Foreword

THE 1990s ARE WITHOUT DOUBT an era of dramatic transition and startling contrast. The end of the cold war has encouraged democratization in all parts of the world, but it has also brought increasing national and ethnic strife to many regions. The globalization of economic activity and information has generated untold prosperity and new opportunities, but a growing number of people remain marginalized, mired in chronic, debilitating poverty. The consequences of these and other trends are increasingly felt across national boundaries and require collective action by the international community. More and more in this global age, people and nations are turning to the United Nations, the world's premier global institution.

The Organization's work during 1996 was as diverse as ever, encompassing peace and security issues, human rights, economic and social development, humanitarian assistance, environmental protection and the advancement of international law. One highlight was the observance of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty, which symbolized the commitment of Member States to address the multitude of interrelated problems that plague the majority of the world's population: hunger, disease, unemployment and illiteracy. The United Nations also convened major conferences in two priority areas: the "City Summit", or Habitat II, in Istanbul, to discuss the challenges of a rapidly urbanizing world; and the World Food Summit in Rome, to focus on food security. Civil society was prominently represented at both gatherings, with leaders from business, academia, the media and non-governmental organizations joining Governments to give strength and depth to a consensus that will need to be carried out on many fronts in the decades ahead.

These events and numerous other subjects are covered in the pages of this 1996 edition of the Yearbook of the United Nations. This authoritative record offers compelling testimony to the centrality of the United Nations in today's world. Half a century after its founding, it remains an indispensable instrument and its work continues to touch the lives of people everywhere as it strives to fulfil its Charter-driven mandate of a better life for all.

About the 1996 edition of the Yearbook

This volume of the YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS continues the tradition of providing the most comprehensive and up-to-date coverage of the activities of the United Nations. It is an indispensable reference tool for the research community, diplomats, government officials and the general public seeking readily available information on the UN system and its related organizations.

The Department of Public Information of the United Nations remains committed to a timely annual publication of the YEARBOOK in order to ensure that the public receives detailed and current accounts of the work of the United Nations. However, the efforts to achieve timely publication have resulted in having to rely on provisional documentation and other materials to prepare the relevant articles. Largely, Security Council resolutions, presidential statements and some other texts in the present volume are provisional.

Structure and scope of articles

The Yearbook is subject-oriented and divided into six parts covering political and security questions; human rights issues; economic and social questions; legal questions; institutional, administrative and budgetary questions; and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations. Chapters and topical headings present summaries of pertinent UN activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, on a selective basis, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the respective articles. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of substantive nature adopted in 1996 by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are followed by the procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining); information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption, approved amendments and committee reports; and information on sponsors. Also given are the document symbols of any financial implications and relevant meeting numbers. Details are also provided of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole.

Major reports. Most reports of the Secretary-General, in 1996, along with selected reports from other UN sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the UN regular budget, selected information is given on contributions and expenditures.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topics. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Related organizations. The Yearbook also briefly describes the 1996 activities of the specialized agencies and other related organizations of the UN system.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The user may locate information on the United Nations activities contained in this volume by the use of the Table of Contents, the Subject Index, the Index of Resolutions and Decisions and the Index of Security Council Presidential Statements. The volume also has five appendices: Appendix I comprises a roster of Member States; Appendix II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; Appendix III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations; Appendix IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 1996; and Appendix V gives the addresses of the United Nations information centres and services worldwide.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References in square brackets in each chapter of Parts One to Five of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1996 on the topic. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/51/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the fifty-first session, beginning with A/51/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4.-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals; the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1996/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1996 sessions, beginning with E/1996/1.E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/C.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1996/1); and one for decisions, beginning with 201 (decision 1996/201).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Coordination
CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ECLAC/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designed by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.96.II.A.2; E/F/R.96.II.E.7; E.96.X.1.

Report of the Secretary-General

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

The following are excerpts from the annual report on the work of the Organization for 1996, prepared by then Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali. These include, in full, the Executive Summary, Introduction: Renewal and reform, and Conclusion: Peace, development, democratization. (The full report—which the General Assembly took note of on 11 October by decision 51/404—includes the following three additional sections, entitled: Coordinating a comprehensive strategy and strengthening administrative structures; Building the foundations of peace: development, humanitarian action, human rights; and Preventing, controlling and resolving conflict.) The 1996 report is available as UN document A/51/1 and in book form as a UN sales publication (United Nations Sales No. E.96.I.19, ISBN 92-1-100615-5).

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The fiftieth session of the General Assembly was marked by the largest ever gathering of world leaders during a three-day special commemorative meeting, at which Member States and observers adopted the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations. Some 200 speakers—91 Heads of State, 8 vice-presidents, 1 crown prince, 37 prime ministers, 10 deputy prime ministers, 21 foreign ministers, 9 chairmen of delegations and 23 observers—reaffirmed their commitment to the Charter of the United Nations, expressed gratitude to those who have served the Organization, determined that the United Nations of the future would work with renewed vigour and effectiveness, and pledged to give the twenty-first century a United Nations equipped, financed and structured to serve its peoples.

The General Assembly, its General Committee and Main Committees held 393 meetings during the fiftieth session, compared with 384 during the forty-ninth; informal meetings and consultations totalled 296, versus 266 during the forty-ninth session; and the working groups of the Assembly held 292 meetings, compared with 163 during the previous session. As at 25 July 1996, the Assembly had adopted 321 resolutions during the fiftieth session, compared with 328 during the forty-ninth.

The open-ended working groups of the General Assembly—on an Agenda for Peace, an Agenda for Development, Security Council reform, the financial situation of the United Nations and the strengthening of the United Nations system—worked intensively to improve the effectiveness of the Organization and are scheduled to submit their reports to the Assembly before the end of its fiftieth session.

The number of formal meetings of the Security Council, compared with a similar period last year, decreased from 131 to 106. Consultations of the whole numbered 189, down from 226, resolutions decreased from 63 to 51 and presidential statements from 64 to 49.

This year, the Security Council focused its attention on African affairs, as well as on the former Yugoslavia. The Council also continued its consideration of agenda items dealing with the Americas, the question of sanctions and the various sanctions regimes.

The Economic and Social Council held its substantive session from 24 June to 26 July 1996 in New York. Its high-level segment dealt with an issue of priority on the international agenda, namely, international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and related activities. The coordination segment focused on coordination of activities of the United Nations system for poverty eradication. The operational activities segment focused on strengthening cooperation between the United Nations development system and the Bretton Woods institutions. The Economic and Social Council also adopted a resolution on the consultative relationship between the United Nations and non-governmental organizations.

A report containing Member States' comments on the review of the role of the Trusteeship Council was submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly, at its request.

The International Court of Justice had 14 contentious cases on its docket and two requests for an advisory opinion.

In the Secretariat, considerable progress was made in the implementation of the Secretary-General's comprehensive management reform plan, set out in last year's annual report. Improvement in the management of the Organization's cost structure was a major focus of the past year, during which the Secretary-General proposed and the General Assembly approved the Organization's first zero nominal growth budget.

The $2,608 million in approved appropriations for the biennium 1996-1997 included $154 million in cost reductions mandated by the General Assembly beyond the $98 million already indicated in the Secretary-General's proposed budget. The Secretary-General was asked to propose reductions while ensuring the full implementation of all mandated activities; he has met these cost reductions through a combination of staff cuts and efficiency measures. He was also asked to absorb some $35 million for new unbudgeted mandates; the means of absorption will be reported in the performance report.

Efficiency measures implemented during the past year have led to substantial savings: printing of documents and publications has been cut by 27 per cent since January 1996; by late autumn, more than 270,000 United Nations documents in all official languages will be available electronically in at least 157 countries and the majority of the New York missions; travel has been reduced by 26 per cent in the first six months of 1996; and the consolidation of purchases of foreign currencies, beginning in July, will mean savings of more than $1 million during the biennium.

The financial situation of the United Nations was a major focus of attention throughout the year and remains a matter of urgent concern. As at 31 July 1996, unpaid assessments totalled $3 billion, of which $0.8 billion was due to the regular budget and $2.2 billion to the peacekeeping budget. The recurring need to borrow cash from peacekeeping accounts means that by the end of 1996 the United Nations will owe Member States some $675 million for troops and equipment. While the overall cash-flow situation has improved, the Organization continues to face a worsening regular budget situation, with a persistent negative cash flow already seen and forecast for many months of the year.

The work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development centred around the forty-second session of the Trade and Development Board, which reviewed and made recommendations on the functioning of the intergovernmental machinery of the Conference, and the ninth session of the Conference, held at Midrand, South Africa, from 27 April to 11 May 1996.

The second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) was held at Istanbul from 3 to 14 June 1996. The Conference, which was unique in its openness to representatives of civil society, produced a detailed Habitat Agenda, as well as a commitment by Governments to the progressive realization of the right to housing as provided for in international instruments.

During the period under review, some 23.3 million people have been targeted to receive assistance through United Nations inter-agency appeals, covering Angola, Afghanistan, the Caucasus region, the Russian Federation (Chechnya), the Great Lakes region, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, Sierra Leone, the Sudan and the former Yugoslavia. Of the $2.5 billion requested in the 11 appeals launched since September 1995, a total of $795 million has so far been pledged or carried over.

Between 1 September 1995 and 31 March 1996, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat provided assistance to 31 Member States to help them cope with the impact of 45 natural disasters and environmental emergencies. During the same period, the Department arranged for 13 relief operations from the United Nations Pisa warehouse and dispatched five field missions of its disaster assessment and coordination teams.

Protection and resettlement of refugees remained the focus of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, whose population of concern, at the end of 1995, stood at some 24 million worldwide, including 14.2 million refugees, along with returnees, internally displaced persons and others.

As part of the ongoing effort to implement the "Agenda for Peace", the Organization has strengthened its capacity for preventive action and early warning by setting up an Oversight Group of the Framework for Coordination, already established among the three departments of the Secretariat primarily concerned with the prevention, control and resolution of conflicts, the Departments of Humanitarian Affairs, Political Affairs and Peacekeeping Operations.

The Departments of Political Affairs and Peacekeeping Operations are increasing their co-operation with the Department of Humanitarian Affairs on the Humanitarian Early Warning System.

While the commitment to United Nations peace-keeping declined significantly (67,269 troops were deployed in July 1995 as compared with 24,657 troops in July 1996), the complexity of the tasks entrusted to United Nations personnel did not diminish during the past year, as is revealed by the present report's detailed account of United Nations activities in preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peacekeeping.

During the year under review, the United Nations was involved in 33 peace operations, 17 of which were peacekeeping operations. Progress was made in developing a rapidly deployable headquarters team, in enhancing preparedness for conflict prevention and peacekeeping in Africa and in further developing the system for standby arrangements.

Events over the course of the past year reaffirmed two key lessons: that every peace operation must be deployed with the strength necessary to achieve the tasks entrusted to it and to protect itself, and that no instrument for peace and security can bring about peace without the will of the parties to the conflict to achieve peace.

The past year also witnessed a determined effort by the international community to take action to end the scourge of terrorism. In its resolution 50/53, the General Assembly reaffirmed the 1994 Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, and at the Summit of Peacemakers, on 13 March 1996, the Secretary-General stressed his commitment to work towards adopting concrete measures to end terrorism.

On disarmament, three major long-term multilateral efforts in the nuclear field have strengthened the broad consensus in favour of the global nuclear non-proliferation regime: the signing of the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (15 December 1995), the signing of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (the Pelindaba Treaty) (11 April 1996) and work towards the finalization of the text of a comprehensive test-ban treaty. The period under review was also marked by new and ongoing initiatives in micro-disarmament, not least of which is the effort to achieve a permanent global ban on landmines and their components.

Between August 1995 and April 1996 the United Nations received 16 new requests for electoral assistance; assistance was provided in response to 10 of those requests, as well as to 17 requests received prior to August 1995.

During the period under review, the Departments of Humanitarian Affairs and Peacekeeping Operations were together responsible for mine-clearance programmes in Afghanistan, Angola, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Mozambique and Rwanda, with continuing input into the programmes in Cambodia and the Lao People's Democratic Republic. A one-year programme was completed in Yemen.

Introduction: Renewal and reform

This is my fifth annual report on the work of the Organization, presented in accordance with Article 98 of the Charter of the United Nations. Like the others, it offers a comprehensive overview of improvements in the administration of the Organization and of the full range of its efforts in the service of humanity: to help the afflicted and the suffering; to oppose war, violence and intolerance; to promote the rights and dignity of every individual; and to help bring about the economic, social, political and environmental conditions for long-term human progress.

In the context of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations, the past year has brought a historic recommitment by Member States to the purposes and principles of their Organization. At a three-day special commemorative meeting of the General Assembly, held in October 1995, 128 Heads of State and Government, joined by other high-level representatives of Member States and Permanent Observers, adopted the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations, pledging themselves to give the twenty-first century a United Nations equipped, financed and structured effectively for the peoples of the world, in whose name it was established.

The period covered in the pages of this annual report has, however, also brought indications of a diminished willingness to engage the critical issues on the international agenda through the United Nations. Most notable among these indicators have been the ongoing financial crisis, which so dominated the first part of the year and remains a matter of urgent concern; the decline in peacekeeping activity (where 67,269 troops were deployed in July 1995 as compared with 24,657 in July 1996) without a parallel decline in the level of conflict requiring international attention; and a continuation of the dismaying downward trend in the level of resources made available for development, including through the United Nations system.

Yet over the course of the past year, further substantial progress has been made, as this report reveals, in strengthened administrative procedures, in adapting peacekeeping to new circumstances and in the effectiveness and coherence of development operations. As the rapidly evolving world situation demands new departures in both substance and structures, the United Nations has been undergoing comprehensive change to meet new and emerging problems and to tackle persistent problems in new contexts.

During the past 12 months, reform has been high on the Secretary-General's agenda, as well as on the agenda of the intergovernmental machinery, in particular the work programme of the General Assembly. Five working groups of the Assembly have been addressing major aspects of reform.

In my statement of 11 March 1996 to the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System, I stressed that reform—indeed change in the Organization—should be perceived not as an imposition, not as compromising the objectives of the Charter, but as adapting structures and methods to the new global environment that the Organization has helped to bring about.

During the past year, this perception has gained ground at both the Secretariat and intergovernmental levels. Further concrete reform measures have been introduced. Many objectives that had been pursued without success in the past several years were finally realized. Major challenges, however, still lie ahead.

There are three main levels of institutional reform: intergovernmental, organizational and managerial. Each level differs in both the changes required and in the distribution of responsibility among the Secretary-General and the Member States for the actions necessary to effect those changes. They all must be pursued in a mutually reinforcing way, however. In this respect too, progress has been significant.

In relation to intergovernmental reform—the responsibility for which lies primarily with Member States—three interrelated objectives are, explicitly or implicitly, being pursued: improvements in the effectiveness and functioning of the principal organs; a better balance in the authority of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as envisioned in the Charter; and a streamlining of the subsidiary machinery—an important condition for effective overall reform, particularly in the economic and social fields.

As for the General Assembly, improvements in its functioning have been a major focus in the programme of the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System. At the same time, action has been taken by the Assembly, in its resolution 50/227, to reinforce significantly the coordinating role of the Economic and Social Council.

Equally important, the Assembly instructed the Council to undertake further reviews of its functional and regional commissions and its expert groups. The stage has thus been set not only for greater balance in the functioning of the principal organs, but also for a further streamlining and strengthening of the intergovernmental machinery in the economic and social fields.

Organizational reform concerns the simplification of Secretariat structures and the rationalization of both the multiplicity of programmes and funds and their relationships with the Secretariat. As such, it is a joint responsibility of the Secretary-General and the Member States. The reorganization I introduced soon after taking office, which involved a drastic reduction in the number of high-level posts and a significant simplification in Secretariat structures, was consolidated during the programme budget biennium 1994-1995. That reorganization has, in turn, made it possible to achieve zero nominal growth for the current biennium and has made way for a further phase of reform, involving not only the central Secretariat but also all the programmes and funds comprising the Organization, which I outlined in my statement of 11 March to the High-level Working Group of the General Assembly.

Complementing these two levels of institutional reform, managerial reform, which is primarily under the responsibility of the Secretary-General, is well under way. Progress during the year has been significant in relation to each of the strategic areas of management: human resources, cost structure, information and technology.

With respect to human resources, the system of accountability and responsibility that I presented to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session has been further consolidated. As an integral part of that system, the Code of Conduct of the International Civil Service is being strengthened and updated. A new work planning and appraisal system has been introduced at all duty stations. A comprehensive management training programme has been instituted and has already been completed by over 300 senior managers. The number of women in posts subject to geographical distribution has reached the highest point in United Nations history, and recruitment costs have been reduced by 30 per cent.

As for the management of costs, the current approved budget represents a 10 per cent reduction in real terms and includes cost cuts mandated by the General Assembly of $154 million, beyond the $98 million already indicated in my budget submission. This new budget reduces the total number of staff posts to 12 per cent less than that of 10 years ago. At the same time, the new Integrated Management Information System has enhanced the use of financial, human resource and procurement information, and has strengthened internal controls and accountability.

Progress in the management of technology has also been significant and has affected a wide range of Secretariat operations, from remote translation and text processing to high-speed electronic access to United Nations documents through the new optical disk system, which has served to reduce by thousands the number of documents to be printed and distributed.

Cutting across these three areas, managerial reform has been accelerated by the work of the Efficiency Board I established in November 1995. With guidance from the Board and support from a working group of experts contributed by Member States, every office in the Secretariat has carried out efficiency reviews, involving some 400 projects to enhance management efficiency in the Secretariat. The results achieved to date have contributed to the savings mandated by the General Assembly and to improvements in the services and operations of the Secretariat, and have served to identify a number of areas where further systemic efficiency changes are needed. These are currently being addressed by the Board.

Effective reform in a global institution such as the United Nations must be rooted in a broad consensus on the main features of the new global environment and on the role the Organization is called upon to play in such changing circumstances.

These principles have been the focus of another long-term effort given particular prominence during the past year: the series of global conferences from New York in 1990 to Istanbul in 1996. Undeniably, some of these conferences have been controversial. I believe that, equally undeniably, they have shown that a true international community is coming into being, perhaps for the first time in history, and that it can summon the will and the capacity to deal with issues that nations cannot take on separately nor, indeed, in any manner other than by agreed universal action.

The centuries-old practice of convening international conferences is being transformed into a new mechanism for international cooperation. The new conferences are revolutionary in both form and focus, and, while keeping costs to the minimum, they are producing concrete and far-reaching results.

These conferences have been democratic in form, bringing together, on a basis of equality, representatives of Governments from throughout the world, often at the highest political level. At the same time, they have brought world leaders together with representatives of civil society, from business people to trade unionists, academics, women's groups, professional associations, local authorities and non-governmental organizations of all types.

These conferences have also been democratic in focus and linked so as to foster global consensus on specific, interlocking global issues, by considering their impact on the human person and human communities. A great many of my efforts as Secretary-General have been devoted to ensuring that each conference—on children, the environment and development, human rights, the sustainable development of small island States, natural disaster reduction, population and development, social development, the advancement of women, international trade and development, and human settlements—would build upon its predecessors and carry forward a common human thrust. Together, they are producing cumulative results, offering all development actors—North and South, governmental and non-governmental, public and private—a pragmatic, cooperative and comprehensive approach to the key challenges now faced by every nation in the world and by all nations together.

The results are considerable, starting with hard-won consensus reached on a range of important points, such as the need for a new and equitable partnership among all States, developed and developing, and among government and civil society at all levels, to achieve sustainable development; the recognition of the right to development and of the mutually reinforcing relationship between development, democracy and respect for human rights; the necessity of linking demographic change to development policies; the need to adopt new and more comprehensive policies to address problems of poverty, unemployment and social disintegration as global problems requiring global attention; the importance of a shared approach to common urban crises; and the recognition of the advancement of women as a key to progress in the search for equality, development and peace.

Through the world conferences, consensus reached on these and other fundamental issues is translated into new international norms, agreements and specific commitments, into concrete goals and objectives set by Member States for themselves and for the United Nations. These are then integrated by Member States into national priorities and supported by the United Nations and other organizations through practical programmes and operational activities. Steps are being taken to ensure that the commitments being produced are followed up effectively and efficiently, on a thematic, not simply a conference-by-conference, basis.

For all development actors, the entire conference series has provided an opportunity to forge durable and productive partnerships in the face of new challenges. For the United Nations in particular, the conferences have produced a comprehensive agenda, which gives new direction to the work of the Organization and to the reform and strengthening of its development machinery. This has been supported by new arrangements for inter-secretariat coordination, agreed to by the Administrative Committee on Coordination. It has also helped to promote the revitalization of the Economic and Social Council as the key intergovernmental body for coordination. As part of this process of reform and revitalization, the intergovernmental structure of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and its secretariat and work programme have been streamlined and given a sharper focus. Cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions has been deepened further, as reflected in the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative for Africa. A leaner, more focused, better coordinated United Nations development system is coming into being, oriented to implementing programmes that reflect a broad political consensus on the priorities of development.

Even as the capacity of the United Nations to support development improves, the resources available to it for this purpose are decreasing. During the year the flow of voluntary resources into the United Nations funds and programmes declined. Overall, the flow of official development assistance from countries of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) in 1995 declined in absolute terms to $59 billion and as a percentage of gross national product to 0.27 per cent, a level far below the United Nations target of 0.7 per cent. Thus, for the economic and social sector, this was a year when the capacity to act effectively improved, but the means to do so declined.

The current cycle of global conferences came to a close with the ninth session of UNCTAD and Habitat II. The authority to convene additional world conferences lies with the General Assembly. The work of the past six-year conference series could be enhanced further should the Assembly decide to perform, on a continuing basis, the role that the new world conferences have played so far. The Assembly could decide to oversee and promote action to follow up the conferences that have already been held. It could deal with new global issues as they arise, comprehensively and at the political levels necessary, with the participation of civil society. Finally, the General Assembly would also need to take measures to ensure that the progress already made is not reversed, nor the promise spoiled by the precarious financial situation of the United Nations, which in recent years has proved to be an obstacle to the fundamental work, reform and revitalization of the Organization.

Whatever the mechanism the Member States decide upon to deal with shared global problems, the will to do so will be absolutely essential if the substantial recent achievements of the United Nations are to be consolidated and if a compelling vision for its future is to be fulfilled.

Conclusion: Peace, development, democratization

The pages of this report depict a United Nations in the midst of a dramatic transformation.

The process began with the abrupt end of the cold war, when the bipolar system—a somewhat predictable, if not agreed system, according to which nations could order their relations—suddenly collapsed. With that collapse came a new hope that the promise of the Charter of the United Nations could be renewed, that an international system based on collective security, shared values and cooperative problem-solving could finally be achieved. It is in this context that Member States called the United Nations to action unprecedented in scale or scope.

The transformation has been neither smooth nor easy. The realities and assumptions of 50 years ago cannot simply be recreated, nor can the full dimensions of the changes taking place and their implications be instantly understood. Expectations for the United Nations were too high at the outset of what must inevitably be a long and difficult process, for after every major conflict in history has come to a close, it has taken years, sometimes a generation or more, to put in place a workable and enduring international system. In the aftermath of the cold war, the transformation to a new international system is still under way, but the United Nations, the world's vehicle in this process, has—sometimes painfully, sometimes with success—moved definitively forward. Political realities have been transformed. New forms of international cooperation have been required and continue to take shape. New rules, concepts and procedures are emerging case by case. The structures of the United Nations are being streamlined and opened, the Organization streamlined and deregulated, costs reduced, accountability strengthened and performance improved. In the past five years alone, the distance travelled has been great. The time has come to examine how what has been achieved so far relates to a vision of the United Nations for the period ahead.

The United Nations has worked to bring peace and security to a world in which conflicts and confrontations within States are now more prevalent than was between them. The first-ever Summit Meeting of the Security Council (January 1992) and the subsequent report to the Council on "An Agenda for Peace" launched an international debate on the role of the United Nations in maintaining international peace and security under these new circumstances and engendered an ongoing process of initiative, discovery and reflection. Preventive diplomacy has been identified as a priority, the Organization's capacity for it strengthened and a preventive deployment force authorized for the first time. While traditional United Nations peacekeeping has continued to prove effective in conflict situations between States that have the will to maintain peace, the United Nations has worked to adapt its peacekeeping instrument to deal with internal conflicts through more complex, multifaceted operations. These incorporate elements of traditional peacekeeping with political, social, economic, humanitarian and human rights aspects, an approach that has proved most successful where conflicts are being resolved through processes of negotiation, but has encountered setbacks where war situations continued. An important part of these efforts has been to advance United Nations cooperation with regional organizations in peace and security on an ad hoc basis and under Chapter VIII of the Charter. Another important dimension has been a new emphasis on post-conflict peace-building—linking conflict control and resolution with action to address the roots of conflict and strengthen the basis for reconstruction and development. And disarmament remains integral to United Nations peace efforts; the historic decision reached at the United Nations to extend indefinitely the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons has reaffirmed the process of macro-disarmament as vigorous and essential, while steps are being taken to explore the new idea of micro-disarmament, with a view to its integration into the wider context of preventive diplomacy and peace-building.

In human rights and humanitarian assistance, the United Nations has continued to serve as the universal forum for advancing consensus and as a coordinating mechanism among the many organizations active in the field. While the easing of ideological tensions and the acceleration of democratization has spurred progress on one level, the new conflicts have all too often been accompanied by massive human rights violations and humanitarian emergencies, posing new challenges. The United Nations in response has moved to integrate, to the extent possible, its human rights and humanitarian efforts with its peace efforts and to link both areas of effort to its work for reconstruction and development; mechanisms to those ends have been strengthened at Headquarters to enhance substantive and logistical support for forging such linkages and cooperation in the field. The Organization has pursued closer cooperation with its key operational partners, governmental and non-governmental, in the human rights and humanitarian communities. At the request of Member States, it has deployed human rights field presences in several countries. It has expanded its advisory services and technical cooperation for building national human rights and humanitarian infrastructure, and it has strengthened its capacity for and emphasis on early warning and preventive action.

Development and democratization can themselves be the most effective forms of conflict prevention. The United Nations has therefore endeavoured to ensure that urgent efforts in peacekeeping and humanitarian assistance do not detract from long-term efforts for human progress.

Facing a sharp decline in international development assistance, the United Nations has worked to forge international agreement on a new rationale and framework for development cooperation, through the ongoing debate on the "Agenda for Development". As an integral part of this process, the continuum of global conferences has produced specific commitments and is giving shape to the comprehensive agenda and cooperative framework that are now needed. My contribution to this process, through my reports on "An Agenda for Development" and promotion of an integrated approach to the preparation of these conferences, has been followed by an unprecedented effort on the part of the United Nations system as a whole to bring about a coordinated follow-up to their outcomes around common priority themes—employment, social services, the enabling environment, the advancement of women and poverty reduction.

Meanwhile, the Secretariat has continued to work to achieve greater efficiency and effectiveness in carrying out policy analysis and operational mandates and in utilizing the development assistance provided by Member States. Working to define better the Organization's role and to strengthen its capacity in the three key areas of information-gathering and analysis, policy coordination and technical cooperation for capacity-building has not only served to sharpen its own contribution and impact, but has also greatly advanced efforts to achieve a more effective division of labour within the United Nations system as a whole. New levels of cooperation have been reached between the United Nations and the agencies of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, one major coordinated effort being the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative for Africa, designed to mobilize, coherently and efficiently, international support for Africa's priority development goals.

Supporting democratization is becoming a new thrust in the work of the United Nations. Electoral assistance from the United Nations continues to grow, while the full range of support for societies to prepare the institutional and cultural ground in which democratization can take shape is being expanded in the increasing number of Member States that seek it. At the same time, the United Nations is working to promote democratization internationally. One way of doing this is by opening United Nations forums to the views of non-State actors, such as regional organizations, non-governmental organizations, parliamentarians, members of the academic and business communities and the media. Another integral element of the United Nations efforts to promote democratization internationally is the ongoing effort to promote respect for the rule of law in international relations and the progressive development of international law. Major steps in this direction include the increased use by Member States of the International Court of Justice in both dispute settlement and the provision of advisory opinions, the entry into force of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, the establishment by the Security Council of international tribunals to judge war crimes and crimes against humanity in the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, and the beginning of negotiations on the establishment of a permanent international criminal court.

This surge in new activity and substantive change across the spectrum of United Nations efforts has both demanded and enabled major institutional reform. This report details my ongoing effort at the managerial level towards a mission-driven, result-oriented Organization, showing enhanced performance, improved productivity and increased cost-effectiveness.

The simplification of Secretariat structures that I have introduced—to reflect not the structures but the key areas of work of the intergovernmental machinery—has paved the way for a further reorganization at the Secretariat level, which, as I indicated last March in my statement to the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System, must encompass not only the central Secretariat but also the secretariats of the many programmes and funds of the Organization. The aim would be to achieve a more integrated Organization—one in which the central Secretariat, the regional structures and the operational entities could plan and act as one.

Like my earlier initiatives on organizational reform, this initiative is designed to avoid the common flaw of restructuring exercises in years past, which was to create additional layers of coordination, superimposed on multiple and diverse entities. Instead, the guiding principle of my initiatives has been and will continue to be simplification and consolidation, achieved through a "bottom up" approach to eliminate duplication in support services and overlap in activities.

This further phase of reorganization would group all entities that are part of the Organization into a small number of clusters. Each cluster would undertake a set of central Secretariat responsibilities and would comprise related programmes and funds contributing to common objectives and functions. Clusters would thus serve to advance strategic objectives of the Organization as a whole—peace and security, human rights, humanitarian assistance, economic and social analysis, operational activities for development. At the same time, management support and services would be further consolidated and strengthened. Each cluster would include not only the programmes and funds that would be its main pillars but also a capacity, drawn from existing Secretariat departments, to provide integrated support to the intergovernmental body charged with imparting overall policy direction to the work of the entities constituting each cluster.

From my experience over the past five years, I am convinced that the personal and direct involvement of the Secretary-General is essential to effective management, in particular at times of mass change. For such involvement to be sustained and in fact enhanced, some form of substantial reduction in the number of lines of reporting to the Secretary-General—there are now some 30 United Nations entities reporting to him directly—is seriously needed. While preserving the distinct identity of the various programmes and funds, reorganization along the lines suggested above would establish broader spheres of management responsibility and significantly reduce the number of lines of reporting to the Secretary-General. It would assist the Secretary-General in imparting common management directives to entities that contribute to common objectives and together represent a basic dimension of the Organization's work. It would also facilitate the crucial task of promoting effective linkages among the basic dimensions of the work of the United Nations, thereby sustaining the unitary character of its mission, as envisaged in the Charter.

The implementation of such an initiative, or other further progress in reform at the managerial and organizational levels, will require endorsement and complementary initiatives at the intergovernmental level. One major requirement in this regard will be for Member States to strengthen the capacity of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council to provide coherent overall guidance to the basic dimensions of the work of the Organization. This is one important aspect of the major questions of intergovernmental reform now before five open-ended working groups of the General Assembly: on an Agenda for Peace, an Agenda for Development, the financial situation of the United Nations, Security Council reform, and the strengthening of the United Nations system.

Reform, both political and institutional, must be ongoing. It is a process, not an event. There is no one point where the United Nations could declare reform "done". But the current critical phase of transformation can be brought to completion, and it must be, if we are to put the United Nations firmly on the road to a future in which collective security, the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and the promotion of social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom can proceed as intended by the Charter.

Reform efforts in the past year have shown us the future of the Organization. It is in essence a simple vision—a vision of a United Nations that works.

Political and security questions

Chapter I

International peace and security

The maintenance and promotion of international peace and security was a primary focus of United Nations activities during 1996. To achieve its objectives in that area, the Organization was involved in a wide range of peacekeeping operations, as well as preventive diplomacy and peace-making activities, post-conflict peace-building, the application of sanctions and efforts towards disarmament (see PART ONE, Chapter VII).

During the year, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations recommended action to improve the planning, management and financing of UN missions, to reinforce cooperation with regional organizations, and to strengthen the rapid deployment capacity of the United Nations by enhancing standby arrangements between the Organization and Member States for resources to be used in UN operations. The General Assembly endorsed those recommendations in December.

Over the course of 1996, there were 19 United Nations peacekeeping operations deployed worldwide, with more than 25,000 military and civilian police personnel serving by mid-year under UN command—virtually no change since the end of the previous year, but a marked decline from the 67,000 peacekeepers who had been deployed in mid-1995. By the end of 1996, there were 16 UN operations, three of them new—two in Croatia, the third in Haiti. Another three UN missions—in Croatia, Rwanda and Haiti—completed their mandates during the year.

In addition to its widespread deployment of peacekeeping operations, the United Nations used other means to address conflict situations: the Secretary-General's special representatives, special envoys and other emissaries in a number of countries and territories, including Afghanistan, Burundi, Cambodia, El Salvador, Sierra Leone and Somalia; mine clearance (demining) activities; electoral assistance programmes; and missions to monitor and protect human rights, as in El Salvador, Guatemala and Haiti.

The cost of UN peacekeeping operations during the year was estimated at $1.4 billion, compared with $3.2 billion in 1995, while unpaid assessed contributions from Member States to the peacekeeping budget amounted to $2.2 billion as at 31 July 1996, further exacerbating the severe finanacial situation of the Organization (see PART FIVE, Chapter II).

The General Assembly in 1996 considered various aspects of peacekeeping financing, including reimbursement for contingent-owned equipment, third-party claims against UN operations, entitlements of peacekeeping personnel, the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund, the support account for peacekeeping operations, unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, and apportionment of costs among Member States, as well as management of peacekeeping assets and procurement reform.

In March 1996, the Security Council set out new procedures for consultation and exchange of information with troop-contributing countries. In August, it made recommendations concerning mine clearance in the context of peacekeeping.

Agenda for Peace

In his August 1996 report on the work of the Organization [A/51/1], the Secretary-General noted that the General Assembly's Informal Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Peace continued to discuss his recommendations for developing UN activities related to international peace and security, as set out in his 1992 report, "An Agenda for Peace" [YUN 1992, p. 35], and its 1995 Supplement [YUN 1995, p. 175]. The Working Group focused its deliberations on four key areas: preventive diplomacy and peacemaking; post-conflict peace-building; coordination; and the question of UN-imposed sanctions. Such active consideration by the Assembly of his recommendations, the Secretary-General said, was further testimony to the belief that conflict prevention through early warning, quiet diplomacy and, in some cases, preventive deployment was better than undertaking major politico-military efforts to resolve conflicts after they had broken out.

In that regard, he reaffirmed the importance of coordination among various UN elements in averting or mitigating the effects of complex crises, and pointed out that the Secretariat's Departments of Political Affairs, Humanitarian Affairs and Peacekeeping Operations—those primarily concerned with conflict prevention, control and resolution—continued to operate within the Framework for Coordination, established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 177] and involving routine monitoring and early-warning analysis, formulation of options for preventive action, fact-finding, planning and implementation of field operations, and conduct of evaluations or "lessons-learned" exercises. A standing Oversight Group of senior officers, set up in December 1995, held weekly meetings to review crisis situations and to ensure interdepartmental consultations on a given crisis, if such were warranted. Work also had begun to improve coordination at the country level, in pre-mission planning and in end-of-mission assessments. The Secretary-General pointed out that he continued regularly to brief troop-contributing Governments and to engage in dialogue with them about the conduct of particular operations.

Special Committee consideration. In its May report [A/51/130 & Corr.1] to the General Assembly, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations pointed out that peacekeeping, while a key UN instrument for maintaining international peace and security, was not a preferred method of containing conflicts. It emphasized the importance of conflict prevention, in part so as to avoid the need for new peacekeeping operations, and of the pacific settlement of disputes by the parties concerned through negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional arrangements or other peaceful means. In the Committee's view, the United Nations should explore ways to do more in that regard. It noted that the use of preventive deployment, in one particular case, was contributing to the maintenance of peace and security.

The Special Committee took note of the ongoing work of the Informal Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Peace on the issues of preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, sanctions, coordination and post-conflict peace-building.

Working Group activities. On 16 September, the General Assembly President informed the Assembly that sub-groups of the Informal Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Peace—on coordination and on the question of UN-imposed sanctions—had concluded their work and arrived at provisional texts. However, owing to time constraints and ongoing consultations, the Working Group had been unable to conclude the rest of its work dealing with preventive diplomacy and peacemaking and with post-conflict peace-building. In that regard, it was decided that the Working Group should continue its work during the Assembly's fifty-first session.

Preventive diplomacy and peacemaking

In his report on the work of the Organization [A/51/1], the Secretary-General noted that Member States continued to attach importance to preventive diplomacy and peacemaking as the most cost-effective ways of preventing new disputes from arising and existing ones from escalating into conflicts, as well as controlling and resolving ongoing conflicts. He was mandated by the General Assembly and the Security Council to maintain existing efforts and undertake new ones in that field, and his special representatives, special envoys and other emissaries were actively engaged in helping him implement those mandates in Afghanistan, Burundi, Cambodia, Cyprus, East Timor, El Salvador, Georgia, Guatemala, Haiti, Liberia, Myanmar, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Tajikistan and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia; it was also expected that such efforts would soon commence in Rwanda. In addition, the United Nations, often in cooperation with appropriate regional organizations, maintained its involvement and followed developments regarding the situations concerning the Nagorny Karabakh region of Azerbaijan, Cameroon and Nigeria, Eritrea and Yemen, Guyana and Venezuela, the Korean peninsula, Nigeria, the Papua New Guinea island of Bougainville and the Sudan.

The Secretary-General pointed out that, in addition to diplomacy, several other forms of action had proved in recent years to have had a useful preventive effect: preventive deployment; preventive disarmament; preventive humanitarian action; and preventive peace-building, which could involve, with the consent of the Government concerned, a wide range of actions in the areas of good governance, human rights and economic and social development. He therefore concluded that the activity referred to as "preventive diplomacy" should be renamed "preventive action". He further clarified that the term "peacemaking", as employed by the United Nations, referred to the use of diplomatic means to persuade parties in conflict to cease hostilities and negotiate a peaceful settlement of their dispute, and that it thus excluded the use of force against one of the parties to enforce an end to hostilities—an activity referred to in UN parlance as "peace enforcement".

Post-conflict peace-building

conflict peace-building, the primary goal of which was to avert the revival of conflicts that had been brought under control. Those efforts attempted to address the causes underlying disputes and thus to consolidate peace. He noted that, judging from accumulated experience in that area, the Organization could play an important role in: identifying situations where its assistance would help to reduce the chances of a conflict recurrence; elaborating, in consultation with the Government concerned, appropriate measures to that end; mobilizing relevant UN bodies to carry out assistance programmes for reconstruction and rehabilitation; and monitoring the impact of peace-building activities on reducing the risk of a revived conflict. Recent experience, he said, also showed the importance of the contribution made to those efforts by two specific types of activity—mine clearance (see below) and electoral assistance.

In the period between August 1995 and July 1996, the United Nations had received 25 new requests for electoral assistance from 21 States and the Palestinian Authority, the Secretary-General went on. In addition, the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) had been given a mandate to organize elections in Eastern Slavonia, in Croatia. From January to July 1996, the Organization had received 18 requests for such assistance, of which 11 had been accepted, compared with 22 requests received and 17 accepted for the whole of 1995. Electoral assistance was also provided in 1996 to 15 States in response to requests received before August 1995, as well as to UN missions in Guatemala and in Western Sahara; five requests remained under consideration. The type of assistance included coordination and support, short-term observation, verification, and organization and conduct of elections.

Standby arrangements

In 1996, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations reiterated its concern over the length of time taken to deploy operations after the establishment of mandates by the Security Council and urged the Secretariat to continue improving the Organization's rapid deployment capacity. In that regard, the Committee welcomed the Secretariat's efforts to develop further the system of standby arrangements, whereby Member States identified specific resources to be made available, within agreed response times, for UN missions. Given the lack of certain specialized units in standby arrangements, States were invited to participate in such areas as headquarters support, sea/airlift provision, communications personnel, engineers, logistics and medical staff; they were also encouraged to provide information on the period of time required for the deployment of standby forces. The Secretariat was requested to keep Member States informed with regard to the development and composition of a rapidly deployable headquarters team.

Noting that some troop contributors were not always in a position to equip their troops adequately for peacekeeping operations, the Special Committee reiterated its request that the Secretary-General consider ways of addressing the problem, and welcomed in that regard the creation of partnerships between Governments that required equipment and those willing to provide it.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 Security Council request [YUN 1994, p. 119], the Secretary-General on 24 December 1996 reported [S/1996/1067] on the current status of standby arrangements. As at 30 November, 62 Member States had confirmed their willingness to provide standby resources totalling some 80,000 personnel, up from 47 States and 55,000 personnel in October 1995. Five of them—Austria, Denmark, Ghana, Jordan and Malaysia—formalized their standby contributions through a memorandum of understanding. In addition, 41 Governments provided detailed information on specific capabilities of their standby resources, which was included in the Secretariat's database and which had proved most helpful, the Secretary-General said, in the planning for and subsequent deployment to operations in Angola, Haiti and the former Yugoslavia, particularly UNTAES.

The Secretary-General noted that standby resources included elements of different sizes, varying from infantry battalions to individual military observers, and covered the whole range of components envisaged for peacekeeping operations. However, as the bulk of resources consisted of infantry, they had to be complemented with logistic support in such areas as sea/airlift, communications, multi-role logistics, transport, health services, engineering, mine clearance and transport utility aircraft; in addition, there was a need for more civilian police personnel.

Although standby arrangements were also expected to cover civilian resources, little progress had been achieved in that area; nevertheless, the Secretariat had recently observed a growing interest by Governments in contributing civilian services which, in some cases, substituted for military resources, such as the use of civilian organizations to provide medical support for peacekeeping missions.

The Secretariat continued to register response times—defined as the period between the request for resources and when resources were ready for air/sealift to a mission area—according to the declared individual capacities of Member States, which varied from 7 to more than 90 days. Although some 40 per cent of resources had a response time of 30 days or less, and 16 per cent, of 60 days, the UN capacity for rapid deployment continued to be impeded by such factors as political approval and support at the national level, availability of air/sealift, a capacity for mission management and logistic sustainment in the field, and the conclusion of necessary administrative procedures.

Noting that peacekeeping units were currently required to sustain themselves for a minimum of 60 days, to allow for the establishment of UN logistic support, the Secretary-General drew attention to the elaboration of a contribution agreement for the provision of personnel, equipment and services in support of missions, under which the level of logistic support provided by the United Nations was expected to decrease (see below, under "Financing of peacekeeping operations"). In that regard, he believed that to save time preliminary contribution agreements between the Secretariat and Member States should be drawn up in advance and finalized before deployment. Other efforts to facilitate the rapid deployment of missions included the development of a rapidly deployable mission headquarters (RDMHQ), the skeleton of which was established within the Secretariat, to enable quick deployment of essential civilian and military personnel to the mission area for the first three to six months of the operation. RDMHQ, consisting of both earmarked Secretariat personnel and personnel nominated by Governments and remaining in their home country until deployment, was expected to become functional in early 1997.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General, noting the progress in the development of the standby arrangements system, reiterated his suggestion for the establishment of bilateral partnerships between Governments that needed equipment for their peacekeeping troops and those ready to provide it, and pointed to the need to broaden the geographical base of available resources, as well as to achieve a proper mix of troops and supporting units.

Communications. In response to a 1995 statement [YUN 1995, p. 177] by the Security Council President, several Governments submitted in 1996 their suggestions on ways to improve the UN rapid deployment capacity.

By an 18 January letter [A/50/869-S/1996/71], France communicated an aide-memoire, examining the implementation and refinement of the standby arrangements system, establishment of rapid deployment units, development of planning capacities, and improvement of command structures of peacekeeping operations. On 29 February, Denmark transmitted a report [A/51/75-S/1996/166] by a Danish-led military working group, comprising also 10 participating Governments and two observer States, on cooperation modalities for the establishment of a multinational UN standby-forces high-readiness brigade, to enhance the UN rapid response capacity. A 31 July reply [A/51/273-S/1996/630] from the United Kingdom dealt with, inter alia, the training and planning for peacekeeping missions, their command and control, the mission plan, operational-level command arrangements, rapid response capability, public information and community relations, as well as finance, logistics, commercial contracts and "lessons learned".

Consultations with troop contributors

On 28 March, the Security Council President made the following statement [S/PRST/1996/13] on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has reviewed the arrangements for consultation and exchange of information with troop-contributing countries, which were established by the statement of its President made on behalf of the Council on 4 November 1994. The Council has given careful consideration to the views expressed on this question in its debate under the item "An Agenda for Peace: Peacekeeping" in its 3611th meeting on 20 December 1995, as well as to the views expressed in debates in the General Assembly.

The Security Council has noted the wish expressed in these debates that arrangements for consultation and exchange of information with troop-contributing countries should be improved. The Council shares this wish. It considers it essential for troop-contributing countries to be heard. It notes that many of the concerns expressed would be met if the arrangements set out in the statement of its President of 4 November 1994 were fully implemented. It is also of the view that those arrangements can be strengthened further as set forth below.

The Security Council will therefore follow in future the procedures here set out:

(a) Meetings will be held as a matter of course between members of the Council, troop-contributing countries and the Secretariat for the purpose of consultations and the exchange of information and views; the meetings will be chaired by the Presidency of the Council supported by a representative of the Secretariat;

(b) The meetings will be held as soon as practicable and in good time before the Council takes decisions on the extension or termination of, or significant changes in, the mandate of a particular peacekeeping operation;

(c) When the Council considers establishing a new peacekeeping operation, meetings will, unless it proves to be impracticable, be held with any prospective troop contributors who have already been approached by the Secretariat and who have indicated that they may be willing to contribute to the operation;

(d) The President of the Council will, in the course of informal consultations of members of the Council, report the views expressed by participants at each meeting with troop-contributing or prospective troop-contributing countries;

(e) The existing practice of inviting to these meetings Member States which make special contributions to peacekeeping operations other than troops—that is, contributions to trust funds, logistics and equipment—will continue;

(f) The monthly tentative forecast of work of the Council made available to Member States will include an indication of the expected schedule of such meetings for the month;

(g) Ad hoc meetings may be convened in the event of unforeseen developments in a particular peacekeeping operation which could require action by the Council;

(h) These meetings will be in addition to those convened and chaired by the Secretariat for troop contributors to meet with special representatives of the Secretary-General or force commanders, or to discuss operational matters concerning particular peacekeeping operations, to which members of the Security Council will also be invited;

(i) Background information and an agenda will be circulated by the Secretariat to the participants well in advance of each of the various meetings referred to above; members of the Council may also circulate information as appropriate;

(j) Interpretation services in all the official languages of the Organization will continue to be available; translation of written documents will continue to be available, if possible in advance of the meetings;

(k) The time and venue of each meeting should, where possible, appear in advance in the Journal of the United Nations;

(l) The Council will append to its annual report to the General Assembly information about these meetings.

The Security Council recalls that the arrangements described above are not exhaustive. They do not preclude consultations in a variety of forms, including informal communication between the Council President or its members and troop-contributing countries and, as appropriate, with other countries especially affected, for example, countries from the region concerned.

The Security Council will continue to keep arrangements for consultations and the exchange of information and views with troop contributors and prospective contributors under review and stands ready to consider further measures and new mechanisms to enhance further the arrangements in the light of experience.

Meeting number. SC 3645.

Special Committee consideration. At its 1996 session, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations welcomed the arrangements for consultation and exchange of information with troop-contributing countries, set out in the above statement by the Security Council President, and noted that they strengthened the arrangements established by a 1994 statement [YUN 1994, p. 120] on the subject. The Special Committee noted that the new procedures were not exhaustive and did not preclude consultations with other countries especially affected, such as countries from the region concerned. It encouraged the Security Council and troop contributors to make full use of the arrangements, and the Council to continue considering the matter further.

Peacekeeping operations

General aspects

In his report on the work of the Organization [A/51/1], issued in August 1996, the Secretary-General observed that UN peacekeeping remained a dynamic and demanding activity, responding to continuing turbulence in relations between States as well as to armed conflict within State borders. While the number of peacekeeping personnel had declined dramatically—from 67,269 in July 1995 to 25,296 in July 1996—the complexity of their tasks had not diminished. Most operations were confronted with exceedingly difficult missions, reflecting the fact that many conflicts were fought within States, not only by regular armies but also by militias and civilians with ill-defined chains of command, and were sometimes marked by the collapse of State institutions and a breakdown of law and order. Ceasefire agreements, when achieved, were often fragile, whereas humanitarian emergencies were commonplace and often exacerbated by deliberate obstruction of relief efforts by warring parties.

Negotiated settlements had to cover a wide range of military, political, humanitarian and civilian matters, and be supported by sustained peacekeeping efforts to ensure compliance with their provisions; they also required long-term programmes based on contributions from different parts of the UN system and aimed at addressing the root causes of a conflict and promoting national reconciliation.

In addition to problems encountered in implementing their mandates, UN peacekeeping operations were adversely affected by the financial crisis of the Organization, the Secretary-General stated. As at 31 July 1996, unpaid contributions for peacekeeping budgets totalled $2.2 billion, while the amount owed by the United Nations to Member States for troops and equipment was expected to reach $675 million by year's end. As a result, troop contributors had to bear the additional burden of financing the shortfalls of UN missions.

Difficulties in the rapid deployment of UN missions remained a matter of great concern. Work advanced towards developing a rapidly deployable headquarters team composed of personnel skilled in military and civilian headquarters functions, as part of action to improve the UN rapid reaction capacity, and significant progress was achieved in elaborating further the standby arrangement system with Member States (see above). Member States and the UN Secretariat had also been working to devise ways to cope with lower revenues in the support account for peacekeeping operations, which funded a large majority of those needed to set up, manage and support missions (see below).

The Secretary-General observed that in the course of the year, two key lessons derived from peacekeeping operations had been reaffirmed: one, that every mission should be deployed with the strength necessary to achieve the tasks entrusted to it and to protect itself, so as to avoid jeopardizing the credibility of the Organization and the safety of its personnel; the other, that no instrument for peace and security could bring about a lasting solution without the will for peace by the parties to the conflict. In the international effort to help parties to a conflict reach an agreement, positive incentives were ultimately more effective than coercion, and a UN peacekeeping operation provided one such incentive by contributing to a climate of confidence. In the Secretary-General's view, UN capacity in that respect would be strengthened if the chief of mission were enabled to provide some direct development assistance to those affected; such assistance had proved valuable in the past and had served as an important element in the mission's overall success.

The Secretary-General further described action to implement his 1992 report, "An Agenda for Peace" [YUN 1992, p. 35], and its 1995 Supplement [YUN 1995, p. 175], and reviewed activities in the areas of preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and post-conflict peace-building, as well as cooperation with regional organizations in that respect (see below). He noted in conclusion that while traditional UN peacekeeping continued to prove effective in conflict situations between States that had the will to maintain peace, the Organization was working to adapt its peacekeeping instrument to deal with internal conflicts through more complex, multifaceted operations. These incorporated elements of traditional peacekeeping with political, social, economic, humanitarian and human rights aspects, engaged the cooperation of regional organizations under Chapter VIII of the United Nations Charter, and placed a new emphasis on post-conflict peace-building, linking conflict control and resolution with action to address the roots of conflict and strengthen the basis for reconstruction and development. Disarmament also remained integral to UN peace efforts, with steps being taken to explore the new idea of micro-disarmament and its integration into the wider context of preventive diplomacy and peace-building (see PART ONE, Chapter VII).

Comprehensive review of peacekeeping

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations

As requested by the General Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 308], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations continued a comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects. In 1996, the Committee held five meetings in New York (1-3 April); deliberations were summarized in its report [A/51/130 & Corr.1] to the General Assembly.

The Special Committee noted a recent decrease in the establishment of new operations and a decline in the number of peacekeepers deployed. It observed that those developments provided an opportunity to enhance the efficiency of the Secretariat's Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO), implement Committee recommendations and respond to relevant lessons learned from recent experiences. The Committee stressed the importance of consistent application of the principles and standards it had set forth for the establishment and conduct of peacekeeping operations, and emphasized the need to continue considering those principles, as well as peacekeeping definitions, in a systematic fashion and in the light of the lessons learned.

It was underscored that respect for the principles of sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States and non-intervention in matters that were essentially within a State's domestic jurisdiction were crucial to common efforts, including peacekeeping, to promote international peace and security, and that respect for basic principles of peacekeeping, such as the consent of the parties, impartiality and the non-use of force except in self-defence, were essential to the success of missions. The Special Committee also emphasized the importance of providing peacekeeping operations with clearly defined mandates, objectives, command structures and secure financing, and of ensuring congruence between mandates, resources and objectives. In cases where an existing operation was given additional mandates, the resources necessary for their implementation should also be made available.

Stressing the need to ensure the unity of command and control of peacekeeping missions, the Committee reaffirmed that the overall political direction and control of UN-mandated operations devolved upon the Security Council, while the execution of UN peacekeeping was the responsibility of the Secretary-General. In that regard, the Secretary-General was encouraged to continue to improve the structure and capacity for successful planning and management of operations, both at Headquarters and in the field, giving due regard to the principles of equitable geographical and gender representation. The UN Secretariat was urged to issue guidelines for the provision of specialists for peacekeeping operations, similar to previously published guidelines for provision of military observers, civilian police and military contingents. Noting the important work undertaken by the recently established "lessons learned" unit of DPKO, the Special Committee considered it important that the unit's work be distributed to Member States and to the Committee itself for consideration, and urged the Secretariat to provide studies completed by the unit in all UN official languages; the Secretary-General was urged to seek regular, predictable financing for the unit. The Committee also made a number of recommendations dealing with the financing of DPKO and peacekeeping in general, as well as with personnel issues, inventory and control of peacekeeping assets and procurement procedures (see below, under "Financing of peacekeeping operations").

The need to enhance cooperation between peacekeeping missions and other related UN activities was stressed, and the Secretary-General was requested to ensure cooperation with other agencies of the UN system. The Special Committee also reaffirmed the importance of an effective public information capacity as an integral part of operations, appropriate to their size and targeting the local population in order to spread awareness of the operation's nature and purposes. With regard to the safety and security of missions, the Committee expressed its grave concern regarding all attacks and acts of violence against UN peacekeeping and associated personnel; welcomed the adoption by the General Assembly in 1994 of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel [GA res. 49/59]; and emphasized that safety and security constituted integral elements of operation planning. The Secretariat was urged to intensify efforts to provide adequate protection and safety for peacekeepers and to consider measures for preventing attacks of all kinds against both UN personnel and civilians.

While reaffirming that the training of peacekeeping personnel was essentially the responsibility of Member States, the Special Committee underscored the UN role in coordinating such training activity, establishing basic guidelines and performance standards and providing advisory services and descriptive materials. It welcomed the development of peacekeeping training modules for national staff colleges and the UN staff college, as well as the increased training of both field and Headquarters personnel through the deployment of training assistance teams and instructors. The Secretary-General was encouraged to expand further the use of such teams and to continue holding regional training workshops, developing regional pools of instructors, and sharing training information among national and regional training institutions and the Secretariat.

Noting the progress made in elaborating a code of conduct for UN peacekeeping personnel, consistent with applicable international humanitarian law, the Committee urged its early completion. It further urged the Secretariat to respect the principle of multilingualism in all its training activities, and requested that the linguistic composition of operations be taken into account, where practicable, in the provision of manuals and handbooks for field personnel in languages other than UN official languages.

The Special Committee, noting the increasing use of civilian police in missions, urged the Secretary-General to strengthen further the DPKO civilian police unit, and it encouraged the Secretariat to identify particular police skill requirements for peacekeeping operations, to coordinate national civilian training programmes for such operations, and to take differences in national rank levels into account in its operational planning. Particular attention should be given in status-of-forces agreements with host countries to the safety and security of civilian police officers. The Committee also welcomed the development of educational materials to assist Member States in training civilian police, as well as the use of special teams to assist in selecting civilian police for peacekeeping operations. States were encouraged to include police elements among units identified in their standby arrangements with the United Nations. The Special Committee made other recommendations concerning rapid deployment and standby arrangements, and consultations with troop-contributing countries (see above), as well as cooperation with regional arrangements (see below).

In addition, it was recommended that the Special Committee's membership be expanded in 1997 to include past or present peacekeeping personnel-contributing States as well as States observers at the Committee's 1996 session. It was further recommended that, in future, States which became personnel contributors be allowed to become Committee members, as well as those States having participated for three consecutive years in Committee sessions as observers.

Note on JIU report. By a 28 June note [A/50/576/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his comments on a 1995 report by the Joint Inspection Unit [YUN 1995, p. 305] concerning the military component of UN peacekeeping operations.

He noted that most recommendations in the report either corresponded to the established policy and standard practice of the Secretariat, coincided with the course of action currently followed or had already been implemented. However, the Secretary-General took exception to the report's assessment that the integration of military and civilian aspects in the management of peacekeeping operations was not fully developed; that DPKO had not solved the problem of mounting a mission with troops from countries with dissimilar levels of development and differing standards; that the integration of the Field Administration and Logistics Division into DPKO was not complete; that neither the Department of Humanitarian Affairs nor the Department of Political Affairs had participated sufficiently in the planning of peacekeeping operations; and that such participation should be further institutionalized.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/136.

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965 and all other relevant resolutions,

Recalling in particular its resolution 50/30 of 6 December 1995,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization,

Welcoming the statement of 28 March 1996 by the President of the Security Council on the arrangements for improved consultation and exchange of information with troop-contributing countries,

Affirming that the efforts of the United Nations in the peaceful settlement of disputes, including through its peacekeeping operations, are indispensable,

Convinced of the need for the United Nations to continue to improve its capabilities in the field of peacekeeping and to enhance the effective and efficient deployment of its peacekeeping missions,

Considering the contribution that all States Members of the Organization make to peacekeeping,

Taking note of the widespread interest in contributing to the work of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations expressed by many Member States, including troop-contributing countries,

Bearing in mind the continuous necessity of preserving the efficiency and strengthening the effectiveness of the work of the Special Committee,

1. Welcomes the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations;

2. Endorses the proposals, recommendations and conclusions of the Special Committee contained in paragraphs 29 to 85 of its report;

3. Urges Member States, the Secretariat and relevant organs of the United Nations to take all necessary steps to implement the proposals, recommendations and conclusions of the Special Committee;

4. Decides to expand the membership of the Special Committee in accordance with the provisions of its report; those Member States which are past or present personnel contributors to United Nations peacekeeping operations and those which were observers at the 1996 session of the Special Committee shall, upon request in writing to the Chairman of the Committee, become members at its 1997 session;

5. Decides also that those Member States which become personnel contributors to United Nations peacekeeping operations in years to come or participate in the future in the Special Committee for three consecutive years as observers shall, upon request in writing to the Chairman of the Committee, become members at the following session of the Committee;

6. Decides further that the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate, shall continue its efforts for a comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects, and shall review the implementation of its previous proposals and consider new proposals so as to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to fulfil its responsibilities in this field;

7. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects".

Operations in 1996

As of 1 January 1996, there were 16 United Nations peacekeeping operations in place—4 in Africa, 1 in the Americas, 3 in the Middle East, 3 in Asia and 5 in Europe. During the year, with the termination of three operations (one each in Africa, the Americas and Europe) and the launching of three more (one in the Americas and two in Europe), a total of 19 UN peacekeeping operations had been deployed; by year's end, the total was again 16.

The focus in Europe was in the area of the former Yugoslavia, with the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia (UNCRO) terminated on 15 January 1996 as a result of positive political developments at the end of 1995. (An umbrella operation—the United Nations Peace Forces Headquarters (UNPF-HQ), located in Zagreb, Croatia—was terminated on 31 January.)

Two new operations were launched in January 1996. The United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) was established on 15 January to assist the Croatian Government and local Serb representatives in Croatia in implementing the Basic Agreement for the region signed in late 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 587]; by year's end, it numbered more than 5,000 personnel. A separate United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP), formerly part of UNCRO, was established in January 1996 to continue monitoring demilitarization activities on the peninsula. In November, the mission numbered 27 military observers.

The mandate of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH), which included the International Police Task Force (IPTF), established in December 1995, was extended until 21 December 1997. The 1,000-member United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, created in 1995 as a result of the restructured United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR), became an independent mission on 1 February 1996.

In another part of Europe, the 124-member United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) monitored the implementation of the 1994 Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces between the Government of Georgia and authorities of the Georgian region of Abkhazia [YUN 1994, p. 583]. In October, the Security Council authorized the establishment of a human rights office as part of UNOMIG. The 32-year-old United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) continued its tasks of keeping the peace on that Mediterranean island. (See PART ONE, Chapter V.)

In Africa, the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR) was ended on 8 March. On the same date, the Security Council encouraged the Secretary-General, in agreement with the Government, to maintain a UN office in Rwanda, headed by his Special Representative. Three other African operations continued during 1996, including the largest of the UN peacekeeping operations, the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III), with more than 7,000 military and civilian police personnel deployed at year's end. In northern Africa, with the Security Council agreeing in May to a 20 per cent reduction in its military component, the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) continued to assist in identifying and registering potential voters and in organizing other aspects of conducting voting on self-determination for that Territory; in November, its mandate was extended until 31 May 1997. In West Africa, despite setbacks during the year, the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL) continued to work for a comprehensive settlement of the conflict, its strength, however, reduced to 10 military observers by the end of July, due to the deteriorating security situation. Its mandate was extended in November until 31 March 1997, with the mission numbering about 60 by mid-December. (For operations in Africa, see PART ONE, Chapter II.)

As for peacekeeping activities in the Americas, the Security Council extended the mandate in February of the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH) for a final period ending on 30 June 1996; UNMIH was immediately succeeded on 1 July by the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti (UNSMIH), created to assist in the professionalization of the police and in maintaining a secure and stable environment conducive to the success of those efforts. In December, the mandate of UNSMIH was extended for a final period, to end on 31 May 1997.

In Asia, the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM) pursued its task of monitoring the demilitarized zone along the border between the two countries, and the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) verified the compliance of the parties to the conflict in that country with their 1994 ceasefire agreement [YUN 1994, p. 594]. The United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP), established in 1949, remained in place to monitor the ceasefire in Jammu and Kashmir. (For operations in Asia, see PART ONE, Chapter IV.) Three long-standing operations continued in the Middle East—the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

In addition to these 19 peacekeeping operations, the United Nations supported a number of human rights missions, including the International Civilian Mission in Haiti (MICIVIH), conducted jointly with the Organization of American States (OAS) to monitor the human rights situation there. The Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador (MINUSAL), mandated to carry out good offices and verify compliance with the 1992 peace accords [YUN 1992, p. 222] in that country, was replaced in May by a smaller United Nations Office of Verification (ONUV), subsequently terminated on 31 December. The United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala (MINUGUA) continued to fulfil its mandate throughout 1996. In December, the MINUGUA mandate was extended until 31 March 1997 (see PART ONE, Chapter III).

Also, in 1996, the United Nations maintained the Special Mission to Afghanistan—a peacemaking operation seeking to facilitate national reconciliation in that country. The work of the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM) monitoring Iraq's compliance with relevant Security Council resolutions continued. The Organization also followed developments in Cambodia, through the Secretary-General's Special Representative, and events in the Korean peninsula (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

Roster of 1996 operations

UNTSO

United Nations Truce Supervision Organization

Established: June 1948.

Mandate: To assist in supervising the observance of the truce in Palestine.

Strength as at July 1996: 173 military observers.

UNMOGIP

United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan

Established: January 1949.

Mandate: To supervise the ceasefire between India and Pakistan in Jammu and Kashmir.

Strength as at July 1996: 44 military observers.

UNFICYP

United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus

Established: March 1964.

Mandate: To prevent the recurrence of fighting between the two Cypriot communities.

Strength as at July 1996: 1,202 troops, 33 civilian police.

UNDOF

United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

Established: June 1974.

Mandate: To supervise the ceasefire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic and the disengagement of Israeli and Syrian forces in the Golan Heights.

Strength as at July 1996: 1,043 troops.

UNIFIL

United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

Established: March 1978.

Mandate: To confirm the withdrawal of Israeli forces from southern Lebanon, restore peace and security, and assist the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area.

Strength as at July 1996: 4,489 troops.

UNIKOM

United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM)

Established: April 1991.

Mandate: To monitor the demilitarized zone along the border between Iraq and Kuwait.

Strength as at July 1996: 936 troops, 238 military observers.

MINURSO

United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

Established: April 1991.

Mandate: To monitor and verify implementation of a settlement plan for Western Sahara and assist in the holding of a referendum in the Territory.

Strength as at July 1996: 47 troops, 212 military observers, 26 civilian police.

UNOMIG

United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia

Established: August 1993.

Mandate: To verify compliance with a ceasefire agreement between the parties to the conflict in Georgia and investigate ceasefire violations; expanded in 1994 to include monitoring the implementation of an agreement on a ceasefire and separation of forces and observing the operation of a multinational peacekeeping force.

Strength as at July 1996: 122 military observers.

UNOMIL

United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia

Established: September 1993.

Mandate: To investigate ceasefire violations and monitor compliance with a peace agreement between the parties to the conflict in Liberia, verify the election process, assist in coordinating humanitarian activities and develop a plan for the demobilization of combatants; revised in 1995 to include monitoring the disengagement of forces, disarmament and observance of the arms embargo and assisting with demobilization programmes.

Strength as at July 1996: 10 military observers.

UNMIH

United Nations Mission in Haiti

Established: September 1993.

Terminated: June 1996.

Mandate: To provide non-combat military training to the armed forces and carry out engineering and medical assistance projects; revised in 1994 to include assistance to the Government of Haiti in sustaining a secure and stable environment, modernizing the armed forces, creating a separate police force and organizing legislative elections.

Strength as at June 1996: 1,193 military personnel, 291 civilian police.

UNAMIR

United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda

Established: October 1993.

Terminated: March 1996.

Mandate: To monitor observance of a ceasefire agreement between the parties to the conflict in Rwanda as well as the security situation and repatriation of refugees, and to assist with mine clearance and coordination of humanitarian activities; adjusted in 1994 to include intermediary functions in securing a ceasefire agreement, assistance in the resumption of humanitarian relief operations and monitoring of developments in the country; adjusted in 1995 to include good offices in achieving national reconciliation, assistance to the Government in facilitating the return of refugees and training a national police force, support for the provision of humanitarian aid and contribution to the security of UN activities.

Strength as at February 1996: 1,200 troops, 200 military observers and headquarters staff.

UNMOT

United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan

Established: December 1994.

Mandate: To assist in monitoring a temporary ceasefire agreement between the parties to the conflict in Tajikistan.

UNSMIH

United Nations Support Mission in Haiti

Established: July 1996.

Mandate: To assist the Government of Haiti in the professionalization of the police and in the maintenance of a secure and stable environment conducive to the successful establishment and training of a national police force.

Authorized initial strength: 600 troops, 300 civilian police.

Total strength as at November 1996 (including voluntarily funded military personnel): 1,588 all ranks.

Financing of peacekeeping operations

General aspects

In 1996, the cost of peacekeeping operations totalled an estimated $ 1.4 billion, compared with some $3.2 billion in 1995, while requirements for activities funded from the support account for peacekeeping operations were estimated at an additional $35.4 million. At the same time, unpaid assessed contributions from Member States to the peacekeeping budget amounted to $2.2 billion as at 31 July; in addition, its dire financial situation had compelled the Organization to borrow from peacekeeping accounts to meet the need for regular budget cash. As a result, the United Nations had to delay reimbursements to troop-contributing countries and payments owed for contingent-owned equipment, with the debt estimated to have reached $675 million by the end of the year.

During the year, the General Assembly considered various aspects of peacekeeping financing. In April, it endorsed new procedures for reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment, and, in November, it requested the Secretary-General to develop measures for handling third-party claims against UN operations and for limiting the Organization's financial liability. The Assembly also considered the reclassification of Member States into groups for the apportionment of peacekeeping expenses (see below, under "Apportionment of costs"). In June, it approved a new funding mechanism for the support account for peacekeeping operations, provisionally until 30 June 1997. The Assembly also continued consideration of issues related to the management of peacekeeping operations and assets, entitlements of peacekeeping personnel, the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund, and unforeseen and extraordinary expenses.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, by resolution 51/218 D, the Assembly decided to continue its consideration of administrative and budgetary aspects of peacekeeping financing at its resumed fifty-first session.

Review exercise

In a May report [A/51/130 & Corr.1] to the General Assembly, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations reaffirmed the obligation of Member States under the UN Charter to bear peacekeeping expenses as apportioned by the Assembly, and stressed that those contributions must be paid in full and on time so as not to undermine the effectiveness of UN peacekeeping operations. Welcoming efforts to reform the budgetary procedures and methods of managing and providing logistic support for UN missions, the Committee expressed its belief that further reforms were necessary to ensure that DPKO had a predictable and stable financial base. It encouraged competent bodies of the General Assembly to consider further steps in improving mechanisms for the start-up financing of new operations, in particular the issue of the partial assessment of commitment authority granted by the Assembly for the start-up or expansion of missions.

The Special Committee noted the growing imbalance within DPKO between posts financed from the regular budget or the support account for peacekeeping operations and the number of military officers on loan, and pointed out that the use of loaned personnel should be temporary. The Secretary-General and the General Assembly were urged to correct the imbalance by providing for UN financing of posts currently occupied by loaned officers and by recruiting staff for those posts in accordance with established procedures. The Committee made other recommendations concerning procurement and management of peacekeeping assets, entitlements of peacekeeping personnel, and reimbursement for troops and contingent-owned equipment (see below).

Procurement and the liquidation of missions were also subjects of recommendations set forth by the Board of Auditors in its July report [A/51/5, vol. II] on UN peacekeeping operations for the biennium ended 31 December 1995. In addition, the Board recommended that DPKO should identify in advance suitably qualified core field personnel who could be dispatched at short notice to set up new missions, and that adequate instruction and training should be provided for staff appointed as mission finance officers, so as to ensure more effective control over cash management.

Note of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1338], the Secretary-General, in May 1996, submitted to the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee a note [A/C.5/50/63] containing estimated budgetary requirements of all current peacekeeping operations for the period 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997. The estimates totalled some $1.3 billion, including $496 million for military personnel costs and $423 million for civilian personnel costs.

Apportionment of costs

In 1996, the General/Assembly again considered the question of placement of Member States into groups for the apportionment of peacekeeping expenses. First specified in 1973 [GA res. 3101(XXVIII)], the groups were subsequently adjusted several times, most recently in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 314]. The original four groups were: (A) permanent members of the Security Council; (B) specifically named economically developed Member States not permanent members of the Council; (C) economically less developed Member States; and (D) economically less developed Member States that were specifically named.

Czech Republic

On 18 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/218 B.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, 43/232 of 1 March 1989, 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995 and 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, concerning the composition of groups for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations,

Recalling also its resolution 48/223 A of 23 December 1993, in which it set the rate of assessment for the regular budget for the Czech Republic,

1. Welcomes the readiness of the Czech Republic to be placed in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (b) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 from 1 January 1997;

2. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, in respect of the apportionment of peacekeeping expenses, that, from 1 January 1997, the Czech Republic shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (b) of resolution 43/232 and that its contributions to the financing of peacekeeping operations shall be calculated in accordance with the scale of assessments approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995 and subsequent resolutions to be adopted by the Assembly concerning future scales of assessments;

3. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, in respect of the apportionment of peacekeeping expenses, that, for the period from its admission on 19 January 1993 to 31 December 1996, the Czech Republic shall be in-eluded in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of resolution 43/232 and that its contributions to the financing of peacekeeping operations for this period shall be calculated in accordance with the scales of assessments approved by the General Assembly in its resolutions 46/221 A of 20 December 1991, 48/223 A and 49/19 B and its decisions 47/456 of 23 December 1992 and 50/471 A;

4. Recalls that, in accordance with paragraph 2 of resolution 48/223 A, for the year of its admission, the Czech Republic shall contribute at the rate of one twelfth of its rate of assessment for each full month of membership; its contribution in the case of appropriations or apportionments approved by the General Assembly for the financing of peacekeeping operations shall be calculated in proportion to the calendar year;

5. Decides that, notwithstanding the provisions of resolution 48/223 A, the 1993 assessments of the Czech Republic for peacekeeping operations shall be credited to Member States included in the groups set out in paragraphs 3 (b), (c) and (d) of resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent resolutions, and that the relative shares for 1993 shall be calculated on the same basis as set out in paragraph 6 below;

6. Decides also that the contributions of the Czech Republic for the financing of peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1996 shall be credited to Member States in proportion to their effective rates of assessment for the financing of peacekeeping operations during the period, subject to the following:

(a) Member States included in the groups set out in paragraphs 3 (c) and (d) of resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent resolutions, shall be credited with the full amount by which their aggregate contributions for the financing of peacekeeping operations during the period in question exceeded the aggregate level that would have applied had the Czech Republic been included in one of the groups of Member States set out in paragraph 3 of resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent resolutions;

(b) The full balance of the contributions of the Czech Republic for the financing of peacekeeping operations for the period in question, after provision for crediting Member States pursuant to paragraph 6 (a) above, shall be credited to Member States included in the group set out in paragraph 3 (b) of resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent resolutions.

18 December 1996 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/753) without vote, 18 December (meeting 47); draft by Chairman following informal consultations (A/C.5/51/L.34, part B); agenda item 140.

Greece and Ukraine

At its resumed fiftieth session, the General Assembly continued consideration of the request by Ukraine—originally made in 1993 and reiterated in 1995—that it be relocated from group B to group C due to economic hardship.

On 29 March 1996 [A/C.5/50/SR.51], Ukraine introduced a draft resolution in the Fifth Committee, providing for gradual reclassification of Greece from group C to group B, in accordance with that country's decision, and simultaneous gradual transition of Ukraine from group B to group C. Ukraine, indicating that it was considering ways to settle its arrears which, in its view, were a direct consequence of the fact that its request for reclassification had not yet been approved, said the adoption of the draft resolution would help it to finalize a payment schedule.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 April, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/224.

Relocation of Ukraine to the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3101 (XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and its subsequent resolutions relating to the composition of the existing groups for the apportionment of the expenses of peacekeeping operations, the latest of which are resolution 49/249 A of 20 July 1995 and resolution 49/249 B of 14 September 1995,

Having considered the request of Ukraine for reclassification from group B to group C,

1. Welcomes with great satisfaction the voluntary decision made by the Government of Greece to reclassify Greece from group C to group B;

2. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement:

(a) To note the voluntary decision made by the Government of Greece and to place Greece among the Member States referred to in paragraph 3 (c) of resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989 and, in accordance with that decision, to apportion its share of the costs of peacekeeping operations financed through assessed contributions on the basis of the proportions determined by the scale of assessments in the following manner: 35 per cent beginning 1 July 1996, 55 per cent in 1997, 75 per cent in 1998, 95 per cent in 1999 and 100 per cent in 2000 and subsequent years;

(b) To begin the transition of Ukraine to the group of Member States referred to in paragraph 3 (c) of resolution 43/232 on the understanding that the reduction in the United States dollar amounts to be assessed on Ukraine beginning 1 July 1996 shall be equal to the additional United States dollar amounts assessed on Greece in accordance with paragraph 2 (a) above, on the basis that this decision will be adjusted as appropriate to conform with any future relevant decisions adopted by the General Assembly;

3. Stresses that paragraph 2 above does not result in any change in the assessments for financing peacekeeping operations of other Member States;

4. Notes the intention as stated by Ukraine on 29 March 1996 in the Fifth Committee concerning the settlement of its arrears;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Relocation of Ukraine to the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232".

General Assembly resolution 50/224*11 April 1996 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/851/Add.1) without vote, 4 April (meeting 55); draft by Rapporteur (A/C.5/50/L.41), based on informal consultations on draft by Greece and Ukraine (A/C.5/50/L.32); agenda item 138 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 51, 55; plenary 104.

Slovakia

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/218 C.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101 (XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, 43/232 of 1 March 1989, 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995 and 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, concerning the composition of groups for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations,

Recalling also its resolution 48/223 A of 23 December 1993, in which it set the rate of assessment for the regular budget for Slovakia,

1. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, in respect of the apportionment of peacekeeping expenses, that, for the period from its admission on 19 January 1993 to 31 December 1996, Slovakia shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of resolution 43/232 and that its contributions to the financing of peacekeeping operations for this period shall be calculated in accordance with the scales of assessments approved by the General Assembly in its resolutions 46/221 A of 20 December 1991, 48/223 A and 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decisions 47/456 of 23 December 1992 and 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

2. Recalls that, in accordance with paragraph 2 of resolution 48/223 A, for the year of its admission, Slovakia shall contribute at the rate of one twelfth of its rate of assessment for each full month of membership; its contribution in the case of appropriations or apportionments approved by the General Assembly for the financing of peacekeeping operations shall be calculated in proportion to the calendar year;

3. Decides that, notwithstanding the provisions of resolution 48/223 A, the 1993 assessments of Slovakia for peacekeeping operations shall be credited to Member States included in the groups set out in paragraphs 3 (b), (c) and (d) of resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent resolutions, and that the relative shares for 1993 shall be calculated on the same basis as set out in paragraph 4 below;

4. Decides also that the contributions of Slovakia for the financing of peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1996 shall be credited to Member States in proportion to their effective rates of assessment for the financing of peacekeeping operations during the period, subject to the following:

(a) Member States included in the groups set out in paragraphs 3 (c) and (d) of resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent resolutions, shall be credited with the full amount by which their aggregate contributions for the financing of peacekeeping operations during the period in question exceeded the aggregate level that would have applied had Slovakia been included in one of the groups of Member States set out in paragraph 3 of resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent resolutions;

(b) The full balance of the contributions of Slovakia for the financing of peacekeeping operations for the period in question, after provision for crediting Member States pursuant to paragraph 4 (a) above, shall be credited to Member States included in the group set out in paragraph 3 (b) of resolution 43/232, as adjusted by subsequent resolutions.

General Assembly resolution 51/218 C*18 December 1996 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Zambia

On 18 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/218 A.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, 43/232 of 1 March 1989, 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995 and 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, concerning the composition of groups for the apportionment of peacekeeping appropriations,

Recalling also its resolution 46/206 of 20 December 1991, in particular paragraph 6 thereof, in which it endorsed the recommendations of the Committee for Development Planning regarding the inclusion of Zambia, among others, in the list of least developed countries,

Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, in respect of the apportionment of peacekeeping expenses, that, from 1 January 1997, Zambia shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (d) of resolution 43/232 and that its contributions to the financing of peacekeeping operations shall be calculated in accordance with the scale of assessments approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995 and subsequent resolutions to be adopted by the Assembly concerning future scales of assessments.

General Assembly resolution 51/218 A*18 December 1996 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Peacekeeping support account

In 1996, the General Assembly continued to examine issues relating to the support account for peacekeeping operations established in 1990.

The account was intended to meet the needs at Headquarters for the support of ongoing operations and some additional workload during pre-implementation phases of prospective missions. It was funded by including in, and setting aside from, the budgets of all operations financed outside the regular budget an amount equalling 8.5 per cent of the cost of the mission's civilian staff component (salaries, common staff costs and travel). Those moneys were to be kept in a separate account and used to fund temporary posts. In 1995, the Assembly had decided [GA dec. 50/473] to review the methodology for financing the account, noting a statement by the UN/Controller that the existing formula had not foreseen the expansion of the Secretariat's responsibilities in backstopping peacekeeping operations and the changed ratio of military to civilian personnel in UN missions.

Auditors' recommendations. By a February note [A/50/874 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General transmitted the Board of Auditors' report on the audit of the support account for the period ended 30 September 1995, prepared in accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/250 [YUN 1995, p. 316].

Noting that 32 per cent of the approved support account posts were encumbered by staff with permanent contracts, and 61.6 per cent by staff on fixed-term and short-term contracts, the Board recommended a review of the funding arrangement for those posts, originally conceived as temporary, taking into account the actual requirement of each peacekeeping operation and the workload associated with the ratio of military to civilian personnel, the level of the support account in relation to actual requirements, and annualized budgets of the support account. It also recommended that the value of in-kind contributions for backstopping operations be included in estimates for staff requirements of the support account; that the staff capable of providing qualitative backstopping support be retained for longer employment; that recruitment and placement procedures for support account posts be further streamlined to ensure transparency; that DPKO expedite the compilation of job descriptions for its units for subsequent classification; and that DPKO and the Office of Human Resources Management identify the overlapping backstopping functions between them to determine a fair distribution of support account posts.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to the Assembly's 1995 decision [YUN 1995, p. 317], the Secretary-General submitted a February report [A/50/876] on the support account, providing a comprehensive review of the account and its requirements for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1996 and from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, estimated at some $16.1 million and $31.3 million, respectively.

The Secretary-General pointed out that the effective coverage of backstopping functions at Headquarters involved three elements: permanent core capacity, financed from the regular budget, as well as variable capacity to support ongoing missions and additional capacity to support the liquidation of completed missions, both funded from the support account. He noted that if the existing funding formula remained unchanged, it would be necessary to reduce immediately and drastically the number of posts funded from the support account, currently totalling 408. However, such a reduction was not feasible given that there would not be a corresponding immediate decrease in the number of missions to be supported and the amount of backstopping work to be performed. Accordingly, to accommodate the workload for 1996/97, there should be a phased, orderly reduction in backstopping staff requirements. In the Secretary-General's view, a minimum of 355 posts were needed at Headquarters for such work, at a cost of $31 million for a 12-month period; at the same time, the current funding formula was projected to generate only some $17.4 million for 1996, compared with $25 million in 1995, leaving a significant shortfall.

In that regard, the Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly adopt, as of 1 July 1996, a new funding arrangement, under which it would appropriate, on a 12-month basis, the resources required for approved backstopping activities, to be assessed on the same scale as those for peacekeeping. He also recommended that the Assembly approve $37.2 million gross ($31.3 million net) from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 for 355 posts, and authorize continuation of 408 posts, including 61 temporary posts, from 1 April to 30 June 1996, at a cost of $7.2 million. The Secretary-General further recommended that financial requirements from 1 January to 30 June 1996 be met from the formula-generated income of some $11.6 million and a transfer of some $4.7 million from the operating reserve, less some $145,000 to cover the 1995 operating deficit.

ACABQ report. In a March report [A/50/897], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) noted the recommendations of the Board of Auditors (see above) and recommended that the General Assembly authorize the establishment of 370 posts, for a total of $7.2 million, from 1 April to 30 June 1996, to be financed by the current formula; that it approve the staffing and financial resource requirements for backstopping activities from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, as proposed by the Secretary-General; and that he provide a more rational and justified distribution of those 355 posts. ACABQ was not convinced, however, that separate appropriation and assessment of resources for the support account was necessary, and suggested that a minimum 12-month quantum of resources be established instead to meet backstopping requirements, which would be prorated among individual peacekeeping budgets.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (April)

On 11 April, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/221 A.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/258 of 3 May 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 48/226 A of 23 December 1993, 48/226 B of 5 April 1994, 48/226 C of 29 July 1994 and 49/250 of 20 July 1995 and its decisions 48/489 of 8 July 1994, 49/469 of 23 December 1994 and 50/473 of 23 December 1995,

Having considered the report of the Board of Auditors on the audit of the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period ended 30 September 1995, the report of the Secretary-General on the support account and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee,

Reaffirming the need to continue to improve the administrative and financial management of peacekeeping operations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report submitted by the Board of Auditors on its audit of the support account for peacekeeping operations;

2. Also takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

3. Decides, pending its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General at the second part of its resumed fiftieth session, in May 1996:

(a) To authorize the extension until 30 June 1996 of the sixty-one temporary posts previously authorized in paragraph 12 of its resolution 49/250;

(b) To authorize the amounts of 50,000 United States dollars for general temporary assistance, 40,000 dollars for overtime, 60,000 dollars for travel, 189,500 dollars for training and 660,100 dollars for common services, until 30 June 1996, to be financed on the basis of the current funding methodology and formula;

4. Also decides to revert to the proposals of the Secretary-General for the support account for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 at the second part of its resumed session, in May 1996;

5. Requests the Secretary-General in this regard to address the issues contained in the report of the Advisory Committee;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all submissions relating to the backstopping at Headquarters of peacekeeping operations are presented in the context of the report on the support account;

7. Recognizes the temporary nature of support account posts and decides in this regard that measures introduced by the Secretary-General in connection with the regular budget shall not be extended to those posts;

8. Requests the Board of Auditors to keep under review the issue of the role and use of extrabudgetary resources, including the use of personnel loaned by departments and offices at Headquarters supporting peacekeeping operations, and to report to the General Assembly thereon as appropriate;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to present in each report on the support account information on the use of trust funds, including the scope of activities financed by them;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep Member States informed on the establishment of trust funds as well as on the possibilities for their use.

General Assembly resolution 50/221 A

11 April 1996 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/850/Add.2) without vote, 4 April (meeting 55); draft by Rapporteur (A/C.5/50/L.42); agenda item 138 (a). Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 49, 50, 55; plenary 104.

Notes of Secretary-General (May). On 6 May [A/C.5/50/62], the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee a table indicating the prorated share of peacekeeping operations in the cost of backstopping requirements, to be funded from the support account from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 and totalling $31,346,400.

In a 10 May note [A/C.5/50/65], he addressed the issues raised by ACABQ in March (see above), relating, among others, to the review of procedures for the approval of expenditures, staffing of the DPKO Mission Planning Service, potential overlap between the regional divisions of DPKO and those of the Department of Political Affairs, and the impact of technological innovations on resource requirements. The Secretary-General trusted that the information provided would allow the General Assembly to establish the minimum predictable annual level of support account resources for backstopping requirements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 7 June, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/221 B.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/258 of 3 May 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 48/226 A of 23 December 1993, 48/226 B of 5 April 1994, 48/226 C of 29 July 1994, 49/250 of 20 July 1995 and 50/221 A of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/489 of 8 July 1994, 49/469 of 23 December 1994 and 50/473 of 23 December 1995,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the support account for peacekeeping operations and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee,

Reaffirming the need to continue to improve the administrative and financial management of peacekeeping operations,

Noting the recent notable decline in peacekeeping expenditure, and recognizing that this should, in due course, lead to a commensurate decline in backstopping requirements funded through the support account for peacekeeping operations,

Recognizing the need for adequate support during the liquidation and termination phases of peacekeeping operations,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the support account for peacekeeping operations;

2. Also takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Approves, on a provisional basis and for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, the proposals of the Secretary-General with regard to post and non-post resource requirements as contained in his report of 29 February 1996 and his proposals with regard to the proposed funding mechanism as amended by the Advisory Committee in paragraphs 35 to 37 and annex II to its report, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in the context of his revised estimates for peacekeeping operations, which are subject to budgetary fluctuations as defined in General Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994, to present it with information on the impact that such fluctuations would have on the support account;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General, in this regard and on the assumption that the overall level of peacekeeping activities will remain at current levels, to submit revised resource estimates for the support account by 15 November 1996, with a view to reducing, to the extent possible, the post and non-post requirements for the backstopping of peacekeeping operations at Headquarters and, to a commensurate level, the number of officers on loan from Member States to the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, to reflect the recent notable decline in peacekeeping expenditure;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a performance report on the operation of the support account in the context of the annual consideration by the General Assembly of his proposals for the support account, including information on redeployments, if any, between units;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing his annual proposals for the support account, and taking into consideration the temporary nature of the current level of resources, to review and substantiate comprehensively the entire post and non-post requirements for the support account;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General, in preparing his report on the support account for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, to submit a comprehensive proposal on the total requirement for human resources from all sources of funding for the backstopping of peacekeeping operations, including posts financed from the regular budget and trust funds, officers on loan from Member States and other voluntary contributions during the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, to enable the General Assembly to decide on the level of human resources required, including whether such posts should continue to be financed by means other than through assessed contributions;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General, in preparing his report on the use of the support account for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, to submit proposals that reflect as closely as possible the overall evolution of peacekeeping budgets and any additional relevant observations and recommendations regarding the lessons learned from the previous year of operation of the support account;

10. Decides, in particular in the context of its consideration of the above-mentioned proposals, to review the operation of the funding mechanism referred to in paragraph 3 above, taking into account past experience and the decline in the level of peacekeeping activities, on the understanding that, unless otherwise decided, the funding mechanism set out in paragraphs 3 to 5 of its resolution 49/250 will be restored as from 1 July 1997;

11. Reiterates the provisions contained in paragraphs 8 and 9 of its resolution 49/250 and paragraph 7 of resolution 50/221 A;

12. Reiterates its request to the Board of Auditors to keep under review the issue of the role and use of extra-budgetary resources, including the use of personnel loaned by departments and offices at Headquarters supporting peacekeeping operations, in particular the issue of the impact on the geographic distribution of staff in the Secretariat, and to report thereon to the General Assembly as appropriate;

13. Again recalls its resolution 48/226 C, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to it, no later than 1 September 1996, a detailed report on various aspects related to the provision of personnel by Member States on loan to the Department of Peacekeeping Operations;

14. Decides to keep under review the proposed transfer of twenty-six posts from the support account to section 3 (Peacekeeping operations and special missions) and section 26B (Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Accounts) of the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997, and to consider the issue further in the context of the first performance report on the programme budget to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

15. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to present, in each report on the support account, information on the establishment and use of trust funds, including the scope of activities financed by them;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the transfer of posts from the Office of Human Resources Management to the Department of Peacekeeping Operations is fully implemented no later than 30 June 1996;

17. Decides to abolish the following posts:

(a) One General Service post in the Executive Office of the Office of the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations;

(b) One General Service post in the Peacekeeping Financing Division of the Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Accounts;

(c) Two General Service posts in the Mail Operations Unit of the Buildings Management Service of the Office of Conference and Support Services;

(d) Two General Service posts in the Electronic Services Division of the Office of Conference and Support Services;

(e) Twelve posts in departments other than the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, to be determined by the Secretary-General, of which at least two are in the Department of Administration and Management;

18. Decides also to establish the following posts:

(a) Two Professional posts, at the P-5 and P-3 levels, in the Audit and Management Consulting Division of the Office of Internal Oversight Services;

(b) Six Professional posts at the P-4 level in the Mission Planning Service of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, subject to post classification review and full observance of normal recruitment procedures.

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/850/Add.4) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Rapporteur (A/C.5/50/L.65); agenda item 138 (a).

Note of Secretary-General (October). By an October note [A/C.5/51/8], the Secretary-General transmitted a revised table indicating the pro-rated share of peacekeeping missions in the support account from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, for a total of $30,534,400.

Peacekeeping Reserve Fund

In a June report [A/50/976], ACABQ provided its observations and recommendations on the Secretary-General's 1993 and 1994 reports [YUN 1993, p. 1179, and YUN 1994, p. 1346] concerning the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund. The Fund had been established by the General Assembly in 1992 [GA res. 47/217] as a cash-flow mechanism to ensure the Organization's rapid response to the needs of peacekeeping operations; its level was set at $150 million.

The Advisory Committee noted that the Assembly had decided [GA res. 49/233 A] in 1994 to maintain the Fund's level, but limited its utilization to the start-up phase of new missions, expansion of existing ones or unforeseen and extraordinary expenses related to peacekeeping. It also noted that, as at 31 December 1995, receipts totalled $93,258,951, leaving $60,893,038 still due. The outstanding amount included funds to be transferred from the UN General Fund ($57,601,038) and from the special accounts for the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG) in Namibia ($2,240,000) and for the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group (UNIIMOG) ($903,000), as well as $149,000 in accrued interest. ACABQ was informed that the amounts anticipated from outstanding assessments for UNTAG and UNIIMOG had been reduced to some $700,000 and $200,000, respectively; at the same time, there were sufficient credits available to provide for the adjusted total of $60.7 million required from the General Fund.

ACABQ noted that all outstanding loans made by the Fund to peacekeeping missions had been paid, and that in the light of the recent decrease in peacekeeping expenditures, there were no longer compelling reasons for establishing a much larger revolving fund at $400 million as recommended earlier. It pointed out that shares of the original founding Members in the Reserve Fund should be recalculated as additional assessments apportioned among new Member States were credited to it. It invited the General Assembly to decide on the imputation of interest income earned in the Fund, which stood at $3,651,000 as at 31 December 1995, plus $149,000 in accrued interest still due to the Fund, and the Secretariat was asked to provide information on the Fund's status on an annual basis.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 September, the General Assembly, by decision 50/501, took note of the reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ and deferred their consideration until its fifty-first session.

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses

On 17 September, the General Assembly, by decision 50/480 B, noted the Secretary-General's 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 317] on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, and deferred its consideration to the fifty-first session. In that report, the Secretary-General had requested that his authority to incur expenditures for the maintenance of peace and security be increased from $5 million to $7 million per year and that he be granted authority to enter into commitments not exceeding $3 million in any one year, without prior concurrence of ACABQ, for the immediate requirements of the start-up phase of peacekeeping operations or for unforeseen extensions of mandates by the Security Council.

The General Assembly also considered a proposal by the Secretary-General for the absorption of new mandates in the 1996-1997 budget relating to Haiti (MICIVIH), Guatemala (MINUGUA), El Salvador (ONUV), and Rwanda (Commission of Inquiry). In resolution 50/231 of 7 June, the Assembly took decisions on those proposals (see PART FIVE, Chapter II).

Reimbursement issues

Troop reimbursement

At its 1996 session [A/51/130 & Corr.1], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations expressed concern over protracted delays in reimbursements to troop-contributing States, including for operations whose mandates had been completed, and urged the Secretary-General to accord high priority to the early settlement of all pending claims and to ensure that all reimbursements took place in a timely fashion.

ACABQ report. In an August 1996 report [A/50/1012], ACABQ provided its observations and recommendations on the Secretary-General's 1994 report [YUN 1994, p. 1342] on the rates of reimbursement to troop-contributing States. The original rates, effective since October 1973, had been revised by the General Assembly several times, most recently as of 1 July 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 862].

The Advisory Committee noted that the current rates covered pay and allowances for all ranks, supplementary payment for specialists, reimbursement for personal weaponry and a usage factor for personal clothing, gear and equipment, the last two items being reimbursed at 1975 rates. It also noted that wide variations existed in troop costs among troop contributors and that not all Governments were fully compensated for those costs; the portion absorbed by the troop-contributing country was known as the absorption factor. The overall average absorption factor for 1991 was 43.1 per cent, showing a 6.2 per cent decrease against 1989.

The Advisory Committee pointed out that the most recent survey of troop costs was completed for 1992-1993 and that the number of troop contributors had since increased from 57 to 70, making the survey's information outdated. It was of the opinion that the Secretary-General should carry out a new survey before any General Assembly action on reimbursement rates. ACABQ also requested the Secretary-General to include in his next report on the subject a complete analysis of all services provided to troops, including the rationale for their provision. At the same time, the Committee expressed concern at the low level of response to the survey by troop-contributing countries, and recommended that the matter be addressed by the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 September, the General Assembly, by decision 50/502, took note of the reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ and deferred their consideration until its fifty-first session.

Equipment

In 1996, ACABQ also considered the Secretary-General's December 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 311] on the reform of procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment, as well as 1995 reports of the working groups on the subject [YUN 1995, pp. 311 & 312], established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1338], and setting out a five-phase project plan for reform and a timetable for its implementation.

The Advisory Committee pointed out that to commence implementation of the new reimbursement system, a service/contribution agreement between the United Nations and Member States had to be completed as a matter of utmost priority. It expected that the agreement's final text would be available for its review as early as possible before implementation and would be accompanied by implementation procedures, performance standards, agreed definitions and reimbursement rates. The contribution agreement should also set out a mechanism for settlement of disputes to determine responsibility for loss or damage of equipment under the lease system; in that regard, the Committee recommended acceptance of the understanding that, in the event that the Organization or the troop-contributing country did not meet its full obligations under the lease system, either party could refer the matter to that mechanism. ACABQ also recommended that lease rates include an additional risk factor to compensate Member States for potential loss of or damage to equipment with an individual value of less than $250,000, resulting from hostile action or forced abandonment, and that the Secretary-General be requested to propose the percentage of such a risk factor. It further recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's proposal that the General Assembly approve one environmental/operational mission-specific factor not exceeding 5 per cent of the reimbursement rates for minor equipment and of the leasing costs for major equipment.

Noting that the implementation timetable had been revised to commence on 1 July 1996, ACABQ trusted that the Secretariat would take urgent measures to create the capacity within the United Nations for a smooth transition period and effective implementation of new procedures, including the establishment of data systems and training programmes for personnel dealing with verification and inspection of equipment. The Advisory Committee held the view that as many existing operations as possible should be converted to the new procedures at the earliest date. In that regard, it was informed that the draft contribution agreement would be issued to Member States by the end of March; that the new system would be applied to all new missions as soon as procedural arrangements were in place, with the Secretariat to finalize verification and control procedures by 1 July; that the dry lease system might be introduced for existing missions, while the wet lease system would require reconfiguration of support functions; and that appropriate staff would be trained both at Headquarters and in the field to administer the new arrangements.

The Advisory Committee also commented on the question of an evaluation and review of reimbursement rates and procedures, and requested the Secretary-General to monitor the implementation of the new system and report on its impact. Its observations and recommendations were submitted to the General Assembly in a March report [A/50/887].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 April, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/222.

Reform of the procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the reports of the Working Groups on Contingent-Owned Equipment, established pursuant to its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note further of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the Working Groups on Contingent-Owned Equipment on the reform of the procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Decides to endorse the proposal concerning loss or damage to contingent-owned equipment, other than loss or damage to major equipment due to hostile action or forced abandonment, as presented in paragraph 13 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Also decides that the reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment shall be in place as from 1 July 1996 on the basis of the recommendations contained in paragraph 51 of the report of the Phase III Working Group and paragraph 20 of the report of the Advisory Committee;

4. Further decides to review the operation of the reformed procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment at its fifty-second session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in this regard, to submit for its consideration a report on the first full year of implementation of the reformed procedures;

6. Decides that the above-mentioned review and report shall pertain to all elements of the reformed procedures, in particular to those elements of the recommendations of the Working Groups that were not specifically endorsed by the Secretary-General in his report, and decides to request the Secretary-General in this regard to include in the above-mentioned report comparative data on the differences between the adopted system and other proposals contained in the reports of the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to inform all Member States by 30 May 1996 of the establishment of the new procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment.

General Assembly resolution 50/222

11 April 1996 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/850/Add.3) without vote, 4 April (meeting 55); draft by Rapporteur following informal consultations (A/C.5/50/L.40); agenda item 138 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 47, 48, 55; plenary 104.

Contribution agreements

By a July note [A/50/995], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the draft contribution agreement between the Organization and States contributing resources to UN peacekeeping operations. The agreement covered the Government's contribution, reimbursement and support from the United Nations, general and specific conditions, claims by third parties, recovery of assets and supplementary arrangements, as well as procedures for the introduction of amendments, settlement of disputes and the agreement's entry into force and termination. Annexes to the agreement dealt with personnel, major equipment and self-sustainment provided by the Government, performance standards, definitions, and guidelines for troop-contributing countries. The Secretary-General stated his intention to submit comprehensive implementation procedures to ACABQ.

In a November report [A/51/646], ACABQ noted revisions to the draft agreement introduced subsequently to the Secretary-General's note, as well as potential legal difficulties with the term "contribution agreement", and recommended exploration of alternative terms and their legal implications for the United Nations. The Advisory Committee trusted that implementation of the new procedures for contingent-owned equipment would take place as soon as possible.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations at its 1996 session welcomed the reform of reimbursement procedures and urged the Secretariat to implement in full the recommendations approved by the Assembly in April.

Third-party claims

In a May report [A/50/903/Add.1] on the financing of UN operations in the former Yugoslavia

(see PART ONE, Chapter V), ACABQ recommended that the current procedures for settling third-party claims associated with UN peacekeeping efforts be studied by the UN Legal Counsel and that measures be developed for a simple, efficient and prompt settlement of such claims, aimed at securing UN interests, limiting its liabilities and allowing for a coordinated inter-agency approach to the issue. The General Assembly endorsed that recommendation in resolution 50/235 of 7 June.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to the above recommendation, the Secretary-General in September reported [A/51/389] on the scope of UN liability for activities of its forces, procedures for handling third-party claims and limitations of liability.

He pointed out that, according to a legal study of the issue, the Organization was liable for non-consensual use and occupancy of privately owned land and premises, but reserved the right to seek recovery from the host Government; its liability for property loss or damage in an ordinary operation of the force was subject to the principle of "operational necessity", while the liability for combat-related damage was determined by the principles and rules of international humanitarian law and was limited in cases of operations by forces not constitutionally or effectively under exclusive UN command and control.

Proposed changes in the existing settlement mechanism included the creation of multiple claims review boards, increasing their financial authority, and provision of additional staff, both at Headquarters and in the field. At the same time, the study proposed measures for limiting the Organization's financial liability where its legal liability had been engaged, including through financial and temporal limitations, counter-claims and set-offs, and recovery from troop-contributing States for damage caused by gross negligence, wilful misconduct or action entailing international criminal responsibility. The Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly endorse those proposals.

The current requirements for settlement of third-party claims against UN forces in the former Yugoslavia were estimated at $15.5 million.

ACABQ report. In an October report [A/51/491], ACABQ welcomed the development of the "operational necessity" concept as an exemption from liability, as well as the proposal to incorporate that exemption into the model status-of-forces agreement, and requested the Secretary-General to review the agreement's provisions for handling third-party claims of a private law nature, so as to devise new procedures in that respect. The Advisory Committee concurred with proposals concerning financial and temporal limitations, but believed that aspects such as the ceiling of compensation, modalities of establishing the financial limitation and duration of the limitation period must be studied further. The Committee also pointed out that UN claims against host Governments for payments which the Organization was under no legal obligation to make were not counter-claims but requests for restitution as a result of the host Government's non-compliance with status-of-forces or other agreements; it asked to be provided with a compendium of all such instances.

Noting that Bosnia and Herzegovina had submitted on 11 May a list of undocumented claims totalling $70.7 million, ACABQ underscored the need for the United Nations to elaborate effective measures to limit its liability, and recommended that the General Assembly endorse the Secretary-General's recommendations and request him to develop such measures, as well as criteria and guidelines for their implementation. The Committee also proposed that a standard format be established for the preparation of claims to be considered by the Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/13.

Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations: financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters—Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations: financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations" and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to develop specific measures, including criteria and guidelines for implementing the principles outlined in his report and to report thereon to the General Assembly through the Advisory Committee.

General Assembly resolution 51/13

4 November 1996 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/640) without vote, 31 October (meeting 17); draft by Chairman following informal consultations (A/C.5/51/L.8); agenda items 129 & 140 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 14, 17; plenary 50.

Other matters

Death and disability benefits

On 11 April, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/223.

Death and disability benefits

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Expressing deep concern at the delay in the settlement of claims in respect of death and disability,

Taking note of the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee,

1. Reiterates the decision, contained in section III, paragraph 1, of its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994, that underlying any system of compensation for death and disability should be the need for:

- (a) Equal treatment of Member States;
- (b) Compensation to the beneficiary that is not lower than reimbursement by the United Nations;
- (c) Simplification of administrative arrangements to the extent possible;
- (d) Speedy settlement of claims for death and disability;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to examine also the possibility of an insurance scheme to cover all troops, on the basis of a request for proposals from the global insurance market;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to present the results of the above-mentioned action and to respond to issues raised in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions by 15 July 1996 for the consideration of the General Assembly, through the Committee.

11 April 1996 Meeting 104 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/850/Add.3) without vote, 4 April (meeting 55); draft by Rapporteur following informal consultations (A/C.5/50/L.44); agenda item 138 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 47, 48, 55; plenary 104.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations noted in 1996 the Secretary-General's 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 313] on arrangements for death and disability benefits of UN peacekeeping personnel, welcomed the Assembly's April resolution on the issue and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly on a possible commercial insurance scheme to cover all troops.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in April, the Secretary-General reported [A/50/1009] in July on a proposed accidental death and disability insurance scheme for troops. He recommended that the scheme: be based on a schedule of awards set out in his 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 313]; be costed on a per troop/per month basis and make provision for periodic variation in troop strength; include, as a second option, a service-incurred death benefit of $100,000; provide coverage in a fixed amount of $5,000 for funeral and transportation (repatriation) expenses in the event of death; and provide for a five-year time-frame from the date of occurrence during which a documented claim would be receivable. The Secretary-General also noted that the United Nations sought liberal terms with respect to aggregate loss limits, preferably no aggregate limit, per occurrence or per policy period.

The report further indicated that by 28 June the Secretariat had received four proposals, three of which met its specifications, from brokerage firms for insurance coverage which ranged in cost from $25 to $40 per troop/per month for coverage in the base amount of $50,000.

The Secretary-General reviewed the legal status of contingent personnel and pointed out that no direct contractual or statutory relationship existed between national contingents serving in UN peacekeeping operations and the Organization. It was therefore not legally appropriate for the United Nations to make direct payments to individual contingent personnel. Accordingly, any compensation for the death or disability of such personnel should be paid not directly to disabled troops or dependent survivors but to the national authorities, as was the current practice.

ACABQ's observations on the Secretary-General's proposal were provided in a November report [A/51/646] to the Assembly.

Gratis personnel

In response to General Assembly resolution 48/226 C [YUN 1994, p. 1344], the Secretary-General in November 1996 submitted a report [A/51/688 & Corr.1] concerning the secondment by Member States and other entities of military and civilian personnel to DPKO at no cost to the United Nations (gratis personnel).

The report noted that the number of such personnel and the scope of functions entrusted to them had grown significantly over the past few years. It reviewed in that regard issues relating to the status and accountability of gratis personnel, financial implications and related budgetary and financial issues, as well as implications for personnel policies and practices in the Secretariat. Particular emphasis was placed on the need to establish uniform policies for the acceptance and use of such personnel, while preserving the international character of Secretariat responsibilities.

The Secretary-General pointed out that positions funded from extrabudgetary resources or personnel on loan from Governments were acceptable only on a temporary basis for specific short-term projects or pending a transition to budgetary posts, and that guidelines to that end had already been developed. He invited the General Assembly to note that gratis personnel would be accepted, on an exceptional basis, only when the required expertise was not readily available in the Secretariat, and on the condition that acceptance of such personnel was supplementary to budgeted resources, not a substitute, and assignment was for a limited duration under the supervision of Secretariat staff. The Assembly was also invited to reaffirm that acceptance of gratis personnel could not involve any additional financial liability for the Organization.

Management of peacekeeping assets

In response to General Assembly resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1338], the Secretary-General submitted a May 1996 report [A/50/965] on policy, technique and accounting issues in the management of peacekeeping assets. The report outlined the overall assets management strategy, involving a worldwide master inventory of field assets; a centralized facility for the receipt, inspection, inventory and issue of equipment and supplies to and from missions, which would also provide a broad oversight and control function; and the introduction of a common supply language within UN peacekeeping operations, based on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) Codification System. Also described were materials management mechanisms required for the operation of a master inventory system, methodology for the accounting of peacekeeping assets, and the policy for their transfers between missions and to non-peacekeeping operations (see below). Accordingly, the Secretary-General requested that the Assembly endorse the proposed management strategy, accounting methodology and transfer policy.

In a June report [A/50/985], ACABQ shared the Secretary-General's view that an accurate master inventory was important for both control of existing assets and procurement of new ones, and should be an integral component of the procurement system; it was not convinced, however, of the need to develop a separate cataloguing and codification system and pointed out that the Secretary-General's report did not contain a comprehensive analysis of the UN Common Coding System used by organizations and agencies of the UN system. The Committee recommended that the results of the six-month trial project using the NATO Codification System together with an analysis of possible alternatives be reported to the Assembly before a decision was made to use it on a permanent basis.

Special Committee consideration. In 1996, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations noted that the establishment of an adequate inventory and asset control system was crucial to the effective logistic support of UN missions and welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to implement such a system. It also encouraged the Secretariat to ensure cost-effective and viable handling of UN peacekeeping equipment.

Procurement

Report of Secretary-General (February). In response to General Assembly resolution 49/216 C [YUN 1994, p. 1369], the Secretary-General reported [A/C.5/50/13/Rev.1] in February 1996 on the implementation of procurement reform in the UN Secretariat. The report described, inter alia, steps taken to improve procurement and logistics support for peacekeeping operations, including on-the-job training of procurement personnel of peacekeeping operations; revised delegation of procurement authority granted to UN missions worldwide and the removal of geographical procurement restrictions for missions; development of the supplier roster, currently including more than 4,000 firms; introduction of a catalogue of commonly requisitioned items; and a comprehensive review of relevant financial rules and regulations.

The Secretary-General pointed out that new procedures had been introduced to facilitate requests for use of commitment authority for peacekeeping procurement against current and future appropriations, and that considerable progress had been made in defining responsibilities and streamlining procurement procedures with regard to DPKO, the Department of Administration and Management (DAM) and the Office of Legal Affairs. Comprehensive management information statistics had been developed for workload and performance measurement and planning of staff resources, and a weekly status report on all procurement for major peacekeeping missions was prepared.

The Secretary-General further examined staff resources for procurement and reiterated his commitment to establishing an efficient and responsive procurement process.

ACABQ report (March). In a March report [A/50/7/Add.13], ACABQ welcomed the progress made in the implementation of procurement reform, but regretted that the Secretary-General had provided only a limited update of issues raised in his 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 312] and had not described procurement activities in units under his authority other than DAM. The Advisory Committee recommended that the Secretary-General submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a full implementation report on procurement reform, addressing, inter alia, the issue of DPKO responsibility for procurement operations, including the delegation of procurement authority to peacekeeping missions. It also underscored an urgent need to improve procurement planning, particularly in peacekeeping operations, and recommended that DPKO develop a list of UN-particular specifications to be provided to missions.

The Committee noted that DPKO had issued in 1995 letters of assist totalling $297.7 million for the acquisition of goods and services not available commercially, and that working groups on reimbursement for contingent-owned equipment (see above) had recommended an increase of commitment authority for letters of assist from $70,000 to $100,000, which was under review by the Secretary-General. In that regard, ACABQ pointed out that letters of assist were issued as an exception to the normal procurement process, and recommended that the Secretary-General include in his report to the Assembly the result of his review. It also made recommendations concerning the procurement activities of various other units of the Secretariat.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations in 1996 underlined the importance of efficient, responsive and transparent procurement procedures for UN missions and, in particular, the need to document adequately the reasons for seeking exceptions from the rule of open, international competitive bidding.

Auditors' recommendations. In its 1996 report [A/51/5, vol. II] on UN peacekeeping operations for the biennium ended 31 December 1995, the Board of Auditors set forth a number of recommendations for: ensuring accurate reporting of procurement expenditures, as well as control and management of procurement made through letters of assist; extending training for procurement personnel to the military, logistics and other mission personnel involved in procurement; and preparing guidelines on the bidding process. Other recommendations dealt with contract awards and continued approval of requisitions by the DPKO Field Administration and Logistics Division before procurement action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 April, the General Assembly, by decision 50/479, took note of the reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ and requested the former to submit to it at its fifty-first session a comprehensive report on the implementation of procurement reform.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In response to the Assembly's April request, the Secretary-General reported [A/C.5/51/9] in November on procurement reform, reviewing reform measures relating to the organization and structure of the Procurement and Transportation Division, training for procurement, delegation of procurement authority, use of systems contracts, the supplier roster and criteria for evaluating suppliers, the Headquarters Committee on Contracts and local committees on contracts, streamlining of procedures, and the development of information technology in support of procurement activities.

The Secretary-General concluded that, with the introduction of current measures, most recommendations made by UN bodies and Member States regarding procurement reform either had been addressed or were in an advanced stage of implementation (see also PART FIVE, Chapter IV).

ACABQ report (December). In a December report [A/51/7/Add.3], ACABQ welcomed the measures outlined by the Secretary-General, but stated that it was too soon to evaluate the results, as they had been introduced only in July.

Liquidation of missions

Further to General Assembly resolution 50/204 [YUN 1995, p. 318] concerning proposals for physical verification and valuation of assets and liabilities of a mission in liquidation, and procedures for their transfer to other missions and UN entities, the Secretary-General, in an annex to a May report [A/50/965], summarized priorities for disposal of such assets.

Upon the liquidation of a mission, its equipment and other property conforming to established standards or compatible with existing equipment would be redeployed to other UN operations or placed in reserve to form start-up kits for future missions, whereas equipment not required for peacekeeping missions but useful for operations of other UN agencies and international non-governmental organizations could be sold to them at depreciated rates. Any other unneeded equipment or property would be sold commercially within the country, while those surplus assets remaining after disposition as described above would be contributed free of charge to the host Government. However, the General Assembly would have to approve any disposition of mission assets providing for free-of-charge contribution to the Government. In that regard, all efforts would be made to obtain the recipient Government's agreement to compensate the United Nations in a mutually acceptable form for the residual value of surplus assets installed in a country that could not be disposed of otherwise.

Auditors' recommendations. By an August note [A/51/283], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a summary of findings and recommendations by the Board of Auditors concerning the financial period ended 31 December 1995. The Board pointed out, inter alia, that in the period under review, there were instances of property transfer from missions in liquidation to ongoing operations without a thorough assessment to determine the need for such items in receiving missions. In addition, the Board recommended that appropriate evaluation be conducted before assets were transferred from liquidating to continuing missions, to avoid the transfer of unserviceable property at additional costs to the Organization.

In its July report [A/51/5, vol. II] on UN peacekeeping operations, the Board reiterated its recommendation that standard procedures be developed for the transfer and acknowledgement of assets, and recommended that DPKO assign specific responsibility for the management and completion of a mission's liquidation within a specified period.

OIOS report

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362], the Secretary-General, by a March note [E/AC.51/1996/3 & Corr.1], transmitted a report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on an in-depth evaluation of the termination phase of peacekeeping operations.

The report contained findings and recommendations on the Organization's capacity to learn from its experience in peacekeeping. It examined lessons of successfully terminated missions relating to peace-building during the mission, a protracted termination phase, successor arrangements, planning for the termination phase, liquidation of missions and disposition of assets; some termination issues in problematic missions were also reviewed.

The OIOS report was considered by the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) at its 1996 session [A/51/16]. The Committee endorsed the recommendations dealing with the establishment of a peacekeeping documentation centre at Headquarters; assessment of implementation of OIOS recommendations in the triennial review, to be submitted to CPC; reviews of experience with the planning of the termination phase in all end-of-mission and "lessons learned" assessments; modifications to provisional guidelines on the liquidation of missions, derived from end-of-mission and "lessons learned" assessments; introduction of a critical path analysis for the liquidation process into the field mission planning process; and elaboration of guidelines for a cost-benefit analysis of transfer of assets.

CPC also modified and endorsed the recommendations to submit the OIOS report and related CPC conclusions to a number of General Assembly and inter-agency bodies; to review end-of-mission assessments and "lessons learned" documents with a view to modifying existing policies and procedures, and to issue the results by June 1997; to designate responsibility centres for work on demobilization, resettlement and reintegration of uprooted populations and other substantive tasks, but not necessarily within the purview of DPKO; to arrange for the provision of military personnel by troop contributors, with prior Security Council approval, to assist in securing a mission's assets, and to entrust the civilian police component with investigations of incidents involving UN personnel and thefts of UN property; and to review by the end of 1996 the existing policy on the disposition of assets during the liquidation of a mission.

The Committee concluded that action on three other recommendations, concerning the transfer of responsibility to successor arrangements, should be based on decisions of relevant intergovernmental bodies, and that the remaining six recommendations should be examined further by such bodies.

Transfer of assets

In his May report [A/50/965], the Secretary-General outlined the methodology for the accounting and transfer of peacekeeping assets, comprising the following main elements: upon receipt for storage at the United Nations Logistics Base (see below), assets would be transferred from the sending mission's inventory to that of the Base; upon redeployment, inventory responsibility would follow the physical movement of property, including storage for future use; inventory was included in the financial accounts at initial purchase price, until eventual disposal; inventory records for start-up kits deployed to a new mission would be transferred to that mission, while replacement equipment procured against that mission's budget would be added to the inventory of the Base; and assets would be transferred without reimbursement to the source.

The Secretary-General recommended that assets procured for operations funded by assessed contributions be transferred or redeployed to the Base or other such operations at no additional cost to Member States and without additional financial transactions; however, upon their disposal or transfer to activities not funded by as-assessment, their residual value should be determined and reported to the General Assembly, and redeployments to and from such activities would be charged at depreciated rates.

ACABQ, in its June report [A/50/985], concurred with the methodology for the accounting and transfer of assets, and recommended that the Assembly endorse the Secretary-General's proposals in that regard.

UN Logistics Base

Report of Secretary-General. Further to his 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 312], the Secretary-General reported [A/50/907] in April 1996 on surplus asset storage facilities and mission start-up kits at the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy. The report estimated that the start-up costs for the Base from 23 November 1994 to 31 December 1995 were $3.2 million, and the cost of maintaining it from 1 January to 30 June 1996 was $4,078,500 gross ($3,828,600 net), which provided for 16 international and 17 local staff. Estimates also covered spare parts, contractual refurbishment services, preparation and loading of equipment for shipment, maintenance of premises, and transport, logistics and electronic support. The budget from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 was estimated at $7,875,000 gross ($7,375,200 net).

The Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly note the Base's financing from 23 November 1994 to 30 June 1996, approve the cost estimates until 30 June 1997, and decide to include in the budget of each peacekeeping mission its share of costs for maintaining the Base, reflecting the percentage relationship of that mission's budget to the overall peacekeeping budget.

ACABQ report. In its June report [A/50/985], ACABQ provided observations and recommendations on the Secretary-General's 1995 and 1996 reports on surplus asset storage facilities. It noted the Secretariat's intention to maintain in reserve five start-up kits for 100-person missions, preconfigured and stocked in ways to facilitate immediate packing and shipment, with an individual value of $3.4 million; it pointed out that the actual cost of start-up kits could vary significantly depending on the availability of surplus assets at the Base. ACABQ agreed with the proposed mechanism for the establishment and replenishment of start-up kits, trusting that only serviceable equipment and usable supplies would be transferred from peacekeeping missions for storage at the Base. It also concurred with the proposal to establish standards for a maximum level of stocks and the quality of assets to be retained for future use, so as to enable local disposal of substandard equipment before shipment to the Base. It was recommended that such standards be established expeditiously and that a cost-benefit analysis be carried out regarding the Base's operation.

ACABQ further recommended that the General Assembly note the extension of the Base's ad hoc financing arrangements until 30 June 1996, and approve the proposed cost estimates until 30 June 1997, to be prorated among peacekeeping budgets, and that future budget proposals for the Base reflect detailed workload indicators for various types of work to be performed by contractors.

Special Committee consideration. In 1996, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations requested competent bodies of the General Assembly to examine further the Secretary-General's proposal to regularize financing of the UN Logistics Base.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 50/500 of 17 September, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on policy, technique and accounting issues in the management of peacekeeping assets, his 1995 and 1996 reports on surplus asset storage facilities and mission start-up kits, and the related ACABQ report, and deferred their consideration to its fifty-first session. The Secretary-General was asked to submit follow-up information as requested by ACABQ.

Financial management and management review

In response to General Assembly resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1338], the Secretary-General submitted a June 1996 report [A/50/983] clarifying the concepts of a management review officer and a roving finance officer, as well as the accountability of programme managers in peacekeeping operations.

He noted that the shortage of experienced civilian administrative staff was one of the most crucial problems facing UN missions, particularly in the early stages. To address that shortage in the area of financial management, trained personnel from Headquarters or other missions had been temporarily assigned to new operations as roving finance officers. Their responsibilities included financial planning and management, operational support, and review and control. The report further described each of those functions, adding that roving finance officers, due to their extensive previous field experience, played an important role in the training of personnel on administrative and finance issues prior to deployment to the field. The Secretary-General suggested that a pool of at least four such officers should be established and that a roster of such individuals from DPKO and other offices could be maintained to ensure their immediate availability.

The report further pointed out that management review capability in missions often proved to be insufficient and that management review officers should be assigned to each operation to carry out three broad functions: review and analysis of existing management practices; streamlining and improvement of management practices and programme coordination; and implementation of follow-up mechanisms for corrective action. Such officers would assist the mission's head of administration in expediting the implementation of approved managerial policy, recommendations issued by oversight bodies and guidance received from legislative bodies. Currently, those functions could be performed through appropriate redeployment of staff.

The Secretary-General concluded that roving finance officers and management review officers would complement and support internal control mechanisms implemented by resident auditors assigned to missions by OIOS. Those three functions would in turn support the system of accountability and responsibility of peacekeeping programme managers, ensuring the effective administration of personnel and financial resources allocated to them.

In a November report [A/51/646], ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report and that information on roving finance officers and management review officers be included in the budgets of peacekeeping operations.

Other matters

Demining

The Secretary-General, in his August 1996 report on the work of the Organization [A/51/1], noted that DPKO, facing the problem of mine clearance as both a mandated objective and a question of safety for peacekeeping troops, had worked closely with the Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA)—the Organization's focal point for mine clearance—on enhancing UN demining capacity and coordinating national demining activities. The two Departments continued to develop different aspects of the UN Central Landmine Database, designed to disseminate information on minefields and mine incidents reported around the world, some of which was placed on the Internet. Over the past year, DHA and DPKO had been responsible for programmes in Afghanistan, Angola, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Mozambique and Rwanda, as well as for separate programmes in Eastern Slavonia and in the rest of Croatia, and continued to provide input into programmes in Cambodia and the Lao People's Democratic Republic. In addition, a one-year programme was completed in Yemen, and DPKO continued to collect information on the mine situation in Western Sahara. (See also PART ONE, Chapters II, IV, V and VII, and PART THREE, Chapter III.)

Special Committee consideration. At its 1996 session, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations called on the Secretary-General to provide a more coordinated approach between the units within DHA and DPKO responsible for demining operations under UN auspices and involved in coordination with non-UN demining agencies, so as to avoid duplication of effort.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 August, the Security Council President made the following statement [S/PRST/1996/37] on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has reviewed the issue of demining in the context of United Nations peacekeeping and has given careful consideration to the views expressed in the open debate under the item "Demining in the context of United Nations peacekeeping" in its 3689th meeting on 15 August 1996.

The Security Council, bearing in mind its responsibilities with regard to United Nations peacekeeping, notes that the widespread indiscriminate use of anti-personnel mines in areas of United Nations peacekeeping operations poses serious impediments to such operations and to the safety of United Nations and other international personnel. Against this background, the Council states the following:

1. Operational demining should be, wherever appropriate, an important element and an integral part of peacekeeping mandates. This will facilitate the implementation of those mandates and better enable the Secretary-General to allocate appropriate resources towards achieving their objectives.

2. The early deployment of mine clearance units will often be important to the effectiveness of a peacekeeping operation. The Council encourages the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations to examine options for achieving such early deployment. It also encourages Member States to examine whether and in what form they might be able to help in this respect.

3. The tasks of, on the one hand, operational mine clearance during peacekeeping operations, which is the responsibility of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, and, on the other hand, longer-term humanitarian mine-clearance activities, which fall under the responsibility of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, are different. The Council is, however, aware of linkages and complementarities between different elements of conflict resolution as well as of the need to ensure a smooth transition from demining as a peacekeeping requirement to demining as part of peace-building in a follow-up phase.

The Security Council, thus, is of the opinion that coordination and a clear delineation of responsibilities between the two Departments as well as with regard to other United Nations agencies dealing with demining could be further improved so as to avoid duplication of effort and to guarantee a coherent and integrated approach towards the whole range of short- and long-term demining needs. With particular reference to paragraph 51 of the report of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations of 7 May 1996, the Council requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts aiming in this direction.

The Security Council emphasizes the importance of coordination by the United Nations of activities related to mine clearance in the context of United Nations peacekeeping, including those by regional organizations, in particular in the areas of information and training.

4. The primary responsibility for demining in the context of United Nations peacekeeping lies with parties responsible for the laying of mines. Parties to a conflict must desist from further mine laying once a peacekeeping operation is established. They are also obliged to facilitate humanitarian and military demining efforts by providing detailed maps and other relevant information on those mines that have already been laid by them and by contributing financially or otherwise to their removal.

5. The international community should intensify, multilaterally or bilaterally, its efforts in assisting those parties to a conflict which have shown their readiness to cooperate with mine clearance, mine awareness and training programmes in the context of United Nations peacekeeping operations. In this connection, the Council welcomes the establishment by the Secretary-General of a United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund for Demining as a necessary and timely mechanism to channel funding to humanitarian demining operations.

The Security Council appeals to all States to contribute to this Fund as well as to other voluntary funds set up by the Secretary-General for certain peacekeeping operations which contain demining elements.

6. Demining activities should, as much as possible, make use of the appropriate modern mine-clearance technologies and specialized equipment and focus on the creation and strengthening of local demining capabilities; training programmes should attach particular importance to this aspect. Where this would be of benefit to the operational effectiveness of a peacekeeping operation, consideration should also be given to including provision for the training of a local demining capability in mandates of peacekeeping operations.

The Security Council encourages the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, given its responsibility for a comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations, to continue and intensify its considerations of the operational demining aspects of peacekeeping operations. These considerations might include an analysis of mine-clearance experience in previous peacekeeping operations.

The Security Council is of the view that the elements outlined in this statement are not exhaustive. The Council will thus keep this issue under review in the context of the establishment of peacekeeping operations and the consideration of specific mandates.

Meeting number. SC 3693.

Cooperation with regional organizations

In his report on the work of the Organization [A/51/1], the Secretary-General noted that as demands for international action to maintain peace and security increased, cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations continued to grow and, in some cases, had reached considerably higher levels. To explore the full potential of such cooperation, a second meeting of the heads of 13 regional organizations that cooperated with UN peacemaking and peacekeeping endeavours was convened on 15 and 16 February. The report further described UN activities carried out over the past year in cooperation with the Organization of American States (OAS), the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Caribbean Community (CARICOM), the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) (see relevant regional chapters of PART ONE), the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the League of Arab States.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations in 1996 reaffirmed the important contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security that regional arrangements and agencies could make in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, including peacekeeping. It recalled the General Assembly's 1994 Declaration on the Enhancement of Cooperation between the United Nations and Regional Arrangements or Agencies in the Maintenance of International Peace and Security [GA res. 49/57] and encouraged the strengthening of such cooperation.

In that context, the Committee noted the framework for cooperation between the UN Secretariat and OSCE, as well as the Secretary-General's 1995 report on improving preparedness for conflict prevention in Africa [YUN 1995, p. 307], and encouraged him to continue efforts, in consultation with OAU, to reinforce African capacity to participate in peacekeeping, notably through technical assistance and the training of personnel, logistical support and mobilization of financial aid. The Secretary-General was also encouraged to continue his meetings on cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations, including in the area of peacekeeping, and to report on those meetings to Member States.

Note of Secretary-General. In a July note [A/50/571/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly his comments on a 1995 report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the sharing of responsibilities in peacekeeping between the United Nations and regional organizations [YUN 1995, p. 307].

While welcoming some of the recommendations, he pointed out that the thrust of conclusions that the United Nations should provide regional organizations with resources to carry out roles in the peace and security field contradicted the report's own premise that regional organizations could relieve some of the burden from the United Nations at a time when its capacity for peace operations was being overstretched. The Secretary-General noted that he and the Secretariat would be guided in developing more efficient cooperation with regional organizations by the general policy directive set out in a 22 February 1995 statement of the Security Council President [YUN 1995, p. 179].

Communication. By a 26 January letter [A/51/62-S/1996/74], the Russian Federation transmitted to the Secretary-General the texts of decisions adopted by the Council of Heads of State of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) in Moscow on 19 January. The decisions concerned, inter alia, approval of the statute on collective peacekeeping forces in CIS and of the concept for prevention and settlement of conflicts in CIS member States, which comprised such elements as conflict prevention, settlement of armed conflicts, post-conflict peace-building and interaction with the United Nations and OSCE.

Chapter II

Africa

The continent of Africa continued to suffer from debilitating political and civil conflict during 1996, resulting in massive flows of refugees and displaced persons. The countries most severely affected by ethnic strife and the ensuing humanitarian problems were African nations in the Great Lakes region, particularly Zaire, Rwanda and Burundi. The situation in Burundi was further complicated by a coup d'état on 25 July, when the power-sharing Government established in 1994 was overthrown. The widespread tensions and violence in the Great Lakes region led to hundreds of thousands crossing borders between neighbouring Central African nations, particularly Zaire, Rwanda and Burundi. During the year, Kenya, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania were also affected by the turmoil. Beginning in mid-November, the significant return of refugees to Rwanda from eastern Zaire eased the humanitarian crisis to some degree. The mandate for a multinational force, authorized by the Security Council on 15 November, was terminated at year's end because of the changed situation. Special Envoys and Special Representatives of the Secretary-General continued their work for the entire region.

In Angola, the United Nations focused on efforts to implement the 1994 Lusaka Protocol signed by the two parties to the long-standing dispute—the Government of Angola and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA). However, progress in implementing the terms of the accord relating to the withdrawal and demilitarization of UNITA forces and the integration of those forces into a national military remained slow.

The civil war continued in Liberia despite the warring factions having signed an agreement in 1995. At one point, fighting between the factions erupted again, but the sides agreed to return to a ceasefire by the end of the year. Following international diplomatic intervention, the several parties agreed on a revised schedule for elections, postponing them until May 1997.

A coup d'état occurred in Sierra Leone on 16 January following years of civil unrest. Nevertheless, the new leaders of that country carried out the previously planned presidential elections and a peace agreement was signed by the two opposing sides in November.

Political chaos, civil strife and famine remained the dominant features of the situation in Somalia. UN efforts to achieve national reconciliation were stymied by a lack of cooperation from the Somali parties, and fighting resumed in December. A United Nations Political Office for Somalia was established in Nairobi, Kenya, to maintain contact with political leaders and coordinate relief assistance.

Agreements were signed by the Government of the Sudan in 1996—on 10 April, with two rebel factions, to end the ongoing civil war, and on 9 September, with Uganda, to normalize relations. The Security Council in January demanded that the Sudan extradite to Ethiopia three suspects in the June 1995 assassination attempt on the President of Egypt in Addis Ababa, and a Special Envoy was appointed by the Secretary-General. In April and again in August, travel and diplomatic sanctions were imposed by the Council against the Sudan for non-compliance with its resolution.

In Western Sahara, the United Nations continued to work towards holding a referendum on the self-determination of the territory. However, the two parties—the Government of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO)—remained at an impasse over the issue of who would be eligible to vote. The ceasefire continued to hold throughout the year.

As part of its efforts to find solutions to the political problems facing Africa, the United Nations maintained four peacekeeping forces on the continent in 1996: the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM); the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL); the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO); and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR). UNAMIR's mandate expired in March and the last troops left Rwanda in April, after a two-and-a-half year presence in that country. UNOMIL, in place since 1993, had been supplemented since 1994 by the Monitoring Group of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOMOG).

Two international bodies dealt with specific investigations in Africa in 1996: the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 (see PART FOUR, Chapter II), and the International Commission of Inquiry established to investigate reports of the sale or supply of arms to former Rwandan government forces residing in eastern Zaire.

The Security Council in 1996 upheld sanctions imposed against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in 1992, despite efforts to have them lifted. The sanctions were intended to obtain the Libyan Government's cooperation in releasing two individuals suspected of involvement in a 1988 aircraft bombing over Lockerbie, Scotland.

Great Lakes region

In 1996, the refugee situation remained a serious destabilizing factor for the entire Great Lakes region in Central Africa. Those countries most severely affected were Burundi, Rwanda and Zaire, but Kenya, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania also suffered. The presence of more than 1 million refugees in eastern Zaire, mostly from Rwanda, exacerbated ongoing problems of political and ethnic friction in the area, leading to intensified hostilities during the year. As a result, great flows of refugees crossed the borders of Great Lakes region nations, with large numbers returning to Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania by the end of the year. Rwanda and Zaire, and to a lesser degree Burundi and Uganda, accused other countries of provoking armed attacks by refugees or involvement in rebel movements in efforts to destabilize existing Governments.

As the political, humanitarian and security situation grew significantly worse, the Secretary-General appointed a Special Envoy for the Great Lakes region, Raymond Chrétien (Canada), whose tasks were threefold: to consult with all concerned to establish the facts relating to current conflicts and develop plans for defusing tension and establishing a ceasefire and a negotiating process; to explore the possibilities for convening a regional conference; and to advise on the mandate for a Special Representative who would reside in the region, and on the size and structure of a UN political presence to be established in the region. On 30 October, the Security Council welcomed the appointment [S/1996/889].

Intense fighting between Zairian troops and rebels in early November resulted in the evacuation of all international humanitarian workers and forced hundreds of thousands of refugees and displaced Zairians to flee Zaire—an unexpected, massive flow of approximately 600,000 into Rwanda from eastern Zaire by mid-November.

The Secretary-General had proposed to the Security Council on 7 November that a multinational force be dispatched to eastern Zaire. On 15 November, the Council authorized Member States cooperating with the Secretary-General to establish a temporary multinational force to facilitate delivery of humanitarian aid. Although a small force was dispatched, it was subsequently determined that the situation had changed so that the force, at its authorized level, had very little utility. (For further details regarding the Great Lakes situation, and texts of relevant resolutions, see sections below on "Zaire" (pp. 55-59), "Rwanda" (pp. 59-73) and "Burundi" (pp. 73-89).)

Peacemaking efforts

The United Nations was involved in and supported regional efforts to find a solution to the political and humanitarian problems of Central Africa, particularly in the Great Lakes region, during 1996. The Secretary-General during the year dispatched two Special Envoys and a Special Representative to the Great Lakes region, and the Security Council in November authorized a multinational force for humanitarian purposes for eastern Zaire, which was terminated in December due to developments in that area. UN representatives also attended two summit meetings of leaders of regional States, held in Nairobi. The heads of State and Government of the countries members of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa (see PART ONE, Chapter VII), at a meeting held in Brazzaville, Congo, on 2 and 3 December [S/1996/1006], stressed the need for an integrated and comprehensive approach to the search for a lasting peace in the Great Lakes region and decided to give priority to monitoring the situation there and to consult regularly with a view to finding peaceful solutions.

Multinational force

Various suggestions were made during 1996 for an international or multinational force to be sent to the Great Lakes region in response to the political and humanitarian problems there. The Security Council authorized such a force on 15 November. However, with the return of the majority of refugees and the growing access of humanitarian agencies to the remainder, the mandate for the multinational force was terminated at the end of the year.

In April, the Security Council, in resolution 1053(1996) (see below, under "Rwanda"), had requested the Secretary-General to consult with States neighbouring Rwanda, in particular Zaire, on measures, including the possible deployment of UN observers at airfields and other transportation points near border crossing points, for the purpose of monitoring the arms embargo against Rwandan rebel forces (see below). In response to a communication from the Secretary-General on the subject, President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire, in a 29 May letter, requested that UN observers be deployed to North and South Kivu for the purpose of exercising surveillance over the flow of goods through the airports of Goma (North Kivu) and Bukavu (South Kivu), and of monitoring the movement of persons along the common borders of Zaire with Rwanda and Burundi, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council President on 4 June [S/1996/420]. He also informed the Council that he intended to dispatch a technical mission to the area to collect information and prepare a report, on the basis of which he would submit recommendations to the Council for the eventual deployment of UN observers. Rwanda, on 28 June [S/1996/496], expressed its view that sending another mission to the region might not be appropriate; instead, the Council should be urged to complete the work of the International Commission of Inquiry (see below), which was investigating reports of arms being supplied to former Rwandan government forces.

On 5 November, a summit meeting of regional leaders in Nairobi (see below) called for the deployment of an international force in eastern Zaire to support humanitarian assistance. Support for that proposal was expressed by the 17-member Central Organ of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution at a meeting at ministerial level in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, on 11 November. A statement [S/1996/922] issued after the meeting called on the Security Council to authorize the rapid deployment of a neutral force to provide humanitarian assistance to refugees, as well as to ensure their return to Rwanda, and stressed that African participation in such a force was pivotal. The ministers asked the international community to ensure that financial, logistical and material resources were available to support African participation.

The Secretary-General, in a 7 November letter [S/1996/916] to the Security Council, said that the immediate concern, in view of the increased fighting, was to respond to the refugee crisis by securing the delivery of humanitarian assistance, and the longer-term goal was the repatriation of the refugees. In order to create the necessary conditions to achieve those objectives, he proposed that a multinational force be created under the command agreed to by the countries contributing to it. His proposal for such a force to be set up for humanitarian purposes in eastern Zaire was welcomed by the Security Council in resolution 1078(1996) of 9 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (9 November)

On 9 November, the Security Council adopted resolution 1078(1996).

The Security Council,

Gravely concerned at the deteriorating situation in the Great Lakes region, in particular eastern Zaire, and at the effect of the continued fighting on the inhabitants of the region,

Recalling the statement of the President of the Security Council of 1 November 1996 on the situation in the Great Lakes region and the letters dated 14 and 24 October 1996 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council, Particularly concerned at the humanitarian situation and the large-scale movements of refugees and internally displaced persons,

Deeply concerned at the obstacles to the efforts of all international humanitarian agencies to provide relief and assistance to those in need,

Stressing the need to address, as a matter of urgency, the humanitarian situation, and in this context, underlining the necessity to adopt, in consultation with the States concerned, measures necessary in order to enable the return in the region of humanitarian agencies and to secure the prompt and safe delivery of humanitarian assistance to those in need,

Having considered the letter dated 7 November 1996 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council,

Welcoming the regional efforts which are aimed at reducing tension in the region, in particular the contribution made by the regional leaders at their meeting in Nairobi on 5 November 1996,

Taking note of the letter dated 6 November 1996 from the Permanent Representative of Kenya to the Secretary-General, which contains the communique of the Nairobi regional summit on the crisis in eastern Zaire,

Taking note also of the request addressed to the Council by the regional leaders at their meeting in Nairobi on 5 November 1996, to take urgent measures to ensure the establishment of safe corridors and temporary sanctuaries by deploying a neutral force,

Noting that the regional leaders called for an intensification of efforts towards the voluntary repatriation of refugees to Rwanda,

Expressing its intention to respond positively on an urgent basis to those requests,

Bearing in mind the reaffirmation by the Nairobi regional summit of its commitment to the territorial integrity of Zaire, and stressing the need for all States to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the States in the region in accordance with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Underlining the urgent need for the orderly and voluntary repatriation and resettlement of refugees, and the return of internally displaced persons, which are crucial elements for the stability of the region,

Reiterating its support for the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, and underlining the need for all Governments in the region and parties concerned to cooperate fully with the mission of the Special Envoy,

Welcoming the efforts of the mediators and representatives of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the European Union and the States concerned, and encouraging them to coordinate closely their efforts with those of the Special Envoy, Underlining the urgent need for an international conference on peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region under the auspices of the United Nations and the OAU to address the problems of the region in a comprehensive way,

Taking note of the letter dated 8 November 1996 from the Charge d'affaires a. i. of the Permanent Mission of Zaire to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Council,

Determining that the magnitude of the present humanitarian crisis in eastern Zaire constitutes a threat to peace and security in the region,

A

1. Condemns all acts of violence, and calls for an immediate ceasefire and a complete cessation of all hostilities in the region;

2. Calls upon all States in the region to create the conditions necessary for the speedy and peaceful resolution of the crisis and to desist from any act that may further exacerbate the situation, and urges all parties to engage in a process of political dialogue and negotiation without delay;

3. Reaffirms its commitment to the establishment of conditions conducive to the voluntary repatriation of refugees to their country of origin as a crucial element for the stability of the region;

4. Calls upon all States to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the States in the region in accordance with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Calls upon all those concerned in the region to create favourable and safe conditions to facilitate the delivery of international humanitarian assistance to those in need and to ensure the safety of all refugees as well as the security and freedom of movement of all international humanitarian personnel;

B

6. Welcomes the Secretary-General's letter dated 7 November 1996, including in particular his proposal that a multinational force be set up for humanitarian purposes in eastern Zaire;

7. Strongly urges Member States, on an urgent and temporary basis and in cooperation with the Secretary-General and with the OAU, to prepare the necessary arrangements, in consultation with the States concerned, to allow the immediate return of humanitarian organizations and the safe delivery of humanitarian aid to displaced persons, refugees and civilians at risk in eastern Zaire, and to help to create the necessary conditions for the voluntary, orderly and secure repatriation of refugees;

8. Requests the Member States concerned to report to the Council through the Secretary-General on those arrangements as soon as possible to enable the Council to authorize the deployment of the multinational force referred to above upon receipt of the report, which will inter alia reflect the results of the consultations with the States concerned in the region, and bearing in mind the need to ensure the security and freedom of movement of the personnel of the multinational force referred to in paragraph 6 above;

9. Decides that the cost of implementing such an operation will be borne by the participating Member States and other voluntary contributions, and encourages all Member States to contribute to the operation in any way possible;

C

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with his Special Envoy and the coordinator of humanitarian affairs, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the OAU, the Special Envoy of the European Union and the States concerned:

(a) To draw up a concept of operations and framework for a humanitarian task force, with military assistance if necessary, drawing initially on immediately available contributions from Member States, with the objectives of:

(i) Delivering short-term humanitarian assistance and shelter to refugees and displaced persons in eastern Zaire;

(ii) Assisting the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees with the protection and voluntary repatriation of refugees and displaced persons;

(iii) Establishing humanitarian corridors for the delivery of humanitarian assistance and to assist the voluntary repatriation of refugees after carefully ascertaining their effective will to repatriate;

(b) To seek the cooperation of the Government of Rwanda in, and to ensure international support for, further measures, including the deployment of additional international monitors, as appropriate, to build confidence and ensure a safe return of refugees;

(c) To report to the Council with recommendations no later than 20 November 1996;

11. Calls upon the OAU, the States of the region and other international organizations to examine ways in which to contribute to and to complement efforts undertaken by the United Nations to defuse tension in the region, in particular in eastern Zaire;

12. Expresses its readiness to examine without delay the recommendations that the Secretary-General might submit in this regard;

D

13. Invites the Secretary-General, on an urgent basis and in close consultation with the Secretary-General of the OAU, and with the States concerned, and in the light of the recommendations of his Special Envoy, to determine the modalities of the convening of an international conference for peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region and to make all necessary arrangements to convene such a conference;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1078(1996)
 9 November 1996 Meeting 3710 Adopted unanimously
 Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/921).

Zaire, in an 8 November letter to the Security Council President [S/1996/920], agreed to the deployment of a multinational force. It agreed with the Secretary-General's proposal that the best option would be for a group of Member States to establish and contribute to a multinational force, with the Security Council's authorization, operating under the command and control agreed between the countries contributing to it; the force would exist for a limited period. If necessary, it could be supplemented by a UN peacekeeping force. Zaire called on the United Nations to order Rwanda and Burundi to withdraw their troops from occupied Zairian territory and to condemn the murderers of Zairian soldiers in the UN camps and the massacre of innocent civilians.

Having consulted with a number of Governments, including those in the region, Canada offered to work with other Governments to enable the deployment of a multinational force as a temporary humanitarian operation for eastern Zaire. In a 14 November letter [S/1996/941] to the Secretary-General, Canada said the purpose of such an operation would be to allow the immediate return of humanitarian organizations and the safe delivery of humanitarian aid to displaced persons, refugees and civilians at risk in eastern Zaire, and to help to create conditions for the voluntary repatriation of refugees. Canada was willing to take the lead in organizing and commanding such an operation, whose objectives were humanitarian and not intended to interfere with the balance of military forces in the area or to support the re-establishment of camps in which armed elements were able to operate. In Canada's view, the temporary operation should terminate on 31 March 1997 and could be succeeded by a follow-up operation, if the Security Council so decided.

Mali, in an 8 November letter [S/1996/969] to the Secretary-General, had stated that it stood ready to contribute to the establishment of any intervention force that might be set up under the auspices of OAU and the United Nations for safeguarding the lives of those in jeopardy in the Great Lakes region.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 November 1996, the Security Council adopted resolution 1080(1996), thereby authorizing a temporary multinational force for eastern Zaire.

 Reaffirming its resolution 1078(1996) of 9 November 1996,

Gravely concerned at the continuing deteriorating situation in the Great Lakes region, in particular eastern Zaire,

Taking note of the communique issued by the fourth extraordinary session of the Central Organ of the Organization of African Unity Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution held at the ministerial level at Addis Ababa on 11 November 1996, as well as a communication dated 13 November 1996 from the Permanent Observer Mission of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to the United Nations,

Stressing the need for all States to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the States in the region in accordance with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Underlining the obligation of all concerned strictly to respect the relevant provisions of international humanitarian law,

Having considered the letter dated 14 November 1996 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council,

Reiterating its support for the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, and underlining the need for all Governments in the region and parties concerned to cooperate fully with the mission for the Special Envoy,

Welcoming the efforts of the mediators and representatives of the OAU, the European Union and the States concerned, and encouraging them to coordinate closely their efforts with those of the Special Envoy,

Recognizing that the current situation in eastern Zaire demands an urgent response by the international community,

Reiterating the urgent need for an international conference on peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region under the auspices of the United Nations and the OAU to address the problems of the region in a comprehensive way,

Determining that the present situation in eastern Zaire constitutes a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Bearing in mind the humanitarian purposes of the multinational force as specified below,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Reiterates its condemnation of all acts of violence, and its call for an immediate ceasefire and a complete cessation of all hostilities in the region;

2. Welcomes the letter from the Secretary-General dated 14 November 1996;

3. Welcomes also the offers made by Member States, in consultation with the States concerned in the region, concerning the establishment for humanitarian purposes of a temporary multinational force to facilitate the immediate return of humanitarian organizations and the effective delivery by civilian relief organizations of humanitarian aid to alleviate the immediate suffering of displaced persons, refugees and civilians at risk in eastern Zaire, and to facilitate the voluntary, orderly repatriation of refugees by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees as well as the voluntary return of displaced persons, and invites other interested States to offer to participate in these efforts;

4. Welcomes further the offer by a Member State to take the lead in organizing and commanding this temporary multinational force;

5. Authorizes the Member States cooperating with the Secretary-General to conduct the operation referred to in paragraph 3 above to achieve, by using all necessary means, the humanitarian objectives set out therein;

6. Calls upon all concerned in the region to cooperate fully with the multinational force and humanitarian agencies and to ensure the security and freedom of movement of their personnel;

7. Calls upon the Member States participating in the multinational force to cooperate with the Secretary-General and to coordinate closely with the United Nations Coordinator for humanitarian assistance for eastern Zaire and the relevant humanitarian relief operations;

8. Decides that the operation shall terminate on 31 March 1997, unless the Council, on the basis of a report of the Secretary-General, determines that the objectives of the operation have been fulfilled earlier;

9. Decides also that the cost of implementing this temporary operation will be borne by the participating Member States and other voluntary contributions, and welcomes the establishment by the Secretary-General of a voluntary trust fund with the purpose of supporting African participation in the multinational force;

10. Encourages Member States to contribute urgently to this fund or otherwise to give support to enable African States to participate in this force, and requests the Secretary-General to report within 21 days of the adoption of this resolution to enable the Council to consider the adequacy of these arrangements;

11. Requests the Member States participating in the multinational force to provide periodic reports at least twice monthly, through the Secretary-General, to the Council, the first such report to be made no later than 21 days after the adoption of this resolution;

12. Expresses its intention to authorize the establishment of a follow-on operation, which would succeed the multinational force, and requests the Secretary-General to submit for its consideration a report, no later than 1 January 1997, containing his recommendations regarding the possible concept, mandate, structure, size and duration of such an operation, as well as its estimated costs;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to initiate detailed planning and to determine the willingness of Member States to contribute troops for the anticipated follow-on operation;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1080(1996)

32-nation draft (S/1996/943).

Sponsors: Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Botswana, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Congo, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, France, Gabon, Germany, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Indonesia, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Mali, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire.

(Following adoption of the resolution, the President read out a letter [S/1996/949] from Brazil, indicating that it had been its intention to be a sponsor.)

Zaire, in a letter of 15 November [S/1996/942] to the Council President, said that it should be consulted on the composition and mandate of any multinational force to be deployed in eastern Zaire. It objected to the sending of a team of planners for the multinational force to Kigali, Rwanda, and said the force should have its headquarters in Zaire since the force would be deployed there. As for the mandate of the international force, it should be not only humanitarian but also political—and must be supported militarily, if necessary—in order to cover all aspects of the problem. Humanitarian organizations operating in the country should work under the authority of the UNHCR Coordinator for humanitarian operations and should refrain from dealing with the illegal administrations established by the aggressors, Zaire added.

The Secretary-General indicated in a 5 December letter [S/1996/1013] to the Council President that several Member States had expressed their willingness to participate in the voluntary trust fund established on 25 November to support African participation in the temporary multinational force, but no contributions had been received so far since the nature and size of the force had yet to be finalized.

As an annex to his letter, the Secretary-General forwarded a report on the multinational force, submitted by Canada on the same day. Canada stated that, since the adoption of resolution 1080(1996) on 15 November, the situation on the ground in eastern Zaire had improved significantly. With the voluntary repatriation of a large number of refugees to Rwanda and the increase in access, albeit limited, of humanitarian organizations in eastern Zaire, progress had been achieved towards fulfilling both elements of the mandate. It was possible that there might be an appreciable number of refugees and displaced persons in eastern Zaire who still required assistance, and the multinational force had been undertaking aerial and ground reconnaissance missions to obtain a clearer understanding of the number and needs of those people. The Force Commander had had numerous contacts with the Governments of Zaire, Rwanda and Uganda, as well as other leaders, to solicit their support for the multinational force. Headquarters had been established in Kampala, Uganda, and current personnel numbered 345 in theatre in Uganda and Rwanda, with 32 military personnel in the planning group in Stuttgart, Germany. A Steering Group composed of key contributors of troops, equipment and funding—Belgium, Cameroon, Canada, France, Ireland (EU Presidency), Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Senegal, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Uganda, the United Kingdom and the United States—had held its first meeting on 29 November in Ottawa. Its mandate was to exchange information on developments relating to the force, to decide on any major change to the concept of operations and mission tasks, and to ensure liaison on humanitarian assistance.

After consulting with the Steering Group members in December, Canada concluded that, with the return to Rwanda of the majority of refugees, the dispersal of the remaining number over large areas of eastern Zaire and the growing access of humanitarian agencies to the remaining refugees and others at risk, the multinational force at its current authorized force level had very little utility. As stated in a 13 December letter [S/1996/1046] to the Secretary-General, Canada decided to withdraw its command and forces by 31 December. It recommended that the Security Council terminate the mandate of the multinational force, effective that day.

The Security Council on 23 December, in a letter [S/1996/1064] to the Secretary-General, agreed that the functions of the force had come to an end.

The Secretary-General, in his 20 December report on the Great Lakes region [S/1996/1063], said that, under the circumstances, he was not in a position to recommend to the Council the establishment of a UN operation to follow on from the multinational force.

Special Envoy

In a visit to the region, Special Envoy Raymond Chrétien arrived in Kinshasa, Zaire, on 8 November, having first called on Zaire President Mobutu Sese Seko in the south of France where he was undergoing medical treatment. Afterwards, Mr. Chrétien shuttled between a number of countries (Burundi, Cameroon, Ethiopia, Kenya, Rwanda, Senegal, South Africa, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire). He returned to United Nations Headquarters on 11 December following a further meeting with President Mobutu in Nice.

On 12 December, the Secretary-General transmitted Mr. Chrétien's report on his mission [S/1996/1036] to the Security Council. The Special Envoy noted that, at the time of his departure for the Great Lakes region, a humanitarian crisis of unprecedented proportion was unfolding in eastern Zaire. Intense fighting between Zairian troops and rebels had caused the evacuation of all international humanitarian workers and forced hundreds of thousands of refugees and displaced Zairians to flee. There were alarming accounts of intimidation and killings and accusations by Zaire that Rwanda, with the help of Uganda, was waging a war on its territory.

During his visit, the Special Envoy said, a number of events took place that helped to ease some of the tension in the region, including a 4 November declaration by the rebel forces in eastern Zaire of a unilateral ceasefire for a three-week period; a regional summit on 5 November in Nairobi, Kenya, which reaffirmed the territorial integrity of Zaire and called for the deployment of a neutral force in the region; the adoption by the Security Council on 15 November of resolution 1080(1996) authorizing the deployment of a multinational force in the region for humanitarian purposes; and, the most dramatic, the sudden and massive return of refugees, beginning on 15 November, from eastern Zaire to Rwanda.

It was evident, stated the Special Envoy, that with the return to Rwanda of approximately 600,000 refugees, the need for the deployment of a multinational force, as envisaged in resolution 1080(1996), had changed. As for the ceasefire, it had held for a while in most Kivu provinces of eastern Zaire, but the continued advance by rebel forces northward and westward continued to be a source of concern. Zaire had declared its readiness to use all necessary means to regain control over its territory. Also, the fighting between Zairian and Ugandan troops on 30 November did not bode well for future stability, he added.

Following his conversations with the leaders of the subregion, the Special Envoy was convinced that the desire for a political dialogue existed, in particular between Rwanda and Zaire. While the immediate humanitarian crisis might have eased somewhat, he stated, the underlying political and military causes of instability in the region had yet to be addressed. However, there was little enthusiasm for an international conference. On the other hand, a consensus seemed to be developing for convening a regional summit, similar to the one held in Nairobi in early November. The Special Envoy proposed that the Secretary-General appoint a Special Representative to facilitate political dialogue and reconciliation and provide mediation if requested.

December report. Special Envoy Chrétien reported on 12 December [S/1996/1036] on the results of his mission to seek a solution to the political and humanitarian crisis. He stated that the leaders of the region had expressed their belief that the appointment of a Special Representative of the Secretary-General would have a salutary effect. The Special Representative's mandate would be to facilitate political dialogue and reconciliation, at both the bilateral and regional levels; assist leaders in developing a common strategy for promoting dialogue and stability in the region across cultural and linguistic divides; support efforts to promote reconciliation in Zaire; maintain a working relationship with all regional leaders, the OAU Secretary-General, former Tanzanian President Mwalimu Julius K. Nyerere and other parties involved in mediation (Canada, United States, EU, among others), as well as the Special Representative for Burundi; provide guidance to the UN Humanitarian Coordinator and, as needed, to the force commander of whatever international military force might be present in the region; promote efforts aimed at convening an international conference and participate actively in it; and encourage national efforts towards developing democratic processes.

As for the working arrangements for a Special Representative, the Special Envoy suggested three alternatives: he could be based in Nairobi or another appropriate location not too distant from the subregion; he could serve in a roving capacity, with no fixed home base, for several months; or he (possibly a high-level Secretariat official) could visit the region when and as needed. In any case, he would need the necessary administrative and logistical means (including satellite communications and a small aircraft) to enable him to travel freely throughout the region.

Had the multinational force been established in the region, including eastern Zaire, with the original strength envisaged, the Special Envoy would have recommended the last option; however, given that the force deployed was quite modest, the other options were worthy of consideration.

Although the Special Envoy saw merit in establishing satellite offices in Rwanda and Zaire, those countries were not currently receptive to the idea. That did not preclude doing so at a later date, nor did it prevent, if warranted, the strengthening of the UN electoral office in Kinshasa, which had been providing services to the National Electoral Commission.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a 20 December report [S/1996/1063] on the Great Lakes region, expressed his belief that future UN functions in the region would require the presence there of a Special Representative of the Secretary-General, along the lines of his Special Envoy's first suggested alternative (see above) to provide good offices to those involved in conflicts and to coordinate UN work. He added, however, that, given the fluid situation which persisted, it would be premature to take such a decision in the immediate future. Therefore, he proposed to adopt Mr. Chrétien's third option—sending a Special Envoy of senior rank to the region, to interested capitals outside the region and to OAU headquarters at regular intervals. His principal function would be to confirm that the proposal to appoint a resident Special Representative was still welcomed by Governments in the region. He would also perform the functions of good offices, mobilization of international support for an integrated approach and coordination of UN work which he envisaged for a resident Special Representative, as well as advising the Secretary-General on the future of UN technical assistance to the electoral process in Zaire. It would be essential for the Special Envoy to have adequate logistic support and staff, and it would be desirable for him to make his first visit to the region as early as possible in 1997.

In a 30 December letter [S/1996/1074] to the Secretary-General, the Security Council agreed with that proposal and with the need to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations to perform the functions he had described. The Council reiterated that the current situation in the area underlined the need to organize a conference on peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region under the auspices of the United Nations and OAU. To that end, it suggested that a Special Envoy should continue to promote the convening of such a conference.

Regional summits

Leaders of the countries of the Great Lakes region met twice in late 1996 to discuss the ongoing crisis. On 5 November, at the invitation of President Daniel T. Arap Moi of Kenya, the Presidents of Eritrea, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia, together with the Prime Minister of Ethiopia, the Foreign Minister of Cameroon (representing the current OAU Chairman), the Secretary-General of OAU and former President Nyerere, facilitator of the peace process, met in Nairobi. The Government of Zaire was invited but did not attend.

The participants, in a communique issued at the end of the meeting [S/1996/914], stated that the summit had agreed that an immediate ceasefire should be strictly observed; reaffirmed its commitment to the territorial integrity of Zaire and called for non-intervention and an end to cross-border incursions; reaffirmed the inalienable rights of all people as stipulated in international conventions on the rights of citizenship and nationality; called for the immediate setting up of safe corridors and temporary sanctuaries in Zaire to facilitate humanitarian assistance and the repatriation of refugees; called for implementation of the long-standing decision to separate the intimidators (i.e. the ex-Rwandese Armed Forces personnel and the extremist Hutu militias) and bona fide refugees; requested the Security Council to ensure the establishment of safe corridors and temporary sanctuaries by deploying a neutral force; and reaffirmed the readiness of the subregion to make its own contribution to that effort.

A second regional summit was held in Nairobi on 16 and 17 December, also at the invitation of the President of Kenya, with the participation of the Presidents of Eritrea, Rwanda, South Africa, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe, the Prime Minister of Ethiopia, the Foreign Minister of Cameroon, representing the OAU Chairman, the OAU Secretary-General and the facilitator of the peace process. They reviewed recent developments in the region and expressed concern that the security situation had deteriorated further since the first summit.

In a joint communique [S/1996/1068], the summit participants called on the parties to the conflict to commit themselves to a negotiated, peaceful settlement and, in that connection, directed their Foreign Ministers to establish a follow-up mechanism. Reiterating their position on the territorial integrity of Zaire, they welcomed the assurance by President Mobutu of Zaire that his Government recognized the inalienable right to citizenship and nationality of all people within its internationally recognized boundaries. The summit expressed regret that the Security Council had not deployed a neutral force in eastern Zaire. Having observed that a large number of Rwandan refugees had returned to Rwanda from eastern Zaire for resettlement, the summit expressed appreciation to the international community for its assistance in that area and urged its continued support. The participants called on the international community to provide substantial assistance to those refugees who had returned to Rwanda and to encourage the remaining bona fide refugees still in Zaire, as well as those in the United Republic of Tanzania, to return to their countries. The summit decided to entrust the Presidents of Cameroon, Kenya, South Africa and Zimbabwe, acting on behalf of all the leaders of the region, to take initiatives aimed at assisting in ending the conflict in eastern Zaire and promoting peace, stability and security in the Great Lakes region.

International conference proposal

The Security Council, by resolution 1078(1996) of 9 November, invited the Secretary-General, in consultation with OAU and the States concerned, to determine the modalities of convening an international conference for peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region and to make necessary arrangements to convene such a conference.

Having been sent by the Secretary-General to speak to regional leaders about a political solution, Special Envoy Chrétien, in his 12 December report [S/1996/1036], stated that there was little enthusiasm for an international conference at that stage, but there was a developing consensus for convening a regional summit similar to the one held in Nairobi in early November. Zaire President Mobutu had indicated that he would attend such a summit.

Refugee situation

The Prime Ministers of Rwanda and Zaire met in Rwanda on 21 and 22 August to discuss, among other things, the repatriation of Rwandan refugees in Zaire. In a joint communique transmitted to the Security Council President on 26 August [S/1996/694], Zaire undertook to close camps gradually and Rwanda agreed to adopt measures to ensure the safe return and settlement of refugees. They also agreed to prevent each country's territory from being used as a base for operations aimed at destabilizing the other.

When fighting intensified between Zairian troops and armed Banyamulenge in late October in eastern Zaire, an estimated 300,000 people were on the move in the regions bordering Rwanda and Burundi [S/1996/878].

By 7 November, more than 1.2 million Burundian and Rwandan refugees and tens of thousands of Zairians had been displaced by the fighting, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council President [S/1996/916]. Most of the refugees had abandoned their camps and were moving westwards towards some of the most inhospitable and inaccessible areas in Zaire, beyond the reach of the agencies which could provide food and medical help. Others had found their way to the United Republic of Tanzania and Uganda.

Zaire affirmed that it adhered to the principle of voluntary safe return of refugees to their country of origin, unless there was a threat to the security of the host State, and, in a letter of 15 November to the Security Council President [S/1996/942], it requested the international community to become involved in the search for third countries that would take those refugees not wishing to return to their countries of origin. The exact number of refugees was difficult to ascertain as they were constantly moving from camps and in all directions. Rwanda, in a letter of 21 November [S/1996/967], stated that at a meeting with UNHCR, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme (WFP) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), it was agreed that the total number of Rwandan refugees in the Bukavu area of South Kivu was about 380,000, with a 10 per cent margin of error.

