to the 1967 Convention establishing WIPO, amended in 1979. The number of States adhering to treaties administered by WIPO also increased: as at 31 December 1996, there were 140 States parties to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property; 119 to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works; and 87 to the Patent Cooperation Treaty (PCT).

Activities in 1996

Development cooperation

In 1996, WIPO's development cooperation resources were double the amount budgeted in 1994-1995, in order to meet the ever-increasing needs of developing countries for assistance in the areas of industrial property, copyright and neighbouring rights. Assistance was provided to 120 developing countries, one territory and nine intergovernmental organizations, mainly in the areas of human resources development, legal advice and technical assistance for the automation of administrative procedures and the retrieval of technological information.

On 1 January 1996, the 1995 Cooperation Agreement between WIPO and the World Trade Organization (WTO) entered into force; it established cooperation arrangements for collecting, translating and disseminating the texts of intellectual property laws and regulations; for publishing State emblems; and for promoting the implementation of the 1994 WTO Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS Agreement). During the year, WIPO organized four regional mega-symposia on the implications of the TRIPS Agreement for developing countries: one for English-speaking African countries, in Pretoria, South Africa; one for French-speaking African countries, in Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire; one for countries of Asia and the Pacific, in Jakarta, Indonesia; and one for Latin American and Caribbean countries, in Caracas, Venezuela. In September, WIPO and WTO jointly organized a workshop in Geneva on the TRIPS Agreement and border enforcement, attended by government officials from various countries.

Some 12,000 participants attended a total of 144 courses, seminars or meetings organized by WIPO at the global, regional and national levels. In addition, 213 legal and technical advisory missions were undertaken to 73 developing countries. Training was provided to 109 individuals through study visits to industrial property and copyright offices abroad, and eight long-term fellowships were granted to government officials of developing countries for training in institutions of higher learning. In total, 330 consultants were engaged either for advisory missions or as lecturers in courses and seminars, representing a 20 per cent increase over 1995. The WIPO Academy conducted two sessions on the policy considerations behind current intellectual property issues for middle- and senior-level government officials from 28 countries.

A new feature of the development cooperation programme in 1996 was the planning and implementation of WIPO-financed country projects, involving a plan of action based on the intellectual property needs of a developing country, as identified jointly by WIPO and the authorities of the country.

Assistance to countries in transition

Technical cooperation with countries in transition to a market-economy system continued in 1996, with nine national and regional seminars and other meetings in the fields of industrial property and copyright and neighbouring rights. WIPO officials and consultants undertook seven missions to six of those countries to give advice on the revision of existing or the drafting of new intellectual property legislation.

The Eurasian Patent Convention allowed an individual, irrespective of nationality or domicile, to obtain a Eurasian patent, which had effect in all contracting States, by filing a single application with the Eurasian Patent Office, located in Moscow. By 1 December 1996, nine States (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Republic of Moldova, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Turkmenistan) had deposited their instruments of adherence to the Convention. Only countries party to the Paris Convention and PCT may adhere to the Eurasian Patent Convention.

Setting of norms and standards

On 1 August 1996, the Trademark Law Treaty entered into force. The year was also highlighted by the adoption of two new treaties in the field of copyright and neighbouring rights at the WIPO Diplomatic Conference on Certain Copyright and Neighbouring Rights Questions (Geneva, 2-20 December). The new treaties—the WIPO Copyright Treaty (WCT) and the WIPO Performances and Phonograms Treaty (WPPT)—clarified existing rights or established new rights for authors, performing artists and producers of sound recordings, especially when their works, fixed sound performances or phonograms were used by digital means, as on the Internet. The Diplomatic Conference urged the continuation of WIPO's efforts for the conclusion of an "Audio-Visual Protocol" to complement WPPT, and of a "Database Treaty" for providing sui generis protection for databases even if they did not qualify for copyright protection.

