Foreword

THE YEAR 1991 SAW THE DEFINITIVE END OF THE COLD WAR and of the bipolar era. Political energies previously held captive to the super-Power struggle were released; new States were born as people recovered their freedom; major steps forward helped to reduce the threat of nuclear war. A new spirit of hopefulness and a belief in the relevance of common action began to take shape. But it also emerged that the transition to a new pattern of international relations would be neither easy nor risk-free.

One of the most hopeful signs was the clear consensus among States that the age of the United Nations had come. The United Nations suddenly found that it was no longer paralysed by the bipolar struggle; indeed, the world looked to the Organization as never before. It was increasingly being asked to take on and fulfil its historic Charter mission: that of the guardianship of peace and hope.

This volume of the Yearbook of the United Nations provides a faithful record of the Organization's efforts to devise just and lasting solutions to regional conflicts, safeguard human rights and promote international cooperation for the furtherance of peace and social progress.

About the 1991 edition of the Yearbook

The 1991 YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS marks the beginning of the publication of a series of new and current editions. Its scope, content and breadth of coverage have been restructured and redefined to enhance its focus on the main issues and activities during the calendar year. It has been designed to serve as the most comprehensive and up-to-date reference tool for use by all who might need readily available information on the activities of the United Nations system and those of each of the related organizations. The timely production of this edition within 1992 reflects the desire and commitment by the Department of Public Information of the United Nations to provide the general public and research community with current information on the activities of the Organization. The efforts to restore the Yearbook to its annual publication cycle imply having to rely on provisional documentation and other materials for the preparation of the required articles, as final versions may not be readily available.

Structure and scope of articles

The book is subject-oriented, divided into seven major parts: political and security questions, regional questions, economic and social questions, trusteeship and decolonization, legal questions, administrative and budgetary questions, and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations.

The first six parts present, under various chapters and topical headings, summaries of pertinent United Nations activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications. At the end of each chapter or subchapter is a list of REFERENCES, linked by numerical indicators to the text and supplying additional sources of information on the issues concerned.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, where applicable, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the respective articles. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of substantive nature adopted in 1991 by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are followed by the procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining); information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption, with document symbols of drafts, approved amendments and committee reports; and a list of sponsors. Also given are the document symbols of any financial implications and relevant meeting numbers. Details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole also follow the text. The texts of resolutions and decisions of a purely procedural nature are not reproduced, but are summarized and their numbers highlighted in bold type. Major reports. Most 1991 reports of the Secretary-General, along with selected reports from other United Nations sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly. The document symbols of all reports cited appear in the REFERENCES. However, not all documents were available in their final form at the time of writing.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the United Nations regular budget, information is given, wherever available, on contributions and expenditures. Financial data are generally obtained from the audited accounts prepared for each fund and cover the 1991 calendar year unless otherwise specified.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topic. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Related organizations. Part Seven of the Yearbook briefly describes the 1991 activities of each specialized agency, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, based on information prepared by them.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

As in previous volumes, the 1991 edition has been designed to enable the user to locate information on United Nations activities in a number of ways: by the table of contents, which highlights the broad subjects and subheadings; by the SUBJECT INDEX, which may be used to locate individual topics and specific references to the bodies dealing with each topic; and by the INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS, which provides a numerical list of all resolutions and substantive decisions adopted in 1991 by the principal organs, with page numbers for their text. The Yearbook also contains five appendices. APPENDIX I comprises a list of Member States with dates of their admission to the United Nations; APPENDIX II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; APPENDIX III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations, including the members, officers and date and place of sessions of each body; APPENDIX IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 1991; and APPENDIX V gives the location and addresses of the United Nations Information Centres and Services worldwide.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References at the end of each article in Part One to Six of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1991 on the topic, arranged in the order in which they are referred to in the text. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/46/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the forty-sixth session, beginning with A/46/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of six of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. The symbol for documents of the seventh Main Committee, the Special Political Committee, is A/SPC/-. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1991/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1991 sessions, beginning with E/1991/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/CI/-, E/C.2/- and E/C.3/- refer to documents of the Council's sessional committees, namely, the First (Economic), Second (Social) and Third (Programme and Coordination) Committees, respectively; E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/C.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1991/1); and one for decisions, beginning, since 1990, with 201 (decision 1991/201).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council. Its resolutions are numbered consecutively, with the session at which they were adopted indicated by Roman numerals, e.g. resolution 2194(S-XXI) of the twenty-first special session. The Council's decisions are not numbered.

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers- to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Coordination
CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DIP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
LOS/PCN/-	Preparatory Commission for the International Seabed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme
UNITAR/-	United Nations Institute for Training and Research

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	America and the Caribbean
E/ECLAC/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/ESCAP/-	Economic Commission for Europe Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONE" to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language (s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.91.II.A.2; E/F/R.91.II.E.7; E.91.X.1.

Report of the Secretary-General

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization, submitted to the General Assembly and dated 13 September 1991. The Assembly took note of it on 8 November (decision 46/404).

I

This has been another year in a series marking a great turning-point in history. Indeed, as this report is being written, events are changing the political map of a good part of the northern Eurasian land mass. The wave of democracy is surging in diverse other places as well. Intense yearnings for self-determination are in increasing display. It will be some time before a settled shape comes into view.

The causes of the transformation of the global scene, under way since 1985, are beyond the compass of this report. One of its direct effects, however, has been the end of the long season of stagnation for the United Nations. We can derive satisfaction from the fact that at no point in this time of tumult has the United Nations failed to keep pace with historic change. But the concern that the principles of its Charter should govern the emerging international order continues and is accentuated by all current developments.

The renaissance of the Organization has reflected a qualitative change in attitudes and perceptions. It is the outcome of the active cooperation of Member States and of long preparation and intense effort by the Secretariat despite discouragements. It originated several years ago when opportunities for peace-making began to be discerned in a changing international climate. The contrast between the position I am stating now and what I recorded in my first annual report is all too clear.

II

In 1982, I spoke of the erosion of the authority and status of the United Nations and the inaction of the Security Council in the face of conflicts. Fearing international anarchy, I suggested a number of ways in which the Council and the Secretary-General might become more effective in keeping the peace. At first, the results were discouraging. However, a slow but meticulous process of institutional self-analysis was set in train. A re-examination of the Security Council's role and procedures was accompanied by agreement in the General Assembly on the manner in which the Organization's budget should be adopted by consensus. A major, even if by its nature incomplete, effort was commenced to streamline the Secretariat so as to adapt it to the requirements of the period ahead. These and other intermediate moves, spread over five years, indicated a concern that went beyond purely organizational issues. They reflected an urge to end a period of drift. A renewed focus on the Organization's working corresponded to a sense of the deeper stirrings for change in the world. With the end of the cold war, the measures I had suggested in 1982 have mostly become, as I had hoped, commonplace and routine.

In January 1987, I urged the Security Council to find ways of working collectively to resolve some of the issues that had stayed on its agenda for years. What followed is now a matter of general public awareness. A remarkable coordination developed between the work of the Security Council and the Secretary-General. The adoption of a plan for the termination of the war between Iran and Iraq, the conclusion of the Geneva Accords followed by the withdrawal of the forces of the Soviet Union from Afghanistan and the bringing to independence of Namibia were among the major fruits of this rejuvenation of the United Nations. Steady progress was also maintained with regard to the situations in Western Sahara, Cambodia, Central America and elsewhere.

None of these accomplishments was a matter merely of diplomatic ingenuity; all required, or will require, complex operations in the field, duly authorized by the competent organs, which go far beyond the earlier, innovative and highly useful concept of peace-keeping by the United Nations. As against 13 operations launched all through 43 years, 5 were mounted in 1988 and 1989, and 4 during the period under review. The mandates of these operations are set out in the relevant resolutions; their results are dealt with in my reports. Here I will only mention that never before in the history of the Organization were so many new insights gained about the varied tasks of keeping, making or building the peace in areas riven or threatened by conflict. Never before were such precedents set as has been done, in different ways, in Namibia, Haiti, Angola, Nicaragua and now, most notably, in Central America, particularly El Salvador. Indeed, today, the Organization is conducting some missions that were unthinkable in the previous era.

All these operations, in one way or another, relate to the implementation of plans negotiated in detail with the parties concerned with the active participation of the Secretary-General. They have a wide range. To take two that have already concluded, the one in Namibia leading the country to independence and the other, the election observer mission, with a complementary military undertaking, in Nicaragua helped end situations of dangerous strife. Two other operations that have achieved their purpose are the observer mission along the Iran-Iraq border and the monitoring of the departure of foreign troops from Angola. The election observer mission in Haiti, with its security component, set an example of the undertaking by the United Nations, with appropriate legislative backing, of the impartial supervision of national elections in a situation with possible international repercussions. The mission in Western Sahara relates to a referendum about the future status of the territory. The expected one in Cambodia will provide the supportive structure for the project of national reconciliation after years of fighting. The second mission in Angola launched this year supervises the cease-fire between the formerly warring parties. The mission in El Salvador has, for the present, the innovative task of monitoring human rights on a long-term, nationwide basis. United Nations personnel drawn from the programmes and the agencies, together with civilian guards, have been deployed to further humanitarian assistance to all of the people of Iraq, including notably the Kurds. To a large extent, the purpose of my mission in Afghanistan and Pakistan has changed since the Geneva Accords, as has the role of my mission in Iran and Iraq since the completion of the withdrawal of forces to the internationally recognized boundaries. Nevertheless, these missions represent a significant evolution in the role of the United Nations in areas relating to international security.

Alongside these new operations, older peace-keeping missions are being maintained. In Cyprus, a United Nations force separates the parties while progress is made in negotiations towards an overall settlement. In Central America, an observer mission maintains supervision of adherence to undertakings made by five Central American countries under the Esquipulas II Agreement. In the Middle East, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine, the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force continue to contribute an important element of stability in the region, while the United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan is stationed in Kashmir to supervise the cease-fire.

In addition to manning all these ramparts of peace, the Secretariat is now engaged in tasks of a complexity and scope untried before to secure the implementation of the decisions of the Security Council relating to the Iraq-Kuwait situation. Only one of them, the military observation mission, conforms to the traditional pattern of peace-keeping. Others that follow from the Council's decisions under Chapter VII of the Charter include the demarcation of the boundary between Iraq and Kuwait through the mechanism of a commission, the elimination of Iraq's mass destruction capability through an effort involving a special commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency, the management of a compensation fund, arranging the return of all Kuwaiti property seized by Iraq and the discharge of onerous tasks deriving from Security Council resolution 706(1991). These are breaking new ground in international experience and the responsibilities of the Secretariat.

Activity, not argument, has thus answered two questions about the Organization that troubled the public mind through most of its existence: one, whether it could ever muster the power to repair breaches of the peace and reverse acts of aggression; two, whether the Secretariat would be able to execute the increasingly versatile projects of peace. The answers are affirmative. The effectiveness of the United Nations can no longer be in doubt. It is a fact of no small significance that world leaders assembled at three recent summit conferences in London, Abuja and Guadalajara issued declarations recognizing the central place of the United Nations in the international system and solemnly affirmed their reliance on it. On totally different planes of international life as well, the United Nations is being increasingly looked upon as a trusted intermediary.

Against this background of a near-universal harmony of view, some discordant notes, however, are still audible. One is the persistence of the trend, even if now in lesser degree, not to avail of the machinery of the United Nations to resolve certain important issues, including some relating to areas of incipient or potential conflict. The other is the pronounced contrast between the tasks imposed on the Organization and the resources provided to it. The dynamism and liberality of vision hardly accord with the indigence to which the Organization has been financially reduced.

III

Looking beyond the Organization itself to the world situation, we witness a unique juxtaposition of promise and perils. The promise is expansive and the perils only partly perceived. The extinction of the bipolarity associated with the cold war has no doubt removed the factor that virtually immobilized international relations over four decades. It has cured the Security Council's paralysis and helped immensely in resolving some regional conflicts. By itself, however, it does not guarantee a just and lasting peace for the world's peoples. We still see a dappled international landscape, with large spots of threatened trouble and incipient conflict.

It is unnecessary to mention in detail the specific situations that are reviewed in my reports to the Security Council and the General Assembly and on which I shall have occasion to offer my suggestions and comments in the coming weeks. As the earlier account of United Nations field operations shows, peace is being guarded or built in a number of situations. Not all the situations of danger to the peace, however, figure currently on the active agenda of the United Nations. The reasons vary from the use of an alternative peace process to the inability or unwillingness of one or more of the parties concerned to refer the matter to the United Nations. This does not in any way detract from the seriousness of these situations nor diminish the acute suffering of the people most directly affected.

A new factor in the international situation has been introduced by the manifold difficulties of transition in a good part of the northern Eurasian land mass. The way in which this transition is handled by leadership both inside and outside that vast region is certain to have far-reaching implications for the emerging international order as a whole. Indeed, statesmanship of the highest order is required for civil strife to be avoided, for crises to be resolved by peaceful means, for minorities to be securely protected, for human rights to be upheld and for dangerous repercussions on international relations to be averted.

A volatile world situation is certain to contain multiple sources of conflict. It would be unrealistic to suppose that all of them can be dissolved by multilateral action. However, the United Nations, if supported by the generality of its membership, can help purge international relations of the lethal elements that lead to violent hostility between States or cause a pervasive sense of insecurity. There is no magical formula for it; the only available course is that of organizing international life on a stable basis in accordance with principles clearly understood, generally accepted and consistently applied. The principles are those articulated in the Charter of the United Nations.

The performance and capacity of the United Nations provide a crucial element in this process and the greatest effort must be made to improve them. The areas on which I propose to focus are the maintenance of international peace and security with justice, the protection of human rights and the treatment of global problems, including the level of armaments, the persistence of widespread poverty, the deterioration of the environment and the proliferation of social evils like drug trafficking and crime. All these impinge on the development of international legal norms and practices. The areas overlap to some extent and I shall deal with them only to the extent that new perspectives have been opened by recent developments.

IV

During the period under review, the Security Council took action of extraordinary consequence to reverse the invasion of Kuwait by Iraq and to deter aggression in future. The considerations that arise from some of the aspects of this action are plainly central to the maintenance of international peace and security. I believe they will need to be carefully borne in mind in future.

Once the invasion occurred, the response of the Security Council was not only swift but systematic; in adopting 14 resolutions regarding the situation, the Council followed a step-by-step and considered approach to the use of its powers under Chapter VII of the Charter. Far from acting in haste, the Council afforded ample time—from 2 August 1990 to 15 January 1991—for the Government of Iraq to comply with the Council's demand. It was only when all warnings—including my own pleadings to Iraq to correct a manifest wrong—went unheeded and all friendly advice was rejected that armed force was finally employed to restore the independence of Kuwait. This is the factual side of that fateful occurrence, which no balanced assessment, now or in the future, can ignore.

Another important aspect is that the enforcement action was not carried out exactly in the form foreseen by Articles 42 et sequentia of Chapter VII. Instead, the Council authorized the use of force on a national and coalition basis. In the circumstances and given the costs imposed and capabilities demanded by modern warfare, the arrangement seemed unavoidable. However, the experience of operations in the Persian Gulf suggests the need for a collective reflection on questions relating to the future use of the powers vested in the Security Council under Chapter VII.

In order to preclude controversy, these questions should include the mechanisms required for the Council to satisfy itself that the rule of proportionality in the employment of armed force is observed and the rules of humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts are complied with. Moreover, careful thought will have to be given to ensuring that the application of Chapter VII measures is not perceived to be overextended. In today's conditions of economic interdependence, the effect of the imposition of comprehensive economic sanctions on third States that are economic partners of the offender State requires that Article 50 of the Charter be supplemented by appropriate agreements creating obligations to assist concretely the disadvantaged third State or States. The human effect of sanctions on the population of an offending State, if it lacks the political means to bring about a reversal of the policy that gives rise to the offence, will also need to be carefully borne in mind. As I stated at meetings of the Security Council, enforcement is a collective engagement, which requires a discipline all its own.

V

The hostilities in the Gulf have made it agonizingly clear that the devastation of two States, with untold loss of innocent lives, appalling dangers to public health, damage to the environment and immense suffering of millions, represented a startling failure of collective diplomacy. In the aftermath of these hostilities, therefore, a renewed emphasis is rightly being placed on the need for preventive diplomacy.

In my previous annual reports, I have, time and again, dwelt on what preventive diplomacy by the United Nations requires. The main problem today is the same as before: the lack of means at the disposal of the United Nations to maintain an impartial and effective global watch over situations of potential or incipient conflict. Preventive diplomacy presupposes early warning capacity, which, in turn, implies a reliable and independently acquired database. At present, the pool of information available to the Secretary-General is wholly inadequate. Lacking access to the technological means, such as space-based and other technical surveillance systems, and without field representation commensurate with need, it is hard to visualize how the Secretariat can monitor potential conflict situations from a clearly impartial standpoint. A modest beginning has been made in this regard during the last four years with the establishment of political offices of the Secretary-General in Kabul and Islamabad, and more recently in Tehran and Baghdad. Work of that nature seems to be indispensable if we wish to develop the preventive capacity available to the Secretary-General. The traditional lack of such ability hinders the use of Article 99 of the Charter, especially in its anticipatory aspect. The Charter does not contemplate that the United Nations should wait for fighting to erupt, for aggression to take place, for violations of human rights to attain massive proportions before it moves to rectify the situation. Too often, the Organization's mediatory or investigative capacity, in situations threatening large-scale conflict, has been kept in reserve while wars have occurred and disputes have festered. There is a complementarity between the Secretary-General being fully equipped with the means presupposed in Article 99 of the Charter and the Security Council (in conformity with the spirit of Article 34) maintaining a peace agenda not confined to items formally inserted at the request of the State or the States concerned. I believe this complementarity can translate preventive diplomacy from a phrase into a working reality.

Conflict control or conflict resolution come under, but are not exactly synonymous with, the pacific settlement of disputes to which the Charter devotes a whole Chapter. The basic assumption of Chapter VI-a point that I repeat for emphasis-is that neither the Security Council itself nor the Member States of the United Nations will remain passive until a situation of international friction gives rise to a dispute and until the dispute, in turn, leads to belligerency. For the machinery of settlement to work, however, the prime requisite is a radical change in the view that parties to major international disputes take of the role and capabilities of the United Nations in the matter of settling those disputes. Over long years, there has grown a view of the United Nations itself, not only its judicial organ, as a place of litigation that is likely to result in a negative verdict for one or the other party. I believe that we need now actively to foster the perception that, except in cases of action with respect to breaches of the peace or acts of aggression (matters dealt with in Chapter VII), the United Nations is more an instrument of mediation that can help reconcile legitimate claims and interests and achieve just and honourable settlements.

I must stress here that, for itself, the United Nations is not designed to monopolize the peace process. The role of regional arrangements or agencies in pacific settlement of disputes is explicitly recognized in Articles 33 (1) and 52 (2) of the Charter. As long as a credible peace process is in motion as envisaged in these two Articles, there can be no cause for complaint that the United Nations is being bypassed. However, when such a process is not initiated or appears to be interminably suspended or to have clearly failed, then there would be little reason why recourse to the United Nations should still be avoided. Recognizing the central part of the United Nations in the international system should be more than theoretical.

In this context, it is important also to recall that Article 52 (1) of the Charter requires activities of regional arrangements or agencies to be consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations. That provision has become more pertinent in today's interdependent world, in which major developments in one region have inevitable repercussions in another. The efforts of a resurgent regionalism should, therefore, complement rather than compete with or complicate those of the United Nations. This requires a working relationship based on mutual rapport between the United Nations and the regional agencies. Otherwise, the incoherence and fragmentation of the peace effort can impair the machinery of peace.

Another deficiency in the working of the system of collective security is the insufficient use of the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, the International Court of Justice. Many international disputes are justiciable; even those which seem entirely political (such as the Iraq-Kuwait dispute prior to invasion) have a clearly legal component. If, for any reason, the parties fail to refer the matter to the Court, the process of achieving a fair and objectively commendable settlement and thus defusing an international crisis situation would be facilitated by obtaining the Court's advisory opinion. Article 96 of the Charter authorizes the General Assembly and the Security Council to request such an opinion from the Court. I, therefore, repeat the suggestion I have made before that the extension by the General Assembly of the authority to the Secretary-General would be wholly in accord with the complementary relationship between the three concerned organs of the United Nations, which has grown fruitfully over the years. Such a development would also strengthen the role of the Secretary-General, which is a frequently stated objective of the membership as indicated by statements made at the highest level. This would be an important way of developing international law and legal norms as the basis of the activity of the United Nations and of international relations.

VI

Over the years, a certain dichotomy has marked the theme of human rights. This has become more pronounced in recent years. On the one side, there has been legitimate satisfaction at providing the world community with the International Bill of Human Rights, consisting of the Universal Declaration and the two International Covenants, followed by a corpus of other instruments. On the other, there has been dismay at the barbaric realities of the world in which we live, arising from the indiscriminate use of power to brutalize populations into submission. Public opinion now demands emphatically that the gulf between aspiration and fact be narrowed if the former is not to become totally ineffectual.

It would be unfair to belittle the positive accomplishments made so far. Much has been done to lay the foundations of a universal culture of human rights. Procedures have been developed whereby alleged violations are examined and discussed by the Commission on Human Rights and the various bodies established pursuant to the various conventions to monitor their implementation. Moreover, the consciousness of human rights that now pervades the globe has in no small degree been raised by the considerable thought and work that have been devoted to the cause by the United Nations and, under its influence or inspiration, by concerned individuals, non-governmental organizations and the media.

Indeed, the effort to end apartheid in South Africa, sustained over decades, provides lasting testimony of the profound and active concern of the United Nations with eradicating racial segregation and persecution. It will signify attainment of one of the Organization's major goals when the notable progress made so far is consolidated and a post-apartheid retime based on democratic principles and racial harmony is firmly put in place in that country.

Nevertheless, the fact must be squarely faced that the campaign for the protection of human rights has brought results mostly in conditions of relative normalcy and with responsive Governments. In other conditions, when human wrongs are committed in systematic fashion and on a massive scale—instances are widely dispersed over both time and place—the intergovernmental machinery of the United Nations has often been a helpless witness rather than an effective agent for checking their perpetration.

It would betray a callous or an overly bureaucratic attitude to expect the victims of these horrors to utilize the normal time-consuming procedures and mechanisms that are available for seeking redress. The encouragement of respect for human rights becomes a vacuous claim if human wrongs committed on a major scale are met with lack of timely and commensurate action by the United Nations. To promote human rights means little if it does not mean to defend them when they are most under attack.

I believe that the protection of human rights has now become one of the keystones in the arch of peace. I am also convinced that it now involves more a concerted exertion of international influence and pressure through timely appeal, admonition, remonstrance or condemnation, and, in the last resort, an appropriate United Nations presence, than what was regarded as permissible under traditional international law.

It is now increasingly felt that the principle of non-interference with the essential domestic jurisdiction of States cannot be regarded as a protective barrier behind which human rights could be massively or systematically violated with impunity. The fact that, in diverse situations, the United Nations has not been able to prevent atrocities cannot be cited as an argument, legal or moral, against the necessary corrective action, especially where peace is also threatened. Omissions or failures due to a variety of contingent circumstances do not constitute a precedent. The case for not impinging on the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States is by itself indubitably strong. But it would only be weakened if it were to carry the implication that sovereignty, even in this day and age, includes the right of mass slaughter or of launching systematic campaigns of decimation or forced exodus of civilian populations in the name of controlling civil strife or insurrection. With the heightened international interest in universalizing a regime of human rights, there is a marked and most welcome shift in public attitudes. To try to resist it would be politically as unwise as it is morally indefensible. It should be perceived as not so much a new departure as a more focused awareness of one of the requirements of peace.

I would emphasize that novel doctrines are not only not required on this issue; they can also upset established understandings. It is possible that in the ongoing debate among legal experts and political theoreticians, new concepts may emerge and gain broad acceptance. However, at the intergovernmental level, what the present stage in international affairs demands, in the context of human rights as much as in any other, is not a process of theorizing but a higher degree of cooperation and a combination of common sense and compassion. We need not impale ourselves on the horns of a dilemma between respect for sovereignty and the protection of human rights. The last thing the United Nations needs is a new ideological controversy. What is involved is not the right of intervention but the collective obligation of States to bring relief and redress in human rights emergencies.

It seems to be beyond question that violations of human rights imperil peace, while disregard of the sovereignty of States would spell chaos. The maximum caution needs to be exercised lest the defence of human rights becomes a platform for encroaching on the essential domestic jurisdiction of States and eroding their sovereignty. Nothing would be a surer prescription for anarchy than an abuse of this principle.

Some caveats are, therefore, most necessary at this point. First, like all other basic principles, the principle of protection of human rights cannot be invoked in a particular situation and disregarded in a similar one. To apply it selectively is to debase it. Governments can, and do, expose themselves to charges of deliberate bias; the United Nations cannot. Second, any international action for protecting human rights must be based on a decision taken in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations. It must not be a unilateral act. Third, and relatedly, the consideration of proportionality is of the utmost importance in this respect. Should the scale or manner of international action be out of proportion to the wrong that is reported to have been committed, it is bound to evoke a vehement reaction, which, in the long run, would jeopardize the very rights that were sought to be defended.

VII

Another principal source of chronic instability is the militarization of human society represented by the level of armaments and military outlays in the world today. The unconscionable waste of resources and energies is only one of its results. Equally deleterious is the obsession with military security, which has corroded international relations and, in most developing countries, hampered the advance towards stable democratic institutions. The obsession has been as ruinous in political, cultural and psychological terms as it has been financially costly.

Over the years, however, the cold war overshadowed the whole field of arms limitation and disarmament. The perspectives that have now been opened should enable us to weave collective approaches in this field more tightly into the fabric of peace-making and conflict control. The opportunities now presented to us are not likely to remain open indefinitely.

At the global level, the priorities include a search for new, stabilizing reductions in nuclear weapons, maintaining the regained momentum of support for the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, arresting the uncontrolled proliferation of advanced weapons of mass destruction and the relevant technology, a swift conclusion of a convention for the comprehensive prohibition of chemical weapons and strengthening the basic obligations of the Biological Weapons Convention. The challenge that is to be overcome to achieve non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction is that of devising regimes of verification which will build confidence, safeguard peaceful applications and above all reliably detect non-compliance, wherever and whenever it occurs.

Assuring orderly flows of badly needed technology to developing countries, without leading to weapons proliferation, is an issue of great importance. What is needed is a formula for cooperation involving greater willingness by the industrial countries to meet the needs of developing countries for science and technology for peaceful purposes, coupled with genuine openness among recipients about their end-use.

For several years, I have expressed grave concern (over the problem of excessive and destabilizing transfers of conventional armaments. Recent expressions of support for the idea of promoting transparency in the arms trade through a United Nations-based scheme for registration and disclosure are encouraging. If applied fairly to, and worked out in concert by, arms suppliers and recipients alike, a register would foster a climate that is conducive to voluntary restraint and more responsible behaviour. Over the longer term, we must seek to develop fair criteria for multilateral control of arms transfers while at the same time meeting the legitimate security needs of States.

Dismantling the military edifice of the cold war should mean designing a credible architecture for regional security. In this connection, one cannot disregard the existing imbalances and asymmetries within regions that cause recurrent tensions and insecurity. This again shows how difficult it is to detach arms limitation negotiations from the peaceful settlement of international disputes. For its part, the Secretariat has given high priority to organizing regional and interregional meetings as a way to explore solutions tailored to the distinctive needs of regions and subregions. But only when this dialogue engages the policy makers of States will our aim be realized. The mist of unreality that has hung over discussions of limiting and reducing the level of arms needs to be blown away. That, I believe, is a most impelling call of the present moment in history.

VIII

Rising affluence and increasing poverty are a pronounced and paradoxical feature of the present world scene. The world situation offers overwhelming evidence that poverty undermines the cohesion of societies and States, destroys the base of human rights and damages the health of the environment. This major cause of instability needs to be addressed with the same sense of urgency as is evoked by political crises. No system of collective security will remain viable unless workable solutions are sought to the problem of poverty and destitution, afflicting the greater part of the world.

A reinvigoration of the North-South dialogue has now become more urgent than ever. Fortunately, conditions exist now for advancing it constructively without a needless overlay of rhetoric or ideological controversy.

The profound changes in the world economy in recent years have brought prosperity to many parts of the world. However, the position of most of the developing countries within the world economy has been deteriorating for some time. World trade has increased fairly rapidly but not so the exports and imports of developing countries. Foreign direct investment flows have quadrupled in the 1980s but the share of developing countries has fallen sharply. As a result of the debt crisis, the indebted countries as a whole are suffering a net outflow of resources. The external debt of capital-importing countries, which was less than $600 billion in 1988, has reached $1.2 trillion. Income per capita has declined in many parts of the world during the last decade. All this has fed the forces leading to violent strife; it has exacerbated health and ecological problems; it has alarmingly increased the ranks of the poor and the displaced. Over 1 billion people now live in absolute poverty. Nearly 37 million have been uprooted by conflicts. These are the huge areas of blight in the present international landscape and nowhere is the situation more serious than in Africa, on which I have recently reported at some length. It is clear to me that what is needed is a renewal of the commitments arrived at in the compact between African countries and the international community live years ago. There is no greater human and economic imperative than to initiate and implement plans for creating conditions that would allow sustainable development in the entire developing world, especially in Africa.

The reactivation of economic growth and development in poor countries requires a dynamic trading system that allows exports from these countries unrestricted access to markets in the industrial countries, an urgent and bold solution to the problem of indebtedness, an adequate volume of lending from official and multilateral creditors, increased foreign investment flows and enhanced official development assistance as an essential source of concessional finance to the developing countries, particularly the poorest and the least developed. Moreover, a significant increase in the financial resources of the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and the regional development banks is crucial if these institutions are to effectively support structural adjustment, continue to provide concessional assistance to low-income countries and resources for debt and debt-reduction schemes, and facilitate the economic transformation of countries that are making great efforts to restructure their economies.

It has become apparent that, in order to safeguard the environment, to finance the transition to market economies, to deal with the reconstruction needs of countries in the Gulf region and above all to sustain development efforts in the developing world, substantially increased levels of resources would need to be mobilized. The acceleration in growth could be the most important source for generating resources for investments. A positive factor is the end of the cold war, which offers realistic prospects of releasing the substantial resources for social and economic development that were consumed by military expenditures. With the realization that national security gains strength from economic development, there is a palpable need for the developing countries themselves to reduce the close to $200 billion they spend on arms and, with the necessary financial assistance, to convert military structures and integrate them into the civilian economy. The unique opportunity that is now being presented to the world should be the subject of reasoned discussion and negotiation in the best interests of the global community.

It was with these ideas and problems in mind that I have proposed consideration of the convening of an international conference on the financing of development in order to formulate a coherent response to the challenge. Benefiting from the preparatory work and the agreements reached at both the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the conference could devise agreed ways to ensure that developing countries and others that are striving to integrate their economies into the emerging global economy have the resources to support their efforts.

My experience has convinced me that the United Nations system has a key role to play in addressing the host of transborder issues that have come to the fore in recent years. In revitalizing that role, we have to look beyond the procedural or organizational aspects of reform and restructuring. For the fundamental and far-reaching changes in existing institutional arrangements and practices that may be required, the search for a broad consensus needs to be undertaken now.

IX

The way we treat the new generation of global problems that now confront humanity may very well determine the quality of life for all the peoples living on the planet. Next year the United Nations will face a very important test of its capacity to meet global challenges in the Conference on Environment and Development—the first world summit conference formally mandated by the General Assembly.

The Conference will be a test of the willingness of Governments to adopt long-term policies on matters of vast significance to human well-being—even survival. It will also test the capacity of nations to cooperate in the United Nations in developing effective global strategies and in the evolution of respected—even enforceable—international law. For these strategies to work in a future that will depend more and more on public awareness and participation, the cooperation of Governments with non-governmental organizations and the private sector will also be essential. The process will further develop the capacity of the United Nations system and its ability to work as a team in response to the challenges of a rapidly changing world.

That the environment is humanity's common inheritance is now merely a platitude. But it entails a common responsibility to mount a global attack on what depletes and degrades that inheritance. Traditional patterns of industrialization and the consumption of industrial products are not the only cause. Other major ones are poverty, overpopulation and the lack of the technological or material capability for developing countries to move to environmentally sound and sustainable practices. The difficult and complex issues that have to be addressed range over a whole spectrum; effective solutions likewise will require new approaches in urban and industrial planning, technology transfer, energy consumption, to name only a few. The success of the 1992 Conference will depend primarily on the broad consensus that is reached on all major relevant issues during the preparatory stage. Mobilizing new and adequate financial resources to support sustainable development and agreement on terms for the transfer of technology will need focused attention. The Conference should decide on built-in mechanisms for follow-up action and periodical stocktaking. The stakes are high for the entire human race.

X

The health of the global society does not depend only on political relations and economic growth. We are witnessing grave afflictions at present that cross State or cultural frontiers and, in one way or another, defy the remedies that Governments can administer in isolation from one another. The resentments and dislocations of groups within societies, the decay of traditional structures of loyalty, discipline and emotional support—the family being the outstanding example—and the disorientation of vast numbers of individuals are among the negative consequences of rapid societal change. They manifest themselves in the plague of drug abuse and trafficking, in the thriving black market in weapons, in the taking of hostages, in the use of terror against civilian populations—indeed, in the modernization of crime. If the security of nations is to be viewed not in terms of external threats alone, if progress is to be measured not only by economic indicators and if change is to be managed from the perspective of human welfare, the social agenda of the United Nations is equal in rank with the political, economic or environmental.

In the complex battle against international drug abuse, some recent initiatives have given better definition to the Organization's functions and also aroused higher public expectations. The new United Nations International Drug Control Programme has been established in order to formulate a coherent and integrated strategy. The division of labour with regional and international institutions and partnership with Governments in drug control efforts should strengthen multilateralism when national initiatives abound but results are sadly wanting.

The upsurge and transnationalization of crime endanger the internal security of States, erode the individual's basic freedom from fear and can also disrupt international relations. This calls for effective intergovernmental mechanisms and much stronger judicial and police cooperation among States.

Beyond addressing these two menacing problems, the global social strategy would be sadly deficient if it did not include constructive action to revive basic social institutions and to end social discrimination against the weaker members of society. The intended observance of the International Year of the Family in 1994, the development of standard rules for the equalization of opportunities for the disabled, the collaboration with non-governmental organizations in establishing principles for the treatment of older persons, the commitment to attain equality in law and managerial practice between men and women as a basic human right—all reflect a continuity of concern with social health and justice. On the question of gender equality, which is, a concern second to none, it is discouraging to observe that progress slackened during the 1980s, in large measure as a result of distracting eco-conomic and political factors. I believe that the pace can be quickened through the preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women in 1995.

The restructuring of economic systems does not and will not by itself answer the demands of social justice and equity. Indeed, there is a serious danger that in the difficulties of transition, the social advances made in the past might not be maintained. The fundamental principles of social welfare and the provision of essential services will remain valid regardless of the configuration of economic systems. The war against hunger, disease, illiteracy and unemployment cannot be left for the market to fight. To examine the whole gamut of issues relating to social development, the Economic and Social Council has requested me to consult Governments on the possibility of convening a world summit for social development. I believe the idea is timely and would help place the human being at the centre of the development agenda.

XI

It is a mark of growing human solidarity that relief of the intolerable suffering caused by disasters is now one of the major items on the international agenda. Tragically, disasters—some natural, others entirely man-made—have been more frequent in recent years. We witness spectacles of displacement, devastation and death at several points of the globe. I believe that some clarifications are necessary to prevent the issue of the international response to disasters from becoming a seed-bed of controversies.

International relief efforts in emergencies caused by famine or flood, earthquake or drought are mounted at the request of the affected State or States and generally create no legal or political problems. But international action with regard to situations where a population is torn by war or oppression raises sensitive political issues, calls for early warning capacity of a different character and has to be based on a determination made by a competent organ of the United Nations. It would be unwise to put the two kinds of emergencies in the same conceptual basket, even though the actual operations may on occasion assume a similar physical or logistical shape. For this reason, it is hard to visualize a unified system of emergency relief that would be automatically triggered by situations that, between themselves, are wholly disparate.

There is, of course, no question that the incidence and magnitude of humanitarian emergencies of all types call for mechanisms of greater coordination of the various agencies and the enhancement of their early warning capacities. But even these mechanisms, no matter how well designed, will be of little avail without enhanced stand-by arrangements, which, in turn, cannot be put in place by the United Nations lacking a prior earmarking by Governments of substantial necessary resources. I intend to make a detailed report later on this subject and I trust that it will be considered by Governments at the highest policy-making level.

In this context, a reminder has been rendered necessary by the experience gained in addressing the humanitarian emergency that occasioned Security Council resolution 688(1991). The Secretary-General cannot be expected to use powers that are not vested in him and deploy resources that are not available. For large-scale field operations, the Secretariat needs clear mandates, with assured financing, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter and under established procedures.

XII

As the foregoing makes clear, the United Nations is now entering uncharted territories and undertaking tasks of a kind unforeseen in its original design. This prompts an examination of its executive organ, that is, the Secretariat.

I shall describe later the strains on the administrative machinery. Despite all those strains, however, it should be a matter of gratification to the entire membership—as, for me, it is a cause for enduring satisfaction—that at no stage has the Secretariat failed to respond effectively to challenge. This is a tribute to the commitment and ability of all those involved in the planning, deployment, operation and administration of the great variety of field missions and also to the dedication of the staff at Headquarters. For myself, I am grateful for the exemplary cooperation and understanding—enhanced this year—between the Secretariat and the different bodies representing Governments.

Considering the unique nature of the Secretariat's tasks, it would be unfair to expect that it would escape criticism; some of that has been thoughtful and refreshing. However, the judgements sometimes made from one vantage point have ignored the fact that the Secretariat has to answer the priorities and preferences not of one group of States but of all. Being multilingual and multinational, it is unlike any other administrative set-up in the world and cannot be run as the foreign ministries of Governments are. Its heterogeneous composition, as much as the variety of its mandates, demands cohesive and integrated control at the top. That kind of control can be eroded if there is excessive interference from outside.

In this context, a standing problem to which I drew attention in my annual report in 1984 is that there sometimes seems to be a blurred perception of the exact delimitation of functions between the Secretariat, headed by the Secretary-General, and the other principal organs. Article 101 of the Charter empowers the General Assembly to establish regulations for the appointment of the staff Regulations, however, should mean broad guidelines under principles set out in the Charter and not detailed or rigid directives that can only upset operational efficiency and dilute the authority of the Secretary-General. Judicious use of funds is naturally a matter of concern to all Member States, particularly the principal contributors. However, beyond the legislative responsibility of scrutinizing expenditures and ensuring as wide a geographical basis for recruiting the staff as possible, the management of the Secretariat needs to be left in the hands of the chief administrative officer. To secure efficiency, he needs the freedom to define the different spheres of responsibility, to allocate staff according to need and to reward merit and performance. Over-legislation itself can cause strains that are wholly avoidable.

The time seems to have come to examine afresh the conditions in which increasingly varied and complex mandates are entrusted to the Secretariat.

In the first place, it is hardly comprehensible that Governments impose far-reaching and costly responsibilities on the Organization, as they judge they must, but are themselves unwilling to fulfil corresponding financial obligations. Voluntary contributions, however welcome and generous they may be, cannot reliably fill the gap. This places the Secretary-General in an often intolerable situation, as I have stated time and again during my period in office. Under the Charter, it is a legal duty of Member States to pay their assessed contributions. By improved mechanisms, payments must be made on time and in full if the Secretariat is to retain the capability of responding, on behalf of the membership as a whole, to the pressing tasks required of it. At the time of writing this report, the level of outstanding contributions to the regular budget was $809,445,015, and only 49 Member States had fully paid their annual contributions. Peace-keeping assessments unpaid by Governments amounted to $486,994,618. It can thus be seen that the financial crisis of the Organization is still not over. I trust that, along with enlarging the Organization's role by their own decisions, Governments will revise their approach to funding the vital and far-reaching tasks they request the Secretariat to perform.

Furthermore, constrained as the Secretariat is by zero-growth budgets, it would at first sight appear necessary that Governments prioritize the mandates conferred upon the Organization. Since, however, this is difficult in practice, some flexibility has to be left within its budgets for redeployment, in the light of the demands of changing situations, of existing resources on a discretionary basis. At present, there is virtually no such flexibility. Difficulties are aggravated by divergent decisions coming from the different legislative bodies, as happened several times this year.

All this becomes stranger if it is borne in mind that the proportion of national budgets that Governments devote to the United Nations is minuscule compared with their military outlays; indeed, by any reckoning, resources devoted to the Organization constitute an extremely economical investment for Governments.

There is an urgency to replenish, increase and maintain the Working Capital Fund and the Special Account, both of which are gravely depleted. Member States may also wish to consider the establishment of a strategic reserve fund specifically designed to meet the costs arising from unanticipated pressures upon scarce resources. Had such a fund been available in the past year, the Organization might not have become a mendicant as it did in order to secure, at very short notice, sizeable resources so as to undertake urgent and unexpected tasks. Alternatively, perhaps the time has come again to consider permitting the Organization to borrow, since such a facility could help to provide the necessary flexibility in unanticipated contingencies.

The staff retrenchment called for by the General Assembly at its forty-first session was completed in 1990. This year, the pace at which the Organization has had to deploy new complex field missions, most of which require innovative work, has so quickened as to stretch the already slender human resources dedicated to such operations almost to breaking-point. While a number of missions have been successfully staffed, staffing pressures have become acute in certain areas and some existing programmes have been maintained only with extreme difficulty. The strain on the personnel, both at Headquarters and in the field, should be easily imaginable.

The staff is our most important asset and the Secretariat must be enabled to maintain the appropriate conditions of service if it is to attract and retain the kind of talent required to meet extraordinary challenges. Unfortunately, those conditions have deteriorated steadily. It is ironical that, on the one hand, complaints are heard about the high salary scales within the Secretariat and, on the other, some Governments find it necessary to pay subsidies to their nationals in order to induce them to serve on the staff. The result of this as well as certain aspects of the practice of secondments, now fortunately being reviewed, has been to create anomalies that demoralize the staff. I hope that Governments will realize that the present situation must be corrected for it hinders the realization of the objectives they have jointly laid for the Secretariat.

The present juncture suggests taking a fresh, searching look at our structures and the way in which the Organization is engineered and equipped to handle new demands. The United Nations and its system of allied agencies are now 45 years old and were established in a very different era. Vast changes in human society and human needs have occurred since 1945. The Organization's membership has itself more than tripled. It is only natural, therefore, that the structures of the Organization and the system now need to be overhauled in the light of current and foreseeable challenges.

Many of the constraints due to the cold war, which made it impossible in previous years to reorganize and update the Secretariat, are now vanishing. The workload of the Secretariat has also vastly increased and diversified, and its responsibilities become greater every year. It is clearly essential to introduce further reforms to allow the Secretariat to respond to changing circumstances.

An inspection of the anatomy of the Organization cannot be a substitute for its real work. Devising new organizational charts for the Secretariat and rearranging the number and disposition of high-level posts and departments can certainly be of value, provided it is remembered that there cannot be a credible way of strengthening the Secretariat by weakening the authority of the Secretary-General. In the long term, it is far more important to deal with the fundamental difficulties facing the Secretariat and the United Nations system, for only then would the reforms be real and their objectives served. Some useful discussions are taking place both within and outside the Organization on these matters and the idea of a "unitary United Nations" has also been floated. I believe that some of the issues involved are of a fundamental nature and require thought of the same depth and scope as was devoted to the formulation of the mandates of the United Nations, its programmes and the specialized agencies at the time of their establishment. At that time, the different global problems and issues were not viewed as being as interconnected as they are now. I would, therefore, suggest that a serious and well-organized process of analysis and consultation be initiated, in which Governments can outline their priorities, and the Secretary-General, as the senior manager of the Organization, can discuss with them and with his colleagues in the United Nations system the most effective ways and means of achieving the desired objectives. These would relate to the future shape and structure of the Secretariat, the United Nations system and the related intergovernmental bodies. The aim should be a more effective fulfilment of the purposes of the Charter in the interest of the global society that is rapidly evolving now.

XIII

Earlier in this report, I mentioned the two nagging doubts about the Organization's will and the Secretariat's efficiency, which have now been allayed. There is, however, a larger question that should continue to occupy our minds: whether, by its decisions and actions, the United Nations inspires and retains the trust of peoples across all cultures and continents. To try to answer this question from the perspective of one group of nations, dismissing that of another, would betray either complacency or undue suspicion. There are nations that have reason to be satisfied with the status quo, relying on the dynamics of power or economics, and there are nations with deep grievances, political or economic, which ask to be redressed. Any view of the implementation of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations that reflects the interests and outlook of one group of nations and is imperceptive of those of another is bound to prove divisive.

Closely related to this is the question whether the balance between the principal organs, including the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Secretariat, envisaged in the Charter is being consistently maintained. This, I would submit, is not merely an issue of the internal working of the Organization; it bears on the guardianship of peace exercised by the United Nations. The action relating to the Iraq-Kuwait situation this year has made it timely to express the hope that the unity of the permanent members of the Security Council will be complemented by a balanced constitutional relationship within and between the various principal organs. Moreover, it is important to preserve the political acquis that the office of the Secretary-General has accumulated over 45 years. It is an essential asset built as much on an incumbent's personal impartiality, tact and sensitivity as on the integrity of the international civil service that provides the base for his functions.

Two years ago, in my annual report in 1989, I said that agreement among the permanent members must carry with it the willing support of a majority of nations if it is to facilitate movement towards a better and a saner world. Events since then have lent emphasis to that observation.

In this time of massive transition, extraordinary care needs to be taken against disequilibrium in the management of international affairs by the United Nations. The traditional concept of balance of power can hardly be invoked in a situation in which economic and technological capability and its uneven distribution have become critical, often decisive, factors. For the quality of peace built through the United Nations, the necessary balance can be provided only by consistent adherence to the principles articulated in the Charter of the United Nations.

These principles are by no means frozen; their scope and the manner of their application is determined by changing global conditions. It should be the purpose of the international discourse constantly to develop shared understandings not only of the standards of acceptable international behaviour but also of the procedures to be employed for upholding them and correcting their infractions. A rigid interpretation that fails to take human realities into account would ossify international law and diminish its contemporary relevance. To an equal extent, loose interpretations would create disorder. As the era unfolding now displays the opposite qualities of fusion and fission, we need constantly to hark back to basic principles like that of respecting the territorial integrity and political independence of States. We have little ground to expect that States and societies will escape internal turbulence but we have every reason not to allow that turbulence to imperil international peace and security.

The Charter of the United Nations furnishes guidance that remains timely even in conditions its framers could not have anticipated. We cannot, of course, regard the Charter as immutable. Some of its provisions, for example, the composition of the Security Council, have already come under questioning. But it is the only multilateral treaty of its nature and scope that has been accepted by, and is binding on, all States and any revisions in it except on the basis of genuine consensus will create more problems than they will solve. The facilitation of peaceful and constructive change, not the perpetuation of the status quo, will remain the United Nations principal concern.

XIV

As my term of office will soon come to an end, I may be forgiven if I share with Member States some feelings relating to the experience. I have been associated with the Organization for some two decades in various capacities. It has been my privilege to serve it as Secretary-General during what are generally regarded as some of its most productive years. Throughout this latter period, I have felt impelled more to dwell on problems that are still to be resolved than to muse on accomplishments. A Panglossian frame of mind is hardly appropriate for the United Nations. The present report too suggests initiatives to overcome serious difficulties in averting conflicts, eradicating poverty and protecting human rights.

None of these difficulties, however, diminishes the metamorphosis of the United Nations. I believe that the change which the United Nations has channelized has not been fortuitous. The radical shift in political perceptions testifies to the resilience of the human spirit. The United Nations, to the best of its capabilities, is helping to give it concrete shape.

Peace has won victories on several fronts. Many a people have been released from the agonies of strife. The process is capable of extension to other areas. New vistas are opening for States to work together in a manner they did not do before. The earlier posture of aloofness and reserve towards the Organization has been replaced by more ardent participation in its endeavours. An era of law and justice may not be around the corner but the United Nations has defined the direction. If dynamic efforts are made, obstacles in the way may no longer prove insuperable. Today there are far more solid grounds for hope than there are reasons for frustration and fear.

The hope arises both from the enduring relevance of the philosophy of the Charter and from the vastly strengthened credentials of the Organization. My credo is anchored in that philosophy and it will remain so. With its return from the doldrums, and with its role no longer peripheral, the United Nations has come nearer to the vision of its Charter. Everyone who contributed to the process is entitled to a measure of exultation and I, for my part, to a feeling of fulfilment. I profoundly appreciate the confidence placed in me through this testing phase of international affairs. I close on that note of faith and gratitude.

Political and security questions

Chapter I

International peace and security

In 1991, the General Assembly, following its annual review of the implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, reaffirmed that Declaration (decision 46/414). In other actions, the Assembly welcomed the changes in many countries of the world towards more democratic systems of government (resolution 46/14) and, welcoming the progress made by the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations in 1990 and 1991, adopted a series of recommendations and conclusions on peace-keeping matters (resolution 46/48). It also welcomed the establishment in 1989 of the Institute of East-West Dynamics, which was to assist societies in transition in the development of their democratic institutions and market mechanisms (resolution 46/15).

The Assembly, with a view to preserving the security of small States, stressed the importance of unconditional respect for the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the importance of strengthening regional security arrangements (resolution 46/43).

The Assembly urged States to cooperate with the Mediterranean countries in reducing tension, promoting peace and ensuring stability (resolution 46/42). It called on States to cooperate in promoting the objectives established in the 1986 declaration of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic, affirmed the importance of the zone to global maritime and commercial transactions and reaffirmed the aspirations of the States of the zone to make it an active instrument for fostering human rights, fundamental freedoms, racial equality, justice and liberty as integral elements of peace, development and cooperation (resolution 46/19).

Programmes and activities to promote peace in the world

In response to a General Assembly request of 1989,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in October 1991 a report on programmes and activities to promote peace,<sup>(6)</sup> outlining the mandate and framework for such promotion and giving an overview of programmes and activities of Member States, the United Nations system, cities, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and academic institutions.

Over the preceding two years, the Secretary-General said, unprecedented international developments had opened up significant opportunities for greater cooperation and pragmatism to solve global problems and create a more secure and peaceful world. The end of the cold war, recent arms-control accords, the peaceful revolution in Eastern Europe and concrete steps for eliminating the apartheid system in South Africa demonstrated important progress towards more universal fulfilment of the basic objectives set forth in the United Nations Charter. In that context, a significant number of programmes and activities related to peace around the world had begun to focus more directly on the relationship of peace and the quality of life.

The guidelines established in 1985<sup>(7)</sup> for the promotion of peace, international security and cooperation and the peaceful resolution of conflict stressed three primary objectives: to stimulate international action; to strengthen the United Nations as an instrument of peace; and to focus attention on the basic requirements of peace, in particular problems of development, disarmament, human rights, human needs and preparation for life in peace.

The Peace Studies Unit of the United Nations Department of Political and Security Council Affairs was responsible for coordinating the promotion of peace and served as a clearing-house for information on peace-related projects and programmes. Among its primary functions was the encouragement of activities and the exchange of information on peace issues among over 600 NGOs, academic institutions and cities around the world. The Secretary-General had designated over 400 NGOs and cities as "Peace Messengers" for their contributions to the promotion of peace and their continuing cooperation with the United Nations. Peace Messenger Awards were presented to deserving organizations and cities on the International Day of Peace, observed each year on the third Tuesday of September.

Special activities for the promotion of peace were financed from the Trust Fund for the Promotion of Peace. As at 15 September 1991, the Fund totalled $12,290 in convertible and $36,167 in non-convertible currencies.

Several long-term Peace Messenger projects—designed to be global in scope and specifically oriented towards fulfilling United Nations objectives for the promotion of peace—were continuing and expanding to encompass new areas of activity and offer new opportunities for participation. Among such activities were the creation of a global database of peoples' hopes for the future, peace education, art programmes and information dissemination.

The NGO community remained an important source of ideas and action for peace promotion. Peace Messenger organizations had expressed interest in forming networks for cooperation. During their first international meeting in 1991, they discussed the possibility of holding regional Peace Messenger meetings over the coming two years and "Peace Messenger" cities had tentative invitations for annual meetings in different cities for the coming three years.

With regard to the role of the United Nations, the Secretary-General stated that in the past two years the Organization had assumed increased prominence as the primary international body dedicated to the maintenance of international peace and security; as a result, it was increasingly utilized as a source of information, advice and coordination on peace-related issues. He suggested that Member States and interested organizations be invited to continue informing the Secretariat of their peace-promotion programmes and activities. He stressed that he would continue to report periodically on initiatives and trends in the promotion of peace around the world, noting that the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1995 would provide a unique opportunity to consider its role in promoting peace.

The Secretary-General concluded that, despite the end of the cold war, the concern and interest for the promotion of peace had not diminished. There was, however, a shift to broader conceptions and greater emphasis on issues such as human rights and the environment; basic human needs such as food, shelter, housing and medical care were also a focus in considering conditions for peace.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/14 without vote.

Programmes and activities to promote peace in the world

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/11 of 24 October 1989, on the achievements of the International Year of Peace,

Recognizing that the International Year of Peace has generated a number of important activities and programmes to promote peace in the world,

Recognizing also that resolution 44/11 stimulated the interest of Member States, non-governmental organizations and academic, scientific and educational institutions at all levels, as well as of individuals, in developing activities to promote, disseminate information on and assist the United Nations in the implementation of programmes for the achievement of one of its primary objectives, namely, peace in the world,

Bearing in mind that peace is not merely the absence of war and that interdependence and cooperation to foster human rights, social and economic development, disarmament, protection of the environment and ecosystems and the improvement of the quality of life for all are indispensable elements for the establishment of peaceful societies,

Contributions of the Institute of East-West Dynamics to programmes and activities to promote peace in the world

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the peaceful transition to more democratic systems currently under way in many countries,

Having considered that facilitating the efforts of societies in such a transition should remain within the purview of the United Nations system,

Bearing in mind that economic and social development and international cooperation are essential to the maintenance of world peace and stability,

Endorsing therefore the need to strengthen political, social and economic links among all countries and regions of the world by promoting greater contact, exchanges and sharing of experience and expertise,

Recognizing the opportunities for broader theoretical and practical exchanges among various research and development institutions throughout the world,

1. Welcomes the establishment, at the initiative of the Conference on Resolving the Problems, Defining the Opportunities: A Project for Peace, hosted by the United Nations at its Headquarters in January 1989, of the Institute of East-West Dynamics, working in close cooperation with the United Nations, and created to assist societies in transition in developing their democratic institutions and market mechanisms through transfer of professional and technical expertise;

2. Recommends to the Institute, in its further activities, to take into account the need to examine the issues relating to, and problems arising from, the transition, so as to ease the readjustment burden and thus avert or alleviate resulting tensions which may undermine international stability and peace;

3. Expresses the hope that the Institute and its activities and programmes will receive the widest possible support through voluntary contributions made by Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, foundations, concerned individuals and the private sector;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures in order to provide for cooperation between the Institute and the competent United Nations bodies.

Review of peace-keeping operations

United Nations peace-keeping forces continued in 1991 to operate in Cyprus, Lebanon and the Golan Heights between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic. In addition, the Security Council expanded the role of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission to verify the peace accords between the Angolan Government and the guerrilla forces in the country (see PART TWO, Chapter I). The Council also discussed a possible peace-keeping operation in Yugoslavia (see PART TWO, Chapter IV).

In 1991, the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations held five meetings in New York between 19 April and 30 May.<sup>(1)</sup> To examine the substance of its mandate, it established an open-ended Working Group, which submitted conclusions and recommendations for the Committee's approval and transmittal to the General Assembly.

The Committee had before it a report of the Secretary-General<sup>(2)</sup> containing replies from Governments to an invitation by the Assembly in a 1990 resolution<sup>(3)</sup> to submit their observations on peace-keeping operations, particularly proposals to make those operations more effective. As at 26 April 1991, nine Governments had responded and subsequent replies were received from two Governments.

The Secretary-General, in response to the same resolution, submitted another report in May 1991 describing the responsibilities, functions and structures of Secretariat units dealing with peace-keeping operations,<sup>(4)</sup> and a third report containing a model agreement between the United Nations and Member States which contributed personnel and equipment to peace-keeping operations.<sup>(5)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/48 without vote.

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965 and all other relevant resolutions,

Recalling, in particular, its resolutions 44/49 of 8 December 1989 and 45/75 of 11 December 1990,

Welcoming the progress made by the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations during its sessions in 1990 and 1991 and, in particular, the agreement reached on a number of conclusions and recommendations,

Convinced that the United Nations peace-keeping operations are an integral component of enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recognizing that the peace-making activities of the Secretary-General, which are his good offices, mediation, conciliation and other diplomatic efforts, conducted with due respect for the sovereignty of Member States, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, constitute an essential function of the United Nations and are among the important means for the prevention, containment and resolution of disputes and for maintaining international peace and security,

Taking into account that increasing activities in the field of United Nations peace-keeping require increasing human, financial and material resources for the Organization,

Aware of the extremely difficult financial situation of the United Nations peace-keeping forces and of the heavy burden on the troop contributors, especially those from developing countries,

Emphasizing that the current political atmosphere is propitious for achieving further progress in the work of the Special Committee,

Bearing in mind the fact that constructive exchanges of views on various practical aspects of peace-keeping operations can contribute favourably to the smooth and effective functioning of these operations,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations;

2. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the use of civilian personnel in peace-keeping operations<sup>a</sup> and invites the Secretary-General to continue to consider using civilian personnel in the peace-keeping tasks whenever he deems it appropriate, taking into account the operational and other relevant needs, as well as the requirement of cost-effectiveness of the peace-keeping operations;

3. Also welcomes the training guidelines issued by the Secretariat in 1991 and urges the Secretariat to keep the guidelines updated;

4. Requests the Secretariat to consider in due course the utility of similar guidelines for the training of civilian specialized units, including civilian police;

5. Recognizes the importance of peace-keeping training and considers it useful for the Secretariat to designate a focal point for all such related activities;

6. Again encourages those Member States with national or regional training programmes to provide access to those programmes, as appropriate, to other interested Member States;

7. Further encourages all Member States conducting training in peace-keeping to include cross-cultural education in existing training programmes;

8. Also encourages all Member States to organize their own national training programmes and consider the establishment of regional and national training centres, and urges all Member States to promote cooperation between them;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to study and report on the feasibility, including costs, of establishing an annual peace-keeping fellowship programme for national peace-keeping trainers to be administered by the Secretariat;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to collect information on peace-keeping training and similar activities and further requests him to issue a list based upon national submissions and to bring it up to date regularly;

11. Notes that only forty-five Member States have to date responded to the questionnaire issued by the Secretary-General on 21 May 1990 pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/49 to identify those personnel, material and technical resources and services which Member States would be ready, in principle, to contribute to United Nations peace-keeping operations, and urges Member States which have not replied to do so;

12. Encourages studies on the possible application of high technology to peace-keeping operations, where it would enhance their efficiency;

13. Recalls that the financing of peace-keeping operations is the collective responsibility of all Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations;

14. Emphasizes again the need to ensure a secure and sound financial basis for United Nations peace-keeping operations, particularly with reference to the resources needed for the start-up phases of such operations;

15. Reiterates its call upon all Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time and encourages again those States which can do so to make voluntary contributions that are acceptable to the Secretary-General;

16. Stresses the importance of the need to reimburse the outstanding dues of troop-contributing States;

17. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to examine all aspects of peace-keeping operations, as distinct from the provision of technical and other assistance to States upon their request, in order to ensure that they are conducted in an efficient and cost-effective manner;

18. Considers it important that in establishing future peace-keeping operations, financial questions should continue to be studied seriously, particularly at the planning stage, in order to ensure the effectiveness of such operations and strict control of their expenditures;

19. Calls upon States directly concerned to take all necessary measures to facilitate the launching of peace-keeping operations, with a view to creating the necessary conditions for ensuring that they are conducted in a cost-effective manner;

20. Encourages regional and subregional organizations to contribute, in the context of cooperation with the United Nations, to the effective conduct of peace-keeping operations;

21. Welcomes the factual report on the Secretariat units dealing with peace-keeping operations and welcomes as well the elaboration on it by the Secretariat;

22. Fully recognizes the complexity of the Secretariat functions & support of peace-keeping activities, and takes note of the dispersed nature of the various offices reporting to different Under-Secretaries-General;

23. Notes that, as a result of the launching of at least four new operations, the workload of the offices concerned has continued to increase, recognizes the efforts made by the Secretariat to cope with the challenge, and further notes that the capacity of the Secretariat to plan and coordinate new operations and manage ongoing ones is dependent on sufficient human resources to meet the increased demands;

24. Invites the Secretary-General, given the need to improve the capacity of the Secretariat to plan and coordinate new and ongoing peace-keeping operations, to investigate the feasibility of integrating those offices whose primary functions are directly related to peace-keeping;

25. Also invites the Secretary-General to consider identifying a focal point for contacts by Member States seeking information on all facets, including operational and administrative matters, of ongoing and planned peace-keeping operations;

26. Notes that informal consultations among Member States contributing personnel and other interested States held in accordance with resolution 45/75 were considered useful;

27. Takes note of the possibility for the Special Committee of holding inter-sessional open-ended informal consultations, as required, in order to have an exchange of views on operational and technical matters relating to the practical aspects of peace-keeping operations, and to receive briefings from the Secretariat and other briefings as may be appropriate;

28. Recognizes that peace-keeping operations are an evolving concept calling for increased attention and ongoing evaluation by Member States, in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter;

29. Considers that the growing demands on the United Nations in the field of peace-keeping make it essential to continue to secure the greatest possible support from Member States;

30. Considers it useful that the Special Committee continue discussion on different aspects of the question of prevention of conflicts;

31. Also considers it useful for the United Nations to monitor global developments which eventually may be transformed into a crisis and, in this connection, takes note of the role of the Office for Research and the Collection of Information;

32. Further considers it useful that the Special Committee pursue its exchange of views on the role of United Nations personnel in, inter alia, electoral activities when they are an integral part of peace-keeping operations, and on the role of the United Nations civilian police;

33. Considers that the composition of the United Nations peace-keeping operations, taken as a whole, should be on a wide geographical basis and requests the Secretary-General to continue to make every possible effort to broaden the participation of countries in these operations;

34. Considers it advisable that the Special Committee continue the discussion of the idea of a generally acceptable text of a declaration on United Nations peace-keeping operations, which would include fundamental organizational and practical aspects involved in the conduct of peace-keeping operations and would contain recommendations on ways to improve the effectiveness of such operations;

35. Urges the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate, to continue its efforts for a comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects with a view to strengthening the role of the United Nations in this field, taking into account the difficult financial situation of peace-keeping operations and the need for maximum cost efficiency;

36. Decides that the Special Committee shall accept the participation of observers of Member States, including in the meetings of its working groups;

37. Invites Member States to submit any further observations and suggestions on peace-keeping operations to the Secretary-General by 1 March 1992, outlining proposals on specific items in order to allow for more detailed consideration of the Special Committee, with particular emphasis on practical proposals to make these operations more effective;

Protection and security of small States

In response to a General Assembly resolution of 1989,(1) the Secretary-General submitted, in September 1991, a report on the protection and security of small States,(2) based on the views expressed by members of the Security Council and replies received as at 31 August 1991 from 22 Member States and 7 specialized agencies. Also annexed to the report were the recommendations of a workshop on the subject (Malé, Maldives, 5 and 6 May).

The Secretary-General summed up his observations by stating that it was an acknowledged fact that the international community had a vested interest in safeguarding the security of small States. It was also felt, however, that those States had a limited capacity to provide for their own security and that there was little value in advising any answer based on self-reliance. It was therefore advisable to create an environment of support and protection. The United Nations might take the lead in creating such an environment, primarily by strengthening already existing arrangements under the international collective security system envisaged in the Charter. Security arrangements for small States should also involve regional and subregional support systems.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/43 without vote.

Concerned about the danger that mercenaries and terrorists, as well as drug traffickers, can represent for small States,

Condemning all acts of aggression, including those against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of small States,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 44/51,

1. Expresses its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report on the implementation of resolution 44/51;

2. Recognizes that small States may be particularly vulnerable to external threats and acts of interference in their internal affairs;

3. Stresses the vital importance for all States of the unconditional respect by all States of all the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, including the principle of sovereign equality, territorial integrity, non-interference in the internal affairs of other countries and the peaceful settlement of disputes, and their consistent application;

Chapter II

Disarmament

Throughout 1991, the end of the cold war continued to have a positive impact on international relations. Prospects for arms limitation and disarmament improved; major reductions in the military budgets of many of the world's leading military spenders were in hand—a process that was welcomed and at the same time gave rise to its own economic and social challenges.

The Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START), signed by Presidents George Bush of the United States and Mikhail S. Gorbachev of the USSR on 31 July 1991 after nine years of negotiations, provided for radical cuts in the nuclear offensive arms of those two countries.

The Conference on Disarmament (Geneva, 22 January–28 March, 14 May–27 June, 23 July–4 September), a 40-nation multilateral negotiating body, significantly intensified negotiations on a chemical weapons convention. As to the related field of biological weapons, progress was made at the Third Review Conference of the parties to the biological weapons Convention (Geneva, 9–27 September 1991). The Conference adopted its final declaration by consensus, with the States parties agreeing on the need to strengthen the Convention and, more particularly, on the need for enhanced confidence-building measures and exchange of information.

The Disarmament Commission (New York, 22 April–13 May 1991), a deliberative body composed of all United Nations Member States, took on three new agenda items in 1991—nuclear disarmament in the framework of peace and security, with the objective of eliminating nuclear weapons; regional disarmament within the context of global security; and the role of science and technology in international security, disarmament and related fields.

In December, the General Assembly established a United Nations Register of Conventional Arms which, effective 1 January 1992, was to provide data on arms transfers and available background information regarding military holdings, procurement through national production and relevant policies (resolution 46/36 L).

General aspects

Communications. In 1991, the Secretary-General received a number of communications, from countries individually or in groups, concerning arms control and disarmament.

The Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Treaty Member States (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 1 July)(1) terminated the validity of the Warsaw Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance, signed on 14 May 1955, and of the Protocol extending its validity, signed on 26 April 1985. The former members voiced support for the further development of new structures of security and cooperation in Europe, in accordance with the Charter of Paris for a New Europe of 21 November 1990.(2)

On 18 October,(3) the text of a speech by the United States President on his nuclear-arms initiative, broadcast on 27 September, was transmitted to the Secretary-General. The President noted the 31 July signing of the START Treaty by the USSR President and himself which called for substantial stabilizing reductions and effective verification, and announced a series of unilateral steps his country would take on nuclear weapons. By an 11 October letter,(4) the USSR transmitted the text of a 5 October statement by the USSR President in which he responded positively to the United States initiative and proposed further arms reduction measures. On 12 December,(5) Belarus transmitted the texts of a declaration by the heads of State of the Republic of Belarus, the Russian Soviet Federative Socialist Republic (RSFSR) and Ukraine signed at Minsk on 8 December 1991, proclaiming the establishment of the Commonwealth of Independent States and the dissolution of the USSR. In the agreement establishing the Commonwealth, signed on the same date, the three countries undertook to discharge the international obligations incumbent on them under treaties and agreements entered into by the USSR. On 27 December,(6) Belarus transmitted the Alma Ata Declaration, signed by all 11 republics constituting the Commonwealth (Azerbaijan, Armenia, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Moldova, RSFSR, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan, Ukraine). The republics committed themselves to maintaining a unified command of strategic forces and joint control over nuclear weapons, and respecting each other's efforts to achieve the status of a nuclear-free and/or neutral State.

During 1991, steps were taken to enhance the status of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT)(7) which had entered into force in 1970. On 3 June,(8) France transmitted the text of an arms control and disarmament plan which stated that it had decided in principle to adhere formally to the Treaty, the provisions of which it already applied. On 11 July,(9) South Africa notified the Secretary-General that it had deposited its instrument of accession on 10 June and had signed a safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). In Latin America, Argentina and Brazil, which were not parties to NPT, concluded a joint safeguards agreement with IAEA and stated that they were taking measures to permit the full entry into force for them of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco).

In addition, on 29 June,(10) the European Council adopted a declaration on non-proliferation which identified a number of common criteria for the harmonization of national policies, with a view to strengthening the regime of nuclear non-proliferation and, in the light of the Persian Gulf War, further enhancing the effectiveness of regimes of non-proliferation. At the London Economic Summit (15-17 July),(11) a declaration on conventional arms transfers and the non-proliferation of nuclear, biological and chemical weapons was adopted. The Summit participants—the heads of State and Government of the seven major industrialized countries—reaffirmed their readiness to work towards the widest possible consensus in favour of a non-proliferation regime based on a balance between nuclear non-proliferation and the development of peaceful uses of nuclear energy, and to achieve a strengthened and improved IAEA safeguards system.

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea, both of which became United Nations Members during 1991, signed an accord on 13 December in an effort to open a new era of peace on the Korean peninsula. By a 19 December letter to the Secretary-General,(12) the Republic of Korea transmitted a text by its President stating that both countries had recognized that there should be no nuclear weapons on the Korean peninsula.

Trends in multilateral disarmament

UN role in disarmament

The United Nations continued its disarmament efforts in 1991 mainly through the General Assembly and its First Committee, the Disarmament Commission (a subsidiary organ of the Assembly) and the Conference on Disarmament (a multilateral negotiating forum at Geneva).

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, composed of all United Nations Member States, at its 1991 session (New York, 22 April-13 May) held seven plenary meetings under the chairmanship of Peter Hohenfellner (Austria).(1) It also met on 29 January to elect its officers and considered its provisional agenda for its 1991 session.