In his report of 29 November [S/1996/993], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the situation in eastern Zaire remained volatile. A large-scale movement of refugees across the Rwandan border began on 15 November and had significantly changed the humanitarian situation, but precise information was difficult to obtain. However, UNHCR and WFP had done a food assessment in October, and based on past estimates and that information it was believed that there were 1.24 million refugees in eastern Zaire before the mid-November hostilities, 1.1 million of whom were Rwandan and the others Burundian. Between 15 and 25 November, an estimated 500,000 Rwandan refugees returned to their country, leaving between 300,000 and 700,000 in Zaire in several large new concentrations. Some 36,000 Burundian refugees had returned to their country (see below). A large number of Zairians were displaced during the latest round of fighting, and there had been considerable new flows of people from eastern Zaire into Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia. Those influxes involved mostly Zairian nationals, but also included Rwandan and Burundian refugees.

The return of some of the refugees was expected to alleviate the tension in the regions of North and South Kivu where refugees had lived in large numbers for two and a half years. The Secretary-General said that the current situation might offer an opportunity to address the roots of the problem. The return of the Rwandans to their country was a welcome development, but he warned that there must be no return to the status quo ante and above all no re-creation of the refugee camps in eastern Zaire. At that point, efforts were needed to assure that repatriation could be carried out voluntarily, in safety and without threat of reprisals.

Of immediate concern was the fact that hundreds of thousands of men, women and children were still facing hunger, disease and violent death and, as at 26 November, UN agencies had been unable to re-establish contact with those refugee populations. In addition, elements of the former Rwandese Armed Forces and extremist militias were still believed to be at large in Zaire. Since neither the UN system nor the NGO community had the capacity in current conditions to secure access to the refugees and displaced persons to deliver relief, the Secretary-General believed that a practical way to avoid a humanitarian disaster was the creation of some form of military presence in the region.

Special Envoy Chrétien, in his report of 12 December [S/1996/1036], said that, following the sudden return of many Rwandan refugees from North Kivu in November, the humanitarian situation had eased somewhat. However, the reported flight of over 20,000 refugees away from the border between the United Republic of Tanzania and Rwanda and deeper inland could jeopardize the voluntary repatriation of the estimated 500,000 Rwandan refugees from Tanzania. The stabilizing effects expected from a massive presence of a multinational force were in doubt in the light of the developments on the ground and the drastic scaling down of the force from the plans as originally conceived.

Despite the sudden return of a great number of refugees, the Secretary-General, in a 20 December report on the Great Lakes region [S/1996/1063], warned that the humanitarian crisis was not over. Assistance would be required for returning refugees who faced problems associated with social, economic and political integration. The shortage of housing remained a flashpoint. It was estimated that since 1 December 560,000 refugees from eastern Zaire and 235,000 refugees from the United Republic of Tanzania had returned to Rwanda. Meanwhile, in Zaire, large numbers of Burundian and Rwandan refugees had fled the conflict and moved further west into that country, and 250,000 internally displaced persons of Zairian nationality, as well as some 500,000 other Zairians affected by the conflict, required immediate humanitarian assistance. Another pressing problem was the future of former members of the Rwandese Armed Forces and the extremist militias (Interahamwe) connected with them, as well as their families, and the bona fide refugees they might be keeping as hostages.

Humanitarian task force

Following a meeting in Brussels, Belgium, on 7 November, EU Development and Humanitarian Aid Ministers issued a statement [A/51/662-S/1996/924] endorsing the call by the Nairobi regional summit (see above) for a ceasefire and the establishment of safe corridors and temporary sanctuaries inside Zaire to facilitate humanitarian assistance and the repatriation of refugees. The EU called for protected humanitarian corridors in order to ensure delivery of immediate relief supplies to victims of the crisis, and reaffirmed its intention to play its part in the international response to the humanitarian crisis.

The Security Council, in resolution 1078(1996) of 9 November, requested the Secretary-General to draw up plans for a humanitarian task force, with military assistance if necessary, to deliver short-term humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons in eastern Zaire, assist with voluntary repatriation and establish corridors for delivery of humanitarian assistance. Such plans were to be made in consultation with his Special Envoy and the coordinator of humanitarian affairs, UNCHR, OAU, the EU Special Envoy and the States concerned.

Although President Mobutu and the Prime Minister of Zaire had also called for the establishment of secure corridors for the supply of humanitarian assistance and the return of refugees as reported by the Secretary-General on 29 November [S/1996/993], by the end of November humanitarian agencies were permitted only very limited access to areas of displacement in eastern Zaire due to hostilities there. The Secretary-General also stated that since the nature, strength, composition, mandate and modus operandi of the multinational force envisaged under resolution 1080 (1996) were still under consideration by the Member States concerned, it would not be possible for him to present to the Council a concept of operations for the proposed follow-on humanitarian task force.

Prior to the renewed fighting in eastern Zaire in mid-November, several UN agencies, in particular UNHCR, WFP, UNICEF, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the World Health Organization (WHO), had undertaken emergency preparedness measures and stockpiled food and other relief commodities in the region. UN agencies, other international aid organizations and donor Governments agreed on the need for an overall policy, programme cohesion and a coordination mechanism. On 6 November, the Secretary-General appointed Sergio Vieira de Mello, Assistant High Commissioner for Refugees, as Regional Humanitarian Coordinator for the Great Lakes Region, pending recommendations of the Special Envoy on longer-term arrangements for UN coordination. The immediate needs were to secure access to those affected by the conflict, to stabilize their condition and to ensure that relief agencies could provide emergency assistance and support repatriation programmes.

On 18 November, the Secretary-General launched a Flash Appeal to the international community to contribute $259.4 million to address the most immediate requirements for three months in food, health, water and sanitation, agriculture, logistics and communications in eastern Zaire and Rwanda (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Zaire

During 1996, the conflict in the Great Lakes region continued to affect Zaire, where large numbers of refugees had fled to escape ethnic violence and genocide. By the latter part of the year, fighting between government troops and armed rebels had exacerbated the ongoing situation, displacing tens of thousands of Zairians and forcing large numbers of Rwandan and Burundian refugees to leave established camps, placing them beyond the reach of agencies that could provide food and medical care. The failure to address the root causes of the conflicts in the region of the Great Lakes, the Secretary-General said, had once again unleashed a spiral of violence and human suffering that might spin out of control unless urgent measures were taken. In the light of the situation, the Security Council in mid-November authorized a multinational force for humanitarian purposes in eastern Zaire (see under "Great Lakes region"). By year's end, however, its mandate had been terminated because the situation had somewhat improved, and it was determined that at its authorized strength, the force would have very little utility. The United Nations continued to be involved through, among other things, the new UN Human Rights Centre in Zaire, established in December, and the electoral assistance mission in Zaire, which had been operating during the last three months of the year.

General situation

The situation in eastern Zaire deteriorated to an alarming degree in the latter half of 1996, the Secretary-General reported in a 14 October letter [S/1996/875] to the Security Council President. He said that hostilities had broken out in South Kivu province of eastern Zaire, home to about 350,000 people known as the Banyamulenge, who spoke the language of Rwanda and included both Hutus and Tutsis, though the majority were Tutsis. In 1972, like all persons living in Zaire, they had been granted Zairian nationality, but a 1981 law withdrew that status. Their change of citizenship had not been enforced until early 1996, when pressure was put on the Banyamulenge to move to Rwanda. Their situation was similar to that of the Masisi people in North Kivu.

In early September 1996, the Zairian Armed Forces launched an offensive against armed Tutsi groups in the area inhabited by the Banyamulenge, which was declared a military zone. There were allegations of attacks on civilians by both the Zaire army and armed Tutsi groups. As a result, tension had increased at the border between Rwanda and Zaire, including exchanges of heavy weapons fire.

The Secretary-General stated that he had dispatched his Special Envoy, Assistant Secretary-General Ibrahima Fall, to Kinshasa to assess the situation and consider what action the United Nations could take to defuse tension in eastern Zaire.

On 13 September, Zaire accused the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) of supporting Banyamulenge groups infiltrating Zaire from Rwanda and Burundi. Following discussions with the Secretary-General's Special Envoy, the Government of Zaire agreed that UNHCR had not in fact been involved in the alleged activities. On 10 October, however, the Chief of Staff of the Zairian Armed Forces again accused UNHCR of involvement in aggression against Zaire. The Secretary-General urged the Zairian authorities to withdraw their allegations, which, he said, could pose a threat to the security of UN staff in the area.

The growth of violence in eastern Zaire, which included attacks on refugee camps, affected the ability of humanitarian agencies to pursue their work; international staff were temporarily withdrawn to more secure locations and the UN system undertook contingency planning for a potential humanitarian crisis. By a 24 October letter [S/1996/878] to the Security Council President, the Secretary-General reported that military activity within eastern Zaire and across borders had escalated and that the humanitarian situation had further worsened. An estimated 300,000 people were on the move in the Uvira and Bukavu regions of Zaire, bordering Rwanda and Burundi. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Sadako Ogata, on 22 October appealed to all sides to halt the violence and avoid another humanitarian disaster in the region. On the same day, the Rwandan Government urged refugees to return to Rwanda, stressing that they could return in safety. UNHCR transmitted a message through the local media that humanitarian workers would be prepared to help refugees return and that UNHCR had increased its reception and assistance capacities inside Rwanda.

In a 25 October letter [S/1996/876] to the Secretary-General, the Security Council, expressing concern over the deteriorating situation, noted recent statements by authorities in Zaire and Rwanda that they would refrain from action that would exacerbate the situation. The Council members looked to both Governments to relaunch their bilateral dialogue with the aim of finding a peaceful settlement of the crisis along their borders, which had earlier resulted in the issuing of a joint communique following a visit to Rwanda by the Prime Minister of Zaire in August.

Rwanda-Zaire exchanges

Throughout 1996, Rwanda and Zaire, in letters to the Security Council President, exchanged charges, each accusing the other of involvement in ethnic violence and of provoking efforts to destabilize the existing Government.

On 2 May [S/1996/332], Rwanda said that Zaire was engaged in acts aimed at destabilizing the Great Lakes region, such as forcibly evicting Kinyarwanda-speaking citizens of Zaire; and supporting former Rwandan army officials and Interahamwe militia who had planned and supervised genocide in Rwanda in 1994 and were now based in eastern Zaire.

Rwanda, on 24 May [S/1996/374], said that 3,000 Rwandan and Zairian families were currently under siege by former Rwandan government forces responsible for the massacre in 1994 of more than a million Tutsis and moderate Hutus. According to Rwanda, the former Rwandan forces were allowed to operate in eastern Zaire with impunity. More than 65,000 Kinyarwanda-speaking Zairian nationals and Rwandan refugees had fled their homes in Zaire's Masisi region since April to escape ethnic violence, Rwanda said, and for that reason it called for an emergency meeting of the Security Council to take action to prevent genocide in eastern Zaire.

On 3 June [S/1996/405], Zaire rejected those allegations, stating that the unrest that had been occurring for some time in the Masisi region was a completely internal situation which Zaire was taking steps to resolve. Furthermore, Rwanda was attempting to prevent the return of refugees to Rwanda.

Rwanda and Zaire continued to blame each other as the situation in eastern Zaire deteriorated in late 1996. On 14 September [S/1996/757], Zaire said that both Rwanda and Burundi were engaged in acts of deliberate provocation.

Rwanda, in a 24 September letter [S/1996/784], denied any involvement in the violence in South Kivu, which, it said, must be seen in the context of the genocidal intent of the former Government of Rwanda.

On 23 October [S/1996/869], Rwanda presented a brief history of events which, it said, had led to the current crisis, stating that the international community could not remain aloof without seeking solutions to halt the ethnic cleansing and genocide in eastern Zaire. Rwanda also appealed to Rwandan refugees to return and called on the international community to assist in the repatriation of those trapped in the Zairian crisis.

In a letter of 31 October [S/1996/895], Zaire provided its own chronological account of the arrival of different tribes in eastern Zaire and recent events, which it described as aggression against Zaire.

Uganda-Zaire exchanges

Uganda and Zaire, in an exchange of letters to the Security Council President during 1996, accused each other of carrying out border attacks.

In a letter of 8 June [S/1996/413], Zaire said that a force from Uganda had attacked the Zairian locality of Bunagana, near the Ugandan border, on 4 and 5 June. Zaire requested the Council to hold an urgent meeting to consider the complaint and to take measures to ensure that the climate of peace in the region was maintained.

On 12 June [S/1996/429], Uganda denied the allegations and said that on 6 June gunshots were heard inside Zaire in areas close to the Ugandan border. Following that incident, refugees started entering Uganda to escape the fighting and by the following day approximately 800 people had crossed the border. Uganda believed in peaceful coexistence with its neighbours to promote regional stability.

Uganda, on 24 June [S/1996/468], said that it saw no need to post UN monitors along its border with Zaire since what was happening in that country was purely an internal matter. It also opposed any suggestion to convene a regional conference under the auspices of the United Nations and OAU on the problems of the subregion. On 1 November [S/1996/904], Uganda rejected an allegation by Zaire that Uganda was involved in the fighting in that country. Uganda said it had assisted Zairians who had been displaced by the fighting by providing them with safe passage through Ugandan territory and that it was willing to have observers go to Uganda to verify that it was not involved in the internal conflict in Zaire.

Zaire on 1 December [S/1996/994] renewed its allegations of Ugandan aggression. Zaire called on the Security Council and the Secretary-General to take measures to end Uganda's armed incursions, adding that the involvement of the Ugandan army in the war which Rwanda was imposing on Zaire would disqualify Uganda from participating in organizing a multinational force for the region, and invalidated the decision of the multinational force to establish its headquarters in Entebbe or Kampala.

On 12 December [S/1996/1038], Uganda contested claims by Zaire, stating that at no time had Ugandan forces entered Zairian territory. Uganda said that the current conflict in eastern Zaire was the result of a number of historical events, and that it had become a base for dissident groups who intended to destabilize neighbouring countries. Eastern Zaire was also a home for armed internal Zairian dissident groups.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (1 November)

On 1 November, the President of the Security Council issued the following statement [S/PRST/1996/44] on behalf of the members:

The Security Council is gravely concerned at the deteriorating situation in the Great Lakes region, in particular eastern Zaire, and at the effect which the continued fighting is having on the inhabitants of the region, and condemns all acts of violence. It underlines the urgent need for a comprehensive and coordinated response by the international community to prevent any further escalation of the crisis there.

The Council calls for an immediate ceasefire and a complete cessation of all fighting in the region. The Council calls on all States to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of neighbouring States in accordance with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations. In this connection, it urges all parties to refrain from the use of force as well as cross-border incursions and to engage in a process of negotiation.

The Council, in the light of the letters from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council and the information received from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights regarding the situation in eastern Zaire, is particularly concerned at the humanitarian situation and the resulting large-scale movements of refugees and displaced persons. It fully supports the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and humanitarian agencies to alleviate the suffering. It calls on all parties in the region to allow humanitarian agencies and non-governmental organizations to deliver humanitarian assistance to those in need and to ensure the safety of all refugees, as well as the security and freedom of movement of all international humanitarian personnel. It underlines the urgent need for the orderly voluntary repatriation and resettlement of refugees and the return of displaced persons, which are crucial elements for the stability of the region.

The Council agrees with the Secretary-General that the situation in eastern Zaire constitutes a serious threat to the stability of the Great Lakes region. It is convinced that the complex problems at issue can only be resolved through early and substantive dialogue. The Council urges the Governments of the region to pursue such a dialogue without further delay in order to defuse the tension. The Council calls upon all States in the region to create the conditions necessary for the speedy and peaceful resolution of the conflict, and to desist from any acts that may further exacerbate the situation. In this context, the Council welcomes all regional efforts aimed at defusing tension in the region, in particular the announcement of the meeting of regional leaders scheduled for 5 November 1996 in Nairobi, Kenya.

The Council fully supports the initiative of the Secretary-General to dispatch to the Great Lakes region a Special Envoy to consult with all concerned in order to establish the facts relating to the present conflict; to develop as a matter of urgency a plan to defuse tension and establish a ceasefire; to promote a process of negotiation; and to submit advice on the mandate to be given to a United Nations Special Representative, including on the size and structure of a United Nations political presence, which, in consultation with the Governments and parties concerned, will be established in the Great Lakes region. The Council also considers that the Special Envoy should be provided with adequate staff and logistic resources to carry out his mission. The Council also expresses the hope that the mediation efforts of the Organization of African Unity and the European Union will complement those of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General. The Council calls upon all Governments and parties concerned to cooperate fully with the mission of the Special Envoy and to contribute to the search for a comprehensive solution to the problems facing the people of the Great Lakes region. Given the urgency of the situation, the Council expresses the hope that the Special Envoy will travel as soon as possible to the region and provide early information on the situation there.

The Council reiterates that the present situation in eastern Zaire underlines the need to organize a conference on peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region under the auspices of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity. To this end, it calls on the Secretary-General to ask his Special Envoy to promote the convening and to encourage the adequate preparation of such a conference on an urgent basis.

Secretary-General's recommendations. In a 7 November letter [S/1996/916], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the situation in eastern Zaire had deteriorated dramatically in early November and more than 1.2 million Burundian and Rwandan refugees and tens of thousands of Zairians had been displaced by the fighting. Those events had demonstrated that peace and security would not be restored in the Great Lakes region unless the refugee problems created by the internal conflicts in Burundi and Rwanda were resolved. Urgent humanitarian action was needed, but also action to create the necessary conditions for the orderly and secure repatriation of the refugees.

The immediate requirement was to stabilize the situation for the delivery of humanitarian assistance, which would involve, among other things, the securing of airfields and border crossing points and the protection of logistics supply bases in eastern Zaire. It would also involve finding locations for refugees to receive help. The immediate response also needed to take into account longer-term considerations, the Secretary-General affirmed. It was important not to recreate conditions in which refugees could again be intimidated by those who, for political reasons, did not want them to return to their home countries. The international community's response to the crisis needed to mark the beginning of a repatriation programme.

Given the prevailing conditions in eastern Zaire, the Secretary-General believed it was necessary to deploy, at least for a short period, an international military force (see pp. 46-51) with a mandate to ensure the minimum security to stabilize the situation and enable relief supplies to reach refugees and allow preparations for repatriation.

A multinational or international force would require close consultation with OAU and countries of the region, the Secretary-General said. Special Envoy Chrétien, after consulting with President Mobutu of Zaire on 6 November, endorsed the decision of the previous day's regional summit in Nairobi supporting the deployment of an international force on Zairian territory. Given the need for urgent action, the Secretary-General suggested that the first option of a multinational force was the best choice.

In resolution 1078(1996), the Security Council welcomed the proposal for a multinational force for humanitarian purposes in eastern Zaire (see text, pp. 47-48).

In resolution 1080(1996), the Security Council authorized such a force (see text, pp. 49-50).

Renewed hostilities

As a result of the situation in eastern Zaire in late 1996, particularly in the area inhabited by the Banyamulenge, which was declared a military zone, tensions increased on the border between Rwanda and Zaire and cross-border exchanges of heavy weapons fire were reported [S/1996/875]. Each of the States accused the other of attempting to destabilize its neighbour.

In a report of 29 November [S/1996/993], the Secretary-General said that the situation in eastern Zaire had undergone a sharp transformation since September, and particularly since 15 November, in which political, military and humanitarian aspects were closely linked. Fighting between the Zairian Army and the rebels intensified and resulted in the rebels' takeover, by 4 November, of the towns of Uvira, Bukavu and Goma. The fighting led to massive movements of over a million Rwandan and Burundian refugees who needed urgent humanitarian relief. The Secretary-General said he had kept in touch with the heads of State of the countries of the region and with the OAU Chairman and Secretary-General.

On 4 November, said the Secretary-General, the leader of the Zairian rebel group known as the Alliance of Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Congo-Zaire (ADFL), Laurent-Désiré Kabila, announced a unilateral ceasefire. Six days later, he promised to open a humanitarian corridor for refugees and relief organizations, but he warned that humanitarian organizations wishing to operate in what he called "liberated zones" would have to deal with ADFL. He added that if an international force did not intervene quickly, his forces would attack Mugunga refugee camp, from which, he claimed, Goma had been shelled on 9 and 10 November. Reacting to the statement, the Zairian Minister of Information warned international organizations not to deal with or support the rebels, otherwise the Government would not allow them to work in Zaire. The differences between the two sides had made negotiations on humanitarian corridors and the return of aid agencies to eastern Zaire very difficult.

The Secretary-General's Special Envoy, during his first consultations with Rwandan and Zairian leaders in early November, noted the differences in their views of the situation. Rwanda said it was not in a state of war with Zaire and that Rwandan forces were not involved in the hostilities in eastern Zaire. Rwanda was willing to meet with the Zairian authorities under certain conditions. Rwandan leaders reaffirmed their Government's willingness to facilitate the return of refugees. Zairian leaders, on the other hand, considered Zaire to be at war with Rwanda and demanded an official ceasefire and the withdrawal of Rwandan forces, which, they alleged, were occupying Zairian territory. They suggested that the two countries hold a high-level meeting.

The Secretary-General stated that it might be necessary for the United Nations to increase its presence in the subregion, with the consent of the Governments concerned, in order to enhance its capacity to assist those Governments in resolving the problems threatening their internal cohesion and relations with each other.

Situation at year's end

In a report of 20 December [S/1996/1063], the Secretary-General warned that, while the humanitarian crisis might have eased somewhat due to the return of many refugees to their home countries, enormous challenges remained. Little progress had been made in easing international tensions within the region, internal conflicts persisted and the humanitarian crisis was far from being resolved. Urgent attention should be devoted to the social, economic and political integration of the estimated 560,000 refugees from eastern Zaire and 235,000 from the United Republic of Tanzania who had returned to Rwanda since 1 December.

The political situation in Zaire was affected by the return on 17 December of President Mobutu. On 18 December, he appointed General Mahele as Chief of Staff of the Zairian Army, and the following day he met with political leaders to discuss the situation in the eastern part of the country and the need to establish a crisis government.

Zaire continued to consider itself the victim of aggression on the part of Rwanda, Burundi and Uganda, charging that armies of those countries had violated its territorial integrity. The three countries denied those charges.

Summarizing the situation, the Secretary-General listed the major problems that remained to be resolved in the Great Lakes region: intermittent hostilities across Zaire's borders with its neighbours; internal conflict within Zaire; the future of the ex-Rwandese Armed Forces, the Interahamwe and their families who remained in Zaire, as well as in the United Republic of Tanzania; the unresolved conflict in Burundi; the prodigious demands made upon Rwanda by the massive return of refugees; and meeting the continuing needs of refugees and displaced persons who remained scattered in the region, particularly in Zaire.

The UN system was also devoting considerable effort to problems in the humanitarian and developmental fields (see PART THREE, Chapter III). The Secretary-General recommended strengthening the capacity of the United Nations to perform three functions: the provision of good offices to those involved in the various conflicts in the region; the mobilization of international interest in, and support for, an integrated effort to address the region's problems; and coordination of the work of the UN system as a whole. Such a strengthening of the Organization's political role would need to be undertaken in close consultation with OAU and with the agreement of the Governments concerned. The Secretary-General was of the view that such a role would require the presence in the region of a Special Representative of the Secretary-General but, given the existing fluid situation, he proposed, as an interim measure, sending a Special Envoy of senior rank to the region, to interested capitals outside the region and to OAU headquarters at regular intervals.

Rwanda

In late 1996, particularly during the latter half of November, the situation in Rwanda changed significantly with the massive return of refugees from eastern Zaire. (For additional information, see sections on "Great Lakes region" and "Zaire" above.)

The International Commission of Inquiry established to investigate reports of the sale or supply of arms to former Rwandan government forces, many of whom were residing in eastern Zaire, visited the region in 1996 and found some evidence that arms might have been transferred to Zaire. The Security Council requested the Commission to continue its investigation and called on States in the region to ensure that their territory was not used as a base for armed groups to launch incursions against any other State.

With the departure of its last troops from Rwanda on 19 April 1996, the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR) ended its two-and-a-half year presence in that country. It was initially set up to help implement the 1993 Arusha Peace Agreement, signed by the Rwandan Government and opposition forces, by assisting in maintaining security and monitoring the ceasefire agreement.

UNAMIR also assisted the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 (see PART FOUR, Chapter ID.

When the UNAMIR mandate expired on 8 March, the Security Council encouraged the Secretary-General to maintain a UN office in Rwanda to support efforts to promote national reconciliation, strengthen the judicial system, facilitate the return of refugees and rehabilitate the country's infrastructure.

UN Assistance Mission for Rwanda

Work of UNAMIR

The mandate of UNAMIR, established by the Security Council by resolution 872(1993) in October 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 285] to assist in the implementation of the 1993 Arusha Peace Agreement signed between the Government and the Rwandese Patriotic Front, expired on 8 March 1996. The operation was phased out over the next six weeks, as called for by Security Council resolution 1029(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 392], and all its forces were repatriated.

UNAMIR's original mandate was to monitor the security situation leading up to elections, assist with mine clearance and coordinate humanitarian assistance activities in conjunction with relief operations. In April 1994, following the deaths in an aeroplane crash of the Presidents of both Rwanda and Burundi and the ensuing civil unrest, large-scale massacres of civilians, and massive flows of refugees and displaced persons, the mandate was expanded under Council resolution 918(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 285] to include acting as intermediary between the warring Rwandan parties, assisting in the resumption of humanitarian relief operations and monitoring developments. In June 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 386], UNAMIR was called on to contribute to the security of refugees and civilians at risk and to provide security for relief operations. Its work was further expanded in 1995 [SC res. 1029(1995)], following the installation of the new Government, to include underpinning stability and security in the north-western and south-western regions, stabilizing and monitoring the situation throughout the country as a means to encourage the displaced population to return, providing security and support for humanitarian assistance operations and promoting national reconciliation. The expanded mandate also included facilitating the safe return of refugees.

The authorized troop strength of UNAMIR was reduced from approximately 5,700 at the beginning of 1995 to 1,400 by the end of the year, as the Government of Rwanda had expressed reservations about the scope and nature of its mandate.

In 1996, the situation in Rwanda was beginning to return to normal and the Security Council decided to complete the withdrawal of UNAMIR as planned. The Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on three occasions—on 30 January, 29 February, and 15 April—on the work of UNAMIR and the situation in Rwanda, covering such aspects as political developments, human rights, the military and security situation, humanitarian developments, and rehabilitation, reconstruction and development.

Report of Secretary-General (January). On 30 January [A/50/868-S/1996/61], the Secretary-General reported on his efforts to reduce UNAMIR forces to 1,200 and to bring down support staff numbers to 200, as decided by Security Council resolution 1029(1995) in December 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 392]. The Council had further requested the withdrawal of the civilian police component and that had been completed. Plans had been made for the withdrawal of UNAMIR within the period of six weeks following the expiry of the mandate on 8 March.

UNAMIR had two logistic bases, consisting of about 40 personnel each, located along Rwanda's borders, to assist in the return of refugees. Other troops were stationed in Kigali with the tasks of contributing to the security of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, providing humanitarian assistance, protecting UN property, and assisting in construction works and in rehabilitation and repair of infrastructure.

On 16 January [S/1996/35], Canada informed the Secretary-General that it had decided not to participate further in UNAMIR, being of the opinion that the mandate, as renewed in December 1995, was not viable. Reducing forces by one third while maintaining the same mandate created false expectations about what UNAMIR could realistically achieve. The Secretary-General noted that the withdrawal of that key logistic support unit was another factor reducing UNAMIR's operational effectiveness during the sensitive concluding phase of its mission. Since there was no time to make alternative arrangements, the remaining UNAMIR forces would be restricted to garrison mode in Kigali.

The internal situation in Rwanda had remained stable, the Secretary-General reported in December 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 391]. There were increasing signs of normalcy and a marked diminution of overt violence. Rwanda's relations with its neighbours, particularly the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire, had improved. Two events, however, had had a negative impact on the political situation: Rwanda's request that 38 NGOs operating in Rwanda cease their activities and 18 others be suspended, their assets frozen and equipment impounded; and the defection of some senior civilian and military officials, which represented a setback to the prospects for national reconciliation.

One cause for concern with regard to relations between UNAMIR and the Government was Rwanda's insistence that contractors providing goods and services for UNAMIR should pay taxes, and that the United Nations should pay frequency management fees and obtain licences for the use of UN communications equipment. The Government had also attempted to renegotiate the status-of-mission agreement. Those issues were being discussed between government officials and UN experts.

In border regions with Zaire, infiltration and sabotage activities by elements of the former Rwandese government forces continued, although at a lower level of intensity than in late 1995. In the face of security problems posed by the former Rwandese government forces, the Rwandese Patriotic Army had increased its patrolling activities. The pre-emptive measures it had taken against the local population had been more severe in the border region than in other parts of the country.

Humanitarian operations within Rwanda continued to be coordinated by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs. An ongoing task would be to ensure the continuity of assistance to Rwanda following the departure of UNAMIR (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

As he had stated in earlier reports, the Secretary-General believed that long-term peace in Rwanda would remain elusive as long as large concentrations of Rwandan nationals remained camped in neighbouring countries. He therefore welcomed initiatives being taken at the regional level to help to resolve the problem. Genuine peace and reconciliation would also depend on progress made by the Government and the international community to put an end to the prevailing environment of impunity, by bringing to justice those accused of genocide and massacres. In that regard, he noted that the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda was able to hold its first plenary session in Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, on 8 January 1996 and that proceedings would begin in March.

Despite progress towards the restoration of normal conditions in Rwanda, much more remained to be done. The international community should continue to support the Rwandan Government's efforts to achieve peace and reconciliation, which were the necessary conditions for sustainable rehabilitation and reconstruction.

Having considered the Secretary-General's January report, the Security Council, in a letter of 13 February [S/1996/103], said that it agreed with his observation that the United Nations still had a useful role to play in Rwanda. The Council encouraged consultations with Rwanda, and with relevant UN agencies, on the appropriate nature of the UN role in Rwanda after the expiration of UNAMIR's mandate. Any UN presence should assist the process of establishing a climate of normality and stability.

Report of Secretary-General (February). In a 29 February report [S/1996/149], the Secretary-General reported on possible options regarding the UN role after the expiration of UNAMIR's mandate. He noted that conditions were returning to normal, though a significant portion of the population were still refugees or displaced persons. When Rwanda emerged from civil war and genocide with the establishment of the Government of National Unity on 19 July 1994, conditions were disastrous; there was no administration, no functioning economy, no judicial or education system, no water or electricity supply and no transport. UNAMIR, other UN and international agencies and NGOs had assisted in Rwanda's efforts to establish a normal society.

The Secretary-General said his Special Representative had suggested options for a post-UNAMIR presence: the retention of a small political office to support the Rwandan Government's efforts to promote national reconciliation, strengthen the judicial system, facilitate the return of refugees and rehabilitate the country's infrastructure; a political office as described above, plus a component of military observers to monitor the return of refugees, specialized units to provide logistic support for their return and formed troops to ensure security for the logistic units; or the establishment of a regional office with responsibilities for promoting peace, stability and development in the Great Lakes region as a whole.

Those possibilities had been explored with the Rwandan authorities, but they had not requested that any of them be recommended to the Security Council and continued to express reservations about the retention of UN troops in Rwanda after the expiry of UNAMIR's mandate. It was the Secretary-General's view, however, that, given the presence of more than 1.5 million refugees along Rwanda's borders, including numerous elements of the former Rwandan army and organized militias, the deployment of UN military personnel, particularly in those areas to which large numbers of refugees were expected to return, could speed up the return process both by building confidence and by providing logistic support. He was convinced that Rwanda could benefit greatly from further UN support to consolidate peace and security. He noted, however, that any of the three options would require the consent of the Rwandan Government, which had not been forthcoming. There was, therefore, no alternative at that time to the complete withdrawal of all UNAMIR civilian and military components after 8 March.

By early February, the UNAMIR force level had been reduced to 1,200 formed troops and 200 military observers and headquarters staff.

UNAMIR had assisted Rwanda in facilitating the safe and voluntary return of refugees to their home communes. When Burundi closed the refugee camp at Ntamba in early February, UNAMIR troops and military observers provided assistance to resettle the returnees by performing such tasks as constructing and improving transit camps and providing transportation and engineering work, including road and bridge repair.

In view of the impending withdrawal of UNAMIR, a liquidation plan had been drawn up. An adequate level of security troops would be maintained until mid-April, at which time all installations would be turned over to other UN agencies or to the Government of Rwanda.

Communication (March). Rwanda, in a letter to the Secretary-General of 1 March [S/1996/176], stated that it accepted his proposal to maintain the office of the Special Representative in Kigali for another six months, so that he could coordinate all UN activities, monitor political developments and use his good offices to promote peace and national reconciliation. Rwanda appealed to the United Nations and the international community to contribute to its rehabilitation (see below).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 8 March, the UNAMIR mandate expired and the Security Council adopted resolution 1050(1996), in which it encouraged the Secretary-General to maintain a UN office in Rwanda.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the situation in Rwanda,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 29 February 1996 on the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR), Welcoming the letter dated 1 March 1996 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs and Cooperation of Rwanda to the Secretary-General,

Paying tribute to the work of UNAMIR and to the personnel who have served in it,

Stressing the continued importance of the voluntary and safe repatriation of Rwandan refugees and of genuine national reconciliation,

Emphasizing the importance it attaches to the role and responsibility of the Government of Rwanda in promoting a climate of confidence, security and trust and the safe return of Rwandan refugees,

Emphasizing also the importance it attaches to States acting in accordance with the recommendations adopted by the Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons held at Bujumbura from 15 to 17 February 1995, the summit of heads of States of the Great Lakes region held at Cairo on 28 and 29 November 1995, and the follow-up conference of 29 February 1996 held at Addis Ababa, and the importance it attaches to the continuation of efforts to convene a regional conference for peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region,

Encouraging all States to cooperate fully with the International Commission of Inquiry established pursuant to resolution 1013(1995) of 7 September 1995,

Recognizing the importance of the human rights field operation in Rwanda in contributing to the establishment of confidence in the country, and concerned that it may not be possible to maintain its presence throughout Rwanda unless sufficient funds for that purpose are secured in the very near future,

Concerned to ensure the effective operation of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 established by resolution 955(1994) of 8 November 1994,

Commending the continuing efforts of the Government of Rwanda to maintain peace and security as well as to reconstruct and rehabilitate the country,

Stressing its concern that the United Nations should continue to play an active role in assisting the Government of Rwanda in promoting the return of refugees, in consolidating a climate of confidence and stability and in promoting the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Rwanda,

Reiterating the responsibility of the Government of Rwanda for the safety and security of all United Nations personnel and other international staff serving in the country,

1. Takes note of the arrangements made by the Secretary-General for the withdrawal, starting on 9 March 1996, of UNAMIR pursuant to its resolution 1029(1995) of 12 December 1995;

2. Authorizes elements of UNAMIR remaining in Rwanda prior to their final withdrawal to contribute, with the agreement of the Government of Rwanda, to the protection of the personnel and premises of the International Tribunal for Rwanda;

3. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to submit recommendations to the General Assembly regarding UNAMIR non-lethal equipment that may be released for use in Rwanda in accordance with paragraph 7 of its resolution 1029(1995), and calls upon the Government of Rwanda to take all necessary steps to ensure that UNAMIR personnel, and equipment which is not remaining in Rwanda, can be withdrawn without impediment and in an orderly and safe manner;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General, in agreement with the Government of Rwanda, to maintain in Rwanda a United Nations office, to be headed by his Special Representative and to include the present United Nations communications system and radio station, for the purpose of supporting the efforts of the Government of Rwanda to promote national reconciliation, strengthen the judicial system, facilitate the return of refugees and rehabilitate the country's infrastructure, and of coordinating the United Nations efforts to that end;

5. Commends the efforts of States, including neighbouring States, the United Nations and its agencies, the European Union and non-governmental organizations which have provided humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons, and underlines the importance it attaches to continued efforts by the Government of Rwanda, neighbouring States, the international community and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to facilitate the early, safe, voluntary and organized return of Rwandan refugees to their own country in accordance with the recommendations of the Bujumbura Conference;

6. Calls upon States and organizations to continue to give assistance for the reconstruction of Rwanda and the rehabilitation of the infrastructure of the country, including the Rwandan justice system, directly or through the United Nations trust funds for Rwanda, and invites the Secretary-General to consider whether there is a need to adjust the scope and purposes of those funds to bring them into line with current requirements;

7. Calls also upon States to contribute urgently to the costs of the human rights field operation in Rwanda, and encourages the Secretary-General to consider what steps might be taken to place the operation on a more secure financial basis;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council by 5 April 1996 on what arrangements have been agreed with the Government of Rwanda for the protection of the personnel and premises of the International Tribunal for Rwanda after the withdrawal of UNAMIR and on the arrangements he has made pursuant to paragraph 4 above, and to keep the Council closely informed thereafter of developments in the situation;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

8 March 1996

Meeting 3640

Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/177).

Report of Secretary-General (April). In a 15 April report [S/1996/286], the Secretary-General provided the Security Council with information on the implementation of resolution 1050(1996), stating that as at 12 April a total of 679 personnel, comprising 648 troops, 11 military observers and 20 headquarters staff, remained in Rwanda. Their departure was expected to be completed between 12 and 19 April.

Financing of UNAMIR

The Secretary-General, in his 29 February report on UNAMIR [S/1996/149], said that as at 15 February, the total outstanding contributions to the UNAMIR special account from the inception of the Mission to 8 March 1996 amounted to $84.5 million.

In an 8 March report [A/50/712/Add.1], the Secretary-General provided the General Assembly with the UNAMIR cost estimates for the withdrawal period from 9 March to 19 April 1996 and for the administrative closing down from 20 April to 30 September. It covered the withdrawal of 1,395 military personnel, 161 international civilian staff and 56 United Nations Volunteers, the removal of UNAMIR assets, including contingent-owned equipment, and the completion of residual administrative tasks.

On 25 March, the Secretary-General reported [A/50/712/Add.2] on the disposition of UNAMIR assets, which included items of equipment related to accommodation, air transport, communications and mine clearing, and computers, generators and vehicles. The estimated value of the assets as at 19 October 1995 was $62.5 million. If approved by the Assembly, non-lethal equipment and assets with no remaining useful life, worth some $15 million, would be donated to Rwanda. Much of the equipment had already been transferred to other UN offices or operations or earmarked for them.

The two March reports on disposition of UNAMIR assets were considered by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), which submitted its own report to the Assembly on 17 April [A/50/936]. It proposed that the Assembly defer action on the revised requirements for the period from June to December 1995 until a final performance report was received, and that it take note of the preliminary report on the disposition of UNAMIR assets.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 7 June, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/211 B.

Financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1029(1995) of 12 December 1995, by which the Council adjusted and extended the mandate of the Assistance Mission for a final period until 8 March 1996, as well as all previous Council resolutions on the Mission,

Recalling also its resolution 48/248 of 5 April 1994 on the financing of the Assistance Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 50/211 A of 23 December 1995,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Assistance Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Assistance Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Assistance Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Assistance Mission on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda as at 21 May 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 48,946,102 United States dollars, representing 10 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Assistance Mission to the period ending 8 March 1996, notes that some 23 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Assistance Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Assistance Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Approves, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements for the Assistance Mission with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support for the Mission shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

8. Decides to keep under review the amounts budgeted for the reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment, pending completion of the processing of outstanding claims for reimbursement for contingent-owned equipment with respect to the Assistance Mission;

9. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda the amount of 19,745,000 dollars gross (19,462,700 dollars net) for the withdrawal of the Assistance Mission for the period from 9 March to 19 April 1996;

10. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 19,745,000 dollars gross (19,462,700 dollars net) for the period from 9 March to 19 April 1996 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1996, as set out in resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

11. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 282,300 dollars approved for the period from 9 March to 19 April 1996;

12. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 4,632,500 dollars gross (4,152,200 dollars net) for the administrative closing of the Assistance Mission for the period subsequent to 19 April 1996, inclusive of the amount of 50,200 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

13. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 480,300 dollars approved for the period subsequent to 19 April 1996;

14. Takes note of the preliminary report of the Secretary-General on the disposition of the assets of the Assistance Mission, and requests him to submit to the General Assembly a full report thereon by 27 November 1996;

15. Invites voluntary contributions to the Assistance Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda".

ANNEX

Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations

1. At the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts payable shall remain recorded in the Special Account for the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda until payment is effected;

2. (a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for goods supplied and services rendered, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which required claims have not yet been received, shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period shall be treated as provided under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period, any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/848/Add.1) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.52), based on informal consultations; agenda item 135.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 58, 64 (resumed); plenary 120.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 18 December, by decision 51/462, the General Assembly decided that the item on the financing of UNAMIR remained for consideration at its resumed fifty-first session in 1997.

UN Office in Rwanda

In resolution 1050(1996) of 8 March, the Security Council encouraged the Secretary-General to maintain a UN office in Rwanda, to be headed by his Special Representative and to include the existing UN communications system and radio station. In a 15 April report [S/1996/286] to the Council, the Secretary-General stated that Rwanda had requested a meeting with the United Nations to clarify the mandate of the UN office. The Government was insisting on a formal proposal on terms of reference, status and size of the office, to which it would respond. A draft status-of-mission agreement had been prepared for discussion.

Subject to the agreement of the Government of Rwanda and the availability of funds, the new office would be known as the United Nations Office in Rwanda (UNOR) and would be headed by a Special Representative at the Assistant Secretary-General level. Resource requirements for UNOR would be sought from the General Assembly.

The Secretary-General said he had hoped to be able to report to the Council that agreement had been reached with Rwanda on UNOR and that there could be a smooth transition from UNAMIR to the new Office when the former's funding expired on 19 April. In spite of efforts by the Special Representative, it had not been possible to obtain the Government's acceptance, nor had the Government confirmed its agreement that the United Nations should continue to operate a radio station in Rwanda. Because it appeared unlikely that agreement could be reached by 19 April, the Secretary-General sent the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs on an urgent mission to Kigali from 19 to 24 April to carry the negotiations forward.

In a 3 May report [S/1996/286/Add.1], the Secretary-General informed the Council that during the latest round of negotiations, President Pasteur Bizimungu of Rwanda confirmed his Government's acceptance of a UN Office but it was not willing to approve the proposed UN radio station. Rwanda objected on the grounds that it would create the impression that UNAMIR was still in Rwanda under another guise and would involve a higher profile for the UN Office than the Government wished. However, the Government was prepared to make three hours of airtime available to the United Nations daily on its radio station.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council authorize the establishment of UNOR for an initial period of six months, with an estimated budget of $1.3 million. Meanwhile, work was continuing on a plan for broadcasting UN programmes on the government radio station and discussions would be resumed with the Government on the matter. The Secretary-General also reported that negotiation of the status-of-mission agreement for UNOR was likely to be concluded in the near future.

At the time of the Secretary-General's May report, the United Nations and the Government had not resolved the outstanding disagreement on Rwanda's claim for taxes against corporations that had entered the country as contractors to UNAMIR.

The Security Council President, by a letter of 31 May [S/1996/400], informed the Secretary-General that the Council members supported his recommendation for the establishment of an Office in Rwanda, as described in his May report.

By the end of 1996, the Office had not been established.

Refugees

The Secretary-General, in a 30 January report on UNAMIR [A/50/868-S/1996/61], reported that the voluntary return of refugees from bordering States to Rwanda remained at a trickle, despite the efforts of UNHCR and other agencies. The main hurdles continued to be the fear of oppressive treatment on returning to their home country, intimidation and political dissuasion by former Rwandese government forces' leaders in the camps, and the perception of relatively better living conditions in the camps than those expected on returning. The number of returnees remained small despite a joint communique issued after the Rwanda/Zaire/UNHCR Tripartite Commission meeting in Geneva on 20 December 1995 in which Rwanda reaffirmed its commitment to establish the necessary conditions for the safe return of refugees and Zaire reaffirmed its commitment to rid the camps of those resorting to intimidation to block the refugees' return.

UNHCR launched an appeal for $288 million to cover the cost of its 1996 operations for Rwandan and Burundian refugees and returnees in the Great Lakes region, with emphasis on voluntary repatriation to Rwanda and plans for a shift in UNHCR programmes from care and maintenance of refugees in countries of asylum to return and reintegration in the country of origin.

In a 29 February report [S/1996/149], the Secretary-General said that the humanitarian situation in Rwanda continued to warrant a centralized coordination structure, given the challenge to be confronted with the return and absorption of refugees and internally displaced persons. The authority for the coordination of humanitarian assistance rested with the UN Humanitarian Coordinator/Resident Coordinator, who was supported by a small Department of Humanitarian Affairs office (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

UNHCR, Rwanda and the countries hosting some 1.7 million Rwandan refugees, namely, Zaire, Burundi and the United Republic of Tanzania, had made efforts to accelerate the voluntary return of refugees. The number of returnees rose from an average of around 5,000 a month through much of 1995 to 14,000 in January 1996 and more than 20,000 in the first three weeks of February. While the number of voluntary repatriations from Zaire remained low, refugee returns from Burundi increased dramatically in the wake of fighting in the northern part of that country and two refugee camps were closed.

The Burundi/Rwanda/UNHCR Tripartite Commission, at its fourth meeting (Bujumbura, Burundi, 29-30 January), decided to close progressively the remaining camps in Burundi, starting with those nearest the border with Rwanda. The Commission hoped that all remaining Rwandan refugees in Burundi would have repatriated by July. The number of returnees from the United Republic of Tanzania also rose in February, to more than 500. As at late February, it was estimated that 1.1 million Rwandan refugees remained in Zaire, 511,000 in the United Republic of Tanzania and 97,000 in Burundi.

Rwanda, in a 26 August letter [S/1996/694] to the Security Council, said that many Rwandan refugees had voluntarily returned to their country from Burundi. As at 26 August, 96,000 Rwandans had gone back to their rural communities in Rwanda and another 4,000 who were still in Burundi were likely to return by the end of the month.

In late 1996, the situation changed dramatically, as the Secretary-General reported on 29 November [S/1996/993]. Fighting between rebel forces in eastern Zaire and the Zairian Government forces had greatly affected the refugee population residing in eastern Zaire, causing a sudden mass return to Rwanda. In a matter of hours, refugees poured into Rwanda through the Goma-Gisenyi border crossing, stretching to the limit the capacities of the Rwandan Government and international organizations to deal with the reception and transit of the returnees. The Government had facilitated the processing and onward movement of some 500,000 returnees by the end of November.

In two letters sent to the Security Council in November, Rwanda appealed to the international community to provide humanitarian assistance to the returning refugees. On 8 November [S/1996/919], Rwanda said it was ready to welcome all Rwandan refugees who were in refugee camps in Zaire and elsewhere. On 15 November [S/1996/945], Rwanda said that over the past 48 hours thousands of refugees, at the rate of 100 per minute, were crossing from Zaire into Rwanda, and that within a week the majority of Rwandan refugees would have returned. Rwanda believed that conditions for the continued orderly return of many more refugees were in place, including the preparation of reception centres. In view of the situation, Rwanda believed that the proposed multinational force was no longer relevant as far as rescuing Rwandan refugees in eastern Zaire was concerned. (See sections on "Great Lakes region" and "Zaire" above.)

Human Rights Field Operation

The Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda (HRFOR), set up after the period of mass killings in that country from April to July 1994, worked with the new Government that had taken power in mid-1994 towards national reconciliation and resettlement of refugees. Run under the authority of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the operation, having carried out extensive investigations of genocide (see PART TWO, Chapter III), was currently involved with monitoring the human rights situation throughout the country.

As the Secretary-General reported on 29 February [S/1996/149], HRFOR had established a presence in all but one of Rwanda's 11 prefectures and developed relationships with the authorities, including the security forces. The human rights officers contributed to the prevention of human rights violations and to appropriate investigation by presenting information regarding violations to the competent ministries.

The Government of Rwanda had indicated its desire to have the Operation continue after UNAMIR left, and the Secretary-General said that it would constitute an important element of the UN presence in Rwanda beyond 8 March 1996. However, unless sufficient funds could be secured, the High Commissioner would have to close down HRFOR.

In April [S/1996/286], the Secretary-General reported that in the absence of sufficient financial resources it had not been possible to maintain the required number of staff. The presence of human rights monitors in the field was crucial, especially when the refugees were being encouraged to return and when the Rwandan justice system was not yet functioning. In the Declaration adopted at the Tunis summit of the Great Lakes region on 18 March, it had been reaffirmed that Rwanda would welcome the deployment of up to 300 human rights monitors.

Rehabilitation and reconstruction

The Secretary-General reported on 30 January [A/50/868-S/1996/61] that reactivating the judicial system remained a priority of UN agencies operating in Rwanda. Progress had been slow on account of the Government's lack of capacity and the complexity of trying those suspected of genocide. However, the Government had announced that it intended to establish 11 "special courts" for the treatment of genocide cases, with the assistance of six international experts.

On 29 February, the Secretary-General reported [S/1996/149] that the Ministry of Justice had submitted its revised plan for the UNDP "Rehabilitation of the justice system" project, in which it proposed the recruitment of 10 legal advisers to assist in establishing "special chambers" to handle genocide cases. Overcrowding in prisons and other places of detention remained a matter of serious concern.

Capacity-building activities were continuing. The Rwandan Communal Police Training Programme, conducted with UNDP assistance, would fund training for a third group of 750 cadets and provide for the construction of living quarters for police in 100 communes. The World Health Organization (WHO) and UNICEF were to provide equipment and supplies to hospitals, and to carry out training and education on preventive measures on disease and nutrition.

Rwanda, in a 1 March letter [S/1996/176], proposed continued UN assistance to its national recovery and rehabilitation. It stated that the 1994 genocide, in which more than 1 million people were killed, had left about 4 million people internally displaced and 2.5 million refugees. Large numbers of orphans, widows and other helpless people were struggling to survive and economic infrastructures were completely destroyed. The Government appealed for increased assistance in a number of areas, particularly through the UN system. It accepted the Secretary-General's proposal to maintain the office of the Special Representative in Kigali for six months, for the purpose of coordinating UN activities.

Following the massive return of refugees from eastern Zaire that began on 15 November, the Secretary-General, in a 29 November report [S/1996/993], stated that the Government and international organizations were working together on a repatriation plan. The overall effort, coordinated by the Government and led by the UN Resident Coordinator, involved UNDP, the World Bank, UNICEF, WFP, UNHCR, other UN agencies and NGOs. It aimed to ensure that a long-term community-based rehabilitation and development strategy was implemented. In that regard, an informal donor meeting on refugee reintegration in the Great Lakes region was held on 23 November in Geneva at the initiative of Canada (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

UN Trust Funds

In 1996, two UN Trust Funds for Rwanda were in operation. Describing their status in a 15 April report [S/1996/286], the Secretary-General said that his Trust Fund for Rwanda, established under Security Council resolution 925(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 288] in response to the urgent needs that had arisen out of the humanitarian crisis in Rwanda and in order to finance relief and rehabilitation programmes, had received $7.3 million by 31 March 1996, of which $5 million was transferred to UNDP for implementation.

The UNDP Trust Fund for Rwanda had been established in March 1995 following a request by the Netherlands, to provide the donor community with a financial mechanism to support the programme of national reconciliation and socio-economic recovery presented by Rwanda. Activities included rehabilitation, reconstruction, reintegration and resettlement programmes, as well as direct financial support for the Government. As at 31 March, total pledges reached $35.5 million, of which $20.6 million had been received.

The Secretary-General's Fund responded to short-term humanitarian needs, whereas the UNDP Fund covered mid-term and long-term developmental needs in Rwanda. The Secretary-General stated that he did not see the need to change the scope and purposes of the trust funds and appealed to Member States to continue to make contributions.

Arms embargo

The Security Council in May 1994 adopted resolution 918(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 285] imposing mandatory arms sanctions against Rwanda; it established a Sanctions Committee to monitor their implementation. In September 1995, the Council, under resolution 1013(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 382], established an International Commission of Inquiry to investigate reports about the sale or supply of arms and related materiel to former Rwandan government forces in violation of the arms embargo. Both the Sanctions Committee and the Commission of Inquiry reported to the Security Council on their work in 1996.

Sanctions Committee

In a 14 March letter [S/1996/202], the Secretary-General, as requested under Security Council resolution 1011(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 380], reported on the export of arms and related materiel to Rwanda on the basis of reports submitted by the Sanctions Committee. During the six months since the Council's request, the Committee had received no notifications about the export of such goods to Rwanda. However, Singapore had informed the Committee on 12 February that it had exported spare parts for vehicles for use by the Ministry of Defence.

In a 26 August letter [S/1996/407/Rev.1], the Chairman of the Sanctions Committee stated that Rwanda had reported importing military clothing from Germany. Also on 26 August [S/1996/396/Rev.1], he said that Singapore had informed the Committee about another shipment of vehicle spare parts to Rwanda. The Chairman, again on 26 August [S/1996/329/Rev.1], listed notifications received—Singapore had informed the Committee of its export of spare parts for vehicles and Rwanda reported that it had imported two patrol boats from Italy, 65 cars from Dubai and 122 vehicles for military use from Singapore. A summary of those sales/imports was made by the Secretary-General in letters of 30 August [S/1996/663/Rev.1 & Add.1].

International Commission of Inquiry

The International Commission of Inquiry, established by the Security Council in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 382] to investigate reports relating to the sale or supply of arms and military equipment to former Rwandan government forces in the Great Lakes region, submitted an interim report to the Council in January and its report in March. It had begun its work by visiting the region in November 1995. The Commission was authorized to look into arms sales to the former forces in violation of Council resolutions 918(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 285], 997(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 386] and 1011(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 380].

In its interim report of 17 January 1996 [S/1996/67], the Commission described its methods of work and its activities during its initial visit to the region. Thanking the Commission for that report in a letter of 13 February [S/1996/104], the Security Council underlined the importance it attached to the work of the Commission and emphasized the need for those Governments which had not done so to respond to the Commission's inquiries, emphasizing in particular the importance of the cooperation of Zaire for the successful completion of the Commission's work.

The Secretary-General, in forwarding the Commission's report [S/1996/195] of 13 March to the Security Council, said the Council might wish to have the Commission continue its investigations or consider whether other measures should be put in place to promote compliance with the relevant Council resolutions. Should the Council decide that the investigations should be pursued, the Secretary-General would review, in consultation with the Commission Chairman, the composition and modus operandi of the Commission, taking into account the need for cost-effectiveness, especially in view of the Organization's current financial crisis.

Interim report

The Commission reported [S/1996/67] that on 10 November 1995 it had visited Iwawa island in Lake Kivu, the scene of a battle a few days before between the Rwandese Patriotic Army (RPA) and Rwandan insurgents apparently controlled by the former Rwandan government forces. A quantity of weapons and military materiel, as well as a number of prisoners, had been captured. Although unable to conduct an extensive investigation because of landmines, time constraints and transport limitations, the Commission did inspect weapons, explosives and other military equipment and interviewed some captured soldiers, who indicated that they were Rwandans who had been living in Mugunga Camp near Goma, Zaire, and had been receiving weapons training on the island from former Rwandan government forces. On the basis of the limited information it received, the Commission was unable to reach a firm conclusion as to the truth of the allegations.

The Commission visited Kinshasa, Zaire, from 8 to 16 December 1995. In reply to written questions concerning allegations that the Government had been involved in arming and training former Rwandan government forces in violation of Security Council resolutions, the Government stated that it had no knowledge of some of the alleged incidents and considered in respect of others that evidence was insufficient to warrant any action. The Zairian authorities denied having armed or provided training to Rwandan forces in violation of the embargo.

In January 1996, a sharp disagreement arose between the Commission and the Zairian officials over the Commission's proposed activities and interpretation of its mandate. The Zairian side insisted on attending Commission meetings with potential witnesses and on reviewing the Commission's draft report on its activities in Goma before it left Zaire. Those demands were rebuffed by the Commission and, in response to a 9 January appeal from the Zairian Prime Minister, the Secretary-General confirmed that the Commission's interpretation of its mandate was correct. On 12 January, the Zairian Minister for Foreign Affairs wrote to the Secretary-General, repeating Zaire's demands. At that point, the Commission declared that it could not pursue its investigations in Goma in the face of the attitude of the Zairian authorities and it withdrew to Nairobi.

Although unable to pursue a full investigation in Goma, the Commission stated that it had gathered enough information from a variety of sources to give rise to suspicion that clandestine activities were being carried out there, including alleged night flights and secret unloading of cargo from aircraft.

In other activities, the Commission Chairman wrote to a number of Governments whose nationals were said to have participated in delivering weapons and related materiel to the former Rwandan government forces. The allegations were made by Human Rights Watch, a Washington-based NGO.

As for allegations that arms and military equipment were being sold or supplied to the former Rwandan government forces in violation of the Security Council ban, the Commission in January 1996 could not confirm whether these were true. Nor could it establish whether specific Governments, companies or individuals had aided or abetted the sale or supply of arms and related equipment to those forces.

March report

In its report [S/1996/195] to the Security Council dated 13 March, the Commission described more of its activities.

Commission members visited Bujumbura, Burundi, from 26 to 29 January and met with the President, Sylvestre Ntibantunganya. They also interviewed a number of Burundian officials, including the Chiefs of Staff of the army and gendarmerie and members of the diplomatic community, none of whom had information on alleged violations of Security Council resolutions.

The Commission continued its contacts with Rwandan Government officials and others within Rwanda and had obtained information that strongly suggested that arms continued to be supplied to former Rwandan government forces, and that former Rwandan government forces were still actively raising money among sympathizers abroad.

The Commission concluded that Rwandan men were receiving military training to conduct destabilizing raids into Rwanda. They had also received arms in violation of the Security Council embargo. In reaching those conclusions, the Commission noted, it had to investigate media reports rather than rely solely on information obtained through UN sources. It also noted the absence of an effective, proactive mechanism to monitor or implement the arms embargo.

Among its recommendations on future measures to deter attempts to supply arms to the former Rwandan government forces, the Commission proposed setting up such monitoring machinery and noted that financing would also be necessary, so as to reinforce the Organization's preventive diplomacy efforts, particularly in the fields of fact-finding and the development of early-warning systems. In the Commission's view, embargo measures would probably not be effective unless they were applied throughout the subregion.

The Commission recommended that the Governments of the region, particularly Zaire, intensify efforts to ensure that their territory was not used for the recruitment or training of refugees or as a base for armed groups to launch incursions or attacks against another country. They should also prevent military training and the sale or supply of weapons to militia groups or other groups among the refugees. In another recommendation on arms embargoes in general, the Commission suggested that neighbouring States be encouraged to participate on a voluntary basis in maintaining a register of movements and acquisitions of small arms, ammunition and materiel. Regarding the embargo against arms to Rwandan refugees, the Commission recommended that the Security Council invite Bulgaria, South Africa and Zaire to pursue investigation of the reported violations dealt with by the Commission. It suggested that Zaire should again be invited to consider the stationing of UN observers on its territory to monitor the embargo and deter shipment of arms to the former Rwandan government forces. Another proposal was that the Council extend the concept embodied in the UNHCR Zairian Camp Security Contingent, by which national troops were recruited, led and paid by the international community, and apply it to monitoring the embargo in Zaire, perhaps in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity. As an interim measure, in order to maintain an element of deterrence, the Commission suggested that the Council retain the Commission or create a similar body to maintain contacts with the Governments of the Great Lakes region, to follow up the investigations of the Commission, to respond to any other allegations and to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the situation.

Reactions to Commission of Inquiry. On 2 February [S/1996/84], Rwanda, noting that the Commission was expected to conclude its work by the end of the month, said that that would be tantamount to encouraging violation of the embargo and constituted encouragement to the criminals, and the country harbouring them, to continue the infiltration across the frontiers of Rwanda and Burundi. Rwanda requested that the Security Council strengthen the authority of the Commission, extend its mandate and give it the means necessary to discharge its mandate. It suggested that appropriate measures be taken against countries that refused to cooperate with the Commission.

Zaire responded to the interim report on 22 February [S/1996/132], stating that nothing in the report proved that Zaire was training former Rwandan government forces in order to destabilize Rwanda or was supplying them with arms for that purpose. Zaire denied involvement in any attempt to destabilize.

On 27 March [S/1996/222], Rwanda welcomed the Commission's second report and said that if the Commission were provided with adequate means, mandate and strength, then an eventual conflagration could be avoided in the Great Lakes region. Rwanda endorsed the recommendations made by the Commission except that of recruiting Zairian troops to monitor the Rwandan arms embargo in Zaire. Rwanda recommended that further investigations be carried out on Zaire's role in providing shelter and protection to the former Rwandan army forces and rebel militias in eastern Zaire.

Zaire, on 3 April [S/1996/241], again denied any involvement in attempts to destabilize Rwanda and said that the March report levelled serious accusations against it without providing proof. By using innuendoes and not fully examining information provided by various sources, it sought to blame Zaire for an arms sale that allegedly took place elsewhere, and it ignored important information which the Zairian authorities had made available to the Commission.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 April, the Security Council adopted resolution 1053(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the situation in Rwanda, in particular its resolutions 918(1994) of 17 May 1994, 997(1995) of 9 June 1995, 1011(1995) of 16 August 1995 and 1013(1995) of 7 September 1995,

Having considered the letter dated 13 March 1996 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council and the report of the International Commission of Inquiry established under resolution 1013(1995) annexed to that letter, as well as the interim report of the Commission of Inquiry dated 17 January 1996,

Expressing its support for the Tunis Declaration of the heads of State of the Great Lakes region of 18 March 1996,

Expressing once again its grave concern at allegations of the sale and supply of arms and related materiel to former Rwandese Government Forces in violation of the embargo imposed under its resolutions 918(1994), 997(1995) and 1011(1995), and underlining the need for Governments to take action to ensure the effective implementation of the embargo,

Commending the members of the Commission of Inquiry for the excellent investigation they have conducted,

Welcoming the assistance given to the Commission of Inquiry by some Governments,

Noting with concern the continuing lack of full cooperation the Commission of Inquiry has received from other Governments,

Gravely concerned by the finding of the Commission of Inquiry that certain Rwandan elements are receiving military training to conduct destabilizing raids into Rwanda,

Deeply disturbed by the strong evidence presented by the Commission of Inquiry leading to the conclusion that it is highly probable that a violation of the arms embargo occurred, in particular by the sale of arms which took place in Seychelles in June 1994 and the subsequent two shipments of arms to Goma, Zaire, from Seychelles destined for former Rwandese Government Forces,

Noting that the Commission of Inquiry received strong indications from its sources that aircraft are continuing to land at Goma and Bukavu with arms for former Rwandese Government Forces, and that senior figures among those forces are still actively raising money apparently for the purpose of funding an armed struggle against Rwanda,

Further noting that the Commission of Inquiry has not yet been able to investigate thoroughly these allegations of continuing violations of the arms embargo,

Reaffirming the need for a long-term solution to the refugee and related problems in the Great Lakes States,

Reaffirming also the importance of terminating radio broadcasts which spread hate and fear in the region, and emphasizing the need for States to assist the countries of the region in terminating such broadcasts as stated by the Cairo Declaration on the Great Lakes Region of 29 November 1995,

1. Reaffirms the importance it attaches to the work of the Commission of Inquiry, to the investigations it has conducted to date, and to continued effective implementation of the relevant Council resolutions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to maintain the Commission of Inquiry on the basis set out in paragraph 91 (c) of the report of the Commission of Inquiry to follow up its earlier investigations and to stand ready to pursue any further allegations of violations, especially of current and expected arms shipments;

3. Expresses its determination that the prohibition on the sale or supply of arms and related materiel to non-governmental forces for use in Rwanda should be implemented fully in accordance with resolution 1011(1995);

4. Calls upon States in the Great Lakes region to ensure that their territory is not used as a base for armed groups to launch incursions or attacks against any other State in violation of principles of international law and the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Urges all States, in particular those in the region, to intensify their efforts to prevent military training and the sale or supply of weapons to militia groups or former Rwandese Government Forces, and to take the steps necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the arms embargo, including by creation of all necessary national mechanisms for implementation;

6. Encourages States of the Great Lakes region to ensure the effective implementation of the Tunis Declaration of the Heads of State of the Great Lakes region of 18 March 1996;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with States neighbouring Rwanda, in particular Zaire, on appropriate measures, including the possible deployment of United Nations observers in the airfields and other transportation points in and around border crossing points, for the purpose of better implementation of the arms embargo and deterrence of the shipment of arms to former Rwandese Government Forces in violation of Council resolutions;

8. Expresses concern at the lack of response by certain States to the Commission's inquiries, and calls upon those States that have not yet done so to cooperate fully with the Commission in its inquiries and to investigate fully reports of their officials and nationals suspected of violating the relevant Council resolutions;

9. Calls upon States, in particular those whose nationals have been implicated by the report of the Commission of Inquiry, to investigate the apparent complicity of their officials or private citizens in the purchase of arms from Seychelles in June 1994, and in other suspected violations of the relevant Council resolutions;

10. Further calls upon States to make available to the Commission of Inquiry the results of their investigations, and to cooperate fully with the Commission of Inquiry, including by providing to the Commission of Inquiry at any time any access they request to airfields and to witnesses, in private and without the presence of officials or representatives of any Government;

11. Encourages States to make voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for Rwanda, established by the Secretary-General, to support the work of the Commission of Inquiry, and to contribute through the Secretary-General equipment and services to the Commission of Inquiry;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council on the implementation of this resolution by 1 October 1996;

13. Reiterates its concern that the uncontrolled illegal flows of arms and related materiel in violation of Council resolutions would pose a threat to peace and stability in the Great Lakes region, and declares its willingness to consider further measures in this regard;

14. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

23 April 1996 Meeting 3656 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/298).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 June, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/229.

Commission of Inquiry in Rwanda

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the Commission of Inquiry in Rwanda and the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling that, in its resolution 50/214 of 23 December 1995, it had already requested the Secretary-General to make economies in an amount of 103,991,200 United States dollars and also to implement fully all mandated programmes and activities, and reaffirming the budgetary process adopted in its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and subsequent relevant resolutions,

1. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in an amount of up to 931,800 dollars (net of staff assessment) under section 3 (Peacekeeping operations and special missions) of the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997 for the maintenance of the Commission of Inquiry;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, no later than 15 May 1996, proposals on possible means of absorption in the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997, including, inter alia, part II thereof;

3. Requests the Fifth Committee to revert to the issue of appropriations at subsequent meetings in May 1996 in the light of the Secretary-General's proposals referred to in paragraph 2 above.

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/842/Add.3) without vote, 9 May (meeting 58); draft orally proposed by Chairman; agenda item 116. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 56-58; plenary 120.

Further activities of Commission. As requested by the Security Council in April, the International Commission of Inquiry continued to investigate reports of arms flows to the former Rwandan government forces and allegations that those forces were receiving military training in order to destabilize Rwanda, in violation of relevant Council resolutions. The Secretary-General, as he explained in a letter of 27 September to the Council President [S/1996/816], approached the Governments of Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire to ascertain their readiness to receive the Commission. Following those approaches, the Commission proceeded to the region and contacted several other Governments. It began inquiring into fresh allegations that the former Rwandan government forces and the Interahamwe militia were continuing to receive military training in order to destabilize Rwanda and that they were expanding and diversifying their methods of fund-raising to buy arms for use against Rwanda. While it was waiting to obtain more data, the Commission sought the Council's concurrence to submit its report a month later than originally requested. The Council agreed in a letter of 1 October [S/1996/817].

Third report

The Secretary-General, by a letter of 1 November 1996 [S/1997/1010], forwarded to the Security Council the third report of the International Commission of Inquiry. In the forwarding letter, he noted that the situation in the region had changed dramatically since the Commission submitted its previous report.

The Commission had visited the region from 12 July to 21 October and, in accordance with Council resolution 1053(1996), reduced its size from six members to four. All Commission members visited Kenya, Rwanda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Uganda; three members visited South Africa; and one member visited Belgium and the United Kingdom. Approaches were made to several Governments believed by the Commission to have information regarding its investigations (Belgium, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Egypt, France, Italy, Kenya, Malta, Portugal, Seychelles, South Africa, Spain, Switzerland, United Kingdom, Zaire, Zambia), but many replies were awaited. In the time available to it, the Commission was unable to follow up on all aspects of the investigation; the main pending questions concerned allegations involving the transportation and origin of arms.

In Rwanda, the Commission was informed that the number and duration of cross-border incursions from Zaire were increasing and they were penetrating deeper into Rwanda.

During the Commission's visit to the United Republic of Tanzania, the Prime Minister stated that it was his Government's policy not to allow the country to be used as a base for military training or political activities by the refugees, nor were refugees permitted to have arms. Accompanied by Tanzanian officials, the Commission visited Rwandan refugee camps and found no evidence that arms and materiel were being sold or supplied to the remnants of the former Rwandan government forces and militia resident there.

In Uganda, the Commission met with senior government officials. According to information obtained there, recruitment and training of Rwandans were taking place at several locations in eastern Zaire.

During a second field tour (July to mid-October 1996), the Commission received information from a wide variety of sources, including Governments. Despite the varying degrees of reliability, the volume and consistency of the information gathered from different sources, when reviewed all together, proved highly convincing, and the Commission was confident that its conclusions were soundly based on accurate information.

It had received indications that a complex, organized multinational fund-raising and taxing system existed under the control of prominent members of the Hutu community and was carried out in the refugee camps, among Hutu communities worldwide, organized from Nairobi, and in Rwanda itself. A major source of funding was reportedly the sale in refugee camps of relief goods donated by international humanitarian organizations. Wealthy Hutus in Kenya and Zaire were also said to have contributed to fund-raising efforts, which had yielded up to $2 million.

Sources in Europe and Africa described a web of illicit arms deals, arms flights and arms deliveries spanning Africa and stretching as far as Europe, particularly Eastern Europe, and involving contraband drugs, firearms, diamonds and gold. As a result, arms continued to flow to the former Rwandan government forces. The Commission was told that the former Rwandan government forces had brand-new weapons that were not available to them before the embargo was imposed.

In conclusion, the Commission noted that, despite many differences, Rwanda and Burundi faced linked problems because of the similarity of their ethnic composition and the presence in the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire of hundreds of thousands of refugees from both countries. The Commission was convinced that the problems of the Great Lakes region needed to be approached from a regional perspective because the conflict involving each country affected developments in neighbouring countries. It had little doubt that between mid-1994, when the Security Council imposed an arms embargo on Rwanda, and early 1995, arms deliveries and training had taken place. Furthermore, it concluded that the former Rwandan government forces, including the Interahamwe militia, were continuing to receive arms from a variety of sources in violation of the embargo.

Recommendations. The Commission recommended that consideration be given to requesting the States producing arms to take measures under their domestic law to implement provisions of the sanctions, as provided for in Security Council resolutions 918(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 285], 997(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 386] and 1011(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 380], and, in particular, to prosecute their nationals for violations of the arms embargo imposed by those resolutions.

The Commission believed that only a long-term political settlement would result in the repatriation of the refugees and the eventual resolution of the conflict, but that short-term measures would help reduce the danger of large-scale fighting on Rwanda's borders. The Commission also recommended that the Council call on Zaire not to allow foreign armed groups to operate from its soil and to end assistance to such groups. In addition, the Commission stated that the Council should keep under review the possibility of deploying UN observers in the airfields and at border crossing points for the purpose of deterring arms shipments.

The Commission further recommended that the Council consider expanding the embargo to include a freeze on assets, including bank accounts, of individuals and organizations involved in raising funds to finance the insurgency. The Council might also wish to encourage the Tanzanian authorities to continue to liaise with UNHCR and to consult the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda to see if legal grounds existed to detain known "intimidators" in the refugee camps.

Although the situation in Burundi did not fall within the Commission's mandate, it could not disregard its finding that the Rwandan and Burundian insurgents in the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire were coordinating their arms procurement, training and military operations. It suggested that, should the Council decide to impose an arms embargo on Burundi, it should extend it to include the Burundian insurgents outside the country because of their cooperation with the former Rwandan forces.

One of the major reasons for the unstable situation was the refusal of the majority of Rwandan refugees to return home because of fear of reprisals. It was therefore recommended that the Security Council urge Rwanda to take measures to create a climate conducive to the reintegration of the refugees in order to encourage their return as soon as possible.

Having concluded its visit to the area, the Commission said it intended to continue, subject to the Council's concurrence and in accordance with resolution 1053(1996), to maintain contacts with Governments and others in the Great Lakes region, to follow up the investigations, to respond to further allegations of violations and to make periodic reports to the Council on the evolution of the situation. The Commission recommended that its mandate be reviewed in the light of any further Council action concerning the Great Lakes region.

Burundi

The political, ethnic, humanitarian and security situation in Burundi deteriorated significantly in 1996, despite UN efforts to avert further problems. It reached a new crisis point with the overthrow of the existing coalition Government on 25 July, an action condemned by the UN Security Council. That crisis was the most recent in a series beginning with a coup d'état in October 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 262], which had been followed by the assassination of the President and other political leaders and widespread massacres. The situation deteriorated further with the deaths of the Presidents of Burundi and Rwanda in a plane crash in April 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 276]. Although an agreement known as the Convention on Governance, a power-sharing mechanism for a four-year transitional period [YUN 1994, p. 278], had been signed in September 1994, and remained in effect until the 1996 coup, ethnic and political tensions had continued.

Before the overthrow of the Government in July 1996, the Security Council issued four statements and adopted two resolutions calling for, among other things, a cessation of violence, a peaceful resolution involving all parties to the conflict and the consideration of possible sanctions against Burundi. It also urged the Secretary-General to continue with contingency planning for a rapid humanitarian response in the event of widespread violence. Following the coup, the Council issued another statement and adopted another resolution, by which it condemned the overthrow of the legitimate Government, called for restraint, demanded that all parties initiate unconditional negotiations, urged the return to constitutional order and legality, called for continued contingency planning and decided to consider the imposition of sanctions.

During the year the Secretary-General's Special Representative sought ways to maintain dialogue for a peaceful resolution of the situation.

Tensions and deteriorating situation

At the beginning of 1996, the situation in Burundi was marked by continued ethnic and political tensions which were manifested in killings, massacres, torture and arbitrary detentions. The Secretary-General, in a 15 February report to the Security Council on the situation in Burundi [S/1996/116], noted the seriousness of the situation, which was defined by visceral fears and brutal struggles for power. Much of the Tutsi minority, historically dominant, lived with fear of physical elimination, while the Hutu majority was seeking proper political representation. The minority's fears had been heightened by the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, leading extremist elements to take ruthless actions against Hutu populations. Hutu extremists, in turn, were reinforced and supported from outside the country by some of the perpetrators of the Rwandan genocide.

December 1995 had been characterized by widespread violence and by attempts by opposition members, with support from among the military, to remove from office the President, Sylvestre Ntibantunganya. During that month [S/1995/1068], a number of politicians and officials were assassinated and clashes between the military and insurgents occurred. Violence was also directed against members of the international humanitarian community. At the beginning of January 1996, the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Marc Faguy, confirmed that the influence of moderate political forces in Burundi continued to diminish and the Prime Minister publicly warned that the ideology of exclusion and genocide was gaining ground.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

At a meeting of the Security Council on 5 January to discuss the situation in Burundi, the President made the following statement [S/PRST/1996/1] on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the letter of 29 December 1995 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council on developments in Burundi. The Council shares the Secretary-General's deep concern at the situation in Burundi, which has been characterized by daily killings, massacres, torture and arbitrary detention. It condemns in the strongest terms those persons responsible for such actions, which must cease immediately. It encourages all States to take the measures deemed necessary to prevent such persons from travelling abroad and receiving any kind of support. It reiterates its profound concern about radio stations which incite hatred and acts of genocide and encourages Member States and others concerned to cooperate in the identification and dismantling of them. The Council calls upon all concerned in Burundi to exercise maximum restraint and to refrain from all acts of violence. It reiterates that all who commit or authorize the commission of serious violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for such violations and should be held accountable. In this context it stresses the importance it attaches to the work of the International Commission of Inquiry established pursuant to its resolution 1012(1995) of 28 August 1995, and undertakes to study carefully the letter from the Secretary-General dated 3 January 1996 containing an interim report on that work.

The Council is gravely concerned at recent attacks on personnel of international humanitarian organizations, which have led to the suspension of essential assistance to refugees and displaced persons and to the temporary withdrawal of international personnel. The Council welcomes the Secretary-General's decision to ask the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to visit Burundi to discuss with the Burundi authorities steps that might be taken to defuse the situation. It underlines that the authorities in Burundi are responsible for the security of personnel of international humanitarian organizations and of the refugees and displaced persons there and calls upon the Government of Burundi to provide adequate security to food convoys and humanitarian personnel.

The Council welcomes the assumption of his functions by the new Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Burundi and calls on all concerned to support his efforts. It commends the work of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in seeking to promote dialogue and national reconciliation in Burundi, as well as the role played there by the Organization of African Unity (OAU). It welcomes the decision of the OAU in Addis Ababa on 19 December 1995 to extend the mandate of its mission in Burundi for another three months and to strengthen the civilian component of the mission. The Council also welcomes the outcome of the Cairo Conference of Heads of State of the Great Lakes Region on 29 November 1995, supports the work of the facilitators appointed by it, and emphasizes once again the importance it attaches to all States acting in accordance with the recommendations contained in the Cairo Declaration as well as those adopted at the Regional Conference held in Bujumbura in February 1995. It stresses the importance of continued attention by the international community as a whole to the situation in Burundi and encourages Member States to intensify contacts and visits.

The Council notes the proposals referred to in the Secretary-General's letter of 29 December 1995. It will consider these and other proposals he may submit in the light of the reports on the mission of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and from his Special Representative in Burundi. It also requests the Secretary-General to consider what role United Nations personnel in the region and other support personnel might play in Burundi.

The Council reaffirms its support for the Convention on Governance of 10 September 1994, which constitutes the institutional framework for national reconciliation in Burundi and for the institutions of Government established in line with it. It calls once again upon all political parties, military forces and elements of civil society in Burundi fully to respect and implement the Convention on Governance and to give their continued support to the institutions of Government established in line with it.

The Security Council will remain seized of this matter.

Meeting number. SC 3616.

Communications (January). In a 16 January letter [S/1996/36] to the Security Council President, the Secretary-General said that he had sent the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Sadako Ogata, to Burundi as his personal envoy to discuss with government authorities steps to defuse the situation and enable international organizations to function effectively. The High Commissioner visited Burundi on 7 and 8 January. Her visit had been preceded by a number of attacks against staff of UN agencies and NGOs working in Burundi, at a time when the security situation as a whole was deteriorating. In the prevailing climate of growing radicalization, extremists from the two main ethnic groups were engaged in violence including selective killings, massacres of civilians and destruction of national economic assets and infrastructure. The governing coalition was under threat and the polarization of State institutions, particularly the security forces, was growing. Burundian officials described their country as in a state of civil war and accused other parties of engaging in ethnic cleansing. There were two conflicting views among the Burundian leadership about the best method to reverse the situation: some called for a military offensive against the armed factions but opposed international military intervention or preventive deployment; others advocated a wider political dialogue, including negotiations with the extremist movements, and welcomed the idea of an external military presence.

Mrs. Ogata reported that continuation of humanitarian aid was essential to address the needs of Burundians and foreign refugees affected by more than two years of uninterrupted regional turmoil. Should humanitarian activities have to be suspended due to security concerns, the consequences in terms of human lives, health, sanitation and general welfare could lead to a massive emergency situation that would further destabilize the region. Mrs. Ogata recommended three steps to improve the security of humanitarian personnel: sending a technical security mission to find ways of improving security arrangements, including limited deployment of UN guards to protect UN personnel and premises; expanding application of the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel [GA res. 49/59] to cover UN activities in Burundi; and cooperating more closely with OAU military observers, who might be able to perform liaison functions between the humanitarian community and the Burundian security forces. During the visit, the Prime Minister publicly announced his agreement with Mrs. Ogata's proposal for a standing mechanism of consultation on security issues between the Government, the United Nations and NGOs.

The Secretary-General believed the proposed measures could be helpful but were not likely to have any real impact on the fundamental problems of the country. In his view, it was imperative that the international community take action to prevent another tragedy in the subregion and to promote a dialogue embracing all the elements of the Burundian political spectrum. His Special Representative would explore with Burundian leaders how such a dialogue might be established.

Burundi, responding to the Secretary-General's letters of 29 December 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 3501 and 16 January 1996, rejected the idea of stationing military forces in Zaire or any other neighbouring country with a view to deploying those forces in Burundi. In an 18 January letter [S/1996/40] to the Security Council, Burundi said the threat of a deployment of external troops was provoking a climate of uneasiness in Burundi, but was welcomed by opposition forces which were terrorizing the population. Furthermore, Burundi security forces had protected international personnel from danger during the two-year crisis, with a few exceptions when the opposition forces had ambushed such workers. Therefore, Burundi rejected the Secretary-General's proposal for a limited deployment of UN guards to protect UN personnel and premises. It listed its own priorities for international assistance, including: dismantling a radio station which was transmitting programmes inciting ethnic hatred and genocide; enhancement of the judicial system; increased contributions in technical, financial and material resources; increased humanitarian assistance for displaced persons, victims and refugees; efforts for national reconstruction and economic recovery; development of a free and responsible national press; and eradication of networks for training, equipping and use of armed political groups. #### SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 29 January, the Security Council adopted resolution 1040(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling the statement by its President of 5 January 1996,

Having considered the letters of the Secretary-General to the President of the Council dated 29 December 1995 and 16 January 1996,

Deeply concerned at the continued deterioration in the situation in Burundi, and at the threat this poses to the stability of the region as a whole,

Condemning in the strongest terms those responsible for the increasing violence, including against refugees and international humanitarian personnel,

Underlining the importance it attaches to the continuation of humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Burundi,

Underlining also the responsibility of the authorities in Burundi for the security of international personnel and of refugees and displaced persons there,

Welcoming in this context the recent visit of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to Burundi, at the request of the Secretary-General, and plans for the establishment of a standing mechanism of consultation on security issues between the Government of Burundi, the United Nations and non-governmental organizations,

Stressing the paramount importance of, and imperative need for, all concerned in Burundi to pursue dialogue and national reconciliation,

Stressing the importance it attaches to the continuation and intensification of efforts by the international community to avert a further worsening of the situation in Burundi, and to promote dialogue and national reconciliation there,

Noting with appreciation the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General and his staff, the Organization of African Unity and its military observers in Burundi, the European Union, and the facilitators appointed by the Cairo Conference of Heads of State of the Great Lakes Region held on 29 November 1995,

Reaffirming its support for the Convention on Governance of 10 September 1994, and for the institutions of Government established in line with it,

1. Demands that all concerned in Burundi exercise restraint and refrain from acts of violence;

2. Expresses its fullest support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and others, in support of the Convention on Governance, to facilitate a comprehensive political dialogue with the objective of promoting national reconciliation, democracy, security and the rule of law in Burundi;

3. Calls upon all concerned in Burundi to participate in a positive spirit and without delay in such dialogue, and to support the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and others seeking to facilitate such dialogue;

4. Invites Member States and others concerned to cooperate in the identification and dismantling of radio stations which incite hatred and acts of violence in Burundi;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation as appropriate with the Organization of African Unity and with Member States concerned, to consider what further steps of a preventive nature may be necessary in order to avoid the situation deteriorating further, and to develop contingency plans as appropriate;

6. Welcomes the sending by the Secretary-General of a technical security mission to Burundi to examine ways to improve existing security arrangements for United Nations personnel and premises and the protection of humanitarian operations;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council closely informed, including on the technical security mission he has sent to Burundi, and to submit a full report to the Council by 20 February 1996 on the situation, covering the progress of his efforts to facilitate a comprehensive political dialogue and the actions undertaken pursuant to paragraph 5 above including contingency planning;

8. Declares its readiness in the light of that report and of developments in the situation:

(a) To consider the imposition of measures under the Charter of the United Nations, including a ban on the supply of all arms and related materiel to Burundi and travel restrictions and other measures against those leaders in Burundi who continue to encourage violence;

(b) To consider what other steps may need to be taken;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1040(1996)
 29 January 1996 Meeting 3623 Adopted unanimously
 Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/56).

Report of Secretary-General (February). In a 15 February report [S/1996/116], the Secretary-General described the situation in Burundi as desperately serious and called on the international community to plan for contingency measures to avoid a catastrophe. He said that a broad-based dialogue of the parties was the only path towards mutual accommodation and national reconciliation, but that had not been possible despite many efforts by the United Nations, OAU and others, particularly Julius K. Nyerere, former President of the United Republic of Tanzania.

In one attempt to depose Burundi's President, Mr. Ntibantunganya, Tutsi extremists, in mid-January, had called on the general population in Bujumbura to stop working. That effort did not come to fruition, but intimidation continued despite the fact that some of the extremist leaders were arrested. On 16 January, the military introduced countermeasures to contain the demonstrations and the situation in Bujumbura returned to a state of uneasy peace. Armed Hutu groups concentrated their actions against strategic targets. Heavy fighting was reported in northern Burundi, uprooting tens of thousands of people. In the few days before his report was completed, however, the Secretary-General noted that the situation had been somewhat calmer and there was more coordination between the President and the Prime Minister.

The Secretary-General believed the best approach to prevent another humanitarian tragedy in the subregion was to launch an initiative to promote a dialogue embracing all the elements of the Burundian political spectrum. He sent his Special Representative to explore with Burundian leaders how such a dialogue might be established, possibly under UN auspices, but there had not been any substantial progress. The Secretary-General had met with Mr. Nyerere on 19 January in an effort to pursue a negotiated solution. Having visited Burundi at the end of 1995, Mr. Nyerere feared that the Government could collapse and agreed that a major initiative was needed. He favoured a broad-based dialogue including all elements of the political spectrum, even extremists, but had not been able to get the leaders to agree.

In the light of the political and security situation, the humanitarian situation also suffered. Agriculture, which accounted for nearly 90 per cent of economic activity, had been disrupted by population displacement and insecurity. Foreign aid fell sharply after the events of 1993—to roughly one third of the 1992 level—and decline was likely to continue in 1996, despite the increasing needs of the displaced population, Rwandan refugees, and the few returnees repatriating from Zaire and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Following attacks on representatives of humanitarian organizations, the Secretary-General sent a technical team to Burundi from 27 January to 3 February to review the possible role UN guards could play in providing enhanced security to the humanitarian community. The team concluded that, in the current context of violence and instability, UN guards would not be able to guarantee the security of humanitarian personnel and could themselves be potential targets. Should real progress be made towards political dialogue, UN guards could play a significant role in helping to monitor the implementation of agreements reached by the opposing groups. They could also complement the operations of the OAU military observers. While it was possible to envisage a role for UN guards, the Government was still opposed to the idea and the international humanitarian community in Burundi was sceptical. The Secretary-General therefore saw little point in pursuing the option of UN guards for the time being.

The objective of the international community had to be to prevent the escalation of tensions in Burundi into full-scale civil war, ethnic violence and genocide, which would lead to massive flows of refugees into neighbouring countries and further regional destabilization. Preventive diplomacy was the preferred mode of conflict management and resolution, but it was not always sufficient when the parties were not willing to engage in a constructive dialogue. The Secretary-General said that the Security Council should consider other options in the event the situation deteriorated, including the possibility of establishing a standby multinational force for humanitarian intervention. Donor countries would earmark contingents for participation in the multinational force that would remain in their home countries, ready for deployment at short notice. The force would be established under Chapter VII of the UN Charter and led by one Member State. That approach would be necessary, as Burundi had indicated that it would not consent to any kind of foreign humanitarian operation with a military component on its territory. The lessons drawn from the UN experience in the former Yugoslavia, Somalia, Haiti and Rwanda suggested that, in situations where there was no consent and/or no peace to keep, better results were likely through a multinational operation that could create conditions for the subsequent deployment of a UN peacekeeping operation.

Should such a humanitarian military intervention in Burundi be necessary, the mission's mandate would be to deter massacres, to provide security to refugees, displaced persons and civilians at risk, and to protect key economic installations. Under a worst-case scenario, the force would require a maximum of 25,000 troops initially, with staging areas in neighbouring countries.

The duration of such a humanitarian operation, designed to forestall possible genocide and a massive exodus of refugees, would depend on when the situation in the country could be stabilized. Once that had been achieved, the responsibility could be transferred to a UN peacekeeping mission, which would work towards reactivating the political reconciliation process.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General stated that it was evident that the Burundian people, and particularly their leaders, paid attention to the words and actions of the Security Council. Pressure had to be maintained on the political leaders. In that regard, the international community—including the Council, donor countries and Burundi's neighbours—had to act in a coherent and concerted way.

The Secretary-General noted that it was some of the Burundian military and their extremist allies who were most opposed to international intervention or preventive deployment. The challenge to the international community was whether to take an initiative that was welcomed by those who wanted peace or to allow the extremists to retain their veto over effective international action.

Communications (February). Burundi, in a 13 February letter [S/1996/110] to the Security Council President, said that it had been engaged for three months in establishing a policy of dialogue so as to counter all the extremist and factional elements which were undermining attempts to restore peace. The United Nations and the rest of the international community should focus their assistance in more concrete terms so that the people could pursue peace and national reconciliation, through such steps as: supporting the Convention on Governance so as to counter extremists who were undermining peace and security; encouraging diplomatic initiatives intended to promote peace and development in the Great Lakes region; assisting the displaced, repatriated and dispersed groups and supporting national reconciliation; helping the rehabilitation of the socio-economic infrastructure; and supporting law and order, the judicial system, reconstruction and stimulation of the economy. Burundi called on the international community to continue to support the people of Burundi, in strict respect for its sovereignty and to the exclusion of any use of force.

On 18 February [S/1996/121], Burundi informed the Security Council that the gravity of the crisis was steadily diminishing. There was greater cohesion within the executive branch and trust was being restored between the forces of law and order and the population.

Zaire, however, in a position paper of 22 February [S/1996/146], said that the situation in Burundi was precarious, and characterized by confusion; a weakening of authority and power; inter-ethnic hatred; a struggle for power in which all means were acceptable; and cleansing of Hutu elements from Bujumbura, the capital city, by a Tutsi army, whereas the rest of the country was controlled by Hutu militias. The situation could take a dangerous turn at any moment with unforeseeable consequences for neighbouring countries, particularly Zaire. In Zaire's view, the Secretary-General's report of 15 February (see above) reflected the true situation. The Security Council needed to impose peace and reconciliation in Burundi by all means available and create the conditions for a democratic Government there.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 5 March, the Security Council adopted resolution 1049(1996).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions and the statements of its President concerning the situation in Burundi, in particular the statement of its President of 5 January 1996 and resolution 1040(1996) of 29 January 1996,

Noting the views expressed by the Government of Burundi set out in the letter to the President of the Security Council dated 13 February 1996,

Welcoming the efforts of the President and the Prime Minister of Burundi and other members of the Government to calm the situation in the country,

Deeply concerned at the support extended to certain groups in Burundi by some of the perpetrators of the genocide in Rwanda and the threat this poses to the stability of the region,

Deeply concerned also at all acts of violence in Burundi and at the continued incitement to ethnic hatred and violence by radio stations and the growth of calls for exclusion and genocide,

Deeply disturbed that the persistence of the conflict has had a negative impact on the humanitarian situation and on the capacity of the international community to continue to assist the people of Burundi,

Supporting the work of the Commission of Inquiry established by resolution 1012(1995),

Taking note of the letter from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council dated 3 January 1996, in which he reports that the Commission of Inquiry believes the United Nations security personnel currently provided for its protection are inadequate,

Reiterating the urgent need for all concerned in Burundi, including extremists inside and outside the country, to make concerted efforts to defuse the present crisis and to commit themselves to a dialogue aimed at establishing a permanent political settlement and the creation of conditions conducive to national reconciliation,

Reaffirming its commitment to assist the people of Burundi to achieve a lasting political solution,

Recognizing the urgent need for preparations aimed at anticipating and preventing the escalation of the present crisis in Burundi,

Reaffirming its support for the Convention on Governance of 10 September 1994, and for the institutions of Government established in line with it,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 15 February 1996;

2. Condemns in the strongest terms all acts of violence perpetrated against civilians, refugees and international humanitarian personnel and the assassination of government officials;

3. Demands that all concerned in Burundi refrain from all acts of violence and incitement to violence and from seeking to destabilize the security situation or depose the Government by force or by other unconstitutional means;

4. Calls upon all concerned in Burundi to engage, as a matter of urgency, in serious negotiations and mutual accommodation within the framework of the National Debate agreed upon by the signatories to the Convention and to increase efforts towards national reconciliation;

5. Reiterates its invitation to Member States and others to cooperate in the identification and dismantling of radio stations which incite hatred and acts of violence in Burundi;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with interested States and organizations, to report to the Council on the possibility of establishing a United Nations radio station in Burundi, including through voluntary contributions, to promote reconciliation and dialogue and to relay constructive information as well as supporting the activities undertaken by other United Nations agencies, particularly in the fields of refugees and returnees;

7. Calls upon all parties to cooperate fully with the Commission of Inquiry, reminds the Government of Burundi of its responsibility to ensure security and protection for members and personnel of the Commission, requests the Secretary-General to continue his consultations with the Government of Burundi and the Organization of African Unity Observer Mission in Burundi with a view to ensuring that adequate security is provided for the Commission, and invites Member States to provide adequate voluntary financing to the Commission;

8. Expresses strong support for the efforts of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and his Special Representative, the Organization of African Unity, the European Union, former Presidents Nyerere and Carter and the other facilitators appointed by the Cairo Conference, and others seeking to facilitate political dialogue in Burundi, and encourages the international community to extend political and financial support to the National Debate;

9. Invites Member States and regional, international and non-governmental organizations to stand ready to provide assistance in support of progress achieved by the parties towards political dialogue, and to cooperate with the Government of Burundi in initiatives for comprehensive rehabilitation in Burundi, including in military and police reform, judicial assistance, development programmes and support at international financial institutions;

10. Encourages the Organization of African Unity to increase the size of its Observer Mission in Burundi, as formally requested by the Government of Burundi, and stresses the need for the military observers to operate without any restrictions on their movement to any part of the country;

11. Declares its commitment and readiness to assist the parties in their implementation of agreements reached through political dialogue;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation as appropriate with the Government of Burundi, the heads of State of the Great Lakes region, Member States concerned, the Organization of African Unity and the European Union, to intensify the preparations for convening a Regional Conference for Peace, Security and Development in the Great Lakes Region to address the issues of political and economic stability, as well as peace and security, in the Great Lakes States;

13. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his consultations with Member States concerned and the Organization of African Unity, as appropriate, on contingency planning both for the steps that might be taken to support a comprehensive dialogue and for a rapid humanitarian response in the event of widespread violence or a serious deterioration in the humanitarian situation in Burundi;

14. Decides to keep the situation under constant review and to consider further the Secretary-General's recommendations in the light of the developments in Burundi, and declares its readiness to respond as appropriate, considering all relevant options including those contained in resolution 1040(1996);

15. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council closely informed on the situation in Burundi, including on his efforts to facilitate a comprehensive political dialogue, to report to the Council in the event of a serious deterioration in the situation, and to submit a full report on the implementation of this resolution by 1 May 1996;

16. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

5 March 1996 Meeting 3639 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/162).

Communication (April). By a 12 April letter [S/1996/313], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the security situation in Burundi had taken a turn for the worse during the month of March, when there was a sharp increase in the number of attacks by Hutu rebels. Serious differences were reported between the President and the Prime Minister, on the issue of negotiations with the armed opposition.

The Secretary-General's Special Representative continued to appeal to all concerned for an end to violence and for a constructive dialogue among the main protagonists.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 25 April, the Security Council President, on behalf of the Council members, issued the following statement [S/PRST/1996/21]:

The Security Council has taken note of the letter dated 12 April 1996 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council on the present situation in Burundi, in response to the request to the Secretary-General in resolution 1049(1996) to keep the Council informed on the situation.

The Council is deeply concerned at the recent degeneration of security conditions and political cooperation in Burundi. The Council condemns all acts of violence. The Council is equally concerned at reported statements calling for the arming of civilians, which could lead to grave consequences. The dramatic increase in violence throughout the country already severely inhibits humanitarian aid and could have a negative effect on the donors' capacity to implement development assistance in support of the search by the people of Burundi for reconciliation and rehabilitation.

The Council urges the authorities and all parties in Burundi to set aside their differences and demonstrate the necessary cohesion, unity and political will for settlement of the conflict by peaceful means. The Council calls upon all Burundians to renounce the use of violence and to engage in a comprehensive dialogue to ensure a peaceful future for the people of Burundi.

The Council is deeply concerned at the widespread purchase and use of weapons by Burundians, in particular the laying of landmines.

The Council looks forward to the recommendations of the Secretary-General in the report which it requested by 1 May 1996 on the progress towards commencement of the National Debate and other initiatives for comprehensive political dialogue and national reconciliation. The Council extends its full support for and confidence in the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, and those of former President Nyerere and other envoys to facilitate negotiations to resolve the present crisis.

The Council requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with paragraph 13 of resolution 1049(1996), to expedite consultations with Member States concerned and the Organization of African Unity, as appropriate, on contingency planning both for the steps that might be taken to support a comprehensive dialogue and for a rapid humanitarian response in the event of widespread violence or serious deterioration in the humanitarian situation in Burundi.

The Council underlines its commitment to follow events in Burundi closely and resolves to consider further all relevant options for an appropriate response by the international community upon receipt of the impending report of the Secretary-General.

Report of Secretary-General (May). In a report of 3 May [S/1996/335], the Secretary-General said the security situation in Burundi continued to deteriorate. Since February, over 100,000 people had been displaced as a result of the fighting. New flows of Burundian refugees were moving into Zaire.

Given the political and security situation, the Secretary-General believed that negotiations should be initiated for a restoration of peace.

The leaders of the 12 political parties that had signed the Convention on Governance, together with two other parties, accepted the invitation of Mr. Nyerere to meet with him in Mwanza, United Republic of Tanzania, on 20 and 21 April. Those talks and further consultations ended inconclusively on 26 April. OAU extended by three months, until 13 July, the mandate for its observer mission in Burundi.

As requested by the Security Council in resolution 1049(1996), the Secretary-General continued his consultations with interested Member States and with OAU on contingency planning in relation to Burundi. Continued violence resulted in increased numbers of displaced persons and refugees requiring relief both inside Burundi and in neighbouring countries. It was estimated that displaced persons numbered more than 300,000 and the number of Burundian refugees in eastern Zaire exceeded 140,000.

The Secretary-General concluded that setting up a UN radio station was not a viable option and recommended that the United Nations contribute programmes to existing radio stations.

The Secretary-General remained convinced that the international community had to proceed with contingency planning for a possible military intervention to save lives. Member States, after consultation, had expressed readiness in principle to consider providing troops, insisting on certain conditions: broad-based participation; leadership by one or more Member States which could handle rapid deployment in such circumstances; and financial and logistical assistance.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 15 May, the President of the Security Council made the following statement on behalf of the Council [S/PRST/1996/24]:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Burundi, dated 3 May 1996, submitted pursuant to resolution 1049(1996).

The Council is gravely concerned at the continued deterioration of the security situation in Burundi, in particular at reports of a downward spiral of violence which has resulted in further large-scale killings in Buhoro and Kivvyuka, and at the increasing flow of refugees from Burundi. The Council is deeply concerned that relief organizations have been prevented from delivering vital humanitarian and development assistance in Burundi, and at the suffering which this imposes on the people of Burundi. It calls on the parties and all concerned to refrain from any action that could aggravate the problem of refugees.

The Council strongly condemns any use of violence and emphasizes its conviction that a lasting settlement of the situation in Burundi can only be found through peaceful means. The Council calls on the parties to engage in a comprehensive political dialogue aimed at achieving national reconciliation in Burundi. The Council urges once again the authorities and all parties concerned in Burundi to set aside their differences, renounce the use of force and demonstrate a firm political will for a prompt settlement of the conflict.

The Council stresses the importance of the commencement of the National Debate provided for in the Convention on Governance, as an appropriate mechanism for a wide-ranging political dialogue in which all parties to the conflict should participate without any preconditions. The Council reaffirms its support for the convening of the Regional Conference on Peace, Security and Development in the Great Lakes Region and calls upon all the States concerned to render their cooperation for the convening of the conference.

The Council reiterates its full support for the ongoing efforts of former President Nyerere to facilitate negotiations and political dialogue to resolve the crisis in Burundi and looks forward to a successful outcome of the upcoming meeting in Mwanza, United Republic of Tanzania, on 22 May 1996. The Council calls upon the parties to make full use of the meeting to achieve progress towards national reconciliation. It also supports the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to that end.

The Council emphasizes the importance of the continued cooperation of the United Nations with the Organization of African Unity, the European Union and other interested countries and organizations in coordination with former President Nyerere aimed at achieving the objective of a comprehensive political dialogue between the parties in Burundi. In this regard, the Council expresses its support for the efforts of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and its observer mission and calls upon all States to contribute generously to the OAU Peace Fund in order to enable the OAU to increase the size of the mission and to extend its mandate beyond July 1996.

The Council welcomes the endorsement by the Secretary-General of the conclusions of the technical mission providing for United Nations radio broadcasts in Burundi and looks forward to being kept informed by him of progress made in the implementation of their recommendations.

The Council reiterates the importance it attaches to the contingency planning called for in paragraph 13 of resolution 1049(1996), and notes the consultations which have already taken place. In the light of recent developments, it requests the Secretary-General and Member States concerned to continue to facilitate, as a matter of urgency, contingency planning for a rapid humanitarian response in the event of widespread violence or a serious deterioration in the humanitarian situation in Burundi. It also encourages the Secretary-General further to pursue planning for steps that might be taken to support a possible political agreement.

The Council reminds all parties of their responsibilities for restoring peace and stability in Burundi, and recalls its readiness, as set out in resolution 1040(1996), to consider the adoption of further measures should the parties fail to demonstrate the necessary political will for a peaceful solution to the crisis. The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Communications (May/June). By an 8 May letter [S/1996/341] to the Security Council President, Burundi transmitted a 5 May statement by its Foreign Minister concerning attacks against civilians. He stated that terrorists had assassinated a member of Parliament and his family and had attacked a hospital, killing one person and wounding others. The attackers had looted, damaged and destroyed public buildings and private homes. The Foreign Minister denied allegations that had been made against the Burundian army regarding recent deaths in Cibitoke province, adding that the Burundian forces had rescued many citizens threatened by armed terrorist groups that had infiltrated into Burundi from abroad.

The EU Presidency, in a 20 June declaration [A/51/173-S/1996/469], expressed concern over the deteriorating political and human rights situation in Burundi and pointed out that it had taken initiatives aimed at resolving the crisis, including having appointed a Special Envoy for the Great Lakes region, Aldo Ajello, who would assist efforts of the United Nations, OAU and others to support a regional conference under the aegis of the United Nations and OAU to resolve the causes of the crisis.

First Arusha regional summit. At the regional summit of heads of State and Government in Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, on 25 June [S/1996/557], the participating States (Burundi, Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire) reaffirmed their commitment to a negotiated peace in Burundi and stated that the national debate should involve all parties. They welcomed a request by the Burundi Government for security assistance to restore peace and stability and established a technical committee to determine the type and level of assistance needed. Burundi made clear that it was not seeking outside military intervention but rather assistance to ensure the people's safety.

In a declaration of 5 July [A/51/190-S/1996/528], the EU welcomed the Arusha proposals and stated that it expected the President and the Prime Minister of Burundi to fulfil the undertakings they had given at the summit to overcome the crisis. It affirmed that it would not recognize a Government that had taken power by force of arms and reiterated the need to convene a conference on the Great Lakes region under the joint aegis of the United Nations and OAU.

On 16 July [A/51/217-S/1996/564], the EU welcomed a resolution on Burundi adopted by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government (Yaounde, Cameroon, 8-10 July) [A/51/229]. The EU particularly welcomed OAU's affirmation of support for the peace talks under the facilitation of Mr. Nyerere, known as the Mwanza peace talks, and its acceptance of Burundi's request for security assistance in order to create conducive conditions for all parties to participate in the talks.

July coup d'etat

The situation in Burundi continued to deteriorate in mid-1996 leading to a coup d'etat in late July.

In a letter of 22 July to the Security Council [S/1996/591], the Secretary-General reported that another massacre of civilians had occurred and rumours of an impending coup d'etat were widespread, while demonstrations in Bujumbura had become increasingly militant. The Burundi authorities claimed that the dead were Tutsis killed by Hutu rebels of the armed wing of the National Council for the Defence of Democracy (CNDD), while CNDD denied any role in the massacre, claiming that the victims were Hutus killed by Burundian army soldiers. The United Nations had no independent information on the events. Through his Spokesman, the Secretary-General had condemned the killings and had called on the parties to cease acts of violence. Former President Jean-Baptiste Bagaza, president of the Parti pour le redressement national, had called for a two-day general strike in protest against the killings and the Arusha security assistance plan; life in Bujumbura had ground to a halt. Mr. Bagaza had also reportedly called for the overthrow of the Government and for the formation of a patriotic front to defend Burundi's sovereignty.

Also of concern, said the Secretary-General, were the ongoing security operations to close down the Kibenzi and Ruvumu camps for Rwandan refugees. There were reports that more than 3,000 refugees had been expelled to Rwanda, 4,000 had fled into the hills, and more than 12,000 were under guard and awaiting expulsion.

The Secretary-General said that those reports only underlined the pressing need for the international community to take concrete and immediate action to halt the violence and prevent another catastrophe in the Great Lakes region. For that reason, he urged the Council to press forward with contingency planning for a multinational force.

In the days before the coup d'etat, the coalition Government under the President and Prime Minister collapsed. One of the two major political parties, the Union pour le progrès national, denounced the Convention on Governance and announced that it was formally withdrawing confidence in the President and that it had entered into a dialogue with other political partners. The President took refuge in the United States Embassy and the Prime Minister announced his intention to resign to a "competent authority". The armed forces then claimed that there was a "constitutional vacuum" that necessitated their seizing power. On 25 July, they replaced the President with the Tutsi former head of State, Major Pierre Buyoya.

Major Buyoya pledged to relaunch the democratic process but, in the meantime, immediate measures were announced by the armed forces: the suspension of the National Assembly and of political parties; a ban on strikes and demonstrations; and the closure of the country's borders and of Bujumbura airport. Major Buyoya urged the international community to refrain from military intervention in Burundi. He appointed Pascal Firmin Ndimira, a Hutu, as the new Prime Minister. On 2 August, a new Government of 23 members was introduced.

On 25 July [S/1996/594], the Secretary-General of OAU informed the UN Secretary-General that OAU was holding an urgent meeting of the Central Organ of the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution to consider the situation in Burundi. In a communique issued that day, the Central Organ said that any attempt to overthrow the legitimate Government of President Ntibantunganya through illegal means would not be accepted by Africa and would be opposed by OAU. The Central Organ called on the international community to isolate any regime taking over leadership in Burundi through the use of force and to impose sanctions against it.

The EU Presidency issued a statement on 23 July [A/51/258-S/1996/598] expressing concern over the new stage in the vortex of violence, putting Burundi at risk of a civil war. The EU believed that only compliance with the undertakings given at the Arusha regional summit on 25 June in favour of dialogue open to all sectors of Burundi's population could restore a climate of confidence and prevent Burundi from becoming embroiled in a generalized conflict. The statement expressed support for the efforts of former President Nyerere and the countries of the region to achieve the restoration of peace and security in Burundi. The EU Presidency issued a similar statement on 26 July [A/51/259-S/1996/608].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

The Security Council, on 24 July, issued the following statement [S/PRST/1996/31] through its President:

The Security Council is gravely concerned at recent information on political developments in Burundi. It strongly condemns any attempt to overthrow the present legitimate Government by force or coup d'état.

The Council takes note of the letter dated 22 July 1996 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council. The Council condemns the massacres of civilians including that of more than 300 women, children and elderly men in Bugendana commune in Gitega province. The Council calls upon all parties to the conflict in Burundi to cease immediately any acts of violence and to cooperate fully with all those who are seeking to bring an end to the vicious cycle of violence. The Council urges all parties to exercise restraint and requests the Burundi authorities to conduct a proper investigation of the massacre.

The Council once again urges the authorities and all parties concerned in Burundi to set aside their differences, renounce the use of force and demonstrate a firm political will for the prompt settlement of the conflict.

The Council deplores the recent forced repatriation of Rwandan refugees from refugee camps in Kibenzi and Ruvumu and calls upon the Government of Burundi to honour its obligations under the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees of 28 July 1951, and to desist from further refoulement of refugees. The Council is also concerned at reports of Rwandan cooperation in the forced repatriation process.

The Council supports the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and urges all parties to work with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to ensure that the rights of refugees are respected. The Council calls upon the international community to respond favourably to the recent appeal to fund their activities in the region.

The Council stresses its full support for the efforts of former President Nyerere, including the agreements of the Arusha Regional Summit of 25 June 1996, and welcomes the full support of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) for these agreements. The Council supports also the acceptance by the Arusha Regional Summit of the request by the Government of Burundi for security assistance in order to complement and reinforce the Mwanza peace talks as well as for creating conducive security conditions for all parties to participate freely in the Mwanza process. The Council encourages all parties to work in a constructive manner with former President Nyerere. It urges the Government of Burundi to grant permission to the International Technical Committee, established at the Arusha Summit, to enter the country in order to work out the logistics of the regional peace plan.

The Council emphasizes the importance of the continued cooperation of the United Nations with the OAU, the European Union, the United States of America and other interested countries and organizations in coordination with former President Nyerere, aimed at achieving a comprehensive political dialogue between the parties in Burundi. In this regard, the Council expresses its support for the efforts of the OAU and its observer mission and welcomes the extension of the mandate of the observer mission.

The Council reiterates the importance it attaches to the contingency planning called for in paragraph 13 of resolution 1049(1996), and notes the consultations which have already taken place. In the light of recent developments, it requests the Secretary-General and Member States concerned to continue to facilitate contingency planning for a rapid humanitarian response in the event of widespread violence or a serious deterioration in the humanitarian situation in Burundi.

The Council reminds all Burundian parties of their responsibilities for restoring peace and stability in Burundi, underlines its commitment to follow events in Burundi closely and recalls its readiness, as set out in resolution 1040(1996), to consider the adoption of further measures should the parties fail to demonstrate the necessary political will for a peaceful solution to the crisis.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Following the Burundi coup, the Security Council issued a statement [S/PRST/1996/32] on 29 July:

The Security Council regrets that both civilian and military leaders of Burundi did not resolve their differences through established constitutional mechanisms, and condemns the actions that led to the overthrow of constitutional order in Burundi.

The Council calls upon all Burundian leaders to respect the Burundi constitution and the will of the people of the country. The Council urges the military leaders of Burundi to restore constitutional government and processes, including the continuation of the elected National Assembly and civil institutions and respect for human rights. The Council stresses that the present situation in Burundi requires utmost restraint, and calls upon all concerned to refrain from any actions and statements that could provoke further escalation of the crisis.

The Council calls upon all Burundian parties and leaders to halt all violence and engage immediately in concerted efforts to achieve a lasting national settlement and reconciliation. The Council stresses their responsibility to protect the lives of all persons, including President Ntibantunganya, Prime Minister Nduwayo and members of their Government, and expects them to maintain democratic institutions and to enter into negotiations for a peaceful resolution of the crisis.

The Council reiterates its full support for regional mediation efforts, including those of former President Nyerere and the Organization of African Unity.

The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Meeting number. SC 3684.

Sanctions imposed

At their second summit in Arusha on 31 July, the regional leaders of Ethiopia, Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire issued a statement [A/51/264-S/1996/620] on the military takeover of Burundi, condemning it as illegal. They called on the new regime to restore constitutional order by returning responsibilities to the National Assembly and allowing political parties to operate.

Furthermore, they decided to impose economic sanctions against Burundi. The summit set up a technical committee to determine the scope and period for sanctions, but some States acted immediately and severed economic ties with Burundi.

Burundi, in a letter [S/1996/690] of 25 August, protested the sanctions, calling on the Security Council President to convene an urgent meeting to discuss the illegal economic blockade. In a letter dated 25 September [A/51/409-S/1996/788], Burundi stated that it was prepared and determined to embark on negotiations with the armed factions, a development negating any justification for not lifting sanctions. Burundi subsequently reiterated that position to the General Assembly and Security Council President, stating that it had met the requirements laid down by its neighbouring countries, i.e., restoring the National Assembly and political parties' activities, and opening dialogue with armed groups.

The leaders held a third regional summit on Burundi, in Arusha on 12 October, at which they issued a communique [A/51/513-S/1996/857]. The States participating in the July summit were joined by Cameroon as current Chairman of OAU and OAU representatives. The summit took note of the report of the Ministerial Technical Committee on the implementation of the economic sanctions imposed on 31 July in an effort to obtain a peaceful settlement of the Burundi crisis and expressed satisfaction with their implementation. Taking note of the exemptions granted in respect of fertilizers and seeds in recognition of the steps taken by the Buyoya regime towards meeting the conditions set by the second summit, the third summit decided to maintain the economic sanctions against Burundi until the negotiating process was well under way. It would respond positively should the regime enter into negotiations with all parties to the conflict and emphasized that the central requirement was unconditional negotiation of all parties to the conflict and armed factions inside and outside the country. The summit was briefed on contacts and efforts made towards promoting negotiations by the Facilitator, Mr. Nyerere, who said a letter had been received from Major Buyoya confirming his commitment to enter into negotiations. In view of that development, the summit decided to send a ministerial delegation to Bujumbura to follow up.

By 10 December letters [A/51/728-S/1996/1040] to the Secretary-General and the Council President, Burundi cited a statement made by the UN Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa (Brazzaville, Congo, 2-3 December) calling on States to lift the embargo against Burundi.

On 5 August [S/1996/628], the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution appealed to the international community to support the decisions of the second Arusha regional summit and announced the decision to withdraw the military component of its mission from Burundi. However, it requested the OAU Secretary-General to consider strengthening the civilian and political components.

The EU Presidency, in a declaration on Burundi issued on 19 August [A/51/298-S/1996/673], urged all sides to refrain from violence and work towards a peaceful resolution of the crisis. It reiterated its conviction that national reconciliation could be restored only through the participation of all sectors of society in the principal institutions and bodies of the State. It reaffirmed its willingness to support Burundi's recovery efforts once national reconciliation was embarked upon.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

The Security Council met on 28 and 30 August and adopted resolution 1072(1996).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions and statements by its President on the situation in Burundi,

Recalling the statement by its President of 24 July 1996, in which the Council strongly condemned any attempt to overthrow the legitimate Government of Burundi by force or coup d'état, and recalling also the statement by its President of 29 July 1996, in which the Council condemned the actions that led to the overthrow of constitutional order in Burundi,

Deeply concerned at the continued deterioration in the security and humanitarian situation in Burundi that has been characterized in the last years by killings, massacres, torture and arbitrary detention, and at the threat that this poses to the peace and security of the Great Lakes region as a whole,

Reiterating its appeal to all parties in Burundi to defuse the present crisis and to demonstrate the necessary cohesion, unity and political will to restore constitutional order and processes without delay,

Reiterating the urgent need for all parties in Burundi to commit themselves to a dialogue aimed at establishing a comprehensive political settlement and the creation of conditions conducive to national reconciliation,

Recalling that all persons who commit or authorize the commission of serious violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for such violations and should be held accountable, and reaffirming the need to put an end to impunity for such acts and the climate that fosters them,

Strongly condemning those responsible for the attacks on personnel of international humanitarian organizations, and underlining that all parties in Burundi are responsible for the security of such personnel,

Emphasizing the urgent need to establish humanitarian corridors to ensure the unimpeded flow of humanitarian goods to all people in Burundi,

Taking note of the letter from the Permanent Representative of the United Republic of Tanzania of 2 August 1996,

Taking note also of the note from the Secretary-General transmitting a letter from the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity of 5 August 1996,

Reiterating its support for the immediate resumption of dialogue and negotiations under the auspices of the Mwanza peace process facilitated by former President Nyerere and the joint communique of the Second Arusha Regional Summit on Burundi of 31 July 1996, which seeks to guarantee democracy and security for all people in Burundi,

Determined to support the efforts and initiatives of the countries in the region, which were also supported by the Central Organ of the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), aimed at returning Burundi to a democratic path and contributing to stability in the region,

Underlining the importance it attaches to the continuation of the efforts of the OAU and its observer mission,

Welcoming the efforts made by interested Member States and by the European Union to contribute to a peaceful solution of the political crisis in Burundi,

Underlining that only a comprehensive political settlement can open the way for international cooperation for the reconstruction, development and stability of Burundi, and expressing its readiness to support the convening, when appropriate, of an international conference involving the United Nations system, regional organizations, international financial institutions, donor countries and non-governmental organizations aimed at mobilizing international support for the implementation of a comprehensive political settlement,

Recalling its resolution 1040(1996) of 29 January 1996, in particular paragraph 8 thereof, in which the Council declared its readiness to consider the imposition of measures under the Charter of the United Nations,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 15 August 1996,

A

1. Condemns the overthrow of the legitimate Government and constitutional order in Burundi, and condemns also all those parties and factions which resort to force and violence to advance their political objectives;

2. Expresses its strong support for the efforts of regional leaders, including at their meeting at Arusha on 31 July 1996, of the OAU and of former President Nyerere, to assist Burundi to overcome peacefully the grave crisis which it is undergoing, and encourages them to continue to facilitate the search for a political solution;

3. Calls upon the regime to ensure a return to constitutional order and legality, to restore the National Assembly and to lift the ban on all political parties;

4. Demands that all sides in Burundi declare a unilateral cessation of hostilities, call an immediate halt to violence and assume their individual and collective responsibilities to bring peace, security and tranquillity to the people of Burundi;

5. Demands also that the leaders of all parties in Burundi ensure basic conditions of security for all in Burundi by a commitment to abstain from attacking civilians, to ensure the security of humanitarian personnel operating in the territory they control, and to guarantee the protection within Burundi and safe passage out of the country for the members of President Ntibanunganya's government and the members of Parliament;

6. Demands further that all of Burundi's political parties and factions without exception, whether inside or outside the country and including representatives of civil society, initiate unconditional negotiations immediately, with a view to reaching a comprehensive political settlement;

7. Declares its readiness to assist the people of Burundi with appropriate international cooperation to support a comprehensive political settlement resulting from these negotiations and, in this context, requests the Secretary-General in consultation with the international community to undertake preparations when appropriate for the convening of a pledging conference to assist in the reconstruction and development of Burundi following the achievement of a comprehensive political settlement;

8. Encourages the Secretary-General in consultation with all those concerned, including the neighbouring States, other Member States, the OAU and international humanitarian organizations, to establish mechanisms to ensure the safe and timely delivery of humanitarian relief throughout Burundi;

9. Acknowledges the implication of the situation in Burundi for the region and underlines the importance of convening at an appropriate time a regional conference of the Great Lakes region, under the auspices of the United Nations and the OAU;

B

10. Decides to re-examine the matter on 31 October 1996, and requests that the Secretary-General report to the Council by that time on the situation in Burundi, including on the status of the negotiations referred to in paragraph 6 above;

11. Decides also, in the event that the Secretary-General reports that the negotiations referred to in paragraph 6 above have not been initiated, to consider the imposition of measures under the Charter of the United Nations to further compliance with the demand set out in paragraph 6 above; these may include, among others, a ban on the sale or supply of arms and related materiel of all types to the regime in Burundi and to all factions inside or outside Burundi, and measures targeted against the leaders of the regime and all factions who continue to encourage violence and obstruct a peaceful resolution of the political crisis in Burundi;

12. Reiterates the importance it attaches to the contingency planning called for in paragraph 13 of resolution 1049(1996) of 5 March 1996, and encourages the Secretary-General and Member States to continue to facilitate contingency planning for an international presence and other initiatives to support and help consolidate a cessation of hostilities, as well as to make a rapid humanitarian response in the event of widespread violence or a serious deterioration in the humanitarian situation in Burundi;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

30 August 1996 Meeting 3695 Adopted unanimously

11-nation draft (S/1996/708).

Sponsors: Botswana, Chile, Egypt, Germany, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Indonesia, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States.

Meeting numbers. SC 3692, 3695.

Contingency planning

The Security Council, in a Presidential statement of 15 May [S/PRST/1996/24], had requested the Secretary-General and Member States concerned to continue to facilitate contingency planning for a rapid response in the event of widespread violence or a serious deterioration in the humanitarian situation in Burundi. The Secretary-General, in a 15 August report on the Burundi situation [S/1996/660], said that the conditions necessary for the successful deployment of a peacekeeping operation did not appear to exist at that time. After querying nearly 50 Member States regarding participation in a multinational force for humanitarian intervention, only three countries and the United Republic of Tanzania had offered troops, and seven others expressed willingness to offer logistical support, transportation, medical units or financial assistance.

In a 29 October report [S/1996/887 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General said that he remained convinced that the worst might yet occur in Burundi. He continued to encourage countries with military and logistical capacity to stand ready to take the necessary measures to prevent a disaster similar to the 1994 genocide in Rwanda [YUN 1994, pp. 281-317]. In the circumstances, he supported strengthening the capacity of the African countries to contribute to peacekeeping activities. Although there was not sufficient political will for resolute preventive action at that time, that did not rule out the possibility of a decision by the international community to act if a large-scale ethnic conflict broke out. He believed contingency planning should go on.

Situation after coup

Burundi, in a letter [S/1996/719] to the Security Council President of 5 September, outlined the programme of the new regime installed on 25 July. The programme, which would be undertaken during a transitional period of three years, had four main objectives: restoration of the Burundian State; dialogue with the armed factions; organization of a national debate; and establishment of a National Assembly composed of all its former members as well as other members. The programme also envisaged the return of political parties to the national arena; they would be required to abide by national law and by the code of conduct for political parties. Burundi said that the programme showed its determination to uphold the priorities outlined in Security Council resolution 1072(1996) of 30 August. Among other things, the new regime said it intended to collaborate with the United Nations, OAU, countries of the subregion and the designated mediator, Mr. Nyerere. It confirmed its readiness to initiate a dialogue with all armed factions, on condition that they ceased killing innocent people and renounced genocide. The regime also said that those involved in the 1993 coup d'etat and subsequent ethnic massacres would be tried in court, that a national debate bringing together Burundians of all ethnic groups and political tendencies would take place, culminating in a new constitution and new institutions, and that the current National Assembly would resume in an enlarged form. By a further letter [S/1996/750] of 13 September, Burundi announced the re-establishment the day before of the National Assembly within the framework of the transitional institutional system and the resumption of activities by political parties.

Despite the apparent lull following the July coup, violence quickly reasserted itself, the Secretary-General stated in his report of 29 October [S/1996/887]. It was estimated that there had been over 10,000 casualties of the civil war since the coup d'etat. However, at the Arusha regional summit on 12 October, the regional heads of State received a solemn pledge from the two main leaders who were parties to the conflict, Major Buyoya and Mr. Nyangoma, to start negotiations immediately and without conditions. Taking note of those pledges, the summit adopted a timetable for launching negotiations by 12 November. Thus, at the end of October, Burundi was again at a crossroads, the Secretary-General reported, and the following few weeks could be crucial. The key question was whether the parties to the conflict would succeed in embarking on a serious process of negotiation.

The Security Council's request to prepare for a pledging conference for the reconstruction of Burundi following a political settlement would have to wait in view of the absence of a settlement, he said.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General remarked on the deteriorating situation in eastern Zaire, with recent incidents close to the Burundi border and possible consequences for the region as a whole. He noted charges and countercharges between Burundi, Rwanda and Zaire, which went so far as to implicate UNHCR and certain NGOs. In addition, movements of Hutu refugees were becoming difficult to control. Those conditions could lead to a regionalization of the conflict that would engulf the entire Great Lakes region, he warned, adding that it was more necessary than ever to convene a regional conference on peace, security and development of the Great Lakes region, which had been under discussion for several years.

The Secretary-General, in his 29 October report [S/1996/887 & Corr.1], stated that the new regime had taken a number of measures to comply with the requirements of the international community, including the removal from their posts of the Chiefs of the General Staff of the Army and the Gendarmerie. The National Assembly, while restored under President Buyoya, had not retained all its powers and responsibilities, and the freedom of action of political parties was severely restricted. As for the possibility of negotiations involving the parties to the dispute, contradictory statements suggested that there was no genuine determination to begin serious political discussions soon and each side was seeking to consolidate its position. The Burundi armed forces, which comprised primarily one ethnic group, had recruited an estimated 5,000 to 7,000 additional men, doubling in size, while CNDD was also bolstering its military capability.

The Secretary-General, on 2 November [S/1996/887/Add.1], warned that the recent ethnic conflict in eastern Zaire had considerably changed the political situation in the Great Lakes region. The resulting crisis had focused international attention on eastern Zaire. He urged, however, that that not permit the serious situation in neighbouring Burundi, where civil war and ethnic conflict continued, to become a secondary issue.

Humanitarian situation

The Secretary-General, in a 15 August report [S/1996/660] to the Security Council, said that the climate of extreme insecurity had severely hampered humanitarian relief work. Furthermore, the politicization of the inter-ethnic conflict had made it more difficult for humanitarian organizations to be perceived by the population as neutral, as their assistance was judged to favour one side or the other. Exacerbating the situation was the closure of refugee camps in the north of the country, forcing thousands of Rwandans to return to their country and others to flee. After the July coup, President Buyoya stopped the refolement and declared that Burundi would respect international law, including the protection of refugees on its soil. Since then, over 3,000 Rwandan refugees out of 65,000 remaining in Burundi had been repatriated voluntarily to Rwanda under UNHCR auspices.

Sanctions had complicated the task of humanitarian aid activities, said the Secretary-General on 29 October.

In an 18 November letter [A/51/685-S/1996/964] to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President, Burundi renewed its invitation to all Burundian refugees, especially those who had sought asylum in eastern Zaire, to return to their homeland in complete safety. It said that it had already repatriated more than 33,000 refugees.

The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights had deployed a team of human rights observers in Burundi on 19 April. The team, which had to limit its activities somewhat owing to the political and security disturbances, received allegations of massacres, killings, infringements of personal freedom and security, forced disappearances and arbitrary detentions in the interior of Burundi. The alleged violations, which were difficult to verify, were largely attributable to the armed forces, while a number were attributable to the rebels.

The Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, during his mission to Burundi from 1 to 17 July, observed numerous defects in the system of administration of justice and noted that justice was dispensed very rapidly without the defendants' having been properly informed of the charges (see PART TWO, Chapter III). The Secretary-General's Special Representative in Burundi and the High Commissioner for Human Rights had launched, at the request of the Burundi authorities, an international judicial assistance project to assist both defendants and civil parties. Training was being organized for magistrates, judicial police, clerks and registrars.

Commission of Inquiry

By a 3 January letter [S/1996/8], the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council President a preliminary report on the work of the Commission of Inquiry in Burundi. The Commission was established under Council resolution 1012(1995)[YUN 1995,p.346] to investigate the assassination of the President of Burundi in 1993 and the massacres which followed. The Commission was requested to recommend legal, political or administrative measures with regard to bringing to justice persons responsible for those acts, to prevent any repetition of such acts and to eradicate impunity and promote national reconciliation in Burundi.

The Commission had first arrived in Bujumbura on 29 October 1995 and held meetings with representatives of political parties, NGOs and the religious community, met with diplomatic representatives and gathered relevant documents. It initiated a study of the judicial system. The Commission said its work was hampered by the length of time that had elapsed since the events under investigation; the intensifying ethnic polarization in the country, which made it difficult to obtain objective testimony; the deterioration of the security situation and lack of protection for the Commission; and the inadequacy of resources provided to it.

The Security Council on 12 January 1996 [S/1996/27] welcomed an OAU agreement to allow its observers in Burundi to accompany Commission officers in their work in the light of the security situation.

The Commission submitted its final report to the Secretary-General, who transmitted it to the Council on 25 July 1996 [S/1996/682]. The Commission, after a thorough investigation, concluded that it had sufficient evidence to establish that acts of genocide against the Tutsi minority took place in Burundi on 21 October 1993, the day of the death of President Melchior Ndadaye, and the days following, at the instigation and with the participation of certain Hutu members of the Front pour la démocratie au Burundi (FRODEBU); they were functionaries and leaders up to commune level. The Commission decided the evidence was insufficient to determine whether or not the acts of genocide were planned or ordered by leaders at a higher level. In its view, there was sufficient circumstantial evidence to conclude that some highly placed FRODEBU members had planned a response to the eventuality of a coup by the Army, including blocking roads, arming Hutus and taking male Tutsi adults and youths as hostages, and that that plan had been communicated to certain local FRODEBU members in leadership positions. The Commission considered that the evidence showed that indiscriminate killing of Hutu men, women and children was carried out by members of the Burundian Army and Gendarmerie, and by Tutsi civilians. Although it had no evidence of a central plan, no effort was made by the military to halt, prevent, investigate or punish such acts. With the evidence it had at hand, the Commission was not in a position to name the persons that should be brought to justice. Furthermore, it stated that it was not able to make recommendations as to how to effect national reconciliation in Burundi and re-establish peace and security, particularly in the face of such problems as resettling the tens of thousands of internally displaced Tutsis and exiled Hutus, restraining population growth, creating opportunities for work outside of agriculture and increasing agricultural yields, all of which required considerable outside assistance.

Impunity had been an important factor in the aggravation of the ongoing crisis. It could be reversed only through a fair and effective administration of justice. However, the Commission could find no way in which such administration of justice could be established when the situation in the country had not been brought under control.

The Commission reported that the Burundi judiciary and police were overwhelmingly unbalanced in favour of Tutsis, as was the entire legal profession, and that Burundian criminal law needed to be reformed; however, the main problem was the overriding ethnic confrontation and total insecurity throughout the country. No reforms could have any effect as long as every citizen faced the danger of death at the hands of members of either ethnic group. The Commission believed that the most important reform would be to establish a reasonable ethnic balance at all levels of the judiciary, which should be independent, impartial and non-political. That would require considerable international assistance in the form of training and financial support during a transitional period. The practice of indefinite detention without formal accusation or prosecution had to be abolished.

Having concluded that acts of genocide against the Tutsi minority were committed in Burundi in October 1993, the Commission believed that international jurisdiction should be asserted with respect to those acts, but that it was not possible to carry out an adequate international investigation under the conditions existing in Burundi. In the Commission's view, if it was decided to assert international jurisdiction regarding genocide in Burundi once order and ethnic harmony were established, the investigation should not be limited to acts committed in October 1993, but should be extended to determine whether other events also constituted acts of genocide and, if so, to bring those responsible to justice. Particular attention should be given to the events in 1972 when, according to all reports, a systematic effort was made to exterminate all educated Hutus. No one was ever prosecuted for those acts. The Commission concluded that any international body that was given the responsibility of investigating genocide in Burundi must be given sufficient resources and powers to inspect records, to make witnesses appear before it, to ensure the safety of witnesses and to guarantee immunity or reduced sentences to those willing to cooperate.

Regarding the assassination of President Ndaye, the taking of hostages and the repression of civilians, all of which fell within the jurisdiction of Burundi, the Commission believed that there was no hope of fair and effective investigation or prosecution by the current Burundian judiciary. Such an investigation would require an independent body with all necessary powers, in conditions of reasonable order and security.

The Security Council President, in a 24 September letter [S/1996/780] to the Secretary-General, commented on the Commission's report and expressed grave concern at its conclusions. Stressing the importance they attached to bringing to justice those responsible for the serious crimes that had occurred in and after October 1993, the Council members noted that the Commission was not in a position to identify those persons. They expressed the view that, once conditions in Burundi permitted, the recommendations of the Commission should be given further consideration and that the problem of impunity should be addressed in the context of a negotiated political settlement, as called for in Council resolution 1072(1996).

Burundi also commented on the Commission's report, in a 23 October letter [S/1996/910] to the Secretary-General, proposing that the Security Council set up an international criminal tribunal to punish the crimes of genocide perpetrated in Burundi. It requested any proof and evidence that the Commission had obtained concerning the assassination of President Ndaye, which the Commission said was planned beforehand, and concerning acts of genocide against the Tutsi minority, as well as assistance from the United Nations to strengthen the Ministry of Justice.

Angola

During 1996, the implementation of the 1994 Lusaka Protocol [YUN 1994, p. 348], for which the third United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III) had been established, proceeded slowly. Signed by the Government of Angola and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA), the Protocol aimed to achieve reconciliation between the two parties and to re-establish peace and stability in the country. It dealt with, among other things, the withdrawal, quartering and demilitarization of all UNITA forces; disarming of civilians; integration of forces into a national military; police functions; the electoral process; and national reconciliation. At the beginning of 1996, it appeared that the peace process had all but stalled; by year's end, however, the situation appeared somewhat more optimistic.

During the year, the Joint Commission, the principal body charged with overseeing the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, held regular and extraordinary sessions to review various aspects of the peace process. The Joint Commission comprised the two parties and three observer countries (Portugal, the Russian Federation and the United States). The Secretary-General's Special Representative, Alioune Blondin Beye (Mali), in cooperation with the representatives of the three observer States, continued to interact closely with both the Government and UNITA.

The peacekeeping forces of UNAVEM III, established under Security Council resolution 976 (1995) in February 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 321], remained in Angola throughout 1996 at a strength of approximately 7,000 military personnel. The Secretary-General reported to the Security Council eight times during the year, describing political, military, human rights, humanitarian, and economic and social aspects of the country's situation, as well as the financial requirements of the Mission. On five occasions in 1996, the Council took action on Angola, renewing UNAVEM III's mandate, calling on the parties to implement the Lusaka Protocol and expressing concern over the delays and lack of progress towards lasting peace.

In December, the Secretary-General recommended that UNAVEM III be almost completely withdrawn by August 1997. Such a move would substantially reduce the Mission, leaving in place a rapid reaction force comprising six company-sized infantry groups to help maintain much-needed confidence between the Angolan parties and support other UN components so that they could function effectively. UNAVEM III, which in 1996 was the largest active UN peacekeeping mission, had been preceded by two UN missions in Angola—UNAVEM I, established in December 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 160] to verify the withdrawal of Cuban troops from the country, and UNAVEM II, established in May 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 127] to verify a ceasefire and maintain a presence until after the election period. The results of the elections of September 1992 were disputed and fighting ensued, lasting until November 1994 when the two sides reached agreement on the terms of the Lusaka Protocol.

Implementation of Lusaka Protocol and UNAVEM III

Report of Secretary-General (January). In a 31 January report [S/1996/75] to the Security Council, the Secretary-General covered developments in Angola since December 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 334]. He observed that the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol was woefully behind schedule, although the United Nations had spared no effort to create the environment necessary for its implementation. As agreed in the 1995 status-of-forces agreement [YUN 1995, p. 327], UNAVEM III had made arrangements for the establishment of an independent UN radio station in Angola. The Government had not granted the requisite facilities, although it had granted some time on national radio and television for UNAVEM information programmes.

The military situation during the latter part of the reporting period had remained relatively quiet after an offensive in early December by government troops around the oil-producing region of Soyo, followed by their withdrawal from those positions by the end of the month. Subsequently, UNITA escalated hostility towards UNAVEM III, preventing UN teams from leaving their camp on two occasions and threatening to shoot down UNAVEM III aircraft if they flew without prior clearance from UNITA. During the second half of January, however, the Government and UNITA agreed to establish a "conflict prevention group" which included high-ranking military representatives of the two parties. The group was expected to maintain direct communications with the respective military authorities and field commanders to prevent or rapidly de-escalate ceasefire violations.

In mid-January, progress was made in the talks on military integration, with UNITA agreeing to provide 26,300 personnel to the national forces, in addition to the 2,500 which had been integrated into the Angolan Armed Forces (FAA) in 1992. However, crucial details regarding the structure of the joint armed forces, the allocation of posts and, in particular, the creation of a fourth branch of FAA to perform tasks associated with national reconstruction still needed to be finalized.

More than a year after the signing of the Lusaka Protocol, the Secretary-General said, the quartering of UNITA troops—a central element of the peace process—had not significantly advanced. Shortly after cantonment began in November 1995, it ground to a halt and was later declared officially suspended. Four quartering areas, with a capacity for 20,000 soldiers, had been ready for some time. On 19 January, the UNITA President, Jonas M. Savimbi, pledged that 16,500 troops of the declared 62,500 UNITA military personnel would report to quartering areas by 8 February, but as of 25 January only 693 UNITA troops had registered. There were reports that some soldiers were under age, and that they were without uniforms and carrying old weapons.

As a result of recent understandings, the Government started the quartering of the rapid reaction police on 10 January, and by 25 January 1,762 personnel were quartered. Other matters to be resolved were for the two parties to agree on a comprehensive security plan for UNITA leaders and the disarmament of the civilian population throughout the country.

As at 25 January, UNAVEM III strength stood at 6,384 military personnel, deployed at 54 sites, and the civilian police observer component (CIVPOL) comprised 225 officers at 33 sites. CIVPOL was monitoring the neutrality of the Angolan National Police, security arrangements for UNITA leaders in Luanda, quartering of the rapid reaction police, free circulation of people and goods, and the general law and order situation in the country. It also assisted the Human Rights Unit of UNAVEM III.

Since the beginning of December 1995, security for humanitarian assistance activities had deteriorated in many parts of the country, especially those controlled by UNITA, resulting in cancellation of relief flights and road convoys, as well as confiscation of relief goods, vehicles and radios. Nevertheless, deliveries of food, seeds and medical supplies had taken place.

The Secretary-General said that promising steps had been taken by the Government of Angola. He urged UNITA to respond positively, first of all by a large-scale and verifiable movement of its troops to quartering areas, and to release or provide information on all prisoners. The Angolan Government and UNITA should conclude talks on military matters as a matter of urgency, with workable and fair agreements concerning the incorporation of UNITA into FAA and the gradual demobilization of its other forces. Joint demining and opening of roads, as well as the free circulation of people throughout the country, were imperative to foster national reconciliation.

The Secretary-General stated that the humanitarian situation in the country had improved somewhat during 1995 but large segments of the population still required massive emergency assistance.

The Secretary-General recommended that the mandate of UNAVEM III be extended until 8 August 1996.

Communications (January). In an 11 January letter [S/1996/28], Angola apprised the Secretary-General of its concern over the lack of action by UNITA in implementing the Lusaka Protocol. Angola said it had taken specific steps to ensure that the peace process remained on track, including withdrawal of FAA from the Soyo area and from demobilization areas; termination of contracts with expatriate personnel; preparation of a plan for quartering the rapid intervention police; release of all remaining opposition prisoners; renewal of its invitation to the President of UNITA to meet with Angolan President Jose Eduardo dos Santos in January; and extension of an invitation to UNITA to identify teams to work on revising the Constitution, with the goal of including the position of Vice-President, an office not currently mentioned in the Constitution. Despite those steps, Angola said, the peace process remained stagnant. UNITA had not responded to its proposals for a meeting. Particularly disappointing was UNITA's failure to provide UNAVEM with information on military matters as called for in the Lusaka Protocol. Angola also claimed that UNITA had raised the level of rhetoric in recent broadcasts, saying that the Government was preparing a massive military campaign. Angola urged the Secretary-General's Special Representative to impress upon UNITA the importance of a meeting with President dos Santos.

In identical letters of 15 January to the Presidents of Angola [S/1996/31] and UNITA [S/1996/32], the President of the Security Council, on behalf of the Council members, noted the parties' recent agreement on a revised timetable for the peace process, as well as movement towards agreement on the modalities of UNITA participation in an integrated FAA. However, the Council regretted that questions such as appointment of UNITA officers and specific issues for integration had not been acted on. Further, the Council expressed serious concern about reports of continued violations of the ceasefire, at the slow progress on practical implementation of obligations assumed under the Lusaka Protocol, and at the failure to stick to previous timetables. It appreciated recent steps by the Government of Angola and expected that UNITA would take the necessary steps in response, by resuming the large-scale and verifiable process of quartering its troops in line with the revised timetable, releasing all prisoners and extending its cooperation to UNAVEM III. The Council urged both parties to refrain from military activities, to speed up the process of demining, to stop disseminating hostile propaganda and to implement the disengagement plan prepared by UNAVEM III. The two leaders were encouraged to meet without conditions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's report at meetings held on 6 and 8 February, the Security Council adopted resolution 1045(1996).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 31 January 1996,

Reaffirming its commitment to preserve the unity and territorial integrity of Angola,

Reiterating the importance it attaches to the full implementation by the Government of Angola and the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) of the Acordos de Paz, the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions,

Deeply concerned at delays in the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol and the lack of steady progress towards lasting peace,

Concerned also at the deteriorating humanitarian situation in many parts of Angola and, in particular, at the lack of security guarantees and freedom of movement for the personnel of humanitarian organizations,

Emphasizing the importance of reconstruction and rehabilitation of the Angolan national economy and its vital contribution to durable peace,

Recalling its resolution 976(1995) of 8 February 1995 which stated, inter alia, the expectation that UNAVEM III would complete its mission by February 1997,

Noting that one half of the duration of UNAVEM III's mission, as envisaged in Council resolution 976(1995), has already elapsed, while implementation of the Lusaka Protocol is seriously behind schedule,

Noting also the agreement between the Government of Angola and UNITA of 21 December 1995, and welcoming the efforts of the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the three observer States to the Angolan peace process to facilitate the establishment of a revised timetable for implementing the tasks in the agreement between the two parties at Bailundo of 9 January 1996,

Welcoming the efforts by Member States, the Organization of African Unity and the international community as a whole to promote peace and security in Angola,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General dated 31 January 1996;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of UNAVEM III until 8 May 1996;

3. Expresses deep concern at the numerous delays in the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, reminds the Government of Angola and UNITA of their obligations to consolidate the peace process and, in this regard, urges them to maintain an effective ceasefire, conclude their military talks on integration of the armed forces, undertake active engagement in the demining process and commence the integration of UNITA personnel into administrative and governmental institutions in furtherance of the objective of national reconciliation;

4. Welcomes the positive steps taken by the Government of Angola in implementing its commitments, in particular the cessation of offensive operations, the withdrawal of its troops from offensive positions in the vicinity of UNITA quartering areas, the release of all prisoners registered by the International Committee of the Red Cross, the beginning of the quartering of the rapid reaction police and the termination of contracts of expatriate personnel as agreed;

5. Expresses the expectation that the Government of Angola will continue its progress with the goal of fully implementing its obligations under the Lusaka Protocol, including quartering of the rapid reaction police, deployment to barracks of the Angolan Armed Forces, the repatriation of expatriate personnel as agreed and the drawing up of a programme for disarming the civilian population;

6. Expresses deep concern at the slow pace of quartering and disarming the UNITA troops, notes the public commitment by UNITA to quarter its troops in an expeditious and comprehensive fashion, and reiterates its conviction that the quartering of the UNITA forces, as the first step in its transformation to a legitimate political party, is a crucial component of the peace process;

7. Urges UNITA to proceed immediately with the orderly, large-scale and verifiable movement of its troops to the quartering areas at Vila Nova, Lunduimbali, Negage and Quibaxe, without further interruption, in strict adherence to the new timetable agreed by the parties on 9 January 1996, and in full cooperation with UNAVEM III;

8. Calls upon UNITA, following completion of this initial quartering, to proceed immediately with the orderly movement of all of its troops to the other quartering areas and to conclude all quartering within the time of this mandate renewal;

9. Also calls upon UNITA to extend full cooperation to UNAVEM III and the Joint Commission at all levels, including the exchange of military information as required by the Lusaka Protocol;

10. Further calls upon UNITA to release all remaining prisoners;

11. Calls upon the two parties, in particular UNITA, to ensure the freedom of movement of people and goods throughout the country;

12. Also calls upon the two parties, in particular UNITA, to cooperate fully with humanitarian organizations by granting them all the necessary security guarantees and freedom of movement to facilitate their work;

13. Reminds the Government of Angola and UNITA of their obligation to cease the dissemination of hostile propaganda;

14. Notes the importance attached to the dissemination of impartial information by radio UNAVEM, and calls upon the Government of Angola to provide all the facilities necessary for the independent functioning of that radio;

15. Encourages both the President of Angola and the President of UNITA to meet, as soon as possible and thereafter on a regular basis, to promote mutual confidence and achieve the full, fair and speedy implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, including its provisions on national reconciliation and other outstanding issues;

16. Commends the Joint Commission for the positive role it continues to play in support of the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol;

17. Commends also the efforts of the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the personnel of UNAVEM III to facilitate the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol;

18. Urges the international community to continue to provide the assistance necessary to facilitate the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the Angolan national economy, provided that the two parties meet their obligations under the Lusaka Protocol;

19. Reaffirms the obligation of all States to implement fully the provisions of paragraph 19 of Council resolution 864(1993);

20. Urges all States, in particular those neighbouring Angola, to facilitate the process of national reconciliation in Angola and to take steps in their territory to facilitate full implementation of the provisions of the Lusaka Protocol;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to report by 7 March, 4 April and 1 May 1996 on the progress made by the Government of Angola and UNITA in taking concrete steps towards meeting the goals and timetable agreed between them, and to keep the Council fully informed on developments in the situation on the ground, so that the Council may respond accordingly;

22. Expresses its readiness, in the light of recommendations by the Secretary-General and developments in Angola, to consider any further measures;

23. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1045(1996)

8 February 1996 Meeting 3629 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/86).

Meeting numbers. SC 3628, 3629.

On 1 March, the Presidents of Angola and UNITA met in Libreville under the auspices of President El Hadj Omar Bongo of Gabon. In a press communique transmitted to the Security Council [S/1996/175], they stated that they had decided to adopt measures to accelerate implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, in particular by concluding the process of forming FAA by June 1996, and by forming a Government of National Unity and Reconciliation between June and July 1996. To that effect, UNITA submitted a list of names of its officials.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In a report of 6 March [S/1996/171 & Corr.1] covering events in Angola since his 31 January report, the Secretary-General said that since the adoption of resolution 1045(1996), the Government of Angola and UNITA had taken some positive steps towards implementing the Lusaka Protocol. Of particular importance was the 1 March meeting in Libreville between President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi, their fourth such meeting. The Government should be commended for implementing several of its commitments, and UNITA's quartering of more than 16,000 troops was, despite its significant shortcomings, a step forward, the Secretary-General said. However, UNAVEM III's mandate was past its mid-point, and numerous outstanding tasks foreseen in the Lusaka Protocol remained to be fulfilled.

There had also been a decrease in the number of ceasefire violations, a further reduction in hostile propaganda, the release of additional prisoners, the disengagement of government forces from some forward positions, and continued quartering of the rapid reaction police. Several measures were behind schedule, particularly the crucial quartering of UNITA troops, and that had delayed other elements of the Lusaka Protocol, including the extension of State administration throughout the country.

At the Libreville meeting, Mr. Savimbi promised to complete the quartering of UNITA troops by June 1996. Both sides agreed to start the process of selecting UNITA troops for incorporation into FAA and to complete the formation of the unified armed forces, also by June. They further agreed to form, by June or July, the Government of National Unity and Reconciliation, in which Mr. Savimbi would be a Vice-President. At the meeting, Mr. Savimbi submitted to President dos Santos a list of officials proposed for the various posts reserved for UNITA in the Government. It was agreed that the mandate of the current National Assembly would be extended, and that Mr. dos Santos would soon declare an amnesty for offences resulting from the Angolan conflict. There had been no progress with regard to the establishment of an independent UN radio.

Despite progress made, the quartering of UNITA troops had begun to slow down. Instances of forced recruitment and the substandard quality and quantity of weapons, equipment and ammunition brought to the quartering areas had only raised doubts about the good faith of UNITA, the Secretary-General stated. UNITA could dispel those doubts only by completing the quartering in accordance with the new timetable. Equally important were a withdrawal of FAA to barracks and the completion of the quartering of the rapid reaction police. Rapid conclusion of the talks on all outstanding military matters was critical for the continuation of the peace process.

Communication (March). Angola, in a 25 March letter [S/1996/219] to the Security Council President, said that it did not have any mercenaries in its armed forces. However, UNITA had quartered only 17,000 of its 60,000 soldiers, and those troops had not brought all their heavy weapons with them. Angola requested UNITA to release all prisoners of war remaining in its custody, since the Government had already done so.

Report of Secretary-General (4 April). On 4 April, the Secretary-General [S/1996/248 & Add.1] reported an improvement in the political atmosphere since the 1 March meeting, with some progress achieved in implementing the revised timetable approved by the two parties.

Meetings had taken place in Luanda between government and UNITA delegations to the Joint Commission, and the Armed Conflict Prevention Group continued to operate regularly. Prisoners on both sides had been released. The key element required was complete and verifiable quartering of UNITA troops, followed by the formation of the new armed forces and the establishment of a Government of National Unity and Reconciliation. Since the last report, fewer than 2,000 more UNITA troops had registered in the quartering process, and 1,163 soldiers had subsequently deserted those areas. The United Nations, its agencies and other assistance organizations were providing supplies and services to quartering areas, including food, health facilities and civic education.

The Government had begun quartering the rapid reaction police in three locations during March, bringing to six the number of such quartering sites. By the end of the month, 3,386 personnel had been quartered of 3,504 declared to be present in the forward areas.

The total strength of the military and police personnel of the Mission grew to 7,071 in March.

Although scheduled to begin in March 1996, the programme for disarmament of the civilian population had been delayed. UNAVEM III continued to monitor the human rights situation and to investigate persistent violations.

Humanitarian activities proceeded normally during the reporting period, with the World Food Programme (WFP) providing more than 60 per cent of relief items by road, despite mines and security and logistic constraints. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Humanitarian Assistance Coordination Unit had formulated a contingency plan to start referral services in the expectation of imminent demobilization of disabled and under-age soldiers, and the World Bank had sent a mission to Angola in February to identify projects to address social aspects during a transition period.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

At a 24 April meeting, the President of the Security Council made the following statement [S/PRST/1996/19] on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 4 April 1996 on the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III) submitted pursuant to paragraph 21 of Security Council resolution 1045(1996) of 8 February 1996.

The Security Council notes that some progress has been achieved during the past two months in the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, although it has been limited and has not fulfilled the hopes generated by the meeting between President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi in Libreville on 1 March 1996. The Council stresses the importance it attaches to the full implementation of the Protocol. The Council reminds President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi of their commitments and urges them to take the necessary actions to move the peace process forward.

The Security Council notes that the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) has quartered more than 20,000 of its forces, but expresses concern over delays in the quartering of the UNITA troops and urges it to move expeditiously to achieve full quartering of its troops. The Council expresses concern about the quality of weapons surrendered by UNITA and urges it to fulfil its commitment to turn over all of its arms, ammunition and military equipment as the quartering process continues. The Council reiterates that the quartering process is a crucial component of the peace process and stresses the need for quartering to be credible and fully verifiable. The Council expresses its concern at the statements made by Mr. Savimbi on 13 and 27 March 1996. In this context, the Council urges all Angolan leaders to consider carefully the effect of public statements on the climate of confidence necessary to nurture the peace process. It also urges UNITA to release all remaining prisoners.

The Security Council recognizes with satisfaction the progress by the Government of Angola in the implementation of its commitments under the Lusaka Protocol and the current timetable and encourages the Government to continue this progress. The Council emphasizes the importance of completion of the calendar of actions for April, including, inter alia, the continuation of the pull-back of government forces from areas near the UNITA quartering sites, the return of the rapid reaction police to barracks, the resolution of the question of amnesty for UNITA officials, and the adoption of a plan to disarm the civilian population, as well as the quartering of the UNITA troops. The Council encourages the two parties to complete the integration of UNITA into the Angolan armed forces.

The Security Council also encourages the Government to grant UNAVEM III the requisite facilities for the establishment of an independent United Nations radio.

The Security Council stresses its concern at the extensive presence of landmines throughout Angola and expresses support for the efforts of the United Nations, the Government and non-governmental organizations to address this problem. The Council urges the Government and UNITA to destroy their stockpiles of anti-personnel landmines. It encourages them to make a meaningful public gesture towards destruction of landmines, which could have a positive effect on public confidence and the free circulation of people and goods.

The Security Council notes with concern credible reports of continuing purchases and delivery of weapons to Angola and considers that such actions are contrary to paragraph 12 of its resolution 976(1995) of 8 February 1995 and undermine confidence in the peace process. The Council reaffirms the obligation of all States to implement fully the provisions of paragraph 19 of its resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993.

The Security Council emphasizes that the ultimate responsibility for restoring peace rests with the Angolans themselves. The Council reminds the parties that extension of the mandate of UNAVEM III will be based, to a large part, on progress by the two parties towards meeting the goals set by the Lusaka Protocol.

The Security Council condemns the incident on 3 April 1996 which resulted in the death of two UNAVEM III personnel, the wounding of a third and the death of a humanitarian assistance official and reiterates the importance it attaches to the safety and security of UNAVEM III and humanitarian assistance personnel. The Council notes the cooperation offered by the Angolan Government and UNITA with the investigation by UNAVEM III of this deplorable incident.

The Security Council reiterates its gratitude to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, the staff of UNAVEM III and the three observer countries, whose unflagging service to the cause of peace has been outstanding. The Council will continue to monitor the situation in Angola closely and requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep it informed of progress in the Angolan peace process.

Report of Secretary-General (30 April). In a report covering the period 4 to 30 April [S/1996/328], the Secretary-General said that progress in implementing the Lusaka Protocol remained disappointingly slow. Overall achievements fell well short of what the Security Council had been led to expect. In particular, the quartering of UNITA troops had virtually stalled, with a total of 23,376 UNITA troops of the declared 62,500 having been registered as of 25 April. The repeated failure of UNITA to honour its commitments had reinforced the doubts about its good faith, and further procrastination could not be justified; if continued, it could bring about the collapse of the whole peace process with consequent interruption of international aid for Angola.

Another source of concern was the delay in incorporating UNITA personnel into the joint armed forces, negotiations on which were continuing at a sluggish pace. Progress was also needed in forming the Government of National Unity and Reconciliation, which was supposed to take place by mid-July.

Because of the unsatisfactory state of affairs, the Secretary-General recommended that the mandate of UNAVEM III be extended for a period of two months only, until 8 July 1996.

Meanwhile, UN agencies and other humanitarian organizations continued their efforts in Angola in areas such as road rehabilitation, demining, assistance to displaced people, medical care and food aid.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 8 May, the Security Council adopted resolution 1055(1996).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 30 April 1996,

Reaffirming its commitment to preserve the unity and territorial integrity of Angola,

Reiterating the importance it attaches to the full and timely implementation by the Government of Angola and União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) of the Acordos de Paz, the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions,

Recognizing that although some progress has been made towards consolidating the peace process, the overall pace has been disappointingly slow,

Noting with concern the repeated delays in the implementation of successive timetables agreed to by the two parties, in particular the quartering of the UNITA troops and the completion of talks on military issues regarding the integration of the armed forces,

Taking note that five months have elapsed since the first UNITA troops arrived in quartering areas, and expressing concern that prolonging the stay of troops in quartering areas puts strains on United Nations resources and on discipline within the UNITA ranks,

Noting the agreement reached between the President of Angola and the President of UNITA in Libreville on 1 March 1996 on the formation of the unified armed forces by June 1996 as well as the establishment of the Government of National Unity and Reconciliation between June and July 1996,

Recalling its resolution 976(1995) of 8 February 1995 which stated, inter alia, the expectation that the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III) would complete its mission by February 1997,

Emphasizing the need for adequate security for all United Nations and other international personnel, and awaiting the results of the investigation of the deaths on 3 April 1996 of two UNAVEM III military observers and a humanitarian assistance official,

Underlining the need for respect for human rights and urging the Angolan parties to give greater attention to preventing and investigating incidents of human rights abuse,

Expressing concern at the extensive presence of landmines throughout Angola, and emphasizing the need for the political will to speed up demining efforts to enable the free circulation of people and goods and to restore public confidence,

Stressing the importance of the demilitarization of Angolan society, including the disarmament of the civilian population and the demobilization and social reintegration of ex-combatants,

Reiterating the importance of reconstruction and rehabilitation of the Angolan national economy and its vital contribution to a durable peace,

Welcoming the efforts by Member States, in particular the three observer States to the Angolan peace process, the Organization of African Unity and the international community as a whole to promote peace and security in Angola,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General dated 30 April 1996;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of UNAVEM III until 11 July 1996;

3. Expresses profound regret at the overall slow pace of implementation of the peace process, which is far behind schedule;

4. Notes with deep concern the failure of UNITA to complete the quartering of all its troops by 8 May 1996 in accordance with Council resolution 1045(1996) of 8 February 1996;

5. Reiterates that quartering and disarming of the UNITA troops are crucial components of the peace process that are fundamental to its success, and stresses that further procrastination cannot be justified and, if continued, could bring about the collapse of the whole peace process;

6. Notes the recent progress in the quartering of the UNITA troops and calls upon it to fulfil by June 1996 its obligation to complete the credible, uninterrupted and fully verifiable quartering of its troops and to turn over to UNAVEM III all arms, ammunition and military equipment;

7. Calls upon UNITA to release unconditionally and without further delay all remaining prisoners in accordance with its obligations under the Lusaka Protocol;

8. Underlines the importance of completion of the talks on military issues regarding the integration of the UNITA troops into the Angolan Armed Forces and the formation of a joint military command, and urges the two parties to resolve the remaining issues by 15 May 1996, as agreed in the Joint Commission calendar of actions for May;

9. Welcomes the proclamation by the National Assembly of Angola of amnesty arrangements, as agreed in Libreville, for offences resulting from the Angolan conflict, in order to facilitate the formation of a joint military command;

10. Urges the Government of Angola and UNITA to abide strictly by their obligations under the Lusaka Protocol as well as the commitments entered into in Libreville, Gabon, on 1 March 1996, including the selection of the UNITA troops for incorporation into the Angolan Armed Forces and the completion of the formation of the unified armed forces by June 1996;

11. Urges also the Government of Angola and UNITA to take all necessary steps for the UNITA deputies to take their places in the National Assembly, for the beginning of the controlled movement of the UNITA troops out of quartering areas in accordance with the provisions of the Lusaka Protocol, for the incorporation of UNITA personnel into the State administration, the Angolan Armed Forces and the national police, for the orderly transition of demobilized troops to civilian life, for moving constitutional issues forward in a spirit of national reconciliation, and for the formation of the Government of National Unity and Reconciliation by July 1996;

12. Encourages the President of Angola and the President of UNITA to meet at the earliest opportunity within Angola to resolve all remaining issues;

13. Welcomes the progress made by the Government of Angola in quartering the rapid reaction police;

14. Urges the Government of Angola to continue to pull back its forces from areas near UNITA quartering sites and to complete the return of the rapid reaction police to barracks under UNAVEM III monitoring in accordance with the provisions of the Lusaka Protocol;

15. Notes the intention of the Joint Commission to study the plan for the disarmament of the civilian population and urges the parties to begin its implementation without delay;

16. Reminds the Government of Angola and UNITA of their obligation to cease the dissemination of hostile propaganda;

17. Calls upon the Government of Angola to provide the requisite facilities for the establishment of an independent United Nations radio;

18. Also calls upon the Government of Angola and UNITA to signal their commitment to peace by destroying their stockpiles of landmines and to begin this process through joint public action;

19. Reaffirms the obligation of all States to implement fully the provisions of paragraph 19 of resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993, and reiterates that continuing acquisition of weapons would be contrary to paragraph 12 of resolution 976(1995) of 8 February 1995 and undermine confidence in the peace process;

20. Notes with concern reports that UNITA has impeded, on occasion, the work of UNAVEM III, and reminds the parties, in particular UNITA, to extend full cooperation to UNAVEM III and the Joint Commission at all levels;

21. Demands that all parties and others concerned in Angola take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of United Nations and international personnel and premises and guarantee the safety and freedom of movement of humanitarian supplies throughout the country;

22. Commends the Joint Commission and the Armed Conflict Prevention Group for the positive role they continue to play in support of the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol;

23. Commends also the efforts of the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the personnel of UNAVEM III to facilitate the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol;

24. Urges Member States to provide the assistance necessary to facilitate the demobilization and social reintegration of ex-combatants;

25. Also urges the international community to continue to provide the assistance necessary to facilitate the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the Angolan national economy, provided that the two parties meet their obligations under the Lusaka Protocol;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to report by 1 July 1996 on the progress made towards meeting the goals and timetable agreed between the two parties, and to keep the Council fully informed on a regular basis on developments in the situation on the ground, in particular by providing a comprehensive briefing by 17 May 1996 on whether the two parties have fulfilled the tasks they have specified in the Joint Commission calendar of actions for May to be carried out by 15 May 1996;

27. Declares that it will place special emphasis, during its future discussion of the mandate of UNAVEM III, on the progress demonstrated by the parties;

28. Reiterates its readiness, in the light of recommendations by the Secretary-General and the state of affairs in Angola, to consider any further measures;

29. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1055(1996)

8 May 1996

Meeting 3662

Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/336).

Communications (May). By a letter of 8 May [S/1996/340], Angola informed the Security Council that the Government had promulgated a law granting amnesty for all crimes against the internal security of the State and related crimes committed by citizens in the framework of the armed conflict, beginning on 31 May 1991.

On 22 May, the President of the Security Council wrote to the Presidents of Angola and UNITA on behalf of the Council members, expressing concern at the slow pace of the peace process. He told Angola [S/1996/378] that Council members were also concerned that the military talks on integrating UNITA troops into FAA were not concluded on 15 May in accordance with the timetable agreed earlier that month, and that the steps for complete integration might not be sufficient to achieve that goal by June 1996.