Regarding the harmonization of patent laws, the Committee of Experts on the Patent Law Treaty at two 1996 sessions (June and November) considered draft provisions for the proposed treaty and its regulations, and agreed that the treaty should follow the solutions provided for in PCT and its Regulations.

Concerning the settlement of intellectual property disputes between States, the WIPO General Assembly decided to include in its draft programme and budget for the 1998-1999 biennium an item for the holding of a diplomatic conference in the first half of 1998. The Bureau was requested to prepare by April 1997 a revised draft treaty and draft regulations to serve as the basic proposal for the conference.

In October, draft provisions for improved protection of well-known marks were examined by the second session of a committee of experts. The committee was to continue its work in 1997.

Regarding intellectual property, the WIPO Governing Bodies asked the International Bureau to: study the feasibility of an "international deposit" system for nucleotide and/or amino acid sequence listings; study the need for and feasibility of establishing an international centralized system for the recording of assignments of patent applications and of patents; conduct a preliminary study concerning a possible new treaty on intellectual property with respect to integrated circuits; and study international intellectual property issues arising from the new global information infrastructure, including the Internet. In the autumn of 1996, WIPO started preparations for the first meeting, to be held in February 1997, of a group of consultants on trademarks and Internet domain names.

WIPO Arbitration and Mediation Centre

In 1996, the WIPO Arbitration and Mediation Centre continued to undertake promotional activities related to its services, including a conference on mediation in March, two training programmes on mediation in intellectual property disputes in May, and a workshop for arbitrators in November. The third meeting of the WIPO Arbitration and Mediation Council, held in November, reviewed the activities of the Centre and examined proposed WIPO Emergency Relief Rules prepared by the International Bureau, with the assistance of a group of experts.

International registration activities

Patent Cooperation Treaty (PCT). In 1996, 47,291 international applications were filed, an increase of almost 22 per cent over 1995 and the equivalent of some 2.5 million national applications.

Madrid Agreement. In the trademark system under the Madrid Agreement concerning the Registration of Marks and its 1989 Protocol, there were 18,485 international registrations in 1996. With an average of 10.79 countries designated per registration, those applications had the effect of some 200,000 national registrations.

Operations under the Madrid Protocol started on 1 April 1996. That was also the date of entry into force of the Common Regulations under the Madrid Agreement and Protocol, including the Schedule of Fees, which had been adopted by an extraordinary session of the Madrid Assembly in January 1996. The 1 April date also coincided with the date of entry into force of the Community Trade Mark system.

Hague Agreement. Under the Hague Agreement concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs, 5,830 industrial design deposits, renewals and prolongations were filed in 1996, representing an increase of 3.9 per cent, compared to 1995. Work continued to make the Hague system accessible to more countries.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1996, WIPO employed 614 staff members representing 65 countries. Of those, 198 were in the Professional or higher categories, and 416 were in the General Service category.

Budget

WIPO's principal income was derived from ordinary and special contributions from member States and international registration services, mainly under PCT and the Madrid Agreement.

In 1996, the organization's budgeted income and budgeted expenditures totalled 150 million Swiss francs each, of which 90 million Swiss francs were staff costs. The development cooperation budget in WIPO's 1996-1997 regular budget was double the amount allocated during the previous biennium. The increase allowed WIPO to provide additional legal and technical assistance to developing countries to help them meet their new obligations under the TRIPS Agreement.

Chapter XVI

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

In 1996, the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) continued to assist the poorest segments of the rural population—including small farmers, nomadic pastoralists, artisanal fisherfolk, the landless, indigenous peoples and women—by funding projects to increase food production and incomes as well as improve nutrition, health, education and general well-being on a sustainable basis. IFAD was established in 1977 to combat hunger and rural poverty by designing and funding rural development projects in the low-income, food-deficit regions of the world.