The Commission's agenda included items on objective information on military matters; nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of eliminating nuclear weapons; regional disarmament within the context of global security; and the role of science and technology in international security, disarmament and related fields. The item on objective information on military matters was carried over from the Commission's 1990 session,(2) while the remaining three items were on the agenda for the first time.

The Commission established a Committee of the Whole and four working groups to deal with its agenda items. Following a detailed discussion by Working Group I on objective information on military matters, the Group's Chairman presented his suggested text on guidelines for that item, which was later revised. The paper was annexed to the Commission's report. In Working Group II, discussions on nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of eliminating nuclear weapons, proceeded on the basis of elements proposed by the Chairman. During consultations, the Chairman identified a number of elements around which further deliberations could be developed, as contained in a paper annexed to the Commission's report. Working Group III considered a regional approach to disarmament within the context of global security. The Chairman presented a paper, which was annexed to the Commission's report, containing his own assessment and providing an overview of the issues raised under that agenda item. The document was to be considered further in 1992. Working Group IV debated the role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields.

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, the 40-member multilateral negotiating body, met three times in 1991 at Geneva (22 January-28 March; 14 May-27 June; and 23 July-4 September).<sup>(3)</sup> Holding 29 formal plenary meetings and 18 informal meetings, it considered a nuclear-test ban, cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, prevention of nuclear war, chemical weapons, prevention of an arms race in outer space, security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, radiological weapons and a comprehensive programme of disarmament.

The Conference re-established ad hoc committees on security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, radiological weapons, chemical weapons, prevention of an arms race in outer space and a nuclear-test ban. (Details of those questions are discussed elsewhere in this chapter.) It continued to consider, but did not take action on, the possibility of increasing its membership by not more than four States. It also held six informal consultations on the improved and effective functioning of the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/38 C by recorded vote. By a second resolution (46/38 B), the Assembly requested the Conference to re-establish at its 1992 session the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament.

Report of the Conference on Disarmament The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolution 45/62 D of 4 December 1990,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, should have the primary role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament,

Expressing its regret that the Conference on Disarmament was not able in 1991 to commence negotiations on the nuclear issues on its agenda,

Expressing its expectation that the Conference on Disarmament, in view of the positive current process in some fields of disarmament, will be in a position to reach concrete agreements on disarmament issues to which the United Nations has assigned the greatest priority and urgency and which have been under consideration for a number of years,

Considering that in the present international climate it is more than ever imperative to give additional impetus to negotiations on disarmament at all levels,

Taking note with satisfaction of the relevant paragraphs of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on the progress towards improved and effective functioning of the Conference, and expressing the hope that the process will continue in all aspects of its work,

1. Reaffirms the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community;

2. Welcomes the progress in the negotiations on the elaboration of a draft convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, and urges the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its work with a view to completing negotiations on such a draft convention in 1992;

3. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to strengthen its work, within the framework of ad hoc committees as the most appropriate mechanism, and to adopt concrete measures on the specific priority issues of disarmament on its agenda, in accordance with the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

4. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to provide negotiating mandates to ad hoc committees on all agenda items, in keeping with the fundamental role of the Conference as identified in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2602 E (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it declared the decade of the 1970s as a Disarmament Decade and requested, inter alia, the then Conference of the Committee on Disarmament<sup>a</sup> to work out "a comprehensive programme, dealing with all aspects of the problem of the cessation of the arms race and general and complete disarmament under effective international control, which would provide the Conference with a guideline to chart the course of its further work and its negotiations",

Considering that the present international situation is conducive to a renewed effort towards the conclusion of the comprehensive programme of disarmament,

Considering also that the conclusion of the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament would constitute an important contribution to the success of the Third Disarmament Decade and to the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament,

Reaffirming its resolution 44/122 of 15 December 1989,

Recognising the abiding concern of all Member States for maintaining respect for rights and obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law,

Convinced that observance of the Charter of the United Nations, relevant treaties and other sources of international law is essential for the strengthening of international security,

Mindful, in particular, of the fundamental importance of full implementation and strict observance of agreements on arms limitation and disarmament if individual nations and the international community are to derive enhanced security from them,

Stressing that any violation of such agreements not only adversely affects the security of States parties but can also create security risks for other States relying on the constraints and commitments stipulated in those agreements,

Stressing also that any weakening of confidence in such agreements diminishes their contribution to global or regional stability and to further disarmament and arms limitation efforts and undermines the credibility and effectiveness of the international legal system,

Recognizing in this context, that full compliance by parties with existing agreements and the resolving of compliance concerns effectively can, inter alia, facilitate the conclusion of additional arms limitation and disarmament agreements,

Believing that compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements by States parties is a matter of interest and concern to all members of the international community, and noting the role that the United Nations has played and should continue to play in that regard,

Convinced that resolution of non-compliance questions that have arisen with regard to agreements on arms limitations and disarmament would contribute to better relations among States and the strengthening of world peace and security,

Noting recent developments in international relations, and welcoming the universal recognition of the critical importance of the question of compliance with and verification of arms limitation and disarmament agreements,

1. Urges all States parties to arms limitation and disarmament agreements to implement and comply with the entirety of the spirit and provisions of such agreements;

2. Calls upon all Member States to give serious consideration to the implications of non-compliance with those obligations for international security and stability, as well as for the prospects for further progress in the field of disarmament;

3. Also calls upon all Member States to support efforts aimed at the resolution of non-compliance questions, with a view to encouraging strict observance by all parties of the provisions of arms limitation and disarmament agreements and maintaining or restoring the integrity of such agreements;

4. Welcomes the role that the United Nations has played in restoring the integrity of certain arms limitation and disarmament agreements and in the removal of threats to peace;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide assistance that may be necessary in restoring and protecting the integrity of arms limitation and disarmament agreements;

6. Encourages efforts by States parties to develop additional cooperative measures, as appropriate, that can increase confidence in compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements and reduce the possibility of misinterpretation and misunderstanding;

7. Notes, in this connection, the contribution that verification experiments and research can make and already have made in confirming and improving verification procedures in arms limitation and disarmament agreements under negotiation, thereby providing an opportunity, from the time that such agreements enter into force, for enhanced confidence in the effectiveness of verification procedures as a basis for determining compliance;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements".

Economic aspects of disarmament

Disarmament and development

As requested by the General Assembly in December 1990,<sup>(14)</sup> the Secretary-General reported, in October 1991,<sup>(15)</sup> on the relationship between disarmament and development, particularly the implementation of priorities for the period 1990-1993 as determined by a high-level intra-Secretariat task force in 1990.<sup>(16)</sup> The task force had been established pursuant to the Final Document adopted at the 1987 International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development.<sup>(17)</sup>

The report surveyed specific activities undertaken in 1990 and 1991.

On 20 September 1991 the task force reviewed the impact of the post-cold-war changes and noted, among other things, that while the long-term economic effects of reductions in military expenditures planned by the major military spenders were awaited, actual arms reduction measures had involved the costly destruction or disposal of existing weapons. In addition, there was widespread concern among major arms producers over the economic adjustments necessary to reorient military-related resources towards civilian purposes. It was also foreseen that some of the benefits from arms reductions among major military spenders would be used to attend to urgent domestic priorities, which did not exclude redirecting parts of the released resources towards the financing of development. The potential reductions of military expenditures in Central and Eastern Europe could also diminish competition for scarce capital internationally. The task force warned that unless the security concerns of developing countries were addressed and satisfactorily resolved, the challenges to their national survival could result in greater procurement of modern weapons through imports or domestic production.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/36 C without vote.

Relationship between disarmament and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly related to the relationship between disarmament and development,

Recalling also the adoption on 11 September 1987 of the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development,

Stressing the growing importance of the relationship between disarmament and development in current international relations,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General and actions undertaken in accordance with the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development;

2. Request the Secretary-General to continue to take action, through appropriate organs and within available resources, for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the International Conference;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Relationship between disarmament and development".

Reallocation of military resources

Pursuant to a General Assembly request of December 1990,<sup>(18)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted in September a study on charting potential uses of resources allocated to military activities for civilian endeavours to protect the environment.<sup>(19)</sup> The study, carried out by a group of six governmental experts appointed by the Secretary-General, provided background information on the environmental impact of military activities and recent changes in international military and political postures. It also covered environmental strategies and military-related resources, and environmental applications of military-related technologies.

The experts recommended that the United Nations promote environmental applications of military-related resources by facilitating global sharing of environmental data; developing plans to create international environmental relief teams making use of personnel, equipment and facilities from the military sector; acting as a clearing-house for international exchange of information about national experiences in environmental applications of military-related resources; encouraging the involvement of military personnel in promoting, through education and training, public awareness of the need for environmental compliance and in providing skills for monitoring environmental abuses; and giving due consideration to sustainable development and the transfer of military technology to the non-military sectors, and exploring ways of overcoming constraints on transfer of environmental technologies within and among States.

As to Governments, the experts recommended that they make inventories of their environmental needs and military-related resources applicable for environmental purposes, use such resources in national environmental action plans and report their experiences to the United Nations; consider the military-related resources they could place at the disposal of the United Nations or other international bodies on a temporary, long-term or standby basis as instruments of international multilateral cooperation for responding to environmental disasters and emergencies; ensure that military activities conformed to environmental norms and regulations and correct effects of past negligence; develop environmentally sound technologies for weapons disposal; incorporate environmental concerns in their military research and development programmes; integrate environmental preservation and sustainable development in their concepts of security; and make greater efforts to promote disarmament.

The expert group also recommended that the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (1992) consider incorporating its conclusions and recommendations into its work.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October,<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretary-General summarized views of 11 Governments concerning the conversion of military resources to civilian purposes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/36 B without vote.

Study on charting potential uses of resources allocated to military activities for civilian endeavours to protect the environment

The General Assembly,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General transmitting the study on charting potential uses of resources allocated to military activities for civilian endeavours to protect the environment,

Desirous of benefiting from progress in disarmament within the endeavours to protect the environment,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the report to the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development;
3. Also requests the Secretary-General to arrange for the reproduction of the study as a United Nations publication and to give it the widest possible distribution;

Disarmament and the environment

Convention to prohibit the hostile use of environmental modification techniques

As at 31 December 1991,<sup>(21)</sup> there were 55 parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques, adopted by the General Assembly in 1976<sup>(12)</sup> and in force since 1978.<sup>(22)</sup> In 1991, Algeria acceded to the Convention.

Second Review Conference

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/36 A without vote.

Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/72 of 10 December 1976, in which it referred the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques to all States for their consideration, signature and ratification and expressed the hope for the widest possible adherence to the Convention,

Noting that the second paragraph of article VIII of the Final Declaration of the First Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention, held in September 1984, provides that:

“The Conference, recognizing the importance of the review mechanism provided in article VIII, decides that a second Review Conference may be held at Geneva at the request of a majority of States Parties not earlier than 1989. If no Review Conference is held before 1994 the Depositary is requested to solicit the views of all States Parties concerning the convening of such a Conference in accordance with article VIII, paragraph 3, of the Convention”,

1. Notes that, as a result of consultations, a majority of States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques have expressed their wish to convene the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention in September 1992 and that, to that end, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, as Depositary of the Convention, will hold consultations with the parties to the Convention with regard to questions relating to the Conference and its preparation, including the establishment of a preparatory committee for the Conference;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services, including summary records, as may be required for the Second Review Conference and its preparation;

3. Also notes that arrangements for meeting the costs of the Second Review Conference and its preparation are to be made by the Conference.

It decided to request the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly in 1992 on activities undertaken in the framework of the International Committee of the Red Cross with regard to that issue and to include in the provisional agenda for 1992 the item entitled “Protection of the environment in times of armed conflict”. ## Nuclear disarmament

Nuclear-arms limitation and disarmament

In 1991, attention continued to focus on nuclear-arms limitation and disarmament and prevention of nuclear war at both the bilateral and multilateral levels.

On 31 July 1991, Presidents Bush, of the United States and Gorbachev of the USSR signed in Moscow the START Treaty, providing for radical cuts in their nuclear offensive arms. Subsequently, President Bush announced a unilateral decision on 27 September to reduce significantly the size and nature of United States nuclear deployments worldwide and to enhance stability.<sup>(1)</sup> President Gorbachev announced similar steps on 5 October<sup>(2)</sup> in response to that decision.

The Secretary-General, in reaction to those initiatives, expressed his hope that they would provide a new momentum to efforts to achieve further significant reductions in the nuclear arsenals of the USSR and the United States and contribute to greater stability. He urged other nuclear-weapon States to join in the bilateral effort.

Disarmament Commission consideration. The Disarmament Commission<sup>(3)</sup> entrusted a new agenda item entitled "Process of nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons" to its Working Group II. The Group discussed the relationship between the process of nuclear disarmament and international peace and security; review of the steps taken in the process of nuclear disarmament; strengthening the process of nuclear disarmament, necessary conditions, and mechanisms required for it; and the role of the United Nations system.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament<sup>(4)</sup> considered the topic of nuclear-war prevention during seven informal meetings held between 28 February and 25 July 1991. As in previous years, no consensus was reached on a mandate proposed by the group of 21 neutral and non-aligned States (Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire) for an ad hoc committee that would consider all relevant proposals, including appropriate and practical measures for preventing nuclear war.

The Conference considered the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament" in eight informal meetings held between 21 February and 1 August 1991. It was again unable to agree on the establishment of an ad hoc committee under the item.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/36 D by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/58 L of 4 December 1990 and previous resolutions, in which it requested the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly" and of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to consider urgently the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration,

Noting that the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament for 1991 included the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects" and that the programme of work of the Conference for all three parts of its 1991 session contained the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament",

Recalling the proposals and statements made in the Conference on Disarmament on those items,

Welcoming the improved relationship between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America and their consequent announcements of significant measures, which could signal the reversal of the nuclear-arms race,

Considering that the cessation of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes and the progressive conversion and transfer of stocks to peaceful uses would also be a significant step towards halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race,

Considering also that the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices would be an important measure in facilitating the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and explosive devices,

1. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, under the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to continue to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the General Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes".

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions,

Mindful that it is the responsibility and obligation of all States to contribute to the process of the relaxation of tension and to the strengthening of international security,

Stressing the importance of the strengthening of international security through disarmament and the halting of the qualitative and quantitative escalation of the arms race,

Stressing also that general and complete disarmament under effective international control is by its very nature unattainable unless all States have the responsibility and join in adopting and implementing measures towards that objective.

Emphasising that nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war remain one of the principal tasks of our times,

Concerned that the world is still threatened by the significant nuclear arsenals and that the primary responsibility for nuclear disarmament, with the objective of the total elimination of nuclear weapons, rests with the nuclear-weapon States, in particular those which possess the largest nuclear arsenals,

Noting with satisfaction the positive developments in the current international scene, in particular the cooperation between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, which contributes to the process of general and complete disarmament and the strengthening of international security,

Recalling that, at their meeting in Washington in 1990, the leaders of the two major nuclear Powers, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, agreed to pursue, among other efforts, new talks on the relationship between strategic offensive and defensive arms,

Welcoming the decision of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to suspend all nuclear tests throughout the next twelve months as a contribution towards the achievement of a comprehensive test-ban treaty,

Convinced that the international community should encourage the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America in their endeavours in the process leading to the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Affirming that bilateral and multilateral negotiations on disarmament should facilitate and complement each other,

1. Expresses its satisfaction at the continued implementation of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, in particular at the completion by both parties of the destruction of all their declared missiles subject to elimination under the Treaty;

2. Welcomes the signing of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms by the President of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the President of the United States of America in Moscow on 31 July 1991;

3. Also welcomes the unilateral decision announced by the President of the United States of America on 27 September 1991 significantly to reduce the size and nature of United States nuclear deployments worldwide and to enhance stability, as well as the similar steps announced by the President of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on 5 October 1991, in response to that decision;

4. Recalls the stated intention of the two Governments concerned to intensify, following the signature of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, further negotiations on other issues, in particular on preventing an arms race in space and achieving a comprehensive nuclear-test ban;

5. Encourages and supports the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America in their efforts to reduce their nuclear armaments and to give future negotiations the highest priority;

6. Invites the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to keep other Members of the United Nations duly informed of progress in their negotiations.

Nuclear-arms freeze

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, adopted in 1978 and unanimously and categorically reaffirmed in 1982 during the twelfth special session of the General Assembly,<sup>a</sup> the second special session devoted to disarmament, the Assembly expressed deep concern over the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Welcoming the new trends that have led to an improvement in the international security environment,

Welcoming also the announcements of the significant measures, including unilateral steps, by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, which could signal the reversal of the nuclear-arms race,

Welcoming the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, signed on 31 July 1991, and expressing the hope that it will be followed by agreement at an early date on further cuts in strategic nuclear arsenals,

Convinced of the urgency of further negotiations for the substantial reduction and qualitative limitation of existing nuclear arms,

Considering that a nuclear-arms freeze, while not an end in itself, would constitute an effective step to prevent the qualitative improvement of existing nuclear weaponry during the period when the negotiations take place, and that it would at the same time reinforce the favourable environment for the conduct of negotiations to reduce and eventually eliminate nuclear weapons,

Convinced also that the undertakings derived from the freeze can be effectively verified,

Welcoming the unilateral steps taken by the nuclear-weapon States for the cessation of the production of highly enriched uranium for nuclear weapons and for the shutting down of reactors producing weapons-grade plutonium,

Noting with concern that all nuclear-weapon States have not so far taken any collective action in response to the call made in the relevant resolutions on the question of a nuclear-arms freeze,

Convinced that the current international situation is most conducive to nuclear disarmament,

1. Urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, as the two major nuclear-weapon States, to reach agreement on an immediate nuclear-arms freeze, which would, inter alia, provide for a simultaneous total stoppage of any production of nuclear weapons and a complete cut-off in the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

2. Calls upon all nuclear-weapon States to agree, through a joint declaration, to a comprehensive nuclear-arms freeze, whose structure and scope would be the following:

(a) It would embrace:

- (i) A comprehensive test ban on nuclear weapons and on their delivery vehicles;

- (ii) The complete cessation of the manufacture of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
- (iii) A ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
- (iv) The complete cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

(b) It would be subject to appropriate and effective measures and procedures of verification;

3. Requests once again the nuclear-weapon States to submit a joint report, or separate reports, to the General Assembly, prior to the opening of its forty-seventh session, on the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Nuclear-arms freeze".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly, on 6 December 1991, adopted resolution 46/37 D by recorded vote.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the existence and use of nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to the survival of mankind,

Convinced also that nuclear disarmament is the only ultimate guarantee against the use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced further that a multilateral agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons should strengthen international security and contribute to the climate for negotiations leading to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, signed on 31 July 1991,

Welcoming also the announcements by the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America of significant measures, including unilateral steps, which could signal the reversal of the nuclear-arms race, and expressing the hope that these will be followed by agreements at an early date on further cuts in strategic nuclear arsenals,

Conscious that the recent steps taken by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America towards a reduction of their nuclear weapons and the improvement in the international climate can contribute towards the goal of complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Recalling that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that the use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 1991 session, was not able to undertake negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the text annexed to General Assembly resolution 45/59 B of 4 December 1990,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, as a matter of priority, in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons annexed to the present resolution;

2. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly on the results of these negotiations.

ANNEX

Draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The States Parties to this Convention,

Alarmed by the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that any use of nuclear weapons constitutes a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity,

Convinced that this Convention would be a step towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons leading to general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Determined to continue negotiations for the achievement of this goal,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

The States Parties to this Convention solemnly undertake not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons under any circumstances.

Article 2

2. This Convention shall be subject to ratification by signatory States. Instruments of ratification or accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. This Convention shall enter into force on the deposit of instruments of ratification by twenty-five Governments, including the Governments of the five nuclear-weapon States, in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article.

4. For States whose instruments of ratification or accession are deposited after the entry into force of the Convention, it shall enter into force on the date of the deposit of their instruments of ratification or accession.

5. The depositary shall promptly inform all signatory and acceding States of the date of each signature, the date of deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession and the date of the entry into force of this Convention, as well as of the receipt of other notices.

6. This Convention shall be registered by the depositary in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

Article 4

This Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall send duly certified copies thereof to the Government of the signatory and acceding States.

In witness whereof, the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed this Convention, opened for signature at — on the — day of — one thousand nine hundred and —.

Cessation of nuclear-weapon tests

Efforts towards achieving a nuclear-test ban in 1991 centred on the Amendment Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (1963) (also known as the partial test-ban Treaty).<sup>(5)</sup> The subject was also discussed by the Conference on Disarmament and the General Assembly.

Amendment Conference of States parties to the partial test-ban Treaty

At the request of more than one-third of the parties to the partial test-ban Treaty, the Amendment Conference was convened (New York, 7-18 January 1991)<sup>(6)</sup> by the depositary Governments (USSR, United Kingdom, United States) in accordance with the provisions of article II of the Treaty and pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of December 1990<sup>(7)</sup> to consider amending the Treaty to convert it into a comprehensive test-ban treaty. Of the 117 States parties to the Treaty, 100 participated. Prior to the Conference, parties to the Treaty were invited to submit their views regarding the verification of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban; as at 11 January 1991,<sup>(8)</sup> 10 had done so.

In view of the divergent positions on the practicality of amending the partial test-ban Treaty and of negotiating a ban in the Conference on Disarmament (see below), it was not possible to reach consensus on the agenda item "Consideration of the proposed amendment to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water as provided for in its article II, including reports of the Committees" or on the proposed amendment<sup>(9)</sup> and draft Protocol II on the verification of the proposed amendment to the Treaty<sup>(10)</sup> put forward jointly by Indonesia, Mexico, Peru, Sri Lanka, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

When it became clear that no consensus would be possible with regard to any extension, reconvening or resumption of the Conference, a draft decision sponsored by Indonesia, Mexico, Nigeria, Peru, the Philippines, Senegal, Sri Lanka, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela and Yugoslavia was put to a vote. The decision, adopted by a recorded vote of 74 to 2, with 19 abstentions, mandated the President of the Conference to conduct consultations with a view to achieving progress towards a comprehensive test ban and resuming the work of the Conference at an appropriate time.

In the general debate, a large majority of the 63 representatives who addressed the Conference supported the proposal to amend the partial test-ban Treaty to make it into an adequately verifiable, comprehensive test-ban instrument. Mexico commented on continuing underground testing by the three depositary States of the partial test-ban Treaty and on the apparent resolution by the two major depositary Powers of questions of verification of compliance in the context of their threshold test-ban and peaceful nuclear explosions treaties. Mexico felt that clarification of the depositaries' positions was one of the tasks of the Conference. Mexico, among others, held that the Conference provided a unique opportunity to amend the 1963 Treaty to provide the international community with a multilateral document which would ensure a complete cessation of nuclear testing.

Others speakers recognized various difficulties in achieving the objective of a complete halt to testing through the Conference. Several participants, including sponsors of the amendment approach, saw it at the least as requiring two or more sessions of the Conference. Others regarded the Conference as a milestone on the way to a complete test ban. Still others felt that the importance of the Conference lay in its potential to focus attention, mould public opinion and provide an impetus to endeavours to achieve that goal. A number of participants, including Western and associated States that regarded the approach as impractical, saw the Conference as providing a worthwhile opportunity for airing and clarifying views. Those holding that opinion- even if disappointed at the absence of substantive progress towards a ban thus far- generally identified the Conference on Disarmament, in which all the nuclear-weapon States were represented, as the appropriate forum for the negotiation of a verifiable comprehensive test-ban treaty.

The USSR felt that achievement of a nuclear-test ban was a priority issue, and that therefore all promising efforts, both bilateral and multilateral, should be pursued in parallel. It attached importance to both the Soviet-American step-by-step process and the work of the Conference on Disarmament, as well as to the Amendment Conference. However, other States parties, including the United Kingdom and the United States, which had voted consistently against the approach of holding a conference to amend the Treaty, while reiterating their commitment to a comprehensive test ban, stressed that the matter could not be considered in isolation from the continuing need for reliance on a nuclear deterrent. Both of those countries and many others made clear their support of further work on the complex issues relating to a nuclear-test ban in the Conference on Disarmament. The United States in particular questioned whether the amendment approach was in the best interests of the existing partial test-ban Treaty and its parties. It indicated that it would not participate in or provide financial support to any continuation of the Conference.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. While the Conference on Disarmament<sup>(4)</sup> considered the question of a nuclear-test ban in plenary meetings, the bulk of its substantive test-ban work took place in the Ad Hoc Committee on the item, which was established on 14 February 1991.<sup>(11)</sup>

In the Ad Hoc Committee, which held 17 meetings between 21 February and 22 August 1991, the group of 21 continued to stress the need for the Committee to have a negotiating mandate but delegations of the Western group maintained that the current mandate allowed for genuine progress on a nuclear-test ban. There continued to be a general acceptance of the final goal of a nuclear-test ban; however, differences remained on timing and modalities. Many delegations of the group of 21 stressed that for them a nuclear-test ban remained an absolute priority to halt the arms race. For delegations of the Western group, a nuclear-test ban remained a long-term goal and had to be seen in the context of the wider disarmament process. As to the Amendment Conference, the group of 21 delegations party to the partial test-ban Treaty felt that developments from that Conference should be taken into account and there should be a discussion on the draft Protocol II on verification of the proposed amendment to the partial test-ban Treaty.

In its report to the Conference, the Ad Hoc Committee recommended that its work should continue at the Conference's 1992 session.

Documents before the Conference in 1991 included those submitted by Australia and New Zealand<sup>(12)</sup> and Canada<sup>(13)</sup> on verification, and by Indonesia, Mexico, Peru, Sri Lanka, Venezuela and Yugoslavia transmitting draft Protocol II on verification of their proposed amendment to the partial test-ban Treaty.<sup>(14)</sup> In addition, Sweden submitted a draft comprehensive test-ban treaty and related protocols.<sup>(15)</sup>

The Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Cooperative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events held two sessions at Geneva in 1991 (thirty-first session, 11-21 February;<sup>(16)</sup> thirty-second session, 29 July-9 August).<sup>(17)</sup> It had conducted, as agreed in 1987,<sup>(18)</sup> the main phase of its second major technical test, a large-scale international experiment on the exchange and analysis of seismic data (GSETT-2). Thirty-four countries had participated in the test, providing seismic data for 42 consecutive days from 60 stations distributed around the world. The Group noted that as a result of GSETT-2, a unique seismological database had been established. Annexed to the Group's report was a summary report describing the preliminary results of GSETT-2.

Note by the Secretary-General. By a September note,<sup>(19)</sup> prepared in response to a General Assembly request of November 1987,<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretary-General reported that during the period 15 September 1990 to 14 September 1991 one Member State, the USSR, had reported a nuclear explosion. According to the USSR, the nuclear explosion, with a yield of between 20 and 150 kilotonnes, was conducted on 24 October 1990 in the Novaya Zemlya islands region to increase the reliability and safety of nuclear weapons. It stated that radiation in the test area was reported to be normal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/28 by recorded vote.

Amendment of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolutions 44/106 of 15 December 1989 and 45/50 of 4 December 1990,

Reiterating its conviction that a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty is the highest-priority measure for the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and for the achievement of the objective of nuclear disarmament,

Recalling also the central role of the United Nations in the field of nuclear disarmament and in particular in the cessation of all nuclear-test explosions, as well as the persistent efforts of non-governmental organizations in the achievement of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

Conscious of the growing environmental concerns throughout the world and of the past and potential negative effects of nuclear testing on the environment,-

Recalling its resolution 1910(XVIII) of 27 November 1963, in which it noted with approval the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water, signed on 5 August 1963, and requested the Conference of the Eighteen-Nation Committee on Disarmament<sup>a</sup> to continue with a sense of urgency its negotiations to achieve the objectives set forth in the preamble to the Treaty,

Recalling also that more than one third of the parties to the Treaty requested the Depositary Governments to convene a conference to consider an amendment that would convert the Treaty into a comprehensive test-ban treaty,

Reiterating its conviction that the Amendment Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear

Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water will facilitate the attainment of the objectives set forth in the Treaty and thus serve to strengthen it,

Recalling further its recommendation that arrangements be made to ensure that intensive efforts continue, under the auspices of the Amendment Conference, until a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty is achieved,

1. Notes with satisfaction that a substantive session of the Amendment Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water was held in New York from 7 to 18 January 1991, and takes note of its report;

2. Takes note of the decision adopted by the Amendment Conference to the effect that, since further work needed to be undertaken on certain aspects of a comprehensive test-ban treaty, especially those with regard to verification of compliance and possible sanctions against non-compliance, the President of the Conference should conduct consultations with a view to achieving progress on those issues and to resuming the work of the Conference at an appropriate time;

3. Welcomes the ongoing consultations being conducted by the President of the Amendment Conference and the holding in 1992 of more structured open-ended consultations, as well as the establishment of a group of friends of the President in order to examine various aspects of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban, with a view to resuming the work of the Conference as soon as possible thereafter;

4. Calls upon all parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water to participate in, and to contribute to the success of, the Amendment Conference for the achievement of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban at an early date, as an indispensable measure towards implementation of their undertakings in the preamble to the Treaty;

5. Urge all States, especially those nuclear-weapon States which have not yet done so, to adhere to the Treaty;

6. Recommends that arrangements should be made to ensure the fullest possible participation of non-governmental organizations in the Amendment Conference;

7. Reiterates its conviction that, pending the conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, the nuclear-weapon States should suspend all nuclear-test explosions through an agreed moratorium or unilateral moratoria;

8. Stresses once again the importance of ensuring adequate coordination among the various negotiating forums dealing with a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Amendment of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water".

France indicated that it did not participate in the vote because it was not a party to the 1963 Treaty.<sup>(5)</sup> It wished that action to be reflected in the record.

Also on 6 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/29 by recorded vote.

Comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty

The General Assembly,

Recalling previous resolutions which identify the complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests and a comprehensive test ban as one of the basic objectives in the field of disarmament,

Convinced that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Welcoming the improved relationship between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America and their consequent announcements of significant measures, including unilateral steps, which could signal the reversal of the nuclear-arms race,

Welcoming also the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, signed on 31 July 1991, and expressing the hope that it will be followed by agreement at an early date on further cuts in strategic nuclear arsenals,

Recognizing the ratification of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Underground Nuclear Weapon Tests, signed on 3 July 1974, and the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes, signed on 28 May 1976, together with their protocols,

Noting the decline, in comparison with previous years, in the number of nuclear tests conducted in 1990,

Convinced that an end to nuclear testing by all States in all environments for all time is an essential step in order to prevent the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear weapons and their further proliferation and to contribute, along with other concurrent efforts to reduce nuclear arms, to the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons,

Noting also concerns expressed about the environmental and health risks associated with underground nuclear testing,

Convinced also that the most effective way to achieve an end to nuclear testing is through the conclusion, at an early date, of a verifiable, comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty that will attract the adherence of all States,

Taking into account the undertakings by the original parties to the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water to seek to achieve the early discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time, and also noting the reiteration of this commitment in the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Noting with satisfaction the work being undertaken within the Conference on Disarmament by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Cooperative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, and in this context welcoming the second technical test concerning the global exchange and analysis of seismic data, Recalling that the Amendment Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water was held in New York from 7 to 18 January 1991,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States in all environments for all time is a matter of priority which would constitute an essential step in order to prevent the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear weapons and their further proliferation, and which would contribute to the process of nuclear disarmament;

2. Urge, therefore, all States to seek to achieve the early discontinuance of all nuclear-test explosions for all time;

3. Reaffirms the particular responsibilities of the Conference on Disarmament in the negotiation of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, and in this context urges the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban in 1992 with an appropriate mandate;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, in this context, to intensify its substantive work on specific and interrelated test-ban issues, including structure and scope and verification and compliance, taking also into account all relevant proposals and future initiatives;

5. Urges the Conference on Disarmament:

(a) To take into account the progress achieved by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Cooperative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, including the experience gained from the technical test concerning the global exchange and analysis of seismic data, and other relevant initiatives;

(b) To continue efforts to establish, with the widest possible participation, an international seismic monitoring network with a view to developing further a system for the effective monitoring and verification of compliance with a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(c) To investigate other measures to monitor and verify compliance with such a treaty, including on-site inspections, satellite monitoring and an international network to monitor atmospheric radioactivity;

6. Urges:

(a) The nuclear-weapon States to agree promptly to appropriate verifiable and militarily significant interim measures, with a view to concluding a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(b) Those nuclear-weapon States which have not yet done so to adhere to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water;

7. Culls upon the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on progress made;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session an item entitled "Comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty".

Strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament<sup>(4)</sup> considered effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons-also known as negative assurances. On 24 January 1991,<sup>(21)</sup> it re-established an ad hoc committee on the subject, which held 11 formal and 4 informal meetings between 12 March and 19 August.

In its conclusions and recommendations,<sup>(22)</sup> the Ad Hoc Committee reaffirmed the need for effective security assurances for non-nuclear-weapon States and stated that agreement on a common formula of assurance could not be reached due to persistent specific difficulties relating to differing perceptions of security interests and the complexity of the issues. It was generally agreed that the Ad Hoc Committee should be re-established in 1992 to continue to pursue ways of overcoming those difficulties.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/32 by recorded vote.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Welcoming the progress achieved in recent years in both nuclear and conventional disarmament,

Noting that, despite recent progress in the field of nuclear disarmament, further efforts are necessary towards the achievement of the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Also convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Determined strictly to abide by the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations on the non-use of force or threat of force,

Recognising that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures and arrangements to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing also that effective measures and arrangements to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can contribute positively to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document,

Recalling the relevant parts of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament, submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, and of the special report of the Conference on Disarmament submitted to the Assembly at its fifteenth special session,<sup>a</sup> the third special session devoted to disarmament, as well as of the report of the Conference on its 1991 session,

Recalling also paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item,

Taking note of the proposals submitted under that item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note also of the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,<sup>b</sup> as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference reiterated in the Final Communiqué of the Twentieth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Istanbul from 4 to 8 August 1991,<sup>c</sup> calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to reach an urgent agreement on an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note further of the unilateral declarations made by all nuclear-weapon States on their policies of non-use or non-threat of use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

Noting also the greater willingness to overcome the difficulties encountered in previous years,

Recalling its relevant resolutions adopted in previous years, in particular resolution 45/54 of 4 December 1990,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach an early agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to work actively towards an early agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula that could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including, in particular, those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends also that the Conference on Disarmament should actively continue intensive negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Nuclear non-proliferation

Nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace

In 1991, the international community continued to discuss the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace in various regions of the world. The establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones was seen as contributing, in principle, to the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons, the strengthening of the security of the countries concerned and confidence-building among them.

Africa

Since 1964, when the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa was adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU),<sup>(23)</sup> the General Assembly had annually called for its implementation. In 1991, as in previous years, the Assembly adopted two resolutions—one on the implementation of the Declaration and the other on the nuclear capability of South Africa.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a General Assembly request of December 1990,<sup>(24)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in October 1991 a report on South Africa's nuclear-tipped ballistic missile capability<sup>(25)</sup> containing the views of four Member States regarding an expert report on that subject which had been submitted to the Assembly in 1990.<sup>(26)</sup>

In an October report on the nuclear capability of South Africa,<sup>(27)</sup> the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that he had continued to follow nuclear developments in South Africa. He had been in contact with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and OAU and had received a letter from South Africa informing him that on 10 July it had acceded to NPT, which had entered into force in 1970.<sup>(29)</sup> Annexed to the report was an excerpt from a resolution on South Africa's nuclear capabilities adopted on 20 September 1991 at the IAEA General Conference.

Expert group meeting. Pursuant to an Assembly resolution of December 1990<sup>(30)</sup> requesting the Secretary-General to assist OAU in convening in 1991 a meeting of experts to examine the modalities and elements for preparing and implementing a convention or treaty on the denuclearization of Africa, Nigeria transmitted the report of that meeting (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 6-10 May 1991)<sup>(31)</sup> to the Assembly in October. Organized jointly by the United Nations Department for Disarmament Affairs and OAU, the meeting of experts discussed the legal form of the agreement establishing Africa's denuclearized status; the geographical zone to which such status would apply; the necessity for foreign Powers exercising trusteeship responsibilities in territories or islands forming a part of Africa to commit themselves to respect their denuclearized status; the need for South Africa to be subjected to the obligations deriving from Africa's status as a nuclear-weapon-free zone; and the need for States possessing nuclear weapons to agree in a satisfactory and consistent manner not to use such weapons against any African country and to fully respect the continent's nuclear-weapon-free status.

The group of experts agreed to recommend that the OAU Council of Ministers further establish an intergovernmental group of African experts to consider the report in depth. They also agreed to ask the United Nations Secretary-General, in consultation with the OAU Secretary-General, to convene a second meeting of their group.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/34 A by recorded vote.

Concerned about the transfer of nuclear missile technology to South Africa by a certain State commonly known for its collaboration with South Africa,

1. Calls upon South Africa to comply fully with the implementation of its safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Also calls upon South Africa to disclose all its nuclear installations and materials in conformity with its treaty obligations, and to enhance confidence-building, peace and security in the region;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the measures taken by the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency to verify the completeness of the inventory of South Africa's nuclear installations and materials;

6. Urges all Member States to assist and cooperate with the Secretary-General and the Director General to this end;

7. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which he rendered effective assistance to the Organization of African Unity in organizing the meeting of the group of experts;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964, in which they solemnly declare their readiness to undertake, through an international agreement to be concluded under United Nations auspices, not to manufacture or acquire control of atomic weapons,

Recalling its resolution 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, its earliest on the subject, as well as its resolutions

2033(XX) of 3 December 1965, 31/69 of 10 December 1976, 32/81 of 12 December 1977, 33/63 of 14 December 1978, 34/76 A of 11 December 1979, 35/146 B of 12 December 1980, 36/86 B of 9 December 1981, 37/74 A of 9 December 1982, 38/181 A of 20 December 1983, 39/61 A of 12 December 1984, 40/89 A of 12 December 1985, 41/55 A of 3 December 1986, 42/34 A of 30 November 1987, 43/71 A of 7 December 1988, 44/113 A of 15 December 1989 and 45/56 A of 4 December 1990, in which it called upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Bearing in mind also the provisions of resolution CM/Res.1342(LIV) on the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa<sup>a</sup> adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fifty-fourth ordinary session, held at Abuja from 27 May to 1 June 1991,

La tin America

The General Assembly continued to consider in 1991 the item on the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco), which concerned the application of the Treaty to territories in the region for which outside States had de jure or de facto responsibility. Three of the four States to which the Protocol was open were already parties to it. Those States were the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States. France, the fourth State, had signed Additional Protocol I, but had not yet ratified it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 October 1991, in the First Committee, 18 States—Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Barbados, Bolivia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Venezuela—introduced a draft text<sup>(32)</sup> entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 45/48 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)", which would have urged France not to delay in ratifying the Protocol. Following a statement by France that it was giving positive consideration to the possibility of doing so, the sponsors decided to withdraw the draft and to request that the General Assembly should include on the provisional agenda of its 1992 session an item entitled "Signature and ratification of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) and its two Additional Protocols". On 7 November, the sponsors of the draft submitted a draft decision<sup>(33)</sup> to that effect, which they later withdrew, saying that the withdrawal did not in any way affect their right to have the item placed on the 1992 provisional agenda at a later stage.

On 6 December 1991, by decision 46/411, the General Assembly took note of the report of the First Committee.<sup>(34)</sup>

Middle East

In response to a General Assembly request of December 1990,<sup>(35)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in July 1991(36) a report containing the views of 10 Member States on a 1990 expert study on effective and verifiable measures which would facilitate the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East,(37)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/30 without vote.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 of 9 December 1981, 37/75 of 9 December 1982, 38/64 of 15 December 1983, 39/54 of 12 December 1984, 40/82 of 12 December 1985, 41/48 of 3 December 1986, 42/28 of 30 November 1987, 43/65 of 7 December 1988, 44/108 of 15 December 1989 and 45/52 of 4 December 1990 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, and in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place all their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and to deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing also the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous of building on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Welcoming all initiatives leading to general and complete disarmament, including in the region of the Middle East, and in particular on the establishment therein of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear weapons,

Emphasizing the essential role of the United Nations in the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 45/52,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all countries of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Invites all countries of the region, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with paragraph 63 (d) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

4. Also invites those countries, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

5. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and the spirit of the present resolution;

6. Invites all parties to consider the appropriate means that may contribute towards the goal of general and complete disarmament and the establishment of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction in the region of the Middle East;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to conduct further consultations with the States of the region and other concerned States, on the basis of the study undertaken by him in accordance with paragraph 8 of resolution 43/65, as well as the views and suggestions submitted by Member States in accordance with paragraph 9 of resolution 45/52, taking into account the evolving situation in the region, to explore further the ways and means of establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

Israeli nuclear armament

In accordance with a General Assembly request of December 1990,(38) the Secretary-General reported in October 1991(39) that he had followed closely Israeli nuclear activities. Other than the text of a resolution of 20 September 1991 adopted by the IAEA General Conference on Israeli nuclear capabilities and threat, which he annexed to his report, no other information had been transmitted to him.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/39 by recorded vote.

Israeli nuclear armament

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its previous resolutions on Israeli nuclear armament, the latest of which is resolution 45/63 of 4 December 1990,

Recalling its resolution 44/108 of 15 December 1989, in which, inter alia, it called for placing all nuclear facilities in the region under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East,

Recalling also that the Security Council, in its resolution 487(1981), called upon Israel urgently to place all its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards,

Noting with grave concern Israel's persistent refusal to commit itself not to manufacture or acquire nuclear weapons, despite repeated calls by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Taking note of resolution GC(XXXV)/RES/570, adopted on 20 September 1991 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, Taking into consideration the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,<sup>a</sup> and in particular its paragraph 12, which relates to Israel's nuclear capabilities,

Deeply alarmed by the information with regard to the continuing production, development and acquisition of nuclear weapons by Israel and its testing of their delivery systems in the Mediterranean and elsewhere, thus threatening the peace and security of the region, and equally alarmed by reports of Israel's placing on alert its nuclear arsenal during conflicts in the Middle East,

Aware of the grave consequences that endanger international peace and security as a result of Israel's development and acquisition of nuclear weapons and Israel's collaboration with South Africa in developing their delivery systems,

Deeply concerned that Israel has not committed itself to refrain from attacking or threatening to attack safeguarded nuclear facilities,

1. Deplores Israel's refusal to renounce possession of nuclear weapons;
2. Expresses grave concern at the cooperation between Israel and South Africa in the military nuclear fields;
3. Expresses its deep concern regarding the information on Israel's continuing production, development and acquisition of nuclear weapons and testing of their delivery systems;
4. Reaffirms that Israel should promptly apply Security Council resolution 487(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, requested it to place all nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to refrain from attacking or threatening to attack nuclear facilities;

5. Calls upon all States and organizations that have not yet done so not to cooperate with or give assistance to Israel that could enhance its nuclear-weapons capability;

6. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to inform the Secretary-General of any steps Israel may take to place its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to follow closely Israeli nuclear activities and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Israeli nuclear armament".

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will assist in the strengthening of the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note of the proposal to convene, under the auspices of the United Nations, a conference on nuclear non-proliferation in South Asia as soon as possible, with the participation of the regional and other concerned States,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly regarding the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, including in the region of South Asia,

Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

Activities of the Committee on the Indian Ocean. The Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean held two sessions in 1991 (New York, 15-19 April, 1-12 July)(42) as it continued to consider practical measures for achieving the implementation of the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace.<sup>(43)</sup>

During its 1991 session, the Ad Hoc Committee, acting as the preparatory body for the United Nations Conference on the Indian Ocean, adopted the provisional rules of procedure of the Conference and substantive elements for its consideration. The Committee outlined three stages of the Conference, each to be held separately, dealing with a programme of action for finalizing an international agreement and adopting other practical measures for maintaining the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace; negotiating and finalizing international agreement(s) with arrangements for establishing and maintaining the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace; and signing those agreement(s).<sup>(44)</sup> The first stage of the Conference was to be held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, for up to 10 days. The Committee could not reach agreement on the issue of participation in the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/49 by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolutions 2992(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 3080(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3259 A (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3468(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/88 of 14 December 1976, 32/86 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/68 of 14 December 1978, 34/80 A and B of 11 December 1979, 35/150 of 12 December 1980, 36/90 of 9 December 1981, 37/96 of 13 December 1982, 38/185 of 20 December 1983, 39/149 of 17 December 1984, 40/153 of 16 December 1985, 41/87 of 4 December 1986, 42/43 of 30 November 1987, 43/79 of 7 December 1988, 44/120 of 15 December 1989, 44/77 of 12 December 1990 and other relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming that the establishment of zones of peace in various regions of the world under appropriate conditions, to be clearly defined and determined freely by the States concerned in the zone, taking into account the characteristics of the zone and the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and in conformity with international law, can contribute to strengthening the security of States within such zones and to international peace and security as a whole,

Recalling also the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean held in July 1979,

Recalling further paragraph 22 of the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,<sup>a</sup>

Convinced that agreement on such action should be facilitated by encouraging developments in international relations that could have beneficial effects on the region,

Also convinced that the continued military presence of the great Powers in the Indian Ocean area, conceived initially in the context of their confrontation, gives urgency to the need to take practical steps in the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration,

Preparations for the 1995 Review Conference on NPT

After the entry into force on 5 March 1970 of the NPT,(29) four quinquennial review conferences were held in 1975,(45), 1980,(46) 1985(47) and 1990.(48)

The States parties also agreed to convene an informal meeting in New York at the end of 1992 to decide on organizational aspects of the preparatory committee, which was to meet during the first half of 1993.

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee and as requested by the parties to NPT, the General Assembly by decision 46/413 took note of the intent of the parties to form a preparatory committee in 1993 for the conference called for in article X, paragraph 2, of the Treaty, and decided to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh (1992) session the item entitled "Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons: 1995 Conference and its preparatory committee".

Prohibition or restriction of other weapons

Chemical and biological weapons

In 1991, a qualitative change was seen in the multilateral negotiations on a global convention banning chemical weapons. The war in the Persian Gulf (see PART TWO, Chapter III) and the possibility that chemical weapons could be used added urgency to efforts to rid the world of such weapons. In May,(1) the United States announced its intention to unconditionally destroy its chemical weapons stocks and chemical weapons production facilities and to formally forswear the use of chemical weapons under any circumstances, including retaliation in kind against any State, as of the convention's entry into force.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. In 1991, the Conference on Disarmament<sup>(2)</sup> continued negotiations on a convention banning chemical weapons.

The Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons continued its work in informal consultations and a resumed session (8-18 January 1991) after the closure of the 1990 session.(3)

The Ad Hoc Committee, re-established by the Conference on 14 February, held 23 meetings from 20 February to 27 August. It was mandated to continue the full and complete process of negotiations, developing and working out the multilateral convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons and on their destruction, with a view to achieving an agreement as soon as possible. As a result of the United States initiative in May,(1) the Conference, on 20 June, amended the Ad Hoc Committee's mandate to include "use of chemical weapons" in the scope of the prohibition and to make explicit its commitment to strive to achieve a final agreement on the convention by 1992. To further intensify the negotiations, the Ad Hoc Committee also decided to hold additional meetings from 8 to 19 July. During 1991, 37 States not members of the Conference participated in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee.

The Ad Hoc Committee set up three working groups to deal with security, verification, and legal and institutional issues. The Chairman of the Committee held consultations on inspections on request; universality of the convention; its relation to other international agreements; assistance and protection against chemical weapons; economic and technological development; the executive council; and measures to redress a situation and ensure compliance, including sanctions. He also held consultations on a proposal to convene a session of the Conference at the foreign-minister level to promote the early conclusion of the convention.

Three Friends of the Chair were appointed to deal with technical issues related to schedules of chemicals, guidelines and definitions, as well as the modalities for their revision and time-limits for declarations; technical issues related to the destruction of chemical weapons and chemical weapons production facilities, including environmental aspects, and definition of other relevant facilities; and "old chemical weapons". The Committee decided to re-establish the technical group on an analytical database and laboratories.

The Committee continued its practice of convening meetings with representatives from the chemical industry on subjects relating to the convention. In addition, a meeting of experts on the technical aspects of the destruction of chemical weapons was held (7-11 October 1991).

New documents, mostly dealing with verification, were submitted; a number of them focused on results of national or multilateral trial inspections carried out at either civilian or military installations to establish whether the various provisions of the draft convention were applicable in practice. Those reports were submitted by Canada and the Netherlands,(5) France,(6) Germany,(7) Germany and the United Kingdom,(8) Iran,(9) New Zealand, Poland and the USSR,(11) Spain, the United Kingdom,(13) and the United States.(14) Other documents on a variety of verification issues were submitted by Austria,(15) Finland,(16) Norway,(17) Peru(18) and Sweden.(19)

As a continuing contribution towards confidence-building, transparency and openness, data relevant to the chemical weapons convention, including information on the non-possession of chemical weapons and the production of chemicals to be prohibited, restricted or subject to information exchange or verification, was provided by Chile,(20) Czechoslovakia(21) and Hungary.(22) Australia outlined a strategy for preparing the implementation of the chemical weapons convention in Australia(23) and Canada transmitted a study on the future international inspectorate.(24) The United States submitted information regarding its export controls on chemical weapons-related materials and technology and its domestic legislation to enforce them. (25)

The report of the Ad Hoc Committee, with its two appendices, was adopted by the Conference on 4 September.(4) Appendix I, the so-called rolling text, represented the stage of elaboration of the provisions of the draft convention, and appendix II contained papers reflecting the work undertaken so far on various issues, which were included as a basis for future work. The Ad Hoc Committee recommended that its work on the convention should continue between the end of the 1991 and the beginning of the 1992 sessions, and that it be re-established at the outset of the 1992 session with its current mandate.

6. Stresses the particular significance and importance of declarations made by States on whether or not they possess chemical weapons and of further international exchanges of data and other relevant information in connection with the negotiations on such a convention;

7. Welcomes those initiatives taken by States, and urges all States to take further initiatives, measures and steps on a national, bilateral, regional or multilateral basis to achieve rapid agreement in the negotiations on, and universal adherence to, such a convention;

8. Calls upon all States to consider declaring their intention to become original States parties to the convention so as to ensure its early entry into force, its effective implementation and its universal character;

Third Review Conference of the parties to the Convention on biological weapons

The Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (1971)(26) met at Geneva from 9 to 27 September 1991.(27)

The Convention had been opened for signature on 10 April 1972 and entered into force on 26 March 1975; its first Review Conference had met in 1980(28) and its second in 1986.(29) Preparations for the Third Review Conference were made by the Preparatory Committee, which held one session at Geneva from 8 to 12 April 1991.(30)

Of the 118 States parties at the time of the 1991 Review Conference, 78 participated. Also attending were six signatories and three observer States. The United Nations, including the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) and the United Nations Environment Programme, attended. The United Nations Scientific, Educational and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, and one regional intergovernmental agency, the League of Arab States, were granted Agency Observer Status. In addition, 11 non-governmental organizations (NGOs) participated.

The Conference elected Roberto García Moritán (Argentina) as its President. It established a Committee of the Whole to review the Convention's articles, preamble and purposes and to examine the question of a future review of the Convention and a drafting committee to prepare the draft final document and declaration.

On 27 September, the Conference adopted by consensus its Final Declaration which, in several aspects, provided more detailed measures for the implementation of various provisions of the Convention than did the Final Declarations of earlier review conferences, especially with respect to confidence-building measures. However, agreement on creating an institutional arrangement which would oversee the implementation of the Convention eluded the Conference. The format of such a body, as well as the potential costs involved, weighed heavily in preventing consensus on that issue.

The Conference agreed on a set of new confidence-building measures designed to prevent or reduce the occurrence of ambiguities and improve cooperation in the area of peaceful bacteriological activities. It established an ad hoc group of governmental experts to identify and examine potential verification measures from a scientific and technical standpoint. The ad hoc group would seek to evaluate potential verification measures, taking into account the broad range of types and quantities of microbial and other biological agents and toxins, whether occurring naturally or altered, which were capable of being used as means of warfare. It was decided that the group would meet at Geneva in March/April 1992 and complete its work before the end of 1993. Its report would be circulated to all States parties for their consideration; if the majority of States parties so requested, a conference would be convened to examine the report.

The Conference welcomed proposals developed by a group of experts,<sup>(31)</sup> endorsed by the General Assembly in 1990,<sup>(32)</sup> for technical guidelines and procedures to guide the Secretary-General in the timely and effective investigation of reports of the possible use of chemical and biological or toxin weapons.

The Conference decided, in accordance with article XII of the Convention, that the fourth review conference should be held at Geneva at the request of a majority of States parties not later than 1996 to consider, inter alia, the impact of science and technological developments relating to the Convention; relevance of the provisions of the proposed chemical weapons convention (see above) to the effective implementation of the biological weapons Convention; effectiveness of coordinated confidence-building measures as agreed in the Final Declaration; report of the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts on Verification and the conclusions of a special conference, if convened; requested allocation by the Secretary-General of staff resources and other requirements to assist the effective implementation of the relevant decisions of the Third Review Conference, and in particular of the confidence-building measures; and, in the light of those considerations and of the provisions of article XI, whether or not follow-up action was called for to create further cooperative measures in the context of article V or legally binding improvements to the Convention, or a combination of both.

By the end of 1991, the number of States parties to the Convention stood at 118.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/35 A without vote.

Stresses the importance, inter alia, of the solemn political declaration of the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference, and welcomes with satisfaction the results of the Third Review Conference, including in particular the expanded confidence-building measures related to activities relevant to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, and the establishment of an ad hoc group of governmental experts open to all States parties to identify and examine potential verification measures from a scientific and technical standpoint;

3. Calls upon all States parties to the Convention to participate in the implementation of the recommendations of the Third Review Conference, including in the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference, and to provide such information and data in conformity with the standardized procedure to the Secretary-General on an annual basis and not later than 15 April;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services as may be required for the implementation of the decisions and recommendations of the Third Review Conference;

5. Calls upon all signatory States that have not ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so without delay and also calls upon those States that have not yet signed the Convention to join the States parties thereto at an early date, thus contributing to the achievement of universal adherence to the Convention.

New weapons of mass destruction, including radiological weapons

The prohibition of radiological weapons continued to be considered in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly. The relevant Ad Hoc Committee continued to review the draft articles for a convention, and some progress was made concerning the texts on scope and definitions as well as on verification and compliance. However, the existing differences of view concerning the prohibition of attacks against nuclear facilities persisted and no progress was made on the crucial question of the scope of an eventual agreement. The Conference and the Assembly also continued to discuss the prohibition of the dumping of radioactive waste.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament(2) considered the item "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons", re-establishing the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons on 24 January with a view to reaching agreement on a convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons. The Ad Hoc Committee held six meetings between 25 February and 12 August; a number of informal consultations also took place.

The Ad Hoc Committee re-established contact group A to continue considering the prohibition of radiological weapons in the "traditional" sense, and contact group B on the prohibition of attacks on nuclear facilities. The reports of the two groups were annexed to the Committee's report.(33) The Ad Hoc Committee concluded that its work had contributed further to clarifying the different approaches to the two subjects under consideration.

The Conference recommended that the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons be re-established at the beginning of its 1992 session.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October 1991 report on the prohibition of attacks on nuclear facilities,(34) prepared in response to a General Assembly request of December 1990,(35) the Secretary-General referred to the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons and to a 1991 report by the IAEA Director-General, the relevant parts of which were included in the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/36 E without vote.

Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/58 F of 4 December 1990,

1. Takes note of the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1991 session that deals with the question of radiological weapons, in particular the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons;

2. Recognizes that in 1991 the Ad Hoc Committee made a further contribution to the clarification and better understanding of different approaches that continue to exist with regard to both of the important matters under consideration;

3. Takes note also of the recommendation of the Conference on Disarmament that the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons should be re-established at the beginning of its 1992 session;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue its substantive negotiation on the subject with a view to the prompt conclusion of its work, taking into account all proposals presented to the Conference to this end and drawing upon the annexes to the report of the Ad Hoc Committee as a basis of its future work, the result of which should be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all relevant documents relating to the discussion of all aspects of the issue by the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons".

3. Calls upon all States to take appropriate measures with a view to preventing any dumping of nuclear or radioactive wastes that would infringe upon the sovereignty of States;

4. Request the Conference on Disarmament to take into account, in the ongoing negotiations for a convention on the prohibition of radiological weapons, radioactive wastes as part of the scope of such a convention;

Conventional weapons and advanced technology

The trend towards emphasizing conventional aspects of the arms race, armaments and armed conflict in an increasingly technological era continued in 1991. Consideration of those and other interrelated issues reached a new level, owing in large part to the crisis in the Persian Gulf.

International transfers of conventional arms

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1988 request of the General Assembly, (36) the Secretary-General transmitted in September 1991 a study on ways and means of promoting transparency in international transfers of conventional arms. (37) The study conducted by a group of 18 experts reviewed past and current proposals and practices to promote transparency or regulate arms transfers and described the reason for and consequences of arms transfers. It presented an overview of the international transfer of conventional arms and examined the relationship between arms transfers, security, arms limitation and disarmament. Measures to promote transparency were discussed, as were the role of transparency in facilitating control and other measures of restraint, and illicit arms trade.

In its recommendations the group of experts encouraged States to make all their military activities as open as practicable and to ensure that they had the legal and administrative machinery to regulate and monitor effectively their arms transfers. It recommended establishing, as soon as possible, a universal and non-discriminatory arms transfer register under United Nations auspices and outlined the broad characteristics of such a register. The group further encouraged States to make efforts to achieve regional and subregional measures of transparency in relation to arms transfers by means of consultations, arrangements and agreements. The wider sharing of information on defence might be reflected in the provision of information to the United Nations or in the context of possible regional arrangements or both.

Concerning illicit arms trade, the group recommended that States take urgent action to eradicate it and proposed measures towards that end. The group believed the United Nations had a role to play in combating illicit arms trade by facilitating the holding of meetings and seminars at the national, regional and international levels to increase awareness of the destructive and destabilizing effects of the illicit arms trade and to increase the understanding of other countries' procedures in order to facilitate cooperation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/36 H without vote.

International arms transfers

The General Assembly,

Realizing the urgent need to resolve underlying conflicts, to diminish tensions and to accelerate efforts towards general and complete disarmament with a view to maintaining regional and international peace and security in a world free from the scourge of war and the burden of armaments,

Recognizing that the international transfer and production of conventional arms, including advanced weapons, delivery systems and military technology, have in recent decades acquired a dimension and qualitative characteristics that can give rise to serious and urgent concerns,

Greatly concerned by the illicit arms trade, a most disturbing and dangerous phenomenon, because of its destabilizing and destructive effects, particularly for the internal situation of affected States and the violation of human rights,

Recalling that in paragraph 85 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly it urged major arms suppliers and recipient countries to consult on the limitation of all types of international transfers of conventional arms,

Reaffirming the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament and the commitment of Member States to take concrete steps in order to strengthen that role,

Realizing that arms obtained through the illicit arms trade are most likely to be used for violent purposes, and that even small arms when so obtained, directly or indirectly, by terrorist groups, drug traffickers or underground organizations can pose a danger to regional and international security, and certainly to the security and political stability of the countries affected,

Considering that the illicit arms trade, representing a distinctly unique phenomenon, by its clandestine nature defies transparency and could not be dealt with by an arms transfers register,

Recalling its resolution 43/75 I of 7 December 1988,

Welcoming the study submitted by the Secretary-General, pursuant to paragraph 5 of resolution 43/75 I and prepared with the assistance of governmental experts, on ways and means of promoting transparency in international transfers of conventional arms, as well as the problem of the illicit arms trade,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the study on ways and means of promoting transparency in international transfers of conventional arms;

2. Calls upon all States to give high priority to eradicating the illicit trade in all kinds of weapons and military equipment, a most disturbing and dangerous phenomenon often associated with terrorism, drug trafficking, organized crime and mercenary and other destabilizing activities, and to take urgent action towards this end, as recommended in the study submitted by the Secretary-General;

3. Urges Member States to exercise effective control over their weapons and military equipment and their arms imports and exports to prevent them from getting into the hands of parties engaged in the illicit arms trade;

4. Also urges Member States to ensure that they have in place an adequate body of laws and administrative machinery for regulating and monitoring effectively their transfer of arms, to strengthen or adopt strict measures for their enforcement, and to cooperate at the international, regional and subregional levels to harmonize, where appropriate, relevant laws, regulations and administrative procedures as well as their enforcement measures, with the goal of eradicating the illicit arms trade as stated in the recommendations in the study;

5. Invites Member States to provide the Secretary-General with relevant information on their national legislation and/or regulations on arms exports, imports and procurement, and administrative procedures, as regards both authorization of arms transfers and prevention of the illicit arms trade;

6. Calls upon affected States to provide the Secretary-General, in accordance with national judicial procedures, information regarding arms and military equipment, seized by authorities, destined for the use of terrorists, drug traffickers and organized crime and for mercenary and other destabilizing activities, when this would assist the eradication of the illicit arms trade;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements to make available for consultation by Member States the information referred to in paragraph 5 above, and to publish the information provided in connection with paragraph 6 above;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to assist, upon request and within available resources, in holding meetings and seminars at the national, regional and international levels, as pertinent, with a view to:

(a) Promoting the concept of transparency as a confidence-building measure;

(b) Increasing the awareness of the destructive and destabilizing effects of the illicit traffic in arms and exploring ways and means for its eradication;

(c) Promoting the development of internationally harmonized laws and administrative procedures relating to official arms procurement and arms transfer policies;

(d) Promoting regional and international efforts to eradicate the illicit traffic in arms and providing advisory assistance to Member States, when so requested, on measures for enforcement of relevant rules and administrative procedures as recommended in the study, with a view to, inter alia, facilitating cooperation between Member States in the training of their customs and other appropriate officials;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on progress made in implementing the present resolution;

10. Requests the Disarmament Commission, at its organizational session in 1992, to consider including the issue of international arms transfers in the agenda of its substantive session in 1993;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "International arms transfers".

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 1st Committee 3-37; plenary 65.

On 9 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/36 L by recorded vote.

Transparency in armaments

The General Assembly,

Realizing that excessive and destabilizing arms build-ups pose a threat to national, regional and international peace and security, particularly by aggravating tensions and conflict situations, giving rise to serious and urgent concerns,

Noting with satisfaction that the current international environment and recent agreements and measures in the field of arms limitation and disarmament make it a propitious time to work towards easing tensions and a just resolution of conflict situations, as well as more openness and transparency in military matters,

Recalling the consensus among Member States on implementing confidence-building measures, including transparency and exchange of relevant information on armaments, likely to reduce the occurrence of dangerous misperceptions about the intentions of States and to promote trust among States,

Considering that increased openness and transparency in the field of armaments could enhance confidence, ease tensions, strengthen regional and international peace and security and contribute to restraint in military production and the transfer of arms,

Realizing the urgent need to resolve underlying conflicts, to diminish tensions and to accelerate efforts towards general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control with a view to maintaining regional and international peace and security in a world free from the scourge of war and the burden of armaments,

Recalling also that in paragraph 85 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly it urged major arms supplier and recipient countries to consult on the limitation of all types of international transfer of conventional arms,

Disturbed by the destabilizing and destructive effects of the illicit arms trade, particularly for the internal situation of affected States and the violation of human rights,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, Member States have undertaken to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, and that the reduction of world military expenditures could have a significant positive impact for the social and economic development of all peoples,

Reaffirming the important role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament and the commitment of Member States to take concrete steps in order to strengthen that role,

Recalling its resolution 43/75 I of 7 December 1988,

Welcoming the study submitted by the Secretary-General, pursuant to paragraph 5 of resolution 43/75 I and prepared with the assistance of governmental experts, on ways and means of promoting transparency in international transfers of conventional arms, as well as the problem of the illicit arms trade, taking into account views of Member States and other relevant information,

Recognizing the major contribution of an enhanced level of transparency in armaments to confidence-building and security among States, and also recognizing the urgent need to establish, under the auspices of the United Nations, as a first step in this direction, a universal and non-discriminatory register to include data on international arms transfers as well as other interrelated information provided to the Secretary-General,

Stressing the importance of greater transparency in the interest of promoting readiness to exercise restraint in accumulation of armaments,

Considering that the standardized reporting of international arms transfers together with the provision of other interrelated information to a United Nations register will constitute further important steps forward in the promotion of transparency in military matters and, as such, will enhance the role and effectiveness of the United Nations in promoting arms limitation and disarmament, as well as in maintaining international peace and security,

Recognizing also the importance of the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction,

1. Recognizes that an increased level of openness and transparency in the field of armaments would enhance confidence, promote stability, help States to exercise restraint, ease tensions and strengthen regional and international peace and security;

2. Declares its determination to prevent the excessive and destabilizing accumulation of arms, including conventional arms, in order to promote stability and strengthen regional or international peace and security, taking into account the legitimate security needs of States and the principle of undiminished security at the lowest possible level of armaments;

3. Reaffirms the inherent right to individual or collective self-defence recognized in Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, which implies that States also have the right to acquire arms with which to defend themselves;

4. Reiterates its conviction, as expressed in its resolution 43/75 I, that arms transfers in all their aspects deserve serious consideration by the international community, inter alia, because of:

(a) Their potential effects in further destabilizing areas where tension and regional conflict threaten international peace and security and national security;

(b) Their potentially negative effects on the progress of the peaceful social and economic development of all peoples;

(c) The danger of increasing illicit and covert arms trafficking;

5. Calls upon all Member States to exercise due restraint in exports and imports of conventional arms, particularly in situations of tension or conflict, and to ensure that they have in place an adequate body of laws and administrative procedures regarding the transfer of arms and to adopt strict measures for their enforcement;

6. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his study on ways and means of promoting transparency in international transfers of conventional arms, which also addressed the problem of the illicit arms trade;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to establish and maintain at United Nations Headquarters in New York a universal and non-discriminatory Register of Conventional Arms, to include data on international arms transfers as well as information provided by Member States on military holdings, procurement through national production and relevant policies, as set out in paragraph 10 below and in accordance with procedures and input requirements initially comprising those set out in the annex to the present resolution and subsequently incorporating any adjustments to the annex decided upon by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session in the light of the recommendations of the panel referred to in paragraph 8 below;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of a panel of governmental technical experts to be nominated by him on the basis of equitable geographical representation, to elaborate the technical procedures and to make any adjustments to the annex to the present resolution necessary for the effective operation of the Register, and to prepare a report on the modalities for early expansion of the scope of the Register by the addition of further categories of equipment and inclusion of data on military holdings and procurement through national production, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

9. Calls upon all Member States to provide annually for the Register data on imports and exports of arms in accordance with the procedures established by paragraphs 7 and 8 above;

10. Invites Member States, pending the expansion of the Register, also to provide to the Secretary-General, with their annual report on imports and exports of arms, available background information regarding their military holdings, procurement through national production and relevant policies, and requests the Secretary-General to record this material and to make it available for consultation by Member States at their request;

11. Decides, with a view to future expansion, to keep the scope of and the participation in the Register under review, and, to this end:

(a) Invites Member States to provide the Secretary-General with their views, not later than 30 April 1994, on:

(i) The operation of the Register during its first two years;

(ii) The addition of further categories of equipment and the elaboration of the Register to include military holdings and procurement through national production;

(b) Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of a group of governmental experts convened in 1994 on the basis of equitable geographical representation, to prepare a report on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development, taking into account the work of the Conference on Disarmament as set forth in paragraphs 12 to 15 below, and the views expressed by Member States, for submission to the General Assembly with a view to a decision at its forty-ninth session;

12. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to address, as soon as possible, the question of the interrelated aspects of the excessive and destabilizing accumulation of arms, including military holdings and procurement through national production, and to elaborate universal and non-discriminatory practical means to increase openness and transparency in this field;

13. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to address the problems of, and the elaboration of practical means to increase, openness and transparency related to the transfer of high technology with military applications and to weapons of mass destruction, in accordance with existing legal instruments;

14. Invites the Secretary-General to provide to the Conference on Disarmament all relevant information, including, inter alia, views submitted to him by Member States and information provided under the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures, as well as on the work of the Disarmament Commission under its agenda item entitled "Objective information on military matters";

15. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to include in its annual report to the General Assembly a report on its work on this issue;

16. Invites all Member States, in the meantime, to take measures on a national, regional and global basis, including within the appropriate forums, to promote openness and transparency in armaments;

17. Calls all Member States to cooperate at a regional and subregional level, taking fully into account the specific conditions prevailing in the region or subregion, with a view to enhancing and coordinating international efforts aimed at increased openness and transparency in armaments;

18. Also invites all Member States to inform the Secretary-General of their national arms import and export policies, legislation and administrative procedures, as regards both authorization of arms transfers and prevention of illicit transfers;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on progress made in implementing the present resolution, including relevant information provided by Member States;

20. Notes that effective implementation of the present resolution will require an up-to-date database system in the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session an item entitled "Transparency in armaments".

Science and technology

Disarmament Commission. The Disarmament Commission(39) established a working group to consider a new agenda item, "the role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields". The Group met from 24 April to 10 May and held 11 meetings in addition to informal consultations. It exchanged views on four aspects of the agenda item, including scientific and technological developments and their impact on security; science and technology for disarmament; the role of science and technology in other related fields; and the transfer of high technology with military applications.

Before the Commission were working papers by Argentina and Brazil on the international transfer of sensitive technologies; Austria,(41) Colombia,(42) and India(43) on science and technology's impact on international security; Canada,(44) on the conversion of military resources to civilian purposes; and the Netherlands, on behalf of the 12 States of the European Community (EC),(45) on international cooperation in the use of scientific and technological achievements for disarmament-related purposes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/38 D without vote.

The transfer of high technology with military applications

The General Assembly,

Having considered the annual report of the Disarmament Commission.