He told UNITA [S/1996/379] that, since about half of the declared number of UNITA troops were yet to be quartered nine months before the expected completion of the UNAVEM III mission, it expected the quartering to resume and continue until completed by June 1996.

Report of Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General, reporting on 27 June [S/1996/503], said that the pace of implementation of the Lusaka Protocol had improved somewhat. Positive developments included the adoption of the framework agreement on military matters; the promulgation of the Amnesty Law on 8 May; the start of the process of incorporating UNITA military personnel into FAA; the quartering of the rapid reaction police; and the second phase of the withdrawal of FAA from forward positions. In addition, as called for in the Lusaka Protocol, UNITA had submitted proposals to change the status of its radio station Vorgan.

Other aspects of the Lusaka Protocol, such as the disarmament of the civilian population and the extension of State administration throughout the country, had not yet been implemented. Political measures towards the formation of the Government of National Unity and Reconciliation had not advanced. In the Secretary-General's view, if the peace process was to succeed, the parties, especially UNITA, would have to show greater readiness to implement the commitments they had entered into.

The demobilization and socio-economic reintegration of former combatants was another essential precondition for lasting peace, but so far the donor community had been cautious in committing resources to that process. Of the $42 million required for the first year of demobilization, only $10 million had been received.

The quartering of UNITA troops had continued at an uneven pace in April and May. On 14 May, Mr. Savimbi promised to quarter 50,000 troops (of the declared 62,500) by 15 June; that level was achieved on 17 June. But in the second half of June, the pace of quartering decreased significantly. As at 25 June, 51,597 UNITA troops had been registered, and only 26,150 personal weapons and 3,368 crew-served weapons had been handed over. No heavy weapons had been brought in. The presence of more than 55,000 family members and other dependants in satellite camps around the quartering areas had added to the daunting tasks facing UN agencies, which continued to provide food aid, medical treatment, civic education and sanitation training.

The first two groups of UNITA officers had been incorporated into FAA and additional integration was scheduled for mid-July. Those not selected for service with FAA or the national police would be demobilized, a process that would require assistance from the international community.

UNAVEM III and other organizations continued active mine clearance, having cleared a total of 7,216 kilometres of roads and repaired and opened 24 bridges. The UN demining school in Viana, Angola, had trained a total of 188 personnel. UN police observers continued to monitor Angolan police activities, including the barracking of the rapid reaction police. On 11 June, the Government concluded the quartering of its rapid reaction police, with a total of 5,222 of the declared strength of 5,385 having been quartered.

On 8 May, the Joint Commission adopted UNAVEM's plan of action on human rights. The Government and UNITA agreed to cooperate in UNAVEM human rights investigations.

The Secretary-General recommended that the mandate of UNAVEM III be extended for three months, until 11 October. Contingency plans had been drawn up for the phased downsizing of the Mission's military component as soon as the quartering process had been concluded and the incorporation of UNITA troops into FAA and the formation of the unified armed forces had reached an advanced stage.

The general humanitarian situation in Angola was improving gradually, but more food aid would be necessary. The Angolan economy remained in deep crisis, with the inflation rate rising to 3,780 per cent in 1995 while real wages were falling and civil servants were not paid on time. Unemployment was in the range of 40 to 55 per cent.

Communications (June-August). President dos Santos of Angola expressed doubts about UNITA's commitment to the peace process in a letter of 17 June to the Secretary-General [S/1996/494]. While UNITA had bowed to pressure to quarter some of its troops, the task would not be concluded within the June deadline established by the Security Council in resolution 1055(1996), he said. The international community needed to exert pressure on UNITA in order for it to fulfil its commitment. He requested the Secretary-General to send a mission to Angola by the end of June to evaluate the Angolan peace process and to advise UNITA against taking any actions that might delay the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol.

On 11 July and 16 August, Angola, in letters to the President of the Security Council [S/1996/553, 672], reiterated concern about UNITA's intentions, stating that it had not vacated areas it was occupying and had not completed quartering of its true military forces, nor had it laid down its quality weapons and materiel. It had failed to induct its general officers into FAA, had hampered the transit of goods and persons, and had not cooperated with the Government in submitting opinions on the constitutional configuration of political arrangements. The Council should urge UNITA to fulfil its commitments so that the Protocol could be implemented by 15 September and the new Government could be established.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 11 July, the Security Council adopted resolution 1064(1996).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 27 June 1996,

Reaffirming its commitment to preserve the unity and territorial integrity of Angola,

Reiterating the importance it attaches to full and timely implementation by the Government of Angola and the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) of the Acordos de Paz, the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions,

Noting with approval the recent progress made towards consolidating the peace process, but reiterating that the overall pace has been slow,

Reminding the parties that if the peace process is to succeed they must show greater readiness to implement in good time their commitments, and to act in the spirit of flexibility and compromise,

Welcoming the successful conclusion of military talks between the two parties which paves the way for the formation of the unified armed forces,

Noting the agreement reached between the President of Angola and the leader of UNITA on the establishment of the Government of National Unity and Reconciliation,

Emphasizing the necessity for adequate security for all United Nations and other international personnel,

Underlining the need for respect for human rights, and urging the Angolan parties to give greater attention to preventing and investigating incidents of human rights abuse,

Noting with approval the progress made towards free circulation of people and goods, and emphasizing the importance of continuation of demining efforts to make that free circulation possible and to restore public confidence,

Stressing the importance of the demilitarization of Angolan society, including disarmament of the civilian population and the demobilization and social reintegration of ex-combatants,

Reiterating the importance of reconstruction and rehabilitation of the Angolan national economy and its vital contribution to a durable peace,

Welcoming the efforts by Member States, in particular the three observer States to the Angolan peace process, the Organization of African Unity and the international community as a whole to promote peace and security in Angola,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 27 June 1996;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III) until 11 October 1996;

3. Acknowledges the recent progress in consolidation of the peace process, but expresses regret that its implementation is still behind schedule;

4. Commends both parties for the adoption of the framework agreement on military matters, and for beginning the incorporation of UNITA military personnel into the Angolan Armed Forces, and expresses its satisfaction with the positive role of the Joint Commission and the armed conflict prevention group in support of the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol;

5. Welcomes the efforts of both parties in lifting checkpoints and opening major routes, emphasizes the importance of full completion of such efforts to ensure the free circulation of people and goods, stresses the importance of extending State administration throughout the country, and encourages the Government of Angola to use units of the newly integrated military forces to improve the security situation;

6. Welcomes also the progress made so far by the registration of over 52,000 UNITA troops in quartering areas, and calls upon UNITA to complete the credible and fully verifiable quartering of all its troops in accordance with the Joint Commission timetable, and hand over to UNAVEM III all arms, in particular heavy weapons, ammunition and military equipment, without which the quartering process will not be complete;

7. Reiterates that quartering and disarming of UNITA troops are crucial components of the peace process which are fundamental to its success;

8. Urges UNITA to make available for duty, as agreed by the Joint Commission, the generals and other high-ranking military officers designated to enter the Angolan Armed Forces, as well as the UNITA officials designated to take up posts in the State administration at the national, provincial and local levels;

9. Commends the Government of Angola for the promulgation of the Amnesty Law, for the quartering of the rapid reaction police and for the continuing withdrawal of the Angolan Armed Forces to barracks, and urges the Government to take the required corrective measures regarding the withdrawal movements, as agreed with UNAVEM, and to reach agreement with UNAVEM on remaining withdrawal operations;

10. Welcomes the launching of the programme for the disarmament of the civilian population by the Government of Angola, and stresses the need for its full and effective implementation;

11. Notes the closing of eight out of fifteen UNITA quartering areas for the induction of additional troops, requests the Government of Angola to prepare a programme for phased demobilization and social reintegration of ex-combatants, and calls upon both parties and the international community to extend their full cooperation and support to that end;

12. Urges the Government of Angola and UNITA to take all necessary steps for completion of the formation of the national armed forces, in particular the establishment of integrated headquarters, for the planned movement of UNITA troops out of quartering areas in accordance with the provisions of the Lusaka Protocol, and for the orderly transition of demobilized troops to civilian life;

13. Urges also the Government of Angola and UNITA to take all necessary steps for all elected members of Parliament to take their seats in the National Assembly, for moving constitutional issues forward in a spirit of national reconciliation, and for the formation of the Government of Unity and National Reconciliation and for the incorporation of UNITA personnel into the State administration, the Angolan Armed Forces and the national police;

14. Encourages the President of Angola and the leader of UNITA to meet at the earliest opportunity within Angola to resolve all remaining issues;

15. Notes the progress made in the area of demining, encourages both parties to intensify their demining efforts, and stresses the need for continued commitment to peace by destroying stockpiles of landmines;

16. Notes the reduction in the intensity and frequency of hostile propaganda, and reminds the parties of their obligation to cease the dissemination of all hostile propaganda with a view to promoting a spirit of tolerance, coexistence and mutual trust;

17. Urges the Government of Angola to provide the requisite facilities for the establishment of the independent United Nations radio, and also urges UNITA to finalize the transformation of its radio station Vorgan into a non-partisan station;

18. Reaffirms the obligation of all States to implement fully the provisions of paragraph 19 of resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993, and notes with concern that the failure by States, in particular those neighbouring Angola, to do so is inconsistent with the peace process and undermines economic recovery;

19. Reiterates that continuing acquisition of weapons would be contrary to paragraph 12 of resolution 976(1995) of 8 February 1995 and would undermine confidence in the peace process;

20. Condemns the use of mercenaries;

21. Demands that all parties and others concerned in Angola take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of United Nations and other international personnel and premises, and to guarantee the safety and freedom of movement of humanitarian supplies throughout the country, and reminds the parties to extend full cooperation to UNAVEM III at all levels;

22. Strongly urges Member States to provide promptly the financial resources necessary to facilitate the demobilization and social reintegration of ex-combatants through the United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for Angola;

23. Urges the international community to fulfil expeditiously its pledges to provide assistance to facilitate the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the Angolan national economy and the resettlement of displaced persons, stresses the importance of such assistance at this time in order to consolidate the gains in the peace process, and calls upon the two parties to meet their obligations under the Lusaka Protocol in order to create the necessary stability for economic recovery;

24. Commends the efforts of the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and the personnel of UNAVEM III, and expresses confidence in their abilities to continue to facilitate the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to report by 1 October 1996 on the progress made towards meeting the goals and timetable agreed between the two parties, and to keep the Council fully informed on a regular basis on developments in the situation on the ground, in particular by providing a comprehensive briefing by the third week of August on whether the two parties have fulfilled the task of forming the Government of National Unity and Reconciliation;

26. Declares that it will place special emphasis, during its future discussion of the mandate of UNAVEM III, on the progress demonstrated by the parties;

27. Reminds the Government of Angola and UNITA of its resolution 976(1995) of 8 February 1995, in which it stated, inter alia, the expectation that UNAVEM III would complete its mission by February 1997;

28. Reiterates its readiness, in the light of recommendations by the Secretary-General and the state of affairs in Angola, to consider any further measures;

29. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1064(1996)

11 July 1996 Meeting 3679 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/536).

Observer group report. The three observer States of the Angolan peace process (Portugal, Russian Federation, United States), reporting to the Security Council on 22 August [S/1996/681], said that the process of quartering and disarmament, including collection of heavy weapons, should be concluded shortly. They called on President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi to settle any outstanding issues, including that of Mr. Savimbi's status, at their upcoming meeting, and to begin the formation of a unified government within 14 days of that meeting. Conditions had to be created for the unobstructed delivery of humanitarian assistance throughout Angola, and the free movement of persons and goods throughout the country; the observers condemned the continuing obstruction of such work. The observer States encouraged Angola to intensify its efforts to collect weapons from the population so that conditions could exist for a civil society. In general, they noted that the peace process was at a crucial moment and called on the two parties to work towards the terms of the Lusaka Protocol.

Communication (September). Angola reiterated its complaint about UNITA's political will in a message of 5 September [S/1996/822] addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council. Mr. Savimbi had publicly rejected the position of Vice-President of the Republic, further increasing mistrust and doubts about the real intentions of UNITA. Although Angola remained willing to solve the problems of reconciliation, UNITA refused to cooperate. The Security Council should withdraw support for UNITA, freeze UNITA bank accounts, cut communication with UNITA, and prohibit travel and other documents for UNITA members.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In a 4 October report [S/1996/827], the Secretary-General said that the lack of significant progress in the peace process over the reporting period reflected the trend over the past two years, since the Lusaka Protocol had been signed, of grudging compliance, protracted delays and last-minute concessions.

The date envisaged, at the time the Mission was established, for the completion of the UNAVEM III mandate—8 February 1997—was fast approaching, and it should still be possible for UNAVEM III to finish most of its mandated tasks by that date. He intended to initiate the downsizing of the Mission by withdrawing some infantry and support units by the end of December 1996. The response of the international community to Angola's continuing need for support would depend on concrete actions the Angolan parties might take in the coming weeks. Unless serious progress was made in several areas before the expiration of the Mission's current mandate on 11 October, the Secretary-General would recommend that the Council consider only a short extension of the mandate, perhaps until 11 December. If certain pressing commitments were honoured in the next few days, in particular the arrival of all UNITA generals in Luanda and acceleration of the selection of UNITA soldiers and their incorporation into the national army, the Council might wish to consider a longer extension of the mandate.

The Secretary-General noted that the failure of Mr. Savimbi to attend the Southern African Development Community (SADC) summit in Luanda on 2 October was unfortunate, because it would have provided a much-needed impetus to the peace process.

The demobilization and reintegration process was at a critical juncture. To support the demobilization of approximately 100,000 ex-combatants, humanitarian organizations would have to increase their activities and additional resources would have to be found. Rehabilitation of rural communities was another important aspect.

The Joint Commission continued to meet regularly to review implementation of agreed tasks, but little progress could be reported. UNITA, at its Third Extraordinary Congress (20-27 August), had reaffirmed the transformation of UNITA from an armed opposition to a political party but had rejected the Government's offer to Mr. Savimbi of one of two vice-presidential posts. The Joint Commission then requested UNITA to present counter-proposals regarding special status for Mr. Savimbi, as stipulated in the Lusaka Protocol. On 1 October, UNITA submitted proposals for the special status of Mr. Savimbi as the President of the largest opposition party.

Throughout the period, the ceasefire continued to hold, with the exception of tensions in the diamond-producing provinces of Lunda Norte and Lunda Sul. Angolan forces completed 61 withdrawal movements from forward positions to barracks, and an agreement was concluded on the withdrawal of troops from the Lunda provinces. As at 27 September, the number of UNITA personnel registered in the 15 quartering areas was 63,189, which exceeded the figure of 62,500 initially declared by UNITA to be the strength of its military forces. The continued presence of "UNITA police" in areas vacated by their troops was a matter of serious concern. Unless they were quartered, it would be impossible to extend State administration throughout the country as foreseen under the Lusaka Protocol.

Only about 4,000 of the 26,300 UNITA personnel to be incorporated into FAA had been selected, largely due to UNITA's continued procrastination. Five of the 10 UNITA commanding officers expected to join FAA arrived in Luanda on 9 September but, despite assurances, the remaining five had not materialized by 3 October.

Communications (October). Zimbabwe, in a letter of 7 October to the President of the Security Council [S/1996/832], said that a summit meeting of SADC, held on 2 October in Luanda, had selected a five-member team, composed of the Foreign Ministers of Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, South Africa and Zimbabwe, to participate in the Council debate on the peace process in Angola. On behalf of those five States, Zimbabwe requested the Council to meet on 10 October to consider the critical situation in Angola. The meeting would be separate from that scheduled for 11 October for the purpose of renewing the UNAVEM III mandate.

By a 10 October letter [S/1996/841], Zimbabwe transmitted the communique adopted by the SADC summit, in which the 11 participating States expressed concern over the slow progress and apparent stalemate in the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol. They regretted the absence of Mr. Savimbi and called for an early meeting between the Government of Angola and UNITA in order to pave the way for the resolution of all outstanding issues. Appealing to UNITA to fulfil its commitments within the deadlines established by the Lusaka Protocol and Security Council resolution 864(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 256], the summit noted that the situation in Angola was the remaining major obstacle to stability within the SADC region. It called on the Security Council to adopt measures that would oblige UNITA to respect the Council's deadlines.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

As requested by Zimbabwe and in order to consider the Secretary-General's October report, the Security Council met on 10 and 11 October. On 11 October, it adopted resolution 1075(1996).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 4 October 1996,

Welcoming the Summit of the Southern African Development Community (SADC) Organ on Politics, Defence and Security, which took place at Luanda on 2 October 1996, and noting the communique issued at that time,

Welcoming also the Ministerial delegation of the SADC Organ on Politics, Defence and Security to the Security Council to participate in its consideration of the situation in Angola,

Reaffirming its commitment to preserve the unity and territorial integrity of Angola,

Reiterating the importance it attaches to full implementation by the Government of Angola and the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola

(UNITA) of the Acordos de Paz, the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions,

Underlining the need for respect for human rights, and stressing the need for the Angolan parties to give greater attention to preventing incidents of human rights abuse and investigating alleged human rights violations,

Emphasizing the importance of a continued and effective United Nations presence in Angola with a view to fostering the peace process and advancing the full implementation of the Acordos de Paz and the Lusaka Protocol,

Welcoming the efforts of the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and personnel of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III), the three observer States to the Angolan peace process, the Organization of African Unity, the SADC and the international community as a whole, and encouraging them to continue their efforts to promote peace and security in Angola,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 4 October 1996;

2. Expresses deep concern at the lack of significant progress in the peace process over the past three months;

3. Expresses concern that the protracted delay in the beginning of the demobilization of UNITA personnel from the quartering areas has set the process behind schedule so that progress will be made more difficult by the onset of the rainy season;

4. Stresses that it is imperative that UNITA personnel be moved rapidly from the quartering areas, in the light of the strains which the prolonged presence of UNITA personnel in quartering areas is placing on the political process, on morale in the camps and on United Nations finances, and in the light of the need to reintegrate expeditiously into the civilian community those not selected for incorporation into the Angolan Armed Forces (FAA);

5. Emphasizes that continuing delays and unfulfilled promises, in particular on the part of UNITA, in implementing the successive timetables for the completion of key military and political issues are no longer acceptable;

6. Welcomes the efforts of the Government of Angola to implement the provisions of the Lusaka Protocol, and encourages the Government of Angola to continue making progress in that direction;

7. Acknowledges as positive steps the arrival in Luanda of UNITA generals for duty in the FAA, the registration of over 63,000 UNITA troops in quartering areas, the surrender of additional heavy weapons in September, the selection of approximately 10,000 UNITA troops for incorporation into the FAA, the beginning of the demobilization of under-age personnel on 24 September 1996 and the submission by UNITA of its proposal regarding the special status of the leader of UNITA;

8. Decides to extend the mandate of UNAVEM III until 11 December 1996;

9. Welcomes the Summit of the SADC Organ on Politics, Defence and Security, which took place at Luanda on 2 October 1996, regrets the failure of the leader of UNITA to attend the Summit and seize the opportunity for a more rapid advancement of the process, and expresses support for the continuing efforts of the heads of State and Government of the SADC to accelerate the peace process in Angola;

10. Urges the President of Angola and the leader of UNITA to meet at the earliest opportunity in Angola to resolve all outstanding issues;

11. Expresses the expectation that the Government of Angola and UNITA will, without delay, and in a spirit of mutual cooperation, uphold strictly their obligations under the Lusaka Protocol and the commitments they entered into at the meeting between the President of Angola and the leader of UNITA at Libreville on 1 March 1996;

12. Expresses deep disappointment with UNITA for delaying the full implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, underlines the importance it attaches to UNITA fulfilling its commitments, reaffirmed at its Third Extraordinary Congress held at Bailundo from 20 to 27 August 1996, to complete its transformation from an armed opposition to a political party, and, to this end, calls upon UNITA immediately to fulfil the following tasks enumerated in the mediation document formulated by the Secretary-General's Special Representative in consultation with the representatives of the observer States and called for by the Lusaka Protocol:

(a) To complete substantially the selection of 26,300 UNITA soldiers for incorporation into the FAA;

(b) To stem the flow of deserters from quartering areas and to continue to return those soldiers who have deserted;

(c) To register in the quartering areas UNITA policemen who have remained in the areas vacated by UNITA military forces;

(d) To dismantle all command posts of UNITA military forces;

(e) To issue a formal, written declaration that all UNITA soldiers have been quartered and that UNITA has no more weapons and military equipment in its possession, in order to remove any obstacles to the extension of State administration throughout Angola;

(f) To cooperate fully with UNAVEM III and the Joint Commission in the extension of State administration throughout Angola;

(g) To make available other generals and high-ranking military officers for duty in the FAA, as well as the UNITA officials designated to take up posts in the State administration at the national, provincial and local levels;

(h) To return all elected deputies to the National Assembly;

(i) To cease interference with United Nations aircraft flights and with mine-clearing activities;

(j) To cooperate in good faith with the Government of Angola to finalize the transformation of its radio station into a non-partisan station;

(k) To complete the training of UNITA personnel for the protection of UNITA leaders;

(7) To establish the free circulation of people and goods;

13. Expresses its readiness to consider the imposition of measures, including, inter alia, those specifically mentioned in paragraph 26 of resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993, unless, by 20 November 1996, the Secretary-General has reported that UNITA has made substantial and genuine progress in fulfilling its tasks in the mediation document and its commitments under the Lusaka Protocol;

14. Welcomes the continuation of the programme for the disarmament of the civilian population by the Government of Angola, and stresses the need for its full and effective implementation, including disarmament of the Civilian Defence Corps;

15. Urges the Government of Angola and UNITA to take all necessary steps for completion of the formation of the FAA, in particular the establishment of integrated headquarters, for the planned and orderly movement of UNITA personnel from the quartering areas in accordance with the Lusaka Protocol, for the orderly transition of demobilized troops to civilian life, for all elected members of Parliament to take their seats in the National Assembly, for constitutional issues to move forward in the spirit of national reconciliation, for the formation of a Government of National Unity and Reconciliation, and for the incorporation of UNITA personnel into the Government, the military, and Angolan National Police, without the imposition of undue qualifications;

16. Reiterates its concern over the acquisition of weapons contrary to paragraph 12 of resolution 976(1995) of 8 February 1995, which undermines confidence in the peace process;

17. Reaffirms the obligation of all States to implement fully the provisions of paragraph 19 of resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993, calls upon all States to take the necessary actions to implement the provisions of paragraphs 19 to 25 of resolution 864(1993) vigorously and strictly, and expresses deep concern that the failure by States, especially those neighbouring Angola, to do so is inconsistent with the peace process and undermines economic recovery;

18. Demands that all parties and others concerned in Angola take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of United Nations and other international personnel and premises and to guarantee the safety and freedom of movement of humanitarian supplies throughout the country;

19. Condemns the actions by UNITA with regard to United Nations aircraft flights on 8, 15 and 21 September 1996, and reminds the parties to extend full co-operation to UNAVEM III at all levels;

20. Expresses regret for the casualties caused to UNAVEM troops by landmines, expresses serious concern about interference by UNITA with mine-clearing activities, calls upon both parties to intensify their demining efforts, and stresses the need for continued commitment to peace by destruction of stockpiles of landmines;

21. Strongly urges Member States to provide promptly the financial resources necessary to facilitate the demobilization and social reintegration of ex-combatants through the United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for Angola;

22. Urges the international community to fulfil expeditiously its pledges to provide assistance to facilitate the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the Angolan national economy and the resettlement of displaced persons, and stresses the importance of such assistance at this time in order to consolidate the gains in the peace process;

23. Takes note of the Secretary-General's intention to initiate the downsizing of UNAVEM military forces by the end of December 1996 pursuant to resolution 976(1995) of 8 February 1995 in which the Security Council stated, inter alia, its expectation that UNAVEM III would complete its mission by February 1997, and to submit recommendations regarding the role the United Nations should continue to play in Angola to consolidate the peace process, including his plans for further draw-down of formed military units of UNAVEM III;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to report by 20 November 1996 and by 1 December 1996 on the progress made towards consolidating the peace process in Angola;

25. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1075(1996)

11 October 1996 Meeting 3703 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/844).

Meeting numbers. SC 3702, 3703.

Report of Secretary-General (November).

The Secretary-General, on 19 November, reported [S/1996/960] that some progress had been made towards implementing the Lusaka Protocol, but again the international community had been disappointed that a long-lasting settlement had not been achieved.

Immediately following the adoption of Security Council resolution 1075(1996) on 11 October, the Secretary-General's Special Representative had undertaken intensive consultations with the Government of Angola and UNITA; both parties committed themselves to the implementation of the resolution. UNITA submitted a list of tasks which it intended to fulfil by 15 November. A comprehensive implementation timetable, covering all pending military, police and political tasks to be completed by both parties, was subsequently prepared by UNAVEM III in consultation with the Government, UNITA and the three observer States and adopted by the Joint Commission on 31 October.

On 28 October, UNITA submitted the list of officials it wished to nominate to the Government of National Unity and Reconciliation and an updated list of deputies to fill the 70 seats won by UNITA in the legislative elections in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 178]. It also completed legal and administrative formalities for the transformation of its Vorgan radio station into a non-partisan station. It further proposed that the National Assembly, whose tenure was to expire on 26 November 1996, be transformed into a Constituent Assembly which would revise the country's Constitution.

For its part, the Government had indicated that it would discuss major political issues only after completion of the military tasks listed in the consolidated implementation timetable.

Implementation of the timetable was still behind schedule, particularly due to UNITA's lack of action, the Secretary-General said. The completion in good faith by UNITA of the quartering of its forces still remained the paramount task to be achieved. Related issues were the handover of all its military equipment and the formation of the unified armed forces. The Government was expected to complete all logistic preparations for the incorporation of UNITA troops and police into FAA and the Angolan National Police.

By 18 November, the number of UNITA troops registered in the 15 quartering areas totalled 65,362—about 3,000 more than the declared number—including personnel from the command and control post which UNITA had started to dismantle, as well as the "UNITA police". However, the number of UNITA personnel who had left quartering areas without authorization was 12,494 on 18 November. Thousands of personal weapons had been handed over by UNITA, but their quantity and quality continued to be a matter of concern.

As at 18 November, 16,152 UNITA personnel had been selected for incorporation into FAA, but all those troops remained in quartering areas and their incorporation had not yet begun. The implementation timetable adopted by the Joint Commission called for the selection of all 26,300 UNITA troops by 15 November and for their total incorporation by 11 December.

As part of his plan to downsize UNAVEM III's formed military units, the Secretary-General announced his decision to withdraw from Angola four UN infantry and support units, with a total strength of between 600 and 700 personnel, by the end of December 1996.

Report of Secretary-General (December). On 2 December, the Secretary-General reported [S/1996/1000] on the future UN role in Angola and set forth plans for downsizing the UNAVEM III military units.

Regarding the military situation, the Secretary-General said that, although considerable progress had recently been achieved, some tasks enumerated in resolution 1075(1996) and in the consolidated timetable approved by the Joint Commission had not been fulfilled by the 15 November deadline. Ceasefire violations had recently declined, due in part to the withdrawal of government forces from several locations.

As at 28 November, 69,093 UNITA troops had been registered in 15 quartering areas; 13,115 of them had subsequently deserted and a total of 29,698 personal weapons and 4,521 crew-served weapons had been handed over by the quartered soldiers. Some 18,738 of the expected 26,300 UNITA troops had been selected for incorporation into FAA and the pace of that exercise had accelerated since the Government lifted strict age and education criteria for selection. Despite some demobilization of UNITA troops, most of them still remained in the quartering areas, thereby placing an additional financial burden on the international community.

The United Nations was still awaiting a declaration by UNITA that it had assembled all its troops and handed over all weapons. In the meantime, the dismantling of illegal checkpoints had proceeded, contributing to the free circulation of people.

As at 28 November, 3,860 out of the expected 4,962 "UNITA police" personnel had been moved to quartering areas.

UN humanitarian activities concentrated on expanding programmes to newly accessible areas and on the return of internally displaced persons to their areas of origin. However, military road-blocks, banditry and other impediments to the free circulation of people and goods continued to hamper humanitarian efforts and discourage the movement of displaced persons. Over 1 million displaced persons, concentrated mainly in urban or peri-urban areas, were relying on humanitarian assistance.

An international effort coordinated by the UN Central Mine Action Office continued mine-clearing activities. UN agencies and NGOs continued to provide humanitarian assistance to some 54,000 UNITA troops still remaining in quartering areas and to more than 100,000 of their dependants in satellite camps.

Due to delays in the demobilization of troops and their reintegration into civilian society, humanitarian assistance to quartered personnel would have to be provided for a much longer period than was initially expected. The Secretary-General appealed to donors to provide additional resources to support those tasks as well as the programmes for demobilization and rural rehabilitation.

As at 28 November, UNAVEM III had 7,003 military personnel deployed at over 70 locations. Their presence, together with CIVPOL and other UN components, had had a positive effect on the military and political situation, but it had placed a financial burden on Member States. For that reason, the Secretary-General had begun to withdraw four UNAVEM units and intended to plan for the progressive withdrawal of the Mission. He recommended that the withdrawal of UNAVEM III military units resume in February 1997, with a view to a complete drawdown in six to seven months, or by August 1997. At the same time, he recommended that a rapid reaction force should be retained, comprising six company-sized infantry groups, to provide a basic safety net to allow other UN components to function and to help maintain confidence between the Angolan parties.

In order to conclude the implementation of the tasks contained in the Lusaka Protocol and to consolidate the gains made so far in the peace process, a continued but substantially scaled-down presence of the United Nations in Angola would be required after February 1997; the activities of the Mission would be increasingly concentrated on political, police and human rights monitoring, humanitarian activities including demining, and public information programmes and logistic support.

The Secretary-General intended to elaborate on those tasks in his next report and to make recommendations on the mandate, structure and size of a follow-up UN presence after the withdrawal of the bulk of UNAVEM III's military units. In the meantime, he recommended that the mandate be extended until 28 February 1997.

Reviewing the financial aspects of the Mission, the Secretary-General said that the revised budget for the maintenance of UNAVEM III for the period after 1 July 1996, which took into account the withdrawal of four infantry and support units by the end of December 1996, estimated costs to be $25.5 million gross per month beginning 1 January 1997. Should the Security Council decide to extend the mandate of UNAVEM III, the cost of maintaining the Mission during the extension period would be within the monthly rate, subject to approval of the budget by the General Assembly.

Communication. Angola, in identical letters to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President, said on 11 December [S/1996/1029] that the President of Angola had nominated nine UNITA generals to various posts in FAA in accordance with a declaration issued the same day by the UNITA leadership. The attached communique listed the nine generals and their new positions and said that the Chief of the Armed Forces General Staff had ordered the incorporation and appointment of the other UNITA high-ranking officers to FAA.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 11 December, the Security Council adopted resolution 1087 (1996).

The Security Council,
Reaffirming its resolution 696 (1991) of 30 May 1991 and all subsequent relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 2 December 1996,

Reaffirming its commitment to preserve the unity and territorial integrity of Angola,

Reiterating the importance it attaches to full implementation by the Government of Angola and the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA) of the Acordos de Paz, the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions,

Reminding the Government of Angola and UNITA to uphold strictly, without delay, their obligations under the Lusaka Protocol and the commitments they entered into in Libreville and Franceville,

Underlining the need for respect for human rights, and stressing the need for the Angolan parties to give greater attention to preventing incidents of human rights abuse, investigating alleged human rights violations and punishing those found guilty by due process of law,

Welcoming the efforts of the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and personnel of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III), the three observer States to the Angolan peace process, the Organization of African Unity, the Southern African Development Community, and the international community as a whole, and encouraging them to continue their efforts to promote peace and security in Angola,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General dated 2 December 1996;

2. Expresses concern at the overall slow pace of the peace process, but notes some positive steps in its implementation;

3. Decides to extend the mandate of UNAVEM III until 28 February 1997;

4. Approves the Secretary-General's recommendation to resume withdrawal of UNAVEM III formed military units during February 1997 as set forth in paragraphs 30 to 32 of his report of 2 December 1996, with the understanding that the pace of withdrawal will be commensurate with progress achieved in the quartering areas, in demobilization and in the extension of State administration, and that the first phase of withdrawal will begin on schedule in February 1997;

5. Authorizes the Secretary-General to commence the gradual and progressive withdrawal of UNAVEM III formed military units from individual quartering areas prior to February 1997, and to accelerate the withdrawal schedule subsequently, if former combatants vacate the quartering areas in accordance with the Lusaka Protocol and other factors are conducive to withdrawal, without putting at risk the successful completion of the peace process;

6. Stresses that both parties must immediately begin to cooperate on integrating selected UNITA officers and troops into the Angolan Armed Forces (FAA) and on demobilizing those remaining in the quartering areas, and underlines the need for the Government of Angola to make available all necessary funds it has pledged and to speed up the processing of demobilization certificates and other administrative matters;

7. Reminds Member States that the need has now become urgent for the financial resources necessary to facilitate the demobilization and social reintegration of ex-combatants through the United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for Angola;

8. Calls upon UNITA to cooperate with the Government of Angola in its immediate task of creating integrated FAA and police units which would begin, in the spirit of the Lusaka Protocol and monitored by UNAVEM III, the gradual, orderly and peaceful extension of State administration into areas formerly occupied by UNITA;

9. Urges the Government of Angola to avoid offensive military operations which go beyond those strictly necessary for the restoration and maintenance of law and order in the areas formerly occupied by UNITA;

10. Recalls the need for the President of Angola and the President of UNITA to meet inside Angola at the earliest opportunity, and calls on both parties to move rapidly on the political steps towards national reconciliation, including the assumption by UNITA deputies and officials of their posts, followed by establishment of a Government of National Unity and Reconciliation prior to 31 December 1996;

11. Urges the two parties to reach agreement on the special status of the President of UNITA as the President of the largest opposition party before 31 December 1996, without linkage of that issue to the formation of a Government of National Unity and Reconciliation;

12. Calls upon the President of UNITA to travel to Luanda for the creation of the Government of National Unity and Reconciliation, and thereafter to maximize the amount of time spent in Luanda in order to enhance confidence in the country's democratic institutions and the irreversibility of the peace process;

13. Welcomes the continuation of the programme for the disarmament of the civilian population by the Government of Angola, and stresses the need for its full and more effective implementation, including disarmament of the Civilian Defence Corps;

14. Reiterates its concern over the acquisition of weapons contrary to paragraph 12 of resolution 976(1995) of 8 February 1995, while the peace process is under way;

15. Reaffirms the obligation of all States to implement fully the provisions of paragraph 19 of resolution 864(1993) of 15 September 1993, calls upon all States to take the necessary actions to implement the provisions of paragraphs 19 to 25 of resolution 864(1993) vigorously and strictly, and expresses deep concern that the failure by States, especially those neighbouring Angola, to do so is inconsistent with the peace process and undermines economic recovery;

16. Demands that all parties and others concerned in Angola take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of United Nations and other international personnel and premises, including that of non-governmental organizations, and to guarantee the safety and freedom of movement of humanitarian supplies throughout the country;

17. Calls upon both parties to intensify their demining efforts, and reiterates the need for continued commitment to peace by destruction of stockpiles of landmines monitored and verified by UNAVEM III, and expresses support for various United Nations demining activities in Angola, including plans aimed at enhancing national demining capacity;

18. Urges the Government of Angola and UNITA to remove all illegal checkpoints that constitute obstacles to the free circulation of people and goods throughout the country;

19. Urges the international community to fulfil expeditiously its pledges to provide assistance to facilitate the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the Angolan national economy and the resettlement of displaced persons, and stresses the importance of such assistance at this time in order to consolidate the gains in the peace process;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to continue planning for a follow-on United Nations presence along the lines described in paragraph 33 of his report of 2 December 1996 which would include military observers, police observers, a political component, human rights monitors and a Special Representative, with the aim of maintaining a limited United Nations presence in Angola, and to report thereon no later than 10 February 1997;

21. Expresses its readiness to consider, in that context, the possibility of sending a Security Council mission to Angola before the expiry of the mandate of UNAVEM III;

22. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

11 December 1996 Meeting 3722 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/1026), based on draft by Portugal, Russian Federation and United States.

UNAVEM financing and composition

In March 1996 [A/50/651/Add.3], the Secretary-General presented a proposed budget for the financing of UNAVEM III for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, which amounted to $335,140,000 gross ($328,230,000 net). The budget provided for the maintenance of UNAVEM III at its authorized strength of 7,000 contingent personnel from 36 nations, 350 military observers and 260 civilian police observers, supported by a civilian component of 714 personnel (417 international and 297 local) and 75 United Nations Volunteers.

That report was considered by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), which issued its own report in April [A/50/814/Add.1 & Corr.1].

ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly approve the amounts suggested by the Secretary-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 50/209 B of 7 June, the General Assembly approved financing for UNAVEM III.

Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 626(1988) of 20 December 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, by which the Council decided to entrust a new mandate to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II), 976(1995) of 8 February 1995, by which the Council authorized the establishment of a peacekeeping operation in Angola (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission III), and its subsequent resolutions, the latest of which was resolution

Recalling its resolution 43/231 of 16 February 1989 on the financing of the Verification Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 50/209 A of 23 December 1995,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Verification Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Verification Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Verification Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Verification Mission on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission as at 21 May 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 52,802,286 United States dollars, representing 10 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Verification Mission to the period ending 30 April 1996, notes that some 16 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Verification Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

6. Decides that, when election activities resume, eleven posts that have been transferred from election-related activities to administrative and support functions will be returned to election-related activities;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Verification Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Angola Verification Mission the amount of 65,912,903 dollars gross (63,067,742 dollars net) already authorized and assessed under the terms of General Assembly resolution 49/227 B of 20 July 1995 for the period from 9 August to 31 December 1995;

9. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 84,687,300 dollars gross (83,190,300 dollars net) already authorized under the terms of General Assembly resolution 50/209 A for the period from 9 February to 8 May 1996;

10. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 76,218,600 dollars gross (74,871,300 dollars net) already apportioned under the terms of resolution 50/209 A, to apportion an additional amount of 8,468,700 dollars gross (8,319,000 dollars net) for the period from 9 February to 8 May 1996 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1996, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

11. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the additional estimated staff assessment income of 149,700 dollars approved for the period from 9 February to 8 May 1996;

12. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 47,988,900 dollars gross (47,140,600 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Verification Mission for the period from 9 May to 30 June 1996 already authorized under the terms of General Assembly resolution 50/209 A;

13. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 47,988,900 dollars gross (47,140,600 dollars net) for the period from 9 May to 30 June 1996 among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

14. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 848,300 dollars approved for the period from 9 May to 30 June 1996;

15. Takes note of the Secretary-General's cost estimate in the amount of 335,140,000 dollars gross (328,230,000 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Verification Mission for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

16. Decides to appropriate the amount of 169,118,500 dollars gross (165,984,100 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Verification Mission for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996, inclusive of the amount of 4,048,500 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations and, subject to the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, an additional amount of 1 million dollars for administrative and logistic support services, including contract supervision, to be assessed on Member States at a monthly rate of 28,186,410 dollars gross (27,664,010 dollars net), in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, subject to the decision by the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Verification Mission beyond 11 July 1996;

17. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 16 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 3,134,400 dollars approved for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the performance reports for the Verification Mission and to provide updated cost estimates for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1997, as appropriate, no later than 1 November 1996, including information on administrative and logistic support services as well as contract supervision;

19. Invites voluntary contributions to the Verification Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission".

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/845/Add.1) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.56), based on informal consultations; agenda item 123.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 56, 64 (resumed); plenary 120.

In an October 1996 report [A/51/494], the Secretary-General described the financial performance of UNAVEM III for the period from 9 February to 31 December 1995. Updated cost estimates for that period totalled $314,738,000 gross ($308,606,000 net). Also in November [A/51/700 & Corr.1], ACABQ commented on the Secretary-General's latest estimates.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/213, approving UNAVEM III financing for 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997.

Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the related comments and observations in the reports of the Office of Internal Oversight Services and the Board of Auditors,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 626(1988) of 20 December 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, by which the Council decided to entrust a new mandate to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II), 976(1995) of 8 February 1995, by which the Council authorized the establishment of a peacekeeping operation (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission III) and its subsequent resolutions, the latest of which was resolution 1087(1996) of 11 December 1996, in which the Council extended the mandate of the Verification Mission until 28 February 1997,

Recalling its resolution 43/231 of 16 February 1989 on the financing of the Verification Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 50/209 B of 7 June 1996,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Verification Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Verification Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Verification Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Verification Mission on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission as at 10 December 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 127,520,046 United States dollars, representing 23 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Verification Mission to the period ending 11 December 1996, notes that some 19 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the Verification Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Verification Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to address relevant findings and to implement the relevant recommendations of the Advisory Committee, the Office of Internal Oversight Services and the Board of Auditors in respect of the Verification Mission;

8. Decides to appropriate the amount of 137,978,400 dollars gross (134,980,800 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Verification Mission for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, inclusive of the amount of 4,048,400 dollars for the support account for peace-keeping operations, in addition to the amount of 170,118,500 dollars gross (166,984,100 dollars net) already appropriated for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996 under the provisions of General Assembly resolution 50/209 B;

9. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 137,978,400 dollars gross (134,980,800 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 among Member States at a monthly rate of 22,996,400 dollars gross (22,496,800 dollars net) beginning 1 January 1997, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Verification Mission beyond 28 February 1997;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the additional estimated staff assessment income of 2,997,600 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

11. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Verification Mission, there shall be set off against their apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of

20,790,900 dollars gross (20,639,700 dollars net) for the period from 9 February to 31 December 1995;

12. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Verification Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 20,790,900 dollars gross (20,639,700 dollars net) for the period from 9 February to 31 December 1995 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Verification Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

14. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-first session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission".

18 December 1996 Meeting 89 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/740) without vote, 15 December (meeting 44); draft by Chairman following informal consultations (A/C.5/51/L.20), orally revised; agenda item 124.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 40, 44; plenary 89.

Sanctions Committee

By a 16 January letter [S/1996/37], the Chairman of the Committee set up by the Security Council in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 2561 to monitor sanctions against UNITA reported on the Committee's activities from its establishment until 31 December 1995, during which time eight meetings were held.

Formally known as the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 864(1993) concerning the situation in Angola, it described its work regarding the mandatory sanctions against UNITA relating to the sale or supply of arms and military supplies, including weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment and spare parts, as well as petroleum and petroleum products.

The Committee had considered replies from countries of the region received in response to a request for information. Angola had written to the Committee on alleged violations of the arms embargo regarding materiel and logistical support to UNITA. The countries cited by Angola were Namibia, South Africa, Zaire and Zambia.

The Committee observed that it had, since its establishment, experienced difficulty in obtaining information on alleged violations of the sanctions with respect to UNITA. As was the case with similar arms embargoes imposed by the Security Council, the effectiveness of the Committee would continue to depend on the cooperation of Member States in a position to provide information on possible violations.

In 1996 [S/1997/33], the Committee held two meetings and considered a case of an alleged violation of the embargo against UNITA. It reiterated its readiness to act towards enhancing implementation of the mandatory measures, thereby contributing to the peace process.

Liberia

In 1996, the Liberian civil conflict continued, despite international efforts to encourage the warring parties to fulfil the terms of the Abuja Agreement they had signed in August 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 358]. Intended as a supplement to the 1993 Cotonou [YUN 1993, p. 268] and 1994 Akosombo [YUN 1994, p. 380] Agreements, the Abuja Agreement provided for a ceasefire, a Council of State, which was to remain in power until elections were held, and disarmament and demobilization of the factions. By the Agreement, the fifth ceasefire accord since 1991, the signatories—the National Patriotic Front of Liberia (NPFL); the two wings of the United Liberation Movement of Liberia for Democracy, General Roosevelt Johnson's wing (ULIMO-J) and Alhaji Kromah's wing (ULIMO-K); the Liberia Peace Council (LPC); the Armed Forces of Liberia (AFL); the Lofa Defence Force (LDF); the National Patriotic Front of Liberia Central Revolutionary Council (NPFL-CRC); and the Liberia National Conference (LNC)—established the Liberian National Transitional Government (LNTG). The new Government was led by a Council of State as the ruling body, in which the factions were represented. The Council of State experienced difficulties in functioning in 1996 due to mistrust between the various factions.

Throughout 1996, both the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL), in place since late 1993, and the Monitoring Group (ECOMOG), set up in January 1994 by the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), remained in the country as peacekeeping forces. Despite the Abuja Agreement and the presence of international forces, a low point was reached during April and May, with renewed fighting and a breakdown of law and order, following which some peacekeeping forces were withdrawn. Diplomatic efforts by ECOWAS members, the Secretary-General's Special Representative and his Special Envoy for Liberia intensified and, by the end of the year, the situation had improved. A revised timetable for the implementation of the Abuja Agreement was formulated, UN and ECOWAS peacekeeping forces were restored to previous strengths, and the ceasefire was generally holding. However, under the timetable, elections were postponed until May 1997. Further efforts with regard to implementing the Abuja Agreement focused on a new phase—disarming and demobilizing the factions and developing modalities for elections—and initial steps were taken in those areas in late 1996.

UN operations in Liberia

The Secretary-General submitted six progress reports to the Security Council during 1996 on UNOMIL activities and on developments in Liberia. During the year, the Council acted four times, on his recommendation, to extend the UNOMIL mandate.

Report of Secretary-General (January). In a report of 23 January (the fifteenth) [S/1996/47 & Add.1], the Secretary-General provided an update of the situation in Liberia since his last report of 18 December 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 366], a period dominated by the question of the disarmament and demobilization of combatants. ECOMOG in mid-December deployed troops to several regions of Liberia for that purpose, and UNOMIL began to revise its own deployment plans accordingly. Consultations were held between the Council of State, the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Anthony Nyakyi, and the ECOMOG Field Commander, Major-General John Inienger. However, the peace process suffered a serious setback when ULIMO-J attacked ECOMOG in Tubmanburg on 28 December 1995. The Tubmanburg incident was rooted in the deep suspicions between the two wings of ULIMO, the Secretary-General said. ULIMO-J alleged that ECOMOG had sided with the forces of ULIMO-K. However, ECOMOG had reported that, before the incident, ULIMO-J forces had repeatedly violated the terms of the ceasefire, entering Tubmanburg with arms and harassing civilians. ECOMOG suffered 94 casualties, including 16 dead, in the attack.

The fighting in Tubmanburg, the most serious ceasefire violation since the signing of the Abuja Agreement, ended on 4 January 1996 after consultations between the Council of State, ECOMOG, UNOMIL and ULIMO-J. However, the situation remained tense and the peace process was at a critical juncture, according to the Secretary-General. Faction leaders had to ensure that their forces observed the ceasefire, disengaged and allowed ECOMOG and UNOMIL to launch disarmament and demobilization efforts; LNTG needed to support those efforts, with the international community providing the necessary resources.

The total military strength of UNOMIL in January was 82 observers, of the 160 authorized under Security Council resolution 1020(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 362]. UNOMIL, during the reporting period, completed reconnaissance of most of the designated deployment areas, patrolled in some of those areas, and sent a disarmament team to Tubmanburg. That team was forced to withdraw on 30 December because of increased insecurity in the area. Eight mobile disarmament teams were ready for deployment as soon as conditions permitted, but further deployment of UNOMIL, as well as any increase in its military strength, would depend on the presence of ECOMOG troops and progress in the peace process. Despite the recent setbacks, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the UNOMIL mandate for four months, until 31 May 1996.

With regard to human rights, UNOMIL continued to monitor the situation in Liberia and to carry out investigations of major violations. In addition to the attack on Tubmanburg, ULIMO-J troops assaulted ECOMOG positions in the town of Kle on 2 January, reportedly leaving thousands of civilians displaced, trapped between ECOMOG and ULIMO-J forces outside the town. UNOMIL facilitated discussions on the evacuation of the wounded, exchange of prisoners and release of the bodies of soldiers killed in the fighting. In addition to coordination functions, the United Nations Humanitarian Assistance Coordination Office operating in Liberia was responsible for the reintegration aspects of demobilization and humanitarian efforts. As at 12 January, 17,500 displaced people had registered for assistance. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) concluded an agreement with LNTG on 3 January, establishing the framework for the repatriation and reintegration of an estimated 750,000 Liberian refugees; some 7,000 Liberian refugees had returned from Guinea since mid-1995 and the influx continued.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 29 January, the Security Council adopted resolution 1041(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions concerning the situation in Liberia, in particular resolution 1020(1995) of 10 November 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 January 1996 on the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL),

Commending the positive role of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), in its continuing efforts to restore peace, security and stability in Liberia,

Expressing its grave concern about the recent incidence of ceasefire violations and attacks on ECOWAS Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) troops as well as continuing delays in the process of disengagement and disarmament of forces,

Stressing the need for all parties to the Abuja Agreement to adhere strictly to its terms and expedite its implementation,

Emphasizing once again that the people of Liberia and their leaders bear the ultimate responsibility for achieving peace and national reconciliation,

Expressing its appreciation to those African States which have contributed and are contributing troops to ECOMOG,

Commending those Member States which have provided assistance in support of the peace process and to ECOMOG, including contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Liberia,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 23 January 1996;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of UNOMIL until 31 May 1996;

3. Calls upon all the Liberian parties to respect and implement fully and expeditiously all the agreements and commitments they have already entered into, in particular the provisions of the Abuja Agreement with regard to the maintenance of the ceasefire, disarmament and demobilization of combatants, and national reconciliation;

4. Condemns the recent armed attacks against personnel of ECOMOG and against civilians, and demands that such hostile acts cease forthwith;

5. Expresses the Council's condolences to the Governments and peoples of the ECOMOG countries and the families of the ECOMOG personnel who have lost their lives;

6. Demands once more that all factions in Liberia strictly respect the status of ECOMOG and UNOMIL personnel, as well as of organizations and agencies delivering humanitarian assistance throughout Liberia, and further demands that these factions facilitate such deliveries and that they strictly abide by the relevant rules of international humanitarian law;

7. Urges all Member States to provide financial, logistical and other assistance in support of ECOMOG to enable it to carry out its mandate, particularly with respect to disarmament of the Liberian factions;

8. Stresses that continued support by the international community for the peace process in Liberia, including the participation of UNOMIL, is contingent on the demonstrated enduring commitment by the Liberian parties to resolve their differences peacefully and to achieve national reconciliation in line with the peace process;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit by 31 March 1996 a progress report on the situation in Liberia, in particular the progress in disarmament and demobilization, and in planning for elections;

10. Calls upon ECOMOG, in accordance with the agreement regarding the respective roles and responsibilities of UNOMIL and ECOMOG in the implementation of the Cotonou Agreement and the UNOMIL concept of operations, to intensify the necessary action to provide security for UNOMIL observers and civilian staff;

11. Stresses the need for close contacts and enhanced coordination between UNOMIL and ECOMOG in their operational activities at all levels;

12. Urges Member States to continue to provide additional support for the peace process in Liberia by contributing to the United Nations Trust Fund for Liberia;

13. Stresses also the importance of respect for human rights in Liberia as well as the need to rehabilitate promptly the penitentiary system in this country;

14. Reminds all States of their obligations to comply strictly with the embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia imposed by resolution 788(1992) of 19 November 1992 and to bring all instances of violations of the embargo before the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 985(1995);

15. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, his Special Representative and all UNOMIL personnel for their tireless efforts to bring peace and reconciliation to Liberia;

16. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1041(1996)

29 January 1996 Meeting 3624 Adopted unanimously

Meeting numbers. SC 3621, 3624.

Report of Secretary-General (April). The Secretary-General, in his 1 April progress report (the sixteenth) [S/1996/232], said that, since 23 January, the peace process had continued to encounter severe difficulties, with setbacks on the military front and signs of discord between members of the Council of State. Unless the peace process was put back on track, the consequences could be disastrous. He called on the Council of State to approve the disarmament and demobilization plan so that the factions could disarm by 30 April.

Urgent action was needed from the international community, the Secretary-General affirmed, to enable ECOMOG to discharge its mandate. So far, the failure to provide the necessary resources had given an opportunity to the factions to procrastinate and renege on their commitments.

Since the December 1995 attack in Tubmanburg by ULIMO-J, that faction had not withdrawn from the area or returned to ECOMOG the heavy weapons it seized during the fighting. On 1 March, ECOMOG withdrew from Tubmanburg, indicating that it would return only when the weapons had been returned.

The transitional Government's Council of State condemned the ULIMO-J attack and called on all factions to remove their checkpoints and on ECOMOG to deploy troops throughout the coun-

Against a backdrop of renewed skirmishes, ECOMOG was deployed in seven locations as at 1 April. It had received an additional infantry battalion from Nigeria, increasing its total strength from 7,000 to 7,500. UNOMIL had a total strength of 93 military observers, and was deployed in three locations. Regular patrols, investigations of ceasefire violations and monitoring of the overall military and security situation remained the main tasks of observers. Further UNOMIL deployment was contingent on ECOMOG deployment as well as on the security situation. Reconnaissance of most disarmament and demobilization sites had been completed.

The Liberian Ad Hoc Elections Commission had begun the process of certifying political parties in preparation for legislative and presidential elections scheduled for 20 August. Certificates of authorization had been issued to three political parties—the Labour Party, the National Patriotic Party and the Unity Party. Seven other political parties had agreed to form an alliance during the elections. Because of delays in preparations and lack of logistic assistance, some Council of State members expressed apprehension about holding elections on schedule.

Humanitarian assistance efforts suffered due to increased insecurity. Humanitarian workers in all parts of the country had been harassed by fighters, their convoys held up and supplies looted.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

Concerned over the deteriorating situation, the Security Council, at a meeting on 9 April, issued the following statement [S/PRST/1996/16] through its President:

The Security Council expresses its grave concern at the outbreak of fighting in Monrovia and the rapidly deteriorating situation throughout Liberia. This new outbreak of factional fighting, the harassment and abuse of the civilian population and humanitarian and relief workers, threatens the peace process and raises serious doubts about the commitment of the factions to its implementation.

The Council reminds all parties of their responsibility fully to respect international humanitarian law with regard to the civilian population and to ensure the safety of United Nations and other international personnel, and calls upon them to take immediate steps to this end. The Council calls on all parties to fulfil their obligation to respect the inviolability of diplomatic personnel and property.

The Council expresses its deep concern at the failure of the Council of State and the faction leaders to demonstrate the political will and determination required for implementation of the Abuja Agreement. Unless Liberia's political leaders immediately show by concrete positive actions a reaffirmation of their commitment to the Abuja Agreement and fully honour their obligation to re-establish and maintain the ceasefire, they risk losing the support of the international community. The Council underscores the personal responsibility of Liberia's leaders in this regard.

The Council reaffirms its support for the Abuja Agreement as the only existing framework for resolving Liberia's political crisis and the crucial role of the Economic Community of West African States in bringing the conflict to an end.

The Council calls on the Liberian National Transitional Government and the Liberian parties to work with the Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) immediately to disengage all forces, re-establish peace and law and order in Monrovia and an effective and comprehensive ceasefire throughout the country. The Council calls on the parties, in particular ULIMO-J, to release all hostages without harm. It further calls upon the parties to return all captured weapons and equipment to ECOMOG.

The Council reminds all States of their obligation to comply strictly with the embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia imposed by resolution 788(1992) and to bring all instances of violations of the arms embargo before the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 985(1995).

The Council declares its intention, based on the progress made by the Liberian parties in implementing the steps set out above, and after consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on developments in Liberia, to determine what further measures may be appropriate regarding the future United Nations presence in Liberia.

Secretary-General's letter (April). A new round of hostilities erupted in Monrovia on 6 April and widespread looting and a complete breakdown of law and order engulfed the capital city, the Secretary-General reported on 19 April [S/1996/312]; UNOMIL, UN agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) had to be relocated to neighbouring countries because of the security situation. Offices and equipment of international organizations, including computers, vehicles and communication equipment, had been looted. The Secretary-General's Special Representative and some UN personnel remained in the country to assist in bringing the crisis to a peaceful resolution and to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance. The Secretary-General's Special Envoy for Liberia, James Jonah, arrived in Monrovia on 18 April.

Widespread looting continued. Thousands of people were displaced, living in desperate conditions. Hundreds of innocent civilians (including women and children) remained confined to the Barclay Training Centre, where forces of ULIMO-J, AFL and LPC were concentrated. Food and water were in short supply. Humanitarian organizations provided emergency food aid and attempted to reactivate water and sanitation services.

The international community had worked together to promote a peaceful resolution of the crisis, the Secretary-General said. UNOMIL and ECOWAS, with the Ambassadors of Guinea, Nigeria, Sierra Leone and the United States, had undertaken intensive mediation efforts to end the fighting.

The Secretary-General urged faction leaders to cooperate fully to secure a peaceful resolution to the crisis, as well as to ensure that the international agencies were allowed to operate in conditions of peace and security. The first step in that regard should be the return of seized vehicles and equipment.

The Secretary-General hoped that ECOMOG would be able to establish the confidence required for the factions to withdraw from Monrovia and for displaced people to return to their homes.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (6 May)

Again alarmed at the situation in Liberia, the Security Council, through its President, issued a statement on 6 May [S/PRST/1996/22]:

The Security Council expresses once again its grave concern at the deteriorating situation in Liberia. The Council strongly deplores the wanton killing and atrocities committed against innocent civilians by the forces of the warring factions. The escalating violence among the factions in violation of the Abuja Agreement puts the peace process at grave risk.

The Council calls upon the parties immediately to cease fighting, to observe the ceasefire and to return Monrovia to a safe haven under the protection of the Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group (ECOMOG). It expresses its support for the efforts of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), including the role of ECOMOG, to bring this conflict to an end.

The Council regrets that the deterioration of the situation in Liberia has forced the evacuation of significant numbers of personnel of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia. The Council reminds all States of their obligation to comply with the embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia imposed by resolution 788(1992).

The Council stresses the importance it attaches to the ECOWAS summit meeting to be held in Accra on 8 May 1996, and urges the leaders of the Liberian factions to reaffirm by concrete positive actions their commitment to the Abuja Agreement.

Meeting number. SC 3661.

Communication (May). The ECOWAS Committee of Nine on Liberia (Benin, Burkina Faso, Cote d'Ivoire, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Nigeria, Senegal, Togo) met at ministerial level in Accra, Ghana, on 7 and 8 May. Discussions centred on the breached Abuja Agreement. A statement transmitted to the Secretary-General on 17 May [S/1996/377] said that talks focused on a mechanism to put the Liberian peace process back on track, to stop the mayhem in Monrovia and to restore that city to its safe haven status. The Committee decided on a number of conditions that could test the sincerity of the Liberian factions in bringing durable peace to their country, including: strict observance of the ceasefire; withdrawal of fighters from Monrovia with simultaneous deployment of ECOMOG throughout the city; removal of arms from Monrovia and the city's return to the status of a safe haven; return of ECOMOG arms seized during the Tubmanburg attack and return of vehicles and equipment seized; re-establishment of the authority of the Council of State of Liberia; a statement by ULIMO-J's General Johnson on his preparedness to work within the framework for peace in Liberia; safe conduct out of the Barclay Training Centre of armed elements of ULIMO-J and LPC to areas outside Monrovia and the disarming of AFL soldiers at the Centre; revitalization of plans for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; creation of the necessary atmosphere for restoration of democracy; and ensuring preparations for free and fair elections.

With regard to the recent events in Monrovia, the ministers concluded that they revolved around General Johnson, leader of ULIMO-J, and they welcomed the invitation by Ghana and Nigeria to provide temporary residence to him in order to lessen the tension in Monrovia. They appealed to the Council of State to grant him amnesty from arrest and prosecution. They recognized that, as currently constituted, ECOMOG could not adequately discharge its political and military duties in the Liberian peace process. They welcomed efforts by the international community to support and assist.

Report of Secretary-General (May). On 21 May [S/1996/362], the Secretary-General submitted his seventeenth report, stating that renewed hostilities continued to jeopardize the Abuja peace process. Over the previous six weeks, faction leaders had shown wanton disrespect for the United Nations, ECOWAS and the international community, as well as disregard for the Liberian people's desire for peace. The Liberian civil war had engaged ECOWAS for over six years. West African States had spent millions of dollars, negotiated numerous peace agreements and sacrificed the lives of their young men in trying to bring peace to Liberia. On occasion, hostilities had spilt over borders, affecting the stability of Liberia's neighbours. In addition, States, having already hosted thousands of refugees, faced the prospect of thousands more seeking safety.

The Secretary-General's Special Envoy said that the restoration of peace and stability in Liberia would be a difficult process, given the deep mistrust between the factions. Monrovia had to be restored as a safe haven and the Council of State must work within the spirit envisaged under the Abuja Agreement. The factions were allied in two groups—the NPFL/ULIMO-K forces, which controlled many areas of the city, and the ULIMO-J/LPC/AFL alliance, which had retreated to the AFL Barclay Training Centre barracks in city centre.

During the peak of the fighting, UN property and equipment had been systematically looted. UNOMIL relocated 88 of its 93 military observers outside the country, with the assistance of the United States Government. With continued fighting, the security situation in Monrovia remained dangerous and unpredictable. Over the six-week reporting period, more than half of Monrovia's 1.3 million population had been displaced and many thousands had fled the country. The provision of humanitarian aid was severely constrained due to the continued insecurity.

The ECOWAS ministers had agreed on steps to resume the Abuja process, but had warned faction leaders that if those steps were not implemented, ECOWAS would reconsider its involvement in Liberia. The Secretary-General noted that the withdrawal of ECOMOG could be catastrophic, not only for Liberia but also for the subregion. Should ECOMOG be compelled to withdraw, UNOMIL would have to do the same.

The Secretary-General said that for the peace process to resume, all Council of State members, who represented various sectors of Liberian society, should have a voice in the decision-making process. Ways must be found to enable civil society to assume its rightful place in the peace process, particularly the media; in that connection, he had requested his Special Representative to encourage greater input into the political process from a broad spectrum of civilian leaders.

In the absence of functioning institutions to organize the electoral process and given the continued instability, it was unlikely that elections could be held in August 1996, as provided for under the Abuja Agreement. It was also increasingly difficult for UNOMIL to carry out its mandate to assist in implementing the Agreement, especially the disarmament and demobilization process. However, UNOMIL played an important role in supporting ECOWAS and could also seek, in consultation with ECOMOG, confidence-building measures.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the mandate of UNOMIL for three months, until 31 August. During that time, UNOMIL's strength would remain roughly the same—25 civilian and military personnel. The willingness of faction leaders to engage in genuine negotiations would be an important factor in determining further involvement of the international community in Liberia, he concluded.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (31 May)

The Security Council, on 31 May, adopted resolution 1059(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions concerning the situation in Liberia, in particular resolution 1041(1996) of 29 January 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 21 May 1996 on the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL), Stressing that the escalating violence is in violation of the Abuja Agreement and puts the peace process at grave risk,

Firmly convinced of the importance of Monrovia as a safe haven, and noting especially the recent broader deployment of the Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) in the city,

Emphasizing once again that the people of Liberia and their leaders bear the ultimate responsibility for achieving peace and national reconciliation,

Commending the positive role of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) in its continuing efforts to restore peace, security and stability in Liberia,

Noting the adoption of a Mechanism for Returning Liberia to the Abuja Agreement by the ECOWAS Foreign Ministers on 7 May 1996,

Expressing its appreciation to those African States which have contributed and are contributing troops to ECOMOG,

Commending those Member States which have supported the peace process and ECOMOG, including through contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Liberia,

Stressing also that the presence of UNOMIL in Liberia is predicated on the presence of ECOMOG and its commitment to ensure the safety of UNOMIL military observers and civilian staff,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 21 May 1996;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of UNOMIL until 31 August 1996;

3. Recognizes that the deterioration of the security situation on the ground warranted the Secretary-General's decision to temporarily reduce the strength of UNOMIL;

4. Notes the Secretary-General's intention to maintain UNOMIL deployments at their present level, and requests that he advise the Security Council of any significant planned increase in the number of personnel deployed depending on the evolution of the security situation on the ground;

5. Expresses its grave concern at the collapse of the ceasefire, the resumption of hostilities and the spread of fighting into the previously safe area of Monrovia and its environs;

6. Condemns all attacks against personnel of ECOMOG, UNOMIL and international organizations and agencies delivering humanitarian assistance, as well as the looting of their equipment, supplies and personal property, and calls for the immediate return of looted property;

7. Demands once more that the factions in Liberia strictly respect the status of ECOMOG and UNOMIL personnel, as well as of international organizations and agencies delivering humanitarian assistance throughout Liberia, and further demands that these factions facilitate such deliveries and that they strictly abide by the relevant rules of international humanitarian law;

8. Calls upon the Liberian parties to implement fully and expeditiously all the agreements and commitments they have already entered into, in particular the Abuja Agreement, and in this regard demands that they restore an effective and comprehensive ceasefire, withdraw all fighters and arms from Monrovia, allow the deployment of ECOMOG, and restore Monrovia as a safe haven;

9. Stresses that continued support by the international community for the peace process in Liberia, including the participation of UNOMIL, is contingent on the Liberian parties' demonstrating their commitment to resolve their differences peacefully and on the fulfilment of the conditions set out in paragraph 8;

10. Stresses the importance of respect for human rights in Liberia;

11. Recalls the obligation of all States to comply strictly with the embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia imposed by resolution 788(1992) of 19 November 1992 and to bring all instances of violations of the embargo before the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 985(1995);

12. Encourages the members of ECOWAS, in preparation for their summit, to consider ways and means to strengthen ECOMOG and to persuade the faction leaders to resume the peace process;

13. Urges all Member States to provide financial, logistical and other assistance in support of ECOMOG to enable it to carry out its mandate;

14. Calls upon ECOMOG, in accordance with the agreement regarding the respective roles and responsibilities of UNOMIL and ECOMOG in the implementation of the Cotonou Agreement and with the UNOMIL concept of operations, to provide for the security of UNOMIL observers and civilian staff;

15. Expresses support for the resolve of the ECOWAS ministers not to recognize any Government in Liberia that comes to office through the use of force;

16. Urges Member States to continue to provide additional support for the peace process in Liberia by contributing to the United Nations Trust Fund for Liberia;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Security Council closely informed of the situation in Liberia, and expresses its readiness, if the situation further deteriorates, to consider possible measures against those who do not cooperate with the resumption of the peace process;

18. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1059(1996)

31 May 1996

Meeting 3671

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/394).

Communication (August). The ECOWAS Committee of Nine on Liberia met in Abuja on 17 August at the level of heads of State and Government, under the chairmanship of Nigeria, to consider further the Liberian peace process. In a final communique submitted to the Security Council President by a 21 August letter [S/1996/679 & Corr.1], the leaders reaffirmed that the Abuja Agreement remained the most appropriate legal framework for finding a peaceful settlement to the Liberian crisis, despite the fact that little progress had been made in its application. They agreed that the Agreement should be extended for another nine months, from 21 August 1996 to 15 June 1997, and they decided on a new schedule for implementation of its terms, culminating with the holding of free, fair and democratic elections on or about 31 May 1997, with a new Government to be installed on 15 June. The timetable also provided for the dissolution of all factions by 31 January 1997. As part of the revised peace plan, the heads of State adopted measures that might be invoked against any persons obstructing the peace plan.

Regarding the current Council of State, the heads of State expressed concern about its performance and said that a change in leadership would improve its effectiveness. Consequently, they agreed to the appointment by the signatories to the Abuja Agreement of Ruth Perry as the new Chairman of the Council of State. They stressed that if in future any Council member was found wanting, that member would be replaced. On the status of Monrovia, the Heads of State expressed satisfaction at ECOMOG measures to restore relative calm, but they were concerned at recent incidents of harassment, abduction and assassination of civilian members of rival factions or other ethnic groups. They condemned the growing tendency to partition the city along factional lines, and called on ECOMOG to restore Monrovia to its original safe haven status.

Successful implementation of the extended peace plan, the communique said, would require the deployment of 18,000 troops to Liberia and adequate assistance. The heads of State commended the efforts of those ECOWAS States that had promised to contribute troops once adequate logistic support was provided, and thanked the United States, which had provided logistics and communications equipment.

Noting that the Liberian security agencies had deep affiliations with the factions, the heads of State endorsed the proposal to restructure the armed forces, the police and other security forces to reflect geographical and ethnic balance. They directed Liberian faction leaders to return the arms and ammunition seized from ECOMOG and to release to the United Nations and other organizations the vehicles and other property looted from them. They condemned acts committed by the Liberian fighters that violated the rules of armed warfare and called on the faction leaders to guarantee the safety of relief personnel in Liberia.

Report of Secretary-General (August). On 22 August, the Secretary-General submitted his eighteenth report [S/1996/684], covering the period since 21 May. The Secretary-General said that, after nearly two months of hostilities in Monrovia, with the exception of the withdrawal of armed fighters, the factions had failed to take the further steps necessary to reconcile their differences. They had issued a statement on 30 July indicating their agreement to end immediately and unconditionally all hostilities throughout Liberia, to disengage their forces, to dismantle all checkpoints and to disarm by the end of September. However, faction leaders failed to meet those commitments and also failed to convene a meeting of the Council of State, which had not met since the outbreak of hostilities on 6 April.

The situation appeared to take a new direction when the heads of State and Government of ECOWAS on 17 August extended the Abuja Agreement and adopted a new programme of implementation.

UNOMIL, reduced to 10 military observers, continued to send patrols around the country, except where conditions were too insecure. Even though UNOMIL would soon be expanded by an additional 24 observers, its activities remained constrained as a result of the loss of $ 18 million in equipment and vehicles due to the April and May looting.

Liberia had suffered tremendously since April, with thousands killed, hundreds of families displaced and the economy largely destroyed, the Secretary-General said. Yet the outcome of the ECOWAS summit offered some hope, and in Monrovia the ceasefire, re-established on 26 May, was generally holding. Further assistance was urgently required, however, so that ECOMOG could continue its peacekeeping activities and the implementation schedule be maintained. Expressing support for the efforts of ECOWAS, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the mandate of UNOMIL for three months. During that time, should the factions demonstrate full commitment to the peace process, he would make further recommendations on any enhanced UN role that might be needed to support ECOWAS and create conditions conducive to peace, stability and national reconciliation in Liberia. In the meantime, he would deploy an additional 24 military observers, as well as additional essential civilian personnel, to assist UNOMIL (which had an authorized strength of 160).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 30 August, the Security Council adopted resolution 1071(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions concerning the situation in Liberia, in particular resolution 1059(1996) of 31 May 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 22 August 1996 on the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL),

Noting the letter of 21 August 1996 to the President of the Security Council containing the final communique of the heads of State and Government of the Committee of Nine on Liberia of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), held at Abuja on 17 August 1996,

Welcoming the increasing restoration of Monrovia as a safe haven,

Emphasizing once again that the people of Liberia and their leaders bear the ultimate responsibility for achieving peace and national reconciliation,

Recognizing the positive role of ECOWAS in its efforts to restore peace, security and stability in Liberia,

Expressing its appreciation to those African States contributing troops to the ECOWAS Monitoring Group (ECOMOG),

Commending also those Member States that have supported the peace process, UNOMIL and ECOMOG, including through contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Liberia,

Stressing also that the continued presence of UNOMIL in Liberia is predicated on the presence of ECOMOG and its commitment to ensure the safety of UNOMIL, and emphasizing the need for enhanced coordination between UNOMIL and ECOMOG,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General dated 22 August 1996;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of UNOMIL until 30 November 1996;

3. Welcomes the agreement of ECOWAS in Abuja on 17 August 1996, which extended the 1995 Abuja Agreement until 15 June 1997, established a timetable for implementation of the Agreement, adopted a mechanism to verify compliance by the faction leaders with the Agreement, and proposed possible measures against the factions in the event of non-compliance;

4. Calls upon the Liberian factions to implement fully and expeditiously all the agreements and commitments they have entered into;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council by 15 October 1996 with proposals for assistance which UNOMIL or other United Nations agencies could provide in support of the Liberian peace process, including support for the election process, disarmament, demobilization, and verification of compliance by the factions;

6. Further decides to maintain UNOMIL deployments at an appropriate level as recommended in the report of the Secretary-General, and requests that the Secretary-General take into account the need to ensure the security of UNOMIL personnel and advise the Council of any planned further deployments;

7. Stresses that the continued support of the international community for the peace process in Liberia, including the participation of UNOMIL, is contingent on the Liberian factions' demonstrating their commitment to resolve their differences peacefully and to achieve national reconciliation in accordance with the agreement reached in Abuja on 17 August 1996;

8. Condemns all attacks against and intimidation of personnel of ECOMOG, UNOMIL and the international organizations and agencies delivering humanitarian assistance as well as the looting of their equipment, supplies and personal property, calls upon the leaders of the factions to ensure the immediate return of looted property, and requests the Secretary-General to include in the report referred to in paragraph 5 above information on how much of the stolen property has been returned;

9. Condemns the practice of some factions of recruiting, training and deploying children for combat, and requests the Secretary-General to include in the report referred to in paragraph 5 above details on this inhumane and abhorrent practice;

10. Demands once more that the factions and their leaders strictly respect the status of the personnel of ECOMOG, UNOMIL and international organizations and agencies, including humanitarian assistance workers, and further demands that these factions facilitate the freedom of movement of UNOMIL and the delivery of humanitarian assistance and that they strictly abide by the relevant principles and rules of international humanitarian law;

11. Stresses the importance of respect for human rights in Liberia and also the human rights aspect of UNOMIL's mandate;

12. Stresses the obligation of all States to comply strictly with the embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia imposed by resolution 788(1992) of 19 November 1992, to take all actions necessary to ensure strict implementation of the embargo, and to bring all instances of violations of the embargo before the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 985(1995);

13. Urges all States to provide financial, logistical and other assistance in support of ECOMOG to assist it to carry out its mandate;

14. Urges all States to contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for Liberia;

15. Stresses the importance of close contacts and enhanced coordination between UNOMIL and ECOMOG in their operational activities at all levels and calls on ECOMOG, in accordance with the agreement regarding the respective roles and responsibilities of UNOMIL and ECOMOG in the implementation of the Cotonou Agreement and with the UNOMIL concept of operations, to provide security for UNOMIL;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Security Council closely informed of the situation in Liberia;

17. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1071(1996)

30 August 1996 Meeting 3694 Adopted unanimously

Report of Secretary-General (October). In his nineteenth report to the Security Council, issued on 17 October [S/1996/858 & Add.1], the Secretary-General stated that, despite affirmations of their readiness to cease hostilities, Liberian factions were again engaged in hostilities outside Monrovia, particularly to the south-east and west. The factions also continued to impede efforts at providing assistance to suffering people and to abuse international personnel. Nevertheless, the Secretary-General expressed hope that the assessment meeting of ECOWAS, UNOMIL, ECOMOG, LNTG and representatives of the donor community, which began on 16 October, would address those problems and that the peace process could move forward. He made recommendations on assistance UNOMIL could provide, in the fields of disarmament, demobilization and human rights, but those proposals could not be undertaken unless the factions implemented the revised timetable.

The new Chairman of the Council of State, Ruth Perry, was inducted into office on 3 September, becoming the first woman head of State in Africa. On 10 September, the Council of State met for the first time since the outbreak of hostilities in April. Factional leaders on the Council remained deeply mistrustful of one another and their factions continued to engage in hostilities in the interior of the country. That raised a concern as to the ability of the Council to carry out its functions effectively, in accordance with the Abuja Agreement.

The military situation outside Monrovia had not changed significantly during the reporting period. Checkpoints remained in place in many areas, and hostilities continued.

In preparation for disarmament, ECOMOG requested the factions to provide an indication of potential sites for the collection of arms. There were an estimated 60,000 fighters in Liberia. The factions would be responsible for delivering their fighters to five or six centres, where disarmament and demobilization could be completed within a period of about three months. To investigate reports of ceasefire violations, monitor, disarm and disengage forces, observe the arms embargo, assist in maintenance of assembly sites and implement demobilization, UNOMIL would require more personnel, but not to exceed 92 military observers, the Secretary-General reported.

The Secretary-General estimated that the expansion cost of UNOMIL for a six-month period was $26.4 million, including $7 million in non-recurrent costs, most of which related to replacement of lost equipment. The expansion provided for the current budgeted strength to be increased by 58 military observers, 54 international staff, 613 local staff and 28 UN Volunteers. Of the additional civilian staff, 494 local staff and 15 UN Volunteers would be for the three-month disarmament and demobilization programme.

Although UNOMIL had been mandated to report on violations of human rights, it had not been able to do so due to the security situation. However, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) had addressed the issue of child soldiers in Liberia, reporting that all factions had recruited and deployed children for direct combat and related military tasks, often under duress and sometimes through peer pressure or manipulation. It was estimated that 15,000 to 20,000 child soldiers were under the control of the six major warring factions. The children, under the age of 17, both male and female, were compelled to witness, and sometimes commit, human rights atrocities. They were also subject to sexual abuse and drug abuse. UNICEF's programme for war-affected children was slowly being re-established, providing support for establishing community centres for vocational and literacy training, and providing shelters, transit-homes and trauma counselling for children. UNICEF was leading a special technical committee to address the issue of child soldiers in the context of the overall demobilization programme.

The humanitarian situation during the reporting period remained essentially unchanged, with a large number of persons in the interior cut off from relief assistance. The humanitarian community had been successful in negotiating access to suffering populations in previously inaccessible areas. UNICEF, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) had launched programmes to assist Liberia in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of its society and economy.

Security Council letter (November). By a letter of 8 November to the Secretary-General [S/1996/917], the President of the Security Council, on behalf of the Council members, said they remained concerned that conditions in Liberia might not be right for implementation of his October proposals, given the continued insecurity. The Council understood that the Secretary-General would not deploy additional personnel and logistic resources to implement the proposals unless the factions took concrete steps to fulfil the commitments they had entered into under the revised timetable of the Abuja Agreement.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In his last 1996 progress report (the twentieth), dated 19 November [S/1996/962], the Secretary-General made recommendations on the future role of the Mission.

Under the revised timetable for implementation of the Abuja Agreement, provision was made for periodic assessments by ECOWAS, UNOMIL, representatives of the donor community and LNTG. The first meeting took place in Monrovia on 16 and 17 October and their assessment was considered by the ECOWAS Committee of Nine on Liberia, which met in Monrovia on 8 and 9 November. The Committee considered that the situation in Liberia had improved markedly since the events of April and May. It noted, however, that the restoration of the peace process continued to be hindered by violations of the ceasefire and other serious incidents. Concern was also expressed about continuing divisions within the Council of State, which had not met since the attempted assassination.

The Committee noted that strict adherence to the Abuja Agreement, especially with regard to disarmament, would be necessary in order to establish conditions necessary for holding elections. It established a subcommittee, under the chairmanship of the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Nigeria and in consultation with the United Nations and LNTG, to review the question of elections and develop the modalities of the electoral process. For its part, the Council of State established a committee to seek the views of Liberian groups and factions on election issues. LNTG requested the United Nations to send a technical survey team to Liberia to make recommendations on the conduct of the electoral process and the role that the United Nations could play in it.

With regard to the military situation, the ceasefire continued to hold in Monrovia and most other parts of Liberia. On 27 October, the two ULIMO factions agreed to cease hostilities in the west, to create a buffer zone between their forces there and to establish a joint committee of their ground commanders to oversee the cessation of hostilities and the disengagement of forces.

ECOMOG strength remained at 7,500 and its priority continued to be to ensure security in Monrovia, where the majority of its troops were stationed. As at 15 November, the military strength of UNOMIL stood at 23 observers and was expected to expand to 34 in the coming weeks.

As to demobilization, the Secretary-General presented a plan that had been developed by the United Nations Humanitarian Assistance Coordination Office (HACO) and UNOMIL, in consultation with ECOMOG, LNTG and the factions. During the first stage, which would begin as combatants were disarmed, they would be registered and interviewed and would receive counselling and a medical examination. A second stage would begin for those without means of livelihood and would involve "bridging activities", or work and training projects to ensure that they were productively engaged. Longer-term reintegration programmes, the third stage, were being planned by donors but were not likely to be operational for months. The shortage of resources for the bridging activities posed a serious threat to the peace process.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the UNOMIL mandate for a further four months, until 31 March 1997.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 November, the Security Council adopted resolution 1083(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the situation in Liberia, in particular resolution 1071(1996) of 30 August 1996,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General dated 19 November 1996,

Noting with grave concern the continued violations by the factions of the ceasefire as agreed to in the 19 August 1995 Abuja Agreement and in the timetable for implementation established on 17 August 1996 when the Abuja Agreement was extended, which threaten the prospects for peace in Liberia,

Welcoming the beginning of the disarmament process on 22 November in accordance with the amended implementation schedule of the Abuja Agreement, and urging all factions to participate as they have agreed,

Reiterating that the people of Liberia and their leaders bear the ultimate responsibility for achieving peace and national reconciliation,

Noting with appreciation the active efforts of the Economic Community of the West African States (ECOWAS) to restore peace, security and stability to Liberia, and commending the African States which have contributed to the ECOWAS Monitoring Group (ECOMOG),

Expressing its appreciation to those States which have supported the United Nations Military Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL) and those which have contributed to the United Nations Trust Fund for Liberia,

Emphasizing that the continued presence of UNOMIL is predicated on the presence of ECOMOG and its commitment to ensure the safety of UNOMIL,

1. Calls upon the Liberian factions to cease hostilities immediately and to implement the commitments they have entered into, especially the agreement of ECOWAS in Abuja on 17 August 1996, which established a timetable for implementation of the agreement, adopted a mechanism to verify compliance by the faction leaders with the agreement, and proposed possible measures against the factions in the event of non-compliance;

2. Urges the factions to complete on time the disarmament process, which is one of the key steps leading up to the forthcoming elections in 1997;

3. Stresses the urgent need for the international community to support the work and training projects to help ensure the social and economic rehabilitation of demobilized combatants;

4. Decides to extend the mandate of UNOMIL until 31 March 1997;

5. Decides further to maintain UNOMIL deployments at an appropriate level as recommended in paragraph 37 of the report of the Secretary-General, and requests that the Secretary-General, taking into account the need to ensure the security of UNOMIL personnel, advise the Council of any planned further deployments;

6. Condemns in the strongest possible terms the practice of recruiting, training and deploying children for combat, and demands that the warring parties immediately cease this inhumane and abhorrent activity and release all child soldiers for demobilization;

7. Condemns all attacks against and intimidation of personnel of ECOMOG, UNOMIL and the international organizations and agencies delivering humanitarian assistance, as well as the looting of their equipment, supplies and personal property, and calls upon the leaders of the factions to return stolen property;

8. Demands that the factions facilitate the freedom of movement of UNOMIL, ECOMOG and international organizations and agencies and the safe delivery of humanitarian assistance and that they strictly abide by the principles and rules of international humanitarian law;

9. Stresses the importance of respect for human rights in Liberia, and emphasizes the human rights aspect of UNOMIL's mandate;

10. Stresses also the obligation of all States to comply strictly with the embargo on the deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia imposed by resolution 788(1992) of 19 November 1992, to take all actions necessary to ensure strict implementation of the embargo, and to bring all instances of violations of the embargo before the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 985(1995);

11. Reiterates strongly its appeal to all States to provide financial, logistical and other assistance in support of ECOMOG to assist it in carrying out its mission and to contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for Liberia in order to help implement the peace process, including demobilization and reintegration;

12. Stresses the importance of close contacts and enhanced coordination between UNOMIL and ECOMOG at all levels, and calls upon ECOMOG, in accordance with the agreement regarding the respective roles and responsibilities of UNOMIL and ECOMOG in the implementation of the Cotonou Agreement and with the UNOMIL concept of operations, to provide security for UNOMIL;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of the situation in Liberia, especially on the progress of demobilization and disarmament, and to submit by 31 January 1997 a progress report and recommendations on possible United Nations support for the holding of free and fair elections;

14. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1083(1996)

27 November 1996 Meeting 3717 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/984).

Further developments (November/December). The disarmament and demobilization process began on schedule on 22 November, but was hindered by logistic, financial and manpower constraints. Nevertheless, in accordance with the revised schedule of the implementation of the Abuja Agreement, UNOMIL deployed military observer teams to 11 disarmament sites. ECOMOG deployed troops in the interior of Liberia in support of the disarmament process, which was proceeding slowly, with a smaller quantity and poorer quality of weapons returned than expected.

In October 1996, the Council of State submitted a formal request to the United Nations for assistance in developing a framework for holding elections in Liberia by the end of May 1997. In response, and following discussions with ECOWAS, a UN technical survey team arrived in Monrovia on 8 December 1996 and held consultations with interested parties. It focused on what steps would be needed to create a framework for free and fair elections—a fair and credible political framework; an efficient electoral operation; and adequate support from the international community.

Composition of UNOMIL

At the beginning of 1996, the military strength of UNOMIL stood at 82 observers out of an authorized strength of 160. Following the outbreak of violence in April, most were relocated to neighbouring countries. As at 15 November, the military strength was 23 observers from eight countries, and 11 more were expected to be deployed before the end of the year.

On 23 October [S/1996/881], the Secretary-General proposed to the Security Council that Nepal and Zimbabwe be added to the list of States providing military observers to UNOMIL. The Council agreed on 28 October [S/1996/882].

On 25 November [S/1996/972], the Council welcomed the Secretary-General's proposal of 20 November [S/1996/971] that Major-General Sri-kander Shami of Pakistan succeed Major-General Mahmoud Talha of Egypt as Chief Military Observer of UNOMIL.

Financing of UNOMIL

In two March reports to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General submitted estimates for financing UNOMIL for the periods from 1 January to 30 June 1996 [A/50/650/Add.2] and from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 [A/50/650/Add.3]. The latter report contained the proposed budget for the 12-month period, amounting to $27,615,100 gross ($25,852,600 net).

By decision 50/482 A of 7 June, the General Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to utilize the resources available to UNOMIL for the period up to 30 September 1996, subject to the Security Council extending its mandate beyond 31 May, and requested the Secretary-General to submit revised estimates for 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997.

In September, the Secretary-General submitted a revised budget [A/50/650/Add.4]. The reduced figure of $14,512,800 gross ($13,630,800 net) was due to lower staffing requirements.

The General Assembly, by decision 50/482 B of 17 September, authorized the Secretary-General to utilize the resources available to UNOMIL for the period up to 31 October 1996, and, if necessary, to enter into an additional commitment of $1.1 million gross ($1 million net) for that period.

The Secretary-General, in December [A/51/756], presented the financial performance report of UNOMIL for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996, during which expenditures amounted to $17,004,100 gross ($15,946,400 net), leaving an unencumbered balance of $13,466,400 gross ($13,443,900 net) to be applied to the next budget.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/3 A.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 866(1993) of 22 September 1993, by which the Council established the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia, and subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Observer Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1071(1996) of 30 August 1996, and resolution 1020(1995) of 10 November 1995, by which the Council adjusted the mandate of the Observer Mission,

Recalling also its decision 48/478 of 23 December 1993 on the financing of the Observer Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was decision 50/482 B of 17 September 1996,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decision regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia as at 30 September 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 10,511,972 United States dollars, representing 13 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Observer Mission to the period ending 31 March 1996, notes that some 30 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observer Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that all United Nations activities related to the Liberian peace process are administered in a coordinated fashion with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia the amount of 14,016,000 dollars gross (13,186,800 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Observer Mission for the twelve-month period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, inclusive of the amount of 791,800 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, equivalent to a monthly rate of 1,168,000 dollars gross (1,098,900 dollars net), subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Observer Mission;

8. Decides also that the apportionment for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1996 in the amount of 5,840,000 dollars gross (5,494,500 dollars net) will be made at a later date following the review of the performance report of the Observer Mission for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996;

9. Decides further to apportion among Member States the amount of 8,176,000 dollars gross (7,692,300 dollars net) for the period from 1 December 1996 to 30 June 1997 at the rate of 1,168,000 dollars gross (1,098,900 dollars net) per month, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Observer Mission beyond 30 November 1996, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July

1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1996 and 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

10. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 69,100 dollars per month approved for the Observer Mission for the period from 1 December 1996 to 30 June 1997;

11. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observer Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

12. Decides to keep the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia" under review during the fifty-first session.

17 October 1996 Meeting 38 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/504) without vote, 11 October (meeting 6); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.3), based on informal consultations; agenda item 135.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 3, 6; plenary 38.

Sanctions Committee

The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 985(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 355] to monitor sanctions against Liberia reported to the Council twice in 1996. The Council, in its resolution 788(1992), had imposed an embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia [YUN 1992, p. 192]. The Sanctions Committee presented its first report on 26 January [S/1996/72], covering activities from the Committee's inception until 31 December 1995. Having issued an appeal to all States and international organizations, as well as to governmental organizations and NGOs, for any information on violations or suspected violations of the embargo, the Committee reported that it had not received any allegations of violations. On 31 December 1996 [S/1996/1077], the Committee drew the attention of States to the fact that it relied solely on the cooperation of States and organizations to provide it with pertinent information.

Sierra Leone

a coup d'état took place. The new Government carried out the previously planned presidential elections in February and March 1996, as it had pledged. By the end of the year, the situation appeared calmer, after a Peace Agreement was signed on 30 November between the Government and the Revolutionary United Front (RUF) and the launching of a demobilization process. In response to a request of the country's new leaders, the Secretary-General decided in December to send an assessment team to Sierra Leone to determine if and how international observers could monitor the newly established peace.

The 1991 conflict resulted in the deaths of thousands of civilians and forced almost half of the population to become internally displaced or to flee to Guinea or Liberia. RUF forces had launched attacks against the Government of the All People's Congress (APC), which in 1992 was overthrown by a military coup. A National Provisional Ruling Council (NPRC) was established, with Captain Valentine Strasser as Chairman and Head of State. RUF attacks against the NPRC Government continued and, in November 1994, NPRC requested UN assistance to bring the two sides to the negotiating table. From 1991 until early 1996, NPRC and RUF, which controlled areas in the southern and eastern parts of the country, respectively, continued the hostilities.

Coup d'etat

On 16 January 1996, a coup d'état took place in Sierra Leone. The Secretary-General, in a statement issued that day, said he was disturbed by the reports from Sierra Leone and he continued to believe that the political future of the country should be determined by free and fair elections. The United Nations remained committed to supporting the holding of such elections, he added. The Secretary-General's good offices would also remain available, through his Special Envoy for Sierra Leone, to facilitate a process of negotiation between the Government and RUF.

The National Consultative Conference, on 12 February, overwhelmingly supported the commitment by Brigadier-General Julius Maada Bio, Chairman of NPRC, to hold elections on 26 February.

The European Union (EU), in a statement forwarded by Italy on 6 February to the Secretary-General [S/1996/91], expressed concern about the 16 January coup, which, it said, ran counter to the expectations of the international community. The EU hoped that recent events would not compromise the holding of democratic elections. It would continue to monitor the situation and expected that all necessary measures would be taken to enable the democratization process to go ahead.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 February, the Security Council President issued a statement [S/PRST/1996/7] on behalf of the Council.

The Security Council welcomes the results of the meeting of the National Consultative Conference on 12 February 1996 that overwhelmingly supported the decision to maintain 26 February 1996 as the date of the elections. The Council also welcomes the renewed promise of the Government of Sierra Leone, through the Chairman of the National Provisional Ruling Council, to abide by the will of the people expressed through the Conference to hold the elections as scheduled. The Council notes that the Chairman of the Interim National Electoral Commission has confirmed that all the necessary technical arrangements are in place for elections to proceed.

The Council reiterates its belief that the holding of free and fair elections as scheduled is of critical importance to Sierra Leone's transition to democratic constitutional rule. Any delay in the elections or interruption in this process is likely to erode international donor support for Sierra Leone. It is also likely to greatly increase the potential for further instability and violence, with devastating consequences for the people of Sierra Leone.

The Council cautions all groups and individuals in Sierra Leone not to attempt to disrupt through violence or intimidation the electoral process which the great majority of the people of Sierra Leone support. The Council calls upon the Government to fulfil its undertaking to ensure a safe and free environment for the elections.

The Council urges all parties to end the violence in Sierra Leone. The Council welcomes the initial contacts between the Government and the Revolutionary United Front and calls upon the Revolutionary United Front to renew its ceasefire and to enter into a full dialogue for peace without any conditions.

The Council expresses its continued concern about the humanitarian situation and suffering of the people resulting from the conflict in Sierra Leone. The Council calls on Member States to continue to provide humanitarian assistance to address this problem.

The Council commends the efforts of the Secretary-General to assist the conduct of the elections, and in particular the establishment of the Joint International Observer Group. It also commends the work of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General to support the democratic transition and to facilitate peace negotiations between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front. The Council appreciates the important role of the Organization of African Unity and others, including States neighbouring Sierra Leone, in attempting to bring peace to that country.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the situation in Sierra Leone and to keep the Council informed of all significant developments.

Meeting number. SC 3632.

Elections

Parliamentary and Presidential elections were held in Sierra Leone on 26 and 27 February, followed by a second round of Presidential elections on 15 March. In an 18 March statement, the Secretary-General, noting with satisfaction that the electoral process had been completed successfully, congratulated President-elect Ahmad Tejan Kabbah. The Secretary-General commended NPRC and its Chairman, Brigadier-General Bio, for their commitment to the processes of democratization and peace in Sierra Leone.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 March, the Security Council President issued a statement [S/PRST/1996/12] on behalf of the Council.

The Security Council welcomes the Parliamentary and Presidential elections held in Sierra Leone on 26 and 27 February 1996 and the second round of Presidential elections held on 15 March. It congratulates the people of Sierra Leone on the courage and determination they have shown in proceeding with the elections despite difficulties and disruptions, and pays tribute to all those involved in the success of the elections, in particular the Interim National Electoral Commission and its Chairman. The Council stresses the importance it attaches to a peaceful transition to civilian rule. It welcomes the commitment by the Chairman of the National Provisional Ruling Council to hand over authority by 31 March 1996 and calls upon all concerned to cooperate fully with the newly elected President and Parliament.

The Council notes that the Joint International Observer Group, which monitored the first round of elections, was impressed by the "overwhelming desire on the part of the people of Sierra Leone to exercise their democratic right in casting a ballot for the parties and candidates of their choice". They have now done so, and it is incumbent on all concerned to help them to consolidate the gains that have been made. The Council is of the view that the circumstances created by the successful conclusion of the elections in Sierra Leone require redoubled efforts to end the fighting in that country. It commends the efforts of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General and others, in particular the Government of Cote d'Ivoire, to that end. It reiterates its call to all parties to end the violence. It calls upon the Revolutionary United Front to accept the outcome of the election, maintain the ceasefire and enter into a full dialogue for peace, without any conditions.

The Council calls upon the international community to provide generous assistance to help in resolving the humanitarian problems caused by the conflict in Sierra Leone, and to assist the Government and people of that country in the task of reconstruction that now faces them.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the situation in Sierra Leone and to keep the Council informed of significant developments.

Peace agreement

After two days of talks under the auspices of the United Nations and the Government of Cote d'Ivoire, Sierra Leone and RUF reached an agreement on 23 April to cease hostilities, with a view to creating a climate of confidence conducive to the conclusion of a peace accord. In a joint communique, signed in Yamoussoukro, Cote d'Ivoire, the two sides reaffirmed their commitment to a just and lasting peace in Sierra Leone and to a peaceful resolution of the conflict. They agreed to establish three joint working parties to deal with the following matters: a final peace accord; encampment and disarmament of combatants; and demobilization and resettlement of combatants. The joint working parties were scheduled to begin work in Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire, on 28 April.

The Secretary-General, in a 23 April statement, expressed pleasure that the Yamoussoukro Communique had been signed. He further expressed his gratitude to Cote d'Ivoire and its President, Henri Konan Bedie, for supporting the mediation efforts of his Special Envoy, Berhanu Dinka, which had contributed to the successful conclusion of the talks.

On 30 November, the Government of Sierra Leone and RUF signed the Peace Agreement in Abidjan. The text, submitted to the Secretary-General by Sierra Leone on 11 December [S/1996/1034], dealt with the disarmament, demobilization and resettlement of combatants; restructuring of the military; monitoring the ceasefire; promotion of national reconciliation, including immunity for RUF members from judicial or official action for political acts committed prior to the signing of the Agreement; reform of the electoral process; civil and political liberties; strengthening the judiciary and the police force; and national socio-economic goals to improve the quality of life of the people.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 4 December, the Security Council President made the following statement [S/PRST/1996/46] on behalf of Council members:

The Security Council warmly welcomes the Peace Agreement signed by the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front in Abidjan on 30 November 1996. The Agreement brings to an end a bitter conflict which has caused appalling suffering to the people of Sierra Leone. The Council pays tribute to the courage and determination of all those who have worked tirelessly towards this end.

The Council hopes that the Agreement will provide encouragement to those working for peace in other parts of Africa.

The Council commends in particular the role played by the Government of Cote d'Ivoire, whose commitment and determination in the chairmanship of the negotiations between the parties have been crucial to this successful outcome. The Council also pays tribute to the support provided to the negotiations by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General in close coordination with the Organization of African Unity, the Commonwealth, the Economic Community of West African States and other organizations and neighbouring countries.

The Council continues to follow developments in Sierra Leone with close interest. The Peace Agreement is an essential first step towards national reconciliation and reconstruction. The Council will continue to support the development of peace and democracy in Sierra Leone. It notes in particular the need for a successful process of demobilization and reintegration of former combatants and stands ready to assist in this process. It stresses the importance of a coordinated international effort to alleviate the humanitarian situation in the country.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the situation in Sierra Leone and to keep the Council informed of further significant developments.

Meeting number. SC 3720.

Proposed assessment mission

Referring to the Security Council statement of 4 December in which the Council expressed the intention to support the development of peace and democracy in Sierra Leone, the Secretary-General, in a 13 December letter to the Council [S/1996/1049], forwarded letters from the President of Sierra Leone and the RUF leader requesting the United Nations to provide, in accordance with the Peace Agreement, international observers to monitor the peace. The Secretary-General sought the Council's concurrence with his plan to send an assessment mission to Sierra Leone to develop recommendations on ways in which the United Nations could assist in that regard.

In a 17 December response [S/1996/1050], the President affirmed the Council's agreement with the Secretary-General's proposal and mentioned, in particular, the need for demobilizing and reintegrating former combatants.

Somalia

Despite efforts in 1996 to address the problems of famine, civil strife and political chaos in Somalia, the United Nations remained faced with a lack of progress in the peace process and in national reconciliation efforts, and was particularly hampered by a lack of sufficient cooperation from the Somali parties over security issues. As the Security Council viewed the situation, the people of Somalia bore the ultimate responsibility for achieving national reconciliation and restoring peace to Somalia, and the international community could only facilitate the process. Nevertheless, work continued in both the political and humanitarian areas, and the United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS) was established, with headquarters in Nairobi, Kenya, to maintain contact with political leaders and coordinate relief assistance. The Organization's involvement in Somalia had been reduced in 1995 after the withdrawal of the second United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM II) in late March of that year [YUN 1995, p.400].

During 1996, the United Nations continued to encourage Somali leaders to seek a negotiated settlement. In January, the Security Council, noting the absence of any credible progress towards national reconciliation, called on all Somali political leaders and parties to return to an inclusive process of negotiation on national reconciliation, to lead to the establishment of a broad-based national Government. However, there was little change in the political situation during the year. In December, the Council expressed grave concern at the resumption of fighting in Mogadishu and the increasing toll in human lives, and called for a ceasefire.

Despite the strife, UN efforts to restore peace and ensure the basic needs of the population continued in the form of the good offices of the Secretary-General, UNPOS facilitation of mediation efforts, cooperation with regional organizations and neighbouring States, humanitarian relief and efforts to improve human rights.

Political and security developments

In a 19 January report [S/1996/42], the Secretary-General provided an update of developments in Somalia since his previous report of 28 March 1995 [YUN 1995, p.403]. He described the security situation in Somalia since the withdrawal of UNOSOM II in March 1995 [YUN 1995, p.400] as being characterized by political instability, inter-clan conflict, banditry and general lawlessness, although conditions varied greatly from region to region. International staff had been relocated from Mogadishu in March 1995 in conjunction with the withdrawal of UNOSOM II, and their permanent return had not been possible because of continued inter-clan fighting in the city and the closure of the airport and seaport.

UN agencies continued to operate in Kismayo and the Juba valley following the departure of UNOSOM II, although the security situation had deteriorated in the second half of 1995. There were incidents of international staff being threatened, beaten and held for ransom; warehouses were looted, and UN compounds in Kismayo were fired on. In south-western Somalia, international staff were relocated from Baidoa following its capture in September by forces loyal to General Mohamed Farah Aidid. UN staff were illegally detained and mistreated, and UN equipment was looted.

In other areas, relative peace existed and many of the regional and district administrations that had come into being with the assistance of UNOSOM II continued to operate. The Secretary-General reported a growing trend towards a general acceptance of the Shariah—Islamic code of religious law—court as an instrument for stamping out lawlessness in some regions; religious leaders in north Mogadishu, which was the headquarters of the Islamic Shariah Implementation Forum and where the Shariah court was said to have been effective in reducing banditry and lawlessness, had launched a campaign to establish Shariah courts throughout the country.

The Secretary-General observed that the political situation had been dominated by a debilitating stalemate for almost two years after the Somali faction leaders had failed to honour their commitments under the Nairobi declaration of 24 March 1994 [YUN 1994, p.320]. That agreement called for restoration of peace throughout Somalia and a National Reconciliation Conference to elect a President and Vice-Presidents, appoint a Prime Minister and establish local authorities and an independent judiciary. The resulting frustration over the lack of progress had been a factor contributing to the split in May 1995 between General Aidid and his former collaborators in the United Somali Congress/Somali National Alliance (USC/SNA), led by Osman Atto. Mr. Atto had declared that General Aidid was no longer leader of the SNA, an action that General Aidid claimed had been manipulated by foreigners. On 15 June 1995, a conference held by General Aidid declared him "Interim President" of Somalia for three years, and General Aidid sought recognition for his "Government" from the Organization of African Unity (OAU). The request was rejected by OAU, and no State recognized it.

The Secretary-General remarked that, while there had been no major progress towards national reconciliation, the worst scenario, an all-out civil war, had been averted. In that situation, regional administrations had emerged as a result of initiatives by factional and community leaders. The Secretary-General hoped that further progress in establishing regional authorities, begun under UNOSOM II, would have a beneficial impact in the near future on efforts to establish a central authority. He noted that many Somali leaders had requested the United Nations, through UNPOS, to support some of their peace initiatives financially and logistically, but UNPOS had no resources for such support. In any case, past actions had raised doubts about the leaders' sincerity regarding peace.

The Secretary-General intended to maintain UNPOS in Nairobi for the time being, and to continue efforts to maintain contacts with all Somali parties concerned, while coordinating activities with interested Governments and regional organizations. The low level of food production and continued political instability made international assistance to Somalia essential. UN agencies believed that, even in the worst-case scenario, their continued operations could play an important role in preventing another major humanitarian crisis from taking place. The Secretary-General predicted that the humanitarian needs of the Somalis would be at least as great in 1996 as during the previous two years, particularly for food and essential health programmes.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 January, the Security Council issued the following statement [S/PRST/1996/4] through its President:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Somalia dated 19 January 1996 and is deeply concerned about the absence of any credible progress towards national reconciliation. It calls upon all Somali political leaders and parties to return to an inclusive process of consultation and negotiation aimed at national reconciliation leading to the establishment of a broad-based national Government.

The Council welcomes with appreciation the efforts of the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the League of Arab States, the European Union and neighbouring States in promoting national dialogue in the search for a solution to the Somali crisis. These efforts demonstrate the commitment of the international community not to abandon the people of Somalia. It reaffirms that the people of Somalia bear ultimate responsibility for achieving national reconciliation and restoring peace. In this respect, the Council urges the leaders of Somali factions to reject violence and place the interests of the country and people above their personal differences and political ambitions.

The Council also welcomes and supports the Secretary-General's intention to maintain the United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS). It stresses the importance of its maintaining close cooperation with the regional organizations, monitoring developments in Somalia and continuing contacts with Somali factions. It looks forward to the return of UNPOS to Somalia as soon as circumstances permit.

The Council expresses deep concern at the continuing conflict. The resulting insecurity, banditry and general lawlessness increase the suffering of the civilian population. The Council condemns the harassment, beatings, abduction and killings of personnel of international humanitarian organizations, and underlines the responsibility of all parties in Somalia for ensuring the safety and security of humanitarian and other international personnel. This atmosphere of insecurity has regrettably forced the United Nations agencies to relocate international personnel, thus hindering the smooth delivery of much-needed humanitarian assistance.

The Council commends the valiant efforts of United Nations and international humanitarian agencies and their Somali personnel for the courage and determination to render assistance to the people of Somalia. The Council encourages Member States to continue to provide humanitarian assistance in order to avoid a further deterioration of the current situation.

The Council considers the uninterrupted delivery of humanitarian assistance to be a crucial factor in the overall security and stability of Somalia. In this respect, the closure of Mogadishu main seaport and other transportation facilities severely aggravates the present situation and poses a potential major impediment to future emergency deliveries. The Council calls upon the Somali parties and factions to open those facilities unconditionally.

The Council reminds all States of their obligation to implement fully the general and complete embargo imposed by paragraph 5 of resolution 733(1992) on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia. In this respect it calls on all States to refrain from any actions which might exacerbate the situation in Somalia.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep it informed about developments in Somalia. The Council remains seized of the matter.

Meeting number. SC 3620.

The Security Council held a debate on the situation in Somalia on 15 March 1996, just short of a year after the UN peacekeeping operation in that country had been withdrawn. Speakers made some common points, including that despite UN efforts, progress towards the goal of national reconciliation had still not been achieved; that the humanitarian situation in the country was deteriorating against a background of continued violence and lawlessness; and that it was the people and leaders of Somalia who bore the ultimate responsibility for restoring peace to the country. Many States expressed support for a small, continued UN presence in the country, favouring the move to Mogadishu of the political office established in Nairobi following the UNOSOM II withdrawal in 1995. Regional organizations, as well as the United Nations, should continue efforts to improve the situation in Somalia, it was felt.

Following the debate, the Secretary-General noted that the idea of a joint UN/OAU fact-finding mission had gained support, and the OAU Secretary-General was agreeable to it. However, the two Secretaries-General concluded that conditions in Somalia were not conducive to a successful mission at that time. Other international organizations were active in supporting national reconciliation in Somalia, including the European Union (EU) and the League of Arab States (LAS).

Further developments. In a later report [S/1997/135], the Secretary-General said that throughout 1996 UNPOS had continued to follow political developments in Somalia. Conflicts within the sub-clans (especially Modulod, Habr Gedir, Hawadle and Murosade) of the Hawiye clan, to which Ali Mahdi Mohamed, Hussein Aidid and Osman Atto (leaders of the main factions) all belonged, constituted a major obstacle to national reconciliation and settlement of the conflict in Mogadishu. If reconciliation between the Hawiye leaders were achieved, prospects would improve for reopening the Mogadishu seaport and airport and for national reconciliation and establishment of a broad-based Government.

As requested by some Somali leaders, the Secretary-General met with them in Nairobi on 30 April. The group led by General Aidid was absent. The Secretary-General said he would continue to seek a peaceful settlement of the crisis, in cooperation with the regional efforts of OAU, the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) and others, and he urged the Somali leaders to come up with new ideas on how to solve their problems.

UNPOS staff had met during the year with all Somali political leaders. Relations had improved between the United Nations and the group formerly led by General Aidid, and, after his death later in 1996, by his son and successor, Hussein Aidid. On 1 August, General Aidid had died from injuries sustained in fighting in Medina and his son was selected to succeed his father as "President" of Somalia.

On 10 August, against a backdrop of ongoing factional struggles, a major conflict erupted and continued until President Daniel arap Moi of Kenya succeeded in arranging a meeting in October between the principal leaders based in Mogadishu. The situation remained calm until 13 December, when a major conflict resumed in the Medina area. It was estimated that about 300 people were killed and over 1,000 wounded in the following week. Intermittent fighting continued afterwards.

From 9 to 16 October, President Moi of Kenya succeeded in bringing together Hussein Aidid, Osman Atto and Ali Mahdi Mohamed in Nairobi. In a joint statement released after the meeting, the leaders asked President Moi to continue his mediation efforts, declared a cessation of hostilities, agreed to allow free movement of people in Mogadishu, pledged to continue dialogue on a peace process, and called on the international community to assist Somalia. The Nairobi meeting was the first participation by the Aidid faction in a meeting with the Ali Mahdi Mohamed faction since the UN-brokered Nairobi declaration of March 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 320], in which they agreed to restore peace and hold a reconciliation conference to elect national and local authorities.

Implementation of the October statement was adversely affected by the reluctance of Hussein Aidid to settle his differences with Osman Atto, whom he reportedly held responsible for the death of his father and from whom he had sought to regain an enclave in south Mogadishu.

In late October, Ethiopia, which had a mandate from both OAU and IGAD to assist in a peace effort for Somalia, brought together 27 Somali leaders, representing 26 political factions, in Addis Ababa and later in Sodere, a nearby resort. Participating faction leaders were expected to meet again in early January 1997 to set up a National Salvation Council. Hussein Aidid, however, rejected the outcome of the Sodere meeting on the grounds that Ethiopia was not fit to broker peace among Somalis. He cited Ethiopia's incursion into Somalia and the alleged supply of arms by Ethiopia to some of the factions, charges rejected by Ethiopia.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 December, the President of the Security Council, on behalf of the members, made the following statement [S/PRST/1996/47]:

The Security Council is gravely concerned at the resumption of fighting in Mogadishu, where the latest clashes are taking an increasingly heavy toll in human lives. It is deeply concerned, in particular, at the plight of the civilian population, whose suffering is increased even further by the fighting.

The Council calls on all Somali factions to cease immediately all hostilities and to restore an effective ceasefire.

The Council fully supports the efforts of the countries of the region as well as of international and regional organizations, in particular the Organization of African Unity and the League of Arab States, to facilitate a political settlement of the crisis in Somalia. It appeals to all Somali factions to join in such efforts and to start a process of national reconciliation aimed at the establishment of a broad-based national Government.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to a lasting solution to the crisis in Somalia and encourages the Secretary-General to continue to monitor closely the situation and to report to the Council on any further development.

The Council reminds all States once again of their obligations to implement fully the general and complete embargo imposed by resolution 733(1992) on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia.

The Council reaffirms its appreciation to all the organizations and individuals who carry out humanitarian activities in Somalia and calls upon all Somali factions to ensure the safety of all the personnel involved.

Meeting number. SC 3726.

Sanctions against Somalia

By a 15 January 1996 letter [S/1996/17] to the Security Council President, the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 751(1992) concerning Somalia [YUN 1992, p. 202] reported on the Committee's activities since its establishment until 31 December 1995. The Committee, consisting of all Council members, was responsible for reporting on the arms embargo against Somalia. It noted that during its existence, it had experienced difficulties in obtaining information on embargo violations. Its effectiveness in monitoring the arms embargo would continue to depend on the cooperation of all States and organizations in a position to provide pertinent information.

The Secretary-General had reported in April 1992 that the flow of arms into Somalia continued, and he requested the Security Council to consider appropriate arrangements for monitoring the embargo. The report indicated that, despite replies from States that they were strictly observing the arms embargo, both Somali factions had claimed that the other side was receiving arms from some countries in the region. On several occasions after establishing the embargo, the Security Council expressed concern about the availability of arms to Somalia and reiterated the need for observance of the embargo.

The Committee appealed in 1993 and 1994 for information on violations or suspected violations of the arms embargo. No replies were received from neighbouring States. States responding during the reporting period did not report violations of the arms embargo.

From the time of its establishment in April 1992 until 31 December 1995, the Committee had considered two cases of suspected violations of the arms embargo against Somalia.

Humanitarian relief and rehabilitation

UN agencies continued to deliver assistance to Somalia in 1996, adapting programmes to the needs and operating environments of each region [S/1997/135]. The country essentially comprised zones experiencing collapsed and disputed political authority, sporadic conflict, an economy of plunder and population displacement; zones of recovery, where economic activity was reviving under a return to local governance; and zones in transition, where there was some level of governance, security, stability and economic activity, but which remained highly susceptible to setbacks.

There was no major humanitarian crisis in 1996 in Somalia, but daily life for the average Somali continued to be very difficult, especially in the southern half of the country. Crop failures and poverty were the main problems, combined with the difficulty of access for humanitarian agencies in southern Somalia. There were some areas in northern Somalia where gains were made in local governance, enabling UN agencies and NGOs to work with local bodies.

During the year, there were a number of cases where UN and NGO personnel were killed, wounded, threatened or subjected to kidnapping and extortion. A lack of security for relief operations remained a major impediment to the delivery of assistance. The continued absence of a settlement led to violations of humanitarian law and human rights, the indiscriminate use of force and the killing of civilians, mainly in Mogadishu.

Joint international and Somali action in the Juba valley during June 1996 helped to halt a movement of population towards the Kenyan border. UN agencies assisted the voluntary return of 920 internally displaced families and facilitated the repatriation of some 1,200 persons.

The UN strategy for rehabilitation and reconstruction in Somalia focused on the implementation of sustainable community-based activities to bolster self-sufficiency. Assistance was provided to strengthen good governance and to improve agricultural production through such projects as rehabilitating irrigation canals, improving rice production, and increasing local production of agricultural tools. Support was also provided for rehabilitation of Somalia's airports and seaports.

The response from the international community to UN appeals for assistance to Somalia was well below what was needed. In December 1996, the 1996-1997 United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Somalia was launched, which requested $46.5 million for joint UN system programmes. A further $54 million was requested by individual UN agencies to implement their own programmes. (See PART THREE, Chapter III.)

UNPOS location

In an 11 April letter [S/1996/325] to the Security Council President, the Secretary-General referred to the 15 March Council meeting during which ideas were put forward on how the international community might address the situation in Somalia. Regarding the suggestion to relocate the United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS) from Nairobi to a location in Somalia, the Secretary-General remarked that Mogadishu would not currently be a practical option for two reasons: first, it would force the United Nations to choose between the north and the south of the divided city, thereby inviting refusal from one or the other main faction to deal with UNPOS; and second, the increased tension brought about by recent fighting between the forces of Osman Atto and those of General Aidid had heightened security concerns in Mogadishu. One future possibility might be for UNPOS to establish a sub-office in a city such as Bossaso in the north-east.

UNOSOM II financing

The General Assembly, by decision 50/498 of 16 September 1996, decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-first session an item on financing the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM II). UNOSOM II had been withdrawn from Somalia in March 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 400].

By decision 51/460 of 18 December, the Assembly decided to consider the question of UNOSOM II financing at its resumed fifty-first session in 1997.

The Sudan

Political developments

The Sudan in 1996 continued to suffer the effects of a civil war and a critical humanitarian situation.

In a 1 March statement, the Secretary-General expressed concern over bombings in February by Sudanese government aircraft of airfields in southern Sudan used by relief agencies. Those incidents, he stated, constituted serious violations of international humanitarian law, endangering the lives of civilians in need of assistance provided by Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS) (see PART THREE, Chapter III), as well as the lives of international relief workers and flight crews. The Secretary-General was seeking assurances from the Government that such actions would not be repeated.

On 10 April, the Government of the Sudan and two of the rebel factions, the South Sudan Independence Movement and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement, signed a peace agreement in Khartoum, which was transmitted to the Secretary-General by a letter of 11 April [A/50/932-S/1996/271]. By that agreement, the parties agreed to end the ongoing civil war and resolve the conflict through peaceful and political means. The parties agreed that after establishment of peace, stability and a reasonable level of social development in the south, and at the end of an interim period, a referendum would be conducted by the people of southern Sudan to determine their political aspirations. They agreed that Shariah and custom would be the sources of legislation, but that states could enact legislation complementary to federal law in matters peculiar to those states. Cultural diversity and freedom of religion and belief would be observed. A coordinating council would be formed between the southern states for better implementation of a subsequent peace agreement.

On 15 July, the Secretary-General expressed concern about the recent serious deterioration in the humanitarian situation in the Sudan as a result of the unilateral and unjustified obstruction by the Government of humanitarian assistance to the affected population in southern Sudan. He added, however, that the Government of the Sudan was currently permitting OLS relief flights to resume delivery of humanitarian assistance to southern Sudan during the month of July. The Secretary-General noted that continued authorization by the Government for the delivery of relief supplies in the forthcoming months was critical.

Sudan-Ethiopia

In 1996, the Security Council sought the Sudan's assistance in extraditing to Ethiopia three suspects wanted in connection with the assassination attempt on President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt, in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, on 26 June 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 412]. On three occasions during the year, in January, April and August, the Council called for the suspects' extradition and demanded that the Sudan desist from assisting or sheltering terrorists. In April, the Council imposed sanctions against the Sudan, calling on States to reduce the number, level and movement of Sudanese diplomatic staff in their countries. In August, it widened its sanctions, calling for restrictions on the movement of Sudanese aircraft.

The failure of the Sudan to meet those requests strained its relations with Ethiopia, and the two countries exchanged accusations through letters to the Security Council President.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 31 January, the Security Council adopted resolution 1044(1996).

The Security Council,

Deeply disturbed by the worldwide persistence of acts of international terrorism in all its forms which endanger or take innocent lives, have a deleterious effect on international relations and jeopardize the security of States,

Recalling the statement made by the President of the Security Council on 31 January 1992 when the Council met at the level of heads of State and Government, in which the members of the Council expressed their deep concern over acts of international terrorism and emphasized the need for the international community to deal effectively with all such acts,

Recalling also the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents, opened for signature at New York on 14 December 1973,

Stressing the imperative need to strengthen international cooperation between States in order to make and adopt practical and effective measures to prevent, combat and eliminate all forms of terrorism that affect the international community as a whole,

Convinced that the suppression of acts of international terrorism, including those in which States are involved, is an essential element for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Gravely alarmed at the terrorist assassination attempt on the life of the President of the Arab Republic of Egypt, in Addis Ababa on 26 June 1995, and convinced that those responsible for that act must be brought to justice,

Taking note that the third extraordinary session of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, of 11 September 1995, considered that attack as aimed, not only at the President of the Arab Republic of Egypt, and not only at the sovereignty, integrity and stability of Ethiopia, but also at Africa as a whole,

Taking note also of the statements of the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism of 11 September 1995 and of 19 December 1995 and supporting the implementation of the requests contained therein,

Regretting the fact that the Government of the Sudan has not yet complied with the requests of the Central Organ of the OAU set out in those statements,

Noting the letter from the Permanent Representative of Ethiopia of 9 January 1996 to the President of the Security Council,

Noting also the letters from the Permanent Representative of the Sudan of 11 January 1996 and 12 January 1996 to the President of the Council,

1. Condemns the terrorist assassination attempt on the life of the President of the Arab Republic of Egypt in Addis Ababa on 26 June 1995;

2. Strongly deplores the flagrant violation of the sovereignty and integrity of Ethiopia and the attempt to disturb the peace and security of Ethiopia and the region as a whole;

3. Commends the efforts of the Government of Ethiopia to resolve this issue through bilateral and regional arrangements;

4. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan to comply with the requests of the Organization of African Unity without further delay to:

(a) Undertake immediate action to extradite to Ethiopia for prosecution the three suspects sheltering in the Sudan and wanted in connection with the assassination attempt on the basis of the 1964 Extradition Treaty between Ethiopia and the Sudan;

(b) Desist from engaging in activities of assisting, supporting and facilitating terrorist activities and from giving shelter and sanctuaries to terrorist elements, and act in its relations with its neighbours and with others in full conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with the Charter of the Organization of African Unity;

5. Urges the international community to encourage the Government of the Sudan to respond fully and effectively to the OAU requests;

6. Welcomes the efforts of the Secretary-General of the OAU aimed at the implementation of the relevant provisions of the statements of the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism of 11 September 1995 and of 19 December 1995, and supports the OAU in its continued efforts to implement its decisions;

7. Requests the Secretary-General in consultation with the OAU to seek the cooperation of the Government of the Sudan in the implementation of this resolution and to report to the Council within 60 days;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1044(1996)

31 January 1996 Meeting 3627 Adopted unanimously

6-nation draft (S/1996/69).

Sponsors: Botswana, Chile, Egypt, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Indonesia.

Report of Secretary-General (March). Having been requested by the Security Council to seek the cooperation of the Sudan in the implementation of resolution 1044(1996), the Secretary-General proposed on 6 February [S/1996/92] to send a Special Envoy to the area to conduct consultations and gather information. For that task, he had chosen Under-Secretary-General Chinmaya R. Gharekhan. The Security Council, in a letter of 8 February [S/1996/93], welcomed the decision.

During his mission, from 18 February to 2 March, the Special Envoy held consultations with the OAU Secretary-General in Addis Ababa and met with authorities in Egypt, Eritrea, Ethiopia, the Sudan, Tunisia and Uganda. The mission's findings were reported to the Security Council on 11 March [S/1996/179]. It was evident that there were basic differences between Ethiopia and the Sudan on the matter, the Secretary-General declared. Having conducted extensive investigations and having interviewed three of the criminals involved in the assassination attempt,

Ethiopia remained convinced that the Sudan was sheltering the three other suspects. The Sudan maintained that Ethiopia had not provided it with adequate information on which to base its search for the suspects, and that it was continuing to look for the suspects and, if they were found, would extradite them to Ethiopia.

Regarding the demand contained in resolution 1044(1996) that the Sudan desist from engaging in activities of assisting terrorist activities, similar differences prevailed. All the neighbouring countries visited by the Special Envoy—Egypt, Eritrea, Ethiopia and Uganda—believed that the Sudan was actively engaged in supporting terrorist elements who operated from Sudanese territory, carrying out destabilizing activities in their countries, the Secretary-General said.

The Sudan claimed that it was the victim of destabilizing activities encouraged and supported by its neighbours, citing heavy equipment, including tanks and anti-aircraft guns, observed recently in the south and which, they said, could have come only through Uganda. They also mentioned Sudanese rebels alleged operating from Eritrean territory, alleged border attacks launched by Ethiopian forces, and illegal occupation of Sudanese territory.

It was obvious that the Sudan had not complied with the Security Council's demands, the Secretary-General said. He intended to keep in contact with all parties concerned as well as with the OAU Secretary-General on all aspects of resolution 1044(1996).

The Sudan, in a 15 March letter [S/1996/201] commenting on the Secretary-General's report, declared that it had cooperated with Ethiopia by searching for the suspects, whereas Ethiopia had refused to provide the Sudan with relevant information. The Sudan also refuted claims of its involvement in terrorist or rebel movements in other countries, and invited the Secretary-General to send a Special Envoy and a military fact-finding mission to investigate such allegations. By a letter of 14 March [S/1996/197], the Sudan transmitted a report on actions taken by the Sudanese authorities in response to Security Council resolution 1044(1996).

By a 27 March letter [S/1996/226], the Sudan informed OAU that its President would attend the meeting of heads of State and Government of the members of the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution, scheduled to be convened in Addis Ababa on 15 and 16 April. He would address the meeting on Sudan's commitment to cooperate with the resolutions of OAU and the Security Council on the assassination attempt and on the outcome of its efforts.

By a 24 April letter [S/1996/317], Ethiopia submitted to the Security Council transcripts of interviews by its authorities with three suspects in the assassination attempt and with the wife of one of the suspects. According to Ethiopia, there were 11 persons involved in the plot, of whom 5 had been killed, 3 were in the Sudan and 3 were in the custody of Ethiopia. The interviews showed clearly, said Ethiopia, that the three terrorists whose extradition was demanded in resolution 1044(1996) resided in the Sudan and said the Sudan was deeply involved in the assassination attempt.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 26 April, following consideration of the Secretary-General's March report, the Security Council adopted resolution 1054(1996).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 1044(1996) of 31 January 1996,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 11 March 1996 submitted pursuant to paragraph 7 of resolution 1044(1996) and the conclusions contained therein,

Gravely alarmed at the terrorist assassination attempt on the life of the President of the Arab Republic of Egypt, in Addis Ababa on 26 June 1995, and convinced that those responsible for that act must be brought to justice,

Taking note that the statements of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of 11 September 1995 and of 19 December 1995 considered the attempt on the life of President Mubarak as aimed, not only at the President of the Arab Republic of Egypt, and not only at the sovereignty, integrity and stability of Ethiopia, but also at Africa as a whole,

Regretting the fact that the Government of the Sudan has not yet complied with the requests of the Central Organ of the OAU set out in those statements,

Taking note of the continued effort of the OAU Secretary-General to ensure the Sudan's compliance with the requests of the Central Organ of the OAU,

Taking note also, with regret, that the Government of the Sudan has not responded adequately to the efforts of the OAU,

Deeply alarmed that the Government of the Sudan has failed to comply with the requests set out in paragraph 4 of resolution 1044(1996),

Reaffirming that the suppression of acts of international terrorism, including those in which States are involved, is essential for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Determining that the non-compliance by the Government of the Sudan with the requests set out in paragraph 4 of resolution 1044(1996) constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to eliminate international terrorism and to ensure effective implementation of resolution 1044(1996) and to that end acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Demands that the Government of the Sudan comply without further delay with the requests set out in paragraph 4 of resolution 1044(1996) by:

(a) Taking immediate action to ensure extradition to Ethiopia for prosecution of the three suspects sheltered in the Sudan and wanted in connection with the assassination attempt of 26 June 1995 on the life of the President of the Arab Republic of Egypt in Addis Ababa;

(b) Desisting from engaging in activities of assisting, supporting and facilitating terrorist activities and from giving shelter and sanctuary to terrorist elements; and henceforth acting in its relations with its neighbours and with others in full conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with the Charter of the OAU;

2. Decides that the provisions set out in paragraph 3 below shall come into force at 00.01 Eastern Standard Time on 10 May 1996, and shall remain in force until the Council determines that the Government of the Sudan has complied with paragraph 1 above;

3. Decides that all States shall:

(a) Significantly reduce the number and the level of the staff at Sudanese diplomatic missions and consular posts and restrict or control the movement within their territory of all such staff who remain;

(b) Take steps to restrict the entry into or transit through their territory of members of the Government of the Sudan, officials of that Government and members of the Sudanese armed forces;

4. Calls upon all international and regional organizations not to convene any conference in the Sudan;

5. Calls upon all States, including States not members of the United Nations and the United Nations specialized agencies, to act strictly in conformity with this resolution, notwithstanding the existence of any rights granted or obligations conferred or imposed by any international agreement or of any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted prior to the entry into force of the provisions set out in paragraph 3 above;

6. Requests States to report to the Secretary-General of the United Nations within 60 days from the adoption of this resolution on the steps they have taken to give effect to the provisions set out in paragraph 3 above;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit an initial report to the Council within 60 days of the date specified in paragraph 2 above on the implementation of this resolution;

8. Decides to re-examine the matter 60 days after the date specified in paragraph 2 above and to consider, on the basis of the facts established by the Secretary-General, whether the Sudan has complied with the demands in paragraph 1 above and, if not, whether to adopt further measures to ensure its compliance;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

By a 31 May letter [S/1996/402], the Sudan stated that it was in full compliance with Security Council resolutions 1044(1996) and 1054(1996). In a 24 June letter [S/1996/464], it described its efforts to implement resolution 1054(1996), which included a search for the three suspects, measures to ensure the departure of members of certain groups of nationals of foreign countries, and actions taken to enhance its relations with neighbouring States. It had been unable to locate two suspects and had no information on the third.

In a 2 July letter [S/1996/513], the Sudan stated that the Presidents of the Sudan and Egypt had met in Cairo on 23 June during the meeting of the heads of State and Government of the League of Arab States. They had agreed to open a new era in the Sudanese-Egyptian relationship and to establish mechanisms to tackle pending issues. In addition, the Sudan, noting that a peace process in the country had begun with the signing of a Peace Charter on 30 March by two rebel factions, joined later by two others, called on Eritrea, Ethiopia and Uganda to desist from fuelling the civil war in the Sudan so that peace could prevail in the region.

In a 10 July letter [S/1996/538], Ethiopia said that the Sudan had not taken any steps to comply with resolutions 1044(1996) and 1054(1996), despite its claims to the contrary.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In a 10 July report [S/1996/541], the Secretary-General provided the Security Council with information he had received from States regarding implementation of the provisions set out in resolution 1054(1996) on reducing the number and level of Sudanese diplomats in Member States and limiting their movement, and on restricting entry of Sudanese officials. By 15 August [S/1996/541/Add.1-3] 60 replies were received and published as Security Council documents.

With regard to the Sudan's compliance with the demands in paragraph 1 of resolution 1054(1996), the Secretary-General said that the Council had determined that the three suspects involved in the assassination attempt were sheltered in the Sudan. It had called on the Sudan to ensure their extradition, but the Sudan claimed that its investigations in respect of two of the suspects had produced no trace of their presence and that the identity of the third was unknown.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 16 August, the Security Council adopted resolution 1070(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1044(1996) of 31 January 1996 and 1054(1996) of 26 April 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 10 July 1996,

Taking note of the letters dated 31 May 1996, 24 June 1996 and 2 July 1996 from the Permanent Representative of the Sudan to the United Nations,

Taking note also of the letter dated 10 July 1996 from the Permanent Representative of Ethiopia to the United Nations,

Gravely alarmed at the terrorist assassination attempt on the life of the President of the Arab Republic of Egypt, in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, on 26 June 1995, and convinced that those responsible for that act must be brought to justice,

Taking note that the statements of the Central Organ of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of 11 September 1995 and of 19 December 1995 considered the attempt on the life of President Mubarak as aimed not only at the President of the Arab Republic of Egypt, and not only at the sovereignty, integrity and stability of Ethiopia, but also at Africa as a whole,

Regretting the fact that the Government of the Sudan has not yet complied with the requests of the Central Organ of the OAU set out in those statements,

Taking note of the continued efforts of the OAU to ensure the Sudan's compliance with the requests of the Central Organ of the OAU, and regretting that the Government of the Sudan has not responded adequately to the efforts of the OAU,

Deeply alarmed that the Government of the Sudan has failed to comply with the requests set out in paragraph 4 of resolution 1044(1996) as reaffirmed in paragraph 1 of resolution 1054(1996),

Reaffirming that the suppression of acts of international terrorism, including those in which States are involved, is essential for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Determining that the non-compliance by the Government of the Sudan with the requests set out in paragraph 4 of resolution 1044(1996) as reaffirmed in paragraph 1 of resolution 1054(1996) constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to eliminate international terrorism and to ensure the effective implementation of resolutions 1044(1996) and 1054(1996), and, to that end, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Demands once again that the Government of the Sudan comply fully and without further delay with the requests set out in paragraph 4 of resolution 1044(1996) as reaffirmed in paragraph 1 of resolution 1054(1996);

2. Notes the steps taken by some Member States to give effect to the provisions set out in paragraph 3 of resolution 1054(1996), and requests those States that have not yet done so to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible on the steps they have taken to that end;

3. Decides that all States shall deny aircraft permission to take off from, land in or overfly their territories if the aircraft is registered in the Sudan, or owned, leased or operated by or on behalf of Sudan Airways or by any undertaking, wherever located or organized, which is substantially owned or controlled by Sudan Airways, or owned, leased or operated by the Government or public authorities of the Sudan, or by an undertaking, wherever located or organized, which is substantially owned or controlled by the Government or public authorities of the Sudan;

4. Further decides that it shall, 90 days after the date of adoption of the present resolution, determine the date of entry into force of the provisions set out in paragraph 3 above and all aspects of the modalities of its implementation, unless the Council decides before then, on the basis of a report presented by the Secretary-General, on the compliance of the Sudan with the demand in paragraph 1 above;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, by 15 November 1996, to submit a report on the compliance of the Sudan with the provisions of paragraph 1 above;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (November/December). On 14 November and 24 December [S/1996/940 & Add.1], the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council, as requested in resolution 1070(1996), on the Sudan's compliance with the provisions of that resolution and with its earlier demands in resolutions 1044(1996) and 1054(1996).

Another five States had replied to his request concerning diplomatic restrictions taken against the Sudan, bringing to 65 the number of replies received.

The Secretary-General stated that in October he had met with the Foreign Minister of the Sudan, who briefed him on the status of the Sudan's relations with four of its neighbours—Egypt, Eritrea, Ethiopia and Uganda. In late October, the Secretary-General sent his Special Envoy, Lakhdar Brahimi, to consult with the Sudanese Government and collect information on its compliance with the Security Council's demands. The Sudan told the Special Envoy it wanted more than ever to pursue its long-standing policy of fighting terrorism. It had adopted new measures to that end, such as reinstating the regulation requiring all foreigners to have entry visas, reviewing the status of all foreigners who had entered the country at a time when no entry visas were required, requesting a number of Egyptians, Palestinians and "Arab Afghans" to leave the country, and scrutinizing visa applications. Government officials also reiterated their readiness to welcome a Security Council mission to investigate any location in the country suspected of providing training for terrorists and to provide the mission freedom of movement and of contacts.

The Secretary-General stated that, while the Council demanded compliance with its requests by the Sudan, the latter maintained that it could not extradite suspects who were not in the country and that it condemned terrorism and was working to improve its relations with all its neighbours.

Sudan-Eritrea

The Sudan, in a 13 May letter [S/1996/358] to the Security Council President, complained that Eritrea was sponsoring and hosting elements of the Sudanese armed resistance and the rebel movement in southern Sudan, with a view to overthrowing the Sudanese Government by force. Eritrea continued to support those outlaw elements, according to the Sudan, which had complained in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 412] of similar action on the part of Eritrea. The international community must enjoin Eritrea to adhere to responsible conduct in its international relations and to abide by the UN Charter and resolutions. The Sudan reaffirmed that it desired good relations with all States and considered aggressive action directed against it to be incompatible with international standards.

Making a similar complaint on 4 December [S/1996/1007], the Sudan listed and gave details of aggressions reportedly perpetrated against Sudanese territory between February and October 1996 by Eritrean forces and opposition terrorist groups.

Sudan-Uganda

In a 15 April letter [S/1996/288] to the Security Council President, Uganda, noting the March report [S/1996/179] of the Secretary-General, denied allegations that it was supplying arms, men, logistics, and military and political support to forces and parties supporting the insurgency in southern Sudan. Uganda's view was that the war in southern Sudan was purely an internal conflict. A Sudanese monitoring team, invited in 1990 by Uganda to observe the joint border on the Ugandan side, was asked to leave in 1995 because the team was involved in activities compromising the security of Uganda. Furthermore, Uganda maintained that the Sudan had not stopped its activities of assisting, supporting and giving shelter to rebel groups operating from bases inside the Sudan against Uganda. Uganda called on the Security Council and the international community to condemn the Sudan and to dissuade it from committing further acts of aggression against Uganda.

The Sudan on 20 May [S/1996/359] asserted that Uganda was fighting civil wars against rebel movements in north, central and eastern Uganda and continued to support rebel movement in southern Sudan. Because of that support, the borders between the two countries were no longer under the control of the Sudan. Despite having signed the Tripoli Declaration for Normalization of Relations between the two countries on 5 April 1995, Uganda had unilaterally severed diplomatic relations with the Sudan 18 days later. Subsequently, it had been agreed that a multilateral monitoring team, composed of representatives of the Sudan, Uganda and Malawi, should verify claims impeding the normalization of relations. However, Uganda had failed to show up at scheduled meetings. The Sudan concluded that Uganda continued to play the role assigned to it by external forces in destabilizing the region without consideration for regional efforts towards peace, security and development.

On 28 August [S/1996/710], Uganda said that the Sudan continued its policy of aggression and provocation. The Sudan had reneged on mediation efforts, whereas Uganda had affirmed its readiness to re-establish normal ties with the Sudan, provided that it demonstrated commitment to maintaining good relations by: disarming the rebels based in the Sudan; confining rebels to a place that could be monitored and verified; and confining or expelling rebel leaders.

The Sudan and Uganda, meeting in Khartoum on 9 September, with Iran as an observer, signed an agreement on the settlement of disputes and the normalization of relations. That agreement was forwarded to the Secretary-General [A/51/346-S/1996/740, S/1996/738]. The Sudan and Uganda agreed to: cease campaigns of negative propaganda against each other; cease to provide territory to rebel forces; refrain from supporting rebel forces; disarm and dismantle bases of rebel forces; move belligerent groups and refugees at least 100 kilometres away from common borders; facilitate the voluntary repatriation of refugees; and set up joint verification teams, to be joined by Iran, Malawi and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, to ensure implementation of the agreement. The Foreign Ministers of Iran, the Sudan and Uganda would meet once every six months to discuss implementation of the agreement.

Western Sahara

In 1996, the United Nations continued to work towards holding a UN-sponsored referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, in accordance with the settlement plan set out by the Security Council in resolution 690(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 794]. Throughout the year, implementation of the plan was stalled, with the two parties—the Government of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO)—disagreeing particularly over the issue of which tribal groups, known as subfractions, would be eligible to vote. Despite the stalemate, the ceasefire held throughout the year.

The Security Council acted three times on Western Sahara in 1996. In January, it expressed concern over delays in establishing the electorate. It called on the Secretary-General, in the absence of meaningful progress towards completion of the settlement plan, to consider a phased withdrawal of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO). The Council in May agreed with the Secretary-General's recommendation that the identification process should be suspended until both parties provided evidence that they were committed to completing it. The Council also agreed with the Secretary-General's proposal to reduce the strength of the MINURSO military component by 20 per cent, and urged the two parties to demonstrate the political will necessary to resume the identification process and implementation of the settlement plan. While it again extended the mandate of MINURSO in May, the Council reminded the parties that if significant progress was not achieved by the end of November, other measures, including further reductions in MINURSO, would be considered. In November, the Council renewed MINURSO's mandate until 31 May 1997. It requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to break the impasse blocking the implementation of the settlement plan and to propose alternative steps should there be no progress.

Implementation of settlement plan

Report of Secretary-General (January). As requested by the Security Council in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 257], the Secretary-General reported [S/1996/43 & Corr.1] on 19 January 1996 on the situation concerning Western Sahara, particularly UN consultations with the two parties on resolving differences that were hindering the identification process. In January, the Secretary-General sent his Special Envoy, Under-Secretary-General Chinmaya R. Gharekhan, to Rabat (Morocco), Tindouf (Algeria), Nouakchott (Mauritania) and Algiers (Algeria), where he met with leaders of Governments and of POLISARIO, and visited the Smara refugee camp in Western Sahara. The Special Envoy brought to the attention of both Morocco and POLISARIO that, if there was no progress towards a meaningful resumption of the work of the Identification Commission, the Secretary-General would inform the Council and provide it with options, including a programme for the withdrawal of MINURSO. Both sides had confirmed their commitment to hold a free and fair referendum on the future status of Western Sahara in conformity with the settlement plan. At the same time, they said that there was no room left for additional concessions, and that progress was contingent on the other party's willingness to adjust its position.

Morocco maintained its position on the identification of applicants remaining to be processed by the Identification Commission, underlining that it was the Commission's duty to process every application submitted before the expiry of the deadline established for that purpose, irrespective of the current place of residence of the applicant. Furthermore, the same procedures should be applied to all applications. Morocco also insisted that the Commission give equal weight to all forms of evidence offered by applicants in support of their claims to eligibility, be it documentary or oral testimony. POLISARIO agreed to participate in the identification of all applicants members of subfractions that were represented in the 1974 census held by Spain, being those for which a list of sheikhs or alternates had already been drawn up. The 1974 census classified the 10 tribes on an alphabetical-order basis. The first seven tribes (A-G) were subdivided into 256 subfractions, but the last three (H-J) were not subdivided. The Secretary-General said that POLISARIO would not participate in the processing of applicants from certain tribal groups that were not represented by subfraction in the 1974 census, since it believed that, under the established criteria, applications from persons other than those belonging to subfractions specifically represented in the census were not admissible. Moreover, POLISARIO was not able to present sheikhs or alternates for such groups and it would oppose any attempt to identify such applicants with the participation of a sheikh from one side only; in such an event, it would be compelled to withdraw from the entire process. POLISARIO was willing to resume the identification operation on that basis and it called for more transparency in the work of the Identification Commission.

As to the possibility of talks between the two parties, whether direct or indirect, to resolve differences, the Secretary-General reported that Morocco believed, based on past experience, that a dialogue would not serve much purpose. POLISARIO indicated its willingness to enter into talks in any format agreeable to both parties, whether direct or indirect, under UN auspices or through a contact group, which could consist of regional and non-regional States. The Secretary-General remained ready to assist in any way possible to bring about constructive contacts between the two parties.

During meetings with the Special Envoy in Nouakchott and Algiers, leaders of the two observer countries, Mauritania and Algeria, confirmed their interest in a speedy settlement of the Western Saharan conflict as a prerequisite for the stability of the region. Both Algeria and Mauritania were concerned that retrenchment or withdrawal of MINURSO would have dangerous consequences for regional stability. It had acceded to the Special Envoy's request to establish a second identification centre in Zouerate in north-eastern Mauritania, in addition to a centre at Atar, to help expedite the identification of applicants living in Mauritania. Algeria reiterated its view that direct talks between the parties were necessary to instil confidence in the process and should address such issues as the post-referendum period.

Due to the standstill in the identification process, only 7,935 persons were identified between 1 September 1995 and mid-January 1996, bringing the total number of persons identified to 60,257, of 76,992 convoked. During the period, identification took place at centres at Laayoune in Western Sahara and El-Aaiun camp near Tindouf. With some 174,000 applicants remaining to be convoked for identification by January 1996, the Secretary-General said that, even if identification were to be resumed immediately and accelerated, the call for a referendum to be held in May 1996 was no longer realistic.

If both parties were to cooperate with the Identification Commission, it would be possible to complete the identification process within 6 to 12 months. The parties must also respect the programme of work set out by the Commission. In each instance, the appointed sheikhs, the party representatives and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) observers would have to be present at the hours stated and remain until identification was completed.

In the circumstances, the Secretary-General suggested that the Security Council might wish to consider extending the MINURSO mandate for six months, ending on 31 May 1996, which would give enough time for resumption of the identification process and an opportunity to test the political will of the parties.

The Secretary-General suggested that the Council might also consider deciding that it could not justify a further extension without imposing conditions in terms of solutions to outstanding problems, and, if solutions were not found by specified dates, plans would be made for MINURSO's withdrawal. He too feared that closing down MINURSO could have destabilizing consequences for the region.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 January, the Security Council adopted resolution 1042(1996), extending the mandate of MINURSO.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 19 January 1996,

Welcoming in this context the visit to the region by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General from 2 to 9 January 1996,

Noting the views expressed by the Government of Morocco set out in the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting also the views expressed by the Polisario Front set out in the report of the Secretary-General,

Reconfirming its commitment to assist the parties to achieve a just and lasting solution to the question of Western Sahara,

Reiterating the fact that, for progress to be achieved, the two parties must have a vision of the post-referendum period,

1. Reiterates its commitment to the holding, without further delay, of a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in accordance with the settlement plan which has been accepted by the two parties referred to above;

2. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 19 January 1996;

3. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) until 31 May 1996;

4. Expresses deep concern about the stalemate which has been hindering the identification process and the consequent lack of progress towards completion of the settlement plan;

5. Calls upon the two parties to cooperate with the Secretary-General and MINURSO in resuming the identification process, overcoming obstacles hindering completion of that process, and implementing all other aspects of the settlement plan, in accordance with the relevant resolutions;

6. Encourages the two parties to consider additional ways to create confidence between themselves and to facilitate the implementation of the settlement plan;

7. Supports the intention of the Secretary-General, in the absence of meaningful progress towards completion of the settlement plan, to bring the situation to the immediate attention of the Council, and invites the Secretary-General in this eventuality to submit for consideration a detailed programme for a phased withdrawal of MINURSO, in accordance with the second option contained in his report of 19 January 1996;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by 15 May 1996 on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1042(1996)
 31 January 1996 Meeting 3625 Adopted unanimously
 Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/60).

Report of Secretary-General (May). In response to the Security Council's call for the resumption of the identification process, the Secretary-General's Acting Special Representative, Erik Jensen, suggested that the parties meet to discuss that proposal. In an 8 May report [S/1996/343], the Secretary-General informed the Council that a detailed programme to complete the identification of all remaining applicants within 26 weeks had been prepared for submission to the parties. However, the positions taken by the parties made it impossible to resume the identification process. Morocco said it would accept the proposed programme, provided that all persons for whom applications were received on time would be presented for identification, without discrimination between different tribal groups. However, it agreed to resume the process by starting with members of non-contested groups on the understanding that all applicants would eventually be processed. The practical consequence of those provisos was that it would not have been possible to postpone processing of the contested groups. POLISARIO maintained its same position, i.e., that certain groupings were unacceptable for identification because they were groupings of tribes and were not composed of subfractions in the strict sense of the 1974 census.

At that stage, the Secretary-General said, even making available the lists of persons found eligible to vote was unlikely to resolve the problem of how to identify the many applicants from the groups in whose identification POLISARIO would not participate, and on whose identification Morocco insisted. The settlement plan was complex from the outset and its implementation, which had reached the current stage only through creative compromises, appeared to have come to an impasse. Nevertheless, more than 60,000 persons had been identified and over 77,000 convoked. Even though 156,924 applicants remained to be identified, the achievement had been important in respect of the procedures established, the logistical arrangements and the work completed, as well as the interaction between long-separated Saharans.

In the circumstances, he recommended that the identification process be suspended until both parties provided convincing evidence that they were committed to resuming and completing it without further obstacles.

The suspension of the identification process would mean that the remaining members of the Identification Commission would leave the mission at the end of May 1996, with the exception of a few who would close the remaining centres and arrange storage of identification data so that it could be used at a later date. It would also entail the withdrawal of the civilian police component of 44 staff, except for a small number to maintain contacts with the authorities on both sides.

There had been no significant progress on the implementation of other aspects of the settlement plan, such as the release of political prisoners, the exchange of prisoners of war, the reduction of Moroccan forces and the confinement of POLISARIO troops. As for the ceasefire, it continued to be monitored by MINURSO, which reported no violations during the reporting period (January-April). Its maintenance had been a major achievement of MINURSO. He proposed a reduction in the military component of MINURSO by 20 per cent, from 288 to 230, to be followed by cuts in the civilian staff.

In a continuing effort to overcome obstacles, the Secretary-General proposed maintaining a political office, headed by his Acting Special Representative, in Laayoune with a liaison office in Tindouf, to maintain a dialogue with the parties and countries. The Secretary-General remained conscious of the need to keep searching for solutions to the impasse, and he recommended the extension of MINURSO's mandate for another six months.

Communications (May). Morocco on 10 May [S/1996/345] told the Secretary-General that POLISARIO's refusal to participate in the identification process relating to certain tribal groups and persons not resident in Western Sahara was inconsistent with the settlement plan, which mandated the Identification Commission to consider applications from persons who claimed the right to participate in the referendum on the grounds that they were Western Saharans and were omitted from the 1974 census. Morocco recalled a 1991 report by the Secretary-General [YUN 1991, p. 797], which stated that the parties and the tribal chiefs recognized that the 1974 census did not include all the Saharans from the Territory, specifically those not contacted by the census teams and those who lived outside Western Sahara. POLISARIO had taken an obstructionist position because it feared it would be defeated if the process functioned properly, while Morocco remained committed to the settlement plan.

POLISARIO submitted its views on the settlement plan in a memorandum forwarded to the Security Council by Namibia and the United Republic of Tanzania on 22 May [S/1996/366], stating that the referendum envisaged in the plan had been delayed as a result of the Moroccan will to obstruct and change it, so as to legitimize Moroc-co's illegal occupation of the Sahrawi territory. POLISARIO said that the original peace plan was changed unilaterally when its most important clause, considering the 1974 census (conducted by Spain before its withdrawal) as the unique basis for the establishment of the electoral body for the referendum, was replaced by new criteria of voters permitting Morocco to include in the electoral lists a Moroccan population that had been transferred to Western Sahara after the 1991 ceasefire. The failure of MINURSO, POLISARIO said, was due to Moroccan opposition to a free and fair referendum and a lack of firmness shown by MINURSO in the management of the peace plan. The lack of firmness, in the view of POLISARIO, had led to a situation whereby nothing could be done without the approval of the occupying Power, Morocco.

In a 23 May letter [S/1996/376] to the Security Council President, the Prime Minister of Ethiopia, as current Chairman of OAU, and the OAU Secretary-General recalled that OAU had deployed a group of official observers to follow the process of identification of voters. They expressed concern that any relaxation of UN efforts in implementing the settlement plan could further complicate the impasse. It was important, in their view, that the United Nations remain actively involved in the pursuit of a settlement and that the identification process be resumed.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 29 May, the Security Council adopted resolution 1056(1996).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 8 May 1996,

Noting the views expressed by the Government of Morocco as set out in the report of the Secretary-General and in the memorandum attached to the letter addressed to the Secretary-General dated 10 May 1996,

Noting also the views expressed by the Polisario Front as set out in the report of the Secretary-General and in the memorandum attached to the letter addressed to the Secretary-General dated 23 May 1996,

Noting also the letter dated 23 May 1996 from the current Chairman and the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity,

Reaffirming its commitment to assist the parties to achieve a just and lasting solution to the question of Western Sahara,

Stressing the importance it attaches to the maintenance of the ceasefire, as an integral part of the settlement plan,

Recognizing that, despite all the difficulties, the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) has to date identified more than 60,000 persons,

Reiterating that, for progress to be achieved, the two parties must have a vision of the post-referendum period,

1. Reiterates its commitment to the holding, as soon as possible, of a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in accordance with the settlement plan which has been accepted by the two parties referred to above;

2. Deeply regrets the fact that the required willingness does not exist to give MINURSO the cooperation needed for it to resume and complete the identification process, and that there has therefore been no significant progress towards implementation of the settlement plan;

3. Agrees with the recommendation of the Secretary-General that the identification process be suspended until such time as both parties provide concrete and convincing evidence that they are committed to resuming and completing it without further obstacles, in accordance with the settlement plan;

4. Supports the proposal of the Secretary-General to reduce the strength of the military component of MINURSO by 20 per cent, on the understanding that this will not impair its operational effectiveness in monitoring the ceasefire;

5. Endorses the view of the Secretary-General that the decision to suspend temporarily the work of the Identification Commission and to reduce the number of civilian police and military personnel does not imply any lessening of resolve to secure the implementation of the settlement plan;

6. Supports the proposal of the Secretary-General, in the context of the settlement plan, to maintain a political office to continue the dialogue with the parties and the two neighbouring countries and to facilitate any other effort that could help set the parties on a course towards an agreed formula for the resolution of their differences, and encourages the Secretary-General to consider ways of strengthening the role of this office;

7. Urges the two parties to demonstrate without further delay the political will, cooperation and flexibility necessary to permit the resumption and early completion of the identification process and the implementation of the settlement plan, notes with satisfaction that the parties have respected the ceasefire, which is an integral part of the settlement plan, and calls upon them to continue to do so;

8. Also calls upon the parties, as a demonstration of goodwill, to cooperate with the United Nations in the implementation of certain aspects of the settlement plan, such as the release of Saharan political prisoners and the exchange of prisoners of war on humanitarian grounds, as soon as possible, to accelerate implementation of the settlement plan in its entirety;

9. Encourages the parties to consider additional ways to create confidence between themselves in order to remove obstacles to implementation of the settlement plan;

10. Decides to extend the mandate of MINURSO, on the basis proposed by the Secretary-General in his report of 8 May 1996, until 30 November 1996;

11. Reminds the parties that if significant progress is not achieved during this period, the Council will have to consider other measures, including possible further reductions in the strength of MINURSO, but stresses its readiness to support the resumption of the identification process as soon as the parties have demonstrated the necessary political will, cooperation and flexibility, as called for in paragraph 7 above;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts with the parties to break the impasse blocking the implementation of the settlement plan, and to submit a report to the Council by 31 August 1996 on the outcome of his efforts;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council closely informed of all significant developments, including their humanitarian aspects, and to submit a comprehensive report on the implementation of this resolution by 10 November 1996;

14. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1056(1996)

29 May 1996 Meeting 3668 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/382).

Communications (June). In a 3 June communique [A/51/160-S/1996/418], Spain reiterated its position of principle that the problem of Western Sahara would be definitively resolved only through the self-determination of the Saharan people by means of a free referendum with international guarantees. Spain expressed concern at the suspension of the voter identification operation and the impasse in the settlement process. It would encourage the parties to work in a spirit of compromise for a solution.

In a letter of 11 June [S/1996/434] to the Security Council President, Jerry John Rawlings, President of Ghana and Chairman of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), on behalf of ECOWAS, appealed for a revival of UN involvement in Western Sahara, specifically regarding the identification process. He added that the United Nations must encourage POLISARIO authorities and the Moroccan Government to engage in direct dialogue in an effort to break the impasse.

Morocco on 26 June [S/1996/495] told the Security Council President that President Rawlings was seeking to commit ECOWAS member States to a policy issue without their knowledge, as the Western Sahara question had not been discussed at any ECOWAS meeting or in consultations. Morocco said the concerns of President Rawlings regarding peace in the region were a poor disguise of his animosity towards Morocco.

Report of Secretary-General (August). On 20 August [S/1996/674], the Secretary-General reported on further discussions by his Acting Special Representative, which focused on resumption of the identification process, release of political prisoners, exchange of prisoners of war and options for other confidence-building measures.

As for the release of political prisoners, Morocco said that it was not prepared to discuss individual names on an informal list provided by POLISARIO, but it indicated its willingness to work through the United Nations Independent Jurist to investigate a formal list established by the Independent Jurist on the basis of definite elements. POLISARIO also indicated its readiness to contribute to the Independent Jurist's work.

The Secretary-General reported that the military staff of MINURSO would be reduced to the approved number of 230 by the end of October; the civilian police component had been reduced from 44 to 7. At the time of the report, the ceasefire continued to hold. The military observers did note, however, a number of technical violations on the part of POLISARIO forces throughout June, including unauthorized live-fire exercises and movements of weapons. The civilian police maintained security at the identification centres until their closure and provided technical assistance in closing centres, packing identification materials and ensuring their safe transfer to Geneva. The remaining police ensured the security of computerized information and other equipment in Western Sahara.

Given the positions of the two parties, the Secretary-General stated that it was unlikely that the identification process would be resumed any time soon. He believed that the current deadlock could be broken only when both parties recognized that identification was a scrupulous procedure based on clear principles and in the context of a broader agreement. He appealed to the two parties to demonstrate flexibility and expressed satisfaction that the ceasefire was holding.

Report of Secretary-General (November). On 5 November [S/1996/913], the Secretary-General again reported to the Council on the situation in Western Sahara. He said that Morocco and POLISARIO had reiterated their commitment to the settlement plan, and the neighbouring States had stressed their support for MINURSO and their belief that a solution to the Western Sahara problem was crucial to regional stability. The positions of Morocco and POLISARIO remained irreconcilable and unchanged, disagreeing as to which groups should be eligible and on procedures. As a result of the stalemate, the 132 Identification Commission staff members had left MINURSO.

Morocco released 66 POLISARIO prisoners of war on 31 October, following an initiative by Germany and the United States and with the assistance of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). A year earlier, POLISARIO had released 185 Moroccan prisoners of war with the assistance of ICRC and Argentina and the United States. The Secretary-General welcomed the move and said it should help promote confidence.

As for political prisoners, the Independent Jurist continued to meet with both sides and compare lists of "disappeared" persons so that final lists could be presented to Morocco for investigation.

The Secretary-General reported that the efforts of his Acting Special Representative and the presence of the political office and the military observers had been important in ensuring respect for the ceasefire and reducing the danger of a return to hostilities in the absence of progress in implementing the settlement plan. To help uphold the ceasefire and to allow time for further progress, the Secretary-General recommended that the mandate of MINURSO be extended for another six months, until 31 May 1997.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 27 November, the Security Council adopted resolution 1084(1996).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 5 November 1996,

Reaffirming its commitment to assist the parties to achieve a just and lasting solution to the question of Western Sahara,

Welcoming the reiteration by the Kingdom of Morocco of its commitment to the settlement plan,

Welcoming also the reiteration by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Saguia el-Hamra and Rio de Oro of its commitment to the settlement plan,

Stressing the importance it attaches to the maintenance of the ceasefire, as an integral part of the settlement plan,

Stressing also the importance and usefulness of the resumption of exploratory talks between the parties, without prejudice to their respective positions, in order to create an atmosphere of mutual confidence conducive to a speedy and effective implementation of the settlement plan,

Reiterating that, for progress to be achieved, the parties must have a vision of the post-referendum period,

Noting the completion by the Secretary-General of reductions in the various components of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO),

1. Reiterates its commitment to the holding, as soon as possible, of a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in accordance with the settlement plan;

2. Supports the activities of the Acting Special Representative in continuing the dialogue with the parties and the two neighbouring countries and in facilitating, in the context of the settlement plan, other efforts to set the parties on a course towards an agreed formula for the resolution of their differences, and requests that those activities be accelerated and that the parties continue to cooperate with the Acting Special Representative;

3. Notes the beneficial effect of demonstrations of goodwill and of all contacts aimed at achieving the implementation of the settlement plan;

4. Welcomes the steps taken by the parties to demonstrate goodwill, including the release of prisoners, and the recent indications that the parties are moving forward in their efforts to resolve outstanding questions concerning the implementation of the settlement plan, and encourages them to pursue these efforts so as to build confidence between themselves and to facilitate the implementation of the settlement plan;

5. Welcomes also the ongoing activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the cooperation afforded to it by the parties, and encourages UNHCR to pursue its humanitarian work and assistance in accordance with its mandate and the settlement plan;

6. Decides to extend the mandate of MINURSO on the basis proposed by the Secretary-General in his report of 5 November 1996, until 31 May 1997;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts with the parties to break the impasse blocking the implementation of the settlement plan, and to submit an interim report to the Council by 28 February 1997 on the outcome of his efforts;

8. Also requests that in his next report the Secretary-General propose alternative steps, in the framework of the settlement plan, should there be no meaningful progress towards removing the obstacles to the implementation of the plan;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the staffing size and configuration of the various components of MINURSO under active review in order to ensure maximum efficiency and effectiveness, and to include in his next report ways to achieve this aim;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council closely informed of all significant developments, including their humanitarian aspects, and to submit a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution by 9 May 1997;

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1084(1996)

27 November 1996 Meeting 3718 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/985).

On 25 November [S/1996/973], Morocco gave its views on a draft resolution (subsequently adopted, see above) on Western Sahara. Morocco felt that the draft concealed the true reasons for the impasse in the implementation of the settlement plan, the principal one being the refusal of the other party to participate in the identification process for certain groups of applicants. The draft appeared to take liberties with the settlement plan by introducing incompatible elements, since many paragraphs were based on the question of contacts. In Morocco's view, the Council should refrain from mentioning those contacts, which were officially described by Morocco as "contacts with a part of the Saharan population and our lost sons with the aim of inducing them to return to the motherland", because those contacts were not part of the settlement plan. Furthermore, Morocco said, references went beyond the true scope of the contacts and gave an impression of progress which the Council wished to transmit as a justification for extension of the MINURSO mandate.

Consideration by Special Committee on decolonization. The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Special Committee on decolonization) considered the question of Western Sahara on 24 July [A/51/23]. It had before it a working paper [A/AC.109/2059] of the Secretariat, describing the good offices of the Secretary-General in his efforts to persuade the two parties to resume implementation of the settlement plan, as well as political and other developments.

The Special Committee acceded to Algeria's request to participate in its consideration of Western Sahara. It also granted requests for hearings to representatives of POLISARIO and Liberal International, who addressed the Committee.

Report of Secretary-General (September). As requested by the General Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995,p.257], the Secretary-General reported on the question of Western Sahara. The report [A/51/428], covering the period from 5 October 1995 to 30 September 1996, described his efforts, in close cooperation with the Chairman of OAU, to exercise his good offices with the parties concerned. It also described the developments leading up to and reasons for the continuing impasse in the peace process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/143.

Question of Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered in depth the question of Western Sahara,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all peoples to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 50/36 of 6 December 1995,

Recalling also the agreement in principle given on 30 August 1988 by the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro to the proposals of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the then Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in the context of their joint mission of good offices,

Recalling further Security Council resolutions 658(1990) of 27 June 1990 and 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, by which the Council approved the settlement plan for Western Sahara,

Recalling all the Security Council resolutions relating to the question of Western Sahara, in particular resolutions 621(1988) of 20 September 1988, 725(1991) of 31 December 1991, 809(1993) of 2 March 1993, 907(1994) of 29 March 1994, 973(1995) of 13 January 1995, 995(1995) of 26 May 1995, 1002(1995) of 30 June 1995, 1017(1995) of 22 September 1995, 1033(1995) of 19 December 1995 and 1042(1996) of 31 January 1996, as well as all General Assembly resolutions relating to the question of Western Sahara,

Recalling with satisfaction the entry into force of the ceasefire in Western Sahara on 6 September 1991, in accordance with the proposal of the Secretary-General, and stressing the importance it attaches to the maintenance of the ceasefire as an integral part of the settlement plan,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the United Nations towards the people of Western Sahara, as provided for in the settlement plan,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 1056(1996) of 29 May 1996, by which the Council decided to suspend the identification process and to reduce the military component of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara owing to the absence of progress in the implementation of the settlement plan,

Seriously concerned about the risks that this impasse has on the implementation process of the settlement plan for the holding of a free, fair and impartial referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara and on the peace and stability of the region,

Stressing the importance and usefulness of the resumption of direct talks between the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro in order to create an atmosphere of mutual confidence necessary for overcoming the obstacles to the implementation of the settlement plan,

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reiterates its support for further efforts of the Secretary-General for the organization and supervision by the United Nations, in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, of a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, in conformity with Security Council resolutions 658(1990) and 690(1991), by which the Council approved the settlement plan for Western Sahara;
3. Reaffirms that the goal on which all were agreed consists of the holding of a free, fair and impartial referendum for the people of Western Sahara, organized and conducted by the United Nations in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity and without any military or administrative constraints, in conformity with the settlement plan;

4. Expresses its serious concern about the persistence of obstacles to the implementation of the settlement plan;

5. Takes note of Security Council resolution 1056(1996), by which the Council decided to suspend the identification process and to reduce the military component of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara owing to the absence of progress in the implementation of the settlement plan;

6. Reaffirms the responsibility of the United Nations towards the people of Western Sahara, as provided for in the settlement plan, and in this regard fully subscribes to the commitment of the Security Council and the Secretary-General concerning the fulfilment of their respective mandates, consisting of the holding of a free, fair and impartial referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara;

7. Declares its conviction of the importance and usefulness of direct contacts between the two parties with a view to overcoming their differences and creating propitious conditions for a speedy and effective implementation of the settlement plan, and encourages in this regard the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro to start direct talks as soon as possible;

8. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to consider the situation in Western Sahara, bearing in mind the ongoing referendum process, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

13 December 1996 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/51/588) without vote, 28 October (meeting 8); 57-nation draft (A/C.4/51/L.4), orally revised; agenda item 19.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 4th Committee 2-5, 8; plenary 83.