The IFAD Executive Board held three regular sessions in 1996 (April, September and December), approving loans for 33 projects and 18 technical assistance grants. The Board also approved a programme of work for 1997 of 312.6 million special drawing rights (SDR) for loans and grants under the Regular Programme and endorsed a budget of $52.8 million, including a contingency of $300,000.

IFAD membership remained at 158 in 1996. Of its member countries, 22 were in Category I (developed countries), 12 in Category II (oil-exporting developing countries), and 124 in Category III (other developing countries).

Resources

In November 1996, agreement was reached on the Fourth Replenishment of IFAD resources. Member States of Category I agreed to contribute $345 million and to make further endeavours to increase that level. They also agreed to seek authority to unblock specific supplementary contributions they had made under the special matching agreement for the Third Replenishment, an amount that could total $16,320,000. Category II member States confirmed pledges of $70 million, as well as efforts, wherever possible, to increase that level. Category III member States confirmed pledges totalling $56.7 million.

Activities in 1996

Loans and grants approved in 1996 under IFAD's Regular Programme totalled SDR 300.9 million ($435.7 million equivalent), which financed 33 projects worth SDR 281.7 million ($407.9 million) and 95 technical assistance grants worth SDR 19.3 million ($27.8 million).

In terms of SDR, total financing approved in 1996 was 24.6 per cent higher than the annual average of the previous five years and 36.2 per cent higher than the annual average since the start of IFAD funding operations in 1978. The average IFAD loan per project in 1996 was SDR 8.5 million ($12.4 million), fairly consistent with the 1978-1995 average amount per project of SDR 8.2 million ($10.4 million).

The largest share of 1996 lending—42 per cent—went to Africa, which received SDR 118.7 million ($171.7 million) for 15 projects in 43 countries. Over the period 1978-1996, Africa received a cumulative share of 30.5 per cent of IFAD loans under the Regular Programme. The Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification (SPA), which was established in 1986 to provide loans on highly concessional terms, was merged into IFAD's Regular Programme as of 31 December 1995. If loans under SPA were included in the cumulative total, the region's share over 1978-1996 reached 34.9 per cent, or SDR 1,312.5 million ($1,699.9 million).

The Asia and Pacific region received 25.1 per cent of 1996 loans, consisting of SDR 70.5 million ($102.5 million) for seven projects in 21 countries. However, cumulatively over the period 1978-1996, the region continued to account for the largest share of Regular Programme lending, with loans amounting to SDR 1,249.6 million ($1,594.1 million), or 35.4 per cent.

Loans approved in 1996 for Latin America and the Caribbean amounted to SDR 51.7 million ($74.8 million) for seven projects in 28 countries, representing 18.3 per cent of lending during the year. The region's share had been progressively increasing over the past decade, from under 15 per cent during 1978-1986 to a cumulative 16.8 per cent, or SDR 575.8 million ($756.4 million), over the period 1978-1996.

The Near East and North Africa region (which also included Djibouti, Somalia and the Sudan) received SDR 40.8 million ($58.9 million), or 14.4 per cent of 1996 lending, for four projects in 17 countries. Over the period 1978-1996, the region received a total of SDR 606.4 million ($781.8 million), or 17.3 per cent of Regular Programme lending. Taking into account lending under SPA, the region's cumulative total reached SDR 633.9 million ($818 million) or 16.8 per cent.

During the year, there was continued emphasis on providing financial assistance to sub-Saharan African countries, which received SDR 118 million ($170.7 million), or 41.9 per cent of 1996 lending. Least developed countries (as defined by the United Nations) received SDR 92.5 million ($133.8 million) in 1996, representing 32.8 per cent of the year's total, somewhat lower than their cumulative 37.1 per cent share since 1978. Low-income, food-deficit countries (as defined by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations) continued to receive the bulk of IFAD financing, totalling SDR 217.2 million ($314.4 million). Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, Mongolia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia received loans from IFAD for the first time in 1996.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1996, the IFAD secretariat comprised 265 staff, including 113 staff from 49 countries in the Professional or higher categories, and 152 in the General Service category.