Taking note of the report of Working Group IV of the Disarmament Commission on the agenda item entitled "The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields",

Considering, in this connection, the interest expressed in the Working Group in continuing the consideration of the question of the transfer of high technology with military applications, bearing in mind the proposal for seeking universally acceptable international norms or guidelines to regulate such transfer,

Recognizing that norms or guidelines for the transfer of high technology with military applications should take into account legitimate requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, while ensuring that they do not deny access to high-technology products, services and know-how for peaceful purposes,

1. Calls upon the Disarmament Commission to continue its consideration, within the scope of its agenda, of all relevant aspects of the question of the transfer of high technology with military applications at its 1992 session, with a view to concluding its work on this matter at its 1993 session;

2. Invites all Member States to make available to the Secretary-General pertinent information and comments on this subject, taking into account arrangements, laws and regulations related to international transfers of high technology with military applications, as appropriate;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, taking into account the information and comments transmitted by Member States.

Regional disarmament and security-building measures

Disarmament Commission. In 1991, the Disarmament Commission(39) considered two agenda items relating to regional disarmament and confidence-building measures, entitled "regional approach to disarmament within the context of global security" and "objective information on military matters". The Chairman of the Commission stated that the two items were functionally interconnected.

A regional approach to disarmament was discussed by a working group of the Disarmament Commission from 24 April to 10 May during 11 meetings and a number of informal consultations. The working group's discussion focused on the relationship between regional disarmament and global security and arms limitation and disarmament; principles and guidelines; ways and means; machineries and modalities; and the role of the United Nations. The Chairman presented a paper containing his assessment of the discussions and overview of the issues raised, which was annexed to the Commission's report. It was understood that the document was not binding and it would be considered further at the Commission's 1992 session. Working papers outlining objectives and principles and possible approaches for the Commission to adopt in its work on the item were submitted by Australia,(46) Austria,(47) China,(48) Ecuador,(49) the Netherlands on behalf of the 12 States members of EC,(50) Pakistan(51) and the USSR.(52)

The working group dealing with objective information on military matters held 13 meetings from 24 April to 10 May. The group structured its discussions under four items: objectives; principles; scope; and mechanisms. Annexed to the Commission's report was a working paper by the group's Chairman, in which he recommended expanding and improving the United Nations reporting system on military expenditures; considering the establishment of a United Nations register (depending on the outcome of the ongoing study on conventional arms transfers); the periodic study, by a group of qualified experts, of possible methods for rendering nationally supplied data internationally comparable; and possible bilateral arrangements that might be formulated to promote the direct flow and exchange of information. Working papers were submitted by Australia,(53) China,(54) the Netherlands on behalf of the 12 States members of EC,(55) the USSR(56) and the United Kingdom.(57)

Reports of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in December 1990,(58) the Secretary-General presented in September 1991 the views of five Member States on conventional disarmament on a regional scale.(59) Also in September, the Secretary-General submitted a report with a later addendum,(60) as requested by the Assembly in December 1989,(61) summarizing activities relating to regional disarmament taken by the United Nations and UNIDIR. He also presented replies from 10 Governments regarding their regional disarmament efforts.

In response to another Assembly request of December 1989,<sup>(62)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report in July 1991, with a later addendum,<sup>(63)</sup> containing information received from six States on a set of principles to govern further action of States in freezing and reducing military budgets. In September,<sup>(64)</sup> with later addenda, the Secretary-General submitted his annual report on military expenditures in standardized form reported by 33 States. As in previous years, a majority of the responding States used the standard reporting instrument, consisting of a matrix designed to show how much each force group (such as land, naval and air forces) spent in each resource category (such as personnel, procurement and operations).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/25 without vote.

Transparency of military expenditures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/142 B of 12 December 1980, which introduced the United Nations system for the standardized reporting system on military expenditures,

Noting that since then national reports on military expenditures have voluntarily been submitted by a number of Member States belonging to different geographic regions,

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General for providing Member States with the reports on military expenditures, welcoming the decision of the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, as contained in the 1990 Vienna Document of the negotiations on confidence- and security-building measures, to exchange annually information on their military budgets, on the basis of the categories of the United Nations standardized-reporting system,

Welcoming also the recent progress achieved in arms limitations and disarmament, which, in the long term, will lead to significant reductions in military expenditures,

Convinced that the end of the East-West confrontation and the resulting improvement of international relations form a sound basis for promoting further openness and transparency on all military matters,

Emphasizing that an increased flow and exchange of information on military expenditures will contribute to the predictability of military activities, thus strengthening international peace and security on a global and regional level,

Recalling that the Disarmament Commission in dealing with objective information on military matters is currently developing principles, mechanisms and guidelines aimed at the enhancement of openness and transparency in military matters, including military expenditures,

1. Calls upon all Member States to participate in the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures as adopted by the General Assembly;

2. Encourages the Disarmament Commission to finalize its work on objective information on military matters in 1992;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session an item entitled "Transparency of military expenditures".

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 1st Committee 3-34; plenary 65.

The Assembly, on 6 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted without a vote resolution 46/36 F.

Regional disarmament, including confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/116 S, 44/116 U and 44/117 B of 15 December 1989 and 45/58 M and 45/58 P of 4 December 1990,

Considering that the adoption of regional disarmament measures is one of the most effective means by which States can contribute to international security, arms limitation and disarmament,

Recognizing that the regional and global approaches to disarmament complement each other and can be pursued simultaneously in the promotion of regional and international peace and security,

Noting that the recent events in the Middle East have underlined the importance of regional disarmament and that they justify in particular the search for a comprehensive and balanced control of armaments in the region, notably through a dialogue among the States of that region,

Convinced that disarmament can be carried out only in a climate of confidence based on mutual respect and aimed at ensuring better relations founded on justice, solidarity and cooperation,

Noting also that the volume of resources consumed for potentially destructive purposes is in stark contrast to social and economic development needs but that reduction in military expenditure following, inter alia, the conclusion of regional disarmament agreements could entail benefits in both the social and economic fields,

Considering that regional disarmament measures should be aimed at establishing a military balance at the lowest level while not diminishing the security of each State and at eliminating as a matter of priority the capability for surprise attacks and large-scale offensive action,

Noting further that disarmament measures in one region should not lead to increased arms transfers to other regions,

Considering also that measures of transparency are one of the essential elements in the implementation of regional disarmament,

Persuaded that verification measures are important to ensure compliance with regional agreements on arms control and disarmament,

1. Reaffirms that the regional approach to disarmament is one of the essential elements in the global process of disarmament;

2. Is convinced of the importance and effectiveness of regional disarmament measures taken at the initiative of States of the region and with the participation of all States concerned and taking into account the specific characteristics of each region, in that they can contribute to the security and stability of all States, in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and in compliance with international law and existing treaties;

3. Stresses the importance of confidence-building measures in ensuring the success of this process;

4. Notes with satisfaction the important progress made in various regions of the world through the conclusion of peace, security and cooperation agreements and following from the implementation of measures intended to enhance confidence in the fields of political, economic and military cooperation;

5. Affirms that regional and subregional agreements on arms control and disarmament can contribute to the peaceful settlement of disputes and conflicts;

6. Recognizes the useful role played by the regional centres of the United Nations;

7. Encourages States of the same region to examine the possibility of creating, on their own initiative, regional mechanisms and/or institutions for the establishment of measures in the framework of an effort of regional disarmament or for the prevention and the peaceful settlement of disputes and conflicts with the assistance, if requested, of the United Nations;

8. Stresses that confidence-building measures, including objective information on military activities and capabilities, are essential to the promotion of arms control and disarmament at the regional level;

9. Believes that regional initiatives should enjoy the support of all States of the region concerned and the respect of those outside that region;

10. Invites and encourages all States to conclude, whenever possible, agreements on disarmament and confidence-building measures at the regional level.

Confidence- and security-building measures and conventional disarmament in Europe

The General Assembly,

Determined to achieve progress in disarmament,

Stressing that confidence-building and disarmament measures have a positive impact on international security and are facilitated by the reduction of tensions,

Noting the work accomplished in 1991 by the Disarmament Commission within the framework of the Working Groups on its agenda items 4 and 6,

Expressing the hope that the improved international climate will facilitate the necessary efforts to build confidence, to lessen the risk of military confrontation and to enhance mutual security,

Recalling its resolutions 43/75 P of 7 December 1988, 44/116 I of 15 December 1989 and 45/58 I of 4 December 1990,

Reaffirming the great importance of increasing security and stability in Europe through the establishment of a stable, secure and verifiable balance of conventional armed forces at lower levels, as well as through increased openness and predictability of military activities,

Considering that the positive results of the negotiations on confidence- and security-building measures, as well as of those on conventional armaments and forces, both within the framework of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, have considerably increased confidence and improved security and cooperation in Europe, thereby contributing to international peace and security,

Welcoming the prospects for the early implementation of the measures agreed upon and the continuation of negotiations in these fields among the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe,

1. Notes with satisfaction the progress achieved so far in the process of disarmament and the strengthening of confidence and security in Europe;

2. Welcomes the determination of the States signatories of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe fully to implement its provisions and the determination of all the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe fully to implement the provisions of the Vienna Document on confidence- and security-building measures, as well as the decision of these States to continue negotiations in these fields;

3. Invites all States to consider the possibility of taking appropriate measures with a view to reducing the risk of confrontation and strengthening security, taking due account of their specific regional conditions.

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/58 M of 4 December 1990 on regional disarmament,

Believing that the efforts of the international community to move towards the ideal of general and complete disarmament are guided by the inherent human desire for genuine peace and security, the elimination of the danger of war and the release of economic, intellectual and other resources for peaceful pursuits,

Affirming the abiding commitment of all States to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations in the conduct of their international relations,

Noting that essential guidelines for progress towards general and complete disarmament were adopted at the tenth special session of the General Assembly, welcoming the prospects of genuine progress in the field of disarmament engendered in recent years as a result of negotiations between the two super-Powers,

Taking note of the recent proposals for disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation at the regional and subregional levels,

Recognizing the importance of confidence-building measures for regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that endeavours by countries to promote regional disarmament, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region and in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest level of armaments, would enhance the security of smaller States and would thus contribute to international peace and security by reducing the risk of regional conflicts,

1. Stresses that sustained efforts are needed, within the framework of the Conference on Disarmament and under the umbrella of the United Nations, to make progress on the entire range of disarmament issues;

2. Affirms that global and regional approaches to disarmament complement each other and should therefore be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

3. Calls upon States to conclude agreements, wherever possible, for nuclear non-proliferation, disarmament and confidence-building measures at regional and subregional levels;

4. Welcomes the initiatives towards disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation and security undertaken by some countries at the regional and subregional levels;

5. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at regional and subregional levels in order to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation measures at regional and subregional levels;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Regional disarmament".

Beating in mind the guidelines for general and complete disarmament adopted at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling also its resolutions 43/78 H and 43/85 of 7 December 1988, 44/21 of 15 November 1989 and 45/58 M of 4 December 1990,

Considering the importance and effectiveness of confidence-building measures taken at the initiative and with the participation of all States concerned and taking into account the specific characteristics of each region, in that they can contribute to regional disarmament and to international security, in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that the resources released by disarmament, including regional disarmament, can be devoted to economic and social development and to the protection of the environment for the benefit of all peoples, in particular those of the developing countries,

Bearing in mind the final document adopted by the States members of the Economic Community of Central African States on confidence-building measures, security, disarmament and development in their subregion,<sup>a</sup> at the seminar-workshop held at Yaoundé from 17 to 21 June 1991,

1. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at regional and subregional levels in order to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and non-proliferation measures at regional and subregional levels in Central Africa;

2. Welcomes the initiative taken by the States members of the Economic Community of Central African States with a view to developing confidence-building measures, disarmament and development in their subregion, by, in particular, the creation, under the auspices of the United Nations, of a standing advisory committee on security questions in Central Africa;

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

Preventing an arms race in outer space continued to be a focus of attention within the United Nations.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament<sup>(2)</sup> considered the item in the Ad Hoc Committee on outer space, which held 17 meetings from 26 February to 20 August 1991.

The Committee's work programme included examining and identifying issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, existing agreements, and existing proposals and future initiatives.

New documents submitted under the item included three submitted by Canada (concerning a paper on satellites harming other satellites and studies on overhead imaging for verification and peace-keeping)<sup>(a)</sup> and one by the United States (statement by Chief United States Negotiator for the Defence and Space Talks).<sup>(69)</sup>

Although a large number of members—principally non-aligned—thought it would be desirable to undertake negotiations immediately, the United States remained opposed to such a move.

Two aspects which figured more prominently in 1991 were anti-satellites (ASATS) and verification of an ASAT ban, and confidence-building measures. It was felt that the complex issue of ASATS would require intensive consultations in the future. As far as confidence-building measures were concerned, some Western States, among them Canada, France, Germany and Italy, presented the findings of their research pertinent to the subject and to the establishment of a regime to ensure stability for activities carried out in outer space.

In its conclusions, the Committee noted that there had been continued general recognition of the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space and of the significant role that the legal regime applicable to outer space was playing and the need to consolidate and reinforce that regime and enhance its effectiveness. The importance of strict compliance with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral, was also recognized.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/33 by recorded vote.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Reaffirming the provisions of articles III and IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies.

Recalling the obligation of all States to observe the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the use or threat of use of force in their international relations, including in their space activities,

Reaffirming paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that in order to prevent an arms race in outer space further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling also its previous resolutions on this issue and the Declaration adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,<sup>a</sup> and taking note of the proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions, and of the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Recognizing the grave danger for international peace and security of an arms race in outer space and of developments contributing to it,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, including bilateral agreements, and with the existing legal regime concerning the use of outer space,

Considering that wide participation in the legal regime applicable to outer space could contribute to enhancing its effectiveness,

Noting that bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have continued since 1985 with the declared objective of working out effective agreements aimed, inter alia, at preventing an arms race in outer space,

Welcoming the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space at the 1991 session of the Conference on Disarmament, in the exercise of the negotiating responsibilities of this sole multilateral body on disarmament, to continue to examine and identify, through substantive and general consideration, issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Noting also that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment in 1985 and seeking to enhance its functioning in qualitative terms, continued the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

ing an arms race in outer space, and hoping that concrete results will emerge from these efforts as soon as possible,

Convinced that further measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space,

Recalling in this context its resolution 45/55 B of 4 December 1990 which, inter alia, reaffirmed the importance of confidence-building measures as means conducive to ensuring the attainment of the objective of the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

1. Reaffirms the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective, in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;

2. Reaffirms its recognition, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal regime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that this legal regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, that there is a need to consolidate and reinforce that regime and enhance its effectiveness, and that it is important strictly to comply with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and of the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to refrain from actions contrary to that objective and to the relevant existing treaties in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international cooperation;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider as a matter of priority the question of preventing an arms race in outer space;

7. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its consideration of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, building upon areas of convergence and taking into account relevant proposals and initiatives, including those presented in the Ad Hoc Committee at the 1991 session of the Conference and at the forty-sixth session of the General Assembly;

8. Recognizes, in this regard, the relevance of considering measures on confidence-building and greater transparency and openness in space as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee;

9. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish an ad hoc committee with an adequate mandate at the beginning of its 1992 session and to continue building upon areas of convergence with a view to undertaking negotiations for the conclusion of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

10. Urge the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to pursue intensively their bilateral negotiations in a constructive spirit with a view to reaching early agreement for preventing an arms race in outer space, and to advise the Conference on Disarmament periodically of the progress of their bilateral sessions so as to facilitate its work,

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Information and studies

World Disarmament Campaign

In 1991, the World Disarmament Campaign—launched by the General Assembly in 1982 at the start of its second special session devoted to disarmament(1)—continued to generate public understanding and support for the disarmament objectives of the United Nations.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1991,(2) in his annual report on implementing the Campaign's objectives, the Secretary-General informed the Assembly of activities carried out by the United Nations system, including publishing and disseminating information materials, holding special events and publicizing activities. The Department for Disarmament Affairs organized five meetings on arms limitation, disarmament and security: a regional disarmament workshop for Asia and the Pacific (Bandung, Indonesia, 28 January-1 February); a seminar on confidence- and security-building measures (Vienna, 25-27 February); a conference on disarmament issues (Kyoto, Japan, 27-30 May); an expert meeting on denuclearization of Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 6-10 May); and a regional disarmament workshop for Latin America and the Caribbean (Mexico City, 1-5 July). The Department of Public Information continued to inform the public of United Nations activities concerning disarmament by providing radio and television coverage, answering public inquiries, arranging briefings for NGOs and organizing events at Headquarters and information centres around the world.

Regional centres for peace and disarmament

In September 1991,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the activities of the three regional centres for peace and disarmament covering Africa, Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean.

The United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, inaugurated in 1986 at Lomé, Togo,<sup>(4)</sup> focused on disseminating information on disarmament, peace and security, conducting seminars and conferences and undertaking studies. With regard to training, the Centre organized, in cooperation with Cameroon, a workshop on conflict resolution, crisis prevention and management and confidence-building among African States (Yaoundé, Cameroon, 17-21 June 1991) for members of the Economic Community of Central African States. In August, the Centre began publication of a quarterly newsletter, African Peace Bulletin.

As agreed by the Assembly in 1986,<sup>(5)</sup> the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean was established on 1 January 1987 and inaugurated at Lima, Peru, on 9 October. The Secretary-General reported that the Centre widened and strengthened its contacts and cooperation with governmental and non-governmental organizations, academic and other institutions and other United Nations bodies. It continued to serve as a resource centre for studies and researchers and expanded its reference library. United Nations publications were distributed throughout the region, and videos and films on disarmament were made available to universities, schools and institutions. The Centre and the Peruvian Foundation for the Conservation of Nature, with the sponsorship of the Friedrich Naumann Foundation, co-hosted a seminar on environment, development and peace (Lima, 24-26 April).

The United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific, established in 1987<sup>(6)</sup> and inaugurated on 30 January 1989 at Kathmandu, Nepal, focused on disseminating information on United Nations activities regarding arms limitation and disarmament, answering public inquiries and organizing yearly a meeting at the Centre. In 1991, 32 participants from Governments and research institutes and several observers from NGOs attended a regional meeting on confidence-building measures in the region (Kathmandu, 24-26 January).

Disarmament studies and research

Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters, formerly the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies, met in New York (twenty-second session, 12-18 July)<sup>(7)</sup> and considered the establishment of a global emergency system to provide early warning of crisis situations and strengthening mechanisms for preventive diplomacy and crisis prevention. It discussed promoting understanding between suppliers and recipients of modern weapons-related technologies, acceleration of the chemical weapons convention negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament (see above, under "Prohibition or restriction of other weapons"), actions to encourage the consideration of regional solutions to regional problems, establishment of a register of arms transfers and ways to control the illicit arms trade.

In 1991, the Advisory Board continued to act as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR. In that ca-capacity it considered and approved the report of the UNIDIR Director on the Institute's activities for 1990-1991 (see below) and the research programme and proposed annual budget for 1992. The Board was informed by the UNIDIR Director of the elements contained in UNIDIR's programme for 1993. It recommended a subvention from the regular United Nations budget amounting to $220,000 for 1992 to assure the independence of the Institute. In September,<sup>(8)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, accordingly, and the Assembly approved the subvention on 20 December (resolution 46/185).

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

In September 1991, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly UNIDIR's report covering the period from July 1990 to June 1991.<sup>(9)</sup> The report described UNIDIR's completed and ongoing research projects. UNIDIR continued to issue its quarterly publication, Newsletter. Its fellowship programme enabling scholars from developing countries to undertake research on disarmament also continued. Among UNIDIR's research projects were subjects such as disarmament and development; the economic dimension of disarmament agreements and negotiations; national concepts of security; problems related to outer space; chemical weapons; non-military aspects of security; regional approaches to disarmament, security and stability; and confidence-building measures for maritime security.

UN disarmament studies programme

In 1991, two studies were completed—one on promoting transparency in international transfers of conventional arms (see above, under "Conventional weapons and advanced technology") and another on charting potential uses of resources allocated to military activities for civilian endeavours to protect the environment (see above, under "Trends in multilateral disarmament").

In addition, there were two studies in progress during the year. One study, in response to a General Assembly request of December 1990,<sup>(10)</sup> dealt with defensive security concepts and policies. The Secretary-General had appointed experts from 12 countries to assist him in carrying out the study. The Group of Experts held an initial session in New York from 20 to 23 May. The second study, pursuant to an Assembly request of December 1990,<sup>(11)</sup> concerned confidence-building measures in outer space. Similarly, the Secretary-General appointed experts from 12 countries to assist him. That Group of Experts held an initial session in New York from 29 July to 2 August.

Education and information for disarmament

Pursuant to a General Assembly request of December 1989,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted, in October 1991,<sup>(13)</sup> the views of three Governments, one specialized agency, one United Nations body and nine NGOs on the current state of education for disarmament.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/27 without vote.

Education and information for disarmament

Recalling its resolution 44/123 of 15 December 1989,

Taking into account the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in particular paragraph 106 thereof, in which the Assembly urged Governments and governmental and non-governmental international organizations to take steps to develop programmes of education for disarmament and peace studies at all levels, considering that paragraphs 99, 100 and 101 of the Final Document provide for the mechanisms of a programme to mobilize world public opinion on behalf of disarmament, including the dissemination of information and publicity to complement the educational work,

Also considering that the World Disarmament Campaign plays an important role in complementing the educational efforts on behalf of disarmament carried out by Member States within their own educational and cultural development systems,

Recognizing that, in order to achieve irreversible results, it will be indispensable to carry out training programmes at all levels of formal education for the purpose of changing basic attitudes with respect to aggression, violence, armaments and war,

Noting with satisfaction the important changes that have taken place in many systems of government throughout the world aimed at promoting freedom, democracy, respect for and enjoyment of human rights, disarmament and economic and social development,

1. Expresses appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report submitted pursuant to resolution 44/123;

2. Also expresses appreciation for the valuable information contained in the report as provided by Member States, international governmental organizations, non-governmental organizations and educational institutions for peace and disarmament;

3. Reiterates that, in order to achieve the desired results, it is indispensable to carry out training programmes at all levels of formal education for the purpose of changing basic attitudes with respect to aggression, violence, armaments and war, especially at a time when important changes have taken place in many systems of government throughout the world aimed at promoting freedom, democracy, respect for and enjoyment of human rights, disarmament and social and economic development;

4. Considers that attainment of the vital objectives set out in the World Disarmament Campaign of informing, educating and generating understanding of and support for the goals of the United Nations in the sphere of disarmament would make a positive contribution to implementing the proposals contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and set out in the first preambular paragraph above;

5. Invites Member States and international governmental and non-governmental organizations and educational institutions for peace and disarmament to redouble their efforts to respond to the appeal made in paragraph 106 of the Final Document and to submit to the Secretary-General a report on their activities in this regard;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the reports requested in paragraph 5 above to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session under the item entitled "Education and information for disarmament".

Fellowship, training and advisory services programme

In October 1991,<sup>(14)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted his annual report on the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme stating that 25 fellows had been selected to participate during 1991. The programme, comprising lectures, seminars and panel discussions, research projects on peace and disarmament, simulation exercises and study visits, began on 22 July at Geneva and ended in New York on 16 November. During the first part of the programme the fellows followed meetings of the Conference on Disarmament, and during the latter part, the work of the First Committee. In the course of their work, they also paid study visits to IAEA headquarters at Vienna and, at the invitation of the States concerned, to offices and institutions in Finland, France, Germany, Japan, Sweden and the United States.

The training and advisory services programme was established in 1985<sup>(15)</sup> with a view to making such services available regionally. In 1991, two regional disarmament workshops were held under this aspect of the programme: one, for Asia and the Pacific (Bandung, Indonesia, 28 January-1 February), with the participation of representatives from 21 countries of the region; the other, with special emphasis on chemical weapons, for Latin America and the Caribbean (Mexico City, 1-5 July), also with 21 participants from that region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December 1991, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/37 E without vote.

United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly,<sup>a</sup> the second special session devoted to disarmament, in which it decided, inter alia, to continue the programme and to increase the number of fellowships from twenty to twenty-five as from 1983,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has already trained an appreciable number of public officials selected from geographical regions represented in the United Nations system, most of whom are now in positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament affairs in their respective countries or Governments,

Recalling also its resolutions 37/100 G of 13 December 1982, 38/73 C of 15 December 1983, 39/63 B of 12 December 1984, 40/151 H of 16 December 1985, 41/60 H of 3 December 1986, 42/39 I of 30 November 1987, 43/76 F of 7 December 1988, 44/117 E of 15 December 1989 and 45/59 A of 4 December 1990,

Noting also with satisfaction that the programme, as designed, has enabled an increased number of public officials, particularly from the developing countries, to acquire more expertise in the sphere of disarmament,

Believing that the forms of assistance available to Member States, particularly to developing countries, under the programme will enhance the capabilities of their officials to follow ongoing deliberations and negotiations on disarmament, both bilateral and multilateral,

1. Reaffirms its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly and the report of the Secretary-General approved by resolution 33/71 E of 14 December 1978;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Finland, France, Germany, Japan, Sweden and the United States of America for inviting the 1991 fellows to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme;

3. Notes with satisfaction that, within the framework of the programme, the Department for Disarmament Affairs of The Secretariat organized regional disarmament workshops for Africa in April 1989 at Lagos, for Asia and the Pacific in January 1991 at Bandung, Indonesia, and for Latin America and the Caribbean in July 1991 at Mexico City;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Nigeria, Indonesia and Mexico for their support of the regional disarmament workshops, as well as to the Governments of Norway and New Zealand for making financial contributions;

5. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the implementation of the programme within existing resources and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

Chapter III

Peaceful uses of outer space

During 1991, the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on outer space) and its Scientific and Technical and Legal Subcommittees continued their consideration of matters of international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space. The prevention of an arms race in outer space was taken up by the Conference on Disarmament's Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space.

The Committee on outer space held its thirty-fourth session (Graz, Austria, 27 May-6 June). The General Assembly, in December, endorsed the Committee's recommendations on various space-related issues (resolution 46/45) and reaffirmed the urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space (resolution 46/33).

Science, technology and law

Space science and technology

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee of the Committee on outer space held its twenty-eighth session in 1991 (New York, 19 February-1 March).<sup>(1)</sup> It continued to consider the United Nations Programme on Space Applications and the coordination of its activities, as well as the implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space held in 1982 (UNISPACE-82).<sup>(2)</sup> The Subcommittee also continued to examine other issues, including remote sensing of the Earth by satellites; the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; space transportation systems; the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit; life sciences, including space medicine; space activities related to the Earth environment; planetary exploration; astronomy; and International Space Year (1992).

Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 1990,<sup>(3)</sup> the Subcommittee re-established the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of UNISPACE-82 (see below).

During the Subcommittee's session, the Committee on Space Research (COSPAR) of the International Council of Scientific Unions and the International Astronautical Federation (IAF) organized a symposium (20 and 21 February) on applying airborne and satellite remote sensing for prospecting mineral and ground water resources and for monitoring and managing biological resources, with emphasis on agriculture.<sup>(4)</sup> The Subcommittee had selected that subject for special attention at its session.

The Subcommittee's recommendations were acted on by the Committee on outer space at its May/June session.<sup>(5)</sup>

UN Programme on Space Applications

The United Nations Programme on Space Applications, under its mandate given by the General Assembly in 1982,<sup>(6)</sup> emphasized the following activities: provision of fellowships for in-depth training and of technical advisory services to Member States and regional institutions; organization of regional and international training courses, seminars, workshops and expert meetings; assistance in the development of indigenous capability at the local level; acquisition and dissemination of space-related information; and promotion of cooperation between developed and developing countries, as well as among developing countries.

According to a report of December 1991 of the United Nations Expert on Space Applications,<sup>(7)</sup> the Programme received the following 18 long-term fellowship offers for 1991/92: two from Austria in microwave technology; 10 from Brazil in remote-sensing technology; two from China in geodesy, photogrammetry and remote sensing; and four from the European Space Agency (ESA) in space antennae and propagation, communications systems, remote-sensing information systems and satellite meteorology, at various ESA institutions.

In collaboration with ESA, the Programme conducted a survey and reviewed field projects that could benefit from remote-sensing data being made available by ESA to African countries within the perimeters of ESA's two ground-receiving stations at Maspalomas, Canary Islands, and Fucino, Italy. United Nations and ESA assistance was aimed at making available historical, current and future data from different satellites for use in irrigation, road, water and agricultural projects. The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia and the Programme organized a plenipotentiary meeting (Muscat, Oman, 21 and 22 December) on the Centre for Space Science and Technology Education for Western Asia, to discuss the importance of the Centre to the region and fund-raising prospects.

In 1991, the Programme conducted three training courses and three workshops. A workshop on basic space science for development was held at the Indian Space Research Organization's satellite centre (Bangalore, 30 April-3 May).<sup>(8)</sup> Attended by 40 scientists from 15 countries and three international organizations, the workshop focused on the significance of basic space science for developing countries and international cooperation, and discussion of planetary environment and atmosphere, space plasma processes, solar system science, planetary exploration, space astronomy and astrophysics.

In cooperation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and ESA, the Programme organized a workshop on microwave remote-sensing technology, hosted by the Instituto Nacional de Técnica Aeroespacial-Maspalomas Space Station, Canary Islands, from 10 to 14 June.<sup>(9)</sup> It was attended by 34 experts from 17 Member States and three international and intergovernmental organizations.

A workshop on the application of space techniques to combat natural disasters was organized by the United Nations, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) and the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator, in cooperation with the Government of China (Beijing, 23-27 September); it was attended by 72 participants from the ESCAP region and nine national and international organizations with expertise in combating disasters.<sup>(10)</sup>

The objective of a United Nations international training course on remote-sensing applications for environmental assessment and monitoring, organized with the United States (Sioux Falls, South Dakota, 9 September-4 October),<sup>(11)</sup> was to develop the practical knowledge and skills of the 23 participants and 2 observers from 25 countries in the multidisciplinary use of data sets for environmental study and resources management.

A United Nations international training course on remote-sensing applications to geological sciences was organized for 20 participants from 18 countries in cooperation with the German Government (Potsdam, 7-25 October).<sup>(12)</sup> The United Nations/World Meteorological Organization/ESA training course on the use of visible, infrared and radar sensor systems in hydrological and agrometeorological applications was held for the benefit of member States of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (Lima, Peru, 7-25 October).<sup>(13)</sup>

The General Assembly in 1989 had approved a budgetary appropriation under the regular

United Nations budget for the implementation of 1991 activities. In addition, the Programme was supported by voluntary contributions from Member States and their institutions, as well as from regional and international, governmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). In 1991, the Assembly approved another budgetary appropriation for programme activities during 1992-1993. The Subcommittee expressed concern over the limited financial resources available for carrying out the Programme and appealed to Member States for support.

The Assembly, in resolution 46/45, endorsed the Programme for 1992, as proposed by the Expert on Space Applications in a 1990 report,<sup>(14)</sup> and urged States to make voluntary contributions.

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1982 Conference on outer space

In 1991, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee noted that in 1990<sup>(3)</sup> the General Assembly had emphasized the urgency and importance of implementing the recommendations of UNISPACE-82.<sup>(2)</sup> The Assembly considered it particularly urgent to implement the following recommendations: that all countries should have the opportunity to use the techniques resulting from medical studies in space; that national and regional data banks should be strengthened and expanded and an international space information service should be established to function as a centre of coordination; that the United Nations should support the creation of regional training centres linked to institutions implementing space programmes; and that the United Nations should organize a fellowship programme to give graduates and postgraduates from developing countries in-depth, long-term exposure to space technology or applications.

The Subcommittee reconvened the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of UNISPACE-82, which held a series of meetings between 21 and 26 February 1991. The Group put forward several proposals which were subsequently endorsed by the Committee and by the Assembly in resolution 46/45. Among the proposals were: that the emphasis of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications should remain on long-term, project-oriented, on-the-job training in space technology and specific application areas; that States and international organizations should be requested to submit annually information on their space activities and that the Outer Space Affairs Division should prepare regular reports on the basis of such information; that the United Nations should continue to provide experts to help prepare national space applications programmes; that regional cooperation should be encouraged and that regional centres for space science and technology education should be established; that the participation of NGOS and of financial and development institutions in the Programme should be encouraged; and that countries with relevant capabilities should assist developing countries in establishing low-cost community receivers for communications satellites and low-cost power sources for their operation.

Remote sensing of the Earth by satellites

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 1990,<sup>(3)</sup> the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee gave priority consideration at its 1991 session to matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites. It took note of the programmes of China, France, India, Japan, the USSR and the United States for remote-sensing satellites, the planned remote-sensing satellite systems of Brazil, Canada and ESA, and the remote-sensing activities of FAO for mapping, assessment and management of renewable natural resources for the benefit of developing countries.

The Subcommittee reiterated that remote-sensing activities should take into account the need to provide assistance to developing countries, emphasized the importance of making remote-sensing data and analysed information available at reasonable cost and in a timely manner, and stated its belief that international cooperation in the use of remote-sensing satellites should be encouraged.

The Committee on outer space recognized the importance of international efforts to ensure the continuity, compatibility and complementarity of systems for remote sensing and to promote cooperation through regular meetings between satellite operators, ground station operators and users. It further recognized the importance of free distribution of meteorological information.

Nuclear power sources and safety in spacecraft

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee continued its consideration of the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, noted the work by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and other international organizations concerning international principles of radiation protection and agreed to invite Member States to report to the Secretary-General regularly on national and international research on the safety of nuclear-powered satellites. It called for further studies to be conducted on the problem of the collision of nuclear power sources with space debris. The Committee on outer space endorsed those recommendations.

Space transportation

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee noted that 1991 was the thirtieth anniversary of the first human space flight and reviewed the space transportation programmes of China, Japan, the USSR, the United States and ESA.

Technical aspects of the geostationary orbit

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considered the question of the utilization of the geostationary orbit- in which communications and other satellites were positioned some 36,000 kilometres above the equator. Some delegations contended that the orbit was subject to saturation, that existing technological and coordination procedures were not adequate, and that a special regime was required to ensure equitable access by all States. Others felt that in considering the issue of equitable access, account should be taken in particular of the characteristics of the equatorial countries. Still others expressed the view that the geostationary orbit was being addressed effectively by the International Telecommunication Union (ITU). The Subcommittee also reviewed developments in national and international space communications programmes, which would help ensure access for all countries to satellite communications. It took note of the various current and planned satellite communications programmes of Member States and of international organizations.

International Space Year (1992)

In 1991, the Committee on outer space and its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considered activities for International Space Year (ISY), to be held in 1992. Those activities, described in a guidebook, UN-ISY 1992: The Participation of the United Nations System in International Space Year, were planned to be complementary to the activities of international organizations such as COSPAR, IAF, the International Society for Photogrammetry and Remote Sensing and the Space Agency Forum for International Space Year, which included a World Space Congress in Washington, D.C., and a number of conferences, workshops and seminars in Japan.

The Committee noted that generous voluntary contributions were needed and that ISY activities would focus on the use of space technology for studying and monitoring the global environment. It suggested that Member States consider ways in which those activities could complement the efforts of the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII). The Committee invited the Conference secretariat to keep it informed of further developments relating to ISY.

Spin-off benefits of space technology

viewed the current status of spin-off benefits of space technology. It noted a study on the item, prepared by the Secretariat's Outer Space Affairs Division, and also took note of a working paper submitted by the USSR.

The Committee noted the rapidly growing importance of spin-off benefits and of international cooperation in developing such benefits and in ensuring that developing countries had access to them. It agreed that spin-offs of space technology were yielding substantial benefits in many fields and were providing new techniques for medicine, including dry heat sterilization, artificial bone matrix and artificial veins and arteries; spin-off applications for industry included quality control systems, dry lubricants, precision machining techniques, new materials, food processing and consumer electronics.

The Committee recommended that it continue consideration of the item in 1992.

Other questions

The Committee on outer space, as well as its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, dealt with various other space-related questions, such as life sciences, including space medicine; progress in national and international space activities related to the Earth environment, in particular progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme; and matters relating to planetary exploration and to astronomy.

The Committee noted that a number of special presentations had been made to the Subcommittee on those items by specialists from various countries. It expressed appreciation to COSPAR for the informative presentation on progress in the International Geosphere-Biosphere Programme. The Committee endorsed the Subcommittee's recommendations to continue consideration of those items at its 1992 session.

The Committee also recommended that the Secretariat invite Member States to submit annual reports on their space activities, including information on space programmes and spin-off benefits of space activities. The Committee further noted the participation in its work and that of its Subcommittees of various organizations, including FAO, IAEA, ICAO, ITU, WMO and UNESCO. ITU submitted to the Committee its thirtieth report on telecommunication and the peaceful uses of outer space.<sup>(15)</sup>

Space law

The Legal Subcommittee of the Committee on outer space held its thirtieth session in 1991 (New York, 25 March-12 April).<sup>(16)</sup> It continued to consider draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit; and the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all States.

The Committee took note of the Subcommittee's report as well as of the draft for a convention on manned space flight, presented to the Subcommittee by the International Astronautical Federation.

Legal aspects of nuclear power sources in spacecraft

Elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space continued in 1991 through a working group of the Legal Subcommittee. Several working papers were submitted, including one by Canada and Germany,<sup>(17)</sup> on which the Committee on outer space hoped to constitute a solid basis for consensus at the Subcommittee's next session.

As a result of its informal consultations, the Committee reached consensus on two draft principles dealing with responsibility and liability and compensation.

Legal aspects of the geostationary orbit and definition of outer space

The Subcommittee's working group on matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including ways to ensure its rational and equitable use without prejudice to the role of ITU, continued its work in 1991. After informal consultations on the subject, a "working non-paper" was introduced by a number of members of the Group of 77.

Summing up the discussion, the working group Chairman stated that the "non-paper" was useful and constructive, giving hope for positive debate in the future.

Exploration of outer space

The Subcommittee re-established its working group on the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries. The working group after discussion requested its Chairman to prepare for the 1992 Subcommittee session a paper summarizing in an analytical manner the responses of Member States to requests from the Secretary-General in 1988 and 1989, respectively, for their views as to the priority of subjects under the item and on international agreements they had entered into relevant to the principle.

A working paper on principles regarding the exploration and utilization of outer space was submitted by Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Uruguay and Venezuela and was annexed to the Subcommittee's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 46/45.

International cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 45/72 of 11 December 1990,

Deeply convinced of the common interest of mankind in promoting the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes and in continuing efforts to extend to all States the benefits derived therefrom, and of the importance of international cooperation in this field, for which the United Nations should continue to provide a focal point,

Reaffirming the importance of international cooperation in developing the rule of law, including the relevant norms of space law and their important role in international cooperation for the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Gravely concerned about the extension of an arms race into outer space,

Recognizing that all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, should contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international cooperation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Aware of the need to increase the benefits of space technology and its applications and to contribute to an orderly growth of space activities favourable to the socioeconomic advancement of mankind, in particular that of the people of developing countries,

Considering that space debris is an issue of concern to all nations,

Noting the progress achieved in the further development of peaceful space exploration and application as well as in various national and cooperative space projects, which contribute to international cooperation in this field,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the work of its thirty-fourth session,

1. Endorses the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

2. Invites States that have not yet become parties to the international treaties governing the uses of outer space to give consideration to ratifying or acceding to those treaties; taking into account the concerns of all countries, particularly those of developing countries, should:

(a) Continue, through its working group, the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear-power sources in outer space with the aim of finalizing the draft set of principles at its next session;

(b) Continue, through its working group, its consideration of matters relating to the definition and delimitations of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including consideration of ways and means to ensure the rational and equitable use of the geostationary orbit without prejudice to the role of the International Telecommunication Union;

(c) Continue, through its working group, its consideration of the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries;

(vii) The theme fixed for special attention at the 1992 session of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee: "Space technology and the protection of the Earth's environment: development of endogenous capabilities, in particular in the developing countries and in the context of International Space Year"; the Committee on Space Research and the International Astronautical Federation, in liaison with Member States, should be invited to arrange a symposium, with as wide a participation as possible, to be held during the first week of the Subcommittee's session, to complement discussions within the Subcommittee on the special theme;

8. Considers, in the context of paragraph 7 (a) (ii) above, that it is particularly urgent to implement the following recommendations:

(a) All countries should have the opportunity to use the techniques resulting from medical studies in space;

(b) Data banks at the national and regional levels should be strengthened and expanded and an international space information service should be established to function as a centre of coordination;

(d) The United Nations should organize a fellowship programme through which selected graduates or post-graduates from developing countries should get in-depth, long-term exposure to space technology or applications; it is also desirable to encourage the availability of opportunities for such exposure on other bilateral and multilateral bases outside the United Nations system;

9. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee should reconvene, at its twenty-ninth session, the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, to continue its work;

10. Also endorses the recommendations of the Working Group of the Whole of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, as endorsed by the Committee and as contained in paragraphs 4, 5 and 6 of the report of the Working Group of the Whole;

23. Also recommend that more attention be paid to all aspects related to the protection and the preservation of the outer space environment, especially those potentially affecting the Earth's environment;

24. Considers that it is essential that Member States pay more attention to the problem of collisions with space debris and other aspects of space debris and calls for the continuation of national research on this question, for the development of improved technology for the monitoring of space debris and for the compilation and dissemination of data on space debris, and that, to the extent possible, information thereon should be provided to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee in order to allow it to follow this area more closely;

Spacecraft launchings

During 1991, six countries (France, India, Italy, Japan, USSR, United Kingdom)<sup>(1)</sup> provided information to the United Nations on the launching of objects into orbit or beyond, in accordance with a 1961 General Assembly resolution<sup>(2)</sup> and article IV of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space,<sup>(3)</sup> which had entered into force in 1976.

Convention on registration of launchings

As at 31 December 1991, there were 36 States parties to the Convention on registration. In 1979, ESA had declared its acceptance of the rights and obligations of the Convention.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space of the Conference on Disarmament held 17 meetings in 1991 (Geneva, 26 February-20 August). The Committee had before it a number of new working papers on a variety of topics, among them confidence- and security-building, predictability measures in space activities of States, and the problem of debris and military activities in space.

The Committee examined various issues relevant to the item, including existing agreements and proposals, as well as future initiatives. It recognized that by itself the legal regime applicable to outer space did not guarantee the prevention of an arms race and that there was a need to consolidate, reinforce and enhance its effectiveness. The Committee further recognized the importance of strict compliance with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral, and of the bilateral negotiations between the USSR and the United States. The Committee recommended that it be re-established in 1992. On 4 September, the Conference adopted the Committee's report as a part of its report to the Assembly.<sup>(1)</sup>

On 6 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/33 by recorded vote.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Reaffirming also provisions of articles III and IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

Recalling the obligation of all States to observe the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the use or threat of use of force in their international relations, including in their space activities,

Reaffirming further paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that in order to prevent an arms race in outer space further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling also its previous resolutions on this issue and the Declaration adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,<sup>a</sup> and taking note of the proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions, and of the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Recognizing the grave danger for international peace and security of an arms race in outer space and of developments contributing to it,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, including bilateral agreements, and with the existing legal regime concerning the use of outer space,

Considering that wide participation in the legal regime applicable to outer space could contribute to enhancing its effectiveness,

Noting that bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have continued since 1985 with the declared objective of working out effective agreements aimed, inter alia, at preventing an arms race in outer space,

Welcoming the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space at the 1991 session of the Conference on Disarmament, in the exercise of the negotiating responsibilities of this sole multilateral body on disarmament, to continue to examine and identify, through substantive and general consideration, issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Noting also that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment in 1985 and seeking to enhance its functioning in qualitative terms, continued the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

Emphasizing the mutually complementary nature of bilateral and multilateral efforts in the field of preventing an arms race in outer space, and hoping that concrete results will emerge from these efforts as soon as possible,

Convinced that further measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space,

Recalling in this context its resolution 45/55 B of 4 December 1990 which, inter alia, reaffirmed the importance of confidence-building measures as means conducive to ensuring the attainment of the objective of the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

1. Reaffirms the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective, in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;

2. Reaffirms its recognition, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal regime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that this legal regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, that there is a need to consolidate and reinforce that regime and enhance its effectiveness, and that it is important strictly to comply with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and of the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to refrain from actions contrary to that objective and to the relevant existing treaties in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international cooperation;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider as a matter of priority the question of preventing an arms race in outer space;

7. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its consideration of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, building upon areas of convergence and taking into account relevant proposals and initiatives, including those presented in the Ad Hoc Committee at the 1991 session of the Conference and at the forty-sixth session of the General Assembly;

8. Recognizes, in this regard, the relevance of considering measures on confidence-building and greater transparency and openness in space as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee;

9. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish an ad hoc committee with an adequate mandate at the beginning of its 1992 session and to continue building upon areas of convergence with a view to undertaking negotiations for the conclusion of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

10. Urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to pursue intensively their bilateral negotiations in a constructive spirit with a view to reaching early agreement for preventing an arms race in outer space, and to advise the Conference on Disarmament periodically of the progress of their bilateral sessions so as to facilitate its work;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Chapter IV

Other political questions

In 1991, questions related to information, effects of atomic radiation, Antarctica and Cyprus were again on the General Assembly's agenda. Promotion of communication and the free flow of information and United Nations public information policies and activities were the subjects of two Assembly resolutions (46/73 A and B). The Assembly requested the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation to continue its work on the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources and noted with satisfaction the Committee's increasing cooperation with the United Nations Environment Programme (46/44). The Assembly also underlined the significance of Antarctica for international peace and security, environment, global climate conditions, economy and scientific research (46/41 A). The Assembly appealed again for the exclusion of South Africa from the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties until the system and practices of apartheid were eliminated (46/41 B).

The Secretary-General continued his mission of good offices concerning Cyprus with the goal of achieving overall agreement between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities, and the Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus.

Seven new States were admitted to United Nations membership, bringing the number of Members to 166. Boutros Boutros-Ghali of Egypt was named Secretary-General for a five-year term with effect from 1 January 1992.

Information

The public information activities of the United Nations continued to focus on publicizing the Organization's work and goals and enhancing the information capacities of developing countries. Those activities were carried out by the Department of Public Information (DPI) of the Secretariat, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC).

Information policies and activities were reviewed by the General Assembly's Committee on Information. The Committee held an organizational meeting in New York on 4 March 1991 and its thirteenth session from 4 to 19 April,<sup>(1)</sup> at which it dealt with three substantive questions: the establishment of a new, more just and more effective world information and communication order; United Nations public information policies and activities; and evaluation and follow-up of the efforts made and progress achieved by the United Nations system in the area of information and communications. The Committee submitted recommendations to the Assembly, which acted on them in resolutions 46/73 A and B.

Mass communication

UNESCO activities. UNESCO continued to pursue in 1991 its new strategy for the development of communication and the free flow of information, agreed upon at its General Conference in 1989. As part of a continuing effort to support freedom of the press, UNESCO, in conjunction with DPI, organized a seminar on promoting an independent and pluralistic African press (Windhoek, Namibia, 29 April-3 May 1991). The seminar approved by acclamation a Declaration, which, among other things, called for the convening of a seminar of journalists and managers of radio and television services in Africa to explore the possibility of applying similar concepts of independence and pluralism to those media.

The General Conference of UNESCO (twenty-sixth session, Paris, 15 October-7 November) adopted a resolution on the promotion of press freedom in the world, which was transmitted to the General Assembly at its 1991 session.<sup>(2)</sup> The resolution invited the Director-General of UNESCO to extend to other regions the action taken so far in Africa and Europe to encourage press freedom and promote the independence and pluralism of the media; to commemorate the anniversary of the Windhoek Declaration adopted on 3 May; to transmit to the Assembly the wish expressed by UNESCO member States to have 3 May declared International Press Freedom Day; and, to mark that day, to examine with the United Nations Secretary-General ways of issuing a report on the progress of press freedom in the world.

UNESCO helped establish a Central and Eastern European Media Centre at Warsaw, Poland, which opened in March 1991 to serve as a regional mechanism to respond to the urgent needs in Eastern European countries to train journalists, to exchange information and documentation, and to introduce in the Eastern European mass media the principles and practices prevailing in societies with independent and pluralistic media.

UNESCO assisted in the organization of a tricontinental meeting on South-South cooperation in communications (Lima, Peru, 31 March-5 April), which was called to outline areas of collaboration among key communication institutions in Asia, Africa and Latin America, especially in the areas of media education, television flow and research on new communication technologies.

The UNESCO International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC) continued to support projects aimed at meeting the needs of developing countries in the fields of communications, information and mass media infrastructures. The twelfth session of the IPDC Intergovernmental Council was held in Paris (11-18 February 1991).<sup>(3)</sup>

During the 1990-1991 biennium,<sup>(4)</sup> 95 projects amounting to $24,477,992 were submitted to the IPDC Council for financing, as compared with 104 projects totalling $14,849,640 during 1988-1989. Of the projects approved by the Council, 53 were financed under the IPDC Special Account and 15 under funds-in-trust arrangements. The financing capacity of the Special Account could meet only about 15 per cent of the total amount requested with an average of $78,200 per project.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 46/73 A.

Information in service of humanity

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the comprehensive and important report of the Committee on Information,

Also taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on questions relating to information,

Urges that all countries, organizations of the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned, reaffirming their commitment to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to the principles of freedom of the press and freedom of information, as well as to those of the independence, pluralism and diversity of the media, deeply concerned by the disparities existing between developed and developing countries and the consequences of every kind arising from those disparities that affect the capability of the public, private or other media and individuals in developing countries to disseminate information and communicate their views and their cultural and ethical values through endogenous cultural production, as well as to ensure the diversity of sources of and their free access to information, recognizing the call in this context for what in the United Nations and at various international forums has been termed "a new world information and communication order, seen as an evolving and continuous process", should:

(a) Cooperate and interact with a view to reducing existing disparities in information flows at all levels by increasing assistance for the development of communication infrastructures and capabilities in developing countries, with due regard for their needs and the priorities attached to such areas by those countries, and in order to enable them and the public, private or other media in developing countries to develop their own information and communication policies freely and independently and increase the participation of media and individuals in the communication process, and to ensure a free flow of information at all levels;

(b) Ensure for journalists the free and effective performance of their professional tasks and condemn resolutely all attacks against them;

(c) Provide support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes for broadcasters and journalists from public, private and other media in developing countries;

(d) Enhance regional efforts and cooperation among developing countries, as well as cooperation between developed and developing countries, to strengthen communication capacities and to improve the media infrastructure and communication technology in the developing countries, especially in the areas of training and dissemination of information;

(e) Aim, in addition to bilateral cooperation, at providing all possible support and assistance to the developing countries and the media, public, private or other, in the developing countries, with due regard to their interests and needs in the field of information and to action already adopted within the United Nations system, including:

- (i) The development of the human and technical resources that are indispensable for the improvement of information and communication systems in developing countries and support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes, such as those already operating under both public and private auspices throughout the developing world;
- (ii) The creation of conditions that will enable developing countries and their media, public, private or other, in developing countries, to have, by using their national and regional resources, the communication technology suited to their national needs, as well as the necessary programme material, especially for radio and television broadcasting;
- (iii) Assistance in establishing and promoting telecommunication links at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, especially among developing countries;
- (iv) The facilitation, as appropriate, of access by the developing countries to advanced communication technology available on the open market;
- (f) Provide full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which should support both public and private media.

11 December 1991 Meeting 69 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/46/641) without vote, 27 November (meeting 29); draft by Chairman of Committee on Information (A/SPC/46/L.5); agenda item 75.

UN public information

DPI activities

In response to a General Assembly resolution of 1990,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary General submitted a report in October 1991<sup>(6)</sup> on questions relating to information, which focused on special activities and products of DPI, including its cooperation with UNESCO and the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries; its activities in connection with international peace and security, the World Disarmament Campaign, human rights, women and their role in society, economic and social development, African recovery and development, environment and development, and the international campaign against illicit trafficking in narcotics and drug abuse; activities against apartheid; activities related to the Middle East situation and Palestine; the Yearbook of the United Nations; strengthening United Nations information centres (UNICs); dissemination of information to educators and educational institutions; and the orientation programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries.

The Committee on Information made several recommendations on the work of DPI and the United Nations system, which were the basis of Assembly resolution 46/73 B. The Committee had before it reports on the 1990 activities of JUNC,<sup>(7)</sup> public information activities of the United Nations pertaining to the situation in the Middle East and the question of Palestine,<sup>(8)</sup> technical assistance to radio stations that were broadcasting or willing to broadcast to South Africa,<sup>(9)</sup> and a review of the Yearbook of the United Nations.<sup>(10)</sup>

During 1991, in response to a recommendation of the Committee, DPI made special efforts to strengthen UNICs and enhance the qualitative balance among them with respect to the discharge of their responsibilities, allocations and resources, and specialists' services. Such action included regional meetings of UNIC directors in Africa and Europe, special briefing programmes for key local staff and improvement of electronic communications capabilities. The total number of UNICs in 1991 was 61, of which 22 were in Africa, 14 in Asia, 13 in Europe and 12 in the Americas.

In 1990,<sup>(11)</sup> the General Assembly had urged the Secretary-General to facilitate and expedite the establishment of a UNIC at Windhoek. An agreement to establish it was signed between the Government of Namibia and the United Nations on 21 August 1991.

Coordination in the UN system

JUNC activities. The inter-agency Joint United Nations Information Committee, which coordinated information activities in the United Nations system, held its seventeenth session in New York (24-26 June 1991).<sup>(12)</sup> Its discussions covered special events, United Nations participation in international exhibits, the United Nations Non-Governmental Liaison Service, Development Forum, inter-agency cooperation in audio-visual productions, services rendered by UNICS, and the use of computer technology in the area of information. #### Radiation effects

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its fortieth session at Vienna (13-17 May 1991),<sup>(1)</sup> continuing its work on the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources. It took note of a General Assembly request of 1990<sup>(2)</sup> that it continue its review of problems of radiation doses and effects.

The Committee examined documents prepared by the Secretariat on various subjects and focused its technical discussions on radiation exposures-natural, man-made environmental, medical and occupational; radiation effects on the developing human brain and on the environment; epidemiological evaluations of radiation effects; dose and dose-rate effects on radiation response; mechanisms of radiation oncogenesis; deterministic effects of radiation in children; hereditary effects of radiation; stimulation effects from low-level radiation; and perception of radiation risks. The Committee made suggestions for the further development of those topics, in particular pointing out additional information to be considered.

With regard to obtaining more extensive data for exposure evaluations, the Committee noted that many replies had been received from Member States on medical and occupational radiation exposures, but that additional data were desirable in most of the areas discussed, particularly on levels of radon indoors and on releases of radioactive materials from industrial uses of materials and from activities connected with the nuclear fuel cycle.

The Committee received a presentation of an international review assessing the consequences in the USSR of the 1986 Chernobyl accident. The Committee hoped that the results of the international conference which would conclude the project would clarify the scientific issues and lead to better public understanding of the accident and the consequences associated with it (see PART SEVEN, Chapter I).

Antarctica

Antarctica and the environment

Reports of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 1990,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report in October 1991<sup>(2)</sup> on the state of the environment in Antarctica and its impact on the global system. The report considered the Antarctic atmosphere, including ozone depletion and the carbon dioxide balance; terrestrial and marine environments; and scientific research and protection of the Antarctic environment. The Secretary-General concluded that the increase of scientific activities in Antarctica and man-induced phenomena such as the depletion of the ozone layer had increased public awareness of the dangers to the Antarctic environment and to the global system. Moreover, speculation about possible exploitation of Antarctic mineral resources and its detrimental environmental impact had become a source of concern. In the preceding five years, a number of initiatives had been taken in various forums, including the Antarctic Treaty system, seeking answers to questions related to protecting the Antarctic environment and its associated ecosystems.

Also in October,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General presented a study on the feasibility of establishing a United Nations-sponsored station in Antarctica to help promote coordinated international cooperation in scientific research, particularly in regard to the global environment and ecosystems, as well as to provide early warning of climate change and accidents. The study, requested by the Assembly in 1990,<sup>(1)</sup> provided mainly technical information and cost estimates. It concluded that the execution of such a project would be a complicated exercise and that the active involvement of Member States with expertise in the area, relevant United Nations programmes, specialized agencies and other international governmental and non-governmental organizations would be essential.

Annexed to the report were replies to the Secretary-General's invitation for submission of pertinent information from three Member States—one of them acting on behalf of the States parties to the 1959 Antarctic Treaty—six United Nations organizations and programmes, and Greenpeace International.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/41 A by roll-call vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of Antarctica",

Recalling its resolutions 38/77 of 15 December 1983, 39/152 of 17 December 1984, 40/156 A and B of 16 December 1985, 41/88 A and B of 4 December 1986, 42/46 A and B of 30 November 1987, 43/83 A and B of 7 December 1988, 44/124 A and B of 15 December 1989 and 45/78 A and B of 12 December 1990,

Recalling also the relevant paragraphs of the final documents adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,<sup>a</sup> the second meeting of States of the Zone of Peace and Cooperation of the South Atlantic, held at Abuja from 25 to 29 June 1990,<sup>b</sup> the Nineteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Cairo from 31 July to 5 August 1990,<sup>c</sup> and the meeting of the Commonwealth Heads

Conscious also of the interrelationship between Antarctica and the physical, chemical and biological processes that regulate the total Earth system,

Welcoming the increasing recognition of the significant impact that Antarctica exerts on the global environment and ecosystems and of the need for a comprehensive agreement to be negotiated by the international community on the protection and conservation of the Antarctic environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems,

Sharing the concern over the environmental degradation of Antarctica and its impact on the global environment expressed at the first, second and third substantive sessions of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Welcoming the increasing support, including by some Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties, for the establishment of Antarctica as a nature reserve or world park to ensure the protection and conservation of its environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems for the benefit of all mankind,

Welcoming the signing of the Protocol on Environmental Protection by the Antarctic Treaty parties on 3 October 1991 at Madrid, which among other things banned prospecting and mining in and around Antarctica for the next fifty years,

Welcoming also the ongoing trend in acknowledging the need for internationally coordinated scientific research stations in Antarctica in order to minimize unnecessary duplication and logistical support facilities,

Welcoming further the increasing awareness of and interest in Antarctica shown by the international community, and convinced of the advantages to the whole of mankind of a better knowledge of Antarctica,

Affirming its conviction that, in the interest of all mankind, Antarctica should continue for ever to be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it should not become the scene or object of international discord,

Reaffirming that the management and use of Antarctica should be conducted in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and of promoting international cooperation for the benefit of mankind as a whole,

Convinced of the need to prevent or minimize any negative impact of human activity resulting from the large

Expresses its regret that, despite the numerous resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, the Secretary-General or his representative has not been invited to the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties, and urges once again the Consultative Parties to invite the Secretary-General or his representative to their future meetings;

4. Reiterates its call upon the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to deposit information and documents covering all aspects of Antarctica with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on his evaluations thereof to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

5. Expresses its disappointment, while welcoming the recent signing at Madrid of the Protocol on Environmental Protection by the Antarctic Treaty parties, that the Protocol was not negotiated with the full participation of the international community;

6. Expresses its concern that the Madrid Protocol on Environmental Protection lacks the monitoring and implementation mechanisms to comply with the provisions of the Protocol and has not taken into consideration the call of the international community to ban permanently prospecting and mining in Antarctica;

7. Underlines its call that any move at drawing up an international convention to establish a nature reserve or world park in Antarctica and its dependent and associated ecosystems must be negotiated with the full participation of the international community;

8. Reaffirms the need to promote public awareness of the importance of Antarctica to the ecosystem, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of providing the relevant materials on Antarctica through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat;

9. Calls upon the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to increase the level of cooperation and collaboration with a view to reducing the number of scientific stations in Antarctica;

10. Urges all members of the international community to ensure that all activities in Antarctica are carried out exclusively for the purpose of peaceful scientific investigation and that all such activities will ensure the maintenance of international peace and security and the protection of the Antarctic environment and are for the benefit of all mankind;

Cyprus question

Under the mandate entrusted to him by the Security Council, the Secretary-General continued his mission of good offices concerning Cyprus, with the objective of preserving the State of Cyprus and establishing a new constitutional arrangement between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities. He undertook to convene a high-level international meeting to work out an overall agreement. However, the meeting was delayed by parliamentary elections and a subsequent change of government in Turkey.

The Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), in June and December 1991.

Although the question of Cyprus was included in the agenda of the forty-sixth (1991) General Assembly session (decisions 45/458 of 16 September and 46/402 of 20 September), it was not discussed. However, in suspending the session on 20 December, the Assembly retained the question on its agenda (decision 46/468).

Secretary-General's good offices

The Secretary-General's mission of good offices in Cyprus focused on establishing a new constitutional arrangement that would regulate the relations of the Greek Cypriot and 'Turkish Cypriot communities on a federal, bi-communal and bi-zonal basis, while at the same time preserving the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of the State of Cyprus. In the efforts to reach an overall agreement that would take into account the interests and concerns of both sides, discussions were held during the year with the leaders of the two communities as well as with Greek and Turkish government representatives.

Following a statement by the Secretary-General on 27 March 1991 to the Security Council on his mission of good offices, the Council President on 28 March issued the following statement on behalf of the Council members: (1)

"The members of the Council have considered the Secretary-General's report on his mission of good offices in Cyprus. They are unanimous in expressing their full support of his current efforts.

"The members of the Council agree with the Secretary-General's assessment of the current situation, including the main issues that remain to be clarified before an outline can be completed, and encourage him to continue his efforts along the lines he has proposed by making suggestions to facilitate the discussions.

"The members of the Council reaffirm Security Council resolution 649(1990) and the mandate for the Secretary-General's mission of good offices as set out in resolution 367(1975); and recall that resolution 649(1990) reaffirmed in particular Security Council resolution 367(1975) as well as the Council's support for the 1977 and 1979 high-level agreements between the leaders of the two communities. This should continue to serve as the basis for the Secretary-General's effort to arrive at an agreed outline.

"The members of the Council urge all concerned to act in a manner consistent with resolution 649(1990), to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and to continue the discussions that have taken place over the past few months in order to resolve without delay the outstanding issues.

"The members of the Council welcome the Secretary-General's intention to submit a further report by early July 1991 on his effort to arrive at an agreed outline of an overall settlement. The members of the Council will decide, in the light of the situation at that time, on any further measures for proceeding that may be necessary."

In another statement, on 27 June, the Secretary-General said he found attractive the idea of a high-level international meeting that would result in an agreed outline for an arrangement, provided that it was thoroughly prepared to ensure its success. To that end, he proposed two rounds of discussions to be undertaken by his representatives in July and August with all concerned to elaborate a set of ideas that would bring the parties within agreement range on all the issues. He suggested that, following those discussions, he would assess whether the conditions were ripe for a high-level meeting. The Council endorsed that approach in the following statement, issued on its behalf by its President on 28 June:(2)

"The members of the Security Council have considered the Secretary-General's report on his mission of good offices in Cyprus. They are unanimous in reiterating their full support of his current efforts.

"The members of the Council recall that they had urged all concerned to cooperate with the Secretary-General and to continue the discussions with a view to resolving without delay the outstanding issues. They regret that, despite the Secretary-General's effort, the necessary progress has not yet been made on these outstanding issues.

"The members of the Council endorse the Secretary-General's view that a high-level international meeting, if properly prepared and of adequate duration, could give his effort the necessary impetus and achieve an agreed outline of an overall settlement. They agree with the Secretary-General's judgement that before such a meeting could be held the two sides should be within agreement range on all the issues. They urgently appeal to all concerned to spare no efforts to achieve this goal.

"The members of the Council further endorse the Secretary-General's intention to have his aides meet with all concerned during the months of July and August to try to work out a set of ideas that would bring the two sides within agreement range on each of the eight headings of the outline. The members of the Council request the Secretary-General to pursue these consultations urgently and to assist this process by making suggestions.

"The members of the Council request the Secretary-General to provide a full report to the Council by the end of August on the substance of the ideas that were discussed and the responses of all concerned, and to provide his assessment of the situation, particularly with regard to whether the conditions are conducive to a successful outcome of a high-level international meeting."

Reporting to the Council again on 8 October,(3) the Secretary-General stated that, although differences remained to be resolved on a number of issues, the set of ideas elaborated by his representatives in August provided the basis for an overall framework agreement. Summing up, he emphasized that it was important that the preparatory work be concluded without delay so that a high-level meeting could be convened. To that end, he requested his representatives to resume their discussions with both sides in early November in order to finalize the set of ideas for an agreement. If that effort proceeded in keeping with the basic principles adopted by the Council and accepted by both sides in 1977 and 1979, he was confident that it would be possible to convene the high-level meeting before the end of 1991. He concluded by appealing again to both sides to refrain from any counter-productive statements or actions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

On 11 October, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 716(1991).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 8 October 1991 on his mission of good offices in Cyprus,

Noting with satisfaction the progress made in preparing a set of ideas as the basis for arriving at an agreed overall framework agreement on Cyprus,

Noting with concern the difficulties encountered in completing this work,

Regretting that it was not possible to convene the high-level international meeting<sup>7</sup> foreseen in the statement by the President of the Security Council of 28 June 1991,

1. Commends the Secretary-General for his efforts during the past few months and endorses his report and observations;

2. Reaffirms its previous resolutions on Cyprus;

3. Reaffirms its position on the Cyprus question, expressed most recently in resolution 649(1990) and in line with the 1977 and 1979 high-level agreements between the parties in Cyprus, that the fundamental principles of a Cyprus settlement are the sovereignty, Independence, territorial integrity and non-alignment of the Republic of Cyprus; the exclusion of union in whole or in part with any other country and any form of partition or secession; and the establishment of a new constitutional arrangement for Cyprus that would ensure the well-being and security of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities in a bi-communal and bi-zonal federation;

4. Reaffirms that its position on the solution to the Cyprus problem is based on one State of Cyprus comprising two politically equal communities as defined by the Secretary-General in the eleventh paragraph of annex I to his report dated 8 March 1990;

5. Calls upon the parties to adhere fully to these principles and to negotiate within the framework of them without introducing concepts that are at variance with them;

6. Reaffirms that the Secretary-General's mission of good offices is with the two communities whose participation in the process is on an equal footing;

7. Endorses the Secretary-General's intention to resume discussions in early November with the two parties in Cyprus and Greece and Turkey to complete the set of ideas on an overall framework agreement;

8. Considers that convening a high-level international meeting chaired by the Secretary-General in which the two communities and Greece and Turkey would participate represents an effective mechanism for concluding an overall framework agreement on Cyprus;

9. Requests the leaders of the two communities and Greece and Turkey to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and his representatives so that the high-level international meeting can be convened before the end of this year;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council in November 1991 whether sufficient progress has been made to convene the high-level international meeting and, should conditions not be ripe, to convey to the Council the set of ideas as they will have evolved by that time with his assessment of the situation.

Security Council resolution 716(1991)

11 October 1991 Meeting 3013 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23137).

Further report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with the Council's request, the Secretary-General submitted on 19 December a further report on his mission of good offices in Cyprus.<sup>(4)</sup> He noted that, as a result of parliamentary elections and the subsequent change of government in Turkey, the discussions towards the convening of a high-level meeting had had to be postponed. He expressed disappointment that the Cyprus question had not been resolved, but was convinced that the two communities would recognize that a solution was in their respective self-interest.

The Secretary-General believed that the framework for a settlement had become clear and an agreement would result in the establishment of a bi-communal and bi-zonal federation, i.e., one State comprising two politically equal communities in which sovereignty would be equally shared but indivisible. He stressed that the expectations raised earlier in the year to convene a high-level international meeting to conclude an overall framework agreement must not be lost. It was vital that the set of ideas that had emerged be preserved and completed in preparation for such a meeting. It was also important for both sides, with the necessary flexibility and realism, to focus their attention on the establishment of a federal republic. The Secretary-General believed that a solution was within reach if all concerned were willing to contribute to a compromise solution that would safeguard the interests and concerns of both sides.

UNFICYP

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, established by the Security Council in 1964,<sup>(5)</sup> continued throughout 1991 to supervise the cease-fire lines of the Cyprus National Guard and of the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces. It also continued to provide security for civilians in the area between the lines; discharge its functions with regard to the security, welfare and well-being of the Greek Cypriots living in northern Cyprus; visit regularly Turkish Cypriots residing in the south; and support United Nations relief operations. The area between the cease-fire lines-the buffer zone-was kept under constant surveillance by UNFICYP through a system of 150 observation posts, with 51 of them permanently manned as at 30 November 1991.

As part of its efforts to promote a return to normal conditions, UNFICYP continued to facilitate economic and other civilian activities in the areas between and adjacent to the cease-fire lines, including assisting both communities with regard to the supply of electricity and water. It also continued to provide frequent emergency medical services to civilians of both communities and cooperated with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in providing humanitarian assistance to needy displaced persons.

Report of the Secretary-General (May). The Secretary-General submitted a report on 31 May 1991(6) on the United Nations operation in Cyprus, covering developments from 1 December 1990 to 31 May 1991. The report brought up to date the activities of UNFICYP and the Secretary-General's mission of good offices. It showed that UNFICYP had continued to perform its functions, often under difficult circumstances. The Secretary-General recommended an extension of its mandate for a further six months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 14 June, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 697(1991).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 31 May 1991,

Taking note also of the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1991,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 December 1991;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 30 November 1991;

3. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to cooperate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 697(1991)

14 June 1991 Meeting 2992 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/22700).

Report of the Secretary-General (November). The Secretary-General submitted another report on 30 November,<sup>(7)</sup> covering the United Nations operation in Cyprus since 1 June. He expressed regret that the political climate on the island had not improved to the point where UNFICYP's initiatives for a return to normal conditions could progress unimpeded. He had no doubt that UNFICYP's presence remained indispensable and therefore recommended to the Council an extension of its mandate for a further six months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 12 December, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 723(1991).