UN Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

As at 10 January 1996 [S/1996/43 & Corr.1], the military component of MINURSO totalled 288 and the civilian police totalled 91. Pending fulfilment of the conditions necessary for commencement of the transitional period, the military mandate of MINURSO remained restricted to monitoring and verifying the ceasefire, which had gone into effect on 6 September 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 796]. By 1 November 1996 [S/1996/913], the military component had been reduced to 230, and the civilian police to 9, as requested by the Security Council in resolution 1056(1996).

In spite of the reduction, it had been possible to keep the number of ground patrols at the previous level and to maintain operational activities through an increase in helicopter reconnaissance flights. MINURSO reported that the ceasefire continued to hold, although there had been some technical violations, as well as an intensification of military activity on both sides, apparently aimed at ensuring combat readiness at the end of the current mandate. Civilian police continued to ensure the security of equipment and computerized information in Laayoune and Tindouf and provided escort and other assistance to MINURSO. By the beginning of November, civilian staff had been reduced from 410 to 170.

The Secretary-General stated that reductions in staff and administrative support had brought down the costs of MINURSO by approximately 40 per cent, from an original figure of $48,456,000 per annum to a revised appropriation of $30,132,000.

The tour of duty of Brigadier-General Andre Van Baelen (Belgium) as Force Commander of MINURSO ended on 31 March. Major-General Jose Leandro (Portugal) succeeded him on 1 April. Major-General Jorge Barroso De Moura (Portugal) replaced Major-General Leandro on 1 December.

Financing of MINURSO

In an April report [A/50/655/Add.1] on the financing of MINURSO, the Secretary-General proposed a budget for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 amounting to $52,335,000 gross ($48,456,000 net), a 22 per cent decrease in gross terms in comparison with the preceding 12-month period. The proposed budget provided for the maintenance of MINURSO at its authorized strength of 240 military observers, 160 civilian police observers and 48 military support personnel, plus a civilian component of 410 personnel (320 international and 90 local) and 12 observers from OAU.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) in April [A/50/939] recommended that the General Assembly approve the Secretary-General's proposal for the financing of MINURSO.

The Assembly adopted decision 50/446 B on 7 June, authorizing the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the maintenance of MINURSO from 1 July to 30 September 1996.

On 17 September, the Assembly, by decision 50/446 C, authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in an amount not to exceed $2.6 million gross ($2.5 million net) for the maintenance of MINURSO from 1 to 31 October.

Having reviewed the Secretary-General's June report and met with his representatives, ACABQ, in an October report [A/51/440], concurred with his recommendations for financing MINURSO.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/2 A.

Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, and its subsequent resolutions, the latest of which was resolution 1056(1996) of 29 May 1996, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission until 30 November 1996,

Recalling its resolution 45/266 of 17 May 1991 on the financing of the Mission, and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was decision 50/446 C of 17 September 1996,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Mission on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara as at 30 September 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 49,014,872 United States dollars, representing 20 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 30 September 1996, notes that some 18 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, particularly as regards the reimbursement of troop-contributing countries, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission promptly and in full;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara the amount of 27,962,500 dollars gross (25,480,500 dollars net), already authorized and assessed under the terms of General Assembly resolution 49/247 of 20 July 1995, for the operation of the Mission for the period from 1 February to 30 June 1996;

8. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 13,292,500 dollars gross (12,555,000 dollars net) for the operation of the Mission for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1996, inclusive of the amount of 526,835 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, and taking into account the amount of 7,816,100 dollars gross (6,846,350 dollars net) already authorized and assessed for the period from 1 July to 30 September 1996 by the Assembly in its decision 50/446 B of 7 June 1996, and the amount of 2.6 million dollars gross (2.5 million dollars net) already authorized for the period from 1 to 31 October 1996 by the Assembly in its decision 50/446 C;

9. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 7,816,100 dollars gross (6,846,350 dollars net) already apportioned under the terms of decision 50/446 B, to apportion the additional amount of 5,476,400 dollars gross (5,708,650 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1996 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1996, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

10. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, shall take into consideration the decrease in their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 232,250 dollars for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1996;

11. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 18,609,500 dollars gross (17,577,000 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 December 1996 to 30 June 1997, inclusive of the amount of 737,565 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be assessed on Member States at a monthly rate not to exceed 2,658,500 dollars gross

(2,511,000 dollars net), in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 30 November 1996;

12. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,032,500 dollars approved for the period from 1 December 1996 to 30 June 1997;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedures established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

14. Decides to keep the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara" under review during its fifty-first session.

17 October 1996 Meeting 38 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/502) without vote, 11 October (meeting 6); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.4), based on informal consultations; agenda item 126.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 3, 6; plenary 38.

Other questions

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

In 1996, the Security Council upheld sanctions imposed on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya under resolution 748(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 55] and strengthened under resolution 883(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 101], despite efforts by the League of Arab States (LAS) and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to have them lifted. The Security Council measures were intended to obtain the surrender for trial in the United Kingdom or the United States of two Libyan nationals suspected of involvement in the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, and Libya's cooperation with French authorities investigating the 1989 crash of Union de transport aériens (UTA) flight 772 in the Niger.

The sanctions covered air links with, provision of military supplies to, restriction on diplomatic and consular personnel of, and restrictions on suspected terrorist nationals of Libya. Funds held in other States by the Libyan Government or Libyan enterprises were frozen in 1993.

Libya, in a number of letters to the Security Council, said that the sanctions were unfair and that the reasons for their imposition were not valid.

Communications. Libya, on 31 January [S/1996/73], transmitted a 27 January letter from the Secretary of the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to the Security Council President, stating that the United States was repeating false claims that Libya posed a threat to its national security and foreign policies, and that Libya's failure to comply with Security Council resolutions 731(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 53] and 748(1992) constituted a threat to international peace and security. Denying those claims, Libya requested the Security Council to form a committee to study the truth of the claims; to ascertain that there were no camps on Libyan territory used for training terrorists, as the United States had alleged; and to conduct an independent inquiry to arrive at the truth concerning the bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie. Libya demanded the suspension of the sanctions imposed by Council resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993), until the results of the investigation were published.

France, the United Kingdom and the United States transmitted to the Secretary-General a 21 March declaration [A/51/84-S/1996/211] expressing their regret at Libya's non-compliance with Council resolutions, and stating they would review implementation of the sanctions with a view to strengthening their impact through full and rigorous application. The results of their investigation would be reported to the Council's Sanctions Committee. The three States requested that, in accordance with the resolutions, those accused of the bombing of Pan Am flight 103 be tried in Scotland or the United States and that satisfactory answers be given to French requests on the bombing of UTA flight 772.

On 2 April [S/1996/236], Libya rejected the declaration of the three States and said that the majority of Security Council members had supported the LAS proposal that the two suspects be tried at the International Court of Justice (ICJ) before Scottish judges and in accordance with Scottish law. It said that the three States had been unable to find any reasonable grounds to support their accusations of terrorism against Libya. Libya called on the Security Council to find a solution to the dispute that would take into account both the interests of the victims' families and those of the Libyan people.

On 19 March [S/1996/209], Libya forwarded to the Secretary-General the text of a resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of OAU on the dispute between Libya and the United States, the United Kingdom and France. Deploing the sanctions against Libya despite its efforts to meet the conditions set for lifting them, the Ministers requested the Secretary-General to contact his counterpart in LAS with a view to organizing a joint meeting of the OAU Ministerial Committee of Five on Libya and the Arab League Committee of Seven on Libya so that they could work towards adopting a common strategy leading to a peaceful and quick resolution of the crisis.

The United Arab Emirates on 6 April [A/50/911-S/1996/239] transmitted the text of a resolution adopted by the Council of LAS on 21 March on coercive measures and threats by the United States, the United Kingdom and France against Libya. Expressing support for Libya's efforts to arrive at a peaceful solution of the crisis, the Council decided to continue to adhere to its 1994 proposal [YUN 1994, p. 129] that the two suspects in the Lockerbie crash be given a fair trial by Scottish judges, in conformity with Scottish law, at the seat of ICJ in The Hague, Netherlands. It also urged that sanctions against Libya be lifted, and supported Libya's right to obtain compensation for the losses and human damage it had sustained as a result of the Security Council action.

A joint meeting of the LAS Ministerial Committee of Seven and the OAU Ministerial Committee of Five, held on 11 April, issued a statement on the crisis between Libya and certain Western States, the text of which was forwarded to the Secretary-General on 17 April [A/50/938-S/1996/302] by the United Arab Emirates and on 21 May [S/1996/369] by LAS. The members of the Committees affirmed that the dangers resulting from the insistence of the Western countries concerned on the continued imposition of sanctions could pose threats to regional and international peace and security. They urged the Security Council to use their proposal for a legal settlement at ICJ headquarters as a basis for resolving the crisis with a view to lifting the sanctions.

Libya, on 24 June [S/1996/466], transmitted to the Security Council President a paragraph of the final communique adopted by the Arab Summit in Cairo, Egypt, on 23 June. With regard to the sanctions against Libya, the leaders at the Summit considered that the lack of response to the endeavours of Libya, LAS, OAU, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference had delayed a solution to the crisis and increased the suffering of the Libyan people. They considered the LAS proposal for a trial to be held at ICJ as a practical and appropriate solution and called on the three Western countries concerned to be receptive to it.

Support for the LAS proposal for a trial at ICJ and for the lifting of sanctions was expressed by the OAU Council of Ministers in a resolution of 5 July, which was forwarded to the Security Council President by Libya on 18 July [S/1996/569].

In a 17 September resolution, the LAS Council reiterated its support for the trial proposal and for the right of Libya to seek compensation for the losses sustained as a result of sanctions. The resolution was forwarded to the Security Council President by Libya on 23 September [S/1996/785].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

At a meeting on 18 April, the President of the Security Council made the following statement [S/PRST/1996/18] on behalf of the members:

On 16 April 1996, a Libyan-registered aircraft flew from Tripoli, Libya, to Jeddah, Saudi Arabia. The Security Council considers this clear violation of Council resolution 748(1992) of 31 March 1992 as totally unacceptable and calls on Libya to refrain from any further such violations. It recalls that arrangements have been made consistent with resolution 748(1992) in order to fly Libyan pilgrims to perform the Hajj. The Council will review the matter should further violations occur.

The Council has requested the Committee established pursuant to resolution 748(1992) to draw to the attention of Member States their obligations under resolution 748(1992) in the event that Libyan-registered aircraft land in their territory.

Meeting number. SC 3655.

Further communications (May-September).

Libya, in a 7 May letter [S/1996/342] to the Security Council President, said that for more than a month United States officials, including Secretary of Defense William Perry, had indicated that their Government was preparing for military action against Libya on the pretext of preventing it from producing chemical weapons at a plant under construction near the town of Tarhunah. Libya denied that allegation. Recalling that the United States had used brutal aggression against it in 1986, Libya wished to alert the international community to the hostile intentions of the United States towards the Libyan people and to the threat posed by them to peace and security in the Arab world and the Mediterranean region.

In a letter of 22 July [S/1996/588] to the Security Council President, the Leader of the Great Revolution of 1 September of Libya, Colonel Muammar Qaddafi, stated that he had avoided air travel since the embargo against his country was imposed, and affirmed the right of heads of State to travel to and from Libya by air using their own aircraft. He stated that members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, OAU and LAS were threatening to abandon their compliance with the Security Council resolutions against Libya, having become convinced of the justice of Libya's cause. In a further communication of 15 August [S/1996/670], Colonel Qaddafi said that there had been a negative statement by the President of the Security Council on 31 July in response to his affirmation of Libya's right to use air transport in travelling to other countries in fulfilment of Libya's international obligations and of the right of other leaders to use their own aircraft while visiting Libya.

In a letter of 30 July [S/1996/609], Libya referred to a speech by United States President William Clinton, in which he had urged the international community to impose sanctions on Libya and other countries, claiming that they sponsored terrorism. Rejecting those accusations as unsubstantiated, Libya noted that it had requested the UN Secretary-General to send a mission to verify that there were no activities in Libyan territory linked with terrorism; however, the United States had obstructed the dispatch of such a mission.

On 4 September [S/1996/717], Libya transmitted to the Secretary-General its sixth report on damage caused by the implementation of Security Council resolutions 748(1992) and 883(1993), covering the period from 15 April 1992 to 31 December 1995. It claimed that its financial losses totalled more than $18 billion.

Sanctions Committee

The Committee on Sanctions against Libya, established pursuant to Security Council resolution 748(1992), issued a report [S/1996/1079] on 31 December covering its activities since the beginning of 1996. During the year, the Committee held eight meetings and reviewed more than 100 communications relating to the implementation of the sanctions, as well as a comparable number of replies.

The Committee approved 63 emergency medical evacuation flights in 1996, compared to 42 in 1995. At a meeting in July, it approved further procedures concerning the authorization and monitoring of medical evacuation flights from Libya and the related issue of maintenance and supply of spare parts for the four pre-designated air ambulances.

On 8 March, the Committee approved a request from Egypt for 45 flights on Egypt Air from Cairo to Tripoli and Benghazi and on to Jeddah, as well as return flights, for transporting Libyan pilgrims to perform the Hajj. As it had done the previous year, the Committee approved the Egyptian request with certain conditions, including inspection of the aircraft to ensure that they were operating exclusively for declared humanitarian purposes. On 18 April, the Security Council issued a statement (see above) in which it said that the 16 April flight of a Libyan-registered aircraft from Tripoli to Jeddah was a violation of resolution 748(1992).

At a meeting on 5 July, the Committee reviewed two notes verbales dated 27 June and 28

June from Egypt and Libya, respectively; it considered the fact that a Libyan-registered aircraft had flown from Tripoli to Cairo on 22 June (transporting the Libyan head of State to the Arab Summit) and back to Tripoli on 23 June. The Committee, having decided that the flights were serious violations of resolution 748(1992), demanded that Libya refrain from any further such actions and added that if a further violation occurred, it would consider recommendations to the Council on ways to increase the effectiveness of the sanctions.

The Security Council on several occasions considered in informal consultations a 22 July letter [S/1996/588] from Libya regarding air travel by the head of State (see above). The Council members concurred with the President's proposal to make a statement to the press recalling the terms of resolution 748(1992), and to indicate that the Chairman of the Sanctions Committee had stated that if a future violation occurred, the Committee would consider strengthening the effectiveness of the sanctions. The Council members urged the Libyan authorities not to pursue its intentions as stated in the letter.

During the year, the Council undertook three reviews (21 March, 19 July and 15 November) to determine Libya's compliance with the provisions of resolution 748(1992) calling for information on the two aeroplane crashes and a halt to terrorist activity. On those three occasions, the members found that conditions did not exist for modifying the sanctions.

France, the United Kingdom and the United States, in a letter of 19 July [S/1996/606] to the Chairman of the Sanctions Committee, reviewed the effectiveness of the sanctions. Inquiries by the three Governments had revealed that in certain cities, the number of diplomats stationed at Libyan diplomatic missions had increased since 1993, in violation of the sanctions. In certain cities, including Amman, Jordan, and Cairo, offices of the Libyan Arab Airlines remained open. It was also noted that a number of Governments had not complied with provisions of resolution 748(1992) requiring them to inform the Secretary-General of measures taken to uphold the resolution's terms.

1986 attack against Libya

The General Assembly on 16 December 1996 adopted decision 51/432, by which it deferred consideration of the agenda item "Declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the aerial and naval military attack against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the present United States Administration in April 1986" and included it in the provisional agenda of its next (fifty-second) session.

The 15 April 1986 incident was the subject of a 12 April 1996 letter [S/1996/279] from Libya, which said that the United States bombing of Libya and its attempt to assassinate the Libyan head of State should be condemned by the Security Council. Libya continued to wait for the Council to follow up with regard to Libya's right to compensation, in line with General Assembly resolution 41/38 of 20 November 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 257].

Mozambique

The United Nations Operation in Mozambique (ONUMOZ) was formally ended on 31 January 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 367] after more than two years in operation, signalling the successful implementation of the 1992 Rome General Peace Agreement [YUN 1992, p. 193] between Mozambique and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana (RENAMO).

On 16 September 1996, the General Assembly, by decision 50/499, decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-first (1996) session an item on financing of the liquidation of ONUMOZ.

In decision 51/462 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that that agenda item would remain for consideration during the resumed fifty-first session in 1997.

Mayotte

Although the question of the Comorian island of Mayotte remained on the agenda of the General Assembly in 1996, the Assembly took no action on it. Mayotte—one of four islands of the Comoro Archipelago in the Indian Ocean—had been on the Assembly's agenda since 1975, when the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros acceded to independence from France. France, however, continued to administer Mayotte.

By decision 50/493 of 16 September 1996, the Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-first (1996) session an item on the question of the Comorian island of Mayotte. On 16 December, by decision 51/436, it deferred consideration of that item and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second (1997) session.

Cameroon-Nigeria

In February 1996, Cameroonian and Nigerian troops were involved in a border clash in the disputed Bakassi Peninsula, which resulted in several casualties. The issue of the land and maritime boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria in that area had been brought before ICJ by Cameroon in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1281], and the Court remained seized of the case in 1996 (see PART FOUR, Chapter I). The Secretary-General called on the parties to the dispute to show restraint and to withdraw their troops from the border areas so that the necessary conditions for the peaceful settlement of their dispute could be created. He sent a fact-finding mission to the region, and the two countries expressed readiness to find ways to reduce tension in the disputed area and to improve relations between them while the dispute was under ICJ consideration. In a series of letters to the Security Council, each State claimed that the other had mounted attacks against its troops.

Communications. On 22 February [S/1996/125], Cameroon said that since 3 February Nigerian troops had been advancing further into Cameroonian territory and launching artillery attacks on Cameroonian positions, causing loss of life and considerable material damage. It requested the Security Council to urge Nigeria to withdraw to positions occupied prior to its 21 December 1993 military aggression, and to ask the Secretary-General to report on the situation and latest incidents in the Bakassi Peninsula. In a protest note to Nigeria of 28 January, Cameroon reaffirmed its willingness to work for the maintenance of peace in the Bakassi Peninsula while awaiting the ICJ judgement. Cameroon also informed Nigeria of its decision to prohibit all fishing activity in the area of military hostilities because of risks to the civilian population.

Nigeria, on 26 February [S/1996/140], called the Cameroonian allegations unfounded. It pointed out that the Bakassi Peninsula had historically been Nigerian territory and that over 95 per cent of the inhabitants of the Peninsula were Nigerians. It stated that the Cameroonians had instigated attacks on the Nigerian population in the Bakassi, the latest of which occurred on 3 February. Expressing its belief that the best option for resolving the dispute was through negotiation, Nigeria mentioned that the Foreign Ministers of the two countries had met on 16 February in Kara, Togo, and had signed a communique agreeing to stop hostilities. It said that the Cameroonian aggression seemed to be aimed at forcing a decision on the Peninsula question in its favour regardless of the ongoing ICJ process.

The President of the Security Council, at the request of the Council members, addressed identical letters [S/1996/150] to Cameroon and Nigeria on 29 February, stating that the resumption of fighting on the Bakassi Peninsula threatened regional peace and stability and that the Council members regretted the loss of life and destruction suffered by civilians there. The President warned that neither side should take any unilateral action, particularly the use of force, to complicate the dispute settlement process. Council members welcomed the Secretary-General's proposal to send a fact-finding mission to the Peninsula and urged the two Governments to cooperate fully with that mission.

Cameroon, on 7 March [S/1996/184], welcomed the dispatch of a mission of inquiry to the Bakassi. On 12 April [S/1996/287], it welcomed the protective measures that ICJ had recently decreed in connection with the dispute, adding that the return of forces to positions held prior to the submission of the case to ICJ was the only way to ensure peace in the region. Cameroon hoped that the Secretary-General's mission would investigate the military positions of the two sides since ICJ had become seized of the matter; construction by Nigeria on the Peninsula; and the number of oil deposits, their ownership and the extent of their exploitation.

On 30 April [S/1996/330], Cameroon said that Nigerian troops had attacked Cameroonian positions from 21 to 24 April, taking new territory inside Cameroon's international border. Cameroon urged the Secretary-General to expedite the fact-finding mission to the Bakassi Peninsula. As a result of the fighting, more than 700 people had been displaced and more than 120 soldiers were being held by Nigeria.

The Secretary-General, on 24 May [S/1996/390], informed the Council President that the two countries had agreed to receive the mission. He had dispatched his Special Envoy, Lakhdar Brahimi, to meet with the two heads of State. President Paul Biya of Cameroon had said that his country would abide by any ICJ decision and would welcome a fact-finding mission. He also suggested that UN military observers be stationed in the area to help prevent confrontations. The head of State of Nigeria, General Sani Abacha, while indicating his preference for a bilateral solution to the dispute, recognized that a UN mission could help in that regard. The President of the Security Council, on 29 May [S/1996/391], asked the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of any measures he was able to take to monitor the situation in the Peninsula.

On 9 October [S/1996/891], the Secretary-General informed the Council President that he had obtained the agreement of the two Governments to sending a goodwill mission to improve relations between the two countries while the dispute regarding the Bakassi Peninsula was under ICJ consideration. Its mandate would be to suggest confidence-building measures to reduce tensions. The mission visited Yaounde, Cameroon, and Abuja, Nigeria, in September, where it consulted the authorities of the two countries. After travelling to areas of the Bakassi Peninsula controlled by both sides, it revisited the two capitals for further consultations.

The mission reported that each side had proposed specific measures to reduce military tensions and regarding cooperation in the economic and cultural fields. The Secretary-General intended to study those proposals. Council members expressed support for the mission in a 31 October letter [S/1996/892] to the Secretary-General, and looked forward to future reports of progress towards settling the dispute.

On 12 December [S/1996/1052], Cameroon protested that Nigeria was implementing electrification and drinking-water supply projects in Cameroonian territory occupied by Nigerian troops. That was contrary to Nigeria's intention, as expressed in September to the UN goodwill mission, to work for peace on the Bakassi Peninsula pending a judgement by ICJ.

Eritrea-Yemen

By a letter of 2 January [S/1996/1], Yemen reiterated charges it had made in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 413] that Eritrea had carried out an armed attack against the Yemeni island of Hanish al-Kubra, located in the international navigation channel in the Red Sea. The latest aggression, according to Yemen, had begun on 15 December 1995 and resulted in the occupation of the island, the capture of 186 Yemeni soldiers and the death of all other members of the island's Yemeni garrison. A month earlier, Yemen said, Eritrean forces had delivered a written warning, asserting that the island belonged to Eritrea and demanding the withdrawal of the Yemeni garrison, which at that time comprised roughly 20 soldiers, and of a commercial investor constructing tourist diving facilities and holding a Yemeni government permit. Yemen said that at a meeting of their Foreign Ministers in Asmara on 7 December 1995, Eritrea had broadened its claims, asserting sovereignty over all the Yemeni islands from Jabal al-Tayr to south of Hanish al-Kubra, and had suggested that the case be referred to ICJ. Yemen called on Eritrea to release Yemeni prisoners, to withdraw from the island and to begin immediate direct negotiations with a view to reaching a comprehensive settlement of the maritime boundary between the two countries.

Eritrea and Yemen reached an agreement, which was signed in Paris on 21 May 1996 and which the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council [S/1996/447] on 18 June. They agreed to settle peacefully their dispute on questions of territorial sovereignty and delimitation of maritime boundaries. To that end, they would establish an Arbitral Tribunal, and they committed themselves to abide by its decision. In the meantime, they would refrain from any form of military activity against each other. Both parties would meet in Paris to draft an agreement instituting the Arbitral Tribunal. Until arrangements were finalized, the Government of France would propose a monitoring mechanism to evaluate military activity.

The Secretary-General issued a statement on 15 August, appealing for maximum restraint on both sides and for their cooperation to calm the situation and facilitate the implementation of the 21 May agreement.

On 17 August [S/1996/671], Yemen complained to the Security Council President of new Eritrean aggression on Yemen's Lesser Hanish island, in violation of the 21 May agreement and the subsequent agreement on technical arrangements between the two parties and France. France had reported to the Secretary-General, based on information received from its observers in the Red Sea, that Eritrea had committed aggression and had occupied positions on Lesser Hanish island. While reaffirming its commitment to the 21 May agreement, Yemen urged the Security Council to condemn the aggression and to compel Eritrea to evacuate Lesser Hanish island. Yemen reserved its right to defend its territory by all possible means.

On 19 August [S/1996/677], Yemen informed the Security Council that the Eritrean Government had notified France that it would withdraw its forces from Lesser Hanish island within a few days. Yemen remained committed to the 21 May agreement and to the negotiations being held under the auspices of France with a view to reaching agreement on arbitration. Despite Eritrea's pledge, Yemen remained concerned as to the possibility of deception on the part of Eritrea, particularly since its undertaking to remove its military presence was not linked to any deadline. Yemen requested the Council to compel Eritrea to evacuate the island within the next few days, and to continue to consider the matter until the island was cleared of Eritrean military.

Eritrea confirmed in a 22 August letter [S/1996/686] its decision to evacuate Lesser Hanish island, but warned that Yemen intended to occupy it when Eritrea withdrew. If that happened, it would precipitate a dangerous situation; therefore Eritrea called for guarantees to avert such an eventuality. In a statement of 22 August [S/1996/687], Eritrea described the talks it had held with a French delegation on 18 August on the misunderstandings over the Lesser Hanish island. At those talks, Eritrea had not received convincing evidence to refute its presence on the islands, but it had agreed to evacuate the Lesser Hanish island within a short time in the interests of peace and security in the region. Yemen had responded irresponsibly, Eritrea said, by firing at Eritrean forces on the islands.

Yemen, in a 24 September statement [A/51/413], raised another issue regarding its relations with Eritrea, stating that the President of Eritrea had falsely accused Yemeni authorities of searching the diplomatic bag of the Eritrean Embassy in Yemen.

The Council of the League of Arab States (LAS), at a meeting on 14 September, adopted a statement concerning the dispute between Eritrea and Yemen, which was transmitted to the Secretary-General on 24 September [S/1996/796]. Commending Yemen's position in addressing the crisis and the Security Council's demand for a return to the situation prevailing prior to August 1996, the LAS Council affirmed its support for the 21 May agreement signed by the two countries and for France's efforts to find a peaceful settlement of the dispute.

Cooperation between OAU and the UN system

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1995 General Assembly request [YUN 1995, p. 416], reported in September 1996 [A/51/386] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU). The Secretary-General noted that the OAU Chairman, President Meles Zenawi of Ethiopia, in a message of 27 September 1995 to the General Assembly, had called for the international community to lend its support to African initiatives in the areas of prevention, management and resolution of conflicts, and economic growth and development. The Secretary-General continued to consult with the OAU Secretary-General on all African issues of common concern to the two organizations during meetings in New York and during the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government, in Yaounde, Cameroon, from 8 to 10 July 1996 [A/51/524].

The Secretary-General reviewed cooperation and the exchange of information between the two organizations in the field of economic and social development, which involved the Centre for Human Rights of the UN Secretariat, the Economic Commission for Africa, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Monetary Fund and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. Cooperation in other areas was extended by the International Civil Aviation Organization, the International Maritime Organization and the World Intellectual Property Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/151.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations on regional arrangements or agencies, which set forth the basic principles governing their activities and establishing the legal framework for cooperation with the United Nations in the area of the maintenance of international peace and security, as well as resolution 49/57 of 9 December 1994, the annex to which contains the Declaration on the Enhancement of Cooperation between the United Nations and Regional Arrangements or Agencies in the Maintenance of International Peace and Security,

Recalling also the agreement of 15 November 1965 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity as updated and signed on 9 October 1990 by the Secretaries-General of the two organizations,

Recalling further its resolutions on the enhancement of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, in particular resolutions 43/12 of 25 October 1988, 43/27 of 18 November 1988, 44/17 of 1 November 1989, 45/13 of 7 November 1990, 46/20 of 26 November 1991, 47/148 of 18 December 1992, 48/25 of 29 November 1993, 49/64 of 15 December 1994 and 50/158 of 21 December 1995,

Recalling that, in its resolutions 46/20, 47/148 and 48/25, it, inter alia, urged the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the relevant agencies of the United Nations system to extend their support for the establishment of the African Economic Community,

Recalling also its resolution 48/214 of 23 December 1993 on the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s,

Taking note of the resolutions, decisions and declarations adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its sixty-fourth ordinary session, held at Yaounde from 1 to 5 July 1996, and by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-second ordinary session, held at Yaounde from 8 to 10 July 1996,

Considering the important statement made by the Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity before the General Assembly on 24 October 1996,

Mindful of the need for continued and closer cooperation between the United Nations and its specialized agencies and the Organization of African Unity, in particular in the political, economic, social, technical, cultural and administrative fields,

Noting that the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity is developing its capacity in preventive diplomacy,

Also noting the efforts of the Organization of African Unity, and the support and assistance of the United Nations, to promote the peaceful settlement of disputes and conflicts in Africa and the harmonious continuation of the process of democratization,

Deeply concerned that, despite the policies of reform being implemented by most African countries, their economic situation remains critical and African recovery and development continue to be severely hindered by the persistence of lower-level commodity prices, the heavy debt burden and the paucity of funding possibilities,

Aware of the efforts being made by the Organization of African Unity and its States members in the area of economic integration and of the need to accelerate the process of implementation of the African Economic Community,

Deeply concerned about the gravity of the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Africa and the urgent need for increased international assistance to help refugees and, subsequently, African countries of asylum,

Acknowledging the assistance already rendered by the international community, in particular to refugees, displaced persons and African countries of asylum,

Recognizing the importance of developing and maintaining a culture of peace, tolerance and harmonious relationships in order to contribute to the prevention of conflicts and wars in Africa,

Taking note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly for the Mid-term Review of the Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and of his efforts to strengthen that cooperation and to implement the relevant resolutions;

2. Notes with appreciation the continued and increasing participation of the Organization of African Unity in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and its constructive contribution to that work;

3. Calls upon the United Nations organs, in particular the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, to continue to involve the Organization of African Unity closely in all their activities concerning Africa;

4. Welcomes the fact that both the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity have agreed to strengthen and broaden their cooperation in measures to prevent and resolve conflicts in Africa, and in this regard invites the United Nations to provide the Organization of African Unity with the necessary support for the consolidation and promotion of a culture of peace, tolerance and harmonious relationships in Africa;

5. Calls upon the United Nations to coordinate its efforts and to cooperate with the Organization of African Unity in the context of the pacific settlement of disputes and the maintenance of international peace and security in Africa, as provided for under Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations;

6. Commends the efforts of the Organization of African Unity to strengthen its capacity in the field of conflict resolution and to operationalize its Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution in Africa;

7. Also commends the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity for their ongoing cooperative activities in the resolution of conflicts in Africa, and stresses the need to enhance and strengthen the existing pattern of exchange of information and consultations, especially in the areas of preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peacekeeping operations;

8. Invites the United Nations to assist the Organization of African Unity in strengthening its institutional and operational capacity in the prevention, management and resolution of conflicts in Africa, in particular in the following areas:

- (a) Establishment of an early-warning system;
- (b) Technical assistance and training of personnel, including a staff exchange programme;
- (c) Exchange and coordination of information between their respective early-warning systems;
- (d) Logistical support;
- (e) Mobilization of financial support;

9. Urges the United Nations to enhance its cooperation with, and facilitate the participation of, the Organization of African Unity in its preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peacekeeping operations and in joint fact-finding missions in Africa, by providing technical assistance and secondments and assisting in the mobilization of financial and logistical support;

10. Also urges the United Nations to encourage donor countries, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, to provide adequate funding and training for African countries in their efforts to enhance their peacekeeping capabilities, with a view to enabling those countries to participate actively in peacekeeping operations within the framework of the United Nations;

11. Notes with appreciation the assistance provided by the United Nations and its agencies to African countries in the context of the democratization process;

12. Urges the United Nations to continue to support the Organization of African Unity in its efforts to manage a peaceful democratic transition in Africa, in particular in the areas of education for democracy, election observation, human rights and freedom, including technical support to the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights;

13. Urges all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, as well as non-governmental organizations, to provide the necessary and appropriate economic, financial and technical assistance to refugees and displaced persons, as well as to the African countries of asylum, taking into account recent disquieting developments in this respect;

14. Commends the continued efforts of the Organization of African Unity to promote multilateral cooperation and economic integration among African States, and requests the United Nations agencies to continue to support those efforts;

15. Stresses that the economic, technical and development assistance provided to Africa by the organizations of the United Nations system must continue, and emphasizes the current need for those organizations to accord priority to Africa in this field;

16. Urges the Secretary-General, Member States, regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, and non-governmental organizations to extend their support to the operations of the African Economic Community and to assist in economic integration and cooperation in Africa, in particular the strengthening of the regional economic communities, the preparation of the protocols to the Treaty Establishing the African Economic Community, its popularization and the strengthening of its institutional support;

17. Requests the agencies of the United Nations system working in Africa to include in their programmes at the national and regional levels activities that will enhance regional cooperation in their respective areas and to facilitate the realization of the objectives of the Treaty Establishing the African Economic Community;

18. Calls upon the United Nations agencies to intensify the coordination of their regional programmes in Africa in order to create interlinkages among them and to ensure the harmonization of their programmes with those of the African regional and subregional economic organizations;

19. Emphasizes the urgency of the need to adopt appropriate measures to ensure the effective implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, in particular regarding (a) economic reforms, including the effective mobilization and efficient utilization of domestic resources, (b) promotion of the private sector and foreign direct investment, (c) intensification of the democratic process and the strengthening of civil society, (d) environment and development, (e) resource flows, (f) solution of Africa's debt problem, (g) trade facilitation and market access, (h) diversification of African economies, (i) improvement of physical and institutional infrastructure and social and human resource development and (j) women in development;

20. Urges all States and international subregional and regional organizations actively to implement the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly for the Mid-term Review of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, as adopted by the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

21. Invites the Secretary-General to associate the Organization of African Unity closely with the follow-up and monitoring of the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, including the conduct of the final review of its implementation in the year 2002;

22. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations to work closely with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity on the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, and requests that it be given prominence at the annual meeting of the two organizations;

23. Recalls its resolution 48/214, in paragraph 10 of which it invited the Secretary-General to follow up and promote the responses of the United Nations system and the international community to the development concerns of Africa, as expressed in the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s;

24. Takes note with appreciation of the recommendations of the meeting between the secretariats of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations held at Addis Ababa from 6 to 9 November 1995, and requests the convening of a follow-up meeting in 1997, at Addis Ababa, to review and evaluate the progress made in the implementation of the recommendations agreed at the 1995 meeting and to adopt new and effective joint action;

25. Calls upon the relevant organs of the United Nations system to ensure the effective, fair and equitable representation of Africa at senior and policy levels at their respective headquarters and in their regional field operations;

26. Requests the relevant organs of the United Nations system to continue to assist the Organization of African Unity in strengthening its capacity for information gathering, analysis and dissemination through the training of personnel and the mobilization of technical and financial assistance;

27. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen and improve follow-up, monitoring and evaluation of the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa;

28. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution and on the development of cooperation between the Organization of African Unity and the organizations of the United Nations system.

General Assembly resolution 51/151

13 December 1996      Meeting 84      Adopted without vote

Draft by the Congo (A/51/L.19/Rev.1); agenda item 42.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: plenary 67, 84.

Chapter III

Americas

At the end of 1996, Central America looked forward to a regional situation without armed conflict for the first time in more than three decades, with the signing on 29 December of the Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace by the parties to the conflict in Guatemala and the final phase of implementing the 1992 El Salvador agreement.

The Guatemala Agreement crowned the peace negotiations in that country, which during the year brought about the cessation of hostilities and a number of other agreements, including those on social and economic aspects and the agrarian situation, the strengthening of civilian power and the role of the armed forces in a democratic society, constitutional reforms and the electoral regime, and the legal integration of opposition forces. The UN verification mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA) reported improvement in the human rights situation there.

Further progress was achieved in the peace process in El Salvador as well; in May, the Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador (MINUSAL) was replaced by a smaller United Nations Office of Verification (ONUV), which continued to oversee implementation of outstanding provisions of the peace accords in that country and concluded its mandate on 31 December.

The process of transition to a democratic society in Nicaragua was consolidated further with the holding of general elections in October.

The political situation also continued to improve in Haiti. On 1 July, the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH) was succeeded by the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti (UNSMIH), established in accordance with the Security Council's June resolution to assist in the Government's efforts to professionalize the police and maintain a secure and stable environment conducive to the success of those efforts. In December, the mandate of UNSMIH was extended for a final period, until 31 May 1997. In addition, the United Nations continued its participation in the International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH), operated jointly with the Organization of American States (OAS) and charged with monitoring the human rights situation.

The International Civil Aviation Organization investigated the shooting down of two civilian aircraft by the Cuban airforce, and in July the Security Council condemned the use of weapons against civil aircraft in flight; at the same time, it reaffirmed the principle that States should prohibit the use of civil aircraft under their jurisdiction for purposes inconsistent with the 1944 Chicago Convention on International Civil Aviation.

The General Assembly later in the year considered the ongoing United States economic embargo against Cuba. In other action, the Assembly reiterated its support for Panama's initiative to convene in 1997 a Universal Congress on the Panama Canal to examine the role the Canal should play in the twenty-first century, and adopted resolutions on strengthening UN cooperation with OAS and the Caribbean Community (CARICOM).

Central America

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/132 [YUN 1995, p. 421], the Secretary-General reported [A/51/338] on 9 September 1996 on the situation in Central America, covering the progress achieved since October 1995 by Central American countries in the areas of peace, freedom, democracy and development.

The Secretary-General observed that, with the successful resolution of peace negotiations in Guatemala, Central America could find itself without armed conflict for the first time in more than three decades, which, along with other circumstances, would place it in a favourable position to pursue economic growth, social justice and further democratization. However, noting the gravity of the challenges still facing the region, he urged the Central American countries and the international community to remain fully engaged in the consolidation of peace, and expressed his readiness to continue to play the active role in that process entrusted to him by the General Assembly.

The report noted continued efforts to strengthen democratic institutions and to bring military and public security bodies under the control of civilian authorities. The offices of the ombudsmen for human rights in El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras were consolidating their presence, with their actions reinforced by pressure from non-governmental organizations (NGOs) for vigilance and accountability in that area. In El Salvador, a National Council on Public Security was established in January 1996 to advise the President. In Honduras, steps were taken to create a civilian police force, reduce the size of the military and replace mandatory military service with a system of voluntary enlistment. In Guatemala, efforts were launched to streamline the security forces, while the joint declaration on cessation of hostilities by the parties to the conflict brought within reach the prospect of a firm and lasting peace. The process of broadening national consensus continued in Panama, where in 1996 a "Panama 2000" meeting of political forces and representatives of civil society pledged to keep outside partisan political considerations issues related to the transfer of the Panama Canal to exclusive Panamanian control after 31 December 1999, to reinforce the rule of law and to hold transparent elections in 1999. In Nicaragua, a compromise was found on the divisive property issue, on the conduct of the campaign for the October elections and on key official appointments, including the President of the Supreme Electoral Council. At the same time, throughout the region, institutions responsible for public security continued to be confronted by alarming levels of common criminality, rooted in poor economic and social conditions of a large proportion of the population, combined with difficulties in reintegrating former combatants and those displaced by conflict.

The vigour and assertiveness of civil society in Central America was manifest, according to the report, in the diversification of political processes as issue-oriented organizations and professional associations provided new channels for political participation. Macroeconomic stabilization within the region was largely maintained through structural adjustment programmes and economic liberalization policies, which resulted in reasonably moderate growth prospects for 1996 but was accompanied by a decline in social conditions, with little advance in the alleviation of widespread poverty or in the creation of employment. At the same time, the period under review saw further consolidation of a new regional strategy within the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, adopted in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 389]. In December 1995, the Central American Presidents launched the second phase of the Alliance, and, at their eighteenth summit meeting (Montelimar, Nicaragua, 8-9 May 1996), reaffirmed their commitments in that regard, stressing in particular the development of tourism. Within the framework of the Alliance, a number of regional institutions increased their activities, including the Central American Integration System, the Central American Parliament, the Central American Bank for Economic Integration and the Central American Court of Justice. Economic integration, however, remained more difficult to secure than integration in other areas, due to a potential for conflict between regional and national priorities. The Permanent Secretariat of the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration considered that imbalances in trade accounts with third countries had to be reverted in order for commercial liberalization to favour regional integration, and deemed necessary the adoption of measures aimed at reinforcing the intraregional free trade area; the joint participation of Central American countries in trade negotiations with third countries; the convergence of macroeconomic policies; the enhancing of the region's infrastructure; and the strengthening of investment.

Also in December 1995, the Central American Presidents approved a framework treaty on democratic security in Central America [YUN 1995, p. 424], which defined the Central American Democratic Security Model as based on the supremacy and strengthening of the power of civil society, a reasonable balance of forces and the security of individuals and their property; elimination of poverty, promotion of sustainable development and protection of the environment; eradication of violence, corruption, impunity, terrorism and trafficking in drugs and arms; and the increasing channelling of resources into social investment. The Central American Security Commission, composed of the Deputy Ministers for Foreign Affairs, Defence and Public Security or Government, was given an important role in implementing confidence-building measures, establishing a regional security information and communications mechanism and a weapons registration and transfer system, and setting up a standardized register of weapons, explosives and equipment for the exclusive use of the armed or public security forces. The framework treaty also provided for prior notification of certain military manoeuvres, movements or exercises and for invitation of observers to such activities. In addition, the Central American countries consistently underscored the need to settle their territorial disputes through dialogue; those concerned land pockets along the border between Honduras and El Salvador and the demarcation of waters in the Gulf of Fonseca shared by Honduras, El Salvador and Nicaragua (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

The report further described international assistance for Central American efforts to promote peace, freedom, democracy and development. It noted activities of the Group of Friends of the Guatemalan Peace Process (Colombia, Mexico, Norway, Spain, United States, Venezuela) and of the support group to follow the transition process and internal consensus-building in Nicaragua (Canada, Mexico, Netherlands, Spain, Sweden), and pointed out that political dialogue and economic cooperation with the European Union (EU) were enhanced at the twelfth meeting of the "San Jose Process" (Florence, Italy, 21-22 March) between the Foreign Ministers of Central America, the EU and the Group of Three (Colombia, Mexico, Venezuela). The meeting established new objectives for EU-Central American cooperation, aimed at supporting Central American integration, institutional modernization and consolidation of the rule of law, as well as social policies and national policies to soften the social costs of structural adjustment programmes. The report noted the establishment of a mechanism for dialogue between Central America and Mexico at their presidential summit (San Jose, Costa Rica, 15-16 February); the extension of the partial scope agreements between Mexico and El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras for the purpose of creating a free trade zone; the setting up of a high-level commission to promote free trade, cooperation and investment between Chile and Central America; and an offer by the United States to negotiate an extension of tariff exemptions for Central American export products and to extend its cooperation in environmental protection, control of illegal immigration and the fight against organized crime. The economic contribution of the international community was extended by commitments made during consultative group meetings of donors on Nicaragua and Guatemala, organized by the Inter-American Development Bank with the participation of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank (Washington, D.C., 17-18 June). Cooperation also continued between Central America and the Organization of American States (OAS) through the regional mine-clearance programme, the presence of the OAS International Support and Verification Commission in Nicaragua and election monitoring in Guatemala and Nicaragua.

As for UN efforts in Central America, the Secretary-General noted that the peace process in El Salvador, initiated by the 1992 Peace Agreement, had maintained its impetus, although difficulties and delays persisted in a number of areas; in May, the Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador was replaced by the United Nations Office of Verification, which continued overseeing the Agreement's implementation (see below, under "El Salvador"). The parties to the conflict in Guatemala declared the cessation of hostilities, signed an agreement on social and economic issues and the agrarian situation and decided to conclude their peace negotiations by the end of 1996; at the same time, the situation in that country continued to be characterized by serious human rights violations and persistent impunity, as reported by the UN human rights verification mission there (see below, under "Guatemala").

The Secretary-General also outlined UN operational activities in support of processes in the region. He noted that the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) had launched a new initiative within the framework of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, which focused on peace consolidation and democratic governance, poverty eradication, promotion of sustainable development at the local level, and natural resources protection and sustainability. Assistance was provided to strengthen public security and human rights institutions in El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras; to simplify property ownership and transfer procedures and promote decentralization in Nicaragua; to support municipal development as well as national consensus-building on development priorities in Panama; and to improve local administration and sustainable human development in Costa Rica. A regional programme for sustainable human development at the local level was formulated, based on the results of an inter-agency workshop (Montelimar, Nicaragua, 19 March) aimed at establishing a strategic alliance between all UN agencies working in the region. UNDP continued to promote national debates on macroeconomic policies and to provide cooperation to improve the region's international competitiveness, with emphasis on agricultural development, industrial modernization, international trade negotiations, regional economic integration and regional integration institutions. Projects in the field of natural resources included assistance to the comprehensive planning of coastal resources management in Belize, assistance to a national system of conservation areas in Costa Rica, and protection to threatened ecosystems through an integrated programme of resources conservation in Guatemala. Support was also extended to the Central American Commission for Environment and Development for, inter alia, the possible establishment of an Environmental Development Fund. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) sponsored a regional military forum for a culture of peace (San Salvador, El Salvador, 26-27 June), as well as an Iberoamerican forum of ombudsmen on human rights and a culture of peace (Antigua, Guatemala, 30 June).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/197.

The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and its own resolutions, particularly resolutions 49/137 of 19 December 1994 and 50/132 of 20 December 1995, in which it recognized the importance of international support for Central America, within an appropriate global frame of reference, in order to preserve and extend the progress made in the process of consolidating peace, democracy and sustainable development and thereby to overcome the obstacles that are preventing Central America from becoming a region of peace, freedom, democracy and sustainable development,

Recognizing the importance and validity of the commitments made by the Central American Presidents since the Esquipulas II summit meeting of 7 August 1987, and their subsequent summit meetings,

Reaffirming that there can be no peace in Central America without sustainable development or democracy, which are essential for ensuring the process of change in the region, and recognizing the importance of settling differences by means of dialogue, negotiation and respect for the legitimate interests of all States, with full respect for the principles of self-determination and non-intervention,

Drawing attention to the establishment at the Summit Meeting of Central American Presidents held at Guacimo, Costa Rica, from 18 to 20 August 1994, and adopted at the Central American Environment Summit for Sustainable Development, held at Managua on 12 and 13 October 1994, of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, which constitutes the new integrated strategy for development, and the importance of the International Conference on Peace and Development in Central America, held at Tegucigalpa on 24 and 25 October 1994, that marked a major turning point in the course taken by the region, as well as the Treaty on Central American Social Integration, adopted at the El Salvador summit meeting on 30 March 1995, one of whose main objectives is to strengthen the investment in human capital,

Welcoming the Framework Treaty on Democratic Security in Central America, adopted at the summit meeting held at San Pedro Sula, Honduras, from 13 to 15 December 1995, that reaffirms, inter alia, the strengthening of civil society, the security of individuals and the elimination of poverty, and recognizing the importance for Central America of the Regional Programme of Action for the Development of Tourism, adopted at the summit meeting held at Montelimar, Nicaragua, on 8 and 9 May 1996,

Emphasizing the importance of cooperation and international solidarity in supporting the efforts being made by the peoples and Governments of Central America for the consolidation of a firm and lasting peace, and the need to strengthen the new programme of cooperation and economic, technical and financial assistance for Central America in the light of the new situation in the region,

Welcoming the role played by the peacekeeping operations and observer and monitoring missions of the United Nations, which carried out successfully their mandate in Central America pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, respectively,

Recalling its resolutions 48/267 of 19 September 1994, 49/236 A of 31 March 1995, 49/236 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/220 of 3 April 1996, by which it decided to establish the United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala and extended the mandate of the Mission,

Recognizing the commitment of the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca to continue the negotiations in the framework of the Guatemalan peace process, as well as to support the presence of United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights in Guatemala,

Welcoming the signing of the Agreement on Social and Economic Aspects and Agrarian Situation at Mexico City on 6 May 1996, and the joint statement of the Peace Commission of the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca, issued on 6 August 1996,

Also welcoming the signing of the Agreement on the Strengthening of Civilian Power and on the Role of the Armed Forces in a Democratic Society at Mexico City on 19 September 1996, and the statements of the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca of 7 November 1996, which are a positive contribution to the peace process in Guatemala,

Further welcoming resolution 50/226 of 10 May 1996, by which the General Assembly established the United Nations Office of Verification in El Salvador as a mechanism that would combine regular visits by a high-level envoy from Headquarters with a small group of experts in the field,

Stressing the efforts being made by the people and Government of El Salvador to consolidate the progress made towards a society characterized by democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights, and to honour its commitments under the Peace Agreement, for the benefit of all Salvadorans,

Recognizing the approval by the Legislative Assembly of El Salvador on 31 July 1996 of a package of constitutional reforms recommended by the Commission on the Truth, as well as the adoption of the Police Career Law,

Recognizing that the efforts of the Government of Nicaragua to consolidate peace and democracy, repair its economy and rebuild the nation merit the urgent support of the international community and the United Nations system in order to preserve the gains made and overcome the effects of the war and natural disasters which persist in Nicaragua,

Welcoming the adoption of resolutions 49/16 of 17 November 1994 and 51/8 of 25 October 1996, in which it recognized the exceptional circumstances that still prevail in Nicaragua,

Recognizing the importance of the effective support of the United Nations and governmental and non-governmental mechanisms in taking steps to launch new initiatives in the framework of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, and of the results of the inter-agency workshop held at Montelimar on 19 March 1996, which aimed to establish a strategic alliance between all agencies of the United Nations system working in the region,

Stressing the importance of promoting national debates on the character of macroeconomic policies most conducive to sustainable human development goals and to a lasting peace in Central America, as well as the ongoing policy dialogue carried out in this regard by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Commends the efforts of the peoples and Governments of the Central American countries to consolidate peace and promote sustainable development by implementing the agreements adopted at the summit meetings, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to give the fullest possible support to the initiatives and activities of the Governments of the Central American countries;

2. Supports the decision of the Presidents of the Central American countries to declare Central America a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development, and encourages the initiatives of the Central American countries, in the framework of the integrated strategy for sustainable development and in the context of the summit meetings, to consolidate Governments that base their development on democracy, peace, cooperation and respect for human rights;

3. Draws attention to the decision of the Presidents of the Central American countries embodied in the Declaration of Guacimo, in which the national and regional strategy known as the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America became an integrated initiative reflected in a programme of immediate action in the political, moral, economic, social and environmental fields, through which the Central American countries hope to become, with the support of the international community, an example of sustainable development for other regions;

4. Emphasizes the work accomplished by the Central American Integration System in favour of subregional integration to promote economic growth oriented towards human development and in the strengthening of democracy and the consolidation of peace in the region, and calls upon Member States and international organizations to provide effective cooperation for the strengthening of subregional integration;

5. Supports the adoption of the Framework Treaty on Democratic Security in Central America concerning the supremacy and strengthening of the power of civil society, a reasonable balance of forces, the security of individuals and of their property, the alleviation of poverty, the promotion of sustainable development, the protection of the environment, the eradication of violence, corruption, impunity, terrorism and trafficking in drugs and arms, and the increased channelling of resources into social investments;

6. Welcomes the agreement reached on 11 November 1996 by the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca to conclude their negotiations, with a view to finalizing and signing a firm and lasting peace agreement in Guatemala on 29 December 1996, thus completing the peace process in Central America, and, in this context, encourages both parties to undertake all necessary measures to achieve this objective;

7. Also welcomes the adoption of the Agreement on Social and Economic Aspects and Agrarian Situation, the joint statement of the Peace Commission of the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca and the Agreement on the Strengthening of Civilian Power and on the Role of the Armed Forces in a Democratic Society, as well as the statements of the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca of 7 November 1996, which are a positive contribution to the peace process in Guatemala;

8. Recognizes the commitment of the Government and civil society of Guatemala to advance in the fight against impunity and towards the consolidation of the rule of law;

9. Calls upon the parties to comply fully with their commitments under all the agreements reached between them and to implement the corresponding recommendations of the United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights in Guatemala;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, the organizations of the United Nations system and the international community to continue their support for the peace process and hence for efforts to promote national reconciliation, democracy and development in Guatemala, and reiterates its appreciation of the peace efforts of the Secretary-General, the Group of Friends (Colombia, Mexico, Norway, Spain, the United States of America and Venezuela), as well as its appreciation of the contribution of the Assembly of Civil Society and other Guatemalans within the constitutional framework and the peace agreements;

11. Calls upon the Government of El Salvador and all the political forces involved in the peace process to make all possible efforts to complete the implementation of all remaining aspects of the Peace Agreement;

12. Welcomes the establishment of the United Nations Office of Verification in El Salvador as a mechanism that combined regular visits by a high-level envoy from Headquarters with a small group of experts in the field that efficiently verified the progress of the implementation of all remaining aspects of the Peace Agreement in El Salvador;

13. Reiterates its recognition of the effective participation of the Secretary-General and his representatives and encourages them to continue to take all necessary steps to ensure the successful implementation of all the commitments made by the parties to the Peace Agreement in El Salvador;

14. Recognizes the achievements made by the people and Government of Nicaragua in their efforts to consolidate peace, democracy and reconciliation among Nicaraguans, as well as the importance of political, economic and social consultation among all sectors of the country, so as to continue with the country's reconstruction, the renegotiation and reduction of the external debt, as well as the economic recovery and social development of the country;

15. Welcomes with satisfaction the peaceful electoral process held in Nicaragua on 20 October 1996, and its importance as a further step towards the strengthening of democracy, peace, development and reconstruction in that country;

16. Supports the treatment accorded to Nicaragua in the light of its continuing exceptional circumstances, so that the international community and financial institutions can incorporate that treatment into programmes to support the country's economic recovery and social reconstruction;

17. Expresses its appreciation of the work of the support group for Nicaragua (Canada, Mexico, the Netherlands, Spain and Sweden), which, under the coordination of the Secretary-General, is playing an active role in supporting the country's efforts towards economic recovery and social development, particularly with regard to solving the external debt problem and securing investments and new resources that will allow the country's economic and social programmes to continue towards national reconciliation, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to support those efforts;

18. Emphasizes the importance of the current political dialogue and economic cooperation between the European Union and its member States and the Central American countries, with the participation of the Group of Three (Colombia, Mexico and Venezuela), in particular the ministerial conference held at Florence, Italy, on 21 and 22 March 1996, where new objectives were approved, concerning support for the strengthening and consolidation of the rule of law, support for social policies aimed at softening the social costs of structural adjustment programmes, and support for the Central American integration process;

19. Also emphasizes the commitments on sustainable development adopted at the fifteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth meetings of the Summit of Central American Presidents, with the aim of fashioning a region of peace, democracy and sustainable development, and urges the international community to give them every support;

20. Reiterates the importance of the support of the United Nations system through its operational activities, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, aimed at facilitating the development of programmes and projects which are indispensable for strengthening peace and the development process in the region, bearing particularly in mind the new strategy for subregional development established by the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, and urges the international community to lend its support to the achievement of the goals of the new strategy for development in Central America;

21. Reiterates its full appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to promote the pacification process and the consolidation of peace in Central America and to the groups of friendly countries which have made a direct contribution to attaining those ends, and requests that those efforts be maintained;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution;

23. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development".

El Salvador

Implementation of the 1992 Peace Agreement [YUN 1992, p. 222] between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) entered its final phase in 1996. Despite a number of delays, overall progress in implementing the Agreement enabled the United Nations to reduce its presence in that country.

On 1 May, the Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador (MINUSAL), established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 430] to provide good offices and verify implementation of outstanding provisions of the peace accords, was replaced by a smaller United Nations Office of Verification (ONUV), which in turn concluded its mandate on 31 December. Also in December, the General Assembly decided that the Secretary-General's Special Representative in El Salvador and Chief of Mission, Ricardo Vigil (Peru), should be withdrawn at the conclusion of ONUV's mandate, and that good offices and verification responsibilities should be executed through periodic visits to the country by a high-level envoy from New York.

UN presence in El Salvador

Report of Secretary-General (April). In response to General Assembly resolution 50/7 [YUN 1995, p. 431], the Secretary-General submitted a 23 April report [A/50/935] on MINUSAL, stating that the Mission continued to verify implementation of the peace agreements in accordance with the programme of work for the completion of all outstanding provisions, signed by the parties in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 427]. He pointed to positive developments in the public security situation, including the appointment of a new Inspector General for the National Civil Police (PNC), drafting of a police career law, dissolution of the "analysis unit" operating outside PNC's formal structure, and the President's decision to appoint a National Council on Public Security. At the same time, advances in implementing the peace agreements had not served to strengthen PNC institutionally, while slow progress in purifying the judiciary, high criminal activity and simmering social protest continued to have an adverse impact on the situation.

Steps were taken to establish a coordination mechanism between PNC and the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights, which achieved steady consolidation of its activities; however, its funding remained inadequate. The new Supreme Court provided important leadership in judicial reform efforts, confirming its independence and establishing the precedence of international instruments over domestic laws. The Court adopted measures to address the overcrowding of prisons, professional ethics, delays in the administration of justice, the nullification of cases for lack of defence attorneys and improvement in professional and ethical standards in the judiciary. On the other hand, the ratification of constitutional reforms and secondary legislation to fulfil the binding recommendations of El Salvador's Commission on the Truth remained in a state of paralysis, due partly to disagreement over the guarantees of due process and the admissibility of extrajudicial confessions, which delayed approval of criminal codes and the penitentiary law, as well as the repeal of the 1886 police law. In addition, the emergency law to fight crime, passed recently by the Legislative Assembly, included elements that could lead to violations of civil rights and guarantees, thus undermining judicial reform. Due process could also be threatened by the adoption of a law on social defence, proposed by the Government.

MINUSAL continued to verify implementation of the land transfer programme, which was impeded by the large backlog in the filing of property deeds in the national registry. In January 1996, the number of potential beneficiaries was adjusted downward to 36,551; as at 26 March, some 92.9 per cent of them had received titles to land, while only 49.6 per cent of issued titles had been recorded in the registry. Titles to some 3,000 other beneficiaries were delayed due to the shortfall in suitable land available for purchase and the need to relocate, without breaking up existing human settlements, landholders occupying properties whose owners did not wish to sell. In that regard, the trilateral working group on the transfer of rural human settlements reached agreement on several structural and political guarantees, including legal protection for property holders for the duration of the transfer programme, allowing the operational phase to begin in March 1996. Other positive developments included a restructuring of the Lands Bank, involvement of FMLN in identifying property to meet outstanding needs, progress in streamlining payments to owners, and the adoption of key decrees providing legal guarantees to owners and landholders under the land transfer programme.

Targets for reintegration programmes had been largely achieved, although productive activities deriving from them fell short of expectation, in part because of the inadequacy and harshness of the terms of credit to newly created small businesses and the scarcity of technical assistance. On the positive side, the Fund for the Protection of the War-Wounded and Disabled showed advances with respect to the payment of benefits. Progress, albeit slow, was also registered with regard to electoral reform and administration of the Supreme Electoral Tribunal, in preparation for the 1997 legislative and municipal elections. In the meantime, UNDP, in cooperation with MINUSAL, continued to implement technical assistance programmes in El Salvador and to seek international funding for its projects.

The Secretary-General observed that the public security situation and delays in judicial reform remained a cause of concern and that the slow pace of the land transfer programme could lead to social unrest, and concluded that MINUSAL's verification responsibilities would not be completed by the time its mandate expired on 30 April. Accordingly, a continued UN presence in El Salvador was required until the end of 1996, although not at the same level. He proposed that MINUSAL be replaced with a mechanism combining regular visits by a high-level envoy from New York with the retention in the field of a small expert group. The mechanism was to be known as the United Nations Office of Verification and was to rely on UNDP for logistical and administrative support. Additional appropriations would be necessary to cover the costs of ONUV.

Communication. El Salvador transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter [A/50/948] of 23 April from the Presidential Commissioner for the Implementation of the Peace Agreements and FMLN representatives, stating that, in their view, it would be advisable to set up a UN group of three to four officials, led by the current head of MINUSAL as the Secretary-General's representative, to verify complete implementation of outstanding aspects of the peace agreements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (May)

On 10 May, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/226.

United Nations Office of Verification in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the situation in Central America, in particular resolution 50/7 of 31 October 1995, in which it, inter alia, approved the proposal of the Secretary-General to extend the mandate of the Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador for a further period of six months and requested the Secretary-General to report on its implementation,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 April 1996 on the Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador, and the letter from the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to the Secretary-General dated 23 April 1996,

Recognizing with satisfaction the continuing evolution of El Salvador from a country torn by conflict into a democratic and peaceful nation,

Paying tribute to those Member States which have contributed personnel and voluntary funding to the Mission,

1. Welcomes the continuing commitment of the Government and people of El Salvador to the consolidation of the peace process;

2. Pays tribute to the accomplishments of the Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador, under the authority of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative;

3. Recognizes the political commitment of the Government of El Salvador and the other parties to the peace accords to continue to comply with their provisions, and urges them to work together to complete their implementation without delay;

4. Decides, in accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 36 of the report of the Secretary-General, to establish a small United Nations Office of Verification, to be headed by an official at an appropriate political level, to follow up implementation of pending aspects of the peace accords in El Salvador through 31 December 1996;

5. Also decides that the United Nations Office of Verification should be financed within existing resources, in a manner consistent with the effective fulfilment of its mandate and taking into account that the Secretary-General will submit proposals on possible means of absorption in the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997 to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, no later than 15 May 1996;

6. Notes that regular visits to El Salvador by senior officials from United Nations Headquarters are making a significant contribution towards the full implementation of the peace accords;

7. Emphasizes the importance of continued and enhanced cooperation of the United Nations Office of Verification with other bodies of the United Nations system in the consolidation of the peace accords;

8. Calls upon Member States and international institutions to continue to provide assistance to the Government and people of El Salvador and to lend support to the efforts of the United Nations in El Salvador for the purposes of peace-building and development;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to it on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 50/226

10 May 1996 Meeting 118 Adopted without vote

7-nation draft (A/50/L.72 & Add. 1); agenda item 45.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/50/951; S-G, A/C.5/50/59.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 56, 57; plenary 118.

On 7 May, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee decided [A/50/951] to inform the Assembly that, should it adopt the text, the Secretary-General would be authorized to enter into commitments up to $1 million net to continue a UN presence in El Salvador from 1 May to 31 December 1996. The Secretary-General would be requested to present to the Assembly proposals on possible means of absorption in the 1996-1997 programme budget.

Secretary-General's report (November). On 25 November, the Secretary-General reported [A/51/693] that ONUV, consisting of six international officials, three civilian police consultants and a reduced number of administrative staff, assumed MINUSAL responsibilities on 1 May. During the reporting period, efforts continued to strengthen PNC and the National Public Security Academy and to consolidate activities of the National Council on Public Security, which defined a new public security doctrine; at the same time, the gravity of the situation kept the public security issue at the centre of the national agenda. The Minister for Public Security and the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights signed on 16 July an agreement on coordination of activities between the Counsel's office and PNC, while the Legislative Assembly was likely to approve a new criminal procedures code in the near future, which would permit the achievement of full compliance with outstanding recommendations of the Commission on the Truth. The Secretary-General pointed out that the current challenge facing the country was the need to establish a binding relationship between full respect for human rights and the strengthening of democratic institutions; in that context, he urged the Government to provide necessary funding to the office of the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights.

As at 19 November, 34,413 beneficiaries under the land transfer programme, or 98.93 per cent of the total, had received titles, while the number of deeds filed in the national registry had risen to 29,974. However, the distribution of titles to beneficiaries from the armed forces was complicated by their absence from properties and a low attendance level at title distribution points; some confusion was also created by the law for restructuring the agrarian debt and the Government's proposal to divide properties transferred as a single block into individual parcels, beginning in 1997. Accordingly, ONUV was requested to identify all properties exempt from debt, so as to transfer original titles without further delay. In addition, the need remained to transfer promptly to landless peasants identified land which exceeded the constitutional limit of 245 hectares.

The transfer programme for rural human settlements experienced significant delays. The measuring and legalization of properties was still not completed and the transfer of only a minimal number of properties was negotiated with their respective owners, while the payment and distribution of titles for those properties came to a halt and no accord had been reached by the parties on fundamental issues relating to the transfer of the social and productive infrastructure of human settlements. As for the Fund for the Protection of the War-Wounded and Disabled, a draft project was drawn up at ONUV's initiative to offer legal support in securing benefits for some 14,000 family members of combatants killed during the conflict.

The Secretary-General reiterated that the implementation of pending recommendations for electoral reform, including the creation of a national civil register to facilitate issuing a single identity and voter card, as well as the introduction of residential voting and of proportional representation in municipal councils, would constitute a significant advance in El Salvador's electoral system. He expressed the hope that the 1999 presidential elections would benefit from a system so reformed. The report further described technical assistance programmes executed by UNDP in the areas of administration of justice, public security, reintegration of former combatants and demobilized soldiers, benefits to the war-wounded and disabled, protection of human rights and democratic participation. Nine other programmes were to be initiated by the end of the year; project resources totalled $12.2 million, with a further $2.8 million to be approved shortly.

The Secretary-General concluded that implementation of the peace accords was entering its final phase. He recommended that UN good offices and verification responsibilities be executed, as of 1 January 1997, through periodic visits to El Salvador by a high-level envoy from New York, assisted by a small support unit remaining in the field for a period of six months. Accordingly, he proposed to withdraw his Representative at the conclusion of ONUV's mandate on 31 December 1996.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/199 A.

United Nations Office of Verification in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the situation in Central America and, in particular, resolution 50/226 of 10 May 1996, by which it, inter alia, decided to establish the United Nations Office of Verification in El Salvador to follow up implementation of pending aspects of the peace accords in El Salvador through 31 December 1996 after the expiration of the mandate of the Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Office of Verification in El Salvador,

Recognizing with satisfaction the efforts that continue to be made by the Government, other parties to the peace accords and the people of El Salvador to honour the commitments contained in the accords and to consolidate the peace process,

Welcoming the progress made towards a society characterized by democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights,

Paying tribute to those Member States which have contributed personnel and voluntary funding to the Office and to technical assistance projects undertaken in support of the peace process,

1. Welcomes the continuing commitment of the Government and people of El Salvador to the consolidation of the peace process;

2. Pays tribute to the accomplishments of the United Nations Office of Verification in El Salvador, under the authority of the Secretary-General and his Representative;

3. Notes with satisfaction the commitment by the Government of El Salvador and other parties to the peace accords to the full implementation of the provisions of the peace accords, and urges them to work together to complete this implementation without delay;

4. Decides, in accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 33 of the report of the Secretary-General, that:

(a) The Representative of the Secretary-General in El Salvador should be withdrawn at the conclusion of the mandate of the United Nations Office of Verification in El Salvador on 31 December 1996;

(b) The responsibilities of verification and good offices entrusted to the United Nations should be executed through periodic visits to El Salvador by a high-level envoy from Headquarters who will keep the Secretary-General informed on a regular basis;

5. Also decides that the envoy will be assisted for a period of six months in the discharge of these responsibilities by a small support unit in El Salvador, working with the administrative support of the United Nations Development Programme;

6. Emphasizes the importance of a continued and enhanced cooperation of the various agencies, offices and programmes of the United Nations system active in El Salvador with the efforts of the Organization as verification of the peace accords approaches its conclusion and in the consolidation of the peace process;

7. Calls upon Member States and international institutions to continue to provide assistance to the Government and people of El Salvador and to lend support to the efforts of the United Nations in El Salvador for the purposes of peace-building and development;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to it before the end of June 1997 on the implementation of the present resolution, including an assessment of the peace process in El Salvador.

General Assembly resolution 51/199 A
17 December 1996 Meeting 87 Adopted without vote
21-nation draft (A/51/L.58 & Add.1); agenda item 40.
Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/51/734; S-G, A/C.5/51/42.
Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 44; plenary 60, 87.

On 16 December, the Fifth Committee decided [A/51/734] to inform the Assembly that, should it adopt the text, additional requirements of $408,700 would be needed under the budget for the biennium 1996-1997. (For further details on UNOV financing, see PART FIVE, Chapter II.)

Financing of ONUSAL

On 29 February, the Secretary-General presented a final report [A/50/735/Add.1] on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) from its inception in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 149] until its liquidation in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 427]. According to the report, total appropriations for ONUSAL, together with those for the United Nations Observer Group in Central America, amounted to $238.1 million, while outstanding contributions from Member States as at 31 December 1995 stood at $19.9 million for both operations, of which $9.7 million was outstanding for ONUSAL. (In 1992, by resolution 46/240, the General Assembly had decided that the special accounts for both should be merged [YUN 1992, p. 224].) At the same time, cumulative unencumbered appropriations totalled $15.7 million. The Secretary-General noted that ONUSAL operating costs included additional requirements of $826,000 gross for the period from 1 December 1994 to 30 April 1995 and $16,300 gross for the liquidation period from 1 to 31 May 1995. He requested that the General Assembly appropriate and assess those amounts and take action concerning the remaining unencumbered balance, interest and miscellaneous income, as well as any surplus arising from the eventual liquidation of ONUSAL's remaining obligations.

In a 6 August report [A/50/1018], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) agreed with the Secretary-General's request.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 September, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/246.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 991(1995) of 28 April 1995, by which the Council affirmed that the mandate of the Observer Mission would terminate as at 30 April 1995, as well as all previous Security Council resolutions on the Observer Mission,

Recalling also its resolution 45/267 of 21 June 1991 on the financing of the Observer Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was decision 50/447 of 22 December 1995,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observer Mission by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to meet its outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador as at 31 August 1996, including the contributions unpaid in the amount of 7,804,394 United States dollars, representing 4 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Observer Mission to the period ending 31 May 1995, notes that some 45 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observer Mission in full;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador the additional amount of 826,000 dollars gross (745,300 dollars net) already authorized by the General Assembly in its decision 50/447 for the period from 1 December 1994 to 30 April 1995;

7. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion an additional amount of 826,000 dollars gross (745,300 dollars net) for the period from 1 December

1994 to 30 April 1995 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, the scale of assessments for the year 1994 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 169,580 dollars gross (153,010 dollars net), which is the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1994, and the scale of assessments for the year 1995 to be applied against the balance, that is, 656,420 dollars gross (592,290 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 30 April 1995, inclusive;

8. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 80,700 dollars approved for the Observer Mission for the period from 1 December 1994 to 30 April 1995, inclusive, 16,570 dollars being the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1994, and the balance, that is, 64,130 dollars, approved for the period from 1 January to 30 April 1995, inclusive;

9. Decides to appropriate the additional amount of 16,300 dollars gross (17,700 dollars net) for the period from 1 to 31 May 1995, already authorized by the General Assembly in its decision 50/447, to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

10. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, shall take into consideration the decrease in their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,400 dollars approved for the Observer Mission for the period from 1 to 31 May 1995;

11. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observer Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionments, as provided for in paragraphs 7 and 9 above, their respective share in the amount of 842,300 dollars gross (763,000 dollars net) from the unencumbered balance of 15,712,958 dollars gross (14,221,605 dollars net) for the period ending 30 November 1994;

12. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observer Mission, their share in the amount of 842,300 dollars gross (763,000 dollars net) from the unencumbered balance of 15,712,958 dollars gross (14,221,605 dollars net) for the period ending 30 November 1994 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

13. Decides also that the remaining unencumbered balance of 14,870,658 dollars gross (13,458,605 dollars net) in the Special Account for the Observer Mission shall be credited to Member States;

14. Decides further to transfer the remaining interest and miscellaneous income totalling 256,674 dollars and any surplus arising from the eventual liquidation of the remaining obligations in the Special Account for the Observer Mission to the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund.

General Assembly resolution 50/246

17 September 1996 Meeting 128 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/818/Add.1) without vote, 12 September (meeting 67); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.75), orally revised; agenda item 126.

Guatemala

In 1996, negotiations continued between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG) under the auspices of the United Nations to find a lasting settlement of the most protracted conflict in Central America. The Secretary-General reported that the peace process there was on an irreversible course, with the signing of several agreements since 1994 and the continued presence of the United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala (MINUGUA).

Democracy was further consolidated as a result of the participation of various sectors of the society—among them URNG—in the presidential elections held in January 1996; the arrival, following the elections, of new political forces in Congress; the new Government's commitment to fight poverty and impunity; mutual decisions in March by URNG and the Government to cease offensive military actions, as reported by the Secretary-General on 25 March [A/50/902]; and the suspension of the practice of exacting the so-called "war tax" once an agreement was reached on socio-economic issues.

MINUGUA continued to fulfil the verification mandate entrusted to it under the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights [YUN 1994, p. 407] and to carry out effective institution-building. MINUGUA institution-building activities had become a fundamental instrument in improving respect for human rights. To that end, the MINUGUA/UNDP Joint Unit was implementing projects in support of the judiciary, the Offices of the Public Defender and the Public Prosecutor, the Ministry of the Interior's criminal investigation capacity, the Counsel for Human Rights, the Presidential Human Rights Committee and relevant NGOs, with funding provided to the Trust Fund for the Guatemala Peace Process. In April, the General Assembly extended the Mission until the end of the year and in December authorized a further extension until 31 March 1997, to assist in implementing the Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace, which was eventually signed by the parties on 29 December.

On 1 June, David Stephen (United Kingdom) succeeded Leonardo Franco (Argentina) as Director of MINUGUA [A/50/954].

Human rights verification mission

Report of Secretary-General (February). In a 16 February report [A/50/881] on MINUGUA, the Secretary-General stated that the new President of Guatemala, Alvaro Arzú Irigoyen, and the URNG General Command had reaffirmed their commitment to the Framework Agreement of 10 January 1994 and expressed their wish to resume negotiations to reach a final peace agreement promptly. The United Nations convened a new round of talks in February in Mexico City.

Based on the results of its verification activities, the Mission concluded that serious and repeated violations of human rights had taken place at the hands of State agents, groups connected to the State or through URNG actions. The violations, which had been neither clarified nor punished—especially when members of the military and police were implicated—did not appear to constitute official government policy, but were due to the Government's failure to combat persistent impunity, which was considered the main obstacle to the enjoyment of human rights in Guatemala, and had increased the public's lack of confidence in the administration of justice. The Mission found both the Government and URNG, by action or by omission, responsible for the failure to comply with their commitments under the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights [YUN 1994, p. 407]. Nonetheless, positive steps had been taken by both towards compliance with several commitments included in the Agreement. Among the steps taken under the administration of President Ramiro de Leon Carpio were the near cessation of forcible recruitment for military service and restraint in the use of force by the authorities. The establishment of new Voluntary Civil Defence Committees (CVDCs) was no longer encouraged and the Military Commissioners were abolished; legal requirements in the detention of URNG members were being observed, including their referral to tribunals, and the Interior Ministry had increased its investigation of crimes. URNG, for its part, had pledged to refrain from certain acts of sabotage and showed restraint in military actions that endangered civilians; it also had unilaterally ceased offensive actions during the two rounds of elections and continued cooperating with MINUGUA. While noting these steps, the Mission observed that their impact on public opinion had been severely limited due to an increase in crime and the inability of government institutions to cope with it, as well as the continuation of the armed conflict.

The Secretary-General reiterated that it was incumbent on the parties to comply fully with their commitments under the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights and with human rights aspects of the 1995 Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples [YUN 1995, p. 431]. It was critical that the Government and the URNG leadership take action to carry out the Mission's recommendations, which had too often remained unheeded. At stake was the confidence of the Guatemalan people and the international community in the peace process. Calling for an early and successful conclusion to the peace negotiations, the Secretary-General observed that the continuation of the conflict provided a pretext for human rights abuses and the culture of violence and intolerance, which thwarted efforts, including those of MINUGUA, to protect human rights and strengthen the rule of law. While compliance with the commitments regarding human rights should be improved, trends observed were encouraging. MINUGUA's active country-wide presence had played an important role, helping to place peace and human rights protection firmly at the top of the political agenda. With both the Government and URNG supporting a continuation of MINUGUA's activities, the Secretary-General recommended that its mandate be extended until 31 December. Given the cash-flow crisis afflicting the United Nations, additional funds would be necessary to cover the costs of the Mission during the new mandate period, with assurances that funds would be made available in the necessary time-frame.

Fourth report of Mission Director (February). By a 24 February 1996 note [A/50/878], the Secretary-General transmitted the fourth report of the MINUGUA Director, describing the Mission's activities from 21 August to 31 December 1995 and evaluating its work during its first year of operation. Despite some noteworthy progress, the report stated, the overall situation continued to cause concern because of repeated human rights violations, the persistence of impunity and the growing lack of public safety. MINUGUA continued its bilateral contacts through monthly meetings with the Guatemalan President and the URNG General Command. Additional meetings were held between the Mission and its official counterparts in the Government, the Presidential Human Rights Committee (COPREDEH), ministries and State bodies. Visits were made to URNG camps to discuss matters relevant to the task of verification.

In the gravest incident since MINUGUA's establishment, 11 people were killed by an army patrol in the community of Xamán, Aka Verapaz, on 5 October, which led to the resignation of the Minister of Defence. President Ramiro de Leon Carpio transferred power to President Alvaro Arzú Irigoyen following democratic elections in November 1995 and a second round of voting in January 1996, but nearly two thirds of the electorate did not participate in the voting, despite the fact that URNG unilaterally suspended hostilities during the general elections. According to reports of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), nearly 10,000 refugees had returned to Guatemala during 1995, significantly more than in previous years.

During its first year of activity, the Mission received more than 7,700 complaints, 1,567 of which it declared admissible for verification. It closed 1,078 of them, verifying that violations, involving 3,161 victims, had occurred in 43.2 per cent of them. Almost two thirds of those violations concerned the right to life, integrity of person and individual liberty, and responsibility was attributed to National Police officers, military commissioners and members of the army and of CVDCs, with URNG members being held responsible for 5.4 per cent of the cases. Responsibility was attributed to URNG in 92.5 per cent of the cases where verification confirmed a violation of the commitment concerning human rights and the internal armed conflict.

MINUGUA was enabled to carry out its mandate by the cooperation of both parties and the assistance provided by the Government, as well as the support of the Group of Friends of the Guatemalan Peace Process (composed of Colombia, Mexico, Norway, Spain, the United States and Venezuela), the international community and Guatemalan society, including NGOs. Fulfilment of its mandate was also made possible by its deployment in 13 offices throughout the country and its acceptance by the local communities, as well as by the practical development of a verification methodology involving the interaction of civilian and police observers and military liaison officers. Another important aspect had been the linkage of verification and institution-building tasks through the development of a strategy, in the framework of the MINUGUA/UNDP Joint Unit, for cooperating with national bodies for the protection of human rights.

The Mission also reported adverse reactions to its work, some of them violent, such as the armed attack on its regional office in the capital and threats against some of its members; however, those reactions had not affected its normal operations in the country as a whole.

MINUGUA made recommendations both to the Government and URNG aimed at their fulfilment of the Comprehensive Agreement. In its final conclusions, in spite of the disturbing human rights situation and the failure to follow its recommendations, it cited some reasons to hope that human rights would be more fully enjoyed: progress in the peace process and national reconciliation; the growing conviction of the parties and of Guatemalan society that the armed conflict had to be ended without delay and that there had to be national reconciliation; progress in the political transition, through the consolidation of new democratic institutions, the convergence of opinions in favour of the primacy of civilian authority, the normal conduct of elections, the emergence of new forms of representation of civil society and the national consensus surrounding the broadening of the political sectors incorporated in the Congress of the Republic, all of which was promoting a decline in violence and politically motivated rights violations; growing participation of indigenous communities and leaders in various spheres of national life and the signing of the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples; and signs of a greater commitment to human rights, notably the awareness at the highest level of Government and in civil society that the fight against impunity was an urgent challenge, as well as the growing role of non-governmental human rights bodies and the ongoing monitoring, protection and defence activities of the Counsel for Human Rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 April, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/220.

United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/15 of 20 November 1990, 46/109 A of 17 December 1991, 47/118 of 18 December 1992, 48/161 of 20 December 1993 and 48/267 of 19 September 1994, in which it decided to establish the Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala, and its resolutions 49/137 of 19 December 1994, 49/236 A of 31 March 1995, and, in particular, 49/236 B of 14 September 1995, in which it decided to authorize the renewal of the mandate of the Mission for the further period of six months, that is, until 18 March 1996,

Taking into account the notes by the Secretary-General transmitting the third and fourth reports of the Director of the Mission,

Taking note of the conclusions and recommendations contained in the third and fourth reports of the Director of the Mission, regarding compliance by the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca with their commitments under the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights and to the human rights aspects of the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples,

Acknowledging the support given to the Mission by the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca,

Concerned by the inadequate implementation of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights, as reported by the Director of the Mission, and in particular the lack of action on the Mission's recommendations throughout the year 1995,

Welcoming the commitment expressed by President Alvaro Arzú to the struggle against impunity and the continuation of the peace process with the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca, within the Framework Agreement for the Resumption of the Negotiating Process between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca of 10 January 1994, as well as his support for the continuation of the Mission,

Also welcoming the resumption of the negotiations between the two parties and their commitment to revitalizing the negotiations with a view to the early signing of a final peace agreement,

Acknowledging the efforts of the Secretary-General, the Group of Friends of the Guatemala peace process and the United Nations programmes and agencies for their support to the Guatemala peace process,

Having considered the recommendations of the Secretary-General regarding the renewal of the mandate of the Mission, contained in his report on the Mission,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala;

2. Takes note with satisfaction of the third and fourth reports of the Director of the Mission;

3. Decides to authorize within existing resources and in a manner consistent with the effective fulfilment of its mandate the renewal of the mandate of the Mission for a further period of nine months and thirteen days, that is, until 31 December 1996, in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary-General;

4. Calls upon the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca to take effective action to implement the recommendations contained in the third and fourth reports of the Director of the Mission and to comply fully with their commitments under the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights and with human rights aspects of the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples;

5. Reiterates the importance of the undertaking by the parties to continue to provide their broadest support to the Mission and whatever cooperation it may need to carry out its functions, particularly with respect to the security of the members of the Mission;

6. Encourages the parties to strive for the earliest conclusion of a final peace agreement;

7. Calls upon the parties to adopt all necessary steps to eradicate the suffering of the civilian population as well as measures aimed at building confidence between them;

8. Invites the international community to continue supporting institution-building and other activities undertaken by the Mission, in cooperation with United Nations programmes and agencies, with a view to facilitating implementation of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights, in particular through voluntary contributions to the trust fund for the Guatemala peace process established by the Secretary-General;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly fully informed of the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 50/220

3 April 1996 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

7-nation draft (A/50/L.68 & Add.1): agenda item 45.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/50/914; S-G, A/C.5/50/53.

By a letter [A/50/891] of 12 March to the President of the Assembly, the Secretary-General expressed his concern about the resolution text, which called for future funding of the Mission within existing resources. Previously mandated reductions in the programme budget made it impossible for him to implement additional mandates within existing resources. The Assembly's request for the continuation of MINUGUA without requisite financial resources stood in danger of not being implemented. He therefore requested guidance from the Assembly, should the resolution be adopted as proposed, as to which programmes should be curtailed, postponed or terminated.

The President of the Assembly, in a letter of 14 March [A/C.5/50/56] to the Fifth Committee Chairman, noted that the current budgetary situation did not give the Secretary-General the flexibility to implement additional mandates within existing resources. Were the Assembly to decide to continue MINUGUA without requisite financial resources, its decision would stand in danger of not being implemented. (For further details on MINUGUA financing, see PART FIVE, Chapter II.)

Fifth report of Mission Director (July). By a 19 July note [A/50/1006], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the fifth report of the Director of MINUGUA, covering the period 1 January to 30 June 1996, during which the peace process took a significant step forward with the signing on 6 May of the Agreement on Social and Economic Aspects and Agrarian Situation [A/50/956].

During the period under review, and especially since the new Government came to power, the context in which the Mission operated underwent significant changes, which had a positive effect on the human rights situation and on compliance with the Comprehensive Agreement. The peace negotiations were given a fresh impetus when URNG declared, on 20 March, an indefinite suspension of hostilities, followed by the Government's decision to suspend counter-insurgency actions. As a result, the 6 May Agreement was signed, after which URNG stated that it would stop collecting the so-called "war tax". On 5 June, the parties began negotiations on strengthening civilian power and the future role of the army in a democratic society.

The Congress of the Republic adopted a reform of the military code, making it inapplicable to members of the armed forces implicated in ordinary offences. In March, the Congress adopted the International Labour Organization (ILO) Convention concerning Indigenous and Tribal Peoples in Independent Countries (No. 169) and ratified it in June. Steps were taken to include the crime of racial and ethnic discrimination in the Penal Code.

Significant personnel movements occurred within the police force and the military high command, including the retirement of some generals from active duty. Following a government decision, the army began to play an explicit role in fighting organized crime and ordinary offences, with positive initial results, while new heads were appointed for the Public Prosecutor's Office and COPREDEH.

Important developments were noted in the areas of social conflicts and the public debate on human rights. Tensions rooted in land and labour disputes became more serious, particularly when small-scale farmers invaded agricultural holdings and were subsequently evicted by the authorities.

The lack of public safety and the State's inadequate response to the situation were cited as factors contributing to a climate in which civilians took the law into their own hands and lynched several alleged criminals. Public debates took place on the imposition of the death penalty for kidnapping and on a possible general amnesty.

MINUGUA continued to receive complaints of human rights violations and expanded its activities to strengthen human rights institutions. Regular contacts with the Government and URNG continued through periodic meetings with the President, his ministers and the URNG General Command. Meetings with COPREDEH, which had been suspended earlier, resumed following the appointment of a new Committee Chairman. The Mission also increased its systematic contacts with State authorities and entities involved in human rights protection.

During the reporting period, the Mission received about 2,700 complaints, of which 468 were admitted for verification, involving 4,495 alleged violations. The first finding of the verification was the persistence of the climate of violence, intimidation and disregard for human life noted earlier. The number of death threats and other threats recorded by MINUGUA remained high, with 179 complaints of 1,327 violations, which, together with the many homicides, kidnappings and serious crimes attributed to common criminals, showed that the State was not fulfilling its obligation to provide guarantees or its legal duty to prevent, investigate and punish such rights violations. The Mission also expressed concern about the actual or attempted lynchings, especially in the initial months of the year, and found that cases of homicides in which State agents and persons or groups linked to them were implicated were not adequately investigated. It noted a disproportionate use of firearms by State agents and deplored death threats as one of the most common manifestations of the climate of intimidation.

MINUGUA found a weakness of institutions for human rights protection, characterized by their insufficient presence in, or total absence from, large areas of the country, as well as by structural shortcomings and pressures restricting their independence, integrity and effectiveness. It also observed with concern the lack of coordination between the entities involved in the judicial process and the absence of a criminal justice policy integrating the bodies responsible for human rights protection. The repeated threats and pressure to which judges and prosecutors were subjected demonstrated, in the Mission's view, the urgent need to implement special protection programmes and create proper coordination among State institutions. MINUGUA was concerned at the continuing weakness observed in the functioning of the Public Defender's Office and at the repeated death threats against the Public Prosecutor.

In the current situation of impunity, the majority of serious crimes and violations went unpunished, the Mission noted, largely due to the inefficiency of the bodies responsible for investigation, judgement and punishment, as well as the influence of certain groups, mostly those connected with the State, on those bodies. That grave situation, MINUGUA stated, continued to be the greatest obstacle to the enjoyment of human rights.

Organizations existing on the fringes of State structures, including CVDCs, which used civil insecurity as a pretext of exercising control over their local communities, were a symptom as well as a consequence of the internal armed confrontation and a source of human rights violations; the provision of weapons to CVDC members by the army constituted a serious obstacle to the commitment to regulate the bearing of arms by private citizens, the Mission found, and a factor leading to acts of violence. Also observed was the emergence of various civilian organizations that carried out surveillance patrols, established curfews and made arrests, which was, according to MINUGUA, incompatible with the objective of strengthening the official security forces.

State officials were frequently implicated in crimes like kidnappings, vehicle thefts and other illegal acts; to purify the security forces, the Ministry of the Interior took certain actions for the dismissal or trial of members of the police, but more needed to be done, according to the Mission, to combat impunity effectively, by professionalizing the National Police, separating police and military functions, and other measures.

With Guatemala going through a critical period, in which genuine compliance with the commitments in the Comprehensive Agreement had become a matter of utmost urgency, MINUGUA recommended that the Government pay special attention to combating impunity, putting an end to the illegal security forces, strengthening the bodies for human rights protection, protecting individuals and entities working to promote those rights, and stopping the proliferation of weapons in private hands. To the URNG General Command, it recommended that it instruct its members to adopt safeguards in carrying out propaganda activities so as to avoid causing danger or fear to the population or damage to its property; instruct its fronts to refrain from confiscating weapons in the custody of CVDCs; and demand that all combatants suspend collection of the so-called "war tax".

Reports of Secretary-General (November/December). On 26 November, the Secretary-General reported [A/51/695-S/1996/998] that the peace process had made considerable headway. The Agreement on the Strengthening of Civilian Power and on the Role of the Armed Forces in a Democratic Society, signed on 19 September in Mexico City by the Government and URNG, contained a comprehensive set of provisions for solidifying the democratic institutions in Guatemala, including the executive, legislative and judicial branches of Government. Specifically, under a reformed Constitution, the police were to be restructured and consolidated in a new National Civil Police, which would assume responsibility for internal security, while the army would limit its role to external defence. The contents of that landmark Agreement were consistent with the recommendations of MINUGUA, the Secretary-General noted in his 30 September letter [A/51/410-S/1996/853] transmitting the text of the Agreement to the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Security Council, and, with its signing, the parties had concluded their negotiations on the substantive part of the agenda agreed on in the 1994 Framework Agreement. What remained to be negotiated were the reintegration of URNG, a definitive ceasefire, constitutional reforms and the electoral regime, and the timetable for implementing and verifying the peace agreements.

On 11 November, the parties confirmed that conditions existed for an agreement to be reached on all pending items and set 29 December as a target date.

The progress at the negotiating table was accompanied by tangible progress in compliance with the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights. According to MINUGUA reports, since the informal cessation of military activities by the parties in late March, there had been no military or civilian casualties related to the armed confrontation, and the Government had started a programme to disarm and demobilize the CVDCs, which was expected to be completed within 30 days after the signing of the final peace agreement. In addition, the Government had made a major effort, in its first year in power, to combat crime, corruption and impunity, removing from office or sanctioning a number of high-ranking officials implicated in criminal activities.

The Government's initiatives, however, had also drawn attention to the gravity of the institutional problems in the fight against impunity. Verification of complaints by MINUGUA revealed specific weaknesses in the administration of justice and law enforcement and pointed to the need to strengthen the relevant institutions. The Mission, therefore, placed increasing emphasis on its institution-building role, and there had been significant progress in pilot projects to improve the efficiency of, and access to, the administration of justice.

With the imminent entry into force of the final agreement, the United Nations would be called upon, as requested by the parties to the Framework Agreement, to verify compliance with the peace accords. Final recommendations on the mandate and structure of the verification mission could not, however, be completed until all agreements were signed. In the meantime, the Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly extend MINUGUA's mandate for a further three months, until 31 March 1997, at its current strength. Anticipating that the future agreement on the timetable for implementation and verification of the peace accords would provide for a number of urgent implementation measures to be taken before 31 March 1997 and falling outside MINUGUA's current mandate, the Secretary-General recommended that it be authorized, on an exceptional basis, to verify all those measures within its capabilities. In addition, the Secretary-General believed that verification of measures related to the agreement on the definitive ceasefire would be required, involving the deployment of UN military personnel.

In a 17 December report [S/1996/1045], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the agreement on the definitive ceasefire had been signed on 4 December in Oslo, Norway, and was scheduled to come into force, like other agreements in the overall peace package, upon the signing of the final agreement on 29 December. Subject to the Council's approval, the agreement would then require, within a short time, an increase in MINUGUA's strength, through the addition for a three-month period of a military component to verify its implementation. In his report, the Secretary-General presented to the Council detailed recommendations, based on the findings of a technical survey team of the Secretariat which had visited Guatemala, regarding the organization and strength of the proposed military component and on how it should undertake the responsibilities entrusted to it under the ceasefire agreement.

In later addenda [S/1996/1045/Add.1,2] to his report, dated 23 and 30 December, the Secretary-General informed the Council that the Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace was signed on 29 December in Guatemala City, and requested authorization for deploying a military component of 155 military observers. The cost of the military component was estimated at $3.4 million for three months.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/198 A.

United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/15 of 20 November 1990, 46/109 A of 17 December 1991, 47/118 of 18 December 1992, 48/161 of 20 December 1993 and 48/267 of 19 September 1994, in which it decided to establish the Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala, and its resolutions 49/137 of 19 December 1994, 49/236 A of 31 March 1995, 49/236 B of 14 September 1995 and, in particular, 50/220 of 3 April 1996, in which it decided to authorize the renewal of the mandate of the Mission for a further period of nine months and thirteen days, that is, until 31 December 1996,

Taking into account the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the fifth report of the Director of the Mission,

Taking note of the conclusions and recommendations contained in the fifth report of the Director of the Mission, regarding compliance by the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca with their commitments under the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights and to the human rights aspects of the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples,

Acknowledging the support given to the Mission by the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca,

Welcoming the steps taken by the Government of Guatemala to combat impunity,

Also welcoming the de facto cessation of hostilities as a result of confidence-building measures taken by both parties,

Encouraged by the progress made in the peace process as reflected in the signing of the Agreement on Social and Economic Aspects and Agrarian Situation and the signing of the Agreement on the Strengthening of Civilian Power and on the Role of the Armed Forces in a Democratic Society, as well as the announcement by the parties that the agreement on a firm and lasting peace will be signed on 29 December 1996 in Guatemala City,

Recalling the request of the parties that the United Nations should verify all the agreements signed by them as reflected in the Framework Agreement for the Resumption of the Negotiating Process between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca of 10 January 1994,

Acknowledging the efforts of the Secretary-General, the Group of Friends of the Guatemala peace process, the United Nations system and other international agencies in support of the peace process,

Having considered the recommendations of the Secretary-General regarding the renewal of the mandate of the Mission contained in his report on the Mission,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala;

2. Takes note with satisfaction of the fifth report of the Director of the Mission;

3. Calls upon the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca to continue their efforts to comply with their commitments under the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights and the human rights aspects of the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples;

4. Encourages the parties to maintain the current momentum of the negotiating process in order to ensure that, as they have agreed, the agreement on a firm and lasting peace will be signed on 29 December 1996;

5. Decides to authorize the renewal of the mandate of the Mission until 31 March 1997, in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary-General;

6. Invites the international community to intensify its support for the peace process, and in particular for the implementation of the peace agreements, inter alia, through voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the Guatemala Peace Process established by the Secretary-General;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit recommendations as soon as possible on how the structure and staffing of the Mission should be redesigned to enable the Mission to fulfil its new responsibilities after the signing of the agreement on a firm and lasting peace, and to keep the General Assembly fully informed of the implementation of the present resolution.

Sixth report of Mission Director (January 1997). The Secretary-General transmitted the sixth report [A/51/790] of the Director of MINUGUA covering the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996. During that time, the peace process continued with the signing of all pending agreements and culminated in the signing on 29 December of the Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace [A/51/796-S/1997/114]. The report presented an analysis of how the human rights situation in Guatemala had evolved and made specific recommendations designed to assist the Government in fulfilling its firm commitment to make the changes needed to improve the situation.

In carrying out its mandate, MINUGUA continued to receive complaints of alleged human rights violations and to carry out cooperation programmes aimed at strengthening the institutions responsible for protecting those rights, while the international community increased its support through contributions to the Trust Fund for the Guatemalan Peace Process and other assistance.

In the context of dismantling the counter-insurgency support structure, the Government proceeded to disarm and disband the CVDCs and the "peace and development committees", and Congress on 28 November repealed the decree which conferred legal status on such organizations.

However, progress in the peace process was limited by a lack of public safety, high levels of ordinary crime and a lack of confidence in the State institutions responsible for crime prevention, investigation and punishment. Despite the Government's efforts, kidnappings by gangs increased, affecting all social sectors. There were further lynchings of alleged criminals, and social conflicts linked to agrarian issues and labour rights persisted.

MINUGUA acceded to the authorities' request that it use its good offices to secure a peaceful resolution of such conflicts. The parties fulfilled the commitments made in March to end offensive military action and counter-insurgency operations, with the result that there were no deaths in combat. Nevertheless, URNG propaganda activities, including the holding of political rallies at which some participants were armed, were challenged by some sectors, which criticized the Government for tolerating such actions. At the end of the reporting period, armed groups of ordinary criminals emerged, masquerading as guerrillas, who committed robberies, armed assaults and acts of extortion on farms on the southern coast, which prompted the Government to authorize the deployment of troops to reinforce civilian security forces in the area.

The public debate over human rights centred on the search for a delicate balance between the demands of peace, truth, justice and national reconciliation, with a view to influencing the agreement on the legal integration of URNG, which was signed on 12 December and ratified by Congress as the National Reconciliation Act. A number of human rights groups, led by the Alliance against Impunity, criticized the Act, fearing it would become a general amnesty for human rights violators. In that connection, MINUGUA underscored the importance of excluding from the extinction of liability violations which took place outside the framework of the internal armed conflict.

The independent expert of the UN Commission on Human Rights visited Guatemala in November and drew attention to weaknesses in the justice system and public security, as well as to the need to find lasting solutions to problems affecting economic and social rights. (For details of action by the Commission and its Subcommission, see PART TWO, Chapter I.)

During the second half of the year, the number of complaints admitted and violations verified declined by comparison to the first half and concerned for the most part the right to due process. Due to the gradual cessation of the armed conflict, the number of cases of impunity and violations of the rights to life, integrity and security of person declined, as well as violations attributable to the armed forces. There were no substantiated cases of enforced disappearances and the number of such complaints declined appreciably, leading the Mission to conclude that the practice was no longer occurring. Efforts were being made, with government assistance, albeit in a limited number of cases, to find the remains of past victims. Congress adopted protective measures for members of the judiciary at the end of August. In the labour sphere, the most important was the implementation of the new rules for the recognition of legal personality and the approval of statutes and registration of trade unions, which fulfilled Guatemala's obligations with regard to ILO Convention No. 87.

Progress was also reported in the strengthening of institutions for the protection of human rights. Under the leadership of the new Attorney-General, a more rational administration of the human, material and technical resources in the Public Prosecutor's Office took place. The Public Defender's Office broadened its activities and extended its coverage. An information and an anti-riot unit were created within the National Police. The Office of the Counsel for Human Rights had begun to set up the department for investigating individual human rights violations, and COPREDEH, under its new chairmanship, had significantly improved its capacity to deal with complaints of rights violations and ensure prompt response from the authorities.

The demobilization and disarming of the CVDCs concluded in December. While MINUGUA had no mandate to verify the process, its field presence allowed it to conclude that that was a most significant development. The purification of the National Police continued. Between July and October, 134 police officers faced legal actions for various criminal acts. The recruitment and training of new police officers improved and the Criminal Investigation Department underwent some reorganization. On 21 August, Congress approved a decree prohibiting the bearing of firearms by persons under 25 years of age. The suspension of compulsory military conscription continued, while consultations were held on a new law governing military service.

NGOs and entities working for the protection of human rights had begun to play a more visible role, while COPREDEH was following up on cases of threats reported by human rights organizations. In the course of the year, several legislative initiatives were designed to provide comprehensive assistance to victims of violations and their relatives, and a compensation bill was before the Congressional Human Rights Commission. Other significant legislative developments included the adoption of the Code on Children and Youth and the Act on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Domestic Violence.

In 1996, over 4,000 refugees returned to Guatemala. Total voluntary repatriation to date involved more than 34,000 people, with another 32,500 refugees remaining in Mexico. Progress was made in reincorporating into national life the so-called communities of populations in resistance, assisting them in resettlement and access of land and with support for socio-economic development programmes.

The Government set in motion an extensive campaign, with assistance from MINUGUA, to publicize the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples. The judiciary showed greater interest in and provided financial support for the training of court translators. Representatives of the Maya, Xinca and Garifuna organizations laid the foundation for their role in implementing the Agreement by establishing working committees to prepare for the reforms envisaged.

Nevertheless, the Mission observed, the enjoyment of human rights by the population as a whole was still precarious, and government efforts against crime and impunity had achieved only partial results, as the persistence of widespread criminal violence continued to cause a serious lack of public safety and distrust in the institutions responsible for the rule of law. Further progress was being hampered by the continuing weaknesses in the institutions responsible for preventing, investigating, trying and punishing serious crimes and rights violations, a large proportion of which had been impossible to clarify. In addition, there was an alarming proliferation of firearms in the hands of private individuals, as well as recourse to violence, failure to abide by the law in resolving private conflicts and discrimination against indigenous groups.

Overcoming those problems required a major effort to comply with all the agreements signed and the State should be fully committed to that, with the backing of civil society and the support of the international community, MINUGUA believed. The Mission wished to contribute by focusing on those aspects of the peace agreements with which it was most familiar. Now that the peace agreements had been signed, judges and magistrates would have to apply the National Reconciliation Act in accordance with its meaning and its aim of achieving reconciliation without impunity. Impeccable professional conduct on the part of those involved in running the justice system would be essential; MINUGUA offered its technical cooperation in that connection. Effective coordination between the National Police, the Public Prosecutor's Office and the judiciary was essential for improving the State's performance in guaranteeing public safety and fighting crime.

The Mission put forward a number of recommendations to bring about the necessary changes in the administration of justice; transform the National Police into an effective public service institution; limit and control the use of weapons; and enact legislation for human rights protection. It appealed to the authorities to ensure that capital punishment was carried out only after a trial whose outcome left no room for doubt, and expressed the hope that the armed forces would increase their cooperation in clarifying and punishing crimes and rights violations in which some of their members might be implicated. It called for legislative advances so that the right to freedom of association could not be obstructed and for the broadest possible participation of indigenous peoples in preparing for the reforms envisaged in the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples. Lastly, the Mission saw an urgent need for the State to set in motion the conflict resolution mechanisms referred to in the peace agreements, particularly those related to land disputes, and recommended that the Government assign the necessary resources to plan the incorporation of human rights issues into the educational system.

Nicaragua

In a 2 August 1996 report [A/51/263] on international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua (see PART THREE, Chapter III), the Secretary-General noted that general elections scheduled for October should mark the final consolidation of democracy and national reconciliation in that country, which had to overcome many obstacles, such as the disbanding of armed groups, constitutional disputes and property issues. The economic situation was characterized by price stability, although stabilization continued to depend on external assistance. The Consultative Group of donors for Nicaragua, meeting in June in Washington, D.C., reaffirmed its support for the transition process with commitments of $600 million for 1996 and $1.8 billion for 1995-1997, intended to relieve Nicaragua's balance-of-payments deficit.

The consolidation of peace and democracy was reflected in the sharp reduction of political violence, the high level of public freedom, the increasingly independent functioning of the branches of Government, the strengthening of local authorities, and the reduction and conversion of armed forces. At the same time, although the vast majority of Nicaraguans continued to support political democracy, public confidence in political institutions was not yet sufficient to guarantee stability, due to the lack of substantive improvement in the standard of living. Despite resumed economic growth and macroeconomic balance, underemployment remained high, creating an additional difficulty in reintegrating demobilized former combatants.

The Secretary-General concluded that the forthcoming elections should be used to generate a national debate and achieve consensus on a long-term development strategy, essential for consolidating democracy. The international community could stimulate that debate and ensure that it was not limited by conditions established for the provision of international assistance.

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/197 of 17 December (see above, in section on "Central America"), welcomed the peaceful electoral process in Nicaragua on 20 October as a further step towards strengthening democracy, peace, development and reconstruction. It recognized the achievements by the Nicaraguan people and by the Government in consolidating peace, democracy and reconciliation, as well as the importance of political, economic and social consultation among all sectors of the country, so as to continue with its reconstruction. The Assembly expressed appreciation of the work of the support group for Nicaragua—Canada, Mexico, the Netherlands, Spain and Sweden—which, under the coordination of the Secretary-General, was playing an active role in supporting the country's efforts towards economic recovery and social development.

Haiti

During the year, the international community intensified its efforts to help the Government of Haiti successfully complete its transition to democracy. The United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH), established in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 3491, was succeeded on 1 July by the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti (UNSMIH), which, together with the joint United Nations/Organization of American States International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH), contributed to a secure and stable environment conducive to the success of those efforts. During the year, the military component of UNMIH continued to carry out patrols, escort humanitarian relief convoys and provide security support for Haitian authorities in the areas of law and order. UNMIH engineers undertook development projects to benefit the local population. The training and monitoring of the Haitian National Police (HNP), including the organization of its managerial components, remained the priority task of the civilian police (CIVPOL) component of the Mission.

Haitian President René Préval, who succeeded Jean-Bertrand Aristide on 7 February 1996, following December 1995 elections [YUN 1995, p. 440], requested an extension of the mandate of UNMIH so that a gradual withdrawal might take place later. The Security Council extended the Mission with a reduced military component until 30 June. As of 1 July, the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti was established, with a mandate expiring on 30 November, to assist the Government in the professionalization of the police. The Council expressed support for the role of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in the coordination of UN activities aimed at promoting institution-building, national reconciliation and economic rehabilitation. On 29 November (resolution 1085(1996)), the UNSMIH mandate was extended for an additional five days to permit the conclusion of discussions on its extension, which was subsequently authorized until 31 May 1997.

Enrique ter Horst (Venezuela) in March replaced Lakhdar Brahimi (Algeria) as the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Haiti. Brigadier-General J. R. P. Daigle of Canada succeeded Major-General Joseph Kinzer of the United States as Commander of the military component of UNMIH.

In the context of reviewing the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti, the General Assembly, in April, August and December, extended UN participation in MICIVIH.

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council, acting on a recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights, adopted decision 1996/269, by which it requested the independent expert on human rights in Haiti to report to the Commission at its fifty-third session on the human rights situation and on the initiation of the technical co-operation programme in the area of human rights.

(See also PART TWO, Chapter III, for the human rights situation in Haiti, and PART THREE, Chapter III, for economic assistance to Haiti.)

United Nations Mission in Haiti

Report of Secretary-General (February). In a 14 February report [S/1996/112] on the UN Mission in Haiti (UNMIH) covering developments since November 1995, the Secretary-General noted that the overall security situation had improved as a result of the continued efforts of UNMIH and the more active role played by the Haitian public security forces. UNMIH had enjoyed the support and respect of the overwhelming majority of the Haitian people, although small groups on both the left and the right of the political spectrum had expressed some opposition to its presence.

As instituted by the Security Council, UNMIH assisted in creating a new police force. The Secretary-General reported that, by 29 February 1996, more than 3,600 Haitian National Police (HNP) officers had been deployed, of a planned force of 5,000 [YUN 1995, p. 449]. Following the gradual demobilization of most members of the Interim Public Security Force, which had originated in the disbanded Armed Forces of Haiti, the Interim Force was abolished by presidential decree on 6 December 1995. By the end of February 1996, the security forces should comprise about 6,500 personnel, the Secretary-General said.

The Haitian police officers were a visible presence on the roads and in various communities, but they were inexperienced and lacked proper infrastructure and commitment and needed further training, according to the Secretary-General. Of most serious concern was the absence of competent senior officers and overall leadership, which affected the discipline of HNP. The impact of inadequate experience and leadership could be seen from instances of unwarranted or disproportionate force, which often resulted in incidents that could have been avoided, undermining the authority of and respect for HNP. There was agreement between senior management of HNP and UNMIH monitors that guidance from experts and seasoned policemen was necessary, as were more resources to meet the basic and infrastructural requirements of HNP. The Secretary-General appealed to Member States to contribute generously in order to enhance the capabilities of HNP to meet future challenges.

Owing to a lack of infrastructure and equipment, the situation of the national penitentiary system remained critical. There had been a sharp increase in the prison population, with the total number of inmates reaching 2,300 in the country's 18 prisons. The Ministry of Justice was coordinating efforts to improve unnecessary arrests and accelerate the processing of prisoner files. Programmes were planned to train penitentiary and judicial personnel, and to rehabilitate and construct court houses.

Activities aimed at strengthening the renewed democratic institutions in Haiti had also been launched. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) assisted the Interior Ministry in organizing a seminar for newly elected mayors and, working with the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) and the Inter-Parliamentary Union, provided assistance to the Haitian authorities to strengthen the Parliament.

As for the economic situation, the improved conditions that were obtained towards the end of 1995, including lower inflation, stable foreign exchange, increasing investments and lower unemployment, had largely halted, mainly as a result of uncertainty of economic policies, including privatization measures. A team from the Bretton Woods institutions, the Inter-American Development Bank and the European Union held discussions with Haitian authorities in January 1996, and further talks on a new structural adjustment package were expected when a new Government took power.

The Secretary-General considered the continuation of development cooperation efforts to be critical in maintaining the pace of the Haitian economy, and reported that external assistance available for the remainder of the decade had reached $1.7 billion. External resources were several times the annual gross domestic investment in infrastructure, the Secretary-General said, which attested to the critical need for increased absorption capacity.

Transfer of responsibilities

In his February report [S/1996/112], the Secretary-General also described certain achievements of UNMIH and measures taken towards the transfer of its responsibilities to the Government of Haiti. Since taking over the functions of the multinational force on 31 March 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 444], he said UNMIH had assisted Haiti in sustaining a secure and stable environment and protecting international personnel and key installations. It also had helped to organize free legislative, local and presidential elections and provide on-the-job training to new HNP officers. Since January, CIVPOL staff had concentrated on developing a cadre of competent supervisors, in the field and at the administrative level. CIVPOL officers with expertise in the fields of finance, computers, personnel, logistics and communications were being identified as candidates for secondment to HNP Headquarters.

UNMIH also provided security to humanitarian convoys, airports, seaports, storage locations and UN installations. With financial assistance from bilateral and multilateral donors, it helped stimulate small development projects. Some 1,000 such projects, including training courses on disaster prevention and relief, helped to improve conditions in rural communities, thus creating goodwill for UNMIH contingents. Responsibility for projects, most of which were expected to be finished by 15 February, was to be transferred to local communities, governmental organizations and NGOs.

The Secretary-General stated that, mindful of the need for economy, UNMIH staff was being reduced to some 400 civilian staff and 4,100 combat personnel by 29 February. On the military side, the concept developed for force reductions envisaged a gradual vacating of outlying areas, starting with the least troublesome operational sectors, and culminating in reduced force levels in Port-au-Prince and Cap-Haïtien. Primary base camps were to be closed once the last contingents had departed from a particular sector.

UNMIH had paid special attention to a smooth and orderly transfer to the Government of responsibilities and functions it had been carrying out on the Government's behalf. Joint working groups established by the Trilateral Commission in Port-au-Prince in November 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 450] continued to deal with a number of transition issues: disarmament; information; justice; prisons and human rights; presidential security; election security; airports, seaports and coast guards; fire-fighting and urban disorders; and traffic. The functioning of the Presidential Security Unit, the National Presidential and Residence Guard and HNP was reported to be progressing well. A 156-man Haitian police riot control team was being trained by France and the International Criminal Investigative Training Assistance Programme (ICITAP) of the United States Justice Department. The transition of overall responsibility for the Port-au-Prince international airport had begun, and transfer of responsibility for the exterior security of the seaport was to be completed by 21 February, the report stated. In addition, the Haitian Government, with Canadian and United States support, was in the process of setting up a new coast guard.

The Secretary-General believed that the new Government would have to take a number of difficult decisions to energize the economy and attract domestic and foreign investments, and that the security climate would have to be judged to be satisfactory and stable by prospective investors for those efforts to succeed. Economic hardships on the Haitian people had resulted in a growing number of public demonstrations. Although there was no indication of an organized threat against the Government, concern had been raised that growing popular discontent could be used by disgruntled groups to foment trouble, especially after the departure of UNMIH. The large amount of available financial and technical assistance provided the new Government with an opportunity to foster economic and social progress, and some confidence in the country's stability had been restored as a result of the presidential elections. However, the direction of social and economic policies would remain the key determinant of private investment and improved living conditions. In that context, swift policy decisions and improved administrative management would be critical to mobilize private resources and put available foreign aid to meaningful use.

During a transition to a smaller military component of UNMIH, the United States was to withdraw all military personnel by 15 March, leaving 320 support personnel until 15 April to close the base camps. Military components of UNMIH would then be provided by Argentina, Bangladesh, Canada and Pakistan. Algeria, Benin, Canada, Djibouti, France, Mali, Togo, the Netherlands and the Russian Federation indicated that they would be prepared to contribute to the Mission's reduced civilian police component.

Stressing in his concluding observations that the Haitian people still faced formidable challenges and that it was ultimately they themselves who were in charge of their present and responsible for their future, the Secretary-General considered it essential that the continued commitment of the international community be matched with a renewed commitment by the Haitian people, regardless of their differences, as well as by their political and civic leaders and their Government.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 29 February, the Security Council adopted resolution 1048(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 841(1993) of 16 June 1993, 861(1993) of 27 August 1993, 862(1993) of 31 August 1993, 867(1993) of 23 September 1993, 873(1993) of 13 October 1993, 875(1993) of 16 October 1993, 905(1994) of 23 March 1994, 917(1994) of 6 May 1994, 933(1994) of 30 June 1994, 940(1994) of 31 July 1994, 944(1994) of 29 September 1994, 948(1994) of 15 October 1994, 975(1995) of 7 February 1995 and 1007(1995) of 31 July 1995,

Recalling also the resolutions adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on Haiti,

Recalling also the terms of the Governors Island Agreement and the related Pact of New York,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 14 February 1996 and noting the recommendations contained therein,

Taking note of the letters of 9 February 1996 from the President of the Republic of Haiti to the Secretary-General of the United Nations,

Underlining the importance of the peaceful transfer of power to the new democratically elected President of Haiti,

Welcoming and supporting the efforts of the Organization of American States to promote in cooperation with the United Nations consolidation of peace and democracy in Haiti,

Stressing the need to ensure that the Government of Haiti will be able to maintain the secure and stable environment established by the Multinational Force in Haiti (MNF) and maintained with the assistance of the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH), and in this context welcoming progress to establish a fully functioning Haitian National Police and to revitalize Haiti's system of justice,

Recognizing the link between peace and development and that a sustained commitment by the international community to assist and support the economic, social and institutional development of Haiti is indispensable for long-term peace and stability in the country,

Commending the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative, the contribution of UNMIH and the International Civilian Mission (MICIVIH) in support of the Haitian people's quest for stability, national reconciliation, lasting democracy, constitutional order and economic prosperity,

Acknowledging the contribution of the international financial institutions, including the Inter-American Development Bank, and the importance of their continued involvement in the development of Haiti,

Recognizing that the people of Haiti bear the ultimate responsibility for national reconciliation, the maintenance of a secure and stable environment and reconstruction of their country,

1. Welcomes the democratic election of a new President in Haiti and the peaceful transfer of power from one democratically elected President to another on 7 February 1996;

2. Expresses appreciation to all Member States which have contributed to UNMIH;

3. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 14 February 1996 and notes his recommendations for continued United Nations assistance to the democratically elected Government of Haiti;

4. Reaffirms the importance of a professional, self-sustaining, fully functioning national police force of adequate size and structure to the consolidation of peace, stability and democracy and revitalization of Haiti's system of justice;

5. Decides, in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary-General's report of 14 February 1996, that for the purpose of assisting the democratic Government of Haiti in fulfilling its responsibilities to (a) sustain by UNMIH's presence the secure and stable environment which has been established, and (b) professionalize the Haitian National Police, the mandate of UNMIH is extended for the final period of four months, for the purposes set out in paragraphs 47, 48 and 49 of the report;

6. Decides to decrease the troop level of UNMIH to no more than 1,200;

7. Decides to reduce the current level of civilian police personnel to no more than 300;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to consider and implement, as appropriate, steps for further reduction of the strength of UNMIH consistent with the implementation of this mandate;

9. Requests further the Secretary-General to initiate planning not later than 1 June 1996 for the complete withdrawal of UNMIH;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of this resolution by 15 June 1996 including information on activities by the United Nations system as a whole to promote the development of Haiti;

11. Requests all States to provide appropriate support for the actions undertaken by the United Nations and by Member States pursuant to this and other relevant resolutions in order to carry out the provisions of the mandate as set out in paragraph 5 above;

12. Reiterates the commitment of the international community and international financial institutions to assist and support the economic, social and institutional development of Haiti and stresses its importance for sustaining a secure and stable environment in Haiti;

13. Appeals to Member States to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund established in resolution 975(1995) for the support of the Haitian National Police, to ensure that the police are adequately trained and fully operational, which is essential for the implementation of the mandate;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1048(1996)

29 February 1996 Meeting 3638 Adopted unanimously

7-nation draft (S/1996/136).

Sponsors: Argentina, Canada, Chile, France, Honduras, United States, Venezuela.

Report of Secretary-General (June). On 5 June, the Secretary General provided an update [S/1996/416] to the Security Council on the activities of the UN system to promote the development of Haiti. Recommendations were made on the future role of the United Nations in Haiti after the expiration of UNMIH's mandate at the end of the month.

The Secretary-General said that a number of obstacles were hampering the proper functioning of the new democratic institutions in Haiti, among them the lack of qualified staff, adequate premises and equipment, as well as the absence of consensus, even within the ruling party, on major issues such as economic reform. However, government initiatives were unfolding in an environment which, in spite of certain worrisome trends, remained generally stable and secure, thanks in great part to the presence of UNMIH.

Although President Préval had taken steps to address fundamental problems, including weak governmental institutions, economic inefficiency and corruption, increasing demands for social services and infrastructure, plus heightened expectations resulting from the elections, led to frequent demonstrations in Port-au-Prince and throughout the country, increasing the potential for violence. Deep apprehension persisted that associates of the de facto regime could foment unrest by capitalizing on the public's frustration. UNMIH's diminished presence had led to growing concerns in that regard in certain sectors of the society and many feared that elements of the former military and militia forces might again threaten the consolidation of democracy following the Mission's planned departure three months after the expiration of its current mandate (by 30 September).

The Secretary-General also reported that during March and April the force headquarters staff had been reduced to a third of its original strength, and with an almost total rotation of the military contingents. Boundaries of the operational zones of the Mission had been redrawn, with a permanent military presence established only in Port-au-Prince and Cap-Haïtien. The remainder of the country was divided into four "response zones", in the Northwest, in the Artibonite region, on l'Ile de la Gonâve and in the South. Nevertheless, a visible presence was maintained throughout the country, including in the capital, by means of periodic patrols.

UNMIH military components continued to assist in providing security for Haitian President Préval and former President Aristide, as well as for key installations, including the international airport and seaport. CIVPOL continued to train Haitian police, which by late February numbered nearly 6,000. Challenges to the police were constant and considerable. Five officers had died during attacks against HNP personnel, affecting police morale. HNP continued to suffer from the absence of an effective senior officer corps, as well as a lack of adequate equipment and appropriate operating procedures. To overcome the serious shortage in HNP leadership, accelerated training courses were launched. UNMIH helped prepare a long-range work programme to promote the institutional development of HNP in four major areas: training, infrastructure and logistics, management and operations.

Fundamental reforms and professionalization of the justice system were considered necessary for the new police force to operate effectively. Following a meeting of representatives of the international community, a three-day seminar was held on the reform of the judicial system, covering the internal management of the Justice Ministry, judicial and legal reforms, human rights, police and the prison system.

The Secretary-General characterized the economic situation in Haiti as extremely difficult owing to low growth and high inflation and unemployment. While economic reforms had met some resistance, taxes and import duties were being collected more aggressively, and an economic reform programme, which included the privatization of many State-owned enterprises, was being drawn up with help from the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the Inter-American Development Bank and the European Union. The Secretary-General believed that resourceful and determined policies would be needed to secure steady and non-inflationary economic growth. Funds committed by bilateral and multilateral donors, previously reported at more than $1 billion, had not been fully utilized and remained at well above that figure, but were earmarked exclusively for development programmes rather than for emergency measures.

UN agencies sought to accelerate economic growth while protecting the environment and ensuring basic social services for the population, the Secretary-General reported. Disbursements by UN agencies were projected at $118 million in 1996 and $155 million in 1997. Of those, the World Bank would disburse almost $67 million in 1996 and $80.5 million in 1997 in support of private sector development, water supply, transportation, energy, forest protection, basic social services and balance of payments. IMF was supporting a programme of macroeconomic stabilization and structural reform with $18 million in fiscal year 1995-1996 and $36 million in fiscal year 1996-1997.

UNDP—including its Capital Development Fund—would allocate about $30 million in 1996-1997 for governance activities, modernization programmes, economic growth, poverty alleviation and protection of the environment. The World Food Programme (WFP) would disburse almost $5 million in 1996 and $6.5 million in 1997, mostly for rural development projects and food for schoolchildren. UNICEF was to spend close to $15 million in 1996-1997 on vaccination and nutrition programmes for children, the development and improvement of potable water systems, primary education, community organization and leadership training for women. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) was to focus on institution-building efforts in the agricultural sector, revitalizing production and improving the seed pool. Together with the International Fund for Agricultural Development, FAO would allocate $1.6 million to agricultural development in 1996 and $5 million in 1997.

The World Health Organization (WHO) and the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO) were to provide $2.3 million in each of the next fiscal years for improving the health of Haitians and the quality of services available to them. The two organizations would target maternal and child health, control of infectious diseases, provision of drinking water and basic sanitation, distribution of fundamental medicines and epidemiological tracking and surveillance. The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), with $2.1 million in 1996 and $2.5 million in 1997, would continue supporting improvements in reproductive health, family planning and the special needs of women and adolescents. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) was to focus on literacy programmes, the formulation and implementation of a National Plan for Educational Development and the protection of Haiti's historical and cultural patrimony. This wide array of projects was expected to result in joint initiatives among the various agencies, international financial institutions and key multilateral and bilateral donors, with UNDP as coordinator.

A list of projects was submitted to the Prime Minister covering infrastructure, health, irrigation, drinking water, and renovation of schools, clinics and courthouses; some $400 million in financing had already been secured. The Secretary-General reaffirmed the long-term commitment of the United Nations to promoting development in Haiti; he believed that the formulation among Haitians of a shared vision of the country's future would provide a very useful framework for international support.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General observed that, for the first time in its history, Haiti had the foundation for a professional police force committed to the rule of law and respect for the human rights and dignity of all citizens. However, the memories of the distressing circumstances imposed by the former military rulers lingered in the minds of most Haitians, who feared that the ill-equipped and inexperienced police force alone might not be able to protect them from a potential resurgence of sympathizers of military rule and former militia members, Haitians also suspected that those groups might have retained a capacity to destabilize the country's emerging institutions. Withdrawal of international support could jeopardize the objective of completing the creation of the new civilian police force and ensuring the security needed to advance development and consolidate democracy.

President Préval, with the proposed reforms, had set Haiti on a course towards economic recovery, but a peaceful environment had to remain to guarantee success. Nationwide elections for local assemblies and the Haitian Senate were forthcoming, and continued support to HNP by UN military and police personnel would help ensure that they proceeded smoothly.

At a meeting on 22 April, chaired by the President, the Secretary of State for Public Security expressed concern that HNP was not currently in a position to maintain a secure and stable environment on its own. The Minister for Foreign Affairs expressed the Government's view that continued support by the international community was necessary to consolidate the institutional development of HNP and that an extension of UNMIH until 31 December would be desirable. By a letter dated 31 May [S/1996/431], the President requested the continued presence of an international force for an additional period of six months; that proposal was echoed in a resolution [A/51/164-S/1996/432] adopted by the Organization of American States (OAS) on 6 June, calling for the international presence in Haiti to be maintained.

The Secretary-General and his Special Representative shared the view that the presence and assistance of the international community continued to be necessary to support HNP and consolidate the progress attained. Complete withdrawal of the international military and civilian police presence could jeopardize the successes already achieved, the Secretary-General warned. Mindful of the Security Council's decision that the mandate of UNMIH ending on 30 June was to be the last, he recommended that a new Mission—to be known as the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti (UNSMIH)—be established for a period of six months, with the following mandate: to assist the Haitian authorities in the professionalization of HNP; assist in maintaining a secure and stable environment conducive to the success of the current efforts; and coordinate activities of the UN system to promote institution-building, national reconciliation and economic rehabilitation. UNSMIH would include military and civilian police elements, the former at an initial strength of 1,200 personnel, later to be reduced to 1,000, while a strength of 300 was recommended for CIVPOL.

In an addendum to his report, the Secretary-General estimated the cost for the operation of UNSMIH at $37.1 million for six months [S/1996/416/Add.1]. That figure was later revised [S/1996/416/Add.1/Rev.1] downward to $29.7 million, for 600 military and 300 CIVPOL personnel for the five-month period from 1 July to 30 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 June, the Security Council adopted resolution 1063(1996).

Establishment of UN Support Mission in Haiti

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions and those adopted by the General Assembly,

Taking note of the request of 31 May 1996 from the President of the Republic of Haiti to the Secretary-General of the United Nations,

Underlining the need to support the commitment of the Government of Haiti to maintain the secure and stable environment established by the Multinational Force in Haiti (MNF) and extended with the assistance of the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH),

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 5 June 1996,

Commending the role of UNMIH in assisting the Government of Haiti in fulfilling its responsibilities (a) to sustain the secure and stable environment which has been established, and (b) to professionalize the Haitian National Police, and expressing appreciation to all Member States which have contributed to UNMIH,

Noting the termination in accordance with resolution 1048(1996) of the mandate of UNMIH as of 30 June 1996,

Noting the key role played to date by the United Nations civilian police, supported by United Nations military personnel, in helping to establish a fully functioning Haitian National Police force of adequate size and structure as an integral element of the consolidation of democracy and the revitalization of Haiti's system of justice, and, in this context, welcoming progress to establish the Haitian National Police,

Welcoming and supporting the efforts of the Organization of American States (OAS) in cooperation with the United Nations, and in particular the contribution of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH), to promote consolidation of peace and democracy in Haiti,

Taking note of the resolution on the international presence in Haiti adopted at the seventh plenary session of the twenty-sixth regular session of the OAS which, inter alia, encourages the international community to sustain the same level of commitment it demonstrated during the years of crisis, and recommends that, at the request of the Haitian Government, the community maintain a strong presence in Haiti and extend its full support for strengthening the national police force and consolidating the stable and democratic environment necessary for economic growth and development, and inviting the further participation of the OAS,

Recognizing the link between peace and development and stressing that a sustained commitment by the international community and the international financial institutions to assist and support the economic, social and institutional development in Haiti is indispensable for long-term peace and stability in the country,

Welcoming the continued progress towards consolidation of democracy by the people of Haiti since the historic peaceful transfer of power from one democratically elected President to another on 7 February 1996,

Recognizing that the people of Haiti bear the ultimate responsibility for national reconciliation, the maintenance of a secure and stable environment, the administration of justice, and reconstruction of their country,

1. Affirms the importance of a professional, self-sustaining, fully functioning national police force of adequate size and structure, able to conduct the full spectrum of police functions, to the consolidation of democracy and revitalization of Haiti's system of justice;

2. Decides to establish the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti (UNSMIH) until 30 November 1996 in order to assist the Government of Haiti in the professionalization of the police and in the maintenance of a secure and stable environment conducive to the success of the current efforts to establish and train an effective national police force, and supports the role of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in the coordination of activities by the United Nations system to promote institution-building, national reconciliation and economic rehabilitation in Haiti;

3. Decides that UNSMIH initially will be composed of 300 civilian police personnel and 600 troops;

4. Welcomes the assurance that the Secretary-General will be alert to further opportunities to reduce the strength of the mission so it can implement its tasks at the lowest possible cost;

5. Recognizes that major tasks facing the Haitian Government and people include economic rehabilitation and reconstruction and stresses the importance that the Government of Haiti and the international financial institutions agree as soon as possible on the steps necessary to enable the provision of additional financial support;

6. Requests all States to provide appropriate support for the actions undertaken by the United Nations and by Member States pursuant to this and other relevant resolutions in order to carry out the provisions of the mandate as set out in paragraph 2 above;

7. Further requests all States to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund established in resolution 975(1995) for the support of the Haitian National Police, to ensure that the police are adequately trained and fully operational;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the implementation of this resolution, including prospects for further reductions in the strength of the mission, by 30 September 1996;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1063(1996)

28 June 1996 Meeting 3676 Adopted unanimously

By a letter of 30 July [S/1996/618], the Secretary-General, having conducted the customary consultations, proposed that the military component of UNSMIH be made up of contingents from Bangladesh, Canada, Pakistan, and Trinidad and Tobago and that Algeria, Canada, Djibouti, France, India, Mali, the Russian Federation and Togo contribute to the Mission's police component. By a letter of 2 August [S/1996/619], the President of the Security Council expressed the Council's agreement with the Secretary-General's proposals. On 1 November [S/1996/911], the Secretary-General proposed that the United States be added to the list of Member States contributing to the UNSMIH police component. The Council's agreement was conveyed to him by a letter dated 5 November [S/1996/912].

Financing UNMIH

Reports of Secretary-General (March) and ACABQ (May). On 18 March, the Secretary-General, reporting on the financing of UNMIH [A/50/363/Add.2 & Corr.1], presented a proposed budget for the final extension period of the Mission from 1 March to 30 June 1996 and for liquidation of UNMIH over a seven-month period after that. For the four months ending 30 June, the budget of UNMIH was $45,799,000 gross ($44,833,400 net), for a reduced troop strength of 1,200 contingent personnel and 300 CIVPOL monitors, supported by 364 civilian staff made up of 162 international and 184 local staff, as well as 18 UN Volunteers (UNVs). The budget also provided for the repatriation of 2,659 troops. For the liquidation period up to 31 January 1997, the budget was $15,620,500 gross ($15,162,900 net), providing for the repatriation of the remaining troops and CIVPOL, as well as for the closing of base camps and the closing down of UNMIH.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in a 3 May report [A/50/488/Add.2], recommended certain reductions for the period from 1 March to 30 June. According to the Advisory Committee, an appropriation of $45,314,000 gross ($44,348,400 net) was required, inclusive of $30 million gross ($28.5 million net) already authorized by the General Assembly in resolution 50/90 A of 19 December 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 454]. An additional amount of $25,314,000 gross ($24,348,400 net) was to be assessed for the same time period, taking into account the $20 million gross ($19 million net) already assessed on Member States under the same resolution. For the liquidation period, ACABQ recommended the appropriation of $15,520,000 gross ($15,062,900 net).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 7 June, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/90 B.

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1048(1996) of 29 February 1996, in which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission for a final period of four months, to 30 June 1996, and requested the Secretary-General to initiate planning not later than 1 June 1996 for the complete withdrawal of the Mission, as well as all previous Security Council resolutions on the Mission,

Recalling also its decision 48/477 of 23 December 1993 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 50/90 A of 19 December 1995,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation.

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in Haiti as at 21 May 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 74.7 million United States dollars, representing 23 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 30 April 1996, notes that some 18 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full; and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Approves, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements for the Mission with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Mission shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission in Haiti the amount of 45,314,000 dollars gross (44,348,400 dollars net) for the period from 1 March to 30 June 1996, inclusive of the amount of 30 million dollars gross (28.5 million dollars net) authorized by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/90 A for the period from 1 March to 31 May 1996;

9. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 20 million dollars gross (19 million dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/90 A, to apportion the additional amount of 25,314,000 dollars gross (25,348,400 dollars net) for the period from 1 March to 30 June 1996 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution

43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1996, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, shall take into consideration the decrease in their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 34,400 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 March to 30 June 1996;

11. Decides to appropriate the amount of 15,897,900 dollars gross (15,440,300 dollars net) for the liquidation of the Mission for the period beginning 1 July 1996, inclusive of the amount of 377,400 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraph 9 above;

12. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 11 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 457,600 dollars approved for the Mission for the period beginning 1 July 1996;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti".

ANNEX

Special arrangements with regard to the application of article IV of the financial regulations of the United Nations

1. At the end of the twelve-month period provided for in financial regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts payable shall remain recorded in the Special Account for the United Nations Mission in Haiti until payment is effected.

2. (a) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for goods supplied and services rendered, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which required claims have not yet been received, shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in regulation 4.3;

(b) Claims received during this four-year period shall be treated as provided for under paragraph 1 of the present annex, if appropriate;

(c) At the end of the additional four-year period, any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

General Assembly resolution 50/90 B

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by the Fifth Committee (A/50/705/Add.3) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.53), based on informal consultations; agenda item 133.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 8, U, 59, 64 resumed; plenary 120.

Reports of Secretary-General (August) and ACABQ (October). On 12 August, the Secretary-General submitted a financial performance report [A/50/363/Add.3] of UNMIH for the period from 1 August 1995 to 29 February 1996. Expenditures for that period amounted to $134,621,400 gross ($132,965,300 net), while appropriations totalled $152,011,500 gross ($149,680,400 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $17,390,100 gross ($16,715,100 net). The savings had been realized under such items as military and civilian personnel costs, premises and accommodation, infrastructure, transport and air operations, communications and other equipment, following the downsizing of the Mission beginning in late November 1995 as a consequence of the substantial progress made towards achieving its goals and its objective of reducing operating costs.

In an addendum of 30 August [A/50/363/Add.4], the Secretary-General presented revised cost estimates for the liquidation of UNMIH, reduced to $1,469,900 gross ($1,455,100 net) from the appropriation of $15,897,900 gross ($15,440,300 net) authorized by the Assembly earlier in June. The substantial reduction was due to the fact that the existing UNMIH civilian personnel and some of the military contingents remained in the Mission area to form UNSMIH, and the concurrence of ACABQ had been obtained to utilize part of the appropriation for the liquidation of UNMIH for the establishment and operation of UNSMIH.

Commenting on the financial performance report, the Advisory Committee, in a 2 October report [A/51/444], noted that savings of $2,189,300 reported under premises accommodations were overstated, as maintenance services budgeted under premises/accommodations had been charged to miscellaneous services under logistics support contracts. ACABQ expressed concern that the actual costs for logistical support were $13,717,225, resulting in an overexpenditure of $6,710,700. It also noted with concern the overexpenditure incurred using the letter of assist arrangement.

With regard to the costs for liquidating UNMIH, the Advisory Committee said that pending formal submission of the Secretary-General's report on the financing of UNSMIH (see below), it had concurred with the proposal to utilize $13,447,000 of the appropriation originally provided for UNMIH's liquidation for the establishment and operation of UNSMIH.

UN Support Mission in Haiti

On 1 October, the Secretary-General reported [S/1996/813] that recent developments in Haiti had resulted in a serious deterioration of the security situation. He also outlined his recommendations on the future operation and strength of UNSMIH, which were based on ongoing consultations with the Special Representative for Haiti, the Haitian Government and the group of Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti (Argentina, Canada, Chile, France, United States, Venezuela).

The report stated that the Government of President Préval and Prime Minister Rosny Smarth had taken steps to correct some of the country's pressing economic and social problems. Progress was visible in increased State revenues and road repair, and the Government had reached an agreement with the multilateral lending agencies and presented an economic reform package to Parliament. However, the absence of consensus within Parliament had led to considerable delays in finalizing that legislation, and international aid, which was contingent on passage of the reform package, did not materialize. The Government remained solvent only through severe economies and fiscal conservatism; as a result, some public sector employees, including members of HNP, had not been paid regularly, which led to absenteeism and low morale among police officers.

Despite the Government's efforts, progress had been inadequate in several areas. Many ministries suffered from a lack of qualified personnel and institutional memory, insufficient resources and inadequate premises. Consequently, Haiti remained unable to make full use of the substantial international assistance available, while popular demand for social services and improved infrastructure continued to rise. Unmet aspirations led to frustration, frequently expressed in public demonstrations and roadblocks.

Common crime was on the increase, taking the unusual forms of kidnapping for ransom and greater use of firearms. There were also indications of an increase in drug trafficking and contraband. The weaknesses of HNP and the poor performance of the justice sector had led to acts of vigilante justice. Abuse of authority and human rights violations by HNP were also on the rise, as the police struggled to meet increasing demands and expectations while faced with increasingly sophisticated criminal elements.

Violent incidents by former soldiers and extreme rightist organizations further threatened public security. The disbanding of the Armed Forces of Haiti and the country's sluggish economy left many soldiers, some still in possession of their weapons, without a source of livelihood. Some demobilized soldiers were suspected of plotting against the Government. A dialogue was subsequently sought with the Government after it announced that steps were being taken to address the soldiers' financial concerns. While the numerous but uncoordinated violent incidents did not pose a serious threat to the Government, they caused disquiet among Haitians and affected the morale of HNP, the Secretary-General stated.

Preoccupied with the security threat, the Government had been distracted from solving urgent economic and social problems and promoting reconciliation, issues that were conditions of future stability. In a public statement on 2 September, the Prime Minister sought to reach out to the former soldiers while calling on all Haitians to support the rule of law and safeguard the country's democracy. He reported that the Government had begun working with the international community to respond to the soldiers' situation, that HNP's logistical capacity would be increased and that the justice system had been instructed to speed up investigation of recent crimes.

The Secretary-General considered efforts to reintegrate the former soldiers into civil society essential for peace-building and said that he had appealed to Member States for additional funding for that purpose. According to a November report [S/1996/813/Add.1], the security situation had improved somewhat but remained volatile. A later report [S/1997/244] stated that despite steady, if modest progress made by HNP, common crime was on the rise and the reintegration of demobilized soldiers into civilian life remained difficult. Violence and unrest were fueled by persistent high levels of unemployment, a rising cost of living, impatience at the slow pace of change and attempts by certain sectors to profit politically from the growing popular frustrations and discontent.

The Parliament had passed key legislation in September allowing for partial privatization or modernization of nine State-owned enterprises. A commission was subsequently appointed and began to lay the groundwork to initiate the process and attract private investors. However, project implementation and follow-up remained a major problem, as approved funds sometimes remained unused and pressing social needs were unmet. Many fully funded infrastructural projects still had not commenced, exacerbating the sense among many that the country's transition to democracy was not producing benefits.

UNSMIH activities and deployment

Reports of Secretary-General (October, November). After the expiration of the mandate of UNMIH, some of its military personnel were redeployed while others were repatriated. According to the Secretary-General's 1 October report [S/1996/813], reductions in the military element had necessitated a concentration of the remaining forces in Port-au-Prince, which, as the centre of the country's economic, political and social activities, was critical to the maintenance of a secure and stable environment. As of mid-September, UNSMIH's strength stood at 600, with an additional 672 personnel funded on a voluntary basis. Successful negotiations were held with the Government to ensure UNSMIH's full freedom of movement, communication and other rights necessary to the performance of its functions.

UNSMIH had greatly increased the number of its patrols to manifest its presence, thus reducing considerably its response time to critical situations in the metropolitan area, and coordinated its air and ground patrols to increase effectiveness, especially at night. It routinely provided support and back-up to HNP as the latter confronted security challenges and provided security at the National Palace, for the President's motorcade and at the residence of former President Aristide. The number of key installations under UNSMIH's protection was reduced to a minimum in order to maximize the number of troops available for patrols. As a result, HNP took over security control at the airport and the seaport.

UNSMIH's military element also assisted in the professionalization of HNP by conducting joint CIVPOL/HNP/military patrols in the capital's more difficult areas. It provided assistance in training an HNP quick-reaction tactical response team for the search and seizure of weapons. Support was also given in the areas of information-gathering, organization and planning.

CIVPOL, whose strength stood at 271 in mid-September, continued to be deployed at 19 locations throughout Haiti from where it sought to professionalize HNP through on-the-job training by reinforcing HNP's command and management structures. HNP officers were accompanied in their daily policing activities and provided with formal training at police stations. With the exception of eight members who composed the senior police command at UNSMIH headquarters, CIVPOL officers either were serving as technical consultants, instructors and advisers to specialized units or were assigned to individual "commissariats". CIVPOL also participated in the evaluation of HNP officers and provided instruction at the detachment level under the monitoring of the training section at UNSMIH headquarters, a newly developed approach that assured consistency in training across the country.

In his concluding observations, the Secretary-General expressed the view that the 6,000-member HNP, fully deployed in 174 locations since February, had not yet reached the level of experience and confidence required to control and defeat threats posed by subversive groups, and that UNSMIH's military element was a key factor in containing the danger of destabilization. The recent spate of violence was intended to test the resolve of HNP, the Government and the international community. The Government had repeatedly demonstrated its commitment to build a civilian police force respecting human rights, and the HNP leadership and many HNP officers were working diligently under very difficult circumstances and under pressure of both increasing expectations and renewed security threats. Nine officers had been killed during 1996, shaking the confidence of police and citizens alike. Efforts had to be redoubled and key decisions promptly implemented if HNP was to achieve the necessary professionalism and efficiency. The recent events served as a reminder of the importance of further steps to prevent the dangers posed by polarization and to ensure the reconciliation of Haitian society. In that context, the Secretary-General noted with satisfaction that a working group which included UNSMIH had crafted a scheme to satisfy a number of the legitimate demands of the demobilized soldiers; once implemented, the scheme should help promote their reintegration into civil society, he said.

According to the Secretary-General, with the Government's economic policies almost in place, the stage was set for more growth and development. Coordinated by his Special Representative and Deputy Representative, a mechanism had been put in place to improve project implementation in the socio-economic area. It was hoped that those steps would bolster investors' confidence. In view of the situation, the presence and assistance of the international community would continue to be required beyond 29 November. For the time being, he recommended that the current minimum of UNSMIH's military and CIVPOL strength be maintained, as any reduction would place its mandate at risk.

In an addendum of 12 November [S/1996/813/Add.1], the Secretary-General reported some improvement in the security situation and an abatement in the spate of violence which had characterized the months of July to September. While inactive in recent weeks and apparently devoid of popular support, the subversive groups of former soldiers apparently behind some of the violent incidents were in a position to threaten and damage government installations and infrastructure, and were believed to be planning future challenges to undermine government efforts to ensure stability, increase democratic participation and promote economic development. Recent information suggested that they might be using neighbouring countries as a base.

The existence of several armed security bodies—some of them attached to municipalities and with a marked tendency to degenerate into bands of armed thugs—outside the official structure of HNP also caused concern, as they undermined the established order and represented a potential for human rights violations. The high level of criminality, which included drug and arms trafficking and contraband trade, also posed a formidable challenge to HNP and to the maintenance of a secure and stable environment. At the same time, the performance of HNP in the capital as well as the rest of the country had improved markedly since late September. Judicial reform, however, was not keeping pace with developments in the public security sector, and the fact that the courts were not able to fulfil their part in law enforcement threatened to undermine the progress achieved in HNP.

Faced with the numerous incidents of violence between July and early September, which demonstrated the limitations of its troop strength, the UNSMIH military element introduced several operational innovations, such as the use of air patrols in close coordination with ground patrols, patrolling of areas of the countryside susceptible to criminal activity, and joint CIVPOL/HNP/military patrols. UNSMIH's CIVPOL element continued to concentrate on training HNP, both at the Police Academy and in the commissariats around the country.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General outlined criteria to measure the results achieved: the completion of the deployment of the HNP officer corps; the deployment of HNP according to a coherent plan which took into account Haiti's terrain, the characteristics and needs of its population and the incidence of criminality; the establishment of fully operational personnel and logistical systems; the definition of a curriculum for basic police training, as well as the establishment of training centres; assimilation of the concept of "community policing" at the rank-and-file level; the establishment of a functioning telecommunications system; and the establishment of an information storage and retrieval mechanism, as well as a monitoring and planning system. A chart of outstanding tasks for consolidating HNP was discussed at a meeting of the Government, the Friends of the Secretary-General and UNSMIH on 7 November in Port-au-Prince, and a 12-month programme of work was approved.

Looking back at the 18 months since the first class of Haitian police officers had graduated, the Secretary-General noted that much had been accomplished in a relatively short period; nevertheless, HNP was not yet in a position to ensure its own continued development while at the same time maintaining security and stability. The presence of UNSMIH continued to be required to give the international programme of support the necessary foundation, to allow for an orderly transfer to the Haitian authorities of the functions now being carried out by the Mission and to consolidate the considerable investment made by the international community in restoring democracy in Haiti. Therefore, should the Haitian Government so request, the Secretary-General said he would be ready to recommend an extension of the UNSMIH mandate until 30 June 1997 at its current strength; a further reduction in the Mission's size would diminish its operational and training capabilities and place the discharge of its mandate at risk. However, he said he would again ensure that the force level was kept under constant review so that the remaining tasks could be completely at the lowest possible cost to Member States.

On 1 November [S/1996/956], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that President Préval had requested an extension of UNSMIH.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 November, the Security Council adopted resolution 1085(1996).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 1063(1996) which established the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti (UNSMIH),

1. Decides to extend UNSMIH's mandate for an additional period terminating on 5 December 1996;
2. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1085(1996)

29 November 1996 Meeting 3719 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/990).

The adoption of resolution 1085(1996) provided the Security Council with additional time to discuss the extension of the mandate of UNSMIH, and on 5 December, the Council adopted resolution 1086(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions and those adopted by the General Assembly,

Taking note of the request of 13 November 1996 from the President of the Republic of Haiti to the Secretary-General of the United Nations,

Welcoming the reports of the Secretary-General of 1 October 1996 and 12 November 1996, and noting the recommendations contained therein,

Commending the role of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti (UNSMIH) on its efforts to assist the Government of Haiti in the professionalization of the police and in the maintenance of a secure and stable environment conducive to the success of the current efforts to establish and train an effective national police force,

Noting the improvement in recent months in the security situation in Haiti and the capacity of the Haitian National Police to confront existing challenges, as described in the report of the Secretary-General of 12 November 1996,

Noting further the fluctuations in the security situation in Haiti described in the reports of the Secretary-General of 1 October 1996 and 12 November 1996,

Supporting the role of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in the coordination of activities by the United Nations system to promote institution-building, national reconciliation and economic rehabilitation in Haiti,

Noting the key role played to date by the United Nations Civilian Police, supported by United Nations military personnel, in helping to establish a fully functioning Haitian National Police Force of adequate size and structure as an integral element of the consolidation of democracy and the revitalization of Haiti's system of justice, and, in this context, welcoming continued progress towards establishing the Haitian National Police,

Supporting the efforts of the Organization of American States (OAS) in cooperation with the United Nations, and in particular the contribution of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH) to promote consolidation of peace and democracy in Haiti,

Recognizing the link between peace and development and stressing that a sustained commitment by the international community and the international financial institutions to assist and support the economic, social and institutional development in Haiti is indispensable for long-term peace and stability in the country,

Recognizing that the people of Haiti bear the ultimate responsibility for national reconciliation, the maintenance of a secure and stable environment, the administration of justice, and reconstruction of their country,

1. Affirms the importance of a professional, self-sustaining, fully functioning national police force of adequate size and structure, able to conduct the full spectrum of police functions, to the consolidation of democracy and revitalization of Haiti's system of justice;

2. Decides to extend for the final time the mandate of UNSMIH, as set out in resolution 1063(1996) and in paragraphs 6 to 8 of the Secretary-General's report of

12 November 1996, and in accordance with the request of the Government of Haiti, until 31 May 1997 with 300 civilian police personnel and 500 troops, except that, if the Secretary-General reports by 31 March 1997 that UNSMIH can make a further contribution to the goals set out in paragraph 1 above, it will be further extended, following a review by the Council, for the final time until 31 July 1997;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the implementation of this resolution, including recommendations on further reductions in the strength of the mission, by 31 March 1997;

4. Recognizes that economic rehabilitation and reconstruction constitute the major tasks facing the Haitian Government and people, and stresses the importance that the Government of Haiti and the international financial institutions continue their close collaboration to enable the provision of additional financial support;

5. Requests all States to provide support for the actions undertaken by the United Nations and by Member States pursuant to this and other relevant resolutions in order to carry out the provisions of the mandate specified in paragraph 2 above;

6. Further requests all States to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund established in resolution 975(1995) for the support of the Haitian National Police, to ensure that the police are adequately trained and fully operational;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report of 31 March 1997 recommendations on the nature of a subsequent international presence in Haiti;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1086(1996)

5 December 1996 Meeting 3721 Adopted unanimously

6-nation draft (S/1996/1002).

Speaking before the Council, Haiti said that during the coming months, its Government, assisted by UNSMIH, would be working as fast as it could to strengthen HNP and address its shortcomings. An in-depth assessment of HNP had been conducted to assist in identifying specific needs and drawing up a schedule of activities to ensure that, before the end of the next year, HNP achieved a satisfactory level of efficiency and was in a position to maintain peace and security. Meanwhile, the serious socio-economic situation was being exploited by subversive groups to sow anxiety and maintain a climate of instability which harmed investment and hindered the reform of institutions. The release of international assistance, following the adoption by the Parliament of laws on the modernization of public enterprises and civil service reform, should allow the Government to launch long-awaited infrastructure projects, which were expected to have a positive impact on the country's economy and reduce unemployment. The Government had also launched initiatives designed to ease poverty, as well as a programme for agrarian reform to help renew agricultural production and give the peasants in the countryside, who constituted more than 60 per cent of the population, the means to cultivate their lands.

Only two years after Haiti had returned to constitutional legality with the international community's assistance, the prospects were encouraging, as democracy was gaining strength daily and the construction of a state of law was advancing steadily. The success of the Haitian experiment was also a success for the international community.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (November)

On 4 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/14 A.

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1048(1996) of 29 February 1996, in which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission for a final period of four months, to 30 June 1996, as well as all previous Security Council resolutions on the Mission,

Recalling also its decision 48/477 of 23 December 1993 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 50/90 B of 7 June 1996,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in Haiti as at 29 October 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 19.9 million United States dollars, representing 6 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 30 June

1996, notes that some 23 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Shares the concern expressed by the Advisory Committee in paragraph 9 of its report, and requests the Secretary-General to submit detailed explanations to the General Assembly on the circumstances that led to the overexpenditures of approximately 6.7 million dollars with respect to the original estimates;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

8. Decides to reduce the appropriation and apportionment provided by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/90 B in the amount of 15,897,900 dollars gross (15,440,300 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 377,400 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, for the liquidation of the Mission for the period beginning 1 July 1996, to the amount of 1,197,100 dollars gross (1,185,800 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 377,400 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations;

9. Decides also that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the amount of 1,197,100 dollars gross (1,185,800 dollars net) from the unencumbered balance of 17,390,100 dollars gross (16,715,100 dollars net) for the period from 1 August 1995 to 29 February 1996;

10. Decides further that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, their share in the amount of 1,197,100 dollars gross (1,185,800 dollars net) from the unencumbered balance of 17,390,100 dollars gross (16,715,100 dollars net) for the period from 1 August 1995 to 29 February 1996 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

11. Decides that the remaining unencumbered balance of 16,193,000 dollars gross (15,529,300 dollars net) for the period from 1 August 1995 to 29 February 1996 shall be credited to Member States;

12. Decides also to keep under review during its fifty-first session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti".

General Assembly resolution 51/14 A

4 November 1996 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/637) without vote, 31 October (meeting 17); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.5), based on informal consultations; agenda item 134.

Financing of UNSMIH

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ (August/October). By a note of 5 August [A/51/191], the Secretary-General requested that a supplementary item on the financing of UNSMIH be included in the agenda of the General Assembly's fifty-first session.

In a 9 September report [A/51/191/Add.1], the Secretary-General presented cost estimates for the establishment and operation of UNSMIH for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, as authorized by the Security Council in June, in the amount of $57,187,400 gross ($54,791,000 net), providing for 600 troops and 300 civilian police. Support to UNSMIH would be provided by 298 civilian staff, comprising 128 international and 156 local staff and 14 UNVs.

Among the actions to be taken by the Assembly were the appropriation of the above amount, plus the assessment of $23,957,000 gross ($22,958,500 net) for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1996, and the assessment at a monthly rate of $4,747,200 gross ($4,547,500 net) for the period beyond 30 November, subject to the Council's decision to extend UNSMIH's mandate.

ACABQ, in a 2 October report [A/51/444], concurred with the Secretary-General's proposals. In doing so, the Advisory Committee pointed to its views expressed with regard to financing the liquidation of UNMIH (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/15 A.

Financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1063(1996) of 28 June 1996, by which the Council established the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti until 30 November 1996,

Recognizing that the costs of the Support Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Support Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Support Mission by certain Governments,

Noting also that the assessed contributions to the special account to be established for the Support Mission will cover only direct and indirect costs associated with the six hundred contingent personnel and three hundred civilian police authorized by the Security Council in its resolution 1063(1996),

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Support Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti in full and on time;

3. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Support Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Support Mission in accordance with paragraph 13 of his report;

6. Decides to appropriate the amount of 28,704,200 United States dollars gross (27,506,000 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Support Mission for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996, inclusive of the amount of 13,447,000 dollars gross and net remaining from the appropriation provided under General Assembly resolution 50/90 B of 7 June 1996 for the liquidation of the United Nations Mission in Haiti, with which the Advisory Committee has concurred, for the period from 1 July to 15 September 1996 and the amount of 5,762,800 dollars gross (5,420,700 dollars net) authorized by the Advisory Committee under the terms of section IV of Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994 for the period from 16 September to 15 October 1996;

7. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 23,957,000 dollars gross (22,958,500 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1996 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1996, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

8. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 998,500 dollars approved for the Support Mission for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1996;

9. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion among Member States the amount of 4,747,200 dollars gross (4,547,500 dollars net) for the period from 1 to 31 December 1996 in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Support Mission beyond 30 November 1996;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 199,700 dollars approved for the Support Mission for the period from 1 to 31 December 1996;

11. Invites voluntary contributions to the Support Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

12. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-first session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti".

General Assembly resolution 51/15 A

4 November 1996 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/638) without vote, 31 October (meeting 17); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.6), based on informal consultations; agenda item 157.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 4, 17; plenary 50.

In order to allow for the financing of UNSMHI beyond the end of the year, the Assembly, on 18 December, adopted decision 51/459.

Financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti

At its 89th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1996, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee and recalling its resolution 51/15 of 4 November 1996 on the financing of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti:

(a) Decided to appropriate the amount of 27,400,800 United States dollars gross (26,202,600 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Support Mission for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, in addition to the amount of 28,704,200 dollars gross (27,506,000 dollars net) already appropriated for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996 under the provisions of its resolution 51/15;

(b) Also decided, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 28,704,200 dollars gross (27,506,000 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with its resolution 51/15, to apportion among Member States the additional amount of 27,400,800 dollars gross (26,202,600 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 at a monthly rate of 4,566,800 dollars gross (4,367,100 dollars net) in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraph 7 of resolution 51/15 and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1997, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Support Mission beyond 31 May 1997;

(c) Further decided that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there should be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in subparagraph (b) above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the additional estimated staff assessment income of 1,198,200 dollars approved for the Support Mission for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

(d) Requested the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to address the relevant findings and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, the Office of Internal Oversight Services and the Board of Auditors in respect of the Support Mission and the United Nations Mission in Haiti.

General Assembly decision 51/459

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/638/Add.1) without a vote, 17 December (meeting 46); draft by Chairman following informal consultations (A/C.5/51/L.27); agenda item 157.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 41, 46; plenary 89.

In the Fifth Committee, the United Nations Controller recalled that ACABQ had recommended that the Assembly appropriate $57 million to UNSMIH for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, on the basis of the Secretary-General's cost estimate. However, in the light of uncertainties about the Mission's future at the beginning of November, only an assessed amount of $28.7 million had been appropriated until the end of 1996. The Security Council had since extended the UNSMIH mandate to 31 May 1997, with a reduction in force strength of 100, resulting in a cost saving of over $1 million. The amount required to allow continued financing of the Mission was $57 million, which, minus the $28.7 million already appropriated and the $1 million cost saving, left $27.4 million to be appropriated.

International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH)

Established in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 338] at the request of Haiti's then President, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, the joint United Nations/Organization of American States (OAS) International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH) was entrusted with the tasks of verifying full observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, providing technical assistance to the Government in institution-building, and supporting the development of a programme for the promotion and protection of human rights (see below). In the context of reviewing the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti, the General Assembly extended UN participation in MICIVIH three times during 1996, in April, August and December.

Reports of Secretary-General (January/February). Reporting on 25 January on the human rights situation in Haiti and on the activities of MICIVIH [A/50/861] since his previous report [YUN 1995, p. 457], the Secretary-General said MICIVIH had continued to investigate rights violations by State agents and to raise those cases with relevant local and national authorities. In that regard, it had made a number of recommendations to the Ministry of Justice of Haiti, police and penal authorities, which addressed individual cases as well as general measures that could improve human rights protection, such as strengthening institutional mechanisms for the investigation of alleged human rights abuses by police, prison guards and political officials. Conditions of detention were being monitored regularly and surveys were carried out to identify detainees held beyond legal limits in order to expedite the resolution of the most flagrant cases.

MICIVIH participated in human rights training for HNP, presidential security, and examining magistrates and justices of the peace. The Mission handed over all dossiers on past human rights violations that had been requested by the National Commission on Truth and Justice, and the Mission's forensic anthropologist provided technical assistance to the Commission. In addition, MICIVIH facilitated the establishment of a victims' rehabilitation network.

A number of seminars were organized throughout the country as part of the human rights and civic education programme, bringing together a wide spectrum of Haitian society. MICIVIH also developed a programme to train human rights trainers in order to strengthen local capacity. It also contributed to the peaceful resolution of disputes arising from land conflicts by facilitating dialogues among the opposition parties and between those parties and government officials.

Nevertheless, the Secretary-General stated, weaknesses in the institutions charged with human rights protection, including HNP, highlighted the need for further training and reform. Although abuses were not widespread, systematic or institutionalized, MICIVIH identified a number of problems, which principally involved use of excessive force by HNP resulting in deaths or injuries, and some cases of beatings by prison guards. The continuing lack of public confidence in public security and judicial systems was demonstrated by persistent cases of summary or vigilante justice.

MICIVIH had been instrumental in bringing to the attention of central authorities problems with police functioning in the field and in incorporating such information into the training curriculum for new recruits at the Police Academy, the Secretary-General noted. Remaining problems included breaches of basic discipline, the bearing of arms while off-duty, inappropriate methods of crowd control, and insufficient use of techniques for the peaceful settlement of disputes. In view of the increasing numbers of persons held for longer periods of time in police detention centres, training of police and the elaboration of appropriate regulations for the treatment of persons in custody had to be addressed, said the Secretary-General.

The judicial system was in urgent need of major reforms, although some important initiatives had already been or were being implemented. Additional courthouses had been opened and basic equipment provided; a programme for the rehabilitation and construction of new courthouses had been prepared.

In carrying out its tasks, MICIVIH closely cooperated with UNMIH, particularly its CIVPOL component. Frequent consultations and information exchange between both Missions took place at all levels. UNMIH also provided a full range of administrative services to MICIVIH and gave additional support at times of increased activity, such as during the period of the elections. Its air operations section facilitated and provided transportation for MICIVIH personnel and equipment.

The Secretary-General concluded that while the human rights situation had improved dramatically as a result of reforms, serious weaknesses remained in the institutions responsible for protecting human rights. MICIVIH's emphasis in that area could, because of its extensive field experience and expertise, continue to make a significant contribution. After consulting with the Secretary-General of OAS, he had stated his intention to recommend an extension of the Mission, as soon as the Government of Haiti had communicated its intentions in that regard.

By letters of 9 February to the Secretary-General and to OAS, Haiti requested that MICIVIH be extended. In an addendum [A/50/861/Add.1] to his earlier report, the Secretary-General recommended an extension until 31 August, with a reduced strength of a maximum of 32 personnel, with an equal number being provided by OAS. MICIVIH was to work in close cooperation with UNDP and the UN specialized agencies, as well as the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch in Vienna, the United Nations

Centre for Human Rights and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in Geneva, as well as the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and other human rights organs of OAS. MICIVIH would continue to have a central office as well as regional offices, and, on the basis of reports from the field, would evaluate the progress of reforms, the functions of institutions with regard to the protection of human rights and the impact of the programme to promote human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 April, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/86 B.