Income and expenditure

Total revenue under the Regular Programme in 1996 was $190 million, consisting of $149 million of investment income and $41 million from interest and service charges on loans. Total operational and administrative expenses for the year amounted to $50.7 million, compared with a budget, before contingency, of $52.5 million. The excess of revenue over expenses for the year, including the effects of foreign exchange rate movements of $161 million, was $21.7 million.

Chapter XVII

United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)

Established in 1966 by the General Assembly and formalized as a specialized agency in 1986, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued activities aimed at accelerating sustainable industrial development in developing and transition economies and promoting industrial cooperation. In 1996, as a result of strategic reforms approved by the UNIDO General Conference in 1995, the demand for UNIDO services increased by 35 per cent. Also during the year, UNIDO activities gave special emphasis to Africa and the least developed countries (LDCs).

The Industrial Development Board held its fifteenth session in May and its sixteenth session in November to review the budget and work programme adopted by the General Conference at its sixth biennial session in 1995.

UNIDO membership remained at 168 countries in 1996. As it had announced in 1995, the United States withdrew from UNIDO as of 31 December 1996, citing budget constraints that had made it necessary to consider withdrawing from a number of organizations, as well as adverse opinion in the United States Congress concerning participation in UNIDO and other international organizations.

New programme initiatives

In 1996, UNIDO was fully oriented towards developing and implementing new programmes in response to the growing demand from its member States for quality services, both as a global forum and as a provider of technical cooperation. During the year, full or partial funding was secured for five high-impact programmes developed as part of the reform process: industrial policy formulation and competitiveness strategies; international networking for the development of small and medium-sized enterprises; quality management in food processing in sub-Saharan Africa; new technologies for the abatement of global mercury pollution; and women entrepreneurship development.

In October, the Alliance for Africa's Industrialization was launched with the aim of developing African-generated industrial development strategies and public- and private-sector partnerships. Among the programmes and projects launched were those on capacity-building for industrial policy formulation and implementation; linking industry with agriculture; and integrating the formal and informal industrial sectors.

UNIDO expanded its normative activities aimed at assisting the industrial sector in developing countries and transition economies to face international competition. Examples of such activities included: construction of a UNIDO Industrial Development Index for measuring industrial development based on a variety of indicators; preparation of UNIDO guidelines for the classification and certification of industrial science and technology parks; and assessment of industrial performance against international benchmarks and norms for technological, environmental and social parameters.

UNIDO assistance focused increasingly on projects addressing and working with the private sector. In 1996, private-sector beneficiaries of UNIDO technical cooperation accounted for almost 80 per cent of all projects. Other new initiatives during the year included the launching of the International Business Advisory Council, composed of eminent international industrialists from the private sector, to advise UNIDO on approaches to industrialization, and the establishment of National Industrial Business Councils in 12 developing countries to identify demand from the private sector for UNIDO services, provide sources of expertise, and develop and fund joint programmes.

Thematic priorities

During 1996, UNIDO implemented programmes and projects under seven thematic priorities: strategies, policies and institution-building for global economic integration; environment and energy; policies, networking and basic technical support for small- and medium-sized industries; innovation, productivity and quality for international competitiveness; industrial information, investment and technology promotion; rural industrial development; and linking industry with agriculture in Africa and LDCs.

Strategies, policies and institution-building

The provision of assistance in formulating industrial strategies and policies continued to be an essential part of UNIDO's work. New and ongoing projects in that area included restructuring and revitalizing industries in the Kaliningrad region of the Russian Federation; a support programme for industrial development of the Sumgait region of Azerbaijan; and formulation of a medium-term industrial strategy for Viet Nam.