The Security Council,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 30 November 1991,

Noting also the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting further that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December 1991,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 June 1992;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 31 May 1992;

3. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to cooperate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 723(1991)

12 December 1991 Meeting 3022 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23281).

Financing of UNFICYP

Report of the Secretary-General (May). In his report of 31 May on the United Nations operations in Cyprus,(6) the Secretary-General also noted that voluntary contributions from Governments to the part of the financing of UNFICYP which was borne by the Organization amounted to only $3.2 million against anticipated expenditures of some $15.4 million for the six-month period ending on 31 May 1991. As contributions had never been sufficient to meet UNFICYP's costs, the reimbursement claims from the troop-contributing countries had been met only up to December 1980. Unless additional contributions were received, the accumulated deficit in the UNFICYP Special Account was expected to be approximately $178.7 million for the periods since the inception of the Force. He therefore suggested that the United Nations share of the costs be financed from assessed contributions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 14 June 1991, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 698(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 establishing the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for an initial period of three months,

Also recalling its subsequent resolutions extending the mandate of the Force, most recently its resolution 697(1991) of 14 June 1991,

Also recalling the report of the Secretariat Review Team of 7 December 1990 and the recommendations contained therein,

Further recalling its resolution 682(1990) of 21 December 1990 by which it decided to examine the problem of the costs and financing of the Force in all its aspects, with a view to putting into effect an alternative method of financing simultaneously with the renewal of the mandate on or before 15 June 1991,

Taking note with appreciation of the recent consultations among Council members on the problem of the costs and financing of the Force in all its aspects resulting in the report of the Group of Friends of the President of the Security Council of 31 May 1991,

Also taking note with concern of the latest report of the Secretary-General which once again draws attention to the chronic financing problem of the Force,

Reaffirming again the statement of the President of the Security Council of 30 May 1990 in which the members emphasized that United Nations peace-keeping operations must be launched and maintained on a sound and secure financial basis,

Stressing the importance of an early agreement on a resolution of the Cyprus problem,

1. Concludes that a method of financing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus is needed which will put the Force on a sound and secure financial basis;

2. Further concludes that the question of the costs of the Force needs to be studied further, with the aim of both reducing and clearly defining the costs for which the United Nations should be responsible;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to hold consultations with members of the Council, troop-contributing countries and others concerned, on the question of costs, taking into account both the report of the Secretariat Review Team of 7 December 1990 and the report of the Group of Friends of the President of the Security Council of 31 May 1991. and to report to the Council by 1 October 1991, and undertakes to decide, in the light of this report and by the time of the next extension of the mandate of the Force on or before 15 December 1991. on measures to be taken to put the Force onto a sound and secure financial basis.

14 June 1991 Meeting 2993 Adopted unanimously

3-nation draft (S/22697).

Sponsors: Austria, Belgium, United Kingdom.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). Pursuant to the Council's request, the Secretary-General submitted a report on the financing of UNFICYP on 15 October 1991.<sup>(8)</sup> He discussed the possibilities of reducing costs-reduction of troops; reduction of troops with a seasonal increase; replacement of troops by less expensive ones; change of structure; transformation of UNFICYP into an observer mission; abolition of humanitarian or economic work, examination of operational costs; and examination of extra and extraordinary costs-and the possibilities of increasing income, which had been identified in a report of 31 May prepared by the Group of Friends of the President of the Security Council.

The Secretary-General concluded that the current financial arrangements needed to be revised urgently and reiterated his recommendation that the Council approve the funding of the costs of UNFICYP from 1 January 1992 through assessed contributions on the peace-keeping scale.

A draft resolution on the financing of UNFICYP was submitted by Austria and the United Kingdom on 10 December, but was not acted upon by the Council.<sup>(9)</sup>

Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, recently independent from the USSR, were recommended on 12 September.

On 17 September 1991, these seven States were admitted to the United Nations, bringing the total membership of the Organization to 166.

Institutional machinery

Security Council

In 1991, the Security Council held 53 meetings and adopted 42 resolutions.

Agenda

The Security Council considered 19 agenda items during 1991. It continued the practice of adopting at each meeting the agenda for that meeting. (For list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV.)

On 17 September,(1) the Secretary-General notified the General Assembly, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter, of 12 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security that the Council had discussed since his previous annual notification.(2) He listed 140 other matters not discussed during the period but of which the Council remained seized.

By decision 46/408 of 25 November, the General Assembly took note of those matters.

Report for 1990/91

At a private meeting on 29 November 1991, the Council unanimously adopted its report covering the period from 16 June 1990 to 15 June 1991.<sup>(3)</sup> The General Assembly took note of the report by decision 46/424 of 12 December.

Membership

On 11 December, by decision 46/418, the General Assembly decided to defer consideration of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council and to include the item in the provisional agenda of its 1992 session.

General Assembly

The General Assembly met in two sessions during 1991, to resume and conclude its forty-fifth (1990) regular session and to hold the major part of its forty-sixth session. The forty-fifth session resumed from 29 April to 3 May, from 13 to 17 May, from 10 to 28 June, on 12, 13 and 27 August and on 13 and 16 September 1991.

The forty-sixth session opened on 17 September and continued until its suspension on 20 December.

Representatives' credentials

In 1990,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly had retained on the agenda of its forty-fifth session the report of the Credentials Committee. No action was taken on the report at the resumed forty-fifth session in 1991.

At its first meeting in 1991, on 9 October, the Credentials Committee examined a memorandum of the previous day from the Secretary-General indicating that credentials of representatives to the General Assembly's forty-sixth session had been submitted by 117 Member States. The Legal Counsel explained that the memorandum related solely to Member States that had submitted formal credentials.

On 10 December, at its second meeting, the Committee examined a further memorandum from the Secretary-General, which was orally updated by the Legal Counsel, reporting that, since the Committee's first meeting, formal credentials from 37 other Member States had been received. In addition, information concerning the appointment of their representatives to the forty-sixth session had been communicated to the Secretary-General by 11 Member States, by means of a facsimile communication, letter or note verbale. The Committee Chairman proposed that the Committee accept the credentials of all those Member States, including those that had communicated by facsimile, letter or note verbale, on the understanding that the latter would submit formal credentials as soon as possible.

At each meeting, the Committee, acting without vote on an oral proposal by its Chairman, adopted a resolution by which it accepted the credentials received. The Committee also recommended to the Assembly two draft resolutions approving its first<sup>(5)</sup> and second<sup>(6)</sup> reports. The Assembly held no discussion and took no action on either report.

Organization of the 1991 session

On 20 September 1991, by decision 46/401, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee as set forth in its first report,<sup>(7)</sup> adopted without vote a number of provisions concerning the organization of the 1991 session.

The Committee's recommendations concerned rationalization of the Assembly's work; the schedule of meetings; meeting records; the general debate; explanations of vote, right of reply and length of statements; concluding statements; questions related to the programme budget; documentation; resolutions; special conferences; and meetings of subsidiary organs.

Subsidiary organs

By decisions 46/403 A, B, C and D, adopted on the recommendation of the Committee on Conferences<sup>(8)</sup> on 17 September, 20 September, 28 October and 18 November, respectively, the General Assembly authorized the following subsidiary organs to hold meetings during its 1991 session: Governing Council and Standing Committee for Programme Matters of the United Nations Development Programme; Committee on Relations with the Host Country; Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; Special Committee against Apartheid; Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East; Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa; Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa; Special High-Level Council for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction; Committee on Applications for Review of Administrative Tribunal Judgements; and Trust Committee of the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

Agenda

sonnel questions (decision 45/402 B). By decision 45/402 D of 21 June, the Assembly, at the request of Australia, Canada, Japan, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States,(9) reopened consideration of two agenda items, on the United Nations common system and the United Nations pension system. In addition, consideration of the following items was reopened: financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (decision 45/402 E of 28 June); a sub-item on the appointment of members of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (decision 45/402 F of 27 August); and the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations (decision 45/402 G of 13 September).

Two additional items were included in the agenda of the resumed session (decision 45/402 B), on 29 April and 13 May, respectively, namely, the financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and other activities arising from Security Council resolution 687(1991); and the financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara. On 10 June, by decision 45/402 C, the Assembly included in its agenda the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador.

By decisions adopted on 16 September, the Assembly included items in the draft agenda of its forty-sixth session on: the question of Cyprus (45/458); Iraqi aggression and the continued occupation of Kuwait in flagrant violation of the Charter of the United Nations (45/459); financing of activities arising from Security Council resolution 678(1991) (45/460); and revitalization of the work of the General Assembly (45/461).

The forty-sixth session initially had 147 items on its agenda, which was adopted by the Assembly by decision 46/402, acting on recommendations of the General Committee.(10) Under the same decision, the Assembly allocated the agenda items to the appropriate Main Committees and decided that the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the United Nations(11) would be introduced in plenary meeting.

On 20 December, by decision 46/468, the Assembly retained 24 items or sub-items on the agenda of its forty-sixth session.

1992 agenda

By decision 46/402, the Assembly, on the General Committee's recommendation,(7) included in the provisional agenda of its 1992 session the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India, and the question of East Timor. On 9 December, by decision 46/415 adopted on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of that session an item on the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations.

Deferring consideration of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council, the Assembly, by decision 46/418 of 11 December, decided to include the item in the provisional agenda of its 1992 session. Also to be included was the implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations, consideration of which was deferred by Assembly decision 46/444 of 20 December.

The report summarized the activities of 25 United Nations bodies and organizations which cooperated with the League in six sectoral areas—international peace and security; food and agriculture; labour, trade, industry and environment; social affairs; education, science, culture and information! and communications—in accordance with a decision taken at a joint meeting in 1990.

Organization of the Islamic Conference

Responding to a 1990 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report in October 1991<sup>(4)</sup> on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference. He reported on action taken to strengthen cooperation in seven priority areas: development of science and technology; development of trade; technical cooperation among Islamic countries; assistance to refugees; food security and agriculture; education and eradication of illiteracy; and investment mechanisms and joint ventures. He also surveyed cooperation in economic, social and cultural development.

Representatives of the two organizations met at Geneva from 19 to 22 November. At a joint meeting on basic education and training for human resources development (Rabat, Morocco, 24-26 April), it was concluded that, to meet the challenges of the future, Islamic countries should expand access to education and improve the quality of education, and that providing basic education for children and adults should be conceived as: part of a series of socio-economic changes to bring about real improvement in the conditions of society.

The meeting further agreed that Islamic countries should be assisted by both organizations in designing and implementing educational plans in the following areas: vocational and technical training; preparation and dissemination of educational material; research; administration; introduction of science and technology in basic education programmes; promotion of education to meet the needs of girls and women; protection of the environment; health of mother and child, including child spacing; development of traditional educational institutions, industries and handicrafts, and of vocational components in basic education; and education for the disadvantaged.

PART TWO

Regional questions

Chapter I

Africa

The year 1991 was a momentous one for change in Africa and its relations with the United Nations. It marked a watershed in the Organization's concern with and involvement in African affairs. The democratization process swept the continent while long-standing conflicts were settled in Ethiopia and Angola.

In South Africa, which had been on the United Nations agenda since 1946, significant progress was made towards eradicating apartheid. A significant development during the year was the signing in September of a Memorandum of Understanding between the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the South African authorities on voluntary repatriation of South African refugees and political exiles. The repatriation programme was expected to be completed within 12 months and was estimated to cost between $35 million and $40 million. In June, the major apartheid laws were repealed, marking the beginning of all-party talks on the country's constitutional future. By the end of 1991, the United Nations had poised itself to address the socio-economic inequalities in South Africa.

In recognition of those developments, the Assembly in December, by resolution 46/79 A, lifted the ban on academic, scientific, sports and cultural links with South Africa which had been in effect since 1980. It called on all Governments, none the less, to continue to observe fully the Security Council mandatory arms embargo of 1977 against South Africa (46/79 C) and to prohibit the supply and shipment of oil and petroleum products to that country (46/79 E). Cracks in the international consensus against South Africa began to appear, however, during the year as some countries moved to lift economic and other sanctions against it, expressing the view that pressure on the country should be eased to encourage the process of negotiations on a new constitution. In a related action (46/79 D), the Assembly reiterated its demand that Israel end its collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields. In addition, it urged the Security Council to consider appropriate measures against Israel for violating the arms embargo against South Africa.

The Assembly endorsed the programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid (46/79 B), allocating $480,000 from the United Nations regular budget for special projects to be undertaken by the Committee in 1992. It appealed for generous contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa (46/79 F). In a resolution on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (46/80), it welcomed the Paris Statement adopted in June 1991 by the International Conference on the Educational Needs of the Victims of Apartheid in South Africa and emphasized the responsibility of the international community to assist in bridging the economic and social disparities in South Africa, particularly in the field of education.

Positive developments in southern Africa in 1990 and 1991 generated hopes for a settlement of the region's political conflicts. Namibia in 1991 marked the first anniversary of its independence, while Angola and Mozambique took steps towards political reform. Following a series of negotiations held at Lisbon, Portugal, in 1990 and 1991, the Government of Angola and the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola signed a peace agreement on 31 May 1991. In anticipation of that event, the Security Council in May (resolution 696(1991)) established the second United Nations Angola Verification Mission to monitor the implementation of the Peace Accords and eventually oversee elections scheduled for the last quarter of 1992.

The Security Council considered the situation in Liberia in January 1991, a little over a year after conflict had broken out in that West African country. In a statement on behalf of the Council members, the Council President called for respect of the ceasefire agreement. The Secretary-General, at the invitation of the Economic Community of West African States, sent a representative to Côte d'Ivoire to observe negotiations on Liberia's future.

Relations between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) continued to be strengthened and were expected to reach new heights during the 1990s. Reaffirming that the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s would necessitate the full participation of the international community, the General Assembly urged that the United Nations provide support for a possible OAU peace-keeping operation as well as for the African Economic Community (resolution 46/20).

South Africa and apartheid

In many respects, 1991 was a turning-point in South Africa, as regards its apartheid system. In June, the Government rescinded the laws which underpinned the system and amended others. But the most important development by far was the beginning on 20 December of the long-awaited Convention on a Democratic South Africa, as the all-party talks were billed. The Convention marked an important step towards power-sharing. The United Nations was represented at the talks as an observer.

Of great interest to the Organization during the year was the extent to which its 1989 Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa(1) had been implemented by Member States and the South African Government. The Declaration established a Programme of Action, with an appeal to the international community not to relax measures against the South African regime until there was clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes in the country. The Declaration had become, according to the Special Committee against Apartheid, the yardstick against which the process of change in South Africa was being assessed.

Banned political parties and organizations resumed their operations legally for the first time during the year, which also saw a rise in political violence. The National Peace Accord aimed at curbing the violence—which was signed on 14 September by the South African Government and a large number of political parties and organizations, including the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC) and the Inkatha Freedom Party, was welcomed by the General Assembly in resolution 46/79 A. The Assembly urged the South African authorities to take immediate further action to end the violence and acts of terrorism. It reaffirmed its support for the legitimate struggle of the South African people and, by resolution 46/79 C, urged States to adopt legislation to enforce the arms embargo, to maintain existing financial measures and not to extend new loans and credits.

Responding to an intensified United Nations-led international campaign for the elimination of apartheid, the South African Government in June repealed the major apartheid laws and amended others. They were the Black Land Act, No. 27, of 1913; the Development Trust and Land Act, No. 18, of 1936; the Group Areas Act, No. 36, of 1966; the Black Communities Development Act, No. 4, of 1984; and the Population Registration Act, No. 30, of 1950 (although the register would remain until a new constitution was adopted). On 21 June 1991, the Internal Security Act, No. 74, of 1982 was amended. (The Group Areas Act and the Land Acts segregated communities and relegated the Black population to a minor percentage of the land.)

Noting that those and other actions by South Africa were positive (46/79 A), the Assembly said further efforts were needed to enhance the climate for free political activity and to address the inequities resulting from the legacy of those laws. The Secretary-General, in September,(2) also stated that many of the concomitant attitudes and practices, as indeed the consequences of those apartheid laws, still persisted.

The Assembly, noting the progress in the removal of obstacles to negotiations, called on the international community (46/79 A) to resume academic, scientific and cultural links with democratic anti-apartheid organizations and individuals in those fields. It also urged resumption of sports links with unified non-racial sporting organizations of South Africa. It called for a review of existing restrictive measures as warranted by positive developments, adding that the vulnerable and critical process under way there should be supported through a phased application of appropriate pressure. Opponents of apartheid as well as the disadvantaged sectors of South African society should be helped.

During the year, the member States of the European Community (EC), some other European countries, Japan and the United States lifted their economic and trade sanctions against South Africa. Earlier, South Africa had been readmitted to the Olympic movement after an absence of more than 25 years. The Special Committee against Apartheid in various statements deplored those actions, describing them as premature and counter-productive.

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to a General Assembly resolution of 1990,(3) submitted in September 1991 a second progress report(2) on the implementation of the 1989 United Nations Declaration on Apartheid.(1) The report contained a chronological review of major political developments in South Africa from mid-1990 until August 1991. It was based on the views of the South African Government as well as several other interlocutors, including political parties, movements and organizations. The Secretary-General's first progress report, submitted to the Assembly in 1990,(4) included the findings of a mission he had sent to South Africa in June to obtain first-hand information on developments there.

The report said the process towards the eradication of apartheid, although halting, had remained on course over the period under review. The consequences of the major apartheid laws still persisted. Delays in the implementation of the necessary measures envisaged in the Declaration concerning the creation of a climate for negotiations had led to tension and a crisis of confidence.

Those opposed to the democratic transformation of the country or who wished to obtain political advantage prior to negotiations had manifested their political antagonism by violent means, while elements connected with the system had resorted to less overt activities. In that respect, the impartiality of the security forces had been called into question and the potential for destabilization by extremist groups remained a cause for concern.

While the Government had introduced a number of positive measures, the problems faced by the majority of South Africans were so vast that they required a comprehensive national programme of redress. The private sector would be required to play a more important role than it had in the past. The serious socio-economic cleavages and the persistent negative attitudes towards change would have to be overcome so that the conditions of life of the disadvantaged sectors could be perceptibly improved.

The broad consensus that human rights must be protected in a democratic South Africa was encouraging, the report observed, adding that ratification of the International Covenants on Human Rights would be a significant step. There appeared to be a growing convergence of the views of the parties concerned on a number of basic principles of a new constitution. The response of the international community should be finely tuned to the complex and delicate process; as envisaged in the 1989 Declaration, encouragement, pressure and assistance would need to be suitably applied as the process unfolded.

The United Nations was preparing a concerted response to requests for assistance, particularly from the disadvantaged sectors of South African society. Furthermore, the Secretary-General stood ready to help promote the process and to provide assistance during the transitional period and beyond.

In another report, of November 1991,<sup>(5)</sup> on coordination of the United Nations system in the implementation of the 1989 Declaration, the Secretary-General indicated that he had apprised the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) of the matter and that ACC had consequently issued guidelines.<sup>(6)</sup> The guidelines called for divestiture of stocks and bonds, and denial of contracts and facilities to companies doing business in South Africa; closure of accounts and cessation of business relations with financial institutions in or collaborating with South Africa; refraining from purchasing South African products; prohibition of official travel by South African air and shipping lines; paying particular attention to the needs of victims of apartheid; and publication and dissemination of information on apartheid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 45/457 A of 28 June 1991, the General Assembly concurred with the Secretary-General's proposal that he postpone until a later date prior to the closing of its resumed forty-fifth session the submission of his second progress report on the implementation of the Declaration on Apartheid. On 13 September, by decision 45/457 B, the Assembly took note of the report and later considered it during its 1991 regular session. It requested the Secretary-General to continue to promote all efforts leading to the eradication of apartheid through genuine negotiation and to report to it during 1992 on further progress in the implementation of the Declaration.

By decision 46/409 of 2 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Special Political Committee<sup>(7)</sup> on a meeting held on 14 November at which statements were heard on behalf of the following six organizations with special interest in apartheid: the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC); the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions; the Progressive Librarians Guild (United States); the National Center for Public Policy Research; Young People against Apartheid; and the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights under Law.

General aspects

Activities of the Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report covering May to October 1991,<sup>(8)</sup> reviewed the political developments and economic conditions in South Africa, the country's external relations, the response of the international community to developments there, and its own activities with respect to the world-wide campaign to eradicate apartheid. It was a sequel to an interim report covering mid-October 1990 to May 1991,<sup>(9)</sup> which had reviewed South Africa's compliance with the terms set out in the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid.

In its latest report, the Special Committee said that, overall, progress had been made during the period under review in the process of ending apartheid and towards negotiations on a new constitution. The repeal of major apartheid laws in June 1991 was a most notable development, although little had been done by the authorities to give it practical effect. Without specific additional legislation or other measures to encourage individuals and communities to shed their attitudes and practices, it was likely that the socio-economic disparities created by the current system would last beyond the repeal of the laws.

A serious obstacle to the exercise of free political activity remained the persistent violence which, the Special Committee observed, could affect the future of a democratic South Africa. At least 5,000 persons, nearly all of them Blacks, had been killed since February 1990, 3,000 of whom had died between July 1990 and June 1991. From 1 January to the end of August 1991, some 81 persons had been killed and 491 injured as a result of actions of the security forces. The National Peace Accord, signed by the South African authorities and the political parties and organizations on 14 September, provided for a code of conduct for the security forces and for political parties and organizations, as well as enforcement mechanisms. It also proposed specific measures to facilitate socio-economic reconstruction and development in the communities devastated by violence.

According to the report, the South African authorities continued to use their powers of detention without trial against political activists despite certain amendments to the security legislation. The Public Safety Act of 1953 remained unaltered and continued to allow for the declaration of states of emergency and unrest areas. The Internal Security and Public Safety Acts still allowed the formal prohibition of gatherings. Arrests of political activists and political trials continued, with more than 8,000 arrests being recorded by the South African Human Rights Commission between July 1990 and June 1991; 2,500 of them were recorded in May 1991 alone, a month of mass demonstrations throughout the country.

At the international level, the international community had in many ways deviated from the consensus established by the Declaration on Apartheid and subsequent General Assembly resolutions. Some Member States had considered that it was important to lift some pressure on South Africa in order to promote the process of negotiations and to hasten the adoption of a democratic constitution. A consensus had emerged both within and outside South Africa on the need to link the lifting of sanctions to specific progress made in that regard.

In its conclusions, the Special Committee observed that apartheid would be considered dead only after the attainment of the following strategic objectives: the establishment of transitional arrangements, the adoption of a new constitution and the installation of a new Government after free and fair elections based on the new constitution. The repeal of major apartheid laws had been a positive step, but the wave of violence and the threat posed by extremist right-wing groups and others, exacerbated by their collaboration with elements of the security forces and other paramilitary groups, presented serious obstacles and dangers.

Although there was growing convergence on some basic constitutional principles outlined in the Declaration on Apartheid, the Special Committee said serious disagreements persisted on the transitional arrangements and on the appropriate mechanism to draft the new constitution. Finally, the grave socio-economic inequalities, unless addressed on an urgent basis, could undermine the stability required for the negotiations. The international community should therefore monitor developments in South Africa and identify all the dangers that could disrupt the ongoing process of the democratic transformation of the country.

In addition, pressure on the architects and beneficiaries of the system of apartheid must continue, while the anti-apartheid forces were helped in their struggle. The random lifting of sanctions was premature and counter-productive as it deprived the international community of its leverage and ability to promote the process of change.

The Special Committee recommended that the General Assembly call on the international community to resume academic, scientific and cultural links with democratic anti-apartheid organizations and individuals in those fields; urge resumption of sports links with unified non-racial sporting organizations in South Africa and assistance to disadvantaged athletes there; and call for full international support to the vulnerable and critical process under way in South Africa, through a phased application of appropriate pressure on the regime and through assistance to the opponents of apartheid and the disadvantaged sectors of the society.

It also proposed the removal of restrictions on tourism and air and other transport links, but strict observance of the mandatory arms embargo, restrictions on the export to South Africa of computers and communication equipment and the ban on the provision of military intelligence until free and fair elections had been held and a new democratic Government established. It called for an immediate end to violence and for action by the South African Government to address it.

The Special Committee urged the Assembly to reaffirm its support for the legitimate struggle of the South African people for the eradication of apartheid through peaceful means. The positive measures introduced thus far by the South African Government should be noted.

Among other activities, the Special Committee closely cooperated with the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa and the Commission against Apartheid in Sports. It expanded its close working relationship with the International Labour Organisation (ILO), in particular with the ILO Committee on Action against Apartheid, as well as with the United Nations Commission on Human Rights and the Centre for Human Rights.

The Committee was represented at meetings of OAU, including those of its Liberation Committee. It also continued to cooperate with the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and with other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), anti-apartheid organizations and movements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1991, the General Assembly adopted six resolutions on the policies of apartheid of South Africa. Resolution 46/79 A, which dealt with the more general aspects of the problem, was adopted without vote.

International efforts towards the total eradication of apartheid and support for the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, contained in the annex to its resolution S--16/1 of 14 December 1989, its resolution 45/176 A of 19 December 1990 and its decision 45/457 B of 13 September 1991,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the second progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Declaration, as well as the reports of the Secretary-General on the coordinated approach by the United Nations system on questions relating to South Africa and on the concerted and effective measures aimed at eradicating apartheid,

Convinced that broad-based negotiations leading to a new constitutional order providing for universal, equal suffrage under a non-racial voters' roll will lead to the total eradication of apartheid through peaceful means and the establishment of a non-racial democracy in South Africa,

Welcoming the signing on 14 September 1991 of the National Peace Accord and expressing the hope that this will finally end the tragic bloodshed in South Africa.

Welcoming the efforts of all parties, including ongoing talks among them, such as the recently held Patriotic/United Front conference, aimed at facilitating the commencement of substantive broad-based negotiations towards a new constitution and arrangements on the transition to a democratic order,

Welcoming the accession of South Africa on 10 July 1991 to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and subsequent conclusion and ratification of a related safeguards agreement,

Noting with satisfaction that fundamental principles for a new constitutional order, as set out in the Declaration, are receiving broad acceptance in South Africa,

Welcoming the convening of the preparatory meeting for the Convention for a Democratic South Africa.

Noting that while positive measures have been undertaken by the South African authorities, including the repeal and revision of the major apartheid and security laws, further efforts are needed to enhance the climate for free political activity and to address the inequities resulting from the legacy of these laws,

Gravely concerned that the persistence of violence, resulting largely from apartheid, including actions by those opposed to the democratic transformation of the country, poses a threat to the negotiating process and to the vital interests of all people of South Africa,

Concerned about any remaining obstacles to free political activity, as identified in the Declaration, including the delay in the full implementation of agreements regarding the release of any remaining political prisoners and the return of refugees and exiles, the use of repressive legislation still in place as well as other attempts aimed at undermining the democratic forces,

Noting with serious concern the remaining effects of the acts of aggression and destabilization that were committed by South Africa against neighbouring independent African States,

Convinced that international pressure, both that exerted by Governments and by individual citizens and organizations, has had and continues to have a significant impact on developments in South Africa,

Recognizing the responsibility of the United Nations and the international community, as envisaged in the Declaration, to continue to take all necessary measures aimed at the eradication of apartheid through peaceful means, in particular by adhering to the programme of action contained in the Declaration,

1. Reaffirms its support for the legitimate struggle of the South African people for the total eradication of apartheid through peaceful means and the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa in which all its people, irrespective of race, colour, sex or creed, will enjoy the same fundamental freedoms and human rights;

2. Reaffirms the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa and the need for the full and immediate implementation of the provisions not yet fulfilled;

3. Calls for an immediate end to violence and the removal of any remaining obstacles to free political activity;

4. Urges the South African authorities to take immediate further action to end the recurring violence and acts of terrorism, including actions by those opposed to the democratic transformation of the country, by ensuring that all competent authorities act effectively and impartially;

5. Calls upon all signatories of the National Peace Accord to manifest their commitment to peace by fully implementing its provisions, and calls upon all other parties to contribute to the attainment of its objectives;

6. Calls upon the South African authorities to enhance the climate conducive to negotiations by ensuring the immediate release of any remaining political prisoners, the unhindered return of refugees and exiles and the repeal of repressive and discriminatory legislation still in place, and to address the glaring inequalities created by apartheid;

7. Calls upon the representatives of the people of South Africa to commence in good faith, urgently, broad-based substantive negotiations towards an agreement on the basic principles of a new constitution, taking into account the fundamental principles in the Declaration and its suggested guidelines on the modalities for the elaboration of a new constitution, on transitional arrangements inspiring general confidence in the administration of the country until the new constitution takes effect, and on the role to be played by the international community in ensuring the successful transition to a democratic order;

8. Appeals to the international community to give its full and concerted support to the vulnerable and critical process now under way in South Africa through a phased application of appropriate pressure on the South African authorities, as warranted by developments, and to provide assistance to the opponents of apartheid and the disadvantaged sectors of society in order to ensure the rapid and peaceful attainment of the objectives of the Declaration;

9. Calls upon the international community, in view of progress made in overcoming obstacles to negotiations, to resume academic, scientific and cultural links with democratic anti-apartheid organizations and the individuals in these fields, to resume sports links with unified non-racial sporting organizations of South Africa which have received endorsement by appropriate non-racial sporting organizations within South Africa and to assist disadvantaged athletes in that country;

10. Also calls upon the international community, within the context of the need to respond appropriately to ongoing developments in South Africa, to review existing restrictive measures as warranted by positive developments, such as agreement by the parties on transitional arrangements, and agreement on a new, non-racial democratic constitution;

11. calls upon all Governments to observe fully the mandatory arms embargo, requests the Security Council to continue to monitor effectively its strict implementation and urges States to adhere to the provisions of other Security Council resolutions on the import of arms from South Africa and the export of equipment and technology destined for military or police purposes in that country;

12. Appeals to the international community to increase humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid, returning refugees and exiles and released political prisoners;

13. Also appeals to the international community to increase its material, financial and other contributions to the victims and opponents of apartheid to help them address the glaring socio-economic inequalities, particularly in the areas of education, health, housing and social welfare;

14. Further appeals to the international community to render all possible assistance to the front-line and neighbouring States to enable their economies to recover from the effects of years of destabilization and to support the current efforts to achieve a durable peace in Angola and Mozambique, which would contribute to the stability and prosperity of the region;

15. Welcomes the agreement reached on 4 September 1991 by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees with the South African authorities concerning the voluntary repatriation of South African refugees and exiles, and appeals to the international community to provide and urges the Secretary-General to facilitate, through the relevant United Nations agencies and offices in cooperation with the High Commissioner, all necessary humanitarian assistance to ensure the successful implementation of the repatriation programme;

16. Urges the Secretary-General to facilitate, through the relevant United Nations agencies and offices and in a concerted manner, humanitarian and educational assistance inside South Africa for the reintegration of political exiles and released political prisoners and to the disadvantaged sectors of South African society;

17. Also urges the Secretary-General, at the appropriate time, in the light of positive developments such as agreement on transitional arrangements, to expand, in a concerted manner, through the relevant United Nations offices and in collaboration with the specialized agencies, the scope of assistance provided inside South Africa aimed at addressing socio-economic issues, particularly in the areas of education, health, housing and social welfare, which may entail the physical presence of the United Nations system in that country;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure the coordination of activities of the United Nations system in the implementation of the Declaration and of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, and to continue monitoring the implementation of the Declaration as well as pursuing appropriate initiatives to facilitate all efforts leading to the peaceful eradication of apartheid.

The Assembly, in resolution 46/41 B, again appealed to the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to exclude at the earliest possible date the apartheid minority regime from participation in their meetings until the abhorrent system and practices of apartheid minority domination were totally eliminated. The Assembly expressed concern that South Africa had been participating in the meetings and requested the Secretary-General to report on the issue in 1992.

Commenting on the Assembly resolutions on South Africa in a statement of 13 December,<sup>(10)</sup> the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa said it was encouraging to note that the United Nations was at last recognizing important political developments that had taken place in the country—a considerable advance in the attitude of the United Nations over previous years. Those developments included the signing of the National Peace Accord, the accession by South Africa to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,<sup>(11)</sup> the convening of the preparatory meeting for the Convention for a Democratic South Africa and the September 1991 agreement between the Government and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) on the return of South African exiles.

Other international action to eliminate apartheid

Activities of the Special Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid continued in 1991 its efforts to mobilize world public opinion in support of the anti-apartheid campaign by organizing a number of conferences, roundtable meetings, seminars and consultations. On 1 and 2 October, it held consultations with designated focal points of selected United Nations agencies and offices on programmes or plans concerning South Africa. The objective was to start the process of regular exchange of information and to discuss the most appropriate mechanisms for system-wide coordination on the matter. Also discussed were preparations for a seminar to be held in early 1992, under the aegis of the Special Committee, on the possible role of the United Nations system in helping to address the socio-economic problems of South Africa.

The Special Committee collaborated with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa in organizing the International Conference on the Educational Needs of the Victims of Apartheid in South Africa (Paris, 25-27 June). The Conference recommended a series of measures that could be undertaken by the international community to support initiatives for transforming education in South Africa and establishing educational priorities.

On 4 and 5 November, the Special Committee held consultations at Geneva with representatives of 46 national and international NGOs and anti-apartheid movements, United Nations agencies and individuals on developments in South Africa. At the end of the consultations, which also covered the implementation of the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid, the participants adopted a statement calling for support to the national liberation movements and for the maintaining of sanctions, with any adjustments concomitant with the establishment of an interim government transitional authority and agreement on a new constitution.

OAU, at its summit at Abuja, Nigeria, in June adopted a declaration on South Africa<sup>(12)</sup> by which it reaffirmed the support of African leaders for the 1989 Harare Declaration (which set out the principles, climate and guidelines for a negotiated settlement of South Africa's constitutional future)<sup>(13)</sup> and the United Nations Declaration on Apartheid, and called on South Africa to implement all their conditions and to end the violence in the country. Acknowledging that there had been some positive developments, the summit called on South Africa to take further measures- to eliminate apartheid; should South Africa adopt measures leading to positive, profound and irreversible change towards abolishing apartheid, the African leaders would commit themselves to reviewing the question of sanctions with a view to readmitting South Africa into the international community.

Relations with South Africa

Economic relations

Conditions in South Africa

Reporting on the socio-economic inequalities in South Africa,<sup>(8)</sup> the Special Committee against Apartheid said per capita income for Whites was estimated at 20,600 rand, Asians R 8,100, Coloureds R 5,900 and Blacks R 2,400. Less than 2 per cent of Whites, as compared with 53 per cent of Blacks, lived below the poverty line. The situation was particularly dramatic in the rural areas of the "Bantustans", where unemployment rates ranged from 25 to 31 per cent of the economically active population. Lack of skilled Black workers was closely linked to the apartheid education system, under which the Government spent five times as much for the education of each White child as for that of each Black child.

In an overview of the economic situation, the Committee said it was widely accepted that economic priorities should be directed towards the correction of socio-economic imbalances determined by race and the progressive reduction of unemployment. A vast amount of resources would be required to meet the growing expectations of the majority of the population. The structural adjustment policy begun in 1988 had continued during the period under review. Its main results, so far, had been a contraction in both domestic demand and output with a consequent rise in unemployment.

The Committee reviewed the policies for tax reform and the impact of the recession that had started in the fourth quarter of 1989 and continued through the first six months of 1991. Overall, the economy had registered a contraction of 0.9 per cent in real terms in 1990 and zero growth was expected in 1991. However, the drop in imports had contributed to a significant improvement in the current account surplus, which rose by a significant 87.1 per cent, from R 3.1 billion in 1989 to R 5.8 billion for 1990. In the first months of 1991, the level of the surplus declined to a seasonably adjusted rate of R 3.9 billion, and a surplus of a similar size was expected for the entire year. South Africa's balance of payments, after a substantial improvement in 1990, was expected to produce a lower current account surplus in 1991 of up to R 4 billion, against the previous year's R 5.8 billion, as a result of a slower growth in the international economy and a poor outlook for agricultural and gold exports. South Africa's total foreign debt decreased at the end of 1990 from $20.6 billion in the previous year to $19.4 billion.

Sanctions and boycotts

existing restrictive measures imposed on South Africa. In its 1991 report, it said it had also welcomed and encouraged actions by the international community to increase assistance to the disadvantaged sectors of South African society.

Throughout the period under review, the Committee monitored measures undertaken by Governments against South Africa, deploring their decisions unilaterally to suspend or lift sanctions, partially or in their entirety. In statements issued by its Chairman, it declared that relaxation of sanctions was unwarranted and premature because conditions for negotiations in a peaceful environment had not been established.

In April, EC announced the lifting of its ban on the import of South African iron, steel and gold coins (krugerrands). Finland repealed its trade and trade credits sanctions in July, while the United States lifted during that month the economic sanctions set by the United States Congress in its Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986. Those sanctions covered most trade with South Africa, including the import of gold and other minerals, oil and refined petroleum products, coal, textiles and agricultural products, exports of computers, nuclear products and technology, and air links. State and local sanctions, however, remained. A ban on all exports to the South African military and police under the 1985 Export Administration Amendments Act remained in effect.

Among other countries which lifted their sanctions during the year, Israel lifted its ban in July, including the oil embargo; Hong Kong repealed its sanctions in August; Australia suspended its economic measures in September for a year, after which the situation would be assessed; and Japan lifted most of its economic sanctions in October.

The Special Committee addressed communications to Member States concerning their activities regarding South Africa. Several such letters were sent to Hungary requesting information and clarification on steps it had taken regarding its political, diplomatic and economic relations with South Africa. Approaches were made to Czechoslovakia, Morocco, Poland, Romania and Yugoslavia regarding their plans to establish or re-establish diplomatic relations with South Africa, and Angola, Gabon, Kenya and Romania were requested to provide information on their economic links with it. The Special Committee said it had received replies from Gabon, Morocco, Poland and Yugoslavia.

Quoting from the Monthly Statistics of Foreign Trade of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, it said that South Africa's main trading partners in 1990 remained Germany ($4.9 billion), the United Kingdom ($3.9 billion), Italy ($3.5 billion), the United States ($3.5 billion) and Japan ($3.3 billion), followed by Taiwan ($1.9 billion) and France ($1.3 billion).

South Africa's commercial relations with Central and Eastern Europe were also developing. Preferential trade agreements signed in September 1991 with Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland were aimed at increasing bilateral trade and economic cooperation. South Africa's trade with the rest of Africa, estimated to be worth R 7 billion to R 10 billion in 1990, registered the fastest growth in recent years. An estimated 90 per cent of that trade was reported to be with the southern African region. Existing relations might be further developed with the economic reintegration of a post-apartheid South Africa, the Special Committee said.

With regard to international air links, it reported that South Africa had established regular flights to an increasing number of countries and that the number of foreign visitors had risen by 10.6 per cent in 1990 to 1.02 million, bringing in a record R 2.47 billion in foreign exchange. The South African Tourism Board estimated that, by the year 2000, more than 2 million people would visit the country, adding about R 7 billion a year in foreign exchange to its earnings.

The Commonwealth heads of Government at their summit at Harare, Zimbabwe, in October 1991 decided that people-to-people sanctions, namely, consular and visa restrictions, cultural and scientific boycotts, restrictions on tourism promotion and the ban on direct air links, should be lifted immediately. Air links would be restored on the condition that South African Airways adopted appropriate affirmative action programmes.

A team of ILO experts, in a report published in March 1991, said sanctions against South Africa were having an adverse impact on the country's economy. The experts, appointed by ILO in 1989, also said sanctions had not been universally applied and further pressure was needed. They recommended a total ban on trade credits and coordinated action by banks and Governments towards rescheduling South Africa's external debt.

Oil embargo

Oil and petroleum products continued to flow to South Africa, albeit at a premium price, despite the oil-exporting States' repeated declarations of support and observance of the oil embargo against it. The major shipping States, with a few exceptions, had not adopted legislation prohibiting the shipping of oil to South Africa. The Worldwide Shipping Group based in Hong Kong continued to be a major shipper. This was stated by the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa, established by the General Assembly in 1986,<sup>(14)</sup> in a report of October 1991.<sup>(15)</sup> The embargo had imposed massive costs on South Africa, conservatively estimated at between $25 billion and $30 billion over the last 12 years. The Group felt that lifting it prematurely would be counter-productive.

The Group concluded that the most effective way to enforce the embargo remained the adoption by the Security Council of a mandatory embargo under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations. It made a number of recommendations to the General Assembly, including the adoption by Governments of a draft model law for the effective enforcement of the oil embargo, submitted to them by the Group in April.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/79 E by recorded vote.

Oil embargo against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa,

Recalling its resolutions on the oil embargo against South Africa, in particular resolution 45/176 F of 19 December 1990,

Recognizing the importance of the oil embargo as a major contribution to the pressure exerted on South Africa towards the eradication of apartheid through negotiations, as well as the importance of maintaining pressure until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes, bearing in mind the objectives of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, such as the adoption of a non-racial and democratic constitution for a free South Africa,

Noting that the most effective way to enforce the oil embargo against South Africa remains the adoption by the Security Council of a mandatory embargo under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Concerned that the oil embargo against South Africa is still being violated and that South Africa, because of loopholes in the embargo, such as lack of effective legislation, has been able to acquire oil and petroleum products,

Convinced that an effective oil embargo against South Africa would contribute to the efforts of the international community to bring about a negotiated settlement and the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa,

1. Takes note of the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa and endorses its recommendations;

2. Requests all States to adopt, if they have not already done so, and otherwise to maintain and enforce effective measures prohibiting the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa, whether directly or indirectly, and in particular:

(a) To apply strictly the "end users" clause and other conditions concerning restriction on destination to ensure compliance with the embargo;

(b) To compel the companies originally selling or purchasing oil or petroleum products, as appropriate to each nation, to desist from selling, reselling or otherwise transferring oil and petroleum products to South Africa, whether directly or indirectly;

(c) To establish strict control over the supply of oil and petroleum products to South Africa by intermediaries, oil companies and traders by placing responsibilities for the fulfilment of the contract on the first buyer or seller of oil and petroleum products who would, therefore, be liable for the actions of these parties;

(d) To prevent South African companies from acquiring holdings in oil companies outside South Africa;

(e) To prohibit all assistance to South Africa in the oil sector, including finance, technology, equipment or personnel;

(f) To prohibit the transport of oil and petroleum products to South Africa by ships flying their flags, or by ships that are ultimately owned, managed or chartered by their nationals or by companies within their jurisdiction;

(g) To develop a system for registration of ships, registered in their territory or owned by their nationals, that have violated the oil embargo, and to discourage such ships from calling at South African ports;

(i) To impose penal action against companies and individuals that have been involved in violating the oil embargo, and to publicize cases of successful prosecutions in conformity with their national laws;

(i) To gather, exchange and disseminate information regarding violations of the oil embargo, including ways and means to prevent such violations, and to take concerted measures against violators;

(j) To discourage ships within their jurisdiction from engaging in activities that give rise to violation of the oil embargo against South Africa, taking into account legislative and other measures already adopted;

3. Commends to Member States for their consideration the draft model law annexed to the report of the Intergovernmental Group and recommends that they strive for an effective oil embargo by adopting the general principles of the model law within the framework of their own legal practices;

4. Authorizes the Intergovernmental Group to take action to promote public awareness of the oil embargo against South Africa, including, when necessary, sending missions and participating in relevant conferences and meetings;

5. Requests the Intergovernmental Group to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Requests all States to extend their cooperation to the Intergovernmental Group with all necessary assistance for the implementation of the present resolution.

Foreign investment

The Special Committee reported that the trend towards disinvestment by transnational corporations (TNCs) with equity interests in South Africa, which had started in 1985, virtually stopped in 1991. At the same time, approximately half of the United States companies that had disinvested (a total of 192 as at 15 September 1991), and probably a higher proportion of TNCs from other countries, retained non-equity ties with South Africa. A major re-entry into the country by the companies seemed unlikely in the short term because of the economic and political uncertainties as well as the economic and financial management of a future non-racial Government. United States corporations were further hindered by state and local laws that restricted contracting with companies doing business with South Africa. Observers pointed out that it was unlikely that commercial banks would resume lending to South Africa even though the country's external debt situation had improved. South African borrowers were, however, gradually returning to the international bond markets.

Notwithstanding those developments, which signalled a major improvement in South Africa's access to international capital markets, it was considered that financial sanctions continued to be an effective form of pressure towards change in South Africa.

The United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, in a report of March 1991,<sup>(16)</sup> also confirmed that departing United States-based corporations were unlikely to consider reinvestment in South Africa after a possible abolition of investment restrictions. On the other hand, European TNCs, which traditionally had a larger share of their overall investment in South Africa, and some Asian counterparts already seemed to be preparing the ground for new investments. According to the South African Ministry of Trade and Industry, R 4.5 billion of new investments were expected in the automobile industry. In addition, a number of German and Dutch TNCs which had remained were negotiating with their national and

South African trade unions the conditions under which they would be expected to continue their operations.

Should a post-apartheid Government of South Africa decide to involve TNCs more actively in the field of training and entrepreneurship development, programmes and guidelines would have to be designed in close consultation with the companies, the local business community and the trade unions, the report stated. An effective training programme should allow TNCs the flexibility to concentrate efforts on their specific fields. (For action by the Commission on TNCs, see PART THREE, Chapter V.)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1991/54, again called on TNCs to stop immediately operations in and trade and economic links with South Africa. It also called on all multilateral financial and development institutions to cease immediately any support or other form of collaboration with the regime.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to continue collecting and disseminating information on TNC activities in South Africa; to prepare studies on the level and form of their operation and an updated study on the responsibilities of home countries with respect to those TNCs operating in South Africa in violation of United Nations resolutions; and to continue examining possible contributions of TNCs to the construction of a non-racial democratic South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 46/79 A, called on the international community to review existing restrictive measures as warranted by positive developments in South Africa. In resolution 46/64, it condemned activities of foreign economic and other interests which impeded implementation of its 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>(17)</sup> and the efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination. It strongly condemned the collaboration with the South African regime by certain countries as well as by TNCs that continued to make new investments there and supplied the racist regime with armaments, nuclear technology and other materials. The Assembly called on all States to maintain existing measures against the apartheid regime as specified in the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid. It called on oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that had not done so to take effective measures against oil companies supplying crude oil and petroleum products to South Africa.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa, in a statement of 13 December on the Assembly resolutions on South Africa,<sup>(10)</sup> said the Assembly's decision to resume academic, scientific, sport and cultural links confirmed that sanctions were crumbling, despite its continuing shortsightedness on financial and trade sanctions. He added that it was essential for the progress and well-being of South Africa's people that the Assembly should support economic growth rather than inhibit it.

World Bank and IMF relations with South Africa

The relationship of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) with South Africa and their future activities there were outlined in a report of the Secretary-General of November 1991.<sup>(5)</sup> According to the report, South Africa was a paid-up member of the Bank and a contributing member of its soft-loan affiliate, the International Development Association. The Bank had had no operational relationship with the South African Government since the last loan was approved in 1966. All the loans had been repaid.

Since the early 1970s, South Africa had not been represented on the Bank's Board of Executive Directors, but instead by a Principal Resident Representative to IMF and the World Bank.

With the prospect of political change, the Bank had since early 1990 carried out work in four areas of a post-apartheid South Africa: establishing a wide range of contacts; developing a reliable economic and social database; initiating a series of studies into the general economy and the urban and education sectors; and disseminating the lessons of the Bank's global experience, for example, through seminars on its 1990 World Development Report on Poverty.

A central aim of the Bank's programme, endorsed by the South African Government and leading Black opposition groups, was to be prepared to assist a future Government in moving the economy towards a more rapid and labour-absorbing growth path, while permitting a substantial degree of redistribution. However, the Bank had no intention of starting to prepare projects or to provide direct technical assistance to the South African Government until there was broad support in South Africa and among the Bank's shareholders for the change of role and a significant degree of consensus on the underlying economic issues in the sector concerned. It would provide technical assistance to non-governmental groups to help establish an independent Institute for Economic Research at the University of Cape Town; to that end, a feasibility study had been initiated and the Bank would work closely with advisory groups from universities, the big corporations and Black business organizations, as well as international aid agencies, in determining the Institute's structure and aims.

South Africa was a long-standing member of IMF, with the same right of access to its facilities and resources as other members in good standing. The last occasion when South Africa had made purchases from the Fund was in the early 1980s. Since then, IMF's contact with it had consisted primarily of the article IV consultation, which the Fund held with all members at regular intervals. In that context, IMF had, through its staff reports and discussions of its Executive Board, commented on the conduct of macroeconomic policy in South Africa, including the deleterious effects of apartheid on the country's economic and social performance. The latest visit of IMF staff to South Africa as part of the consultation process was in August 1991.

In addition, IMF had advised the South African authorities on specific technical taxation issues. It was expected that future discussions would focus on the medium-term setting of macroeconomic policy, particularly fiscal policy, to address South Africa's pressing social problems, while at the same time promoting growth in output and employment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 46/65, urged specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to adhere to the Programme of Action contained in the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid,<sup>(1)</sup> in particular with regard to increased support for the opponents of apartheid. In resolution 46/79 C, it urged IMF and the World Bank, among others, not to extend new loans and credits to South Africa until agreement was reached on a non-racial democratic constitution or specific recommendations were made by the transitional authorities to be established by the Convention for a Democratic South Africa.

Military and nuclear relations

The Special Committee reported that South Africa's 1991 budget showed a relative reduction in the allocation to defence, in keeping with the trend begun in the 1990/91 financial year, which ended the rise in defence spending throughout the 1980s. The 1991 figure of R 9.187 billion represented 11 per cent of total State spending, compared with the 1989/90 figure of more than 15 per cent. The special defence account, used partly for financing overseas armaments procurement, received R 4.17 billion of the defence budget, a slightly lower proportion than that of 1990. The allocation for the secret services account was increased by 38 per cent over the preceding two years to R 380 million. The reduction in defence expenditure seemed to reflect the shortage of loans, major exposure of the arms embargo violations in recent years and the changes taking place in the country, the Special Committee observed.

The 1991 Persian Gulf conflict had provided an opportunity for increased military exports from South Africa and it was widely believed that, in exchange for its weapons, South Africa had received illicit shipments of Gulf oil. Also, military collaboration between Israel and South Africa, despite their slightly reduced trade, apparently continued unabated; there had been reports that South Africa was financing an Israeli-developed sea-launched cruise missile, believed to be comparable to the United States Tomahawk system. Central and Eastern European countries had since 1989 been developing links with South Africa, and the South African Air Force had purchased some aircraft from Czechoslovakia.

The Special Committee observed that the cases of confirmed or suspected military collaboration between South Africa and foreign Governments or corporations bore witness to the regime's determination to engage in armaments trading and to the weaknesses in the implementation by Member States of the United Nations arms embargo.

The Committee had sought information from Iraq, the Netherlands, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates on their alleged military collaboration and armaments contracts with South Africa. Bangladesh, the Sudan, Switzerland and Turkey were contacted in connection with alleged breaches of a 1977 Security Council resolution<sup>(18)</sup> and General Assembly resolutions on the arms embargo. Replies had been received from Argentina, the Netherlands and Qatar.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/79 C by recorded vote.

Military and other collaboration with South Africa
The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, its resolutions 45/176 B and C of 19 December 1990, as well as the resolutions of the Security Council on the arms embargo and military collaboration with South Africa,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the report of the Security Council Committee established by Council resolution 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 concerning the question of South Africa on its activities during the period 1980-1989,

Noting with appreciation the resolve and effectiveness of the Security Council in its handling of questions relating to the preservation of international peace and security,

Noting that the monitoring and enforcement mechanism of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council on South Africa in its resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977 would benefit from further strengthening,

Reiterating that the full implementation of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa is an essential element of international action towards the eradication of apartheid,

Convinced that sanctions and other restrictive measures have had a significant impact on recent developments in South Africa and that the phased application of appropriate pressure remains an effective and necessary instrument in the process towards the peaceful end to apartheid,

Taking note of the accession of South Africa on 10 July 1991 to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and subsequent conclusion and ratification of a related safeguards agreement,

Expressing serious concern about the continued violations of the mandatory arms embargo, particularly by those countries which surreptitiously trade in arms with South Africa,

Expressing concern that South Africa's external military relations, especially in the area of military technology and, in particular, in the production and testing of missiles, continue unabated, as mentioned in paragraphs 100 to 102 of the report of the Special Committee,

Gravely concerned about the practice carried out by certain oil-producing States whereby oil is exchanged for South African arms,

1. Deplores the actions of those States which, directly or indirectly, continue to violate the mandatory arms embargo and collaborate with South Africa in the military, nuclear, intelligence and technology fields, and calls upon those States to terminate forthwith any illegal acts and honour their obligations under Security Council resolution 418(1977);

2. Urges all States to adopt strict legislation relating to the implementation of the arms embargo and prohibit the supply to South Africa of nuclear and military products, as well as computer and communications equipment, technological skills and services, including military intelligence, destined for use by the military, police and security agencies of that country, until free and fair elections have been held and a democratic government has been established;

3. Calls for the early and full disclosure by South Africa of its nuclear installations and materials in conformity with its treaty obligations as an essential element to the peace and security of the southern African region;

4. Urges the Security Council to consider immediate steps to ensure the full implementation and the effective monitoring of the arms embargo imposed by the Council in its resolutions 418(1977) and 558(1984) of 13 December 1984, to implement the recommendations of the Committee established under Council resolution 421(1977) concerning appropriate measures in response to violations of the mandatory arms embargo and to provide information on a regular basis to the Secretary-General for general distribution to Member States;

5. Calls upon all States to maintain existing financial measures, and, in particular, urges Governments and private financial institutions, as well as the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, not to extend new loans and credits to South Africa, whether to the public or private sector, until agreement has been reached on a non-racial democratic constitution or until specific recommendations are made on this matter by the transitional authorities to be established by the Convention for a Democratic South Africa;

6. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to keep the issue of military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa under constant review and to report thereon to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

South Africa's nuclear capability

The alleged collaboration between South Africa and Israel in the nuclear field caused great concern to the Special Committee and the international community as a whole. Following the 1979 detection by a United States satellite of an apparent "flash" over the Atlantic Ocean near South Africa, the international community and the United Nations had taken steps to prevent South Africa from obtaining technological assistance to accelerate the development of its nuclear programme. (For further action regarding South Africa's nuclear capability, see PART ONE, Chapter II.)

In June 1991,<sup>(19)</sup> South Africa agreed to become a party to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons<sup>(11)</sup> and, on 10 July, deposited an instrument of accession to the Treaty at Washington, DC., the United States being one of the three depositaries of the Treaty besides the United Kingdom and the former USSR. It then concluded a safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

At its General Conference in September, IAEA adopted a resolution requesting its Director General to ensure early implementation of the safeguards agreement and to verify the completeness of the inventory of South Africa's nuclear installations and material. The resolution was annexed to the Secretary-General's report on South Africa's nuclear capability of October 1991.<sup>(20)</sup>

In his report, the Secretary-General said that, as requested by the Assembly in 1990,<sup>(21)</sup> he continued to follow very closely South Africa's evolution in the nuclear field and had, in that connection, been in contact with IAEA and OAU. He had also been informed by South Africa of its accession to the non-proliferation Treaty.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 46/34 A, called on South Africa to comply fully with the implementation of its safeguards agreement with IAEA, to disclose all its nuclear installations and materials in conformity with its treaty obligations and to enhance confidence-building, peace and security in the region. The Assembly also called on all States, corporations, institutions and individuals not to engage in collaboration with South Africa that might lead it to violate its treaty obligations.

Israel-South Africa relations

The Special Committee against Apartheid, in the second part of its report<sup>(2)</sup> prepared in response to a General Assembly resolution of 1990,<sup>(22)</sup> dealt exclusively with relations between South Africa and Israel. The Committee said it had for almost two decades monitored with concern the relations between them in the light of their close links, particularly in the military and nuclear fields. The Committee stated that evidence showed that Israel was maintaining military links with South Africa in contravention of the 1977 Security Council arms embargo<sup>(18)</sup> and despite Israel's assurance that no new contracts would be undertaken.

The Committee further noted that total combined trade between South Africa and Israel fell from $343 million in 1989 to $317 million in 1990. The reduction was attributed to a drop in Israeli exports to South Africa of 41 per cent. South Africa's exports on the other hand rose by more than 20 per cent over the same period.

Cooperation in the exchange of medical technology and products also seemed to be growing. The Special Committee reported that a senior delegation from the Bophuthatswana National Development Corporation visited Israel in June to promote investment in the Bantustan by offering various tax incentives especially to attract high-technology commerce.

On 10 November, the South African President, F. W. de Klerk, accompanied by his Minister for Foreign Affairs, arrived in Israel for a three-day visit, the first by a South African head of State since 1976. On 11 November, the two countries signed a broad agreement for economic and scientific cooperation.

In conclusion, the Special Committee said it considered the provision of Israeli technology and know-how to South Africa as additional evidence of Israel's violations of the mandatory arms embargo. It recommended that the General Assembly call on Israel to cease its continuing collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/79 D by recorded vote.

Relations between South Africa and Israel

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the relations between South Africa and Israel and, in particular, its resolution 45/176 D of 19 December 1990,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid on recent developments concerning relations between South Africa and Israel, and the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's nuclear-tipped ballistic missile capability,

Noting with concern that the military relations between South Africa and Israel, especially in the area of military technology and in particular the collaboration in the production and testing of nuclear missiles, continue unabated,

1. Strongly deplores the collaboration of Israel with the South African regime in the military and nuclear fields:

2. Reiterates its demand that Israel desist from and terminate forthwith all forms of collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields;

3. Urges the Security Council to consider taking appropriate measures against Israel for its violation of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa;

4. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue to monitor the relations between South Africa and Israel and keep them under constant review and report to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

Situation in South Africa

Political prisoners and other detainees

The release of all political prisoners was one of the prerequisites provided for in the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid to help create a climate conducive to negotiations. In its annual report,<sup>(8)</sup> the Special Committee said the South African authorities had taken steps over the past year to release certain categories of political prisoners.

According to the Human Rights Commission of South Africa, more than 1,000 such prisoners had been released, 825 of them between January and August 1991. The South African authorities, on the other hand, said that a total of 1,145 prisoners claiming political status had been released by the end of August. The Commission contended that there were still more than 800 political prisoners in the country's jails. Repeated delays and controversies had arisen over the implementation of agreements reached between the South African authorities and ANC on the subject, leading the Lawyers for Human Rights in South Africa to state, in a submission of 17 October to the Special Committee, that the issue remained not only unresolved but highly volatile.

The Special Committee said that among the controversial features of the method adopted by the authorities to deal with the release of political prisoners was the establishment of "indemnity committees". Besides, the exclusion of political prisoners convicted of violent crimes from the process of release was seen by many human rights observers as a violation of previous agreements.

As the ultimate decision to grant political prisoner status remained in the hands of the regime, the Special Committee said there was a need to set up proper mechanisms to deal with disputed cases. It quoted the Human Rights Commission of South Africa as stating that the regime could not avoid ultimate responsibility for the fate of political prisoners held in the "independent" Bantustan of Bophuthatswana, where there were said to be 128 political prisoners as at 17 October, 24 of whom reportedly went on a hunger strike for several weeks.

Lawyers for Human Rights had warned, according to the Special Committee, that right-wing extremists could take advantage of the continuing debate over political prisoners and commit more acts of terror in the hope that, even if apprehended, they would benefit from a general amnesty. They further considered that the impasse fuelled the prevailing "culture of violence" with dire implications for the future of human rights in the country.

The Special Committee said that, despite certain amendments to security legislation, the South African authorities continued to use their powers of detention without trial against political activists. In June, the Internal Security and Intimidation Act, No. 138, of 1991 was passed into law, thus abrogating sections 28 and 50 A of the 1982 Internal Security Act, which permitted long-term preventive detention. Short-term preventive detention and witness detention, however, remained unchanged.

The Public Safety Act of 1953, which remained unaltered, also permitted detention without trial for 30 days. A number of other modifications were reportedly made to the Internal Security Act, withdrawing powers of house arrest and internal banishment, and eliminating a number of punishable offences (such as promotion of communism). The two Acts, however, allowed the formal prohibition of gatherings.

Arrests of political activists and political trials continued, with more than 8,000 arrests being recorded by the Human Rights Commission between July 1990 and June 1991. Of that number, 2,500 arrests were reportedly made in May, a month of mass demonstrations throughout South Africa. The Special Committee said that 312 prisoners, 17 of whom were considered political by the Commission, were on death row as at 30 August.

Activities of the Special Committee. During 1991, the Special Committee against Apartheid continued to promote the international campaign on behalf of South African political prisoners. On 11 October, it observed the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners.

In a letter of 9 October to the General Assembly President,<sup>(23)</sup> South Africa said it regretted the observance of the Day since all political prisoners with a legitimate claim to political status, within the meaning and spirit of the Groote Schuur and Pretoria Minutes, had been released. (The Groote Schuur Minute was an agreement reached between the South African Government and ANC in May 1990 on a common commitment to resolve the existing climate of violence and intimidation, as well as a commitment to a peaceful process of negotiations. The Pretoria Minute covered discussions held between the two sides on 6 August 1990 in which they again committed themselves to the Groote Schuur Minute. They also adopted a report on political offences, including guidelines on what constituted them. At that meeting, ANC announced it was suspending all armed actions and related activities.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 46/79 A, called on the South African authorities to enhance the climate conducive to negotiations by, among other things, ensuring the immediate release of any remaining political prisoners and the repeal of repressive laws and discriminatory legislation.

Apartheid in sports

Significant developments took place during 1991 regarding sports and cultural links with South Africa. After an absence of more than 25 years, South Africa was readmitted to the Olympic movement on 9 July 1991. Announcing its decision, the International Olympic Committee (IOC) said it had concluded that, following the repeal of the Land and Group Areas Acts, the revision of the Population Registration Act and the progress achieved in unifying sports on a non-racial basis, South Africa had sufficiently met its conditions for readmission.

At the Commonwealth level, the United Kingdom had led efforts to lift the sports boycott of South Africa, even before IOC adopted its decision. In October, the Commonwealth heads of Government, at their Harare summit, said they were encouraged by the considerable progress in the evolution of a unified and non-racial sports movement in South Africa and welcomed the IOC decision. They agreed to continue to encourage those developments and, where appropriate, to provide assistance. They stressed the need for each sporting body to provide assistance to sportsmen and sportswomen disadvantaged by apartheid, and set three criteria for lifting restrictions on a particular sport: the formal endorsement of the achievement of unity by the appropriate representative non-racial sporting organization in South Africa; readmittance to the relevant international governing body; and agreement of the appropriate non-racial sporting organization within South Africa to resume international competition. The Commonwealth leaders also stated that their Governments would continue to be guided in those matters by the National Olympic Committee of South Africa and other appropriate representative non-racial sporting organizations.

In June,<sup>(24)</sup> EC noted with satisfaction the progress achieved in desegregation in sports and proposed to lift the sports ban on a case-by-case basis, where unified and non-racial sporting bodies had been set up.

In July, South Africa was readmitted to the International Cricket Conference. It was also readmitted to the International Federation of Amateur Cycling, while the World Boxing Council sent a delegation to the country to re-evaluate the continuation of the ban on South African boxers. The International Federation of Motorcyclists also lifted its ban in July. On 19 July, the National Olympic and Sports Congress and the South African Non-Racial Olympic Committee agreed that the ban should be lifted on the following sporting disciplines, which had unified their ranks on a non-racial basis: badminton, canoeing, ice-skating, yachting, cycling, triathlon and equestrian events. On 5 October, they agreed to recommend that Tennis South Africa, the new united tennis organization in the country, be affiliated with the National Olympic Committee of South Africa.

At the General Assembly of the Association of National Olympic Committees of Africa (Cairo, Egypt, 19-21 September), a monitoring committee was set up to advise on developments in South African sport.

A new issue of the Register of Sports Contacts with South Africa, published in April 1991 by the Special Committee, showed that 3,593 athletes, of whom only 157 were new additions in 1990, had violated the sports ban between 1 September 1980 and 31 December 1990.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 46/79 A, called on the international community to resume sports links with unified non-racial sporting organizations of South Africa which had received endorsement by appropriate non-racial sporting organizations in the country and to assist disadvantaged athletes there.

Culture and apartheid

In its report, the Special Committee said that a broad and wide-ranging debate on the future of culture in the interim and post-apartheid periods continued in South Africa. Efforts also continued to establish a broad-based and non-partisan cultural body in order to facilitate contacts with the world of culture outside the country. The Committee explained that the cultural boycott was based on a two-pronged approach of isolating the apartheid cultural structures and supporting the democratic ones.

Participants at a symposium organized by the Committee (Los Angeles, California, United States, May 1991) supported the United Nations policy of encouraging certain international cultural and academic contacts, which gave appropriate assistance to the anti-apartheid structures and to the disadvantaged sectors of South African society. Representatives of South African organizations had the opportunity of exchanging ideas with members of the United States entertainment industry on assistance to the anti-apartheid cultural structures in South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 46/79 A, called on the international community, in view of the progress made in South Africa to overcome obstacles to negotiations, to resume academic, scientific and cultural links with democratic anti-apartheid organizations and individuals in those fields.

Women under apartheid

Responding to a 1990 request of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(25)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women in January 1991 a report on women and children living under apartheid,<sup>(26)</sup> which dealt with the effects of apartheid on equal educational opportunity, women's legal rights and their participation in the economy. It said their experience under apartheid differed from other groups as the degree of disadvantage was determined by race, class and culture. Within each ethnic group, women had a lower status than men in both law and practice and, as with racism, the disadvantage ranged across the political, economic, social, domestic, cultural and civil spheres.

The subordinate role of women in South Africa predated independence and had been institutionalized in the laws, as well as in the customs and practices, of all racial groups. Specific efforts would have to be made, during the transition to majority rule, to ensure that elimination of discrimination based on sex was also dealt with.

On 9 August 1991, the Special Committee against Apartheid commemorated the Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women in South Africa—a day set aside by the General Assembly in 1981<sup>(27)</sup> for the observance of the 1956 demonstration by 20,000 women against the Pass Laws. The Secretary-General, in a statement to the Committee read on his behalf, said the women of South Africa had borne a heavy burden over decades under apartheid. Socio-economic inequalities had particularly victimized them and it was in that area that international solidarity with them could best be manifested. Assistance to them would contribute to the stability and progress of their country and promote a peaceful transformation of the political, economic and social environment in South Africa.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/20 by recorded vote.

Women and children under apartheid

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1990/13 of 24 May 1990,

Recalling also the provisions of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989 and contained in the annex thereto,

Noting the positive changes initiated by the Government of South Africa aimed at dismantling the system of apartheid,

Deeply concerned about the continuing degradation and abuse of African women and children by the white minority regime of South Africa, as noted in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Recognizing that the equality of women and men cannot be achieved without the success of the struggle towards a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on women and children living under apartheid;

2. Commends those women both inside and outside South Africa who have resisted oppression and who have remained steadfast in their opposition to apartheid;

3. Urges all parties engaged in negotiations for a post-apartheid society to ensure that the principle of equality between women and men is incorporated in all laws and institutions;

4. Urges the Government of South Africa to ratify the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women at the earliest possible opportunity;

5. Appeals to all countries and United Nations bodies, in consultation with liberation movements, as appropriate, to increase their support for educational, health, vocational training and employment opportunities for women and children living under apartheid;

6. Demands the unconditional release of all political prisoners and detainees, among whom are women and children, in accordance with the undertaking of the President of South Africa;

7. Urges the international community to maintain all existing and any other necessary measures against South Africa until all the provisions of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa have been met;

8. Decides that the Commission on the Status of Women should remain seized of the issue of women and children living under apartheid.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/20

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour Algeria, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Botswana, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Chile, China, Ecuador, Guinea, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Nicaragua, Niger, Pakistan, Peru, Rwanda, Somalia, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Abstaining: Austria, Bulgaria, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Romania, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Aid programmes and inter-agency cooperation

United Nations assistance to victims of apartheid was provided through national liberation movements recognized by OAU and directly to individuals for education and training. Legal assistance, relief and education continued to be given by the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa to persons prosecuted under South Africa's repressive and discriminatory legislation. Similar assistance was provided by NGOs such as the International Defence and Aid Fund.

In a report of November 1991 to the General Assembly,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General said the United Nations system was preparing a concerted response to current and future requests for assistance, particularly from the disadvantaged sectors of South African society. He indicated his readiness to help, when requested, in the promotion of the complex and delicate process under way in South Africa and in the provision of assistance during the transitional period and beyond.

In April, ACC issued guidelines for a coordinated approach by the United Nations system to questions relating to South Africa.<sup>(6)</sup>

Assistance by UN agencies

UNDP activities. As the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)—like other United Nations agencies—had no official mandate to support operational activities within South Africa, it had since 1974 limited its involvement to externally based projects to assist the national liberation movements. Its special assistance programme continued to be implemented with the endorsement of the Liberation Committee of OAU, based at Dar-es-Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania. The ongoing programme for 1987-1991 included over 30 projects with a total funding of $17 million. More than two thirds of the amount had been allocated to projects in training and education.

In June 1990, the UNDP Governing Council allocated an additional $12 million for the continuation of the national liberation movements programme during the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996). Discussions took place in February 1991 with the national liberation movements, prospective training institutions and selected United Nations technical agencies on a future technical cooperation initiative in a post-apartheid South Africa.

To advance the needs assessment process, UNDP also helped organize an information exchange mechanism, composed of a group of development partners (United Nations Centre against Apartheid, African Development Bank, World Bank, Economic Commission for Africa, Commonwealth Secretariat, European Economic Community), to shape consensus on appropriate technical cooperation responses to the South African milieu. Their first meeting took place on 30 September 1991 at Geneva, and a second was projected for the first quarter of 1992.

UNICEF activities. Assistance by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) to South African children and women was channelled through ANC and PAC. In collaboration with the World Health Organization (WHO), UNHCR and UNDP, UNICEF helped South African children and women residing in Angola, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia in the areas of health, nutrition, emergency relief, formal and non-formal education, and early childhood care and development.