The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered further the item entitled "The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti",

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, as well as those adopted on the question by the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights,

Recalling also the relevant resolutions adopted on the question by the Organization of American States,

Reaffirming that the goal of the international community remains the full observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms and the promotion of social and economic development in Haiti,

Welcoming the presidential elections, which were held in a peaceful environment and observed by the Organization of American States in close coordination with the United Nations, and the peaceful transfer of power from one democratically elected President to another,

Strongly supportive of the continuing leadership of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States in the efforts of the international community in furthering political progress in Haiti,

Welcoming also the success of the United Nations Mission in Haiti and the contributions of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and his staff to that success,

Welcoming further the continued efforts by States to provide humanitarian assistance and technical cooperation to the people of Haiti,

Supporting fully the contribution of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti and the United Nations Mission in Haiti in the establishment of a climate of freedom and tolerance propitious to the full observance of human rights and the full restoration of the constitutional democracy of Haiti, and encouraging the International Civilian Mission to continue to cooperate with the United Nations Mission and others participating in institution-building, including police training activities,

Paying tribute to the members and staff of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti for their contribution in accompanying the Haitian people in their efforts to return to constitutional order and democracy,

Welcoming the continuous improvement in the situation of human rights in Haiti,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and the addendum thereto on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti,

1. Welcomes the recommendation of the Secretary-General contained in his report to renew the mandate of the joint participation of the United Nations with the Organization of American States in the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, with the task of verifying full observance by Haiti of human rights and fundamental freedoms and providing technical assistance at the request of the Government of Haiti, in the field of institution-building, such as the training of the police or the establishment of an impartial judiciary and support for the development of a programme for the promotion and protection of human rights, in order to further the establishment of a climate of freedom and tolerance propitious to the consolidation of long-term constitutional democracy in Haiti and to contribute to the strengthening of democratic institutions;

2. Decides to authorize, within existing resources and on the basis of the recommendations of the Secretary-General, the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations component of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti until 31 August 1996, according to the terms of reference and modalities under which the Mission is operating;

3. Expresses its full support for the International Civilian Mission to Haiti and welcomes the continued effective, timely and complete cooperation between the Mission and the Government of Haiti;

4. Commends the Haitian authorities on the progress accomplished in the advance of democracy, respect for human rights and the reconstruction of Haiti;

5. Pays tribute to the Haitian people in their ongoing quest for strong and lasting democracy, justice and economic prosperity;

6. Expresses its appreciation to those States participating in the United Nations Mission in Haiti and those that have accompanied the Haitian people in their efforts to return to constitutional order and democracy;

7. Expresses its confidence that the democratic election of a new President and the peaceful transfer of power from one democratically elected President to another will further strengthen democracy in Haiti;

8. Reaffirms once again the commitment of the international community to continue its technical, economic and financial cooperation with Haiti in support of its economic and social development efforts and in order to strengthen Haitian institutions responsible for dispensing justice and guaranteeing democracy, respect for human rights, political stability and economic development;

9. Commends the cooperation between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States in their efforts to promote respect for the rights of all Haitians and to contribute to the strengthening of democratic institutions, including through the promotion and protection of human rights and institution-building;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to support the Government of Haiti as it works towards the national reconstruction and development of Haiti, in order to consolidate a climate propitious to the establishment of a lasting democracy and full respect for human rights;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to coordinate the efforts of the United Nations system to help provide humanitarian aid and meet the development requirements of Haiti;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly regular reports on the work of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti;

13. Decides to keep the item entitled "The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti" under review at its fiftieth session.

3 April 1996 Meeting 103 Adopted without vote

By a letter [A/50/891] of 12 March to the General Assembly President, the Secretary-General alerted Member States to the implications of extending the mandate of MICIVIH without adequate funding. Reductions in the programme budget mandated by the Assembly made it impossible to absorb additional expenditures without affecting existing programmes and activities, he said; he would thus be unable to implement the resolution extending MICIVIH unless the Assembly were also to decide which existing programmes should be curtailed, postponed or terminated.

The President of the Assembly, by a letter of 14 March [A/C.5/50/56] to the Fifth Committee Chairman, noted that the current budgetary situation did not give the Secretary-General the flexibility to implement additional mandates within existing resources. Were the Assembly to decide to continue the mandate of MICIVIH without requisite financial resources, its decision would stand in danger of not being implemented. (For further details on MICIVIH financing, see PART FIVE, Chapter II.)

Report of Secretary-General (August). On 13 August, the Secretary-General reported [A/50/861/Add.2] on the activities of MICIVIH, provided an assessment of the human rights situation and evaluated the institutions charged with the promotion and protection of human rights in Haiti.

While overall the human rights situation continued to improve, the rate of improvement was slow, and serious violations were reported, including summary execution, deliberate shooting and ill-treatment or torture of suspects by the police. A disciplinary code for police entered into force in March, supplementing the code of ethics and conduct implemented in August 1995.

Following complaints naming more than 300 former members of the security forces and their associates, prosecution of those accused of human rights abuses during the de facto regime proceeded, but few cases had reached the trial stage and even fewer convictions had been obtained, partly because of procedural problems, and witnesses' and victims' fear of testifying. The report of the National Commission on Truth and Justice, which had investigated human rights abuses, had been delivered to the President in February and made public in April. A government committee had recently been designated to make recommendations on the follow-up to that report.

The UN component of MICIVIH was reduced in February from 87 to 32 observers, the Secretary-General reported; a similar reduction was made in the number of OAS observers. The Mission's total strength fell from 162 observers in 12 regional offices to 64 in 7 regional offices. In view of the full deployment of the 5,300 agents of HNP at the end of February, and the reduction in the CIVPOL component of UNMIH, monitoring respect for human rights by state security agents re-emerged as a MICIVIH core activity.

In the area of institution-building, the Mission continued to work closely with UNDP in implementing a prison reform project financed jointly with USAID.

In the framework of human rights education programmes, designed to reach a broad range of actors in civil society as well as local government officials, several hundred leaders of peasant, women's and popular organizations were trained by MICIVIH. The Mission continued to assist in developing facilities for the provision of medical, social and psychological assistance to victims of human rights violations.

The Secretary-General concluded that despite certain progress in the areas of responsibility assigned to MICIVIH under its extended mandate, such as full deployment of HNP, somewhat improved prison conditions and efforts to rebuild the judiciary system, practices contrary to human rights principles, incidents of "popular justice" and lack of security for judges and police agents demonstrated the continued fragility of the existing or newly established institutions. Work remained to be done to further both the Government's and the international community's efforts to improve their functioning and to increase the public confidence required to ensure a democratic future. Human rights education and training were crucial to the proper operation of the police and justice systems, and technical assistance and monitoring, as well as consolidation of civic and human rights education programmes, were still needed.

In view of the situation and in response to an 18 July request by the Haitian President, the Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly authorize an extension of the UN component of MICIVIH until 31 December under its existing terms of reference and at the current staff level.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 August, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/86 C.

The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered further the item entitled "The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti",

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, as well as those adopted on the question by the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions adopted on the question by the Organization of American States,

Reaffirming that the goal of the international community remains the full observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms and the promotion of social and economic development,

Reaffirming also its support to the people and the Government of Haiti for their efforts to advance democracy, respect for human rights and the reconstruction of Haiti,

Strongly supporting the continuing leadership of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States in the efforts of the international community in furthering political progress in Haiti,

Welcoming the establishment of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti and the contributions of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and his staff,

Welcoming also the continued efforts by States to provide humanitarian assistance and technical cooperation to the people of Haiti,

Supporting fully the contribution of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti and the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti in the establishment of a climate of freedom and tolerance propitious to the full observance of human rights and the full restoration of the constitutional democracy of Haiti, and encouraging the International Civilian Mission to continue to cooperate with the United Nations Support Mission and others participating in institution-building, including police training activities,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 August 1996 on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti,

Noting the policy statements by Haitian authorities that the Government of Haiti remains committed to upholding human rights and improving accountability and welcoming the continuing improvement in the situation of human rights in Haiti,

1. Welcomes the recommendation of the Secretary-General contained in his report to renew the mandate of the joint participation of the United Nations with the Organization of American States in the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, with the tasks of:

(a) Verifying full observance by Haiti of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(b) Providing technical assistance at the request of the Government of Haiti in the field of institution-building, such as the training of the police or the establishment of an impartial judiciary;

(c) Supporting the development of a programme for the promotion and protection of human rights, in order to further the establishment of a climate of freedom and tolerance propitious to the consolidation of long-term constitutional democracy in Haiti and to contribute to the strengthening of democratic institutions;

2. Decides to authorize, within existing resources and on the basis of the above recommendation, the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations component of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti until 31 December 1996, according to the terms of reference and modalities under which the Mission is operating;

3. Pays tribute to the Haitian people in their ongoing quest for a strong and lasting democracy, justice and economic prosperity;

4. Reaffirms once again the commitment of the international community to continue its technical, economic and financial cooperation with Haiti in support of its economic and social development efforts and in order to strengthen Haitian institutions responsible for dispensing justice and guaranteeing democracy, respect for human rights, political stability and economic development;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to coordinate the efforts of the United Nations system providing humanitarian aid and contributing to the development of Haiti;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly regular reports on the work of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti;

7. Decides to keep the item entitled "The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti" under review at its fifty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 50/86 C

29 August 1996 Meeting 122

Adopted without vote

30-nation draft (A/50/L.77 & Add.1); agenda item 38.

Report of Secretary-General (December). On 2 December, the Secretary-General reported [A/51/703] that the overall calm in Haiti had been disrupted in August by a series of violent incidents. Increasingly threatening statements by former military personnel demanding payments they considered due to them, rumours of a plot against the State and incidents which were condemned by the Government as acts of destabilization led to the arrest of 19 persons, including two members of an opposition party and 15 demobilized soldiers. In the following days, shots were fired at several government installations; and on 20 August, two members of an opposition party were assassinated. Allegations were made that the Government was involved, which led to the suspension of the two supervising officers of the Presidential Security Unit in September and bilateral and international efforts to reinforce the security of the President.

The situation had improved since the Government committed itself publicly to address the issue of its obligations to the demobilized soldiers, who eventually refrained from disrupting or threatening public order. It also adopted economic and public sector reform bills, and the performance of HNP was perceived as improving. Nevertheless, disruptive protests continued and new arrests on charges of plotting against the security of the State had been made.

With an average effective strength somewhat below the mandated level of 64 United Nations and OAS personnel, MICIVIH retained a permanent presence in seven of the country's nine regions. Monitoring of police conduct, with emphasis on human rights and due process, remained a central activity of the Mission. Training continued at the Magistrates School and the Police Academy, with MICIVIH participation, and a number of MICIVIH recommendations with regard to the police and the judiciary were being implemented. The pace of human rights promotion and civic education activities requiring financial outlays slowed as a result of delays in the renewal of the Mission's mandate.

Improvements in the human rights situation were maintained, as was the authorities' commitment to fighting impunity and strengthening the protection of human rights. Violations of the right to life and physical integrity by State agents were relatively sporadic, but major concerns remained in the judicial domain, including glaring violations of procedures and shortcomings with regard to respect for due process.

The firm response of the authorities to egregious violations reported earlier appeared to have curbed the worst premeditated abuses by HNP, such as summary executions and torture, the Secretary-General noted. Nevertheless, nine people were shot dead by police in September, the highest figure since March, bringing the total to more than 40 persons killed since January. After a sharp rise in the first seven months of the year, the number of allegations of beatings of people in police custody decreased and most of the detainees interviewed by MICIVIH did not report having suffered ill-treatment.

On several occasions, MICIVIH raised concerns with the authorities about alleged abuses by the Presidential Palace Guard and the Presidential Security Unit, but allegations of the Guard's involvement in the killing of opposition members in August had yet to be substantiated.

MICIVIH continued to monitor arrest procedures and the legal situation of detainees held in police stations and prisons. It drew the attention of authorities to failures to respect legal and constitutional arrest and detention procedures, including interference in judicial proceedings.

According to the report, internal mechanisms for investigating police abuses were consolidated and the Inspector-General began handing over to the State Prosecutor cases of police agents accused of alleged abuses and criminal activities. Greater efforts were made to condemn police abuses publicly and to inform the public of disciplinary measures taken. While few cases of abuses by prison guards were reported, MICIVIH noted that only minor sanctions were handed down.

Reports of "popular justice" reached a low in August but rose again in October. Between January and the end of September, 101 individuals were said to have been killed during 50 such incidents. Of especially serious concern was the fact that one victim was pulled out of a courtroom and killed in front of police and judicial officials, which illustrated the authorities' difficulty in exercising their authority.

MICIVIH continued to monitor the performance of HNP with regard to human rights, participating in training of police officers at all levels, recommending measures to improve operational and disciplinary procedures and facilitating police community outreach. To strengthen internal disciplinary procedures further, MICIVIH proposed the addition of a number of serious human rights violations to the list of punishable breaches of police conduct, and information on new cases of abuse documented by MICIVIH was transmitted to the Inspector General.

In addition to ongoing human rights training for HNP, MICIVIH designed a training module on the use of force to complement firearms instruction; helped prepare a programme for the training of investigators in the Inspector General's Office; and assisted in the retraining of presidential and palace guards.

MICIVIH drafted a detention register, in collaboration with CIVPOL, to improve detention conditions in police stations, and the two worked closely in helping HNP improve its outreach to local communities. MICIVIH's civic education seminars and radio programmes offered HNP the opportunity to explain its role and answer questions from the public.

In response to a strike by prison guards in mid-July, during which demands were made for the same rights and remuneration as HNP agents, the Government prepared a bill incorporating the prison administration into HNP. MICIVIH submitted comments on a draft for internal regulations for prison facilities prepared by the administration, which was expected to be adopted in the near future.

MICIVIH collaborated with the Ministry of Justice to implement judicial reform, supported by initiatives by France and the United States. It also proposed measures to deal with the acute backlog of criminal cases, especially in the capital, where in spite of some improvements a MICIVIH survey revealed that over 90 per cent of detainees were in pre-trial detention.

The Ministry of Justice and HNP also adopted and agreed to distribute ministerial directives on police conduct, and a circular on the use of Creole in the justice system was under discussion.

In collaboration with NGOs, the Mission continued to reinforce facilities for the provision of medical, social and psychological assistance to victims of past human rights violations. It also was completing a study on the medical and psychological effects of repression based on the experiences of its medical unit and of other health professionals. Conflict resolution activities with peasant leaders, human rights organizations and authorities included a training seminar for mayors and police. A joint project on conflict resolution was carried out with UNESCO, and Creole language material was produced.

The emphasis placed on institution-building and reform by the Government, the relevant authorities and the international community was starting to bear fruit, the Secretary-General concluded, as new institutions were slowly being consolidated and the public's perception of HNP performance was changing noticeably. Continued insistence on accountability and the rejection of impunity had contributed to the improved human rights situation, but some recent events showed that continued vigilance was necessary and the major bottlenecks and structural weaknesses in the judiciary had to be urgently resolved to restore public confidence in the system. Legal and constitutional procedures had to be observed scrupulously in order to ensure that measures taken to counter corruption and threats to State security could not be interpreted as arbitrary acts intended to restrict or punish political opponents.

Gradual improvements in the functioning of HNP and the prison administration had not been matched by a similar process of reconstruction in other institutions, particularly the judiciary, on which the enjoyment of human rights hinged, the Secretary-General found. It was nonetheless encouraging that the Haitian Senate had before it proposals for badly needed judicial reform, but those could only reinvigorate the judicial system if they met with the widest support among the interested sectors and society as a whole. The Secretary-General was convinced that implementation of agreed judicial reform, together with the need to overcome remaining weaknesses in the police and prison administration, would require the international community's continued assistance. It was on those areas that MICIVIH had placed emphasis and where it could make a significant contribution. The Government shared his view, he said; on 30 November, the President had requested an extension of MICIVIH's mandate for 12 months.

The Secretary-General, following consultations with OAS, recommended that the General Assembly authorize such an extension of MICIVIH at the current personnel strength, with a focus on assisting the Haitian authorities in rebuilding and consolidating the cornerstone institutions of a democratic society based on law and respect for human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/196 A.

The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti",

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, as well as those adopted on the question by the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions adopted on the question by the Organization of American States,

Reaffirming that the goal of the international community remains the full observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms and the promotion of social and economic development in Haiti,

Paying tribute to the Haitian people in their ongoing quest for a strong and lasting democracy, justice and economic prosperity,

Reaffirming its support to the people and the Government of Haiti and for their efforts to advance democracy, respect for human rights and the reconstruction of Haiti,

Strongly supporting the continuing leadership of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States in the efforts of the international community in furthering political progress in Haiti,

Welcoming the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti and the contributions of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and his staff,

Welcoming also the continued efforts by States to provide humanitarian assistance and technical cooperation to the people of Haiti,

Supporting fully the contribution of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, its Executive Director and staff, and of the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti in the establishment of a climate of freedom and tolerance propitious to the full observance of human rights and the full restoration of the constitutional democracy of Haiti, and encouraging the International

Civilian Mission to continue to cooperate with the United Nations Support Mission and others participating in institution-building, including police training activities,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti and the request from the President of the Republic of Haiti to the Secretary-General of the United Nations contained in the annex thereto,

Welcoming the continuing improvement in the situation of human rights in Haiti, and noting the policy statements by Haitian authorities that the Government of Haiti remains committed to upholding human rights and improving accountability,

1. Welcomes the recommendation of the Secretary-General contained in his report to renew the mandate of the joint participation of the United Nations with the Organization of American States in the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, with the tasks of:

(a) Verifying full observance by Haiti of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(b) Providing technical assistance at the request of the Government of Haiti in the field of institution-building, such as the training of the police or the establishment of an impartial judiciary;

(c) Supporting the development of a programme for the promotion and protection of human rights, in order to further the establishment of a climate of freedom and tolerance propitious to the consolidation of long-term constitutional democracy in Haiti and to contribute to the strengthening of democratic institutions;

2. Decides to authorize, on the basis of the above recommendation, the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations component of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti until 31 July 1997, according to the terms of reference and modalities under which the Mission is operating, with the possibility of a further decision to renew the Mission until 31 December 1997, based upon the report of the Secretary-General mentioned in paragraph 3 below;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly regular reports on the implementation of the present resolution, including a report to be submitted not later than 30 June 1997 on the mandate and further extension of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, taking into consideration the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General to be submitted to the Security Council by 31 March 1997 on the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti;

4. Reaffirms once again the commitment of the international community to continue its technical, economic and financial cooperation with Haiti in support of its economic and social development efforts and in order to strengthen Haitian institutions responsible for dispensing justice and guaranteeing democracy, respect for human rights, political stability and economic development;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to coordinate the efforts of the United Nations system in providing humanitarian aid and contributing to the development of Haiti;

6. Decides to keep under review at its fifty-first session the item entitled "The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti".

In December, the Fifth Committee decided, on the basis of the Secretary-General's statement of programme budget implications [A/C.5/51/43], to inform the Assembly that to implement the resolution, an additional appropriation of $3,400,400 would be required, to be considered in the context of the revised appropriations for the biennium 1996-1997.

Other questions

Cuba-United States

Embargo against Cuba

On 20 March, Cuba transmitted [A/51/82] to the Secretary-General a declaration by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, rejecting emphatically the recent adoption by the United States Congress and the signing by the United States President of the so-called "Cuban Liberty and Democratic Solidarity Act" (the Helms/Burton Act) as essentially an act of aggression against Cuba, an attempt to legislate its destiny and future and an assault on the international community as a whole. As stated in a 1995 Cuban memorandum [YUN 1995, p.459], the legislation in question authorized bringing lawsuits before United States courts with regard to property nationalized in Cuba, as well as retaliatory measures against third-country companies trading with or investing in Cuba.

Also on 20 March, Cuba communicated to the Commission on Human Rights a statement [E/CN.4/1996/142] by the International Relations Committee of its National Assembly characterizing the Helms/Burton Act as an affront to the dignity of the Cuban people and an attempt to oblige other Governments to submit to United States laws. It called on all parliaments to reject the provisions of the Act, and also recommended that an itemized account be prepared of damages caused by the United States embargo and aggression against Cuba.

On the same date, Colombia transmitted a statement [A/51/85] by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, which rejected unilateral coercive measures as a means of exerting pressure on non-aligned and other developing countries and expressing particular concern at the enactment of the Helms/Burton bill. The Helms/Burton legislation was also rejected by the States members of the Permanent Mechanism for Consultation and Policy Coordination (the Rio Group) in a statement [A/51/94] communicated to the Secretary-General on 27 March.

On 19 October [A/51/531], Cuba presented a juridical analysis of the scope and illegality of the Helms/Burton Act, reviewing its compatibility with international law. The analysis concluded that the legislation violated the most fundamental principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of international law and merited the most serious concern of the General Assembly.

On 6 November [A/51/669], Uruguay transmitted a decision adopted by the Council of the Latin American Economic System at its twelfth regular meeting (Montevideo, 23-25 October), which reaffirmed its strongest rejection of the Helms/Burton Act, called on the United States to repeal it, and reiterated its call for the lifting of the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States against Cuba.

Secretary-General's report. As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 50/10 on the necessity of ending the United States embargo against Cuba [YUN 1995, p. 460], the Secretary-General presented a 13 September report, with later addendum [A/51/355 & Add.1], containing information from 61 States and five UN agencies and organs on their implementation of the resolution, by which the Assembly had called on States to refrain from unilateral application of economic and trade measures against Cuba and urged them to repeal or invalidate such measures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/17.

Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba

The General Assembly,

Determined to encourage strict compliance with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming, among other principles, the sovereign equality of States, non-intervention and non-interference in their internal affairs and freedom of international trade and navigation, which are also enshrined in many international legal instruments,

Recalling the statements of the heads of State or Government at the Ibero-American Summits concerning the need to eliminate the unilateral application of economic and trade measures by one State against another which affect the free flow of international trade,

Concerned about the continued promulgation and application by Member States of laws and regulations, such as the one promulgated on 12 March 1996 known as the "Helms-Burton Act", the extraterritorial effects of which affect the sovereignty of other States, the legitimate interests of entities or persons under their jurisdiction and the freedom of trade and navigation,

Taking note of declarations and resolutions of different intergovernmental forums, bodies and Governments which express the rejection by the international community and public opinion of the promulgation and application of regulations of the kind referred to above,

Recalling its resolutions 47/19 of 24 November 1992, 48/16 of 3 November 1993, 49/9 of 26 October 1994 and 50/10 of 2 November 1995,

Concerned that, since the adoption of its resolutions 47/19, 48/16, 49/9 and 50/10, further measures of that nature aimed at strengthening and extending the economic, commercial and financial embargo against Cuba continue to be promulgated and applied, and concerned also about the adverse effects of such measures on the Cuban people and on Cuban nationals living in other countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 50/10;

2. Reiterates its call on all States to refrain from promulgating and applying laws and measures of the kind referred to in the preamble to the present resolution in conformity with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and international law which, inter alia, reaffirm the freedom of trade and navigation;

3. Once again urges States that have and continue to apply such laws and measures to take the necessary steps to repeal or invalidate them as soon as possible in accordance with their legal regime;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the appropriate organs and agencies of the United Nations system, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution in the light of the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba".

General Assembly resolution 51/17

12 November 1996 Meeting 57 137-3-25 (recorded vote)

Draft by Cuba (A/51/L.15); agenda item 27.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States, Uzbekistan.

Abstaining: Bhutan, El Salvador, Estonia, Gabon, Georgia, Guatemala, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Liberia, Lithuania, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Morocco, Nepal, Oman, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Tajikistan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, United Arab Emirates.

Introducing the text in the Assembly, Cuba said that under the blockade, Cuba was denied access to the biggest and most important market in the world, as well as to the international financial institutions and other sources of financing available in developed countries. Cuba described material limitations and shortages resulting from the embargo in such areas as food, medicine, electricity and transportation. It estimated that the damages inflicted by the embargo were in excess of $60 billion.

Cuba stated that the Assembly had an opportunity not only to vote against an unfair policy but to ensure that no State, however powerful, might ignore international law. The bells that tolled for Cuba today, it said, might toll for another independent State tomorrow.

The United States said that it had the right, as did every nation, to choose with whom it traded, to protect the property rights of its citizens and to pursue its national interests. It stated that, by introducing the draft resolution in the Assembly, Cuba had manipulated the concerns of countries around the world to claim support for its reprehensible policies of intolerance and oppression. Cuba, it said, was the only nation in the region that did not govern in accordance with democratic principles, and had been condemned by the Assembly and the United Nations Human Rights Commission for its withholding of fundamental freedoms and human rights. The United States believed that the embargo provided leverage to promote peaceful change in Cuba. It also said that its policies included the important element of direct support for the Cuban people, including for human rights organizations and other NGOs working to better the lives of average Cubans.

Ireland, speaking on behalf of the European Union (EU), which supported the draft resolution, said that the Union unreservedly condemned the increasing number of violations of civil and political rights by the Government of Cuba over the last year. It was also concerned that the Cuban people continued to experience a decline in the level of economic and social rights that they enjoyed. While that was due in part to the United States embargo, the Cuban Government must accept a part of the blame for the difficult situation the Cuban people faced. The EU also reiterated its rejection of attempts to apply national legislation on an extraterritorial basis, and it rejected United States attempts to coerce other countries into complying with commercial measures it had adopted unilaterally against Cuba.

Aircraft incident

On 24 February 1996, two civil aircraft operated by an American-based group, Brothers to the Rescue, were shot down by the Cuban air force, resulting in the deaths of four persons. On 26 February, the United States requested [S/1996/130] an urgent meeting of the Security Council, "in view of the seriousness of the situation created by the shooting down" of the two planes.

The Council convened at 3:10 a.m. on 27 February, for 35 minutes, hearing one speaker, the representative of Cuba. He stated [S/PV.3634] that his Government had "irrefutable proof" that the planes were shot down in Cuban airspace, within its jurisdictional waters north of Havana. Furthermore, the pilots had been warned that defences had been activated. Despite those warnings and others, the United States had taken no effective measures to prevent unauthorized flights in Cuban airspace, which had occurred on many occasions. Cuba, in a note [S/1996/137&Corr.1] from its Foreign Ministry, had reported that the United States had called the incident, which it believed had occurred in international waters, a "blatant violation of international law and the norms of a civilized country".

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

Following consultations, the Security Council President issued a statement [S/PRST/1996/9] on 27 February, by which the Council strongly deplored the shooting down of the aircraft, and asked that the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) investigate the incident in its entirety.

The Security Council strongly deplores the shooting down by the Cuban air force of two civil aircraft on 24 February 1996, which apparently has resulted in the death of four persons.

The Council recalls that according to international law, as reflected in Article 3 bis of the International Convention on Civil Aviation of 7 December 1944 added by the Montreal Protocol of 10 May 1984, States must refrain from the use of weapons against civil aircraft in flight and must not endanger the lives of persons on board and the safety of aircraft. States are obliged to respect international law and human rights norms in all circumstances.

The Council requests that the International Civil Aviation Organization investigate this incident in its entirety and calls on the Governments concerned to cooperate fully with this investigation. The Council requests that the International Civil Aviation Organization report its findings to the Council as soon as possible. The Council will consider that report and any further information presented to it without delay.

Meeting number. SC 3635.

Communications. Between February and July, Cuba issued a number of statements [S/1996/141, 144, 152, 153, 154, 198, 370, 448, 449, 458, 470, 498 and 499], reiterating its position regarding the 24 February aircraft incident and commenting on related matters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION (March)

Cuba, on 29 February [A/50/883/Rev.1], asked that the Assembly resume its fiftieth session for one day to consider the agenda item on the "United Nations Decade of International Law", for the purpose of bringing to the Assembly's attention a situation which had undermined respect for the principle of the sovereignty of States, including their full and exclusive sovereignty over their land territory, territorial waters and airspace. The Assembly on 6 March heard statements by Cuba and the United States in that connection.

Cuba said that United States administrations had shown on countless occasions a hostile policy against Cuba, from attempts at diplomatic isolation to a systematic policy of blockade and economic aggression. Concerning the 24 February incident, Cuba said that the United States had been fully aware of the group organized in its territory using airplanes for "clearly provocative purposes", and there was no room for doubt that it was a paramilitary, terrorist organization in open war against Cuba.

"If we are to blame for any mistake in our behaviour", Cuba said, it was that it trusted a country as powerful as the United States "to be able to stop groups of irresponsible people from carrying out perfectly avoidable actions that could even drag it into a genocidal war against our people". Cuba said it assumed full responsibility for the patriotic action it had carried out in legitimate defence of the sovereignty and security of its country.

The United States said it had listened in vain for an apology. It had not sought and did not seek a confrontation with Cuba. But it could not be silent when its citizens were murdered and it would not allow the Cuban Government to transfer blame to the victims of its crime.

Cuba's shooting down of the aircraft violated the prohibition under customary international law against the use of weapons in such circumstances against civil aircraft in flight, the United States said. Behind the smokescreen of Cuba's rhetoric lay a simple matter of right and wrong. It was preposterous to believe that the four young men killed in unarmed planes were enemies of the Cuban people. The fundamental question was not a question about which there could be two co-equal arguments, nor was it a political question. The action taken was a blatant violation of international law and should be denounced as such by all members of the international community, the United States said.

ICAO action

On 6 March, the ICAO Council adopted a resolution directing the ICAO Secretary-General to initiate an investigation of the incident of 24 February.

ICAO report. By a 1 July note, the Secretary-General presented [S/1996/509] to the Security Council the report of the investigating team, which concluded that means other than interception, although available, had not been utilized, which conflicted with the ICAO principle that interception of civil aircraft be undertaken only as a last resort. The two civil aircraft, it said, were destroyed by air-to-air missiles fired by Cuban military planes. ICAO provisions were not followed in executing the interception. It was affirmed that the rule of customary international law, obliging States to refrain from using weapons against civil aircraft in flight, applied irrespective of whether or not such aircraft were within the territorial airspace of that State. At the same time, the report pointed out that the Protocol to the Chicago Convention concerning the use of weapons against civil aircraft had not entered into force and was not ratified either by Cuba or by the United States. The report recommended that each State party to the Chicago Convention ratify the Protocol and that States comply with it pending its ratification and formal entry into force.

The report stated that there were significant differences between the radar data provided by Cuba and by the United States, which could not be reconciled. The most reliable position estimates were considered to be those based on the recorded positions of, and observations by, surface vessels in the area. Based on that information, the report concluded that the two aircraft were shot down outside Cuban territorial airspace.

Also transmitted was a resolution adopted by the ICAO Council on 27 June, noting the report, expressing deep regret over the loss of four lives in the incident, and reaffirming its condemnation of the use of weapons against civil aircraft in flight as incompatible with elementary considerations of humanity, the rules of customary international law, and the standards and recommended practices set out by the Chicago Convention. The Council further reaffirmed the principles that States must refrain from the use of weapons against civil aircraft in flight, that the lives of persons on board and the safety of the aircraft must not be endangered during interception, and that each State party to the Chicago Convention should take measures to prohibit the use of civil aircraft under its jurisdiction for purposes inconsistent with the aims of the Convention. The Council urged all States to ratify Article 3 bis of the Convention as early as possible and to comply with its provisions pending its entry into force. It also instructed the Air Navigation Commission to study the adequacy of regulations relating to interception of civil aircraft.

Communications. Cuba, on 2, 3, 4 and 16 July [S/1996/520,525,532,570], alleged further unauthorized flights, threats to its sovereignty and other violations, citing ICAO regulations. On 17 July, it circulated as a United Nations document [A/50/1008-S/1996/577] a legal memorandum concerning flights by Brothers to the Rescue.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

After ICAO transmitted its report [S/1996/509] to the Security Council, a meeting was convened on 26 July to consider its findings and recommendations. The United States submitted a draft resolution, endorsing the ICAO conclusions and condemning the use of weapons against civil aircraft.

Before the vote, the United States said Cuba's position had been callous and contemptible. It had been consistent only in its refusal to admit the truth and in its determination to lie to the world over and over again. The remedy was to accept and adhere to the rule of law.

Cuba said the United States was manipulating information and falsifying data, making it practically impossible to analyse the 24 February incident. It also persisted in confusing the issue as to the supposedly civilian nature of the aircraft involved. Cuba intended to ask ICAO to examine the crucial question of the improper use of civil aviation.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 26 July, the Security Council adopted resolution 1067(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling the statement made by its President on 27 February 1996 strongly deploring the shooting down by the Cuban Air Force of two civil aircraft on 24 February 1996, which resulted in the death of four persons, and requesting the International Civil Aviation Organization to investigate this incident in its entirety and to report its findings to the Security Council,

Noting the resolution adopted by the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization on 6 March 1996, which strongly deplored the shooting down of the two civil aircraft and which directed the Secretary-General of the Organization to initiate an immediate investigation of the incident in its entirety in accordance with the statement made by the President of the Security Council on 27 February 1996 and to report on that investigation,

Commending the International Civil Aviation Organization for its examination of this incident, and welcoming the resolution adopted by the Council of the Organization on 27 June 1996, transmitting the report of the Secretary-General of the Organization to the Security Council,

Welcoming also the report of the Secretary-General of the International Civil Aviation Organization regarding the shooting down of civil aircraft N2456S and N5485S by Cuban MIG-29 military aircraft, and noting in particular the conclusions of the report,

Recalling the principle that every State has complete and exclusive sovereignty over the airspace above its territory, and that the territory of a State shall be deemed to be the land areas and territorial waters adjacent thereto, and noting in this connection that States shall be guided by the principles, rules, standards and recommended practices laid down in the Convention on International Civil Aviation of 7 December 1944 and its annexes (the Chicago Convention), including the rules relating to the interception of civil aircraft, and the principle, recognized under customary international law, concerning the non-use of weapons against such aircraft in flight,

1. Endorses the conclusions of the report of the International Civil Aviation Organization and the resolution adopted by the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization on 27 June 1996;

2. Notes that the unlawful shooting down by the Cuban Air Force of two civil aircraft on 24 February 1996 violated the principle that States must refrain from the use of weapons against civil aircraft in flight and that, when intercepting civil aircraft, the lives of persons on board and the safety of the aircraft must not be endangered;

3. Expresses deep regret over the loss of four lives and offers its deep sympathy and condolences to the bereaved families of the victims of this tragic event;

4. Calls upon all parties to acknowledge and comply with international civil aviation law and related internationally agreed procedures, including the rules and standards and recommended practices set out in the Chicago Convention;

5. Reaffirms the principle that each State shall take appropriate measures to prohibit the deliberate use of any civil aircraft registered in that State or operated by an operator who has his principal place of business or permanent residence in that State for any purpose inconsistent with the aims of the Chicago Convention;

6. Condemns the use of weapons against civil aircraft in flight as being incompatible with elementary considerations of humanity, the rules of customary international law as codified in article 3 bis of the Chicago Convention and the standards and recommended practices set out in the annexes of the Convention, and calls upon Cuba to join other States in complying with their obligations under these provisions;

7. Urges all States which have not yet done so to ratify as soon as possible the Protocol adding article 3 bis to the Chicago Convention, and to comply with all the provisions of the article pending the entry into force of the Protocol;

8. Welcomes the decision of the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization to initiate a study of the safety-related aspects of the report of the investigation with regard to the adequacy of standards and recommended practices and other rules relating to interception of civil aircraft with a view to preventing the recurrence of a similar tragic event;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1067(1996)

26 July 1996

13-0-2

Draft by United States (S/1996/596).

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Botswana, Chile, Egypt, France, Germany, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Indonesia, Italy, Poland, Republic of Korea, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China, Russian Federation.

The Russian Federation, explaining its vote, said the text remained unbalanced from the political and international legal standpoints. The resolution skirted over the underlying reasons for the incident and did not strike a balance between the two fundamental principles of the non-use of weapons against civil aircraft and the non-use of such aircraft for illegal purposes. It was common knowledge that the nature of the flights undertaken by Brothers to the Rescue, as well as the objectives pursued through them, were hardly compatible with the aims laid down for the use of civil aviation by the Chicago Convention.

China said that the Security Council should have based its resolution on that of ICAO, which was balanced and fair and represented the collective will of all ICAO members. Just as the provisions of international law on the non-use of weapons against civil aircraft should be respected, so should be, by the same token, those on the inviolability of territorial airspace and those against the abuse of civil aviation.

Ecuador-Peru

During 1996, Ecuador addressed to the Secretary-General several communications concerning efforts to settle the border dispute with Peru. On 26 January [A/51/60-S/1996/62], Ecuador transmitted the text of a release covering a 17-18 January meeting between the Foreign Ministers of Ecuador and Peru, in which the guarantor countries of the 1942 Protocol of Rio de Janeiro (Argentina, Brazil, Chile and the United States) also participated. The purpose of the meeting was to identify procedures for dealing with point 6 of the 1995 Itamaraty Declaration of Peace between Ecuador and Peru, which related to the solution of remaining impasses between the two countries. The Declaration, which was signed in Brasilia, Brazil, on 17 February 1995, confirmed the cessation of hostilities between the two countries. At the January meeting, agreements were reached on the continuation of the peace process, the venue for the talks, the composition of the delegations, the confidential nature of the talks, the role of the guarantor countries and the need to extend the Ecuador-Peru Military Observer Mission.

By a 20 February letter [A/51/69-S/1996/122], Ecuador transmitted the statement by the guarantor countries of the Protocol of Rio de Janeiro on the occasion of the first anniversary of the Itamaraty Peace Declaration, in which they expressed their satisfaction at the significant progress made towards complete detente in the relations between the two countries.

Ecuador, on 28 February [A/51/72-S/1996/148], transmitted the texts of two agreements, signed by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Ecuador and Peru at meetings held in Quito, Ecuador, on 22 and 23 February. They agreed that Peru would demobilize an observation post, retaining only 60 men there, and to submit to the guarantor countries lists of remaining impasses, in accordance with paragraph 6 of the Itamaraty Peace Declaration. They further agreed to form a working group of officials from the defence sectors of the two countries to design a bilateral mechanism to build confidence between them.

By an 11 March letter [A/51/77-S/1996/181], Ecuador transmitted a communique describing the presentation in Brasilia to the Ambassadors of Ecuador and Peru between the Foreign Minister of Brazil of the lists of remaining impasses, which included demarcation problems and problems arising from division of rivers according to geodesic lines.

On 1 July [A/51/188-S/1996/511], Ecuador transmitted a press release on a meeting between the Foreign Ministers of Ecuador and Peru (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 18-29 June), at which they identified procedures to be followed at talks on the remaining impasses.

In a 31 October letter [A/51/648-S/1996/900], Ecuador transmitted the Santiago Agreement (Santiago, Chile, 29 October), by the Foreign Ministers of Ecuador and Peru and the representatives of the guarantor countries, by which it was decided to begin, before the end of 1996, substantive talks on the border dispute.

Panama Canal

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 50/12 [YUN 1995, p. 461], the Secretary-General submitted an 8 August report [A/51/281] on Panama's initiative to convene a Universal Congress on the Panama Canal, to be held in Panama City in September 1997, with the participation of Governments, international bodies, public and private academic institutions, maritime users and shipping companies, to examine the role which the Canal should play in the twenty-first century.

The report described activities of the Organizing Commission, cooperation in organizing the Congress, and its programme. It noted that the Commission collaborated with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in facilitating a national dialogue on the Canal involving all sectors of Panamanian society. Issues on the agenda of the Congress were discussed at the "Panama 2000" meeting (Coronado, Panama, 26-28 May), which adopted a Final Declaration signed by the leaders of all participating delegations.

Communication. On 27 September [A/51/477], Panama communicated additional information on the organization of the Congress. It noted that, following consultations with interested parties, the Government had formulated a maritime strategy, to be included in the agenda of the Congress, which outlined Panama's policy on maritime matters and the principles and purposes of its integration in regional and international maritime activities. The letter described activities of the Transition Commission for the transfer of the Panama Canal and of the Interoceanic Region Authority, established by Panama in 1993 and charged with drafting a plan for the development of the interoceanic region. The letter also reviewed action by the Panama Canal Consultative Committee, established under the Panama Canal Treaty to advise the United States and Panama on matters of policy affecting the Council's operation, and activities of OAS in relation to the organization of the Congress. It was pointed out that the European Union had agreed to finance Canal transit projections up to the year 2060; the Organizing Commission believed the study of transit projects to be the keystone of the Congress.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/5.

Universal Congress on the Panama Canal

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/12 of 7 November 1995 supporting the convening of the Universal Congress on the Panama Canal, which is to be held at Panama City from 7 to 10 September 1997.

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 50/12,

Taking into account resolution 1376(XXVI-0/96) of the General Assembly of the Organization of American States entitled "The Panama Canal in the Twenty-first Century" and resolution 1379(XXVI-0/96) on the Universal Congress on the Panama Canal, both adopted on 6 June 1996, in which, inter alia, the General Assembly of the Organization of American States noted with satisfaction the harmonious transition process in which the Governments of Panama and the United States of America are participating, through their diplomatic missions, the Panama Canal Commission, the Interoceanic Region Authority and the Transition Commission,

Having considered the letter dated 27 September 1996 from the Permanent Representative of Panama to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General, outlining the work being done by the Government of Panama in connection with the holding of the Universal Congress on the Panama Canal and indicating the progress made by the Organizing Commission for that Congress, under the direction of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs,

Bearing in mind that on 7 September 1977 the Panama Canal Treaty and the Treaty concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal, known as the Torrijos-Carter Treaties, were signed in Washington, D.C., which stipulate that, at noon on 31 December 1999, the Canal, including all improvements, is to come under the control of the Republic of Panama,

Acknowledging the importance that the international community attaches to the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) and the positive implications that the strengthening of the nuclear-weapon-free regime established by that Treaty has for the permanent neutrality of the Panama Canal,

Welcoming the fact that, in anticipation of the holding of the Congress, Panama has ratified the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, universally recognized as the framework for the adoption of national, regional and global measures in maritime matters, in harmony with chapter 17 of Agenda 21 adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Reaffirming the utility of the Panama Canal for international maritime transport and the growth of the world economy, and the need to tackle the problems of interoceanic communication in the twenty-first century,

Noting with appreciation the activities being undertaken in various spheres by Governments, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in support of the holding of the Universal Congress,

Recognizing that the next stages of preparation and organization of the Congress require increased efforts and the availability of greater resources,

1. Notes with satisfaction the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 50/12;

2. Reiterates its firm support for the initiative of the Government of Panama, and urges it to continue to intensify its efforts to organize the Universal Congress on the Panama Canal at Panama City from 7 to 10 September 1997;

3. Renews its appeal to Member States generously to assist the Government of Panama, and calls upon inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to do likewise;

4. Again urges the competent organs, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme and the International Maritime Organization, to make every effort to provide assistance from within existing resources for the holding of the Universal Congress on the Panama Canal;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Universal Congress on the Panama Canal".

Cooperation with OAS

In response to General Assembly resolution 49/5 [YUN 1994, p. 435], the Secretary-General submitted a 19 August report with later addendum [A/51/297 & Add.1] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States (OAS). The report reviewed their joint participation in the International Civilian Mission to Haiti (see above), described consultations and information exchanges on matters of mutual interest held since 1994, and provided information on collaborative activities undertaken with OAS by the United Nations Secretariat, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations University, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), the World Food Programme (WFP), the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), the United Nations International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the International Maritime Organization (IMO), the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and UNDP.

At their third general meeting (New York, 17-18 April 1995), the two organizations signed an agreement on cooperation between their Secretariats. The Secretary-General of OAS participated in a meeting between the United Nations and regional organizations and arrangements (New York, 14 February 1996) on modalities for their cooperation in preventive diplomacy, peace-making and peacekeeping. The meeting reached consensus on the need for agreed consultation mechanisms and the importance of a well-defined division of labour, mutual diplomatic support and the avoidance of a multiplicity of negotiators. Also in 1996, the United Nations introduced a more flexible cooperation mechanism, providing for focal points within UN departments, offices, programmes and agencies and allowing direct contacts with the OAS General Secretariat.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/4.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/5 of 21 October 1994 relating to the promotion of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Recalling that the purposes of the United Nations are, inter alia, to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends,

Bearing in mind that the Charter of the United Nations provides for the existence of regional arrangements and agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action and whose activities are consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling that the Charter of the Organization of American States reaffirms these purposes and principles and provides that that organization is a regional agency under the terms of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting with satisfaction that the third general meeting between representatives of the United Nations system and of the Organization of American States was held at United Nations Headquarters on 17 and 18 April 1995,

Welcoming the fact that the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States attended the special commemorative meeting of the United Nations on the occasion of its fiftieth anniversary,

Expressing its satisfaction at the way in which the United Nations Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs and the Assistant Secretary-General of the Organization of American States have been performing their work of coordination between the two bodies,

Recalling its resolutions 47/20 A, 47/20 B, 48/27 B, 49/27 B, 49/5 and 50/86 B of 24 November 1992, 20 April 1993, 8 July 1994, 12 July 1995, 21 October 1994 and 3 April 1996, respectively,

Aware that the effective consolidation of a new international order requires regional action in harmony with that of the United Nations,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his initiative in convening a meeting between the United Nations and the heads of regional organizations on 15 and 16 February 1996, welcomes the participation of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States in that meeting, and recommends that similar meetings be held more frequently;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the close cooperation between the two organizations and, in particular, the support which they both gave to the conduct of the parliamentary municipal and presidential elections in Haiti from June to December 1995, and at the joint operations of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti;

3. Also expresses its satisfaction at the support given by the Electoral Observer Mission in the general elections in Nicaragua held on 20 October 1996, when the United Nations system also provided technical assistance;

4. Further expresses its satisfaction at the close cooperation between the two organizations in the observation and verification of the electoral process, and recognizes the effectiveness of that cooperation when it is requested by national authorities;

5. Welcomes the meetings between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, as well as the regular meetings between their representatives throughout the period under review;

6. Also welcomes the signature on 17 April 1995 of the Collaboration Agreement between the United Nations and the Organization of American States;

7. Emphasizes that the cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States should be in accordance with their respective mandates, scope and composition and should take place in forms that are suited to each specific situation, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

8. Recommends that general meetings between representatives of the United Nations system and the Organization of American States be held when deemed necessary to continue to review and appraise progress, and that sectoral and focal point meetings be held on areas of priority or mutually agreed issues, continuing with the modality of operating through the focal points already established;

9. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Secretary-General in the promotion of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States, and expresses the hope that he will continue to strengthen the mechanism for cooperation between the two organizations;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States".

General Assembly resolution 51/4
 24 October 1996 Meeting 40 Adopted without vote
 34-nation draft (A/51/L.5/Rev.1 & Rev. 1/Add.1); agenda item 22.

Cooperation with CARICOM

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 49/141 [YUN 1994, p. 251], the Secretary-General reported [A/51/299] on 20 August on cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community (CARICOM). He described consultations and information exchange between the two organizations since 1994, and provided information on collaborative activities undertaken with CARICOM by the United Nations Secretariat, the United Nations Children's Fund, UNCTAD, UNDP, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the United Nations Population Fund, UNDCP, UNHCR, INSTRAW, the International Labour Organization (ILO), UNESCO, the Pan American Health Organization and the World Health Organization, IMF, the International Telecommunication Union, IMO, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

The report noted that ECLAC and CARICOM had signed a memorandum of understanding for cooperation in January 1995 and that the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and of CARICOM held consultations in October 1995 and in February 1996, addressing modalities for cooperation in such areas as preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peacekeeping. Cooperation between the two organizations was also considered by the CARICOM Standing Committee of Foreign Ministers (twenty-second meeting, Kingston, Jamaica, 13-14 May 1996) and by the Conference of Heads of Government of CARICOM (seventeenth meeting, Bridgetown, Barbados, 3-6 July). In the final communique of the Standing Committee, the Ministers agreed that areas of cooperation should include follow-up to global conferences, advancement of a new international human order, issues related to the law of the sea, implementation of the 1994 Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 1994, p. 783], poverty reduction, peacekeeping, diplomatic training, governance and development in the Caribbean, and strengthening of the CARICOM Regional Secretariat's information base. In the final communique of the Conference, transmitted to the Secretary-General by Antigua and Barbuda on 12 August [A/51/295], the Heads of Government of CARICOM noted the development of closer relations between the region and the United Nations, and stressed the importance of furthering the Community's possible role in the development of peace and security within the Caribbean region.

The Secretary-General further noted that a new cooperation mechanism provided for direct contacts between focal points within the UN system and CARICOM.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/16.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/8 of 16 October 1991, by which it granted observer status to the Caribbean Community, and 49/141 of 20 December 1994,

Noting with satisfaction the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community,

Recalling that the Charter of the United Nations contemplates the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters as are appropriate for regional action and other activities consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Taking into account the reports of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace" and "An Agenda for Development" and the related consultations within the United Nations, including the various working groups on those subjects,

Taking note of the final communique of the twenty-second meeting of the Standing Committee of Ministers Responsible for Foreign Affairs, held at Kingston on 13 and 14 May 1996, and the final communique of the seventeenth meeting of the Conference of Heads of Government of the Caribbean Community, held at Bridgetown from 3 to 6 July 1996, which, inter alia, outlines areas of cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community and stresses the importance of furthering the possible role of the Community in the development of peace and security within the Caribbean region, and expresses appreciation to the Secretary-General of the United Nations for promoting this heightened level of cooperation,

Recalling the request made of the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Caribbean Community, to promote meetings between their representatives for consultations on policies, projects, measures and procedures that will facilitate and broaden cooperation and coordination between the two organizations,

Welcoming the inter-agency consultations between the Caribbean Community and its associated institutions, the Inter-American Development Bank, the Organization of American States and the United Nations on the first conference on governance and development in the Caribbean,

Affirming the need to strengthen the cooperation that already exists between entities of the United Nations system and the Caribbean Community in the areas of economic and social development, as well as of political and humanitarian affairs,

Convinced of the need for the coordinated utilization of available resources to promote common objectives of the two organizations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community, as well as his efforts to strengthen that cooperation;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to continue taking the necessary measures for promoting and expanding cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community in order to increase the capacity of the two organizations to attain their objectives;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Caribbean Community, or their representatives, to hold consultations with a view to signing an agreement on cooperation between the two organizations;

4. Notes the areas of cooperation approved by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs in the final communique of the twenty-second meeting of the Standing Committee of Ministers Responsible for Foreign Affairs, namely, follow-up to the global conferences; the advancement of the new international human order; law of the sea; follow-up and implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States; the development of poverty reduction programmes; peacekeeping; diplomatic training; governance and development in the Caribbean; and the strengthening of the Regional Secretariat Information Base;

5. Also notes the special role played by States members of the Caribbean Community in the restoration of democracy in Haiti and in its participation in the United Nations Mission in Haiti;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Caribbean Community, to assist in furthering the development of peace and security within the Caribbean region;

7. Recommends that the first general meeting between representatives of the Caribbean Community and its associated institutions and of the United Nations system be held in 1997 for the purpose of holding consultations on projects, measures and procedures to facilitate and strengthen cooperation between those organizations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Caribbean Community, or their representatives, to encourage inter-agency, sectoral and focal point meetings on areas of priority or mutually agreed issues;

9. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to cooperate with the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Caribbean Community in order to initiate, maintain and increase consultations and programmes with the Caribbean Community and its associated institutions in the attainment of their objectives, and in this connection welcomes the special relationship between the Caribbean Community and the United Nations Development Programme;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community".

Chapter IV

Asia and the Pacific

During 1996, conflicts and turmoil in parts of the region of Asia and the Pacific were dealt with by the United Nations. Dominating regional concerns were those associated with Iraq, Afghanistan, Tajikistan and the Korean peninsula. Other matters considered during the year involved situations relating to Iran, Cambodia, India and Pakistan.

Complex weapons inspections in Iraq—the result of the 1991 ceasefire agreement following the Gulf War—continued to be conducted. Despite those efforts, however, the United Nations Special Commission on Iraqi disarmament (UNSCOM) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) were unable to report to the Security Council that Iraq was in full compliance with its obligations under Council resolution 687(1991). On 20 May, a Memorandum of Understanding was signed, setting out procedures for implementing Council resolution 986(1995), which authorized arrangements, known as the "oil-for-food" formula, by which Iraq would be permitted to sell up to $1 billion worth of oil, the proceeds from which could be used for humanitarian purposes to assist the Iraqi people.

The fall of Kabul in September marked a significant change in the situation in Afghanistan, which was wracked by ongoing civil war, often exacerbated by various forms of foreign involvement. The fundamentalist Taliban group, after taking over the capital city and a number of provinces, instituted practices considered violations of human rights, particularly of women, which were noted in United Nations reports. The execution in September of former President Najibullah, detained for some four years in Kabul, was cited as "brutal" by the Secretary-General, who earlier in the year had appealed for his release. Negotiations aimed at a cessation of the ongoing hostilities were a focus of the work of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan.

Consultations also continued during the year with regard to the conflict in Tajikistan, where fighting occurred sporadically despite a ceasefire agreement signed in mid-July. By the end of the year, the two sides had agreed on establishing a Commission on National Reconciliation, which was to function during a transition period until a new parliament was established. The United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UN-MOT) continued to investigate ceasefire violations and maintained liaison with the Collective Peacekeeping Forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) and the office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE).

The United Nations Command continued to monitor the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement, which the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) termed "obsolete" and insisted should be replaced. The General Assembly in October commended IAEA for continuing to seek full compliance by the DPRK with its obligations under its safeguards agreement with the Agency.

Although not acted upon, communications were addressed to the Secretary-General and the Security Council involving India and Pakistan over the long-standing issue of Jammu and Kashmir.

Iraq

During 1996, the United Nations Special Commission on Iraqi disarmament (UNSCOM) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) continued to conduct inspections of Iraqi sites and facilities in connection with the ongoing monitoring and verification of its non-proscribed activities in the missile, chemical, biological and nuclear areas. They also continued on-site inspections and technical interviews with Iraqi authorities in order to conclude verification of Iraq's full, final and complete declarations of its proscribed weapons programmes and related facilities in those areas. Since, despite their best efforts, both bodies remained unable to report to the Security Council that Iraq was in full compliance with its weapons obligations under Council resolution 687(1991), the ceasefire resolution, there continued to be no agreement in the Council that the necessary conditions existed for a modification of the sanctions regime established by that resolution.

In March, the Council approved an export/import monitoring mechanism, the final component of a multi-layered control mechanism to detect any re-emergence of the weapons denied to Iraq. In May, a Memorandum of Understanding was concluded between the UN Secretariat and the Government of Iraq containing arrangements ("oil-for-food") for implementing the 1995 Council resolution authorizing States to permit the import of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products in limited amounts over specific periods, as a temporary measure to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people. On 9 December, the Secretary-General reported to the Council President that the required arrangements had been completed and that the Secretariat would carry out its responsibilities on the day after the President had informed the Council of his receipt of the Secretary-General's report.

Following a missile attack on Iraq by the United States on 3 and 4 September, Iraq called on the United Nations to condemn the United States for its conduct, as well as for its unilateral extension northwards, as far as the suburbs of Baghdad, of the southern no-fly zone.

The General Assembly, by decision 51/434 of 16 December, decided to defer consideration of the item entitled "Consequences of the Iraqi occupation of and aggression against Kuwait", and to include it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session.

UN Special Commission

The United Nations Special Commission on Iraqi disarmament, established by the Secretary-General pursuant to the Iraq-Kuwait ceasefire resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172], continued to be headed in 1996 by Rolf Ekéus, Executive Chairman. It carried out its operations from its headquarters in New York, the Baghdad Monitoring and Verification Centre (BMVC) in Iraq and its field office in Muharraq, Bahrain.

UNSCOM continued to be financed from funds released from the escrow account established under Security Council resolution 778(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 320] for the receipt of Iraqi frozen assets and from voluntary contributions from a number of States. Since its inception in 1991, it had spent close to $120 million from those two main sources. Contributions in kind (aircraft, facilities, equipment, materials, expert personnel), if given a monetary value, would amount to approximately twice the cash expenditures.

The status, privileges and immunities of UNSCOM, IAEA and other UN bodies involved in implementing resolution 687(1991) continued to be regulated by Council resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 188] and 715(1991) [Ibid., p. 194], by the 1993 exchange of letters between the United Nations and Iraq [YUN 1993, p. 414], and by six-month agreements with Bahrain, which in 1996 were signed on 1 April and 1 October.

In accordance with Council resolution 1051(1996), the Executive Chairman began to submit consolidated progress reports every six months; the first such report was submitted on 11 April [S/1996/258] and the second on 11 October [S/1996/848]. While the formal requirement to report to the Council had been reduced, the Executive Chairman made clear that, as in the past, UNSCOM would report on an ad hoc basis, if developments so required.

Site access

As noted in UNSCOM's April report, the Deputy Executive Chairman visited Baghdad from 7 to 11 March; he discussed the overall status of UNSCOM's work and reviewed a number of operational matters. While there had been progress in many areas, he emphasized once again the need for verifiable information and for stricter compliance with monitoring requirements.

On 9 March, the Executive Chairman of UNSCOM submitted a written report [S/1996/182] to the Security Council President regarding the situation that had arisen on 8 March in Baghdad, when Iraq was denying a 13-member UNSCOM inspection team (UNSCOM 143) access to a facility (Ministry of Irrigation) designated for inspection, despite its obligations under Council resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991) to grant immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to any such facility. The team was finally granted entry into the facility the following day, after more than 17 hours' delay. It was quickly joined by other inspectors so that some 28 of them were finally involved in the inspection.

Whether or not Iraq had, in the interim, disposed of documents and other items in the facility relating to its proscribed weapons programmes, there could be no doubt that the Council's prompt action—calling in the Permanent Representative of Iraq to the United Nations in order to secure Iraq's compliance with its obligations, authorizing a press briefing to that effect and agreeing to meet again within a matter of hours if a satisfactory solution was not found—had been decisive in obtaining Iraq's decision to permit a full inspection of the facility to proceed under circumstances acceptable to UNSCOM, the report stated.

The Council, responding on 12 March [S/1996/183], expressed concern over the 8 March incident, as well as a further incident on 11 March, when an inspection team was again denied immediate and unconditional access to a site similarly designated for inspection and granted access only after an unacceptable delay.

The Council confirmed its full support for the continued efforts of UNSCOM inspection teams on the basis of its relevant resolutions, endorsed the contents of the Executive Chairman's letter, and confirmed in detail Iraq's obligations under specific Council resolutions relating to on-site inspection of its biological, chemical and missile capabilities and to the Council-approved UNSCOM plan for ongoing monitoring and verification. The Council considered that Iraq's delay in permitting the inspection team currently in Iraq access to the sites in question constituted a clear violation by Iraq of resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991) and reiterated that Iraq must allow the UNSCOM inspection team immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to all sites designated by UNSCOM for inspection.

On 17 March, Iraq conveyed information [S/1996/204] intended to clarify the facts relating to the operations of the UNSCOM inspection team between 7 and 17 March, with special reference to the 9 March letter of UNSCOM's Executive Chairman to the Council. Iraq stated that UNSCOM inspections of two ministries—the Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 312] and the Ministry of Irrigation on 8 March 1996—did not yield the materials they had been suspected of housing. The same held true for the inspections of two Republican Guard facilities (11 and 15 March), a headquarters of the Special Guards and nine other sites. The request to inspect the second ministry, besides having been made on a weekend, required consultations and study among officials on the basis of UNSCOM undertaking, as agreed in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 419], to respect Iraq's sovereignty, internal security and dignity, and its right to industrial, scientific and technological progress and development in all fields not proscribed under Council resolution 687(1991). Similarly, access to the Republican Guard headquarters had been requested on Friday, 15 March.

Iraq explained that all such requests required time for appropriate arrangements to be made for the efficient conduct of the inspections, such as ensuring the presence of the official in charge of the site and of a suitable number of personnel to answer questions, to provide keys to rooms and lockers, and to meet other inspection requirements. Iraq advanced a series of reasons as to why it was unrealistic to have raised the possibility that equipment or documents might have been removed from those sites during the time in which entry to them had been delayed, not the least because the site had been surrounded by the UNSCOM team and under air surveillance at the same time. Finally, Iraq said it was quite wrong and baseless to conclude that the delays in question constituted a pattern of impeding the work of UNSCOM.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (19 March)

In the light of the foregoing communications, the Security Council met on 19 March and, following consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the statement below [S/PRST/1996/11] on its behalf:

The Security Council has noted with growing concern that the incident described in the letter of 9 March 1996 from the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission to the President of the Security Council and the further incident on 11 March 1996 in which an inspection team was again not allowed immediate and unconditional access to a site designated by the Commission under its resolution 687(1991) were followed by further such incidents on 14 and 15 March 1996. In all of these cases access was subsequently granted only after unacceptable delays.

The Security Council reiterates its full support for the Special Commission in the conduct of its inspections and the other tasks entrusted to it by the Council.

The Security Council notes the letter of 17 March 1996 to its President from the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq. It recalls that, under paragraph 9 (b) (i) of section C of Security Council resolution 687(1991), Iraq is required to permit "immediate on-site inspection of Iraq's biological, chemical and missile capabilities, based on Iraq's declarations and the designation of any additional locations by the Special Commission itself". By its resolution 707(1991), the Council also expressly demanded that Iraq "allow the Special Commission, the International Atomic Energy Agency and their inspection teams immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to any and all areas, facilities, equipment, records and means of transportation which they wish to inspect". The obligation was furthermore confirmed in the Commission's plan for ongoing monitoring and verification which was approved by the Security Council in resolution 715(1991); in this context the Council recalls the notes from the Secretary-General of 21 July 1993 and 1 December 1993 [YUN 1993, pp. 419, 422].

The Security Council considers that Iraq's delays in permitting the inspection team recently in Iraq access to the sites concerned constitute clear violations by Iraq of the provisions of resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991). The Council demands that the Government of Iraq allow the Special Commission inspection teams immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to all sites designated by the Commission for inspection in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the Council.

Meeting number. SC 3642.

Following the failure of Iraq to cooperate with an UNSCOM mission in May, UNSCOM dispatched a team (UNSCOM 150, 10-16 June) to inspect a series of sites which were believed to be involved in the concealment of proscribed weapons and material and which were associated primarily with the Republican Guard and Special Republican Guard. Iraq's denial of access to two of the sites, on 11 and 12 June, was duly relayed to the Council by the Executive Chairman.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (12 and U June)

In the light of the latest information from the UNSCOM Executive Chairman, the Security Council met on 12 June and adopted resolution 1060(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions, and in particular its resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, 707(1991) of 15 August 1991 and 715(1991) of 11 October 1991,

Recalling also the letter from the Executive Chairman of the United Nations Special Commission to the President of the Security Council of 9 March 1996, the letter from the President of the Security Council to the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission of 12 March 1996, the statement made at its 3642nd meeting on 19 March 1996 by the President of the Security Council, and the report of the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission of 11 April 1996,

Reiterating the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Kuwait and Iraq,

Recalling in this context the notes from the Secretary-General of 21 July 1993 and 1 December 1993,

Noting the progress made in the work of the Special Commission towards the elimination of Iraq's programmes of weapons of mass destruction, and outstanding problems, reported by the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission,

Noting with concern the incidents on 11 and 12 June 1996, reported to members of the Council by the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission, when access by a Special Commission inspection team to sites in Iraq designated for inspection by the Commission was excluded by the Iraqi authorities,

Emphasizing the importance the Council attaches to full compliance by Iraq with its obligations under resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991) to permit immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to the Special Commission to any site which the Commission wishes to inspect,

Emphasizing the unacceptability of any attempts by Iraq to deny access to any such site,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Deplores the refusal of the Iraqi authorities to allow access to sites designated by the Special Commission, which constitutes a clear violation of the provisions of Security Council resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991);

2. Demands that Iraq cooperate fully with the Special Commission in accordance with the relevant resolutions; and that the Government of Iraq allow the Special Commission inspection teams immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to any and all areas, facilities, equipment, records and means of transportation which they wish to inspect;

3. Expresses its full support to the Special Commission in its efforts to ensure implementation of its mandate under the relevant resolutions of the Council;

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1060(1996)

12 June 1996 Meeting 3672 Adopted unanimously

2-nation draft (S/1996/426).

Sponsors: United Kingdom, United States.

The adoption of resolution 1060(1996) notwithstanding, the Iraqi authorities again refused access to UNSCOM 150, which renewed attempts on 13 June to inspect other designated sites. Having been briefed by the Executive Chairman of that continued refusal, the Council met again on 14 June and, after consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the following statement [S/PRST/1996/28] on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council condemns the failure of Iraq to comply with its resolution 1060(1996) of 12 June 1996 by refusing access to sites designated by the Special Commission on 13 June 1996. Coming after the denial of access on 11 and 12 June 1996, this new dimension of non-compliance marks a serious step backwards in Iraq's cooperation with the Special Commission. The Council considers that these events constitute a clear and flagrant violation of its resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991).

The Security Council reiterates its full support for the Special Commission in the conduct of its inspections and the other tasks entrusted to it by the Council. The Council rejects attempts by Iraq to impose conditions on the conduct of inspections by the Special Commission.

The Security Council demands once again that Iraq comply with the relevant resolutions of the Council and, in particular, allow the inspection teams of the Special Commission immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to any and all areas, facilities, equipment, records and means of transportation which they wish to inspect.

The Security Council requests the Chairman of the Special Commission to visit Baghdad as soon as possible with a view to securing immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to all sites which the Special Commission wishes to inspect, and to engage in a forward-looking dialogue on other issues under the Commission's mandate. It further requests the Chairman to report immediately afterwards on the results of his visit and on the impact of Iraqi policies on the mandate and work of the Special Commission.

Meeting number. SC 3674.

Report of UNSCOM Executive Chairman (24 June). In keeping with the Presidential statement of 14 June above, the UNSCOM Executive Chairman undertook a mission to Baghdad from 19 to 22 June. Among the UNSCOM staff accompanying him were his Deputy Chief of Operations and the Director of BMVC. Three plenary meetings and three working group sessions, each of two to over three hours' duration, were held with the Iraqi representatives, who included, among others, the Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister of Oil, a Senior Adviser in the Office of the President, the Director of the Military Industrialization Corporation, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq, a Foreign Ministry Under-Secretary and the Director of the National Monitoring Directorate. The Executive Chairman also met privately three times with the Deputy Prime Minister. Details of the mission were contained in the Executive Chairman's report transmitted to the Security Council on 24 June [S/1996/463].

At the discussions, the Executive Chairman stated that his mandate required him to obtain assurances from Iraq regarding access demanded by the Council and also to engage in a forward-looking dialogue on other issues. He hoped such dialogue would result in a joint programme of action and that the issue of access would be dealt with in tandem with the contents of the programme of action devoted to the future; with a positive approach towards the discussions, it should be possible to achieve favourable results. The Deputy Prime Minister stated that Iraq would continue to cooperate with UNSCOM but that, currently, a crisis of confidence existed. Iraq was seriously concerned that the sites recently designated for inspection involved issues of its sovereignty and national security, which must be safeguarded before access could be granted to ministries, State security sites and military sites. A draft joint programme of action and the text of a joint statement on the issue of access, prepared by the Executive Chairman, were discussed, as was a counter-proposal from Iraq. Having examined Iraq's concerns regarding inspections of sites involving matters of sovereignty and national security, the Executive Chairman notified Iraq that he would issue special inspection modalities that would take account of those concerns and still achieve the inspection objectives and at the same time fully safeguard the rights and the status, privileges and immunities of UNSCOM.

The mission achieved agreement on a joint programme of action and a joint statement signed by the Executive Chairman and Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister on 22 June. The joint programme recorded Iraq's intention to submit before the end of June its official declarations containing full, final and complete disclosures (FFCDs) of its proscribed programmes in the non-nuclear (missile, chemical and biological) areas. It indicated the means and techniques of verifying declarations and, to accelerate verification, identified the fundamental areas on which work was to concentrate: the material balance of proscribed weapons and their major components, the unilateral destruction of proscribed items, the further provision of documentation, and identification of measures used to retain proscribed items. Also recorded was the agreement of both sides to conduct meetings every two months at the political level in order to devote attention to fundamental issues, review progress and direct further efforts. UNSCOM would report regularly to the Council on progress in implementation of the joint programme of action.

By the 22 June joint statement, Iraq reiterated its commitment to continue its cooperation with UNSCOM and IAEA in carrying out its obligations in accordance with Council resolution 687(1991) and other relevant resolutions, and undertook to secure their immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to all sites designated for inspection. For its part, UNSCOM undertook to carry out operations under its mandate and to exercise its rights with full respect for the legitimate security concerns of Iraq. Iraq and UNSCOM agreed to intensify their work with the aim of making it possible for UNSCOM to report as soon as possible to the Council that Iraq had met its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991), as specified in paragraph 22 of that resolution. The joint statement affirmed the agreement to conduct meetings at the political level every two months.

At the end of the mission, on 22 June, Iraq handed to the Executive Chairman its chemical and biological declarations. On 2 July, it submitted its missile declaration.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (23 August)

The Security Council met on 23 August, very shortly before the Executive Chairman's departure for his bimonthly meeting in Baghdad. Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the statement below [S/PRST/1996/36] on its behalf:

The Security Council, on the eve of the planned visit to Baghdad by the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission, strongly reaffirms its full support for the Special Commission in the conduct of its inspections and the other tasks entrusted to it by the Council. The Security Council reiterates the importance it attaches to full compliance by Iraq with the relevant resolutions of the Council. It underlines the important role of the Special Commission's inspection teams and demands once again that they be given immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to any and all areas, facilities, equipment, records and means of transportation which they wish to inspect, and Iraqi officials whom they wish to interview, so that the Special Commission may fully discharge its mandate.

In this context, the Security Council remains gravely concerned at the failure by Iraq to comply fully with its resolution 1060(1996) of 12 June 1996 and with other resolutions of the Council dealing with the Special Commission. The denial by Iraq, on repeated occasions, of immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to sites which they wished to inspect and the attempts made by the Government of Iraq to impose conditions on the conduct of interviews with Iraqi officials by the Special Commission constitute a gross violation of its obligations under resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991). The Council notes that these actions also contradict commitments made by the Government of Iraq in its Joint Statement of 22 June 1996 with the Special Commission, and urges the Government of Iraq to respect these commitments. The Council reminds the Government of Iraq that only full compliance with its obligations under the relevant resolutions will enable the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission to present his report in accordance with section C of resolution 687(1991). The Council will continue to consider how best to ensure Iraq's full compliance.

The Security Council requests the Executive Chairman to report to it on the results of his visit.

Meeting number. SC 3691.

Reports of Executive Chairman (September-December). The next bimonthly meeting took place in Baghdad from 26 to 28 August. As noted in his report of 3 September covering that meeting [S/1996/714], the Executive Chairman's team met, in addition to the Iraqi officials at the June meeting, the Permanent Representative of Iraq to the United Nations, other Foreign Ministry members and Iraqi missile, chemical and biological experts involved with Iraq's implementation of section C of Security Council resolution 687 (1991). The sessions included three long plenary meetings on 26 and 27 August, and a meeting of more than an hour between the Executive Chairman and the Deputy Prime Minister on 28 August, followed by a concluding round-up plenary session.

Discussions centred on the issue of site access, interview procedures, verification of Iraq's FFCDs, concealment of proscribed items, security and safety of UNSCOM personnel, the rights, privileges and immunities of UNSCOM and IAEA, Iraq's obligations with respect to the conduct of ongoing monitoring and verification (OMV), and UNSCOM air operations. Iraq considered that the access problems of recent weeks had arisen from confusion and misunderstandings and reaffirmed its obligations to secure immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to all sites designated for inspection. At Iraq's request, the Executive Chairman outlined preliminary assessments of the FFCDs received in June and July, stating his intention to send to Baghdad in September a team each in the missile, chemical and biological areas, to pursue verification of the FFCDs. As to UNSCOM's concerns that relatively minor, but highly significant, quantities of proscribed items remained unaccounted for, Iraq stated that the weapons and components still unaccounted for were not of a size or character to constitute any threat to regional peace and security. UNSCOM could not accept Iraq's evaluation and pointed to its responsibilities under the Council resolutions to make a full accounting.

The Executive Chairman stressed that the issue of concealment of proscribed items remained a prime objective for inspection because of Iraq's attempts to block or sidetrack investigation of its concealment efforts. The Deputy Prime Minister formally stated that no proscribed weapons or components or related documents were concealed by Iraq. He asked the Commission to refrain, at least for a certain period, from conducting further on-site inspections and interviews relating to the subject. The Executive Chairman responded that activities to clarify concealment efforts must continue as part of the verification of the FFCDs.

As recorded in UNSCOM's October report [S/1996/848], the Under-Secretary of Iraq's Ministry of Foreign Affairs called on the Executive Chairman in New York on 11 September to follow up the August discussions which the latter had had with Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister. In also addressing UNSCOM's current air operations in Iraq, the Under-Secretary renewed the earlier assurances of Iraq that it would not interfere with those operations. At the next bimonthly meeting, held in Baghdad from 29 September to 3 October, the Deputy Executive Chairman of UNSCOM provided an initial assessment of the first round of missions to verify the FFCDs submitted in June and July. Much of the discourse on the Iraqi side amounted to personal attacks on the Deputy Executive Chairman and did not address the matters at hand, the report said.

In New York on 4 October, the Executive Chairman met with Iraq's Foreign Minister to discuss the points raised by the Minister during his intervention in the General Assembly debate of 2 October. They also discussed his 7 September letter to the Secretary-General repeating an allegation that UNSCOM was being exploited by the United States to gather military and intelligence materials which would be directed against the security of Iraq. The Executive Chairman refuted those allegations as baseless and noted that the Russian authorities had denied that the remarks attributed to an unnamed representative of the Intelligence Service, as reported by the Interfax News Agency, represented the official position of the Russian Government. The Minister simply said that Iraq had the right to use any ma-materials in support of its position. Iraq's conduct in that matter, the Executive Chairman stated, called into question its often stated willingness to cooperate with UNSCOM.

Following his briefing of the Council regarding the UNSCOM October report, the Executive Chairman travelled to Baghdad for the next bi-monthly meeting, held from 19 to 21 October [S/1997/301]. The discussions focused mainly on that report. The Executive Chairman explained the reasons for UNSCOM's continuing concerns over various uncompleted aspects of its mandate and pointed out that, on the basis of information provided by Iraq, it could not yet determine that all proscribed weapons, components and materials had been disposed of as Iraq maintained. He pressed Iraq to provide more documentation, as required by the relevant Council resolutions, to support its June and July declarations. However, the Iraqi side did little to deal with those concerns; instead, it dwelt on those parts of the UNSCOM October report that it considered overly negative. Thus, no progress was made on substantive issues.

As agreed at the meetings, the UNSCOM Deputy Executive Chairman visited Baghdad in November to discuss the OMV system and ways to improve its functioning. The UNSCOM team presented general points of principle, as well as specific areas of growing concern regarding Iraq's cooperation in the monitoring operations. The Iraqi side outlined areas in which it had specific requests of UNSCOM and gave commitments to improve its OMV declarations.

The next bi-monthly meetings took place in Baghdad from 8 to 11 December, at which the Executive Chairman made a presentation, including details of what UNSCOM knew of the disposition of prohibited missiles, and pointed to the fact that the missiles that Iraq had acknowledged having imported had not all been accounted for. The UNSCOM experts demonstrated that none of the variety of analyses of information provided by Iraq produced a zero material balance of the proscribed missiles known to have existed at the end of the Gulf War. Furthermore, there were many other outstanding issues, including the rationale for Iraq's programme of secret destruction and its recently admitted diversion of missiles, components and production tools, even during that destruction. The Deputy Prime Minister acknowledged that Iraq could do more to support its declaration that all proscribed missiles had been destroyed and undertook further to address UNSCOM concerns. The Executive Chairman made clear that Iraq's refusal to permit the removal from Iraq of missile remnants for UNSCOM analysis was a violation of UNSCOM's rights and a serious impediment in accounting for the proscribed missiles. Iraq continued to block removal of the remnants, however.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (30 December)

Having been apprised of Iraq's refusal to comply with UNSCOM's request to remove missile engines from the country, the Security Council met on 30 December and, following consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the statement below [S/PRST/1996/49] on its behalf:

The Security Council notes that the Special Commission and the Government of Iraq previously agreed that the investigation of unilateral destruction of proscribed items is a fundamental area to accelerate the verification of the Iraqi Declarations. In this regard, the Council deplores the refusal by Iraq to allow the Special Commission to remove approximately 130 missile engines from Iraq for analysis by a team of international experts under the Special Commission. The Council notes that such action complicates the implementation by the Special Commission of its mandate.

The Security Council reaffirms that a full accounting for Iraq's missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres is a necessary prerequisite to enable the Commission to report that Iraq has complied with the requirements of section C of resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991. The Council fully supports the intention of the Special Commission to carry out thoroughly the examination and analysis in the missile area, either on the basis of dispatching international teams of experts to Iraq or examining the relevant items abroad.

The Security Council reminds the Government of Iraq of its obligation to comply with the provisions of the relevant resolutions and the need to cooperate fully with the Special Commission in order to enable it to report that the requirements of section C of resolution 687(1991) are met. In this perspective, the Council affirms that Iraq is required to allow the Special Commission to remove the missile engines from its territory. The Council welcomes any proposal from Member States to offer their national facilities to the Special Commission in order to enable it to conduct the necessary analysis, if and when the Commission deems it necessary.

The Security Council strongly reaffirms its full support for the Special Commission in the conduct of its mandate under the relevant resolutions of the Council. The Council reaffirms the right and privileges of UNSCOM as stated in its previous relevant resolutions and in particular its resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991).

Meeting number. SC 3729.

Helicopter incident

On 15 June, Iraq transmitted the findings of its inquiry [S/1996/436] into a 14 June incident reported to the Security Council by the Executive Chairman alleging that Iraqi air defence positions had aimed at an UNSCOM helicopter flying in the Abu Ghraib area. The findings revealed that a number of soldiers, upon sighting the Iraqi-escorted UNSCOM helicopter, manned positions near their guns—a normal procedure and not intended to pose a threat. The Chief Inspector of UNSCOM 150 had been so informed, and the Iraqi Director of the National Monitoring Directorate had also made clear that no guns had been aimed in the direction of the helicopter or in any other direction, a fact which could be verified with the helicopter crew or with the leader of the UNSCOM Aerial Inspection Team.

On 11 July, the UNSCOM Executive Chairman transmitted [S/1996/546] to the Council the letter he had addressed that day to the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq stating that, in the light of the findings of the Iraqi inquiry, he felt it necessary to set the record straight by providing a copy of a detailed report of the incident by the Chief Inspector of UNSCOM 150. According to the report, the Iraqi pilot on board the UNSCOM helicopter, which left Rashid airbase at 0802 hours on 14 June for an overflight of site 8 (south-west of Baghdad), formally denied overflight access to the site on the grounds that it was a sensitive military installation; overflight access in the vicinity of site 14 was also denied. The helicopter was then told not to fly north of the old Jordan Road in the vicinity of site 8, a flight path accepted by Iraq during previous inspections, but should continue to stay approximately 6 kilometres south-west of site 14. While communication was being established with the Director of the National Monitoring Directorate, the UNSCOM 150 team on the ground around site 8 observed Iraqi soldiers manning an anti-aircraft gun close to the site and in the helicopter's flight path. The team's attempt to videotape that action had been interrupted by Iraqi minders as armed Iraqi soldiers appeared. Asked by the UNSCOM Deputy Chief Inspector, then at site 8, for an explanation as to why the anti-aircraft guns were being manned while the UNSCOM helicopter was flying nearby, the Iraqi representatives claimed the guns were manned 24 hours a day but could not explain why they had not been manned before the helicopter's arrival. An Iraqi military commander at the site agreed that the positions would not be manned during any further helicopter flights. The Chief Inspector of UNSCOM 150 strongly protested against Iraq's actions, which he deemed a threat against UNSCOM, hence his decision to return the helicopter to base. The Director of the National Monitoring Directorate reaffirmed Iraq's position that UNSCOM would not be allowed to overfly both sites and maintained that the anti-aircraft position had not been manned.

At mid-morning, UNSCOM was informed that Iraq had reversed its decision and would allow direct overflight of site 14; as to site 8, UNSCOM would be allowed to fly only north of the old Jordan Road, some distance away from the site. However, Iraq continued to deny UNSCOM its rights to photograph and videotape the sites. A new UNSCOM flight arrived over site 14 at 1238 hours. The ground team at site 8 reported having observed only one manned anti-aircraft gun at 1140 hours and all three positions manned by 1230 hours. The team's attempts to videotape and photograph the activity at the anti-aircraft gun positions were again interrupted by the Iraqis. The team was informed that, as a security alert was in progress, the anti-aircraft positions would remain manned but that no orders had been given to threaten the helicopter. Since the explanation was not sufficient to assure the flight's safety, the helicopter returned to base at 1500 hours without aerial surveillance of site 8.

It was obvious, the report concluded, that the manning of the anti-aircraft positions was directly related to the UNSCOM helicopter's mission to overfly site 8. The Iraqi authorities were thus in violation not only of their obligations under the Council resolutions but also of their own specific undertakings during the day on 14 June.

National implementation measures

The April report of UNSCOM noted that, for almost four and a half years, Iraq had been in breach of its obligation to enact national measures to implement its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991), resolution 707(1991) and the OMV plans—among the obligations remaining to be fulfilled before UNSCOM could report to the Council that, in its view, Iraq had taken the actions required of it under section C of resolution 687(1991). Enactment of the necessary legislation had taken on renewed urgency in view of the Council-approved export/import mechanism, whose implementation required a variety of actions by Iraq that would appear to include new national administrative, if not legislative, measures. As noted in the UNSCOM October report, the Executive Chairman raised the issue with the Deputy Prime Minister at the political-level meeting in August, who responded that he would handle the matter but gave no indication of any time-frame for enacting the measures. The report noted that that remained an impediment to implementing resolution 687(1991).

Other activities

Inspections

UNSCOM reports (11 April and 11 October). The UNSCOM reports, dated 11 April [S/1996/258] and 11 October [S/1996/848], provided information on all aspects of UNSCOM's work envisaged under Council resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991), 715(1991), 1051(1996) and 1060(1996). The first covered the period from 17 December 1995 to 11 April 1996 and the second from 11 April to 11 October 1996. The reports gave an overview of the continuing on-site inspections and interviews conducted by UNSCOM to verify Iraq's declarations on its past proscribed programmes and related facilities in ballistic missiles and in chemical and biological weapons; the OMV inspections of non-proscribed activities or programmes in those three weapons areas; joint monitoring with IAEA under the import/export control mechanism of all dual-use items that might have applications in the weapons programmes proscribed to Iraq in the missile, chemical and biological areas (relevant to the UNSCOM mandate) and in the nuclear area (relevant to the IAEA mandate); and other activities to assist IAEA with regard to its nuclear inspections.

Also described were developments concerning UNSCOM activities in Iraq, as well as the political-level meetings with Iraqi officials at which the Executive Chairman of UNSCOM sought agreement on ways of removing the serious obstacles to the completion of UNSCOM's mandate, brought on by Iraq's failure fully to meet its obligations under the Council resolutions (see above). In addition, the reports updated information on the organizational, administrative and financial aspects of UNSCOM and the BMVC.

The April report noted that, since the last six-monthly report of 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 489], UNSCOM had made considerable progress towards the accomplishment of the two tasks entrusted to it under resolution 687(1991). The first—identification and disposal of all chemical and biological weapons and all stocks of agents and related sub-systems and components, and all research, development, support and manufacturing facilities, as well as of all ballistic missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres and related major parts and repairs and production facilities—had still not been fully accomplished, however. Although large quantities of those items had been successfully eliminated, relatively minor but highly significant quantities remained unaccounted for, causing concern that Iraq might still be engaged in proscribed activities. With respect to the second task—creation and activation of a system to verify Iraq's compliance with its obligation not to reacquire the proscribed items—the final building block of a multi-layered control mechanism to detect any re-emergence of the weapons denied to Iraq had been put in place by Council resolution 1051(1996), namely, an export/import control mechanism. That represented a major step towards the final implementation of the weapons provisions of resolution 687(1991).

The report underscored that, in all areas for which UNSCOM had responsibility, Iraq had yet to provide sufficient evidence that it did not still possess proscribed weapons or materials related to them. UNSCOM's concern stemmed from the absence of documents or actual evidence to substantiate Iraq's claims that, in 1991, in flagrant violation of its obligations under resolution 687(1991), it had secretly destroyed large quantities of biological and chemical weapons, and missiles and launchers, instead of declaring them to UNSCOM for verification and supervised destruction. In the light of Iraq's 1995 admission [YUN 1995, p. 487] of such unilateral destruction, reportedly carried out in the belief that their revelation would complicate matters and prolong the monitoring and verification process, it was imperative that Iraq provide solid documentary evidence, which UNSCOM was convinced it still retained, on the proscribed items involved and on their destruction, thereby enabling UNSCOM to establish the material balance. To overcome the obstacle of insufficient evidence, which precluded a report to the Council that no prohibited items remained in Iraq, UNSCOM had had to launch search inspections such as UNSCOM 143 (see below). In that regard, UNSCOM noted with interest President Saddam Hussein's speech on 6 January, on the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Iraqi Army, in which, for the first time, he had publicly instructed his people to do their best to respond to legal requests flowing from the relevant Council resolutions concerning Iraq.

Also of concern to UNSCOM were Iraq's procurement of prohibited and dual-use items from abroad, regarding which UNSCOM emphasized the need for a firm OMV system and early implementation of the export/import control mechanism (see below); and the fact that Iraq had yet to enact legislation on national measures [YUN 1994, p. 476] to implement its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991), under resolution 707(1991) and under the OMV system itself, which could not become fully operational without that legal framework in place.

Following were the highlights of UNSCOM's main activities during 1996, as taken from its two reports.

Verification of declarations of proscribed programmes

Missiles. UNSCOM continued intensive inspection and monitoring activities in the area of proscribed programmes relating to missiles with a range of more than 150 kilometres. A special expert mission was dispatched to Iraq from 1 to 5 February 1996 to follow up the high-level talks held between UNSCOM and Iraq towards the end of 1995 (26-30 December) regarding the many discrepancies in the FFCD submitted by Iraq in November that year as the final version to which it would make no further substantive additions or corrections. As a result, Iraq, on 27 February 1996, submitted a "Draft full, final and complete declaration of the Iraqi national ballistic missile programme". The document incorporated significant new information with substantial documentary support, particularly on Project 1728, Iraq's major project for the development and production of long-range missile liquid propellant engines.

A team of 44 inspectors (UNSCOM 143) was sent to Iraq on 8 March to carry out a number of no-notice inspections on sites suspected of concealing items and documents of relevance to UNSCOM. They included three administrative complexes in Baghdad, four military sites and a number of industrial and storage locations. In addition, three sites were surveyed using advanced sensor technologies to detect the possible burial of proscribed items. The inspections yielded no proscribed items or documents. Under normal circumstances, UNSCOM would have had confidence in that finding. However, Iraq had denied the team immediate and unconditional access to five of the sites, with delays ranging from 2 to over 17 hours. It had also imposed restrictions on the usual UNSCOM aerial surveillance in support of ground inspections and, in some cases, impeded the team from securing visual observation or inspection of the sites. Iraq's actions had had a detrimental effect on the team's ability to arrive at unambiguous and definitive findings and thus on UNSCOM's confidence that indeed proscribed items and documents had not been present at the sites before the team finally gained access to them.

In the course of further missions dispatched to Iraq in order to present UNSCOM's assessments and concerns and jointly to establish the best methods to achieve the speediest progress, Iraq provided another draft in May, which did not reflect the same level of progress shown by the February draft. Responding to UNSCOM's wish to continue the cooperative process to resolve major gaps in the draft declarations so that subsequent verification would be quick and smooth, Iraq submitted its official FFCD in the missile area in July, containing only minor changes to the May draft, however. UNSCOM's concerns regarding the official FFCD, based on previous inspection findings and analysis of information obtained from different sources, were outlined by the Executive Chairman during his August visit to Baghdad, including, in particular, declarations on Iraq's unilateral destruction of proscribed items, the material balance of weapons and key components and some issues associated with proscribed programmes.

In accordance with interview modalities established during that visit, the first missile verification inspection (UNSCOM 162/BM 43) took place from 20 to 24 September. It concentrated on the material balance and the issue of unilateral destruction relating to operational missiles and to Project 1728 equipment and components. The inspection established a previously undisclosed fact that, in July 1991, Iraq had diverted from destruction the majority of the project's production tools and components, as well as some missiles. However, in an official letter of 3 October 1996, Iraq admitted to having ordered all its major missile establishments in July 1991 to load key priority tools, dies and parts on 11 trucks that had been turned over to two unidentified officers said to be relatives of Lieutenant-General Hussein Kamel, former Minister of Industry and Military Industrialization, who had left Iraq for Jordan on 8 August 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 483]. The materials were unearthed in March 1992 from a concealment site and destroyed, and Iraq claimed that their remnants were subsequently shown to UNSCOM teams in late 1992. Iraq also declared that during 1991 three proscribed missiles had been diverted from unilateral destruction in July, reportedly to preserve reference material for the future production of similar missiles, but were destroyed in October. In a further letter, Iraq provided additional details related to specific missiles destroyed after the adoption of resolution 687 (1991). UNSCOM would continue verification of the official missile FFCD in keeping with priorities and methods laid down in the joint programme of action (see p. 208).

Chemical weapons. The April report [S/1996/258] noted that UNSCOM's objectives in the chemical weapons area were to be able to verify that no chemical weapons agents, munitions, proscribed equipment and materials remained in Iraq and to be fully confident that UNSCOM's monitoring regime encompassed all equipment and materials in Iraq that could be used to produce chemical weapons. Neither could be achieved without a verifiable chemical weapons FFCD from Iraq as required by the relevant Council resolutions. While the large number of documents obtained in August 1995 marked a major step forward in showing that Iraq's chemical weapons programme was more developed and wider in scope than previously admitted, the documents were incomplete and material on certain important areas was absent; there were no production records for the years of declared activities, including the most important phase after 1988 when Iraq conducted research and development, inter alia, on more advanced chemical weapons agents and delivery systems. Confronted with those reporting shortcomings, Iraq submitted another draft FFCD in November 1995. Following discussion of that draft with senior Iraqi representatives in New York in December, Iraq provided a new draft FFCD in February 1996, judged to be still incomplete in respect of: the level of expertise achieved in research and development of chemical weapons agents, synthesis methods, large-scale production techniques, weaponization and delivery systems; precursor production capabilities; dual-use equipment within the civilian chemical industry; and foreign suppliers to the programme.

Given the importance of obtaining documents to support Iraq's declarations, UNSCOM took the initiative to find documents on its own. Thus, from 24 February to 10 March, an international team of 26 inspectors (UNSCOM 129 B) excavated six sections of the bombed-out buildings and searched other areas and buildings at Al Muthanna, former site of Iraq's largest chemical weapons research and production facility and subsequently the central destruction site for its chemical weapons [YUN 1991, p. 192]. The team discovered and retrieved some 5,000 pages of printed materials—numerous bound volumes, memoranda, organizational papers, booklets, letters, archive records, approximately 100 computer disks, books, catalogues and published journals, some intact and some in fragments. The team also removed some 80 munitions and components, including 122-millimetre artillery chemical warheads and 155-millimetre "binary" artillery shells. Iraq contributed to the effort by providing technical support, including labour and heavy engineering equipment. Translation and analysis of the newly recovered material were underway.

According to UNSCOM's October report [S/1996/848], an UNSCOM team held a seminar in Baghdad in May with senior Iraqi officials to clarify certain military aspects of the chemical and biological weapons programmes and to obtain additional information on the rationale and time-frame for the production of different agents and munitions. Iraq refused to provide more details on the issue, but submitted a third official FFCD of its past chemical weapons programmes on 22 June 1996, the first having been presented in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 309] and the second in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 486]. Verification of that official FFCD began with an inspection team (UNSCOM 140/

CW 29) dispatched to Iraq in August 1996, which focused on verifying the declared material balance of chemical weapons produced in 1989-1990, the unilateral destruction thereof, and the removal of equipment at the end of 1990 and early 1991 from chemical weapons-related sites and its final disposition. In contravention of the joint programme of action, Iraq refused to undertake a serious review of those concerns, whereupon the Executive Chairman presented Iraq with documentary evidence that Iraq had produced chemical agents in 1989.

In response to a further verification team (UNSCOM 161/CW 30) which visited Iraq to discuss the chemical production issues raised by the Executive Chairman in August, Iraq on 1 October handed over seven letters to be considered integral parts of its chemical FFCD; they did not, however, fully address UNSCOM's concerns. After an initial evaluation, UNSCOM believed that the June chemical FFCD had not fully met the chemical declaration requirements. UNSCOM'S understanding of the first and oldest phase of Iraq's chemical weapons programme (the creation of a massive number of tactical chemical weapons) was considerably greater than that of the two more recent phases—integration of the programme into Iraq's civilian chemical industry and production of more stable and storable chemical agents, and design and production of strategic chemical weapons, aspects not disclosed in the FFCD. It was UNSCOM's belief that a full understanding of those recent phases was absolutely necessary before it could complete its task and verify that nothing of the proscribed items remained in Iraq. Since not all of UNSCOM's requests for information from Governments of former suppliers had yielded responses, particularly in respect of large amounts of precursors and munitions delivered to Iraq, UNSCOM faced serious delays in the verification process.

Biological weapons. To assist Iraq to submit an improved version of its November 1995 draft FFCD [YUN 1995, p. 488] in the biological area, assessed as seriously flawed, inspection teams (UNSCOM 123 and 139) conducted detailed discussions in Iraq from 12 to 18 January 1996 and from 24 February to 1 March on weaponization and bulk agent production for weapons purposes. At the January discussions, Iraq produced a number of documents substantiating parts of its declaration. It disclosed that the Al Hakam factory had been intended to be a specialized filling facility for biological warfare munitions and that the R-400 air bombs were assembled there. No resolution was achieved, however, on the fundamental issue of munitions filling and claimed covert destruction of biological warfare warheads for missiles. The February discussions were less fruitful, with no additional documentation provided. However, they resulted in a draft FFCD on 8 March and, subsequently, a May version. Although incorporating a number of improvements, those declarations failed to provide significant additional documentation and, in general, lacked a coherent account consistent with information available to UNSCOM.

Through its investigations, UNSCOM had been able to identify a number of facilities that played a key role in Iraq's biological weapons programme, including the Al Hakam factory, a dedicated biological warfare research, development, production and munition filling facility; and the foot-and-mouth-disease vaccine plant, extensively used for the production of biological warfare agents. Pending a decision on the disposal of those facilities and equipment, as called for by Council resolution 687(1991), Iraq had accepted UNSCOM's request that all activity at the two sites cease and had assisted in establishing appropriate deactivation and surveillance measures.

On 22 June, Iraq submitted a declaration said to contain its official FFCD on the proscribed biological weapons programme, consisting of 622 pages and essentially a copy of the May draft. To verify the document, a biological team (UNSCOM 146/BW 36) was dispatched to Iraq to interview personnel who had been involved in biological weaponization and in the unilateral destruction of biological warfare munitions. That mission was terminated due to Iraq's refusal to cooperate under the established interview procedures. After the Executive Chairman's visit to Iraq in August, interviews were successfully conducted in September; the information gained proved valuable, although not always in agreement with statements in the FFCD. It was the assessment of UNSCOM that the June biological FFCD as written was not credible. Major sections were incomplete, inaccurate or unsubstantiated. Materials acquired for proscribed activities were understated. Biological warfare agent production figures were unsupported for the years 1987, 1988 and 1989. (Expert estimates of production quantities of biological weapons agents, either by equipment capacity or by consumption of growth media, far exceeded the declared amounts.) Data on weapons field trials were inaccurate. Weapons and agent destruction was undocumented.

UNSCOM stated that, until Iraq was able to provide a full accounting of biological weapons produced and destroyed unilaterally, it could not report to the Council that no such weapons and their components remained in Iraq.

Ongoing monitoring and verification

Missile area. UNSCOM continued to manage the monitoring system in the missile area that became operational in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 475]. The resident missile teams at BMVC pursued monitoring of a large number of missile-related sites. Other elements of the monitoring system, including over 40 cameras at 16 sites, continued to operate effectively, providing essential data for analysis and integration into the overall picture of Iraq's activities under OMV. To augment its monitoring capabilities, two specialized teams were sent to Iraq, one in December 1995 (UNSCOM 130) and another from 25 March to 2 April 1996 (UNSCOM 137), to perform in-depth technical analysis of Iraq's current development and manufacturing programmes for non-proscribed missile systems, namely, those with a range of less than 150 kilometres.

Following Iraq's 1995 admission [YUN 1995, p. 488] that, since the adoption of Council resolution 687(1991), it had carried out an undeclared programme to modify a Volga/SA2 surface-to-air missile system to a surface-to-surface application with a range of over 100 kilometres, UNSCOM decided in January 1996 to apply monitoring modalities—tagging and periodic inspection—to all Volga missiles. Three UNSCOM tagging missions undertaken since April had tagged nearly 90 per cent of the missiles identified by Iraq. The remainder and relevant spare parts were expected to be tagged by the end of the year.

UNSCOM continued to obtain information regarding Iraq's efforts to acquire components and technologies for specific use in missile activities, in contravention of sanctions established by relevant Council resolutions. Despite Iraq's claim that all items procured or contracted for were intended for non-proscribed missiles, its failure to declare them and its attempts to conceal acquisition activities were of great concern. A further investigation of that practice was made by an inspection team (UNSCOM 144) from 2 to 6 April. UNSCOM would continue to pursue the matter vigorously.

In particular, UNSCOM expressed great concern over the 1995 delivery to Iraq of a large number of sophisticated missile guidance and control components used in missiles with ranges over thousands of kilometres. A special team (UNSCOM 120) dispatched to Iraq from 14 to 18 January 1996 to investigate that delivery had collected important information and documents, and Iraq included a summary account of the case in its February missile FFCD. Nevertheless, contradictions and ambiguities remained in the account of events as declared and as to the nature and scope of the acquisition. UNSCOM was awaiting responses from Governments which might possess relevant information, particularly those with jurisdiction over the suppliers revealed by Iraq as being involved in the case.

Chemical area. At the end of the second reporting period, 11 October 1996, the BMVC chemical group consisted of 10 inspectors and laboratory technicians, with backgrounds in analytical chemistry, process chemistry, explosive ordnance disposal and chemical weapons. The group had conducted over 350 inspections of some 115 facilities subject to OMV, including: research and development institutes; universities; munitions and chemical production sites; chemical storage sites; and pesticide-, fertilizer- and petrochemical-related facilities with dual-use equipment or chemicals. Installed in the most important of those were remote-controlled sensor systems, as were 30 remote-controlled cameras in six sites and 19 air samplers in eight. Nine additional air samplers and 10 portable sampling pumps for air sampling at facilities without sensors had also been made available to the group. In addition to the BMVC chemical laboratory equipment (gas chromatography system with flame photometric detector and a mass selective detector to analyse air samples), also received were a Fourier transform infrared spectrometer for air monitoring, a melting-point determination device for laboratory use, an ultrasonic pulse echo system and two types of hydrazine detection systems.

The chemical monitoring group had participated in joint missions with other monitoring groups, thereby enhancing knowledge of sites and maximizing use of limited resources. With the considerable increase in Iraq's civilian chemical activities, there had been continued discovery of undeclared dual-use equipment. In many cases, Iraq's explanations for the movement and use of such equipment had been inadequate.

Biological area. Between October 1995 and 11 April 1996, the resident biological monitoring team conducted over 170 inspections of 82 sites; 152 inspections of 86 sites were conducted during the second reporting period (11 April-11 October). In addition to the regular monitoring teams, special teams were assigned to inspect key biotechnology sites. Sampling operations were carried out and remote monitoring surveillance was upgraded. Remote sensor monitoring with over 20 cameras was employed at three sites to increase monitoring capabilities. Iraq's cooperation with UNSCOM's monitoring activities had generally been good since the biological monitoring went into full operation in 1995. However, cases of negligence on the part of Iraq's personnel in meeting monitoring requirements had recently been observed, such as failure to provide monthly information on some sites, non-response to requests for declarations on specific facilities or activities, removal or breaking of UNSCOM tags and seals, and failure to provide timely notifications of activities under monitoring. Such accuracy and timeliness had become an issue that must be addressed by Iraq; otherwise, UNSCOM would need to reconsider the basis of its current monitoring regime and more intrusive procedures might need to be introduced.

Nuclear area. In accordance with the relevant Council resolutions, UNSCOM continued to give IAEA logistical and other operational support for the efficient discharge of the OMV plan in the nuclear area, as follows: to designate sites for inspection (687(1991), paragraph 9 (b) (i); 715(1991), paragraph 4 (a)); to decide on requests from Iraq to move or destroy any material or equipment relating to its nuclear weapons programme or to its other nuclear activities (707(1991), paragraph 3 (c)); and to perform such other functions, in co-operation in the nuclear field with the IAEA Director General, as might be necessary to coordinate activities under the OMV plans, including making use of commonly available services and information to the fullest possible extent, in order to achieve maximum efficiency and optimum use of resources (715(1991), paragraph 4 (c)). In continuing implementation of the integration between their monitoring methods, IAEA and UNSCOM held regular coordination meetings alternately at UNSCOM headquarters (New York) and IAEA headquarters (Vienna) to exchange information and plan cross-disciplinary inspections; UNSCOM experts regularly updated the IAEA monitoring photo library in Vienna.

During the two reporting periods, UNSCOM reviewed and concurred with a number of IAEA evaluations of Iraqi requests to relocate materials and equipment within Iraq or to use some materials under seal. It participated in routine IAEA monitoring inspections, provided airlift for the transport of IAEA inspectors and equipment from Bahrain to Iraq and within Iraq, and made available BMVC working rooms and other supporting facilities to the IAEA Action Team. UNSCOM experts continued to participate in the IAEA negotiations with the Russian Federation regarding the sale of the nuclear fuel removed from Iraq and reprocessed in that country. Various new alternatives were being examined in an effort to bring that matter to a conclusion.

Two joint nuclear/missile-related inspections were conducted: in February 1996, which examined design work on a missile to deliver a nuclear warhead; and in May, to investigate material presented in Iraq's February draft chemical FFCD, to which was attached a report on the efforts undertaken by Iraq's Atomic Energy Commission and Military Industrialization Commission from August to December 1987 to combine the effectiveness of conventional aerial munitions with the spreading of radioactive materials. The report contained information on: details of zirconium irradiation in a nuclear reactor at Al Tuwaitha; calculations of the biological effect of the irradiated materials; field experiments of the distribution of isotopes and the design of munitions; the 1,400-kilogram special aerial bomb known as Qa-Qa-28, four prototypes of which were constructed for the purpose of the experiment; and field tests carried out by Iraq's Air Force and the Muthanna State Establishment. The report concluded that the two Iraqi institutions had the capability to manufacture a bomb containing irradiated materials but that a study should be made aimed at reducing the weight of the bomb. The draft chemical FICD admitted the production of 100 empty casings of a smaller calibre aerial bomb, that 75 bombs had been sent to the Al-Qa-Qa State Establishment and that 25 bombs which had been sent to Al Muthanna were destroyed unilaterally in the summer of 1991; no mention was made of the fate of the 75 bombs. UNSCOM continued to press for additional documents in order to verify the declarations regarding those munitions.

Baghdad Monitoring and Verification Centre

The October 1996 report of UNSCOM [S/1996/848] noted that, during the first two years of its existence, the Baghdad Monitoring and Verification Centre had been modified, improved and equipped to meet the requirements of the six resident monitoring teams and short-term inspection teams. The communications system had been upgraded to expand the repeater network, thereby enabling inspectors directly to contact the Centre from a radius of 75 kilometres using only hand-held radios; the external telephone lines had been increased to secure communications, principally to UNSCOM headquarters in New York and to the IAEA Action Team in Vienna. The infrastructure to support the remote camera monitoring system had been improved and the field camera system refurbished to provide a more reliable transmission capability and to simplify maintenance of recording equipment.

Attention was drawn to the C-160 fixed-wing aircraft and the CH-53 helicopters provided by Germany since 1991 for UNSCOM aerial operations. In view of Germany's wish to terminate that air support, UNSCOM obtained five UH-1H helicopters from Chile, which were deployed in August, allowing Germany to withdraw its helicopter unit. To enable the withdrawal also of the C-160 aircraft, UNSCOM temporarily leased a commercial L-100 aircraft on 2 October. The leasing arrangement was an unexpected expenditure, for which additional contributions were required if UNSCOM was to maintain its current level of inspection activities.

Attention was further drawn to the need to increase the number of BMVC vehicles and to replace those currently in use.

Communications. In connection with UNSCOM's right to conduct aerial surveillance by its own helicopter and high-altitude aircraft, Iraq, in six letters [S/1996/26, S/1996/206, S/1996/367, S/1996/586, S/1996/727, S/1996/932] addressed to the Security Council President during the year, condemned and protested against the continued violation of its airspace by a United States U-2 "spy plane" on the pretext of conducting aerial surveys for UNSCOM. According to Iraqi records, the U-2 always took off from Saudi Arabian territory and, by the end of August 1996, had made 317 overflights, for a total flight time of 1,419 hours and 7 minutes since such operations began in August 1991. Iraq's 19 March 1996 letter [S/1996/206] noted that the repeated use of the U-2 served only the policy of the State to which it belonged. On the basis of what it claimed was an admission by United States Secretary of Defense William Perry, in a 6 February address to the Institute for Near East Political Studies in Washington, D.C., that the United States was indeed involved in operations to expose Iraq to plots aimed at bringing about a change of regime, Iraq said it could assert that the U-2 overflights, which compiled military information on Iraq, were among the means employed to attain that objective.

The facts that had come to light since the aircraft was first brought into use, Iraq pointed out, made it incumbent on the United Nations to re-examine the continued "coercive" use of the aircraft by the United States to violate Iraq's airspace in a manner totally incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations as they related to respect for the sovereignty of all Member States. Iraq took the opportunity to reaffirm its consistent request—made in 112 letters including the current ones—that Iraqi aircraft be used instead of foreign aircraft in the work of UNSCOM in order to exclude their possible use for purposes prejudicial to Iraq's sovereignty and security [S/1996/727].

Export/import monitoring

The Security Council met on 27 March 1996 to take action on the export/import monitoring mechanism finalized in 1995 by UNSCOM and IAEA, in coordination with the Committee established by Council resolution 661(1990) of 6 August 1990 (Sanctions Committee on Iraq). The Council approved the mechanism by adopting resolution 1051(1996).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 687(1991) of 8 April 1991, and in particular section C thereof, its resolution 707(1991) of 15 August 1991 and its resolution 715(1991) of 11 October 1991 and the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification approved thereunder,

Recalling that in paragraph 7 of its resolution 715(1991) to the Committee established under resolution 661(1990), the Special Commission and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to develop in cooperation a mechanism for monitoring any future sales or supplies by other countries to Iraq of items relevant to the implementation of section C of resolution 687(1991) and other relevant resolutions, including resolution 715(1991) and the plans approved thereunder,

Having considered the letter of 7 December 1995 to the President of the Council from the Chairman of the Committee established under resolution 661(1990), annex I of which contains the provisions for the mechanism for export/import monitoring called for in paragraph 7 of resolution 715(1991),

Recognizing that the export/import monitoring mechanism is an integral part of ongoing monitoring and verification by the Special Commission and the IAEA,

Recognizing that the export/import mechanism is not a regime for international licensing, but rather for the timely provision of information by States in which companies are located which are contemplating sales or supplies to Iraq of items covered by the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification and will not impede Iraq's legitimate right to import or export, for non-proscribed purposes, items and technology necessary for the promotion of its economic and social development,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves, pursuant to the relevant provisions of its resolutions 687(1991) and 715(1991), the provisions for the monitoring mechanism contained in annex I of the aforementioned letter of 7 December 1995, subject to the terms of this resolution;

2. Approves also the general principles to be followed in implementing the monitoring mechanism contained in the letter of 17 July 1995 from the Chairman of the Special Commission to the Chairman of the Committee established under resolution 661(1990) which is contained in annex II of the aforementioned letter of 7 December 1995;

3. Affirms that the mechanism approved by this resolution is without prejudice to and shall not impair the operation of existing or future non-proliferation agreements or regimes on the international or regional level including arrangements referred to in resolution 687(1991), nor shall such agreements or regimes impair the operation of the mechanism;

4. Confirms, until the Council decides otherwise under its relevant resolutions, that requests by other States for sales to Iraq or requests by Iraq for import of any item or technology to which the mechanism applies shall continue to be addressed to the Committee established under resolution 661(1990) for decision by that Committee in accordance with paragraph 4 of the mechanism;

5. Decides, subject to paragraphs 4 and 7 of this resolution, that all States shall:

(a) Transmit to the joint unit constituted by the Special Commission and the Director General of the IAEA under paragraph 16 of the mechanism the notifications, with the data from potential exporters, and all other relevant information when available to the States, as requested in the mechanism on the intended sale or supply from their territories of any items or technologies which are subject to such notification in accordance with paragraphs 9, 11, 13, 24, 25, 27 and 28 of the mechanism;

(b) Report to the joint unit, in accordance with paragraphs 13, 24, 25, 27 and 28 of the mechanism, any information they may have at their disposal or may receive from suppliers in their territories of attempts to circumvent the mechanism or to supply Iraq with items prohibited to Iraq under the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification approved by resolution 715(1991), or where the procedures for special exceptions laid down in paragraphs 24 and 25 of the mechanism have not been followed by Iraq;

6. Decides that the notifications required under paragraph 5 above shall be provided to the joint unit by Iraq, in respect of all items and technologies referred to in paragraph 12 of the mechanism, as from the date agreed upon between the Special Commission and the Director General of the IAEA and Iraq, and in any event not later than sixty days after the adoption of this resolution;

7. Decides that the notifications required under paragraph 5 above shall be provided to the joint unit by all other States as from the date the Secretary-General and the Director General of the IAEA, after their consultations with the members of the Council and other interested States, report to the Council indicating that they are satisfied with the preparedness of States for the effective implementation of the mechanism;

8. Decides that the information provided through the mechanism shall be treated as confidential and restricted to the Special Commission and the IAEA, to the extent that this is consistent with their respective responsibilities under resolution 715(1991), other relevant resolutions and the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification approved under resolution 715(1991);

9. Affirms, if experience over time demonstrates the need or new technologies so require, that the Council would be prepared to review the mechanism in order to determine whether any changes are required and that the annexes to the plans for ongoing monitoring and verification approved under resolution 715(1991), which identify the items and technologies to be notified under the mechanism, may be amended in accordance with the plans, after appropriate consultations with interested States and, as laid down in the plans, after notification to the Council;

10. Decides also that the Committee established under resolution 661(1990) and the Special Commission shall carry out the functions assigned to them under the mechanism, until the Council decides otherwise;

11. Requests the Director General of the IAEA to carry out, with the assistance and cooperation of the Special Commission, the functions assigned to him under the mechanism;

12. Calls upon all States and international organizations to cooperate fully with the Committee established under resolution 661(1990), the Special Commission and the Director General of the IAEA in the fulfilment of their tasks in connection with the mechanism, including supplying such information as may be sought by them in implementation of the mechanism;

13. Calls upon all States to adopt as soon as possible such measures as may be necessary under their national procedures to implement the mechanism;

14. Decides that all States shall, not later than 45 days after the adoption of this resolution, be provided by the Special Commission and the Director General of the IAEA with information necessary to make preparatory arrangements at the national level prior to the implementation of the provisions of the mechanism;

15. Demands that Iraq meet unconditionally all its obligations under the mechanism approved by this resolution and cooperate fully with the Special Commission and the Director General of the IAEA in the carrying out of their tasks under this resolution and the mechanism by such means as they may determine in accordance with their mandates from the Council;

16. Decides to consolidate the periodic requirements for progress reports under its resolutions 699(1991), 715(1991) and this resolution and to request the Secretary-General and the Director General of the IAEA to submit such consolidated progress reports every six months to the Council, commencing on 11 April 1996;

17. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1051(1996)

27 March 1996 Meeting 3644 Adopted unanimously

5-nation draft (S/1996/221).

Sponsors: France, Germany, Italy, United Kingdom, United States.

As described in UNSCOM's April report [S/1996/258], the mechanism was designed to ensure timely information to UNSCOM and IAEA on the import to and export from Iraq of all items relevant to section C of Council resolution 687(1991). It relied on notifications by Iraq and supplier States of planned supplies of dual-use items and technology to Iraq, on inspection of those items upon their arrival in Iraq and on monitoring at the end-user site. The provisions of the mechanism required that Iraq make a detailed declaration about its intention to import a dual-use item prior to import; that the Government of the supplier company notify the intention to supply such item prior to export and then confirm details of the actual export to Iraq; and that Iraq make a similar declaration upon arrival of the item in the country. The mechanism also required Governments to provide information they might receive of any attempts by Iraq to acquire items prohibited to it under the Council's resolutions and the OMV plans. Iraq would begin notifying of its intent to import items no later than 60 days from the approval of the mechanism, namely, 26 May 1996. In advance of that date, a mission of UNSCOM and IAEA experts was dispatched to Baghdad to explain the requirements of the system and provide the Government with the necessary documentation for the notifications.

Iraq's notifications would be made to the export/import monitoring group at BMVC and relayed to a joint UNSCOM/IAEA unit in New York. The costs of the unit would not be considered an expense of the Organization and therefore not to be borne by Member States, whose domestic administrative requirements to enable compliance with the mechanism's terms were expected to be minimal. Notifications by Governments of suppliers were to begin from the date on which the Secretary-General and the IAEA Director General, after consultations with Council members and other interested States, reported to the Council that they were satisfied with the preparedness of States for the effective implementation of the mechanism. To facilitate that process, all States had been provided with a two-volume handbook explaining notification requirements and procedures and including standard notification forms and a compendium of definition of terms used in the annexes of notifiable items (see below).

Since the system's inception, Iraq had made a number of import notifications, principally of chemical-related materials. To underpin the requirement that all notifiable items were being brought under the overall OMV system, a second export/import team (UNSCOM 128/EXIM-2) undertook inspections at facilities associated with the import of goods. To enable the joint unit to process notifications, a computerized database system had been developed and made available by a Member State.

Compendium of definitions of terms. On 18 April, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the compendium of definitions of terms [S/1996/303] relating to items described in the annexes to the OMV plans of UNSCOM and IAEA. The definitions were drawn directly from the plans' revised annexes identifying the items and technologies regarding which Iraq, as importer, and the Government of the supplier, as exporter, should notify the two monitoring bodies, as well as from definitions already employed in matters relating to international trade in the items and technologies concerned; explanations and additional descriptions were provided as necessary. The compendium constituted an integral part of the export/import monitoring mechanism and had the same status as the annexes.

Notifications by States. On 24 September, the Secretary-General and the IAEA Director General transmitted to the Security Council a report [S/1996/805] stating that, based on the 16 September communications received from the UNSCOM Executive Chairman, and acting under paragraph 7 of Council resolution 1051(1996), they could report to the Council that they were satisfied with the preparedness of States for the effective implementation of the export/import mechanism approved by that resolution; they had thus determined that 1 October 1996 should be the effective date from which States should provide notifications of exports to Iraq under the mechanism. The 16 September communications from the Executive Chairman contained information that the outcome of his consultations to ascertain the preparedness of States other than Iraq was generally positive, the exception being the Russian Federation, which wrote that it would be ready to implement the mechanism as soon as the competent Russian authorities had completed adapting the list of goods and technologies to the requirements of national legislation.

IAEA activities

During 1996, the International Atomic Energy Agency, through its Action Team based at its headquarters in Vienna and the Nuclear Monitoring Group resident at the Baghdad Monitoring and Verification Centre, continued to verify the correctness and completeness of Iraq's original and recently submitted declarations of its past proscribed nuclear weapons programme, particularly in the light of new information revealed in 1995 relating to certain aspects of that programme, and to investigate any further information that Iraq might still be withholding from IAEA. With the assistance of UNSCOM and in full coordination with it, IAEA maintained rigorous implementation of its plan for the monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with the relevant Security Council resolutions, and began to integrate into that overall plan the newly approved export/import monitoring mechanism.

In the discharge of its tasks, IAEA continued to benefit from the Council's strong support, from the secondment by Member States of cost-free experts, and from access to advanced technologies, information and technical advice. Its OMV activities were facilitated by computerized information systems maintained by the Action Team, which included databases equivalent to approximately 80,000 pages of text and covering all of Iraq's declarations in the nuclear field and information on sites, activities, materials and equipment. The systems had been upgraded with an improved user interface; capabilities for search and retrieval of computerized images of site plans, buildings and equipment, and of newly provided Iraqi documents; capabilities for tracking the actual movements of IAEA inspection teams; and a planning and follow-up information module.

In accordance with Council resolution 1051(1996), IAEA provided consolidated accounts of all of its activities in two half-yearly reports, submitted to the Council through the Secretary-General, the first on 11 April [S/1996/261] and the second on 7 October 1996 [S/1996/833].

High-level technical talks

The October report noted that, on 7 June, Iraq's Minister of Oil met with the IAEA Director General in Vienna to discuss issues of concern to the Government of Iraq, in particular what the former described as the time-consuming process of verifying the correctness and completeness of Iraq's nuclear FFCD, which involved analyses of "less significant details". He also touched on the monitoring of the current assignments of former key staff who had been involved in Iraq's covert nuclear programme, adding that IAEA's opinion that Iraq still retained a complete record of that programme was "totally wrong". The Director General replied that the IAEA secretariat was well focused on matters of significance and was using its best efforts to reach a conclusion as soon as feasible. It should be understood, he explained, that the 1995 events and revelation of the "crash programme" to extract weapons-grade material from safeguarded reactor fuel (see also below, under "Verification of declarations") had prompted further inquiries; even if nuclear facilities and equipment had been neutralized, technical expertise still existed in Iraq, making it inevitable that the current activities of people previously involved in the nuclear programme be monitored and verified.

In Baghdad, from 24 to 29 June, the IAEA Action Team leader held separate meetings with Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister of Oil and the Minister formerly responsible for "Petrochemical Project 3", Iraq's covert nuclear programme, referred to as PC-3. Progress made since the last 1995 round of high-level talks [YUN 1995, p.483] was reviewed. At the discussions of the two main problems referred to earlier by the Minister of Oil, assurance was given that it was the Government's intention to facilitate the task of the Action Team in every possible way.

Verification of declarations

The IAEA April report [S/1996/261] noted that additional discussions had taken place as a follow-up to the two 1995 IAEA (twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth) on-site inspections [YUN 1995, p. 484] relating to Iraq's past proscribed nuclear weapons programme. Those inspections had been undertaken as a result of information revealed by the Haider House Farm documents (the cache of documents turned over to IAEA and UNSCOM by Iraq following the departure from the country of Lieutenant-General Hussein Kamel in 1995) concerning Iraq's programmes to develop weapons of mass destruction, which included documents describing technical details of various aspects of Iraq's covert nuclear weapons programme. The follow-up discussions took place in November and December 1995. They centred on Iraq's research reactor project—project 182—on uranium enrichment projects, and on three planned options for developing nuclear weapon missile delivery vehicles.

The information obtained during the discussions was that Iraq's planned nuclear power programme, begun in 1975, had developed, with international assistance, from a modest plan to acquire a single 600 MW unit to plans for the progressive construction of four to six power plants by the year 2010. Although the plans had been further modified in the mid-1980s, no practical progress had been made in the acquisition of nuclear power plants other than the identification of four possible sites suitable for their location. Feasibility studies on underground siting of reactors and other fuel cycle-related installations had been aimed exclusively at providing protection from aerial attack—a strategy abandoned as prohibitive.

Project 182, an entirely separate project for the construction of an indigenous research reactor to replace the capability that would have been provided by the Osirak research reactor (Tamuz-1), was begun in 1984/85, after the breakdown of Iraq's negotiations with France for rebuilding the Osirak reactor (destroyed by Israel's Air Force in 1981) [YUN 1981, p. 275]. The project 182 reactor was to have been of the heavy-water type (similar to the Canadian NRX reactor). In mid-1988, during the second year of studies on the design of the reactor core, the project had been allowed to lapse for lack of resources resulting from the higher priority needs of the EMIS (electromagnetic isotopic separation) enrichment and weapon development programmes. Studies on the indigenous production of heavy water (an essential trigger for nuclear weapons) had not progressed beyond surveys of technical literature and preliminary laboratory measurements. Although analysis of new documents in hand tended to confirm Iraqi declarations made in November 1995, IAEA felt that additional follow-up was still needed to bring the project 182 file to a satisfactory close.

In the discussions to explore the progress that had been made in chemical (solvent extraction) and ion-exchange methods for the enrichment of uranium, it was stated that the aim was to enhance the capability of the EMIS process by feeding low-enriched uranium instead of natural uranium. As to ion-exchange enrichment, laboratory-scale experiments using indigenously produced ion-exchange resins were stated to have been modest, and a similar project for a pilot plant to produce 4 tonnes a year of up to 3 per cent enriched uranium had not gone beyond the preliminary assessment of equipment and material requirements. Iraq's most promising project, though still at the conceptual design stage in late 1990, combined both enrichment methods in a hybrid process with a solvent-extraction first stage and an ion-exchange output stage, projected to produce up to 5 tonnes a year of between 4 and 8 per cent enriched uranium.

Regarding production of diffusion barriers and compressors—key components of gaseous diffusion enrichment technology—it was confirmed that significant achievement had been attained in 1989 in the development of an anodized aluminium barrier. All activities related to gaseous diffusion had since been stopped to give priority to exploiting the progress made in gas centrifuge enrichment technology.

IAEA was informed that Iraq's nuclear weapons programme, as planned in 1988, foresaw production of the first weapon in 1991. The nuclear weapon in the mid-1988 conceptual design had been deemed to be far too heavy; hence, the PC-3 Fourth (Weaponization) Group had been advised to develop the design further so as to reduce the total weight of the projectile (payload) to about a tonne or less. It appeared from discussions that three delivery vehicle options had been pursued. Option 1 was the long-term plan for a delivery vehicle based on the engine, under development since 1989, to power the second stage of the Al Abid satellite launcher. The vehicle would have had a payload chamber 1.25 metres in diameter and the capability to deliver a warhead of at least a tonne to a range of almost 1,200 kilometres. The vehicle would not have been completed until 1993. Option 2, Iraq's stated fall-back option, was to use an essentially unmodified Al Hussein missile and to accept a range limitation of 300 kilometres. Option 3, the crash programme initiated in August/September 1990, had been an attempt to produce a derivative of the Al Hussein/Al Abbas missile, designed to deliver a warhead of 1 tonne up to 650 kilometres and to accommodate a nuclear package 80 centimetres in diameter.

IAEA stated that it was difficult to evaluate the three options without detailed knowledge of Iraq's nuclear weapons strategy, including how that strategy might have evolved up to 1991 and how it might have changed in response to the international reaction to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait.

The October report [S/1996/833] recalled that, in response to the request made by the twenty-eighth (1995) IAEA inspection for a radical revision of the FFCD of Iraq's covert nuclear programme, Iraq provided a revised draft FFCD of some 1,019 pages on 1 March 1996. A first detailed analysis, completed by early May, found the document to provide an acceptable basis to start discussions with Iraq in order to arrive at a satisfactory final version. To that end, an ad hoc mission (IAEA-30) was organized to clarify ambiguities, inconsistencies and contradictions in the draft and to request additional information judged to be needed in certain areas. Based on the results of the meetings conducted from 13 to 19 May and from 17 June to 8 July, Iraq prepared a second draft FFCD, which, apart from the volume related to EMIS technology, it submitted on 21 June. Discussions on the second draft were held throughout July and August. On 7 September, the Nuclear Monitoring Group at BMVC received the electronic copy of what Iraq declared to be the final version of the nuclear FFCD, which was received by the IAEA Action Team in Vienna on 17 September. An adequate number of copies were made to facilitate the assessment of the completeness and correctness of the document by the panel of experts that had reviewed previous draft FFCDs. The document, together with annexes on procurement and equipment status, had been expanded to some 1,400 pages and its evaluation would require several months to complete.

Procurement verification

As noted in the IAEA April report [S/1996/261], the active cooperation of certain Member States made it possible to locate a carbon-fibre filament winding machine, whose procurement had been initiated by Iraq in mid-1990 for the production of rotors for uranium-enrichment gas centrifuges. The machine was shipped from Switzerland in February 1991 through Singapore and was received in Jordan in July, where it remained until located in November 1995. The discovery, notified to IAEA by the Jordanian authorities in February 1996, represented the successful conclusion to an investigation, begun in May 1994 on the basis of information obtained from open sources, into Iraq's clandestine procurement activities. The machine's final disposition had yet to be determined.

Iraq's trans-shipment scheme through Singapore and Jordan was described in the October report [S/1996/833] as having been set in place immediately following the adoption of Security Council resolution 661(1990) imposing economic sanctions on Iraq. Iraq admitted to IAEA that, through this set-up, it had received only two consignments (vibration measuring and monitoring equipment) before March 1991; that shipments had continued during that year, giving the number and nature of the consignments shipped, as well as details of the transaction costs; and that, to the best of its knowledge, the consignments were still in Amman by late 1994 or early 1995, at which point Iraq had instructed the Jordanian company storing them to dispose of them. That information led to the impoundment by Jordan on 1 September 1996 of a large variety of equipment and materials, in their original shipping crates, warehoused in Amman, related to gas-centrifuge manufacturing and centrifuge cascade technology. Shipping lists and procurement correspondence confirmed the origin of the goods and trans-shipment arrangements. A detailed inventory was taken by IAEA in September and follow-up actions, undertaken with the assistance of concerned Governments, were under way to verify the completeness of the findings.

Documentation cache

The IAEA October report [S/1996/833] stated that progress had been made in the analysis of the Haider House Farm documents, which included some fifty thousand 35 mm microfilm aperture cards and microfilm rolls (35 mm and 16 mm) containing an estimated 600,000 frames. A review of those cards (consisting of technical charts, drawings, graphs and tables with no text except in the card legend), undertaken with the assistance of experts provided by Member States, had been completed in August 1996. The analysis had led IAEA to conclude that the aperture card file appeared to add little to the knowledge developed so far of Iraq's past covert nuclear programme; the large number and the professional quality of the drawings were inconsistent with Iraqi statements that the programme had produced neither a full set of drawings of all weapon components nor drawings integrating the assembly weapon and its missile delivery system; and none of the small number of drawings related to weapon components concerned the weapon assembly, the nuclear charge or the implosion package components.

A set of 49 rolls of microfilm containing approximately 75,000 frames—about 10 per cent of the estimated amount of documents in microfilm—had been screened. It was reported that here, too, the review added little to the current understanding of the past covert nuclear programme, but revealed that: the English, and most of the Arabic, documents dealt with business transactions for ordinary construction engineering projects; while the documents relating to procurement might add to the list of pre-Gulf War Iraqi suppliers, the majority concerned non-sensitive areas; the state of the microfilms was consistent with Iraqi statements that the wartime microfilming effort at the Al Hayrat building (one of the PC-3 Baghdad offices) had been disorganized and haphazard; and most of the microfilms had had to be rewound in order to review them, indicating that the microfilms (most of them received in February and July) had been reviewed at least once before being delivered to IAEA.

Ongoing monitoring and verification

The IAEA reports noted that Iraq had been regularly fulfilling the requirement in paragraph 22 of the IAEA monitoring and verification plan by submitting twice yearly—in January and July—a report updating information (in accordance with annex 2 of the plan), covering the preceding six-month period, on its use of facilities, installations or sites formerly involved in its covert nuclear programme and on changes made to its current nuclear programme and in the inventory and location of materials, equipment and radioisotopes (identified in annexes 3 and 4). Iraq's January 1996 report contained detailed information on 17 additional facilities, bringing to 189 the number of sites declared by Iraq under paragraph 22. The IAEA Nuclear Monitoring Group agreed with Iraq's National Monitoring Directorate in June on amendments to previous half-yearly reports to account for the information received in 1995 (through the Haider House Farm documents) on Iraq's past nuclear programme, as well as on a number of reporting improvements. A review of Iraq's July report reflected many of the agreed improvements but indicated the need for further efforts to achieve a satisfactory reporting standard in terms of correctness and completeness of information. Following detailed discussions in September to explain what remained missing, Iraq gave assurances that the shortcomings would be dealt with in time for the January 1997 report.

The reports further indicated that the OMV activities of IAEA were facilitated by the use of a recently donated geoposition logger (to plot and log geographic position) in connection with its air sampling programme, as well as by the existing surveillance systems recently enhanced to allow video signal transmission via satellite telephone links, not only to BMVC, but also to the Action Team Operations Office at IAEA headquarters.

The Nuclear Monitoring Group's other OMV activities included the following inspections, the majority conducted without prior announcement: from October 1995 to 31 March 1996, about 155 inspections at 65 locations, 16 of which had not been previously inspected, with one night inspection, jointly undertaken with UNSCOM; from 1 April to 1 October, 171 inspections, including of 20 sites not previously inspected. In all instances, the Group detected no indication of prohibited equipment, materials or activities. During the first period, the Group saw to the repackaging of the inventory of natural uranium tetrachloride, currently stored in severely corroded steel drums, into corrosion-resistant high-density plastic containers; at that time, the Group reverified the quantity of the material and placed the containers under individual IAEA seals.

During the second period, the Group undertook eight other inspections under the joint IAEA/UNSCOM multidisciplinary inspection programme of "capable" sites (deemed to have capabilities suitable for conducting work on some aspect of weapons of mass destruction), begun in July 1995. The fifth inspection, on 7 July 1996, was denied immediate access to a factory building located inside an army camp on the grounds that the facility, being a Special Guards installation, was a sensitive site. Allowed to proceed only after a delay of about two hours, the inspection found no indication of prohibited equipment, materials or activities. The Group also continued its ongoing programme of interviews of key personnel of the former Iraqi covert nuclear weapons programme, to verify their current assignments.

During the same period, the Group approved 11 of 17 Iraqi requests for the release or relocation of equipment and materials or change in the use of certain buildings subject to IAEA monitoring. Decisions on the remaining six requests were pending.

The seventh periodic radiometric survey of Iraq's main water bodies was conducted from 20 to 27 April. Samples of water, sediments and biota were collected at 15 sites selected at random from the more than 50 locations for which baseline data had been established in the original survey completed in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 304]. The eighth radiometric survey [S/1997/297], conducted from 15 to 23 October, included sample-collection at 16 sites, as well as from two locations at a water treatment plant south-east of Baghdad.

IAEA observed that Iraq had continued to co-operate in implementing the OMV plan; it had been forthcoming in technical discussions, but had persisted in understating the achievements of its past nuclear weapons programme. IAEA stated that, in the light of its assessment of Iraq's pre-Gulf War nuclear capabilities, it was prudent to assume that Iraq retained the theoretical capability to produce nuclear-weapons-usable material, to fabricate nuclear weapons and to design and manufacture a missile delivery system. It was that assumption which formed the basis for the design, implementation and continuing development of IAEA's plan for ongoing monitoring and verification in Iraq.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 51/10 of 29 October, the General Assembly commended the Director General of IAEA and his staff for their efforts in the implementation of Security Council resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991), and, while noting that Iraq had adopted a more constructive approach over the last 12 months, expressed concern that it had failed to provide immediate access on 7 July to the IAEA Action Team and had previously withheld information about its nuclear weapons programme in violation of its obligations under those resolutions.

The Assembly stressed that the Action Team would continue to exercise its right to investigate further any aspects of the past nuclear weapons capability of Iraq, in particular as regards any further relevant information necessary to complete the record of its nuclear weapons programme that it might still be withholding from IAEA.

Arms and related sanctions

Pursuant to paragraph 21 of its resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172], the Security Council, in informal consultations of the whole, conducted six reviews in 1996 of the sanctions provisions of paragraph 20 of that resolution, as follows: on 7 March, 6 May, 5 July, 3 September, 1 November and 31 December. On 7 March, 5 July and 1 November, the Council concurrently conducted reviews of the sanctions regimes established in paragraphs 22 to 25 of resolution 687(1991), pursuant to paragraph 28 of the same resolution and to paragraph 6 of resolution 700(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 198]. Opinions expressed in the course of those reviews indicated that there still was no agreement in the Council that the necessary conditions existed for a modification of the regime.

By the end of 1996, the Security Council had conducted 34 reviews of the various aspects of the sanctions regime imposed on Iraq.

Sanctions Committee activities

The Committee established by Security Council resolution 661(1990) of 6 August 1990 (Sanctions Committee for Iraq) submitted a report on 26 August 1996 [S/1996/700] presenting a factual summary of its activities since inception. Taking into account the 1995 improvements [YUN 1995, p. 1429] introduced by the Council to make sanctions committee procedures more transparent, including submission of an annual report, the Committee's report focused on major activities in 1995 and until mid-August 1996, with information and references relevant to other important events and decisions prior to that period.

The report outlined the Council resolutions whereby the scope of the mandatory measures imposed against Iraq, following its illegal invasion and occupation of Kuwait in August 1990, had been progressively enlarged, thus correspondingly enlarging the tasks entrusted to the Committee. In monitoring the implementation of the sanctions regime in all its aspects, the Committee relied on the cooperation of Member States and international organizations. Its work was facilitated by the contribution of the multinational maritime forces deployed in the area pursuant to Council resolution 665(1990) of 25 August 1990, as well as the onshore monitoring mechanism operated by Lloyd's Register at Jordan's Port of Aqaba since 25 August 1994, in accordance with an agreement concluded in that year between that company and Jordan. UNSCOM had also assisted the Committee in the discharge of its tasks.

The Committee assigned high priority to the processing of notifications and applications for the procurement of humanitarian supplies, particularly medicine and health supplies, foodstuffs and other items regarded by the applicants as humanitarian necessities. Between January 1995 and mid-August 1996, the Committee processed 16,751 such notifications and applications. Approval for all other supplies intended to meet Iraq's basic civilian needs fell under the simplified and accelerated "no-objection" procedure, whereby an application was considered approved unless an objection or hold was placed on it by a Committee member or members within a specific deadline. Approved under that procedure were 2,794 applications out of 8,004 received during the same period. In the absence of a verifying mechanism, however, the Committee had no way of confirming how much of the supplies for which authorizations had been issued actually arrived in Iraq. The Committee also authorized a number of humanitarian flights and aerial pesticide operations in Iraq and approved several humanitarian projects sponsored by various UN agencies.

Owing to the lack of sufficient progress in implementation of relevant Council resolutions, the difficulties surrounding the release of Iraqi assets frozen abroad for the purchase of humanitarian supplies persisted. In the past few years, the Committee had received numerous inquiries and official requests from States and international organizations concerning the possible release of Iraqi frozen assets and the activation of the sub-account of the UN escrow account provided for in Council resolutions 706(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 207] and 712(1991) [Ibid., p. 209] for the financing of Iraq's humanitarian purchases. Iraq had also submitted several requests for the partial release of its frozen assets for various purposes—to pay its dues to the United Nations and other international organizations, to finance its publication of the Holy Koran, to cover costs of its pilgrimage programmes, to meet legal expenses outside the country, to maintain its diplomatic missions abroad and to purchase humanitarian and other supplies from other countries. While the Committee remained sympathetic to the concerns of its interlocutors, it had been unable to approve such applications or proposals to activate the sub-account of the escrow account.

During 1995, the Committee considered several requests by Iraq and other States for the maintenance and repair of Iraqi vessels currently anchored in foreign ports. Since the Committee could not reach consensus, it was unable to accede to those requests. With regard to Iraqi vessels impounded by other States, the Committee had consistently advised the national authorities concerned that it had no objection to their instituting legal proceedings leading to possible disposal of such vessels under national law, provided claims adjudicated in favour of Iraq, or persons acting for or on behalf of Iraq, were paid into a blocked account in accordance with resolution 661(1990). The Committee had also approved requests from Jordan, Kuwait and the United Kingdom for wreck clearance of some Iraqi vessels in the Persian Gulf because of imminent environmental or navigational threat.

The Committee attached great importance to the need to address the special economic problems faced by third States as a result of their enforcement of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq, and made positive recommendations to the Council. In response to the Council's request for more transparency in the work of sanctions committees, the Committee adopted a number of measures, including initiating issuance of press releases and orally briefing interested delegations.

Annexed to the report were guidelines for the conduct of the Committee's work, the composition of its bureau and the meetings held from January 1995 to 1 March 1996.

In addition to the foregoing report, the Committee issued four other reports during 1996—one every 90 days—on the implementation of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq, in accordance with the guidelines approved by Council resolution 700(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 198] for facilitating full international implementation of its resolution 687(1991). The reports were transmitted to the Council on 21 February [S/1996/127], 20 May [S/1996/361], 20 August [S/1996/676] and 18 November [S/1996/950].

The first report noted that Jordan, by a 27 December 1995 letter, had notified the Committee that it had intercepted, at Amman Airport, 115 Russian-made rocket-guiding devices (gyroscopes) and that the middleman involved was a Gazan businessman who had fled to Iraq; the second and third reports indicated that, during the period under review, the Committee had received no information relating to possible violations of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq committed by other States or foreign nationals; the fourth report stated that Jordan, by a communication of 30 October 1996, pointed out that an investigation into the activities of a Jordanian company suspected of connections with Iraq's missile programme had found the company to be in no way involved as suspected.

Each report stated that, during the period under review, no States or international organizations had consulted the Committee on the question of whether certain items fell within the provisions of paragraph 24 of resolution 687 (1991), or with respect to cases relating to dual- or multiple-use items (meant for civilian use but with potential for diversion or conversion to military use). Regarding the latter, the third report stated that a list of items notifiable to UNSCOM under the export/import mechanism (see above) had been transmitted to the Committee in connection with the categorized list of humanitarian supplies annexed to the distribution plan submitted by Iraq for implementation of resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475]. Each report further stated that no international organization had reported any relevant information that might have come to its attention, as requested under the guidelines.

Oil-for-food

The Secretary-General, in his interim report to the Security Council on 25 November [S/1996/978], recounted the actions he had taken to ensure effective implementation of Council resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475], embodying the concept popularly referred to as "oil-for-food". By that resolution, the Council authorized States to permit the import of up to $1 billion in Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products every 90 days, over an initial 180-day period, as a temporary measure to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people; directed the Sanctions Committee to monitor the sale of those products, to be exported by Iraq from the two Council-designated oil terminal outlets; asked the Secretary-General to establish an escrow account for the deposit of the sales proceeds, the bulk to be used to finance the export to Iraq of humanitarian supplies requested by it, and to report on the authenticated confirmation and observation by UN personnel, of the arrival of the humanitarian supplies in Iraq and of their equitable distribution to all segments of the Iraqi population.

In furtherance of consultations begun in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 477], the Secretary-General obtained Iraq's agreement to conduct formal negotiations on implementation of resolution 986(1995). The more than 50 sessions of talks between the Iraqi delegation and the United Nations delegation led by the Legal Counsel concluded with the signing of a Memorandum of Understanding on the subject on 20 May 1996 (see below). The Secretary-General reported that, to sustain the momentum generated by the signing of the Memorandum and to expedite and consolidate actions required of the Secretariat, he established a high-level Steering Committee on the Implementation of Security Council Resolution 986(1995). Chaired by Under-Secretary-General Chinmaya Gharekhan, the Committee was charged with overseeing steps taken in preparation for the resolution's implementation, maintaining liaison with Iraqi government representatives and advising the Secretary-General on developments.

On 22 May, the Secretariat submitted for the consideration of the Sanctions Committee a draft text of expedited procedures, which the Committee adopted on 8 August (see below). At the Committee's request, the Secretary-General transmitted the text to all Member States for their information and use as necessary.

In the meantime, in June, the Secretary-General had dispatched to Iraq a technical reconnaissance mission of senior Secretariat members, together with petroleum and customs experts, in order to prepare for the speedy implementation of paragraphs 6 and 8 (a) (iii) of the resolution, dealing, respectively, with the monitoring of the export of petroleum and petroleum products by Iraq and with the confirmation of the arrival of humanitarian supplies in Iraq. The mission inspected the metering station on the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline at the border between Iraq and Turkey and Iraqi oil installations at Mina al-Bakr; ascertained the number of independent inspection agents required to monitor those installations; consulted with Iraqi authorities on the number and location of entry points and other locations at which independent inspection agents would be stationed in order to confirm the arrival of the humanitarian supplies; ascertained the number of independent inspection agents required for such confirmation; and discussed related logistical arrangements with the Iraqi authorities.

Memorandum of Understanding

On 20 May, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council the text of a Memorandum of Understanding [S/1996/356] concluded in New York on the same date between the Secretariat of the United Nations and the Government of Iraq on the implementation of Council resolution 986(1995). Constituting integral parts of the Memorandum were detailed procedures set out in annex I for the distribution of humanitarian assistance to Iraq's northern governorates and in annex II for the sale of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products. The Secretary-General stated that the Memorandum represented an important step in the arrangements required to bring the resolution fully into effect.

The general provisions of the document stated that the Memorandum's purpose was to ensure effective implementation of resolution 986(1995); that the distribution plan, which required the Secretary-General's approval, constituted an important element of implementation; that nothing in the Memorandum was to be construed as infringing the sovereignty or territorial integrity of Iraq; that the provisions of the Memorandum pertained strictly and exclusively to the resolution's implementation and, as such, in no way created a precedent; and that the arrangement provided for in the Memorandum was an exceptional and temporary measure.

By other provisions of the Memorandum, Iraq was to undertake to guarantee effectively equitable distribution to the Iraqi population throughout the country of medicine, health supplies, food stuffs and materials for essential civilian needs. It was to submit a distribution plan to the Secretary-General, who would approve the plan if he was satisfied that equitable distribution to the Iraqi population throughout the country, including to the three northern governorates of Arbil, Dohuk and Suleimaniyeh in accordance with arrangements stipulated in annex I. An escrow account, to be known as the United Nations Iraq

Account, would be established by the Secretary-General in a major international bank following consultations with Iraq. It would be administered in accordance with the relevant Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and audited by the Board of Auditors, who were external independent public auditors.

Iraq's petroleum and petroleum products were to be exported via the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline through Turkey and from the Mina al-Bakr oil terminal. Their sale was to be in accordance with the detailed provisions set out in annex II. All exports through those outlets would be monitored and approved by the Sanctions Committee, which had been provided with the Iraq-Turkey arrangement concerning the tariffs and payment modalities for the use of Turkish oil installations. Procedures were set out for the procurement of supplies to meet essential civilian needs of the Iraqi population and for the confirmation of shipment arrivals by independent inspection agents appointed by the Secretary-General and stationed at Iraqi entry points designated by the United Nations after consultations with Iraq, as well as procedures for the export to Iraq of parts and equipment essential for the safe operation of the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline system in Iraq.

Implementation of the distribution plan was to be undertaken by the Government of Iraq in the governorates of central and southern Iraq and by the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme on behalf of the Government in the three northern governorates, with due regard to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq. Under a UN observation process, United Nations personnel, under the overall authority of the Secretariat's Department of Humanitarian Affairs, were to observe the equitable distribution of the humanitarian supplies and determine their adequacy in accordance with the provisions governing four categories of supplies: food; medical supplies and equipment; water and sanitation supplies and equipment; and other materials and supplies needed for the rehabilitation of infrastructures essential to meet humanitarian needs.

The Memorandum further specified that officials of the United Nations and of any of the specialized agencies, independent inspection agents, technical experts and other specialists assigned or appointed by the Secretary-General or by heads of the specialized agencies to perform functions in connection with implementation of resolution 986(1995) and persons performing contractual services for the United Nations in that connection were to enjoy the privileges and immunities defined by the applicable articles of the 1946 Convention on Privileges and Immuni-ties of the United Nations [GA res. 22 A (I)] and of the 1947 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies [GA res. 179 C (II)]. Additionally, all such personnel were to enjoy, among other things, freedom of entry into and exit from Iraq without delay or hindrance and were to be issued visas promptly and free of charge. Any issue relating to privileges and immunities, including safety and protection of the United Nations and its personnel, not covered by the provisions of the Memorandum was to be governed by paragraph 16 of resolution 986(1995).

Also provided for was the holding of any necessary consultations between the UN Secretariat and Iraq on how to achieve the most effective implementation of the Memorandum. The Memorandum would enter into force, following its signature, on the day when paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 986(1995) became operational and was to remain in force until the operation of the 180-day period referred to in paragraph 3 of that resolution. Pending its entry into force, the Memorandum was to be given provisional effect by the United Nations and the Government of Iraq.

Submitted with the Memorandum was Iraq's letter of 20 May addressed to the UN Legal Counsel. The letter contained Iraq's position on the cost of production and transportation of oil within Iraq. Excluding expenses in local currency, that cost was currently estimated at $2 per barrel, which Iraq felt should be deducted from the sale price or recovered through the production and export of an extra quantity of petroleum and petroleum products. In either case, the resultant amount would be deposited in the UN Iraq Account to be utilized for the import of spare parts and other items necessary to maintain and sustain production and transportation operations. The letter noted that, to facilitate conclusion of the Memorandum, Iraq had agreed not to press for UN acceptance of its position at the current stage but to have it included in a separate letter for consideration in any future discussion.

In the letter, Iraq stated that a third outlet for the Iraqi petroleum export—although not a matter included in the discussions—could be via the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Security Council, on 23 May, welcomed [S/1996/365] the conclusion of the Memorandum of Understanding and agreed that it represented an important step towards implementation of resolution 986(1995) as a temporary measure to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people.

Sanctions Committee procedures

On 8 August, the Sanctions Committee transmitted to the Security Council a set of procedures in six sections [S/1996/636], adopted that day, by which to implement the various arrangements set forth in paragraphs 1, 2, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of Council resolution 986(1995). The procedures had been developed in close coordination with the Secretary-General and submitted pursuant to paragraph 12 of the resolution.

Section I of the procedures called for the selection by the Committee of at least four independent experts in international oil trade, to be appointed by the Secretary-General as "overseers" at UN Headquarters, whose authority and responsibilities, defined under the section, related to assisting the Committee in the review and assessment of purchase contracts, pricing mechanisms and conditions of payment. It set forth the elements and documents required for such contracts and mechanisms, as well as information to be included in the irrevocable letter of credit to be opened. It provided for the submission by States, if they so wished, of a list of national oil purchasers (private companies, State-owned companies, State agencies or ministries), or submission of purchase applications through the Permanent Mission of the State of purchase. It stipulated that a purchase contract would only be considered if endorsed by the Government of Iraq, or by the State Oil Marketing Organization of Iraq (SOMO).

Section II concerned the import by Turkey of petroleum and petroleum products originating in Iraq, to be undertaken in accordance with the requirements of paragraphs 2 and 6 of resolution 986(1995), so as to meet pipeline tariff charges, verified as reasonable by independent inspection agents, after the deduction of the percentage referred to in paragraph 2 of resolution 705(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 197] for the United Nations Compensation Fund [Ibid., p. 196]. The import transactions would be authorized and monitored in accordance with the relevant provisions of section I.

Section III outlined the procedures applicable to transactions for the export to Iraq of humanitarian supplies, based on a categorized list prepared by Iraq and submitted, together with a distribution plan, to the Secretary-General for approval. Applications for each export of humanitarian supplies, to be financed from the UN Iraq Account consistent with the relevant provision of the Memorandum of Understanding, were to be submitted for approval by the exporting States to the Sanctions Committee, together with the concluded contractual arrangements, at the request of Iraq. The independent inspection agents would add their authenticated confirmation of the arrival of the humanitarian supplies in Iraq to a copy of the Committee's letter stating that the exporter was eligible for payment.

Section IV outlined procedures applicable to the export to Iraq of parts and equipment essential for the safe operation of the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline system in Iraq, as well as to the financial transactions related thereto, pursuant to paragraphs 9 and 10 of resolution 986(1995).

Section V concerned approval by the Sanctions Committee of reasonable expenses, other than those payable in Iraq, determined to be directly related to the export by Iraq of petroleum and petroleum products permitted under the same resolution. Iraq's requests for meeting such expenses would be approved on a case-by-case basis by the Committee under its no-objection procedure.

Section VI contained provisions concerning the establishment by the UN Secretariat of the appropriate communication links among the overseers, the independent inspection agents, the bank holding the UN Iraq Account and the coordinator of the Multinational Interception Forces operating in the area under Council resolution 665(1990) of 25 August 1990, as well as with the Central Bank of Iraq and SOMO; regular reporting to the Sanctions Committee by the Secretary-General on the details of disbursements from the Iraq Account; the requirement that letters of credit conform with the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credit; and the amendment or revision of the current procedures, if necessary, in the light of future developments.

Annexed to the set of procedures were a standard application form to be used to request approval of sale contracts (annex I) and information to be included in the letter of credit (annex II).

Activities of Secretary-General

Reports of Secretary-General (25 November and 9 December). Pursuant to paragraph 13 of Security Council resolution 986(1995), the Secretary-General prepared an interim report of 25 November [S/1996/978] to bring the Council up to date on where matters stood with respect to implementation of that resolution. Apart from the actions described above, which led to the signing of the Memorandum of Understanding and to the adoption of the Sanctions Committee procedures, the Secretary-General reported that he had appointed Bernard Cullet (France), Alexandre Kramar (Russian Federation), Maurice Lorenz (United States) and Arnstein Wigestrang (Norway) to serve as overseers at Headquarters and had provided adequate support staff for them. Those independent, international oil trade experts had been selected on 9 August by the Sanctions Committee to assist it in the performance of its duties, in accordance with paragraph 1 of its procedures.

On the basis of the assessment of the technical reconnaissance mission dispatched to Iraq in June, the Secretary-General decided that a total of 14 independent inspection agents would be required for monitoring purposes (4 at the Ceyhan terminal; 4 at the metering station on the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline, near Zakho, at the Iraq-Turkey border; and 6 at the offshore Mina al-Bakr terminal), contractual arrangements for whom had accordingly been made with Saybolt Nederland BV. A Saybolt advance team subsequently visited Iraq (22 October-3 November) to test the reliability of the metering equipment at the pipeline metering stations near Zakho and at Mina al-Bakr, as well as to discuss Saybolt's logistical requirements with Iraqi authorities, from whom the team received full cooperation. The team determined that the export of oil from the Mina al-Bakr terminal could commence immediately subject to on-site availability of adequate laboratory facilities, but recommended a number of technical steps needed to bring the station metering systems near Zakho up to acceptable standards. Iraq subsequently informed the Secretariat that the required repairs were under way, upon completion of which Saybolt was to undertake another technical mission to verify the metering systems' reliability.

In accordance with the Sanctions Committee procedures, the pricing mechanisms submitted by SOMO for loadings in December had been sent to the overseers for their analysis and recommendations, after which the Committee would review the mechanisms under its no-objection procedure.

On 18 July, Iraq was informed that the Secretary-General had approved its distribution plan and categorized list of humanitarian requirements for six months, submitted three days earlier, subject to the condition that its implementation would be governed by resolution 986(1995) and by the Memorandum, without prejudice to the Sanctions Committee procedures. In accordance with paragraph 16 of the resolution and as explained in paragraphs 36 to 44 of the Memorandum, the distribution plan contained a confirmation of Iraq's willingness to cooperate fully with the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme (the Programme) in its mandated observation and distribution functions, together with a statement that UN personnel working for the Programme should have, in connection with the performance of their functions, unrestricted freedom of movement and access. As agreed in paragraph 10 of the Memorandum, the Committee had been forwarded a copy of the categorized list of humanitarian supplies. The list had also been scrutinized by UNSCOM, which identified items subject to the export/import monitoring mechanism (see above). The plan and the 18 July letter conveying the Secretary-General's approval were attached to the current report as annexes I and II.

The distribution plan provided estimated fund allocations, on a sectoral basis, for the purchase and distribution only of urgently needed humanitarian supplies. The allocations totalled $1,320.68 million, of which $260 million was allocated for the humanitarian requirements of the three northern governorates, as identified by the Programme in accordance with annex I, paragraph 2, of the Memorandum. The Secretary-General reported having taken steps to reinforce the Secretariat team in New York responsible for processing applications for humanitarian supplies, in the light of paragraph 33 of the Sanctions Committee procedures. He had decided to station 32 independent inspection agents at various entry points in Iraq to confirm the arrival of humanitarian supplies—10 at the port of Umm Qasr, 11 at the Turkish border (Zakho/Faida) and 11 at the Jordanian border (Trebil)—for whom contractual arrangements had been made with Lloyd's Register Inspection Limited.

Mindful of the importance that resolution 986(1995) attached to equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies to all segments of the Iraqi population, the Secretary-General had appointed Gualtiero Fulcheri as Humanitarian Coordinator for the Programme's activities in Iraq, who assumed his functions in August at the United Nations Office of the Humanitarian Coordinator in Iraq (UNOHCI), located in Baghdad. He would be assisted by two Deputy Coordinators: one based at UNOHCI headquarters; the other in Arbil, responsible for activities in the three northern governorates and for the UNOHCI sub-offices in Dihouk and Suleimaniyeh.

To assist the Secretary-General in his reporting obligations under paragraph 11 of the resolution, in particular on whether Iraq had ensured the equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies and on the adequacy of revenues to meet Iraq's humanitarian needs, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs had established an observation and reporting mechanism comprising three observation units: geographical, sectoral and multidisciplinary. Tasks common to all sectors were to include: cross-checking of arriving supplies with entry-point confirmations; analysis of data from Iraqi government ministries and from UN system programmes, funds and agencies; interviews with end-user households and with distribution agents; and random surveys, spot checks and market surveys. In accordance with paragraph 42 of the Memorandum and on the basis of careful assessment in the field, the Secretary-General determined that 151 UN international staff assigned as observers in Iraq would be essential for the United Nations to carry out its observation and reporting functions effectively: 13 to the Baghdad-based multidisciplinary observation unit, 63 to the geographical and 75 to the sectoral observation units. In addition, a team of up to eight staff within the Department of Humanitarian Affairs at Headquarters would be assigned exclusively to the observation function.

As to the escrow account (UN Iraq Account) required under paragraph 7 of resolution 986(1995), the Secretary-General noted that the Banque nationale de Paris (BNP) had been selected as the holder of the account, which had been opened at the BNP branch in New York. The six-month audit reports of the account would be submitted to the Secretary-General for forwarding to the Sanctions Committee and the Government of Iraq. In accordance with paragraph 8 of the resolution, the Secretary-General set out the allocations of the projected $2 billion oil proceeds, in terms of percentages, as follows: 53 per cent for humanitarian purchases by Iraq; 13 for humanitarian supplies to be purchased and distributed by the Programme in the northern governorates; 30 for transfer to the United Nations Compensation Fund; about 2.2 for the various UN operational and administrative costs (estimated at $44.3 million for a six-month period) associated with the resolution's implementation; about 0.8 for transfer to a special account to meet UNSCOM operating costs; and 1 for transfer to the escrow account for the payments envisaged under paragraph 6 of Council resolution 778(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 320].

Summing up, the Secretary-General observed that most of the arrangements required to bring resolution 986(1995) into effect had been put in place: the oil overseers had been appointed; contracts had been signed with firms for the services of independent inspection agents to monitor the export of oil from and to confirm the arrival of humanitarian supplies in Iraq; the distribution plan had been finalized and approved; a Humanitarian Coordinator had been appointed; an observation and reporting mechanism had been prepared to ensure equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies inside Iraq; and the escrow account had been opened. He added that those steps had been taken after consultation with Iraqi authorities, without whose full cooperation effective implementation of the resolution would not be possible.

The Secretary-General drew attention, however, to several new issues raised by Iraq over the past two months. It had requested "assurances" that nothing would disrupt implementation of resolution 986(1995) once it had begun; that it should receive copies of the contracts signed by the Secretariat with commercial firms related to the resolution's implementation; that SOMO should be the beneficiary of letters of credit involving the sale of Iraqi oil; and that all local staff currently employed by the United Nations in the three northern governorates should be dismissed and that the new personnel should be cleared in advance by Iraqi authorities. Furthermore, Iraq had insisted that prior approval of the pricing mechanism by the Sanctions Committee was a condition for bringing the resolution into effect. It had also complained about what it perceived as the lack of consultation by the Secretariat on the number of humanitarian observers to be stationed in central and southern Iraq.

It was encouraging, the Secretary-General observed, that interaction between SOMO and the oil overseers, the oil inspection agents and the Sanctions Committee had thus far been businesslike and cooperative.

In a further report of 9 December [S/1996/1015], the Secretary-General informed the Council that the Sanctions Committee had approved SOMO's pricing mechanisms for crude oil loadings in December. An advance team of technical experts from Lloyd's Register had completed its inspection (27 November-4 December) of the designated entry points in Iraq and assessment of logistical requirements in anticipation of its deployment of the 32 independent inspection agents required to verify incoming humanitarian supplies. The Secretary-General had thus authorized an initial group of 13 agents to take up their designated functions in Iraq; he would authorize the remaining 19 agents to do likewise as soon as it became operationally necessary.

A Saybolt technical mission had also completed (4-8 December) the necessary pressure testing of the metering equipment at the recently repaired metering station near Zakho. In the light of the mission's certification of the reliability of the equipment, the Secretary-General authorized the dispatch to Iraq of Saybolt's 14 independent oil inspection agents, who had since been deployed to their designated duty stations at the Mina al-Bakr oil terminal, the pipeline metering station near Zakho and the Ceyhan oil terminal.

The Department of Humanitarian Affairs had sent an advance team to Iraq (7 December) to put final arrangements in place for implementing the Programme's humanitarian operation, as well as the observation and reporting mechanism. The core observers required for the initial phase had been selected and arrangements were under way to deploy them on an urgent basis. In addition, the escrow account was ready to receive deposits.

The Secretary-General stated his satisfaction that all the actions necessary to ensure the effective implementation of resolution 986(1995) had been concluded. The Secretariat thus stood ready to carry out its responsibilities as of 0001 hours Eastern Standard Time on the day after the Council President had informed the Council of his receipt of the current report, in accordance with the Council's decision in paragraph 3 of resolution 986(1995).

UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM), set up by Security Council resolution 687(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 172], continued in 1996 to discharge its tasks in accordance with its expanded terms of reference: to monitor the Khawr Abd Allah waterway and the demilitarized zone (DMZ) along the Iraq-Kuwait boundary established under the same resolution, as adjusted in accordance with the 1993 technically demarcated international boundary line [YUN 1993, p. 403] between Iraq and Kuwait; to deter violations of the boundary through its presence in and surveillance of the DMZ; to observe any potentially hostile action mounted from the territory of one State into the other; and, as from 1993, to take physical action to prevent or redress small-scale violations of the DMZ or the boundary.

UNIKOM maintained its division of the DMZ into three operational sectors—north, central and south—until 10 June, when it eliminated the central sector and made consequent rearrangements of its patrol and observation bases so that the northern and southern sectors had 10 and 8, respectively. The increased bases in the north were intended to improve control and surveillance of the area between the agricultural zone (Safwan in Iraq, Abdaly in Kuwait) and the Al Rutqah oil-field (in Kuwait). On the recommendation of the Force Commander, the Secretary-General had agreed to improve monitoring of the Khawr Abd Allah waterway by setting up an additional observation post on Warbah Island and by upgrading radar and night vision equipment at the two existing observation posts located on Al Faw and at the entrance to the Al Zubayr waterway.

UNIKOM conducted its ground patrolling activities from those bases and from temporary observation points in the populated areas, in addition to conducting aerial patrols. It maintained close liaison with Iraq and Kuwait at all levels and coordinated with them in cases of unauthorized border crossings and repatriation. It also cooperated in such matters with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC).

UNIKOM maintained headquarters at Umm Qasr in Iraq, liaison offices in Baghdad and Kuwait City and a logistic base at Camp Khor, also in Kuwait City.

Reports of Secretary-General (April and September). During the year, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council two reports, on 1 April [S/1996/225] and on 27 September [S/1996/801], on the activities of UNIKOM, to enable the Council to carry out its six-month review of the operation and to decide on its continuation or termination. The first report covered the period from 1 October 1995 to 31 March 1996, and the second, from 1 April to 23 September 1996.

The reports noted that the situation in the DMZ remained generally calm, except in the first two weeks of September, when tensions increased following the Iraqi military operations in the north of the country and the subsequent missile attacks by the United States against targets in Iraq. In that connection, UNIKOM observed eight cruise missiles flying over the DMZ into Iraq. UNIKOM received nine formal complaints during the first reporting period (three from Iraq, six from Kuwait) and 32 during the second (12 from Iraq, 19 from Kuwait, 1 common to both). The Iraqi complaints concerned overflights of the DMZ and territorial and weapons violations on the Khawr Abd Allah waterway. Kuwait's complaints included several instances of border crossings, by no more than two or three Iraqis at a time, into the Kuwaiti side of the DMZ, armed robberies in the Abdaly farm area, and firings at Kuwaiti police patrols and posts from across the border, in response to which UNIKOM posted a patrol in the most sensitive area for several weeks. The air violations involved overflights by helicopters and by F-15 and A-10 aircraft used by coalition forces but whose nationalities could not be identified. Of the 41 complaints received and investigated, UNIKOM was able to verify 25. Several could not be verified because of the time that had elapsed between the alleged incident and receipt of the complaint.