Environment and energy

UNIDO activities towards sustainable development aimed at helping developing countries meet three critical challenges: ensuring the protection and conservation of environmental resources in a cost-effective manner; meeting obligations under global environmental treaties; and averting potential competitive disadvantages for industry in developing countries that could emerge from international environmental norms and standards. Projects in 1996 included the introduction of new technologies for abating mercury pollution caused by informal gold mining operations in the United Republic of Tanzania; development of new software and technologies related to the efficient and renewable uses of energy; and establishment of the UNIDO/United Nations Environment Programme international network of National Cleaner Production Centres. In addition, UNIDO prepared 55 new projects worth $24 million related to limiting the use of ozone-depleting substances, in accordance with the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, and completed 13 investment projects with a combined budget of $19.4 million, four technical cooperation projects, one country programme and one institution-strengthening activity.

Small- and medium-sized enterprises

During the year, UNIDO provided cross-sectoral support to small- and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), considered an essential component in the industrial development strategies of most countries. New and ongoing projects included the promotion of SMEs in Kazakstan; policy advice for SME promotion in Slovakia; and promotion of co-operation between Italian institutions and enterprises and SMEs in selected developing countries.

Industrial competitiveness

UNIDO support for industrial competitiveness in developing countries included services by institutions specialized in technology management, including technology transfer and research and development; human resources development; information and data systems; venture capital financing; metrology, standardization and testing; and management and engineering consulting. Projects included upgrading the technology of irrigation pump sets and prime movers manufactured by small-scale industry in India, and a regional programme for establishing high-technology incubation systems at the Academies of Science in the Czech Republic, Hungary, Poland and Slovakia.

Industrial information, investment and technology promotion

To assist developing countries in the promotion and absorption of industrial technology and investment flows, UNIDO offered support at the level of policy, institutions and enterprises, particularly related to training and the provision of information on investment and technology opportunities. Projects under way in 1996 included an integrated investment and technology promotion programme in the United Republic of Tanzania and a training package on technology transfer management at the enterprise level for managers of SMEs in developing countries.

Rural industrial development

Much of UNIDO's work in the area of rural industrial development was oriented towards creating supportive, autonomous institutions. These included regional industrial development agencies that could stimulate local interaction and networking among firms and provide access to market information and know-how which the individual entrepreneur or small firm could not afford on its own. Examples of new and ongoing projects in that area included creation of entrepreneur development centres in Micronesia; technical advice on rehabilitation of wood-processing in the Huambo region of Angola; and a Shendi integrated women's development project in the Sudan.

Africa and LDCs

As the only thematic priority with a geographic focus, support for Africa and LDCs encompassed a wide variety of activities aimed at enhancing agricultural production and increasing the competitiveness of agro-based industries. Projects during 1996 included assistance to the fishing industry in Mauritania, design of an integrated development programme for the wood products manufacturing industrial system in Ghana and national leather and footwear industry schemes in Ethiopia, Malawi and Uganda.

Secretariat

A total of 810 staff members were employed at UNIDO headquarters during 1996. Another 948 engineers, economists, lawyers, technology and environment specialists and support staff worked in 42 UNIDO field offices in developing countries.

Budget

Total resources for UNIDO operations for 1996-1997 amounted to more than $385 million, including a regular budget of some $ 158 million funded by assessed contributions from member States, and an operational budget of about $25 million earned from implemented technical cooperation projects. Technical cooperation activities for 1996-1997 amounted to some $202 million.

Chapter XVIII

World Trade Organization (WTO)

Activities of the World Trade Organization (WTO) in 1996 included facilitating implementation of the results of the Uruguay Round; providing a forum for multilateral trade negotiations and a framework for implementing their results; administering the dispute settlement procedures and the Trade Policy Review Mechanism; and co-operating with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank to achieve greater coherence in global economic policy-making. WTO came into being on 1 January 1995 as the successor to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), following the conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations.

During the year, WTO membership increased to 128; there were also 32 observer States.