In 1990, the UNICEF Executive Board had approved a three-year (1990-1992) $3 million master plan of operations with three main components: a situation analysis study to help determine the priority problems of children and women in South Africa; a children's rights campaign to assist anti-apartheid NGOs in intensifying their activities within the general framework of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child;<sup>(28)</sup> and direct support to victims of apartheid based on the results of the situation analysis. Significant progress had been made in the short period since implementation of those activities began in the middle of 1991.

UNHCR action. In addition to a Memorandum of Understanding signed by UNHCR with South Africa on 4 September 1991 on the voluntary repatriation of South African refugees and political exiles, the two sides reached consensus on the text of an agreement intended to govern the legal status, privileges and immunities of UNHCR and its personnel in South Africa. An office of Charge de Mission was established in the country to facilitate the implementation of the repatriation programme, which was expected to end within 12 months.

According to UNHCR, the number of South African refugees in southern Africa had broadly remained stable at some 38,000, of whom over half received UNHCR assistance. The involvement of other relevant United Nations agencies and NGOs was foreseen in the Memorandum of Understanding. The effective participation of those agencies in providing humanitarian and development assistance was, however, dependent on progress made in the fulfilment of the General Assembly's 1990 resolution on international efforts to eradicate apartheid.<sup>(29)</sup>

The other points of the agreement included a comprehensive amnesty for all political offences, a mechanism for representations on behalf of persons not granted amnesty, free access for UNHCR officers to returnees anywhere in the country, and complete freedom of movement for returnees in South Africa.

UNESCO action. The General Conference of UNESCO in November 1989 had adopted a special project entitled "Contribution to the elimination of apartheid: towards an apartheid-free world" within UNESCO's third medium-term plan, 1990-1995. The 1992-1993 programme, taking into account developments in South Africa, was to be coordinated closely with other United Nations efforts during the transition period and thereafter. Under that programme, assistance was to be provided to the national liberation movements and to anti-apartheid democratic institutions and organizations for the elaboration of strategies for alternative policies and programmes for culture, information and education for all. Training in education, social sciences and other nation-building areas would be provided.

UNESCO collaborated with the Centre against Apartheid in organizing the International Conference on Educational Needs of the Victims of Apartheid (Paris, 25-27 June). Follow-up activities to the Conference were planned, in particular assistance for formulating educational policies and strategies for a post-apartheid South Africa, in consultation with and at the request of ANC, PAC and educational anti-apartheid organizations within South Africa. Jointly with the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, UNESCO organized a workshop on human rights issues for a post-apartheid South Africa (Banjul, Gambia, 18-21 June).

WHO action. WHO's global programme on acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) attempted to maintain informal information exchange on the incidence of the human immunodeficiency virus infection and of AIDS with international NGOs in South Africa with a clear anti-apartheid position.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

Nine grants totalling $3,775,000 were made in 1991 from the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, established in 1965<sup>(30)</sup> to provide assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and relief to South African refugees. According to a report of October 1991 of the Secretary-General,<sup>(31)</sup> the Trust Fund had received since his report of September 1990<sup>(32)</sup> $3,077,705 in voluntary contributions from 28 Member States. The total income of the Trust Fund since its inception was $43,614,247 and the total amount of grants was $43,383,541, including those approved in 1991. Pledges of $924,540 were outstanding as at 30 September 1991.

The Committee of Trustees of the Fund had on 28 February held consultations in New York with prominent lawyers and representatives of national human rights and lawyers' associations from South Africa to discuss the Trust Fund's activities. There had been broad agreement that the Fund should pursue its work as long as apartheid existed.

Following the consultations, the Committee agreed at a formal meeting on 7 March that the Trust Fund's mandate remained very much relevant to the evolving political situation in South Africa. It also agreed that there was a great need for legal, humanitarian and educational assistance to former political prisoners and to those to be released, as well as returning exiles, in order to facilitate their reintegration into South African society. The Committee said there might be an increasing need for legal assistance to address the legitimate grievances resulting from the formal dismantling of apartheid structures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/79 F without vote.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, in particular resolution 45/176 H of 19 December 1990,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, to which is annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund,

Taking note of its resolution 45/176 A adopted without a vote on 19 December 1990, and in particular of paragraph 16, relating to the reintegration of released political prisoners into South African society, Welcoming the repeal and revision of the major apartheid and security laws and a number of discriminatory and repressive laws, rules and regulations,

Welcoming also the release of a large number of political prisoners and the agreement reached between the South African authorities and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees allowing for the voluntary repatriation of political exiles and refugees,

Further welcoming the National Peace Accord signed on 14 September 1991 as a significant initiative towards addressing the critical issue of violence in the country and providing a framework within which substantive and broad-based discussions can take place,

Remaining concerned about the continued existence of a number of discriminatory and repressive laws, rules and regulations in South Africa,

Concerned about the delay in the full implementation of agreements regarding the release of any remaining political prisoners and the return of refugees and exiles and about reports that trials of politically motivated cases were carried out in 1991,

Recognizing the work carried out by the International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa over the years in providing legal and humanitarian assistance to the victims of apartheid and their families and noting with satisfaction the transfer of programmes of the Fund to broad-based, impartial organizations inside South Africa,

Strongly convinced that continued, direct and substantial contributions to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies concerned are necessary to enable them to meet the extensive needs for humanitarian, legal and relief assistance during the critical transition to a non-racial and democratic South Africa,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa;

2. Supports continued and substantial humanitarian, legal and educational assistance by the international community in order to alleviate the plight of those persecuted under discriminatory legislation in South Africa and their families, and to facilitate the reintegration of released political prisoners and returning exiles into South African society;

3. Supports assistance by the Trust Fund for work in the legal field aimed at ensuring effective implementation of legislation repealing major apartheid laws, redressing continuing adverse effects of these laws and encouraging increased confidence in the rule of law;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have contributed to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid in South Africa;

5. Appeals for generous contributions to the Trust Fund;

6. Also appeals for direct contributions to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa;

7. Commends the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund for their persistent efforts to promote humanitarian and legal assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa, as well as assistance to their families and to refugees from South Africa.

Work programme of the Special Committee

In its 1991 report,<sup>(8)</sup> the Special Committee against Apartheid recommended that the General Assembly authorize it to continue monitoring the situation in South Africa and international pressure on the regime. Outlining its programme of work for 1992, the Committee said it would be guided by a two-track approach, namely, pressure and assistance. It would emphasize the need for close monitoring of developments in South Africa and for concerted pressure on the authorities as well as increased assistance to the anti-apartheid forces and the disadvantaged sectors of the society. Special attention would be given to issues such as constitution-building, human rights, domestic peace, education and training, and ways to help address the serious socio-economic problems of the country.

Its two main concerns during the period under review were the situation of political prisoners and the recurring violence in South Africa. In May, it expressed deep concern about the deteriorating physical condition of political prisoners on hunger strike and demanded their immediate and unconditional release. In July, it reiterated its concern at the Government's inability or unwillingness to bring the violence to an end. It expressed again in September concern about the resurgence of violence, resulting in the death and injury of hundreds of persons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/79 B by recorded vote.

Programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

1. Commends the Special Committee against Apartheid for the diligent manner in which it has discharged its responsibilities in monitoring the situation in South Africa and in promoting concerted international support for the process towards the early establishment of a democratic, non-racial society;

2. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee and endorses its recommendations relating to its programme of work;

3. ## Other States

Angola

A peace agreement was signed on 31 May 1991 by the Government of Angola and the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA). It was based on a plan proposed jointly by the United States, the USSR and Portugal whereby an internationally monitored cease-fire would come into effect and a transition period of 18 months would lead to multi-party elections in October or November 1992. During the transition period, a joint political and military committee, composed of equal numbers of government and UNITA officials, with Portugal, the United States, the USSR and the United Nations as observers, was to deal with the whole process leading to the cease-fire, elections, stability and internal security, and was to oversee the creation of a single national army. While the two parties had at times accused each other of violating the Peace Accords and delaying the release of political prisoners, progress towards the normalization of political life in Angola had continued steadily since June 1991.

Prior to the signing of the Peace Accords, the Government of Angola made repeated allegations that South Africa continued to assist UNITA, the Special Committee against Apartheid said in its annual report.(1) Under the provisions of an agreement signed in 1988, which led to the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978)(2) on the independence of Namibia, South Africa had undertaken to end all military support to UNITA; however, at a meeting of the joint commission monitoring implementation of the agreement (Cape Town, South Africa, January 1991), Angola accused South Africa of having sent tons of arms and other supplies to UNITA through neighbouring countries.

The texts of the Peace Accords were transmitted to the Secretary-General by Angola on 17 May 1991.(3) Portugal, the former colonial Power, transmitted on 17 May a joint communiqué(4) on the peace talks it had hosted at Lisbon on 15 and 16 May. Angola and Cuba, on 24 May,(5) forwarded a joint declaration concerning the completion of the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola.

UNAVEM II

On 30 May, under resolution 696(1991), the Security Council established the second United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM II) for a period of 17 months from the date of the adoption of the resolution. Its mandate was to verify the Peace Accords ("Acordos de Paz para Angola").

The Secretary-General had recommended the enlargement and extension of the mandate of the original UNAVEM in response to the new developments in Angola. Reporting to the Security Council on 6 June,(6) he said that UNAVEM had successfully accomplished its mission ahead of schedule. The original mandate, set out by the Council in 1988,(7) included verification of the redeployment to the north and the staged and total withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola by 1 July 1991, under a timetable a reed to by Angola and Cuba in December 1988.(8)

The Secretary-General, in a May report,(9) advised the Security Council on how it might wish to respond to an Angolan request, which, if accepted, would entail the enlargement and extension of UNAVEM's mandate. Angola, on 17 May,(3) had asked the Secretary-General to take action to ensure the participation of the United Nations in verifying the implementation of the Peace Accords and the extension of UNAVEM's presence until the holding of general elections. The report also set out the verification tasks arising from the Peace Accords.

The Secretary-General said it was a matter of great satisfaction that an end was at last in sight to the cruel war that had ravaged Angola for too long. He congratulated the Angolan Government and UNITA, the mediator (Portugal) and the two observer delegations (USSR, United States) for their statesmanship and diplomatic skill in negotiating the Peace Accords. The concepts spelt out in the cease-fire agreement for its monitoring and verification seemed to be sound, he said, provided that the two sides adhered scrupulously to their commitments under the Accords and that their representatives worked together in a new spirit of cooperation and national reconciliation.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 696(1991).

The Security Council,

Welcoming the decision of the Government of the People's Republic of Angola and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola to conclude the "Acordos de Paz para Angola",

Stressing the importance it attaches to the signing of the "Acordos de Paz para Angola" and to the fulfilment by the parties in good faith of the obligations contained therein,

Stressing also the importance of all States refraining from taking any actions which could undermine the agreements mentioned above and contributing to their implementation as well as respecting fully the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola,

Noting with satisfaction the decision taken by the Governments of the People's Republic of Angola and the Republic of Cuba to complete the withdrawal, ahead of schedule, of all Cuban troops from Angola by 25 May 1991,

Considering the request submitted to the Secretary-General by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Angola in his letter dated 8 May 1991,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 20 May 1991 and the addendum thereto dated 29 May 1991,

Taking into account that the mandate of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM) established by Security Council resolution 626(1988) of 20 December 1988 expires on 22 July 1991,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General and its addendum and the recommendations therein;

2. Decides accordingly to entrust a new mandate to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (henceforth UNAVEM II) as proposed by the Secretary-General in line with the "Acordos de Paz para Angola", and requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to this effect;

3. Also decides to establish UNAVEM II for a period of 17 months from the date of adoption of the present resolution in order to accomplish the objectives stated in the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council immediately after the signature of the "Acordos de Paz para Angola" and to keep the Council fully informed of further developments.

Security Council resolution 696(1991)

30 May 1991 Meeting 2991 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/22652).

Report and communication. Following the Council's request in resolution 696(1991) that it be kept informed of developments immediately after the signing of the Peace Accords, the Secretary-General in a 4 June report(10) said he had been present at the ceremony. He had also immediately taken steps to implement the mandate of UNAVEM II. Advance parties were deployed on 2 June to five of the six regional headquarters.

In a 13 June letter to the Council,(11) the Secretary-General proposed that the military observer element of UNAVEM II be composed of contingents from the following Member States: Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Canada, Congo, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, India, Ireland, Jordan, Malaysia, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Senegal, Singapore, Spain, Sweden, Yugoslavia, Zimbabwe. He reminded the Council that Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, the Congo, Czechoslovakia, India, Jordan, Norway, Spain and Yugoslavia were already contributing military observers.

Financing of UNAVEM II

The General Assembly on 20 December 1991 approved $42,876,720 gross ($42,062,000 net) to cover UNAVEM II operations from 1 January to 31 October 1992. For the period from 1 June to 31 December 1991, it had appropriated in August $49,467,000 gross, which was to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with a special formula established for peace-keeping operations in 1989.

In a report of December 1991,(12) the Secretary-General noted that assessments totalling $66.8 million had been apportioned among Member States in respect of UNAVEM from its inception (3 January 1989) to 30 November 1991, against which contributions totalling $43.8 million had been received, leaving a balance due of $23 million. He estimated that there would be a cash deficit of some $21.3 million unless outstanding contributions were received before 31 December. He recommended that no action be taken currently in connection with the projected net unencumbered balance of $1,021,200, as well as the interest and miscellaneous income of $443,100, and that those amounts be retained in the UNAVEM II Special Account pending the receipt of the outstanding contributions.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), also in a report of December,(13) recommended for the 10 months from 1 January to 31 October 1992 appropriations of $10,719,180 gross ($10,515,500 net) less than the Secretary-General had recommended in his revised estimates. It recommended, however, that additional commitment authority of up to that amount be authorized on the basis of a performance report to be submitted in 1992.

Taking into account a projected surplus of UNAVEM I of $1,421,568 gross ($1,351,258 net), ACABQ had recommended in July(14) appropriations of $48,045,342 gross ($47,711,242 net) for the initial seven months of UNAVEM II from 1 June to 31 December 1991. The Secretary-General, also in July,(15) had initially estimated the total cost of UNAVEM II at $122,621,900 gross ($121,416,000 net) for the 17-month mandate period from 1 June 1991 to 31 October 1992. That amount included a commitment authority of $4.7 million to cover emplacement of some 120 military observers and police monitors and 19 additional international staff in the mission area, as well as urgently needed logistical support.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

6. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 5 of the present resolution, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 334,100 dollars approved for the period from 1 June to 31 December 1991, inclusive;

11. Decides to include in the draft agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II".

General Assembly resolution 45/269

Comorian island of Mayotte

The question of Mayotte—one of a group of four islands in the Indian Ocean Comoro Archipelago—remained on the General Assembly's agenda in 1991. The Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros acceded to independence on 6 July 1975, following a referendum in 1974. France, the former colonial Power, had since continued to administer the island of Mayotte.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a report of October 1991 to the General Assembly,<sup>(16)</sup> the Secretary-General said he had addressed a note verbale to the Comoros and France, drawing their attention to the contents of a 1990 Assembly resolution on the question of the island of Mayotte<sup>(17)</sup> and inviting them to provide him with any pertinent information for inclusion in his report. A similar communication had been sent to the Secretary-General of OAU. Under the 1990 resolution, the Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to make available his good offices in the search for a negotiated solution to the problem.

France, in its response, reiterated its position that Mayotte had since December 1976 been a territorial collectivity of the French Republic. That special status did not close the door to any future development. The climate of confidence that had been established between the Comoros and France had made dialogue possible. In the same spirit, the President of France had declared that France was willing to resolve the problem of Mayotte, subject to the requirements of its own law and international law. France was prepared to contribute to a just and lasting solution in accordance with its Constitution and the wishes of the peoples concerned. Accordingly, it was maintaining a continuing dialogue at the highest level with the Comoros,

In its letter to the Secretary-General, the Comoros said that, in the search for a settlement of the problem, it had always favoured dialogue and agreement in conformity with the principles of the United Nations Charter. A round-table conference in 1989, attended by representatives of all shades of political opinion in the country, had unanimously confirmed that Mayotte belonged to the Comoros and that it should be reintegrated.

After his election, and following meetings in Paris and Moroni with the President of France, President Said Mohamed Djohar had reaffirmed his willingness to resolve the problem. Towards that end, he had announced his new approach of tripartite discussion involving the French and Comorian authorities, as well as the people of Mayotte. The French President, during a visit to Moroni in June 1990, had responded that a concrete and pragmatic approach must be taken to resolve the issue.

The Comoros further stated that the willingness of the two parties to engage in a dialogue must be supported by the international community at large, and the United Nations in particular, in order to ensure that the numerous resolutions on the subject were finally implemented and that a just and lasting solution was found. It once again called on the Secretary-General to use his good offices and to continue his role of mediator in the search for a just and equitable settlement that respected the territorial integrity and sovereignty of the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros.

OAU quoted a resolution adopted by its Assembly of Heads of State and Government (Abuja, Nigeria, 3-5 June 1991). The OAU Assembly had again reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over Mayotte and had appealed to the French Government to meet the legitimate demands of the Comoros in accordance with the relevant resolutions of OAU, the United Nations, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the League of Arab States. OAU mandated its Ad Hoc Committee of Seven on the question of Mayotte to resume dialogue with the French authorities in the effort to ensure the return of the island to the Comoros.

In his concluding statement, the Secretary-General said he had maintained close contact with all parties, informing them of his readiness to make available his good offices in the search for a peaceful solution to the problem.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 October, the General Assembly by a recorded vote adopted resolution 46/9.

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling also its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3161(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3291(XXIX) of 13 December 1974, 31/4 of 21 October 1976, 32/7 of 1 November 1977, 34/69 of 6 December 1979, 35/43 of 28 November 1980, 36/105 of 10 December 1981, 37/65 of 3 December 1982, 38/13 of 21 November 1983, 39/48 of 11 December 1984, 40/62 of 9 December 1985, 41/30 of 3 November 1986, 42/17 of 11 November 1987, 43/14 of 26 October 1988, 44/9 of 18 October 1989 and 45/11 of 1 November 1990, in which, inter alia, it affirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 3385(XXX) of 12 November 1975 on the admission of the Comoros to membership in the United Nations, in which it reaffirmed the necessity of respecting the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago, composed of the islands of Anjouan, Grande-Comore, Mayotte and Mohéli,

Recalling further that, in accordance with the agreements between the Comoros and France, signed on 15 June 1973, concerning the accession of the Comoros to independence, the results of the referendum of 22 December 1974 were to be considered on a global basis and not island by island,

Convinced that a just and lasting solution to the question of Mayotte is to be found in respect for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago,

Convinced also that a speedy solution of the problem is essential for the preservation of the peace and security which prevail in the region,

Bearing in mind the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to that problem,

Taking note of the repeated wish of the Government of the Comoros to initiate as soon as possible a frank and serious dialogue with the French Government with a view to accelerating the return of the Comorian island of Mayotte to the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind also the decisions of the Organization of African Unity, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference on this question,

1. Reaffirms the sovereignty of the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte;

2. Invites the Government of France to honour the commitments entered into prior to the referendum on the self-determination of the Comoro Archipelago of 22 December 1974 concerning respect for the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros;

3. Calls for the translation into practice of the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to the question of Mayotte;

4. Urges the Government of France to accelerate the process of negotiations with the Government of the Comoros with a view to ensuring the effective and prompt return of the island of Mayotte to the Comoros;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to maintain continuous contact with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity with regard to this problem and to make available his good offices in the search for a peaceful negotiated solution to the problem;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on this matter to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte".

Liberia

The Security Council considered the situation in Liberia for the first time on 22 January 1991, a little over a year after a conflict had broken out in the West African country. The meeting was requested by Côte d'Ivoire in a letter of 15 January to the Council President.<sup>(18)</sup> Liberia and Nigeria, at their request, were invited to participate without the right to vote.

Meeting number. SC 2974.

Liberia described the deteriorating situation in the country as well as the humanitarian and other needs of the population. It said full implementation of a peace plan formulated in 1990 by the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS)-which had a multinational cease-fire monitoring force (ECOMOG) there-could lead to the establishment of durable and lasting peace in the country.

Nigeria, speaking as the alternate Chairman of the group of ambassadors of countries members of ECOWAS at the United Nations, said that ECOMOG's mandate was to restore peace and create an atmosphere conducive to the resumption of free political activity and, eventually, democratic elections. The operation had been endorsed by all the leaders of the West African subregion as well as by OAU. Those leaders had succeeded in getting the parties to agree to a cease-fire, and it was important that the Council urge them to abide by it.

The President of the Council, after consultations among Council members, read out a statement on behalf of the Council:<sup>(19)</sup>

"The members of the Security Council took note of the final communiqué of the first extraordinary session of the heads of State and Government of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) issued in Bamako, Mali, on 28 November 1990.

"The members of the Security Council commend the efforts made by the ECOWAS heads of State and Government to promote peace and normalcy in Liberia.

"The members of the Security Council call upon the parties to the conflict in Liberia to continue to respect the cease-fire agreement which they have signed and to cooperate fully with ECOWAS to restore peace and normalcy in Liberia.

"The members of the Security Council express appreciation to the Member States, the Secretary-General and humanitarian organizations for the humanitarian assistance to Liberia and call for additional assistance. In this connection the Council welcomes the resumption of the United Nations emergency programme in Liberia following the acceptance of a general cease-fire.

"The members of the Security Council support the appeal launched by the ECOWAS Summit to the international community for increased humanitarian assistance to the people of Liberia."

By a letter of 10 April to the Secretary-General,(20) Sierra Leone charged that a contingent of armed bandits of the National Patriotic Front of Liberia, led by Charles Taylor, had at 0800 hours on Saturday, 23 March, attacked the border towns of Bomaru and Senga in the eastern province of Sierra Leone. Two senior military officers and 11 civilians had been killed. Sierra Leone military forces had been sent to the area and, after an intense engagement, the invaders had been repelled. Since 1 April, those forces had retaken large areas previously held by the invading army. Because of the seriousness and persistence of the attacks, Sierra Leone reserved the right to use all necessary means, including assistance from friendly countries, to protect the lives of its people and defend its territorial integrity.

At the invitation of ECOWAS, a United Nations representative went to Côte d'Ivoire to observe negotiations in June on Liberia's future. The Yamoussoukro Communiqué of 30 October 1991 referred to an agreement by all the concerned parties in the Liberian conflict on a cease-fire and the holding of elections within six months.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

On 18 December 1991, the General Assembly, by decision 46/436, decided to defer consideration of a July 1986 Declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU on the aerial and naval military attack against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the United States Administration in April of that year(21) and to include it in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh (1992) session.

Namibia

Namibia and South Africa

South Africa and Namibia held a number of meetings during 1991 on the issue of Walvis Bay and the offshore islands, as well as the boundary between the two countries on the Orange River. According to joint statements issued at Windhoek, Namibia, on 17 May and 24 September, a joint technical committee was established to advise on the functions and structures of a joint administration to be set up in Walvis Bay, pending the settlement of the issue.

UN Fund for Namibia

In a report of September 1991 to the General Assembly's Fifth Committee, submitted in response to a 1990 Assembly resolution,(23) the Secretary-General provided an update of the activities and financial status of the United Nations Fund for Namibia. It covered not only the financing of the individual scholarship programmes but also the training projects carried out under the Nationhood Programme for Namibia. The Fund, financed mainly through voluntary contributions, was administered by the United Nations Council for Namibia until 11 September 1990, when the Assembly decided to dissolve the Council.(24) The Assembly also decided that the Fund should continue to operate in order to ensure completion of all currently financed programmes and activities, and that it would operate under the Secretary-General's custody.(25) It established a Trust Committee, which was to serve as the Fund's trustee until its dissolution, expected in 1994.

In 1991, under the Fund's General Account and the Nationhood Programme Account, training and education projects were financed for Namibians who had been awarded scholarships in various fields of study prior to the independence of Namibia in March 1990. Expenditures under the General Account also provided for the extension of scholarship awards, social and medical assistance for awards holders and their repatriation to Namibia upon completion of their course work. The ongoing projects financed under the General Account prior to 1991 were approved for transfer to the Nationhood Programme Account effective 1 January 1991, with the exception of one project whose one remaining student was being absorbed under the individual scholarship programme. As at 1 January, there were 80 scholarship holders; it was projected that 40 of those awards would be extended to 1992 and 10 to 1993. Total estimated costs of awards from 1991 through the anticipated completion of the programme in 1993 was approximately $2.1 million, i.e., $0.5 million higher than estimated in 1990.

Under the Nationhood Programme, eight previously approved projects were still under implementation. One project, initially scheduled for completion at the end of 1991, providing support to the United Nations Vocational Training Centre for assistance to Namibians in Angola, was terminated, since the Governing Board of the Centre decided in March to terminate the operations of the Centre in Angola, transferring it to Namibia.

In addition, the Secretary-General estimated that three group training projects would require financing from the Fund amounting to $1,406,000 for the period 1991-1994. Also, funding was approved by the Trust Committee under two new projects for the financing of outstanding commitments in relation to completed projects.

The projects were being implemented in various countries. The fields of training covered were in areas such as mining, maritime training, journalism and communications, banking, vocational training, telecommunications, logistics and law, political science and economic development. Six projects were expected to be completed in 1991, four in 1992, one in 1993 and two in 1994. Total requirements for all 13 projects were estimated at $3,385,300.

Due to various factors, a surplus of $2,673,400 was projected as at 31 December 1994 under the Nationhood Programme Account, while a deficit of $205,700 was projected for the individual scholarship programme under the General Account at the time of its estimated completion in 1993. It was the Secretary-General's intention to review with the Trust Committee the possibility of absorbing the deficit under the General Account within the overall fund balance, should the need for such action arise.

The report did not cover the United Nations Institute for Namibia, which was also financed from the Fund. Pursuant to a 1990 Assembly resolution,<sup>(25)</sup> the Institute had ceased its operations at Lusaka, Zambia, on 30 September 1990 and the results of the liquidation proceedings were being finalized. It was projected that all remaining activities financed through the Fund under the Nationhood Programme Account and the General Account would be completed by the end of 1994.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 46/185 A, section II, of 20 December 1991, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and approved his proposals. In resolution 46/65, it again requested United Nations agencies and organizations to continue providing humanitarian, material and moral assistance to Namibia and all newly independent and emerging States to enable them to consolidate their political independence and achieve genuine economic independence.

Financing of UNTAG

In April 1991,<sup>(26)</sup> the Secretary-General presented his second performance report on the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG). He said that revised expenditures, including costs related to the liquidation of UNTAG through 30 June 1991 and the requirements to meet the shortfall in voluntary contributions for the repatriation of Namibians, consisted of disbursements of $322.1 million and unliquidated obligations of $54.8 million, for a total of $376.9 million gross ($368.3 million net); revised requirements were $64.9 million less than the total resources (original cost estimates plus voluntary contributions in cash and kind) of $441.8 million (gross).

The Secretary-General also noted that of the $409.6 million in contributions assessed to Member States, $386.5 million had been received as at 31 March 1991, leaving contributions in the amount of $23.1 million outstanding. Voluntary contributions in cash totalled $13.1 million, while those in kind amounted to $14.7 million.

The Secretary-General also provided supplementary information on the disposition of the property of UNTAG. The overall residual value of that property at the conclusion of the mission amounted to $40.8 million, disposed of as follows: $14.5 million worth of items retained by the United Nations for use in existing or future operations; $374,000 of items sold to United Nations agencies and related organizations; and $26 million of items donated to the Government of Namibia.

The Secretary-General proposed that the shortfall of $3,336,000 for funding the repatriation of some 45,000 Namibians by UNHCR be charged to the UNTAG Special Account. He further proposed that the special arrangements approved by the General Assembly in 1990<sup>(27)</sup> for the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group (UNII-MOG)-under which appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents or logistic support were to be retained beyond the period stipulated in article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations-be extended and applied to UNTAG.

ACABQ, also in a report of April,<sup>(28)</sup> recommended that the unencumbered balance of $54.3 million (not including the shortfall for the repatriation of Namibians) as shown in the Secretary-General's report be credited in relevant amounts to Member States in accordance with the Financial Regulations and applicable practice. It recommended that the Board of Auditors be requested to expedite the audit of the UNTAG account so that it could be approved by the Assembly at its forty-sixth session. It further recommended that the shortfall for the repatriation of Namibians be considered by the Assembly at its forty-sixth session and that, in the meanwhile, the Secretary-General explore the question in consultation with UNHCR. The analysis and alternative proposals would include a detailed accounting of UNHCR expenditure on the repatriation.

Concerning the proposal to extend the 1990 decision of the Assembly to UNTAG, ACABQ recalled that, in its oral report on the financing of UNIIMOG, it had requested the Secretary-General to propose revised guidelines and possible amendments to the Financial Regulations for setting limits to the period within which Governments were required to submit their claims. Pending the receipt of such proposals and without prejudice as to what it might recommend at that time, ACABQ recommended acceptance of the extension of the Assembly's decision to UNTAG.

The Secretary-General, in a report of December 1991,(29) recommended that the unutilized balance of $39,276,257 in the UNTAG Special Account be transferred to his proposed peace-keeping reserve fund, if established. In the meantime, it should remain in the Special Account until the Assembly reached a decision on such a fund. Reflecting changes in actual disbursements, liquidation of outstanding obligations and revised requirements for the repatriation of Namibians, the estimated operating costs of UNTAG had been further reduced to $366,234,324 as at 30 November 1991. Member States had utilized $26,247,433 of the $46,011,473 in credits due to them. The unutilized credit balance payable to certain Member States amounted to $19,782,606, while outstanding assessed contributions from 57 States totalled $3,431,580.

The Secretary-General also recommended that the Assembly take a decision on his proposal that the shortfall of $3,351,395 in contributions, against programme costs of $35,327,085 for the repatriation of Namibians, be met from the Special Account; the shortfall could not be covered from any other funds available to UNHCR and the repatriation programme had been seen as an integral part of the UNTAG operation in the achievement of Namibia's independence.

The report of the Board of Auditors on the audit of the UNTAG Special Account was submitted in December 1991.(30) The Board recommended that a decision be taken on the feasibility of establishing a reserve fund to finance the initial basic requirements of new peace-keeping operations with the interest income of $29.4 million from contributions to UNTAG and what might accrue from future peace-keeping operations. An amount of $3,352,000 should be considered to meet the overall shortfall in funding for the repatriation of Namibian refugees incurred by UNHCR. Regular follow-up on the payment of outstanding contributions should continue to be made and Member States should be encouraged to utilize credits from the revised UNTAG assessment to settle their commitments with other peace-keeping operations. A timely and adequate review, as well as a follow-up of unliquidated obligations, should be undertaken to free the accounts of invalid obligations. Action should be taken to write off the property with a residual value of $26 million donated by the United Nations to the Government of Namibia, the UNTAG account should be credited with property sold to United Nations agencies, amounting to $6.2 million, and UNTAG equipment with the residual value of $0.38 million issued on loan to some United Nations agencies should be officially acknowledged.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 May, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/265 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989,

6. Requests the Board of Auditors to take the measures necessary to expedite the audit of the Special Account for the United Nations Transition Assistance Group and submit its findings to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

7. Requests the Advisory Committee, on receipt of the special audit requested in paragraph 6 of the present resolution, to make appropriate recommendations regarding the Special Account, taking into consideration interest earnings of the Special Account;

9. Notes that the unencumbered balance shown in annex VI to the report of the Secretary-General does not include the reported shortfall in the funding for the repatriation of Namibian refugees;

10. Invites the Secretary-General to renew his appeal to Governments to meet this reported shortfall, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on this issue, through the Advisory Committee, to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

11. Concurs with the observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee contained in paragraph 8 of its report and approves the special arrangements for the Group with regard to the application of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Group shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

Scholarship awards under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa reached 1,278 in 1990/91, compared with 1,200 in 1989/90, according to a report of October 1991 of the Secretary-General. (1) The Programme was administered by the Secretary-General in consultation with an Advisory Committee and was financed from a Trust Fund made up of voluntary contributions from States, organizations and individuals. Under the 1991 Programme, scholarship assistance was granted to students from South Africa and, for a transitional period, to students from Namibia.

For the period from 1 September 1990 to 31 August 1991, a total of $4,425,370 in contributions was received from 28 countries. In addition, pledges for 1991 amounted to $1,483,350. The 1991 contributions and pledges, totalling $5,908,720, represented a significant increase over the previous year's total of $4,841,044.

Scholarship awards to Namibian students were to cease with effect from 31 December 1992, partly because Namibia, now independent, was receiving bilateral and multilateral development assistance. Those on the Programme's scholarship after that date would continue to be sponsored until the completion of courses for which awards were made.

The report said serious efforts were made to sponsor more students from South Africa, in accordance with recommendations of a 1989 evaluation report. The number of 1990/91 scholarship holders from South Africa was 935, and from Namibia 343. The Programme established contacts with South African-based NGOs whose mandate was to match graduates with jobs as well as with actual or potential employers in the private sector and communities. It was also strengthening Black and other universities concerned through exchange programmes for graduates and junior faculty.

During the period under review, the Programme continued to work on existing co-sponsorship projects and initiated a number of new projects with scholarship agencies, educational institutions, foundations, and government and intergovernmental agencies. Those new projects resulted in the Programme's involvement in more forms of training than it could have arranged on its own, and at a lower cost per award. They also made it possible for the Programme to grant awards to an increasing number of students from inside South Africa, and it was expected that the co-sponsored arrangements would be expanded.

The Secretary-General concluded that it was increasingly recognized that a large trained cadre of Black South Africans would play a critical role in facilitating a smooth transition to a post-apartheid society. He appealed for continued generous financial and other support to the Programme.

The Programme's Advisory Committee, in conjunction with UNESCO and the Special Committee against Apartheid, organized an International Conference on Educational Assistance to Victims of Apartheid in South Africa (Paris, 25-27 June). The Conference identified educational needs in post-apartheid South Africa and made a number of recommendations on how they could be met. Those recommendations had implications for the Programme in terms of an expanded role as a focal point for international efforts aimed at providing greater educational and training assistance to victims of apartheid. The recommendations included provision of resources to address problems such as illiteracy, school drop-outs, the marginalization of women and assistance for the establishment of a massive programme of adult education.

The Paris Statement adopted by the Conference called on South Africa to address fully and urgently the quantitative and qualitative components of the education crisis by taking appropriate political, legal, financial and other measures. It urged support for the endeavours of the South African people towards major educational restructuring; assistance for the training of managers of educational change at all levels; assistance in the fields of public administration, policy analysis and planning, and business management; and the strengthening of the capacity of institutions and organizations.

The Statement said education and training programmes conducted abroad should consider, to the extent possible, the potential for job placement in South Africa, including self-employment. It also called for support to universities and other educational institutions that promoted educational and training programmes for the Black majority.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/80 without vote.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its earlier resolutions on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, in particular resolution 45/19 of 20 November 1990,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and an account of the work of the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and the administration of the Programme for the period from 1 September 1990 to 31 August 1991,

Noting with satisfaction that the recommendations of the evaluation of the programme undertaken in 1989 as endorsed by the Advisory Committee continue to be implemented,

Recognizing the valuable assistance rendered by the Programme to the peoples of South Africa and Namibia,

Also noting with satisfaction that educational and technical assistance for southern Africa has become a growing concern of the international community,

Fully recognizing the need to provide continuing educational opportunities and counselling abroad to a greater number of students from inside South Africa in a wide variety of professional, cultural and linguistic disciplines, as well as opportunities for vocational and technical training and for advanced studies at graduate and post-graduate levels in priority fields of study,

Strongly convinced that the development of the Programme is essential in order to meet the increasing demand for educational and training assistance to disadvantaged students from South Africa,

Taking note of the recommendations of the International Conference on the Educational Needs of the Victims of Apartheid in South Africa, convened in Paris from 25 to 27 June 1991 by the Special Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in cooperation with the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa,

Noting that in order to address the priority needs of disadvantaged South Africans, the Programme is allocating greater resources for the purpose of institution-building in South Africa, in particular by strengthening black and other institutions of higher learning through a graduate student and junior faculty enhancement programme abroad in the field of educational management and other short-term specialized training courses with built-in returnability and employability of participants,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa;

2. Commends the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa for their continued efforts to develop the Programme so that it can best meet the needs evolving from changing circumstances in South Africa, to promote generous contributions to the Programme and to enhance cooperation with governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental agencies involved in educational and technical assistance to South Africa;

3. Welcomes the main thrust of the Paris Statement on International Assistance to the Victims of Apartheid in the Fields of Education and Training, adopted by the International Conference on the Educational Needs of the Victims of Apartheid in South Africa, with special regard to:

4. Welcomes the recommendation made in the Paris Statement that a follow-up conference be convened in the first half of 1992 under the auspices of the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and within existing resources;

5. Calls upon all non-governmental organizations, scholarship agencies and foundations to cooperate with the Programme in making the proposed follow-up conference a success;

6. Emphasizes that it is incumbent upon the international community to assist in bridging the economic and social disparities in South Africa during the transitional period, particularly in the field of education;

7. Calls upon non-governmental educational programmes and other non-governmental organizations and individuals concerned to assist the Programme in facilitating the returnability and job placement of its graduates;

8. Appeals to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, individuals and international professional associations to use their influence and leverage inside South Africa to assist graduates of the Programme in obtaining access to job opportunities so that they can effectively contribute their professional competence and expertise towards the political, economic and social development of South Africa during the period of transition and beyond;

9. Considers that under the changing circumstances in South Africa, the Programme should have, in addition to its educational and training programmes abroad, the necessary flexibility to provide, in an appropriate manner, educational and training assistance to disadvantaged South Africans within the country itself;

10. Expresses its appreciation to all those who have supported the Programme by providing contributions, scholarships or places in their educational institutions;

11. Appeals to all States, institutions, organizations and individuals to offer greater financial and other assistance to the Programme to enable it to carry out its expanded programme of activities.

Cooperation between OAU and the UN system

Relations between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity continued to be strengthened and were expected to reach new heights during the 1990s. The General Assembly had for years urged the United Nations system to cooperate with and increase its financial and technical assistance to African regional and sub-regional organizations.

In a report of October 1991,<sup>(1)</sup> prepared in response to an Assembly request of 1990,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General outlined measures he continued to take to strengthen cooperation between the two organizations at the political, economic, cultural and administrative levels. He also outlined assistance and support that various United Nations organizations were providing to African States, and regional and subregional bodies.

As in the past, cooperation between the United Nations and OAU covered four principal areas: consultations and exchange of information; cooperation with regard to the situation in southern Africa; cooperation in the field of economic and social development; and cooperation in other areas, including information and publicity. The report also gave an account of a meeting between the secretariats of the United Nations and OAU, the specialized agencies and other organizations (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 2-5 April), which evaluated progress achieved with regard to cooperation between the United Nations system and OAU and made recommendations for further joint action.

The meeting agreed, among other things, that United Nations agencies, in preparing their work programmes, should take due account of the requirements for the establishment of an African Economic Community. It proposed a joint United Nations/OAU system-wide inter-agency task force to work out a comprehensive and integrated work programme for the implementation of the proposed economic community.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 November 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/20 without vote.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the enhancement of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, in particular resolutions 43/12 of 25 October 1988, 43/27 of 18 November 1988, 44/17 of 1 November 1989 and 45/13 of 7 November 1990,

Recalling also the agreement of 15 November 1965 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity as updated and signed on 9 October 1990 by the Secretaries-General of the two organizations,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions, decisions and declarations adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fifty-fourth ordinary session, held at Abuja, Nigeria, from 27 May to 1 June 1991, and by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization at its twenty-seventh ordinary session held at Abuja from 3 to 5 June 1991, in particular its resolution AHG/Res. 205(XXVII) on the African Economic Community,<sup>a</sup>

Considering the important statement made by the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity before the General Assembly on 4 October 1991,

Mindful of the need for continued and closer cooperation between the United Nations and the specialized agencies and the Organization of African Unity, in particular in the political, economic, social, technical, cultural and administrative fields,

Also mindful of the current political development in South Africa and conscious of the need to provide increased assistance to the people of South Africa and to their national liberation movements in their legitimate struggle to eradicate the policies of apartheid, and to the independent States of southern Africa that are victims of such policies,

Deeply concerned that the critical economic situation persists in Africa despite the policies of reform being implemented by African countries,

Concerned that some constraints, such as the collapse of prices of primary commodities, severe debt-servicing burdens and limited availability of finance, continue to pose critical obstacles to African economic recovery and development,

Considering that the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 did not live up to expectations,

Aware of the efforts under way by the Organization of African Unity and its member States in the area of economic integration and, in particular, the adoption by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on 3 June 1991 at Abuja of the Treaty establishing the African Economic Community,

Recalling further that in its resolution 45/13 it, inter alia, called for increased support from the United Nations and its relevant agencies for the establishment of an African economic community,

Deeply concerned about the gravity of the situation of the refugees and displaced persons in Africa and the urgent need for increased international assistance to help African countries of asylum,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and of his efforts to strengthen this cooperation and to implement the relevant resolutions;

2. Notes with appreciation the increasing and continued participation of the Organization of African Unity in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and its constructive contribution to that work;

3. Notes also with appreciation the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity to reactivate the consultative mechanism between the two organizations;

4. Commends the continued efforts of the Organization of African Unity to promote multilateral cooperation and economic integration among African States and requests the United Nations system to continue to lend its support to these efforts;

5. Calls up on the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue to ensure closer cooperation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity on the issue of decolonization;

6. Reiterates the determination of the United Nations, in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, to continue its efforts for the early eradication of racial discrimination and apartheid in South Africa and to provide adequate assistance to that end;

7. Urges the international community to contribute generously to the Assistance Fund for the Struggle against Colonialism and Apartheid, established by the Organization of African Unity, and to the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund, established by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries;

8. Calls upon the United Nations organs-in particular the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Special Committee against Apartheid-to continue to involve closely the Organization of African Unity in all their activities concerning Africa;

9. Urges all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, as well as non-governmental organizations to provide economic and technical assistance to African countries of asylum to enable them to withstand the heavy burden imposed on their limited resources and weak infrastructure by the presence in their countries of large numbers of refugees;

10. Urges the United Nations to provide such technical assistance as may be appropriate to the Organization of African Unity should the latter decide to launch a peace-keeping operation;

11. Reaffirms that the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s will necessitate the full participation of the international community, in particular of the Governments, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and emphasizes the importance and the need to ensure follow-up to and monitoring and implementation of the New Agenda in accordance with General Assembly decisions;

12. Calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations to work in close coordination and cooperation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, in particular on follow-up to and review and evaluation of the implementation of the New Agenda;

13. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to invite the representative of the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity to participate in the meetings of all the United Nations bodies/committees and its working groups on follow-up to and monitoring and assessment of the implementation of the New Agenda;

14. Urges the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the relevant agencies of the United Nations system to extend their support and cooperation to the member States and the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity for the effective organizational arrangement and smooth functioning of the African Economic Community;

15. Also urges all Member States and regional and international organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations, to provide support as appropriate to the establishment of the African Economic Community, and to assist in the economic integration and cooperation in Africa, in particular by providing financial and technical assistance to African regional and subregional organizations such as the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States, the Southern African Development Coordination Conference, the Economic Community of Central African States, the Economic Community of West African States and the Arab Maghreb Union, as well as those for drought and desertification such as the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Inter-governmental Authority for Drought and Development;

16. Reiterates its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued efforts to mobilize international support for special programmes of economic assistance to African States facing grave economic difficulties, as well as to the front-line States and other independent States of southern Africa to help them to cope with the effects of the acts of aggression and destabilization committed by the apartheid regime of South Africa;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Organization of African Unity informed periodically of measures taken by the United Nations system and by the international community in support of the implementation of special programmes of economic assistance in Africa;

18. Endorses the agreement reached between the organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity for the convening of a meeting between the secretariats of those organizations, to be held in 1992, in order to review and evaluate the final progress achieved in the implementation of the proposals and recommendations agreed upon in April 1990 and 1991 on cooperation between the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations system for 1990-1991 and to adopt new and effective joint action;

19. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to support the efforts of the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, with a view to holding sectoral meetings in the priority areas of cooperation, particularly the establishment of the African Economic Community and the strengthening of the African regional and subregional organizations;

20. Requests the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity to ensure that the representatives of their secretariats continue to hold regular consultations, as and when appropriate, on the implementation of the present resolution;

21. Calls upon the relevant organs of the United Nations system to continue to ensure the fair and equitable representation of Africa at senior and policy levels at their respective headquarters and in their regional and field operations;

22. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the United Nations information network continues to disseminate information so as to increase public awareness of the situation prevailing in southern Africa, as well as of the social and economic problems and needs of African States and of their regional and subregional institutions;

23. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution and on the development of cooperation between the Organization of African Unity and the organizations within the United Nations system.

Chapter II

Americas

The United Nations played a crucial role in 1991 in accelerating the efforts of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama to attain and consolidate peace in the sub-region. The countries agreed on further frameworks to facilitate their peace negotiations and the United Nations Observer Group in Central America continued to verify and promote compliance with the security undertakings they had entered into at their Esquipulas II Summit in 1987.

The Secretary-General and his Personal Representative for the Central American Peace Process remained continuously engaged in mediating the negotiations between the Government and the opposition party in El Salvador and in Guatemala. On the Secretary-General's recommendation, the Security Council, among other actions, established the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador. The Council twice extended the Group's mandate and the General Assembly approved funds for its financing and that of the Mission and adopted two resolutions on the general situation in Central America.

During the year, the Council and the Assembly also met to consider the situation in Haiti resulting from the overthrow of the Government in September.

Central America situation

In a continued effort to implement the procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America, as agreed upon at their 1987 Esquipulas II Summit,(1) the Central American countries took several steps, at summit meetings in 1991, to forge their commitment to bring that objective to fruition. The most notable of these was the Declaration of San Salvador of 17 July, embodying the countries' agreement to establish appropriate institutional machinery for the effective attainment of Central America's integration in the political, economic, social and cultural domains of an emerging new world order.

Other steps included the adoption of: the Guadalajara Declaration,(3) by which the countries determined-along with other Latin American and Caribbean countries, Portugal and Spain-to unite in contributing to a common future of peace, greater well-being and social equality; and the Tegucigalpa Declaration, reiterating the importance of the Esquipulas procedure, together with the Tegucigalpa Commitment to the human development of all Central Americans, with emphasis on children and youth, and the Tegucigalpa Protocol amending the Charter of the Organization of Central American States to mark the establishment of the Central American Integration System.(4)

In a report of 2 December 1991 on the situation in Central America,(5) covering in particular the status of negotiations to end the civil strife in El Salvador and in Guatemala (see below), the Secretary-General stated that the Security Commission, established under Esquipulas II, held several meetings: at Tegucigalpa, Honduras, on 23 and 24 November 1990; and, in 1991, at Managua, Nicaragua, on 12 and 13 April, at Guatemala City on 19 and 20 September, and at San José, Costa Rica, on 24 and 25 October. Among the matters discussed were a model report on weapons inventories, inventory verification, mine-clearing and disarming of civilians. The October meeting was held to consider a draft treaty on Central American security, submitted by Honduras,(6) aimed principally at preventing armed conflict and drug trafficking in the region and fostering cooperation for the protection of the environment and in cases of natural disasters.

(For detailed treatment of the developments on the question of the Central American refugees and displaced persons, see PART THREE, Chapter XV.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolutions 46/109 A and B.

A

Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 530(1983) of 19 May 1983, 562(1985) of 10 May 1985, 637(1989) of 27 July 1989, 644(1989) of 7 November 1989, 650(1990) of 27 March 1990, 653(1990) of 20 April 1990, 654(1990) of 4 May 1990, 656(1990) of 8 June 1990 and 719(1991) of 6 November 1991, and its resolutions 38/10 of 11 November 1983, 39/4 of 26 October 1984, 41/37 of 18 November 1986, 42/1 of 7 October 1987, 43/24 of 15 November 1988, 44/10 of 23 October 1989, 44/44 of 7 December 1989 and 45/15 of 20 November 1990,

Aware that the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987 by the Presidents of the Republics of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, is the outcome of the decision by Central Americans to take up fully the historical challenge of forging a peaceful destiny for Central America,

Convinced that the peoples of Central America wish to achieve peace, reconciliation, development and justice, without outside interference, in accordance with their own decision and their own historical experience, and without sacrificing the principles of self-determination and non-intervention,

Aware also of the political will which inspires them to settle their differences by means of dialogue, negotiation and respect for the legitimate interests of all States, establishing commitments to be fulfilled in good faith, through the verifiable performance of actions aimed at achieving peace, democracy, security, cooperation and respect for human rights,

Taking note of the second report of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador of 15 November 1991<sup>a</sup> and of the report of the Secretary-General of 28 October 1991 concerning the United Nations Observer Group in Central America,

Taking note with satisfaction of the work carried out in the region by the Group in verifying the security commitments entered into by the Central American Governments under the agreement signed at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, and of the work of the International Support and Verification Commission in the repatriation and relocation of displaced persons and refugees, which it has undertaken with the cooperation of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Development Programme, and of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, which is monitoring compliance with human rights commitments,

Convinced that the National Conciliation Agreement on Economic and Social Matters reached in Nicaragua on 26 October 1990 and phase II thereof, signed on 15 August 1991, constitute positive and promising contributions to strengthening the process of democratization, development and peace in Nicaragua and in the region,

Observing with satisfaction that the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional are continuing the negotiating process, begun on 4 April 1990 under the auspices of the Secretary-General, with a view to putting an end, once and for all, to the armed conflict by political means in the shortest possible time, as well as promoting the democratization of the country, guaranteeing unrestricted respect for human rights and reunifying Salvadoran society,

Observing also with satisfaction the progress of the talks between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca aimed at ending the internal armed confrontation and bringing about reconciliation and full respect for the human rights of all Guatemalans, which have taken place under the auspices of the National Reconciliation Commission of Guatemala, in the presence of the Representative of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing the unfailing determination of the Rio Group to achieve peace in Central America and the valuable contribution made by its member States throughout the regional peace effort,

1. Commends the effort made by the Central American countries to achieve peace through the implementation of the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987, as well as of the agreements adopted at subsequent summit meetings;

2. Expresses its strongest support for these agreements and urges the Governments to continue their efforts to consolidate firm and lasting peace in Central America;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to afford the fullest possible support to the Central American Governments in their efforts to consolidate peace, especially by taking the measures necessary for the maintenance, establishment and effective functioning of the appropriate verification machinery;

4. Welcomes the implementation of phases I and II of the National Conciliation Agreement on Economic and Social Matters concluded in Nicaragua on 26 October 1990 and 15 August 1991 and endorses, in particular, the provision concerning exceptional circumstances and the invitation made in phase I to the international community and the international funding agencies to provide effective and efficient support for the implementation of the Agreement, and also supports the agreements reached in phase II regarding property rights and privatization;

5. Fully endorses the efforts of the Secretary-General to bring about peace in Central America and in particular his active role as an intermediary in Guatemala and El Salvador;

6. Urges the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to step up the confidence-building and security measures unilaterally adopted by them in order to maintain the suspension of the armed confrontation pending the conclusion in the shortest possible time of political agreements which will put an end to the armed conflict once and for all and will achieve the other goals laid down in the Geneva Agreement of 4 April 1990;

7. Expresses its support for the process of negotiation between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca, which has given rise to the agreements signed at Mexico City on 26 April 1991 and the Querétaro Agreement signed at Querétaro, Mexico, on 25 July 1991, and encourages both parties to continue their efforts to reach a political solution to the long process of confrontation experienced by Guatemala;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on progress made in implementing the present resolution.

B

Central America: region of peace, freedom, democracy and development

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the importance of the commitments assumed by the Central American Presidents under the agreement signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987 at the Esquipulas II summit meeting; the declarations adopted at Alajuela, Costa Rica, on 16 January 1988 and at Costa del Sol, El Salvador, on 14 February 1989; the agreements concluded at Tela, Honduras, on 7 August 1989, at Montelimar, Nicaragua, on 3 April 1990, at Antigua, Guatemala, on 17 June 1990 and at Pun-tarenas, Costa Rica, on 17 December 1990; and the Declaration of San Salvador of 17 July 1991,

Recognizing the importance of all aspects of the peace-keeping operations which have been carried out in Central America, pursuant to the decisions of the Security Council and with the support of the Secretary-General, and the need to preserve and enhance the results obtained,

Considering that at their meetings at Montelimar, Nicaragua, and Antigua, Guatemala, the Central American Presidents reaffirmed their determination to set Central America on the road to a stable peace through the establishment of democratic regimes throughout the region, the individual and collective forging of a better economic and social future for the area, and the design of specific mechanisms and courses of action for the peaceful settlement of disputes or possible conflicts between the States of the region,

Considering also that, at the Puntarenas summit meeting, the Presidents declared Central America to be a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development, and that in the Declaration of San Salvador they agreed to update the legal framework of the Organization of Central American States and to work for the inclusion of Central America in a world order marked by interdependence, the emergence of new forms of integration and cooperation and the effective implementation of international law,

Considering the commitments which have been entered into during the negotiations on security, verification, and control and limitation of arms and military personnel, within the Security Commission established under the agreement signed at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, for the purpose of achieving a stable and lasting peace in Central America,

Taking into consideration that the force of the new democratic spirit prevailing in Central America has created a sphere of political action which makes it feasible to resume with greater momentum the process of regional integration, as the basis for a firm and lasting peace in the region, taking into account the specific circumstances of each country,

Bearing in mind the political determination in Central America to strengthen the process of cooperation in the political, economic and social fields, which complements the progressive steps towards pacification, reconciliation and democratization,

Reaffirming the belief that peace is one, undivided and indivisible, and thus inseparable from freedom, democracy and development, and that these goals are essential for consolidating the transformations which will guarantee sustained, participatory and equitable development in Central America and redefining the manner in which the Central American economies are linked to the rest of the world,

Recognizing the valuable and effective contribution of the United Nations and of various governmental and non-governmental mechanisms to the process of democratization, pacification and development in Central America,

Recognizing also the importance for the progressive transformation of Central America into a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development of both the political dialogue and the economic cooperation set in motion by the Ministerial Conference on Political Dialogue and Economic Cooperation between the European Community and the Central American countries and the joint initiative of the industrialized countries

(Group of Twenty-four) and the group of cooperating countries (Group of Three), in Latin America, through a Partnership for Democracy and Development in Central America,

Bearing in mind that there remain in Central America major obstacles to the full exercise of peace, freedom, democracy and development, the final overcoming of which requires a global frame of reference which would enable the international community to focus its support on efforts towards collective affirmation and democratic progress being made by the Central American countries,

1. Reaffirms the decision of the Presidents of the Central American countries to declare Central America a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development;

2. Encourages the initiatives of the Central American countries to consolidate Governments which genuinely represent the will of their people and which base their development on democracy, peace, cooperation and strict respect for human rights and on security, verification, and control and limitation of arms and military personnel;

3. Welcomes with satisfaction the agreements reached and progress made by the Security Commission in the creation of a new security model based on coordination, communication and prevention, confidence-building between the States of the region, and the presentation of an inventory of weapons present in Central America;

4. Stresses the importance that the outcome of the political dialogue and economic cooperation between the European Community and its member States, the States of Central America and Panama and the group of cooperating countries (Group of Three) as well as the initiative of the industrialized countries (Group of Twenty-four) and the group of cooperating countries (Group of Three), through the Partnership for Democracy and Development in Central America, have for the efforts of the Central American countries to achieve peace and to consolidate democracy and economic development;

5. Requests the Secretary-General and the organizations of the United Nations system to provide, as appropriate and within the available resources, the necessary technical and financial support to the Central American Governments for the purpose of consolidating the processes of peace, freedom, democratization and development in the region;

6. Reiterates the importance that the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America, which the General Assembly welcomed in its resolution 42/231, has for the implementation of this resolution, in particular because it provides the underpinning for the execution of the Central American Economic Plan of Action, which the Central American Presidents approved at their meeting held at Antigua, Guatemala, in June 1990;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session an item entitled "The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development";

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on progress made in implementing the present resolution.

UN Observer Group in Central America

The mandate of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA) was extended twice in 1991, on 6 May and 6 November, until 7 November 1991 in the first instance and until 30 April 1992 in the second. Set up by the Security Council in 1989,(7) ONUCA was charged with verifying compliance with the security undertakings agreed upon by the five Central American countries at their Esquipulas II Summit in 1987,(1) specifically the cessation of aid to irregular forces and insurrectionist movements active in the subregion and the prevention of the use of a State's territory for attacks on any of the other States. It maintained its headquarters at Tegucigalpa, a liaison office at the capital of each of the five host countries, and verification centres and patrol posts at various sensitive areas in the subregion.

The Secretary-General reported to the Council on all operational aspects of ONUCA before the expiry of each mandate period.

Report of the Secretary-General (April). In his report on the organization and activities of ONUCA for the period 27 October 1990 to 29 April 1991,(8) the Secretary-General noted that, as at the reporting date (29 April), it was composed of 158 military observers and a 29-man naval squadron. He stated that ONUCA, in the course of its intense land, air and sea patrolling of the areas of its deployment, had detected no specific violation of the security undertakings. However, it had been requested by El Salvador to investigate the origin of ground-to-air missiles reportedly used by that country's armed opposition movement, Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN), particularly in Usulután Department on 23 November 1990, as well as the origin of a large number of small arms confiscated by the Salvadorian army. Investigation revealed that the missiles had been illicitly removed from Nicaragua's arsenals; FMLN had fired 11 of them and 17 were returned to Nicaragua on 2 February 1991.

Honduras had made a similar request concerning a truck-load of war matériel it had intercepted near the Honduras-Nicaragua border on 22 February. Nicaragua's own investigation into the matter indicated that the matériel might have been shipped illegally to Honduras with the assistance of Nicaraguan army personnel. Following a confrontation between the Salvadorian army and FMLN on 12 December 1990, ONUCA dispatched a medical team to evacuate the wounded temporarily to Tegucigalpa. On 2 April 1991, Honduras further called on ONUCA to look into an FMLN attack earlier that day on the Salvadorian customs post at El Poy that caused Salvadorian soldiers and customs officials to cross the border into Honduras.

The Secretary-General noted the recommendations adopted by the Central American Security Commission in November 1990, calling for assistance in the disarming of civilians, mine-clearing and verification of arms inventories. He informed the five Governments that the United Nations stood ready to provide the assistance requested within the limits of its means and capabilities, subject to Security Council approval.

A study into the cost-effectiveness of the current method of operation of ONUCA, undertaken on the Secretary-General's instructions, concluded that ONUCA should continue to maintain a regular and visible presence in those border areas where activities contrary to the Esquipulas II undertakings seemed most likely to occur. Its focus, however, should be on liaison and information exchange with the security authorities of the five host countries, with whose Governments full responsibility for the detection and prevention of violations rested. Based on the findings of the study and on the Chief Military Observer's recommendation for a reduction in the strength of ONUCA, the Secretary-General recommended that ONUCA be extended for a further six-month period and that the number of military observers be reduced to 130.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 6 May 1991, the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, unanimously adopted resolution 691(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 637(1989) of 27 July 1989, 644(1989) of November 1989 and 675(1990) of 5 November(1990), as well as the statement made by the President of the Security Council on its behalf on 7 November 1989,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 29 April 1991;

2. Decides to extend, under its authority, the mandate of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America, as defined in resolution 644(1989), for a further period of six months, that is, until 7 November 1991, bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General and the need to continue to monitor expenditures carefully during this period of increasing demands on peace-keeping resources;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council fully informed of further developments and to report on all aspects of the operations of the Observer Group before expiry of the new mandate period.

Security Council resolution 691(1991)

---	-----	------	---------	------	---------	-------------

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/22564).

Report of the Secretary-General (October). The Secretary-General further reported that, during the period 30 April to 28 October 1991,(9) ONUCA continued patrolling sensitive border areas, increasing its visits to, and intensifying information exchange with, national armies and security authorities in the field and in the capitals of the Central American host countries. It had come to believe that border violations throughout the subregion appeared to be linked to such criminal activities as drug trafficking, arms smuggling and cattle rustling.

ONUCA received only one formal request for investigation, from El Salvador on 21 May, to determine the origin of SAM-16 ground-to-air missiles reported to be in the possession of FMLN. Having verified the information supplied by Nicaragua, a possible source of the missiles, that it had accounted for all the missiles in its arsenals, ONUCA did not expect to be able to make the determination requested. It also inspected, on 26 July and 26 August, parts of caches of arms discovered in southern Honduras and San Salvador.

Earlier, on 23 June, an anti-tank rocket was fired at ONUCA headquarters at Tegucigalpa. There were no casualties and damage to the building was light. The group that had claimed responsibility for a series of bombings in that capital in December 1990 identified itself as the source of the attack, to protest against United Nations policy in respect of third world countries.

The Secretary-General observed that, since its establishment in November 1989, ONUCA had been functioning in an improved political and military environment. The Powers that had actively supported opposing sides in the Central America conflict appeared to be disengaging and had publicly announced their intention to revise their policies in favour of negotiated solutions and economic and social development. Relative peace and tranquillity had replaced the 10 years of devastating internal strife in Nicaragua. Important progress towards a peaceful solution of the internal conflict in El Salvador had recently been achieved, and the ongoing direct talks in Guatemala between the Government and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca, a coalition of that country's opposition groups, offered hope for a solution.

Noting the host countries' request to extend ONUCA for another six months, and in view of the current fluid and dynamic situation in the subregion, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council approve ONUCA's extension to 30 April 1992. For accounting purposes, he recommended that the end of the mandate period coincide with the end of a calendar month, hence the extension for a further five months and 23 days rather than a full six months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 6 November 1991, the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, unanimously adopted resolution 719(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 637(1989) of 27 July 1989, 644(1989) of 7 November 1989, 675(1990) of 5 November 1990 and 691(1991) of 6 May 1991, as well as the statement made by the President of the Security Council on its behalf on 7 November 1989,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 28 October 1991;

2. Decides to extend, under its authority, the mandate of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America, as defined in resolution 644(1989), for a further period of five months and twenty-three days, that is, until 30 April 1992, bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General and the need to continue to monitor expenditures carefully during this period of increasing demands on peace-keeping resources;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council fully informed of further developments and to report on all aspects of the operations of the Observer Group before the expiry of the new mandate period and in particular to report to the Council within three months from the date of adoption of the present resolution, taking account of any developments in the region which indicate that the present size of the Observer Group or its future should be reconsidered.

6 November 1991 Meeting 3016 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23196).

Composition

In accordance with the Secretary-General's recommendation of April 1991,(8) the already reduced military strength of ONUCA was further reduced in 1991. As at the end of October,(9) its strength stood at 164 (132 military observers from 10 countries and a 32-man naval squadron), representing a reduction in the previous (April) strength of observers from 158 and an increase in the naval squadron from 29.

Medical support, provided by Germany, consisted of four civilian medical officers, four medical assistants and four pilots. Germany had informed the Secretariat, however, that, as from the end of the year, it would no longer provide either the personnel or the Dornier aircraft flown by the pilots. Alternative arrangements were being urgently explored. A total of 142 civilian staff members (56 international and 86 local recruits)-reduced from 147-were serving with ONUCA. Air-ambulance support consisted of 20 civilian aircrew and maintenance personnel for four helicopters and a small, commercially chartered, fixed-wing aircraft.

The ONUCA verification centres were reduced from eight to three, while the patrol posts were increased from four to eight.

Financing

In December 1991,(10) the Secretary-General provided a detailed report on the financing of ONUCA as at 30 November. He stated that, of the total assessment of $82.8 million apportioned among Member States from ONUCA's inception to 7 November 1991, $74 million had been received. The balance of approximately $8.8 million, unless paid, would mean a projected deficit of some $4,109,000 in the ONUCA Special Account.

The Secretary-General reported on the budget performance for the mandate periods 7 November 1990-7 May 1991 and 7 May-7 November 1991. A summary of resources and operating costs from inception to 7 November 1991 showed a projected net unencumbered balance of $2,188,700 and an interest and miscellaneous income of $1,778,500, which he recommended for retention in the Special Account, pending receipt of outstanding assessed contributions. Thus far, credits amounting to $17,337,700 gross ($17,106,600 net) had been made to Member States.

The Secretary-General estimated that $13,082,100 gross ($12,673,400 net) was required for the period 7 November 1991-30 April 1992. In the event of further mandate extensions, he recommended appropriate provisions to cover a monthly estimated cost of $2,267,700 gross ($2,196,700 net) for the 12-month period beginning 1 May 1992. In addition, he requested that the waiver of regulations 4.3 and 4.4 of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations applied to other peace-keeping operations be applied also to ONUCA.

Following a review of the report, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ)(11) made its recommendations to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/196 without vote on 20 December 1991.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 644(1989) of 7 November 1989, by which the Council established the United Nations Observer Group in Central America, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Group, the latest of which was resolution 719(1991) of 6 November 1991,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Group are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Group, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Group by certain Member States,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Group with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Concurs with the observations, recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

7. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 6 above, their

8. Decides further that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Group shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-sixth session regarding the scale of assessments;

El Salvador situation

In his report of 2 December 1991 on the Central America situation,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General summarized the progress of negotiations, begun in April 1990, to end the armed conflict in El Salvador between the Government and FMLN. He had last reported on the subject in November 1990.<sup>(12)</sup> Included was an account of his intermediary role and that of his Personal Representative for the Central American Peace Process, Alvaro de Soto, to advance those negotiations.

The report stated that the parties held four rounds of discussions between December 1990 and February 1991, with the active participation of the Personal Representative. They were followed by several weeks of protracted negotiations that culminated in the signing, on 27 April, of the Mexico Agreements,<sup>(13)</sup> covering constitutional reforms relating to, among other issues, the role of the armed forces and their subordination to civil authority, the creation of a National Civil Police, the judicial system and human rights, and the electoral system.

No substantive headway was made in two rounds of talks held in May and June at Caraballeda, Venezuela, and Querétaro, Mexico, aimed at reaching a political agreement on the armed forces and on cease-fire accords under United Nations verification. Within the two-stage framework laid down in the 1990 Geneva<sup>(14)</sup> and Caracas<sup>(15)</sup> Agreements, FMLN insisted on cease-fire arrangements that would allow it to preserve its military capability—arrangements that were unacceptable to the Government.

At the First Ibero-American Summit (Guadalajara, Mexico, July 1991), the Secretary-General met separately with El Salvador's President, Alfredo F. Cristiani, and the FMLN General Command, as well as with the Presidents of Colombia, Mexico, Spain and Venezuela. Discussed was the advisability of reviewing the two-phase format of the negotiating process to see whether negotiations could be compressed into a single phase in order to establish, before a cease-fire, the necessary conditions and guarantees for the reintegration of FMLN into the country's civilian, institutional and political life within a framework of full legality. The Secretary-General's consultations with President Cristiani and the FMLN General Command continued in New York from 16 to 25 September, when the two parties signed the New York Agreement.<sup>(16)</sup>

The Agreement provided for the creation of a National Commission for the Consolidation of Peace to oversee and supervise all political agreements reached by the parties. It further contained provisions relating to the purification of the armed forces, their doctrine and training system, to the establishment of the National Civil Police and to economic and social questions. The parties also agreed to "The Compressed Negotiations",<sup>(17)</sup> an integral part of the Agreement, stipulating that all substantive items would be negotiated and agreed before the cease-fire, and that the cease-fire would be of a predetermined duration, during which no substantive negotiations would take place.

The Secretary-General informed the Security Council on 30 September that, following the New York Agreement, conditions had been established for the final phase in the negotiations. He suggested that the moment might have come for the parties to reach a modus vivendi for the gradual cessation of hostilities; if accepted, a modus vivendi might include a simple liaison mechanism consisting of a detachment of United Nations military observers to be assigned to the command of both parties.

The negotiations, which had resumed from 13 to 21 October and from 3 to 16 November, were under way in Mexico at the time of reporting, with the continued active participation of the Secretary-General's Personal Representative. With the unilateral decision taken by FMLN on 16 November to cease offensive operations, armed confrontation had considerably dwindled.

UN Observer Mission in El Salvador

In May 1991, the Security Council established under its authority a United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) to monitor all agreements concluded between the Government of El Salvador and FMLN. Its initial mandate, in its first phase as an integrated peace-keeping operation, was to verify compliance by the parties with the San José Agreement; its subsequent tasks or phases would be subject to Council approval. The Mission's mandate was for an initial period of 12 months.

The first report of the human rights component of ONUSAL was transmitted to the Council and the General Assembly on 16 September (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General submitted a report to the Security Council on 16 April 1991<sup>(18)</sup> to follow up on his intention, made known to the Council in December 1990,<sup>(19)</sup> to request that ONUSAL be set up to monitor agreements concluded between the Salvadorian Government and FMLN, commencing with verification of the Agreement on Human Rights signed by both parties at San José on 6 July 1990.<sup>(20)</sup>

The Secretary-General stated that a preliminary mission visited El Salvador from 13 to 23 March to assist in determining the extent to which verification could be conducted before cessation of the armed conflict and in preparing an operational plan for implementing the verification functions outlined in the San José Agreement. In its discussions with high-level government officials, political and religious leaders and non-governmental organizations, as well as with FMLN representatives in four zones of conflict, the mission recognized that the absence of the other political agreements envisaged in the framework of the 1990 Geneva Agreement<sup>(14)</sup> would require reaching specific, ad hoc working arrangements with the military and judicial authorities and FMLN. It concluded that the verification tasks could be carried out to a significant extent despite the absence of a cease-fire; while the armed conflict could pose risks to personnel security not usually encountered in United Nations observation or verification missions, they were not such as to prevent ONUSAL's establishment before a cease-fire.

The Secretary-General accepted the recommendation that ONUSAL's human rights component be set up at the earliest feasible moment in advance of a cease-fire, emphasizing that it should proceed without awaiting the outcome of ongoing negotiations on outstanding issues. Measures to ensure the security of ONUSAL and its independent functioning would include: an agreement on its status, privileges and immunities, to be concluded between the United Nations and El Salvador; and an FMLN declaration of full cooperation in assuring ONUSAL's safety and in facilitating the fulfilment of its functions. The Secretary-General broadly categorized the verification tasks and outlined the operational plan, operating structure and areas of deployment.