UNIKOM patrols had observed single tracer rounds fired into the air on the Iraqi side of the DMZ as well as small-arms firings on either side, which appeared not to have been directed at anyone, however. Oil drilling and development of related infrastructure had increased on both sides of the border within the DMZ and, in August and September, had intensified on the Kuwaiti side. Kuwait had added a number of ramps to its barbed-wire fence and sand berm along the border to facilitate observation of its border police by vehicle patrols. It had begun to construct a second berm and trench from the coast near Bubiyan Island along the outer edge of the DMZ, overlapping it for a length of about 20 kilometres and a depth of 3 kilometres to encompass the Abdaly farm area. It had also begun to restore its coast-guard posts on Warbah and Bubiyan Islands.

During the peak fishing season, from May to July, activity on the Khawr Abd Allah waterway increased, with fishing boats straying across the unmarked maritime boundary. Iraq lodged complaints on 22 and 23 May, alleging that Kuwaiti boats had entered Iraqi waters and opened fire on Iraqi patrol boats; on 30 June, it complained about the presence of two armed Kuwaiti boats in the waterway. Those complaints could not be verified by UNIKOM. Economic activities in the port of Umm Qasr and oilfield areas in the DMZ had also increased, as had rail and road maintenance to and from the port, in preparation for implementation of Council resolution 986(1995) (see below).

UNIKOM also provided security and logistical support for meetings (11 during the two reporting periods) of the ICRC Technical Subcommittee on Military and Civilian Missing Prisoners of War and Mortal Remains, held alternately at UNIKOM headquarters in Umm Qasr and at the Camp Khor logistic base.

The Secretary-General observed that UNIKOM continued to contribute to the maintenance of calm and stability in the DMZ; in so doing, it had received cooperation from Iraq and Kuwait. He thus recommended to the Council that UNIKOM be maintained.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April and October)

Based on its review of the Secretary-General's two reports on UNIKOM activities, the Security Council, by letters of 4 April [S/1996/247] and 9 October [S/1996/840], concurred with the Secretary-General's recommendation in each of those reports that UNIKOM be maintained. The Council decided to review the question once again by 4 April 1997.

Composition

Major-General Gian Giuseppe Santillo (Italy) remained the Force Commander of UNIKOM throughout 1996. As of 23 September, UNIKOM had an overall strength of 1,356, comprising: 212 military observers from 32 Member States; an infantry battalion of 775 from Bangladesh; an engineer unit of 50 from Argentina; a logistics unit of 34 from Austria; a helicopter unit of 29 from Bangladesh; a civilian medical unit of 15 from Germany; and 241 civilian staff, of whom 71 were recruited internationally.

Financing

On 7 June 1996, during its resumed fiftieth session, the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's 15 March report [A/50/892] containing the proposed UNIKOM budget for the 12-month period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, together with the related observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [A/50/950], adopted resolution 50/234.

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 689(1991) of 9 April 1991, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and to review the question of its termination or continuation every six months,

Recalling also its resolution 49/245 of 12 July 1995 on the financing of the Observation Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observation Mission that are not covered by voluntary contributions are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observation Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Expressing its appreciation for the substantial voluntary contributions made to the Observation Mission by the Government of Kuwait and the contributions of other Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observation Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission as at 21 May 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 22,761,490 United States dollars, representing 11 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Observation Mission to the period ending 30 April 1996, notes that some 34 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses its continued appreciation for the decision of the Government of Kuwait to defray two thirds of the cost of the Observation Mission, effective 1 November 1993;

3. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

5. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observation Mission in full and on time;

6. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observation Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission the amount of 21,742,800 dollars gross (19,129,200 dollars net) authorized and apportioned by the General Assembly in paragraph 16 of its resolution 49/245 for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996;

9. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 52,141,900 dollars gross (50,071,000 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Observation Mission for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, inclusive of the amount of 1,396,500 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, two-thirds share of this amount, equivalent to 33,380,667 dollars, to be funded through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait, subject to the review by the Security Council with regard to the question of termination or continuation of the Mission;

10. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait of the two-thirds share of the cost of the Observation Mission, equivalent to 33,380,667 dollars, to apportion the amount of 18,761,233 dollars gross (16,690,333 dollars net), representing one third of the cost of the maintenance of the Observation Mission for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, to be assessed on Member States at the monthly rate of 1,563,436 dollars gross (1,390,861 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1996 and 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, subject to the review by the Security Council with regard to the question of termination or continuation of the Observation Mission;

11. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,070,900 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

12. Decides also that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observation Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 6,917,700 dollars gross (7,816,700 dollars net) for the period ending 31 October 1993;

13. Decides further that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observation Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 6,917,700 dollars gross (7,816,700 dollars net) for the period ending 31 October 1993 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

14. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observation Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

15. Decides to keep the sub-item entitled "United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission", under the agenda item entitled "Financing of the activities arising from Security Council resolution 687(1991)", under review during its fiftieth session.

General Assembly resolution 50/234

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/970) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.47), based on informal consultations; agenda item 124 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 58, 64 (resumed); plenary 120.

During the Assembly's fifty-first session, the Secretary-General submitted a 6 November report [A/51/658] on the financial performance of UNIKOM for the period 1 November 1994 to 31 December 1995. Following consideration of that report, together with ACABQ's related recommendation [A/51/683], the Assembly adopted decision 51/440.

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

At its 85th plenary meeting, on 16 December 1996, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee and having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission, the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996:

(a) Decided that, taking into consideration the funding through voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait of two thirds of the cost of the Observation Mission, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observation Mission, there should be set off against their future apportionment their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 2,436,433 United States dollars gross (1,633,633 dollars net), representing one third of the unencumbered balance of 5,703,700 dollars gross (4,900,900 dollars net) for the period from 1 November 1994 to 31 December 1995;

(b) Also decided that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observation Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 2,436,433 dollars gross (1,633,633 dollars net), representing one third of the unencumbered balance of 5,703,700 dollars gross (4,900,900 dollars net) for the period from 1 November 1994 to 31 December 1995, should be set off against their outstanding obligations;

(c) Further decided that two thirds of the net unencumbered balance of 4,900,900 dollars, equivalent to 3,267,267 dollars, should be returned to the Government of Kuwait;

(d) Requested the Secretary-General to take immediate action to recover the overpayment relating to mission subsistence allowance, which is estimated at more than 844,000 dollars, and to report to the General Assembly, no later than 31 May 1997, on the results of the actions taken for its recovery, as well as on the comprehensive review of the policies of the Organization in respect of compensatory time off and mission subsistence allowance.

General Assembly decision 51/440

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/726) without vote, 11 December (meeting 39); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.16), based on informal consultations; agenda item 125 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee, 35, 39; plenary 85.

Other matters

Kuwaiti property

On 16 December 1996, the Secretary-General submitted a report [S/1996/1042] on the return of property seized by Iraq during its 1990-1991 occupation of Kuwait. Prepared pursuant to paragraph 15 of Security Council resolution 687(1991)[YUN1991,p.172], the report contained a summary of hand-over operations by Iraq to Kuwait since the issuance of the Secretary-General's 1994 report on the subject [YUN 1994, p. 476]. The summary included items returned to Kuwait's Ministry of Defence, Navy, Ministry of Health, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Institute for Arabic Manuscripts, Arabic Centre for Educational Research, Free Art Studio and United Arab Maritime Company. Also returned were personal items belonging to the Amir and to Sheikh Abdullah Al-Mubarak Al-Sabah.

The Secretary-General noted that Kuwait continued to stress the importance it attached to the return of archives belonging to the Offices of the Amir, the Prime Minister, the Cabinet and the Foreign Ministry. He further noted that Kuwait had drawn attention to the fact that private properties had not been returned, nor had items of military property, including tanks, carriers and missile batteries.

Annexed to the report was a summary of hand-over operations for the period 2 March 1994 through 15 October 1996.

Raymond Sommereyns, Director of the West Asia Division of the Department of Political Affairs, continued to serve as Coordinator for the return of property. He remained available to receive, register and submit to Iraq claims presented by Kuwait and to facilitate the return of any property declared by Iraq to be in its possession. The original hand-over documents for all returned items were available for inspection in the Department of Political Affairs.

UN Compensation Commission and Fund

The United Nations Compensation Commission, established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 196] for the resolution and payment, through the United Nations Compensation Fund, of claims against Iraq for losses and damage resulting from its invasion and occupation of Kuwait, continued in 1996 to expedite the prompt settlement of claims.

On 2 December, the Governing Council of the Commission notified [S/1996/996] the Security Council that the Commission had been unable to present a totally funded draft 1997 budget, amounting to some $28 million. That was due to the depletion of the matching funds transferred by the United States into the escrow account for the Commission's purposes, pursuant to Council resolution 778(1992)[YUN 1992, p. 320], and to the delay in the implementation of the arrangements for the Commission's regular funding as set out in resolution 986(1995). By year's end, only a projected $13 million, resulting from the Commission's conservation efforts, was expected to be available in the Compensation Fund for 1997 expenditures.

The Governing Council conveyed the Commission's appeal to the Security Council to exert all efforts to spur the temporary bridging contributions being actively sought by the Commission from various sources, to be reimbursed immediately once regular funding became available to it.

Governing Council activities

During the year, the Governing Council of the Commission, headquartered in Geneva, held its fifth special session (5 February) [S/1996/108] and four regular sessions there: the twentieth (28-29 May) [S/1996/462], twenty-first (22-23 July) [S/1996/669], twenty-second (14-15 October) [S/1996/893] and twenty-third (16-17 December) [S/1997/50].

At the special session, the Governing Council heard a report by the Commission's Executive Secretary highlighting the significance of the talks between the United Nations and Iraq on implementing the humanitarian "oil-for-food" formula foreseen in Security Council resolution 986(1995) (see above, under "Oil-for-food") for the Commission's ability to pay the substantial number of compensation awards it had approved. The Executive Secretary also touched upon the submission of claims with regard to deadlines set by the Governing Council.

At the May session, the Council had before it the second report and recommendations of the Panel of Commissioners appointed to review category C claims (individual claims for damages up to $100,000) (annex I). The recommendations concerned the second instalment of such claims, numbering 62,337, of which 62,121 were recommended for payment totalling $425,057,699.08, including a recommendation that interest be awarded on those claims as of 2 August 1990. By a decision of 29 May (annex II), the Governing Council approved the amounts per country or international organization; it also reaffirmed that as soon as funds became available, payments should be made by those Governments and international organizations to the individual claimants in accordance with Governing Council decisions 17 and 18 [YUN 1994, p. 478].

At the July session, the Governing Council considered the third report of the Panel of Commissioners for category C claims (annex IV), which contained its recommendations on the third instalment of such claims, submitted exclusively by Kuwait and Egypt and processed on the basis of considerations, precedents and determinations expressed in the first and second reports, which the panel's current report incorporated by reference. By a decision of 23 July (annex III), the Council approved the Panel's recommendation for the payment of 64,065 claims (two less than the total processed), amounting to $323,776,505.21.

On 22 July, the Executive Secretary gave a comprehensive report on the Commission's activities

(annex I) and, referring to the fifth anniversary of the Governing Council, pointed out that, in less than three years, the Commission had begun paying its first awards and, in a little over five, would have resolved 2.4 million claims out of the 2.6 million received.

At the October session, the Governing Council heard a presentation (14 October) by Iraq (annex I) with respect to: issues of fundamental procedural rights under international law (Iraq's lack of standing and proper defence before the Commission, due process, divergence of Commission procedures from international practice in the settlement of war damage claims); Iraq's proper legal defence in the "higher" categories of claims (D, E and F), as well as in claims for environmental damage (in particular Kuwait's well blow-out control (WBC) claim); Iraq's right to present counter-claims (for any wrongful acts committed against it by allied forces during and after the Gulf War) or to make set-offs; and the need to guarantee transparency and objectivity in the Commission's proceedings.

In response, the Chairman made a statement (annex II) affirming the Governing Council's agreement that Iraq continued to be welcome to participate effectively in the work of the Commission in a manner consistent with the relevant Security Council decisions, the provisional rules for claims procedure, and decisions and procedures agreed to by the Governing Council under article 43 of those rules. Iraq's requests dealing with the establishment of the UN Compensation Commission, including its structure and composition, and the use of the UN Compensation Fund were matters within the sole competence of the Security Council. Iraq's request in respect of the WBC claim would be considered in accordance with article 40 of the rules upon receipt of the report and recommendations of the Panel of Commissioners reviewing that claim.

At the same session, the Governing Council considered the report and recommendations of the Panel of Commissioners for category A claims (for departure from Iraq or Kuwait during the period of 2 August 1990 to 2 March 1991) concerning the sixth and final instalment of such claims (annex III). Recommended were payment for 80,456 claims (out of 99,355 processed) totalling $319,730,500 and revised compensation awards in respect of certain claims previously approved under the first to fifth instalments. By a decision of 15 October (annex IV), the Council approved the recommendations, indicating the adjustments to be made in the light of the revised awards. The Commission had thus completed the processing of all category A claims, under which, of the more than 922,000 reviewed, more than 862,000 had been awarded compensation for a total of close to $3.2 billion.

Also before the Council was a summary report (annex V) of the distribution by Governments of compensation awarded to the successful claimants in category B (claims for serious personal injury or death).

The Council approved the Commissioner candidates nominated by the Secretary-General, on the basis of professional competence and the principle of geographical distribution, to make up new panels for claims in categories E (corporate claims) and F (government claims).

At the December session, the Governing Council heard the Executive Secretary's updated report on the Commission's activities (annex I). It had before it the fourth report and recommendations of the Panel of Commissioners for the fourth instalment of category C claims. Recommended for payment were 70,558 claims, out of 71,703 reviewed, for a total of $637,643,444.35; also recommended were revised awards of previously approved claims under the first and second instalments. Those recommendations were approved by the Council by a decision of 17 December (annex II), again indicating the adjustments to be made as a result of the revised awards. With respect to the executive summary of the relevant panel's report and recommendations concerning the WBC claim, the Council, by another decision of the same date (annex III), approved the recommended award of $610,048,547 to the Kuwait Oil Company, without prejudice to adjustments that might be reached concerning allocation of costs after a review of the Company's other related claims.

Complaints of violations

Iraq continued in 1996 to address numerous letters to the Secretary-General and the Security Council seeking their intervention in order to put an end to the repeated violations of its airspace, mainly over the northern and southern regions, by France, the United Kingdom and, particularly, the United States. The sorties, reported in detail in two-weekly periods, were said to originate from bases in Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Jordan and to engage in reconnaissance and provocative activities. They were described as flying at such speeds and altitudes as to cause sonic-boom damage to private and public property, dropping inflammatory leaflets to incite the population, as well as dropping heat or illumination flares, and, on one occasion, an incendiary phosphorous substance with a detonator for the purpose of setting fire to crops [S/1996/349].

Iraq further addressed some 12 letters drawing attention to the interference to which certain of its vessels, rightfully operating within Iraqi territorial waters, were increasingly being subjected, in violation of the Charter and of the norms of international law. In the majority of 14 instances reported as having occurred on 25 December 1995 and between 5 July and 29 November 1996, United States frigates, assisted by helicopters, were cited as the source of such interference. However, an Australian frigate was said to be involved on one occasion [S/1996/582], and a British, along with an American, frigate on another [S/1996/807]. The Iraqi vessel, usually a tug or fishing boat, would be directed to proceed to a certain point where it would be subjected to a thoroughgoing search—sometimes even if already inspected once—including the photocopying of its registration certificate and the crew's identity documents. In some cases, the crew would be made to assemble at the stern at gunpoint while the search was in progress. Iraq strenuously objected to those unjustified practices of the United States Navy stationed in the Persian Gulf, and asked that the Secretary-General or the Council intervene to call a halt to such practices.

Iraq additionally submitted statements on the disposal of miscellaneous unexploded ordnance—missiles, bombs, rockets, shells, mines, grenades—and other materiel left behind by what Iraq called the 30-Power aggression against it, which continued to be found in various areas of the country. The statements indicated the number and type of ordnance disposed of by the civil defence department concerned, covering three month-long periods from January to March [S/1996/120, S/1996/218, S/1996/268] and three two-month periods from April to September [S/1996/459, S/1996/658, S/1996/868].

Two further letters from Iraq and one from Kuwait [S/1996/230, S/1996/249, S/1996/307] were addressed to the Secretary-General regarding Iraq's claim that it had apprehended a group of agents recruited by Kuwaiti intelligence services to carry out acts of sabotage with a view to undermining security and stability in Iraq and targeting UNIKOM personnel on patrol along the Iraq-Kuwait boundary—an allegation denied by Kuwait but which Iraq repeated on the basis of what it claimed was damning evidence reported in minute detail in the confessions of the Kuwaiti agents.

Iraq-Turkey

By five identical letters addressed in 1996 to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President [S/1996/401] and three addressed to the Secretary-General [S/1996/762, S/1996/860, S/1996/1018], Iraq drew attention to the continuing blatant violations of its sovereignty and territorial integrity by Turkey's armed forces. The violations, which Iraq claimed had escalated since March, were concentrated in the country's northern region and covered the period between 28 February and 10 November. As described, they ranged from airspace incursions for reconnaissance purposes and ground incursions as deep into Iraqi territory as 22 kilometres for the purpose of searching villages and even arresting Iraqi citizens, to aerial and artillery bombardments that not only had forced villagers to flee their homes but had also resulted in several deaths and injuries, the burning of or damage to homes and other property, and destruction of livestock. Iraq also reported what it said was the illegal entry into Iraqi territory in July by a group of Turkish journalists who photographed the oil pipeline and pumping station near Zakho, at the Iraq-Turkey border. Iraq submitted a list of letters of protest it had addressed to the Embassy of Turkey in Baghdad since Turkey's first assault on Iraqi territory on 7 August 1991 until 18 July 1996 [S/1996/641].

Iraq condemned those grave violations and categorically rejected the justifications advanced by Turkey for its open aggression, namely, its right to protect its national security against terrorist elements, specifically the Kurdish Workers' Party, and to pursue them even into Iraqi territory until they were extirpated. Iraq pointed out that it was in no way responsible for the anomalous situation prevailing in the north of the country due to Turkey's policy, which had permitted the large-scale deployment of United States and United Kingdom forces on Turkish territory from which, under the so-called Operation Poised Hammer, they could intervene militarily in northern Iraq. That had effectively prevented Iraq from exercising its national sovereignty there, thus damaging the security and stability of that region. Iraq therefore reiterated, through the Secretary-General and the Council, its appeal to Turkey to review the policy that had prevented two neighbouring countries from reaching a settlement of the issues standing in the way of their good-neighbourly relations.

Iraq-United States

On 28 March, Iraq drew attention [S/1996/229] to an article in the 26 March issue of the British newspaper The Independent, according to which an agent of the United States Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) admitted to planning the explosion of car bombs in Baghdad and Salah al-Din, as well as in other regions of Iraq, on direct CIA instructions. That information, Iraq stated, confirmed once again the involvement of United States official agencies in terrorist activities against Iraq aimed at destabilizing the country and causing harm to its national authority.

On 3 September, the United States transmitted [S/1996/711] the text of a statement by its President, William J. Clinton, regarding the United States military strike launched that day against Iraq, in response to the Iraqi army's attack on and seizure of the Kurdish-controlled city of Arbil in northern Iraq, despite clear warnings from the United States and the international community. The limited troop withdrawals announced by Iraq did not change the reality that Arbil was under the control of the Iraqi army, whose units remained deployed for further attacks, the United States maintained.

The decision taken by one Kurdish group previously opposed to Iraq's President Saddam Hussein to cooperate with him, President Clinton stated, could not justify unleashing the Iraqi army against the civilian population of Arbil—an attack that added fuel to the current factional fire in the Kurdish region and threatened to spark instability there. For that latest act of brutality by Iraq's President and significantly to restrict his ability to conduct offensive operations in the region, the United States was extending the no-fly zone from the Kuwaiti border to the southern suburbs of Baghdad. To protect the safety of aircraft enforcing the no-fly zone, United States cruise missiles struck Iraqi air defence capabilities in southern Iraq.

President Clinton pointed out that Arbil was a key distribution centre for the humanitarian supplies envisioned under the recently concluded oil-for-food arrangements (see above). Until the United States was sure that supplies could actually get to those in need of them, those arrangements could not go forward and the Iraqi Government would be denied the new resources it had been expecting.

Also on 3 September, the Russian Federation issued a statement [S/1996/712] to the effect that it considered the United States missile strike an inappropriate and unacceptable reaction to recent events in northern Iraq, especially in view of Iraq's announcement that it was beginning to withdraw its forces from Kurdistan to their former positions. The Russian Federation urged the cessation of all military action threatening the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq and offered energetically to promote the immediate defusion of the situation by political means.

On 4 September, Iraq reported [A/51/328] that the United States had launched another missile attack against it earlier that day, using 17 cruise missiles—the previous day's attack had used 27—which had resulted in civilian loss of life, material damage and destruction. Iraq claimed the attacks had been premeditated and were preceded by a large-scale misinformation campaign to set the stage at the international level, without regard for any moral principle or for responsible behaviour incumbent on a permanent Security Council member.

Iraq drew attention to the two no-fly zones imposed on it by the United States, the United Kingdom and France: in 1991, to the north of the 36th parallel in northern Iraq, under the pretext of protecting the Kurds; and, in 1992, to the south of the 32nd parallel, under the pretext of protecting Shiites in southern Iraq. It referred as well to President Clinton's unilateral extension northwards, as far as the suburbs of Baghdad, of the southern no-fly zone, as contained in his 3 September statement and endorsed by the United Kingdom. Iraq recalled its past declarations that such imposition was a continuing act of armed aggression that threatened Iraq's sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence, in violation of the Charter and international law. That the United Nations had taken no action to condemn such conduct, Iraq said, had encouraged the United States and the United Kingdom to continue their aggression and unilaterally to extend the southern no-fly zone. Iraq reiterated its declaration of 3 September that it regarded the lines of the no-fly zones illusory and null and void, and would act on that basis.

The Russian Federation, referring to the second missile attack in a statement of 4 September [S/1996/715], said it was a matter of grave concern that Washington was arrogating to itself the role of supreme arbiter, seeking to supplant the Security Council, which possessed the exclusive right under the Charter to authorize the use of force. That and unilaterally extending the southern no-fly zone constituted a dangerous precedent and were incompatible with international law and unacceptable. The Russian Federation said military action in and around Iraq must cease.

On 7 September, Iraq pointed [S/1996/729] to a report by Russian intelligence sources that the recent United States military operations against it had been several months in the planning and bore no connection whatsoever to the recent events in Kurdistan. The report made clear, Iraq claimed, that the international (UN) inspection teams that had recently visited Iraq were composed not of experts but of American military personnel whose task was to ascertain the location of Iraqi air defences rather than weapons of mass destruction—a fact that had put UNSCOM in an extremely embarrassing position, in addition to discrediting it in international opinion.

On 9 September, Iraq reported [S/1996/732] that the Permanent Representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom had tried to discuss the question of the no-fly zones with the Charge d'affaires of the Permanent Mission of Iraq to the United Nations. The latter declined on the grounds that the no-fly zones in no way concerned the United Nations, had not been authorized by the Council and were not based on any of that body's resolutions. The Permanent Representatives were invited to pursue the matter, however, through bilateral diplomatic channels in Washington and London if they so wished. Subsequently, the Iraqi Mission received an unofficial note by facsimile transmission "brazenly" making several demands of Iraq. (The note demanded that Iraq not reinforce or introduce new surface-to-air missile systems including mobile systems south of the 33° latitude, not re-deploy surface-to-air missile systems currently south of that latitude to new positions, and not repair or rebuild such systems that had been damaged or destroyed by coalition forces since 3 September; any surface-to-air missile illuminating and/or tracking coalition aircraft with fire-control radar would be considered hostile; failure to comply would make Iraq liable to face military action against the systems concerned.)

On 10 September [A/51/345-S/1996/739], Iraq reported that, in continued pursuit of its policy of aggression towards Iraq and interference in its internal affairs, the United States President had been quoted as saying that everything was being done to get out of Iraq those who had worked with the United States and to help those individuals who needed to get out, adding that the United States had done what it felt needed to be done. Iraq urged the United Nations to take the steps necessary to halt the irresponsible actions of the United States Administration, which it held fully accountable before international law for any consequences of its aggressive and unlawful positions.

On 22 September, Iraq repeated [A/51/401-S/1996/782] its previous complaints calling attention to the direct involvement of the United States in operations against Iraq, planned and led by the CIA. It cited the international media's exposure of the large sums budgeted by the CIA for internal subversion in Iraq, including recruiting and directing agents to perpetrate terrorist acts; the CIA-funded operation in northern Iraq to destabilize the Baghdad Government; and the open, undisguised remarks of United States officials, including President Clinton himself, to bring down the current Government of Iraq.

Iraq pointed out that the actions of the United States were clear violations of Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter, respectively calling for development of friendly relations among nations based on respect for equal rights and self-determination and calling on Member States to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State; and of the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations [GA res. 2625(XXV)], with specific reference to the principle concerning the duty not to intervene in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any State. Iraq urged the United Nations to take action to halt all the hostile practices threatening its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

On 26 September, Iraq communicated [S/1996/806] the text of a statement by the Force Commander of UNIKOM, as reported by Reuters on 18 September. According to the statement, the missile attacks against Iraq constituted a violation of the frontier zone between Iraq and Kuwait, and overflight of the zone by unidentified military aircraft was a violation of the DMZ established at the frontier, as was any military attack in that zone. UN observers were witness to two military aircraft, apparently belonging to the United States Air Force, which overflew the zone at low altitude and entered Kuwaiti airspace from the north before turning and flying over the frontier in the direction of Iraq. The sorties conducted by the two aircraft constituted violations, of which UNIKOM had informed UN Headquarters.

On 4 November, Iraq drew attention [S/1996/915] to a 23 September announcement by a spokesman of the United States Department of State regarding its decision to grant identity documents to a first batch of 2,100 Iraqis, and the planned evacuation of a large number of persons from northern Iraq, including Kurds, Assyrians and NGO employees, for whom the United States was concerned. Iraq reported that the evacuation subsequently took place, under the supervision of CIA operatives, who took the evacuees to Turkey and thence to a base on Guam. Iraq claimed that those operatives had illegally entered Iraq, some under NGO cover, for the purpose of organizing clandestine operations aimed at undermining the national system of governance in Iraq. The CIA Director had admitted as much to the Senate Intelligence Committee at its September hearings, Iraq claimed, when he said that the CIA was endeavouring to change Iraq's regime and President. Iraq asserted that, if the United States could engage CIA operatives and collaborators for such activities, it could not but make use of the details involved in the implementation of Council resolutions to advance its schemes for aggression, such as manipulating humanitarian operations and UN inspection teams to raise problems between them and Iraq.

On 13 November, Iraq referred [S/1996/1004] to United States announcements of 2 and 4 November that, on those dates, an American aircraft had fired a missile at an Iraqi radar system that was tracking the aircraft. Iraq, which stated that the planes had been in violation of its airspace, called the claims groundless and the incidents fabrications that were part of the election campaign in progress at the time; that was subsequently borne out by a Department of Defense investigation, which found that the pilots' actions in both instances had been mistakes due to the malfunctioning of cockpit equipment. It was clear, Iraq remarked, that the fate of its security and interests depended on mistakes of American pilots and malfunctions of aircraft equipment.

In several other communications, Iraq reported the numerous daily sorties conducted by "hostile aircraft" over northern and southern Iraq from 8 to 13 September and drew attention to the no-fly zones imposed on it, saying they constituted a continuing unilateral act of aggressive armed force. Iraq held the States responsible for creating those zones, notably the United States and the United Kingdom, accountable before international law for the damage inflicted thereby on Iraq.

Afghanistan

In 1996, Afghanistan witnessed yet another round of upheavals with significant implications for its future and for UN peacemaking efforts, according to the Secretary-General. In September, the Taliban forces advanced, gaining new territory and taking control of Kabul, then pushing northward. The fall of Kabul generated a great deal of political and diplomatic activity, and significantly affected the work of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan. By the end of the year, the nation was divided between north and south, along ethnic lines, with control resting with the Taliban and the Supreme Council for the Defence of Afghanistan.

The plight of former Afghanistan President Mohammed Najibullah, detained in Kabul since April 1992, was cited by the Secretary-General in a July report, when he appealed again for his release. Mr. Najibullah was hanged following the takeover in September of Kabul by the Taliban; the killing was deplored by the Secretary-General as a brutal execution. Other human rights and humanitarian issues—particularly those affecting women—remained of great concern to the United Nations at the end of the year.

The Security Council and the General Assembly took action on the situation in Afghanistan in 1996. Both bodies called on the Afghan parties to reach a ceasefire and a peaceful settlement, and reaffirmed their support for UN efforts in that regard, in particular the activities of the Special Mission, in facilitating the political process towards national reconciliation and a lasting political settlement.

UN Special Mission to Afghanistan

As requested by the General Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 471], the Secretary-General reported three times during 1996 on the situation in Afghanistan and the activities of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, established in 1993 [GA res. 48/208].

Report of Secretary-General (covering January-March). On 3 April, the Secretary-General reported [A/50/908] that the Special Mission resumed its activities on 12 January when its Head, Mahmoud Mestiri (Tunisia), arrived in the region, following the renewal of the General Assembly mandate to facilitate national reconciliation and reconstruction in Afghanistan, in particular by ensuring the transfer of power through the urgent establishment of a fully representative and broad-based authoritative council. Mr. Mestiri subsequently undertook an extensive round of consultations in pursuit of those objectives.

The Secretary-General reported that, during the first quarter of 1996, Afghanistan remained under the military control of three major forces: those of the Government in Kabul and five other provinces in the north-eastern part of the country (Badakhshan, Takhar, Kunduz, Parwan and Kapisa); those of the Taliban in 14 provinces in the southern, south-eastern and south-western parts (Herat, Farah, Nimroz, Helmand, Kandahar, Ghor, Zabul, Oruzgan, Ghazni, Wardak, Paktika, Logar, Khost and parts of Badghis); and those of General Rashid Dostum in six provinces in the northern part (Jawzjan, Faryab, Samangan, Baghlan, Balkh and most of Badghis). Of two smaller forces, the Hezb-i-Wahdat was confined to Bamyan and parts of Ghor, while the Eastern Zone Shura, under Governor Hajji Abdul Qadir, held the three provinces of Laghman, Kunar and Nangarhar.

While most of the country was relatively calm between January and March, the tension around Kabul continued to be high. The capital remained under siege by the Taliban, which had reached its outskirts in October 1995. Government forces and the Taliban militia were locked in a military stalemate, punctuated by occasional outbursts of fierce fighting, mostly afflicting the civilian population, the Secretary-General reported. Indiscriminate exchanges of rockets and missiles and aerial bombardment had occurred almost on a daily basis since February 1996. The already tragic humanitarian situation, he said, was worsened by the blockade of Kabul by opposition forces, mainly Hezb-i-Islami commanders loyal to Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, and by the unusually harsh winter. The blockade was later relaxed, allowing supplies of food and fuel to reach the city. Tension was also high in Herat province, which had been taken by Taliban forces in September 1995, causing its Governor to flee to Iran.

The Head of the Special Mission made frequent appeals, public and private, to the warring parties for an immediate cessation of hostilities and for unconditional recourse to a peaceful dialogue, as did the Security Council, all of which went unheeded, the Secretary-General went on. The principal reason for the continuing hostilities was the uncompromising stance of the parties. The Taliban was determined to remove President Burhanuddin Rabbani from power by force, and the Government was resolved to maintain control of Kabul at all costs. Both sides appeared to be preparing for a major battle, perhaps at the beginning of spring. That unhealthy climate of war had considerably hindered the progress of the UN peace process, with the Special Mission often forced to adopt a wait-and-see attitude.

While the Government and the Taliban were preparing for more fighting, talks continued among Afghan leaders. President Rabbani often told the Head of the Special Mission that he would transfer power—not to his enemies but either to an individual acceptable to the parties concerned or to an equitably representative mechanism. However, the Taliban and other parties opposed to the Government neither believed Mr. Rabbani nor trusted his word. They insisted that he first step down and evacuate his forces from Kabul as a precondition to a ceasefire and the start of negotiations.

The opposition forces had so far resisted formidable pressures to form a grand military alliance against Mr. Rabbani. General Dostum had maintained a neutral position, siding neither with Mr. Rabbani nor with the Taliban. The leaders of the Supreme Coordination Council (SCC) met in Islamabad, Pakistan, from 7 to 14 February to review their strategy and reportedly discussed a number of options, including the possibility of forming a parallel government to Mr. Rabbani's, as well as the UN proposals for a ceasefire and the transfer of power by Mr. Rabbani as a result of peaceful negotiations. The Taliban delegation appeared briefly in Islamabad but boycotted the talks. The position of the Special Mission was that of full support and encouragement for those intra-Afghan talks, as it recognized that they could complement UN efforts.

The Secretary-General pointed out another area of concern during the current round of consultations—the rapid escalation of foreign interference in Afghanistan, both military and political, which was a massive obstacle to a peaceful settlement. The Head of the Special Mission had been asked, he said, to continue to raise the matter with the countries concerned as well as the Afghan warring factions. In the Secretary-General's view, the problem needed to be taken up at the international level; one proposal in that regard was the convening of an international conference to address the problem as an integral part of the overall Afghan question.

The Special Mission's general assessment was that the main warring parties still seemed to prefer the military option as the course of action and that the military race was on for control of Kabul. Most of the parties did not seem genuinely ready to pursue a peaceful political settlement through the United Nations.

The escalating foreign interference by countries in the region and beyond further complicated the process and fueled the machinery for war. But the countries concerned either denied involvement or described it as legitimate assistance to the Afghan people.

That the proposed transfer-of-power mechanism had not advanced significantly was due almost entirely to those two elements, the Secretary-General concluded. Nevertheless, he remained convinced that the establishment of a fully representative and broad-based authoritative council, through peaceful dialogue among the Afghans, was the most appropriate formula for finding a lasting settlement and peace. At the same time, he believed it was necessary to explore additional ways to facilitate the realization of that objective.

Communications. Afghanistan transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a 19 January statement [S/1996/44] by its Foreign Ministry renewing charges [YUN 1995, p. 472] that Pakistan was sponsoring the Taliban forces in contradiction of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions on Afghanistan. Pakistan was also putting pressure on its banks and businesses to open offices in Kandahar and Herat, which were under Taliban rule. Afghanistan said it wanted to establish good bilateral relations with Pakistan and was seeking a solution to bilateral differences through negotiation and reciprocal understanding.

On 1 March [S/1996/151], Afghanistan said that the intervention of Pakistan in the internal affairs of Afghanistan had been and remained one of the main causes of the armed conflicts in Afghanistan, and that the Taliban had been mobilized, trained, armed and equipped by Pakistan.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 15 February, the President of the Security Council issued the following statement [S/PRST/1996/6] on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council deeply deplores the continuation of armed hostilities in Afghanistan, which have brought death and destruction to the people and property of the country and threaten the peace and security of the region.

The Council is particularly concerned about the recent intensification of shelling and air attacks in and around the capital city of Kabul and the blockade of the city, which has prevented the delivery of foodstuffs, fuel and other humanitarian items to its population.

The Council calls on the parties involved to end the hostilities forthwith and not to obstruct the delivery of humanitarian aid and other needed supplies to the innocent civilians of the city. In this regard, the Council commends the efforts of the United Nations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and other humanitarian agencies in Afghanistan, which are working under the most trying circumstances, and the airlift of food supplies from Peshawar to Kabul, and urges the international community to continue its support of those life-saving efforts.

The Council is deeply concerned that the continued conflict in Afghanistan provides fertile ground for terrorism, arms transfers and drug trafficking, which destabilize the whole region and beyond. It calls on the leaders of the Afghan parties to put aside their differences and to halt such activities.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan to bring about a peaceful solution to the conflict through the establishment of a fully representative, broad-based, authoritative council acceptable to all Afghans. It calls upon all Afghans to cooperate fully with the Special Mission as it works towards this goal.

The Council calls on all States in a position to do so to take steps to promote peace and stability in Afghanistan, in particular by urging the parties to the conflict to cooperate fully with the United Nations Special Mission. It also calls on all States to refrain from interfering in the internal affairs of Afghanistan and to prevent the flow to the Afghan parties of weapons and other supplies that can fuel the fighting.

The Council urges the captors of the members of the crew of the Russian aircraft in Kandahar to release them immediately and without any preconditions.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to the full sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan. It reaffirms its readiness to assist the Afghan people in their efforts to return peace and normalcy to their country, and it encourages all States, as well as the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Non-Aligned Movement and others, to support the efforts of the United Nations Special Mission to the same end.

The Council will remain actively seized of the situation in Afghanistan.

Report of Secretary-General (covering April-June). The Secretary-General, in a 16 July report [A/50/908/Add.1], announced that at the end of May the Head of the Special Mission, Mr. Mestiri, had resigned; he was succeeded by Norbert Heinrich Holl (Germany), beginning on 7 July. Mr. Holl would be based in Jalalabad pending the return of the Special Mission to Kabul.

The Secretary-General reported that, with effect from 1 July, and in order to strengthen the Special Mission and to rationalize the Organization's political presence in Afghanistan, the Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan would cease to exist. All UN peacemaking efforts would be integrated into the Special Mission, with its staff consisting of its Head, a Deputy Head, five political affairs officers, two military advisers, and international and local support staff.

In pursuit of establishing the twin objectives of a cessation of hostilities and a negotiated transfer of power through a fully representative, broad-based authoritative council, another series of consultations took place with Afghan leaders and representatives of other countries. The rigid position of the warring factors, reinforced by deep-seated suspicion and distrust, prevented the launching of meaningful talks, the Secretary-General stated.

Meanwhile, the military stalemate continued. An all-out assault on Kabul in the spring by the Taliban did not materialize, but they continued to bomb Kabul almost daily, with great loss of life among civilians, and clashes between the two forces occurring around the city. All appeals by the Special Mission to halt the exchanges of missiles and aerial bombardment went unheeded.

Afghan leaders maintained a dialogue among themselves in order to find a solution to the conflict, in some cases with involvement of outside Powers, the Secretary-General continued. Early in April, the Taliban indicated to the Special Mission that they were prepared to negotiate with any faction in Afghanistan, including the Government. That change of policy turned out to be short-lived, and the Taliban began to set preconditions for talks that made it impossible to proceed.

President Rabbani was able to broaden his base of support with the signing on 24 May of a six-point agreement with Mr. Hekmatyar, the leader of Hezb-i-Islami, leading to the appointment of Mr. Hekmatyar as Prime Minister on 26 June. A number of ministerial positions were allocated to Hezb-i-Islami officials. In a similar move, the Taliban invited some prominent Afghan leaders to a meeting in Kandahar on 5 and 6 June, and they signed a short statement demanding the resignation of Mr. Rabbani. Talks between SCC and the Taliban also took place.

The Secretary-General concluded that the objectives of a durable ceasefire and a peaceful transfer of power, mandated by the General Assembly and vigorously sought by the Special Mission, were still far from being achieved. Although the intra-Afghan talks were welcomed, they had not yet brought the principal warring parties and others to the negotiating table. There had been no decline in foreign interference in the Afghan conflict, but those involved denied that that was the case. In those circumstances, the Secretary-General said, there was a need for an impartial third party to help the Afghan leaders resolve their differences and to encourage neighbouring countries and others to support that effort. That was the role of the United Nations. The Secretary-General called on the Afghan leaders and the countries concerned to help the United Nations facilitate a peace process.

At the conclusion of his report, the Secretary-General mentioned the plight of former President Najibullah, who since April 1992 had been confined de facto to the UN compound in Kabul. The Secretary-General appealed to the authorities in Kabul to let Mr. Najibullah and his companions leave Afghanistan for another country of their choice.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (April)

The Security Council remained concerned about the situation in Afghanistan, and on 9 April held two formal meetings on the subject. Launching the debate, Afghanistan said that after enduring the sacrifice of 1.7 million lives, it deserved sympathy from the world community and should have been supported in its national endeavours aimed at overcoming the problems left by 17 years of war. Over the last four years, conspirators and interventionists linked to Pakistani military intelligence circles, sometimes in connivance with other outside supporters, had attempted to enthrone a Pakistani-approved regime in Kabul. That unjust scheme had resulted in a renewed, widespread Afghan resistance, while creating legitimate concern for the countries of the region. Afghanistan also cited what it called the negative and ruthless conduct of the Taliban with regard to human rights, particularly of women, and the burgeoning drug cultivation, processing and trafficking in areas under its control. The promoters of the Taliban believed that deploying that terrorist group would secure them a permanent influence in Afghanistan. A vast budget, Afghanistan said, had been channelled through and by Pakistani intelligence circles to that group, which had consequently managed to secure a tyrannical military presence in a number of provinces of Afghanistan, while hatred and resentment of their uncivilized and retrograde practices had been on the rise among civilians.

Afghanistan was in turmoil; the peace and stability of the region was in jeopardy. It was high time for Afghanistan and Pakistan immediately to start serious dialogue and negotiation for the restoration of mutual trust and a cooperative relationship that would definitely contribute to the creation of a sound atmosphere conducive to the restoration of peace in Afghanistan. Afghanistan suggested that a UN monitoring post at the southern border between the two countries be established to halt the flow of illicit arms to Taliban mercenaries; that a fact-finding mission be sent to Taliban-occupied provinces to determine outside intervention in the internal affairs of Afghanistan and investigate illegal drug activities; and that the Security Council arrange for the early return of certain arms belonging to Afghanistan which had been handed over to the Taliban.

Pakistan said that its consistent position with regard to the fratricidal conflict in Afghanistan had been that only a broad-based interim mechanism, in which all factions would participate, could pave the way to a democratic Government that alone could provide the necessary durable fabric for that multi-ethnic country. Durable peace required abandoning the politics of domination and exclusion and achieving a genuine national reconciliation among all the political, ethnic and various other segments of Afghan society. It was evident that the people of Afghanistan were fed up with factional strife and earnestly dreamed of resuming normal life in conditions of peace and security. Much of the strife in Afghanistan could be attributed to the absence of legitimate governance. Legitimacy flowed not from military diktat or the use of weaponry against innocent civilians, but from the confidence and support of those civilians. The massive infusion of weapons and funds from abroad compounded the problem and weakened the resolve to seek national reconciliation. Pakistan had stood steadfast with Afghanistan in its liberation struggle, supporting millions of Afghan refugees, and now was being portrayed by some as playing politics in Afghanistan. Those who accused it of interfering in Afghanistan, Pakistan stated, knew full well that it had scrupulously refrained from supporting one faction or another. Those allegations had been concocted to cover up the massive weapon supplies from certain quarters, or were an expression of disappointment on finding no such support from Pakistan. A representative gathering of Afghan leaders should be convened under UN auspices, or with neighbouring countries, to launch a credible process involving the transfer of power to a fully representative, broad-based Government. It could also address the question of the induction of a neutral security force and the demilitarization of Kabul and Afghanistan. Pakistan favoured a complete ban on weapons and arms supplies to the warring factions through a general arms embargo. It welcomed the debate in the Security Council, but said it was convinced that the true voice of the Afghan people had not yet been heard.

Most speakers expressed support for the Special Mission's work to facilitate the peace process and bring about a dialogue among the Afghan factions. Many emphasized that the political will of the Afghan parties themselves was necessary to achieve any significant progress in the negotiating process.

A number of speakers supported the proposal for convening an international conference on the situation in Afghanistan or felt it was worthy of consideration; many stressed that such a conference needed to be well prepared and supported by the participants.

Meeting numbers. SC 3648, 3650.

Report of Secretary-General (covering July-November). On 26 November [A/51/698-S/1996/988], the Secretary-General reported again on the situation in Afghanistan, focusing on the period between July and November. He described it as a time when Afghanistan had experienced renewed fighting, particularly after the beginning of September, most of which occurred between the government forces and the Taliban, who were approaching the outskirts of Kabul.

Dramatic changes, however, began in early September when the Taliban advanced in heavy fighting, using fighter planes, artillery and tanks, causing some members of other factions to flee. The Secretary-General recalled that on 12 September he had expressed concern at the escalation of hostilities and the bombing of Jalalabad, which endangered the large population of internally displaced persons at camps in the area. The UN Special Mission had to move back to Islamabad as a temporary measure, until conditions permitted its relocation to Kabul.

After taking Jalalabad, Taliban forces took control of Kabul on 27 September, without perceptible resistance from government forces which had largely withdrawn. A six-member interim Council was formed under the leadership of Mullah Mohammed Rabbani to take charge of Kabul. As they had done in other areas under their control, the Taliban immediately imposed the Shariah Islamic law on the Kabul population. On 7 October, the Secretary-General issued a statement expressing concern about the ability of the United Nations to continue humanitarian and development work given the constraints imposed by the new regime.

From Kabul, the Taliban moved northwards. After fleeing the city, government forces regrouped in the Panjshir valley and repelled attacks by the Taliban. Two weeks later, those forces launched a counter-attack and retook some strategic places and moved to within rocket range of Kabul. Meanwhile, General Dostum and his allies in SCC abandoned their neutrality and regrouped in a new alliance, known as the Supreme Council for the Defence of Afghanistan, to counter further advances by the Taliban.

The military situation remained static after mid-October, with some shelling and occasional air raids but no serious armoured or infantry activity by either side. The main consequence of military developments was that Afghanistan was effectively divided between north and south, a division that was not only military but also ethnic. The Taliban, whose leadership and forces were largely composed of Pashtuns, controlled almost all the Pashtun majority areas, and the Supreme Council controlled almost all the areas where the majority was Hazara, Tajik or Uzbek.

One of the first acts of the Taliban administration in Kabul was the extrajudicial murder of former President Najibullah and his brother, Shahpur Ahmadzai, on 27 September. They and two colleagues, who had taken refuge in UN premises in April 1992, were removed from that location by Taliban soldiers who had forced their way into the compound. Later that morning, they were hung in Ariana Square in the city centre, a short distance from the compound. On a number of occasions over the previous four years, the Secretary-General had intervened with the Kabul authorities to try to persuade them that Mr. Najibullah, who had cooperated with the United Nations in an attempt to transfer power peacefully in 1992, should be allowed to leave Afghanistan safely. The Secretary-General said that Taliban seizure of Kabul and murder of Mr. Najibullah raised new issues relating to violation of the immunity of UN premises and the execution of persons who sought refuge in them.

The fall of Kabul to the Taliban generated a great deal of political and diplomatic activity inside Afghanistan, in the region and internationally, and significantly affected the work of the Special Mission. Inside Afghanistan, a new realignment of forces emerged as an anti-Taliban alliance replaced SCC, with control of the country divided between the two major forces, the Taliban and the Supreme Council for the Defence of Afghanistan. Some regional countries expressed alarm that the Taliban might overrun the whole of Afghanistan.

Meanwhile, the humanitarian situation in Afghanistan remained serious and was considered likely to deteriorate sharply over the winter months, the Secretary-General reported. Up to 10 million mines still remained, with the death rate soaring in recent months. Also, up to 1 in 10 Afghans suffered from a disability of some kind, and malnutrition affected up to 20 per cent of children under the age of five. The food security situation worsened, and the refugee situation did not improve, with more than 2 million Afghan refugees living outside the country. There were also hundreds of thousands of internally displaced people. The security of UN and other aid community staff was a matter of growing concern. Violations of basic human rights, particularly those of women, had increased considerably since the Taliban takeover.

Consultations by the Head of the UN Special Mission widened, with the aim of securing an immediate cessation of hostilities. He reported a genuine sense of frustration among the interlocutors, who showed increasing anxiety about the political deadlock and the deteriorating military situation. Most tended to blame the stalemate on foreign interference, especially through the supply of arms and other military assistance. The Secretary-General asked that the leaders of the warring factions agree on an immediate cessation of hostilities, through the good offices of the United Nations, and that each subscribe to basic principles, including a renunciation of the military option. Following the fall of Kabul, the Secretary-General asked that strenuous efforts be made to establish a working relationship with the Taliban authorities in Kabul, to ensure an open channel for communication between all parties and to address certain humanitarian issues.

The Secretary-General, who had held a meeting of consultation with 19 interested Member States on 18 November, said that they had agreed that the current situation could not be allowed to continue, as it was intolerable in terms of human suffering and the threats of regional destabilization, drugs, terrorism and illegal arms flows. They also confirmed that the United Nations had a central role to play in helping the Afghan parties define and implement a peace process, in close consultation with OIC. The Secretary-General believed that the meeting of consultation was a useful first gathering of countries in a position to support his efforts to carry out mandates entrusted to him by the General Assembly and the Security Council. He stated his intention to convene further informal meetings of the group.

In cooperation with UN agencies and programmes operating in Afghanistan, the Special Mission would continue to raise with the relevant authorities issues of equal treatment, the observance of human rights, and the unhindered provision of humanitarian assistance to the needy. The Mission would insist on strict respect for the privileges and immunities of UN staff and premises.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General stated that the suffering of the Afghan civilian population, who continued to bear the main brunt of the civil war, and the danger that that war created for regional stability, obliged the international community to intensify its search for a peaceful solution, despite the fact that certain Afghan parties seemed to continue to favour the military option. It was fortunate, he declared, that the great majority of Afghans wanted the United Nations to play a central role in the search for a solution.

Communications. In letters to the Security Council in 1996, a number of regional countries called on the Council to take urgent action in regard to the situation in Afghanistan.

Uzbekistan, on 23 July [S/1996/607], said the current situation of the ongoing war in Afghanistan was taking a dangerous turn. It was insufficient to concentrate only on the need for national reconciliation within Afghanistan as the principal means of a settlement, and an embargo on arms supplies to Afghanistan should be imposed.

The Security Council President, in a 22 August letter [S/1996/683] to the Secretary-General, stated, on behalf of the Council members, that the United Nations must continue to play a central role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict. The members took note of recent proposals to promote a peaceful settlement, including the proposal for an arms embargo as contained in the letter from Uzbekistan, and had begun to discuss those proposals.

Noting the letters from Uzbekistan and the Council President, the Foreign Ministry of Afghanistan, in a 22 August statement [S/1996/685], said that national reconciliation was needed for a settlement in Afghanistan, and, in the same way, no other means of settlement, including an arms embargo, would be workable without national reconciliation. Afghanistan stated that it had the right to self-defence and any attempt to prevent it from strengthening its national defence would contradict the United Nations Charter. As far as implementation of the arms embargo against armed groups fighting the Government was concerned, Afghanistan considered those groups not legal subjects of international law and their accountability not credible. Furthermore, the implementation of such an arms embargo would be unattainable, it believed, given the long and unguarded frontiers of the country, and any proposed draft resolution of the Security Council needed to be thoroughly discussed with Afghanistan, its neighbours and other interested countries.

On 23 September [S/1996/773], Afghanistan called on the Secretary-General to send a fact-finding mission to witness the presence of Pakistani armed groups in Afghan provinces. Those aggressions, it added, must not go unpunished by the international community. Two days later [S/1996/781], Afghanistan, in a letter to the Security Council President, requested the convening of an emergency session of the Security Council to consider the alarming situation in Afghanistan emanating from a widespread incursion and aggression into Afghan territory by Pakistani militia forces in support of the Taliban.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 28 September, the President of the Security Council, on behalf of the Council, made the following statement [S/PRST/1996/40]:

The Security Council reiterates its grave concern about the military confrontation in Afghanistan.

The Council is also concerned at the violation of the United Nations premises in Kabul and expresses its dismay at the brutal execution by the Taliban of the former President of Afghanistan, Najibullah, and others who had taken refuge in these premises.

The Council demands that all parties fulfil their obligations and commitments regarding the safety of the United Nations personnel and other international personnel in Afghanistan. It calls upon all Afghans to cooperate fully with the United Nations and associated bodies as well as with other humanitarian organizations and agencies in their efforts to respond to the humanitarian needs of the people of Afghanistan.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan. It calls for the immediate cessation of all armed hostilities and urgently calls upon the leaders of the Afghan parties to renounce the use of force, to put aside their differences and to engage in a political dialogue aimed at achieving national reconciliation. The Council also calls upon all States to refrain from interfering in the internal affairs of Afghanistan.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the United Nations in Afghanistan, in particular the activities of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan. It calls upon all parties to cooperate with the Special Mission, which will act as a key and impartial facilitator in order to bring about a peaceful solution to the conflict as soon as possible. The Council calls upon all States to take all steps necessary to promote peace in Afghanistan and to work together with the United Nations to this end.

The Council will continue to follow with close attention developments in Afghanistan.

Meeting number. SC 3699.

Communications. On 28 September [S/1996/810], Kazakhstan expressed concern over the recent events in Afghanistan, stating that further armed conflict could lead to destabilization of the region. Kazakhstan called for a Security Council meeting to draw up urgent measures to halt the bloodshed, bring about a political settlement and extend assistance to civilians and refugees. On 8 October [A/51/470-S/1996/838], Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan called for a Security Council meeting with a view to adopting urgent measures to halt the fighting in Afghanistan and achieve a political settlement, as well as to arrange for international humanitarian assistance to the civilian population and refugees. In a joint declaration of 4 October, they warned that war was getting nearer to the borders of Commonwealth of Independent States countries, and any actions that undermined stability on their borders with Afghanistan were inadmissible. They appealed to the parties to the conflict, first of all the Taliban, to call an immediate halt to hostilities.

Afghanistan, on 16 October [A/51/511-S/1996/855], forwarded to the United Nations a statement of the Supreme Military Council for the Defence of Afghanistan, which said that Afghanistan would observe an immediate ceasefire under the following conditions: that Taliban forces evacuate Kabul and their heavy weapons be withdrawn; that Kabul be recognized as a demilitarized zone; that a police force be formed under the supervision of the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC); and that negotiations commence to form an interim Government in Kabul. Afghanistan said it deemed it necessary that the Secretary-General use his good offices to bring appropriate pressure on the Taliban through its supporters in order to secure general agreement on such a ceasefire.

On 9 October [S/1996/842], Afghanistan said that the continued reinforcement of the Taliban from Pakistani territory was taking place at the border, thus escalating tension and lessening the chance of a negotiated settlement under UN auspices. Afghanistan hoped that the United Nations would put under supervision certain border crossings where Taliban supporters were reportedly entering Afghanistan.

Afghanistan again complained on 18 October [A/51/527-S/1996/863] that Pakistan was sending forces to aid the Taliban, and repeated its request that the Security Council send a UN fact-finding mission to Afghanistan to interview captured Pakistani military officials and evaluate other evidence of intervention, including the use by the Taliban of some type of chemical or other internationally banned weapon against Afghanistan.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

The Security Council adopted resolution 1076(1996) on 22 October.

The Security Council,

Having considered the situation in Afghanistan,

Recalling the previous statements of the President of the Security Council on the situation in Afghanistan, including the statements of 15 February 1996 and of 28 September 1996, and the letter dated 22 August 1996 from the President of the Security Council addressed to the Secretary-General,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 50/88 of 19 December 1995,

Noting the joint declaration made on 4 October 1996 by the leaders of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan concerning developments in Afghanistan,

Expressing concern over the continuation and recent intensification of the military confrontation in Afghanistan which have caused civilian casualties and an increase in refugees and displaced persons, and which seriously endanger the stability and peaceful development of the region,

Deeply concerned about the discrimination against women and other abuses of human rights in Afghanistan,

Stressing the need to prevent further civilian casualties, and noting in this context the proposals, inter alia, for an immediate ceasefire, exchange of prisoners of war and the demilitarization of Kabul,

Urging all Afghan parties to resolve their differences through peaceful means and achieve national reconciliation through political dialogue,

Stressing the importance of non-interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan and the prevention of the flow of arms and ammunition to all parties to the conflict in Afghanistan,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan,

Convinced that the United Nations, as a universally recognized and impartial intermediary, must continue to play the central role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict,

Welcoming the willingness expressed by Member States during the Security Council meeting of 16 October 1996 to support the dialogue among all the parties and to facilitate the negotiations aimed at political settlement of the conflict,

1. Calls upon all Afghan parties immediately to cease all armed hostilities, to renounce the use of force, to put aside their differences and to engage in a political dialogue aimed at achieving national reconciliation and a lasting political settlement of the conflict and establishing a fully representative and broad-based transitional government of national unity;

2. Stresses that the main responsibility for finding a political solution to the conflict lies with the Afghan parties;

3. Calls upon all States to refrain from any outside interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan, including the involvement of foreign military personnel, to respect the right of the Afghan people to determine their own destiny and to respect the sovereignty, independence, unity and territorial integrity of Afghanistan;

4. Calls upon all States immediately to end the supply of arms and ammunition to all parties to the conflict in Afghanistan;

5. Reiterates that the continuation of the conflict in Afghanistan provides a fertile ground for terrorism and drug trafficking which destabilize the region and beyond, and calls upon the leaders of the Afghan parties to halt such activities;

6. Expresses its regret at the civilian casualties inflicted by landmines and calls upon all parties in Afghanistan to desist from the indiscriminate use of landmines;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation, as he deems it necessary, with interested States and international organizations, in particular the Organization of the Islamic Conference, to continue his efforts to promote the political process;

8. Reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the United Nations, in particular the activities of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan in facilitating the political process towards the goals of national reconciliation and a lasting political settlement with the participation of all parties to the conflict and all segments of Afghan society;

9. Calls upon all Afghan parties to cooperate with the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, and encourages all interested States and international organizations to take all steps necessary to promote peace in Afghanistan, to support the United Nations efforts to this end and to use any influence they have to encourage the parties to cooperate fully with the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan;

10. Demands that all parties fulfil their obligations and commitments regarding the safety of United Nations personnel and other international personnel as well as their premises in Afghanistan, not hamper the flow of humanitarian assistance and cooperate fully with the United Nations and associated bodies as well as with other humanitarian organizations and agencies, in their efforts to respond to the humanitarian needs of the people of Afghanistan;

11. Denounces the discrimination against girls and women and other violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Afghanistan, and notes with deep concern possible repercussions on international relief and reconstruction programmes in Afghanistan;

12. Calls upon all States and international organizations to extend all possible humanitarian assistance to the civilian population of Afghanistan;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Security Council regularly informed on the basis of information received from the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan on the political, military and humanitarian situation, and to make recommendations on achieving a political settlement;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 30 November 1996;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1076(1996)

22 October 1996 Meeting 3706 Adopted unanimously

10-nation draft (S/1996/865).

Sponsors: France, Germany, Italy, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Tajikistan, United States, Uzbekistan.

Meeting numbers. 3705, 3706.

Communications. Uzbekistan, in a statement on 23 October [S/1996/877], declared its support for resolution 1076(1996). The further escalation of military hostilities in Afghanistan might have unpredictable consequences and threaten the security of all countries located in the region and all over the world, it said. Among other things, Uzbekistan favoured resolution of the problem exclusively through political means, by way of a peaceful dialogue with the participation of all political, regional, religious and ethnic groups.

Ireland transmitted a statement [A/51/635-S/1996/894] issued by the Presidency of the European Union (EU) on 28 October, expressing concern at the intensification of armed hostilities in Afghanistan and urging all parties to seek a settlement through negotiation. Calling on the parties to cooperate with the UN Special Mission, the EU urged all States to refrain from interfering in the internal affairs of Afghanistan; in particular, it said, the flow of arms from outside its borders must end. As a leading contributor of humanitarian aid, the EU was concerned about the possible repercussion of human rights violations on the beneficiaries of EU relief programmes in Afghanistan, and it looked forward to a dialogue with all the parties to ensure delivery of such aid.

Iran, by a 30 October letter [A/51/634-S/1996/890], forwarded a statement known as the Tehran Declaration, adopted at a Regional Conference on Afghanistan (29-30 October) in Tehran, and attended by representatives of China, India, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan, Turkey and Turkmenistan. Those countries underlined their support for the United Nations and its Special Mission to Afghanistan, as well as for OIC. They supported the decision of the Secretary-General to convene an international conference of States with interest and influence in Afghanistan, with the aim of finding a political settlement. The Conference decided to take appropriate follow-up measures at the regional level within the UN framework, to pursue ways to bring about a cessation of hostilities.

On 4 November [A/51/654-S/1996/909], Afghanistan said that the lack of involvement on the part of the United Nations investigating Pakistani intervention had been justified by some UN authorities by what they described as a lack of hard evidence, despite mounting evidence to the contrary. Afghanistan noted, however, that in resolution 1076(1996) of 22 October, the Council for the first time referred to the "involvement of foreign military personnel". Afghanistan requested that the United Nations verify the presence of Pakistani military personnel in its territory, which it said constituted a major element behind the continuation of the conflict. In addition to the systematic violation of human rights by the Taliban, especially women's rights, many of its leaders had rejected the principles of democracy, including free elections, Afghanistan stated.

Kyrgyzstan, in a letter of 12 November [A/51/676-S/1996/937], reiterated its support for a political settlement and offered its capital, Bishkek, as the venue for an international conference on Afghanistan under UN auspices, proposing that it be held at ministerial level, with the participation of Security Council members and those countries which were interested in and had influence in Afghanistan, and possibly the parties to the conflict.

The Secretary-General informed the Security Council President on 20 November [S/1996/966] of his follow-up action to resolution 1076(1996). He said he had invited a group of 19 interested Member States, together with OIC, to a meeting of consultation in New York on 18 November to brief them on UN political, humanitarian and developmental efforts in Afghanistan, and on what they could do to support those efforts, particularly in regard to a ceasefire and the initiation of a political process towards a negotiated settlement. Those invited were China, Egypt, France, Germany, India, Iran, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Tajikistan, Turkey, Turkmenistan, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uzbekistan.

There was a consensus that there was no military solution to the conflict in Afghanistan, but a need for an immediate ceasefire, including the demilitarization of Kabul. The participants expressed readiness to join in coordinated international efforts to help the Afghan parties achieve a political settlement. The situation, in their view, was intolerable in terms of suffering and the threats that it presented in terms of regional destabilization, of drugs, of terrorism and of illegal arms flows. All participants confirmed that the United Nations had a central role to play in helping the Afghan parties define a peace process. The Secretary-General found the meeting to be a useful first gathering of a group of countries well placed to support his efforts to carry out UN mandates regarding Afghanistan.

In a similar letter of 20 November [A/51/689] to the General Assembly President, the Secretary-General, referring to a 1995 Assembly request that he pursue national reconciliation in Afghanistan [YUN 1995, p. 471], reported on the 18 November meeting.

On 17 December, the Security Council President responded [S/1996/1051] that members welcomed the Secretary-General's initiative to convene the 18 November meeting and his intention to convene further informal meetings of that group from time to time, as well as the participants' support for the role of the United Nations in promoting the peace process. The Council members remained concerned at the ongoing civil war and reports of acts of discrimination against women, as well as obstacles created to activities of the United Nations and humanitarian agencies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/195 B.

The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/140 of 20 December 1994 and 50/88 B of 19 December 1995,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1076(1996) of 22 October 1996, the previous statements of the President of the Security Council on the situation in Afghanistan, including the statements of 15 February and 28 September 1996, and the letter dated 22 August 1996 from the President of the Security Council addressed to the Secretary-General,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 26 November 1996 and of his letters dated 20 November 1996 addressed to the President of the General Assembly and the President of the Security Council,

Noting all recent declarations by participants of regional international meetings and by international organizations on the situation in Afghanistan, including the statement by the Organization of the Islamic Conference ministerial meeting of 2 October 1996, the joint declaration made on 4 October 1996 by the leaders of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan, the statement issued on 28 October 1996 by the Presidency on behalf of the European Union and the Tehran Declaration of 30 October 1996,

Welcoming the initiative of the Secretary-General to convene the international meeting on Afghanistan on 18 November 1996 in New York and his intention to convene further meetings of the group from time to time,

Wishing the people of Afghanistan peace and prosperity,

Strongly committed to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan,

Expressing concern at the continuation and recent intensification of the military confrontation in Afghanistan, which have caused civilian casualties and an increase in refugees and displaced persons, and which seriously endanger the stability and peaceful development of the region,

Deeply concerned about the discrimination against women and girls and other recurring abuses of human rights in Afghanistan, and emphasizing the importance of democracy and of the realization of human rights in any future political process in Afghanistan,

Deeply concerned also about the lack of progress in reaching an agreement on the establishment of an acceptable and broadly representative council and an immediate and durable ceasefire and urging all Afghan parties to resolve their differences through peaceful means and achieve national reconciliation through political dialogue,

Affirming the readiness of the United Nations to assist the people of Afghanistan in their effort to resolve internal political differences, facilitating national reconciliation leading to the restoration of a fully representative, broad-based transitional government of national unity and to the start of the process of rehabilitation and reconstruction in their country,

Convinced that the United Nations, as a universally recognized intermediary, must continue to play a central and impartial role in international efforts towards a peaceful resolution of the Afghan conflict,

Expressing its support for the continuing efforts of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan headed by Mr. Norbert Holl to bring about the restoration of peace, normalcy and national reconciliation, through a political process in which all segments of Afghan society are represented,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of the Organization of the Islamic Conference in support of the Special Mission and the engagement of that organization in Afghanistan, in coordination with the United Nations, with a view to achieving a just and lasting political settlement,

Stressing the need to prevent further civilian casualties,

Stressing also the importance of non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan,

Deeply concerned at the continued supply of weapons, military equipment and ammunition to the Afghan parties, which has further contributed to the deaths of innocent civilians and the destruction of cities, villages and homes and has encouraged the factions in their futile efforts to settle political differences by military means,

Expressing its mounting concern about actions undermining the security of State frontiers, including the growing illicit traffic in arms and narcotics by criminal elements and groups from certain areas of Afghanistan and about the use of Afghan territory for the training and harbouring of terrorists, which create a threat to peace and stability in the entire region, including Afghanistan,

Bearing in mind that Afghanistan, as a State party to the Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage of 16 November 1972, has recognized its primary duty to ensure the identification, protection, conservation, presentation and transmission to future generations of, inter alia, the cultural heritage situated on its territory,

Bearing in mind also the close interrelationship between ensuring peace and normalcy in Afghanistan and the ability of the country to take effective steps towards revitalizing the economy, and stressing that a cessation of armed hostilities between the warring parties in Afghanistan and political stability are indispensable if reconstruction measures are to have a lasting effect,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and endorses the observations and recommendations set out therein;

2. Stresses that the main responsibility for finding a political solution to the conflict lies with the Afghan parties;

3. Calls upon all Afghan parties to cease immediately all armed hostilities, to renounce the use of force, to put aside their differences and to engage in a political dialogue aimed at achieving national reconciliation and a lasting political settlement of the conflict and establishing a fully representative and broad-based transitional government of national unity;

4. Supports the Secretary-General in his continuing efforts, undertaken in cooperation with the Afghan parties and with interested States and international organizations, in particular the Organization of the Islamic Conference, to promote the political process aimed at achieving national reconciliation in Afghanistan;

5. Reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the United Nations, in particular the activities of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, in facilitating, where appropriate in cooperation with interested States and international organizations, the political process towards the goals of national reconciliation and a lasting political settlement with the participation of all parties to the conflict and all segments of Afghan society;

6. Calls upon all Afghan parties to cooperate with the United Nations Special Mission, and encourages all interested States and international organizations to take all steps necessary, in close coordination with the United Nations Special Mission, to promote peace in Afghanistan, to support the United Nations efforts to this end and to use any influence they have to encourage the parties to cooperate fully with the United Nations Special Mission;

7. Demands that all Afghan parties fulfil their obligations and honour their commitments regarding the safety and full freedom of movement of United Nations personnel, in particular the personnel of the United Nations Special Mission, as well as the security of their premises in Afghanistan;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to authorize the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, established under resolution 48/208, to continue its efforts to facilitate national reconciliation and reconstruction in Afghanistan, specifically to mediate an end to the conflict and to facilitate the implementation of a comprehensive peaceful settlement, to be agreed upon by the Afghan parties, which could include, inter alia, the following elements:

- An immediate and durable ceasefire among the Afghan parties, to be supervised by a commission composed of representatives of all the warring parties, facilitated by the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;
- The demilitarization of Kabul, with adequate safeguards to ensure security and public order;
- The establishment of a broad-based and fully representative authoritative council, with authority, inter alia:

To create and control a national security force to provide for security throughout the country and oversee the demobilization of all the warring parties through the collection and safeguarding of all heavy weapons in the country, and to stop the flow of arms and of equipment related to arms production to the parties;

To form a fully representative and broad-based transitional government which would, inter alia, control the national security force and create conditions for free and fair elections leading to a representative national government, possibly utilizing traditional decision-making structures, such as a grand assembly, to help to establish those conditions throughout the country;

9. Expresses its support for the proposal by the Secretary-General to further strengthen the United Nations Special Mission by increasing the number of its military advisers from the current two to five and also by assigning to it two civilian police advisers;

10. Reiterates its call upon all Afghans, especially the leaders of warring parties, to cooperate fully with the broad-based authoritative council, priority being given to the implementation of the steps referred to in paragraph 8 above;

11. Deplores the civilian casualties inflicted by the indiscriminate use of landmines, and calls upon all Afghan parties to desist from such use;

12. Denounces the discrimination against girls and women and other violations of human rights in Afghanistan, and calls upon all Afghan parties to respect the human rights of every individual, regardless of gender, ethnicity or religion;

13. Denounces also violations of international humanitarian law in Afghanistan, and urgently calls upon all parties strictly to respect all its provisions;

14. Calls upon all Afghan parties to take appropriate steps to prohibit, prevent and, if necessary, put a stop to any form of theft, pillage or misappropriation of and any acts of vandalism directed against, cultural property of the Afghan nation;

15. Calls upon all States strictly to refrain from any outside interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan, including the involvement of foreign military personnel, to respect the right of the Afghan people to determine their own destiny and to respect the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan;

16. Also calls upon all States immediately to end the supply of arms, ammunition, military equipment, training or any other military support to all parties to the conflict in Afghanistan;

17. Reiterates that the continuation of the conflict in Afghanistan provides a fertile ground for terrorism and drug-trafficking which destabilize the region and beyond, and calls upon the leaders of the Afghan parties to halt such activities;

18. Supports the intention of the Secretary-General to move the headquarters of the United Nations Special Mission to Kabul when conditions permit;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly every three months during its fifty-first session on the progress of the United Nations Special Mission and to report to the Assembly at its fifty-second session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security".

Further communication. On 24 December [A/51/766-S/1996/1072], Iran forwarded to the Secretary-General the text of an Iranian-Russian statement on Afghanistan adopted in Tehran on 23 December at a meeting of the two Foreign Ministers. By that text, the Ministers expressed concern that, as a result of the military action in Afghanistan, the civilian population was suffering and the number of refugees was rising. They condemned what they described as serious violations of human rights, persecution on political and ethnic grounds and violation of the norms of international law, including actions that prevented the normal conduct of UN activities. They warned that further internal conflict could endanger stability in the region, and called for a ceasefire and a halt to outside interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan. They added that they would continue to exchange views on issues relating to the settlement of the inter-Afghan conflict and were willing to cooperate actively with the United Nations, OIC and interested States with a view to adopting urgent measures to halt hostile action in Afghanistan and bring about a political settlement.

Tajikistan

United Nations efforts in 1996 proceeded with regard to the ongoing inter-Tajik negotiations, begun under UN auspices in Ashgabat, Turkmenistan, on 30 November 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 503]. A series of consultations was held with the parties to the conflict, the Tajik Government and the United Tajik Opposition (UTO). For most of the year, little progress was made and fighting continued sporadically, with the opposition gaining some ground. Tajikistan claimed that Afghanistan was aiding the opposition forces, and the situation along the Afghan-Tajik border became tense. Despite a ceasefire agreement signed in mid-July, fighting continued. In early December, the Secretary-General reported that negotiations were at a standstill and fighting was ongoing. However, at the end of the year, the two sides were able to reach an agreement on a ceasefire and they established a Commission on National Reconciliation, which was to function during a transition period until a new parliament was established and authorities appointed. Its responsibilities included monitoring the ceasefire agreement, ensuring the return of refugees, developing proposals for amendments to the existing Constitution, preparing new election laws for Parliament and local bodies, and reforming the structure of the Government. By the agreement, signed on 23 December, the two sides pledged to meet again in Tehran, Iran, on 5 January 1997, to determine the composition of the Commission and its specific functions and powers.

The United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT), established in 1994 [SC res. 968(1994)], continued to assist the Joint Commission of the Tajik parties in investigating violations of the Agreement on a Temporary Ceasefire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and within the Country for the Duration of the Talks (the Tehran Agreement) of 17 September 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 594]. The Mission maintained liaison with the Collective Peacekeeping Forces (CPF) of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), which were also present in Tajikistan, and with the office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE).

During the year, the Secretary-General submitted four reports on the situation in Tajikistan, and the Security Council, on two occasions, renewed the UNMOT mandate, the second time for a three-month period, until 15 March 1997.

Communications (January-March). The Foreign Ministers of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan met on 19 January and issued a joint statement on Tajikistan, which they forwarded to the Secretary-General on 1 February [S/1996/77]. Affirming their conviction that a settlement of the conflict in Tajikistan could be achieved only by political means, they expressed their readiness to work towards sustaining the inter-Tajik negotiating process under UN auspices. They stated that the first stage of the fifth round of inter-Tajik talks on national reconciliation, held at the end of 1995 in Ashgabat [YUN 1995, p. 505], was not promising, but they expected the negotiators to begin the second stage of the round in the near future in an effort to find a formula for national reconciliation and to create a mechanism for establishing peace. For successful advancement of the negotiating process, they believed there was one essential prerequisite—compliance with the Tehran Agreement.

The Ministers expressed concern at the continuing tension on the Tajik-Afghan border as a result of further shelling and attacks on frontier positions. In that context, they noted the important role played by the Russian frontier forces and the Kazak and Kyrgyz units in ensuring that the border was protected. They also recognized that the presence in Tajikistan of CPF remained a vital factor in curbing the conflict and stabilizing the situation; in that light, the CIS decision to extend the Forces' stay until 30 June 1996 assumed great importance. The Ministers urged the Tajik opposition to recognize the existing Government of Tajikistan, to abstain from military action and terrorist acts and to pursue political dialogue. They welcomed the 14 December 1995 decision by the Security Council [SC res. 1030(1995)] to extend the mandate of UNMOT and pledged to do all possible, in cooperation with the Secretary-General and States attending the inter-Tajik talks as observers, to facilitate reconciliation and to promote the inter-Tajik dialogue.

In an 8 February statement [S/1996/95], Tajikistan said that, despite its efforts to resolve the issues of the inter-Tajik conflict, the continuation of the uninterrupted round of inter-Tajik talks in Ashgabat, and the Government's observance of the Tehran Agreement, the situation in the Pamir regions of Tajikistan remained tense as a result of the opposition's illegal actions. Opposition guerrillas had increased military activity, were violating the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War and had occupied a number of inhabited locations. Tajikistan warned that it would take appropriate measures to ensure stabilization of the situation.

Similar claims were again made by Tajikistan in a 12 February statement [S/1996/105]. It charged that the opposition continued to perpetrate acts of terrorism and sabotage against both the military and civilians. Meanwhile, the Government was observing the ceasefire and was putting forward new proposals at the negotiations. Tajikistan called on the international community to condemn the terrorist acts of the opposition.

On 23 February [S/1996/129], Tajikistan forwarded to the Security Council the text of the Ashgabat Declaration adopted during the second phase of the inter-Tajik negotiations, held under UN auspices from 26 January to 19 February. At those talks, the delegations of Tajikistan and UTO discussed the political problems identified in the Protocol on the fundamental principles for establishing peace and national accord in Tajikistan of 17 August 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 502], and the proposals put forward by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General. Those talks would be continued. Tajikistan called for the holding of a special session of the Majlis-i Olii (Parliament), with the participation of the UTO leadership, the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General and representatives of the States and organizations acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks. In addition, Tajikistan pledged to guarantee the security of the UTO delegation.

During the review of political problems, the two parties discussed the convening of a consultative forum of the peoples of Tajikistan and prepared the text of an agreement on the subject which would be opened for signature after agreement was reached on when the forum would be held—before or after the signature of the General Agreement on Peace and National Accord. The issue of the establishment of a National Reconciliation Council was also discussed.

The parties expressed readiness to extend the temporary ceasefire but no definite solution was found. They agreed to renew talks in Ashgabat.

By a 13 March letter [S/1996/187], Tajikistan transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a 9 March Agreement on social accord in Tajikistan, which was intended to lay the basis for the socio-political and national solidarity of the Tajik and other peoples in building an open, free and pluralistic society. It was based on the principles of observance of the Constitution, peaceful methods for achieving political objectives, diversity of views, the multi-party system, and equality of rights of the parties to the Agreement. Concluded by the President of Tajikistan, the Chairman of the Majlis-i Olii and the leaders of political parties, social associations, unions of creative professionals, religious organizations and cultural societies, the Agreement outlined the Government's responsibility to adopt legislation aimed at democratization of public life and protection of human rights; to create equal opportunities for the activities of socio-political bodies, cultural societies and religious organizations; to promote unity of State structures at all levels on the basis of a personnel policy excluding local and regional bias; to guarantee equal access to the mass media; and to pursue a policy aimed at stabilizing the economy and raising the living standard of the population.

The progress of inter-Tajik talks on national reconciliation was the subject of an 11 March resolution adopted by the Majlis-i Olii and transmitted on 14 March [S/1996/193] by Tajikistan to the Secretary-General. Affirming that the talks, which had begun nearly two years earlier with the mediation of the United Nations, had been an important step towards the settlement of major political problems, the Parliament supported the position adopted at the talks by the governmental delegation on convening a consultative forum of the people of Tajikistan in accordance with the August 1995 Protocol. It requested the Government to establish a group of consultants to provide the delegation with specialized advisory services; to continue radio and television broadcasts on the topic of national reconciliation; to submit a proposal on taking a census of the population; and to submit to the United Nations a proposal on monitoring posts and joint observation committees in the regions of Afghanistan situated on the Tajik border in which armed groups of the Tajik opposition were concentrated.

Report of Secretary-General (March). On 22 March [S/1996/212], the Secretary-General, as requested by the Security Council in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 504], reported on the situation in Tajikistan, including progress towards a political settlement of the conflict and UNMOT operations. The continuous inter-Tajik negotiations under UN auspices had begun in Ashgabat on 30 November 1995, but were overshadowed by fighting which persisted until mid-December, when the situation gradually began to calm down. The Government presented a proposal for establishing a consultative forum of the peoples of Tajikistan, to be convened in Dushanbe in May/June 1996 on the basis of equal representation by the Government and the opposition. It would consider the improvement of political, economic and social reforms and would have consultative status; its recommendations would be adopted by consensus. The opposition delegation rejected the concept of the consultative forum, asserting that the Dushanbe meeting was proposed as a means to avoid consideration of major political issues.

The UTO delegation presented proposals on political and military issues, as well as guarantees for the implementation of a general peace agreement. It suggested establishing a Council of National Reconciliation for a transitional period of up to two years. The Council would consist of 25 representatives from each of the two sides and 10 representatives of ethnic minorities. It would replace the Majlis-i Olii, which would be disbanded. The current President would continue his functions and, together with the Council, would form a new Government. The Council would prepare new parliamentary elections and would cease to exist once the new parliament was elected, and new presidential elections would be held six months later. Those proposals were rejected by the Government as unconstitutional and as having the potential to destabilize the country.

On 22 December 1995, the delegation of the opposition presented its own proposals on the establishment of a consultative forum of the Tajik peoples; however, they were not accepted by the other side. That was the first time that the two sides discussed the central political issues, including power-sharing, but they were unable to reach agreement.

At the end of 1995, the delegation of the opposition unexpectedly declared that it would not renew the talks unless the CIS heads of State, at their meeting in January 1996, defined their position with regard to a political settlement in Tajikistan, and supported that position with concrete acts. That condition created a serious obstacle to the resumption of inter-Tajik talks, but with concerted efforts by the Secretary-General's Special Envoy and interested Governments, particularly Turkmenistan, the talks resumed on 26 January.

The beginning of the second phase, which lasted from 26 January to 18 February, was adversely affected by violence and instability in Tajikistan. Armed insurrections occurred in several locations. The insurgents made a number of demands, including the replacement of senior government officials, the partition of Khatlon province and an amnesty for themselves. The Government met some of the demands, including the replacement of some officials and the amnesty. As that crisis was calming down, fighting resumed in the Tavildara sector on 29 January. The opposition inflicted heavy losses on the governmental forces and took a large number of prisoners.

During the second phase of the Ashgabat talks, the Government proposed holding a special session of Parliament to consider the inter-Tajik negotiations, modalities of integration of opposition representatives into the Government, and ways to integrate opposition military units into the Government's forces. In addition, the Government accepted the opposition's proposals of 22 December on the establishment of a consultative forum of the Tajik peoples, and a draft agreement on the forum was drawn up. However, the two sides disagreed on the timing of its convening. The Government suggested it could meet periodically, before and after the signing of the general peace agreement, while the opposition, changing its position, said that the forum should be convened only after the signing of the general peace agreement and after the establishment of the council of national reconciliation. Nevertheless, the two sides agreed that the draft agreement would remain open for signature after the timing problem was resolved and that the proceedings of the Parliament's special session should be fully publicized in the mass media.

The Secretary-General's Special Envoy, Ramiro Príz-Ballón (Uruguay), presented compromise proposals on the political and military issues. The Government accepted the proposals as the basis for further negotiations, the opposition accepted some (but not those on power-sharing), and they agreed to renew the talks in Ashgabat.

As the United Nations and others, notably Iran and the Russian Federation, pursued efforts towards a ceasefire, a serious event occurred in Dushanbe on 24 February, when the opposition co-chairman of the Joint Commission, Zafar Rakhmonov, was reported to have been kidnapped. As of 22 March, his fate was still unknown. The other four opposition members of the Joint Commission in Dushanbe left Tajikistan for safety reasons. The Presidium of the Parliament decided on 28 February to hold a special session of Parliament on 11 March, in accordance with the Ashgabat Declaration, and requested the United Nations to facilitate the participation of the opposition leaders in the session. In a 5 March letter to UNMOT, the Tajikistan Foreign Ministry reconfirmed guarantees for the security and immunity of the opposition delegation.

The Secretary-General sent his Special Adviser, Ismat Kittani, to the area, and, as a result of talks, the Tajik opposition agreed to extend the ceasefire agreement for another three months until 26 May. However, the Tajik opposition decided not to participate in the special session of the Parliament, citing security concerns.

At its special session on 11 March, the Tajik Parliament considered the inter-Tajik negotiations and problems related to national reconciliation. Most speakers expressed support for continuing negotiations and regret over the absence of the opposition leaders. The proceedings were broadcast over national radio and television.

The Secretary-General commented that the renewal of inter-Tajik negotiations in Ashgabat had raised hopes for progress towards a peace agreement, but, in reality, little progress had been achieved.

The Secretary-General also expressed concern about the deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Tajikistan, particularly in the areas affected by the military confrontation. Over 600,000 people were in need of food assistance. Continued donor support was required to respond to the emergency.

UNMOT activities (January-March). In early 1996, UNMOT's activities were largely determined by the political and military situation, the Secretary-General stated in his March report [S/1996/212]. It carried out 19 investigations, 4 of which were conducted with the Joint Commission and 15 independently.

During periods of high tension in February and March, UNMOT observers were harassed and their movement restricted by government personnel.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 29 March, the President of the Security Council issued the following statement [S/PRST/1996/14] on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Tajikistan of 22 March 1996.

The Security Council regrets that insufficient progress has been achieved during the continual round of the inter-Tajik talks in Ashgabat towards the solution of fundamental political and institutional issues. It calls upon the Tajik parties to accelerate substantially their efforts to reach agreement on the basis of the Protocol on the fundamental principles for establishing peace and national accord in Tajikistan of 17 August 1995. It urges them to negotiate constructively and in good faith and to search for solutions on the basis of mutual concessions and compromises.

The Security Council is deeply concerned about the violations of the Tehran ceasefire agreement of 17 September 1994, and in particular about the ongoing fighting in the Tavildara region. It appeals to the Tajik parties to comply strictly with all their obligations undertaken under this agreement. It reminds them that the mandate of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) is subject to the proviso that the Tehran ceasefire agreement remains in force and the parties continue to be committed to an effective ceasefire, to national reconciliation and to the promotion of democracy. The Council notes with concern that the ongoing military operations and other violations of the ceasefire create doubt regarding the parties' commitment to an effective ceasefire.

The Security Council acknowledges the extension of the ceasefire by the parties for a further three months until 26 May 1996. It is concerned, however, that the ceasefire has only been extended for this short period. The Council fully supports the appeal by the Secretary-General to the Tajik opposition contained in his report to agree to the extension of the ceasefire agreement for the duration of the inter-Tajik talks.

The Security Council reiterates the importance of direct political dialogue between the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan (IRMT) for the peace process and encourages them to hold the next meeting as soon as possible.

The Security Council welcomes the position of the Majlis-i Olii (Parliament) of Tajikistan which at its special session on 11-12 March 1996 expressed its strong support for the efforts to achieve national reconciliation and for the search for compromise at the inter-Tajik talks held under the auspices of the United Nations. It regrets that the leaders of the IRMT declined to participate in the special session of the Majlis-i Olii.

The Security Council expresses its deep concern over the kidnapping on 24 February 1996 of the opposition co-chair of the Joint Commission and calls on the Tajik Government to intensify its investigation into this incident. The Council joins the Secretary-General in calling on the Government to provide the necessary security guarantees to allow the Joint Commission to function safely and effectively.

The Security Council expresses its hope that the Agreement on social accord in Tajikistan signed on 9 March 1996 in Dushanbe by the leaders of Tajikistan and of political parties, social movements and ethnic communities will contribute to national reconciliation.

The Security Council expresses its serious concern at the deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Tajikistan. It calls upon Member States and others concerned to respond promptly in support of the humanitarian relief efforts of the United Nations and other international organizations.

The Security Council welcomes the positive role played by UNMOT under difficult circumstances. The Council expresses deep concern over recent incidents in which UNMOT personnel were harassed and threatened and reiterates its call to the parties to cooperate fully with UNMOT and to ensure the safety and freedom of movement of the personnel of the United Nations and other international organizations.

The Security Council is concerned about delays in the establishment of a liaison post of UNMOT at Taloqan (northern Afghanistan) and encourages the relevant Afghan authorities to facilitate its opening.

The Security Council welcomes the creation of the office of an independent ombudsman for human rights in Tajikistan with the help of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and expresses the hope that his activities will contribute to a lessening of tensions.

The Security Council commends the tireless efforts of the Secretary-General's former Special Envoy in Tajikistan Mr. Pérez-Ballón. It understands that his successor will be appointed promptly and expresses the hope that the new Special Envoy will begin without delay the preparation of the next phase of the continual round of the inter-Tajik talks which should be convened as soon as possible.

Special Representative of Secretary-General.

The Secretary-General, on 26 April [S/1996/326] informed the Security Council members of his decision to appoint Gerd Merrem (Germany), Deputy Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, as his Special Representative for Tajikistan, following the resignation of Mr. Píriz-Ballón, who was taking up a position in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Uruguay. The Special Representative would be based in Dushanbe, where he would perform the functions of Head of UNMOT and provide good offices in the inter-Tajik political dialogue.

On 2 May [S/1996/327], the Security Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council members welcomed his decision.

Communication (May). By a 14 May letter [S/1996/354] to the Security Council President, the President of Tajikistan, Emomali Rakhmonov, drew attention to the increasing deterioration in the social and political situation in certain regions of his country as a result of what he described as the reluctance of the opposition forces to settle outstanding questions by peaceful means, particularly through the inter-Tajik talks being held under UN auspices. An armed wing of the opposition had begun to wage military operations against the government forces in the Tavildara region, presumably with the consent of the leaders of the Tajik opposition, he said, adding that those activities were contrary to the terms of the Tehran Agreement on a temporary ceasefire. The Government accepted the UNMOT appeal for an immediate ceasefire and hoped that the opposition would respond similarly.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 21 May, the President of the Security Council made the following statement [S/PRST/1996/25] on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council condemns the recent violations of the Tehran ceasefire agreement of 17 September 1994, in particular the planned and organized offensive by the armed Tajik opposition in the Tavildara region. It strongly deplores the loss of life of civilians and of members of the Commonwealth of Independent States Collective Peacekeeping Forces as a result of acts of violence. It affirms that such acts are totally unacceptable.

The Security Council expresses its grave concern that all such actions further aggravate the already serious humanitarian situation in Tajikistan. It demands the immediate cessation of the offensive actions and acts of violence.

The Security Council reaffirms its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Tajikistan and to the inviolability of its borders.

The Security Council emphasizes its support for the extension of the ceasefire agreement for the whole duration of the inter-Tajik talks, and notes that the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan (IRMT) has agreed to extend the ceasefire, albeit only for a further three months. It calls upon the parties to demonstrate their commitment to peace by strict compliance with the ceasefire and other obligations which they have assumed, as well as with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council. It also reminds the parties that the mandate of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) is subject to the proviso that the ceasefire agreement remains in force and that the parties continue to be committed to an effective ceasefire, to national reconciliation and to the promotion of democracy.

The Security Council commends the personnel of UNMOT for their contribution under difficult circumstances. It expresses its concern at the restrictions placed upon UNMOT by the parties and calls upon them, in particular the Government of Tajikistan, to ensure the safety and freedom of movement of the personnel of the United Nations and other international organizations.

The Security Council calls upon both parties to resolve their differences over the functioning of the Joint Commission, including the issue of security guarantees for Commission members, and to recommence the operations of the Commission as soon as possible.

The Security Council is concerned that the worsening humanitarian situation makes it all the more urgent to obtain the required resources and calls upon Member States and others concerned to respond promptly in support of the humanitarian relief efforts of the United Nations and other international organizations.

The Security Council invites the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to continue their efforts aimed at the earliest possible resumption of the inter-Tajik talks and calls upon the countries and regional organizations acting as observers at those talks to render all possible support to those efforts.

Meeting number SC 3665.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In his second report [S/1996/412] in 1996 on the situation in Tajikistan, the Secretary-General said that the situation had been very tense, with the most serious developments taking place in the Tavildara sector. In March and April, the Government took advantage of a static period in that sector to reinforce its troops and imposed severe restrictions on UNMOT movements during the entire time. UNMOT was also unable to observe the activities of the opposition on its side of the confrontation line.

Fighting had escalated in early May. The opposition launched an offensive, and by 11 May, had occupied a ridge overlooking Tavildara and started shelling the town. UNMOT was withdrawn, and the following day, the opposition took Tavildara. After the fall of Tavildara, the Government continued to reinforce its forces in the surrounding area but they were under constant harassment from opposition fighters.

On 2 June, government forces began a counter-offensive at Tavildara, but little information was available at reporting time as UNMOT observers had no access to the area and neither side had provided details. In the rest of the country the situation was relatively calm, although the Russian border forces reported sporadic attacks by the opposition against border posts in the Moskovskiy district.

As for the negotiating process, it had come to a stalemate as a consequence of the renewed fighting. The new Special Representative for Tajikistan, Mr. Merrem, undertook his first mission to the area from 7 to 20 May. In addition to Tajik leaders, he met with the Foreign Ministers of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan and with the Deputy Foreign Minister of Iran. The Special Representative reported that the ceasefire had been extended for another three months, until 26 August, without conditions. President Rakhmonov reiterated that his Government would favour the extension of the ceasefire agreement for the entire duration of the inter-Tajik negotiations, while UTO agreed to extend it for three months and issued a declaration to that effect, signed by its leader, Sayed Abdullo Nuri.

In his talks with the Special Representative, President Rakhmonov singled out one issue, the establishment of a consultative forum of the Tajik peoples, which he said had to be discussed as a priority issue during the resumed inter-Tajik talks.

The UTO leader, Mr. Nuri, suggested that the inter-Tajik talks be resumed as soon as possible. He reiterated a proposal to establish a Council of National Reconciliation as the only solution to the Tajik problem.

The Secretary-General expressed concern at the deterioration of the situation in Tajikistan, which was at its worst and most volatile since the end of the civil war of 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 394]. Large-scale fighting in the Tavildara region had resulted in many human losses, the interruption of communication between the capital and a large part of the country, and an aggravation of the humanitarian situation. UNMOT reported continued fighting, raising serious questions about the sincerity of the Tajik parties, both of which had declared that the conflict could not be resolved by military means and that they were willing to resume the inter-Tajik negotiations. Therefore, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend the mandate of UNMOT for another six months. If at the end of that period prospects for progress had not improved, he would recommend that the Council review the UN commitment in that theatre. The first priority remained the restoration of the ceasefire.

The Joint Commission did not function during the reporting period because of the absence of the opposition members, and the Government took no steps towards guaranteeing their security, which was a condition for their return. UNMOT carried out investigations of possible ceasefire violations and communicated the results to the parties. Its activities were severely impeded by restrictions on its movements.

UNMOT maintained contact with the Russian border forces and the CIS peacekeeping forces, both at headquarters and in the field, and cooperated with the OSCE Mission. At the beginning of June, UNMOT had a strength of 94, including 44 military observers from nine countries and 50 civilian staff, of whom 18 were recruited internationally. In addition to its headquarters in Dushanbe, UNMOT maintained eight teams throughout the country.

During the reporting period and throughout the year, UN bodies were represented in Tajikistan—the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the World Food Programme (WFP), the World Health Organization (WHO), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank. In early 1996, UNICEF and WFP launched appeals to address the crisis in the food, health and education sectors, and provided food, agricultural items, clothing, shelter, educational materials, medicines and expert services. UNHCR continued to provide assistance in connection with legislation and due process associated with internally displaced persons and refugees. (For further details on humanitarian assistance to Tajikistan, see PART THREE, Chapter III).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 14 June, the Security Council adopted resolution 1061(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions and the statements of its President,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 7 June 1996,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Tajikistan and to the inviolability of its borders,

Expressing its grave concern at the serious deterioration of the situation in Tajikistan and stressing the urgent need for the Tajik parties to adhere sincerely and in good faith to the commitments they have made,

Recalling the commitments made by the parties to resolve the conflict and to achieve national reconciliation in the country exclusively through peaceful, political means on the basis of mutual concessions and compromises and stressing the inadmissibility of any hostile acts in Tajikistan and on the Tajik-Afghan border,

Stressing the need for an early resumption of talks between the Government of Tajikistan and the United Tajik Opposition (UTO), expressing its hope that substantive progress will be achieved as soon as possible towards a political settlement of the conflict and encouraging the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative in this direction,

Emphasizing that the primary responsibility rests with the Tajik parties themselves in resolving their differences, and that the international assistance provided by this resolution must be linked to the process of national reconciliation and the promotion of democracy,

Expressing its satisfaction at the regular contacts between the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) and the Collective Peacekeeping Forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States, the Russian border forces and the Mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in Tajikistan,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the report of the Secretary-General of 7 June 1996;

2. Calls upon the parties immediately to cease hostilities and to comply fully with the Tehran Agreement and all the other obligations they have assumed, and strongly urges them to extend the ceasefire for the whole duration of the inter-Tajik talks;

3. Decides to extend the mandate of UNMOT until 15 December 1996 subject to the proviso that the Tehran Agreement remains in force and the parties demonstrate their commitment to an effective ceasefire, to national reconciliation and to the promotion of democracy and further decides that this mandate will remain in effect unless the Secretary-General reports to the Council that these conditions have not been met;

4. Expresses its intention to review the future of the United Nations commitment in Tajikistan should the prospects for the peace process not have improved during the mandate period;

5. Calls upon the parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General's Special Representative and to resume the round of inter-Tajik talks without delay in order to achieve a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, with the assistance of the countries and regional organizations acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks;

6. Calls upon the parties to cooperate fully with UNMOT and to ensure the safety of the personnel of the United Nations and other international organizations, and also calls on them, in particular the Government of Tajikistan, to lift all restrictions on the freedom of movement of UNMOT personnel;

7. Calls also upon the parties to resume the activities of the Joint Commission without delay and, in this context, encourages the Tajik opposition to accept in good faith the security guarantees offered to them by the Government of Tajikistan;

8. Calls upon the Afghan authorities and the UTO to finalize arrangements that would permit the establishment of an additional liaison post at Taloqan;

9. Urges the Tajik parties to cooperate fully with the International Committee of the Red Cross to facilitate the exchange of prisoners and detainees between the two sides;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to report to the Council every three months on the implementation of the Tehran Agreement, progress towards a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict and the operations of UNMOT;

11. Expresses its deep concern over the worsening of the humanitarian situation, aggravated by the recent natural calamities, and urges Member States and others concerned to respond promptly and generously in support of the humanitarian relief efforts of the United Nations and other international organizations;

12. Encourages States to contribute to the voluntary fund established by the Secretary-General in accordance with resolution 968(1994) in particular in the expectation of the resumption of work of the Joint Commission;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1061(1996)

14 June 1996 Meeting 3673 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/430).

Report of Secretary-General (September).

The situation in Tajikistan had deteriorated during the period June-August, with heavy fighting in the Tavildara sector, Karategin valley and Garm district, as well as the tense situation on the Tajik-Afghan border, the Secretary-General reported on 13 September [S/1996/754]. UNMOT followed events through the monitoring of troop movements and information received from persons fleeing the confrontation, and its activities continued to be severely restricted.

In view of renewed fighting, the third phase of the inter-Tajik talks in Ashgabat, held from 8 to 21 July under the chairmanship of the Special Representative, concentrated on the restoration of the ceasefire, the extension of the Tehran Agreement and the working out of a schedule and agenda for further talks. Representatives from Afghanistan, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, Uzbekistan and OSCE attended as observers. Both parties agreed on the need for an immediate ceasefire, but insisted on different modalities for the cessation of hostilities, particularly in the Tavildara zone.

The opposition members of the Joint Commission returned to Dushanbe on 28 June, after the Government had given assurances for their security. The Commission met on 1 July.

After intensive negotiations, the Government of Tajikistan, UTO and the Special Representative signed, on 19 July, a joint declaration on the cessation of hostilities and observance of the Tehran Agreement, extending its terms until the end of 1996. They agreed that the forces of the parties would remain in the positions they were holding on the day of the signing of the declaration and would submit to UNMOT information on the deployment of their forces along the line of contact. They agreed to additional confidence-building measures, including the disengagement of forces in the Tavildara area, within 10 days. They guaranteed the security and freedom of movement of the members of the Joint Commission and UNMOT and agreed to clear mines and remove blockades in areas under their control. UN observers would establish in the Tavildara area wireless communication with the field commanders of the armed forces of the two sides. Complaints from the parties concerning possible violations of the ceasefire would be investigated by the UN military observers and the Joint Commission.

The two parties also signed a protocol on 21 July on the exchange of an equal number of prisoners of war and detainees, and the opposition reconfirmed a previous commitment made in May for the unconditional return of 26 prisoners of war.

In a joint communique, the parties agreed on a schedule of further talks on outstanding political and military issues to take place during the rest of the year, but disagreed on the question of venue. The opposition suggested Tehran, while the Government preferred Ashgabat.

In an effort to implement the Ashgabat agreement, three UNMOT teams attempted to travel to Tavildara on 20 July, but were repeatedly blocked by government forces, despite pledges by the Government that the forces would comply. On 4 September, UNMOT teams reached Tavildara and confirmed that the town was held by government forces and that there was ongoing fighting.

The opposition claimed to hold some 600 prisoners; no figures were made public by the Government. The exchange of the first group of 60 from each side was first rescheduled, then prevented by fighting in the Karategin valley. The return of 26 prisoners of war held by the opposition failed to materialize because the previously agreed security arrangements were not in place.

Travel by UN organizations to the Tavildara sector was restricted because of large-scale mine laying. Local inhabitants also reported that Russian border forces had air-dropped anti-personnel mines along the Tajik-Afghan border.

In September, the opposition took new territory in the Karategin valley, including Tajikabad, and the Government began preparing a counter-attack. The UNMOT Chief Military Observer and the Co-Chairmen of the Joint Commission met with field commanders of the opposition in an attempt to prevent further escalation. Tension also mounted along the Tajik-Afghan border, and Russian border forces reported a build-up of opposition fighters in Afghanistan. The Russian border forces reinforced their positions there. The situation along the border was the subject of contacts between Afghanistan, the Russian Federation and Tajikistan.

The continued fighting diverted attention from the political issues on the agenda, and the two sides remained at odds on the issue of the venue for the next round of talks. However, the Special Representative continued to meet with representatives of both parties.

Numerous UN organizations continued their humanitarian work in Tajikistan during mid-1996. The largest humanitarian operation was conducted by WFP, which also coordinated activities of all agencies distributing food in the country. The health situation deteriorated in 1996; a typhoid epidemic was reported and malaria was out of control. Displaced persons, estimated at 16,500 from the Tavildara region, were provisionally housed in makeshift lodgings.

Communications (June-August). Iran, in a 13 June letter [S/1996/439] to the Secretary-General, said that the holding of several rounds of inter-Tajik talks and the agreements reached as a result of the efforts of the United Nations and observer countries had presented a ray of hope to the people of Tajikistan during the previous few months; however, recent developments at borders and within Tajikistan had renewed reasons for concern. As one of the countries working with the United Nations to restore peace and stability in Tajikistan, Iran stressed its commitment to the continuation of the inter-Tajik talks, adding that there was an urgent need to hold the talks in the shortest possible time and to adopt confidence-building measures.

On 16 July [S/1996/558], Tajikistan expressed its conviction that the Ashgabat talks would be successful. At the same time, it was concerned that military preparations were being undertaken by the armed wing of the opposition with a view to reinforcing small groups operating within the country. Tajikistan said it reserved the right to take preventative measures, including the application of pressure using all the forces and means at its disposal, to oppose any escalation of the violence and to safeguard its own security.

The Russian Federation discussed the situation on the Tajik-Afghan border in a 6 August statement [S/1996/638], noting that in recent days the situation along the Badakhshan sector of the border had deteriorated sharply. In its view, the leadership of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan was actively engaged in efforts to heighten tension in that area. The Tajik opposition present in Afghanistan, with the support of Afghan field commanders and other authorities, had begun preparations for large-scale military operations in Tajikistan, Russia said. In view of the situation, Russian border troops, in collaboration with Tajik border troops and military contingents of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan engaged in protecting the border, with the support of CPF, were taking steps to maintain order along the Tajik-Afghan border and defend the interests of Tajikistan and the CIS member States. Any attempt by the detachments of the Islamic Revival Movement in Tajikistan to break into Tajik territory would be repulsed. In the interests of peace and stability in the border area, Russia proposed holding a meeting of representatives of Afghanistan, the Russian Federation and Tajikistan.

On 6 August [S/1996/640], Tajikistan expressed anxiety over the escalation of armed confrontation in areas adjacent to the Tajik-Afghan border. In recent days, Tajikistan said, the opposition had refused to comply with the ceasefire agreement. A build-up of opposition forces and mercenaries from other countries, numbering some 900, had been taking place in the area bordering Tajikistan. He considered such plans a repudiation of the results of the inter-Tajik negotiations and reflecting either the insincerity of the opposition leadership or its inability to control the actions of armed groups loyal to it. Tajikistan warned that an exacerbation of the situation would elicit strong countermeasures by the Government using all means at its disposal.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 20 September, the President of the Security Council made the following statement [S/PRST/1996/38] on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Tajikistan of 13 September 1996.

The Council expresses its concern at the deterioration of the situation in Tajikistan and at the increasing tension along the Tajik-Afghan border. It reaffirms its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Tajikistan and to the inviolability of its borders.

The Council is also concerned about the violations of the Tehran ceasefire agreement of 17 September 1994 and about the failure of both parties to implement the Ashgabat agreements. It is, in particular, concerned about the ongoing fighting in the Tavildara region and the seizure of the towns of Jirgatal and Tajikabad by the opposition. The Council demands the immediate cessation of all hostilities and acts of violence.

The Council recalls the commitments made by the Government of Tajikistan and by the leadership of the United Tajik Opposition (UTO) to resolve the conflict and to achieve national reconciliation through peaceful means. It regrets that these commitments have not so far been honoured.

The Council commends the efforts of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) and urgently calls upon the parties to cooperate fully with UNMOT and to ensure the safety of the personnel of the United Nations and other international organizations and also calls on them to lift all restrictions on the freedom of movement of UNMOT personnel. In this connection it is concerned about the large-scale use of landmines due to the threat it creates for the population and UNMOT personnel.

The Council welcomes the initiative of the Secretary-General to arrange for an inter-agency mission to Tajikistan to determine how to respond most effectively to the humanitarian situation.

The Council welcomes the renewed work of the Joint Commission and the results of their efforts in reducing tensions in the Garm region and in the Karategin valley.

The Council emphasizes that the primary responsibility rests with the Tajik parties themselves in resolving their differences. It recalls paragraphs 3 and 4 of its resolution 1061(1996) of 14 June 1996.

The Council commends the efforts of the Secretary-General's Special Representative and calls upon the parties to cooperate fully with him in resuming the inter-Tajik talks. The Council reiterates the importance of the continuation of direct political dialogue between the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the UTO for the peace process and encourages them to hold their next meeting as soon as possible.

Meeting number. SC 3696.

Communication (December). Tajikistan, in a statement of 2 December [S/1996/1003], said that the situation in the Pamir region of the country remained tense because of illegal actions by the armed opposition, in particular an attack against the town of Garm. Tajikistan said that in the event of an escalation of tension, it would be forced to take appropriate steps, and it called on the United Nations to promote a ceasefire and peaceful settlement of the inter-Tajik conflict.

Report of Secretary-General (December). On 5 December, the Secretary-General reported [S/1996/1010] again on the situation in Tajikistan. The reporting period (September-December), he said, was marked by a fragile ceasefire in the Karategin valley and sporadic fighting in the Tavildara sector, tensions around Dushanbe and along the Tajik-Afghan border, and relative calm elsewhere. In late November, the situation had deteriorated drastically following attacks by the opposition in the Garm area. On 1 December, the opposition retook Garm by force.

On 3 December, an UNMOT team was forcibly detained by government soldiers, beaten and its equipment taken. The members were released amid gunfire and came close to being killed. The Government apologized for the incident and promised that the culprits would be identified and dealt with.

The negotiating process had been at a standstill since July, the Secretary-General reported. As it had in the past, UTO put forward a demand to change the venue from Ashgabat to Tehran, despite the previous understanding that the talks would be conducted in a continuous round and in one place. Given the deteriorating situation, the two sides agreed to the Special Representative's proposal to hold a meeting between President Rakhmonov and the UTO leader, Mr. Nuri. At a preparatory meeting in Tehran (9-17 October) an agreement was drafted, calling for: the creation of a Commission on National Reconciliation with defined responsibilities; a transition period of 12 to 18 months; conclusion of the inter-Tajik negotiating process by 1 July 1997; extension of the ceasefire; the creation of a Consultative Forum of the Peoples of Tajikistan; a comprehensive amnesty; and a comprehensive exchange of prisoners of war and detainees.

However, the draft was not finalized and the leaders' meeting did not materialize owing to delays, mainly by the opposition side. The two leaders agreed to meet in Moscow in late December, but the Secretary-General said such plans seemed increasingly uncertain. Meanwhile, the Secretary-General indicated that the fighting was continuing, raising serious questions about the sincerity of the two parties. On the other hand, the Secretary-General noted the recent statements of President Rakhmonov and Mr. Nuri on their readiness to meet in northern Afghanistan and Moscow by the end of the year. In that context, he recommended that the Security Council extend the UNMOT mandate for another six months.

During the reporting period, the Joint Commission was very active, defusing tensions between government and opposition forces on the ground. The two Co-Chairmen were instrumental in achieving the 16 September ceasefire agreement and maintaining a channel of communication between the Government and the opposition. UNMOT continued to support the work of the Joint Commission, conducting joint patrols and facilitating its meetings. It also maintained contact with the Russian border forces and CPF and cooperated closely with OSCE.

As of December, UNMOT had an overall strength of 96, including 44 military observers from nine countries, and 33 civilian staff, of whom 20 were recruited internationally. In addition to headquarters in Dushanbe, UNMOT maintained eight team sites throughout the country. On 1 November, UNMOT opened a liaison office in Taloqan, northern Afghanistan, for the purpose of maintaining direct liaison with the leadership of the opposition based there.

The humanitarian situation remained critical during the reporting period, with continued deterioration of the social and industrial infrastructure. In November, the United Nations launched a consolidated inter-agency donor alert on urgent humanitarian needs in Tajikistan, calling for approximately $22 million to meet urgent needs for the period from December 1996 to May 1997 (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 13 December, the Security Council adopted resolution 1089(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions and the statements of its President,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 5 December 1996,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Tajikistan and to the inviolability of its borders,

Expressing its grave concern at the continuing deterioration of the situation in Tajikistan, and stressing the urgent need for the Government of Tajikistan and the leadership of the United Tajik Opposition (UTO) to adhere sincerely to the commitments they have made to resolve the conflict and to achieve national reconciliation exclusively through peaceful, political means on the basis of mutual concessions and compromises,

Expressing also its grave concern at the ongoing fighting in Tajikistan and repeated violations of the Tehran ceasefire agreement of 17 September 1994 and about the failure of both parties to implement the Ashgabat agreements,

Emphasizing that the primary responsibility rests with the Tajik parties themselves in resolving the differences, and that the international support provided by this resolution must be linked to the process of national reconciliation and the promotion of democracy,

Expressing its satisfaction at the regular contacts between the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) and the Collective Peacekeeping Forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), the Russian border forces and the Mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in Tajikistan,

Commending the efforts of UNMOT under difficult circumstances,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the report of the Secretary-General of 5 December 1996;

2. Condemns the ongoing flagrant violations of the ceasefire by the parties, in particular the recent opposition offensive in the Garm region, and demands the immediate cessation of all hostilities and acts of violence;

3. Calls upon the parties to comply fully with the Tehran Agreement and all the other obligations they have assumed, and strongly urges them to extend the ceasefire for the whole duration of the inter-Tajik talks;

4. Condemns also the terrorist acts and other acts of violence which have resulted in the loss of life of civilians as well as members of the CIS Peacekeeping Forces and the Russian border forces;

5. Decides to extend the mandate of UNMOT until 15 March 1997 subject to the proviso that the Tehran Agreement remains in force and the parties demonstrate their commitment to an effective ceasefire, to national reconciliation and to the promotion of democracy, and also decides that this mandate will remain in effect until that date unless the Secretary-General reports to the Council that these conditions have not been met;

6. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to report to the Council by 15 January 1997 on the parties' compliance with the Tehran Agreement and the results of meetings between the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the UTO, and requests him also to provide recommendations in that report on the nature and size of the United Nations presence in Tajikistan in this light;

7. Calls upon the parties to cooperate fully with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in resuming the inter-Tajik talks in order to achieve a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, with the assistance of the countries and regional organizations acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks, and, in this context, welcomes the meeting between the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the UTO on 10 and 11 December 1996, and encourages them to continue this dialogue;

8. Welcomes the efforts of the Joint Commission in defusing tensions between government and opposition forces on the ground;

9. Strongly condemns the gross mistreatment of members of UNMOT by both parties, including threats against their lives, and urgently calls upon the parties to ensure the safety of the personnel of the United Nations and other international organizations, to cooperate fully with UNMOT, and to lift all restrictions on the freedom of movement of its personnel;

10. Urges the Tajik parties to cooperate fully with the International Committee of the Red Cross to facilitate the exchange of prisoners and detainees between the two sides;

11. Expresses its serious concern at the indiscriminate use of landmines in Tajikistan and the threat that it poses to the population and UNMOT personnel, and welcomes the proposals of the Secretary-General in his report of 5 December 1996 in this regard;

12. Expresses its deep concern over the worsening of the humanitarian situation in Tajikistan, and calls upon Member States and others concerned to respond promptly and generously to the consolidated inter-agency donor alert on urgent humanitarian needs for the period from 1 December 1996 to 31 May 1997 launched by the Secretary-General;

13. Encourages States to contribute to the voluntary fund established by the Secretary-General in accordance with resolution 968(1994);

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Inter-Tajik Agreement

At a meeting in Moscow on 23 December, the President of Tajikistan, the leader of UTO and the Secretary-General's Special Representative signed two documents—the bilateral Agreement and the Protocol on the main functions and powers of the Commission on National Reconciliation. The Russian Federation forwarded both to the Secretary-General on 24 December [S/1996/1070].

By the Agreement, the two sides undertook: to complete implementation of the agreements reached during the inter-Tajik talks within 12 to 18 months from the signing of the Agreement; to establish a Commission on National Reconciliation for the transition period; to implement a universal amnesty; to exchange prisoners of war; to cease all hostile activities for the duration of the inter-Tajik talks; and to conclude those talks by 1 July 1997.

The Protocol dealt with the functions of the Commission, established for the duration of the transition period. Its tasks included: monitoring compliance with the agreements; implementing measures for the safe return of refugees; developing proposals for amending legislation on the functioning of political parties and the mass media; presenting proposals for amendments to the existing Constitution and submitting them to a national referendum; preparing laws on elections to Parliament and local representative bodies; establishing a Central Commission on Elections and the Conduct of the Referendum; reforming the Government by including UTO representatives in ministries, departments, local authorities, judicial bodies and law enforcement agencies; monitoring the disarmament and disbandment of armed units of the opposition; monitoring the exchange of prisoners of war and other detainees; drafting an amnesty act and a reciprocal pardon act; developing a mechanism for converting the military-political movements into political parties; and making proposals on holding parliamentary elections, to be monitored by the United Nations and OSCE.

The Foreign Ministers of Iran and the Russian Federation, who met in Tehran on 22 and 23 December, issued a statement on Tajikistan, in which they welcomed the agreement of the two sides to a complete ceasefire and the formation of organs of authority. In their statement, which was forwarded to the Secretary-General on 24 December [S/1996/1071], the Ministers welcomed the decision taken in Moscow by the Tajik Government and UTO to hold the next round of talks in Tehran for the purpose of continuing discussion of the practical issues associated with the Moscow Agreement. They called on the two sides to cooperate fully with the Special Representative and UNMOT.

Communication (December). The Foreign Ministry of Ukraine issued a 20 December statement on the situation in Tajikistan [S/1996/1065]. It reported an incident that occurred 70 kilometres east of Dushanbe on that day, when members of the Tajik opposition seized 21 hostages, including representatives of the State structures of Tajikistan and seven UN military observers, one of whom was Ukrainian. Ukraine called for the immediate and unconditional release of all the persons seized, and for the international status of the UN peacekeepers to be respected.

Financing of UNMOT

In a March report on the financing of UNMOT [A/50/749/Add.1], the Secretary-General proposed a budget for the year from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 of $7,302,500 gross ($6,795,200 net), reflecting an overall decrease when compared with the prorated resources provided in the preceding 12-month period of $8,608,800 gross ($8,134,800 net).

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in April [A/50/933], recommended approval of the Secretary-General's proposal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 June, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/238.

Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 968(1994) of 16 December 1994, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, and 1030(1995) of 14 December 1995, by which the Council decided to extend the mandate of the Mission of Observers until 15 June 1996,

Recalling also its resolution 49/240 of 31 March 1995 on the financing of the Mission of Observers,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission of Observers are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission of Observers, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Mission of Observers by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission of Observers with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan as at 21 May 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 788,296 United States dollars, representing 6 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission of Observers to the period ending 15 June 1996, notes that some 26 per cent of Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission of Observers in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission of Observers is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan the amount of 7,478,900 dollars gross (6,971,600 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission of Observers for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, inclusive of the amount of 176,400 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be assessed on Member States at a monthly rate of 623,242 dollars gross (580,967 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1996 and 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 15 June 1996;

8. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 507,300 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

9. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission of Observers in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

10. Invites Member States to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund established in accordance with paragraph 13 of Security Council resolution 968(1994);

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan".

General Assembly resolution 50/238

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/838/Add.1) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.48), based on informal consultations; agenda item 137.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: Fifth Committee 56, 64 (resumed); plenary 120.

On 18 December, by decision 51/460, the Assembly decided that, at the resumed fifty-first session in 1997, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee should continue its consideration of the item on the financing of UN-MOT.

Korean question

In 1996, the United States submitted the annual report on the activities of the United Nations Command in 1995 for the maintenance of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement, whose replacement as an "obsolete mechanism" continued to be called for by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK). In October, the Security Council expressed serious concern over the discovery of a submarine from that country, which had run aground within the territory of the Republic of Korea; it stressed that the Armistice Agreement should remain in force until replaced by a new peace mechanism. Also in October, the General Assembly commended the continuing, impartial efforts of IAEA to secure full compliance by the DPRK with its obligations under its safeguards agreement with the Agency.

Armistice Agreement

On 13 May, the United States, on behalf of the Unified Command established pursuant to Security Council resolution 84(1950) [YUN 1950, p. 230], presented to the Council the annual report of the United Nations Command (UNC) [S/1996/351 & Corr.1] concerning the maintenance in 1995 of the 1953 Armistice Agreement [YUN 1953, p. 136, GA res. 725(VIII)].

According to the report, UNC continued to carry out its functions and to fulfil its obligations under the mandate of the Armistice Agreement and would continue to do so until the achievement of a durable peace through political dialogue between the parties directly concerned with the Korean conflict. Of the original 16 UN Member States which had provided military forces to UNC during the Korean War, 9 were currently represented: Australia, Canada, Colombia, France, New Zealand, Philippines, Thailand, United Kingdom, United States. Despite continuous refusal by the Korean People's Army (KPA) to participate in joint investigations of reported violations of the Agreement occurring within the demilitarized zone (DMZ) separating the two countries, UNC continued to supervise implementation of the Agreement's provisions pertaining to the DMZ.

In accordance with paragraph 20 of the Agreement, the Commander-in-Chief of UNC (CIN-UNC) appointed Major-General Lee Suk-bok of the Republic of Korea Army, with effect from 22 September 1995, as the Senior Member of the UNC component of the Military Armistice Commission (MAC), set up to supervise implementation of the Agreement and settle violations of it. KPA, however, had repeatedly refused to meet with that Senior Member, on the grounds that the Republic of Korea Army was neither a signatory to the Agreement nor a UNC member, and could not represent the whole armed forces currently in the Republic of Korea. Although formal plenary MAC meetings had not been held since 1991, use of the 24-hour telephone channel of communication maintained by the Joint Duty Office, located in the joint security area (the military conference site) in Panmunjom, remained available to both sides. On 3 October, however, when the UNC duty officer attempted a telephone protest against the illegal crossing by two civilians of the military demarcation line into the UNC portion of the DMZ, the KPA duty officer refused to receive the protest, stating he was no longer authorized to accept, and had since not accepted, Armistice-related messages.

The report stated that, regarding the unilateral measures taken by KPA to force Poland's withdrawal [YUN 1995, p. 464] from the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission (NNSC), CINCUNC on 20 February had requested the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers to urge China to protest against KPA's illegal act and, on 24 February, wrote directly to Marshal Kim Jong-il, Supreme Commander of KPA, reminding him of his responsibility to uphold the Armistice Agreement. Senior military officers of the original 16 troop-contributing UN Member States to UNC were also requested to urge their respective Governments to register a similar protest. The two NNSC members from Sweden and Switzerland, likewise, lodged on 2 March a vigorous protest with KPA, stating that, despite the expulsion of the Polish member, whose delegation had been forced to leave Panmunjom on 28 February, they would remain firmly committed to the mandate entrusted to them by the signatories of the Agreement. As China declined Poland's request for the relocation to Beijing of its NNSC delegation, which had temporarily moved to the Embassy of Poland in Pyongyang, that delegation had to depart Pyongyang on 4 March. On 3 May, KPA closed the NNSC buildings under its control and announced restrictions on the free movement of the remaining NNSC members and UNC MAC personnel into the northern part of the joint security area. With the 1993 withdrawal of the Czech member and the recent expulsion of the Polish member from Panmunjom, NNSC was left with only two neutral nations in residence—Sweden and Switzerland. Nevertheless, it held weekly meetings throughout 1995 to review and evaluate UNC reports regarding the number of military arrivals and departures. The Polish member, who travelled from Warsaw to Panmunjom, attended meetings on 1 and 3 May and on 1 August.

In accordance with a 1993 agreement on remains-recovery operations [YUN 1994, p. 438], KPA had recovered and returned 146 sets of UNC Korean War remains between 30 November 1993 and 30 October 1995, bringing the total returned to UNC to 209. Because identification remained a significant problem (only 5 of the 209 sets had been positively identified by the United States Army Central Identification Laboratory), UNC asked KPA to suspend further unilateral recovery operations until agreement could be reached on joint UNC-KPA recoveries.

The report recorded 74 occasions during 1995 on which UNC had dispatched joint observer teams to its guard posts within or along the 151-mile southern boundary of the DMZ. Despite the relative quiet that prevailed there throughout that year, a series of major KPA violations of the military demarcation line and intrusions into the UNC portion of the DMZ had occurred between 14

April and 17 October. There had also been a show of force by KPA in the joint security area on 20 and 22 February (following its declaration of intent to withdraw support to the Polish member of NNSC), which had exceeded the personnel and arms limits set by the Agreement, as well as a 1,000-strong demonstration permitted by KPA in the same area, which, although peaceful, had been accompanied by a deployment of additional KPA guards with sidearms in excess of the 35 specified by the Agreement.

Commenting on the UNC report on 25 June 1996 [S/1996/505], the DPRK stated that UNC had submitted a report to the Council just to make its presence felt, even as the world knew that no legal basis whatsoever could justify the existence of UNC, under which only United States military forces remained. The DPRK went on to say that UNC was a product of the cold war era which came into being through an abuse of the name of the United Nations. Since the reality was that UNC was only a titular or "phantom" body, the DPRK reiterated its call for its dissolution in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3390 B(XXX) [YUN 1975, p. 204] and for the establishment of a new peace mechanism.

Communications. By communications addressed to the Security Council, the DPRK reiterated its calls for the replacement of the Armistice Agreement, which it repeatedly described as an obsolete system that had failed to stabilize the situation in the Korean peninsula, prevent arms build-up and obviate the danger of war.

On 22 February [S/1996/128], the DPRK expanded on its proposal, made almost two years earlier, for such a replacement. Deeming that an institutional mechanism should be in place as a matter of urgency, the DPRK called for early negotiations with the United States aimed at concluding an interim agreement in order to eliminate the possibility of armed conflict and to establish a joint military body in Panmunjom with appropriate terms of reference to replace MAC. That would, it maintained, bring about an epoch-making environment for detente and peace on the peninsula—a prerequisite for a confederal reunification of the two Koreas.

On 8 March [S/1996/186], the DPRK charged the United States with refusing to respond positively to its latest proposal and with misleading world public opinion by claiming that maintenance of the Armistice Agreement contributed to the security of the Korean peninsula. The DPRK reiterated its position that the United States, by its failure to comply with key provisions of that Agreement from the day of its signature, notably its introduction into the Republic of Korea of huge quantities of combat matériel, had progressively invalidated two thirds of the Agreement's provisions. The DPRK further charged that, by other violations, the United States had also paralysed MAC and had manipulated NNSC to serve its military and political purposes, thus wrecking NNSC's impartiality. Those actions by the United States to destroy the armistice mechanism, the DPRK claimed, had resulted in a vacuum that could jeopardize security on the peninsula. The DPRK went on to cite the steps it had taken to reach agreement with the United States on a new peace system, up to and including their military talks in Panmunjom, begun in May 1995 but broken off in September by the United States. The DPRK warned that continued United States refusal to respond to its proposals would leave it no choice but to take the final steps to replace the outdated armistice system with a new mechanism.

On 4 April, a spokesman for the Panmunjom Mission of KPA (the new team set up by the DPRK in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 4381 when it withdrew KPA's membership from MAC) announced [S/1996/253] that as the Republic of Korea, acting under United States protection, had persistently rejected the DPRK's proposals for peace and had turned the DMZ into an armed zone and a launching position for an attack on the North, KPA was taking self-defensive measures. It was giving up its duty under the Armistice Agreement with regard to the maintenance and administration of the DMZ, and KPA personnel and vehicles would no longer bear any distinctive insignia or markings when entering the joint security area and the DMZ.

Noting that the KPA announcement had led to worldwide concern, the European Union (EU), in a statement issued by its Presidency and transmitted on 15 April [S/1996/297], urged the Pyongyang authorities to cease all activities that could further increase tension on the peninsula and to abide by the terms of the Armistice Agreement—which it recognized as having been instrumental in maintaining peace and security on the peninsula—until such time as a peace treaty could be negotiated between all the parties concerned, including the Republic of Korea. The DPRK responded [S/1996/310] that it could not but take self-defensive measures in the face of the considerably enlarged joint military and naval exercises being conducted by the Republic of Korea and the United States, which were obviously preparations for war against the DPRK.

The EU, in a statement [S/1996/333] issued on 29 April by its Presidency in Rome, Italy and Brussels, Belgium, expressed support for the proposal advanced by the Republic of Korea and the United States that four-party talks be held among China, the DPRK, the Republic of Korea and the United States with a view to achieving a stable and permanent peace on the Korean peninsula. The EU also expressed hope that a constructive dialogue could again be put on track. The DPRK, in a statement of 2 September [S/1996/718], referred to the four-party talks as a United States counter-proposal to its proposed interim agreement, regarding which it was still awaiting a reply. If the proposed talks were truly intended to initiate the process of a permanent peace agreement, as the United States had said in its Cheju Island declaration of 16 April, the key topic of those talks should be the withdrawal of United States troops from the Republic of Korea, the DPRK declared; otherwise such talks would be utterly useless.

On 12 September [S/1996/756], the DPRK charged that the United States was openly shipping large quantities of war equipment, including tanks, armoured vehicles and communications equipment, to the Republic of Korea, at a time when the United States had failed to implement its obligations to ease sanctions against the DPRK. That situation led DPRK to consider United States commitments as "hypocritical".

It was clear, DPRK said, that the United States had taken every opportunity and possibility systematically to carry out its arms build-up in the Republic of Korea in a planned way.

Submarine incident

On 23 September [S/1996/774], the Republic of Korea drew attention to the 350-ton, 106-foot military submarine that had run aground about 100 feet offshore near the coastal city of Kangnung, a major port on its eastern coast, about 60 miles south of the DMZ. The Government's investigation of the incident revealed that the submarine belonged to the DPRK armed forces; its occupants, estimated to be 26, were all officers of the same armed forces who had gone ashore, infiltrating the territory of the Republic of Korea. One had been captured near Kangnung, 11 had been found dead and presumed to have been shot by their leader, 9 had been killed by exchanges of fire with the Republic's Army, and the rest remained at large. A written protest which UNC attempted to deliver to the DPRK side had not been accepted. While the incident had been the subject of Security Council consultations on 20 September, the Republic of Korea reserved its right to raise the issue in the Council upon completion of its investigation.

Also on 23 September [S/1996/768], the DPRK claimed that the vessel was a small training submarine on routine training exercises and armed only with small firearms, but had drifted and run aground due to engine trouble. The DPRK demanded the immediate and unconditional return of the submarine, its survivors and the dead. On 27 September [S/1996/800], the DPRK wrote that if its demand was not met, it would be forced to take strong countermeasures; it annexed a report of a 26 September emergency meeting of its political parties and social organizations, which had adopted a decision on countermeasures against what it called the Republic of Korea's provocative misuse of the submarine incident to aggravate confrontation and drive the peninsula to the brink of war.

On 3 October [S/1996/824], the Republic of Korea asserted that the incident reflected a clear pattern of the DPRK's military provocations and part of its larger scheme not only to dismantle the Armistice Agreement but also to destabilize the Republic. As it had made clear during Council consultations on 20 and 24 September, it was time to formally bring the incident before the Council so as to send a clear and strong signal from the international community that further DPRK provocations would not be tolerated. For that purpose, the National Assembly of the Republic of Korea had adopted a resolution on 23 September [S/1996/847] calling on the international community to take a serious view of the Korean situation and to cooperate in restraining the DPRK from further acts of provocation, as well as urging that country to abandon its irrational goal of communizing the Republic by force, immediately to cease acts of provocation and to respond positively to the Republic's initiatives to build a genuine national community on the Korean peninsula.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council convened on 15 October and, following its consideration of the exchange of correspondence between the DPRK and the Republic of Korea over the submarine incident, authorized its President to make the statement below [S/PRST/1996/42] on its behalf:

The Security Council has considered the letters of the Permanent Representative of the Republic of Korea and the letters of the Permanent Representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, regarding the incident of a submarine of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on 18 September 1996.

The Security Council expresses its serious concern over this incident. The Council urges that the Korean Armistice Agreement should be fully observed and that no action should be taken that might increase tension or undermine peace and stability on the Korean peninsula.

The Security Council stresses that the Armistice Agreement shall remain in force until it is replaced by a new peace mechanism.

The Security Council encourages both sides of the Korean peninsula to settle their outstanding issues by peaceful means through dialogue, so that peace and security on the peninsula will be strengthened.

Meeting number. SC 3704.

IAEA inspections agreements

During 1996, IAEA transmitted to the Security Council through the Secretary-General two reports by the IAEA Director General, Hans Blix, on developments in the DPRK's implementation of its agreement with IAEA for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (safeguards agreement), in force since 1992. In that regard, the DPRK linked its compliance with certain safeguards requirements to progress in implementation of the "Agreed Framework of 21 October 1994 between the United States of America and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea" [YUN 1994, p. 442].

IAEA continued to dispatch its inspection teams to the DPRK from Vienna, but maintained the continuous presence of two inspectors in the Nyongbyon area.

IAEA reports. The IAEA Director General's first report of 1996, transmitted on 7 May [S/1996/338], described the fourth round of technical discussions (Pyongyang, 23-29 January) between an IAEA team and the DPRK, held with a view to resolving issues that were outstanding at the conclusion of the third (1995) round of technical discussions [YUN 1995, p. 465]. It was reported that the discussions had yielded limited progress. The DPRK reconfirmed certain previously agreed safeguards measures and monitoring activities (remaining unimplemented, however, due to new objections and preconditions imposed by the DPRK operator), and finally agreed to their implementation according to written procedures endorsed at the discussions. It reconfirmed that IAEA inspectors would continue baseline photographing at all facilities subject to the freeze, and that the DPRK would provide, as required under the freeze, advance notice to the inspectors of any maintenance work involving facility equipment. The DPRK further reconfirmed that short-notice inspections by inspectors already in the DPRK would continue to take place at different parts of facilities subject to the freeze, pending agreement on the installation of containment and surveillance equipment and other monitoring devices. There was also agreement that IAEA would provide two weeks' advance notice of inspections to allow the timely issuance in Vienna of visas for the inspectors.

The DPRK continued to decline a number of important inspection measures, however. The fundamental difference of view between IAEA and the DPRK about the current status of the latter's safeguards agreement remained: the DPRK regarded acceptance of measures required by IAEA to monitor the freeze (of its graphite-moderated reactors and related facilities) in the context only of the 1994 Agreed Framework and not of implementation of the safeguards agreement, which the DPRK considered inoperative at the current stage. The DPRK announced that IAEA could resume the ad hoc and routine inspections required by the safeguards agreement, but only at the small facilities not subject to the freeze—the IRT Research Reactor, the Critical Assembly, the Sub-Critical Assembly and the Nuclear Fuel Rod Storage facility. It agreed to provide IAEA, by the end of February, with accounting reports of the nuclear material at those facilities, as well as an updated list of locations outside facilities, together with the required relevant accounting reports. It was also agreed that IAEA inspections at those locations would start in March. The DPRK declined, however, to provide reports pertaining to nuclear material at facilities subject to the freeze.

Also discussed were inspection activities to be carried out at specific locations. Among those were the measurements scheduled to take place between March and July of irradiated fuel rods in the spent fuel pond at the 5-MWe Experimental Reactor, regarding which the DPRK reiterated that it was not prepared to provide operating and plutonium production records for IAEA examination. As to the suggested modifications to the fuel rack design, which, at the DPRK's request, were to be confirmed with the United States canning team and the DPRK operator, most had been implemented by the reporting date. The DPRK reconfirmed its agreement to the installation, expected in March, of an integral monitoring system, consisting of vibration and magnetic sensors, on the motors of the mixer settlers in the solvent recovery area of the Radiochemical Laboratory, the DPRK reprocessing plant. That would enable continuous detection of any operation of the mixer settlers and of any maintenance work involving the motors. Subject to a month's performance evaluation and discussions with the operator, installation would continue on the Laboratory's other mixer settlers. The DPRK continued to refuse installation of electrometers at the Laboratory's liquid waste tanks. That equipment, together with the containment and surveillance equipment previously installed, would enable IAEA to monitor the freeze related to such waste by verifying, on a continuous basis, any movement or operation involving the liquid nuclear waste. The DPRK had still not agreed to IAEA's request to perform non-destructive measurements and/or sampling at selected locations in the Laboratory. Nor was agreement reached on the monitoring of nuclear-related equipment and components for the 50-MWe (Nyongbyon Nuclear Power Plant) and the 200-MWe (Taechon Nuclear Power Plant) reactors under construction at the inception of the freeze.

Other issues on which agreement remained to be reached included: IAEA's 1995 paper conveyed to the DPRK, containing proposals for preserving information required to verify the correctness and completeness of the initial (1992) declaration [YUN 1992, p. 73] submitted by the DPRK under its safeguards agreement, concerning which IAEA reiterated that, unless there was early agreement on those proposals, any possibility for future verification of the initial declaration might be lost; measures to improve current communication procedures between IAEA and the DPRK to facilitate inspection and monitoring activities; the increased operating costs at facilities subject to the freeze; and the DPRK requirement that IAEA provide its own power supply to operate the safeguards and monitoring equipment it had installed.

The IAEA Director General's second report, transmitted on 4 November [S/1996/906], covered the fifth and sixth rounds of technical talks (Pyongyang, 25-28 June; Vienna, 23-27 September). According to that report, the June talks, as in the case of the January talks, resulted in progress in some areas, but the DPRK still did not accept certain important verification measures, including the installation of monitoring equipment to allow monitoring of nuclear waste tanks and measuring or taking samples at locations in the Radiochemical Laboratory. Although there was some discussion on the 1995 Agency paper, the DPRK commented, inter alia, that IAEA proposals on the preservation of information should be linked to progress in implementation of the 1994 Agreed Framework; that verification of the correctness and completeness of the initial declaration of the DPRK's nuclear material would be carried out following consultations between the DPRK and IAEA upon completion of a significant portion of the light-water reactor project foreseen in the Agreed Framework, but prior to the delivery of key nuclear components; and that the DPRK was ready to discuss verification measures at facilities subject or not to the freeze, but that issues related to "other" facilities would be discussed when "the time comes". IAEA pointed out that its 1995 paper applied to all comprehensive safeguards agreements. It made clear, inter alia, that information about "other" facilities, such as nuclear waste sites and a pilot plant at which the first core of the 5-MWe reactor had been manufactured and which reportedly had been dismantled, was crucial to verifying the correctness and completeness of the DPRK's initial declaration. IAEA could not agree to the DPRK's intention to split provision of the information into two parts. The data required, IAEA stressed, needed to be preserved urgently and in their entirety. The DPRK was thus urged to take all steps necessary to do so by a 20 September resolution of the IAEA General Conference.

The report noted, however, that the DPRK agreed to measures to improve communications to IAEA and to accept the designation of more inspectors.

The September talks made no progress on any of the outstanding key technical issues, particularly the important one of the preservation of information relevant to verifying the accuracy and completeness of the initial DPRK declaration. There was tentative agreement that a further round of talks should be held in January 1997 in Pyongyang.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 51/10 of 29 October on the report of IAEA, the General Assembly commended IAEA for its continuing impartial efforts to implement the safeguards agreement still in force between IAEA and the DPRK, including its efforts to monitor the freeze of specified facilities in the DPRK as requested by the Security Council. The Assembly expressed concern over the continuing non-compliance of the DPRK with the safeguards agreement and urged it to take the steps deemed necessary by IAEA to preserve all information relevant to verifying the accuracy and completeness of the initial report of the DPRK on the inventory of nuclear material subject to safeguards until that country's full compliance with its safeguards agreement.

Statement. On 12 February [S/1996/107], the DPRK drew attention to what it called "provocative remarks" by the Republic of Korea in a statement before the Security Council on 31 January. That statement, made in connection with the agenda item on the extradition of suspects wanted in the 1995 assassination attempt on the life of the President of Egypt, recalled the Republic of Korea's 1983 experience [YUN 1984, p. 213] when an attempt had been made on the life of its President, and the fact that the State sponsor of that act of terrorism had gone unpunished. The DPRK stated that the reference to an issue that was neither on the agenda nor had any link with the DPRK raised concern that the Council "might be abused vis-a-vis selective countries, thus damaging" its credibility. The DPRK also expressed concern over the possible negative impact on the Korean peninsula, where the ceasefire remained intact, should the Republic of Korea become a Council member.

Other matters

Iran-Iraq

Throughout 1996, in communications addressed to the Secretary-General, Iran and Iraq continued to charge each other with repeated violations of the 1988 ceasefire agreement [YUN 1988, p. 188] and the agreements reached in Tehran in 1991 on the area of separation between the two countries [YUN 1991, p. 163].

In two letters of 12 February [S/1996/98 & 111], Iraq denied claims made in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 455] and 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 473] by Iran to the Secretary-General that Iraq had violated the ceasefire. By a 31 May letter [S/1996/403], Iran drew the Secretary-General's attention to what it called instances of Iraqi violations of the ceasefire that had taken place in September and October 1995. On 15 October 1996 [S/1996/856], Iraq responded to those allegations.

During the year, Iraq's charges of Iranian actions against its security and territorial integrity included interception of and firing upon fishing boats, detention of Iraqi naval vessels, construction and overflight in the agreed area of separation, boats entering Iraqi waters with armed passengers, dispatching agents into Iraq for espionage and sabotage purposes, searching vessels entering and leaving the Shatt al-Arab, establishing a control point near Iraq's border and violation of Iraqi airspace.

Iran made similar claims about Iraqi violations, including: construction and digging in the agreed no-man's land, indiscriminate firing and detonation of explosions by Iraqi forces in no-man's land, attacks on Iranian border posts, firing towards Iranian border police, overflying the separation zone, Iraqi patrols crossing into no-man's land, patrol boats violating Iranian waterways, and penetrations into the territory of Iran.

On 29 July [S/1996/602], Iran said that due to the fact that Iraq was unable to exercise effective control over its territory in the north, transborder armed attacks and sabotage operations by terrorist groups against Iranian border towns, originating from Iraqi territory, had intensified and escalated, resulting in human casualties and material damages to the civilian population. Iran had taken immediate measures to curb such activities by pursuing the retreating armed groups that had attacked civilian targets in the border towns of Piranshahr, Mahabad and Oroumīyeh, and had targeted their training camps in Iraq.

In a 1 August letter [S/1996/617], Iraq said that on the night of 26-27 July, a unit of Iranian guards estimated at some 3,000 armed men, travelling in more than 100 vehicles and equipped with heavy weapons, infiltrated Iraqi territory and moved toward the town of Koi Sanjaq. The next day, Iranian forces engaged in heavy artillery shelling in the area and a number of civilians were killed or wounded. Iraq demanded that Iran immediately withdraw its forces from Iraqi territory.

On 28 December [S/1996/1076], Iraq advised the Secretary-General of an assassination attempt that was made on the Iraqi President's son, Uday Saddam Hussein, on 12 December by the Al-Da'wah Party, based in Iran and supported by the Iranian Government. Three days after the attempt, the military leader of the Al-Da'wah Party claimed responsibility for the attempt on behalf of his party. Iraq called on the Secretary-General to intervene with Iran and urge it to hand over the perpetrators of the crime so that they might be tried and punished. Alternatively, it suggested, Iran might try them in accordance with the rules of international law concerning terrorist activities.

On 2 July [S/1996/514], Iraq drew the attention of the Secretary-General to the plight of Iraqi prisoners of war in Iran, some of whom it said had been in captivity for more than 15 years. Iraq's efforts to secure their release had been to no avail and Iran had also refused to cooperate with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in the matter, the letter stated. Iraq requested the United Nations, in cooperation with ICRC, to bring pressure to bear on Iran with a view to devising a solution that would secure the release and return of the Iraqi prisoners.

Iran responded on 31 July [S/1996/616], stating that Iraq had violated the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War. According to Iran, Iraq continued to hold a number of Iranian prisoners of war incommunicado and still denied it was doing so. The letter said Iraq had also blocked, by procrastination and inaction, the implementation of a 14 September 1995 agreement to exchange complete lists of prisoners of war.

Iran-United States

In letters to the Secretary-General, Iran charged that United States forces had violated Iranian territory numerous times in 1996 and, on one occasion, allied forces operating in Iraq had violated Iranian airspace. Iran described those activities as illegal and called for an end to them.

Iran, on 10 June [S/1996/427], transmitted the text of two notes verbales that it had sent through Pakistan to the United States. In the first, Iran said that on 27 January a United States warship's radar had locked on an Iranian battleship for one minute, and at the same time a United States aircraft's radar had locked on an Iranian battleship for the same length of time. Iran protested those activities. By the second note, Iran said that United States violations of Iran's airspace and territorial sea had hindered Iran's normal patrolling of its territory.

On 20 June [S/1996/454], Iran listed four violations of Iranian airspace by aircraft of the allied forces operating in Iraq, which had occurred in December 1995 and January 1996. By a 5 August letter [S/1996/627], Iran listed three more such violations of Iranian airspace, all on 3 August, by American fighter aircraft. On 20 August [S/1996/680], Iran transmitted two notes verbales in which it protested two occurrences in April when American warships were in or near Iranian territorial waters, and of the activities of a United States helicopter in that area. On 2 December [S/1996/1001], Iran transmitted three notes verbales, which stated that in August an Iranian helicopter was forced to return to an oil platform after receiving warnings from United States forces conducting military exercises in the vicinity, action which Iran said was illegal. Iran further complained that in July American ships had jammed the system of an Iranian patrolling unit and that a United States aircraft had overflown an Iranian patrolling flotilla. On a third occasion, in May, two United States helicopters had flown over and photographed an Iranian exploratory hydrographic vessel.

Iran-United Arab Emirates

In 1996, both Iran and the United Arab Emirates, in letters to the Secretary-General, affirmed that the three islands of Greater Tunb, Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa in the Arabian Gulf were part of their sovereign territory and challenged the other's claims.

On 26 August [S/1996/692], the United Arab Emirates referred to a letter from Iran [S/1996/627] protesting that United States aircraft had violated Iranian airspace over the island of Abu Musa. The United Arab Emirates protested that the airspace over the island did not belong to Iran and charged that Iran was attempting to dominate the island and annex it by force. Furthermore, the United Arab Emirates said it was fully disposed to settle the question of sovereignty of the three islands through peaceful means, including recourse to the International Court of Justice.

Asserting that the islands were an inalienable part of its territory, the United Arab Emirates, on 11 September [S/1996/741], transmitted a section of the report of the Ministerial Council of the Cooperation Council for the Arab States of the Arabian Gulf on its sixteenth session (Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, 7-8 September). The Council stated that Iran continued to take measures to consolidate its occupation of the three islands and that such actions threatened regional peace and security. The Council reaffirmed the sovereignty of the United Arab Emirates over the three islands and its support for the peaceful measures being taken to recover that sovereignty.

By a 19 September letter [S/1996/769], Saudi Arabia transmitted a 15 September resolution adopted by the Council of the League of Arab States concerning Iran's occupation of the Arab islands belonging to the United Arab Emirates. Condemning Iran's measures to consolidate its occupation of the three islands, the Council called on Iran to end its occupation, suspend its policy of using force to impose the status quo, remove any installations and employ peaceful means to resolve the conflict.

Iran responded to those letters on 1 October [S/1996/818], emphasizing its sovereignty over the three islands and rejecting any claim to the contrary. It added that any measures it had undertaken were in conformity with arrangements made in 1971 [YUN 1971, p. 209], the year the British forces withdrew. Iran said it continued to be prepared to resolve any misunderstandings with the United Arab Emirates through bilateral dialogue and negotiations on the basis of the existing agreements.

On 11 December [A/51/717-S/1996/1030], Qatar forwarded the final communiqué of the Supreme Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council's seventeenth session (Doha, Qatar, 7-9 December), which included a section on the "occupied islands" belonging to the United Arab Emirates. The Council stated that the Iranian Government was continuing to take measures aimed at perpetuating its occupation of the three islands by pursuing a policy of imposing faits accomplis by the use of force. Such action, the Council said, jeopardized security and stability in the region, and it called on Iran to settle the matter peacefully and to remove any facilities unilaterally installed on the islands. By a letter of 18 December [A/51/757-S/1996/1057], the United Arab Emirates also forwarded the Council's text on Greater Tunb, Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa to the Secretary-General and to the President of the Security Council.

In a 26 August letter [A/50/1033] to the Secretary-General, the United Arab Emirates objected to certain provisions of Iran's 1993 Act on the Marine Areas, which, it said, were inconsistent with international law and would impede navigation in the Gulf, including transit through the Strait of Hormuz. The United Arab Emirates also declined to recognize any provisions of the Act that called into question its sovereignty over the three islands and their territorial waters. Iran, on 18 October [A/51/547], stated that its 1993 Act consolidated and supplemented existing acts and decrees pertaining to Iran's rights and jurisdiction over its marine areas. There was no provision in it to impede navigation in the Persian Gulf and the Sea of Oman, Iran said, adding that it reserved the right to make comments on certain laws in respect of the delimitation of the United Arab Emirates maritime zones that contravened the relevant rules and provisions of the international law of the sea.

Cambodia

The Office of the Secretary-General's Representative in Cambodia, set up in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 450], remained in place in Phnom Penh in 1996. The Special Representative, Benny Widyono, was assisted by one military adviser in carrying out his mandate in accordance with the spirit and principles of the 1991 Paris Agreements [YUN 1991, p. 155]. By decision of the Secretary-General, Mr. Widyono's term was extended twice during the year, both times for a six-month period. The Secretary-General informed the Security Council of each extension, on 8 April and on 13 November [S/1996/266], with which the Council agreed, on 11 April and on 15 November [S/1996/267], respectively.

The General Assembly, by decision 50/497 of 16 September 1996, included in the draft agenda of its fifty-first session an item entitled "Financing and liquidation of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia". By decision 51/460 of 18 December, the Assembly further decided that, at its resumed fifty-first session, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee should continue its consideration of that agenda item, along with 26 other agenda items and one sub-item.

India-Pakistan

The United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP) continued to monitor the situation regarding Jammu and Kashmir during 1996. Following a formal ceasefire of 15 January 1949, a plan was developed to deploy military observers in the area, which was put into effect in February 1949. Those observers, under the command of a Military Adviser, formed the nucleus of UNMOGIP. By resolution 91(1951) of 30 March 1951 [YUN 1951, p. 343], the Security Council decided that UNMOGIP should continue to supervise the ceasefire and requested the two Governments concerned to ensure that their agreement regarding the ceasefire would continue to be faithfully observed.

In 1996, UNMOGIP consisted of 44 observers from eight countries: Belgium, Chile, Denmark, Finland, Italy, the Republic of Korea, Sweden and Uruguay. It continued to be financed under the UN regular budget.

The Secretary-General, in his September 1996 report [A/51/1], said that the search for a political solution to the issue of Jammu and Kashmir through a meaningful dialogue was a matter of urgency. Reports of incidents of violence had increased considerably in recent years, and the number of casualties along the line of control remained high. Both countries had affirmed their commitment to respect the ceasefire line and to resolve the issue peacefully, he stated. He welcomed the readiness recently expressed by both Governments to resume official bilateral talks and hoped that the positive atmosphere would facilitate an early and peaceful resolution of differences between them, including Kashmir. He remained ready to render whatever assistance might be needed in that regard, should both countries find that useful.

During 1996, communications were received transmitting the text of a statement of the Contact Group on Jammu and Kashmir of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) [A/50/927-S/1996/262], dated 2 April; a statement by the official spokesman of the Government of India on 3 April [A/50/943]; and a Declaration on Jammu and Kashmir, adopted by the Ministerial Meeting of the Contact Group of the OIC on 13 August [S/1996/678].

Chapter V

Europe and the Mediterranean

The United Nations in 1996 continued to play an important role in handling the complexities emanating from the break-up of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, still dominant among its concerns in the region of Europe and the Mediterranean. Other situations in Europe in which the United Nations was involved during the year included those relating to Abkhazia in Georgia, Nagorny Karabakh in Azerbaijan, and the Mediterranean island of Cyprus.

UN peacekeeping operations continued to function in parts of the territory of the former Yugoslavia, which now comprised five independent nations—Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY), the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM), and Slovenia.

Major activities in 1996 were focused on Bosnia and Herzegovina, many connected with the implementation of two major agreements signed late in 1995. The General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Annexes Thereto (also known as the Dayton-Paris Agreement or the Peace Agreement) was initiated in Dayton, Ohio, United States, on 21 November 1995, and signed in Paris three weeks later, on 14 December 1995, by the representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and FRY. A separate Dayton Agreement on implementing the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina—one of two entities of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina (the other being the Serb-dominated Republika Srpska)—was signed on 10 November 1995. The Federation was comprised primarily of Bosnian Muslim (Bosniac) and Bosnian Croat citizens.

The new multinational military Implementation Force (IFOR) at the outset of 1996 succeeded the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) in Bosnia and Herzegovina. IFOR, with some 60,000 troops from 34 countries, led by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, was replaced at year's end by the new Stabilization Force (SFOR). The United Nations Peace Forces (UNPF), with headquarters in Zagreb, Croatia—which had overseen UN peacekeeping activities in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and FYROM for most of 1995—was also phased out in early 1996, as was the Office of the Special Coordinator for Sarajevo.

Two new peacekeeping operations for Croatia—the United Nations Transitional Authority for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) and the United Nations Mission of Observers for Prevlaka (UNMOP)—were established on the basis of the signing on 12 November 1995 of the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium. The United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) continued to monitor borders of FYROM in 1996.

The International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia (ICFY), established in 1992 to facilitate the peace process, ceased to exist on 31 January 1996. A new body—the Peace Implementation Council (PIC)—was established as the overall structure to supervise the peace process for Bosnia and Herzegovina, superseding ICFY. Carl Bildt of Sweden was appointed as High Representative by the Peace Implementation Conference to monitor and coordinate implementation of the civilian aspects of the 1995 Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement.

During the year, elections were held in Bosnia and Herzegovina, sanctions were terminated for FRY, and State succession issues continued to be addressed and resolved. Refugee problems persisted throughout the area, as did human rights concerns.

Regarding Cyprus, the Secretary-General stepped up his endeavours to convince the Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots to resume negotiations and to find a final political solution. The Security Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) until 30 June 1997.

No significant progress was achieved during the year towards a comprehensive settlement of the conflict in Georgia, including on the political status of Abkhazia. The United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) continued to monitor compliance with the 1994 ceasefire agreement. A new UN office monitored the human rights situation in Abkhazia.

The United Nations supported peacemaking efforts by the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) to obtain agreement between Armenia and Azerbaijan to end the armed conflict in Nagorny Karabakh.

In other action, the General Assembly commended the efforts by the Mediterranean countries in meeting common challenges through coordinated responses and encouraged them to strengthen their cooperation, particularly in combating terrorism, international crime, illicit arms transfers and illicit drug trafficking.

The former Yugoslavia

In 1996, peacekeeping activities and implementation of negotiated agreements dominated the work of the United Nations in the region. There were signs of progress—elections aimed at securing unified, multi-ethnic societies, the creation of common institutions, restructuring and integration of local police forces, among them. But problems related to return of refugees to their homes and human rights concerns persisted.

Three strife-torn countries of the former Yugoslavia—Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY)—appeared poised on the threshold of peace. Those new nations—since 1992 beset by violence, ethnic conflicts and uncertainties—continued to suffer tremendously from the consequences of massive population displacements, devastated infrastructures and centuries-old hatred and distrust. But the political situation in the area, according to the UN Secretary-General [A/51/1], changed dramatically during the year, in many aspects for the better.

The United Nations, together with other parties, remained committed to finding long-term solutions to the regional conflicts that had engendered so much misery and destruction. Political realities on the ground, the Secretary-General stated, warranted a departure from the past approach to peacekeeping in the area; new strategies were adopted, including the restructuring of the components of previous peacekeeping operations, which were either made independent or closed down.

A new start for many peoples of the region—Serbs, Muslims and Croats predominant among them—was signalled in the implementation in 1996 of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (known as the Dayton-Paris Agreement). Other agreements reached in 1995 also influenced events in 1996—the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (for Croatia), and the Interim Accord between Greece and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM).

The termination of sanctions against FRY was another signal of progress achieved, as were continuing advances with regard to State succession issues.

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions concerning human rights situations in the former Yugoslavia—resolution 51/111, on the situation of human rights in Kosovo; resolution 51/115, on the rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia; and resolution 51/116, on the situation of human rights in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia, and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

(For full texts of resolutions, see PART TWO, Chapter III.)

Peacekeeping activities

Major shifts in peacekeeping activities occurred in 1996 in countries of the former Yugoslavia. The United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) had originally been established in February 1992 [SC res. 743 (1992)] to deal with the situation in Croatia, and later in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in FYROM. The restructuring of UNPROFOR in March 1995 resulted in the creation of three separate but interlinked operations: a new United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia (UNCRO); a continued UNPROFOR for Bosnia and Herzegovina; and an extended United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) for FYROM. They were known collectively as the United Nations Peace Forces (UNPF), with headquarters in Zagreb, Croatia.

At the end of 1995, when major peace accords were signed for the region, the mandates of UNPROFOR and UNCRO were terminated. UNPROFOR was terminated on 20 December 1995, and replaced by a multinational military Implementation Force (IFOR), under the command of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), and incorporating some elements of the former UNPROFOR. Later in 1996, IFOR was replaced by the Stabilization Force (SFOR).

The Security Council in December 1995 had authorized the establishment of an International Police Task Force (IPTF) and a United Nations civilian office with certain responsibilities, including assisting the parties in maintaining civilian law enforcement agencies in accordance with internationally accepted standards. On 6 February 1996, the Secretary-General reported that that operation would henceforth be known as the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH).

UNCRO was succeeded in early 1996 by two new operations for Croatia: the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) and the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP). UNPREDEP continued its work as an independent mission, beginning on 1 February 1996.

Under-Secretary-General Kofi Annan was appointed on 1 November 1995, on a temporary basis, as Special Representative of the Secretary-General in the Former Yugoslavia. His mandate was to coordinate the complex activities associated with winding up two existing peacekeeping missions—UNPROFOR and UNCRO—and establishing three new ones—UNMIBH, UNTAES and UNMOP. A fourth peacekeeping operation for the region—UNPREDEP—continued in 1996 to monitor the situation in FYROM.

Mr. Annan also had the task of ensuring a smooth transfer of responsibilities from the United Nations to IFOR, which had been authorized by the Security Council to ensure compliance with the military aspects of the Peace Agreement. His headquarters was located in Zagreb, alongside the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters (UNPF-HQ), which had overseen the work of UNPROFOR, UNPREDEP and UNCRO in 1995, and was phased out in 1996.

To provide policy direction, a Steering Committee on Transition of Responsibilities in the Former Yugoslavia was established during the transition period. Composed of UN civilian and military personnel and the NATO liaison officer to UNPF, it assisted the Special Representative in matters pertaining to UN agencies and programmes involved in implementing the Peace Agreement, as well as the transition of responsibilities from UNPROFOR to IFOR. Upon Mr. Annan's departure on 29 February 1996, a small Transition Office for the Former Yugoslavia took over responsibility for the liquidation of the former UNPF mission and for the continued provision of common support services to the four successor operations—UNMIBH, UNTAES, UNMOP and UNPREDEP. (For more information on activities of peacekeeping operations, see under "Bosnia and Herzegovina", "Croatia" and "The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia". Financing details and resolutions follow.)

Combined financing of UN operations

During its resumed fiftieth session, on 28 February 1996, the General Assembly, responding to requests from the Secretary-General

[A/50/238/Rev.1, A/50/239, A/50/240], adopted decision 50/402 B. By that decision, the Assembly included in the agenda of its fiftieth session three items—on the financing of UNMIBH, of UNTAES and of UNPREDEP—and allocated them to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

In March, the Secretary-General presented cost estimates [A/50/696/Add.4 & Corr.1] for UN operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina for the period 1 January to 30 June 1996. The estimates covered the phasing-out costs of UNPROFOR, UNCRO and UNPF-HQ; start-up and maintenance costs of UNMIBH and UNTAES; as well as maintenance costs of UNPREDEP. For administrative and budgetary purposes, the estimates for UNMOP and the Office of the Special Coordinator for Sarajevo were included with those of UNMIBH; estimates for the liaison offices in Belgrade and Zagreb were included with those of UNTAES. The related recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [A/50/903] was for a commitment authority, pending its detailed consideration of those estimates.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (April)

As an interim action, therefore, the General Assembly in April adopted decision 50/481.

Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters; financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina; financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium; and financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force

At its 104th plenary meeting, on 11 April 1996, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, having considered the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments for the preliquidation of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters, as well as the maintenance of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force for the period from 1 January to 31 May 1996 in the amount of 100 million United States dollars gross (98,430,700 dollars net);

(b) Decided, as an ad hoc arrangement, to assess the amount of 50 million dollars gross (49,215,350 dollars net) to the Special Account established by the General Assembly in its resolution 46/233 of 19 March 1992, consisting of 14 million dollars gross (13,780,300 dollars net) for the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, 29.5 million dollars gross (29,037,100 dollars net) for the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and 6.5 million dollars gross (6,397,950 dollars net) for the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force, for the period from 1 January to 31 May 1996 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995 and 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1996;

(c) Also decided that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there should be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph (b) above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 784,650 dollars approved for the operations for the period from 1 January to 31 May 1996;

(d) Further decided to undertake a detailed review of the cost estimates for those operations for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1996 at the second part of its resumed session, before 10 May 1996.

General Assembly decision 50/481

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/796/Add.2) without vote, 4 April (meeting 55); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.37), based on informal consultations; agenda items 128, 167, 168 & 169.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

ACABQ subsequently examined the Secretary-General's 1 January-30 June 1996 estimates [A/50/696/Add.4 & Corr.1], together with a later addendum [A/50/696/Add.5] containing estimated liquidation costs of UNPROFOR, UNCRO and UNPF-HQ for an eight-month period, from 1 July 1996 to 28 February 1997, and central support costs (communications, transport and air operations) for UNTAES, UNMIBH and UNPREDEP for a 12-month period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997.

On the basis of the Fifth Committee's consideration of the Secretary-General's cost estimates and of ACABQ's related report [A/50/903/Add.1], the Assembly on 7 June 1996 adopted resolution 50/235.

Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 727(1992) of 8 January 1992 and 740(1992) of 7 February 1992, in which the Council endorsed the sending of a group of military liaison officers to Yugoslavia to promote maintenance of the ceasefire,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 743(1992) of 21 February 1992, by which the Council established the United Nations Protection Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended and expanded its mandate,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 981(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council established the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, to be known as UNCRO,

Recalling Security Council resolution 983(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council decided that the United Nations Protection Force within the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia should be known as the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1025(1995) of 30 November 1995, by which the Council decided to terminate the mandate of the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia on 15 January 1996,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995, in which the Council decided to terminate the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force on the date on which the Secretary-General reported that the transfer of authority from the United Nations Protection Force to the Implementation Force had taken place,

Recalling the letter dated 1 February 1996 from the President of the Security Council to the Secretary-General informing him of the Council's concurrence in principle that the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force become an independent mission,

Recalling also its resolution 46/233 of 19 March 1992 on the financing of the United Nations Protection Force and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996,

Reaffirming that the costs of the combined Forces are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the combined Forces, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the combined Forces by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the combined Forces with the necessary financial resources to enable them to fulfil their responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the combined Forces as at 21 May 1996, including the contributions unpaid in the amount of 738.4 million United States dollars, representing 16 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the United Nations Protection Force to the period ending 31 March 1996, notes that some 22 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the combined Forces in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the combined Forces are administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit the performance report covering the period from 1 July to 31 December 1995, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, to the General Assembly by 15 August 1996;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to clarify, in consultation with the Member State(s) concerned, the value, calculated according to standard United Nations procedures, of those budgeted contributions in kind which served to reduce the amount assessed on Member States for the rapid reaction capacity, and to report thereon to the General Assembly as soon as possible;

9. Decides that all expenses for the rapid reaction capacity of the United Nations Protection Force, including the agreed value of such budgeted contributions in kind, should be included within the assessed budget for the combined Forces;

10. Decides also to review the resource requirements of the United Nations Protection Force in the light of the performance report requested in paragraph 7 and the information requested in paragraph 8 above;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to return to the Member States concerned the unspent cash contributions made to the sub-account for the rapid reaction capacity established pursuant to paragraph 15 of General Assembly resolution 49/248 of 20 July 1995, and also requests him to take the necessary steps to close the sub-account;

12. Takes note of the comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, as contained in paragraph 18 of its report, on provisions for reimbursement for contingent-owned equipment;

13. Welcomes the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General to process outstanding contingent-owned equipment reimbursement claims, and requests him to take urgent steps to clear the backlog of such claims to enable speedier liquidation of the combined Forces;

14. Decides to keep the amounts budgeted for provision for reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment under review, pending completion of the process noted in paragraph 13 above;

15. Urges the Secretary-General to review, on an urgent basis, the concerns regarding decentralization of administrative functions, such as recruitment and placement, movement control, training, repatriation and procurement, and reducing the overall number of administrative staff, which were raised in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and to report thereon by 1 July 1996 to the General Assembly;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to develop revised cost estimates for third-party claims and adjustments, following completion of the thorough study to be completed by the Legal Counsel and taking into account the issues raised in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and to submit them, through the Advisory Committee, to the General Assembly;

17. Decides that any expenditures for disposal of hazardous wastes, such as contaminated petrol, oil and lubricants, batteries, used tyres and other wastes, shall be consistent with prior practice in other missions;

18. Decides also to appropriate to the special account referred to in General Assembly resolution 46/233 the amount of 100 million dollars gross (99,569,800 dollars net) already authorized and apportioned under the terms of Assembly resolution 49/248 for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1995;

19. Decides further to appropriate the amount of 115,373,000 dollars gross (113,866,300 dollars net) already authorized by the General Assembly in its decision 50/410 A of 4 December 1995 for the period from 1 to 31 December 1995;

20. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into additional commitments in the amount of 90,562,100 dollars gross (89,826,050 dollars net) for the pre-liquidation of the combined Forces for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1996, taking into account the amount of 100 million dollars gross (98,430,700 dollars net) already authorized by the General Assembly in its decision 50/410 B of 23 December 1995 and the amount of 50 million dollars gross (49,215,350 dollars net) already authorized by the Assembly in its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 for the period from 1 January to 31 May 1996;

21. Also authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the liquidation of the combined Forces and the provision of common support for the three-month period from 1 July to 30 September 1996 at a monthly rate not to exceed 6,231,150 dollars gross (5,787,200 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 99,400 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations;

22. Invites voluntary contributions to the combined Forces in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

23. Decides to revert to the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters" at its resumed fiftieth session.

General Assembly resolution 50/235

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/796/Add.3) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.60), based on informal consultations and orally revised; agenda item 128.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 59, 64 (resumed); plenary 120.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (November)

Because of the late issuance of the requested UNPF performance report for the second half of 1995, thus precluding its immediate review by ACABQ, and given that paragraph 21 of resolution 50/235 provided for financial arrangements only to 30 September 1996 for liquidation and common support purposes, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/50/796/Add.4], adopted decision 50/410 C on 17 September. By that decision, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the liquidation of the combined Forces and the provision of common support for the period 1 to 31 October 1996 in the amount of $6,231,150 gross ($5,787,200 net).