General activities

The first biennial WTO Ministerial Conference (Singapore, 9-13 December)—the highest authority of the agency—adopted the Singapore Ministerial Declaration, which reaffirmed members' support of the multilateral trading system and updated the WTO work programme. In the Declaration, WTO member States expressed their commitment to: addressing the challenges of the increasing integration of the world economy; observing internationally recognized labour standards; and addressing the problem of marginalization of least developed countries (LDCs), among other objectives.

The Conference adopted a Comprehensive and Integrated WTO Plan of Action for LDCs, which offered an overall approach to enhancing the trading opportunities of LDCs and their integration into the multilateral trading system. It called for action to improve conditions for investment, export expansion and diversification, capacity-building and market access. It called for WTO to assist LDCs in implementing their WTO commitments and to help attract foreign direct investment in LDCs. Individual members could study the feasibility of binding preferential tariff rates in a WTO preferential scheme applicable only to LDCs.

Ministers also agreed to give operational content to the Plan of Action, for example, by enhancing conditions for investment and providing predictable and favourable market access conditions for LDC products. They decided to organize a meeting in 1997 with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the International Trade Centre, with the participation of aid agencies, multilateral financial institutions and LDCs, to foster an integrated approach to assist LDCs to improve their trading situations.

The Conference provided an opportunity for 28 countries—accounting for more than 80 per cent of world trade in information technology products—to negotiate an Information Technology Agreement (ITA) aimed at eliminating tariffs in trade of computer products by the year 2000. The Agreement would eliminate customs duties and other taxes and charges on those products through annual reductions, beginning on 1 July 1997 and concluding on 1 January 2000. ITA covered five main categories of products: computers, telecommunications products, semiconductors, semiconductor manufacturing equipment, and software and scientific instruments. In addition, the Agreement covered other products, including cash registers, computer network equipment and certain photocopiers, but not electronic consumer goods. Implementation of ITA was contingent on its signing by other participants by 1 April 1997, so that the Agreement's coverage would expand to some 90 per cent of world trade in that area.

Ministers further agreed to establish new working groups to study several issues, including the relationship between trade and investment; the interaction between trade and competition policy, including anti-competitive practices; and transparency in government procurement practices. The next Ministerial Conference was scheduled to be held in 1998 in Geneva.

In December, coinciding with the opening of the Ministerial Conference, WTO and IMF signed an agreement for future cooperation and collaboration, including better access for both organizations to each other's information data. A similar cooperation agreement between WTO and the World Bank was also finalized in 1996.

WTO's General Council—the body entrusted with handling the day-to-day operations of the organization between Conferences—made preparations for the 1997 Ministerial Conference, focusing on such issues as the Conference's structure and organization, progress in the consultation process, and attendance of Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. In November, the Council agreed to forward the reports, conclusions and recommendations of some 30 WTO bodies to the Conference, for action by Ministers.

The Council also convened in two other forms: as the Dispute Settlement Body to oversee the dispute settlement procedure; and as the Trade Policy Review Body to conduct regular reviews of members' policies and practices. In 1996, the Dispute Settlement Body dealt with cases brought by Brazil and Venezuela against the United States; the European Community and the United States against Canada; the Philippines against Brazil; the United States against Canada; Costa Rica against the United States; and India against the United States.

The Trade Policy Review Body carried out first reviews of the Czech Republic, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Venezuela and Zambia; second reviews of Brazil, Colombia, Morocco, New Zealand, Norway, the Republic of Korea, Singapore and Switzerland; and fourth reviews of Canada and the United States.

WTO's technical assistance and training activities continued to grow, supported by both the regular budget and special contributions from Governments. Activities included seminars and workshops on aspects of the WTO multilateral trading system, training courses, technical missions, and assistance to Governments in preparing trade policy reviews.