In an addendum to his report,(21) the Secretary-General indicated that he would recommend to the General Assembly that the costs of ONUSAL be considered an expense of the Organization, to be borne by Member States in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. The assessments to be levied on Members would be credited to a special account established for the purpose.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 May 1991, the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, unanimously adopted resolution 693(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 637(1989) of 27 July 1989, in which it lent its full support to the Secretary-General for the continuation of his mission of good offices in Central America,

Recalling also the Geneva Agreement of 4 April 1990 and the Caracas Agenda of 21 May 1990 concluded between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional,

Deeply concerned at the persistence of and the increase in the climate of violence in El Salvador, which seriously affects the civilian population, and thus stressing the importance of the full implementation of the San José Agreement on Human Rights signed at San José on 26 July 1990 between the two parties,

Welcoming the Mexico Agreements of 27 April 1991 between the two parties,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 December 1990 and 16 April 1991,

Commending the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative for their efforts at good offices and expressing its full support for their continuing efforts to facilitate a peaceful settlement to the conflict in El Salvador,

Underlining the great importance that it attaches to the exercise of moderation and restraint by both sides to ensure the security of all United Nations-employed personnel as well as to the adoption by them of all other appropriate and necessary measures to facilitate the negotiations leading to the achievement of the objectives set forth in the Geneva and other above-mentioned agreements as soon as possible, including their full cooperation with the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative to this end,

Recognizing the right of the parties to determine their own negotiating process,

Calling upon both parties to pursue the current negotiations urgently and with flexibility, in a format concentrated on the items agreed upon in the Caracas Agenda, in order to reach, as a matter of priority, a political agreement on the armed forces and the accords necessary for the cessation of the armed confrontation, and to achieve as soon as possible thereafter a process which will lead to the establishment of the necessary guarantees and conditions for reintegrating the members of the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, within a framework of full legality, into the civil, institutional and political life of the country,

Expressing its conviction that a peaceful settlement in El Salvador will contribute to a successful outcome in the Central American peace process,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 16 April 1991;

2. Decides to establish, under its authority and based on the Secretary-General's report referred to in paragraph 1 above, a United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador to monitor all agreements concluded between the two parties, whose initial mandate in its first phase as an integrated peace-keeping operation will be to verify the compliance by the parties with the San José Agreement on Human Rights, and also decides that the subsequent tasks or phases of the Observer Mission will be subject to approval by the Council;

3. Also decides that the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador will be established for an initial period of twelve months;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to establish the first phase of the Mission as described in paragraphs 2 and 3 above;

5. Calls upon both parties, as agreed by them, to pursue a continuous process of negotiations in order to reach at the earliest possible date the objectives set forth in the Mexico Agreements and all other objectives contained in the Geneva Agreement, and to this end to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative in their efforts;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council fully informed on the implementation of the present resolution.

Security Council resolution 693(1991)

20 May 1991 Meeting 2988 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/22616).

The Council subsequently agreed to the Secretary-General's proposal (23) that the military component of ONUSAL be composed of contingents from Brazil, Canada, Ecuador, Spain and Venezuela.

Financing

An item on the financing of ONUSAL was inscribed on 10 June 1991 on the agenda of the General Assembly's resumed forty-fifth (1990) session and allocated to the Fifth Committee at the request of the Secretary-General.(24) Owing to the urgent nature of the item, the Assembly granted the request, waiving its rule of procedure requiring a meeting of the General Committee to consider the item's inclusion.

In a report accompanying his request,(25) the Secretary-General set out the requirements of the Mission, including cost estimates totalling $31,177,700 gross ($28,782,800 net) for the initial 12-month mandate period. That figure incorporated commitments of $611,300 for a preparatory office in San Salvador.

On the recommendation of ACABQ,(26) the Fifth Committee approved an appropriation of $13.8 million gross ($13 million net) for 1 July-31 December 1991, and authorization for commitments not to exceed $9.2 million gross ($8.8 million net) for 1 January-30 June 1992.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly, on 21 June 1991, adopted without vote resolution 45/267.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 693(1991) of 20 May 1991, by which the Council established, under its authority, the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador to monitor all agreements concluded between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, whose initial mandate in its first phase as an integrated peace-keeping operation will be to verify the compliance by the two parties with the Agreement on Human Rights, signed at San José on 26 July 1990,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Noting that the budgetary estimates for the Mission as contained in the report of the Secretary-General amount to 31,177,700 United States dollars gross (28,782,800 dollars net) for the twelve-month period of its authorized mandate,

Recognising that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Urging all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission in full and on time, particularly in view of the urgent need for the start-up cost of the operation,

Recognizing that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States that are permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of the Mission,

1. Decides to appropriate an amount of 13.8 million dollars gross (13 million dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 611,300 dollars authorized by the Secretary-General for pie-implementation costs under the terms of General Assembly resolution 44/203 of 21 December 1989, for the operation of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador for the six-month period from 1 July to 31 December 1991, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account in accordance with paragraph 15 of his report;

2. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 13.8 million dollars gross (13 million dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

3. Decides also that Liechtenstein shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (b) of General Assembly resolution 43/232;

4. Decides further that Namibia shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (d) of General Assembly resolution 43/232;

5. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 of the present resolution, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 800,000 dollars;

6. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the Mission in an amount not to exceed 9.2 million dollars gross (8.8 million dollars net), with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1992, inclusive, the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

7. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/192 A of 21 December 1989;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador".

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, having heard the Secretary-General's oral report at consultations held on 30 September 1991, unanimously adopted resolution 714(1991) on the same date.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 637(1989) of 27 July 1989, in which it lent its full support to the Secretary-General for his mission of good offices in Central America,

Also recalling its resolution 693(1991) of 20 May 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador,

Welcoming the New York Agreement signed 25 September 1991 by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, which provides guarantees and conditions on which to reach a peaceful settlement to the armed conflict, including, inter alia, the provisions concerning the National Commission for the Consolidation of Peace, permitting the reintegration of the members of the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, within a framework of full legality, into the civil, institutional and political life of the country,

Welcoming also the oral report of the Secretary-General, made at the consultations held on 80 September 1991,

1. Commends the parties for the flexibility and seriousness which they demonstrated during the course of the recent talks in New York;

2. Congratulates the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative for Central America for their skilful and tireless efforts which have been vital to the peace process;

3. Expresses appreciation for the contributions of the Governments of the Group of Four Friends of the Secretary-General. Colombia. Mexico. Spain and Venezuela, which have advanced the peace Process in El Salvador;

4. Urge both sides at the next negotiating round, which will begin on 12 October 1991, to proceed at an intensive and urgent pace to reach at the earliest possible date a cease-fire and an overall settlement to the armed conflict in accordance with the framework of the New York Agreement;

5. Reaffirms its strong support for the urgent completion of the peace process in El Salvador and expresses its readiness to support the implementation of a settlement;

6. Urges both sides to exercise maximum and continuing restraint, particularly with respect to the civilian population, in order to create the best climate for a successful last stage of the negotiations;

7. Calls upon both sides to continue to cooperate fully with the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador.

Security Council resolution 714(1991)

30 September 1991 Meeting 3010 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23090).

Guatemala situation

Reporting on the situation in Guatemala on 2 December 1991,(5) the Secretary-General recalled that the way had been paved for a process of reconciliation and peace in that country by the Basic Agreement for the Search for Peace by Political Means,(12) concluded between the Government and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG) in 1990. Pursuant to that Agreement, five meetings were held in 1990 between the parties in the presence of the Conciliator and Chairman of the National Reconciliation Commission and the Secretary-General's Observer.

Two agreements were concluded by the parties on 26 April 1991 at Mexico City: one on procedure,(27) in which they agreed to conduct a process of direct negotiations with the active participation of the Conciliator and in the presence of the Observer; the other on a general agenda.(28)

Two rounds of talks on substantive issues followed, at Cuernavaca in June and at Querétaro in July, which resulted in the signing on 25 July of the Querétaro Agreement,(5) providing a framework agreement on democratization in the search for peace by political means. Valuable progress was made during two rounds of talks at Mexico City in September and October. To give impetus to the process, however, the Conciliator and the Observer held a series of shuttle meetings with the two parties, which were in progress at the time of reporting.

The Secretary-General added that his Representative had travelled frequently to meet with Guatemala's President, Jorge Serrano Elías, and URNG commanders, and that he himself had met twice with the President.

The Caribbean

Cuba

At Cuba's request, submitted with supporting statements from various organizations and church and other religious groups,(1) an item entitled "Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba" was inscribed on the agenda of the 1991 session of the General Assembly. An explanatory memorandum annexed to the request cited the substantial losses that Cuba had sustained as a consequence of the more than 30 years of embargo, which, it asserted, was in violation of the United Nations Charter.

A draft resolution proposed but not pressed to the vote by Cuba(2) would have had the Assembly call for an immediate end to the embargo. By decision 46/407 of 13 November, the Assembly decided to defer consideration of the item and to include it in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh (1992) session.

Haiti situation

In a coup d'état on 29 September 1991, the military in Haiti overthrew the Government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, elected in December 1990 under that country's first free and democratic elections and sworn in on 7 February 1991. The Security Council met to consider the situation, including human rights violations reportedly occurring in the wake of the coup. An item entitled "The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti" was subsequently added to the agenda of the 1991 session of the General Assembly at the request of Honduras.<sup>(3)</sup>

(Detailed treatment of special emergency assistance to Haiti, human rights violations there and the Haitian refugees is contained in PART THREE, Chapters III, X and XV, respectively.)

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The Security Council convened on 3 October 1991, in response to Haiti's request,<sup>(4)</sup> to consider the situation in that country and its consequences for regional stability.

Meeting number. SC 3011.

Addressing the Council, President Aristide called on the international community to decide with the Haitian people to cry "no" to the dictatorship that had overthrown his Government and described the ensuing violence. He stated that, with the international community's help, Haiti had been able to hold free elections and that, with further help, it would also be able to save its threatened democracy. Fifteen other Member States which addressed the Council condemned the assault on the elected Government and the violence being perpetrated by the military, supported the demand for the immediate restoration of President Aristide's legitimate constitutional rule, and asserted their resolve not to recognize the self-appointed junta.

The Council adjourned without taking action but would remain seized of the matter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Before the General Assembly were two resolutions adopted by the Organization of American States, the first affirming OAS support for the democratic Government of Haiti<sup>(3)</sup> and the second reiterating support for democracy in that country.<sup>(5)</sup>

On 11 October, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 46/7.

The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti",

Bearing in mind that, on the basis of its resolution 45/2 of 10 October 1990, the United Nations system, at the request of the lawful authorities of that country and in cooperation with the Organization of American States, supported the efforts of the people of Haiti to consolidate their democratic institutions and also supported the holding of free elections on 16 December 1990,

Concerned about the critical events occurring in Haiti since 29 September 1991, which have brought about a sudden and violent interruption of the democratic process in that country, entailing human rights abuses and the loss of human lives,

Bearing in mind the presentation made by the President of Haiti, Mr. Jean-Bertrand Aristide, to the Security Council on 3 October 1991,

Given the importance of support from the international community for the development of democracy in Haiti by strengthening its institutions and giving high priority to the serious social and economic problems that it faces,

Aware that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the Organization promotes and encourages respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that "the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government",

Welcoming resolutions MRE/RES.1/91 and MRE/RES.2/91 adopted on 3 and 8 October 1991, respectively, by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the member countries of the Organization of American States,

1. Strongly condemns the attempted illegal replacement of the constitutional President of Haiti, the use of violence and military coercion and the violation of human rights in that country;

2. Affirms as unacceptable any entity resulting from that illegal situation and demands the immediate restoration of the legitimate Government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, together with the full application of the National Constitution and hence the full observance of human rights in Haiti;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations: in accordance with his functions, to consider providing support sought by the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States in implementing the mandates arising from resolutions MRE/RES.1/91 and MRE/RES.2/91 adopted by that organization;

4. Appeals to the States Members of the United Nations to take measures in support of the resolutions of the Organization of American States referred to in paragraph 3 above;

5. Emphasizes that an increase in technical, economic and financial cooperation, when constitutional order is restored in Haiti, is necessary to support its economic and social development efforts in order to strengthen its democratic institutions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report as soon as possible on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to keep open the consideration of this item until a solution to the situation is found.

Chapter III

Asia and the Pacific

Significant progress was achieved during 1991 towards the settlement of certain long-standing conflicts in Asia and the Pacific.

Even as the United Nations Command continued to report violations of the 1953 Armistice Agreement between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea, the two sides signed an accord towards the end of the year in an effort to promote national reconciliation. Negotiations towards a political settlement of the Cambodia situation culminated in the signing in October of the Paris Agreements, which called for their implementation under United Nations auspices. With the signing of the Agreements, an official cease-fire went into effect and the United Nations emplaced an advance mission in Cambodia in November, to pave the way for a United Nations transitional authority there to oversee free and fair elections for a new Cambodian Government.

Throughout the year, the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative were unremitting in their efforts to achieve a comprehensive solution of the Afghanistan problem, based on the 1988 Geneva Agreements concluded under United Nations auspices. The United Nations Iran-Iraq Observer Mission, mandated in 1988 to supervise the cease-fire between Iran and Iraq and the withdrawal of their troops to internationally recognized boundaries, was terminated at the end of February 1991 with troop withdrawal completed in that month. Thereafter, the United Nations began action aimed at assisting the parties in their reconstruction efforts.

The international crisis created by Iraq's 1990 invasion and occupation of Kuwait continued into 1991. Iraq's defiance of the Security Council demand that it immediately and unconditionally withdraw from Kuwait, as well as its disregard for the opportunity given it to comply until mid-January, led to military action against Iraq by Member States cooperating with Kuwait, in implementation of that demand and of related Council decisions. The military operations, having successfully forced Iraq's withdrawal, were suspended on 27 February. Resolution 687(1991), adopted by the Council on 3 April, embodied the terms of a formal cease-fire, which Iraq officially accepted on 6 April. That acceptance was subsequently confirmed as irrevocable and unqualified to the Council President, who acknowledged it on 11 April and declared the formal cease-fire effective. The Council adopted 14 other resolutions relating to the Iraq-Kuwait situation in general and to the terms of the cease-fire in particular. By one of these, the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observer Mission was established.

During and in the aftermath of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf region, the United Nations system urgently dispatched various fact-finding missions to Iraq and Kuwait for the purpose of determining immediate and effective humanitarian assistance.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/211 of 25 March, decided to hold, at its 1991 second regular session, an informal exchange of views on the economic, social and environmental consequences of the situation between Iraq and Kuwait and its short-, medium- and long-term implications, based on documentation to be provided by the Secretary-General. (For action taken by the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Environment Programme, see PART THREE, Chapters II, XIV and VIII, respectively. For details on the human rights situation in Iraq, see PART THREE, Chapter X.)

East Asia

Korean question

The annual report of the United Nations Command (UNC) concerning the maintenance in 1990 of the 1953 Armistice Agreement<sup>(1)</sup> was submitted to the Security Council on 13 June 1991 by the United States<sup>(2)</sup> on behalf of the Unified Command established pursuant to a 1950 resolution of the Security Council.<sup>(3)</sup>

The report stated that the Korean People's Army (KPA) of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Chinese People's Volunteers (CPV) continued to frustrate the investigative function of the Military Armistice Commission (MAC) by refusing to participate in its investigations and to misuse MAC as a propaganda forum for presenting political overtures unrelated to the Agreement. Set up to supervise the Agreement's implementation and settle any violations of it through negotiations, MAC held six meetings in 1990 to consider, among other matters, two serious violations. One was the construction of an extensive illegal barrier system in the Democratic People's Republic portion of the demilitarized zone (DMZ), stretching more than 140 kilometres and incorporating anti-tank barriers, electrified and barbed-wire fences, and fortified positions. Photographic evidence of the barrier system was presented to MAC on 17 January. The other violation was the construction of an infiltration tunnel across the Military Demarcation Line under the DMZ, discovered by UNC on 3 March. It was the fourth such tunnel since discovery of the first one in 1974. A proposal that a joint UNC and KPA/CPV team investigate the matter was rejected by the Democratic People's Republic, which insisted on an investigation of its own.

Throughout 1990, UNC addressed confidence-building measures such as the restoration of the Joint Observer Team to investigate serious violations, prior notification and observation of training exercises, removal of propaganda signs in the DMZ, and establishment of a viable verification system for Armistice compliance in the DMZ and in the Joint Security Area (Panmunjom).

Referring to the yearly military training exercise, "Team Spirit", conducted jointly by the United States and the Republic of Korea, UNC pointed out that such exercises were not addressed by the Armistice Agreement and thus could not constitute a violation of it, as the Democratic People's Republic maintained. As with previous exercises, the Democratic People's Republic had received prior notification of "Team Spirit 90" held in March, with an invitation to observe, which it rejected. On the other hand, UNC noted, the secret exercises routinely held by the Democratic People's Republic were a cause for genuine concern.

Informal MAC discussions continued regarding eliminating from the Joint Security Area all military facilities and guard posts, including heavy and automatic weapons; reducing, disarming and controlling the guard forces; and inspections and verifications. The return through MAC of Korean War remains found in the territory of either side, as stipulated by the Agreement, was also pursued. On 28 May, however, the Democratic People's Republic, in an action interpreted by UNC as aimed at increasing its political contacts in the United States, returned several sets of remains of United States military personnel directly to a United States congressional delegation in the Joint Security Area.

In a special report transmitted by the United States on 27 March 1991,<sup>(4)</sup> UNC notified the Security Council that, with effect from 25 March, Major General Hwang Won-Tak of the Republic of Korea had assumed duties as the senior member representing UNC at MAC. The report noted that the Agreement neither addressed MAC membership by nationality or United Nations affiliation nor provided guidelines for designating a senior member; UNC and KPA/CPV each had discretionary authority to appoint its members, not subject to review or approval by the other side.

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea lodged a protest against that appointment as a violation of the Armistice Agreement and warned of its paralysing effect on MAC activities.<sup>(5)</sup> It had earlier protested against the upcoming "Team Spirit 91" as a nuclear war test targeted against it and had reiterated its call for the discontinuance of such manoeuvres.<sup>(6)</sup>

The Republic of Korea announced on 18 December 1991 the signing of an accord between it and the Democratic People's Republic to promote national reconciliation, including the denuclearization of the Korean peninsula;<sup>(7)</sup> in this connection, it called on the Democratic People's Republic, as a party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,<sup>(8)</sup> to conclude a safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).<sup>(9)</sup>

(For details of the admission of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea to membership in the United Nations, see PART ONE, Chapter IV, under "Institutional questions".)

South-East Asia

Cambodia situation

Negotiations during 1991 towards peace in Cambodia culminated in the conclusion of settlement agreements that called for their implementation under United Nations auspices. The negotiations drew impetus from a major development following the General Assembly's urgings and call in October 1990<sup>(1)</sup> for cooperation by the four parties to the Cambodia conflict (National United Front for an Independent, Neutral, Peaceful and Cooperative Cambodia; Khmer People's National Liberation Front; Party of Democratic Kampuchea; People's Revolutionary Party of Kampuchea) and for intensified consultations by the Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference on Cambodia (PCC).

That development was the completion by the PCC Co-Presidents and the permanent members of the Security Council in November 1990 of draft agreements on a comprehensive political settlement<sup>(2)</sup> based on a framework formulated by the five permanent Council members,<sup>(3)</sup> accepted by the Cambodian parties<sup>(4)</sup> and endorsed by the Council.<sup>(5)</sup> The draft was formally presented in December to the Supreme National Council of Cambodia (SNC)—the legitimate source of authority in Cambodia during a transitional period (from the signing of a settlement agreement to the formation of a new Cambodian Government following free and fair elections) and the body representing Cambodia at the United Nations and at other international institutions and conferences.

On 1 February 1991, the draft agreements were also presented to Cambodia's neighbouring countries, Thailand and Viet Nam, whose cooperation in implementing a political settlement was essential.<sup>(6)</sup>

The Secretary-General, on 8 August,<sup>(7)</sup> brought the Security Council up to date on the latest developments. He reported that SNC unanimously agreed, at its meeting attended by the PCC Co-Presidents and his Special Representative, Rafeeuddin Ahmed, as observers (Pattaya, Thailand, 24-26 June), to an immediate and unlimited cease-fire and to undertake to stop receiving outside military assistance. At a further meeting (Beijing, China, 16 and 17 July), SNC elected Prince Norodom Sihanouk as its President, reiterated its acceptance of the framework document in its entirety and requested the dispatch of a United Nations survey team to Cambodia to evaluate the modalities of control of the cease-fire and cessation of foreign military aid. The Co-Presidents and permanent Council members agreed (Beijing, 17 and 18 July) to recommend the dispatch of such a mission to begin the process of preparing for the military aspects of a United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), envisaged by the framework document as the body to be delegated all powers necessary to ensure implementation of an agreement on a comprehensive political settlement, once that agreement was signed.

The Secretary-General accordingly informed the Council of his intention to proceed with arrangements for the dispatch of the survey mission as soon as possible, to which the Council agreed.<sup>(8)</sup>

Paris Conference on Cambodia

The Paris Conference on Cambodia, originally referred to as the International Conference on Cambodia that held a first session in Paris in 1989,<sup>(9)</sup> reconvened in 1991 for a second session in Paris, from 21 to 23 October, at the conclusion of which it adopted four instruments, referred to as the Paris Agreements. They were: (1) Final Act of the Paris Conference; (2) Agreement on a Comprehensive Political Settlement of the Cambodia Conflict, with annexes on the UNTAC mandate, military matters, elections, repatriation of Cambodian refugees and displaced persons, and the principles for a new Cambodian constitution; (3) Agreement concerning the Sovereignty, Independence, Territorial Integrity and Inviolability, Neutrality and National Unity of Cambodia; and (4) Declaration on the Rehabilitation and Reconstruction of Cambodia. The texts were transmitted to the Secretary-General on 30 October.<sup>(10)</sup>

UN Transitional Authority in Cambodia

In response to a request addressed to him in the PCC Final Act, the Secretary-General, on 30 October 1991,<sup>(11)</sup> drew the attention of the Security Council to the Paris Agreements to enable it to consider them at the earliest opportunity. The Agreements inter alia invited the Council to establish a United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia at an appropriate time.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, having considered the Paris Agreements,<sup>(10)</sup> unanimously adopted resolution 718(1991) on 31 October 1991.

The Security Council

Recalling its resolutions 668(1990) of 20 September 1990 and 717(1991) of 16 October 1991,

Welcoming the meeting in Paris, on 23 October 1991, of the Paris Conference on Cambodia at ministerial level, at which the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict were signed.

Having considered the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict,

Noting that those agreements provide inter alia for the designation of a Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the establishment of a United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia,

Noting further that it is the intention of the Secretary-General to send a survey mission to Cambodia as soon as possible to prepare a plan for implementing the mandate envisaged in the agreements, for submission to the Security Council,

Underlining the necessity for the full cooperation of the Supreme National Council of Cambodia, and all Cambodians for their part, in the implementation of the agreements,

1. Expresses its support for the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict, signed in Paris on 23 October 1991;

2. Authorises the Secretary-General to designate a Special Representative for Cambodia to act on his behalf;

3. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to send a survey mission to Cambodia as soon as possible to prepare a plan for implementing the mandate envisaged in the agreements;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit at the earliest possible date a report containing his implementation plan, including in particular a detailed estimate of the cost of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia, on the understanding that this report would be the basis on which the Council would authorize the establishment of the Transitional Authority, the budget of the Authority to be subsequently considered and approved in accordance with the provisions of Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations:

5. Calls upon all Cambodian parties to comply fully with the cease-fire that entered into force at the time of the signature of the agreements;

6. Calls upon the Supreme National Council of Cambodia, and all Cambodians for their part, to cooperate fully with the United Nations in the implementation of the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict.

Security Council resolution 718(1991)

31 October 1991 Meeting 3015 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23180).

On 11 November,<sup>(12)</sup> the Council welcomed the Secretary-General's proposal<sup>(13)</sup> concerning the appointment, at the appropriate time, of Major-General John M. Sanderson (Australia) as Commander of the military component of UNTAC and of Brigadier-General Michel Loridon (France) as Deputy Commander.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1990 request of the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General, in November 1991,<sup>(14)</sup> provided a detailed account of development in Cambodia since his last report on the subject in October 1990,<sup>(15)</sup> from the elaboration of the draft texts of the Paris Agreements to their signing in October 1991 and to the subsequent Security Council request for the preparation of a plan of implementation.

Responding to a 1988 request of the Assembly,<sup>(16)</sup> the Secretary-General strengthened his efforts in coordinating humanitarian relief assistance to Cambodia during 1991 and set up for this purpose an inter-agency coordinating mechanism within Cambodia. His Special Representative, Shah A. M. S. Kibria, maintained close contact with international and non-governmental organizations regarding specific needs. Shortly after the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) sent ambulances from Thailand into Cambodia in July—the first official border crossing since 1975—the United Nations transported emergency relief supplies from Bangkok to Phnom Penh. Additional deliveries of relief assistance, including several thousand tons of rice from the World Food Programme (WFP), were being transported into Cambodia on an ongoing basis.

A combined relief effort was mounted by Governments, United Nations agencies and voluntary organizations to meet the emergency created by widespread flooding in August and September, which caused extensive agricultural and infrastructural damage.

Intensified military activity in western Cambodia during the first part of 1991, as well as deteriorating health and agricultural conditions, had led to a renewed movement of large numbers of people across the border into Thailand, swelling the population in camps supported by the United Nations Border Relief Operation (UNBRO) in Thailand from 290,000 refugees at the end of 1990 to the current level of 340,000. Cash and food requirements for these populations had been met, however, for the remainder of the year. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), designated in 1989 as the lead agency to carry out the repatriation of border populations upon the conclusion of a comprehensive political settlement, assumed on 1 November 1991 the management and administrative support for UNBRO, which had been provided by the United Nations Development Programme since 1988. Registration programmes aimed at identifying areas for refugee resettlement were under way.

Relief assistance was also being provided to displaced persons within Cambodia. In April 1991, relief assistance was recommended for this segment of the population across nine sectors at a cost of some $12 million. Government contributions remained limited, however.

General Assembly resolution 46/18

20 November 1991 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (A/46/L.21); agenda item 24

UN Advance Mission in Cambodia

In a report of 30 September 1991,<sup>(17)</sup> the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council authorize the establishment of a United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia (UNAMIC). The recommendation was made in the light of the survey mission's report on its visit to Cambodia from 19 August to 4 September. The mission pointed out that it could not make the evaluation requested of it due to the inability of certain Cambodian parties to provide the required information, nor was it able to begin preparations for implementing the military aspects foreseen for UNTAC; the mine-awareness programme, best provided by a small military team of UNAMIC, should initially be concentrated in north-western Cambodia and in areas likely to be resettled by returning refugees.

The Secretary-General recalled that, at consultations with the PCC Co-Presidents and the permanent Council members, his proposal to deploy in Cambodia a small advance mission mainly of military liaison officers to assist the parties to maintain the current cease-fire was welcomed, with a suggestion that he proceed to develop a plan along the lines he had indicated. He accordingly recommended that UNAMIC be set up under the command of the United Nations, vested in the Secretary-General under the authority of the Security Council. It would consist of civilian liaison staff, military liaison officers, a military mine-awareness unit and support personnel, mostly civilian.

UNAMIC would establish headquarters at Phnom Penh and deploy liaison teams to the military headquarters of each of the four Cambodian parties and at two forward positions: Battambang and Siem Reap. It would operate an independent round-the-clock communications system, open also to the Cambodian parties. It would function as an integrated operation under the overall responsibility in the field of a civilian Chief Liaison Officer, responsible for liaison with SNC on preparations for UNTAC deployment and on other matters related to the United Nations role in implementing the Paris Agreements, and whose office would comprise eight international staff. A 70-member military component, led by a Senior Military Liaison Officer, would facilitate communications among the military headquarters of the four Cambodian parties on cease-fire matters. A civilian unit of some 75 international and 75 local staff would provide support and technical services. An air unit would provide rapid deployment of Mission personnel, establish necessary supply lines and permit medical evacuations. As to its mine-awareness role, UNAMIC would deploy small military teams with training experience on how to avoid injury from mines and booby traps, giving priority to populations in areas of recent military confrontation.

The Mission would become operational immediately after the signing of the agreement on a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict; its mandate would extend until UNTAC was established and its budget would be adopted by the Assembly. At that time, the Mission would be absorbed by UNTAC and its good offices expanded during the first phase of the cease-fire.

UNAMIC would have to be assured of the cooperation of the four Cambodian parties. It should be guaranteed freedom of movement and communication and be granted the relevant privileges and immunities provided for by the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.<sup>(18)</sup>

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 October 1991, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 717(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 668(1990) of 20 September 1990, in which it endorsed the framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict of 28 August 1990,

Taking note of the draft agreements for a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict.

Welcoming the very significant progress made, on the basis of those draft agreements, towards a comprehensive political settlement which would enable the Cambodian people to exercise its inalienable right to self-determination through free and fair elections organized and conducted by the United Nations,

Welcoming in particular the election of His Royal Highness Samdech Norodom Sihanouk as the Chairman of the Supreme National Council of Cambodia,

Noting with satisfaction the other decisions taken by the Supreme National Council of Cambodia, concerning in particular the implementation of a voluntary ceasefire and the renunciation of foreign military assistance, and underlining the need for the full cooperation of the Cambodian parties,

Considering that such progress has opened the way to an early reconvening of the Paris Conference on Cambodia at ministerial level and the signing of the agreements for a comprehensive political settlement based on the framework document of 28 August 1990 and welcoming the preparations being made by the Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference on Cambodia in that regard,

Convinced that such a comprehensive political settlement can offer at last a peaceful, just and durable solution to the Cambodia conflict,

Taking note of the request by His Royal Highness Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, Chairman of the Supreme National Council of Cambodia, for United Nations personnel to be sent to Cambodia at the earliest possible moment,<sup>a</sup>

Underlining the necessity of a United Nations presence in Cambodia immediately after the signing of the agreements for a comprehensive political settlement, pending the implementation of the arrangements set out in those agreements,

Having considered, to this end, the report of the Secretary-General<sup>1</sup> proposing the establishment of a United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Decides to establish, under its authority, a United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia immediately after the signing of the agreements for a comprehensive political settlement and in accordance with the report of the Secretary-General, with members of the Mission to be sent to Cambodia immediately after the signing;

3. Calls upon the Supreme National Council of Cambodia, and the Cambodian parties for their part, to cooperate fully with the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia and with the preparations for the implementation of the arrangements set out in the agreements for a comprehensive political settlement;

4. Welcomes the proposal of the Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference on Cambodia to reconvene the Conference at an early date at ministerial level to sign the agreements for a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council by 15 November 1991 on the implementation of the present resolution, and to keep the Council fully informed of further developments.

16 October 1991 Meeting 3014 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23145).

As proposed by the Secretary-General on 29 October<sup>(19)</sup> and 12 November,<sup>(20)</sup> and as agreed to by the Council,<sup>(21)</sup> the UNAMIC military contingents would be made available initially by the following 23 countries: Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, China, France, Germany, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Malaysia, New Zealand, Pakistan, Poland, Senegal, Tunisia, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

Reports of the Secretary-General. On 14 November 1991,<sup>(22)</sup> the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that, with the signing on 23 October of the Paris Agreements, the arrangements for the establishment of UNAMIC had entered into force and it had become operational.

In keeping with the plan described in his report of 30 September,<sup>(17)</sup> the Secretary-General had appointed A. H. S. Ataul Karim (Bangladesh) as Chief Liaison Officer and, with the Council's consent, had designated Brigadier-General Michel Loridon (France) as Senior Military Liaison Officer. They assumed their functions in Phnom Penh on 9 and 12 November, respectively. The military communications unit (Australia), which arrived in Phnom Penh on 10 November, was joined by the air operations unit (France) two days later. Deployment of the remaining civilian and military personnel would proceed rapidly and was expected to be completed on schedule by mid-December.

In a further report of 30 December,<sup>(23)</sup> the Secretary-General recommended that the UNAMIC mandate be expanded, pointing to a growing sense in the international community of the urgent need to begin a de-mining effort in Cambodia so as to take advantage of the dry season that would end in May. Under the Paris Agreements, responsibility for that effort was entrusted to UNTAC.

Pending the establishment of UNTAC, therefore, the Secretary-General proposed that the UNAMIC mine-awareness programme be developed immediately to include training of Cambodian personnel in mine detection and clearance; that a demining programme be initiated concurrently by a specialized military unit, which would concentrate in north-western Cambodia and give priority to refugee repatriation routes, reception centres and resettlement areas; and that an engineering component be included to ensure the repair, safety and adequacy of roads and bridges for an anticipated large number of returning refugees. The Secretary-General also set out the corresponding personnel requirements for the expanded mandate, for which he would be presenting a statement of financial and administrative implications.

Financing

On 4 November 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, included in the agenda of its 1991 session an additional item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia". The item's inclusion had been requested by the Secretary-General on 28 October.<sup>(24)</sup>

The Secretary-General informed the Assembly on 3 December that the total resource requirements of UNAMIC for six months, beginning on 1 November 1991, was $15,811,100 gross ($15,406,400 net).<sup>(25)</sup> That figure, estimated at full cost, incorporated initial commitments of up to $6 million for the emplacement of UNAMIC, already entered into with the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), as provided for by a 1989 resolution of the Assembly relating to unforeseen and extraordinary expenses.<sup>(26)</sup> Also incorporated was an amount of $8,035,984 in voluntary contributions in kind, consisting of a 40-personnel military support unit ($1,178,880) and a 112-personnel air support unit ($6,857,104).

Following its review of the estimates, ACABQ<sup>(27)</sup> recommended an appropriation of $13,967,300 net for the six-month period beginning 1 November 1991, which the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee approved on 13 December.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/198 on 20 December 1991.

Financing of the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Southern and Western Asia

Afghanistan situation

The Secretary-General and his Personal Representative in Afghanistan and Pakistan, Benon Sevan, were unremitting in their efforts throughout 1991 to maintain and encourage the movement towards a political settlement in Afghanistan, which began with the conclusion in 1988 of the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan.<sup>(1)</sup> Concluded under United Nations auspices and referred to as the Geneva Agreements, they comprised three instruments: the Bilateral Agreement between the Republic of Afghanistan and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan on the Principles of Mutual Relations, in particular on Non-Interference and Non-Intervention; the Bilateral Agreement between the Republic of Afghanistan and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan on the Voluntary Return of Refugees; and the Agreement on the Interrelationships for the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan, signed by the USSR and the United States.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1990 request of the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General, in October 1991,<sup>(3)</sup> reported on the Afghanistan situation in all its aspects.

He detailed the consultations he had undertaken personally to encourage all segments of the Afghan people, the two parties (Afghanistan and Pakistan), the two guarantors of the Geneva Agreements (the USSR and the United States), and the Governments of the neighbouring and other countries (Iran and Saudi Arabia among them) to work towards a comprehensive political settlement of the Afghanistan problem. He also reported on a series of intensified consultations he had initiated through his Personal Representative. This involved continuous shuttling between Kabul and Islamabad and regular contacts with government authorities in Kabul, leaders of opposition groups based in Afghanistan, Peshawar (Pakistan) and Tehran (Iran), the Nationwide Council of Mujahideen Commanders, tribal and religious leaders, and eminent Afghans residing in and outside Afghanistan.

On 21 May, following a round of such consultations, the Secretary-General issued a five-point statement that could serve as a basis for a political settlement acceptable to the majority of Afghans. The statement pointed to the need for: preserving the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and non-aligned and Islamic character of Afghanistan; recognizing the right of the Afghan people to determine their own form of government and political, economic and social system, free from outside intervention; a transition period, whose details would be worked out by an intra-Afghan dialogue, leading to the establishment of a broad-based Government; an agreement by all to end arms supplies to all Afghan sides; and adequate financial and material resources for the repatriation of refugees and the reconstruction of Afghanistan.

The Secretary-General welcomed the joint USSR-United States statement of 13 September 1991<sup>(4)</sup> announcing their decision to discontinue their weapons deliveries to all Afghan sides from 1 January 1992; this would facilitate a cessation of hostilities, an essential condition for the peaceful conduct of elections during a transition period leading to a political settlement. He considered the decision a major contribution towards the fulfilment of a key provision of his five-point statement.

Concerning implementation of the agreement on the voluntary return of refugees, differences between Afghanistan and Pakistan had prevented the setting up of the mixed commissions envisaged to coordinate and supervise repatriation. None the less, the repatriation project begun in July 1990 by UNHCR, in cooperation with WFP and the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan, continued to assist voluntarily repatriating refugees. By the end of September 1991, 34,000 families (or 170,000 individuals) had exchanged their ration books for cash and wheat to subsidize their repatriation.

As to humanitarian and economic assistance, the Secretary-General's Personal Representative assumed responsibility, on 1 January, for the overall administration of Operation Salam, the emergency relief programme for Afghanistan. The Operation's 1991 requirements totalled $162 million in cash and substantial contributions in kind, including 15,000 metric tons of wheat and other food items. Delivery of contributions pledged had become sporadic. A reduction of funding had led to the cancellation or scaling down in June of 57 projects (valued at $31 million) in agricultural rehabilitation, child immunization, education, nutrition, rehabilitation of the disabled and mine clearance. These set-backs notwithstanding, WFP had distributed over 60,000 metric tons of food commodities; the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations had provided 6,800 metric tons of seeds and fertilizer and over half a million fruit and poplar saplings. The Operation's mine-clearance programme, which employed 1,200 Afghans, continued clearing mines and other unexploded ordnance from key access roads, villages, irrigation channels and agricultural land.

Requests the Secretary-General to keep Member States and the Security Council informed of progress towards the implementation of the present resolution and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the situation in Afghanistan and on progress achieved in the implementation of the Geneva Agreements and the political settlement relating to Afghanistan;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security".

General Assembly resolution 46/23

5 December 1991 Meeting 64 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (A/46/L.13); agenda item 29.

Financial implications. ACABQ, A/46/7/Add.10; 5th Committee, A/46/743; S-G, A/C.5/46/38.

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 5th Committee 44, 45; plenary 64.

In his statement to the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General indicated that the draft resolution, if adopted, would entail estimated requirements of $6,873,400 for 1992. ACABQ reduced the estimates to $6,600,000 and, based on its comments and observations, the Fifth Committee informed the Assembly that adoption of the draft would require an additional appropriation in the amount specified by ACABQ.

Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan

The Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan<sup>(3)</sup> assisted the Secretary-General in his activities to facilitate the early realization of a political settlement in Afghanistan, as mandated by the General Assembly. Headed by the Secretary-General's Personal Representative in the area, it was organized into two small headquarters units, one in Kabul and the other in Islamabad, with a sub-office in Peshawar.

Attached to the Office was a Military Advisory Unit of 10 military advisers from Austria, Canada, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, Ghana, Ireland, Nepal, Poland and Sweden, responsible for providing military expertise as required, maintaining a continued assessment of the security situation in Afghanistan, and updating plans for military support to a possible increased United Nations involvement in Afghanistan. With the concurrence of their Governments, the advisers were detached temporarily from existing peace-keeping operations, namely, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization, the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon.

Iran-Iraq situation

United Nations efforts towards a peaceful settlement of the hostilities between Iran and Iraq continued to focus during 1991 on the full implementation of Security Council resolution 598(1987),<sup>(1)</sup> providing the basic framework for such a settlement. With a cease-fire in place and with the completion in February of the withdrawal of the parties' remaining forces to the internationally recognized boundaries as described in the 1975 Treaty concerning the State Frontier and Neighbourly Relations between Iran and Iraq and its protocols and annexes, the United Nations Iran-Iraq Observer Mission (UNIMOG) was terminated at the end of its mandate on 28 February 1991. Set up by the Security Council in 1988,<sup>(2)</sup> the Mission had been dispatched to Iran and Iraq and mandated by resolution 598(1987) to verify, confirm and supervise the cease-fire and troop withdrawal.

In order to fulfil the other tasks entrusted to him by resolution 598(1987), the Secretary-General, with the Council's concurrence, established in April 1991 a small civilian office in the capital of each country and also appointed a team of experts to study the question of reconstruction, beginning with Iran. Iraq was informed that such a team was also available to it.

UN Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group

Report of the Secretary-General (28 January). Before the expiry on 31 January 1991 of the two-month extension of UNIMOG, the Secretary-General reported<sup>(3)</sup> on the Group's activities from 21 November 1990 to 27 January 1991 and on his consultations with the parties about its future.

During that period, the Group had been charged with resolving the remaining problems on the border, arranging information exchange between the two parties regarding unmarked minefields, and assisting them in negotiating and implementing an area of separation and, thereafter, an area of limitation of armaments. The Group's activities were considerably affected by the outbreak of hostilities in the Persian Gulf region (see below, under "Iraq-Kuwait situation"). Its operations in Iraq temporarily ceased from 18 January, with its personnel relocated to either Cyprus or Iran.

At a technical meeting on 6 January at Tehran, the two parties reached agreements on outstanding questions relating to the Group's mandate. The agreements included removal by 22 January of all disputed border positions and Group verification of troop withdrawals to internationally recognized boundaries; arrangements to ensure information exchange on all unmarked minefields; and the establishment, between 10 and 27 January, of a separation area extending 1 kilometre deep on either side of the internationally recognized boundaries and along their entire length. A further technical meeting to review implementation and consider establishing an area of armaments limitation on either side of the separation area, scheduled for 28 or 29 January at Baghdad, could not take place due to developments in the region.

The Group conducted 791 patrols along the entire length of the international boundaries, where the general situation was reported calm, and 238 investigations of disputed positions. With its evacuation of Iraq on 18 January, the Group was divested of its ability to monitor the Iraqi side of those boundaries. By 26 January, 13 out of 17 disputed positions had been withdrawn by Iran and 23 out of 29 by Iraq. There was little progress on mine-clearing and on the matter of a separation area. With winter's onset, however, both sides were obliged to move back their positions, thereby creating a de facto area of separation in the north and, to a lesser extent, in the central area.

The Secretary-General remarked that Security Council resolution 598(1987) was close to fulfilment as to its demand for a cease-fire and troop withdrawal under United Nations supervision and to its call for the repatriation of prisoners of war (POWs). Also, on 9 December 1990, 196 Iranian and 43 Iraqi war dead were repatriated, bringing the total repatriated since the Group's inception to 2,153 Iranians and 2,097 Iraqis.

Despite difficulties occasioned by recent events in the Persian Gulf region, both parties remained committed to implementing in due course their understandings of 6 January and thus counted on the Group's continued presence and assistance. The Secretary-General therefore recommended that the Council extend the Group's mandate for a further period of one month, or until 28 February 1991.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Having considered the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 685(1991) on 31 January 1991.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 598(1987) of 20 July 1987, 619(1988) of 9 August 1988, 631(1989) of 8 February 1989, 642(1989) of 29 September 1989, 651(1990) of 29 March 1990, 671(1990) of 27 September 1990 and 676(1990) of 28 November 1990,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group of 28 January 1991, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group for a further period of one month, that is, until 28 February 1991, as recommended by the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, during February 1991, a report on his further consultations with the parties about the future of the Group, together with his recommendations on this matter.

Security Council resolution 685(1991)

31 January 1991 Meeting 2976 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/22171).

Report of the Secretary-General (26 February). In a further report covering the period from 28 January to 25 February 1991,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General noted that, although UNIMOG continued to operate only in the Iranian part of its area of deployment, it maintained regular contact with the Iraqi authorities through meetings at the Iran-Iraq border.

The Group confirmed that the parties continued to exchange information on unmarked minefields. It was advised that Iraq had established a separation area and that Iran was in the process of establishing one, but it could not verify the information owing to the suspension of its operations in Iraq and the restrictions on its movement in Iran. On 20 February, the last disputed positions were withdrawn to the internationally recognized boundaries; withdrawal of all forces to those boundaries was thus complete. The Group also coordinated the setting up of joint teams to survey areas where there was doubt as to the exact location of those boundaries.

The Secretary-General concluded that the provisions of resolution 598(1987),<sup>(1)</sup> demanding a cease-fire and calling for a United Nations observer team to verify, confirm and supervise the cease-fire and troop withdrawal, could be considered implemented. He accordingly recommended that the Group's mandate come to an end on 28 February 1991 and its personnel withdrawn. The Secretary-General paid tribute to the two Governments for their cooperation, to the troop-contributing States and to all who had served with UNIMOG.

Composition

As at 25 February 1991,<sup>(4)</sup> UNIMOG, including personnel relocated to Cyprus, had a total strength of 114 (96 military observers from 18 countries: Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Hungary, India, Ireland, Italy, Malaysia, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Sweden, Turkey, Uruguay, Yugoslavia, Zambia—16 military police from Ireland and 2 military medical personnel from Austria), reduced from 140 on 22 January.<sup>(3)</sup> As a result of previous reductions and suspension of rotation replacements, six troop-contributing countries remained unrepresented in 1991: Argentina, Australia, Ghana, Kenya, Nigeria, Senegal.

The Andover aircraft of the Royal New Zealand Air Force and its crew were withdrawn on 31 December 1990; the Twin Otter aircraft was returned to Canada on 31 January 1991. The Jetstream aircraft, provided as a voluntary contribution by Switzerland and located at Tehran, continued to provide air support.

Financing

In December 1991,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General provided a comprehensive report on the financing of UNIMOG since its establishment in 1988 to its termination on 28 February 1991. It also covered the disposition of all UNIMOG property.

For the one-month renewal period from 1 to 28 February, the Secretary-General, in keeping with the procedure set forth by the General Assembly in 1990,<sup>(6)</sup> requested and obtained ACABQ concurrence to enter into commitments in an amount of $2,384,000 gross ($2,178,000 net), to be financed from the unencumbered balance remaining from previous appropriations made available to UNIMOG.

A summary of the financial administration from inception to end of mandate showed that total resources amounted to $213,827,900 gross ($210,509,900 net), consisting of: appropriations ($196,729,000 gross, $193,617,000 net); authorizations ($2,384,000 gross, $2,178,000 net); and voluntary contributions in kind ($3,714,900) and in cash ($11,000,000). Operating costs totalled $170,217,700 gross ($166,213,100 net) against appropriations and authorizations, and $3,714,900 against contributions in kind. Credits to Member States against their assessed contributions from unencumbered balances totalled $24,481,000 gross ($23,627,000 net). The unencumbered balance at the time of reporting was $15,414,300 gross ($16,954,900 net).

The Secretary-General stated that it remained for the Assembly to authorize the required appropriation for the last mandate renewal and to decide on the disposition of UNIMOG property and of the unencumbered and unutilized balances in the UNIMOG Special Account.

UN offices in Iran and in Iraq

Following the termination of UNIMOG, the Secretary-General addressed those provisions of Security Council resolution 598(1987)<sup>(1)</sup> entrusting him with essentially political tasks that remained to be implemented. These called on him (a) to examine measures to enhance the security and stability of the region and (b) to explore, in consultation with Iran and Iraq, the question of entrusting to an impartial body an inquiry into the responsibility for the conflict that had occurred between them, as well as (c) to assign an expert team to study the question of reconstruction (see below).

To facilitate those tasks and for a better assessment of developments in the region, the Secretary-General on 28 February proposed,<sup>(7)</sup> and obtained the Council's concurrence,<sup>(8)</sup> to set up in Iran and in Iraq a civilian office, to include two or three military observers for problems requiring military expertise. The offices were set up in April and were referred to as the United Nations Office of the Secretary-General in the Islamic Republic of Iran (UNOSGI) based at Tehran, and the United Nations Office of the Secretary-General in Iraq (UNOSGI) based at Baghdad. Arrangements concerning their legal status, privileges and immunities were concluded with the Governments on 3 and 27 June, respectively.

Reports of the Secretary-General. On 26 November 1991,<sup>(9)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on the progress of implementation of resolution 598(1987) since 1 March. Further efforts, he noted, had been made difficult due mainly to the complex situation prevailing in the area following the outbreak of hostilities in Iraq and Kuwait (see below).

The Secretary-General described the situation along the border between Iran and Iraq as one of relative unrest, drawing attention to the long lists of alleged cease-fire violations submitted by both and circulated as Security Council documents. UNOSGI at Baghdad confirmed 31 out of 37 alleged cease-fire violations that it had investigated at Iraq's request; UNOSGI at Tehran confirmed 8 out of 11 allegations investigated. The majority of allegations related to unauthorized presence on the border or in the area of separation rather than to any firing. It was the Secretary-General's hope that the recent release of 421 POWs by Iran signalled the beginning of the last phase of the repatriation process, whose completion was long overdue.

As to the resolution's call for measures to enhance security and stability in the Persian Gulf region, the Secretary-General had started a process of consultations that began in September with his visit to Iran and Saudi Arabia and continued in New York with the region's Foreign Ministers and the head of State of Bahrain during the General Assembly session. The Secretary-General suggested that the idea of a declaration, to include basic principles of good-neighbourly relations and other practical arrangements, might be pursued under United Nations auspices.

According to a further report of 9 December,<sup>(10)</sup> the Secretary-General had requested the two Governments, in identical letters dated 14 August, for their views on the question of an inquiry into responsibility for the Iran-Iraq conflict, as called for by resolution 598(1987). He also consulted separately with independent experts so as to gain the fullest understanding of the subject. On the basis of replies received from Iraq on 26 August and from Iran on 15 September, as well as on all other relevant information since the beginning of the conflict, he made the following observations.

The Iran-Iraq war was begun in contravention of international law, the area of violation being the illegal use of force and disregard for a Member State's territorial integrity. The violation entailing responsibility for the conflict was determined to be Iraq's armed attack against Iran on 22 September 1980<sup>(11)</sup> and its continuous occupation of Iranian territory during the conflict-actions unjustifiable under the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law and morality, despite Iran's encroachment on Iraqi territory before the attack. Of the numerous violations of humanitarian law committed during the war, many had been documented by ICRC and the United Nations, particularly by expert teams dispatched to civilian areas subjected to chemical attacks.

Stating that the events of the Iran-Iraq war and the positions of the parties were a matter of record and public knowledge, the Secretary-General was of the opinion that it served no useful purpose to pursue the inquiry. In the interest of peace and in line with implementing resolution 598(1987) as a comprehensive plan, he said it was imperative to move on with the settlement process. What urgently needed tending to was the careful construction of peaceful relations between the parties and of peace and security in the whole region.

Iraq, through its Ministry of Foreign Affairs,<sup>(12)</sup> characterized the 9 December report as devoid of any legal value, reflecting only the Secretary-General's personal opinion. Based on what it called authenticated evidence, Iraq asserted that the action it took against Iran, as cited by the report, had been in response to a long series of attacks, threats and violations of Iraq's sovereignty, territorial integrity and internal security, begun in July 1980 by Iran in accordance with an openly declared plan to subject Iraq to Iran's authority.

Financing

In a December report to the Fifth Committee,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General set out detailed resource requirements for UNOSGI at Baghdad and at Tehran for which he requested appropriations.

To establish the offices in April, the Secretary-General, with ACABQ concurrence, had entered into related commitments of up to $3 million under the provisions of a 1989 General Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the biennium 1990-1991.<sup>(14)</sup> The estimated expenses submitted for April to 31 December 1991 totalled $3,015,000.

On the assumption that the offices would be a continuing need, net requirements for 1992, estimated at $4,410,400, were further submitted. Given their extraordinary nature, relating to the maintenance of peace and security, the Secretary-General recommended that they not be covered by the contingency fund but be dealt with under the relevant provision of the budget process as set forth by the Assembly in 1986.<sup>(15)</sup>

Having reviewed the Secretary-General's estimates and staffing proposals, ACABQ<sup>(16)</sup> recommended that requirements of $3,015,000 for 1991 be reflected in the second performance report on the 1990-1991 programme budget and that a reduced amount of $4,170,100 be appropriated for 1992 under the proposed 1992-1993 programme budget.

Reconstruction

Addressing a further provision of Security Council resolution 598(1987)<sup>(1)</sup> calling for the assignment of an expert team to study the question of reconstruction in Iran and Iraq, the Secretary-General informed the Council on 23 May<sup>(17)</sup> that he had appointed a team of experts, led by former Under-Secretary-General Abdulrahim Abby Farah, to make an exploratory visit to Iran towards the end of May. The team was to obtain initial information on the nature and extent of damage sustained by Iran as a result of the Iran-Iraq armed conflict and on the status of its reconstruction efforts.

The Secretary-General had indicated earlier<sup>(9)</sup> that the additional damage suffered by Iraq during the more recent hostilities in the Persian Gulf region would complicate the task of an expert team. A study might be possible, however, if records existed on data limited to its conflict with Iran. Iraq had been made aware that a team would be made available when it wished a study to proceed.

Reports of the expert team. The preliminary report of the United Nations team on its exploratory mission to Iran, from 31 May to 21 June 1991, was presented to the Security Council by the Secretary-General on 31 July.<sup>(18)</sup>

Data on war damages obtained from the Government included the number of provinces that became operational theatres of war and those that were targets of repeated attacks by aircraft and missiles; urban and rural centres that were razed to the ground or suffered varying degrees of damage; housing units destroyed or severely damaged; civilians killed, wounded or permanently disabled; internally displaced persons; and estimates in millions of rials of direct and indirect damage to the economic sectors. In agriculture, date-growing was singled out as a major casualty. Data obtained did not cover the social sectors (health, education, cultural sites).

The mission noted that the inspections it conducted confirmed damage as reported. It found the damage to the country's infrastructure to be of such magnitude as to require several years of reconstruction. The oil industry, the lifeline of the national economy, suffered massive destruction. The Abadan oil refinery and oil-loading facilities at Kharg Island, among the largest in the world, were virtually destroyed. The same was true of the commercial and passenger port of Khorramshahr.

The mission also noted an accelerated reconstruction programme for the oil industry and a concentrated effort to rehabilitate housing and human settlements. Repairs to the transport sector (road, rail, ports and airfields) were done mostly under war conditions, however. Iran's reconstruction programme, whose stated objective was the rehabilitation and revitalization of the environment, economy, industrial base, and cities and villages, had effective support at the central, provincial and local levels.

The team of experts made a further visit to Iran from 7 November to 1 December in order to complete its study of the country's reconstruction efforts and needs. Its second and final report following the visit was submitted to the Council by the Secretary-General on 24 December.<sup>(19)</sup>

The report contained, among other data, detailed information on the nature and extent of damage, resultant requirements, and government estimates of past and future reconstruction costs for the following sectors: housing and human settlements, the petroleum industry, transport, heavy and light industry, agriculture and irrigation, energy and power, telecommunications and broadcasting, education, cultural heritage and health.

Iraq-Kuwait situation

The international crisis created on 2 August 1990 by Iraq's invasion, occupation and subsequent annexation of its neighbouring State, Kuwait, continued to mount in 1991 and to test the ability of the United Nations to uphold Security Council decisions to resolve the crisis.

When the new year began, a pause of goodwill, granted by the Council on 29 November 1990, was in effect, to allow Iraq one final opportunity until 15 January 1991 to comply with resolution 660(1990),<sup>(19)</sup> by which the Council had demanded the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Iraq from Kuwait. The pause was granted under resolution 678(1990),<sup>(20)</sup> by which the Council also authorized Member States cooperating with Kuwait to use all necessary means to uphold and implement resolution 660(1990) and all subsequent relevant resolutions, and to restore international peace and security in the area, requested all States to provide appropriate support for the actions taken in pursuance of that provision, and requested the States concerned to keep the Council regularly informed on the progress of actions undertaken in implementation of the resolution.

Even as the military forces of the Member States cooperating with Kuwait were poised to act accordingly, extensive diplomatic initiatives were being undertaken within the United Nations and by intergovernmental bodies and Governments of individual Member States. Besides the widely publicized meeting between Iraq's Minister for Foreign Affairs and the United States Secretary of State at Geneva on 9 January, which had held hopes for the peaceful resolution of the crisis but whose negative results the USSR referred to with profound regret,<sup>(21)</sup> the Secretary-General was actively engaged in obtaining Iraq's compliance (see below).

In keeping with resolution 678(1990), Kuwait, on 16 January,<sup>(22)</sup> reported to the Secretary-General that, in the absence of any signs of withdrawal from Kuwaiti territory, Iraq had failed to signal its willingness to comply with the international community's will. Kuwait then informed the Council President on 17 January<sup>(23)</sup> that, the 15 January deadline having expired, it was exercising its right to self-defence and to the restoration of its rights-foremost among them the recovery of its territories-by cooperating with the forces of friendly States equally determined to end Iraq's occupation. That military operations for the liberation of Kuwait had started was in the meantime announced by Saudi Arabia.<sup>(24)</sup>

The United States reported on 17 January<sup>(25)</sup> that, in the face of Iraq's continued efforts to absorb Kuwait and to strengthen its military presence there,

United States military forces deployed in the Persian Gulf region and those of other States cooperating with Kuwait had initiated military action at 1900 hours (eastern standard time (EST)) on 16 January to liberate Kuwait, to restore its legitimate Government, and to restore international peace and security in the area, consistent with resolution 660(1990) and subsequent Council resolutions. Egypt,<sup>(26)</sup> France<sup>(27)</sup> and the United Kingdom<sup>(28)</sup> likewise reported having taken military action.

As indicated in subsequent reports by France,<sup>(29)</sup> the United Kingdom<sup>(30)</sup> and the United States,<sup>(31)</sup> they had jointly mounted an extensive air campaign against Iraq. Its objective, as described by the United Kingdom, was to break down the intricate command network of Iraq's armed forces, to disrupt and degrade its air defence system, and to destroy its unconventional weapons capabilities and the entire spectrum of its military infrastructure, including its land army that sustained Iraq's occupation of Kuwait. They pointed out that the air campaign was conducted with express directions to avoid causing civilian casualties and to avoid sites of cultural and historic significance.

Reporting to the Council President on 5 March,<sup>(32)</sup> the United States stated that, on the night of 23 February (EST), the military forces of the coalition launched ground operations on several fronts to obtain the full withdrawal of Iraqi forces from Kuwait. The air campaign until then had effectively isolated the Kuwaiti theatre of operations and weakened the front-line barrier of Iraqi forces, enabling the coalition forces rapidly to achieve their objective: the defeat of the Iraqi forces and the return of the territory of Kuwait to its legitimate Government. Military operations against Iraq were thus suspended at midnight (EST) on 27 February.

Summing up, the United States stated that the combined surface, naval and air operations were taken against Iraq when intensive diplomatic efforts failed to bring about a peaceful Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait and following provocative actions by Iraq, including continued indiscriminate missile attacks against civilian targets, large-scale destruction of oil facilities and public and private buildings in Kuwait as part of its "scorched earth" policy, and evidence of increased atrocities against the Kuwaiti civilian population. The United States also gave a summary of the planning and execution of the ground campaign, as described by United States General Norman Schwarzkopf.

Among the missile attacks referred to were the 39 Scud missiles launched by Iraq at Israeli cities throughout the hostilities, causing scores of casualties and considerable property damage, as reported by Israel on 28 January<sup>(33)</sup> and 1 March<sup>(34)</sup>. The USSR had described the first attack as doubtless aimed at converting the Iraq-Kuwait problem into a regional conflict.<sup>(35)</sup>

Kuwait informed the Secretary-General on 4 March<sup>(18)</sup> that its Government was resuming the functions of the State and directing the nation's affairs from Kuwait City.

On 3 April, the Council adopted resolution 687(1991) setting forth the terms for a formal cease-fire (see below, under "Cease-fire"). On 6 April, Iraq gave official notification of its acceptance of the resolution, which was confirmed to the Council President on 8 April. Taking that confirmation as constituting Iraq's irrevocable and unqualified acceptance of the resolution, the Council President, on 11 April, stated that the formal cease-fire was in effect.

Meanwhile, various fact-finding missions and related activities were undertaken to provide humanitarian assistance to Iraq and Kuwait, as well as other assistance to other States to meet specific needs arising from the Iraq-Kuwait situation (see below, under "Humanitarian assistance").

Activities of the Secretary-General. Shortly before military action was taken against Iraq, the Secretary-General undertook a two-day peace mission to that country, on 12 and 13 January, during which he met with high-level Iraqi officials at Baghdad and held a three-and-a-half-hour meeting with President Saddam Hussein. On his return to New York on 14 January, the Secretary-General described that meeting as polite but unsuccessful.

On 15 January, the deadline set by the Council for Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait, the Secretary-General, in a statement to the press,<sup>(19)</sup> noted that the world stood poised between peace and war. He appealed to President Hussein to turn the course of events from catastrophe towards a new era of justice and harmony based on Charter principles. He urged that a total withdrawal of Iraq's forces from Kuwait begin without delay, and, based on understandings he had received from Governments at the highest level, assured the President of the following, once withdrawal was under way.

Neither Iraq nor its forces would be attacked by the coalition forces. With the parties' consent and Council agreement, the Secretary-General would be prepared immediately to deploy United Nations observers and, if necessary, United Nations forces to certify withdrawal and prevent the eruption of hostilities on the ground. On Iraq's compliance with the Council resolutions, he would urge a review of the Council decisions imposing sanctions against Iraq<sup>(20)</sup> and encourage the phasing out of foreign forces in the area. Once the crisis was resolved, every effort would be made comprehensively to address the Arab-Israeli conflict, including the question of Palestine.

The Secretary-General reiterated his appeal on 30 January,<sup>(21)</sup> to Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs, and recalled his statement to President Hussein at their 13 January meeting that United Nations efforts to avert the unfolding tragedy would fail unless Iraq signified its readiness to comply with the relevant Council resolutions, beginning with resolution 660(1990) demanding withdrawal from Kuwait. He further recalled his statement to the Council after adoption of resolution 678(1990) in which he underscored that, in requiring compliance, the United Nations sought not surrender but the most honourable way of resolving a crisis that respected all legitimate interests and was conducive to the wider peace and the rule of law; and that the actions of the United Nations in the current crisis must be perceived as part of its larger endeavour to establish peace through justice whenever the one was imperilled and the other denied.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (February/March)

At the urgent request of the Arab Maghreb Union (Algeria, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Tunisia),<sup>(22)</sup> Cuba<sup>(23)</sup> and Yemen,<sup>(24)</sup> the Security Council convened on 13 February 1991 to consider the grave situation in the Persian Gulf region.

Meeting number. SC 2977 (part I-public; part II-private, with resumptions 1-5).

At the outset, the United Kingdom proposed, in accordance with rule 48<sup>a</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, that consideration of the situation should continue in formal but private meetings where constructive discussion could take place, without what it called the glare of publicity. The Council had been divided among those who preferred not to meet unless it was in a position to advance its objectives and those who preferred a public meeting without further delay to consider options other than the military action being taken against Iraq. France viewed the proposal as a good compromise. Following a debate on it, the proposal was adopted by 9 votes (Austria, Belgium, Côte d'Ivoire, France, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire) to 2 (Cuba, Yemen), with 4 abstentions (China, Ecuador, India, Zimbabwe).

Accordingly, the Council resumed its meeting in private from 14 to 16 and on 23 and 25 February and on 2 March. At their request, the President, under rule 37<sup>b</sup> of the provisional rules of

<sup>a</sup>Rule 48 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Unless it decides otherwise, the Security Council shall meet in public. Any recommendation to the General Assembly regarding the appointment of the Secretary-General shall be discussed and decided at a private meeting."

<sup>b</sup>Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as a result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

procedure, invited the following to participate in the discussion without the right to vote: Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, Germany, Greece, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kuwait, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Myanmar, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, South Africa, Spain, Sudan, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, United Arab Emirates, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

At the request of Egypt<sup>(25)</sup> and Belgium,<sup>(26)</sup> respectively, invitations were extended, under rule 39,<sup>c</sup> to the Permanent Observer of the Organization of the Islamic Conference to the United Nations and to a representative of the Commission of the European Economic Committee.

Cuba introduced three draft resolutions, on which the Council took no action: the first<sup>(27)</sup> would have had the Council establish an ad hoc committee of the whole Council to consider possible formulas for halting the armed actions in the Persian Gulf region and achieving a peaceful settlement of the conflict; the second, in its final revised form,<sup>(28)</sup> would have called for the immediate dispatch of a United Nations military observer mission to supervise the suspension of offensive combat operations and for a plan for the deployment of a peace-keeping force in the area; the third, also as finally revised,<sup>(29)</sup> would have called for diplomatic initiatives by the Secretary-General to re-establish peace and security in the region based on his 15 January statement to the press.

The States which spoke at each of the private sessions were listed in the Council's official communiqué approved and issued on 2 March,<sup>(30)</sup> which also listed the Secretary-General as having made a statement.

During the debate, Kuwait made clear its position with respect to the proposals and calls for a temporary partial or comprehensive cease-fire to give ongoing diplomatic efforts a chance to bear fruit: there should be no cease-fire before the complete liberation of Kuwait and before the restoration of its legitimate Government. To end the current situation, Iraq must inform the Secretary-General in writing of its acceptance of the 12 Council resolutions relating to the invasion and annexation of Kuwait. It must immediately and unconditionally withdraw from Kuwait in accordance with resolution 660(1990). Kuwait's legitimate authorities must be enabled to return immediately to Kuwait. Iraq must implement all the other resolutions immediately after the cease-fire, agree to an exchange of POWs of all nationalities, including Kuwaitis taken prisoner since 2 August 1990, arrange to locate the missing (Kuwait said it had a list of more than 8,000 Kuwaiti POWs and more than 20,000 missing), and pay full reparations to Kuwaitis and third-State nationals as specified by resolution 674(1990).<sup>(31)</sup> Iraq must abrogate all legislation concerning Kuwait's annexation as the nineteenth province of Iraq.

Kuwait called on the Council to demand that Iraq immediately cease its escalation of inhuman practices, including torture and murder, against the defenceless people of Kuwait, cease committing crimes against Kuwait's economy and environment by setting fire to its oil wells and installations, and cease destroying what was left of its social and economic infrastructure.

Iraq attributed the three-week delay in convening the Council after the meeting had first been requested to United States objections and claimed that resuming the meeting in private was aimed at denying some Member States the opportunity to unmask the crimes being perpetrated in the name of the Council against the people of Iraq. It said that since the crisis began, the Council had become an American instrument representing American interests and that the United States would continue its aggression even if the Council were to adopt a resolution on a cease-fire or on halting the rain of bombs on Iraq's defenceless civilians. It stated that in the first three weeks of the aggression against it, 45,000 sorties dropped 85,000 tons of explosives, destroying hospitals, schools, mosques and Iraq's cultural monuments and archaeological sites, nuclear and other industrial facilities for peaceful purposes, releasing radiation and other pollutants into the environment, killing many innocent civilians and perhaps causing deformities in future generations.

Iraq reiterated its readiness to deal on the basis of resolution 660(1990) with a view to reaching an honourable and acceptable political solution, including withdrawal from Kuwait, as announced by its Revolution Command Council on 15 February.<sup>(32)</sup> Iraq's readiness was linked, however, to a comprehensive cease-fire; to a retroactive annulment of the 11 resolutions<sup>(33)</sup> adopted after resolution 660(1990) and all the consequences to which they had given rise; to a withdrawal from the Middle East and Arabian Gulf regions of the forces cooperating with Kuwait; to Israel's withdrawal from Palestine, the occupied Arab territories, the Golan and Lebanon; to a guarantee of Iraq's full and undiminished historical territorial and maritime rights in any political solution; and to a political arrangement to be agreed upon based on the people's will in accordance with genuine democratic practice and not on the acquired privileges of the House of Al Sabah.

Iraq also informed the Council of its acceptance of and agreement to all the points of a USSR peace initiative that was the subject of Iraq-USSR talks held in Moscow on 18 February<sup>(34)</sup> and whose key element consisted of securing a rapid start of Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait so as to put an immediate end to the bloodshed. Accordingly, it had asked the USSR to exert efforts towards achieving a cease-fire resolution that would guarantee the complete and rapid implementation of resolution 660(1990), together with a guarantee of the safety of the withdrawing troops and respect for the cease-fire, after which the necessary measures would be considered and adopted in order to implement what could or should be implemented in the other resolutions.

Communications from Iraq. By letters of 27 February 1991, the date on which Kuwait was liberated, Iraq informed the Security Council President<sup>(35)</sup> and the Secretary-General<sup>(36)</sup> that, at dawn on that date (Baghdad time), all Iraqi forces had withdrawn from Kuwait, adding that the United States and pro-aggressor forces continued to attack the withdrawing Iraqi forces. Iraq earlier that day<sup>(37)</sup> had reaffirmed its agreement to comply fully with Council resolution 660(1990), stating that its armed forces had started to withdraw to the positions they were in prior to 1 August 1990; it had further given notice of its agreement to comply with resolutions 662(1990) (demanding rescission of Iraq's actions purporting to annex Kuwait) and 674(1990) (demanding that Iraq ensure the protection and well-being of Kuwaiti nationals and of third-State nationals in Kuwait and Iraq, including diplomatic and consular personnel, whose immediate departure from Kuwait and Iraq it should facilitate), provided the Council adopted a resolution calling for an immediate cease-fire and provided it deemed that resolutions 661(1990) (imposing mandatory sanctions against Iraq), 665(1990) (tightening those sanctions) and 670(1990) (tightening those sanctions, except for food for humanitarian purposes) were no longer in effect since the bases for their adoption no longer existed.

By identical letters of 28 February (Baghdad time), Iraq, through its Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs, officially informed the Council President<sup>(38)</sup> and the Secretary-General<sup>(39)</sup> of its agreement to comply fully with resolution 660(1990) and all the other Council resolutions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (2 March)

The Security Council, having received notification of momentous developments-the liberation of Kuwait, the suspension of hostilities and Iraq's agreement to comply with all of the Council resolutions-met on 2 March 1991 to consider a seven-nation draft resolution<sup>(40)</sup> aimed at the immediate consolidation of that de facto situation. At their request, Iraq, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia were invited to participate without the right to vote under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Following oral revisions of the draft by the United States, the Council voted by a show of hands on each of the amendments submitted by Cuba<sup>(41)</sup> in the order prescribed by rule 36.<sup>d</sup> Of the 18 amendments, 1 was not pressed to the vote; the remaining 17, having each failed to obtain the required number of votes, were not adopted.