In October, the Fifth Committee considered, in addition to the financial performance report of UNPROFOR, UNCRO, UNPREDEP and UNPF-HQ for 1 July to 31 December 1995 [A/50/696/Add.7], a further report by the Secretary-General on the results of an in-depth review undertaken in June [A/50/696/Add.6] of ACABQ's concerns [A/50/903/Add.1] regarding decentralization of additional administrative support functions (recruitment and placement, movement control, training, repatriation, procurement) of UNMIBH, UNTAES and UNPREDEP, as well as reducing the overall number of administrative staff. Accompanying those reports were ACABQ's related comments and observations [A/51/497]. Also considered was a report by the Secretariat's Office of Internal Oversight Services [A/51/305] on its review of the management structure in the civilian staff component of UNPF.

On 4 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 51/12 A.

Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Having considered also the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the review of the management structure in the civilian staff component of the United Nations Peace Forces,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 727(1992) of 8 January 1992 and 740(1992) of 7 February 1992, in which the Council endorsed the sending of a group of military liaison officers to Yugoslavia to promote maintenance of the ceasefire,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 743(1992) of 21 February 1992, by which the Council established the United Nations Protection Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended and expanded its mandate,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 981(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council established the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, to be known as UNCRO,

Recalling Security Council resolution 983(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council decided that the United Nations Protection Force within the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia should be known as the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1025(1995) of 30 November 1995, in which the Council decided to terminate the mandate of the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia on 15 January 1996,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995, in which the Council decided to terminate the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force on the date on which the Secretary-General reported that the transfer of authority from the United Nations Protection Force to the Implementation Force had taken place,

Recalling the letter dated 1 February 1996 from the President of the Security Council to the Secretary-General informing him of the Council's concurrence in principle that the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force become an independent mission,

Recalling also its resolution 46/233 of 19 March 1992 on the financing of the United Nations Protection Force and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was decision 50/410 C of 17 September 1996,

Reaffirming that the costs of the combined Forces are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the combined Forces, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the combined Forces by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the combined Forces with the necessary financial resources to enable them to fulfil their responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the combined Forces as at 23 October 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 731.8 million United States dollars, representing 16 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the United Nations Protection Force to the period ending 31 March 1996, notes that some 32 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the combined Forces in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

6. Endorses also the recommendations made by the Office of Internal Oversight Services in its report on the review of the management structure in the civilian staff component of the United Nations Peace Forces, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that those recommendations are fully taken into account in the future planning of United Nations peacekeeping missions;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to issue no later than 8 December 1996 the performance report for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1996;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his next report on the financing of the combined Forces updated information on the status of liquidation of the United Nations Protection Force and the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, including costs, staffing levels, a description of difficulties that have been encountered, the Secretary-General's assessment of the progress of liquidation and projections regarding its completion;

9. Expresses its concern about the payment by the combined Forces of charges for items that should have been provided without cost under the status-of-forces agreements;

10. Urges the Secretary-General to convey the concerns of the General Assembly to the Governments concerned, as well as the request by the Assembly that the Governments reimburse the combined Forces for those expenditures, and requests the Secretary-General to withhold settlement of claims submitted by the Governments concerned until the matter of the expenditures is resolved and to include information on efforts to obtain reimbursement in the next report on the financing of the combined Forces;

11. Reminds all Member States that are host to a United Nations peacekeeping mission of the importance of concluding a status-of-forces agreement with the United Nations when a mission has been authorized and of their obligation to comply fully with the terms of such agreements, when concluded;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the combined Forces are administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

13. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 115,373,000 dollars gross (113,866,300 dollars net), already appropriated by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/235 of 7 June 1996, for the period from 1 to 31 December 1995 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1995 as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

14. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,506,700 dollars approved for the period from 1 to 31 December 1995;

15. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the combined Forces, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the amount of 115,373,000 dollars gross (113,866,300 dollars net) from the unencumbered balance of 227,406,878 dollars gross (227,911,279 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 31 December 1995;

16. Decides that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their obligations to the combined Forces, their share in the amount of 115,373,000 dollars gross (113,866,300 dollars net) from the unencumbered balance of 227,406,878 dollars gross (227,911,279 dollars net) for the period ending 31 December 1995 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

17. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the liquidation of the combined Forces and the provision of common support for the period from 1 November to 31 December 1996 in the amount of 12,462,300 dollars gross (11,574,400 dollars net);

18. Invites voluntary contributions to the combined Forces in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

19. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-first session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters".

General Assembly resolution 51/12 A

4 November 1996 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/639) without vote, 31 October (meeting 17); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.7), based on informal consultations; agenda item 129.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

In December, the Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report [A/51/701] on the financial performance of UNPROFOR, UNCRO, UNPREDEP and UNPF-HQ for the six-month period from 1 January to 30 June 1996, adopted decision 51/457.

Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters

At its 89th plenary meeting, on 18 December 1996, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, recalling its resolution 51/12 A of 4 November 1996 on the financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters and pending its review of the performance report on the combined Forces for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1996:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General to enter into additional commitments for the liquidation of the combined Forces and the provision of common support for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 in the amount of 12,860,300 United States dollars gross (12,227,800 dollars net), inclusive of the additional amount of 895,000 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations;

(b) Requested the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to address the relevant findings and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, the Office of Internal Oversight Services and the Board of Auditors in respect of the combined Forces.

General Assembly decision 51/457

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/639/Add.1) without vote, 17 December (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.26), based on informal consultations; agenda item 129.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 41, 46; plenary 89.

By decision 51/460 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that, at its resumed fifty-first session, the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the agenda item on the financing of the combined UN Peace Forces along with 26 other agenda items and one sub-item.

UNMIBH financing

In February, at its resumed fiftieth session, the General Assembly included in its agenda an item on the financing of UNMIBH, and in April acted to provide for its initial financing from inception to 30 June 1996 (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On the basis of the Fifth Committee's consideration of the Secretary-General's report on budget estimates for the maintenance of UNMIBH for the 12-month period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 [A/50/906], together with the observations and consequent recommendations of ACABQ [A/50/903/Add.1], the Assembly, on 7 June, adopted resolution 50/241.

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1035(1995) of 21 December 1995, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina for a period of one year,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1038(1996) of 15 January 1996, by which the Council authorized the United Nations military observers to continue to monitor the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula,

Recalling further its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Mission,

Recognizing that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina in full and on time;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

6. Decides to appropriate the amount of 43,849,300 United States dollars gross (42,662,500 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1996, inclusive of the amount of 14 million dollars gross (13,780,300 dollars net) authorized for the period from 1 January to 31 May 1996 under the provisions of General Assembly decision 50/481, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Mission in accordance with paragraph 46 of his report;

7. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 14 million dollars gross (13,780,300 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with General Assembly decision 50/481, to apportion the additional amount of 29,849,300 dollars gross (28,882,200 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1996 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1996, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

8. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 967,100 dollars approved for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1996;

9. Takes note of the cost estimate of the Secretary-General in the amount of 158,799,600 dollars gross (150,854,700 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

10. Decides to appropriate the amount of 75,619,800 dollars gross (72,225,600 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996, inclusive of the amount of 1,918,300 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be assessed on Member States at a monthly rate of 12,603,300 dollars gross (12,037,600 dollars net) in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 20 December 1996;

11. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 3,394,200 dollars approved for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996;

12. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina".

General Assembly resolution 50/241

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/966) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.58), based on informal consultations; agenda item 167.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 59, 64 (resumed); plenary 120.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 16 December 1996, during the Assembly's fifty-first session, following the Fifth Committee's consideration of the Secretary-General's updated cost estimates for UNMIBH for the same 12-month period above [A/51/519 & Corr.1] showing a 1.1 per cent decrease in gross terms from his original estimates, together with the related observations of ACABQ [A/51/681], the Assembly adopted resolution 51/152 A.

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1035(1995) of 21 December 1995, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina for a period of one year,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1066(1996) of 15 July 1996, in which the Council authorized the United Nations military observers to continue to monitor the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula,

Recalling further its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 and its resolution 50/241 of 7 June 1996 on the financing of the Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decision regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina as at 30 November 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 13.7 million United States dollars, representing 12 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Mission to the period ending 20 December 1996, notes that some 27 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides to appropriate the amount of 75,619,800 dollars gross (72,225,600 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, inclusive of the amount of 1,918,300 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, in addition to the amount of 75,619,800 dollars gross (72,225,600 dollars net) already appropriated for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996 under the provisions of General Assembly resolution 50/241;

8. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 75,619,800 dollars gross (72,225,600 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/241, to apportion the additional amount of 75,619,800 dollars gross (72,225,600 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 among Member States at a monthly rate of 12,603,300 dollars gross (12,037,600 dollars net) in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission beyond 20 December 1996;

9. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 3,394,200 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

10. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

11. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-first session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina".

General Assembly resolution 51/152 A

16 December 1996 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/710) without vote, 6 December (meeting 37); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.12), based on informal consultations; agenda item 153.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee, 35, 37; plenary 85.

On 4 December, the Secretary-General submitted budget estimates for the maintenance of UNMIBH for a further 12-month period, from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [A/51/519/Add.1]. In that connection, the Assembly, by decision 51/460 of 18 December, decided that, at its resumed fifty-first session, the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the agenda item on the financing of UNMIBH, along with 26 other items and one sub-item.

UNTAES financing

As a follow-up to his 1995 recommendations [YUN 1995, p. 589] for a UN transitional administration and peacekeeping force to oversee implementation of the Basic Agreement, the Secretary-General, on 15 January 1996 [S/1995/1028/Add.1], submitted a preliminary cost estimate of approximately $128.5 million associated with the emplacement and maintenance of such an operation for six months. That would provide for 5,000 contingent personnel, 600 UN civilian police, 469 international civilian staff and 681 locally recruited staff. A breakdown of the estimate by main categories of expenditure was also submitted.

The Secretary-General recommended that the cost should be considered an expense of the Organization to be borne by Member States and that the corresponding assessments to be levied on them be credited to a special account to be set up for the purpose.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (February and April)

At its resumed fiftieth session, the General Assembly, by decision 50/402 B of 28 February 1996, included in the agenda of that session an item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium" and allocated it to the Fifth Committee. By decision 50/481 of 11 April, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments for the maintenance of UNTAES, among other UN operations.

In March and April, the Secretary-General presented budget estimates for the maintenance of UNTAES from 1 January to 30 June 1996 [A/50/696/Add.4 & Corr.1] and from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 [A/50/909]. For administrative and budgetary purposes, the estimates included the requirements for the liaison offices in Belgrade and Zagreb, although they were independent offices reporting directly to UN Headquarters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On the basis of the cost estimates and of the related ACABQ observations and recommendations [A/50/903/Add.1], the Assembly on 7 June adopted resolution 50/242.

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1037(1996) of 15 January 1996, by which the Council established the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium for an initial period of twelve months,

Recalling also its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Transitional Administration,

Recognizing that the costs of the Transitional Administration are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Transitional Administration, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Transitional Administration with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium in full and on time;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Transitional Administration is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

6. Decides to appropriate an amount of 94,269,700 United States dollars gross (93,073,300 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Transitional Administration for the period from 15 January to 30 June 1996, inclusive of the amount of 29,500,000 dollars gross (29,037,100 dollars net) authorized for the period from 15 January to 31 May 1996 under the provisions of General Assembly decision 50/481, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Transitional Administration in accordance with paragraph 46 of his report;

7. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 29,500,000 dollars gross (29,037,100 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with General Assembly decision 50/481, to apportion an additional amount of 64,769,700 dollars gross (64,036,200 dollars net) for the period from 15 January to 30 June 1996 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993

and 50/451/B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1996 as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

8. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 733,500 dollars approved for the period from 15 January to 30 June 1996;

9. Takes note of the cost estimate of the Secretary-General in the amount of 284,776,500 dollars gross (275,350,500 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

10. Decides to appropriate the amount of 140,484,350 dollars gross (136,087,550 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996, inclusive of the amount of 3,440,050 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be assessed on Member States at a monthly rate of 23,414,100 dollars gross (22,681,300 dollars net), in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

11. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 4,396,800 dollars approved for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996;

12. Invites voluntary contributions to the Transitional Administration in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium".

General Assembly resolution 50/242

7 June 1996      Meeting 120      Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/967) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.57), based on informal consultations; agenda item 168.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 59, 64 (resumed); plenary 120.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

Subsequently, during the fifty-first session, the Secretary-General revised the cost estimates for the maintenance of UNTAES and the Belgrade and Zagreb liaison offices for 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 [A/51/520]. In the light of the revised estimates and of the related ACABQ comments and recommendations [A/51/681], the Assembly, on 16 December 1996, adopted resolution 51/153 A.

Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 1037(1996) of 15 January 1996, by which the Council established the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium for an initial period of twelve months, and 1079(1996) of 15 November 1996, in which the Council extended the mandate of the Transitional Administration to 15 July 1997,

Recalling also its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 and its resolution 50/242 of 7 June 1996 on the financing of the Transitional Administration,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Transitional Administration are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decision regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Transitional Administration, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that a voluntary contribution has been made to the Transitional Administration by a Government,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Transitional Administration with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium as at 30 November 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 53.6 million United States dollars, representing 23 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Transitional Administration to the period ending 31 December 1996, notes that some 27 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Transitional Administration in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Transitional Administration is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides to appropriate the amount of 140,484,350 dollars gross (136,087,550 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Transitional Administration for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, inclusive of the amount of 3,440,050 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, in addition to the amount of 140,484,350 dollars gross (136,087,550 dollars net) already appropriated for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996 under the provisions of General Assembly resolution 50/242;

8. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 140,484,350 dollars gross (136,087,550 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/242, to apportion an additional amount of 140,484,350 dollars gross (136,087,550 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1997 as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

9. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 4,396,800 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

10. Invites voluntary contributions to the Transitional Administration in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

11. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-first session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium".

General Assembly resolution 51/153 A
16 December 1996 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/711) without vote, 6 December (meeting 37); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.11), based on informal consultations; agenda item 154.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 35, 37; plenary 85.

By decision 51/462 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the financing of UNTAES remained for consideration during the fifty-first session.

UNMOP financing

Although an independent mission, for administrative and budgetary purposes, UNMOP was treated as part of UNMIBH. Therefore, on 29 March, the Secretary-General reported on UNMIBH financing [A/50/906], including cost estimates of $2 million for maintaining UNMOP for a 12-month period beginning on 1 July 1996. On 3 July [S/1996/502/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted cost estimates of $500,000 for a three-month extension of UNMOP until 15 October 1996.

UNPREDEP financing

By decision 50/402 B of 28 February, the General Assembly included in its agenda an item on the financing of UNPREDEP, and, on 11 April, granted the Secretary-General authority to enter into commitments required for its maintenance from 1 January to 31 May 1996 (decision 50/481).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (June)

On 7 June, following a review of cost estimates for UNPREDEP for the six-month period from 1 January to 30 June 1996 [A/50/696/Add.4 & Corr.1], and for the 12-month period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 [A/50/895], together with related observations and recommendations of ACABQ [A/50/903/Add.1], the Assembly adopted resolution 50/243.

Financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 983(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council decided that the United Nations Protection Force within the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia should be known as the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force, and 1027(1995) of 30 November 1995, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force until 30 May 1996,

Recalling also its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 on the financing of the Force,

Recognizing that the costs of the Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

3. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force in full and on time;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

6. Decides to appropriate the amount of 20,914,200 United States dollars gross (20,562,300 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 January to 30 May 1996, inclusive of the amount of 6,500,000 dollars gross (6,397,950 dollars net) authorized for the period from 1 January to 30 May 1996 under the provisions of General Assembly decision 50/481, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Force in accordance with paragraph 46 of his report;

7. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 6,500,000 dollars gross (6,397,950 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with General Assembly decision 50/481, to apportion an additional amount of 14,414,200 dollars gross (14,164,350 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 30 May 1996 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1996, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995;

8. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of

249,850 dollars approved for the period from 1 January to 30 May 1996;

9. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in the amount of 4,237,100 dollars gross (4,132,500 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 31 May to 30 June 1996, to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 30 May 1996;

10. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 104,600 dollars approved for the period from 31 May to 30 June 1996;

11. Takes note of the cost estimate of the Secretary-General in the amount of 52,351,500 dollars gross (50,835,900 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

12. Decides to appropriate the amount of 26,296,200 dollars gross (25,538,400 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996, inclusive of the amount of 632,400 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be assessed on Member States at a monthly rate of 4,382,700 dollars gross (4,256,400 dollars net), in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 30 May 1996;

13. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 757,800 dollars approved for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996;

14. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force".

General Assembly resolution 50/243

7 June 1996                      Meeting 120                      Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/968) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.59), based on informal consultations; agenda item 169.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 59, 64 (resumed); plenary 120.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 16 December, the Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's revised cost estimates for UNPREDEP for the 12-month period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 [A/51/508 & Corr.1], together with ACABQ's observations [A/51/681], adopted resolution 51/154 A.

Financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 983(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council decided that the United Nations Protection Force within the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia should be known as the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force, and 1082(1996) of 27 November 1996, in which the Council extended the mandate of the Force until 31 May 1997,

Recalling also its decision 50/481 of 11 April 1996 and its resolution 50/243 of 7 June 1996 on the financing of the Force,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decision regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force as at 30 November 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 10.6 million United States dollars, representing 23 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending 30 November 1996, notes that some 28 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides to appropriate the amount of 4,237,100 dollars gross (4,132,500 dollars net) already authorized and apportioned in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/243 for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 31 May to 30 June 1996;

8. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 25,373,400 dollars gross (24,615,600 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, inclusive of the amount of 632,400 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, in addition to the amount of 26,296,200 dollars gross (25,538,400 dollars net), already appropriated for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996 under the provisions of General Assembly resolution 50/243;

9. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 26,296,200 dollars gross (25,538,400 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/243, to apportion an additional amount of 25,373,400 dollars gross (24,615,600 dollars net) for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 among Member States at a monthly rate of 4,228,900 dollars gross (4,102,600 dollars net) in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 31 May 1997;

10. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 757,800 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

11. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

12. Decides to keep under review during its fifty-first session the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force".

General Assembly resolution 51/154 A

16 December 1996 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/712) without vote, 6 December (meeting 37); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.13), based on informal consultations; agenda item 155.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 35, 37; plenary 85.

State succession issues

The High Representative, appointed by the 1995 London Peace Implementation Conference (see below, under "Bosnia and Herzegovina") [S/1996/542, S/1996/814], reported that the Special Negotiator on State Succession Issues held separate discussions with each of the five successor States of the former Yugoslavia—Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY), the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM), and Slovenia—in several rounds of talks between April and September.

Pending resolution of the succession issues, FRY concluded three separate agreements—with FYROM, on 8 April [S/1996/291]; with Croatia, on 23 August [A/51/318-S/1996/706]; and with Bosnia and Herzegovina, on 3 October [A/51/461-S/1996/830]. The agreements took the form of joint declarations aimed at normalizing relations between the countries, and were transmitted to the Security Council and the Secretary-General. By them, the parties undertook, inter alia, to respect each other as independent States within their international borders; to respect each other's sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence; to establish diplomatic relations at the ambassadorial level; and to resolve issues of succession on the basis of the rules of international law on succession of States and through agreement.

FRY stated that it undertook to respect the integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina in accordance with the Peace Agreement, "which affirmed the continuity of various forms of statal organization of Bosnia and Herzegovina and that the peoples of Bosnia and Herzegovina had during their history". For its part, Bosnia and Herzegovina accepted "the State continuity of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia".

Following the conclusion of the agreement between FRY and FYROM, the European Union (EU) Presidency issued a statement [S/1996/296] by which, inter alia, it stated that it regarded that development as opening the way to recognition by EU member States, in accordance with their respective procedures, of FRY as one of the successor States to the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and that, hereafter, the position of FRY within the international community would depend on its constructive approach towards, among other issues, the question of State succession.

Communication. By a letter [A/51/564-S/1996/885] dated 28 October 1996 from Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, FYROM and Slovenia addressed to the Secretary-General, the States declared their position with respect to questions resulting from the dissolution of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia which related to the membership of the successor States in the United Nations. Those questions constituted a part of the issue of State succession and had to be settled in accordance with international law and the relevant decisions taken by the competent organs of the United Nations, they said.

The relevant decisions in the case of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia were contained in Security Council resolution 777(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 138] and, most recently, resolution 1022(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 545], as well as in General Assembly resolution 47/1 [YUN 1992, p. 139]. In its resolution 777(1992), the Security Council stated that the State formerly known as the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had ceased to exist, and that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) had to apply for membership in the United Nations. Those resolutions continued to be applicable and had to be strictly adhered to.

All States that had emerged from the dissolution of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, which had ceased to exist, were equal successor States, the four States declared. FRY also had to follow the procedure for admission of new Member States to the United Nations, which would enable the Organization to make its judgement on whether the conditions set out in Article 4 of the Charter of the United Nations had been met.

End of sanctions

In tandem with progress in the peace process, the Security Council in November 1995, by resolution 1022(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 545], had suspended indefinitely most sanctions imposed as a result of conflicts in the former Yugoslavia. Measures that had been imposed with regard to the Bosnian Serb party were suspended indefinitely starting on 27 February 1996, after the Council had been informed the day before that the Commander of IFOR had determined that Bosnian Serb forces had withdrawn from the zones of separation established in the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement. The High Representative on 29 September had reported [S/1996/814] that elections called for by the Peace Agreement, which were considered an essential step towards achieving the Agreement's objectives, had taken place on 14 September.

Resolution 1022(1995) had specified that sanctions against FRY would be terminated on the tenth day following the occurrence of the first free and fair elections provided for in Annex 3 of the Peace Agreement.

On 1 October, the Security Council, in unanimously adopting resolution 1074(1996), terminated, with immediate effect, the sanctions imposed in 1995, under resolution 1022(1995), against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (see under "Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)" below).

Bosnia and Herzegovina

With the signing of the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement in December 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 544], the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina entered into a new phase of shared responsibilities in 1996 between the United Nations and other segments of the international community, the Secretary-General reported in August 1996 [A/51/1]. Over the course of the year, a major transition was required on a number of levels, relating to negotiating and implementation machinery, international military and UN peacekeeping operations, and oversight of civilian aspects of the Peace Agreement, including elections, refugees and human rights violations, among others.

The Secretary-General declared that there were credible prospects for a viable and lasting peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, provided that all parties cooperated in the Agreement's implementation. Despite encouraging results in the implementation of its military aspects, serious efforts were still required to achieve progress in other areas, and it would be wrong to underestimate the difficulties that lay ahead, he said.

Restrictions on freedom of movement and the intolerance demonstrated by all parties remained serious obstacles to the process of reconciliation and reconstruction, he went on. The peace process had not yet become irreversible. A real danger remained that the country would be partitioned along ethnic lines and that that could lead to resumption of hostilities in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Joint efforts by the international community and the genuine cooperation of all parties were required to restore the multi-ethnic character of Bosnia and Herzegovina and to overcome the pain and hatred built up over the past four years, the Secretary-General concluded.

As the new multinational military Implementation Force (IFOR) was deployed in early 1996, the United Nations role in Bosnia and Herzegovina, in keeping with the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement, was limited to two key tasks: the work of the International Police Task Force (IPTF)—primarily monitoring and training local law enforcement officials to help create a secure environment and prevent human rights violations—and the return of refugees and displaced persons.

In December 1995, the Security Council had authorized the creation of IFOR and the transfer to it of the authority and functions of the main UN peacekeeping operation for Bosnia and Herzegovina—the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR). Led by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), IFOR was deployed early in 1996, following the termination of UNPROFOR on 20 December 1995. Of 21,000 UNPROFOR troops, about 18,500 were designated to stay on as part of IFOR. By the end of 1996, IFOR consisted of 60,000 troops from 16 NATO countries and 18 non-NATO countries. It was succeeded on 12 December by the new Stabilization Force (SFOR).

During 1996, IFOR worked closely with the newly created IPTF, the major component of the new United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH), which also comprised a civilian affairs office and the Mine Action Centre.

The International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia (ICFY), established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 327] to guide the peace process for the entire region, was terminated on 31 January 1996 and succeeded by a Peace Implementation Council (PIC) and its Steering Board, with the main function of overseeing the Peace Agreement for Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The PIC Steering Board members included Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom, the United States, the Presidency of the European Union (EU), the European Commission and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC).

A Peace Implementation Conference had been convened in London on 8 and 9 December 1995, just before the signing of the Peace Agreement, to mobilize the international community in support of a new start for the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina. In addition to establishing PIC and its Steering Board, the Conference appointed Carl Bildt, former Co-Chairman of the ICFY Steering Committee, as the High Representative to oversee civilian aspects of the Agreement.

A second Peace Implementation Conference was held in London in December 1996 to review the first year of implementation of the Agreement (see below).

On 1 February 1996, Iqbal Riza was appointed as Special Representative and Coordinator of the United Nations Operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, succeeding Antonio Pedauye, who in January had served as Interim UN Coordinator. Mr. Riza had authority over IPTF and the UN civilian office and also coordinated other UN activities, including those relating to humanitarian relief and refugees, demining, human rights and economic rehabilitation. He also coordinated with the High Representative and with international organizations working in the field.

The High Representative established his main headquarters in Sarajevo, where he also served as head of UNMIBH. In April 1996, the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator for Sarajevo, William Eagleton, was closed.

During the year, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) was called on to assist in fostering regional stabilization, and to oversee elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina, as called for in the Peace Agreement. The voting took place on 14 September.

The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) was asked to develop a repatriation plan for the early, peaceful, orderly and phased return of refugees and displaced persons. Other UN agencies and programmes—including the World Bank, UNDP, WFP, WHO, ILO, UNESCO and UNICEF—contributed to the launching of economic reconstruction and rehabilitation—another goal of the Peace Agreement.

On 9 December, the Secretary-General reported [S/1996/1017] that many positive developments had occurred in Bosnia and Herzegovina during 1996: the massive presence of IFOR had ended the fighting; 2.4 million persons had participated in elections; and joint institutions had been established.

However, he warned, the country was still very far from the unified society in which all peoples would enjoy the widespread freedoms envisaged in the Peace Agreement. The three parties had failed to implement in good faith those aspects of the Agreement that would bind together the communities in the country.

Freedom of movement and the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes of origin were far from being secured. Harassment of minorities persisted. Nationalist leaders of Republika Srpska, as well as some Croat leaders, had continued to advocate complete separation of their territories from Bosnia and Herzegovina. Unless those nationalistic aspirations were abandoned soon, the prospect of restoring a united Bosnia and Herzegovina, for which the international community had made such an enormous effort, would fade.

Background

The General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Annexes Thereto [A/50/790-S/1995/999] was initialled in Dayton, Ohio, United States, on 21 November 1995 by three parties: the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia, and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

On the eve of the signing of the Agreement, which took place on 14 December 1995 in Paris, the Secretary-General stated [S/1995/1031] that the Agreement offered real hope of bringing to an end the tragic conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Its implementation, together with that of other negotiated agreements for the region, would end the terrible suffering inflicted on its peoples for so many years, and a major source of instability in Europe would be removed.

By the 11-article Peace Agreement, known as the Dayton-Paris Agreement, the parties recognized the need for a comprehensive settlement to bring an end to the tragic conflict in the region, as well as their desire to contribute towards that end and to promote an enduring peace and stability.

Under the Agreement, the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina assumed the official name of "Bosnia and Herzegovina"; continued its legal existence under international law as a State, with its internationally recognized borders; and modified its structure to consist of two entities: the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina—where resided mainly Bosnian Muslims (Bosniacs) and Bosnian Croats—and the Bosnian Serb-dominated Republika Srpska.

Among other things, the parties welcomed and endorsed the arrangements made concerning specific elements of the peace settlement as set out in the Agreement's 11 annexes, including: its military aspects (Annex 1-A); regional stabilization (Annex 1-B); the boundary demarcation between the two entities (the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska) (Annex 2); elections (Annex 3); the Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina (Annex 4); arbitration (Annex 5); human rights (Annex 6); refugees (Annex 7); preservation of national monuments (Annex 8); public corporations (Annex 9); civilian implementation of the Agreement (Annex 10); and the International Police Task Force (IPTF) (Annex 11).

The Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement, negotiated intensively over a three-week period in November 1995 in Dayton, in a diplomatic effort led by the United States, had been preceded by the signing on 10 November 1995 of the Dayton Agreement on Implementing the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, with an annex concerning agreed principles for an interim statute for the divided city of Mostar [A/50/810-S/1995/1021, YUN 1995, p. 551]. It set forth the general principles relating to the governance of the Federation and provided for the transfer of governmental functions from the former Government of the Republic to the Government of the Federation. At the beginning of January 1996, the two entities comprising the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina—the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska—confirmed their intention to draw up the necessary amendments to their respective constitutions and laws in conformity with the State Constitution, which had entered into force upon signature of the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement.

On 1 March 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 550], a Framework Agreement establishing a Federation in the Areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with a Majority Bosniac and Croat Population [S/1994/255] had been signed in Washington, D.C., by representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Bosnian Croats.

On 18 March 1994, the Constitution of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina was signed, also in Washington, D.C., by the same parties. The Constitution stated that Bosniacs and Croats, as constituent peoples of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the exercise of their sovereign rights, transformed the international structure of the territories with a majority of Bosniac and Croat populations in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina into a Federation, which was composed of federal units with equal rights and responsibilities. Sarajevo served as the capital of both the Republic and the Federation.

The Federation—with its Bosnian Muslim and Bosnian Croat populations—was one of two constituent entities of the Republic, the other being Republika Srpska, established in areas of the Republic which had not been under its control and where primarily Bosnian Serbs resided. Pale was its capital.

The parties to the 10 November Dayton Agreement were the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, with the endorsement of the Republic of Croatia. Representatives of Germany, the United States and the European Union (EU) witnessed the signing.

The parties agreed that the complete establishment of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina was an essential prerequisite for peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Among other things, the 10 November Dayton Agreement dealt with the transfer of certain responsibilities from the Republic to the Federation, including those related to defence, internal affairs, justice, energy and industry, traffic and communications, commerce, agriculture, education, science and culture, refugees, displaced persons and social policy, health, and city planning, resources and environment.

The Republic was to maintain responsibility for foreign policy, foreign trade, customs, monetary policy, immigration regulation, international criminal law enforcement, common telecommunications, air traffic control and civilian coordination of the activities of the armed forces in the whole territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Finance matters were to be handled by both the Republic and the Federation as they related to each.

The Agreed Principles for Mostar, annexed to the 10 November Agreement, called for the divided city to be restructured with six separate city-municipalities. The Mayors of East and West Mostar signed the document, as did the EU Administrator, with witnesses from the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Germany and the EU Presidency.

Implementation of Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement

In 1996, the implementation of the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement was a major focus of United Nations work with regard to Bosnia and Herzegovina. At the end of the year, the second Peace Implementation Conference (London, 4-5 December) issued a report, the "London Conclusions" [S/1996/1012], on developments during the year.

The Conference reported that a two-year civilian consolidation plan had been adopted in Paris at the 14 November meeting of the Peace Implementation Council (PIC) Steering Board, and that the Council, at the second London Conference, had approved a 12-month action plan, dealing with matters related to regional stabilization, human rights, war crimes, democratization, refugees and displaced persons, freedom of movement, municipal elections, policing, a market economy, reconstruction, the Central Bank, mine removal, reconciliation, media, education, the Brcko area and customs.

Conference participants declared that the future of Bosnia and Herzegovina was as an independent and democratic State within internationally recognized borders, with guaranteed human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and with a restructured market-oriented economy, a commitment to free trade, strong economic and political relations with its neighbours, and developing links with the European Union.

Peace had taken root, the Conference declared. In 1996, no Bosnian had died in military conflict; elections had been held, with the participation of 2.4 million citizens; barriers to freedom of movement had begun to be dismantled; the establishment of the new multi-ethnic common institutions, most recently the setting up of the Council of Ministers, had begun; and reconstruction was under way.

Over the next 12 months, in 1997, the objectives would be to consolidate peace; encourage reconciliation and economic, political and social regeneration; and take radical steps to restore a multi-ethnic Bosnia and Herzegovina to economic health and prosperity and to enable it to take its place in the region and in Europe.

Those goals required the full commitment of all the leaders of Bosnia and Herzegovina and its two entities, the Conference stated. There were important areas of the Agreement where little progress had been made. For example, only 250,000 of 2.1 million citizens who had been displaced or become refugees had returned. Human rights abuses continued. People were still being expelled from their home areas for ethnic reasons and homes were still being destroyed.

People were still being harassed when exercising their right to move around the country freely. Progress in reconstruction had been hampered by the failure of the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to provide all the mechanisms and structures to maximize the effectiveness of the international community's efforts. Some indicted persons had not been surrendered to stand trial at the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia at The Hague. Agreed weapons reductions had still not been implemented. Mines had not been cleared.

As before, it was stressed that while PIC was committed to the peace process, responsibility for reconciliation lay with the authorities and citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina, who must progressively take charge of their own affairs.

Military aspects

Under Annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, the parties undertook to recreate as quickly as possible normal conditions of life in Bosnia and Herzegovina. They welcomed the willingness of the international community to dispatch to the region a multinational military Implementation Force (IFOR), composed of ground, air and maritime units from NATO and non-NATO nations, to help ensure compliance with the Agreement, in particular a durable cessation of hostilities. Among other provisions of Annex 1-A were those calling for withdrawal of foreign forces from Bosnia and Herzegovina, redeployment of forces of the parties behind a zone of separation, and establishment of a Joint Military Commission (JMC) to serve as a central body for any military complaints, questions or problems, and prisoner exchanges.

IFOR was to have the right to monitor and help ensure compliance by all parties, in particular withdrawal and redeployment of forces; to supervise the agreed ceasefire line, zone of separation, and the Inter-Entity Boundary Line (IEBL) between the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska; to establish liaison arrangements with local civilian and military authorities; to create secure conditions for elections; to assist humanitarian missions; to assist refugee operations; to observe and prevent interference with freedom of movement; and to monitor the clearing of minefields and obstacles, among other things.

IFOR was authorized, under Security Council resolution 1031(1995), to take such actions as required, including the use of necessary force, to ensure compliance with the military aspects of the Agreement, and to ensure its own protection. IFOR was to have the unimpeded right to observe and monitor, and unimpeded freedom of movement by ground, air and water throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina. Furthermore, the IFOR Commander was to have sole authority to establish rules and procedures governing command and control of airspace over Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Implementation Force (IFOR)

The multinational military Implementation Force (IFOR)—established under the authority conferred upon UN Member States by Security Council resolution 1031(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 548]—began deploying troops in Bosnia and Herzegovina on 20 December 1995 [ibid., p. 551]. IFOR, operating under the chain of command of NATO, concluded its mission of overseeing the country's demilitarization a year later, on 20 December 1996, and was replaced by the Stabilization Force (SFOR) (see below). IFOR at its peak comprised more than 60,000 personnel from 34 nations.

IFOR's primary responsibility was to oversee implementation of the military aspects of the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement. As called for by the Agreement, a Joint Military Commission (JMC) was established to function as a consultative body for the IFOR Commander, who was its Chairman. JMC also comprised the senior military commander and two civilian representatives from each of the three parties, the High Representative, and other persons designated by the Chairman.

IFOR reports. Progress in implementing the Peace Agreement's military aspects was recorded in monthly IFOR reports transmitted by the NATO Secretary-General to the UN Secretary-General, who in turn brought them to the attention of the Security Council. IFOR reported on 23 January [S/1996/49], 26 February [S/1996/131], 22 March [S/1996/215], 23 April [S/1996/315], 23 May [S/1996/375], 21 June [S/1996/465], 25 July [S/1996/600], 22 August [S/1996/696], 24 September [S/1996/7831], 24 October [S/1996/880], 22 November [S/1996/970] and 23 December [S/1996/1066].

The NATO Secretary-General also addressed separate communications to the UN Secretary-General (reporting the fulfilment of certain conditions calling for the lifting of sanctions) [S/1996/87; S/1996/131], as provided for in Council resolution 1022(1995) of 22 November 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 545] (see under "The former Yugoslavia" above).

In its final report [S/1996/1066], IFOR stated that, upon the completion of its mandate on 20 December 1996, it had, with great success, monitored the cessation of hostilities, ensured the withdrawal from the zone of separation of forces and weapons belonging to the former warring factions, and also ensured compliance with the requirement to store aircraft, air defence and heavy weapons in IFOR-approved cantonments. In the process, it had monitored 805 sites throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina. It had also contributed substantially to encouraging freedom of movement through its many civil engineering projects: approximately 2,500 kilometres of roads had been opened up, four bridge projects had been completed or were under way, railways had been re-established, thereby linking the country to the rest of Europe since 13 September, and air operations had been restored at a number of airports, among them Sarajevo International Airport, which was reopened to civilian air traffic on 15 August, after being closed for four years.

IFOR acknowledged, however, the continued presence of unauthorized individuals in the zone of separation, the continued discovery of weapons, mainly small arms, and the persistent restrictions to freedom of movement.

IFOR attributed the success of its operation to the commitment and efficiency of the more than 60,000 troops contributed by 16 NATO and 18 non-NATO countries, to the more than 300 aircraft (assigned from 11 NATO countries) that had flown over 29,700 sorties, to some 20 ships (also from 11 NATO countries) that had been routinely involved in the joint NATO/Western European Union (WEU) arms embargo enforcement operation, and to some 10 ships (from 5 NATO countries) engaged in countermine operations.

In other IFOR reports during the year, it was stated that: a phased transition had been completed by the specified 90-day period of the five designated Sarajevo suburbs to Federation control; that all prisoners had been released for whom the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia had determined that there was insufficient evidence to warrant further detention; and that distrust and tension between all parties continued, that there had been difficulties in establishing common institutions, and confrontations continued to occur in various villages in the zone of separation.

IFOR stated that it had taken firm action to defuse all incidents and prevent further ones, but military measures were no substitute for a longer-term political strategy to bring about co-operation and reconciliation. Therefore, the international community should continue to bring pressure to bear on the Bosnian Presidency to translate into concrete agreements the political commitments they had entered into.

IFOR also reported that it had extended its patrol activities throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina to enhance the security in which the various civilian organizations operated. It worked with OSCE on subregional arms control and development of confidence-building measures, sharing data on weapons holdings inside Bosnia and Herzegovina. It had also conducted extensive aerial and ground surveillance of alleged mass grave sites to which the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia had given priority status, and provided security and logistical support to Tribunal teams investigating those sites.

Assistance had been extended to the High Representative with respect to transportation, logistics, communications, security and administration, and to UNHCR to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons, especially refugee group crossings of the IEBL (see below), and in maintaining the UNHCR inter-entity bus service. IFOR had provided security and other support during the June elections in Mostar, and increased its presence there during the transfer of police responsibilities from WEU police to the IPTF-monitored Federation Police Force, beginning on 15 October.

Inter-Entity Boundary Line

Under Annex 2, the parties agreed on a boundary between the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska—the Inter-

Entity Boundary Line (IEBL)—and also agreed to binding arbitration of the disputed portion of the IEBL in the Brcko area.

Following meetings of a JMC Subcommission under IFOR auspices, the parties, on 17 July, signed a formal agreement resolving most of the adjustments to the IEBL that had been outstanding as of the signing of the Peace Agreement. Discussions on the last remaining sections, in particular the sensitive Sarajevo district of Dobrinja, were still in progress at the end of September 1996.

By then, a tribunal of three arbitrators had been appointed—one by the Federation, a second by Republika Srpska and a third by the President of the International Court of Justice—in connection with the parties' agreement to a binding arbitration of the disputed portion of the IEBL in an area of the strategically located town of Brcko connecting the eastern and northern parts of the Serb entity. As Republika Srpska's participation in the arbitration process had been unclear and no acceptable solution had been arrived at, the time limit for the completion of arbitral proceedings was extended to 15 February 1997.

Stabilization Force (SFOR)

On 9 December 1996, the UN Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council a 2 December letter [S/1996/1025] from the NATO Secretary-General, informing him that NATO was preparing for a follow-on force to IFOR in Bosnia and Herzegovina, to be named the Stabilization Force (SFOR). The NATO Secretary-General on 29 November had sent identical letters to the three-member Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina, to Croatia and to FRY, setting forth NATO's understandings relating to SFOR; he reported he had received positive replies from each.

Those replies confirmed NATO's understanding that the three countries welcomed the organization of SFOR as a NATO-led force, and they invited the Council to continue the authorization granted in paragraphs 14 to 17 of resolution 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 548] that SFOR was the legal successor to IFOR, entitled to the same rights, immunities, privileges and facilities for all purposes, and that all references to IFOR in the Peace Agreement, particularly its annexes 1-A and 2, and in all other relevant documents, would be read as references to SFOR.

In its reply, FRY provided a document entitled "Understandings regarding certain provisions of the Agreement between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization concerning Transit Arrangements for Peace Plan Operations", with a reminder that it was still seeking mutually acceptable interpretations of the provisions of the Transit Agreement, pending which it would implement the agreement in question, on a temporary basis.

The Security Council, in resolution 1088(1996) of 12 December, authorized the establishment of SFOR (see p. 312).

Civilian aspects

By Annex 10, the parties agreed on how to implement the civilian aspects of the Dayton-Paris Agreement, which entailed a wide range of activities, including continuation of humanitarian aid, rehabilitation of infrastructure and economic reconstruction, establishment of political and constitutional institutions, promotion of respect for human rights, and holding of free and fair elections.

They requested the designation of a High Representative, to be appointed consistent with relevant United Nations Security Council resolutions, to facilitate the parties' own efforts and to mobilize and coordinate the activities of the organizations and agencies involved in the civilian aspects of the peace settlement.

High Representative

Carl Bildt of Sweden, former Co-Chairman of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, was named High Representative by the first London Peace Implementation Conference, in December 1995.

The Agreement specified that his tasks should include maintaining close contact with the parties, facilitating the resolution of any difficulties, and providing guidance to and receiving reports from IPTF. He also was to convene and chair a Joint Civilian Commission (JCC), and to establish subordinate Joint Civilian Commissions at the local level. In addition, he was to provide support and assistance to the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

The High Representative was to be the final authority with regard to implementation of civilian aspects of the Peace Agreement. His headquarters was in Sarajevo, with a subsidiary office in Brussels, Belgium, and a regional office in Banja Luka. The High Representative also chaired the PIC Steering Board, meetings of principal parties in Sarajevo, the Economic Task Force, and other meetings of key implementation bodies.

In 1996, the High Representative, pursuant to Security Council resolution 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 548], reported four times to the President of the Security Council—on 13

March [S/1996/190], 9 July [S/1996/542], 1 October [S/1996/814], and 9 December [S/1996/1024]. He described progress in the civilian implementation of the Agreement, which he had been mandated to monitor, mobilize and coordinate. (For details see below, under specific subjects.)

The 9 July report appended the conclusions of the PIC Mid-Term Review Conference (see below) and the results of its special review of implementation of the Peace Agreement's human rights provisions. The 1 October report attached two statements by the OSCE Coordinator for International Monitoring regarding the September elections.

By the end of March, the commissions called for under the Peace Agreement had been constituted and had begun holding regular sessions, under the chairmanship of the High Representative, or of the lead agency in a specific area of endeavour, with his participation. These included commissions on human rights, on real property claims of refugees and displaced persons, to preserve national monuments, and on public corporations.

The Joint Interim Commission (JIC) and JCC, each composed of government representatives from Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Republika Srpska, were chaired by the High Representative or a designee. JIC, mandated to deal with the political and constitutional aspects of the Peace Agreement, held its first meeting in Sarajevo on 24 January, and subsequently met alternately in Sarajevo and Banja Luka. JCC met fortnightly in Sarajevo to address matters relating to economic reconstruction, freedom of movement and the return of refugees and displaced persons.

UN Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH)

On 21 December 1995, the Security Council, by its resolution 1035(1995), authorized the establishment for one year of an International Police Task Force (IPTF) (see below), and a United Nations civilian office, placing them both under the authority of the UN Secretary-General through the United Nations Coordinator. In a 6 February 1996 report, the Secretary-General stated that henceforth that operation would be referred to as the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH).

An integral and distinct unit of UNMIBH was the Mine Action Centre (MAC)—the central repository for landmine information, originally established by UNPF, which assisted Bosnia and Herzegovina in formulating and establishing a mine-clearance programme and a national mine-awareness campaign (see below).

Headquartered in Sarajevo, UNMIBH maintained two regional headquarters, in Banja Luka and in Tuzla; two liaison offices, in Gornji Vakuf and in Mostar; and 17 central police districts and 109 police stations. In addition, it retained a civilian police training and support unit in Zagreb for the reception and administration of incoming police monitors.

IPTF and the civilian office functioned under the authority of the United Nations Coordinator, who was also the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the Head of Mission of UNMIBH.

The civilian law office reported on political and human rights developments, and provided good offices to promote confidence between the entities—the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska—and resolve problems between the parties. It worked in coordination with IFOR, and in collaboration with UNHCR, monitoring population movements and assessing their political implications. It shared its assessments with the High Representative, who relied on UNMIBH to report on the situation in the entities.

During 1996, the Secretary-General reported on the activities of UNMIBH [S/1996/210, 460, 820 & 1017].

In his 9 December report [S/1996/1017], the Secretary-General stated that IPTF numbered 1,704 monitors from 34 countries, operating from 62 locations within the mission area. The level of cooperation between police forces from the different entities and IPTF monitors had been reasonable, he said. Among other things, joint patrols were conducted to introduce principles of democratic policing by example. Training and restructuring of the Federation Police continued; some problems remained with the restructuring of the Republika Srpska police.

UNMIBH civil affairs officers performed three main tasks: support for IPTF, analysis and reporting on local political events and trends, and making available good offices for local confidence-building and problem-solving. Civil affairs officers' close contacts with local authorities had facilitated cross-IEBL meetings of officials on several occasions, contributing to reductions in tensions and possible violence.

The Secretary-General proposed the extension of the mandate for an additional year. During the consolidation period in 1997 and 1998, the Secretary-General said a paramount task would be the creation of suitable conditions for the early, safe and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons, as well as reconstruction and rehabilitation. Work would also have to continue with regard to the promotion of democratic policing, human rights violations and mine clearance. The Special Representative in Bosnia and Herzegovina would be retained, combining the functions of United Nations Coordinator and Chief of UNMIBH, the Secretary-General stated. IPTF would add to its mandate the task of investigating allegations of human rights abuses, as well as building law enforcement institutions. The activities of MAC would be expanded.

In his concluding observations, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the mandate of UNMIBH for a further year, until 21 December 1997, and that IPTF have added to its mandate the task of investigating allegations of human rights abuses by police officers or other law enforcement officials of the various authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina (see Security Council resolution 1088(1996), p. 312).

International Police Task Force (IPTF)

Annex 11 of the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement dealt with the establishment of the International Police Task Force (IPTF). By it, the parties agreed to provide a safe and secure environment for all persons in their respective jurisdictions, by maintaining civilian law enforcement agencies operating in accordance with internationally recognized standards and with respect for internationally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms. IPTF was to be headed by a Commissioner and be composed of persons of high moral standing who had experience in law enforcement. Task Force monitors were to be unarmed. The parties were not to impede the movement of IPTF personnel or in any way hinder them in their duties.

Peter FitzGerald of Ireland was named IPTF Commissioner. His main headquarters was in Sarajevo, with five regional headquarters, in Sarajevo, Banja Luka, Gornji Vakuf, Mostar and Tuzla. Those headquarters, when possible, were to be co-located with IFOR offices. A ratio of 1 monitor to 30 local officers was recommended; a total of 1,721 police monitors was therefore required.

At the beginning of 1996, there were some 44,750 active police officers in the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina; of those, 32,750 belonged to the Federation, 3,000 deployed in areas controlled by the Bosnian Croat authorities. Republika Srpska had 12,000 police officers. The Secretary-General had reported great apprehension that the transfer to Federation authority might cause an exodus of the majority of the Serb population in Sarajevo, or even a renewal of fighting.

The keystone of UNMIBH, IPTF had the mandate of: monitoring, observing and inspecting law enforcement activities and facilities, including associated judicial organizations, structures and proceedings; advising and training law enforcement personnel and forces; assessing threats to public order; advising governmental authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina on the organization of effective civilian law enforcement agencies; and accompanying Bosnian law enforcement personnel, when needed, as they carried out their responsibilities. IPTF also was to assist the parties to ensure the social conditions necessary for free and fair elections, including the protection of international personnel involved in those elections. As an unarmed Task Force, it was not mandated to engage in enforcement activities; it relied on IFOR and local authorities for security.

Agreement was reached on 26 April on the reorganization and reduction of the police of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina—to 11,500. A parallel reduction was under discussion with Republika Srpska authorities.

On 21 June, the Secretary-General reported [S/1996/460] that IPTF had begun assisting the parties in planning the reduction, restructuring and training of their police forces. In coordination with the UN Centre for Human Rights, it had conducted a training programme for its own police monitors in human rights and humanitarian law. It had also launched a database to facilitate the tracking of detained persons from arrest to trial. Difficulties in establishing freedom of movement for the civilian population persisted, despite the elimination by IPTF and IFOR of unauthorized checkpoints, a major obstruction to such movements. Those principally affected were the Bosniacs, for it was reportedly the Serb and Croat authorities who opposed freedom of movement.

Nevertheless, individuals and families were increasingly able to cross the IEHL into Republika Srpska without harassment. IPTF also participated in working groups on issues related to freedom of movement, property and detention.

The Secretary-General reported on 9 December that IPTF numbered 1,704 civilian police monitors from 34 countries, operating from 62 locations. In addition, there were 379 international staff and 902 locally recruited staff. IPTF had successfully introduced community policing into a number of areas. It had also developed a school programme on civic responsibility, and on principles of democratic policing, as well as a comprehensive training programme for various police forces throughout the country. Of 12,500 applicants tested for the Federation Police, 7,000

(from seven cantons) had been vetted with regard to their human rights record. Training and restructuring of the Republika Srpska police had yet to begin, as no formal agreement had been concluded between the Republika Srpska authorities and IPTF.

In Mostar, a smooth transfer of authority from WEU police to IPTF had taken place on 15 October. IPTF had taken steps to disband a number of Bosnian Croat para-police forces there. At the insistence of the IPTF Commissioner, the Special Police Force had been disbanded, as had various groups of armed civilian security guards. Other special police units throughout the Federation were also in the process of being disbanded.

IPTF would remain a crucial element in the coming consolidation period, the Secretary-General believed, and its role would continue to be particularly important in building law enforcement institutions that operated in accordance with democratic standards and formed the basis of an open and free society.

Mine Action Centre (MAC)

An estimated 3 million landmines lay scattered throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina, mostly along former confrontation lines, the Secretary-General reported on 29 March [S/1996/210 & Corr.1]. The Mine Action Centre (MAC) at UNPF-HQ, which was incorporated as an integral part of UNMIBH, had accumulated a wealth of information as a result of its mine information networks for both Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia. Four military mines information officers remained in Bosnia and Herzegovina to maintain accurate and up-to-date records under the direction of the Coordinator. The database was also maintained. The mines officers would be part of the UN Coordinator's office, but were located with IPTF headquarters in various parts of the country.

A Mine Clearance Policy Group, to operate under the Joint Civilian Commission, had been established in Sarajevo on 6 March to function as a clearing house for policy matters and priorities related to mine clearance in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Group was to provide guidelines to MAC.

MAC was officially opened in Sarajevo on 20 May; regional offices were planned for Mostar, Banja Luka, Bihac and Tuzla; only the Mostar office had been partially set up by the end of the year.

While the overall goal of the to the civilian population MAC programme was to eliminate the risks posed to the civilian population by mines and unexploded ordnance, its immediate goal was to develop the capacity to address priority tasks so that refugees and displaced persons could return to their homes and reconstruction projects could be rapidly implemented. A mine action plan was discussed with the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina and prospective donors. Plans were under way for the development of a national mine-clearance training capacity and an employment mechanism to make available up to 2,000 deminers by April 1997.

By December, a national management training programme to assist the Government to assume full responsibility for mine-clearance activities was in place. A UN mine action programme designed to meet the expected shortfall in the number of deminers required had also been developed for inclusion in the inter-agency humanitarian assistance appeal for 1997.

On 9 December, the Secretary-General warned [S/1996/1017] that unless sufficient funds were made available, activities programmed for 1997 would be in jeopardy, thus further delaying implementation of reconstruction programmes and the return of refugees.

According to World Bank estimates, all mine-clearance activities in Bosnia and Herzegovina—including the operations of MAC, the conduct of a mine survey, the establishment of a field operation with a training component, mine-awareness activities, and mine clearance in support of reconstruction—required $70 million in the first 12 months. A World Bank-sponsored donors' conference was held in Sarajevo (16-17 March), at which funding for mine clearance was discussed.

The NATO Secretary-General on 23 December reported [S/1996/1066] that minefields continued to pose a great problem, and that mine-clearing was one of the major obstacles to economic reconstruction, freedom of movement and freedom to return. Only an estimated 10 to 11 per cent of known minefields had been cleared so far, and given the weather it was not likely that mine-clearing operations could resume before the spring of 1997.

Constitution

Annex 4 of the Agreement set out a 12-article Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina, together with a preamble and two annexes, on human rights arrangements and transitional arrangements. In separate declarations appended to Annex 4, the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Republika Srpska approved the Constitution.

In the preamble, it was stated that Bosniacs (Bosnian Muslims), Bosnian Croats and Bosnian Serbs, as constituent peoples, along with others, and citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina declared their conviction that democratic governmental institutions and fair procedures best produced peaceful relations within a pluralist society, and that they desired to promote the general welfare and economic growth through the protection of private property and the promotion of a market economy.

The Constitution's articles dealt with, among other things, human rights and fundamental freedoms, division of responsibilities, the parliamentary assembly, the presidency, the constitutional court, the Central Bank, finances and transitional arrangements.

On 24 January 1996, at the first JIC meeting, the two entities comprising the State of Bosnia and Herzegovina—the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska—confirmed their intention to draw up the necessary amendments to their respective constitutions and laws in conformity with the State Constitution, which had entered into force upon signature of the Peace Agreement on 14 December 1995. On 27 February, the entities stated they would provide the High Representative with proposed amendments in March, but failed to do so.

The High Representative on 19 September announced transitional arrangements to stimulate formation of the agreed common legislative and executive institutions and to prevent a power vacuum or any ambiguity as to the continuity of the legal existence of Bosnia and Herzegovina as a State. Under those arrangements, from the moment the newly elected three-member Presidency of the State assumed office, following certification of the 14 September election results, all existing governmental bodies within the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina would perform their functions on a caretaker basis until replaced by new bodies. To facilitate the initial functioning of the common institutions, a minimal legislative basis for the operation of the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina was prepared, including, among other laws, those governing citizenship and passport issuance, foreign economic relations, the duration of the parliamentary mandate, the immunity and succession of the Presidency, the structure and responsibilities of the Central Bank of Bosnia and Herzegovina, air traffic and the Government's 1997 budget.

Federation issues

Regular informal meetings were instituted in 1996 to expedite the Dayton Agreement on implementing the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina [YUN 1995, p. 551]. Hampering efforts towards that goal, beginning with setting up the necessary Federation structures, were the differing procedural approaches of the Federation partners (the Bosniacs and the Croats) to the dissolution of existing administrative arrangements in the territory under the control of the Croatian Defence Council, namely, the "Croat Republic of Herzeg-Bosna", and to the parallel establishment of Federation structures and their merger with the institutions of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

In 1996, the Federation partners concluded several supporting agreements, the first being the Agreement on the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina of 30 March, also referred to as the Sarajevo Agreement (see below), which resulted in a unified customs administration and financial system. Its text [S/1996/244] spelled out specific steps for the transfer of government structures in finance, internal affairs and defence, and for implementing the Federation institutions; it also detailed the consequences of non-implementation. Later agreements included the Petersberg Agreement of 25 April, aimed at setting up new democratic police structures; the Blair House Agreement of 14 May, which paved the way for unifying existing defence structures; and the Geneva Agreed Measures of 14 August, which increased international pressure to dissolve the "Croat Republic of Herzeg-Bosna" and to finalize establishment of operative structures within the Federation.

A model cantonal police law was elaborated, and steps were taken to transform existing police structures in accordance with the Constitution. The Federation Supreme Court was constituted, as were all cantonal assemblies, which then designated delegates to the House of Peoples of the Federation. In October, the partners reached agreement on Sarajevo's future administrative organization, opening the way for convening the constituent session of both Houses of the Federation Assembly (the House of Peoples and the House of Representatives) on 6 November, which designated 10 Federation delegates (5 Bosniacs and 5 Croats) to the House of Peoples of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and adopted the Federation flag and coat of arms.

Sarajevo Agreement

On 30 March, an Agreement on the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina [S/1996/244] was signed at Sarajevo by representatives of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, deciding upon concrete measures to implement the Federation. These concerned transfer of governmental structures, freedom of movement, transportation routes, organization of the city of Sarajevo, a joint customs system, and budget matters, among others. It also set out consequences for non-implementation, including that cantons would not receive any financial resources from shared taxes and transfers until they had elected a government, and that assistance for reconstruction would be withheld from communities that failed to permit the return of displaced persons and refugees. It called for the removal from office of officials responsible for implementation delays.

Following the parties' 30 March agreement in respect of Sarajevo, steps were taken to secure the transfer of civil authority in the five suburbs previously under the control of Republika Srpska from that entity to the Federation, and thus to reintegrate Sarajevo as an open, united, democratic and multi-ethnic city. IPTF was to monitor the transfer of authority to an integrated police force reflecting the 1991 ethnic composition of those areas. Under a plan worked out by the High Representative, IFOR and IPTF, and agreed to by the Federation government, the transfer was made between 23 February and 19 March.

Under the plan, local Serbs were provided with security and given equal treatment and opportunity to participate in the governing of the city. Discussions were held regarding the future administrative status of Sarajevo, within the provisions of the Federation constitution. The High Representative expressed concern that while gradual reintegration had been proceeding, a large number of Sarajevo's Serb inhabitants had chosen to leave.

UNMIBH's efforts to ensure an orderly transfer was largely attained in three suburbs, but in some other areas it was not possible to reassure the Bosnian Serb residents, over 90 per cent of whom left in a poorly organized exodus. The Secretary-General reported that thousands of Bosniacs from Sarajevo had poured into Ilidza following its handover. There were reports that Bosnian Serbs who remained had been harassed, intimidated and robbed, and that their apartments had been looted. UNMIBH civil affairs and UNHCR field offices there were also robbed and set on fire.

There were strong indications, however, that the Bosnian Serb leadership in Pale had decided that Bosnian Serbs, including long-time residents of Sarajevo, should not be allowed to remain in the five suburbs. It appeared that an overt campaign of pressure had been undertaken to induce them to leave, hastening their departure in organized truck convoys for pre-determined destinations where provisional housing had been arranged, and intimidating the undecided into leaving, using menacing Bosnian Serb gangs.

The economic infrastructure in all five suburbs had been dismantled before the handover dates, it was reported. Hospitals, clinics, schools, factories, and water, electricity and gas plants had been completely stripped. The Secretary-General stated that it appeared that the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina had done little to encourage the Bosnian Serb residents to stay.

Regional stabilization

Annex 1-B of the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement contained an agreement on regional stabilization, by which the parties agreed to establish progressive measures for regional stability and arms control as essential to creating a stable peace in the region. To that end, they agreed on the importance of devising new forms of cooperation in the field of security aimed at building transparency and confidence, and achieving balanced and stable defense force levels at the lowest number consistent with the parties' respective security and the need to avoid an arms race in the region.

Negotiations among the parties took place under the auspices of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). Among other things, the goals were to suspend arms imports, including heavy weapons and ammunition, mines, military aircraft and helicopters, before establishing numerical limits, and to establish a commission to facilitate the resolution of any disputes.

On the basis of negotiations begun under OSCE auspices early in the year, the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska signed the Vienna Agreement on Confidence- and Security-Building Measures on 26 January. At the conclusion of the PIC Mid-Term Review Conference, on 14 June (see below), the parties signed the Agreement on Subregional Arms Control [S/1996/442], setting numerical limits on holdings of specific armaments. Owing to problems and delays, however, the 31 October 1996 deadline for completing some 96 baseline validation inspections was not met, nor was the extended deadline of 1 January 1997 expected to be met. By the beginning of December 1996, a Special Representative of the OSCE Chairman-in-Office had been appointed to assist the parties to organize and conduct negotiations on regional arms control.

Elections

Under Annex 3 of the Peace Agreement, the parties agreed to a number of conditions to promote free, fair and democratic elections and to lay the foundation for representative government and ensure the progressive achievement of democratic goals throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina. Among those were a politically neutral environment, the right to vote in secret without fear of intimidation, and the right to freedom of expression and the press, freedom of association, and freedom of movement. OSCE was to adopt and put in place an elections programme, as well as to supervise the preparation and conduct of elections.

To those ends, OSCE was to establish a Provisional Election Commission (PEC). The Commission was to determine voter registration provisions, ensure compliance with election rules, remedy any violations, and accredit observers.

Elections for the three-member Presidency (one Bosniac, one Croat, one Serb) and House of Representatives for Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Presidency and House of Representatives for the Federation, and a National Assembly for Republika Srpska were held on 14 September. PEC was constituted on 30 January by the OSCE Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which adopted electoral rules and regulations governing the registration of political parties and independent candidates, candidate and voter eligibility, the role of domestic and international election observers, the conduct of campaigns, access to the State media, and publication and certification of definitive election results.

Election preparations included establishing local election commissions and an Elections Appeals Subcommission, voter registration, arranging for refugee participation and for voting by absentee ballot, party and candidate registration, and screening of registration applications (which resulted in PEC's approval of 49 parties and 33 independent candidates). A round table, held in Brussels on 12 March, examined ways to develop free and independent media and ensure their accessibility to all registered parties. An Open Broadcast Network started operations on 7 September, funded by international donors. It was to serve as an independent, cross-entity television network, building on existing stations and drawing upon talents from both entities. Steps were taken to dismantle permanent roadblocks and checkpoints to enhance freedom of movement essential for the conduct of the elections.

The international community's collective effort, notably that of OSCE, which played the leading role in the elections processes, as well as that of UNMIBH, UNHCR and IFOR, made possible the holding of elections at the State, entity and cantonal levels on 14 September, the end of the timeframe set by the Peace Agreement. Municipal elections were held in Mostar on 30 June.

PEC decided on 19 July to make ineligible to participate in the elections any political party maintaining in a party position or function any person under indictment by the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and not in compliance with an order to appear before it. As a result, Radovan Karadzic, President of Republika Srpska and under indictment by the Tribunal, was not eligible as a candidate.

The September elections were conducted in a calm, orderly and dignified fashion, with no acts of violence or serious restrictions to freedom of movement, it was reported. The polling was monitored by almost 1,000 international observers under the supervision of OSCE Coordinator Eduard van Thijn, who issued his assessment of the election cycle in statements on 16 and 24 September.

Nearly 3,000 polling stations reported that the elections had gone well technically, but several of the June 1990 OSCE Copenhagen Commitments had been met only partially. Although significant problems had occurred with regard to three major areas of the election process—voter registration, absentee polling stations and freedom of movement—none had seriously compromised the elections. Problems also occurred relating to out-of-country voting, the right to campaign, Republika Srpska's use of its campaigns to deliver secessionist messages, and media obstruction.

The elections were confirmed by the OSCE Coordinator as having been carried out properly in 97 per cent of the polling stations. On 29 September, PEC officially certified the results of the elections as specified in the Dayton-Paris Agreement. A final report, based on further analysis of more than 4,000 forms and reports from election observers, made recommendations to remedy deficiencies and to forestall a repetition of the irregularities and violations noted in connection with the postponed municipal elections.

The winners in the presidential polls were the candidates from the ruling parties: Alija Izetbegovic, who, having won the largest number of votes, would chair the Bosnian Presidency, Momcilo Krajisnik and Kresimir Zubak. Figures compiled by IPTF and IFOR indicated that, to cast their votes, approximately 20,000 voters had crossed from the Federation's Bosniac-controlled areas to Republika Srpska, while approximately 1,200 voters from the latter had crossed into the Federation; an estimated 25,000 to 30,000 voters crossed the international border from FRY to vote in Republika Srpska.

In October, the Secretary-General reported [S/1996/820] that IPTF had helped to secure 19 voter routes between the two entities and to establish plans for transportation by bus, search procedures and additional polling locations. To facilitate freedom of movement on election day, 1,692 IPTF monitors, together with IFOR troops, supervised voter movement throughout the country in a closely coordinated security operation.

On 30 November 1996, it was announced that Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Republika Srpska had requested OSCE and PEC to extend their mission until the end of 1997, so as to supervise the preparations for and conduct of the municipal elections to be held by the summer of that year. A declaration adopted by the 1996 OSCE summit (Lisbon, Portugal, 3 December) confirmed OSCE's agreement to the request. The agreement was accompanied by a separate memorandum of understanding between the President of Republika Srpska and OSCE.

Refugees and displaced persons

Annex 7 of the Agreement stated that all refugees and displaced persons had the right freely to return to their homes of origin. They had the right to have restored to them their property of which they had been deprived in the course of hostilities since 1991, and to be compensated for any property that could not be restored. It was stated that the early return of refugees and displaced persons was an important objective of the settlement of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The parties confirmed that they would accept the return of such persons who had left their territory, including those who had been accorded temporary protection by third countries.

All refugees and displaced persons should be permitted to return in safety, without risk of harassment, intimidation, persecution, or discrimination, particularly on account of their ethnic origin, religious belief or political opinion, it was specified. Amnesty was to be given to refugees charged with common crimes, and in no case should charges for crimes imposed for political or other inappropriate reasons circumvent the application of amnesty. An independent commission for displaced persons and refugees was to be headquartered in Sarajevo.

At the outset of 1996, it was reported that there were 1.2 million refugees and displaced persons inside Bosnia and Herzegovina, and 900,000 more outside the country.

UNHCR, as lead agency to coordinate humanitarian relief and the return of refugees and displaced persons, planned their voluntary and phased return. In May, it estimated that only a quarter of the 2 million refugees and displaced persons would be able to return by year's end. To facilitate the process, UNHCR organized bus services between the entities—the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska—to permit refugees to visit their homes, an endeavour which faced serious difficulties owing to the lack of cooperation from the parties.

Initial strategic planning for implementing the return or repatriation of refugees and displaced persons was discussed at a meeting of the Working Group on Humanitarian Issues convened by UNHCR (Geneva, 16 January). A more detailed plan of operations was subsequently discussed at a high-level meeting (Oslo, Norway, 8 March). The UNHCR action plan, adopted at a further meeting of the Working Group (Geneva, 13 May), provided for the phased return of three categories of refugees over a two-year period: those wishing to return to their home areas where they currently constituted the majority; those wishing to relocate to new areas where they would constitute the majority; and those wishing to return to their homes of origin where their ethnic groups were currently in the minority. By July, the Commission on Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees, established in Sarajevo in March, was ready to proceed with registering property claims, thereby assuring property owners that their rights would be preserved.

Efforts to implement refugee return continued to be hampered by a segregationist reality on the ground. UNHCR, whose activities also included housing reconstruction and confidence-building measures, was in the process of developing a two-year regional plan aimed at durable solutions.

WFP emergency food aid had been provided to refugees, internally displaced persons and the war-affected population since November 1991. The UN revised consolidated inter-agency appeal of 1 March 1996 (see PART THREE, Chapter III) maintained the same provisional estimates of food aid needs for Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1996, with a target volume of 23,000 metric tons per month, based on the assumption that most of the displaced persons would continue to be dependent on food aid for some six months after returning to their place of choice but that, as economic recovery accelerated and social security measures were being established, relief food aid to other war-affected beneficiaries, such as minorities and unemployed and vulnerable persons, could be phased out gradually.

As at 21 June [S/1996/460], only 70,000 refugees and displaced persons had returned home; UNHCR provided aid to those returnees, including shelter materials. To streamline the repatriation process and facilitate return, a joint Memorandum of Understanding between the International Organization for Migration (IOM) and UNHCR had been signed on 26 April. To address ongoing operational aspects of return movements to and within Bosnia and Herzegovina, a Repatriation Working Group was established, consisting of government and Federation representatives and international organizations.

In order to allow refugees and displaced persons to vote in the September elections at their place of current residence, UNHCR, in coordination with OSCE, was working out appropriate arrangements. A UNHCR initiative launched in June, under which some 22 priority return areas were identified where inadequate infrastructure, rather than security and political constraints, was an obstacle, elicited positive donor response, with commitments of over $50 million.

The Secretary-General reported on 9 December [S/1996/1017] that some 250,000 refugees and displaced persons had returned of more than 2 million people uprooted during the war. UNHCR provided assistance to many of those returning, while at the same time laying the foundation for large-scale returns through its "target areas" initiative, as well as its confidence-building measures, such as local working groups on return, inter-entity bus services and visits by displaced persons to their home areas. It was also involved in implementing the Procedure for Return to the Zone of Separation, adopted in October by the High Representative, UNHCR, IFOR, IPTF, the European Commission and the parties. UNHCR set up five international housing commissions to process applications. In July, it had formally started an initiative to develop a plan of action for durable solutions to the problem of refugees and displaced persons in the region as a whole, including the neighbouring States of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, to be implemented within a two-year period.

In concluding observations, the Secretary-General underlined the importance of the return of refugees and displaced persons and expressed regret that the pace of return had so far been extremely slow. UNHCR, along with other UN agencies and programmes, would strive to ensure that conditions for the return were in place, thus speeding the rate of return. (For further details on refugees and displaced persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, see PART THREE, Chapter XII.)

Human rights

Annex 6 of the Peace Agreement set out specific human rights to be observed and called for the parties to establish a Commission on Human Rights, consisting of the Office of the Ombudsman and the Human Rights Chamber. The Ombudsman was to investigate allegations of human rights violations and issue findings. The Chamber was to deal with referrals from the Ombudsman, as well as receive complaints from individuals or any party acting on behalf of alleged victims who were deceased or missing.

A Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights also reported in 1996 on the situation in the former Yugoslavia. (See PART TWO, Chapter III).

The General Assembly pronounced itself on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as in other nations of the former Yugoslavia, in resolution 51/116, adopted on 12 December 1996. Among other things, the Assembly insisted that authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina cooperate fully with the Commission on Human Rights for Bosnia and Herzegovina, and it demanded that Republika Srpska cease its pattern of non-cooperation with the Commission. That Commission was also called on to intensify its activities concerning alleged or apparent violations of human rights, or alleged or apparent discrimination of any kind. The Assembly also strongly condemned the continuing refusal of the authorities of Republika Srpska and certain other elements within the Federation to arrest and surrender indicted war criminals known to be present in their territories.

(For full text of resolution 51/116 and other information on human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, see PART TWO, Chapter III.)

An International Round Table on Human Rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina was held in Vienna on 4 and 5 March 1996 [A/50/894-S/1996/203].

A Human Rights Coordination Centre was created on 14 March to coordinate human rights activities and monitor the overall human rights situation in close cooperation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, UNHCR, IPTF, OSCE, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and the European Community Monitoring Mission.

A special assessment by the PIC Mid-Term Review Conference in June of implementation of the Peace Agreement's human rights provisions indicated that, some progress notwithstanding, authorities of both entities had contributed to ethnic division by committing, inciting or sanctioning human rights violations and by failing to deter or correct abuses of ethnic minorities. They had, moreover, failed to adopt amnesty laws, to bring property legislation in line with the right of return, to permit freedom of movement and to release arbitrarily detained persons.

Echoing that assessment, the High Representative observed that the Peace Agreement's stipulation that authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Federation and Republika Srpska secure to all persons within their jurisdiction the highest level of internationally recognized human rights remained substantially unmet. He characterized the current human rights situation throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina as deeply unsatisfactory, marked as it was by police abuse despite IPTF monitoring, frequent arbitrary arrests, obstruction of the right of refugees to return, and violations of the rights of opposition parties and political figures. Widespread abuse of ethnic minorities continued in the form of harassment, intimidation, forced evictions, destruction of hundreds of their homes in the zone of separation and in both entities, and discrimination in employment, education and access to government services.

Efforts to secure the release of persons detained as a result of the conflict remained incomplete. Although all ICRC-registered prisoners had been released, evidence existed that an unknown number of persons arrested prior to 19 December 1995 continued to be held in "hidden" detention. The parties' failure to implement the "Rules of the Road", agreed to in Rome on 18 February, constituted an impediment to freedom of movement and fostered arbitrary arrest, in particular of persons suspected of war crimes, often for "exchange" purposes.

Certain authorities, except for those of Bosnia and Herzegovina, were also not in compliance with their obligation to cooperate with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia by refusing to arrest persons indicted for war crimes (see PART FOUR, Chapter II). According to reports received by the High Representative, 50 indictees were likely to be found in Republika Srpska, which remained firm in its refusal to make arrests on the basis of legislation already superseded by the Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina and by relevant annexes of the Peace Agreement; 15 indictees were in residence alternately in the Federation and in Croatia; and 3 in FRY.

A collective effort to establish the fate of missing persons, including of those presumed buried in mass grave sites, was undertaken during the year by the Expert Group on Exhumation and Missing Persons, of which ICRC was a member; the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights; the expert member of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, responsible for the special process on missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia (the UN Expert on Missing Persons); and the Working Group on Unaccounted for Persons. A set of guidelines on exhumations had been agreed on by the parties. The Expert on Missing Persons had launched a worldwide fund-raising campaign to finance the development of an antemortem database on missing persons and the establishment of a team of forensic experts to monitor and supervise exhumations.

In all, ICRC had received 16,000 tracing requests for missing persons. Joint exhumation by the parties had been completed at three mass graves; however, collection of mortal remains at two other sites could not be completed owing to political difficulties and severely constrained resources. Information gathered for the antemortem database being jointly created by the Expert on Missing Persons, ICRC, Physicians for Human Rights and the Boltzman Institute included data provided by more than 2,200 families of the missing.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Council met on 10 October 1996 to follow up its resolution 1034(1995) of 21 December 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 562], demanding that the Bosnian Serb party give relevant UN and other international organizations and institutions immediate and unrestricted access to certain areas in Srebrenica, Zepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most for the purpose of investigating reported atrocities committed by the Bosnian Serbs against the Bosnian Muslim population there, and that all parties cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in this regard. That demand had been based on the Secretary-General's 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 561] noting the existence of substantial evidence of a consistent pattern of summary executions, rape, mass expulsions, arbitrary detentions, forced labour and large-scale disappearances perpetrated in those places when they were being overrun by the Bosnian Serbs.

In that regard, the Council drew attention to a letter of 8 October 1996 [S/1996/834] from Bosnia and Herzegovina, asking the Council to take into consideration the 16 August report [A/51/292-S/1996/665] of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia noting that, while Bosnia and Herzegovina had been the most cooperative party by far, Republika Srpska had not executed any of the scores of arrest warrants addressed to it, or explained its inability or failure to do so; FRY, which was responsible for Republika Srpska's cooperation and compliance as well as its own, had failed to arrest any indictees in its territory and had further allowed prominent indictees to appear publicly in Belgrade with impunity.

After consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to issue the statement below [S/PRST/1996/41] on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council has considered, in the light of its resolution 1034(1995) of 21 December 1995, the current situation with regard to the investigation of violations of international humanitarian law in the areas of Srebrenica, Zepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most as well as in the areas of Glamoc, Ozren and elsewhere throughout the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Security Council recalls the report of the Secretary-General of 27 November 1995.

The Security Council expresses deep concern about the very little progress achieved so far in these investigations and strongly appeals to all the parties of Bosnia and Herzegovina to make every effort to identify the fate of the missing persons, both for humanitarian and legal purposes.

The Security Council is concerned that endeavours by the relevant international authorities to identify the fate of the missing by inter alia carrying out exhumations has met with limited success largely due to obstruction by Republika Srpska. It notes with concern that the fate of only a few hundred missing persons has been so far established.

The Security Council welcomes the recent visit by the delegation from Republika Srpska to the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in The Hague and expresses hope that this visit marks a turning point in relations between Republika Srpska and the International Tribunal and will facilitate co-operation with regard to investigations conducted by personnel of the International Tribunal.

The Security Council condemns all attempts to obstruct the investigations or to destroy, alter, conceal or damage any related evidence. The Council stresses again the obligations of all the parties to co-operate fully and unconditionally with the relevant international authorities and among themselves with respect to such investigations and reminds the parties of their commitment under the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the Peace Agreement).

The Security Council reaffirms that the violations of international humanitarian law throughout the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina as described in resolution 1034(1995) must be fully and properly investigated. The Council reiterates that all States and concerned parties have an obligation, in accordance with resolution 827(1993) of 25 May 1993, other relevant resolutions and the Peace Agreement, to co-operate fully with the International Tribunal and to comply without exception with requests for assistance or orders issued by a trial chamber. The Council expresses again its support for the endeavours of the international agencies and authorities involved in these investigations and invites them to pursue and intensify their efforts. It encourages Member States to continue to provide the necessary financial and other support.

The Security Council will continue to follow this issue closely. It requests the Secretary-General to keep it regularly informed on progress reached in the investigation of the violations of international humanitarian law referred to in the report mentioned above.

Meeting number. SC 3701.

Economic rehabilitation and reconstruction

A Priority Reconstruction Programme amounting to $5.1 billion had been prepared by the European Commission, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the World Bank and endorsed by Bosnia and Herzegovina. Pledges of financial support totalling $ 1.8 billion had been obtained through two donor conferences, of which $1 billion would be made available for planned programmes in 1996. Reconstruction priorities included rehabilitation of the infrastructure (main power plants and transmission lines, rail tracks, bridges, telecommunication facilities) and job creation. Regular coordination meetings in which major civilian implementation agencies participated defined the practical modalities for the use of IFOR assets and resources for some telecommunication and infrastructure restoration projects.

Major pieces of legislation relating to foreign trade and investment, customs tariff and the Central Bank had been drafted to provide the legislative framework for the transition to a market economy.

In March, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) fielded an inter-agency mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina to establish a programming framework for available resources and project proposals. In July, a UNDP country office was established in Sarajevo. UNDP supported local authorities in community development and emergency rehabilitation, and assisted the Government in elaborating an economic and social transition strategy and in strengthening governmental and local institutions. For 1996, it made $5.7 million available. In addition, Japan pledged $30.8 million for 1996-1998.

Assistance for the reconstruction of Bosnia and Herzegovina was also provided by the World Bank. In order to finance urgently needed projects, a $150 million trust fund was set up and formally approved by the Governors of the Bank in February. The World Bank provided particular support to UNHCR for its priority refugee return programme (see above).

The World Food Programme (WFP) in 1996 took over UNHCR's task in the programming and management of food aid. In August, a further 37,000 tonnes of wheat grain arrived and another 25,000 tonnes were received in November, for processing and onward distribution. The World Health Organization (WHO) focused on: coordination of the health sector; public health monitoring; mental health and psychosocial rehabilitation; physical rehabilitation; and health care reform and reconstruction. UNICEF worked in the areas of health, education and psychosocial rehabilitation, and water and sanitation programmes, and also helped to create contingency plans for possible emergency areas throughout the country. ILO promoted emergency employment programmes and assisted in the formulation of a post-war labour code. UNESCO helped repair and reconstruct cultural and educational institutions, among them the National Museum in Sarajevo; it also supported educational and cultural activities, and prepared for the rehabilitation of the old town in Mostar.

Implementation meetings

The successes of the efforts to implement important agreements, as well as objectives yet to be achieved and the parties' shortcomings, were underscored during reviews conducted in 1996—in March by the Contact Group, in June and November by the Peace Implementation Council (PIC), and in December by the second Peace Implementation Conference. The Conference endorsed the guiding principles for a two-year consolidation period developed at the November PIC Steering Board meeting, and it adopted a 12-month action plan for the implementation process.

In connection with those reviews, the Security Council issued two Presidential statements—in April and in August—and adopted one resolution (1088(1996)) in December. Also, the General Assembly adopted on 12 December an overall resolution (51/203) on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Contact Group review (March)

Progress during the first three months of the implementation process for the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement was reviewed by the Contact Group at its ministerial meeting in Moscow on 23 March. The Group, composed of France, Germany, Italy, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States, transmitted the meeting's final document [A/50/899-S/1996/220] to the Secretary-General on 26 March.

The Group—which had played a key role in the negotiations leading up to the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement—reconfirmed its commitment to a strict, just and even-handed approach to the Agreement's implementation. It said the peace process was entering a new stage, in which primary responsibility would be on the parties to give substance to the civilian provisions of the Agreement. A climate of genuine trust and cooperation had to be created, and the parties had to show political will and a sense of initiative in that regard. An important threshold had been reached with the transfer of territories between the two entities of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Having considered the parties' compliance with their obligations under the Peace Agreement as reported by the High Representative and IFOR, the Group drew the parties' attention to problems relating to the release of prisoners; implementation of the constitutional framework; withdrawal of foreign forces; ensuring freedom of movement, of expression and of the press; and cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

The Group agreed that failure to release prisoners was a serious case of non-compliance and that, unless the prisoners were released, it would not be possible to confirm the pledging conference for economic reconstruction scheduled for 12 and 13 April. The Group demanded that the parties fulfil their obligation to withdraw all foreign forces immediately. Noting that the entities' constitutions had not been amended to conform with the Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina, it emphasized that provisions of those constitutions not in line with the State's Constitution were null and void.

The Group enjoined the parties to abide by the election rules and regulations adopted by PEC, called on UN Member States urgently to fulfil their commitments to contribute qualified police personnel to IPTF, stressed the need to facilitate the exercise of the right of return of refugees and displaced persons and urgently to elaborate a uniform methodology of collecting and assessing human rights information, and stressed also the importance of the parties' full cooperation with the ICRC Working Group on Missing Persons.

The Group further emphasized to the parties the importance of settling the disputed portion of the Inter-Entity Boundary Line in the Brcko area and of promptly concluding an agreement on subregional arms control. Underscoring the key importance of the economic rehabilitation and reintegration of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the direct responsibility which the parties had in that regard, the Group expected the parties actively to contribute to that effort. It urged Republika Srpska to arrange, with technical assistance from the international agencies, for the reconnection of water and electricity supplies to Gorazde without delay.

The Group stressed that, for the civilian implementation of the Peace Agreement to be successful, strong support should be given to the High Representative, the UN and OSCE missions, UNHCR, ICRC and all other international organizations operating in the country, whose funding requirements were significant. It thus called attention to the critical importance of the forthcoming April pledging conference and the need for all participants to come prepared to fulfil existing commitments and make substantial contributions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

The Council met on 4 April after considering the High Representative's report of 13 March [S/1996/190], the IFOR report transmitted on 22 March [S/1996/215], the conclusions of the review conducted by the Contact Group ministerial meeting of 23 March [A/50/899-S/1996/220], the Secretary-General's report of 29 March [S/1996/210 & Corr.1] (see below), related comments from Bosnia and Herzegovina [S/1996/242], and the 30 March Agreement on the Federation (Sarajevo Agreement) [S/1996/244].

Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make a statement [S/PRST/1996/15] on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 29 March 1996, submitted pursuant to its resolution 1035(1995) of 21 December 1995, and the report of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, annexed to the letter from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council of 13 March 1996. The Council welcomes both reports.

The Security Council notes that, on the whole, the implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and annexes thereto (collectively the Peace Agreement) is proceeding according to the timetable established by this Agreement. It also notes, in general, satisfactory compliance with the military aspects of the Peace Agreement as confirmed in the most recent report to the Council on IFOR operations and stresses that now the main emphasis in implementation efforts by the international community and the Bosnian parties themselves should shift to the civil aspects of the Agreement.

The Security Council stresses that the responsibility for implementing the Peace Agreement rests primarily with the parties to that Agreement. It demands that they fully implement the Peace Agreement, and demonstrate a genuine commitment to confidence- and security-building measures, regional arms control, reconciliation and the building of a common future. In that context, it demands that the parties comply fully, unconditionally and without any further delay with their commitments regarding the release of prisoners, implementation of the constitutional framework, withdrawal of foreign forces, ensuring freedom of movement, cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, return of refugees, and respect for human rights and international humanitarian law. It calls upon the authorities concerned with the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina to move forward vigorously on measures to strengthen that Federation and, to that end, to implement in full the Sarajevo Agreement concluded on 30 March 1996.

The Security Council is particularly concerned at the failure to date by all parties to comply fully with the provisions of the Peace Agreement concerning the release of prisoners, in spite of the repeated commitments by the parties to do so. The Council stresses that the obligation to release the prisoners is unconditional. Failure to do so constitutes a serious case of non-compliance. In this context the Council affirms its support for the conclusions of the Contact Group ministerial meeting of 23 March 1996 and notes the readiness of the High Representative to propose measures to be taken against any party that fails to comply.

The Security Council expresses its full support for the High Representative, who is in charge of monitoring the implementation of the Peace Agreement and mobilizing and, as appropriate, giving guidance to, and coordinating the activities of, the civilian organizations and agencies involved, in accordance with resolution 1031(1995). It also expresses its full support for the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH), and other international institutions and organizations involved in the implementation of the Peace Agreement. It affirms that the implementation of the Peace Agreement must be strict, just and impartial.

The Security Council expresses its strong support for UNMIBH's International Police Task Force in Bosnia and Herzegovina (IPTF). It notes that an effective United Nations civilian police operation is vital to the implementation of the Peace Agreement and encourages IPTF to implement its mandate as actively as possible consistent with annex 11 of the Peace Agreement as referred to in resolution 1035(1995). The Council, bearing in mind the agreement of the parties in annex 11 of the Peace Agreement not to impede the movement of IPTF personnel or in any way hinder, obstruct or delay IPTF personnel in the performance of their responsibilities, calls upon the parties to allow IPTF personnel immediate and complete access to any site, person, activity, proceeding, record, or other item or event in Bosnia and Herzegovina as IPTF may request. It notes with appreciation the participation of Member States in the staffing of IPTF and urges those Member States which have agreed to provide civilian police to dispatch expeditiously fully qualified personnel to enable IPTF to reach full deployment by mid-April. It encourages IPTF to accelerate the deployment of police monitors, consistent with maintaining their high quality. The Council also expresses its strong support for the Mine Action Centre of UNMIBH and encourages States to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance.

The Security Council recognizes that economic reconstruction and rehabilitation throughout the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina are key factors for the overall success of the peace implementation process, reconciliation and reintegration. These tasks require the political will of and consistent efforts by the Bosnian parties as well as substantial international assistance. The Council urges that priority be given to projects aimed at facilitating the process of reconciliation and the economic reintegration of the whole country. It notes with appreciation the resources that have already been made available in this respect. It calls upon States and international institutions to honour fully their commitments regarding economic and financial assistance to Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council recalls the relationship, as described in the London Conference [YUN 1995, p. 546], between the fulfilment by the parties of their commitments in the Peace Agreement and the readiness of the international community to commit financial resources for reconstruction and development. It affirms that it is the parties themselves that have the most important role in re-establishing the economy of their country.

The Security Council expresses its deep concern over recent developments in the Sarajevo area which caused thousands of Bosnian Serb civilians to leave their homes. The Council calls on the parties to make greater efforts towards reconciliation and the reconstitution of a multicultural and multi-ethnic Sarajevo, as a city of Bosniacs, Serbs, Croats and others, and as the capital and seat of the future common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It further calls on the parties to put in place additional measures to ensure security, freedom of movement and conditions for the return of people affected in Sarajevo and all other transferred areas. The Council calls on the parties to reverse the trend of population movements and partition efforts in Bosnia and Herzegovina along ethnic lines.

The Security Council pays tribute to all those who have given their lives in the cause of peace in the former Yugoslavia and expresses its condolences to their families, including to the family of the Secretary of Commerce of the United States of America.

The Security Council requests the Secretary-General and the High Representative to continue to keep the Council regularly informed on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina and on the implementation of the Peace Agreement.

PIC Mid-Term Review Conference (June)

In Florence, Italy, on 13 and 14 June 1996, PIC conducted a Mid-Term Review Conference to assess progress made in the first six months of the Peace Agreement's implementation.

Participants included representatives of Bosnia and Herzegovina and of its two entities—the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska—as well as the Foreign Ministers of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY) and of Croatia. The Council heard reports from the High Representative, the NATO Deputy Secretary-General and military commanders, the Special Representative of the UN Secretary-General, and heads of international organizations or agencies involved in implementing the Peace Agreement.

In its summary conclusions [S/1996/446], the Council declared that considerable progress had been made in the first six months of the Agreement's implementation. The parties had complied with their military commitments, but on the civilian side there had been serious shortcomings. Everyday life was improving all the time at an accelerating rate for the vast majority of people of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The country was at peace, opposing forces had been separated and a background of secure conditions had been created. Gradual progress was being made in strengthening the Federation, and there had been extensive rehabilitation at the local level.

At the same time, the Council underlined that the parties were erecting obstacles to cooperation between themselves and, with the international community and in the way of achieving a single, democratic and pluralistic Bosnia and Herzegovina. The situation was burdened by fear and mistrust and a continuing trend towards separation. That inhibited freedom of movement on the part of ordinary citizens, especially across the Inter-Entity Boundary Line (IEBL).

Elections were the basis for setting up all the institutions of the country, which were an essential element in reversing the trend towards separation and giving the country a future, PIC declared. It deplored reports of continuing human rights violations and underscored the importance of a strong economic reconstruction programme. It drew attention to the $1.8 billion pledged by the international community for the first year's needs within the framework of the Priority Reconstruction Programme.

Regarding war crimes, PIC called on the parties expeditiously to implement the 18 February "Rules of the Road", adopted in Rome, specifically, to submit immediately for review to the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia lists of persons suspected of having committed violations of international humanitarian law and case files on those arrested in contravention of the "Rules" on suspicion of war crimes, and immediately release all such persons for whom files had not been submitted or in relation to whom the Tribunal determined that the evidence presented was insufficient to warrant further detention.

Stating that PIC and the parties considered the Peace Agreement and the obligations under it to be an integral whole, it was stressed that there could be neither derogation nor partial or conditional compliance. PIC made clear that receipt of political and economic benefits and fulfilment of obligations were linked, and that sanctions would be reimposed in accordance with Security Council resolution 1022(1995) of 22 November 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 545], should circumstances make such action necessary.

Finally, strict adherence to the implementation timetable was essential. PIC stated that it would not permit delaying tactics and it wanted to inject as much certainty as possible into forward planning so that all concerned would know what was expected of them and when.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

The Council met again on 8 August following receipt of the conclusions of the PIC Mid-Term Review Conference and of the High Representative's second report [S/1996/542] describing, among other implementation activities, preparations for the September elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina and drawing attention to the parties' lack of cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

In that connection, the Council had before it a number of communications, including an 11 July letter from the Tribunal President [S/1996/556], notifying it that the Trial Chamber had issued international arrest warrants against Serb leaders Radovan Karadzic and Ratko Mladic, to be transmitted to all States, Interpol (International Criminal Police Organization) and IFOR; and, further, that the failure to execute the initial arrest warrants issued in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1314] against those two accused was wholly due to the refusal of Republika Srpska and FRY to cooperate with the Tribunal (see PART FOUR, Chapter II).

The Contact Group of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) [S/1996/510, S/1996/535] pointed out that only Bosnia and Herzegovina had fully complied with the Tribunal's orders. It stated that the logic behind the Tribunal was the comprehensive application of justice, from apprehension and arrest to investigation and trial, and that, therefore, the removal of war criminals from positions of nominal power was not enough. The Council should promptly sanction the non-compliant parties and call on IFOR to arrest and extradite the indicted war criminals to The Hague. Elections held while the Tribunal's orders were ignored could not be considered legal, free or fair, OIC said.

Bosnia and Herzegovina, in a letter to the Council [S/1996/523], drew attention to a law, enacted by what it called the "self-appointed assembly" of Republika Srpska, creating a special war crimes court of its own. It also pressed the Council [S/1996/565] to compel the arrest and extradition of indicted war criminals, regardless of the success or failure to remove them from positions of authority. In another letter [S/1996/576], Bosnia and Herzegovina acknowledged the subsequent removal of Mr. Karadzic from his post as party leader of SDS, the ruling Bosnian Serb party, but stressed that mere removal from public office did not satisfy the demands of the Tribunal, the Council or the Peace Agreement. The Council should move forward with sanctions on non-complying parties and with the arrest and extradition of the indictees, Bosnia and Herzegovina believed.

Following consultations among its members, the Council on 8 August authorized its President to make the statement below [S/PRST/1996/34] on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council has considered the report of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina annexed to the letter from the Secretary-General to the President of the Council of 9 July 1996.

The Security Council expresses its full support for the conclusions reached at the Peace Implementation Council in Florence, Italy, on 13-14 June 1996. It stresses the importance of the forthcoming elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina, to be carried out in accordance with the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the Peace Agreement), which will allow for the establishment of the common institutions and which will be an important milestone for normalization in Bosnia and Herzegovina. It calls upon the parties to ensure the prompt functioning of these institutions after the elections. It supports the preparatory work done in this regard.

The Security Council expects the parties to increase their efforts towards the maintenance and further enhancement of conditions necessary to ensure democratic elections, as provided for in article I of annex 3 of the Peace Agreement, and to abide fully by the results of those elections. In that context, the Council stresses the importance of the agreement reached by the Bosniac and Bosnian Croat leaderships in Mostar, and facilitated by the European Union Administration of Mostar (EUAM), that has at last secured Bosnian Croat participation in a unified city administration in Mostar on the basis of the election results of 30 June 1996. The Council expects the Bosniac and Bosnian Croat leaderships in Mostar to implement this agreement fully and without delay, and stresses that failure to do so would seriously undermine crucial efforts to ensure lasting peace and stability in Bosnia and Herzegovina. It expresses its full support for the international organizations which are currently working in Mostar, and in particular for the EUAM, and calls on both leaderships to cooperate fully with the EUAM. It calls on the Government of the Republic of Croatia, which bears a special responsibility in this context, to continue to use its influence on the Bosnian Croat leadership to ensure full compliance with its obligations. The Council will continue to follow closely the situation in Mostar.

The Security Council underlines that the continued lack of progress in transferring authority and resources to the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina is a potential danger for the peace implementation process. The Council calls upon the Federation partners to accelerate their efforts for the establishment of a fully functioning Federation, which is an essential prerequisite for peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Security Council notes with particular concern the conclusions of the report of the High Representative on the implementation of the human rights provisions of the Peace Agreement that the parties are not implementing their commitments in respect of human rights, and that this failure is impeding the return of refugees. It condemns all acts of ethnic harassment. It calls upon the parties to the Peace Agreement to take immediately the measures identified in the report to stop the trend of ethnic separation in the country and in its capital, Sarajevo, and to preserve their multicultural and multi-ethnic heritage. The Council deeply regrets the undue delay in implementing measures regarding, inter alia, the development or creation of new independent media and the preservation of property rights, and calls upon each party to implement them immediately. The Council is ready to consider further reports by the Office of the High Representative on all aspects of the implementation of the Peace Agreement, including those mentioned above.

The Security Council stresses that, under the Peace Agreement, persons indicted by the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia who have failed to comply with an order to appear before the Tribunal may not stand as a candidate or hold any appointive, elective or other public office in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Any continued holding of such an office is unacceptable. In this context the Council notes the fact that, as a first step, Radovan Karadzic, after officially handing over his executive powers in Republika Srpska on 30 June 1996, agreed on 19 July 1996 to cease definitively all political and official activities, thus facilitating the electoral process in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council expects this undertaking to be implemented fully and in good faith, and will closely monitor further developments.

The Security Council stresses that all States and concerned parties have an obligation, in accordance with resolution 827(1993) of 25 May 1993, other relevant resolutions and the Peace Agreement, to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and to comply without exception with requests for assistance or orders issued by a trial chamber. The Council has considered the letter from the President of the International Tribunal of 11 July 1996, which referred to the conclusion of the Trial Chamber of the International Tribunal regarding the failure to execute the warrants of arrest issued against Radovan Karadzic and Ratko Mladic due to the refusal of the Republika Srpska and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to cooperate with the Tribunal. It condemns this failure to execute these arrest warrants. The Council notes the recent visit by the delegation from the Republika Srpska to the International Tribunal in The Hague for the purpose of discussing all aspects of cooperation with the Tribunal, and expects that cooperation with the Tribunal to bring to justice all persons indicted will be realized. The Council condemns the failure to date of the Bosnian Croat leadership and the Croatian Government to comply with the orders of the International Tribunal regarding several persons indicted for war crimes. The Council demands the full cooperation of all parties concerned in the immediate execution of all warrants of arrest and the transfer to the Tribunal of all persons indicted, in accordance with article 29 of the statute of the Tribunal. The Council further condemns any attempt to challenge the authority of the International Tribunal. The Council underlines the importance of the obligations undertaken by the parties to the Peace Agreement to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and stresses that failure to arrest and transfer persons indicted by the Tribunal is a violation of these obligations. The Council stresses that compliance with the requests and orders of the International Tribunal constitutes an essential aspect of implementing the Peace Agreement, as provided by previous resolutions; the Council is ready to consider the application of economic enforcement measures to ensure compliance by all parties with their obligations under the Peace Agreement.

The Security Council condemns any threat or act of violence directed against international personnel in Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular those directed against personnel belonging to the United Nations International Police Task Force on the territory of the Republika Srpska. It condemns also the obstacles put in the way of forensic investigations carried out by international organizations on the territory of the Republika Srpska as well as on the territory of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It calls upon all parties to lift those obstacles and to ensure full freedom of movement and safety for all international personnel.

The Security Council reiterates its full support for the High Representative and for all international organizations currently working in Bosnia and Herzegovina for the implementation of the Peace Agreement. The Council stands ready to consider the need for further action in order to continue and consolidate the efforts made for full implementation of the Peace Agreement. The Council welcomes all initiatives which will lead to a greater degree of stability and cooperation in the whole region.

Civilian consolidation plan

In Paris, on 14 November, the PIC Steering Board held a ministerial meeting to define the principles for the consolidation of the civilian peace implementation process in Bosnia and Herzegovina. At the meeting were the Foreign Ministers of France, Canada, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States, and representatives of the Presidency of the EU, the Netherlands, the European Commission, OIC, the United Nations, UNHCR, OSCE, NATO, the High Representative, as Chairman of PIC, the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the Foreign Ministers of Croatia and of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY).

In its conclusions [S/1996/968], the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina reaffirmed, in the name of the country's three constituent peoples (Bosniacs, Croats, Serbs), its commitment fully to pursue the peace implementation process. Accordingly, it undertook to establish, as a high priority, all the joint institutions provided for in the State's Constitution (the Council of Ministers, the Parliamentary Assembly, the Central Bank, the Constitutional Court, the Standing Committee on Military Matters), and to ensure that the duration of the first term of each of the bodies elected on 14 September aligned with the two-year first term of the Presidency, in accordance with the Peace Agreement.

To ensure the continued success of the peace agenda, the Steering Board and the Presidency concluded that the priorities of the two-year consolidation period were: regional stabilization, which called for full implementation, with OSCE assistance, of the 26 January Vienna Agreement on Confidence- and Security-Building Measures and the 14 June Florence Agreement on Sub-regional Arms Control; creating a secure environment, which required the strengthening of IPTF; ensuring full respect for human rights; building a genuine democracy; municipal elections in 1997 and general elections in 1998; ensuring freedom of movement for all persons, goods and services; facilitating the return and resettlement of refugees and displaced persons; full cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in surrendering persons indicted for war crimes; reconstruction that fostered links among the different parts of the country; creating the best conditions for economic aid by constructing a market economy; promoting reconciliation; re-establishing the educational systems; and mine removal in coordination with the Mine Action Centre.

The consolidation period was to be divided into two 12-month action plans, with a mid-term review. The Steering Board invited the High Representative to prepare the first action plan for approval by the second Peace Implementation Conference, to be held in December 1996. OSCE was requested to continue to provide assistance for the municipal elections and for setting up a Permanent Election Commission.

The conclusions stressed that responsibility for consolidating the peace lay primarily with the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina, who understood that the extent of international support depended on the strength of their own efforts and who, along with the other parties to the Peace Agreement (Croatia and FRY), understood that the Security Council, in accordance with its resolution 1074(1996), would consider reimposing sanctions should any party fail significantly to meet its obligations under the Agreement. The Steering Board and the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina recognized the need for the High Representative to continue to perform his tasks throughout the entire consolidation period. Finally, the meeting welcomed the ongoing NATO study of options for securing the environment to enable civilian implementation to continue.

Peace Implementation Conference (December)

The second Peace Implementation Conference (composed of all the members of PIC) was held in London on 4 and 5 December 1996. Its conclusions [S/1996/1012] set out in detail the goals and targets for peace implementation during the next two years, agreed to by Bosnia and Herzegovina and its two entities, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska, and endorsed by Croatia and FRY.

The Conference recapitulated the progress made during the first year's implementation of the Peace Agreement. Peace had taken root, it declared, elections had been held, barriers to freedom of movement had begun to be dismantled, new multi-ethnic common institutions were being established, the Council of Ministers had begun work, and reconstruction was under way.

The aim of the next stage was to build upon those achievements in order to consolidate peace, encourage reconciliation and economic, political and social regeneration and restore a multi-ethnic Bosnia and Herzegovina to economic health and prosperity. Pursuit of those objectives was primarily the responsibility of the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Conference emphasized, adding that PIC's willingness to continue to devote human and financial resources was dependent on their strengthened commitment to implement the Peace Agreement.

The Conference endorsed the guiding principles for a two-year consolidation period developed at the 14 November ministerial meeting of the PIC Steering Board. It adopted the first 12-month action plan for the consolidation phase, which, in addition to the priorities outlined under the guiding principles, also called for: the execution of arrest warrants against indictees and their surrender to the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia; ensuring that the Central Bank was operational by early 1997; developing a media regulatory framework consistent with OSCE standards, unequivocal support for the arbitration of the Brcko area and full implementation of the arbitration decision; and adoption of a customs law and a customs tariff law.

Reaffirming its strong support for the International Tribunal, the Conference charged the Steering Board to consider what further measures could be taken to facilitate the delivery of indictments to the Tribunal for trial and reminded the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina that their obligations under international law took precedence over any provisions in their local or national legislation.

The Conference welcomed the UNHCR decision to convene a meeting of the Humanitarian Issues Working Group on 16 December to discuss a two-year strategic plan to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons. It noted the conclusions of the EU Council of Ministers of 16 October concerning future relations between the EU and countries of the former Yugoslavia and welcomed the EU intention to consider proposals from the European Commission for a contractual relationship between the EU and Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Conference decided that PIC and its Steering Board would continue in 1997. It agreed to the continuation also of the authority it had granted to the High Representative, as well as to the current institutional, reporting and other procedural arrangements for the effective functioning and maintenance of his Office.

The Conference welcomed Bosnia and Herzegovina's request that the Security Council extend the IPTF mandate for a further year and called on the international community to provide the personnel, equipment and support required to maintain IPTF. In noting the successful completion of IFOR's mission, the Conference welcomed the confirmation by the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and FRY of the set of understandings conveyed to them by NATO on 29 November 1996 relating to a follow-on stabilization force which it would organize and lead (see Security Council resolution 1088(1996), part II, below).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

The Security Council convened on 12 December to consider the 9 December report of the Secretary-General recommending extension of the UNMIBH mandate [S/1996/1017] (see below); his 21 November letter [S/1996/968] transmitting the guiding principles of the civilian consolidation plan, adopted by the ministerial meeting of the PIC Steering Board; the conclusions of the 4-5 December Peace Implementation Conference [S/1996/1012], transmitted by the United Kingdom; the High Representative's December report [S/1996/1024], transmitted by the Secretary-General on 9 December; and his communication of the same date [S/1996/1025] conveying letter exchanges between NATO and each of the signatories to the Peace Agreement confirming understandings relating to a NATO-led successor force to IFOR, the Stabilization Force (SFOR).

At the same meeting, the Council adopted resolution 1088(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, including resolutions 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995 and 1035(1995) of 21 December 1995,

Reaffirming its commitment to the political settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, preserving the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States there within their internationally recognized borders,

Welcoming the conclusions of the Ministerial Steering Board and of the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina held in Paris (the Paris Conference) on 14 November 1996, and the guiding principles of the two-year civilian consolidation plan of the peace process referred to in those conclusions,

Welcoming also the conclusions of the Peace Implementation Conference held in London on 4 and 5 December 1996 (the London Conference), which, following the conclusions of the Paris Conference, approved an action plan for the first twelve-month period of the civilian consolidation plan of the peace process,

Welcoming the progress in the implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the Peace Agreement), and expressing its appreciation to the High Representative, the Commander and personnel of the multinational Implementation Force (IFOR), and the personnel of other international organizations and agencies in Bosnia and Herzegovina for their contributions to the implementation of the Peace Agreement,

Noting with satisfaction the holding of the elections called for in annex 3 of the Peace Agreement, and welcoming the progress in establishing the common institutions in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Underlining also the important role for the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to play in the successful development of the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 9 December 1996,

Noting the report of the High Representative of 9 December 1996,

Determining that the situation in the region continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to promote the peaceful resolution of the conflicts in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

I

1. Reaffirms its support for the Peace Agreement, as well as for the Dayton Agreement on implementing the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina of 10 November 1995, calls upon the parties to comply strictly with their obligations under those Agreements, and expresses its intention to keep the implementation of the Peace Agreement and the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina under review;

2. Expresses its support for the conclusions of the Paris and London Conferences;

3. Underlines that the primary responsibility for the further successful implementation of the peace process lies with the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina themselves, which during the next two years should assume increasingly a greater responsibility for the functions now undertaken or coordinated by the international community, and stresses that without compliance and active participation by all the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina in rebuilding a civil society they cannot expect the international community and major donors to continue shouldering the political, military and economic burden of the implementation and reconstruction efforts;

4. Underlines the link, as agreed by the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina in the conclusions of the Paris Conference, between the availability of international financial assistance and the degree to which all the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina implement the Peace Agreement, including cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and cooperation with the action plan which has been approved by the London Conference;

5. Welcomes the mutual recognition among all the successor States to the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia within their internationally recognized borders, and stresses the importance of full normalization of relations, including the immediate establishment of diplomatic relations, among those States;

6. Welcomes the reaffirmation by the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina in the conclusions of the Paris Conference of its commitment to fully pursuing, in the name of the three constituent peoples of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the peace process, in accordance with the Peace Agreement and the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the country, including the development of a Bosnian State based on the principles of democracy and consisting of the two entities, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republika Srpska, and underlines in this respect the importance of establishing the remaining common institutions provided for in the Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina without delay, as well as the importance of the commitment by the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to cooperate in the working of these institutions at all levels;

7. Reminds the parties that, in accordance with the Peace Agreement, they have committed themselves to cooperate fully with all entities involved in the implementation of this peace settlement, as described in the Peace Agreement, or which are otherwise authorized by the Security Council, including the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, as it carries out its responsibilities for dispensing justice impartially, and underlines that full cooperation by States and entities with the International Tribunal includes, inter alia, the surrender for trial of all persons indicted by the Tribunal and provision of information to assist in Tribunal investigations;

8. Recognizes that the parties have authorized the multinational force referred to in paragraph 18 below to take such actions as required, including the use of necessary force, to ensure compliance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement;

9. Welcomes the agreement of the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to supervision by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) of the preparation and conduct of the municipal elections to be held in 1997, and also welcomes the decision of the OSCE to extend the mandate of its mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina to take forward its work on elections, as well as that on human rights and regional stabilization;

10. Underlines the obligation of the parties under the Peace Agreement to secure to all persons within their jurisdiction the highest level of internationally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms, calls upon them to cooperate fully with the work of the Human Rights Ombudsman and the Human Rights Chamber and to implement their conclusions and decisions, and calls upon the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to cooperate fully with the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, the OSCE, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other intergovernmental or regional human rights missions or organizations to monitor closely the human rights situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

11. Welcomes the commitment of the parties to the right of all refugees and displaced persons freely to return to their homes of origin or to other places of their choice in Bosnia and Herzegovina in safety, notes the leading humanitarian role which has been given by the Peace Agreement to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in coordination with other agencies involved and under the authority of the Secretary-General, in assisting with the repatriation and relief of refugees and displaced persons, and stresses the importance of facilitating the return or resettlement of refugees and displaced persons which should be gradual and orderly and carried out through progressive, coordinated programmes that address the need for local security, housing and jobs, while ensuring full compliance with annex 7 of the Peace Agreement as well as other established procedures;

12. Emphasizes the importance of the creation of conditions conducive to the reconstruction and development of Bosnia and Herzegovina, encourages Member States to provide assistance for the programme of reconstruction in that country, and welcomes in this respect the important contribution already made by the European Union, the World Bank and bilateral donors;

13. Underlines the importance of control of armaments in the region at the lowest possible level of weapons, calls upon the Bosnian parties to implement fully and without further delay the agreements signed in Vienna on 26 January 1996 and in Florence on 14 June 1996 and, following satisfactory progress in the implementation of the article II and article IV agreements, calls for efforts to continue to promote the implementation of article V of annex 1-B on regional arms control of the Peace Agreement;

14. Stresses the importance it attaches to the continuation on a reinforced basis as agreed at the Paris and London Conferences of the role of the High Representative in monitoring the implementation of the Peace Agreement and giving guidance to and coordinating the activities of the civilian organizations and agencies involved in assisting the parties to implement the Peace Agreement, and reaffirms that the High Representative is the final authority in theatre regarding the interpretation of annex 10 on civilian implementation of the Peace Agreement and that in case of dispute he may give his interpretation and make his recommendations, including to the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina or its entities, and make them known publicly;

15. Reaffirms its intention to keep the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina under close review, taking into account the reports submitted pursuant to paragraphs 26 and 34 below, and any recommendations those reports might include, and its readiness to consider the imposition of measures if any party fails significantly to meet its obligations under the Peace Agreement;

II

16. Pays tribute to those Member States who participated in the multinational force established in accordance with its resolution 1031(1995), and welcomes their willingness to assist the parties to the Peace Agreement by continuing to deploy a multinational implementation force;

17. Notes the confirmations by the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina, on behalf of Bosnia and Herzegovina, including its constituent entities, and by the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of the understandings set out in the letters dated 29 November 1996 from the Secretary-General of the organization referred to in annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement;

18. Authorizes the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the organization referred to in annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement to establish for a planned period of 18 months a multinational stabilization force (SFOR) as the legal successor to IFOR under unified command and control in order to fulfil the role specified in annex 1-A and annex 2 of the Peace Agreement;

19. Authorizes the Member States acting under paragraph 18 above to take all necessary measures to effect the implementation of and to ensure compliance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, stresses that the parties shall continue to be held equally responsible for compliance with that annex and shall be equally subject to such enforcement action by SFOR as may be necessary to ensure implementation of that annex and the protection of SFOR, and notes that the parties have consented to SFOR's taking such measures;

20. Authorizes Member States to take all necessary measures, at the request of SFOR, either in defence of SFOR or to assist the force in carrying out its mission, and recognizes the right of the force to take all necessary measures to defend itself from attack or threat of attack;

21. Authorizes the Member States acting under paragraph 18 above, in accordance with annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, to take all necessary measures to ensure compliance with the rules and procedures, to be established by the Commander of SFOR, governing command and control of airspace over Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all civilian and military air traffic;

22. Requests the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to cooperate with the Commander of SFOR to ensure the effective management of the airports of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the light of the responsibilities conferred on SFOR by annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement with regard to the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

23. Demands that the parties respect the security and freedom of movement of SFOR and other international personnel;

24. Invites all States, in particular those in the region, to continue to provide appropriate support and facilities, including transit facilities, for the Member States acting under paragraph 18 above;

25. Recalls all the agreements concerning the status of forces as referred to in appendix B to annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement, and reminds the parties of their obligation to continue to comply therewith;

26. Requests the Member States acting through or in cooperation with the organization referred to in annex 1-A of the Peace Agreement to report to the Council, through the appropriate channels and at least at monthly intervals;

***

Noting the request of the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina that the mandate of the United Nations civilian police force known as the International Police Task Force (IPTF), which is a part of the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH), be renewed,

Reaffirming the legal basis in the Charter of the United Nations on which the IPTF was given its mandate in resolution 1035(1995),

Expressing its appreciation to the personnel of UNMIBH for their contribution to the implementation of the Peace Agreement,

III

27. Decides to extend the mandate of UNMIBH, which includes the IPTF, for an additional period terminating on 21 December 1997, and also decides that the IPTF shall continue to be entrusted with the tasks set out in annex 11 of the Peace Agreement, including the tasks referred to in the conclusions of the London Conference and agreed by the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed on the work of the IPTF and its progress in assisting the restructuring of law enforcement agencies, and to report every three months on the implementation of the mandate of UNMIBH as a whole, and, in this context, also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council by 16 June 1997 on the IPTF, in particular its work in assisting the restructuring of law enforcement agencies, coordinating assistance in training and providing equipment, advising law enforcement agencies on guidelines on democratic policing principles with full support for human rights, and investigating or assisting with investigations into human rights abuses by law enforcement personnel, as well as to report on progress by the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina in regard to such issues, in particular their compliance with IPTF-prescribed guidelines including their taking prompt and effective action, which could include dismissal where appropriate, in respect of any officer notified to them by the IPTF Commissioner as failing to cooperate with the IPTF or adhere to democratic policing principles;

29. Stresses that the successful implementation of the tasks of the IPTF rests on the quality, experience and professional skills of its personnel, and urges Member States, with the support of the Secretary-General, to ensure the provision of such qualified personnel;

30. Reaffirms the responsibility of the parties to cooperate fully with, and instruct their respective responsible officials and authorities to provide their full support to, the IPTF on all relevant matters;

31. Expresses appreciation for the efforts under way to enhance and strengthen the logistical and support capabilities of UNMIBH by the Secretary-General, and urges that those efforts be increased;

32. Calls upon all concerned to ensure the closest possible coordination between the High Representative, SFOR, UNMIBH and the relevant civilian organizations and agencies so as to ensure the successful implementation of the Peace Agreement and of the priority objectives of the civilian consolidation plan, as well as the security of IPTF personnel;

33. Encourages Member States, in response to demonstrable progress by the parties in restructuring their law enforcement institutions, to assist the parties, through the IPTF, in following up the United Nations programme of assistance for the local police forces;

34. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council reports from the High Representative, in accordance with annex 10 of the Peace Agreement and the conclusions of the London Conference, on the implementation of the Peace Agreement and in particular on compliance by the parties with their commitments under that Agreement;

35. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1088(1996)

12 December 1996 Meeting 3723 Adopted unanimously

6-nation draft (S/1996/1032).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, having reviewed the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina—an item inscribed in its agenda by decision 50/492 of 16 September—adopted resolution 51/203.

The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/242 of 25 August 1992, 47/1 of 22 September 1992, 47/121 of 18 December 1992, 48/88 of 20 December 1993, 49/10 of 3 November 1994 and all relevant resolutions of the Security Council regarding the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming its support for the independence, sovereignty, legal continuity and territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina, within its internationally recognized borders,

Welcoming the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), signed at Paris on 14 December 1995,

Welcoming also the efforts for the respect, promotion and protection of human rights in all of Bosnia and Herzegovina and for the establishment of the new common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement,

Supporting those institutions and organizations of Bosnia and Herzegovina which are engaged in the implementation of the Peace Agreement and the process of reconciliation and reintegration,

Concerned by the continuing obstructions faced by refugees and displaced persons wishing to return to their homes, emphasizing the need for all parties and the relevant States and international organizations to enhance the conditions necessary to facilitate return, and stressing the need for a regional approach to the issue of refugees and displaced persons,

Welcoming the foundation on 30 October 1996 of the Coalition for Return, composed of refugees and displaced persons from within and outside Bosnia and Herzegovina, including members of all communities, and expressing support for its efforts in facilitating the objectives of annex 7 of the Peace Agreement,

Welcoming also the Agreement on Subregional Arms Control negotiated at Vienna and Florence, as a vital instrument in ensuring regional stability, and alarmed by reports of uneven levels of compliance with provisions of the Agreement,

Having considered the third annual report of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, and noting the varying degrees of cooperation and compliance described therein and stressing the importance and urgency of the work of the International Tribunal as an element of the process of reconciliation in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the region,

Supporting fully the efforts of the International Tribunal aimed at the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991, and demanding that States and parties to the Peace Agreement meet their obligations to cooperate fully with the Tribunal, as required by Security Council resolutions 827(1993) of 25 May 1993 and 1022(1995) of 22 November 1995, including with respect to surrendering persons sought by the Tribunal,

Welcoming the mutual recognition among all the successor States to the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia within their internationally recognized borders, and stressing the importance of full normalization of relations, including the immediate establishment of diplomatic relations, among those States, in accordance with the Peace Agreement,

Stressing the importance of full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for the success of the peace efforts for the region, and calling upon the Governments and the authorities in the region, as well as relevant international organizations, to facilitate such full respect,

Noting that democratization in the region will enhance the prospects for a lasting peace and help to guarantee full respect for human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the region,

Welcoming the holding of elections under the supervision of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe on 14 September 1996 for State, Entity and canton level offices, and calling upon all parties to further cooperate with the organization in the preparation and holding of free and fair elections throughout all of Bosnia and Herzegovina at the municipal/local level,

Noting the positive impact of the two previous pledging conferences, held respectively on 21 December 1995 and 13 and 14 April 1996 and chaired by the World Bank and the European Union on the peace process and reintegration of the country as well as the reconstruction effort, stressing the importance and urgency of providing the pledged financial assistance and technical cooperation in reconstruction efforts and the role of economic revitalization in the process of reconciliation, in the improvement of living conditions and in the maintenance of a durable peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the region, and encouraging an early convening of the next pledging conference,

Welcoming in particular the important efforts of the European Union, bilateral and other donors to provide humanitarian and economic assistance for reconstruction,

Underlining that the full, comprehensive and consistent implementation of the Peace Agreement is vital for the maintenance of international peace and security,

1. Expresses its full support for the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), which constitutes the key mechanism for the achievement of a durable and just peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, leading to stability and cooperation in the region and the reintegration of Bosnia and Herzegovina at all levels;

2. Welcomes the successful implementation of certain aspects of the Peace Agreement, including the establishment of a lasting cessation of hostilities, the establishment of the military zones of separation, national elections held on 14 September 1996, and the formation and functioning of certain common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

3. Underlines the responsibility of the parties to cooperate fully and in good faith in the prompt formation and functioning of all the new common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina and in establishing the necessary conditions for holding democratic, free and fair local elections in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement;

4. Demands the full, comprehensive and consistent implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

5. Welcomes the conclusions of the meeting of the ministerial Steering Board and the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina, held in Paris on 14 November 1996, in order to define the guiding principles of the civilian consolidation plan of the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina in accordance with the Peace Agreement;

6. Welcomes also the conclusions of the London Peace Implementation Conference, held on 4 and 5 December 1996, at which the Bosnian parties and the international community committed themselves to a detailed action plan to implement the Peace Agreement, and calls upon all parties, as signatories to the Peace Agreement and immediate neighbours, to continue to work for a peaceful, reintegrated and stable Bosnia and Herzegovina in accordance with the Peace Agreement;

7. Recognizes that responsibility for consolidating the peace lies primarily with the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as was confirmed in particular in the joint declaration adopted at Geneva on 14 August 1996;

8. Also recognizes that the role of the international community remains essential, and welcomes the readiness of the international community to continue its efforts;

9. Underlines the relationship between the fulfilment by the parties of their commitments under the Peace Agreement and the readiness of the international community to commit resources for reconstruction and development;

10. Welcomes the formation of the multinational Stabilization Force authorized by the Security Council as the successor to the Implementation Force, and calls upon all parties to cooperate fully with it;

11. Stresses the importance of the full, comprehensive and consistent implementation of the Peace Agreement, including cooperation and compliance with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, the establishment of the necessary conditions for the voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons, and the establishment of the necessary conditions for freedom of movement;

12. Calls upon all the parties to cooperate fully, and in good faith, in the prompt formation and functioning of all of the new common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina and in establishing the necessary conditions for holding democratic, free and fair local elections at the municipal level in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement, and urges the relevant international organizations to consider the provision of assistance to meet the infrastructural needs of the new common institutions of Bosnia and Herzegovina, particularly in Sarajevo, the capital of the State and Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

13. Insists upon the need to deliver all indictees to the International Tribunal to trial, notes that the International Tribunal has the authority to address individual responsibility for the perpetration of the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and other serious violations of international humanitarian law committed, including in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and reiterates that all parties should arrest and surrender to the Tribunal all indicted persons on territories under their control, and to otherwise fully comply with the orders of the Tribunal and to cooperate with the work of the Tribunal, including with exhumations and other investigative acts, in accordance with article 29 of the statute of the Tribunal, with all relevant Security Council resolutions and in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement and its annexes, in particular the Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

14. Urges Member States, taking into account the orders and requests of the International Tribunal, to offer the Tribunal their full support, including financial support, in order to ensure the completion of the Tri-bunal's purpose, and to carry out their obligations under the statute of the Tribunal and all relevant Security Council resolutions;

15. Reaffirms once again the right of refugees and displaced persons to return voluntarily to their homes of origin in accordance with the Peace Agreement, in particular annex 7 of the Agreement, and the realization of same in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and host countries, calls upon all parties to immediately establish the conditions necessary for the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes and for the freedom of movement and communication for all the citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and upon the relevant international organizations to enhance the conditions to facilitate return, in accordance with relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement and its annexes, in particular the Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and welcomes efforts by the European Union, bilateral and other donors, United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations in establishing projects designed to facilitate the voluntary and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons to all regions of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

16. Strongly condemns all acts of intimidation designed to discourage the voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons, in particular the destruction of housing units;

17. Reaffirms once again its support for the principle that all statements and commitments made under duress, particularly those regarding land and property, are wholly null and void, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement, and supports the effective engagement of the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees, in compliance with its mandate;

18. Emphasizes the importance of economic revitalization and reconstruction for the successful consolidation of the peace process in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

19. Calls upon the parties to cooperate fully with the arbitration process in Brcko and to respect the decisions reached through the arbitration process, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement;

20. Demands that all parties comply fully with the Agreement on Subregional Arms Control, including the accurate reporting of existing levels of armaments and the destruction of the required amounts of armaments, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement, and urges Member States and the appropriate regional organizations to assist in the implementation and verification of the Agreement on Subregional Arms Control, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Peace Agreement;

21. Stresses the need for timely information about the level of cooperation and compliance with the International Tribunal and its orders, the status and programme for the return of refugees and displaced persons to and within Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the status and implementation of the Agreement on Subregional Arms Control;

22. Commends the efforts of the international community, including the Council of Europe, the European Union, the European Community Monitoring Mission, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Monetary Fund, the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, the Islamic Development Bank, the multinational Implementation Force led by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, non-governmental organizations, the office of the High Representative, the office of the Special Rapporteur for Human Rights of the Commission on Human Rights, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Peace Implementation Council, the United Nations International Police Task Force, the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the World Bank, in their roles in the implementation of the Peace Agreement;

23. Decides to include in the provisional agenda at its fifty-second session the item entitled "The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina".

General Assembly resolution 51/203

17 December 1996 Meeting 88 149-0-2 (recorded vote)

27-nation draft (A/51/L.62/Rev.1 & Add.1); agenda item 56.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: plenary 85, 86, 88.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Palau, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Belarus, Russian Federation.

The Russian Federation noted that, unlike the clear formulations of Security Council resolution 1088(1996), which gave impetus to a further stage in the international community's implementation efforts, the Assembly resolution contained imprecise and unclear language, besides being too detailed in some of its provisions while failing to mention other aspects. It reasoned that, as the Council was actively seized of the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Assembly had no need to adopt a resolution on that item, which it could have deferred to its fifty-second session.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY), as one of the five nations that emerged from the break-up of the former Yugoslavia, remained involved in 1996 in ongoing regional and international efforts to resolve the situations affecting the area (see also "Bosnia and Herzegovina", "Croatia", and "FYROM".)

In the area of human rights, the General Assembly, in resolution 51/116, adopted in December 1996, called on the Government of FRY to undertake substantially greater efforts to institute democratic norms, especially in regard to the protection of free and independent media, and full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. It also strongly urged the FRY Government to revoke all discriminatory legislation and to apply all other legislation without discrimination and to take urgent action to prevent arbitrary eviction and dismissals and discrimination against any ethnic or national, religious or linguistic group. It also strongly condemned the continuing refusal of FRY to arrest and surrender indicted war criminals known to be in its territory.

The Assembly also urgently demanded that authorities in FRY take immediate action to end the repression of and prevent violence against non-Serb populations in Kosovo. (For full text of resolution 51/116 and other information on human rights in FRY, see PART TWO, Chapter III.) In 1996, proceedings continued with regard to a case before the International Court of Justice, brought by Bosnia and Herzegovina against FRY in 1993 (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

Also during 1996, the Security Council, in a presidential statement [S/PRST/1996/23], expressed profound concern over instances of the failure of FRY to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 (see PART FOUR, Chapter II, for full text and further details).

Following the initialling of the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement, the Security Council on 22 November 1995 had adopted resolution 1022(1995), suspending indefinitely the sanctions that had been imposed, beginning in 1992, as a result of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia.

Sanctions against FRY were terminated with immediate effect on 1 October 1996 by a unanimous vote of the Security Council, in adopting resolution 1074(1996) (see full text below). The Council had specified in resolution 1022(1995) that those measures would be lifted on the tenth day following the conclusion of the first free and fair elections called for under the Peace Agreement.

In resolution 1074(1996), the Council also welcomed the process of mutual recognition and stressed the importance of full normalization of relations, including the establishment of diplomatic relations, among all successor States to the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. During 1996, FRY had concluded three separate agreements—with the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Croatia, and Bosnia and Herzegovina—aimed at normalizing relations with those countries. (See above, under "The former Yugoslavia", for details on State succession issues.)

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Council met on 1 October and adopted resolution 1074(1996), formally terminating all sanctions it had imposed in May 1992, under resolution 757(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 352], against FRY.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia and reaffirming, in particular, its resolution 1022(1995) of 22 November 1995,

Reaffirming its commitment to the political settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, preserving the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States there within their internationally recognized borders,

Expressing its appreciation to the High Representative, the Commander and personnel of the multinational Implementation Force, personnel of the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, as well as other international personnel in Bosnia and Herzegovina for their contributions to the implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the Peace Agreement),

Welcoming the progress in the implementation of the Peace Agreement,

Welcoming also the process of mutual recognition and stressing the importance of full normalization of relations, including the establishment of diplomatic relations, among all successor States to the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Noting with satisfaction that the elections called for in annex 3 to the Peace Agreement have taken place in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Underlining the need for full cooperation by States and entities with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, which constitutes an essential aspect of implementing the Peace Agreement,

Reminding the parties of the relationship between the fulfilment by them of their commitments in the Peace Agreement and the readiness of the international community to commit financial resources for reconstruction and development.

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Notes with satisfaction that the elections called for in annex 3 to the Peace Agreement took place on 14 September 1996 in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and notes that their holding constituted an essential step towards achieving the objectives of the Peace Agreement;

2. Decides, in accordance with paragraph 4 of its resolution 1022(1995), to terminate, with immediate effect, the measures referred to in paragraph 1 of that resolution;

3. Calls upon all parties to comply strictly with all their commitments under the Peace Agreement;

4. Decides to keep the situation under close review taking into account the reports submitted pursuant to paragraphs 25 and 32 of its resolution 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995 and any recommendations those reports might include;

5. Further decides to consider the imposition of measures if any party fails significantly to meet its obligations under the Peace Agreement;

6. Further decides to dissolve the Committee established by its resolution 724(1991) of 15 December 1991 once its report has been finalized and expresses its gratitude for the work of the Committee;

7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1074(1996)

1 October 1996 Meeting 3700 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/815).

The Committee established pursuant to Council resolution 724(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 219], in a 15 November report [S/1996/946], presented a concise account of its work since 1993 until the termination of sanctions, and made recommendations to help the Council refine the instrument of sanctions, increase its effectiveness as a peaceful means of conflict management and preventive action and minimize its collateral humanitarian effects. Having finalized its report, the Committee was dissolved in accordance with resolution 1074 (1996).

Croatia

United Nations mandates in the Republic of Croatia in 1996 related mainly to the implementation of the 1995 Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (the Basic Agreement) [YUN 1995, p. 587]—which sought the peaceful reintegration of Serb-held territory into Croatia—as well as to the monitoring of the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula.

In keeping with arrangements to assist the parties in fulfilling their commitments under the Basic Agreement, the Security Council on 15 January 1996 established the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES), for an initial period of 12 months. The United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia (UNCRO) was terminated on the same date in accordance with Council resolution 1025(1995) of 30 November 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 589] relating to the Transitional Administration.

As a result of the Council decision to terminate UNCRO, all UN military units and their accompanying civilian components, including UNCRO political and humanitarian officers and UN civilian police, departed from the former Sectors West, North and South in Croatia. The last civil affairs personnel were withdrawn from those Sectors on 17 January 1996, resulting in a drastic reduction in the international community's ability to monitor the human rights and humanitarian situation in those areas, the Secretary-General said in his report on the work of the Organization [A/51/1]. Human rights concerns in Croatia were addressed throughout the year (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

As described by the Secretary-General in a 26 June report [S/1996/472], the objectives of the new mission were to bring the region, demilitarized and secure, under the sovereign control of the Government of Croatia; to retain the region's multi-ethnic character; to promote an atmosphere of confidence among all local residents irrespective of their origin; to enable refugees and displaced persons to enjoy the right to return to their homes and live there in conditions of security; to promote respect for the highest standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms; to promote redevelopment and reconstruction of the region in harmony with the overall plans of Croatia; and to organize free and fair local elections no later than 30 days before the end of the transitional period.

As full implementation of the Basic Agreement had not been achieved by mid-November, in particular the elections that were envisaged, the Council, on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, extended the UNTAES mandate for six months, from 16 January to 15 July 1997. The six-month deployment of 100 military observers as part of UNTAES, authorized by the Council on 31 January 1996, was subsequently extended until 15 January 1997.

The monitoring of the demilitarization of Prevlaka, a strategic peninsula, which was south-east of Dubrovnik and controlled the entrance to Kotorska Bay, remained on the agenda of the Security Council in 1996. Responsibility for such monitoring, first assumed by the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) in 1992 by authority of Security Council resolution 779(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 343], was in keeping with arrangements elaborated by UNPROFOR and accepted by Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY). Those arrangements, which provided for the complete withdrawal of the Yugoslav People's Army from Croatia, the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula and the removal of heavy weapons from neighbouring areas of Croatia and Montenegro, were based on the concept of the establishment of a demilitarized zone on either side of the Croatia-Montenegro border called the "blue zone" and an area free of heavy weapons and fortifications called the "yellow zone".

Since the case regarding the delineation of the State borders submitted by FRY to the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia (ICFY) remained unresolved, and as the demilitarization called for had never been fully achieved, the area had been a source of dispute and thus of intermittent tension between FRY and Croatia.

Monitoring of the peninsula was incorporated in the UNCRO mandate in March 1995, by Security Council resolution 981(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 569]. In keeping with the Secretary-General's 1995 recommendation [YUN 1995, p. 590] that monitoring of the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula be continued beyond the termination of UNCRO on 15 January 1996 as an independent mission, the Council, on that date, authorized continuation of such monitoring by UN military observers (UNMOs) for a three-month period, subject to extension as necessary for a similar period (resolution 1038(1996)). The Secretary-General subsequently decided that the operation be known as the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP) and comprise 28 UNMOs under the command of a Chief Military Observer, who would report directly to UN Headquarters.

On 15 July, the Council authorized the UNMOs to continue monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula until 15 January 1997.

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted decision 51/428 deferring consideration of the agenda item entitled "The situation in the occupied territories of Croatia" for inclusion in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second (1997) session.

UN Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES)

On 15 January, the Security Council, by resolution 1037(1996) (see below), authorized the creation of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES), for an initial 12-month period, with the overall responsibility of helping the parties implement the November 1995 Basic Agreement between Croatia and the local Serb authorities. The Council also urged Member States, acting nationally or in concert with regional organizations, to take all necessary measures, including close air support, to defend or help UNTAES withdraw if necessary, and it requested UNTAES, on its part, to cooperate with the multinational Implementation Force (IFOR) and the High Representative. The Council decided that the UNTAES military component would consist of up to 5,000 troops initially.

The UNTAES area of operation, located at the easternmost tip of Croatia bordering the Serbian province of Vojvodina, extended approximately 30 kilometres from east to west and 140 kilometres north to south, its main cities being Vukovar, Beli Manastir, Darda, Tenja, Klisa and Vinkovci.

The authorized strength of UNTAES included up to 5,000 troops, 100 UN Military Observers (UNMOs) and 600 police monitors. Also budgeted for were 448 international staff and 664 locally recruited staff. As authorized by resolution 1037(1996), arrangements had been made with IFOR, based in Bosnia and Herzegovina, to provide UNTAES with close air and other support in an emergency.

On 31 January, the Council authorized the deployment of 100 UNMOs as part of UNTAES for a six-month period ending 15 July 1996 (resolution 1043(1996)), subsequently extended for a further six months to 15 January 1997 (resolution 1069(1996)). The UNMOs were charged with identifying items to be demilitarized, monitoring and verifying demilitarization undertaken by the parties, and reporting developments relevant to the maintenance of peace and security.

UNTAES was headed by the Transitional Administrator, Jacques Paul Klein (United States). Appointed by an exchange of letters on 16 and 17 January between the Secretary-General and the Council [S/1996/38, S/1996/39], the Transitional Administrator assumed office on 11 February. The military component was under the command of Major-General Jozef Schoups (Belgium), who was appointed Force Commander with effect from 1 March, also by an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the Council, on 9 and 13 February [S/1996/101, S/1996/102]. He assumed command on 14 March.

The interim military headquarters at Erdut moved to Vukovar on 1 April, while UNTAES headquarters, which had begun operating from existing UN facilities in Zagreb, relocated to Vukovar on 22 April.

The military component, numbering close to 5,000 combat troops and support units, completed deployment on 5 May. By 22 June, 432 police monitors had arrived in the mission area.

The military component was mandated to facilitate the demilitarization of the region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium within 30 days of becoming operational, monitor the safe return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes, and contribute to the maintenance of peace and security in the region.

The civilian staff included a civil affairs unit responsible for the staffing, chairing and coordination of a number of joint implementation committees. It consisted of 44 civil affairs officers, of whom 17 operated from UNTAES headquarters and 27 from six field offices, in Beli Manastir, Osijek, Vukovar City, Vinkovci, Erdut and Ilok.

The civilian component was mandated to: establish a temporary police force and develop a police training programme; undertake tasks relating to civil administration and to the functioning of public services; facilitate the return of refugees; organize elections, assist in their conduct and certify the results; assist in the coordination of plans for the region's development and economic reconstruction; monitor compliance with the parties' commitment to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms; facilitate the demining of the region; and maintain an active public affairs element.

The Schedule and Procedures for the Demilitarization of the Region of Eastern Slavonia were signed on 15 April. The process, which was to last no more than 30 days, entailed disarmament and demobilization of all military, paramilitary and police forces, units and personnel, as well as the elimination of all their command structures. It was completed on 20 June, by which time all heavy weapons belonging to local Serb forces had either been removed from the region or handed over to UNTAES. An international inspection team was formed by UNTAES to confirm that the demilitarization had been carried out, and comprehensive inspections of all known and suspected military/police locations took place between 24 and 27 June, at which date a Certificate of Demilitarization was signed at UNTAES headquarters in Vukovar between the UNTAES Force Commander and the Commander of the Baranja-Eastern Slavonia Corps. However, there had been little handing over of small arms and ammunition, the Secretary-General observed in his annual report on the work of the Organization [A/51/1]; while many of those might have been removed from the region, it was likely that considerable quantities had stayed in private hands. As a result of the anxiety felt by some residents of the region about long-term security, UNTAES developed a procedure for registering non-military weapons of persons entitled to hold them.

The UNTAES military component established observation posts in the zone of separation between the Croatian and Serb forces prior to and during the process of demilitarization; it also monitored demining efforts by the parties. UNTAES soldiers provided support to preventing the illegal removal of resources from the region, such as cut timber, and on 14 May they assumed control of the strategic Djeletovici oilfield.

Progress was made in training a temporary police force consisting of Croatian and local Serb police officers. The local Transitional Police Force, established on 1 July 1996, was to have an estimated strength of 1,300 personnel; it had primary responsibility for maintaining law and order, operating under the authority of the Transitional Administrator and monitored by UN civilian police. Selected officers from both sides were being trained at the International Law Enforcement Academy in Budapest, Hungary, with the assistance of UN civilian police monitors and the United States International Criminal Investigation and Training Assistance Programme.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 15 January 1996, the Security Council adopted resolution 1037(1996), establishing UNTAES.

The Security Council,

Recalling its earlier relevant resolutions, and in particular its resolutions 1023(1995) of 22 November 1995 and 1025(1995) of 30 November 1995,

Reaffirming once again its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia, and emphasizing in this regard that the territories of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium are integral parts of the Republic of Croatia,

Stressing the importance it attaches to full respect for human rights and fundamental freedom of all in those territories,

Expressing its support for the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, signed on 12 November 1995 between the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the local Serbian community (the Basic Agreement),

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995,

Stressing the importance it places on mutual recognition among the successor States to the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, within their internationally recognized borders,

Desiring to support the parties in their effort to provide for a peaceful settlement of their disputes, and thus to contribute to achievement of peace in the region as a whole,

Stressing the obligations of Member States to meet all their commitments to the United Nations in relation to the United Nations peacekeeping operations in the former Yugoslavia,

Determining that the situation in Croatia continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to ensure the security and freedom of movement of the personnel of the United Nations peacekeeping operation in the Republic of Croatia, and to these ends, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to establish for an initial period of 12 months a United Nations peacekeeping operation for the region referred to in the Basic Agreement, with both military and civilian components, under the name "United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium" (UNTAES);

2. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint, in consultation with the parties and with the Security Council, a Transitional Administrator, who will have overall authority over the civilian and military components of UNTAES and who will exercise the authority given to it in the Basic Agreement;

3. Decides that the demilitarization of the region, as provided in the Basic Agreement, shall be completed within 30 days from the date the Secretary-General informs the Council, based on the assessment of the Transitional Administrator, that the military component of UNTAES has been deployed and is ready to undertake its mission;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report monthly to the Council, the first such report to be submitted within one week after the date on which the demilitarization is scheduled to be completed pursuant to paragraph 3 above, regarding the activities of UNTAES and the implementation of the Basic Agreement by the parties;

5. Strongly urges the parties to refrain from any unilateral actions which could hinder the handover from UNCRO to UNTAES or the implementation of the Basic Agreement, and encourages them to continue to adopt confidence-building measures to promote an environment of mutual trust;

6. Decides that, no later than 14 days after the date on which demilitarization is scheduled to be completed pursuant to paragraph 3 above, it will review whether the parties have shown a willingness to implement the Basic Agreement, taking into consideration the parties' actions and information provided to the Council by the Secretary-General;

7. Calls upon the parties to comply strictly with their obligations under the Basic Agreement and to cooperate fully with UNTAES;

8. Decides to reconsider the mandate of UNTAES if at any time it receives a report from the Secretary-General that the parties have significantly failed to comply with their obligations under the Basic Agreement;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council no later than 15 December 1996 on UNTAES and the implementation of the Basic Agreement, and expresses its readiness to review the situation in the light of that report and to take appropriate action;

10. Decides that the military component of UNTAES shall consist of a force with an initial deployment of up to 5,000 troops, which will have the following mandate:

(a) To supervise and facilitate the demilitarization as undertaken by the parties to the Basic Agreement, according to the schedule and procedures to be established by UNTAES;

(b) To monitor the voluntary and safe return of refugees and displaced persons to their home of origin in cooperation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, as provided for in the Basic Agreement;

(c) To contribute, by its presence, to the maintenance of peace and security in the region; and

(d) Otherwise to assist in implementation of the Basic Agreement;

11. Decides that, consistent with the objectives and functions set out in paragraphs 12 to 17 of the Secretary-General's report of 13 December 1995, the civilian component of UNTAES shall have the following mandate:

(a) To establish a temporary police force, define its structure and size, develop a training programme and oversee its implementation, and monitor treatment of offenders and the prison system, as quickly as possible, as set out in paragraph 16 (a) of the Secretary-General's report;

(b) To undertake tasks relating to civil administration as set out in paragraph 16 (b) of the Secretary-General's report;

(c) To undertake tasks relating to the functioning of public services as set out in paragraph 16 (c) of the Secretary-General's report;

(d) To facilitate the return of refugees as set out in paragraph 16 (e) of the Secretary-General's report;

(e) To organize elections, to assist in their conduct, and to certify the results as set out in paragraph 16 (g) of the Secretary-General's report and in paragraph 12 of the Basic Agreement; and

(f) To undertake the other activities described in the Secretary-General's report, including assistance in the coordination of plans for the development and economic reconstruction of the region, and those described in paragraph 12 below;

12. Decides that UNTAES shall also monitor the parties' compliance with their commitment, as specified in the Basic Agreement, to respect the highest standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms, promote an atmosphere of confidence among all local residents irrespective of their ethnic origin, monitor and facilitate the demining of territory within the region, and maintain an active public affairs element;

13. Calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia to include UNTAES and the United Nations Liaison Office in Zagreb in the definition of "United Nations Peace Forces and Operations in Croatia" in the present status-of-forces agreement with the United Nations and requests the Secretary-General to confirm urgently, and no later than the date referred to in paragraph 3 above, on whether this has been done;

14. Decides that Member States, acting nationally or through regional organizations or arrangements, may, at the request of UNTAES and on the basis of procedures communicated to the United Nations, take all necessary measures, including close air support, in defence of UNTAES and, as appropriate, to assist in the withdrawal of UNTAES;

15. Requests that UNTAES and the multinational Implementation Force (IFOR) authorized by the Council in its resolution 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995 cooperate, as appropriate, with each other, as well as with the High Representative;

16. Calls upon the parties to the Basic Agreement to cooperate with all agencies and organizations assisting in the activities related to implementation of the Basic Agreement, consistent with the mandate of UNTAES;

17. Requests all international organizations and agencies active in the region to coordinate closely with UNTAES;

18. Calls upon States and international financial institutions to support and cooperate with efforts to promote the development and economic reconstruction of the region;

19. Underlines the relationship between the fulfilment by the parties of their commitments in the Basic Agreement and the readiness of the international community to commit financial resources for reconstruction and development;

20. Reaffirms that all States shall cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and its organs in accordance with the provisions of resolution 827(1993) of 25 May 1993 and the statute of the International Tribunal and shall comply with requests for assistance or orders issued by a Trial Chamber under article 29 of the statute;

21. Stresses that UNTAES shall cooperate with the International Tribunal in the performance of its mandate, including with regard to the protection of the sites identified by the Prosecutor and persons conducting investigations for the International Tribunal;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to submit for consideration by the Council at the earliest possible date a report on the possibilities for contributions from the host country in offsetting the costs of the operation;

23. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1037(1996)

15 January 1996 Meeting 3619 Adopted unanimously

8-nation draft (S/1996/23).

Sponsors: France, Germany, Italy, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States.

By a 26 January letter [S/1996/66] to the Security Council, the Secretary-General recalled that his recommendation had been for a force of 9,300 combat troops to ensure security in the region and to supervise its demilitarization through a visible, credible presence. Given the smaller force of up to 5,000 troops authorized by the Council, he sought authorization—on the advice of the Transitional Administrator and military staff at UN Headquarters in New York and at the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters (UNPF-HQ) in Zagreb—for the additional deployment of 100 UNMOs, as part of UNTAES, for a period of six months in order to enable UNTAES to supervise and facilitate the demilitarization called for in the Basic Agreement. The UNMOs would identify the units and equipment to be demilitarized, and monitor and verify the demilitarization undertaken by the parties; they would also report on any developments relevant to the maintenance of peace and security in the region.

The Secretary-General notified the Council on the same date [S/1996/66/Add.1] that the costs associated with the deployment of the UNMOs for the period indicated were estimated at approximately $2.3 million and provided a breakdown by main categories of expenditure.

The Security Council met again on 31 January and, following consideration of the Secretary-General's additional proposal and associated cost estimate, adopted resolution 1043(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 1037(1996) of 15 January 1996 establishing the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES),

Having considered the letter dated 26 January 1996 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council,

1. Decides to authorize, as part of UNTAES, and in accordance with the provisions of resolution 1037(1996), the deployment of 100 military observers for a period of six months;

2. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1043(1996)

31 January 1996 Meeting 3626 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/70).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

The Secretary-General notified the Security Council on 20 May [S/1996/363] of the Transitional Administrator's assessment that the military component of UNTAES had been deployed and was ready to undertake its mission of demilitarization of the region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and that other arrangements to support that operation were in place. The Transitional Administrator had reported his intention to begin demilitarization at 1200 hours on Tuesday, 21 May.

The Security Council met on 22 May to consider the Secretary-General's notification. Also before the Council was a letter from Croatia [S/1996/357] stating that, on 17 May, the Croatian Sabor had adopted an amnesty law entitled "Act Applicable to Perpetrators of Criminal Acts in the Area of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium". The letter added that the law referred to criminal acts committed between 17 August 1990 and 1 June 1996 and excluded persons "suspected of violations of international humanitarian law and the laws of war".

Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the statement below [S/PRST/1996/26] on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council has considered the letter of the Secretary-General to its President of 20 May 1996 in which he informed the Council of the assessment of the Transitional Administrator that the military component of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) had been deployed and was ready to undertake its mission of demilitarization of the region. That mission of demilitarization began on 21 May 1996.

The Security Council calls upon the parties to comply strictly with their obligations under the Basic Agreement of 12 November 1995 on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and to cooperate fully with UNTAES. It stresses that they must refrain from any unilateral action which could hinder the implementation of the Basic Agreement, including the process of demilitarization.

The Security Council reminds the parties that the successful implementation of the Basic Agreement requires the respect by them of the highest level of internationally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms. It calls upon the parties to continue to cooperate with UNTAES in adopting confidence-building measures to promote an environment of mutual trust.

The Security Council calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia to grant amnesty to all persons who, either voluntarily or by coercion, served in the civil administration, military or police forces of the local Serb authorities in the former United Nations Protected Areas with the exception of those who committed war crimes as defined in international law. It notes that the law on amnesty recently passed in the Republic of Croatia is a step in this direction. The Council calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia to make this amnesty comprehensive as soon as possible and stresses the importance such a measure would have for maintaining public confidence and stability during the demilitarization and demobilization process.

The Security Council underlines the key importance of attention to the need for economic reconstruction and rehabilitation of the region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and encourages Member States to contribute to this end.

The Security Council will remain seized of the matter and requests the Secretary-General to keep it regularly informed of developments in the situation.

Meeting number. SC 3666.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In keeping with Security Council resolution 1037(1996), the Secretary-General, on 26 June, submitted the first [S/1996/472] of a series of monthly progress reports on UNTAES activities and the parties' implementation of the Basic Agreement. The report gave a detailed description of the political, civilian and humanitarian aspects of the implementation. It also provided information on the composition and deployment of UNTAES (see above).

The report noted that the Transitional Administrator had held meetings with Croatia's cabinet and President Franjo Tudjman to discuss implementation matters. He had maintained regular contact with senior government officials and representatives of the local Serb population, as well as with the local Executive Council, instrumental in coordinating implementation activities. In view of the significant role played by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY) in the conclusion of the Basic Agreement and of its continuing interest in the successful discharge of the UNTAES mandate, the Transitional Administrator had briefed FRY President Slobodan Milosevic and other Yugoslav authorities on relevant developments on a number of occasions. A visit to Zagreb on 11 March by the FRY Minister for Foreign Affairs had resulted in agreements between Croatia and FRY covering the reopening of the Adriatic oil pipeline, consular matters, and the restoration of highway, railway, air-corridor and telecommunication links between the two countries.

In addition, UNTAES had set up joint implementation committees, chaired by UNTAES and attended by Croatian and local Serb representatives. Fifteen such committees and subcommittees had begun work in the areas of public services, education and culture, health, civil administration, human rights, pensions, police matters, prisoners of war, missing persons, refugees and displaced persons, and confidence-building.

Of major significance was the reported completion of the demilitarization of the region on 20 June, which, in accordance with the Basic Agreement, had been accomplished within 30 days of its start at 1200 hours on 21 May. All heavy weapons belonging to local Serb forces had either been removed or handed over to UNTAES for disposal. Since March, UNTAES was reported to have monitored the removal of 93 tanks, 11 armoured personnel carriers, 35 anti-tank systems, 107 artillery pieces, 123 mortars and 42 anti-aircraft guns. Additionally, UNTAES was engaged in halting incursions into the zone of separation near the Lipovac highway by elements of the Croatian Special Police and Army. The local police had also been demilitarized as part of the region's overall demilitarization. Maintenance of law and order would thus devolve on the Transitional Police Force envisaged under the Basic Agreement, which was in the process of being established and expected to be operational on 1 July.

In the economic sector, the UNTAES military had assisted in preventing the illegal removal of resources, such as timber, from the region. On 14 May, it assumed control of the strategic Djeletovci oilfield, the region's single most important economic resource, and secured the departure from the area of the "Scorpion" paramilitary unit, which mined the area as it left. The oilfield's closure since 16 April had resulted in the rapid fall of the region's revenues.

UNTAES legal officers remained engaged in encouraging Croatia to produce a short, comprehensive and clear amnesty law, since, according to the report, the law as finally enacted by Croatia on 31 May lacked the specificity required in a penal enactment, provided amnesty not to all Croatian citizens but only to those in the region, and included possible prosecution in Croatian courts of persons accused of "most serious crimes"—a categorization leading to confusion and uncertainty as to whom it might be applied.

The Secretary-General observed that in less than six months UNTAES had achieved significant progress in the discharge of its mandate. It had contributed towards bringing divided populations together through confidence-building measures such as family reunions, town hall meetings, village visits and church services, as well as towards the gradual normalization of relations between Croatia and FRY. He noted that demilitarization had been completed with relative ease but that quantities of small arms and ammunition had nevertheless been retained by people anxious about their future security.

The Secretary-General pointed to the daunting tasks of enabling the return to and resettlement in the region of several thousand Croat refugees and displaced persons, which required two key conditions: the urgent clearance of mines (estimated to number some 350,000) and the rebuilding or repair of housing and infrastructure. He further drew attention not only to the considerable resources required for such tasks, but, more importantly, to the region's precarious financial situation.

Concurring with the Force Commander's opinion that the continued presence of the UNMOs would enhance the ability of UNTAES to monitor the post-demilitarization situation in the region, the Secretary-General recommended extending the UNMO mandate to 15 January 1997, the end of the current UNTAES mandate.

In a later addendum to his report [S/1996/472/Add.1], the Secretary-General estimated that the cost of maintaining the 100 UNMOs for a further six months would be $1.9 million. On 28 June [A/51/184-S/1996/500], Croatia, referring to the Secretary-General's comment in his report that the recently enacted Croatian amnesty law was unclear as to whom it applied, stated that, on the previous day, the Government had issued a list of 811 persons who would not be protected by that law.

As to the Secretary-General's reference to "several thousand displaced Croats" waiting to return to the region, Croatia cited the 1991 official census indicating that the region had been home to 193,538 Croatian citizens: 125,510 of non-Serb and 68,028 of Serb ethnic backgrounds. Croatia claimed that since then almost all of the non-Serb Croatian citizens had been ethnically cleansed from the region and thousands had been killed, adding that, in addition to the 76,669 registered non-Serbs who had been displaced from there and were currently under government care, almost all of a significant number of non-Serb Croats in refuge in asylum countries had expressed the intention to return. By government estimates, therefore, close to 100,000 Croats were waiting to return.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

The Security Council met twice in connection with the Secretary-General's report. On 3 July, the Council, after consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the statement below [S/PRST/1996/30] on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council, in accordance with paragraph 6 of resolution 1037(1995), has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 26 June 1996 submitted pursuant to this resolution on the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES).

The Council notes that the implementation of the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, signed on 12 November 1995 (the Basic Agreement), is proceeding according to the timetable established by this Agreement. In particular it notes with appreciation that the demilitarization proceeded smoothly and was completed on 20 June 1996. It expresses its satisfaction at the cooperation that both parties have shown in this respect. It calls upon both sides to refrain from any action that might raise tension and to continue to cooperate closely with UNTAES on all aspects of the Basic Agreement to maintain peace and security in the region. It expresses its readiness to consider favourably the extension of the mandate of the United Nations military observers in UNTAES as recommended in the report.

The Council expresses its satisfaction with the work already achieved by UNTAES, in particular through its operational joint implementation committees, for the re-establishment of normal conditions of life for all the inhabitants of the region. The Council welcomes the efforts now in train to begin the return of displaced persons and refugees to their homes in the region. It notes that it is equally important that persons who fled from their homes in Western Slavonia and elsewhere in Croatia, in particular in the Krajina, should be permitted to return to their homes of origin. The Council calls upon both parties to cooperate fully with UNTAES in that respect.

The Council recalls the statement of its President of 22 May 1996. The Council regrets that the Government of the Republic of Croatia has not yet taken steps to adopt a comprehensive amnesty law concerning all persons who, either voluntarily or by coercion, served in the civil administration, military or police forces of the local Serb authorities in the former United Nations Protected Areas, with the exception of those who committed war crimes as defined in international law. The Council urges that this action should be taken as soon as possible and calls on the Croatian Government to cooperate with UNTAES to that end.

The Council expresses its concern at the worsening economic situation in the region, particularly since the closure in April of the Djeletovci oilfields, which constitute the region's most important economic resource, and at the subsequent lack of revenue available to the local administration to meet salaries and other operating costs of the region. The Council urges the Government of the Republic of Croatia to cooperate closely with UNTAES to identify and provide funding for the local administration and public services. It also underlines the importance of economic development in stabilizing the region.

The Council expresses its support for the efforts of UNTAES to establish and train a Transitional Police Force which will have the primary responsibility for the maintenance of law and order, operating under the authority of the Transitional Administrator and monitored by the United Nations civilian police. The Council also supports the efforts of UNTAES and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to facilitate mine clearing for humanitarian purposes. It calls upon States and others concerned urgently to contribute in support of such activities.

The Council commends the Transitional Administrator and all the personnel of UNTAES for the impressive results they have achieved so far and expresses its full support for them.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Meeting number. SC 3678.

The Council met again on 30 July and, following consideration of the Secretary-General's recommendation for an extension of the UNMOs, together with the associated cost estimates, adopted resolution 1069(1996).

The Security Council, Recalling its resolution 1037(1996) of 15 January 1996 establishing the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) and its resolution 1043(1996) of 31 January 1996 authorizing the deployment of military observers as part of UNTAES,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 26 June 1996,

1. Decides to authorize, as part of UNTAES, and in accordance with the provisions of resolution 1037(1996), the deployment of 100 military observers for an additional period of six months, ending on 15 January 1997;
2. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1069(1996)

30 July 1996 Meeting 3686 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/601).

Communications from Secretary-General (2, 12 August). The Secretary-General, on 2 August, communicated [S/1996/632] to the Security Council his deep concerns over the difficulties confronting UNTAES in securing funding for the operation of existing local administrative structures in its area of operations. Recalling his June report on the closure of the Djeletovci oilfield—which, he explained, was a condition agreed upon between Croatia and FRY for reopening the Adriatic oil pipeline—the Secretary-General noted that the resultant steady deterioration of the local administration's revenue base had been worsening, so that even the one-time government commitment of $1.2 million was insufficient to meet operational costs, including fuel and utilities, which Serbian companies were threatening to cut off on 5 August if arrears were not paid. That precarious financial state, besides leading to a depletion of the local civil service and to a possible breakdown of region-wide law and order, had begun to erode public confidence in UNTAES.

In the Secretary-General's assessment, extraordinary financial support was urgently required for up to six months beginning on 1 August, pending a reliable source of funding from the Government. Such support would maintain local administration and public services during the transition period to avoid a collapse of local government, ensure reasonable stability in the region, establish and exercise control over the Transitional Police Force, launch a package of reconstruction projects to reduce unemployment and absorb demobilized ex-combatants into the economy.

On 12 August [S/1996/648], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council the text of the "Agreement on Interim Co-financing of Public Services on the Territory Administered by UNTAES, by the Government of the Republic of Croatia", concluded on 8 August between Croatia and UNTAES.

Under the Agreement, Croatia would provide for regular monthly co-financing of public services on the territory of Croatia administered by UNTAES in the amount of 4.5 million kuna, to be deposited in kuna to the UNTAES account by the tenth of each month; the proportion of the funds to be used for the Transitional Police Force was to be defined by separate agreement between the Ministry of the Interior and UNTAES; and UNTAES was to provide the Government with a monthly financial report on expenditures and was to ensure the official introduction of the kuna in the territory under its administration no later than 1 October 1996. The Agreement was to remain in force until 15 January 1997.

Report of Secretary-General (5 August). In a report of 5 August [S/1996/622], the Secretary-General stated that, following the successful demilitarization of the region, UNTAES had shifted its focus to implementing the civilian and political aspects of its mandate, the key achievements of which included the opening of the Drava River to navigation, the restoration of the main railway line between Croatia and FRY, and the facilitation of demining for humanitarian purposes in priority areas, especially in and around Lipovac. The Transitional Administrator had made strenuous efforts to build confidence in the region and to maintain the full support of the authorities of Croatia and FRY. He had continued to meet regularly with Presidents Tudjman and Milosevic and had advised the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) on developments in the region.

The Secretary-General reported that UNTAES remained unsuccessful in removing the Croatian Special Police stationed at several points in the zone of demilitarization (formerly the zone of separation), but that operational monitoring of eight international crossing points between Croatia and FRY had been instituted in early July, with 37 border monitors deployed by the end of that month. Agreement in principle had been reached on a project for the centralized issuance of identity documents for two months, beginning in August. According to ongoing discussions regarding the opening of the Djeletovci oilfield, demining of the area would begin in early August and oil production would resume by the middle of the month. Human rights training in the region had begun. The Transitional Police Force, established on 1 July and envisaged to have a strength of 1,300 personnel, had begun joint operations but had been hampered by delays in obtaining government clearances and new uniforms, fuel shortages and the unsettled question of salaries. Terms of reference for a collaborative approach to the return of displaced Serbs and Croats both to and from the region, including specific areas of coordination, were finalized between UNTAES and UNHCR on 29 July.

The Secretary-General further reported that, in the assessment of an electoral survey mission to the region undertaken by the Electoral Assistance Division of the UN Secretariat, from 13 to 21 July, elections could be held in February or March 1997 at the earliest. That timing was predicated upon prior establishment of an appropriate legal framework, determination of criteria for voter and candidate eligibility, definition of boundaries of municipalities, districts and counties, and timely logistical preparations.