Trade in goods

The Council for Trade in Goods held six meetings during the year, discussing matters ranging from trade facilitation to the observer status of international intergovernmental organizations. A major subject was the implementation of the Agreement on Textiles and Clothing, covering issues such as integration programmes, the use of transitional safeguards, bilaterally agreed arrangements, functioning of the Textiles Monitoring Body, treatment of small suppliers and least developed cotton-producing countries, rules of origin and market access. The Ministerial Conference gave a mandate to the Council to undertake exploratory and analytical work on the simplification of trade procedures in order to assess the scope of WTO rules in that area.

The Committee on Agriculture reviewed progress in implementing the WTO Agreement on Agriculture, on the basis of questions relating to the commitments contained in the Agreement and questions raised by WTO members in the areas of market access, domestic support and export subsidies, and export prohibitions and restrictions.

The Committee on Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures met three times in 1996 to review implementation of the relevant Agreement, which set out members' rights and obligations relating to food safety, protection of human health from plant- or animal-spread disease, and protection of plants and animals from pests and diseases.

The Committees on Anti-Dumping Practices, on Safeguards, on Technical Barriers to Trade and on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures continued to review relevant legislation and regulations of members.

Trade in services

The Council for Trade in Services started discussions on the basis of submissions by member countries on future work to be forwarded to the Ministerial Conference. In November, the Council adopted its report, which presented recommendations for future work, including the development of an information exchange programme; measures relating to qualification requirements and procedures, technical standards and licensing requirements; and guidelines and procedures for negotiations. Those recommendations were endorsed by the Ministerial Conference.

Intellectual property

On 1 January 1996, the WTO Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS) went into effect for developed countries. The Agreement provided for minimum international standards of protection for know-how and productivity in the area of copyright (including computer programs), trademarks, geographic indications (including wines and spirits), industrial design, layout design of integrated circuits, and trade secrets. It also contained provisions for enforcement.

Developed country members' were obliged to notify the Council regarding their implementing legislation for TRIPS in early 1996. The Council started its reviews in July by examining legislation of developed country members in the area of copyright and related rights, continuing in November with trademarks, geographical indications and industrial design.

Balance-of-payments restrictions

The Committee on Balance-of-Payments Restrictions held consultations with members whose balance-of-payments difficulties had led them to restrict imports, in order to conserve foreign exchange. In 1996, it held consultations with Hungary and Nigeria. Sri Lanka notified WTO that it had removed import restrictions on four tariff lines, while restrictions remained on four products.

Regional trade agreements

In February, WTO members created the Committee on Regional Trade Agreements (RTAs) and mandated it to examine RTAs about which WTO had been notified, in order to increase understanding of their provisions and operations and assess their consistency vis-a-vis WTO rules; to define the scope of the existing obligations for RTAs to report on their activities and to establish arrangements for implementing that obligation; and to consider the systemic implications of the regionalism/multilateralism relationship.

The Committee, which met for the first time in July, devoted much time to RTA examinations; it also dealt with improving examination procedures, reporting on RTA activities, and systemic matters.

Trade and development

The Committee on Trade and Development continued to review trade issues of interest to developing countries. It identified four issues for action by the Ministerial Conference: the position of LDCs; implementation of provisions in favour of developing countries, including the impact of the Uruguay Round on them; participation of developing countries in the multilateral trading system; and guidelines for technical cooperation. The Committee found that information on the implementation of provisions in favour of developing country members pointed to a relatively low use of such provisions. It reviewed WTO's three-year plan for technical cooperation and adopted a set of guidelines for such cooperation; discussed the participation of developing country members in the multilateral trading system on the basis of a WTO study; and devoted particular attention to the difficulties of LDCs through its Subcommittee on Least Developed Countries, which prepared the Plan of Action adopted by the Ministerial Conference.

Trade and environment

The Committee on Trade and Environment, which met regularly throughout 1996, continued to examine the relationship between trade and environmental measures in order to promote sustainable development, mainly focusing on the preparation of its report to the Ministerial Conference. Adopting the report of the Committee, Ministers agreed that it would continue to examine the complementarities between trade liberalization, economic development and environmental protection.