The amendment proposing deletion of the words "and reaffirming" from the first preambular paragraph<sup>(42)</sup> received 2 votes (Cuba, Yemen) to 1 (Austria), with 12 abstentions (Belgium, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, France, India, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire, Zimbabwe). Two amendments proposing deletion of "Article 25 of" from the second preambular paragraph<sup>(43)</sup> and of the entire eighth preambular paragraph<sup>(44)</sup> received 1 vote (Cuba) to none, with 14 abstentions (Austria, Belgium, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, France, India, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Yemen, Zaire, Zimbabwe).

Nine amendments each received identical votes: 2 (Cuba, Yemen) to none, with 13 abstentions (Austria, Belgium, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, France, India, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire, Zimbabwe). Those amendments proposed: deleting the words "pursuant to resolution 678(1990)" from the fifth preambular paragraph,<sup>(45)</sup> the end of subparagraph 3 (d), starting from "in areas of . . .",<sup>(46)</sup> and paragraph 7;<sup>(47)</sup> replacing paragraph 1 by " Welcomes the restoration of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Kuwait";<sup>(48)</sup> inserting three operative paragraphs-to declare null and void all provisions of the pertinent Council resolutions regarding trade in foodstuffs and in all other products essential for the health and well-being of the Iraqi people,<sup>(49)</sup> to declare an immediate cease-fire<sup>(50)</sup> and to affirm Member States' obligation to respect the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq and Kuwait and to note the commitment of Member States cooperating with Kuwait under resolution 678(1990) to bring their military presence in Iraq to an end as soon as possible;<sup>(51)</sup> and replacing the chapeau in paragraph 2 with "Notes that Iraq has committed itself to:"<sup>(52)</sup> and in paragraph 3 with "Further notes that Iraq is fully willing to:"<sup>(53)</sup>

<sup>d</sup>Rule 36 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "If two or more amendments to a motion or draft resolution are proposed, the President shall rule on the order in which they are to be voted upon. Ordinarily, the Security Council shall first vote on the amendment furthest removed in substance from the original proposal and then on the amendment next furthest removed until all amendments have been put to the vote, but when an amendment adds to or deletes from the text of a motion or draft resolution, that amendment shall be voted on first."

The proposal to insert in subparagraph 3 (c) the words "and in conformity with Article 118 of the Third Geneva Convention of 1949" between the words "International Committee of the Red Cross" and "return the remains"<sup>(54)</sup> received 6 votes (Austria, Cuba, Ecuador, India, Yemen, Zimbabwe) to none, with 9 abstentions (Belgium, China, Côte d'Ivoire, France, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire). The proposal to delete paragraph 4<sup>(55)</sup> received 3 votes (China, Cuba, Yemen) to none, with 12 abstentions (Austria, Belgium, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, France, India, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire, Zimbabwe).

Two other operative paragraphs proposed-one to request the Secretary-General to draw up plans for the deployment of a United Nations peace-keeping force in the area,<sup>(56)</sup> and the other to request the United Nations system and other international organizations urgently to provide humanitarian assistance to Iraq and Kuwait<sup>(57)</sup>—received 5 votes (Cuba, Ecuador, India, Yemen, Zimbabwe) to none, with 10 abstentions (Austria, Belgium, China, Côte d'Ivoire, France, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire).

The proposal to replace the rest of the sixth preambular paragraph from "and the objective . . ." by "and the role that the United Nations has to play in restoring and maintaining international peace and security in the region"<sup>(58)</sup> received 4 votes (Cuba, Ecuador, India, Yemen) to none, with 11 abstentions (Austria, Belgium, China, Côte d'Ivoire, France, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire, Zimbabwe).

The proposal to request the immediate dispatch of a military observer mission<sup>(59)</sup> was not pressed to the vote, given its dependence on the amendment calling for an immediate cease-tire, which had not been adopted.

Having rejected all the proposed amendments, the Council adopted resolution 686(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolutions 660(1990) of 2 August 1990, 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, 662(1990) of 9 August 1990, 664(1990) of 18 August 1990, 665(1990) of 25 August 1990, 666(1990) of 13 September 1990, 667(1990) of 16 September 1990, 669(1990) of 24 September 1990, 670(1990) of 25 September 1990, 674(1990) of 29 October 1990, 677(1990) of 28 November 1990 and 678(1990) of 29 November 1990,

Underlining the importance of Iraq taking the necessary measures which would permit a definitive end to the hostilities,

Affirming the commitment of all Member States to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq and Kuwait, and noting the intention expressed by the Member States cooperating with Kuwait under paragraph 2 of resolution 678(1990) to bring their military presence in Iraq to an end as soon as possible consistent with achieving the objectives of the resolution,

Security Council resolution 686(1991)

2 March 1991

Meeting 2978

11-1-3

7-nation draft (S/22298), orally revised.

Sponsors: Belgium, France, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Austria, Belgium, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, France, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: Cuba.

Abstaining: China, India, Yemen.

Iraq on 3 March informed the Council President(60) and the Secretary-General(61) of its agreement to fulfil its obligations under resolution 686(1991). It observed that, despite the Council's awareness of the manner in which the United States forces and their partners had carried out resolution 678(1990) and of the resultant major losses suffered by Iraq, resolution 686(1991) had ignored the Iraqi people's suffering and imposed on Iraq alone a long series of obligations—a fact noted by a number of Council members.

Iraq stressed that its agreement to comply with resolution 686(1991) stemmed from its determination to eliminate any pretext for further aggression against it and for inflicting further harm on its people. It hoped the Council would adopt a resolution proclaiming an official cease-fire and cessation of all land, sea and air military operations, as well as the immediate withdrawal of foreign forces stationed without justification in various regions of Iraq. Consequent upon such a resolution, it also hoped for the Council's speedy nullification of resolutions 661(1990), 665(1990) and 670(1990).

Cease-fire

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (3 April)

The Security Council convened on 3 April 1991 to consider a nine-part draft resolution embodying the terms of a formal cease-fire. At their request, Iraq and Kuwait were invited to participate without the right to vote under rule 37<sup>b</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Kuwait referred to the draft text as historic, a shield to protect the region from the Baghdad regime and a lesson for any other regime that might be tempted to carry out such evils as Iraq had done. Kuwait called on the Council to deal decisively and with full effectiveness with all aspects and questions, underscoring what it called the question of Iraq's armaments and terrifying arsenal.

Summing up its position on the major provisions of the text, Iraq said it viewed the manner in which the question of boundaries had been addressed as an infringement on its sovereignty and territorial integrity and a contravention of resolution 660(1990), which called on the two parties to begin negotiations on their differences, the boundary question among them. To impose reparations on Iraq alone would only paralyse its capacity to rebuild its economy and keep its people from achieving a minimum standard of living for generations to come. To make Iraq, and not also Israel, destroy its weapons was inconsistent with the declared objective of restoring international peace and security in the region. To maintain the economic blockade despite Iraq's acceptance of all 13 Council resolutions would be in contravention of the Charter and could be regarded as economic aggression under the 1974 Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States(62) and human rights covenants.

Following statements by all 15 Council members, the Council adopted resolution 687(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 660(1990) of 2 August 1990, 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, 662(1990) of 9 August 1990, 664(1990) of 18 August 1990, 665(1990) of 25 August 1990, 666(1990) of 13 September 1990, 667(1990) of 16 September 1990, 669(1990) of 24 September 1990, 670(1990) of 25 September 1990, 674(1990) of 29 October 1990, 677(1990) of 28 November 1990, 678(1990) of 29 November 1990 and 686(1991) of 2 March 1991,

Welcoming the restoration to Kuwait of its sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity and the return of its legitimate Government,

Affirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Kuwait and Iraq, and noting the intention expressed by the Member States cooperating with Kuwait under paragraph 2 of resolution 678(1990) to bring their military presence in Iraq to an end as soon as possible consistent with paragraph 8 of resolution 686(1991),

Reaffirming the need to be assured of Iraq's peaceful intentions in the light of its unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait,

Taking note of the letter dated 27 February 1991 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq addressed to the President of the Security Council and of the letters dated 27 February 1991 from the Minister addressed to the President of the Security Council and to the Secretary-General, and taking note also of the letters from the Minister dated 3 March 1991 addressed to the President of the Security Council and to the Secretary-General and those dated 5 March 1991 addressed to the President of the Security Council and to the Secretary-General sent pursuant to resolution 686(1991),

Noting that Iraq and Kuwait, as independent sovereign States, signed at Baghdad on 4 October 1963 "Agreed Minutes between the State of Kuwait and the Republic of Iraq regarding the restoration of friendly relations, recognition and related matters", thereby recognizing formally the boundary between Iraq and Kuwait and the allocation of islands, which Agreed Minutes were registered with the United Nations in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations and in which Iraq recognized the independence and complete sovereignty of the State of Kuwait within its borders, as specified and accepted in the letter of the Prime Minister of Iraq dated 21 July 1932 and as accepted by the ruler of Kuwait in his letter dated 10 August 1932,

Conscious of the need for demarcation of the said boundary,

Conscious also of the statements by Iraq threatening to use weapons in violation of its obligations under the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and of its prior use of chemical weapons, and affirming that grave consequences would follow any further use by Iraq of such weapons,

Recalling that Iraq has subscribed to the Final Declaration adopted by all States participating in the Conference of States Parties to the 1925 Geneva Protocol and Other Interested States, held in Paris from 7 to 11 January 1989, establishing the objective of universal elimination of chemical and biological weapons,

Recalling also that Iraq has signed the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, of 10 April 1972, Noting the importance of Iraq ratifying this Convention,

Noting, moreover, the importance of all States adhering to the Convention and encouraging its forthcoming Third Review Conference to reinforce the authority, efficiency and universal scope of the Convention,

Stressing the importance of an early conclusion by the Conference on Disarmament of its work on a convention on the universal prohibition of chemical weapons and of universal adherence thereto,

Aware of the use by Iraq of ballistic missiles in unprovoked attacks and therefore of the need to take specific measures in regard to such missiles located in Iraq,

Concerned by the reports in the hands of Member States that Iraq has attempted to acquire materials for a nuclear-weapons programme contrary to its obligations under the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, of 1 July 1968,

Recalling the objective of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Conscious of the threat that all weapons of mass destruction pose to peace and security in the area and of the need to work towards the establishment in the Middle East of a zone free of such weapons,

Conscious also of the objective of achieving balanced and comprehensive control of armaments in the region,

Conscious further of the importance of achieving the objectives noted above using all available means, including a dialogue among the States of the region,

Noting that resolution 686(1991) marked the lifting of the measures imposed by resolution 661(1990) in so far as they applied to Kuwait,

Noting also that despite the progress being made in fulfilling the obligations of resolution 686(1991), many Kuwaiti and third-State nationals are still not accounted for and property remains unreturned,

Recalling the International Convention against the Taking of Hostages, opened for signature in New York on 17 December 1979, which categorizes all acts of taking hostages as manifestations of international terrorism,

Deploping threats made by Iraq during the recent conflict to make use of terrorism against targets outside Iraq, and the taking of hostages by Iraq,

Taking note with grave concern of the reports transmitted by the Secretary-General of 20 March 1991 and 28 March 1991, and conscious of the necessity to meet urgently the humanitarian needs in Kuwait and Iraq,

Bearing in mind its objective of restoring international peace and security in the area as set out in its recent resolutions,

Conscious of the need to take the following measures acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Affirms all thirteen resolutions noted above, except as expressly changed below to achieve the goals of this resolution, including a formal cease-fire;

A

2. Demands that Iraq and Kuwait respect the inviolability of the international boundary and the allocation of islands set out in the "Agreed Minutes between the State of Kuwait and the Republic of Iraq regarding the restoration of friendly relations, recognition and related matters", signed by them in the exercise of their sovereignty at Baghdad on 4 October 1963 and registered with the United Nations and published in the United Nations Treaty Series;

3. Calls upon the Secretary-General to lend his assistance to make arrangements with Iraq and Kuwait to demarcate the boundary between Iraq and Kuwait, drawing on appropriate material, including the map transmitted by Security Council document S/22412, and to report back to the Council within one month;

4. Decides to guarantee the inviolability of the above-mentioned international boundary and to take, as appropriate, all necessary measures to that end in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

B

5. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with Iraq and Kuwait, to submit within three days to the Security Council for its approval a plan for the immediate deployment of a United Nations observer unit to monitor the Khawr Abd Allah and a demilitarized zone, which is hereby established, extending ten kilometres into Iraq and five kilometres into Kuwait from the boundary referred to in the "Agreed Minutes between the State of Kuwait and the Republic of Iraq regarding the restoration of friendly relations, recognition and related matters"; to deter violations of the boundary through its presence in and surveillance of the demilitarized zone; and to observe any hostile or potentially hostile action mounted from the territory of one State into the other; and also requests the Secretary-General to report regularly to the Council on the operations of the unit, and immediately if there are serious violations of the zone or potential threats to peace;

6. Notes that as soon as the Secretary-General notifies the Security Council of the completion of the deployment of the United Nations observer unit, the conditions will be established for the Member States cooperating with Kuwait in accordance with resolution 678(1990) to bring their military presence in Iraq to an end consistent with resolution 686(1991);

7. Invites Iraq to reaffirm unconditionally its obligations under the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare and to ratify the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stock piling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction;

8. Decides that Iraq shall unconditionally accept the destruction, removal or rendering harmless, under international supervision, of:

(a) All chemical and biological weapons and all stocks of agents and all related subsystems and components and all research, development, support and manufacturing facilities;

(b) All ballistic missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres and related major parts, and repair and production facilities;

9. Decides also, for the implementation of paragraph 8 above, the following:

(a) Iraq shall submit to the Secretary-General, within fifteen days of the adoption of the present resolution, a declaration of the locations, amounts and types of all items specified in paragraph 8 and agree to urgent, on-site inspection as specified below;

(b) The Secretary-General, in consultation with the appropriate Governments and, where appropriate, with the Director-General of the World Health Organization, within forty-five days of the passage of the present resolution, shall develop, and submit to the Council for approval, a plan calling for the completion of the following acts within forty-five days of such approval:

(i) The forming of a Special Commission, which shall carry out immediate on-site inspection of Iraq's biological, chemical and missile capabilities, based on Iraq's declarations and the designation of any additional locations by the Special Commission itself;

(ii) The yielding by Iraq of possession to the Special Commission for destruction, removal or rendering harmless, taking into account the requirements of public safety, of all items specified under paragraph 8 (a) above, including items at the additional locations designated by the Special Commission under paragraph 9 (b) (i) above, and the destruction by Iraq, under the supervision of the Special Commission, of all its missile capabilities, including launchers, as specified under paragraph 8 (b) above;

(iii) The provision by the Special Commission of the assistance and cooperation to the Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency required in paragraphs 12 and 13 below;

10. Decides further that Iraq shall unconditionally undertake not to use, develop, construct or acquire any of the items specified in paragraphs 8 and 9 above and requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Special Commission, to develop a plan for the future ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with the present paragraph, to be submitted to the Security Council for approval within one hundred and twenty days of the passage of the present resolution;

11. Invites Iraq to reaffirm unconditionally its obligations under the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

12. Security Council resolution 687(1991)

3 April 1991

Meeting 2981

12-1-2

6-nation draft (S/22430 & Corr.1).

Sponsors: Belgium, France, Romania, United Kingdom United States, Zaire.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Austria, Belgium, China, Côte d'Ivoire, France, India, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: Cuba.

Abstaining: Ecuador, Yemen.

In accordance with the responsibilities entrusted to him by the resolution, the Secretary-General established an interdepartmental Coordinating Group(63) of nine senior United Nations officials, with the Secretary-General as Chairman, to supervise and direct the implementation of the various provisions of the resolution. The Chef de Cabinet would chair the meetings in the absence of the Secretary-General.

Iraq, by identical letters of 6 April 1991 to the Secretary-General and the Council President, (64) stated that it had no choice but to accept the resolution. In what it said were preliminary comments on the juridical and legal aspects of the resolution, Iraq variously characterized its provisions as biased, iniquitous and vengeful, an injustice, a severe assault on the Iraqi people's right to life and a flagrant denial of its inalienable rights to sovereignty and independence and to free choice.

Iraq asserted that boundary issues were the subject of agreement between States, the only basis capable of guaranteeing the stability of frontiers. It reiterated that the Agreed Minutes between the State of Kuwait and the Republic of Iraq regarding the restoration of friendly relations, recognition and related matters, referred to in paragraph 2, had not been subjected to the constitutional procedures required for its ratification by the legislative branch and Iraq's President, thus leaving the boundary question unresolved. Obliging Iraq to destroy its weapons could not but seriously endanger the regional balance; depriving it of the right to acquire weapons for defence directly contributed to the threat to its internal and external security.

Whereas the resolution provided mechanisms for obtaining redress from Iraq, it made no reference to Iraq's right to claim redress for the considerable losses it had sustained and the massive destruction inflicted on civilian installations and infrastructures as a result of the abusive implementation of resolution 678(1990). The progressive lifting of sanctions over an unspecified period left broad discretionary authority to certain Council members. The lack of an explicit mention of the withdrawal of foreign troops from Iraq despite the resolution's declaration of a formal cease-fire was tantamount to authorizing occupation of Iraqi territory in violation of Iraq's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity, unjustifiable by any provision of resolution 678(1990). The stipulation for the deployment of United Nations observer forces was inequitable, as were the numerous mechanisms for the resolution's implementation, which necessitated consultations, in which Iraq's participation was not at all clear.

The National Assembly of Iraq, at its session on 6 April, adopted a decision by which it agreed to resolution 687(1991).<sup>(65)</sup>

The Security Council President, by a letter of 11 April to the Permanent Representative of Iraq to the United Nations,<sup>(66)</sup> acknowledged Iraq's communication of 6 April, containing official notification of its acceptance, irrevocable and without qualifying conditions, of resolution 687(1991), in accordance with paragraph 33 of that resolution. The Council President pointed to the Permanent Representative's confirmation to him at their meeting on 8 April that the communication constituted Iraq's irrevocable and unqualified acceptance of the resolution; and to the further confirmation, in the name of the Iraqi Government! that the Revolution Command Council had used its constitutional powers to make the National Assembly's acceptance of the resolution legally binding in Iraq. Accordingly, the Council President noted that the conditions established in paragraph 33 of resolution 687(1991) had been met and that the formal cease-fire was therefore effective.

Kuwait, on 4 April,<sup>(67)</sup> informed the Secretary-General that it welcomed resolution 687(1991). It would scrupulously comply with its provisions and cooperate to ensure its implementation.

Iraq-Kuwait boundary

On 2 May 1991, the Secretary-General reported<sup>(68)</sup> on the arrangements which the Security Council had called on him to make for the demarcation of the boundary between Iraq and Kuwait, drawing on appropriate material, including the map transmitted by Council document S/22412 (resolution 687(1991), paragraph 3). In discharging that task, the Secretary-General took account of the Council demand that the two countries respect the inviolability of the international boundary and the allocation of islands set out in the Agreed Minutes between the State of Kuwait and the Republic of Iraq regarding the restoration of friendly relations, recognition and related matters, signed by them at Baghdad on 4 October 1963,<sup>(69)</sup> and the formal acceptance from Iraq<sup>(64)</sup> and Kuwait<sup>(67)</sup> of the provisions of resolution 687(1991).

The Secretary-General stated his intention, after consulting with Iraq and Kuwait, to create an Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission of one representative each of Iraq and Kuwait and three independent experts appointed by him, one to serve as Chairman. Its terms of reference would be to demarcate, in geographical coordinates of latitude and longitude, the international boundary set out in the Agreed Minutes and to arrange for the physical representation of the boundary. The coordinates established by the Commission would constitute the final demarcation of the international boundary between Iraq and Kuwait in accordance with the Agreed Minutes; they would be lodged in the archives of both Governments, with a certified copy to the Secretary-General for submission to the Council and safe-keeping in the United Nations archives.

The physical representation of the boundary would be carried out through the erection of an appropriate number and type of boundary pillars or monuments. The Commission would arrange for maintenance on a continuing basis and locational accuracy—including repositioning, if necessary—of the surf&l boundary representation. The costs involved should be shared by the two parties.

The Commission would be responsible to the Secretary-General and report regularly to him. It would adopt its own rules of procedure and working methods and would make decisions by majority. Its decisions regarding demarcation of the boundary would be final. The Commission should enjoy unimpeded freedom of movement in the area to be demarcated. The three independent experts should enjoy the status of experts on missions within the meaning of article VI of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.<sup>(70)</sup>

The Secretary-General annexed to his report a letter of 19 April from Kuwait indicating its acceptance of the terms set out in the report and its readiness to cooperate in implementing them, Iraq's comments of 23 April and his reply of 30 April.

Iraq reiterated that, in international law, a boundary demarcation between two States was a matter for agreement between them; the Council had no competence to impose such a demarcation. The map introduced without legal grounds in resolution 687(1991) was a prejudgement of the proposed demarcation. As Iraq would play no part in selecting the three experts, it would have no way of ensuring their independence so that its views would be represented by only one of live Commission members; it required an explanation of the terms "appropriate material", "appropriate technology" and "identification and examination of appropriate material relevant to the demarcation of the boundary"; finally, it objected to paying half of the costs of demarcation without any account being taken of its views on the boundary question.

In reply, the Secretary-General pointed to the formal acceptance by Iraq and Kuwait of resolution 687(1991) in its entirety, whose provisions included a demand on both to respect the inviolability of their international boundary and the allocation of islands as set out in the Agreed Minutes, as well as a stipulation that the demarcation should be based on appropriate material, including the map transmitted by Council document S/22412. He assured Iraq that he would base his appointment of the experts on the need to ensure independence, competence and integrity. He said it was for the Commission to examine and identify the documentation and the technology or combination of methods for use in the fulfilment of its mandate. Iraq's views would be made known through its participation in the Commission's work; it thus had no basis for objecting to paying its share of the costs.

The report was transmitted on 6 May(71) to the Council, which took note of it on 13 May.(72)

Demarcation Commission

The Secretary-General notified the Security Council President on 17 May(73) that the five-member Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission had been constituted, with Riyadh Al-Qaysi representing Iraq, Tariq A. Razouki representing Kuwait, and three independent experts—Mochtar Kusuma-Atmadja (Indonesia), as Chairman, Ian Brook (Sweden) and William Robertson (New Zealand). The Commission met in four sessions in 1991: in New York on 23 and 24 May; at Geneva from 2 to 12 July and from 12 to 16 August; and again in New York from 7 to 15 October. It surveyed and photographed boundary areas in September and November.

Iraq informed the Secretary-General of the constructive and cooperative participation of its representative in the work of the first session(74) and that it had taken no action to impede the Commission's activities in the boundary areas.(75)

UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

Report of the Secretary-General (April). Pursuant to the Security Council request for a plan for the immediate deployment of a United Nations observer unit to the demilitarized zone (DMZ) established by the Council along the boundary between Iraq and Kuwait (resolution 687(1991), paragraph 5), the Secretary-General submitted a proposal for such a unit on 5 April 1991,(76) to be called the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM). Its terms of reference would be: to monitor the 40-kilometre-long Khawr Abd Allah waterway and a DMZ 200 kilometres long and extending 10 kilometres into Iraq and 5 kilometres into Kuwait from the boundary referred to in the 1963 Agreed Minutes; to deter DMZ violations through surveillance; and to observe hostile or potentially hostile action mounted from the territory of one State to the other.

To be composed of military contingents provided by Member States at the Secretary-General's request, UNIKOM would be under United Nations command, vested in the Secretary-General, under the authority of the Council. Command in the field would be exercised by a Chief Military Observer, appointed by the Secretary-General with Council consent.

The plan described the Mission's requirements, including adequate financial arrangements, freedom of movement and communications and relevant privileges and immunities provided for by the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations;(70) certain considerations relevant to the discharge of its mandate; its area of operation—the Khawr Abd Allah waterway and the DMZ, uninhabited except for oilfields and the Iraqi towns of Umm Qasr and Safwan; and the concept of operation.

The Mission's initial strength would be a maximum of 1,440 all ranks, including five temporary infantry companies of 680, a field engineer unit of 300, an air unit and a logistic unit. Its headquarters would be located at Umm Qasr and a logistic base in Kuwait; liaison offices would be maintained at Baghdad and Kuwait City.

Preliminary estimates for the first six months of operation were approximately $83 million and $40 million for the following six months.(77) The costs would be considered a United Nations expense to be borne by Member States. Stressing that UNIKOM'S deployment depended largely on the availability of financial resources, the Secretary-General appealed to Member States for voluntary contributions in cash and in kind.

The Secretary-General indicated that Iraq and Kuwait had informed him of their acceptance of the plan on 8 and 9 April.(78)

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (9 April)

The Security Council, at a meeting on 9 April 1991, to which it invited Iraq and Kuwait to participate without vote under rule 37<sup>b</sup> of its provisional rules of procedure, considered the Secretary-General's report and unanimously adopted resolution 689(1991).

The Security Council

Recalling its resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 5 April 1991 on the implementation of paragraph 5 of Security Council resolution 687(1991) and the addenda thereto of 5 and 9 April 1991;

2. Notes that the decision to set up the observer unit was taken in paragraph 5 of resolution 687(1991) and can only be terminated by a decision of the Council; the Council shall therefore review the question of termination or continuation every six months;

3. Decides that the modalities for the initial six-month period of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission shall be in accordance with the above-mentioned report and shall also be reviewed every six months.

Security Council resolution 689(1991)

9 April 1991 Meeting 2983 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/22470).

On 10 April,(79) Kuwait assured the Secretary-General of its full cooperation towards the successful fulfilment of UNIKOM'S tasks.

Also on 10 April,(80) the Council agreed to the Secretary-General's proposal(18) to appoint Major-General Günther Greindl (Austria) as Chief Military Observer. It also agreed, on 12 April,(82) to his proposal(83) that UNIKOM be composed of contingents from Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, Chile, China, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Kenya, Malaysia, Nepal, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Senegal, Singapore, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States, Uruguay and Venezuela.

Reports of the Secretary-General (May-October). The Secretary-General reported on 9 May 1991<sup>(84)</sup> that the advance party of UNIKOM had established liaison with the authorities in Kuwait and Iraq on 13 and 15 April. By the reporting date, it had organized the DMZ into three operational sectors-north, centre and south-had established five observation posts in each, had deployed 285 military observers, and had brought its strength to 1,385, including, in addition to the observers, five companies of 544 infantrymen, temporarily assigned from existing peace-keeping missions, to provide essential security, and various administrative and logistic support units comprising 556 personnel.

The Mission had monitored the withdrawal of armed forces deployed in its assigned zone. The withdrawal having been completed, the DMZ designated by the Security Council came into effect at 2000 hours (Greenwich mean time) on 9 May, and UNIKOM assumed in full the observation responsibilities entrusted to it by the Council.

In a progress report of 12 June,<sup>(85)</sup> the Secretary-General noted that UNIKOM had reached its full complement of 299 military observers (including five on temporary assignment) and expected shortly to occupy its headquarters at Umm Qasr. He said the situation in the DMZ was calm but that UNIKOM had observed, and had brought to the attention of the parties concerned, incursions into the DMZ by Iraqi, Kuwaiti and Saudi Arabian military personnel, and military aircraft overflying the Iraq-Kuwait border. UNIKOM had received and investigated three allegations from Iraq and two from Kuwait of violations of DMZ rules.

In an interim report of 3 September,<sup>(86)</sup> the Secretary-General summarized violations observed by UNIKOM: armed and unarmed incursions of one party's military personnel into the other party's side of the DMZ, police armed with more than the side-arms permitted, and military aircraft of the type used by forces allied with Kuwait overflying the zone. Of the several shooting incidents recorded, one was reported to have occurred in and around Kuwait's Bubiyan Island, following which the Kuwaiti Coast Guard detachment, which had first been fired upon, took into custody 11 Iraqi fishing boats and a speedboat and their crew of 45; UNIKOM could not confirm the circumstances surrounding the incident.

The Secretary-General noted several developments that posed certain problems: the appearance along the border area of a sheep market that was also trading arms and alcohol, and of groups of civilian Iraqis collecting weapons, ammunition and other military items on the Kuwaiti side of the zone; and Iraq's deployment of police posts along the boundary line, two on its side of the line but closer than the required reasonable distance of 1,000 metres and five on the Kuwaiti side. Despite UNIKOM efforts to have the posts pulled back, Iraq maintained that they had been in place before 2 August 1990; so as not to prejudice its position on the boundary question, it would comply once the Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission created by resolution 687(1991) had settled the question.

On 2 October,<sup>(87)</sup> the Secretary-General reviewed UNIKOM activities from its inception on 9 April to 2 October and recommended that, in the circumstances prevailing in its deployment area, UNIKOM should be extended for a further six months.

He noted that, during the first six months, UNIKOM had discharged its mandate with the cooperation of the parties. The DMZ had been generally respected and the situation there had been calm. Violations from incursions by military personnel into the DMZ had become fewer and continued to decrease. The main source of friction and concern to Kuwait had been the crossings into that country from Iraq across a border that remained to be demarcated: by bedouins, by suppliers and customers of the illegal sheep market, and by groups of civilians in search of weapons and ammunition, including mines and unexploded ordnance.

The crossings, which had given rise to violent incidents when high-calibre weapons were involved, were law-and-order cases with which the police were not properly armed to deal. On the repeated representations of UNIKOM, Iraq had instructed its police to prevent weapons-collecting, had begun complying with the notification requirement prior to moving ships through the Khawr Abd Allah waterway, but maintained its position on the border posts it was being asked to pull back. Also through UNIKOM efforts, Iraq had returned 4 of 15 HY-2G missiles it had removed from storage at Umm Qasr, but not the other 11. Kuwait, which had established five police posts and one police observation point in the DMZ, reiterated its willingness to comply with the reasonable distance principle if Iraq did the same.

In an addendum dated 4 October,<sup>(88)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that, despite instructions to the Iraqi police to halt weapons-collecting, 60 Iraqi civilians with 8 trucks and 40 pick-up vehicles were engaged in such activity on 2 October, mostly on the Kuwaiti side of the DMZ, as was another group of 50, with 13 trucks and 9 pick-up vehicles on 4 October.

A later addendum, dated 15 October,(89) noted that, as a result of discussions between the Chief Military Observer and Iraqi authorities on the question of weapons- and mine-collecting and of pulling back the Iraqi border police posts from the Kuwaiti side of the boundary line, no mine-collecting had been observed since 11 October; however, Iraq reiterated that it would maintain the posts pending a decision by the Demarcation Commission, stating it had in the meantime ordered its border police to avoid any clashes.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (7 October)

The President of the Security Council, on 7 October 1991,(90) stated that, in the light of the Secretary-General's report of 2 October, the Council held informal consultations on 7 October to review the question of termination or continuation of UNIKOM, as well as its modalities, and concurred with the recommendation that UNIKOM be extended for a further six months, to 8 April 1992.

Composition

As a result of adjustments, including the departure of five military observers and five infantry companies on temporary assignment in the DMZ, UNIKOM had a total strength of 736 all ranks as at the beginning of October 1991.(87) That total comprised 295 military observers from 33 countries (Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, China, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Kenya, Malaysia, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Senegal, Singapore, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela) and 441 administrative and logistics personnel-engineer (292), logistics (30), movement control (19), helicopter (50) and medical (50) units.

The civilian staff numbered 177 (106 United Nations personnel and 71 local recruits). Two small fixed-wing aircraft were contributed by Switzerland and operated by civilians. While free airlift had been provided by Sweden at the beginning of the mission, aircraft were currently chartered to move troops and equipment between Baghdad and Kuwait.

In view of the level of incidents along the Iraq-Kuwait border, the Secretary-General decided for the time being,(91) with the Security Council's agreement,(92) to postpone certain adjustments he had proposed earlier.(93)

Financing

On 23 April 1991,(94) the Secretary-General requested inclusion in the agenda of the forty-fifth (1990) General Assembly session of an additional item of an important and urgent character, entitled "Financing of the activities arising from Security Council resolution 687(1991): (a) United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission; (b) Other activities", and requested its allocation to the Fifth Committee. Accompanying the request was the Secretary-General's report on the estimated costs for the Mission's operations for two six-month periods: 9 April-8 October 1991 and 9 October 1991-8 April 1992.

The Assembly waived the required General Committee consideration of the request owing to its urgency and included the item in the agenda of its 1990 session (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

Report of the Secretary-General (April). In the report accompanying his request,(95) the Secretary-General submitted the requirements for UNIKOM for the six months from its inception on 9 April to 8 October 1991, estimated at full cost in the amount of $75,152,600 gross ($74,175,600 net). He noted in this connection that he had already entered into commitments of $900,000 by authority granted to him under an Assembly resolution of 1989 on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses(96) for the Mission's immediate emplacement.

The Secretary-General recalled his previous recommendation that the costs of the Mission should be considered an expense of the Organization to be borne by Member States and recommended setting up a special account for the Mission's financial arrangements.

In its analysis of the estimates,(97) ACABQ pointed to a number of elements or factors that could be provided free of charge, including contributions in kind, but not taken into account in the estimates. To realize further reductions, it asked the Secretary-General to ascertain whether the host Governments could make other items available free of charge or at rates lower than had been estimated and to recast still other items at existing market prices. In the circumstances, ACABQ recommended a total appropriation not to exceed $60,977,000 gross ($60 million net) and that the Secretary-General be permitted the usual flexibility to transfer credits between items of expenditure.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/260 on 3 May 1991.

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The General Assembly.

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 689(1991) of 9 April 1991, by which the Council decided to set up the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and to review the question of its termination or continuation every six months,

Recognizing that the costs of the Observation Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observation Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking it account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Observation Mission by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observation Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Concurs with the observations, recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission in full and on time;

3. Decides to appropriate an amount of 60,977,000 United States dollars (gross), inclusive of the amount of 900,000 dollars authorized by the Secretary-General and the amount of 5.9 million dollars authorized with the concurrence of the Advisory Committee under the terms of General Assembly resolution 44/203 of 21 December 1989, for the operation of the Observation Mission from 9 April to 8 October 1991, inclusive, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Observation Mission;

4. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 60,977,000 dollars referred to in paragraph 3 of the present resolution among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

5. Decides further that Liechtenstein shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (b) of General Assembly resolution 43/232;

6. Decides that Namibia shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (d) of General Assembly resolution 43/232;

7. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 4 of the present resolution, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 977,000 dollars approved for the period from 9 April to 8 October 1991, inclusive;

8. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observation Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/192 A of 21 December 1989;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observation Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Financing of the activities arising from Security Council resolution 687(1991)".

3 May 1991 Meeting 74 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/45/1006) without vote, 2 May (meeting 56); draft by chairman (A/C.5/45/L.28); agenda item 156 (a).

Report of the Secretary-General (December). Following Security Council approval of the extension of UNIKOM's mandate for a further six months to 8 April 1992,(90) the Secretary-General submitted a second report on the financing of UNIKOM on 6 December 1991.(98)

He noted that, for the first six months of UNIKOM operations, from 9 April to 8 October 1991, assessments of $60,296,777 had been apportioned among Member States, of which $39,612,584 had been received, leaving $20,684,193 unpaid as at 30 November 1991. He further noted an unencumbered balance of $5,157,800 in respect of that period, which he recommended for retention in the UNIKOM Special Account in view of the outstanding assessed contributions.

Costs for the next 12 months, from 9 October 1991 to 8 October 1992, were estimated at $72,382,200 gross ($70,480,200 net), or $6,031,850 gross ($5,873,350 net) a month. The Secretary-General accordingly requested an appropriation in the amount of $36,191,100 gross ($35,240,100 net) for the six-month mandate period ending 8 April 1992, and provision by appropriation and/or commitment authorization in those amounts should UNIKOM be extended beyond that date.

In line with the experience of the first mandate period, ACABQ(99) felt that savings might be realized under a variety of objects. It thus recommended a reduced appropriation of $33.6 million gross for 9 October 1991-8 April 1992, and, for the six-month period beginning 9 April 1992, commitment authority up to the level of $5.6 million a month. The Fifth Committee approved those recommendations on 13 December 1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1991, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/197.

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 687(1991) and 689(1991) of 3 and 9 April 1991, respectively, by which the Council decided to set up the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and to review the question of its termination or continuation every six months,

Recalling its resolution 45/260 of 3 May 1991 on the financing of the Observation Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observation Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decision regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observation Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation, lutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989 and 45/260, the scale of assessments for the year 1991 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 15,423,000 dollars gross, which is the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1991, and the scale of assessments for the year 1992 to be applied against the balance, that is, 18,177,000 dollars gross, for the period from 1 January to 8 April 1992, inclusive;

5. 13. Decides also that, in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the contributions to the Observation Mission until 8 October 1991 of the Member States referred to in paragraphs 6 to 12 above shall be treated as miscellaneous income to be set off against the apportionments authorized in paragraph 4 above;

14. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the Observation Mission at a rate not to exceed 5.6 million dollars gross (5,441,500 dollars net) per month, subject to the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, for the period from 9 April to 8 October 1992, inclusive, should the Security Council decide to continue the Observation Mission beyond 8 April 1992, the said amounts to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

On-site inspections

Activities of the Secretary-General. On 18 April 1991, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a plan<sup>(100)</sup> for the creation of a Special Commission to carry out immediate on-site inspection of Iraq's biological, chemical and missile capabilities, based on Iraq's declarations and on additional sites designated by the Special Commission itself. The plan, which was called for by the Council (resolution 687(1991), paragraph 9 (b) (i)), was approved the following day. <sup>(101)</sup>

The Special Commission was to have a membership of 20 to 25, including an Executive Chairman, a Deputy Executive Chairman, and five small groups of experts in nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and ballistic missiles, and in monitoring and verification of compliance. Technical experts to assist the Commission-inspectors, ordnance disposal teams and field support officers-would be either specially engaged or made available by Member States; they were expected to number in the several hundreds.

Execution of the baseline field inspections and the subsequent implementation plan was predicated on the assumption of full Iraqi cooperation. The Special Commission would enjoy the relevant privileges and immunities provided for in the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.<sup>(70)</sup> Experts and other specialists attached to the Commission would be regarded as experts on mission within the meaning of relevant annexes to the 1947 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies<sup>(102)</sup> and article VII of the 1959 Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Atomic Energy Agency, respectively. Supplementary agreements would be concluded if and as required.

Pending submission of comprehensive cost estimates, the Secretary-General would set the plan in motion on the assumption that Member States would pay the salaries of their nationals serving on or assisting the Commission, while the United Nations would pay travel and subsistence costs. The inspections would be carried out in the shortest possible time. The number of Commission members and technical experts would decrease progressively as the various operations were completed.

Within a month, 21 experts had been appointed to the Commission, with Rolf Ekéus (Sweden) as Executive Chairman and Robert Gallucci (United States) as Deputy Executive Chairman. The Commission set up headquarters in New York. A field operations office in Bahrain and a support office in Baghdad were in the process of being established.

On 17 May,<sup>(103)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a plan for implementing the immediate on-site inspections and for the destruction, removal or rendering harmless of the types of weapons and related facilities as specified by the Council (resolution 687 (1991), paragraphs 9 (b) and 10). Developed in consultation with appropriate Governments and with the Directors-General of IAEA and the World Health Organization, the plan involved a three-stage implementation procedure.

The first stage, considered crucial to the entire operation, was the gathering of information necessary to make an informed assessment of Iraq's nuclear, chemical, biological and ballistic-missile capabilities. Based on data provided so far by Iraq and on additional locations designated by the Special Commission, on-site inspections had been initiated. For safe access, experts in explosive-ordnance disposal, construction engineers and security personnel had been engaged to assist the Special Commission and IAEA. The volume of work, the state of the objects of inspection and safety concerns made it difficult to determine the exact time-frame for the first stage.

The second stage concerned the disposal of the four categories of weapons and related items and facilities. Nuclear-weapons-usable (direct-use) material and all other relevant materials would be removed and disposed of by IAEA with Special Commission assistance. Chemical weapons, which posed safety and environmental hazards, required safe-destruction techniques, operable within stringent time-frames, such as neutralization and/or incineration. Biological warfare agents could be destroyed through standard laboratory equipment or special mobile units. The disposal of ballistic missiles was largely a mechanical operation to be done in situ, concomitantly with on-site inspection; items not immediately disposable would be secured, sealed and documented for later disposal; warheads and fuel might be moved to a special location for destruction.

The third stage, monitoring and verification of compliance, was a long-term operation. Verification could be on short notice; it would involve full on-site inspections of military bases, production and storage facilities, and laboratories and other research installations. The frequency of inspection would vary according to the category of weapons, to previous inspection findings and to Iraq's clear demonstration of compliance.

The Special Commission would prepare detailed plans for field operations in Iraq in respect of all categories of weapons, including the composition of the expert teams and their movements. The teams would assemble for briefing in Bahrain and move by dedicated aircraft to Baghdad or other point of entry in Iraq. They would leave the area via Bahrain after debriefing and initial analysis of samples or data collected in Iraq.

Also on 17 May,(104) the Secretary-General submitted to the Council the IAEA plan for the destruction, removal and rendering harmless of nuclear weapons or direct-use material and related research, development, support or manufacturing facilities (resolution 687(1991), paragraph 12).

As direct-use material could not be destroyed or rendered harmless in Iraq, the plan called for IAEA to take exclusive control of the material for custody and removal. A complex and costly decommissioning operation was required to make accessible the irradiated fuel assemblies for the IRT-5000 nuclear research reactor, currently buried under the rubble of the reactor building at the Al-Tuwaitha site. Negotiations were under way with countries possessing the technology for the transportation and storage of direct-use material to ascertain their willingness to receive the material.

Identification of research, development, support or manufacturing facilities and materials relevant to reprocessing of irradiated fuel and isotopic enrichment of uranium would be given priority, as they were capable of producing direct-use material.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (17 June)

The Security Council met on 17 June 1991. At its request, Iraq was invited to participate without vote under rule 37<sup>b</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Having heard a statement by Iraq on the status of its compliance with resolution 687(1991), section C in particular calling for the destruction of weapons of mass destruction, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 699(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 17 May 1991, submitted to it in pursuance of paragraph 9 (b) of resolution 687(1991),

Also taking note of the Secretary-General's note of 17 May 1991, transmitting to the Council the letter addressed to him under paragraph 13 of the resolution by the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Approves the plan contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Confirms that the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency have the authority to conduct activities under section C of resolution 687(1991), for the purpose of the destruction, removal or rendering harmless of the items specified in paragraphs 8 and 12 of that resolution, after the 45-day period following the approval of this plan until such activities have been completed;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Security Council progress reports on the implementation of the plan referred to in paragraph 1 every six months after the adoption of this resolution;

4. Decides to encourage the maximum assistance, in cash and in kind, from all Member States to ensure that activities under section C of resolution 687(1991) are undertaken effectively and expeditiously; further decides, however, that the Government of Iraq shall be liable for the full costs of carrying out the tasks authorized by section C; and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council within 30 days for approval recommendations as to the most effective means by which Iraq's obligations in this respect may be fulfilled.

Security Council resolution 699(1991)

17 June 1991 Meeting 2994 Adopted unanimously

4-nation draft (S/22686).

Sponsors: France, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Iraq, referring to the draft text on 9 June,(105) recalled its absolute readiness to cooperate and desire not to pose obstacles to the implementation of section C of resolution 687(1991), as communicated to the Secretary-General on 18 April, to IAEA on 27 April and to the Special Commission on 19 and 22 May. It thus rejected that provision of the text making Iraq liable for the full costs of carrying out the tasks authorized by section C. To reduce costs, implementation time and danger to the inspection teams, Iraq proposed voluntarily to destroy or render harmless the weapons specified, since it had at its disposal the necessary expertise and technical facilities to achieve the desired objective under United Nations supervision.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Security Council, the Secretary-General, on 15 July 1991, submitted recommendations(106) on the most effective means by which Iraq might fulfil its obligations as set out in paragraph 4 of resolution 699(1991), which was contingent on the availability of funds and on specific arrangements to ensure the channelling of necessary resources to the United Nations.

On the assumption that the Council did not envisage using Iraq's frozen assets held in third countries, the Secretary-General considered the sale of some Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products as the most obvious way of obtaining funds for the purpose. The net proceeds would be deposited in a United Nations account to be used to reimburse the costs of carrying out the tasks authorized under section C of resolution 687(1991). This would reduce the resources available for the United Nations Compensation Fund (see below) and for the Iraqi Government; it would also necessitate lifting the sanctions imposed on Iraq by Council resolution 661(1990)(20) for a limited period and under clearly defined conditions. It might be necessary to repeat the process in the light of the ultimate costs to be reimbursed.

The Secretary-General stated that, in reply to his request for information as to how Iraq planned to meet its obligations under paragraph 4 of resolution 699(1991), Iraq on 7 July reiterated its offer to destroy its weapons systems so as to reduce not only the costs but also the time and risks involved. That offer was under consideration by the Special Commission. In addition, Member States had made voluntary contributions of $2 million as at 15 July.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (26 and 28 June)

The Security Council met on 26 June 1991 to consider information it received that day from the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission(107) that, on 23 and 25 June, Iraqi authorities denied an IAEA/Special Commission nuclear inspection team, headed by the Deputy Executive Chairman and IAEA Chief Inspector Maurizio Zifferero, access to facilities within the Abu Gharaib Army Barracks (west of the Baghdad international airport), designated for urgent inspection by the Special Commission. When finally allowed access on 26 June, the team found no trace of either the activities involving cranes, forklifts and trucks, or the objects it had observed from a distance while awaiting entry.

Seven Council members, speaking on the matter, viewed with grave concern and deplored Iraq's obstruction of the inspection teams and its evident attempts to conceal equipment and other objects that it was required to open to inspection. They demanded Iraq's full compliance with the provisions of resolution 687(1991), particularly those applicable in this instance.

Maintaining that its position was one of cooperation, Iraq explained that the inspection requested fell on an official holiday so that the team was asked to postpone its visit, that it was a well-known practice of all countries that military sites could not be visited without approval through normal procedures, and that obtaining the necessary permission was unavoidably delayed because of the destruction of Iraq's entire communications system.

The Council, which had adjourned for informal consultations, resumed consideration of the incident on 28 June, when it had before it further information from the Executive Chairman that, earlier that day, the Iraqi military had denied another IAEA/Special Commission inspection team, under Acting Chief Inspector David Kay, immediate access to a transportation facility east of Fal-lujah;(108) that while awaiting permission to enter, the team observed vehicles within the compound, loaded with objects that it had specifically wanted to inspect, leaving through an exit to the south; and that when the team went to photograph the vehicle movements, the military fired small arms into the air.

Meeting numbers. SC 2995, 2996.

At the resumed meeting, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement:(109)

"The members of the Security Council have learned with grave concern of an incident which occurred today when the Iraqi military authorities denied a joint International Atomic Energy Agency/Special Commission nuclear inspection team immediate and unimpeded access to a site designated for inspection by the Special Commission under paragraphs 9 and 13 of Security Council resolution 687(1991). In the course of this incident, the Iraqi military did not comply with a request by the Acting Chief Inspector that there should be no movement of transport or equipment pending inspection. The Iraqi military fired small arms into the air when members of the team were endeavouring to photograph loaded vehicles leaving the site. This incident followed earlier incidents on 23 and 25 June 1991 when the Iraqi military authorities denied the nuclear inspection team access to certain facilities at another designated site.

"On 26 June 1991, the Security Council held a meeting to consider the incidents of 23 and 25 June at which time the Permanent Representative of Iraq confirmed that Iraq had accepted Security Council resolution 687(1991) and was doing its best to implement all the requirements and obligations imposed on it by the resolution. He further asserted that Iraq was cooperating with all United Nations missions, including the Special Commission. The President subsequently conveyed the Council's serious concern regarding the incidents to the Government of Iraq.

"The members of the Council strongly deplore the incidents of 23, 25 and 28 June, and in this connection condemn the conduct of the Iraqi authorities. All these incidents constitute flagrant violations of Security Council resolution 687(1991) and of the undertakings contained in the exchange of letters between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Foreign Minister of Iraq governing the status, privileges and immunities of the Special Commission and of the inspection teams mandated under the Security Council resolution. Furthermore, these incidents demonstrate Iraq's failure to abide by its solemn undertakings to comply with all the provisions of Security Council resolution 687(1991).

"The members of the Security Council have decided to ask the Secretary-General to send a high-level mission to Baghdad immediately to meet with the highest levels of the Iraqi Government to convey the Council's urgent demand for unequivocal assurances that the Government will take all necessary measures to ensure that no hindrances are placed in the way of the discharge of the Special Commission's mandate and that it will accord full cooperation, including immediate and unimpeded access, to the inspection teams in compliance with Iraq's obligations and commitments vis-à-vis the United Nations and the International Atomic Energy Agency. The members of the Council have also stressed that the Government must furnish the high-level mission with unconditional guarantees for the safety and security of all personnel engaged in the performance of functions in connection with Security Council resolution 687(1991). The mission, composed of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency, the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission and the Under-Secretary-General for Disarmament Affairs, will depart New York this evening, 28 June 1991.

"At this time, the members of the Council call upon Iraq to grant the International Atomic Energy Agency/Special Commission nuclear inspection team currently in Iraq immediate and unimpeded access to the objects which the team had endeavoured to inspect on 28 June 1991 and any other site deemed necessary.

"The members of the Security Council request the high-level mission to report to it at the earliest opportunity, through the Secretary-General, on the results of its meetings with the highest levels of the Iraqi Government and, in particular, on such further undertakings by the Government to ensure compliance at all levels, including local military and civilian authorities, with Iraq's obligations under Security Council resolution 687(1991).

"The members of the Council wish to make it clear that the Council remains seized of this matter and that any recurrence of non-compliance would have serious consequences.

"The members of the Council reiterate their views expressed in resolution 687(1991) of the threat that all weapons of mass destruction pose to peace and security in the Middle East and of the need to work towards the establishment in the Middle East of a zone free of such weapons."

Replying, also on 28 June,(110) Iraq reiterated the difficulties of obtaining clearances for inspection during a religious holiday of places not under the responsibility of those to whom the request was addressed. It drew attention to the preponderance of United States nationals on the team—6 out of 10—adding that IAEA inspectors of various nationalities might carry out the inspections. Iraq's President, having been apprised of the reports coming from the Council, had authorized its Foreign Ministry to order all authorities from whom United Nations representatives might request permission for scrutiny or inspection to grant permission without hesitation.

High-level mission

The high-level mission, constituted according to the statement by the Security Council President on 28 June 1991, was composed of Hans Blix, Director General of IAEA; Rolf Ekéus, Executive Chairman of the Special Commission; and Yasushi Akashi, United Nations Under-Secretary-General for Disarmament Affairs. It was assisted by a team of experts, one from IAEA and two from the Special Commission. The mission visited Baghdad from 30 June to 3 July. Its report,(111) conveyed on 4 July to the Secretary-General at Geneva, was transmitted to the Council the same day.

The mission met with Iraq's Prime Minister, Deputy Prime Minister, Minister for Foreign Affairs and Minister of Defence, as well as with the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission of Iraq (AEC). It conveyed the Council's urgent demand that Iraq place no hindrances in the way of the Special Commission's functioning and that it accord full cooperation to the inspection teams sent to Iraq by the Special Commission and IAEA, including immediate and unimpeded access to sites declared or designated under paragraphs 9 and 13 of Council resolution 687(1991); sought unconditional guarantees for the safety and security of all personnel engaged in functions called for by the resolution; and sought information on measures by Iraq to ensure compliance at all levels, including civilian and military authorities, with its obligations under the resolution.

The Iraqi officials reiterated their President's assurances that he had ordered all concerned to extend to the United Nations representatives full cooperation as requested and that Iraq had abandoned all activities that might be in contravention of resolution 687(1991). They further gave assurances that Iraq would not hinder the activities of the inspection teams, would accord them, besides immediate and unimpeded access, the right to stop and inspect moving vehicles, and would ensure their safety and security; that orders had been issued to implement those assurances; that the Foreign Ministry had been authorized to issue directives related to compliance with Special Commission and IAEA requests under resolution 687(1991); and that a military liaison officer, assigned to that Ministry, had been authorized to grant access to any military site or installation.

As to granting the nuclear inspection team currently in Iraq immediate access to the objects that it had endeavoured to inspect on 23, 25 and 28 June—insisted upon by the mission—the Iraqi officials explained that AEC equipment and material, of which some had been at the Fallujah site, had been transferred to the Ministry of Defence for destruction as items possibly in contravention of resolution 687(1991) or redistribution to the civilian reconstruction programme. The mission stated that if Iraq's interpretation of resolution 687(1991) excluded research facilities for uranium enrichment or plutonium separation, an additional declaration would be needed to include items such as centrifuges, calutrons, and facilities for production of uranium tetrachloride or uranium hexafluoride. The mission was categorically informed that Iraq had no uranium-enrichment programme.

In response to Iraq's reiteration of the factors that had contributed to the incidents of 23, 25 and 28 June, and of its reservation on the composition of one of the teams, the mission observed that: it was a common feature of verification under modern arms-control agreements that inspections might take place at any time when there was reason to believe that otherwise the purposes of the inspection might be frustrated; despite the fact that 23 June was a religious holiday, considerable activity had been observed within the designated inspection site; the composition of the nuclear inspection team was restricted by the fact that availability of expertise in the nuclear-weapons and related fields was largely limited to the five nuclear-weapon States, and it was agreed that team selection was the sole prerogative of the Special Commission and IAEA.

The mission concluded that, despite their unambiguous character, the general assurances given and the specific measures promised could be evaluated only in the light of current and future implementation by Iraqi authorities; the Iraqi response to the request for access to the objects which the inspection team had endeavoured to inspect on 28 June fell short of what had been called for by the Council.

Activities of the Secretary-General. At the request of the Security Council, the Secretary-General dispatched the report of the high-level mission to Iraq and met with the Permanent Representative of Iraq to the United Nations Office at Geneva to request him immediately to transmit an informal paper, dated 4 July,<sup>(112)</sup> to the President of Iraq.

Noting that the mission deemed unsatisfactory Iraq's response to the request for access to the objects that the nuclear inspection team had observed on a long convoy of trucks and had endeavoured to inspect on 28 June, the paper stated that only a full demonstration of all those objects and their scrutiny by a nuclear inspection team would be satisfactory. It further stated that full explanations about the nuclear activities and equipment that Iraq had deemed to be in contravention of resolution 687(1991) were imperative, as was inspection of the said equipment and related facilities—destroyed or not.

The Secretary-General transmitted the text of the paper to the Security Council President, together with Iraq's response of 5 July that it would provide a list of the items sought, by 7 or 8 July, for study by the inspection team.

IAEA action. On 18 July 1991, the Board of Governors of IAEA, finding Iraq not in compliance with its obligations under its safeguards agreement with the Agency concluded pursuant to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,<sup>(113)</sup> adopted a resolution on the subject by 29 votes to 1, with 3 abstentions.<sup>(114)</sup> The action was based on a report by the IAEA Director General concerning Iraq's failure to provide information on certain nuclear materials as required by the agreement.

By the resolution, the Board condemned Iraq for its non-compliance and decided to bring it to the attention of IAEA members, the Security Council and the General Assembly. The Board called on Iraq to place forthwith under Agency safeguards any and all additional source and special fissionable material within its territory, under its jurisdiction or its control, regardless of quantity or location, and to cease all obstruction or interference with the IAEA inspection teams.

According to Iraq's official position, conveyed to the Secretary-General on 23 July,<sup>(115)</sup> the resolution was hasty, unjust and unbalanced. Iraq had provided the required information on 7 July, which could be treated as constituting a corrective measure in accordance with the relevant provision of the safeguards agreement; the materials declared had been subjected to scrutiny by the third inspection team (see below); and IAEA did not apply to Iraq the same criteria that it had applied in previous cases, specifically Luxembourg's export to Israel in 1984 of 41 tons of depleted uranium without due notification to the Agency. The three inspection teams that had visited Iraq had received full cooperation, as confirmed by the third team; the reasons for the confusion encountered by the second team had been amply explained to the Council and to the high-level mission, which acknowledged Iraq's assurances of cooperation.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council convened on 15 August 1991, when it unanimously adopted resolution 707(1991). The resolution was based on information from the Special Commission, IAEA and the high-level mission regarding Iraq's actions in violation of resolution 687(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 687(1991), and its other resolutions on this matter,

Recalling the letter of 11 April 1991 from the President of the Security Council to the Permanent Representative of Iraq to the United Nations noting that on the basis of Iraq's written agreement to implement fully resolution 687(1991) the preconditions established in paragraph 33 of that resolution for a cease-fire had been met,

Noting with grave concern the letters dated 26 June 1991, 28 June 1991 and 4 July 1991 from the Secretary-General, conveying information obtained from the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency which establishes Iraq's failure to comply with its obligations under resolution 687(1991),

Recalling further the statement issued by the President of the Security Council on 28 June 1991 requesting that a high-level mission consisting of the Chairman of the Special Commission, the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Under-Secretary-General for Disarmament Affairs be dispatched to meet with officials at the highest levels of the Government of Iraq at the earliest opportunity to obtain written assurance that Iraq will fully and immediately cooperate in the inspection of the locations identified by the Special Commission and present for immediate inspection any of those items that may have been transported from those locations.

Dismayed by the report of the high-level mission to the Secretary-General on the results of its meetings with the highest levels of the Iraqi Government,

Gravely concerned by the information provided to the Council by the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency on 15 and 25 July 1991 regarding the actions of the Government of Iraq in flagrant violation of resolution 687(1991),

Gravely concerned also by the evidence in the letter of 7 July 1991 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq to the Secretary-General and in subsequent statements and findings that Iraq's notifications of 18 and 28 April were incomplete and that it had concealed activities, which both constituted material breaches of its obligations under resolution 687(1991),

Noting also from the letters dated 26 June, 28 June and 4 July 1991 from the Secretary-General that Iraq has not fully complied with all of its undertakings relating to the privileges, immunities and facilities to be accorded to the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency inspection teams mandated under resolution 687(1991).

Affirming that in order for the Special Commission to carry out its mandate under paragraph 9 (b) (i), (ii) and (iii) of resolution 687(1991) to inspect Iraq's chemical and biological weapons and ballistic missile capabilities and to take possession of them for destruction, removal or rendering harmless, full disclosure on the part of Iraq as required in paragraph 9 (a) of resolution 687(1991) is essential,

Affirming that in order for the International Atomic Energy Agency, with the assistance and cooperation of the Special Commission, to determine what nuclear-weapons-usable material or any subsystems or components or any research, development, support or manufacturing facilities related to them need, in accordance with paragraph 13 of resolution 687(1991), to be destroyed, removed or rendered harmless, Iraq is required to make a declaration of all its nuclear programmes including any which it claims are for purposes not related to nuclear-weapons-usable material,

Affirming that the aforementioned failure of Iraq to act in strict conformity with its obligations under resolution 687(1991) constitutes a material breach of its acceptance of the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991) which established a cease-fire and provided the conditions essential to the restoration of peace and security in the region,

Affirming further that Iraq's failure to comply with its safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency, concluded pursuant to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons of 1 July 1968, as established by the resolution of the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency of 18 July 1991, constitutes a breach of its international obligations,

Determined to ensure full compliance with resolution 687(1991) and in particular its section C,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Condemns Iraq's serious violation of a number of its obligations under section C of resolution 687(1991) and of its undertakings to cooperate with the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency, which constitutes a material breach of the relevant provisions of resolution 687(1991) which established a cease-fire and provided the conditions essential to the restoration of peace and security in the region;

2. Further condemns non-compliance by the Government of Iraq with its obligations under its safeguards agreement with the Agency, as established by the resolution of the Board of Governors of 18 July, which constitutes a violation of its commitments-as a-party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons of 1 July 1968;

3. Demands that Iraq:

- (i) Provide full, final and complete disclosure, as required by resolution 687(1991), of all aspects of its programmes to develop weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres, and of all holdings of such weapons, their components and production facilities and locations, as well as all other nuclear programmes, including any which it claims are for purposes not related to nuclear-weapons-usable material, without further delay;
- (ii) Allow the Special Commission, the International Atomic Energy Agency and their inspection teams immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to any and all areas, facilities, equipment, records and means of transportation which they wish to inspect;

- (iii) Cease immediately any attempt to conceal, or any movement or destruction of, any material or equipment relating to its nuclear, chemical or biological weapons or ballistic missile programmes, or material or equipment relating to its other nuclear activities without notification to and prior consent of the Special Commission;
  - (iv) Make available immediately to the Special Commission, the Agency and their inspection teams any items to which they were previously denied access;
  - (v) Allow the Special Commission, the Agency and their inspection teams to conduct both fixed-wing and helicopter flights throughout Iraq for all relevant purposes including inspection, surveillance, aerial surveys, transportation and logistics without interference of any kind and upon such terms and conditions as may be determined by the Special Commission, and to make full use of their own aircraft and such airfields in Iraq as they may determine are most appropriate for the work of the Commission;
  - (vi) Halt all nuclear activities of any kind, except for use of isotopes for medical, agricultural or industrial purposes, until the Security Council determines that Iraq is in full compliance with this resolution and paragraphs 12 and 13 of resolution 687(1991), and the Agency determines that Iraq is in full compliance with its safeguards agreement with that Agency;
  - (vii) Ensure the complete implementation of the privileges, immunities and facilities of the representatives of the Special Commission and the Agency in accordance with its previous undertakings and their complete safety and freedom of movement;
  - (viii) Immediately provide or facilitate the provision of any transportation, medical or logistical support requested by the Special Commission, the Agency and their inspection teams;
  - (ix) Respond fully, completely and promptly to any questions or requests from the Special Commission, the Agency and their inspection teams;
4. Determines that Iraq retains no ownership interest in items to be destroyed, removed or rendered harmless pursuant to paragraph 12 of resolution 687(1991);
5. Requires that the Government of Iraq forthwith comply fully and without delay with all its international obligations, including those set out in the present resolution, in resolution 687(1991), in the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and in its safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency;
6. Decides to remain seized of this matter.

Security Council resolution 707(1991)

15 August 1991 Meeting 3004 Adopted unanimously

4-nation draft (S/22942).

Sponsors: France, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Before adoption of the resolution, Iraq, which had been invited to participate in the discussions, along with Kuwait, without the right to vote, under rule 37<sup>b</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, inquired as to what could be the reason for the presentation of the draft text. It had hoped that the Council would express its satisfaction with the cooperation enjoyed by the international teams in Iraq. It did not expect the adoption of a new resolution condemning Iraq for an isolated incident (involving the second nuclear inspection team), the circumstances surrounding which it had already clearly and unambiguously indicated on more than one occasion.

On 28 August,(116) Iraq stated that the resolution was unwarranted, giving its views on each of its operative paragraphs. Of note were its statements that it had provided full, final and complete disclosure of all aspects of its weapons programmes and inquired therefore to what items the inspection teams had been previously denied access. As to paragraph 3 (v), Iraq had no objections in principle to the use of aircraft by the Special Commission. However, there were issues of administration, communications and logistics to be taken into consideration so as to guarantee the safety of the aircraft, crew and passengers; it hoped for a resolution of the issue by cooperation and agreement.

On 24 September,(117) Iraq informed the Council President of its consent to the use of helicopters by the inspection teams for the purpose of carrying out their tasks under resolution 687(1991) and other relevant resolutions. The modalities whereby the helicopters would enter Iraq's airspace and be received by its competent authorities would be agreed upon jointly by the Special Commission Chairman and Iraq. Replying on 25 September,(118) the Council President stated that the Council noted the terms of Iraq's letter and regarded them as constituting acceptance by Iraq without reservation of resolution 707(1991) and that the Iraqi Government was thus giving its unconditional consent to the Special Commission's use of its own aircraft; the Commission intended to avail itself of that possibility without delay.

IAEA inspections

Between the adoption on 3 April 1991 of Security Council resolution 687(1991)—embodying the terms and formal declaration of the cease-fire in the Persian Gulf region—and the end of the year, IAEA, with the assistance of the Special Commission, conducted eight on-site nuclear inspections in Iraq in accordance with the relevant provisions of section C of that resolution. The covering reports, including detailed technical findings and conclusions, were transmitted to the Council by the Secretary-General.

The objectives of the first (15-21 Ma) and second (22 June-3 July) inspections(119) were to verify the accuracy and completeness of Iraqi declarations called for by resolution 687(1991), to conduct inspections of sites designated by the Special Commission where there were grounds to believe that undeclared nuclear activities had been conducted or that undeclared equipment might be stored, and to develop an overall picture of the nature, direction and capabilities of Iraq's nuclear programme. Inspected were the Al-Tuwaitha Nuclear Research Centre and sites at Tarmiya, Abu Gharaib, Al Hamath, Zaafaraniya, Al Musayyib and Fallujah. The findings included evidence of: the ability to manufacture the components for an EMIS (electromagnetic isotope separation) separator; a successful pilot-scale EMIS development done at Al-Tuwaitha; and a large EMIS processing plant under construction at Tarmiya. It was the team's opinion that Tarmiya had never operated; and that Al-Tuwaitha had facilities to operate 5 to 100 separators at most, estimating that live machines could have operated for no more than two years and produced no more than 3 kilograms of highly enriched uranium (HEU).

The third inspection (7-18 July)(120) was of the facilities at Al-Tuwaitha, Tarmiya and Ash Sharqat, the Akashat phosphate mine feeding Al Qaim and the Mosul production facility, among others. The team verified to a large extent the information contained in an Iraqi declaration of 7 July concerning its centrifuge enrichment programme, supplemented by information presented to the team at its request on 14 July. A process of additional clarification by Iraq and subsequent verification and further questioning by the team took place throughout the two-week period. A large number of samples and documents were collected for analysis and evaluation.

Iraq, on 7 August,(121) submitted to the Secretary-General a number of amendments and corrections to certain descriptions and statements made in the team's report.

The fourth inspection (27 July-10 August)(122) endeavoured to assess Iraq's EMIS programme as a whole and to analyse the capacity of local industries to produce processing equipment, components and feed material; to obtain a more comprehensive picture of Iraq's centrifuge enrichment programme; to verify the existence of weaponization activities (research, development, manufacturing and testing required to make nuclear weapons from special fissionable material); and to verify Iraq's declarations on 27 July of nuclear material not previously declared.

It was certain, the team stated, that the EMIS programme was fast-paced and that all of its components were of an industrial scale, which would have resulted in significant production of weapons-grade material. Unless deception of an inordinate magnitude was still taking place, the centrifuge enrichment programme was, at the outbreak of hostilities, second in priority to the EMIS programme; it was receiving at least periodic, and probably continuing, assistance, including technical advice from non-Iraqi sources, beyond the substantial supply of equipment and materials. No conclusive evidence was obtained with respect to weaponization. Iraq's declarations of 27 July confirmed the existence of a clandestine programme to manufacture several kilograms of uranium oxide fuel, irradiate it in the IRT-5000 reactor and reprocess the irradiated fuel in order chemically to separate gram amounts of plutonium.

The fifth inspection (14-20 September)(123) was limited to a follow-up of previous inspections: to verify seals earlier placed on material and equipment and that material present was as declared; to remove the bulk of plutonium from the country; to take samples for destructive analysis to complement previous samples; to establish the heavy water inventory; and to inquire further into the extent of Iraq's chemical enrichment programme.

The sixth inspection (22-30 September)(124) obtained conclusive evidence that Iraq had a programme for developing an implosion-type nuclear weapon, code-named "Petrochemical Three", and found documents linking it to Iraq's AEC, Ministry of Defence and Ministry of Industry and Military Industrialization. The team found documents showing that the nuclear-weapons programme was supported by broad-based international procurement efforts and that Iraq had been working on the revision of a nuclear-weapons design and one linking AEC to a surface-to-surface missile project-presumably the intended delivery system for a nuclear weapon.

Iraq, on 24 September,(125) lodged a protest with the Security Council President against the actions of the sixth inspection team under Chief Inspector David Kay (United States), which, it said, exceeded the team's mandate and appeared to be motivated by goals other than those of the United Nations and of the Council resolutions: photocopying personal files of Iraqi industrial and metallurgical personnel, including scientists and researchers, and the refusal to return the photocopies. On 2 October,(126) Iraq noted that the biased demeanour of the Chief Inspector confirmed that he was serving United States purposes that had nothing to do with the tasks defined by the United Nations. It cited the seizure of scientific and technical documents, and other provocative actions by the team, such as climbing over fences into the inspection site before arrival of the team convoy with its Iraqi escorts, forcing doors open, searching handbags, briefcases and laboratory-coat pockets, opening private letters and photographing registration plates.

The seventh inspection (11-22 October)(127) concentrated on assessing the extent of Iraq's research and development of a nuclear weapon, further investigating the work done and progress made in enrichment, particularly by the centrifuge method, and continuing the work of the fifth inspection team in measuring and verifying declared nuclear material. As a result of persistent investigation, Iraq had acknowledged that it was actively pursuing a research and development programme aimed at developing a "practical" design for a nuclear explosive, the design chosen representing an intermediate-level technology using enriched uranium in an implosion system. The inspection team's report set out detailed findings on Iraq's enrichment programme, but noted that a final conclusion about the amounts and categories of nuclear material listed in various declarations could not be drawn pending evaluation of the destructive and non-destructive measurements.

The eighth inspection (11-18 November)<sup>(128)</sup> continued field activities related to the foreign procurement of equipment essential to Iraq's nuclear programme, further investigated and assessed the extent of its weaponization studies, continued the destruction or rendering harmless of enrichment- and reprocessing-related equipment, prepared and supervised the removal from Iraq of fresh (unirradiated) <sup>HEU</sup> fuel of USSR origin, finalized verification of nuclear material at Al-Tuwaitha and performed further verification activities of nuclear and other material.