The Secretary-General observed that, as the region's reintegration progressed, the apprehensions of the local Serb population had increased—linked to the deteriorating economic situation, the absence of funding for local administration, delayed disbursements of international assistance, the growing pressure from Croatia not to extend the UNTAES mandate beyond 15 January 1997, and the absence of an adequate amnesty law. Drawing attention to the mass demonstrations held by local Serbs in Vukovar on 15 and 17 July, the Secretary-General said they indicated a growing uncertainty and political ferment whose causes, if unaddressed, could undermine the achievements of the implementation process and disrupt further progress.

The Secretary-General stated that, while the tasks of UNTAES were daunting, it was making encouraging progress in implementing all aspects of its mandate. Given current conditions in the region, however, he felt it was unrealistic to expect completion of those tasks by the end of the current mandate. He thus suggested that the Council might consider indicating its intention to extend the UNTAES mandate by up to a further 12 months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (15 August)

In the light of the Secretary-General's foregoing report, as well as of his 2 and 12 August communications, the Security Council met on 15 August and, following consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the statement below [S/PRST/1996/35] on its behalf:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 5 August 1996 on the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) and the letter from the Secretary-General of 2 August 1996 concerning the funding of the existing local administrative structures in the area of operations of UNTAES.

The Council welcomes the progress made by UNTAES in implementing the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium signed on 12 November 1995 (the Basic Agreement), and in promoting the full and peaceful reintegration of the region of Eastern Slavonia into the Republic of Croatia. It stresses that the restoration and maintenance of the multi-ethnic character of Eastern Slavonia are important to international efforts to maintain peace and stability in the region of the former Yugoslavia as a whole. It reminds both parties of their obligation to cooperate with UNTAES. It underlines the importance of economic rehabilitation of the region, the establishment of a Transitional Police Force and the return of displaced persons and refugees to their homes in the region, as well as the importance of the promotion by the Government of Croatia of the return of displaced persons and refugees to their homes of origin elsewhere in the Republic of Croatia. It further underlines the importance of the holding of elections in accordance with the Basic Agreement, once the necessary conditions have been established.

The Council reminds the Government of Croatia of its responsibility to cooperate with UNTAES and to create conditions conducive to maintaining stability in the region. It calls on the Government of Croatia to take the necessary action without further delay.

The Council recalls the statements of its President of 22 May and 3 July 1996 and again urges the Government of Croatia to adopt a comprehensive amnesty law concerning all persons who, voluntarily or by coercion, served in the civil administration, military or police forces of the local Serb authorities in the former United Nations Protected Areas, with the exception of those who committed war crimes as defined in international law. The Council notes with concern that the amnesty law and the action subsequently taken by the Government of Croatia, as described by the Secretary-General in his report of 5 August, have been insufficient to create confidence among the local Serb population in Eastern Slavonia. The Council notes the general agreement reached by President Tudjman and President Milosevic in Athens on 7 August 1996 that a general amnesty is an indispensable condition for the safe return of refugees and displaced persons. It expects this agreement to be followed up by corresponding concrete measures.

The Council notes with appreciation the agreement reached by the Government of Croatia and UNTAES on issues relating to the funding of public services on the territory administered by UNTAES. It notes, however, that this funding is not sufficient to cover all the costs of such services and it expects further funding to be made available by the Government of Croatia urgently and without conditions. It stresses the importance of ensuring a functioning civil administration so as to maintain stability in the region and help ensure the fulfilment of the mission objectives of UNTAES. The Council, having regard to its resolution 1037(1996), also reminds the Government of Croatia of the need to contribute towards the costs of the UNTAES operation.

The Council recalls that the Basic Agreement provides for a transitional period of 12 months which may be extended at most to another period of the same duration if so requested by one of the parties. It stresses the importance it attaches to UNTAES being able to complete its mandated tasks, including the organization of elections as provided for in the Basic Agreement, promptly and in full. These tasks are, as the Secretary-General notes, the building blocks for the difficult process of reconciliation. To that end, the Council affirms its readiness to consider, at an appropriate time, extending the duration of the mandate of UNTAES, on the basis of the Basic Agreement, its resolution 1037(1996) and a recommendation from the Secretary-General.

The Council expresses its appreciation to the Transitional Administrator and his staff, and reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the Transitional Administrator.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Meeting number. SC 3688.

Report of Secretary-General (28 August). In a report of 28 August [S/1996/705], the Secretary-General highlighted several positive political developments. Among them was the 8 August Agreement on interim co-financing of public services of the region signed by Croatia and UNTAES (see above). Although only a partial solution to the estimated $2 million required, the Agreement was a positive step towards the regular funding of public administration structures and hence towards defusing much of the recent weeks' political ferment. Another was the 23 August Agreement concluded between Croatia and FRY on the normalization of relations between them [A/51/318-S/1996/706], which stressed the need to implement the Basic Agreement consistently and to refrain from actions that could compromise full compliance with it. An additional agreement between the parties, to declare general amnesty for all acts committed in connection with armed conflicts, except for the gravest violations of humanitarian law characterized as war crimes, was, the Secretary-General observed, of great significance to the discharge of the UNTAES mandate.

Negative developments were also cited, however, such as increasing signs of polarization within the local Serb leadership, with hardline elements in the Regional Assembly and Regional Executive Council opposing reintegration and challenging the positions of those willing to cooperate with UNTAES. Hardliners made sustained attempts to prevent progress in nascent contacts between the local leadership and the Government and in strengthening cooperation between the local authorities and UNTAES. They had also sought to impede the functioning of the joint implementation committees and to hinder UNTAES efforts to facilitate government issuance of Croatian citizenship and identity documents to eligible residents.

Further noted was the overall negative impact on the implementation process of the uncertainty about the duration of the UNTAES mandate. While the Serb Regional Assembly had formally requested the Transitional Administrator on 18 July to seek a one-year extension of the mandate, Croatia maintained in public statements that it would agree to only a three-month extension beyond 15 January 1997, conditional upon the holding of elections by 15 December 1996.

Opposition from hardliners notwithstanding, the first of three offices to process applications for identity documents (citizenship papers, birth certificates, identity cards and passports) opened on 20 August, in accordance with written instructions issued by the Transitional Administrator in the exercise of his authority over the region. Although subjected to some harassment, 233 persons registered during the first three days; the majority were non-Serbs, however.

The information programme developed by UNTAES consisted of radio broadcasts in the Croatian and Serbian languages and the thrice-monthly UNTAES Bulletin, featuring, besides world and other news items, information about UNTAES activities throughout the region in the context of the Basic Agreement, daily reports from UN spokesmen at Vukovar and Sarajevo and interviews with the Transitional Administrator.

Report of Secretary-General (1 October). The Secretary-General's report of 1 October [S/1996/821] recorded progress in several areas. The Transitional Administrator initiated a series of direct contacts between the parties as a means of resolving their differences and reducing mutual suspicion and mistrust. Such direct dialogue was instrumental in Croatia's enactment on 20 September of a revised amnesty law, which, if applied fairly and equitably, should provide a positive basis for further steps towards reconciliation. In cooperation with UNHCR, UNTAES had made steady progress in preparing for the return of refugees and displaced persons. Demining of the village centres in four pilot villages in the southern part of the region had been completed and reconstruction was under way, while modalities for joint Croat-Serb demining operations in the more populous central and northern villages were under negotiation.

At the eight international crossing points, a more efficient local enforcement of the customs regime, under UNTAES supervision, had increased regional revenue over the past three months, from 1.6 million to 3.7 million dinars (from about $300,000 to about $740,000). High-level technical discussions among Croatia, the local Serb authorities and UNTAES were ongoing, aimed at establishing a joint customs/immigration service beginning in November. The Saturday market days, introduced by UNTAES to foster reconciliation between Croats and Serbs, were reported to have begun drawing up to 8,000 people each week.

Exhumation of the mass grave at Ovcara, begun on 1 September by staff engaged by the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and by Physicians for Human Rights, had uncovered between 25 and 30 bodies, which were to be transported to Zagreb for forensic examination.

However, the Secretary-General pointed out that, for the outstanding complex policy and administrative issues to be settled, the parties had to improve their level of cooperation with UNTAES and take steps to foster a constructive atmosphere. That required Croatia promptly to fulfil its financial commitments for the provision of public services, substantially to accelerate the issuance of citizenship documents, and to mount a clear information campaign to explain to its citizens the remaining steps required for a successful reintegration of the region and its population into Croatia. The Secretary-General expressed concern over the Government's unwillingness fully to inform the population of the obligations it had assumed under the Basic Agreement with regard to the UNTAES mandate and to the rights of the region's residents, as well as concern over the fact that unrealistic demands by politically active groups had not been challenged by the Government.

On the Serb side, the Secretary-General stated that obstructionist attitudes of some hardline elements in the local leadership were squandering opportunities to secure firm commitments for job security, economic development, the orderly return of Croat displaced persons, long-term protection of human rights and the preservation of the multi-ethnic character of the region.

Report of Secretary-General (26 October). In a 26 October report [S/1996/883], the Secretary-General expressed regret that he was not in a position to report an improvement in the level of the Government's cooperation with UNTAES. On 27 September, the House of Representatives of the Croatian Parliament unanimously adopted a non-binding resolution calling for the termination of UNTAES on 15 January 1997 and for elections to be held by 15 December 1996. Throughout October, there had been increasingly hostile and aggressive statements against UNTAES in the media and by the Government, including statements by the Minister of Defence threatening military action if the region was not returned by April 1997. Further instances of non-cooperation by the Croatian authorities were the last-minute withdrawal from joint Croat-Serb demining training and the prohibition of Croatian participation in the UNTAES market day on 12 October.

In efforts to seek the full cooperation of both parties, the Transitional Administrator, on 7 October, met with FRY President Milosevic, who expressed full support for UNTAES and his wish to see its mandate extended for an additional year, and undertook to meet with local hardline Serb leaders to urge them to cooperate with UNTAES. Nonetheless, the hardliners had continued to block progress, particularly in parts of Baranja. The Transitional Administrator then met with Croatian President Tudjman on 8 October and outlined his serious concerns about the confrontational atmosphere that had been developing and the orchestrated attack on UNTAES in the Croatian media. President Tudjman promised full cooperation, indicating his readiness to make significant conciliatory gestures towards Serbs in the region.

As in his preceding three reports on UNTAES activities, the Secretary-General, in the 26 October report, noted that the military situation within the region had remained quiet. The incidence of undisciplined small-arms fire, mostly in urban areas, had been low. UNTAES continued to ensure that the region remained demilitarized and, in cooperation with Croatian authorities, launched a weapons buy-back programme on 2 October. Over 6,000 rifles, automatic weapons, hand and rifle grenades, and portable anti-tank rocket launchers, as well as some 56,000 rounds of ammunition of various calibres, were exchanged for cash provided by the Government. Outside the region, activity by the armed forces of Croatia and FRY had been limited to routine training exercises. However, an unannounced deployment of several FRY tanks in the immediate vicinity of the border with Croatia east of Lipovac occurred on 9 October; following a protest from UNTAES, the tanks were promptly withdrawn.

On 16 October, after two months of negotiations in the Joint Implementation Committee on Agriculture, the parties signed a memorandum of understanding on the Government's financing of some $3.7 million for the autumn planting season and for reintegrating the agricultural holding companies, thereby improving employment prospects. The Joint Implementation Committee on Public Services and Utilities secured agreement for the reintegration of the local Serb telecommunications and postal services into the Croatian national systems, with Croatia providing guarantees of continued employment of local Serbs. Similar progress had been achieved on railways. Discussions were under way regarding reintegrating the regional electricity company into the national company and on a mechanism for the redress of individual cases of human rights violations.

Despite difficulties with respect to the payment of salaries, the operational efficiency of the Transitional Police Force had continued to improve. To enhance its professionalism, training courses on human rights and crowd control had been conducted by the International Criminal Investigation and Training Assistance Programme of the United States Government. As of 26 October, the Force had a strength of 1,512, consisting of 1,337 Serbs and 175 Croats.

Summing up, the Secretary-General stated that, in the six months since the full deployment of UNTAES in the region, demilitarization had been completed, the Transitional Police Force had been established, integration of waterways, railways and roads was in hand, and postal and telephone services had been reconnected with the national systems. That had permitted resumption of communication, travel and commerce between segments of the population who had been separated for five years. Strenuous efforts had been made to attract international financial assistance for economic reconstruction and revitalization, from which disbursements had begun. Government funding had also been secured for local agriculture.

The process of face-to-face political dialogue had been instrumental in the achievement of a satisfactory amnesty law. Over 10 per cent of residents had applied for Croatian citizenship and the number was increasing. More than 45,000 Serbs and Croats had participated at seven UNTAES market days, thus contributing to a reduction of individual hostility and suspicion. Over 13,000 family reunions had taken place. The first four pilot project villages with over 600 houses had been demined, and reconstruction was at a stage where Croat displaced persons might return in November. In the central part of the region, demining had begun in several villages, where there were over 1,000 houses, for returns expected in the spring.

Building on the progress achieved, UNTAES had set a realistic target plan for the fulfilment of the remaining tasks of its mandate within a specific timetable. They included decreasing the number of weapons remaining in the region; the continued development of a dependable multi-ethnic Transitional Police Force; creating a joint transitional customs and immigration service for deployment at all international border crossings; the continued reintegration of administrative systems; the reintroduction of Croatian laws and regulations and administration of justice; the registration of local vehicles with Croatian motor vehicle authorities; continued demining and reconstruction for the return of displaced Croats and Serbs; and establishment of the administrative and technical infrastructure required for the elections.

It was the assessment of UNTAES, the Secretary-General reported, that with full cooperation from both parties, it should be able to complete its primary tasks by the early summer of 1997. He therefore recommended that the Security Council extend the current UNTAES mandate for six months, ending on 15 July 1997, with a suggestion that the Council might at the same time consider making appropriate arrangements for a further six-month presence, making a two-year transitional period.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (15 November)

The Security Council met on 15 November to consider the Secretary-General's 26 October report. The President drew attention to a 1 November letter [S/1996/899] from FRY, strongly supporting the view that, in order to preserve peace and security in the region, the UNTAES mandate should be continued until 15 January 1998 and enclosing a formal request, dated 18 July, for such an extension from the Serb leadership of the Regional Assembly of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium.

At the same meeting, the Council adopted resolution 1079(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions concerning the territories of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium of the Republic of Croatia, and in particular its resolutions 1023(1995) of 22 November 1995, 1025(1995) of 30 November 1995, 1037(1996) of 15 January 1996, 1043(1996) of 31 January 1996 and 1069(1996) of 30 July 1996,

Reaffirming once again its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia and emphasizing in this regard that the territories of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium are integral parts of the Republic of Croatia,

Welcoming the success the United Nations Transitional Administration in Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) has had in facilitating the peaceful return of the territories to the control of the Republic of Croatia,

Recalling that the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, signed on 12 November 1995 by the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the local Serb community (the Basic Agreement), requested the Security Council to establish a Transitional Administration to govern the region during the transitional period,

Recalling also that the Basic Agreement provided that the transitional period of twelve months may be extended at most to another period of the same duration if so requested by one of the parties,

Noting that the local Serb community has requested that the transitional period be extended by twelve months, as indicated by the Secretary-General in his report of 28 August 1996,

Welcoming the Secretary-General's report of 26 October 1996, and noting in particular the Secretary-General's recommendations that the mandate of UNTAES be extended by six months, until 15 July 1997; that early extension would avoid a period of pressure and political turmoil; and that the Council consider at this time the need for a further six-month presence of the United Nations,

Determining that the situation in Croatia continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Determined to ensure the security and freedom of movement of the personnel of the United Nations peacekeeping operations in the Republic of Croatia, and, to these ends, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Expresses its full support for UNTAES and calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the local Serb community to cooperate fully with UNTAES and to fulfil all obligations specified in the Basic Agreement and all relevant Security Council resolutions;

2. Calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the local Serb community to cooperate with UNTAES in creating the conditions and taking the other steps necessary for holding local elections in the region, in accordance with the Basic Agreement, the organization of which is the responsibility of UNTAES;

3. Reaffirms the importance of full compliance by the parties with their commitments as specified in the Basic Agreement to respect the highest standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms and to promote an atmosphere of confidence among all local residents irrespective of their ethnic origin, and, in this context, urges the Government of the Republic of Croatia to ensure respect for the rights of all national ethnic groups;

4. Urges furthermore the Republic of Croatia and the local Serb community to avoid actions which could lead to refugee movements and, in the context of the right of all refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes of origin, reaffirms the right of all persons originating from the Republic of Croatia to return to their homes of origin throughout the Republic of Croatia;

5. Emphasizes the responsibility of both the Republic of Croatia and the local Serb community to improve the reliability and effectiveness of the transitional police force, in cooperation with UNTAES and consistent with its mandate;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council fully informed of developments and to report to the Council by 15 February 1997 and again by 1 July 1997 on the situation in the region;

7. Decides to maintain the United Nations presence in the region until the end of the extended transitional period as provided for in the Basic Agreement and:

(a) Decides to extend the mandate of UNTAES until 15 July 1997;

(b) Requests that, as soon as possible after the successful holding of elections, and in no case later than his report of 1 July 1997, the Secretary-General provide to the Council for its immediate action his recommendations, in the light of the parties' progress towards fulfilling the Basic Agreement, for the further United Nations presence, possibly a restructured UNTAES, consistent with the fulfilment of the Basic Agreement, for the six-month period beginning on 16 July 1997;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1079(1996)

15 November 1996 Meeting 3712 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/938).

UN Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP)

On the basis of the Secretary-General's 1995 recommendations, the Security Council on 15 January 1996 authorized the UNMOs to continue monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula for a three-month period. Until that date, UNCRO had been responsible for such monitoring.

In accordance with specifications set out by the Secretary-General in a report of 6 February [S/1996/83], the monitoring operation, consisting of 28 UNMOs, became a separate mission known as the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP), under the command of a Chief Military Observer who reported directly to UN Headquarters. Colonel Goran Gunnarsson (Sweden) was appointed to that post by an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the Security Council on 21 and 28 February [S/1996/142, S/1996/143]. He was succeeded on 27 November by Harold Mwakio Tangai (Kenya), also appointed by a similar exchange of letters, on 14 and 19 November [S/1996/957, S/1996/958].

Communications (January). Croatia informed the Security Council on 10 January [S/1996/13] that it would support a continued deployment of UNMOs in the Prevlaka peninsula, on the understanding that it would be a short-term, interim one, until its replacement by a regional arrangement. Croatia reaffirmed that it remained committed to confidence-building measures in the peninsula, including full demilitarization of the area on both sides of the international border and other aspects of preventive diplomacy based on OSCE principles. It supported further negotiations with FRY on such issues as maritime passage for vessels utilizing the Boka Kotorska harbour, but reiterated that it could not accept that country's claim that there was a "territorial dispute" between them.

FRY, in a reply transmitted on 11 January [S/1996/21], insisted on the existence of a territorial dispute between it and Croatia and asked the Council to call on the latter to resolve the dispute through diplomatic negotiations, pending which it also asked the Council to regulate the further continuation of the UN monitoring mission in the disputed area.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

The Security Council met on 15 January 1996 to consider the December 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 590] of the Secretary-General recommending, among other things, the continued UNMO monitoring of the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula and setting forth the details of that mission. At the same meeting, the Council adopted resolution 1038(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling its earlier relevant resolutions, and in particular its resolutions 779(1992) of 6 October 1992, 981(1995) of 31 March 1995 and 1025(1995) of 30 November 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995,

Reaffirming once again its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia,

Noting the Joint Declaration signed at Geneva on 30 September 1992 by the Presidents of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, which reaffirmed their agreement concerning the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, emphasizing the contribution that this demilitarization has made to the decrease of tension in the region, and stressing the need for the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to agree on a settlement which would peacefully resolve their differences,

Stressing the importance it places on mutual recognition among the successor States to the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, within their internationally recognized borders,

Determining that the situation in Croatia continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

1. Authorizes the United Nations military observers to continue monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula in accordance with Council resolutions 779(1992) and 981(1995) and paragraphs 19 and 20 of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995 for a period of three months, to be extended for an additional period of three months upon a report by the Secretary-General that such extension would continue to contribute to the decrease of tension there;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council by 15 March 1996 a report for its early consideration on the situation in the Prevlaka peninsula as well as on progress made by the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia towards a settlement which would peacefully resolve their differences, and on the possibility that the existing mandate be extended or that another international organization may assume the task of monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula;

3. Requests the United Nations military observers and the multinational Implementation Force authorized by the Council in its resolution 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995 to cooperate fully with each other;

4. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1038(1996)

15 January 1996 Meeting 3619

Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/24).

Report of Secretary-General (March). Responding to the Security Council's request, the Secretary-General submitted a report dated 12 March [S/1996/180] in which he notified the Council that UNMOP had become a separate mission. Routine operational UNMOP activities included daily patrols, regular weekly meetings with local military and police commanders in Dubrovnik and Herceg-Novi and high-level meetings with the area's political, religious and cultural leaders and with general staff officers in Zagreb and Belgrade—all aimed at promoting confidence and improving prospects for a solution.

Although the situation in the Prevlaka remained stable, provocations from both sides continued, the Secretary-General observed. Monitoring had been seriously disrupted by violations within the "blue zone", an area intended to be controlled exclusively by the United Nations and access to which was to be denied to both parties. There, five military-type fortifications suitable for emplacing tanks and other heavy weapons had been put up and were manned by Croatian special police forces, four permanently and one intermittently. Access to those positions had been consistently denied to UNMOP, limiting its ability to discharge its mandate. Also threatening its safety and seriously restricting its movement were two mined areas on the Croatian side. On the Montenegrin side, a special police checkpoint had been permanently manned since October 1994, in retaliation, Montenegrin authorities claimed, for the Croatian checkpoint set up at Cipavica the month before.

Both parties continued to dispute the nature and extent of the "yellow zone", the Secretary-General noted, and to construct within it field defence fortifications. The stronger positions held a number of bunkers with wide fields of fire, accommodation bays and, in some cases, mortar-firing positions. In front of the forward positions were markers indicating the presence of mines. On the Croatian side in the northern part of the "yellow zone", UNMOP had observed deployment of military units in the Dubravka area, as well as tanks, artillery and anti-aircraft guns. The permanent restriction on movement in an area on the Montenegrin side had led UNMOP to believe that FRY forces were present there in significant numbers.

The Secretary-General stated that his Special Representative, Kofi Annan, had met with the Presidents of Croatia, Montenegro and Serbia in an effort to advance negotiations among them.

Croatia's President maintained that, historically, Prevlaka had been Croatian territory and that there was no question of disputing Croatia's sovereignty over it, nor border changes or territorial negotiations; nonetheless, Croatia had presented a number of proposals to decrease tension and solve the issue through bilateral negotiations. Serbia's President had indicated readiness to work on a "bridging" solution that would facilitate normal, but not fully normalized, relations with Croatia. Montenegro's President affirmed his commitment to a negotiated settlement, pending which the status quo should be maintained.

The Secretary-General drew attention to the parties' differences regarding which international organization should monitor the peninsula, pending a peaceful solution, to which they appeared committed. FRY had voiced satisfaction with the current arrangement and had appealed for renewal of the UNMOP mandate. Croatia's preference was for a mission under OSCE auspices, to dispel what it believed to be the impression created by the UN presence that the area was in dispute and under threat of military confrontation. Such a mission was unacceptable to Montenegro as long as FRY had no full membership in OSCE. In the meantime, OSCE had advised the Special Representative of its inability to assume such responsibility in the foreseeable future.

The Secretary-General thus concluded that, in the absence of progress towards a negotiated settlement or of agreement between the parties on an alternative organization to monitor the area, continued UNMOP presence would contribute to decreasing tension.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

The Security Council informed the Secretary-General on 14 March [S/1996/191] that, in the light of his view that the continued presence of UNMOP in the peninsula would contribute to the decrease of tension there, its mandate would continue in accordance with paragraph 1 of resolution 1038 (1996), namely, for an additional period of three months ending on 15 July 1996. The Council asked for a further report on developments in advance of that date.

Report of Secretary-General (June). As requested, the Secretary-General on 27 June submitted a further report [S/1996/502] indicating an improvement in the situation in the Prevlaka. The Croatian army had cleared one of the two mined areas in the "blue zone", at the shoreline next to the road leading to UNMOP headquarters, and restriction on movement along the coastal road had been partially lifted. In the "yellow zone", Croatia had withdrawn its heavy weapons from areas that UNMOP had been permitted to patrol; it had further replaced its military personnel with special police. FRY had also withdrawn its heavy weapons, although UNMOP could not confirm their complete removal from the zone. After negotiations with that country's authorities, the restriction on movement in the northern part of the "yellow zone" previously reported as permanent had eased. Additionally, UNMOP was currently allowed, with prior notification, to patrol the zone's eastern part. Apart from those positive developments, all other previously reported conditions remained unchanged.

In May, UNMOP presented to the parties a number of practical options and procedures for improving safety and security in the area so as to enable them to move from their current defensive military deployment to a normal border-security stance. The parties acknowledged those proposals as coinciding with their own views.

The Secretary-General believed that, while UNMOP could not continue indefinitely, its termination at that stage could lead to military tensions that could prove prejudicial to political negotiations. Given the continued absence of another international or regional organization to undertake full-time monitoring of the area, the Secretary-General recommended that UNMOP be extended for another three months, until 15 October 1996.

In an addendum to his report [S/1996/502/Add.1], the Secretary-General estimated that, should the Council decide to extend the UNMOP mandate for three months, the associated costs would amount to $500,000.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

Acting on the Secretary-General's recommendation on 15 July, the Security Council adopted resolution 1066(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling its earlier relevant resolutions, and in particular its resolutions 779(1992) of 6 October 1992, 981(1995) of 31 March 1995, 1025(1995) of 30 November 1995 and 1038(1996) of 15 January 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 27 June 1996,

Reaffirming once again its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia,

Noting the Joint Declaration signed at Geneva on 30 September 1992 by the Presidents of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia which reaffirmed their agreement concerning the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, emphasizing the contribution that this demilitarization has made to the decrease of tension in the region, and stressing the need for the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of

Yugoslavia to agree on a settlement which would peacefully resolve their differences,

Stressing the importance it places on mutual recognition among the successor States to the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, within their internationally recognized borders,

Determining that the situation in Croatia continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

1. Authorizes the United Nations military observers to continue monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, in accordance with resolutions 779(1992) and 981(1995) and paragraphs 19 and 20 of the report of the Secretary-General of 13 December 1995, until 15 January 1997;

2. Urges the parties to abide by their mutual commitments and to continue their negotiations with a view to normalizing fully their bilateral relations, which are critical for the establishment of peace and stability throughout the region;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council by 5 January 1997 a report for its early consideration on the situation in the Prevlaka peninsula as well as on progress made by the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia towards a settlement which would peacefully resolve their differences;

4. Encourages the parties to adopt the practical options proposed by the United Nations military observers to reduce tension, as referred to in the report of the Secretary-General of 27 June 1996;

5. Requests the United Nations military observers and the multinational Implementation Force authorized by the Council in resolution 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995 to continue to cooperate fully with each other;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1066(1996)

15 July 1996

Meeting 3681

Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/545).

Communications (October/November). By an aide-memoire issued in Belgrade in October [A/51/563-S/1996/884], the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) presented information arguing for the existence of a dispute with Croatia over Prevlaka (made up of the territory of Cape Ostri and a part of its natural hinterland) and explaining the nature of that dispute. It asserted that the dispute had been acknowledged by Croatia; traced the origins of the UN security regime on Prevlaka and how it had been violated by Croatia; enumerated the diplomatic negotiations it had undertaken with Croatia from 1991 to 13 May 1996, none of which had yielded results; and cited those portions of their recently concluded normalization agreement whereby they undertook to settle the dispute through negotiations, pending which they agreed to respect the existing security regime established through UN monitoring.

Also by the aide-memoire, FRY proposed a solution, which it said represented a new initiative to settle the territorial dispute over Prevlaka and a measure of the agreement's implementation. In essence, the proposal called for a legal and just delimitation on Prevlaka, so that Cape Ostri and a part of its natural hinterland were recognized as an integral part of Boka Kotorska in Montenegro and, therefore, of FRY, on the basis of its continued exercise of jurisdiction on the area over a long period of history. In exchange for Croatia's recognition of that claim, FRY would make it possible for Croatia freely to use the southern air and road corridor.

Croatia, by an aide-memoire of 25 November [A/51/690-S/1996/974], stated at the outset that it would not elaborate on the "counter-productive" FRY aide-memoire. Instead, it highlighted "some basic facts relevant under international law" and advanced arguments in support of its own position that the Prevlaka peninsula was indisputably an integral part of Croatia. Regarding their 23 August agreement on normalization of relations between them, the article dealing exclusively with the Prevlaka peninsula did not mention Prevlaka as a territorial issue, Croatia pointed out, nor, bona fide, could there be any dispute about that.

Croatia said it had always been prepared to settle all disputes with its neighbours peacefully. However, as before, it would not cede any part of its territory as a price for peaceful settlement of outstanding issues; rather, it would defend its territory by all means available to all States equally under international law. In that regard, it was confident that it had the international community's support, based on the Charter of the United Nations.

Further report of Secretary-General (December). Pursuant to the Security Council resolution of 15 July, the Secretary-General issued a 31 December report [S/1996/1075] indicating that the situation in the Prevlaka had been generally stable, but that recent events had raised tensions. Croatia had allowed civilians access to the "blue zone", prompting continuous patrolling by FRY naval vessels at the entrance to Boka Kotorska Bay and subsequent air and naval exercises. That gave rise to Croatian allegations of airspace violations by FRY military aircraft. The parties had shown little willingness to adopt the practical options proposed by UNMOP in May for reducing tension and improving safety and security in the area, and the violations previously observed in the "blue zone" continued, as did the imposition of restrictions on UNMOP's freedom of movement in the northern part of the demilitarized zone. Minefields adjacent to patrol routes in the "yellow zone" remained a hazard to UNMOP.

Despite their 23 August agreement on normalization of relations, Croatia and FRY held different interpretations of the "disputed issue" and the "security regime" referred to in that agreement. For Croatia, the Prevlaka issue was one of security; for FRY, it was a question of territory. The latter wanted UNMOP to remain, while Croatia held that respect for the existing security regime established through UN monitoring, as agreed on in article 4 of the agreement, did not necessarily entail continued UNMOP presence.

The parties' divergent public pronouncements notwithstanding, the Secretary-General was optimistic that a settlement could be attained. Believing that the continued presence of UNMOP was indispensable, he recommended a six-month extension of the UNMOP mandate, to 15 July 1997.

Human rights concerns

During Croatia's recovery of control in 1995 over those parts of its territory formerly known as Sector West (Western Slavonia), in May [YUN 1995, p. 573], and Sectors North and South (northern and southern Krajina), in August [YUN 1995, p. 580], large-scale violations of human rights and humanitarian law were reported to have been perpetrated against the local Serb populations. By resolutions 1009(1995) of 10 August and 1019(1995) of 9 November [YUN 1995, pp. 583 & 560], the Security Council demanded that Croatia take urgent measures to put an end to such violations.

In addition to responding with two 1995 reports [YUN 1995, pp. 592 & 593], the Secretary-General prepared four others [S/1996/100, 456, 691 & 1011] during 1996 on the basis of information provided by the European Community Monitoring Mission, UNHCR, ICRC, international and local non-governmental human rights organizations and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights.

The General Assembly, in its resolution 51/116, adopted on 12 December 1996, called on the Government of Croatia to fully respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the rights of persons belonging to any national, ethnic, religious or linguistic minority. It also asked Croatia to undertake greater efforts to adhere to democratic norms, and to cooperate fully with UNTAES to assure that the reintegration of Eastern Slavonia occurred peacefully and with respect for the human rights of all. ### SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

The Security Council convened on 8 January 1996, in the light of the second 1995 report of the Secretary-General, dated 21 December, in which he observed that violations of human rights in former Sectors West, North and South continued to be reported to the end of November 1995, albeit on a reduced scale. Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the statement below [S/PRST/1996/2] on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 21 December 1995 submitted pursuant to its resolution 1019(1995) of 9 November 1995 on Croatia and in particular the humanitarian situation and human rights violations described therein.

The Security Council strongly condemns the violations of international humanitarian law and human rights in the former sectors North and South in the Republic of Croatia, as described in the report of the Secretary-General, including killings of several hundreds of civilians, systematic and widespread looting and arson and other forms of destruction of property. The Council expresses its deep concern that there is a considerable discrepancy between the number of perpetrators that have so far been brought to justice and the number of reported violations of international humanitarian law and human rights. The Council urges the Government of the Republic of Croatia to make every effort to arrest all perpetrators and bring them promptly to trial.

The Security Council is disturbed by the humanitarian and security situation of the mostly elderly Serb population who have remained in the former sectors in the Republic of Croatia. The Council is gravely concerned at the information contained in the report on continuing extensive harassment and intimidation, looting of property and other forms of abuse. It reaffirms once again its demand that the Government of the Republic of Croatia take urgent measures to stop all such acts immediately and calls on the Government of the Republic of Croatia to provide urgently needed food, medical assistance and proper shelter to the Serb population.

The Security Council reaffirms that all those who commit violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts. It recalls with dismay the failure to date of the Government of the Republic of Croatia to transfer to the custody of the International Tribunal established pursuant to its resolution 827(1993) persons indicted by the Tribunal and expresses its concern at the recent appointment of one of those indicted to a position in the Croatian army. The Council reiterates that all States must cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and its organs.

The Security Council expresses its deep concern at the situation of the refugees from the Republic of Croatia who wish to return. The Council shares the Secretary-General's view that the rights of the members of the Serb population who fled during the military operation to return to their homes in safety and dignity are being severely curtailed by the absence of constructive measures to facilitate their return. The Council reaffirms its demand that the Government of the Republic of Croatia respect fully the rights of the members of the local Serb population, including their right to remain, leave or return in safety, and demands that that Government create conditions conducive to the return of those persons and urgently establish procedures to facilitate the processing of requests by persons wishing to return. It also urges the Government of the Republic of Croatia to refrain from any measure which would adversely affect the exercise of the right to return.

The Security Council reaffirms its call on the Republic of Croatia to lift any time limits placed on the return of refugees to reclaim their property. It notes the decision of the Government of the Republic of Croatia of 27 December 1995 to suspend the deadline set in the relevant Croatian law as a step in the right direction. The Council will follow closely whether the Republic of Croatia will lift any such time limit in a definitive manner.

The Security Council takes note with appreciation of the decision of the Government of the Republic of Croatia of 30 December 1995 to suspend criminal proceedings against and release 455 local Serbs detained on suspicion of armed rebellion. The Council calls on the Government of the Republic of Croatia to take appropriate measures to ensure that the right to a fair trial of those Serbs who remained and have been arrested and accused of war crimes or armed rebellion is safeguarded.

The Security Council affirms that it is necessary to ensure that the rights of persons belonging to the Serb minority are adequately safeguarded in the legal and constitutional framework of the Republic of Croatia. It urges the Government of Croatia to rescind its decision to suspend several articles of the "Constitutional Law on Human Rights and Freedoms and the Rights of National and Ethnic Communities in the Republic of Croatia" as described in the report of the Secretary-General. The Council stresses that strict respect for the rights of persons belonging to the Serb minority will also be of great importance to the implementation of the Basic Agreement of 12 November 1995 on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium.

The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed on the progress of measures taken by the Government of the Republic of Croatia to implement resolution 1019(1995) and the demands set out in the present statement, requests the Secretary-General to report to it no later than 15 February 1996 on this matter and expresses its intention to act as appropriate.

The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (February). The Secretary-General's report of 14 February [S/1996/109] covered developments in the former Sectors from the end of November 1995 to the end of January 1996, and took account of a 28 January report of the Government of Croatia updating information on its implementation of Security Council resolution 1019(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 560]. The Secretary-General noted that the incidence of human rights violations, including killings, arson and looting, had continued to decline, with only isolated acts of killing and sporadic looting reported. He drew attention, however, to the unaccountably large discrepancies between the number of violations recorded by UN investigators and those acknowledged by the government report. To illustrate, the Government indicated that, as of 19 January, judicial proceedings had been instituted against 1,005 persons accused of crimes; of those, 352 were under pretrial investigation and 653 currently on trial. Although only 80 of the latter were said to be Croatian army personnel, the Secretary-General stated that international observers had witnessed many of the perpetrators to be soldiers of the Croatian army.

While Croatia had pursued prosecution in the most dramatic cases of violations of the right to life in the former Sector South—reporting four defendants in the widely publicized killing of nine elderly Serbs in Varivode on 28 September 1995 and six accused but not formally charged in the killing of seven Serbs in Gosic on 27 August of that year—there was little evidence of progress in resolving the other previously reported cases of individual killings numbering at least 150 by UN estimates. The government statement that Croatian police had inspected the site in Grubori, where five elderly Serbs had been killed on 25 August 1995, was contradicted by a UN team which had been informed by local residents that no such inspection had occurred.

Whereas the United Nations had estimated more than 5,000 houses destroyed during the massive campaign of arson in former Sectors North and South, the current government figure was 786 homes partly or totally destroyed by deliberate acts of arson—a downward revision from the 2,787 cases registered in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 594]. With regard to looting, the Government stated that, of the reported 1,600 cases of grand larceny, 1,151 had been solved, and 935 persons charged with aggravated larceny had been brought to trial; of the reported 41 criminal acts of robbery, 26 had been solved by police, 55 persons had been charged with robbery and 36 were currently on trial. Here, too, current government figures showed fewer persons charged with larceny and robbery (990) than had been reported as similarly charged in late 1995 (1,260).

Regarding the Council's demand to ensure the security and well-being of the remaining Serb population, UN and non-governmental sources observed that police presence in the three former Sectors had been disturbingly thin.

According to the Secretary-General, significant progress appeared to have been made in providing humanitarian assistance to needy persons, particularly Croatian Serbs. Reception centres for the sick and elderly and social work centres in 15 locations had been opened in former Sectors North and South, and similar centres had been opened in Pakrac and Daruva in former Sector West. The State welfare agency had provided financial assistance to 9,751 households and subsequently included them in the national welfare rolls. Nevertheless, UN and other agencies continued to receive sporadic reports of Croatian Serbs having problems in gaining access to basic humanitarian assistance, the Secretary-General noted, adding that, while pension and disability funds were available, distributions to beneficiaries had not been possible in most cases due to the required prepayment of arrears in contributions, which usually amounted to prohibitive and thus unpayable sums. Also noted was the continued suspension of several articles of a special constitutional law affecting the rights of national minorities, including one providing for the establishment of a provisional human rights court.

The Secretary-General reported little progress on the return of Croatian Serb refugees to Croatia, a matter which the Government indicated would be addressed in the course of initiatives to be taken for the normalization of relations between Croatia and FRY. Government offices responsible for expediting return requests had been uncooperative and obstructive. According to UNHCR, only some 200 refugees had returned through its intervention, with several hundred more believed to have returned on their own.

The Secretary-General regarded the Government's decision to grant amnesty to 451 Serbs alleged to have taken up arms in support of the "Republic of Serb Krajina" an important step towards the creation of conditions enabling former combatants to live in Croatia in peace. He pointed out, however, that 389 persons who had allegedly committed war crimes remained in detention, and mentioned in that connection the reported imminent introduction of Croatian legislation providing for full cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

Finally, the Secretary-General placed on record that, with the termination of UNCRO on 15 January, the number of international personnel in Croatia (outside the former Sector East) with a mandate to monitor human rights had been drastically reduced, thus limiting the ability of the United Nations to assess further developments on the important issues raised in the current report.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

Having received the Secretary-General's 14 February report, the Security Council met on 23 February. Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the statement below [S/PRST/1996/8] on its behalf:

The Security Council has considered the further report of the Secretary-General of 14 February 1996 submitted pursuant to its resolution 1019(1995) on Croatia.

The Security Council recalls the statement by its President of 8 January 1996. The Council acknowledges that the incidence of human rights violations has been greatly reduced. However, it expresses concern that isolated incidents of killings and other violations of human rights have been reported. The Council also acknowledges the significant progress made by the Croatian Government in alleviating the humanitarian plight of the mostly elderly Serb population who remain in the former sectors in the Republic of Croatia. The Council looks to the Croatian Government to ensure the security and well-being of that population and to ensure the provision of basic humanitarian assistance, including access to medical facilities, pension allowances and property. The Council also looks to the Croatian Government to pursue vigorously prosecutions against those suspected of past violations of international humanitarian law and human rights against the local Serb minority.

The Security Council calls upon the Croatian Government to give due consideration to granting amnesty to local Serbs remaining in detention on charges arising from their alleged participation in the conflict.

The Security Council reiterates that all States must cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and its organs established pursuant to its resolution 827(1993). It notes that Croatian legislation providing for full cooperation with the International Tribunal is reported to be imminent. The Council urges the Government of the Republic of Croatia to uphold its obligations with respect to the International Tribunal unreservedly and without delay.

The Security Council remains deeply concerned at the situation of those refugees from the Republic of Croatia who wish to return. It condemns the fact that effective measures have not so far been taken in that respect. It calls upon the Croatian Government to ensure the expeditious processing of all requests from refugees. It underlines that the exercise by members of the local Serb population of their rights, including their right to remain, leave or return to their homes in safety and dignity, and reclaim possession of their property, cannot be made conditional upon an agreement on the normalization of relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The Council demands that the Croatian Government take measures forthwith to ensure that those concerned may fully exercise these rights. The Council also calls upon the Croatian Government to rescind its earlier decision to suspend articles of the constitutional law affecting the rights of national minorities, and to proceed with the establishment of a provisional human rights court. It reminds the Croatian Government once again that the promotion of strict respect for the rights of persons belonging to the Serb minority is relevant to the successful implementation of the Basic Agreement of 12 November 1995 on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium.

The Security Council welcomes and supports the Croatian Government's agreement to the establishment by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe of a long-term mission with a view to monitoring respect for human rights throughout the Republic of Croatia. The Council pays tribute to the valuable work carried out by UNCRO and the European Community Monitoring Mission in this field over the past year.

The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed and to report in any case no later than 20 June 1996, drawing inter alia on information available from other relevant United Nations bodies, including the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and the European Community Monitoring Mission, on the progress of measures undertaken by the Government of the Republic of Croatia in the light of this statement.

The Security Council will remain seized of the matter.

Meeting number. SC 3633.

Report of Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General's report of 21 June [S/1996/456] covered developments from February to the beginning of June and took account of Croatia's implementation report of 10 June. At the outset, the Secretary-General highlighted a major change in the former Sectors: their repopulation by large numbers of Croats, including Croats displaced at the beginning of the war from those former Sectors and from the region of Eastern Slavonia, Croat refugees from Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croats from FRY, mainly from Vojvodina and Kosovo. Apart from altering the ethnic balance in those areas, that influx raised questions regarding the return of Croatian Serbs whose houses had become occupied by the new Croat residents.

The Secretary-General noted that the reports on Croatia's efforts to alleviate the humanitarian suffering in the former Sectors were generally positive, but that the situation varied from area to area depending on the attitude of the local authorities. Bolstering Croatia's efforts were humanitarian programmes of UNHCR, ICRC, the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and other international NGOs. Basic survival requirements appeared to be adequately met through ongoing programmes, and government figures showed that 448 abandoned persons were currently receiving care in institutions for the elderly and infirm.

The Secretary-General underscored, however, the failure of Croatian authorities to take effective security measures to prevent harassment and victimization of the local Serbs, especially acute in the Knin area (former Sector South), where the prevailing climate, as described by international observers, was one of lawlessness. The incidence of killings and arson, while substantially lower than acts of physical intimidation and looting, continued to be a cause for concern, as was the continued occurrence of physical assault. According to a government report, of 845 cases of serious theft reported between 2 January and 1 May, 462 were resolved, resulting in criminal charges against 488 persons; 17 cases of robbery led to charges against 21 suspects. International observers and residents attributed the main causes of continuing lawlessness to lack of adequate police presence and to Croatian authorities' reluctance to take firm preventive action. The Government's report indicated that investigations of 621 persons had been initiated or completed, legal proceedings against 1,997 persons had been instituted and final verdicts had been reached against 231 persons.

It was evident, the Secretary-General stated, that the prevailing lawlessness in the former Sectors demanded that additional steps be taken and especially that police presence be strengthened. The Government's failure to provide reasonable security had not created conditions likely to encourage the return of Croatian Serbs. There was also concern over the lack of progress in the investigation and prosecution of numerous crimes committed against the local Serb population. Response to the basic needs of Croatian Serbs by government offices continued to be ineffective and sometimes hostile. Matters such as the allocation of property and provision of identity documents were frequently not handled consistently or in accordance with legal procedures.

The Secretary-General pointed to government data indicating that, as of 10 June, only 7,065 Croatian Serbs—of the estimated 200,000 who had fled to FRY—had returned to Croatia following government authorization. In contrast, a total of 36,766 displaced persons from within Croatia had been registered as returnees in the former Sectors, while some 14,000 refugees had also received temporary accommodation there, the majority of whom were Croats. Thus, while Croatia had embarked on a major programme to return displaced Croats to the former Sectors, there was no determined effort to facilitate the return of Croatian Serb refugees. As the Secretary-General had warned at the outset, the rapid repopulation of the area by displaced Croats and by Croat refugees from elsewhere was likely to create major obstacles to the return of Croatian Serbs, unless the Government implemented vigorous policy measures to safeguard their rights. Further militating against the large-scale return of Croatian Serbs was the continued failure of the Government to enact a broad amnesty for former "Republic of Serb Krajina" soldiers and to rescind its suspension of the special constitutional provisions for the protection of minority rights.

The Secretary-General concluded that, overall, there was an absence of initiatives to encourage the return of Croatian Serb refugees to their homes, suggesting a continuing hostility to the presence of a significant Serb population on Croatia's territory.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

The Security Council met on 3 July to consider the Secretary-General's 21 June report. After consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the statement below [S/PRST/1996/29] on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council has considered the further report of the Secretary-General of 21 June 1996 submitted pursuant to its resolution 1019(1995) on Croatia.

The Council is deeply concerned at the failure by the Croatian Government to take sufficient measures to safeguard the rights of the local Serb population and to ensure their safety and well-being. The Council is also deeply concerned at the Croatian Government's failure to promote conditions, including satisfactory procedures, facilitating the return of all Croatian Serbs who wish to do so. The Council strongly deplores such failure to act.

The Council notes that the Croatian Government has begun to cooperate with international human rights mechanisms, and that it has considered various initiatives for the protection of minority rights. Nevertheless the Council underlines that the Croatian Government must undertake determined and sustained efforts to ensure respect for and protection of the rights of Croatian Serbs and to provide for their safeguarding in the legal and constitutional framework of the Republic of Croatia, including by the reactivation of the relevant articles of its Constitutional Law. The Council reminds the Croatian Government that its obligation to promote respect for and protection of such rights cannot be made conditional upon other factors, including upon political negotiations with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

The Council expects the Croatian Government to take steps forthwith to comply with the demands contained in its resolution 1019(1995) and in its statements of 8 January, 23 February and 22 May 1996.

The Council reiterates that all States must cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and its organs established pursuant to its resolution 827(1993). It notes the cooperation by the Croatian Government with the International Tribunal to date, and reminds the Croatian Government of its obligation to execute arrest warrants in respect of any person in its territory indicted by the Tribunal. The Council calls upon the Croatian Government, with due respect to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina, to use its influence with the Bosnian Croat leadership to ensure their cooperation with the Tribunal.

The Council will continue to follow this issue closely. It requests the Secretary-General to keep it regularly informed on measures taken by the Croatian Government in the light of this statement, and to report in any case no later than 1 September 1996.

Meeting number. SC 3677.

Report of Secretary-General (August). In a report of 23 August [S/1996/691], the Secretary-General considered developments in the former Sectors since his June report up to the beginning of August, taking account of a 30 July aide-memoire by the Government of Croatia, delivered to the UNHCR field office.

As reported, the general human rights situation in the former Sectors indicated that residents of the Krajina and Western Slavonia regions continued to suffer from inadequate security conditions and from a well-founded fear of falling victim to theft or physical attack at any time. Croatian Serbs remained by far the most common victims of violent assault. The climate of fear had been aggravated during the summer by several incidents in which explosives had been placed on properties of the remaining local Serb population. Looting and harassment by both uniformed personnel and civilians continued. A disturbing development had been a spate of attacks and threats against NGOs monitoring human rights and providing humanitarian relief in the area.

In the view of international and local observers, principal responsibility for the continuing insecurity lay with the local police, who were either unable or unwilling to take effective action to stop the ongoing wave of criminal activity against the Croatian Serbs.

According to the Secretary-General, the fact that many of the crimes committed against the local Serb minority in the summer of 1995 remained uninvestigated and unpunished by Croatian authorities was a persistent cause of concern. Of a total of at least 5,000 cases of arson reported by international observers in the former Sectors following the military operations at the beginning of August 1995, the so-called "Operation Storm" [YUN 1995, p. 580], government figures suggested that proceedings had been instituted against a mere 10 persons, with final verdicts rendered in two cases. Government investigations into the killings of five elderly Serbs at Grubori in August 1995 had yielded no results and the trials of eight persons accused in the Varivode and Goscic murders had ended in acquittal due to deficient investigations, unreliable evidence and use of undue pressure or physical mistreatment to extract confessions. However, in concurrent trials of other murder cases, five defendants had been convicted and two were still on trial.

Although by 10 August 1996 Croatia had delivered to the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia one indicted suspect who had voluntarily surrendered and was holding another inductee in prison, there was continuing concern over Croatia's failure to execute warrants in respect of prominent accused persons known or believed to be in areas under its control.

By most accounts, the government relief programme appeared effective in meeting the most urgent needs of food and medical care. For many Croatian Serbs, however, obtaining identity documents necessary for access to social benefits such as pensions continued to be met with hostility or inattention. Unlike the Croat communities which were being gradually rebuilt, Croatian Serb communities were said to be experiencing discrimination in terms of reconstruction assistance, restoration of public utilities and transportation services, and employment. Contradicting those reports, the Government's aide-memoire of 30 July asserted that Croatia implemented its domestic policies on a non-discriminatory basis and, indeed, followed the standards of ILO, notably those established by Convention No. 102, on minimum standards of social security.

The Secretary-General drew attention to other areas of continuing concern that required particular attention: the approximately 200 Croatian Serbs remaining in detention, rescision or replacement of the suspended special constitutional provisions in favour of minorities, the repossession of homes owned by Croatian Serbs but currently occupied by Croat refugees, prompt issuance of identity documents to Croatian Serbs to permit access to social benefits, employment discrimination based on ethnic origin and the Government's reluctance to enact a broad amnesty law.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

In the light of the Secretary-General's foregoing report, the Security Council met on 20 September and, following consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the statement below [S/PRST/1996/39] on its behalf:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 August 1996, submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 1019(1995) on Croatia.

The Council notes progress in the humanitarian and human rights situation in some areas. The Council regrets, however, that many of its previous requests have not been complied with by the Government of Croatia. Numerous incidents threatening the population in the formerly Serb-controlled areas are a continuing source of concern and could jeopardize the prospects for peaceful and substantial reintegration of refugees and displaced persons in Croatia.

The Council commends the Agreement between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, signed in Belgrade on 23 August 1996, and expects the commitments contained therein to be implemented.

The Council recognizes steps taken by the Government of Croatia to reintegrate refugees and displaced persons into Croatia but urges the Government to expand its programme to accelerate the return of all such persons without preconditions or delay. The Council urges the Government of Croatia also to expand its humanitarian relief efforts, especially as winter approaches.

The Council in the statement of its President of 3 July 1996 highlighted the need for adoption of a comprehensive amnesty law, in cooperation with the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES). Since the report of the Secretary-General of 23 August 1996 which found no substantial progress in this regard since passage of the Government of Croatia's amnesty law of 17 May 1996, the Republic of Croatia on 20 September 1996 enacted a new amnesty law. The Council welcomes this development as a step towards addressing the concerns outlined in the statement of the President on 3 July 1996 and emphasizes that such a law must be implemented without delay and in a fair and equitable manner, with full respect for the rights of the individual. The Council will follow such implementation closely. The Council notes that a comprehensive new amnesty law and its equitable application are also vital elements in preparing for elections in Eastern Slavonia and important factors in the successful completion of the UNTAES mandate.

Despite some positive developments, the Council is deeply concerned that residents of the Krajina and Western Slavonia continue to suffer from inadequate security, including the danger of theft or assault at any time. The Council also notes with concern attacks and threats against those engaged in humanitarian relief activities and human rights monitoring in the area. In particular it deplores the reported involvement of Croatian uniformed military and police officials in acts of looting and harassment.

The Council urges the Croatian authorities to act immediately to improve the security situation in those regions. It urges that Croatian officials ensure that members of the military and police refrain from criminal and other unacceptable behaviour, and increase their efforts to protect the human rights of all persons present in Croatia, including the Serb population.

The Council welcomes the recommendations made by the Secretary-General in his report for specific action which must be taken to improve the human rights situation in the Republic of Croatia, inter alia, in the framework of the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, as part of the peace process towards a comprehensive political settlement in the region. In this context, the Council calls upon the Government of Croatia to expand investigations of crimes committed against the Serb population in 1995. The Council again calls upon the Government of Croatia to rescind its decision of September 1995 suspending certain constitutional provisions affecting the rights of national minorities, principally Serbs.

The Council reminds the Government of Croatia of its obligation to cooperate with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and, in particular, to execute the arrest warrants issued by the Tribunal regarding individuals under Croatian jurisdiction, including prominent accused persons known or believed to be in areas under its control, and to transfer to the Tribunal all indicted persons. In this context, the Security Council deplores the failure to date of the Republic of Croatia to execute the arrest warrants issued by the Tribunal against individuals indicted by the Tribunal, in particular the Bosnian Croats referred to in the letter of 16 September 1996 from the President of the Tribunal to the President of the Council, and calls for the execution of those arrest warrants without delay.

The Council recalls that no individual should be arrested and detained on the territory of the former Yugoslavia for serious violations of international humanitarian law until and unless the International Tribunal has reviewed the case and agreed that the warrant, order or indictment meets international legal standards.

The Council will remain seized of the matter and requests that the Secretary-General continue to report on the situation, in any case no later than 10 December 1996.

Meeting number. SC 3697.

Further report of Secretary-General (December). Developments in the former Sectors up to mid-November were covered by the Secretary-General's report of 5 December [S/1996/1011 & Corr.1], which took account of two October reports by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter III), as well as of information provided by Croatia, including an aide-memoire dated 15 November.

The Secretary-General reported a slight improvement in the security situation and of having received confirmation of the Government's assertion that it had taken numerous security measures, including deploying an additional 3,500 police officers in the former Sectors. Notable progress was also reported in the Government's programme of humanitarian assistance to vulnerable populations and in other humanitarian programmes undertaken in cooperation with local and international relief agencies aimed at providing individualized care, surveying the population's general requirements, and meeting social security needs such as health insurance, pension and disability benefits, and specialized care facilities.

The Secretary-General felt that encouragement might be drawn from positive political developments. The 23 August agreement on normalization of relations between Croatia and FRY, under which both parties assumed the obligation to facilitate the free and safe return of refugees and internally displaced persons, permitted such persons to apply for return to Croatia at the Croatian Embassy in Belgrade, thus making for faster processing.

Under the new general amnesty law adopted by Croatia on 20 September, which entered into force on 3 October, 94 persons had been released from detention or imprisonment as of 15 November; a procedure for vacating the sentences of those tried in absentia was under way. The legislation, which applied to persons accused of or sentenced for criminal acts committed in Croatia in connection with aggression, rebellion or armed conflict between 17 August 1990 and 23 August 1996, exempted from its coverage alleged perpetrators of war crimes, which were explicitly listed in the law with reference to articles 119 to 137 of the Basic Penal Code of Croatia.

Upon its admission on 6 November to the Council of Europe as its fortieth member, Croatia signed the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and its Protocols, the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities and the European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment—undertakings which the Secretary-General hoped would have a significant impact on human rights affecting all citizens of Croatia, Croatian Serbs in particular.

At the same time, the Secretary-General pointed to continued incidents of looting, arson, demolition of houses and killings, to the lack of progress in the investigation and prosecution of crimes against the Croatian Serb population that had attended Croatia's 1995 offensives, and to the absence of any material increase in the number of refugee returns. It was clear, he observed, that, owing to the legacy of five years of hostilities, many Croatian authorities and residents in the former Sectors wished neither Croatian Serbs to return nor the resident Croatian Serbs to stay. Also militating against future returns were Croatia's continuing failure effectively to safeguard the property rights of Croatian Serbs, the continued suspension of certain provisions of the Constitutional Law on Human Rights, as well as the rearrest on other charges of numerous persons almost immediately after their release under the new amnesty law.

As to cooperation with the International Tribunal, the new government Department for Relations with the Tribunal announced four months earlier had not become operational. While given access to a large number of case files, the Prosecutor's Liaison Office in Zagreb (which had been part of the larger UN presence in Croatia) had been unable to find evidence of any serious attempt by Croatia to investigate grave allegations made about the conduct of Croatian troops and civilians during and after the August 1995 offensive. Croatia had been cooperating fully with the Prosecutor, however, in allowing autopsies of bodies exhumed from Ovcara/Vukovar. Despite a number of recent diplomatic endeavours to impress on Croatia its duty to fulfil international obligations, indicted war-crime suspects Dario Kordic and Ivica Rajic remained at large (see PART FOUR, Chapter II). Croatia's failure to apprehend them, the Secretary-General stressed, overshadowed all other aspects of its cooperation with the International Tribunal.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 20 December, the Security Council met to consider the Secretary-General's foregoing report. After consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement [S/PRST/1996/48] on its behalf:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 5 December 1996, submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 1019(1995) on Croatia.

The Council acknowledges notable progress in the humanitarian situation, in particular measures taken by the Government of Croatia to meet the most urgent humanitarian needs of the Croatian Serb population.

Although the security situation has improved slightly, the Council, however, expresses its concern at continued acts of harassment, looting and physical attacks against Croatian Serbs and, in particular, involvement by Croatian uniformed military and police officials in a number of those incidents. It calls upon the Government of Croatia to intensify its efforts to improve the security situation and to ensure adequate security conditions for the local Serb population including the urgent re-establishment of a functioning court system in the former sectors North and South.

The Council is deeply concerned that in spite of its previous requests there has been little progress on the issue of the return of the Croatian Serb refugees and urges the Government of Croatia to adopt a comprehensive approach in order to facilitate the return of refugees originating from Croatia to their homes of origin throughout Croatia. It deplores the continued failure by the Government of Croatia to safeguard effectively their property rights, especially the situation where many of those Serbs who have returned to the former sectors have been unable to regain possession of their properties. The Council calls upon the Government of Croatia to apply immediately proper procedures to the question of property rights and to stop all forms of discrimination against the Croatian Serb population in the provision of social benefits and reconstruction assistance.

The Council is deeply concerned at reports that the new amnesty law is not being implemented in a fair and equitable manner. It underlines that equitable application of that law is vital for building confidence and promoting reconciliation in Croatia as well as for the peaceful reintegration of the region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium.

The Council stresses the importance of the commitments undertaken by the Government of Croatia in relation to the Council of Europe, including its signature of the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities, and expects that the Government of Croatia will implement those commitments fully and without delay.

The Council reiterates its call upon the Government of Croatia to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and to conduct investigations into and the prosecution of all persons accused of serious violations of international humanitarian law, especially those committed in the course of military operations in 1995.

The Council will remain seized of the matter and requests that the Secretary-General continue to report on the situation, in any case no later than 10 March 1997.

Meeting number. SC 3727.

The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM)

The year 1996 was a period of relative tranquility for the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM), where the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP), in place since 1993, continued to contribute to the peace and security of its area. With a significantly improved region-wide situation, no active hostilities posed a threat, either direct or immediate, to FYROM. Determined to resolve the dispute over its name, FYROM held continuous negotiations with Greece on the basis of their September 1995 Interim Accord [YUN 1995, p. 599], under the good offices of the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy, Cyrus R. Vance (United States). More significantly, FYROM concluded an agreement in April 1996 with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY) aimed at normalizing their relations and promoting cooperation between them.

FYROM President Kiro Gligorov's resumption of official duties in January, after an absence from the Presidency following an attempt on his life in October 1995, served to maintain political continuity in the country. Despite political and inter-ethnic tensions, participation of all political parties in the November 1996 local elections offered hopes for democratic processes to take hold. In addition to the significant contribution of UNPREDEP, the increasing number of other UN bodies, programmes and specialized agencies also contributed towards economic and social stability.

It was within the context of that overall improved climate that the Security Council, in extending the mandate of UNPREDEP until 31 May 1997, decided to reduce its strength by 300 before that date, with a view to concluding the mandate as and when circumstances permitted.

In accordance with article 5 of their 1995 Interim Accord, FYROM and Greece continued negotiations during 1996 with a view to reaching agreement on their differences over the name of the Republic. Under the auspices of the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy, the parties held 10 rounds of direct discussions between 12 January and 18 December. At their last meeting, they agreed to resume direct discussions towards the end of January 1997.

UN Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP)

The United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP), restructured under Security Council resolution 938(1995) of 31 March 1995 as a distinct operating entity in FYROM [YUN 1995, p. 597], became an independent mission in February 1996, with the same mandate, strength and composition of forces [S/1996/76]. Consequently, the Secretary-General redesignated Henryk J. Sokalski, previously Chief of Mission of UNPREDEP, as his Special Representative for the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, and appointed Brigadier-General Bo Lennart Wranger (Sweden) as Force Commander [S/1996/373]. The latter's appointment, which took effect on 1 March 1996, was made through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the Security Council on 14 and 16 February [S/1996/118, S/1996/119]. The Special Representative and the Force Commander ensured the daily functioning of UNPREDEP and reported directly to UN Headquarters.

Its mandate, as defined by Security Council resolution 795(1992) of 11 December 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 386], was to monitor FYROM's borders with FRY and Albania and report on developments that could undermine confidence and stability in the country or threaten its territory. It was broadened in March 1994 when the Council in its resolution 908(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 492] asked the former Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia to use his good offices, as appropriate, to contribute to the maintenance of peace and stability within the country. UNPREDEP concerned itself with numerous aspects of the country's internal and external situation. It also initiated selected social and developmental projects in liaison with other bodies in the UN system, as well as with local and international NGOs.

The year began with UNPREDEP's infantry battalions operating 24 permanent and 33 temporary observation posts along a 420-kilometre stretch on the FYROM side of the border with FRY and Albania, conducting some 40 border and community patrols daily [S/1996/65]. By 30 September, the permanent observation posts had been reduced to 21. Complementing the infantry's work was monitoring by the 35 UN Military Observers (UNMOs) of some 5,000 square kilometres of territory to assess the military situation within it and by the 26 civilian police monitors (UNCIVPOLs) of local police work, especially in areas with high concentrations of minority groups [S/1996/373].

As of 19 November [S/1996/961], the military component of UNPREDEP consisted of two mechanized infantry battalions: a 500-strong Nordic composite battalion and a 500-strong United States Army task force, both supported by a 50-person heavy engineering platoon. Its authorized military strength was 1,050 troops and 35 UNMOs. In addition, there were 26 UNCIVPOLs. The authorized strength of the civilian component was 168. Both international civilian and military personnel were drawn from 50 countries.

Activities

Report of Secretary-General (January). In a 30 January report [S/1996/65], prepared pursuant to Security Council resolution 1027(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 598], the Secretary-General stated that, in view of developments that had led to the establishment of independent UN missions in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in Croatia, the time had come to re-evaluate the status of UNPREDEP. In so doing, he took account of the Government's wish for UNPREDEP's continuance and strong preference for a longer mandate extension, beyond 10 May 1996, the date set by the Council for the termination of that mandate until three conditions were met: mutual recognition and normalization of relations with FRY, and the start of negotiations on the demarcation of their common border; full implementation of the 1995 Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including regional confidence- and security-building measures and arms control; and attainment of a sufficient national indigenous defensive capability.

FYROM President Gligorov's resumption of official duties in January 1996 was regarded as propitious, not only for political continuity and stability, but also for defusing the tension and suspicions that followed the attempt on his life in October 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 598].

Notwithstanding considerable progress in many areas of the country's domestic life, the overall situation remained one of political uncertainty and social tensions, the Secretary-General stated. Fierce partisanship ran deep between the non-parliamentary opposition parties and the ruling coalition on the one hand, and between the ethnic Albanian community, the government coalition and the ethnic Macedonian parties on the other. Strife between Macedonians and ethnic Albanians and the claims and aspirations of other ethnic groups (Rhomas, Serbs, Turks, Vlachs) had created a complex network of ethnic problems. The Government maintained that, for reasons of time and constitutional constraints, the demands of the ethnic Albanian community (status as a constituent nation; university-level education in Albanian, including establishment of a special university at Tetovo; proportional representation in all public institutions; and recognition of Albanian as a second official language) could not be immediately fulfilled.

The state of the economy was such that many enterprises had been substantially reduced or brought to a standstill. Industrial production, which had decreased by nearly 50 per cent over the past five years, continued to decline, and close to half of the workforce continued to be unemployed. Only a few Member States had responded to appeals by the General Assembly and Security Council for technical, financial and material assistance for those States, including FYROM, whose economies had been adversely affected by their compliance with the enforcement of sanctions against FRY.

In the Secretary-General's view, UNPREDEP had contributed to alleviating the country's serious concerns about external security threats and had served as a substitute for its minimal deterrent capacity, as well as to the maintenance of regional peace and stability. He therefore recommended that UNPREDEP not only be continued but that, from 1 February 1996, it should become an independent mission reporting directly to UN Headquarters, with the same mandate, strength and composition. In broad terms, he proposed that the mission be provided with permanent engineering capability, which meant an increase of approximately 50 military personnel; adequate communications infrastructure, including a satellite link with UN Headquarters and a communications repair workshop; an enhanced vehicle maintenance capability; hardware/software expertise and systems management; and other capabilities required by a "stand-alone" operation.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

The Security Council informed the Secretary-General on 1 February [S/1996/76] of its concurrence in principle with the recommended change in the status of UNPREDEP, which it would continue to consider in the light of specific proposals as to the financial and administrative aspects of that change.

Accordingly, the Secretary-General, on 6 February [S/1996/94], proposed and requested approval of the appointment of a Force Commander for UNPREDEP and an increase in its strength by 50 military personnel. He included a statement of related cost estimates amounting to $29 million for a six-month period, to provide for 1,050 contingent personnel, 35 military observers, 26 civilian police, 73 international civilian staff and 127 locally recruited staff. He also gave a breakdown of the total amount by main categories of expenditure.

With the Secretary-General's request in hand, the Council on 13 February adopted resolution 1046(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions and, in particular, resolution 1027(1995) of 30 November 1995 which extended the mandate of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia until 30 May 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 30 January 1996 and his letter of 6 February 1996 to the President of the Council and the annex thereto,

1. Decides to authorize, for the duration of the present mandate, an increase in the strength of UNPREDEP by 50 military personnel in order to provide for a continued engineering capability in support of its operations;

2. Approves the establishment of the position of Force Commander of UNPREDEP;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, not later than 20 May 1996, further recommendations on the composition, strength and mandate of UNPREDEP in the light of developments in the region;

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (May). In line with resolution 1046(1996), the Secretary-General submitted a report dated 23 May [S/1996/373] stating that UNPREDEP had maintained dialogue with all political parties and ethnic groups. The high visibility of UN troops patrolling the country's northern and western borders with FRY and Albania continued to have a stabilizing effect throughout the area, as well as a deterrent effect on illegal cross-border activities, thus reducing incidents of confrontation between the local border patrols and smugglers or illegal immigrants.

In addition, UNPREDEP maintained liaison with the country's Ministry of Defence, the FRY General Staff and relevant Albanian ministries. The battalion commanders had established direct channels of communication with their FRY and Albanian border counterparts so that the UN patrol line along the northern border had been clearly defined and as such had reduced the risk of incidents there. Subject to the performance of its main tasks, UNPREDEP's military interfaced with a number of civilian agencies, providing various community services and humanitarian assistance, as well as assistance for road construction and repair, telecommunication facilities and water distribution systems.

UNPREDEP continued to perform those tasks it had previously undertaken in cooperation with the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia relating to humanitarian issues and to human rights of ethnic communities and national minorities. It also initiated a series of projects aimed primarily at building institutional capacity and strengthening governmental infrastructure. In connection with that endeavour, the Secretary-General described the activities of other UN bodies and specialized agencies, specifically UNICEF, UNHCR and WHO, as well as the World Bank, the International Development Association and the International Monetary Fund, in all three of which the Republic was a member.

The Secretary-General noted recent encouraging developments, including: the emergence of a parliamentary opposition in the form of the Liberal Party, as well as of two major non-parliamentary opposition parties that later organized a nationwide campaign for a referendum on early parliamentary elections; the inclusion in the new Government of five ministers and a number of other senior officials of ethnic Albanian origin; the Republic's 8 April agreement with FRY regulating relations and promoting cooperation between them; and its continuing talks with Greece aimed at resolving their differences.

Responding to the Security Council's request for recommendations on the composition, strength and mandate of UNPREDEP in the light of developments in the region, the Secretary-General presented the alternative of entrusting UNPREDEP's tasks to a minimum of 250 UNMOs who would either be located within driving distance of the monitored border areas or stationed on site, as was currently the case, but only at some observation posts. He outlined the logistical support required by those two options, as well as the advantages and disadvantages of each, taking into account the inclement weather prevailing in the country during eight months of the year. He felt that to replace UNPREDEP's formed infantry units with UNMOs, although operationally feasible, would achieve only modest savings while severely curtailing the mission's core function of border monitoring.

The Secretary-General noted, however, that, in the longer term, many of the activities of UNPREDEP's civilian component would be more effectively performed by UNDP and other UN bodies. Those included good offices in conflict-prone communities, information dissemination on UNPREDEP's role, daily monitoring by the 26-member UNCIVPOL team of border areas largely populated by ethnic minorities, and civilian logistics, transportation, communications and engineering support to the entire mission.

The Secretary-General drew attention to the Government's letter of 8 April [S/1996/389], transmitted to him on 11 April, advancing several arguments in support of its request to extend UNPREDEP for another 12 months: the peace implementation process in Bosnia and Herzegovina (see above) remained sensitive and was fraught with complications; potential regional threats to the Republic had not been overcome, as evidenced by the unresolved issues in its immediate neighbourhood, namely, the Kosovo situation and the still undemarcated border with FRY; the 12-month extension would afford the Republic that much more time in which to upgrade its national defence system; and UNPREDEP's significant contribution towards the establishment of democratic structures in the Republic and realization of its policy of good-neighbourliness.

On the strength of those arguments but at the same time mindful of the financial stringency within the United Nations, the Secretary-General said he would review the question at regular intervals; in the meantime, he recommended that the UNPREDEP mandate be extended for a further period of six months to 30 November 1996. He later [S/1996/373/Add.1] indicated that the cost of maintaining UNPREDEP for that period would be $26.2 million.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

In the light of the Secretary-General's report and the 8 April letter of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, the Security Council met on 30 May and adopted resolution 1058 (1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions and in particular its resolutions 1027(1995) of 30 November 1995 and 1046(1996) of 13 February 1996,

Reaffirming its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia,

Noting with appreciation the important role played by the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) in contributing to the maintenance of peace and stability and paying tribute to its personnel in the performance of their mandate,

Noting that the security situation of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia has improved, but recognizing that it is too early to be confident that stability has been established in the region, and expressing the hope that future developments in the region will not undermine confidence and stability in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia or threaten its security,

Welcoming the signing of the agreement between the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia of 8 April 1996, and urging both parties to implement it in full, including the demarcation of their mutual border,

Welcoming also the progress achieved in improving relations between the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Greece on the basis of the Interim Accord of 13 September 1995,

Further welcoming the close cooperation between UNPREDEP and the mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Taking note of the letter of the Charge d'affaires a.i. of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia to the Secretary-General of 11 April 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 May 1996 and in particular his assessment of the composition, strength and mandate of UNPREDEP,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General of 23 May 1996;
2. Decides to extend the mandate of UNPREDEP for a period terminating on 30 November 1996;
3. Calls upon Member States to consider favourably requests by the Secretary-General for necessary assistance to UNPREDEP in the performance of its mandate;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed of any developments on the ground and other circumstances affecting the mandate, and further requests the Secretary-General to review the composition, strength and mandate of UNPREDEP and to report to the Council by 30 September 1996 for its consideration;
5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1058(1996)

30 May 1996

Meeting 3670

14-O-1

6-nation draft (S/1996/392).

Sponsors: France, Germany, Italy, Poland, United Kingdom, United States.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Botswana, Chile, China, Egypt, France, Germany, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Indonesia, Italy, Poland, Republic of Korea, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Russian Federation.

The Russian Federation indicated that its abstention stemmed from the fact that its proposal for only a four-month extension of the UNPREDEP mandate had not been reflected in the draft text. It hoped that, at the Council's next consideration of the mandate, account would be taken of the Russian Federation's financial and political concerns, which were fundamental to the larger issue of UN peacekeeping.

Reports of Secretary-General (September, November). The Secretary-General on 30 September [S/1996/819] again examined UNPREDEP's role in the context of developments within the country and the region as a whole. He noted a continued improvement in FYROM's relations with its neighbours and in its defence capabilities through a number of bilateral military cooperation agreements with countries outside the region. However, he also noted that, despite a number of positive factors, the domestic scene remained characterized by political and inter-ethnic tensions and exacerbated by a precarious economy.

Responding to the Security Council's request that he review the composition, strength and mandate of UNPREDEP, the Secretary-General concluded that it was neither appropriate nor necessary to recommend a change in UNPREDEP's mandate only two months before its expiration on 30 November 1996. His Special Representative, the Force Commander and military advisers, having considered options for a possible reconfiguration of UNPREDEP, agreed that the least disruptive option would be to revert to the 1992 recommended infantry strength of 700 all ranks, plus a 50-person engineering unit. That would entail a reduction of manned border observation posts from 21 to 16, with the formed infantry units remaining on the northern border, a considerably reduced monitoring of the western border, a more limited reserve capacity and increased reliance on helicopter assets for logistical support. It was their unanimous view, however, that any troop reduction would have a negative impact on UNPREDEP's implementation of its mandate and thus on the international community's capacity to assess and respond to potential threats confronting FYROM.

The Secretary-General stated that his earlier assessments of the positive role of UNPREDEP in promoting peace and stability, both in the Republic and in the region, remained unchanged. He further drew attention to a letter of 6 August from the Government expressing the view that the overall situation in the region had not changed to an extent that would allow ending the UNPREDEP mandate and reiterating the Government's previous arguments to support its request for a further six-month extension of UNPREDEP beyond the current mandate period. The Secretary-General also referred to his meeting with President Gligorov on 25 September, during which they reviewed the overall situation in the region.

In a further report of 19 November [S/1996/961], the Secretary-General gave a detailed history of the UN presence in the Republic, including the nature and scope of its mandate and the increases in its strength in June 1993, authorized by Council resolution 842(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 494], and February 1996 (resolution 1046(1996)). He also provided data on the composition and deployment of UNPREDEP as of the reporting date (see below).

The Secretary-General stated that, in addition to UNPREDEP's continued border monitoring, its civilian component, acting under the political mandate granted to the Special Representative, had assisted in bringing together various segments of the population in an effort to promote mutual understanding between communities, monitor human rights and ease political and inter-ethnic tensions within the country. That had been of special importance in view of the precarious social and economic situation, which had been compounded by the impact on the country of mandatory sanctions against FRY and the unilateral economic blockade from the south.

UNPREDEP's humanitarian assistance and other small but effective assistance programmes initiated with the support of external donors, besides fostering confidence between the host country and the mission, had paved the way for any successor arrangement that might be emplaced upon termination of the preventive deployment operation.

In updating the activities of other bodies and agencies of the UN system, the Secretary-General added those of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and UNDP.

According to information supplied by the Government, its affirmative policies on minority rights had had positive results, particularly in respect of minority-language education, including at the university level. The current quota system provided for student enrolment of a given ethnic group in proportion to that group's representation in the total population. State hiring practices reflected an increase in the number of minority employees in its institutions.

Ethnic Albanians did not share the Government's assessment, however, the Secretary-General noted. Through political action and street demonstrations, they called on the Government to improve the political status of Albanians, officially to recognize the "University of Tetovo" as part of the educational system and to release all political prisoners, including that university's Rector. In the run-up to the local elections on 17 November, opposition parties voiced concern about a possible discrepancy in the number of eligible voters and about election preparations which they considered inadequate. Nonetheless, all major political parties, including those that had boycotted the second round of parliamentary elections in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 571], were reported to have participated in the electoral campaigns; and, except for a few incidents, the first round of elections generally proceeded in an orderly manner.

In the Secretary-General's view, recent developments in the region and the Republic's enhanced international standing had rendered remote the possibility of an outside threat. Therefore, conscious that in the current period of relative tranquillity the Council might judge economies to be necessary, he informed the Council that a reconfiguration of UNPREDEP to the original infantry strength of 700 all ranks, plus an engineering platoon of 50, would offer savings of some $400,000 a month. That would require a shift from a comprehensive and active patrolling to a more limited, and at times static, monitoring presence, particularly along the northern border where a number of observation posts would be eliminated.

Recalling the Government's 6 August request for a further six-month extension of the UNPREDEP mandate beyond 30 November 1996, the Secretary-General accordingly recommended such an extension, ending on 31 May 1997, with a phased reduction of the military component by 300 all ranks by 1 April 1997. That timing would allow for completing the reduction after the usually severe winter, as well as for the necessary consultations to be undertaken with the troop-contributing countries. He would consult with UN agencies and other relevant organizations on the modalities for continuing international support to FYROM, on the basis of which he would recommend to the Council the type of international presence that would be appropriate as from June 1997.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

The Security Council met on 27 November to consider the foregoing report of the Secretary-General. Also before it was a letter of 18 November [S/1996/983] from the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, reiterating that the situation in the region had not so changed as to allow a reduction in UNPREDEP's strength or its termination. At the same meeting, the Council adopted resolution 1082(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions and in particular its resolutions 1046(1996) of 13 February 1996 and 1058(1996) of 30 May 1996,

Reaffirming its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia,

Noting with appreciation the important role played by the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) in contributing to the maintenance of peace and stability, and paying tribute to its personnel in the performance of their mandate,

Taking into consideration that the security situation of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia continues to improve, but that peace and stability in the broader region have not yet been fully achieved, and expressing the hope that developments in the region will contribute to increased confidence and stability in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, permitting the further drawing down of UNPREDEP towards its conclusion,

Welcoming the improvement in the relations between the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and its neighbouring States,

Reiterating its call on the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to implement in full their agreement of 8 April 1996, in particular regarding the demarcation of their mutual border,

Welcoming the continued cooperation between UNPREDEP and the mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Taking note of the letter of 18 November 1996 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia to the Secretary-General requesting the extension of the mandate of UNPREDEP,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 19 November 1996, and noting his assessment of the composition, strength and mandate of UNPREDEP,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of UNPREDEP for a period terminating on 31 May 1997, with a reduction of its military component by 300 all ranks by 30 April 1997, with a view to concluding the mandate as and when circumstances permit;

2. Calls upon Member States to consider favourably requests by the Secretary-General for necessary assistance to UNPREDEP in the performance of this mandate;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed about any developments and to report to the Council by 15 April 1997 with his recommendations on a subsequent international presence in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia;

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1082(1996)
 27 November 1996 Meeting 3716 14-0-1
 5-nation draft (S/1996/979).
 Sponsors: France, Germany, Italy, United Kingdom, United States.
 Vote in Council as follows:
 In favour: Botswana, Chile, China, Egypt, France, Germany, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Indonesia, Italy, Poland, Republic of Korea, United Kingdom, United States.
 Against: None.
 Abstaining: Russian Federation.

The Russian Federation stated its belief that the original objective of the preventive mission in FYROM had been achieved and that the situation in the region had radically changed: hostilities had ceased and the process of stabilization was gaining momentum. Those positive changes were reflected in the significantly improved relations between the Republic and its neighbours, primarily FRY. While the draft resolution's call for a substantial reduction of the Force and oblique reference to its possible termination were definite steps forward, the Russian Federation saw no point in maintaining UNPREDEP beyond May 1997. The current extension must be the last. Failing inclusion of its proposal, the Russian Federation could not support the resolution.

FYROM transmitted its intended statement before the Council [S/1996/986], by which it would have requested a six-month extension of UNPREDEP and cautioned that any reduction in its strength would have a negative impact on the mission's effectiveness.

Armenia-Azerbaijan

The Co-Chairmen (Finland, Russian Federation) of the Conference of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), through the OSCE Minsk Group (Belarus, Czech Republic, France, Germany, Italy, Russian Federation, Slovakia, Sweden, Turkey, United States), accelerated efforts in 1996 to obtain a political agreement between Armenia and Azerbaijan on the cessation of armed conflict in Nagorny Karabakh, an enclave within the territory of Azerbaijan. (The Additional Meeting of the OSCE Council (Helsinki, Finland, 24 March 1992) had requested that a conference be convened in Minsk, Belarus, under OSCE auspices to provide a forum for negotiations towards a peaceful settlement of the crisis. It was to be attended by the two parties and the countries later known as the Minsk Group. The Group had since been spearheading the OSCE effort to promote a political agreement, the conclusion of which would permit convening the conference.)

Building on a draft text arrived at by the parties by the end of 1995, the Co-Chairmen in 1996 proposed three principles to form the basis of a final, unified peace settlement. Despite intensive discussions with the parties in two forums, the principles proved unacceptable to Armenia. That led the OSCE Chairman-in-Office to concede, at the conclusion of the OSCE Summit on 3 December, that progress had eluded the last two years' efforts to resolve the Nagorny Karabakh conflict and the issue of the territorial integrity of Azerbaijan.

(For the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Armenia and Azerbaijan, see PART THREE, Chapter XII.)

Reports of Minsk Conference (9 April and 10 December). The Co-Chairmen of the OSCE Minsk Conference submitted two reports to the Security Council in 1996 on the Nagorny Karabakh conflict: one on 9 April [S/1996/259], covering developments since their July 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 611], and another on 10 December [S/1996/1031], updating developments to 3 December.

Both reports indicated that the Co-Chairmen, with the support and cooperation of the Minsk Group, continued to promote the observation of the 1994 ceasefire [YUN 1994, p. 577], the conclusion of a political agreement on the cessation of the armed conflict, and implementation of confidence-building measures, particularly in the humanitarian field. The reports noted that on the whole the parties had continued to observe the ceasefire and had repeatedly reconfirmed their commitment to continue to do so; that during the three rounds of talks in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 610] progress had been achieved in hammering out the text of a political agreement reflecting certain key issues agreed upon by the parties; and that the Co-Chairmen, as well as individual members (Russian Federation, Turkey, United States) of the Minsk Group, had undertaken several visits to the region for high-level consultations in order to advance a political settlement.

The April report stated that the outlines of a settlement were emerging, with the parties having agreed on: dispute settlement by peaceful means only; measures to consolidate the ceasefire and cessation of hostilities; elaboration of the legal status of Nagorny Karabakh on the basis of a mutually acceptable compromise to be determined at the OSCE Minsk Conference; unimpeded delivery of humanitarian aid to the territories affected by the conflict; the safe, voluntary and balanced return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes, irrespective of nationality; evacuation of the territories occupied in the course of the armed conflict; establishment of local and regional security measures, including unimpeded access from Nagorny Karabakh to Armenia; deployment of a multinational OSCE peacekeeping force to assist in implementation of the political agreement; and restoration of all normal links in the region.

The report further stated that, as a follow-up to the 1995 talks, the Chairman-in-Office of OSCE, during his visit to the region on 29 February and 1 March 1996, had presented to the parties a document prepared by the Co-Chairmen to serve as a basis for further negotiations on the draft text. The document outlined a package solution on the basis of the commitments undertaken by the parties on: evacuation of all occupied territories; unimpeded access to and from Nagorny Karabakh and Armenia; ensuring the security of Nagorny Karabakh and its population; the territorial integrity of Azerbaijan and the broadest possible self-rule for Nagorny Karabakh; the application to the population of Shusha and Shaumyan of the right of voluntary and safe return of all refugees and displaced persons to their permanent residence; observance of the norms of international humanitarian law; openness and transparency; and safeguarding mutual security in the region.

The December report noted that all 110 prisoners of war and detainees on the ICRC lists had been released and repatriated in May during the visit to the region by the Russian Federation's Foreign Minister. More significantly, the report noted that, at the last meeting of the Minsk Group (Helsinki, 18-22 November), attended also by the Co-Chairmen and the parties, as well as at the preparatory meeting for the 1996 OSCE Summit (Lisbon, Portugal, 25 November-3 December), discussion had centred on the three principles proposed by the Co-Chairmen for a settlement. The discussions had yielded no consensus, however.

On 3 December, the OSCE Chairman-in-Office issued a statement noting that no progress had been achieved in the last two years to resolve the Nagorny Karabakh conflict and the issue of the territorial integrity of Azerbaijan. He enumerated the three principles that should form part of a settlement of the conflict, as recommended by the Co-Chairmen and supported by the Minsk Group: the territorial integrity of Armenia and of Azerbaijan; the legal status of Nagorny Karabakh defined in an agreement based on self-determination, conferring on Nagorny Karabakh the highest degree of self-rule within Azerbaijan; and guaranteed security for Nagorny Karabakh and its whole population, including mutual obligations to ensure compliance with the provisions of a settlement by all the parties.

Finally, the Chairman-in-Office expressed regret that one delegation (Armenia) could not accept the principles, which had the support of all other participating States.

The report recorded the resolve of the OSCE Minsk Group to continue its efforts to achieve a settlement of the Nagorny Karabakh conflict in accordance with Security Council resolutions 822(1993) and 853(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 502] and OSCE decisions, in particular that of 1994 [YUN 1995, p. 610].

Communications. During the year, Azerbaijan addressed several letters to the Secretary-General drawing his attention to developments relating to Nagorny Karabakh. Azerbaijan repeatedly underscored that the Nagorny Karabakh region was part of its territory, that it was currently under occupation by Armenia, and that, contrary to Armenia's insistence on its non-involvement in the Nagorny Karabakh conflict, it had given all-out support to the separatists there.

On 5 March, Azerbaijan issued a statement [S/1996/170] drawing attention to an agreement on cooperation and coordination signed on 1 March between Armenia and what Azerbaijan referred to as the "illegal entity . . . established in the Nagorny Karabakh region of Azerbaijan". Azerbaijan called that step an act of "gross and undisguised interference" in its internal affairs and yet another infringement of its sovereignty and territorial integrity. Armenia's action, it said, was a challenge to the stand taken by OSCE and a most flagrant provocation intended to disrupt the international community's efforts to mediate a peaceful settlement of the Armenia-Azerbaijan conflict.

On 8 November, Azerbaijan informed [A/51/670-S/1996/934] the Secretary-General of "presidential elections" scheduled for 24 November in the "Nagorny Karabakh Republic", the highlands of the Karabakh region of Azerbaijan. On 26 November, it reported [S/1996/981] that the "elections", organized by Armenia, had taken place. Azerbaijan labelled those "elections" an unlawful act in defiance of the world community and of international public opinion, and another attempt to complicate ongoing negotiations. On 27 November, Azerbaijan issued a statement [A/51/697-S/1996/987], which it circulated to OSCE member States, containing its analysis of efforts to settle the Armenia-Azerbaijan conflict, including the OSCE principles and a text put forward by the OSCE President, which Armenia indicated it would not accept. On 4 December, Azerbaijan transmitted the statement [A/51/707-S/1996/1009] delivered the previous day by the OSCE Chairman-in-Office at the end of the OSCE Summit.

On 17 May, the Council of Heads of State of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) issued a declaration [S/1996/371] in Moscow, by which the Council called on the parties to intensify efforts to find compromise solutions to the Nagorny Karabakh conflict.

Georgia

The Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Georgia, Edouard Brunner (Switzerland), in consultations with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), and with the Russian Federation as facilitator, in 1996 continued to assist the Government of Georgia and the Abkhaz leadership in Abkhazia, Georgia, to explore and find compromise solutions to their key differences, with the aim of arriving at a comprehensive settlement of the conflict. The Security Council once again reaffirmed its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia, demanded that the Abkhaz side accelerate the process of voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons without delay, and extended the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) for an additional period terminating on 31 January 1997.

A new draft protocol on which such a settlement could be elaborated was presented to the parties in March. As in 1995, the draft proved unacceptable over the contentious issue of the future political status of Abkhazia, on which depended the return of some 300,000 refugees and displaced persons to their homes in that region of Georgia. Georgia's proposals for a united federal State of Georgia defining the status of Abkhazia within it likewise proved unacceptable to the Abkhaz leadership. Exacerbating the situation were "elections" held by the Abkhaz leadership on 23 November.

As consultations at all levels proceeded in efforts to break the protracted deadlock, the parties' compliance with their 1994 ceasefire and separation-of-forces agreement continued to be monitored and verified by UNOMIG throughout 1996.

UN Observer Mission in Georgia

Established by the Security Council in 1993 [res. 858(1993)], the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) continued in 1996 to discharge its mandate, as revised in 1994 [res. 937(1994)], to monitor and verify compliance with the 1994 Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces [YUN 1994, p. 583]; to observe the operation of the CIS peacekeeping force within the framework of the Agreement's implementation; to verify, through observation and patrolling, that the parties' troops and heavy military equipment remained outside the security zone and restricted weapons zone; to monitor the heavy-weapons storage areas and the weapons zone; to monitor Georgia's troop withdrawal from the Kodori valley to points beyond the boundaries of Abkhazia; to investigate and help resolve alleged violations of the 1994 Agreement; and to report regularly to the Secretary-General.

UNOMIG functioned under the authority of the resident Deputy Special Envoy and Head of Mission, Liviu Bota. Its mandate was extended by the Security Council twice during the year, the first time until 12 July 1996 (resolution 1036(1996)) and the second, until 31 January 1997 (resolution 1065(1996)).

Composition

As of 2 January 1996, UNOMIG, under the command of the Chief Military Observer, Major-General Per Källström (Sweden), maintained its full authorized strength of 136 military observers, drawn from 23 countries, and supported by 55 international and 75 local civilian staff. By 10 October, that strength had been temporarily reduced to 124 military observers to accommodate an engineering unit that was to undertake mine clearing.

Besides its main headquarters in Sukhumi (Abkhazia, Georgia), UNOMIG maintained an administrative headquarters in Pitsunda. Some 54 observers were deployed in the Gali sector (north of the Inguri River) and 39 in the Zugdidi sector (south of the Inguri). UNOMIG operated from team bases in Gali, Inguri-Ges, Otobaya and Zemo-Bargevi (in the Gali sector); in Darcheli, Dzvari and Zugdidi (in the Zugdidi sector); and in Adjara (in the Kodori valley), from 16 April to 28 November. In addition, UNOMIG maintained a liaison office of four military observers in the Georgian capital of Tbilisi.

Activities

In five reports submitted to the Security Council during 1996, the Secretary-General updated information on all aspects of the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, and provided details of UNOMIG operations. Regular contacts had been maintained by the Secretary-General's Special Envoy for Georgia and his resident Deputy—with President Eduard Shevardnadze of Georgia, the Abkhaz leader, Vladislav Ardzinba, the heads of the Georgian and Abkhaz delegations in Moscow, and other political and government figures of the Russian Federation—in an effort to assist the parties to arrive at compromise solutions.

The reports further noted the two forums at which UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force discussed with local authorities of both sides various issues relevant to the effective discharge of their respective mandates: weekly meetings with the Georgian police and Abkhaz militia under the chairmanship of the Chief Military Observer of UNOMIG, which dealt with matters relating to the security and restricted weapons zones; and weekly quadripartite meetings under the chairmanship of the Commander of the CIS peacekeeping force, which dealt mainly with administrative and occasionally with security matters, criminal investigations, hostage exchanges and humanitarian issues.

Report of Secretary-General (2 January). Pursuant to a Security Council request in its resolution 993(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 616] for a report every three months on all aspects of the situation in Abkhazia, including the operations of UNOMIG, the Secretary-General submitted a report on 2 January 1996 [S/1996/5] containing updated information since his 8 November 1995 report [YUN 1995, p. 618] and recommendations on the UNOMIG mandate beyond its expiry on 12 January 1996.

He stated that the Georgian-Abkhaz peace process continued to be deadlocked over the issue of the future political status of Abkhazia. Strenuous efforts by the Russian Federation, in its capacity as facilitator and in consultation with the Special Envoy and Deputy, had failed to produce a draft protocol acceptable to both sides, the object of which was to establish a basic understanding of principles on which a detailed political agreement could be elaborated. It was the intention of Georgia's President to break the deadlock by raising the issue of the Abkhaz conflict at the meeting of the CIS Council of Heads of State scheduled for 19 January, as well as the possible enlargement of the CIS peacekeeping force to include deployment throughout the entire Abkhazian territory and not in the Gali district alone. The Abkhaz leader reiterated his position that talks would continue only on the basis of the 1994 Declaration on Measures for a Political Settlement of the Georgian/Abkhaz Conflict and the Quadripartite Agreement on Voluntary Return of Refugees and Displaced Persons [YUN 1994, p. 582]; and that only a union agreement between Georgia and Abkhazia in which both sides enjoyed equal rights could prevent a renewal of hostilities.

The November 1995 presidential and parliamentary elections in Georgia, which had overwhelmingly elected Eduard Shevardnadze (formerly Chairman of the Parliament and head of State) President, as well as a new Parliament [YUN 1995, p. 619], had not extended to Abkhazia, where the central Government of Georgia did not exercise de facto jurisdiction. By law, therefore, the mandates of the Abkhaz parliamentarians in the Georgian Parliament had been extended until such time as elections could be held in Abkhazia. In his inaugural address, the President emphasized that his paramount concerns were to resolve ethno-political conflicts and restore Georgian territorial integrity. He proposed that Georgia should have a federal territorial arrangement, part of which would be the "Republic of Abkhazia", which would have a broad political status, a constitution of its own compatible with that of the federal State, a parliament, a supreme court, an anthem, a state emblem and other symbols. He declared it imperative that the definition of Abkhazia's status and the return of refugees and displaced persons take place without delay. He affirmed that the Georgian side stood ready to engage in dialogue at all levels, including bilateral negotiations.

After a six-month hiatus, the weekly quadripartite meetings had resumed in October 1995, the Secretary-General reported. UNOMIG's cooperation with the CIS peacekeeping force continued to be satisfactory in terms of regular meetings, timely exchanges of information and joint patrolling of the security zone.

In the light of the situation prevailing in the region, the Secretary-General recommended a further six-month extension, ending on 12 July 1996, of the UNOMIG mandate. He further recommended an early review of the mandate in the event of changes to the CIS peacekeeping force mandate at the 19 January meeting of the CIS Council. Should the Security Council concur with the recommended extension, the Secretary-General confirmed that the monthly maintenance cost of UNOMIG would be limited to the commitment authority granted under General Assembly resolution 49/231 B in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 619].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

The Security Council met on 12 January 1996 to consider the Secretary-General's report. Also before it was an 8 January letter from Georgia [S/1996/9], drawing attention to the torture and massacre of seven members of a family in the village of Sheshleti in the Gali region by Abkhaz boeviks, who also summarily executed two neighbours who had tried to prevent the massacre.

At the same meeting, the Council adopted resolution 1036(1996).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 993(1995) of 12 May 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 2 January 1996,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia,

Stressing the need for the parties to intensify efforts, under the auspices of the United Nations and with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator, to achieve an early and comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia, fully respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia,

Noting the holding of presidential and parliamentary elections in Georgia in November 1995 and expressing the hope that these will contribute positively to the achievement of a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia,

Reaffirming also the right of all refugees and displaced persons affected by the conflict to return to their homes in secure conditions in accordance with international law and as set out in the Quadripartite Agreement of 14 April 1994 on voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons,

Deploping the continued obstruction of such return by the Abkhaz authorities,

Deeply concerned at the deterioration in the humanitarian situation, in particular in the Gali region where there is a continued lack of a secure environment,

Deeply concerned also at the rising violence and at the killings being committed in the areas under the control of the Abkhaz side reported in the letter of 8 January 1996 from the Permanent Representative of Georgia to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council,

Recalling the conclusions of the Budapest summit of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe regarding the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia,

Reaffirming the necessity for the parties to comply strictly with international humanitarian law,

Noting that the Moscow Agreement of 14 May 1994 on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces has generally been respected by the parties with the assistance of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) peacekeeping forces and the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG),

Expressing its satisfaction with the close cooperation and coordination between UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force in the performance of their respective mandates and commending the contribution both have made to stabilize the situation in the zone of conflict,

Expressing concern about the safety and security of UNOMIG and CIS personnel and stressing the importance it attaches to their freedom of movement,

Noting that the forthcoming meeting of the Council of Heads of State of the CIS to be held in Moscow on 19 January 1996 will consider the extension of the mandate of the CIS peacekeeping force,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 2 January 1996;

2. Expresses its deep concern at the continued deadlock in the efforts to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia;

3. Reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the Secretary-General aimed at achieving a comprehensive political settlement, of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia, respecting fully the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia, as well as for the efforts that are being undertaken by the Russian Federation in its capacity as facilitator to intensify the search for a peaceful settlement of the conflict, and encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts, with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator, and with the support of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), to that end;

4. Calls upon the parties, in particular the Abkhaz side, to achieve substantive progress without further delay towards a comprehensive political settlement, and further calls upon them to cooperate fully with the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator;

5. Demands that the Abkhaz side accelerate significantly the process of voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons by accepting a timetable on the basis of that proposed by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and further demands that it guarantee the safety of spontaneous returnees already in the area and regularize their status in accordance with the Quadripartite Agreement;

6. Calls upon the Abkhaz side in that context to promote, as a first step, the return of refugees and displaced persons to the Gali region, in safety and dignity;

7. Condemns the ethnic killings and continuing human rights violations committed in Abkhazia, Georgia, and calls upon the Abkhaz side to ensure the safety of all persons in areas under its control;

8. Calls upon the parties to improve their cooperation with UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force in order to provide a secure environment for the return of refugees and displaced persons, and also calls upon them to honour their commitments with regard to the security and freedom of movement of all United Nations and CIS personnel and with regard to UNOMIG inspections of heavy weapons storage sites;

9. Welcomes the additional measures implemented by UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force in the Gali region aimed at improving conditions for the safe and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons, and all appropriate efforts in this regard;

10. Expresses its full support for the elaboration of a concrete programme for the protection and promotion of human rights in Abkhazia, Georgia, as described in the Secretary-General's report of 2 January 1996, and calls upon the Abkhaz authorities to cooperate fully with the efforts to this end;

11. Decides to extend the mandate of UNOMIG for an additional period terminating on 12 July 1996, subject to a review by the Council of the mandate of UNOMIG in the event of any changes that may be made in the mandate of the CIS peacekeeping force;

12. Reiterates its encouragement to States to contribute to the voluntary fund in support of the implementation of the Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces signed in Moscow on 14 May 1994 and/or for humanitarian aspects including demining, as specified by the donors;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Council regularly informed and to report after three months from the date of the adoption of this resolution on all aspects of the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, including the operations of UNOMIG;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1036(1996)

12 January 1996 Meeting 3618 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/16).

Communications. On 13 February, Georgia issued a statement [S/1996/114] reporting that, four days before, 70 Georgian nationals (former refugees who had returned to their homes in Gali, Abkhazia) had been taken hostage by an Abkhaz armed group. Georgia warned that continuous harassment of the Georgian population in Abkhazia would lead to dramatic consequences and would not promote settlement of the Georgian/Abkhaz conflict.

By a decree of 31 January, the President of Georgia imposed a series of measures tightening border and customs control in the sector of the State border between Georgia and the Russian Federation within the territory of Abkhazia, and in the seaport of Sukhumi, other port sites and the marine area. Consignments of humanitarian aid to Abkhazia were exempted from the decree, subject to government approval. The text was transmitted to the Security Council on 3 April, together with a statement of 25 March from Georgia's Ministry of Foreign Affairs [S/1996/240]. According to the statement, the decree was in conformity with the 19 January decision of the CIS Council of Heads of State (see below) and issued in the light of the difficult situation in Abkhazia and the Caucasus region as a whole, including the recent deterioration of conditions in the port of Sukhumi and other port sites within Abkhazia, which posed a threat to the State security of Georgia.

On 5 March, Georgia transmitted the Government's proposals [S/1996/165] regarding the status of Abkhazia within the framework of a federal State of Georgia, an idea that it said had been gaining momentum. The proposals provided for the establishment of a united federal State within the borders of what had been the Georgian Soviet Socialist Republic as at 21 December 1991. Abkhazia, as a subject of the federation, would exercise wide discretionary power and would have its own constitution, anthem, flag, emblem, parliament, the highest executive and judicial bodies, and other attributes of statehood, the competencies of which would be determined by both the federal and Abkhaz constitutions and through a formal agreement on the delimitation of competencies between the federal State and Abkhazia; in the territory of Abkhazia, the Abkhaz language would have the status of a State language along with Georgian.

The Government of Abkhazia would exercise full authority over: the formation of its supreme central and local state bodies and state management, of a supreme court and procuracy and of the budget; taxes and tax collection; issues related to the bar and notariate, and to culture, education and health care; trade; local roads and transport; social welfare, sports and physical training programmes; science; and use of natural resources. The competencies of the federal Government would include: foreign policy and economic relations; defence policy; armed forces and security; monetary system; customs service; federal budget; determination of the status and protection of State borders; energy, national transport and communications; environmental protection and natural disaster relief operations; protection of human rights, civil liberties and national minority rights; and other competencies crucial to the existence of a federal State, such as citizenship and criminal and civil legislation.

Other proposals related to international agreements that Abkhazia might enter into, Abkhaz representation in the federal legislature, decisions of that legislative body directly affecting Abkhaz interests, and questions related to the preparation of an agreement on delimitation of competencies, as well as the structures and functions of federal bodies.

Report of Secretary-General (15 April). The Secretary-General on 15 April reported [S/1996/284] that, in an effort to break the deadlock, the Special Envoy and his Deputy, in addition to their regular contacts with high-level officials of both sides, had held bilateral consultations with the Russian facilitator (Paris, 24-25 January), the OSCE Secretary-General (New York, 15-16 February) and the Foreign Minister of the Russian Federation (Moscow, 4-5 March). Acting for the Special Envoy, the Secretary-General's Special Adviser, Ismat Kittani, and the Deputy Special Envoy had held further consultations on a draft protocol with President Shevardnadze and other high officials, including the Russian Federation's First Deputy Foreign Minister (14-18 March). Neither side signed the draft protocol, although both reaffirmed their determination to continue negotiations until a comprehensive political settlement was achieved. Abkhazia had presented an alternative version of the draft protocol which envisaged that the "two sides shall enjoy equal rights" and would agree to live together in a "Federative Union".

On 19 January, the CIS Council of Heads of State adopted two decisions [A/51/62-S/1996/74] relating to Abkhazia. One extended the mandate of the CIS peacekeeping force until 19 April 1996, and asked relevant CIS councils to draft a new mandate for the force by 19 February on the basis of the Georgian proposals, possibly with a further three-month extension of the mandate to 19 July. The second decision embodied a series of measures to influence the Abkhaz side to arrive at a settlement of the conflict. Abkhazia declared that it would not recognize a new mandate based on the Georgian proposals and that the current mandate could be changed only with the consent of the two parties.

Not only was a new mandate not drafted by 19 February, it also proved impossible to agree on one at a subsequent meeting of the CIS Council of Foreign Ministers, in Moscow on 2 April. Georgia's alternative proposal for the creation of a new monitoring force to oversee previous CIS decisions concerning, inter alia, sanctions against Abkhazia was not accepted. Georgia wanted neither the CIS peacekeeping force withdrawn nor its current mandate continued. It was decided that the force would remain and that the CIS Executive Secretary would examine the issue and report to the CIS Council of Heads of State by 19 April.

Also covered by the report were developments in the region with implications for Abkhazia. Apart from Georgia's recent ratification of the 1994 Treaty on Friendship, Cooperation and Good-Neighbourliness between Georgia and the Russian Federation, several initiatives had been put forward, for a "Great Caucasus" by the Russian Federation, "For a Peaceful Caucasus" by Georgia, and the "Declaration on Peace, Security and Cooperation in the Caucasus Region" signed by Azerbaijan and Georgia (Tbilisi, 8 March) [A/51/89].

The Russian Federation's President, Boris Yeltsin, and President Shevardnadze, in wide-ranging discussions on the situation in the Caucasus (Moscow, 18-19 March), reaffirmed their commitment to the principles of the territorial integrity of States and the inviolability of existing borders, and strongly condemned separatism and terrorism in all their aspects. They expressed their conviction that all possibilities for resolving the question of Abkhazia through peaceful means had not been exhausted. They stated that the negotiations under UN auspices, with the assistance of OSCE and with the Russian Federation acting as facilitator, had brought the sides closer to a comprehensive political settlement; and that the search for mutually acceptable solutions should take account of the relevant Security Council resolutions, OSCE documents, and the 1995 documents collectively drafted and adopted by CIS in Almaty, Kazakhstan (10 February), and Minsk, Belarus (26 May) [YUN 1995, p. 617]. Both Presidents called on member States of CIS strictly to observe its 19 January decisions on Abkhazia.

As reported, the Russian authorities' subsequent enforcement of those decisions drew a statement from the "Government of the Republic of Abkhazia" on 21 March contending that "far-fetched pretexts" were being used to toughen the blockade on Sukhumi; and that, since there were no constitutional ties between Abkhazia and Georgia, agreements or treaties concluded with Georgia that affected Abkhazia's interests could not be legally binding on Abkhazia.

Tension rose in the port of Sukhumi on 23 March as a result of the enforcement measures, but subsided following consultations between the commanders of the Russian border troops and the Abkhaz leadership. On 27 March, the Abkhaz leadership issued a statement to the effect that, if the enforcement measures continued, a referendum would be called to determine whether the people of Abkhazia preferred to have ties with Georgia or the Russian Federation; meanwhile it would not participate in any negotiations with Georgia. It was reported, however, that Abkhazia's "Prime Minister" subsequently held talks in Moscow, during the first week of April, with the Russian Federation's Foreign Minister and other senior government officials.

The situation in the UNOMIG area of responsibility remained tense. UNOMIG temporarily suspended vehicle patrols in the security and restricted weapons zones in the Gali sector because of the danger posed by continued mine laying in the area, responsibility for which could not be determined. In addition, general lawlessness remained prevalent in that sector.

The Secretary-General said that UNOMIG's cooperation and communication with the Government and the Abkhaz authorities remained satisfactory, and weekly police meetings and quadripartite meetings continued.

Regarding ongoing consultations with Abkhazia on human rights issues, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights sent a senior human rights officer to Sukhumi (21-24 February), following which the Abkhaz authorities agreed with a programme drawn up for the protection and promotion of human rights in Abkhazia. The text of the programme, annexed to the Secretary-General's report, set out its objectives, mechanisms of implementation, projects and activities, and organizational framework. The programme was to be carried out by the High Commissioner in cooperation with OSCE.

In summary, the Secretary-General observed that, while the Abkhaz leadership had recognized that Abkhazia would be part of a single Georgian State within the boundaries of the former Georgian Soviet Socialist Republic as at 21 December 1991, and agreed that the State should be "federative" in nature, pronounced differences remained over the constitutional definition of the Georgian State; the Georgian side wanted the draft protocol to reflect Georgia as a single federal State within which Abkhazia enjoyed certain State powers and rights, and the Abkhaz side demanded that the protocol describe the State as a union resulting from a treaty between two subjects of equal status under international law. As long as the stalemate continued, there could be no significant improvement in the situation of refugees and displaced persons, the Secretary-General warned, whose plight was a cause of great concern.

Even should the draft protocol be signed in the near future, the Secretary-General felt it unlikely that it would clearly define the political status of Abkhazia. However, it would serve as a framework for further negotiations, not only on constitutional issues but also on economic matters, banking, finance, transport, communications, public policy (police, administration of justice, education), social affairs and military questions. It was in connection with that phase that the Secretary-General saw an important role for the United Nations, especially as both sides and the Russian Federation had recently asked the Special Envoy to strengthen the Organization's role in the search for a comprehensive settlement.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

The Security Council met on 25 April and, having considered the Secretary-General's foregoing report and the proposals of Georgia [S/1996/165], authorized its President to make the following statement [S/PRST/1996/20] on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the interim report of the Secretary-General concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, of 15 April 1996. It has also read with appreciation the letter of the Government of Georgia and the proposals on the political status of Abkhazia contained therein.

The Council notes with deep concern the continued failure of the parties to achieve a comprehensive political settlement. It also notes the adverse impact that this failure has on the humanitarian situation and economic development in the region. It calls upon the parties, in particular the Abkhaz side, to achieve substantive progress without further delay.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the Secretary-General, his Special Envoy and of the Russian Federation as facilitator aimed at achieving a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia, respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia. The Council stresses that the primary responsibility for achieving a comprehensive political settlement rests upon the parties themselves.

The Council welcomes the efforts undertaken by the members of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) as set out in S/1996/74, annex IV, in support of such a comprehensive political settlement.

The Council remains deeply concerned at the continued obstruction of the return of the refugees and displaced persons by the Abkhaz authorities, which is totally unacceptable.

The Council expresses its support for the Secretary-General's efforts to find ways of improving the observance of human rights in the region, as an integral part of the work towards a comprehensive political settlement.

The Council notes the important contribution made by the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) and the CIS Collective Peacekeeping Forces to stabilization of the situation in the zone of conflict. The Council recalls its encouragement to Member States to make contributions, in cash or kind, to the voluntary fund in support of the implementation of the Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces and/or humanitarian aspects including demining. It welcomes the contributions mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General.

The Council is, however, deeply concerned at the deterioration in security conditions in the Gali region, which has a negative effect on the ability of UNOMIG to meet its mandated tasks. The Council condemns mine laying in the Gali region, which has resulted in loss of life, including of a UNOMIG military observer. Such mine laying should cease. The Council calls on the parties to take all measures in their power to prevent it. The Council stresses that the international community's ability to assist depends on the full cooperation of the parties, especially the fulfilment of their obligations regarding the safety and freedom of movement of international personnel.

The Council invites the Secretary-General to continue to keep it informed of the situation.

Meeting number. SC 3658.

CIS decision. On 17 May, the CIS Council of Heads of State adopted a decision [S/1996/371] extending the mandate of the CIS Collective Peacekeeping Forces in Abkhazia to 19 July 1996 and, with the consent of the parties, adding the following task to it: demarcation of minefields and mine clearance in the territory of Abkhazia, Georgia, with UN assistance and in cooperation with the local authorities. The decision further instructed the CIS Council of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Council of Ministers of Defence, together with the parties to the conflict, to amplify the mandate of the CIS peacekeeping force in accordance with the 19 January decision of the Council of Heads of State. It called on the parties, with the assistance of the CIS peacekeeping force, to take additional measures to ensure the safety of UNOMIG in the performance of its duties.

Report of Secretary-General (1 July). The Secretary-General's report of 1 July [S/1996/507] noted that contacts with all concerned on the Georgian/Abkhaz conflict included consultations by the Secretary-General with Georgia's Foreign Minister (New York, 3 May) and with the Russian Federation's President and Foreign Minister (Moscow, 14-18 May). The Friends of the Secretary-General on Georgia (France, Germany, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States) also had met separately with President Shevardnadze and the Abkhaz leadership to deliver a demarche by which they: conveyed their concern at the lack of progress towards a political settlement in Abkhazia; reiterated their belief that the international community could help them resolve their differences only if they themselves were willing to do so; and declared that the safe and dignified return of displaced persons and refugees to their homes in Abkhazia, including those belonging to ethnic minorities, must be a humanitarian priority. The Friends further conveyed their concerns at the deterioration of security conditions in the Gali region and demanded that the parties take steps to prevent mine laying.

President Shevardnadze indicated the Government's interest in implementing all Security Council resolutions and presidential statements, and its readiness to establish contact with the Abkhaz leadership in order to reduce the level of criminality and violence in the Gali region and thus facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons. The Abkhaz leadership expressed dissatisfaction with the Council resolutions, which it felt were not based on the factual reports of the Secretary-General. It asserted that no ethnic cleansing had been committed by the Abkhaz, that no large-scale repatriation of refugees and displaced persons to Abkhazia was possible, even if it were permitted, because the local population would not accept it, and that, moreover, such return required prior substantive progress towards a political settlement of the Georgian/Abkhaz conflict.

The Secretary-General cited certain developments reported as directly or indirectly affecting the Georgian/Abkhaz peace process, including a memorandum on measures for establishing security and strengthening mutual confidence among the parties to the Georgian-Ossetian conflict signed by Georgia and South Ossetia (Moscow, 16 May). Mediated by the Russian Federation, OSCE and North Ossetia-Alania, the memorandum provided for confidence-building measures, such as accelerating the return of refugees and displaced persons, the establishment of a demilitarized zone and the holding of bilateral meetings on a number of issues. Another was a declaration entitled "For Inter-ethnic Accord, Peace, and Economic and Cultural Cooperation in the Caucasus" (Kislovodsk, Russian Federation, 3 June), adopted by Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia and the Russian Federation, declaring their resolve to promote lasting peace and stability in the Caucasus.

UN agencies, NGOs and ICRC continued to implement multisectoral humanitarian assistance programmes throughout Abkhazia, including immunization programmes (UNICEF) and food distribution (WFP). Launched on 31 May, the UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Caucasus for June 1996 to May 1997, which addressed the immediate needs of internally displaced persons and other vulnerable groups in the community, sought $37 million for Georgia. (See also PART THREE, Chapter III.)

In response to a government appeal for assistance to revitalize and restructure the country's major economic sectors, the Bretton Woods institutions, the European Union (EU) and UN bodies agreed to support government programmes aimed at sustainable human development. A wide range of assistance and development initiatives, in addition to emergency relief, was being undertaken by UNCTAD, UNDP, UNEP, IMF and the World Bank, WHO and UNESCO, among others.

The Secretary-General declared that only the parties could establish peace, through dialogue and mutual accommodation. Unless they demonstrated the necessary will to cooperate, additional UN measures to improve conditions in the security and restricted weapons zones were unlikely to prove effective. The Organization's financial situation was such that he could not continue to request resources for peacemaking and peacekeeping in situations where there was little prospect of making progress. In the hope that the parties could still be persuaded to help reactivate the peace process, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the UNOMIG mandate until 31 January 1997, subject to an early review should there be a change in the mandate of the CIS peacekeeping force prior to its expiration on 19 July 1996.

In an addendum [S/1996/507/Add.1], the Secretary-General stated that, should the Council agree to his proposals in respect of the human rights programme and the arrangements to deal with the mine threat in the mission area, he would recommend that the General Assembly consider the associated costs, estimated to amount to some $970,000 for a 12-month period, as an expense of the Organization to be borne by Member States and that assessments levied on those States should be credited to the UNOMIG Special Account.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

The Security Council met on 12 July to consider the Secretary-General's latest report. In addition, it had before it the 17 May decision of the CIS Council of Heads of State relating to the CIS peacekeeping force [S/1996/371] and a 6 July letter from Georgia stating that the process of resolving the conflict in Abkhazia must be invigorated [S/1996/527].

At the same meeting, the Council adopted resolution 1065(1996).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 1036(1996) of 12 January 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 1 July 1996,

Noting with deep concern the continued failure by the parties to resolve their differences due to the uncompromising position taken by the Abkhaz side, and underlining the necessity for them to intensify without delay their efforts, under the auspices of the United Nations and with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator, to achieve an early and comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia, which fully respects the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia,

Reaffirming the necessity for the parties strictly to respect human rights, and expressing its support for the Secretary-General's efforts to find ways to improve their observance as an integral part of the work towards a comprehensive political settlement,

Noting that the Moscow Agreement of 14 May 1994 on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces has generally been respected by the parties with the assistance of the Collective Peacekeeping Forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS peacekeeping force) and the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG),

Commending the contribution UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force have made to stabilize the situation in the zone of conflict and stressing the importance of continued close cooperation and coordination between them in the performance of their respective mandates,

Deeply concerned at the deterioration of the security conditions in the Gali region and of the safety and security of the local population, of the refugees and displaced persons returning to the region and of UNOMIG and CIS peacekeeping force personnel,

Reminding the parties that the international community's ability to assist them depends on their political will to resolve the conflict through dialogue and mutual accommodation, as well as their full cooperation with UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force, including the fulfilment of their obligations regarding the safety and freedom of movement of international personnel,

Taking note of the decision taken by the Council of Heads of State of the CIS of 17 May 1996,

Noting that the heads of State of the CIS will consider the extension of the mandate of the peacekeeping force beyond 19 July 1996,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 1 July 1996;

2. Expresses its deep concern at the continued deadlock in the efforts to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia;

3. Reaffirms its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia, within its internationally recognized borders, and to the necessity of defining the status of Abkhazia in strict accordance with these principles, and underlines the unacceptability of any action by the Abkhaz leadership in contravention of these principles;

4. Reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy aimed at achieving a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia within the State of Georgia, respecting fully the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia, as well as for the efforts that are being undertaken by the Russian Federation in its capacity as facilitator to continue to intensify the search for a peaceful settlement of the conflict, and encourages the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator, and with the support of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), to that end;

5. Calls upon the parties, in particular the Abkhaz side, to achieve substantive progress without further delay towards a comprehensive political settlement, and further calls upon them to cooperate fully with the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator;

6. Reaffirms the right of all refugees and displaced persons affected by the conflict to return to their homes in secure conditions in accordance with international law and as set out in the Quadripartite Agreement of 14 April 1994 on voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons, condemns the continued obstruction of that return by the Abkhaz side, and stresses the unacceptability of any linkage of the return of refugees and displaced persons with the question of the political status of Abkhazia, Georgia;

7. Demands that the Abkhaz side accelerate significantly the process of voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons without delay or preconditions, in particular by accepting a timetable on the basis of that proposed by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), and further demands that it guarantee the safety of spontaneous returnees already in the area and regularize their status in cooperation with UNHCR and in accordance with the Quadripartite Agreement, in particular in the Gali region;

8. Recalls the conclusions of the Budapest summit of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe regarding the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, and affirms the unacceptability of the demographic changes resulting from the conflict;

9. Condemns ethnically motivated killings and other ethnically related acts of violence;

10. Condemns the laying of mines in the Gali region, which has already caused several deaths and injuries among the civilian population and the peacekeepers and observers of the international community, and calls upon the parties to take all measures in their power to prevent mine laying and to cooperate fully with UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force in order to honour their commitments to ensure the safety and the freedom of movement of all personnel of the United Nations, the peacekeeping force and international humanitarian organizations;

11. Encourages the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps in response to the threat posed by the laying of mines in order to improve security conditions so as to minimize the danger to UNOMIG personnel and to create conditions for the effective performance of its mandate;

12. Decides to extend the mandate of UNOMIG for an additional period terminating on 31 January 1997 subject to a review by the Council of the mandate of UNOMIG in the event of any changes that may be made in the mandate of the peacekeeping force;

13. Expresses its full support for the implementation of a concrete programme for the protection and promotion of human rights in Abkhazia, Georgia, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council by 15 August 1996 on possible arrangements for the establishment of a human rights office at Sukhumi;

14. Reiterates its encouragement to States to contribute to the voluntary fund in support of the implementation of the Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces signed in Moscow on 14 May 1994 and/or for humanitarian aspects including demining, as specified by the donors;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to consider the means of providing technical and financial assistance aimed at the reconstruction of the economy of Abkhazia, Georgia, following the successful outcome of the political negotiations;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Council regularly informed and to report after three months from the date of the adoption of this resolution on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, including the operations of UNOMIG;

17. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1065(1996)

12 July 1996 Meeting 3680 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/544).

Report of Secretary-General (9 August). In a 9 August report [S/1996/644], the Secretary-General detailed the human rights programme for Abkhazia and the proposed human rights office in Sukhumi. The programme's main objectives were to: promote respect for human rights, protect the human rights of the population in Abkhazia in the spirit of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights [YUN 1948-49, p. 535], contribute to a safe and dignified return of refugees and internally displaced persons, and report on human rights developments in conformity with UN and OSCE practices.

To achieve those objectives, the proposed office would: monitor the human rights situation in Abkhazia by collecting first-hand information from witnesses and other reliable sources; establish direct contacts in Abkhazia so as to advise the Tbilisi and Sukhumi authorities on how best to improve the human rights situation; report to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, who in turn would keep the Secretary-General and the OSCE Chairman-in-Office informed of the situation and its impact on possible solutions to the Georgian/Abkhaz conflict; and initiate projects to promote international human rights standards, including human rights education, establishment of human rights centres, training of key public officials, police, judges, prison officials and NGOs, and one-month fellowships in the International Institute of Human Rights (Strasbourg, France).

The office, to be located on the UNOMIG premises in Sukhumi, would consist of an officer deployed by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and another from OSCE.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

The Security Council met on 22 October to consider the Secretary-General's report, following which it adopted resolution 1077(1996).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 937(1994) of 21 July 1994, 1036(1996) of 12 January 1996 and 1065(1996) of 12 July 1996,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 1 July 1996 and 9 August 1996,

Reiterating its full support for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia within its internationally recognized borders,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 1 July 1996, and in particular its paragraph 18, and decides that the office referred to in this report shall form part of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia, under the authority of the Head of Mission, consistent with the arrangements described in paragraph 7 of the report of the Secretary-General of 9 August 1996;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue close cooperation with the Government of Georgia in determining the priorities of the programme referred to in the above-mentioned reports of the Secretary-General and close consultation in its implementation;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to pursue the necessary follow-up arrangements with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe.

Security Council resolution 1077(1996)

22 October 1996 Meeting 3707 14-O-1

5-nation draft (S/1996/866).

Sponsors: France, Germany, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Botswana, Chile, Egypt, France, Germany, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Indonesia, Italy, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China.

China pointed out that the peacekeeping mandate entrusted to UNOMIG should not be all-inclusive. Nor should UNOMIG overextend itself by assuming responsibilities of other agencies. China regretted that its amendments reflecting that position had not been accepted.

Communication. On 8 October [S/1996/835], Georgia informed the Security Council that the Abkhaz leadership, besides showing utter disregard for Council decisions and the efforts of the international community for a comprehensive settlement of the Abkhazia conflict, had exacerbated the situation by scheduling so-called presidential and parliamentary elections in Abkhazia in November.

In the face of the current demographic conditions in which 300,000 persons had been displaced from Abkhazia and had become "disenfranchised, homeless and humiliated", Georgia warned that the decision to hold those elections was not only unlawful and immoral, it could irrevocably shatter any hope for a negotiated settlement and spur the population to uncontrollable actions. Georgia called on the international community to denounce what it called an "adventurist step" and take measures to prevent another conflagration in Georgia.

Report of Secretary-General (10 October). On 10 October, the Secretary-General reported [S/1996/843] that, in addition to his meeting with Georgia's Foreign Minister (New York, 24 September), two further rounds of negotiations were held on the draft protocol with the special representatives of the two parties (Moscow, 16-19 July and 10-13 September). Since both had maintained their incompatible positions on the issue of the political status of Abkhazia, agreement on the draft protocol remained stalled, as it concerned the question of the return of refugees and displaced persons to Abkhazia. Subsequently, several direct, lower-level meetings took place between the parties' representatives. Diplomatic envoys of the Friends of the Secretary-General on Georgia also held consultations with the Abkhaz leadership in Sukhumi.

In August, the Abkhaz side announced its decision to hold "parliamentary elections" on 23 November. The Parliament of Georgia, by a 2 October resolution, declared the Abkhaz move to hold such elections illegal and its results null and void. In the meantime, contrary to an agreement (Vladikavkaz, 27 August) between President Shevardnadze and the South Ossetian leader, Ludwig Chibirov, on further measures for a settlement of the South Ossetia conflict, the "Supreme Soviet" of South Ossetia adopted a 6 September resolution to "create a presidency" and to that end hold "presidential elections" on 10 November—a step with implications for the Georgian/Abkhaz peace process, the Secretary-General stated.

During the reporting period, UNOMIG continued to operate in parts of the security and restricted weapons zones and in the Kodori valley. The weekly police and quadripartite meetings continued, as did UNOMIG cooperation with UN agencies and NGOs working on both sides of the Inguri.

In the security and restricted weapons zones, many incidents of banditry, not only against the local population but also against the Abkhaz militia and the CIS peacekeeping force, continued to be reported, as were more kidnappings.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

At its 22 October meeting, the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's 10 October report, as well as the 8 October letter from Georgia. Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the statement below [S/PRST/1996/43] on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, of 10 October 1996. It has also taken note of the letter from the Permanent Representative of Georgia to the President of the Security Council of 8 October 1996.

The Council notes with deep concern that no significant progress has yet been achieved towards a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia, respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia within its internationally recognized borders.

The Council reaffirms its full support for an active role of the United Nations, with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator, aimed at achieving a comprehensive political settlement. In the context of the recent visit to the region of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, the Council requests the Secretary-General to undertake further efforts and make proposals to reinvigorate the stalled peace process.

The Council stresses that the primary responsibility for achieving such reinvigoration of the peace process rests upon the parties themselves and calls on them, in particular the Abkhaz side, to resume discussions and to reach substantive progress in the negotiations.

The Council is deeply concerned by the deterioration of the situation in the Gali region and its negative impact on the ability of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) to meet its mandated tasks. The Council condemns mine laying and other threats referred to in the Secretary-General's report against UNOMIG and the Collective Peacekeeping Force of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS peacekeeping force). The Council calls on both parties to take all the necessary steps to prevent all such acts.

The Council calls on both parties to respect the Moscow Agreement of 14 May 1994 on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces and expresses its concern at the violations referred to in the Secretary-General's report, in particular the serious violations which recently occurred in the restricted weapons zone.

The Council stresses that the international community's ability to assist depends on the full cooperation of the parties, especially the fulfilment of their obligations regarding the safety and freedom of movement of international personnel.

The Council is deeply concerned at the announcement made by the Abkhaz side that so-called parliamentary elections would be held on 23 November 1996. The holding of such elections would only be possible after the determination through negotiations of the political status of Abkhazia respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia within its internationally recognized borders, within the framework of a comprehensive political settlement, and with the guaranteed possibility of full participation for all refugees and displaced persons. The Council notes that conditions for holding such elections are not met at present. It calls on the Abkhaz side to call off these elections and further calls on both sides to refrain from any action that could heighten tension.

The Council remains deeply concerned at the continued obstruction of the return of the refugees and displaced persons by the Abkhaz authorities, which is totally unacceptable.

The Council welcomes the good cooperation between UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force and their efforts to promote stabilization of the situation in the zone of conflict.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep it closely informed of the situation.

Meeting number. SC 3707.

Further communications. By a decision adopted by the CIS Council of Heads of State in Moscow on 17 October [S/1996/874], transmitted to the Secretary-General by the Russian Federation, the CIS Council, with the consent of the parties to the conflict, extended the mandate of the CIS peacekeeping force until 31 January 1997, or until such time as one of the parties called for its termination. That decision also expanded the mandate to include taking measures to terminate the activities of terrorist subversive formations and other armed groups positioned in or entering the region; and to ensure the security of the personnel of UNOMIG, OSCE and other international organizations at their request.

In two other communications, the Abkhaz leadership was called on to cancel the scheduled "parliamentary" elections in Abkhazia—a resolution adopted by the European Parliament on 12 November [S/1996/965] and a declaration of 21 November by the EU Presidency [S/1996/977]. On 4

December [S/1996/1005], the Chairman of the Supreme Council of Abkhazia, on behalf of the Abkhazian Autonomous Republic and hundreds of thousands of refugees who had been forced to leave Abkhazia, expressed gratitude to the United Nations for the firm position it had taken towards the illegal parliamentary elections held by the separatist leadership on 23 November. The Chairman stated that about 240,000 participants in the plebiscite (organized by the Government and held on the same date), among those forced to live outside Abkhazia, had condemned those elections and again confirmed the separatists' policy of genocide and ethnic cleansing.

Further report of Secretary-General. As later reported by the Secretary-General [S/1997/47], the Special Envoy held talks with President Shevardnadze, the Abkhaz leadership and a representative of the Russian Federation on ways to break the stalemate (8-10 October). While the Georgian side favoured changing the negotiation format, the Abkhaz side preferred retaining the current one, which the Russian representative argued had not been fully exhausted.

The Special Envoy's October talks were overshadowed, however, by the imminent "parliamentary elections" in Abkhazia, which were being held to replace the current parliament whose five-year term had expired. Notwithstanding the international community's calls against holding those elections, they took place as scheduled on 23 November, followed by a second round on 7 December. Also on 23 November, a plebiscite organized by Georgia to determine whether refugees and displaced persons from Abkhazia had supported the holding of those elections prior to their return to Abkhazia and to the restoration of Georgia's territorial integrity was reported to have responded overwhelmingly in the negative.

Meanwhile, the Friends of the Secretary-General on Georgia again met with President Shevardnadze to deliver a demarche (23 October), handing the same to the Abkhaz leadership through the resident Deputy Special Envoy (7 November). The demarche conveyed the Friends' concern about the serious deterioration of the Georgian/Abkhaz conflict and the failure of the parties to agree on its key issues. The Friends later had a lengthy exchange of views with Abkhaz officials on how to give fresh impetus to the peace process (10 December).

Also held were bilateral meetings between the two sides. The Abkhaz "Foreign Minister" held the first such meeting with President Shevardnadze (Tbilisi, 14 November), during which they agreed to continue bilateral contacts at both working and higher levels; with the Special Representative of the President of Georgia to the Peace Process (Moscow, 4-7 December); and again with the same Special Representative, in the security zone in Gali (23-24 December) to discuss the resumption of the orderly repatriation of refugees and displaced persons, in particular to the Gali region. Attended also by representatives of the Russian Federation, UNHCR, UNOMIG, the CIS peacekeeping force and OSCE, the last meeting, although described as constructive, produced no specific agreements.

Between 3 October and 26 December, several murders, kidnappings and attacks, including on the Abkhaz militia and CIS peacekeeping force in the Gali sector, were reported. Georgian violations of the restricted weapons zone drew numerous protests from UNOMIG.

On 29 November, UNOMIG closed its Adjara team base in the Kodori valley for the winter, to be reopened the following spring. The Chief Military Observer suspended the weekly police meetings due to the non-attendance of representatives of the Abkhaz militia and security service since mid-October; the weekly quadripartite meetings continued, however.

On 10 December, the resident Deputy Special Envoy and Head of Mission formally opened in Sukhumi the UN office for the protection and promotion of human rights.

Financing

On 7 June, during its resumed fiftieth session, the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's budget estimates for UNOMIG for the 12-month period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 [A/50/731/Add.1 & Corr.1], together with the related comments and recommendations of ACABQ [A/50/890], adopted resolution 50/237.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 854(1993) of 6 August 1993, by which the Council approved the deployment of an advance team of up to ten United Nations military observers for a period of three months and the incorporation of the advance team into a United Nations observer mission if such a mission was formally established by the Council,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 858(1993) of 24 August 1993, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Observer Mission, the most recent of which was resolution 1036(1996) of 12 January 1996,

Recalling further its decision 48/475 A of 23 December 1993 on the financing of the Observer Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was decision 50/449 of 22 December 1995,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observer Mission,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia as at 21 May 1996, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 1.7 million United States dollars, representing 5 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Observer Mission to the period ending 30 June 1996, notes that some 27 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observer Mission in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observer Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia the amount of 7,606,650 dollars gross (7,102,200 dollars net), already authorized and assessed under the terms of General Assembly resolution 49/231 B of 12 July 1995, for the period from 13 January to 30 June 1996;

8. Decides also to appropriate the amount of 17,089,600 dollars gross (16,023,400 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Observer Mission for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997, inclusive of the amount of 413,500 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be assessed on Member States at a monthly rate of 1,424,100 dollars gross (1,335,300 dollars net) in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995 and 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1996 and 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Observer Mission beyond 12 July 1996;

9. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,066,200 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997;

10. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observer Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 512,136 dollars gross (339,846 dollars net) in respect of the period ending 15 May 1995;

11. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observer Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 512,136 dollars gross (339,846 dollars net) for the period ending 15 May 1995 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

12. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observer Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

13. Invites Member States to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund established in accordance with paragraph 10 of Security Council resolution 937(1994) of 21 July 1994;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia".

General Assembly resolution 50/237

7 June 1996 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/820/Add.1) without vote, 3 June (meeting 64, resumed); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.49), based on informal consultations; agenda item 132.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 56, 64 (resumed); plenary 120.

In October, during its fifty-first session, the General Assembly, following its consideration of the Secretary-General's report on the financial performance of UNOMIG for the period 16 May 1995 to 12 January 1996 [A/50/731/Add.2] and the related ACABQ recommendation [A/51/448], adopted decision 51/406.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 17 October 1996, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee and having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions:

(a) Decided that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observer Mission, there should be set off against their future apportionment their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 1,970,718 United States dollars gross (1,718,168 dollars net) for the period from 16 May 1995 to 12 January 1996;

(b) Also decided that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observer Mission, their share of the unencumbered balance of 1,970,718 dollars gross (1,718,168 dollars net) for the period from 16 May 1995 to 12 January 1996 should be set off against their outstanding obligations.

General Assembly decision 51/406

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/51/503) without vote, 11 October (meeting 6); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/51/L.2), based on informal consultations; agenda item 133.

Meeting numbers. GA 51st session: 5th Committee 4, 6; plenary 38.

By decision 51/460 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that, at its resumed fifty-first session, the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item on the financing of UNOMIG, along with 26 other agenda items and one sub-item.

Cyprus

During 1996, the Secretary-General stepped up efforts to impress upon the leaders of the two communities in Cyprus the urgency of resuming their long deadlocked negotiations and, through mutual concessions, to arrive at a final political solution. The Secretary-General's Special Representative for Cyprus began preparations for such a resumption in 1997, building on already agreed-upon substantive elements and key principles. In the meantime, the Security Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) until 30 June 1997.

The question of Cyprus was included in the agenda of the General Assembly's fifty-first session by Assembly decision 50/494 of 16 September 1996. By decision 51/462 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that the item remained for consideration during that session.

The Secretary-General continued to exercise his mission of good offices in an effort to break the impasse between the leaders of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities. The Secretary-General's new Special Representative for Cyprus, Han Sung-Joo, appointed from 1 May to succeed Joe Clark, visited Cyprus, Greece and Turkey three times in urgent attempts to establish a mutually acceptable basis for the resumption of direct talks early in 1997. To that end, intensive UN preparations were under way to review, update and expand on already agreed-upon key elements and principles to help the two leaders reach common positions during their negotiations. It was hoped that the decision of the European Union (EU) in March to begin negotiations with Cyprus in 1997 or 1998 on the latter's accession to EU membership would facilitate an overall settlement before then.

The Secretary-General urged the parties to cooperate with his Special Representative, as well as with the Deputy Special Representative resident in Cyprus, Gustave Feissel, who maintained regular contact with the two sides, in their efforts to promote conditions for direct talks to achieve an overall settlement. In the meantime, UNFICYP endeavoured with strenuous effort to prevent an escalation of the violent clashes that occurred between the two communities in August, to restore calm and to maintain the ceasefire and military status quo on the island.

Incidents

Communications. Throughout 1996, the Secretary-General received numerous letters from the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot sides, as well as one from Greece, containing charges and countercharges, protests against actions or statements by one side and counter-protests or explanations by the other. Some of the letters from the Cyprus Government were addressed by the President, Glafcos Clerides. Those from the Turkish Cypriot side were addressed mostly by Rauf R. Denktash, under the title of "President of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus", or by Osman Ertug, under the title of "Representative of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus".

A number of letters related to violent incidents of 11 and 14 August provoked by a Greek Cypriot demonstration and to those that followed. The Turkish Cypriot side attributed the unfortunate outcome of the 11 August demonstration to the irresponsible attitude of the Greek Cypriot administration and called for direct dialogue before the current trend became chronic or irreversible. Cyprus, citing the shooting of a Greek Cypriot on 14 August, asserted that a murder committed before many Turkish and Turkish Cypriot officials and with the participation of some of them could not be washed away by a meeting between the two sides and by an appeal for calm. On 4 September, Cyprus conveyed to the Security Council two dossiers [A/51/449-S/1996/826]: one contained information relating to the tragic events in the UN buffer zone near Dherinia, which it said reflected the political objectives of those who committed the brutal actions; the other alleged that the "terrorist activities" had taken place at the initiative of Mr. Denktash, with Turkey's endorsement.

The Turkish Cypriot side, referring to the 8 September shooting of two Turkish Cypriot soldiers, claimed that the shooting had been unprovoked, premeditated and perpetrated by the National Guard. Cyprus later charged that the 13 October shooting of a Greek Cypriot civilian by Turkish soldiers was aimed at furthering the partition of Cyprus and promoting the Turkish Cypriot position that it was impossible for the two communities to live together in a reunited Cyprus. Calling the allegation a distortion of facts and exploitation of unfortunate events, the Turkish Cypriot side stated that the civilian was a Greek Cypriot militiaman who continued his advance into a prohibited area despite warnings that included shots fired into the air. That had been followed by an appeal from the same side to the President of Cyprus to take steps to dissuade a group of Greek Cypriots, reportedly intent on avenging the dead Greek Cypriot, from carrying out their planned attack on Turkish Cypriot residents of Pyla; as well as by a clarification that Turkish Cypriot soldiers, not Turkish soldiers as alleged, had fired the shots that killed the Greek Cypriot.

In a number of letters, Cyprus protested against Turkish Air Force violations of its airspace and the Nicosia flight information region between 25 March and 27 December. In several replies, the Turkish Cypriot side rejected all such allegations, each time asserting that flights within the airspace of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" had been with the full knowledge and consent of the appropriate authorities of the "Republic" over which the "Greek Cypriot regime" had no jurisdiction or right of say whatsoever.

Other communications concerned a military build-up by the Cypriot National Guard in pursuit of what the Turkish Cypriot side claimed was the Greek/Greek Cypriot "joint defence doctrine"; charges of systematic destruction of the cultural property of Cyprus, particularly of the Byzantine Church of Panagia Chrysotrimithiotissa; an 8 February resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of Cyprus, reportedly ruling out any negotiation or even discussion of the issue of sovereignty; and an alleged recent admission by the Turkish Cypriot side that most Greeks or Greek Cypriots considered still missing had in fact been murdered by Turkish Cypriot irregulars.

Also included were exchanges regarding the killing on 3 June of a National Guardsman in the buffer zone by "Turkish occupation forces"; the visit to northern Cyprus of dignitaries from Turkey led by the Prime Minister, on the occasion of the twenty-second anniversary of Turkey's 1974 invasion of Cyprus, referred to by the Turkish Cypriot side as the 20 July Peace and Freedom Day, when Turkey maintained it had intervened in order to rescue beleaguered Turkish Cypriots; and Turkish Cypriot objections to Cyprus references to the presence of a guarantor power in northern Cyprus as an "occupation".

In addition, the Turkish Cypriot side, in a letter of 22 September [A/51/500-S/1996/854], stated its position on EU membership: Cyprus, divided since 1963—and not having had a legitimate "Government of Cyprus" representing the two politically equal communities since—could evolve into a one-Cyprus State again only through a negotiated settlement before it could have a mandate from its component peoples to apply for EU membership; and it could do so only "within the limits accorded to it by the 1960 Agreement".

UNFICYP (December 1995-June 1996)

The United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), established under Security Council resolution 186(1964) [YUN 1964, p. 165], with a mandate defined in the context of the confrontation that year between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities and modified since 1974, continued in 1996 to monitor the ceasefire lines of the Turkish forces and the Cypriot National Guard; to maintain the military status quo and prevent a recurrence of fighting; and to undertake humanitarian and economic activities to promote a return to normal conditions. In the absence of a formal ceasefire agreement, the military status quo, as recorded by UNFICYP in 1974, remained the standard by which the Force judged whether changes constituted violations of the status quo.

Composition and deployment

UNFICYP, under the overall authority of the Deputy Special Representative and Chief of Mission, Gustave Feissel, remained deployed in the UN buffer zone, an area between the ceasefire line of the Turkish forces on the northern side and that of the Cypriot National Guard on the southern side. The lines, extending approximately 180 kilometres from east to west across the island and varying in width from less than 20 metres in the capital, Nicosia, to 7 kilometres near Athienou, covered about three per cent of the island, including some of the most fertile land. UNFICYP maintained constant surveillance of the buffer zone from 22 permanent observation posts, daylight surveillance from 2 additional posts and periodic daily surveillance from another 19 patrol bases; periodic surveillance of the remainder of the zone from another 118 observation posts and by vehicle, foot and air patrols; and surveillance of the seaward extension of the ceasefire lines for 5 kilometres.

The Force included a civilian police component, whose responsibility was to maintain close cooperation and liaison with Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot police on matters of intercommunal interest, such as assisting investigations and contributing to law and order in the buffer zone, as well as assisting in the Force's humanitarian activities.

As of December 1996, UNFICYP troops, under the Command of Brigadier-General Ahti T. P. Vartiainen, numbered 1,162 (from Argentina, Austria, Canada, Finland, Hungary, Ireland and the United Kingdom), with an additional 35 civilian police, from Australia and Ireland. Its civilian complement numbered 339, of whom 40 had been recruited internationally and 299 locally.

Activities

On 7 June, the Secretary-General submitted a report [S/1996/411 & Corr.1 & Add.1] covering developments and activities of UNFICYP from 11 December 1995 to 10 June 1996. According to the report, both sides generally respected the ceasefire and the military status quo. UNFICYP intervened in numerous incidents involving minor violations and, on a number of occasions, ensured withdrawal of military personnel and police who had moved forward from their ceasefire lines into the buffer zone.

The Secretary-General expressed serious concern at the excessive levels of military forces and armaments in Cyprus and at the rate at which they were being expanded, upgraded and modernized. Despite continuous efforts by UNFICYP and contrary to the urgings of the Security Council, most recently in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 607], that both sides reduce the level of their forces and defence spending, they continued to improve their military capabilities.

In late January 1996, the Turkish forces replaced some 80 of their T1 battle tanks with 65 of the improved T2 version from Turkey and increased their armoured personnel carrier (APC) holdings by 80, raising the total to about 250. With those enhancements, and with more than 30,000 Turkish and 4,500 Turkish Cypriot troops, the northern part of Cyprus, 20 per cent of which had been reserved for military purposes, was one of the most densely militarized areas in the world. The National Guard, the weaker of the two forces, was likewise engaged in a comprehensive military upgrading programme. Since the beginning of the reporting period, it had increased the number of its BMP3 infantry fighting vehicles by 25 and the number of its Leonidas APCs by 84, from Greece.

Furthermore, the Secretary-General noted, the opposing forces still had not heeded the Council's repeated calls for reciprocal measures to prohibit live ammunition or weapons other than handheld ones along the ceasefire lines and also the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone, as well as for extending the 1989 unmanning agreement to cover all areas where the two sides were in close proximity to each other. The urgency to implement those measures was illustrated by three incidents of shooting in and around the buffer zone: the shootings at an UNFICYP helicopter and in the direction of an UNFICYP patrol in May, and the killing of a National Guardsman in June. The Secretary-General expressed dismay at the attempt (using the threat of force) by Turkish Cypriot Security Forces to prevent UNFICYP from fulfilling its duties in the buffer zone.

In the fenced area of Varosha, incidents of looting continued. On two occasions (late December 1995 and March 1996), Turkish forces had broken into a UN observation post. An unoccupied hotel, converted into student accommodations, had been occupied since 26 February. UNFICYP lodged protests regarding those incidents with the Turkish forces, who were again reminded that the United Nations held Turkey responsible for the maintenance of the status quo in the fenced area of Varosha. Turkey subsequently informed the United Nations that student dormitories were being built outside the fenced area to permit the hotel to be vacated within a few months.

UNFICYP reported having protested a total of 150 military constructions in the immediate vicinity of the buffer zone as violations of the spirit of the ceasefire resulting from the National Guard's continued strengthening of or adding to its military positions along the whole length of the ceasefire line. UNFICYP had also requested both sides on numerous occasions, but with no success, to have their forces clear the 39 minefields and booby-trapped areas inside the buffer zone, as well as 71 located on either side within 500 metres of the ceasefire lines.

A number of overflights of Cypriot airspace by military fixed-wing aircraft were observed during the reporting period, with protests against overflights by both sides. The Secretary-General said that UNFICYP continued to promote bicomunal events in efforts to increase communication and cooperation between the two communities and thus contribute to facilitating an overall settlement. The Turkish Cypriot authorities continued, however, to exercise tight control, often denying permission to Turkish Cypriots to participate in such events, not only in the southern part of the island but also in the buffer zone. The Secretary-General observed that the situation of the Greek Cypriots and Maronites in the northern part of the island continued to fall far short of the normal life they had been promised under the 1975 agreement [YUN 1975, p. 286] between the two sides. He welcomed measures taken by the Government of Cyprus towards normalizing the lives of the Turkish Cypriots living in the southern part of the island.

UNFICYP continued to act as intermediary between the two communities and to facilitate cooperation in such areas as the repair and equitable distribution of electricity and water supply. UNDP continued its activities in the framework of the Nicosia Master Plan, as well as the coordination of activities of other UN agencies in the country.

The main bicomunal projects of UNHCR were in the sectors of health and sanitation, and of restoration, conservation and rehabilitation of the Venetian Walls of Nicosia and the vacant houses adjacent to the buffer zone. It organized and sponsored 20 bicomunal activities, including: a seminar in cardiology and training of veterinary surgeons in modern techniques and regular meetings of the bicomunal coordination teams on disabled persons, forestry, plant protection, rat control, environment and sewerage.

In the belief that the presence of UNFICYP on the island remained indispensable to achieving the objects set out by the Council, the Secretary-General recommended the extension of its mandate for a further six months, to 31 December 1996.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 28 June and, having considered the Secretary-General's 7 and 25 June reports, adopted resolution 1062(1996).

The Security Council,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 7 June 1996,

Welcoming also the report of the Secretary-General on his mission of good offices in Cyprus of 25 June 1996,

Taking note of the recommendation in his report of 7 June 1996 that the Security Council extend the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP),

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island that it is necessary to keep the force in Cyprus beyond 30 June 1996,

Reaffirming its earlier relevant resolutions on Cyprus, and in particular resolutions 186(1964) of 4 March 1964, 939(1994) of 29 July 1994 and 1032(1995) of 19 December 1995,

Reiterating its concern that there has been no progress towards a final political solution, and agreeing with the assessment of the Secretary-General that the negotiations have been at an impasse for too long,

Regretting that no progress has been made in introducing measures to prohibit along the ceasefire lines live ammunition or weapons other than those which are hand-held and to prohibit the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone, or in extending the 1989 unmanning agreement,

Expressing concern about the restrictions placed upon the freedom of movement of UNFICYP in the northern part of the island, as described in paragraph 27 of the report of the Secretary-General of 7 June 1996,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of UNFICYP for a further period ending on 31 December 1996;

2. Welcomes the appointment of Mr. Han Sung-Joo as the new Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Cyprus and calls upon both parties to co-operate fully with him in his efforts to facilitate a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem;

3. Deplores the tragic incident involving the fatal shooting of a Greek Cypriot National Guardsman inside the United Nations buffer zone on 3 June 1996, as well as the hindering by Turkish Cypriot soldiers of UNFICYP personnel attempting to assist the National Guardsman and investigate the incident, as documented in the report of the Secretary-General of 7 June 1996;

4. Expresses serious concern about the continuing modernization and upgrading of military forces in the Republic of Cyprus, the excessive levels of military forces and armaments and the lack of progress towards a significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus, urges once again all concerned to commit themselves to such a reduction and to a reduction in defence spending in the Republic of Cyprus to help restore confidence between the parties and as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-

Cypriot forces as described in the set of ideas, stresses the importance of eventual demilitarization of the Republic of Cyprus as an objective in the context of an overall comprehensive settlement, and calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to promote efforts in this direction;

5. Expresses serious concern also about recent military exercises in the region, including overflights in the airspace of Cyprus by military fixed-wing aircraft, which have increased tension;

6. Calls upon the military authorities on both sides:

(a) To respect the integrity of the United Nations buffer zone, ensure that no further incidents occur along the buffer zone, prevent hostile actions, including live fire against UNFICYP, grant UNFICYP complete freedom of movement and extend their full cooperation to UNFICYP;

(b) To enter immediately into discussions with UNFICYP, in line with paragraph 3 of resolution 839(1993) of 11 June 1993, with a view to adopting reciprocal measures to prohibit along the ceasefire lines live ammunition or weapons other than those which are hand-held and to prohibit also the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone;

(c) To clear all minefields and booby-trapped areas inside the buffer zone without further delay, as requested by UNFICYP;

(d) To cease military construction in the immediate vicinity of the buffer zone;

(e) To enter immediately into intensive discussions with UNFICYP with a view to extending the 1989 unmanning agreement to cover all areas of the buffer zone where the two sides are in close proximity to each other, on the basis of the updated proposals submitted by the UNFICYP Force Commander in June 1996;

7. Welcomes the measures that have been taken by the two parties in response to the humanitarian review conducted by UNFICYP, regrets that the Turkish Cypriot side has not responded more fully to the recommendations made by UNFICYP, calls upon the Turkish Cypriot side to respect fully the basic freedoms of the Greek Cypriots and Maronites living in the northern part of the island and to intensify its efforts to improve their daily lives, and calls upon the Government of Cyprus to continue its efforts to eliminate any discrimination against Turkish Cypriots living in the southern part of the island;

8. Welcomes the continuing efforts of the United Nations and diplomatic missions to promote bicomunal events, regrets the obstacles which have been placed in the way of such contacts, and strongly urges all concerned, and especially the Turkish Cypriot leadership, to lift and prevent all obstacles to such contacts;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the structure and strength of UNFICYP with a view to its possible restructuring, and to present any new considerations he may have in this regard;

10. Reiterates that the status quo is unacceptable and calls upon the parties to demonstrate concretely their commitment to an overall political settlement;

11. Stresses its support for the Secretary-General's mission of good offices and the importance of the concerted efforts to work with the Secretary-General towards an overall comprehensive settlement;

12. Urges the leaders of the two communities to respond positively and urgently to the Secretary-

General's call upon them to work with him and with the many countries that support his mission of good offices to break the present impasse and establish common ground on which direct negotiations can be resumed;

13. Recognizes that the decision of the European Union concerning the opening of accession negotiations with Cyprus is an important new development that should facilitate an overall settlement;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by 10 December 1996 on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1062(1996)

28 June 1996 Meeting 3675 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1996/477).

Good offices mission (June report)

On 25 June, the Secretary-General submitted a report on his mission of good offices [S/1996/467], including a full assessment of his efforts towards reaching a settlement of the Cyprus situation. In tracing his good offices activities since last reporting on them in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 601], he recalled that that year's series of direct informal talks—five intensive sessions in October and four more shortly thereafter—had been aimed at exploring ways in which progress might be made towards implementing the 1993 package of confidence-building measures [YUN 1993, p. 385] relating principally to reopening the fenced area of Varosha and Nicosia International Airport. The talks, which offered a good opportunity for the two leaders to explain their positions, turned out to be inconclusive. The Secretary-General regretted that his effort in that instance had not achieved concrete results, for he believed that the October 1994 informal talks had created unprecedented opportunities for making progress towards a comprehensive negotiated settlement.

At the Secretary-General's request, his Special Representative, Joe Clark, had visited Nicosia (Cyprus), Ankara (Turkey) and Athens (Greece) in March and May 1995, to try to bring the two leaders in face-to-face talks on an overall settlement on the basis that both would be willing to discuss possible mutual concessions or trade-offs, a concept that had emerged from the October 1994 talks. As Mr. Clark had informed the Council in June 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 602], he had not found it possible to define such a basis for the resumption of direct talks, nor did he see prospects for movement in the near future. The Secretary-General stated that since then numerous attempts by himself and interested Governments, both on and off the island, had not succeeded in breaking the impasse.

In 1996, the Secretary-General personally met with the Turkish Cypriot leader (Istanbul, Turkey, 6 June) and with the Greek Cypriot leader (Geneva, 11 June) to review key aspects of the Cyprus problem. He expressed to them his concern that his good offices mission had remained at a standstill for too long and pressed them to consider the negative consequences of the deadlock for both their communities.

The Greek Cypriot leader confirmed his commitment to a negotiated settlement through direct talks, but emphasized that to avoid yet another unproductive meeting, it would be necessary to ensure, through proximity talks, that sufficient common ground existed between the two sides before direct talks began. He identified five key areas: security, EU membership, territory, sovereignty and political equality. He underlined the need for an arrangement to address with equal effectiveness the security concerns of both communities. The 1960 Treaty of Guarantee (concluded by Cyprus, Greece, Turkey and the United Kingdom, by which they undertook to guarantee the independence of Cyprus and its Constitution and to retain a right of intervention to that end) had not met that objective and his community could not accept Turkey's right of unilateral intervention. He recalled his 1994 proposal for the demilitarization of Cyprus [YUN 1994, p. 601], coupled with an international force that could include Greek and Turkish troops, on the basis of a revised UN mandate providing for the right of direct intervention to guarantee the overall agreed settlement, as well as the security of each community.

The Turkish Cypriot leader reaffirmed his readiness to meet in direct talks within the parameters of equal partnership—which would treat the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities as equal in all aspects, including decision-making in the federal Government—and of the 1960 Treaty of Guarantee. He suggested that the 1992 set of ideas and map endorsed by the Security Council [YUN 1992, p. 268] in resolution 774(1992) should serve as the source of reference for direct talks. He voiced opposition to any change in the 1960 Treaty providing for Turkey's right of unilateral intervention, and to Cyprus joining the EU before Turkey, which he believed would negate both the Treaty and the bizonal and bicomunal foundation for a settlement in Cyprus.

The Secretary-General emphasized again the importance of creating as soon as possible a basis for the resumption of direct talks, which should consist of mutual acknowledgment of the concerns of each side and expression of a willingness to compromise. To that end, he called on both leaders to cooperate with the efforts of his new Special Representative and his Deputy.

The Secretary-General noted several developments during the reporting period that could affect the prospects for achieving an overall settlement, among them the growing international interest in the Cyprus question, particularly among the permanent Security Council members and EU members. That was reflected by missions to Cyprus, Greece and Turkey undertaken by Italy in its capacity as EU President, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States, as well as by a 1995 meeting between the representatives of the two Cypriot communities convened by the United States (London, 21-23 May 1995). More significant was the 6 March 1996 decision of the EU Council of Ministers to begin negotiations for the accession of Cyprus to the EU in late 1997 or early 1998. In that connection, the Council of Ministers called on the European Commission to organize contacts with the Turkish Cypriot community to explain the benefits of EU accession and to allay that community's concerns. In addition, representatives of the permanent Security Council members and senior Secretariat officials, at a meeting to exchange views on the situation (New York, 17 April 1996), reaffirmed that the status quo was unacceptable. They underlined the importance of a comprehensive approach to an overall settlement on the basis of the relevant Council resolutions, the 1977 [YUN 1977, p. 344] and 1979 [YUN 1979, p. 421] high-level agreements and the Secretary-General's good offices mission.

The Secretary-General observed that, 32 years after UN involvement in the Cyprus conflict and 22 years after the 1974 events [YUN 1974, p. 262], it was reasonable for the international community to demand evidence that both parties and others concerned were serious in their pursuit of an overall settlement based on the 1977 agreement. He drew attention to the Council's repeated statement that the existing status quo was unacceptable—a status quo that no one could objectively believe provided a viable basis for preserving the character and security of the two communities. Stressing that the main responsibility for resolving the Cyprus question rested with the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities, he called on both to break the current impasse and establish common ground on which to resume direct negotiations. Stressing also that Greece and Turkey bore a special responsibility, he said it was crucial for them actively to support the search for a settlement and also to ensure that relations between them did not so develop as to endanger that search.

Communication. The "Minister of Foreign Affairs and Defence of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" wrote to the Secretary-General on 17 June [A/50/975-S/1996/443 & Corr.1] to express regret that the Turkish Cypriot side, one of the two parties to the Cyprus dispute, had not been given the same opportunity accorded to the Foreign Minister of Cyprus to speak at an informal meeting on 14 June of the Security Council on the Cyprus question. The Turkish Cypriot "Minister" said that was against not only the principles of the political equality of the two communities in Cyprus and of "equal footing" under the UN-sponsored negotiating process, but also basic norms of justice.

UNFICYP (June-December 1996)

Reporting on 10 December [S/1996/1016] on developments in Cyprus and on UNFICYP activities from 11 June to 10 December, the Secretary-General recounted the tension between the two sides that had erupted in violence along the ceasefire lines at levels unseen since 1974. That was provoked by a symbolic motorcycle demonstration organized in early August by the Greek Cypriots. The demonstration, first announced in January, was to originate in Berlin, Germany, and end in Kyrenia, Cyprus, on 11 August, a route that would take the demonstrators across the UN buffer zone and the Turkish forces' ceasefire line. In the period leading up to the demonstration, tension rose as the media on both sides publicized a number of increasingly inflammatory statements and counter-statements. The United Nations was in constant touch with government authorities, including the Cyprus police, urging them to prevent any violation of the ceasefire lines or of the buffer zone. The Secretary-General himself, on the eve of the demonstration, publicly appealed to the Cyprus Government to prevent any unauthorized entry into the buffer zone. In the meantime, a major counter-demonstration had been organized in north Nicosia involving a significant number of members of an ultra-nationalist Turkish organization called the Grey Wolves.

On the morning of 11 August, however, the demonstrators, who had assembled in the Nicosia Stadium, proceeded eastward of Nicosia, entered the UN buffer zone at several points and approached the Turkish ceasefire line, where they clashed with Turkish troops, Turkish Cypriot police and counter-demonstrators. The most serious clash occurred within the UN buffer zone near Dherinia, where Turkish Cypriot police and counter-demonstrators attacked an approaching group of Greek Cypriots with batons and iron bars, killing one of them. Again at Dherinia, on 14 August, just as UNFICYP was about to escort a group of some 200 Greek Cypriots out of the buffer zone, one broke free and attempted to climb a flagpole flying a Turkish flag just behind the Turkish ceasefire line; he was shot five times from the Turkish/Turkish Cypriot side. Uniformed personnel from that side then proceeded indiscriminately to fire some 25 to 50 rounds at the crowd in the buffer zone, wounding two Greek Cypriots and two British UNFICYP soldiers. In all, 19 UNFICYP soldiers were injured during those August incidents.

Further acts of violence followed, despite strenuous efforts by the Deputy Special Representative to prevent them: on 8 September, the killing by gunfire of one Turkish Cypriot soldier and the serious wounding of another (which the Turkish Cypriot side attributed to the Greek or Greek Cypriot military); on 13 October, a similar killing by a Turkish Cypriot soldier of a Greek Cypriot who had crossed the Turkish forces' ceasefire line; and, on 29 October, the firing from a Turkish sentry post at a British military patrol that had inadvertently crossed the Turkish force ceasefire line.

UNFICYP, which had been on heightened alert since 11 August, had also been increasingly threatened at gunpoint by soldiers of either side and had been fired at on several occasions.

As in the past, the number of reported violations of the status quo were mainly the result of the annual exercises by the National Guard (4-7 October) and by the Turkish forces (4-7 November).

No progress was reported either on the question of reciprocal measures to prohibit live ammunition or weapons, other than hand-held ones, along the ceasefire lines or on extending the 1989 unmanning agreement. Nonetheless, discussions with the two sides were under way on a package of mutually reinforcing measures proposed by UNFICYP in October, calling for the extension of unmanning to the areas where the military on both sides of the ceasefire lines remained in close proximity to each other; the prohibition of loaded weapons along the ceasefire lines; and the adoption of a military code of conduct based on the concept of minimum force and proportionate response.

In reaction to construction in and around the Nicosia Central Prison, close to a sensitive area of the UN buffer zone, which appeared to be part of the National Guard's ongoing military construction programme, the Turkish forces began construction also of military positions in the same area. UNFICYP, which had protested against the National Guard construction, had so far been denied access to the site. Its requests for the clearance of the previously reported minefields and booby-trapped areas had also gone unheeded, it was reported.

In its continued efforts to establish bicommunal contacts, UNFICYP held an open house on 24 October at the Ledra Palace Hotel in the buffer zone in Nicosia, at which more than 3,000 Greek and Turkish Cypriots joined UN personnel to celebrate United Nations Day. To allay the security concerns of the Turkish Cypriots in southern Cyprus in the wake of the August/September incidents, UNFICYP increased its visits there and, at the beginning of December, opened a liaison office in Limassol to facilitate their access to the Force. It had also urged the Government to ensure that the Turkish Cypriots, including those in the mixed village of Pyla, who had been suspended temporarily from their employment, be allowed to return to work without delay.

Referring to the August incidents, the Secretary-General pointed out that controlling the civilian population was the exclusive responsibility of the local authorities, who were perfectly capable of fulfilling the task. He underscored the urgent need for the leaders on both sides to make a serious effort to reverse the negative trend of the last six months and to build trust and goodwill between the two sides. He said prompt agreement on the proposed package of measures to reduce tension along the ceasefire lines, implementation of the 1995 measures recommended by UNFICYP to improve the living conditions of the Greek Cypriots and Maronites in the northern part of the island [YUN 1995, p. 607] and removal of all impediments, official and unofficial, to the movement of people and to the increased contacts and communication between the two sides would be significant steps forward.