Plurilateral agreements

The Agreement on Government Procurement entered in force on 1 January 1996. It covered procurement of goods and services by central government entities, sub-central entities and certain public utilities; 27 WTO members were parties to it. In 1996, the Committee on Government Procurement, established under the Agreement, adopted decisions on such topics as procedural matters relating to participation of observers in the Committee, accession to the Agreement, modalities for notifying threshold figures in national currencies, and notification of national implementing legislation.

During the year, the Committee on Trade in Civil Aircraft continued discussions on the legal status of the relevant Agreement; the International Dairy Council focused on assessing trends in the world market for dairy products and factors affecting the world market; and the International Meat Council examined the functions of the relevant Agreement based on the recognition that WTO members had new priorities as a result of the Uruguay Round negotiations.

International Trade Centre

The International Trade Centre (ITC), operated jointly by UNCTAD and WTO, continued to assist developing countries in trade promotion (see also PART THREE, Chapter IV). Cooperation between ITC, UNCTAD and WTO was given new impetus in 1996 when a general framework for technical cooperation activities of the three organizations, which was agreed upon by the three Executive Heads, led to strengthening of coordination in specific programmes and the development of joint projects. ITC, WTO and UNCTAD concluded another framework agreement to promote complementarity and avoid duplication of technical cooperation activities in Africa. A joint integrated technical assistance programme in selected least developed and other African countries was launched to assist those nations in strengthening their participation in the multilateral trading system. ITC continued to undertake technical cooperation activities as a follow-up to the Uruguay Round agreements, including disseminating information through seminars and workshops; identifying priority areas for further action to expand the business community's participation in the new trading environment; and strengthening local capacities to provide information and advice on the Uruguay Round agreements.

Budget

Beginning in 1996, WTO members' contributions were determined according to their share in total trade in goods, services and intellectual property rights. The budget for 1996 amounted to $93 million.

Secretariat

At the end of 1996, WTO had a staff of some 500.

<sup>2</sup> Egypt and Syria, both of which became Members of the United Nations on 24 October 1945, joined together—following a plebiscite held in those countries on 21 February 1958—to form the United Arab Republic. On 13 October 1961, Syria, having resumed its status as an independent State, also resumed its separate membership in the United Nations; it changed its name to the Syrian Arab Republic on 14 September 1971. The United Arab Republic continued as a Member of the United Nations and reverted to the name of Egypt on 2 September 1971.

Through accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany on 3 October 1990, the two German States (both of which became United Nations Members on 18 September 1973) united to form one sovereign State. As from that date, the Federal Republic of Germany has acted in the United Nations under the designation Germany.

<sup>4</sup> On 20 January 1965, Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw from the United Nations. By a telegram of 19 September 1966, it notified the Secretary-General of its decision to resume participation in the activities of the United Nations. On 28 September 1966, the General Assembly took note of that decision and the President invited the representatives of Indonesia to take their seats in the Assembly.

<sup>5</sup> On 16 September 1963, Sabah (North Borneo), Sarawak and Singapore joined with the Federation of Malaya (which became a United Nations Member on 17 September 1957) to form Malaysia. On 9 August 1965, Singapore became an independent State and on 21 September 1965 it became a Member of the United Nations.

<sup>7</sup> Tanganyika was admitted to the United Nations on 14 December 1961, and Zanzibar on 16 December 1963. Following ratification, on 26 April 1964, of the Articles of Union between Tanganyika and Zanzibar, the two States became represented as a single Member: the United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar; it changed its name to the United Republic of Tanzania on 1 November 1964.

<sup>8</sup> Yemen was admitted to the United Nations on 30 September 1947 and Democratic Yemen on 11 December 1967. On 22 May 1990, the two countries merged and have since been represented as one Member.

Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971 and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council", the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED

to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbors, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.