IAEA report. The first report on the implementation by IAEA of the plan for the destruction, removal or rendering harmless of items specified by the Security Council (resolution 687(1991), paragraph 12) during the period 17 June-17 December 1991 was transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Council on 17 December.<sup>(129)</sup>

Of the stocks of fresh fuel for the IRT-5000 reactor, 68 fuel assemblies of 80 per cent enrichment with a U235 content of 10.97 kilograms and 10 assemblies of 36 per cent enrichment with a U235 content of 1.27 kilograms were removed from Iraq on 15 and 17 November. Removal of this strategically most significant material marked an important stage in the plan's implementation. There remained in Iraq 372 grams of 93 per cent enriched uranium.

A total of 6 grams of clandestinely produced plutonium, eventually declared by Iraq, was removed during the fifth IAEA inspection. Some 400 tons of natural uranium ranging from yellowcake to processed chemicals, although not direct-use material, fell within the scope of resolution 707(1991) and had been verified and sealed.

Destruction of EMIS equipment had proceeded steadily, with eight large magnet poles and all vacuum chambers and coils destroyed. Key components of special manufacturing equipment for the centrifuge programme had been destroyed or rendered useless; centrifuges had been crushed, with some components removed to IAEA.

Equipment for warhead development and assembly, revealed by the seventh and eighth IAEA inspections, had been sealed pending decision on removal, destruction or monitoring; video (streak) cameras had been removed from Iraq.

Of the "hot cells" for dealing with radioactive material, with which the Al-Tuwaitha Nuclear Centre was extensively equipped, many were severely damaged by allied bombing. To prevent their possible reconstruction, the seventh inspection team cut the manipulator arms and control wires; cement and epoxy resin in addition to cement were poured into the glove boxes and mixers-settlers.

No buildings had been destroyed by inspection teams. Most of those used for clandestine programmes were destroyed by bombing. A major task that remained pending was the removal from Iraq of the remaining 35 kilograms of U235 contained in the irradiated fuel elements of the Tamuz-2 and IRT-5000 research reactors.

The report observed that, throughout the reporting period, Iraq's persistent practice of only limited acknowledgement of activities exposed through inspections, its concealment of evidence in such critical areas as uranium-enrichment and nuclear-weapons development, its denial of unrestricted access to certain sites, its detaining of the IAEA (sixth) inspection team on one occasion (in September), and its confiscation of documents from inspectors had made it rather difficult for IAEA to discharge its duties.

Special Commission activities

The Special Commission held its first session in New York from 21 to 23 October 1991. It reviewed a comprehensive report,<sup>(130)</sup> submitted by its Executive Chairman, on its activities in the five months since its inception in mid-May, including a summary of administrative issues to be resolved (approval of a formal budget, adequate financial resources and staffing). The report was transmitted to the Security Council on 25 October.

The Special Commission was serviced by: a full-time secretariat in New York; a field office at Manama, Bahrain, which was the staging area for the assembly, briefing and report-writing of inspection teams; and a support office at Baghdad providing logistical support in the field. Team members were selected principally on the basis of technical expertise and drawn from as many as 34 countries. An agreement was concluded with Iraq on the status, privileges and immunities of the Commission, approved by Council resolution 715(1991), (see below), as was an agreement with Bahrain in respect of the field office.

Through vigorous and intensive inspections by the Special Commission in the chemical, biological and ballistic-missile fields, and by IAEA and the Commission in the nuclear field, sufficient information had been compiled giving a picture of Iraq's capabilities and facilities in those fields, although some important lacunae remained to be pursued energetically.

As of the reporting date, the Special Commission had conducted 13 chemical, biological and ballistic-missile inspections and assisted IAEA in seven nuclear inspections. Such assistance consisted in providing experts in nuclear weapons, in nuclear-energy-related technologies and in special materials; providing broad logistical support, such as explosive-ordnance disposal, information, communications, medical, interpretation and photographic support and financing; and designating sites for inspection, on the basis of information received from interested Member States.

In the nuclear field, the IAEA-led inspections had disclosed three clandestine uranium enrichment programmes or activities: chemical, centrifuge and electromagnetic isotope separation, as well as laboratory-scale plutonium separation. The sixth nuclear inspection finally obtained conclusive evidence of a nuclear-weapons development programme, aimed at an implosion-type nuclear weapon linked to a surface-to-surface missile project. Iraq had yet to make a complete disclosure of its nuclear-weapons programme.

A full assessment of Iraq's chemical weapons capabilities appeared probable in the near future. Iraq had acknowledged possession of 46,000 pieces of filled munitions. Its facilities included the substantial chemical weapons production complex of the Al Muthanna State Establishment and three planned precursor production plants in the Fal-lujah area. In addition to the central storage of filled chemical munitions, warfare agents and precursor chemicals in bulk at Al Muthanna, filled chemical munitions, often damaged and leaking, were stored at various sites throughout Iraq. The process of moving these to Al Muthanna, designated as the central destruction site for chemical weapons, had begun. Destruction of filled munitions and bulk agents was to start early in 1992 and continue into 1993. To date, 11,829 unfilled chemical munitions had been destroyed by Iraqi personnel under the supervision of the Special Commission.

As to biological weapons capabilities, conclusive evidence had been collected—from the major research and development site at Salman Pak and from over 10 additional sites—that Iraq was engaged in an advanced military biological research programme. The inspections, while yielding no evidence of actual weaponization, had provided a sound database for future monitoring.

In the area of ballistic missiles with a range over 150 kilometres, the Commission had supervised the destruction of 62 ballistic missiles, 18 fixed Scud missile launch pads, 10 launchers, 11 decoy missiles, 32 ballistic missile warheads, 127 missile storage support racks, a substantial amount of rocket fuel, an assembled 350-millimetre supergun, components for two 350- and two 1,000-millimetre superguns and 1 tonne of supergun propellant. Inspectors had also confirmed the destruction by coalition bombing of several missile repair and production facilities. Further work was required to obtain a full accounting of Iraq's missile capabilities before the Commission could certify that all items had been identified.

A draft plan for long-term monitoring in the chemical, biological and ballistic missile areas, and another on nuclear monitoring, had been harmonized by the Special Commission and IAEA. Monitoring would include inspections and aerial overflights of military and civilian sites.

The Special Commission noted that, while cooperation from Iraq had generally been forthcoming at the field level, notably in the chemical and biological areas, an attitude of non-cooperation, concealment and sometimes false information had emerged regarding non-declared activities, resources and sites designated by the Special Commission. This had resulted in a number of serious incidents, including those of 23, 25 and 28 June, when a nuclear inspection team was denied access to certain facilities, and when shots were fired by the Iraqi military on 28 June to deter the team from photographing trucks transporting materials previously removed from Iraqi nuclear programme sites. The misgivings regarding Iraqi assurances of cooperation, as expressed by the high-level mission, had been confirmed by the conduct of Iraqi authorities that culminated in the detention of the sixth nuclear inspection team in a Baghdad parking-lot for four days at the end of September. Despite express provisions in the agreement concluded with Iraq, it refused for almost three months to permit the Special Commission to introduce its own helicopter air-support system into Iraq.

Such elements of misinformation, concealment, lack of cooperation and violation of the privileges and immunities of the Special Commission and IAEA had had a negative impact on relations with Iraq and had engendered an atmosphere of profound scepticism, particularly in the nuclear area.

The Special Commission outlined the urgent issues for the immediate future: destruction, including the extent of Iraqi involvement in the destruction process; the organization and initiation of compliance monitoring; compilation and provision of information on suppliers to Iraq of nuclear, chemical, biological and ballistic missile materials; and administrative issues of staffing and financing of the Special Commission.

Activities from 15 October to 4 December, covered by a second Special Commission report,(131) included: two more chemical inspections, one of the Al Muthanna State Establishment (7 October-8 November) and another of a series of declared chemical munitions storage sites (22 October-2 November); a combined chemical and biological weapons inspection on short notice (17-30 November) of a number of sites designated by the Commission as being of potential chemical weapons and/or biological weapons interest; and another visit to Salman Pak. The technically successful inspection of Al Muthanna, which resulted in a comprehensive and detailed inventory of the site, including facilities, munitions, agents, agent conditions, precursors and intermediates, led to the conclusion that Iraq clearly had carried out research on nerve agents other than those previously declared. A four-member mission visited Iraq (11-15 November) for detailed technical discussions on the destruction of chemical weapons and agents, with particular emphasis on the direct involvement of Iraq.

Two additional ballistic missile inspections were expected to be completed. The Special Commission had destroyed one more ballistic missile warhead.

Two more nuclear inspections were completed, which focused on a number of sites associated with Iraq's programme to design and develop the non-nuclear components of a nuclear weapon and centrifuge-component manufacture, and successfully removed unirradiated fuel from Iraq. Contrary to Iraq's declarations, the inspections revealed a well-funded and broadly based programme involving sophisticated facilities for nuclear-weapons development. The Special Commission observed that, in sum, Iraq had not cooperated in the critical area of nuclear-weapons-related activity so that the Special Commission and IAEA were some distance from achieving the transparency they sought.

The Special Commission observed that experience to date had shown that results could be achieved only where resolute stands were taken in response to challenges by Iraq to the implementation of various aspects of the mandates of the Special Commission and IAEA. Such resolute stands could be based only on the full support of the United Nations as a whole and its Member Governments in achieving all the basic objectives of section C of resolution 687(1991).

Monitoring and verification

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a request by the Security Council (resolution 687(1991), paragraph 10), the Secretary-General, on 2 October 1991, submitted a revised version of the plan<sup>(132)</sup> for future monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with its unconditional obligation not to use, retain, possess, develop, construct or otherwise acquire any weapons or related items specifically prohibited by the Council (resolution 687(1991), paragraphs 8 and 9). To be monitored were military and civilian sites, facilities, material and other items, as well as activities, that could be in contravention of that obligation. The plan incorporated monitoring activities corresponding to Iraq's additional obligation under resolution 707(1991), prohibiting all nuclear activities in Iraq, except the use of isotopes for medical, agricultural or industrial purposes.

The plan described the institutional and organizational aspects of the body to carry out the monitoring and verification tasks-perhaps a unit of the Special Commission-as well as the scope of those tasks. It specified the nature of the information to be regularly provided to the Special Commission by Iraq. It set out detailed provisions relating to the Commission's rights and methods of inspection, including aerial overflights, as well as Iraq's related obligations, and notification requirements for both sides.

The plan further set out three sets of detailed provisions covering verification activities in respect of chemical and biological items and missiles. Other provisions related to the national legislative and administrative measures to be adopted by Iraq to implement its obligations, as well as actions to be taken by the Special Commission in the event of Iraq's non-compliance.

IAEA report. The IAEA plan for future ongoing monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance was transmitted to the Council by the Secretary-General on 20 September 1991.<sup>(133)</sup>

The plan set forth detailed provisions concerning the obligations of Iraq with regard to facilitating the monitoring and verification activities of IAEA; the obligations of other States in respect of the items proscribed under resolutions 687(1991) and 707(1991); the rights of IAEA under its safeguards agreement with Iraq and under the exchange of notes between them, in force since 14 May; national implementation measures; and measures to be taken by IAEA in case of Iraqi non-compliance. Other provisions related to the periodicity of reporting to the Council on the status of implementation, revisions to the plan and updating of lists. The plan would enter into force immediately upon its approval by the Council.

Annexed were definitions of nuclear material and activities for the purposes of the relevant resolutions, provisions related to information requirements, lists of items to be reported to IAEA and a list of nuclear activities permitted under resolution 707(1991).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (11 October)

On 11 October 1991, the Security Council met to consider a draft resolution relating to the plans submitted by the Secretary-General and the IAEA Director General for the future monitoring and verification of Iraq's compliance with section C of resolution 687(1991). At its request, Iraq was invited to participate in the discussions without the right to vote under rule 37<sup>b</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Following Iraq's statement of position on the draft text, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 715(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 707(1991) of 15 August 1991, and its other resolutions on this matter,

Recalling in particular that under resolution 687(1991) the Secretary-General and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency were requested to develop plans for future ongoing monitoring and verification, and to submit them to the Security Council for approval,

Taking note of the report and note of the Secretary-General, transmitting the plans submitted by the Secretary-General and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

3. Requests the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency to carry out, with the assistance and cooperation of the Special Commission, the plan submitted by him and to continue to discharge his other responsibilities under resolutions 687(1991), 699(1991) and 707(1991);

(a) Continue to have the responsibility for designating additional locations for inspection and overflights;

(c) Perform such other functions, in cooperation in the nuclear field with the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency, as may be necessary to coordinate activities under the plans approved by the present resolution, including making use of commonly available services and information to the fullest extent possible, in order to achieve maximum efficiency and optimum use of resources;

5. Demands that Iraq meet unconditionally all its obligations under the plans approved by the present resolution and cooperate fully with the Special Commission and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency in carrying out the plans;

6. Decides to encourage the maximum assistance, in cash and in kind, from all Member States to support the Special Commission and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency in carrying out their activities under the plans approved by the present resolution, without prejudice to Iraq's liability for the full costs of such activities;

7. Requests the Committee established under resolution 661(1990), the Special Commission and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency to develop in cooperation a mechanism for monitoring any future sales or supplies by other countries to Iraq of items relevant to the implementation of section C of resolution 687(1991) and other relevant resolutions, including the present resolution and the plans approved hereunder;

8. Requests the Secretary-General and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency to submit to the Security Council reports on the implementation of the plans approved by the present resolution, when requested by the Security Council and in any event at least every six months after the adoption of this resolution;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 715(1991)

11 October 1991 Meeting 3012 Adopted unanimously

6-nation draft (S-23134).

SPONSORS: Belgium, France, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Iraq stated that the text sought to establish permanent international mechanisms to tighten control over Iraq's future and prevent it from carrying out economic and scientific development. The greatest danger was in the plan prepared by the Special Commission, which placed all of Iraq's scientific and educational institutions under severe restrictions in an absolutist and arbitrary fashion. The plan, made up of 45 paragraphs and four annexes integral to the plan, gave the Commission and all authorized by it unrestricted, permanent and absolute police, political and executive powers. One of the paragraphs effectively gave the Commission authority to amend the plan itself. The plan also called for creating an executive body under the Council's authority, an international organ with numerous offshoots in a manner unprecedented in history. The annexes gave further evidence that the plan far exceeded the Council resolutions and Charter provisions and was aimed at denying Iraq the capacity to conduct scientific, biological and chemical research to such excess as to prohibit it from conducting research activities on diseases other than those indigenous to, or immediately expected to break out in, the country.

The main thrust of the plan, Iraq asserted, was not to destroy Iraq's weapons of mass destruction but to deprive it of its industrial and scientific infrastructure and to project an image of it as a State that did not cooperate with the United Nations. If the plan's aims were illegal and prohibited under the Geneva Conventions, then they and the draft resolution under consideration lacked legality and were not consonant with international law or the Charter.

Kuwaiti property

As of the end of 1991, a comprehensive report remained to be submitted to the Security Council regarding the return of Kuwaiti property from Iraq to Kuwait, including a list of property that Kuwait claimed had not been returned or had not been returned intact (resolution 687(1991), section D).

However, on 19 March,<sup>(134)</sup> the Council President, referring to Council resolution 686(1991), demanding in alia that Iraq immediately begin to return all Kuwaiti property it had seized after 2 August 1990 within the shortest possible time, as well as to Iraq's request for information as to the hand-over procedure,<sup>(135)</sup> informed the Secretary-General of the Council's view that the modalities for the return of such property should be arranged through his Office in consultation with the parties. The Secretary-General replied on 26 March<sup>(136)</sup> that he had designated Assistant Secretary-General Richard Foran of the Office of General Services as coordinator for the activity.

In identical letters addressed to the Secretary-General and the Council President, Iraq, on 18 March, said it awaited creation of the machinery through which to return the property<sup>(137)</sup> and confirmed that catalogues of assets taken from Kuwait's Islamic Museum and National Museum were ready for submission,<sup>(138)</sup> and, on 21 March, transmitted a list of Kuwaiti standard gold bars, banknotes, monetary coins and other coins that were ready for immediate return.<sup>(139)</sup> Discrepancies in Iraq's accounting of those coins were subsequently pointed out by Kuwait.<sup>(140)</sup>

Meanwhile, between 14 March and 6 September, Kuwait transmitted to the Council President a series of inventories of items said to have been damaged and/or looted from various sources in Kuwait, as follows: the Ministries of Foreign Affairs,<sup>(141)</sup> Health,<sup>(142)</sup> Information,<sup>(143)</sup> Justice and Legal Affairs,<sup>(144)</sup> and Social Affairs and Labour;<sup>(145)</sup> libraries and the Central Bank of Kuwait;<sup>(144)</sup> the Kuwait Airways Corporation;<sup>(146)</sup> the Kuwait News Agency;<sup>(147)</sup> the Al Sabah Collection, Dar Al Athar Al Islamiyya and the National Museum of Kuwait (except for 109 and 11 items indicated as located in the United States and the United Kingdom, respectively);<sup>(148)</sup> a private antiquities and art collection;<sup>(149)</sup> military equipment currently deployed in Baghdad;<sup>(150)</sup> various public health departments and facilities;<sup>(151)</sup> and the Maritime Company of Kuwait.<sup>(152)</sup>

Kuwait, on 4 April,<sup>(153)</sup> transmitted the text of a decree enabling it to take all necessary and appropriate measures to protect property belonging to Kuwaitis or Kuwaiti residents, and to establish the Government's right to have recourse to foreign administrative and judicial authorities for the purpose of protecting such property. On 5 April,<sup>(154)</sup> it drew attention to confidential instructions issued by Iraq's Ministry of Higher Education and Scientific Research to the University of Basrah, concerning the removal of all property from the University of Kuwait and the Technical Institute of Kuwait and its transfer to corresponding institutions throughout Iraq. Kuwait further stated on 19 April<sup>(155)</sup> that Iraq had yet to implement that provision of resolution 686(1991) regarding the immediate return of all seized Kuwaiti property.

The fact that, on 18 November, the United States Department of State handed over to the Iraqi Interests Section in Washington, D.C., a list of military equipment removed from Kuwait was the subject of a complaint by Iraq on 27 November,<sup>(156)</sup> which at the same time explained what arrangements were under way to return certain of those items, which included several aircraft.

Summing up action it had taken with respect to returning Kuwaiti property, Iraq reported that, as a result of two visits made in May by Assistant Secretary-General Richard Foran, it had handed over a Kuwaiti civilian aircraft at Amman, Jordan, on 11 May;<sup>(157)</sup> and that, between 31 July and 15 December,<sup>(158)</sup> it had delivered for return to Kuwait one civil aircraft (Al Muthanna airport, Baghdad), 3,216 gold ingots and amounts of coins and banknotes, Central Library books, News Agency materials (Arar, Saudi Arabia), nine large aircraft engines (Habaniyah airport), museum items (Baghdad), additional museum items, four Hawk military training aircraft and 16 steel safes belonging to the Central Bank of Kuwait.

UN Compensation Commission and Compensation Fund

Report of the Secretary-General. As directed by the Security Council (resolution 687(1991), paragraph 19), the Secretary-General, on 2 May 1991, <sup>(159)</sup> presented recommendations for the creation of a United Nations Compensation Fund to pay compensation for loss or damage as a result of Iraq's unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait and of a United Nations Compensation Commission to administer the Fund.

The Fund, to which Iraq would make payments, would be set up as a special account of the United Nations and operated in accordance with the United Nations Financial Regulations and Rules. As such, it would enjoy the status, facilities, privileges and immunities accorded to the United Nations under the Charter and the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.<sup>(70)</sup>

The Commission would be a subsidiary organ of the Council, under whose authority it would function. Its members (commissioners) would be nominated by the Secretary-General and appointed by the Governing Council (see below) in their personal capacity as experts in finance, law, accountancy, insurance and environmental damage assessment. The Commission would address a variety of complex administrative, financial, legal and policy issues, including the mechanism for determining the level of contribution to the Fund, allocation of funds and payment of claims, procedures for evaluating losses, listing claims and verifying their validity, and resolving disputed claims.

A 15-member Governing Council, composed of representatives of current Security Council members at any given time, would be the Commission's policy-making organ. It would set guidelines on all policy matters relating to the administration and financing of the Fund, the organization of the Commission's work, and the procedures for processing claims, settling disputed ones and making payments from the Fund. A majority of nine would be required for all Governing Council decisions, but the method of ensuring that payments were made to the Fund would be decided by a consensus. Failing a consensus, the matter would be referred to the Security Council. No veto would apply in the Governing Council.

In accordance with criteria laid down by the Security Council, the Governing Council would establish the mechanisms for determining the appropriate level of Iraq's contribution to the Fund, based on probable levels of its future oil-export revenues, the amounts of its past military spending and arms imports, foreign-debt service and reconstruction and development needs. The Governing Council would have to decide among five methods outlined to ensure payments to the Fund by Iraq, all presupposing its cooperation and strict supervision of its petroleum and petroleum-product exports. The Governing Council should also draw up guidelines for the claims procedure-filing, processing and payment of claims-and incorporate in that procedure an element of due process to be provided by the commissioners.

In principle, the expenses of the Commission, including those of the Governing Council, should be paid from the Fund. However, since it would take some time for the Fund to become adequately financed, the Secretary-General recommended that consideration be given as to how to meet initial costs.

The Commission would be serviced by a secretariat headed by an Executive Secretary. For economy and practicality, it was suggested that its headquarters be located in New York. The 1946 Convention on privileges and immunities would apply to the Commission and its secretariat.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council convened on 20 May 1991 and invited Iraq and Kuwait, at their request, to participate without vote under rule 37<sup>b</sup> of its provisional rules of procedure. Before it were the Secretary-General's recommendations for the creation of the Compensation Fund and Compensation Commission, together with a draft resolution on the subject.

In accordance with an understanding reached in prior consultations (see Iraq's position below), the Council adopted resolution 692(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 674(1990) of 29 October 1990, 686(1991) of 2 March 1991 and 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, concerning the liability of Iraq, without prejudice to its debts and obligations arising prior to 2 August 1990, for any direct loss, damage, including environmental damage and the depletion of natural resources, or injury to foreign Governments, nationals and corporations, as a result of Iraq's unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait.

Taking note of the Secretary-General's report of 2 May 1991, submitted in accordance with paragraph 19 of resolution 687(1991),

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report of 2 May 1991;

2. Welcomes the fact that the Secretary-General will now undertake the appropriate consultations requested by paragraph 19 of resolution 687(1991) so that he will be in a position to recommend to the Security Council for decision as soon as possible the figure which the level of Iraq's contribution to the United Nations Compensation Fund will not exceed;

3. Decides to establish the United Nations Compensation Fund and the United Nations Compensation Commission referred to in paragraph 18 of resolution 687(1991) in accordance with section I of the Secretary-General's report, and decides also that the Governing Council of the Commission will be located at the United Nations Office at Geneva and that the Governing Council may decide whether some of the activities of the Commission should be carried out elsewhere;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take the actions necessary to implement paragraphs 2 and 3 above in consultation with the members of the Governing Council;

5. Directs the Governing Council to proceed in an expeditious manner to implement the provisions of section E of resolution 687(1991), taking into account the recommendations in section II of the Secretary-General's report;

6. Decides that the requirement for Iraqi contributions will apply in the manner to be prescribed by the Governing Council with respect to all Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products exported from Iraq after 3 April 1991 as well as such petroleum and petroleum products exported earlier but not delivered or not paid for as a specific result of the prohibitions contained in Security Council resolution 661(1990);

7. Requests the Governing Council to report as soon as possible on the actions it has taken with regard to the mechanisms for determining the appropriate level of Iraq's contribution to the Fund and the arrangements for ensuring that payments are made to the Fund, so that the Security Council can give its approval in accordance with paragraph 22 of resolution 687(1991);

8. Requests that all States and international organizations cooperate with the decisions of the Governing Council taken pursuant to paragraph 5 of the present resolution, and also requests that the Governing Council keep the Security Council informed on this matter;

9. Decides that, if the Governing Council notifies the Security Council that Iraq has failed to carry out decisions of the Governing Council taken pursuant to paragraph 5 above, the Security Council intends to retain or to take action to reimpose the prohibition against the import of petroleum and petroleum products originating in Iraq and financial transactions related thereto;

10. Decides also to remain seized of the matter and that the Governing Council will submit periodic reports to the Secretary-General and the Security Council.

Abstaining: Cuba.

Iraq, on 20 May,(160) made known its position on the resolution, stating that the procedural decision taken by the Council precluding discussion or voicing of opinion on the resolution at the meeting was a dangerous precedent that made Council deliberations like a closed club, cut off from international public opinion and Member States.

If by adopting resolution 678(1990)(2) the Council relinquished its authority to the United States and its partners by allowing them to use force against Iraq, by resolution 692(1991) it had arrogated to itself the power to establish a political body unbound by any law and with authority to draw up reparations policy, decide on the legitimacy of claims and determine the level of appropriations from Iraq's oil revenues for reparations, with Iraq having no say on the matter. The end result of the resolution, Iraq asserted, was no less than an abrogation of international legality in dealing with the so-called Persian Gulf crisis, an encroachment on the authority of the International Court of Justice, the weakening of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), the impoverishment of Iraq and punishment of its current and future generations. Such a state of affairs would inevitably create a political vacuum in the Persian Gulf region that would become a focus for international, sectarian and religious conflicts with untold repercussions for the region and the world.

Note by the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a note of 30 May,(161) stated that he had undertaken the necessary consultations to determine the level of Iraq's contribution to the Compensation Fund. Data from Iraq, the International Monetary Fund, the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, the United Nations Statistical Office and OPEC were obtained for the exercise. Account was taken of such factors as Iraq's oil production quota of 3.14 million barrels a day at the reference price of $21 a barrel as agreed to within OPEC in July 1990, its daily internal consumption of about 300,000 barrels, conceivably higher earnings given the 2 per cent yearly increase in global demand for oil, estimated requirements to sustain a level of civilian imports consistent with the needs of the Iraqi economy, and requirements to service external debt on the assumption of rescheduling at standard Paris Club terms.

On the basis of the foregoing, the Secretary-General suggested that the level of Iraq's contribution to the Fund should not exceed 30 per cent of the annual value of its exports of petroleum and petroleum products.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

At a meeting on 15 August 1991, the Security Council considered three draft resolutions, one of which concerned the Secretary-General's suggested level of Iraq's contribution to the United Nations Compensation Fund. As with the Council meetings on the Iraq-Kuwait situation, the two parties, at their request, were invited to participate without vote under rule 37<sup>b</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Following statements by the two parties, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 705(1991).

The Security Council,

Having considered the note of 30 May 1991 of the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraph 13 of his report of 2 May 1991 which was annexed to the Secretary-General's letter of 30 May 1991 to the President of the Security Council,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his note of 30 May 1991 which was annexed to his letter to the President of the Security Council of the same date;

2. Decides that in accordance with the suggestion made by the Secretary-General in paragraph 7 of his note of 30 May 1991, compensation to be paid by Iraq (as arising from section E of resolution 687(1991)) shall not exceed 30 per cent of the annual value of the exports of petroleum and petroleum products from Iraq;

3. Decides further, in accordance with paragraph 8 of the Secretary-General's note of 30 May 1991, to review the figure established in paragraph 2 above from time to time in the light of data and assumptions contained in the letter of the Secretary-General and other relevant developments.

Security Council resolution 705(1991)

15 August 1991 Meeting 3004 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/22940).

Before adoption of the resolution, Iraq stated that, for 1991-1995, its revenues from oil and non-oil exports and foreign currency requirements made for a projected deficit of $149.2 billion, or an average yearly deficit of $29.28 billion. For 1991, however, the deficit was expected to rise to $47.8 billion due to accumulating external debt service from the previous year, for which agreement on payment rescheduling had yet to be reached. Projected oil revenues for the rest of 1991 and for 1992 totalled only $13 billion, against the $16 billion needed to meet Iraq's basic requirements for the same period. The figures did not take account of the 30 per cent deduction for the reparations Fund.

In the circumstances, and in view of the continuing economic embargo and freezing of its assets, Iraq requested a five-year grace period, or a deferment of deductions to 1993 at least, as well as a reduced deduction to 10 per cent of its oil revenues. Iraq supplemented its statement of position by a further statement in writing to the Council President on 16 August.<sup>(162)</sup>

Activities of the Governing Council. Following the establishment of the United Nations Compensation Commission on 20 May, its Governing Council held three sessions in 1991 at Geneva.

At the first session (23 July-2 August),<sup>(163)</sup> it approved guidelines for the conduct of its work and adopted the criteria for expediting urgent claims, including provisions for the payment of fixed amounts and of claims for up to $100,000 of actual losses per person, and the requirements applicable under both categories. It also approved the proposals contained in a working paper submitted by the United States on arrangements for ensuring payments to the Compensation Fund.

At the second session (14-18 October), the Governing Council decided to divide its work between Working Group A, to deal with criteria for urgent claims and additional categories of claims, and Working Group B, to deal with arrangements for payments to the Fund. At the third session (25-29 November),<sup>(164)</sup> it established criteria for processing additional categories of claims, which included those of individuals not otherwise covered under the set of criteria adopted at the first session; corporations, other private legal entities and public-sector enterprises; and Governments and international organizations.

Arms embargo

In accordance with the Security Council's request for the development of guidelines, in consultation with appropriate Governments, to facilitate implementation of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq, including procedures for updating the guidelines periodically (resolution 687(1991), paragraphs 24, 25 and 27), the Secretary-General, on 2 June 1991,<sup>(165)</sup> submitted a report annexing the requested draft guidelines for approval.

The guidelines itemized arms and matériel of all types and activities proscribed by the Council, specifically including the sale or transfer through other means of all forms of: conventional weapons and military equipment, chemical and biological weapons and all stocks or agents and all related subsystems and components, ballistic missiles with a greater-than-150-kilometre range and related major parts, and nuclear weapons or nuclear-weapons-usable material or any subsystems or components; as well as all their related research, development, support and manufacturing facilities, repair and production facilities for all ballistic missiles, technology under licensing or other transfer arrangements used in the production, utilization or stockpiling of all such items, and personnel or materials for training or technical support services relating to the design, development, manufacture, use, maintenance or support of those items.

The draft guidelines also defined the responsibilities of the Committee established by Security Council resolution 661(1990) (Committee on sanctions), as well as the principles of implementation by all States, by international organizations and through intergovernmental cooperation. They further provided for the Council's review of the guidelines at the same time as its regular reviews of those provisions of resolution 687(1991) on economic and arms and related sanctions against Iraq.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (17 June)

At a meeting on 17 June 1991, the Security Council had before it, among other documents, the Secretary-General's report containing the draft guidelines. The Council unanimously adopted a draft resolution on the subject as resolution 700(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, 665(1990) of 25 August 1990, 670(1990) of 25 September 1990 and 687(1991) of 3 April 1991,

Taking note of the Secretary-General's report of 2 June 1991 submitted pursuant to paragraph 26 of resolution 687(1991),

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report of 2 June 1991;

2. Approves the guidelines to facilitate full international implementation of paragraphs 24, 25 and 27 of Security Council resolution 687(1991), annexed to the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Reiterates its call upon all States and international organizations to act in a manner consistent with the guidelines;

4. Requests all States, in accordance with paragraph 8 of the guidelines, to report to the Secretary-General within 45 days on the measures they have instituted for meeting the obligations set out in paragraph 24 of resolution 687(1991);

5. Entrusts the Committee established under resolution 661(1990) concerning the situation between Iraq and Kuwait with the responsibility, under the guidelines, for monitoring the prohibitions against the sale or supply of arms to Iraq and related sanctions established in paragraph 24 of resolution 687(1991);

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter and to review the guidelines at the same time as it reviews paragraphs 22, 23, 24 and 25 of resolution 687(1991) as set out in paragraph 28 thereof.

Security Council resolution 700(1991)

17 June 1991 Meeting 2994 Adopted unanimously

B-nation draft (S/22698).

Sponsors: Belgium, France, USSR, United Kingdom, United States

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, on 1 August 1991, reported<sup>(166)</sup> that, following adoption of Security Council resolution 700(1991) on 17 June, he transmitted the text of the resolution by telegram to Iraq, and, on 3 July, by note verbale to all other States with a request to submit, by 1 August, information on measures instituted by their Governments for meeting the obligations set out in paragraph 24 of resolution 687(1991). The text was also transmitted to all international organizations.

The report listed the replies received from 32 States by 1 August. Addenda of 10 September and 4 December<sup>(167)</sup> listed replies received from 34 other States, bringing the total received to 66.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (5 August and 2 October)

Following informal consultations held by the Security Council on 5 August, the President made a statement to the press on the same date<sup>(168)</sup> to the effect that, from the opinions expressed at the consultations, he had concluded that there was no agreement that the necessary conditions existed for a modification of the regimes established in paragraphs 22 to 25, as referred to in paragraph 28, of resolution 687(1991); in paragraph 6 of resolution 700(1991); and in paragraph 20, as referred to in paragraph 21, of resolution 687(1991).

In another press statement on 2 October,<sup>(169)</sup> the President said that, having heard the opinions expressed at consultations earlier that day, it was his conclusion that there was no agreement that the necessary conditions existed for a modification of the regime established in paragraph 20, as referred to in paragraph 21, of resolution 687(1991).

Reports of the Committee on sanctions. The Committee on sanctions transmitted to the Security Council President, on 13 September<sup>(170)</sup> and 10 December 1991,<sup>(171)</sup> two reports, pursuant to the responsibilities entrusted to it under the guidelines for monitoring the prohibitions against the sale or supply of arms to Iraq and related sanctions.

The reports stated that, during the periods under review, the Committee had received no information of possible or alleged violations of the sanction regimes by either States or foreign nationals. Nor had it been consulted by States or international organizations on either the sale or supply of items to Iraq that might fall within the categories of proscribed items or of dual- or multiple-use items. The later report noted, however, that the Committee, on 18 October, took note of a letter from the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421(1977)<sup>(172)</sup> concerning the question of South Africa. Both reports suggested that the Secretary-General issue a reminder to those States that had not reported to him on measures they had taken to prevent the sale or supply to Iraq, or the promotion or facilitation of such sale or supply, by their nationals or from their territories of the items proscribed under the sanctions.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (20 December)

Following consultations held on 20 December 1991, the Security Council President made the following statement to the media<sup>(173)</sup> on behalf of the Council members in connection with the item entitled "The situation between Iraq and Kuwait":

"The members of the Security Council held informal consultations on 6 December 1991 pursuant to paragraph 28 of resolution 687(1991), paragraph 6 of resolution 700(1991) and paragraph 21 of resolution 687(1991). After hearing all the opinions expressed in the course of the consultations, the President of the Council concluded that there was no agreement that the necessary conditions existed for a modification of the regimes established in paragraphs 22, 23, 24 and 25, as referred to in paragraph 28 of resolution 687(1991), in paragraph 6 of resolution 700(1991), and in paragraph 20, as referred to in paragraph 21 of resolution 687(1991).

"However, with a view to alleviating the humanitarian conditions for the civilian population in Iraq and in order to facilitate the utilization of paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991), the 661 Committee [Committee on sanctions] is requested to study immediately those materials and supplies for essential civilian and humanitarian needs as identified in the Ahtisaari report with the purpose of drawing up a list of items which may, with the approval of the Security Council, be transferred from the 'no-objection' procedure to a simple notification procedure. Members of the Council may submit proposals of items for this purpose.

"With regard to imports of items subject to prior approval under the 'no-objection' procedure by the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) (i.e., items other than food and medicine), any member of the Committee putting forward an objection to such an import will offer a specific explanation at a meeting of the Committee.

"The members of the Council are aware of reports received concerning the approximately 2,000 Kuwaitis believed to be still detained in Iraq, access by the International Committee of the Red Cross to all detainees and places of detention, the return of Kuwaiti property, and particularly the return of Kuwaiti military equipment and their bearing upon the present state of Iraqi compliance with resolution 687(1991).

"In the light of the above, the Security Council will request the Secretary-General to prepare a factual report on Iraq's compliance with all the obligations placed upon it by resolution 687(1991) and subsequent relevant resolutions. This report will be made available to the Security Council in good time before the Council undertakes its next review under paragraph 21 of resolution 687(1991).

"In the course of consultations it was noted that resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991) gave to Iraq the possibility for oil sales to finance the purchase of foodstuffs, medicines and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs for the purpose of providing humanitarian relief. However, this possibility has not yet been used."

Repatriation of Kuwaitis and third-country nationals

In identical letters of 8 June 1991 to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President,(174) Iraq reported on the status of its compliance with its obligations under the terms of the cease-fire, among them to facilitate access to or the search for Kuwaiti and third-country nationals unaccounted for (resolution 687(1991), paragraph 30). Iraq stated that the number of those freed and repatriated had reached 6,366 (from Brazil (2), France (17), Ireland (1), Italy (5), Kuwait (6,289), Norway (1), Saudi Arabia (13), Spain (1), United States (36), Uruguay (1)) and that it had taken measures to provide ICRC with the names of persons detained in Iraq and to facilitate access to them. The Iraqi authorities had further enabled ICRC to register more than 3,000 Kuwaitis. They continued to search for missing nationals of the coalition countries registered with ICRC and had returned the remains of 15.

Report of the Secretary-General. Responding to a provision of Security Council resolution 706(1991), the Secretary-General reported on 12 September(175) on activities undertaken to facilitate the repatriation or return of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or their remains present in Iraq on or after 2 August 1990.

The report reproduced a number of communications on the subject received since 3 April from Kuwait and Saudi Arabia, listing the numbers of their nationals and those of other countries believed held in Iraq, together with Iraq's responses. The report contained information from ICRC, according to which a total of 4,178 POWs and 2,056 civilian internees, all former residents of Kuwait, were repatriated from Iraq to Kuwait between 6 March and 6 April. Of these, 1,174 civilians who returned on 7 March were not registered with ICRC.

Of 3,506 civilians, civilian internees or POWs registered with ICRC as of 18 August and wishing to return to Kuwait, 206 were verified and authorized for repatriation by Kuwait on 29 August. As to third-country nationals, ICRC had supervised the repatriation to Italy of 2, to the United Kingdom of 12 and to the United States of 23 POWs; and to Saudi Arabia of 28 POWs, 33 civilian internees and 49 civilians. ICRC also transmitted a list received from Kuwait on 9 September 1991 of 2,242 names of civilians and military personnel missing since 2 August 1990 and presumed arrested.

Terrorism

As required by the Security Council (resolution 687(1991), paragraph 32), Iraq, in identical letters of 11 June 1991, (176) informed the Secretary-General and the Council President of its rejection of all forms of violence that endangered the lives, liberty, security and peace of innocent persons, of its reaffirmation of the right of peoples to self-determination and the need to eliminate colonialism in all its forms in accordance with the United Nations Charter, and of its unhesitating and effective contribution to international efforts in combating international terrorism.

Iraq emphasized that it was a party to: the Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft (Tokyo, 1963), the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft (The Hague, Netherlands, 1970), the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation (Montreal, Canada, 1971) and the 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents;(177) and that it had signed the 1979 International Convention against the Taking of Hostages.(178)

In addition, Iraq's Penal Code did not regard acts of terrorism as political crimes; therefore, it protected its citizens against such acts and punished those responsible for them. In short, its position on international terrorism was fully in line with that of the majority of the international community.

Humanitarian assistance

WHO/UNICEF mission to Iraq

On 16 February 1991, amidst the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, a seven-member joint WHO/UNICEF mission crossed the border into Iraq at Khosravi/Munzaria from Tehran with a 12-truck convoy carrying 54 tons of basic medical and health supplies. The mission's broad mandate, set out by the Secretary-General in a press statement of 6 February, was to deliver a shipment of emergency medical supplies to assist in the care of children and mothers, and to ascertain essential health needs. Its report(179) was circulated by the Secretary-General on 4 March.

The mission, which was based at Baghdad during its five-day visit, focused on: the situation of women and children, particularly the nutrition of children and pregnant women; health services; protection against communicable diseases; requirements of essential drugs and vaccines; and water supply and sanitation.

Among the mission's recommendations were high-energy and high-protein food rations for the most vulnerable groups for an initial 30-day period; the immediate shipment through Iran of supplies for the control of cholera and meningococcal meningitis; a vaccine supply system whereby vaccines would be flown to Tehran, transported by road to Baghdad and distributed to outlying areas; and a three-month supply of diesel fuel, generator spare parts and four generators for mobile use, estimated at $520,000, to help contain sanitation problems due to damaged sewage and garbage disposal systems. Also recommended was emergency intervention to support Baghdad's water supply for three months, at a cost of $1,339,660: 1,800 tons of fuel to operate stand-by generators ($540,000); 1,500 metric tons of alum ($525,000); 45 metric tons of chlorine ($22,500); collars to repair water mains ($52,920); laboratory items ($49,240); and spare parts for water-treatment equipment ($150,000).

Mission to Iraq and Kuwait

Following the report of the WHO/UNICEF mission, the Secretary-General announced at a press briefing given jointly by WHO and UNICEF in New York on 1 March 1991 that it was evident that the United Nations system must act with speed to provide help to those in need, especially with respect to health and nutrition. He therefore decided to ask Under-Secretary-General Martti Ahtisaari to travel to the area at the earliest possible time to determine what action the United Nations could take.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (3 March)

The Security Council met on 3 March, inviting Iraq, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia to participate without vote under rule 37<sup>b</sup> of its provisional rules of procedure.

After consultations among Council members, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:(180)

"The Council welcomes the decisions taken to date relating to food and medical needs by the Committee established under resolution 661(1990) including those just taken to facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance including infant formula and water purification material.

"It calls upon the Committee to continue to act promptly on requests submitted to it for humanitarian assistance.

"It urges the Committee to pay particular attention to the findings and recommendations on critical medical/public health and nutritional conditions in Iraq which have been and will continue to be submitted to it by the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the International Committee of the Red Cross and other relevant organizations, consistent with the relevant resolutions, and urges these humanitarian agencies to play an active role in this process and cooperate closely with the Committee in its work.

"The Council welcomes the Secretary-General's announcement that he plans to send urgently a mission led by Under-Secretary-General Martti Ahtisaari comprising representatives of the appropriate United Nations agencies to Iraq and Kuwait to assess the humanitarian needs arising in the immediate post-crisis environment. The Council invites the Secretary-General to keep it informed in the shortest possible time on the progress of his mission on which it pledges to take immediate action."

Meeting number. SC 2979.

Reports of the mission. On 20 March 1991, the Secretary-General transmitted to the President of the Security Council the mission's report on its visit to Iraq, from 10 to 17 March.(181) Composed of the representatives of the United Nations Secretariat, UNDP, UNDRP, UNHCR, UNICEF, FAO and WHO, the mission focused on the primary areas of food and sustainable agricultural production to avert widespread starvation, safe water and sanitation, basic health and medical support, shelter, and the logistical means essential for effective emergency humanitarian assistance.

The mission observed that the recent conflict had wrought near-apocalyptic results on the economic infrastructure of what had been a highly urbanized and mechanized society, relegating Iraq to a pre-industrial age, but with all the disabilities of post-industrial dependency on an intensive use of energy and technology. Within that context and based on its findings, the mission recommended the immediate lifting of sanctions in respect of food supplies (specifically milk, wheat flour, rice, sugar, vegetable oil, tea) and agricultural machinery, equipment, spare parts and supplies (seeds, fertilizers, pesticides, veterinary drugs).

Apart from the need for adequate water supply for the hot season (April-September), assistance to make safe water available to cities outside Baghdad was required in the form of aluminium sulphate, chlorine, reagents, water-pipe collars, fuel for generators and transport, engine lubricants, water-station generators, skid-mounted river-water treatment units, chemical dosing pumps, gas chlorinators, pump sets and spare parts.

Immediate sanitation needs were for fuel and spare parts for garbage collection and sewage disposal systems (all mechanical and imported), and hoses for water-drawing tanker-trucks. Essential drugs and vaccines, chemicals and reagents, generators, battery-operated incubators, alternative communication (to the largely destroyed telephone and transport systems) and reinstitution of the cold chain for vaccines were among the medical needs mentioned.

Convinced of the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of dealing with the humanitarian needs it had identified without dealing equally urgently with the need for energy, the mission recommended permitting emergency oil imports and the patching up of a limited refining and electricity production capacity with essential supplies from other countries to make it possible to preserve and distribute imported food, purify water, dispose of and treat sewage, irrigate crops, transport medications and effectively assess needs.

Recommendations concerning refugees and other vulnerable groups included: development of a humanitarian programme to enable some 25 orphanages and 71 social welfare centres to resume activities; permitting importation of essential materials to build housing for an estimated 72,000 rendered homeless; and limited relief assistance for a number of the 64,000 Iranian nationals previously residing in three camps in Iraq, as well as for several hundred Palestinians who had recently gone to Baghdad from Kuwait.

Iraq had assured the mission that it would accept a United Nations system of monitoring imports and their use.

The mission visited Kuwait from 23 to 27 March. It received assistance from three other groups that were in the country at the same time: one headed by Abdulrahim Abby Farah looking into damages sustained by Kuwait since 2 August 1990 (see below), and a WHO and a UNICEF team. According to the report covering the visit, transmitted to the Council President on 28 March,<sup>(182)</sup> the scene of devastation left no doubt that a deliberate attempt had been made to extinguish Kuwait, its national identity, and the pride of its people in their history and achievements; the manner of destruction, with its coordinated vandalism and massive looting, had left an indelible image.

The mission concluded that an effective food system had already been established, and it did not appear that further external food aid was required. Water service was expected to return to normal in a matter of weeks, but it remained necessary to monitor the quality of the water being supplied. The country's three major sanitation plants required only superficial repairs and would be operational at the end of March. Garbage collection had been contracted for and was under way.

An action plan had been developed in cooperation with the WHO team to provide, during the next three months, emergency response to health-care requirements and problems. Short-term needs identified by the mission included diagnostic facilities, a blood bank, health information and education for which there was a rising demand, emergency medical care, and managerial, coordinating and technical skills for the reconstruction of the health-care infrastructure. In that connection, secondment of staff on a multilateral or bilateral basis to the Ministry of Public Health and the setting up of coordinating committees were urgently required. As a result of the UNICEF team's work, an airlift of urgently needed vaccines and cold-chain equipment had been mounted and a team had been fielded to help deal with the traumatic effects of war on children.

The mission suggested the creation of a national infrastructure to assess and communicate data relating to the impact on health of smoke and other emissions from the 500 to 800 oil wells torched by the retreating Iraqi forces and burning about 4 million to 6 million barrels of oil a day. It proposed urgent coordinated action in support of government efforts to deal with the threat to the civilian population from mines and other unexploded ordnance, suggesting that the heavily mined regions on the border with Saudi Arabia might need permanent fencing and crossing points. Rescue and specialist units to deal with mine-explosion victims might also be necessary.

As to refugees, displaced persons and other vulnerable groups, the mission suggested that UNHCR might establish an office in Kuwait, and, along with ICRC and the International Organization for Migration, begin consultations with Kuwait and the civil administration of the occupying forces for the purpose of defining protection measures and appropriate assistance for all such categories of persons.

Action by the Committee on sanctions. In the light of the findings and recommendations of the mission to Iraq, the Committee on sanctions adopted two decisions relating to that country's humanitarian needs.

By the first decision, adopted on 22 March 1991,<sup>(183)</sup> the Committee determined, with immediate effect, that humanitarian circumstances applied to the entire civilian population of Iraq in all parts of its national territory and that civilian and humanitarian imports to Iraq as identified by the report were integrally related to the supply of foodstuffs and supplies intended strictly for medical purposes (exempt from sanctions under resolution 661(1990)) and should also be allowed immediately. It decided on a simple notification procedure for foodstuffs supplied to Iraq and a no-objection procedure for those civilian and humanitarian imports (other than supplies intended strictly for medical purposes). Subject to prior notification, the Committee gave general approval under the relevant provision of resolution 670(1990) for all flights carrying only foodstuffs or supplies strictly for medical purposes.

The Committee noted Iraq's assurances to the mission that it would accept a system of monitoring of imports and their utilization and asked the Secretary-General to arrange for an on-the-spot monitoring system.

The second decision, adopted on 28 March,(184) concerned non-governmental organizations (NGOs) wishing to provide humanitarian assistance. It stipulated that notifications or authorization requests for humanitarian consignments to Iraq should be communicated to the Committee by the Governments of the States in which the NGOs were headquartered. Those Governments would be responsible for ensuring that the contents of such consignments were in conformity with the relevant Council resolutions and the Committee's decision of 22 March.

High-level mission to Kuwait

A high-level mission, headed by Abdulrahim Abby Farah, visited Kuwait from 16 March to 4 April 1991. It was dispatched by the Secretary-General, with the concurrence of the Security Council on 6 March,(185) in response to Kuwait's request of 27 February.(186) The mission's terms of reference were to receive information from Kuwaiti authorities and NGOs to enable it to assess the losses in life incurred during the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, from 2 August 1990 to 26 February 1991, and Iraqi practices against the civilian population there; and to assess the scope and nature of the damage inflicted on Kuwait's infrastructure during the period. Confined to assessment of the latter, the mission's report was transmitted to the Council President on 26 April.(187)

The report gave a comparative assessment of the general economic and social conditions prevailing before the Iraqi occupation and those found by the mission in March 1991, as well as a broad assessment of major damage to areas and sectors on which Kuwait had asked the mission to focus: oil industry; environment; agriculture, livestock and fisheries; electricity, transport and communications; housing, urban infrastructure and municipal services; social services; and banking, commerce and manufacturing.

The report noted that the dimensions of the damage to the country's infrastructure and of the repair and reconstruction required were so awesome as to impart a feeling of helplessness and despair. The oil industry was the most visibly and doubtless the most significantly affected of the sectors. The unprecedented catastrophe of hundreds of burning and gushing oil wells and the consequent pollution of the environment overshadowed the damage to the rest of the industry. Posing additional environmental problems were the hundreds of mines and unexploded ordnance that moreover posed a direct danger to life. Education had also suffered across the board. The situation facing Kuwait was one of compelling and competing priorities.

On 29 April, the Secretary-General transmitted an interim report(188) on the mission's assessment of the losses of life and Iraqi practices against the civilian population. For this task, the services of an expert were provided by the United Nations Centre for Human Rights; 87 interviews were conducted, 75 of them with individuals. It was difficult to obtain information because of the displacement of Kuwait's population: of an original 650,000 Kuwaitis, only an estimated 200,000 remained in the country during the occupation; more than 1 million foreign nationals, or two thirds of their original number, had been compelled to leave the country. For this reason, Kuwait had requested that preparation of a full report be deferred.

Information relating to the loss of life was considered within the framework of existing international human rights norms, including the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights(189) and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.(190) The term "loss of life" was also interpreted to cover enforced or involuntary disappearance. Information relating to Iraqi practices was examined in the context of the 1949 Fourth Geneva Convention (relative to the protection of civilian persons in time of war) and categorized under: arbitrary arrest and/or detention; ill-treatment while in detention; ill-treatment of civilians; deportation; non-observance of the right to life; expropriation of property; destruction of property; and reprisals and collective punishment.

Fact-finding activities covered the situation of all civilians in Kuwait, including expatriate nationals and the diplomatic community. Precise figures could not be obtained for the losses of life, but oral testimony pointed to a relatively high number of violent deaths, attributable to two Iraqi intelligence bodies, Istahbarat and Muhabarat, and to summary executions by the Iraqi military. Inquiry yielded no evidence of any form of trial or judicial or quasi-judicial process. The Human Rights Committee of Kuwait had recorded, as of 20 March, applications in respect of over 11,700 persons reported missing; the Red Crescent Society reported giving ICRC in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, 10,500 names of persons whose repatriation needed to be negotiated with Iraq. Arbitrary arrest and detention, followed by deportation or "transfer" to Iraq, were alleged, as were cases of cruel and inhuman treatment and torture (with instruments of torture shown to the mission), rape, reprisals and collective punishment.

As to the expatriate nationals-the Arab-Asian community and nationals of OECD members-the mission received a statement from the Ambassador of the United Kingdom to Kuwait of his community's experiences, which he had also delivered to the 1991 session of the Commission on Human Rights. It also received accounts of foreign workers (some 87,000 Pakistanis and 22,000 Filipinos) forced to flee the country under conditions of duress, without food supplies and through prescribed land routes that were arduous.

Diplomatic and consular missions were ordered closed by 24 August 1990, so that diplomats were treated as civilians protected only by the Fourth Geneva Convention. Diplomatic missions not in compliance were subjected to deliberate acts of harassment, such as internment in their own premises, suspension of water, electricity and telephone communications, and forcible entry into specific diplomatic residences.

The report concluded that, from the foregoing, there appeared to have been no law regulating the conduct of Kuwait's occupation.

Kurdish and other displaced populations

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

At the urgent request of Turkey<sup>(191)</sup> and France,<sup>(192)</sup> the Security Council met on 5 April 1991 to discuss the serious situation arising from abuses being committed against the population in several parts of Iraq, particularly in those inhabited by Kurds. Because of its repercussions, both France and Turkey viewed the situation as a threat to international peace and security in the region.

At their request, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Greece, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Portugal, Spain, Sweden and Turkey were invited to participate without the right to vote, under rule 37<sup>b</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Turkey stated that, in their attempt to quell the various insurgencies that had erupted in Iraq following the cease-fire, Iraq's armed forces were indiscriminately using deadly fire-power, causing more than 200,000 Kurds, Arabs and Turkomans to flee to the north near the border with Iran and Turkey, half of whom reportedly had crossed into Turkey. The fleeing masses were being exposed not only to the elements and the cold of winter in the mountainous border area, but also to intense mortar fire. Turkey objected to the landing of shells on its territory and would not allow its border provinces to be overwhelmed by such a flood of displaced populations.

According to Iran, it was providing refuge to some 110,000 Iraqi civilians who had crossed into the country to escape their own Government's armed forces. Iran referred to the heavy burden of sheltering these innocent victims, whose horrifying accounts of repression pointed to the Iraqi military's indiscriminate methods and use of unconventional weapons. The implications of the situation for Iran and other neighbouring countries made it urgent for the Council to take steps to put an early end to the Iraqi people's suffering.

Iraq stated that it had firm evidence of attempts by some neighbouring States to foment dissent through saboteurs throughout Iraq, thereby to destabilize the country, perhaps even to partition it into mini-States. The saboteurs, whom Iraq could not allow to carry out their evil deeds, fled to safe haven beyond the borders to the north, and, on the way, convinced many innocent citizens through terror and intimidation to leave the country. It had, however, announced that all Iraqi citizens might return home at any time; it had also declared general amnesty to all who had contravened the laws, except those who had committed major crimes and murder. It welcomed the dispatch to Iraq of an international mission, which would be guaranteed freedom of movement and communications so that it might ascertain the facts of the situation.

Statements were made by 28 other Member States, the majority of whom viewed with alarm the massive exodus of Iraqi civilians fleeing repression at the hands of their Government. They called for concerted international humanitarian aid for them, particularly for the Kurdish minority, and demanded that conditions be created to enable them to return to their homes in safety and dignity.

At the same meeting the Council adopted a draft resolution on the situation as resolution 688(1991).

The Security Council,

Mindful of its duties and its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling Article 2, paragraph- 7, of the Charter,

Gravely concerned by the repression of the Iraqi civilian population in many parts of Iraq, including-most recently in Kurdish-populated areas, which led to a massive flow of refugees towards and across international frontiers and to cross-border incursions, which threaten international peace and security in the region,

Deeply disturbed by the magnitude of the human suffering involved.

Taking note of the letters from the Permanent Representative of Turkey to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council dated 2 April 1991 and of the letter dated 4 April 1991 from the Charge d'affaires of the Permanent Mission of France to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council.

Taking note also of the letters dated 3 and 4 April 1991, respectively, from the Permanent Representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Iraq and of all States in the area,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General of 20 March 1991,

1. Condemns the repression of the Iraqi civilian population in many parts of Iraq, including most recently in Kurdish-populated areas, the consequences of which threaten international peace and security in the region;

2. Demands that Iraq, as a contribution to removing the threat to international peace and security in the region, immediately end this repression and, in the same context, expresses the hope that an open dialogue will take place to ensure that the human and political rights of all Iraqi citizens are respected;

3. Insists that Iraq allow immediate access by international humanitarian organizations to all those in need of assistance in all parts of Iraq and make available all necessary facilities for their operations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue his humanitarian efforts in Iraq and to report forthwith, if appropriate on the basis of a further mission to the region, on the plight of the Iraqi civilian population, and in particular the Kurdish population, suffering from the repression in all its forms inflicted by the Iraqi authorities;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to use all the resources at his disposal, including those of the relevant United Nations agencies, to address urgently the critical needs of the refugees and displaced Iraqi population;

6. Appeals to all Member States and to all humanitarian organizations to contribute to these humanitarian relief efforts;

7. Demands that Iraq cooperate with the Secretary-General to these ends;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 668(1991)

5 April 1991

Meeting 2982

10-3-2

4-nation draft (S/22448).

Sponsors: Belgium, France, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: Cuba, Yemen, Zimbabwe,

Abstaining: China, India.

Iraq, on 8 April, (1993) informed the Secretary-General and the Council President that the Council had seen fit to adopt another tendentious and biased resolution against Iraq, despite its expression of readiness to receive a United Nations fact-finding mission. The resolution's reference to cross-border incursions, without any basis in fact, was a calumny. To ask Iraq to allow humanitarian organizations to function so as to provide relief was meaningless since it had been giving full cooperation to such organizations already operating in the country.

It was paradoxical that countries like Iran, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United States, which had incited agents and subversives against Iraqi authority, should stir up defamatory and condemnatory campaigns against Iraq for undertaking to restore security and stability in the country. The majority of the so-called refugees were peaceable inhabitants deceived by agents who, when thwarted, had intimidated them with false allegations and forced them to flee their homes.

Inter-agency humanitarian programme

In view of the exceptional dimensions of the human tragedy unfolding in the Persian Gulf region and the need for urgent measures by the United Nations system, the Secretary-General, on 9 April 1991, appointed Sadruddin Aga Khan as his Executive Delegate in the context of a United Nations inter-agency humanitarian programme for Iraq, Kuwait and the Iraq/Turkey and Iraq/Iran border areas. The Executive Delegate would be based at Geneva and assisted by a small group of staff drawn from the organizations and agencies involved.

The tasks entrusted to the Executive Delegate were: to identify the needs, problems and operational gaps in the United Nations system at work in the Persian Gulf, and suggest appropriate measures; to prepare timely, consolidated appeals and ensure their regular updating; to act as a catalyst to highlight humanitarian needs and stimulate a generous response from the international community; to keep the Secretary-General informed about humanitarian issues relating to the Persian Gulf crisis by constant monitoring and reporting; to provide a means of bringing urgent matters to the attention of the Secretary-General, donors, government authorities and United Nations agencies; to represent the Secretary-General at inter-agency and other meetings and to ensure adherence to his policy guidelines; and to maintain high-level contacts with all Governments, particularly those directly concerned, at Geneva and in the field.

Also on 9 April, the Secretary-General designated Eric Suy (Belgium) as his Personal Representative to head a seven-member team to northern Iraq to look into the situation of the civilian population, in particular the Kurds, refugees and displaced populations of Iraq.

Inter-agency mission to Iraq (April)

At the request of Iraq, discussions were held at Baghdad between the Government and a United Nations mission led by the Secretary-General's Personal Representative, from 13 to 18 April 1991, and a United Nations inter-agency mission led by his Executive Delegate, from 16 to 18 April. The discussions concerned the suffering of the Iraqi civilian population affected by recent events and Security Council resolution 688(1991), which Iraq had not accepted. The result was a Memorandum of Understanding signed at Baghdad on 18 April by Iraq's Minister for Foreign Affairs and by the Executive Delegate.

The Memorandum outlined the basic framework for the United Nations humanitarian presence and action where needed in Iraq, including measures by the Government to facilitate such action. The object of the effort was to promote the voluntary return home of Iraqi displaced persons and to take measures to avert new flows of such persons and refugees from Iraq. This called for the urgent setting up of: United Nations sub-offices and humanitarian centres, to be staffed by civilian personnel of the United Nations and specialized agencies, and perhaps of NGOs, ICRC and the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies; routes of return with relay stations along the way and logistic back-up capabilities; and a radio communication system. Assistance would include food aid, medical care, agricultural rehabilitation, shelter and other relief measures geared to the speedy normalization of life; it would be impartial, and all in need would be entitled to it.

Centres close to the borders with Iraq's neighbouring countries would receive priority. To that end, the United Nations, in cooperation with Iraq, might organize airlifts and land transport of humanitarian assistance and relief goods from and through those countries. The Government would establish forthwith a relief distribution and monitoring structure to permit access to all civilians covered by the programme.

The Memorandum provided for the assignment of a Coordinator, at the Assistant Secretary-General level, under the Executive Delegate's direction, with permanent access to a high-level government official responsible for emergency activities, as well as for the programme's implementation, without prejudice to the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence, security and non-interference in the internal affairs of Iraq.

The foregoing principles and operational modalities would be applicable until 31 December 1991, subject to review two weeks before that date.

Iraq, in transmitting the Memorandum to the Secretary-General on 21 April,(194) drew attention to centres in the Zakho region in northern Iraq under the control of armed forces of the United States and other countries. Objecting to this as a serious violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity, Iraq asked the United Nations to assume responsibility for those centres.

The Secretary-General, on 30 May, conveyed to the Security Council President an agreement, reached on 25 May between the Executive Delegate's Coordinator, Bernt Bernander, and the Foreign Minister of Iraq, regarding the deployment of a United Nations Guard Contingent in Iraq. The agreement constituted an annex to the Memorandum of Understanding.(195)

According to the annex, 10 United Nations Guards had been dispatched to Dohuk on 19 May to establish a United Nations presence at the sub-office and depots there and to liaise with the transit camps in the Zakho plain so as to assume control of those camps. The Dohuk/Zakho-based unit would ultimately have a strength of 50 to 60 Guards. The Contingent's strength would not exceed 500 Guards, and the number assigned to any one region would not exceed 150. They would move freely as their duties required between humanitarian reception points, transit centres, relay stations and sub-offices; they would be authorized to carry side-arms (pistols/revolvers) provided by the Iraqi authorities. Iraq would appoint, in addition to liaison officers at each centre, a Chief Liaison Officer to facilitate Contingent operations.

The annex would be governed by the terms of the Memorandum of Understanding, including the period of applicability, and be implemented in coordination with the Iraqi authorities.

Inter-agency mission to Iraq (June/July)

The Executive Delegate of the Secretary-General led another inter-agency mission to Iraq from 29 June to 13 July 1991. Composed of representatives of UNDP, UNICEF, UNHCR, WFP, FAO and WHO, the mission was to assess current needs for humanitarian assistance and to recommend measures for meeting those needs. For that purpose, it visited sites in 16 of the 18 governorates (including Baghdad). Its report was submitted to the President of the Security Council on 15 July.(196)

The mission made detailed assessments of conditions and identified priority needs with respect to water supply and sanitation, health services, food supply, electricity and oil production, and telecommunication. Using the best information available, the mission estimated that to return the systems in each of those areas to their pre-war condition would require $450 million for water and sanitation systems; an indicative figure of $500 million for international imports for the health sector for one year; $2.64 billion for food imports; $500 million for agricultural imports; $12 billion for power-generating capacity; and $6 billion for the oil sector.

The mission felt that, to address the humanitarian needs of Iraq, it would have to import certain essential items. Observing that Iraq's problem had to do more with financing imports than with the prohibitions under the sanctions in force against it, the mission suggested that funds could be generated either by lifting the freeze on Iraqi assets in third countries or by selling Iraqi oil. As to the latter, the Security Council was empowered to approve exceptions to the prohibition against the import of commodities and products originating in Iraq (resolution 687(1991), paragraph 24).

In sum, the mission recommended that immediate steps be taken to alleviate the priority needs identified. This meant importing essential goods and materials, including: foodstuffs to meet minimum consumption requirements; fertilizers, pesticides, animal feed and drugs, machinery and spare parts to repair damaged irrigation and drainage systems; drugs and raw materials for local pharmaceutical production, vaccines, medical supplies and equipment (medical, surgical, dental, diagnostic), and vehicles (plus spare parts) and ambulances; supplies, equipment and spare parts, replacement pumps and other heavy equipment for water-treatment and pumping facilities, as well as for sewage-treatment systems; and equipment, materials and spare parts for electric power systems, and for the oil and telecommunication sectors.

A monitoring system should be set up for the adequate control of the related import and export transactions, which could be made sufficiently transparent at the international level. Monitoring arrangements in the context of the United Nations humanitarian presence in Iraq, as outlined in the Memorandum of Understanding, could be further developed to provide adequate information on the destination and use of the goods.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 August 1991, the Security Council, having considered the report of the inter-agency mission, adopted resolution 706(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions and in particular resolutions 661(1990), 686(1991), 687(1991), 688(1991), 692(1991), 699(1991) and 705(1991),

Taking note of the report dated 15 July 1991 of the inter-agency mission headed by the Executive Delegate of the Secretary-General for the United Nations inter-agency humanitarian programme for Iraq, Kuwait and the Iraq/Turkey and Iraq/Iran border areas,

Concerned by the serious nutritional and health situation of the Iraqi civilian population as described in this report, and by the risk of a further deterioration of this situation,

Concerned also that the repatriation or return of all Kuwaitis and third-country nationals or their remains present in Iraq on or after 2 August 1990, pursuant to paragraph 2 (c) of resolution 686(1991) and paragraphs 30 and 31 of resolution 687(1991), has not yet been fully carried out,

Taking note of the conclusions of the above-mentioned report, and in particular of the proposal for oil sales by Iraq to finance the purchase of foodstuffs, medicines and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs for the purpose of providing humanitarian relief,

Taking note also of the letters dated 14 April 1991, 31 May 1991, 6 June 1991, 9 July 1991 and 22 July 1991 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iraq and the Permanent Representative of Iraq to the Chairman of the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) concerning the export from Iraq of petroleum and petroleum products,

Convinced of the need for equitable distribution of humanitarian relief to all segments of the Iraqi civilian population through effective monitoring and transparency,

Recalling and reaffirming in this regard its resolution 688(1991) and in particular the importance which the Council attaches to Iraq allowing unhindered access by international humanitarian organizations to all those in need of assistance in all parts of Iraq and making available all necessary facilities for their operation, and in this connection stressing the important and continuing role played by the Memorandum of Understanding between the United Nations and the Government of Iraq of 18 April 1991,

Recalling that, pursuant to resolutions 687(1991), 692(1991) and 699(1991), Iraq is required to pay the full costs of the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency in carrying out the tasks authorized by section C of resolution 687(1991), and that the Secretary-General in his report to the Security Council of 15 July 1991, submitted pursuant to paragraph 4 of resolution 699(1991), expressed the view that the most obvious way of obtaining financial resources from Iraq to meet the costs of the Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency would be to authorize the sale of some Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products; recalling further that Iraq is required to pay its contributions to the Compensation Fund and half the costs of the Iraq-Kuwait Boundary Demarcation Commission, and recalling further that in its resolutions 686(1991) and 687(1991) the Security Council demanded that Iraq return in the shortest possible time all Kuwaiti property seized by it and requested the Secretary-General to take steps to facilitate this,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Authorizes all States, subject to the decision to be taken by the Security Council pursuant to paragraph 5 below and notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs 3 (a), 3 (b) and 4 of resolution 661(1990), to permit the import, during a period of six months from the date of passage of the resolution pursuant to paragraph 5 below, of petroleum and petroleum products originating in Iraq sufficient to produce a sum to be determined by the Council following receipt of the report of the Secretary-General requested in paragraph 5 of this resolution but not to exceed 1.6 billion United States dollars for the purposes set out in this resolution and subject to the following conditions:

(a) Approval of each purchase of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products by the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) following notification to the Committee by the State concerned;

(b) Payment of the full amount of each purchase of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products directly by the purchaser in the State concerned into an escrow account to be established by the United Nations and to be administered by the Secretary-General, exclusively to meet the purposes of this resolution;

(c) Approval by the Council, following the report of the Secretary-General requested in paragraph 5 of this resolution, of a scheme for the purchase of foodstuffs, medicines and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs as referred to in paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991), in particular health-related materials, all of which to be labelled to the extent possible as being supplied under this scheme, and for all feasible and appropriate United Nations monitoring and supervision for the purpose of assuring their equitable distribution to meet humanitarian needs in all regions of Iraq and to all categories of the Iraqi civilian population, as well as all feasible and appropriate management relevant to this purpose, such a United Nations role to be available if desired for humanitarian assistance from other sources;

(d) The sum authorized in this paragraph to be released by successive decisions of the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) in three equal portions after the Council has taken the decision provided for in paragraph 5 below on the implementation of this resolution, and notwithstanding any other provision of this paragraph, the sum to be subject to review concurrently by the Council on the basis of its ongoing assessment of the needs and requirements;

2. Decides that a part of the sum in the account to be established by the Secretary-General shall be made available by him to finance the purchase of foodstuffs, medicines and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs, as referred to in paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991), and the cost to the United Nations of its roles under this resolution and of other necessary humanitarian activities in Iraq;

3. Decides that a part of the sum in the account to be established by the Secretary-General shall be used by him for appropriate payments to the United Nations Compensation Fund, the full costs of carrying out the tasks authorized by section C of resolution 687(1991), the full costs incurred by the United Nations in facilitating the return of all Kuwaiti property seized by Iraq, and half the costs of the Boundary Commission;

4. Decides that the percentage of the value of exports of petroleum and petroleum products from Iraq, authorized under this resolution to be paid to the United Nations Compensation Fund, as called for in paragraph 19 of resolution 687(1991), and as defined in paragraph 6 of resolution 692(1991), shall be the same as the percentage decided by the Security Council in paragraph 2 of resolution 705(1991) for payments to the Compensation Fund, until such time as the Governing Council of the Fund decides otherwise;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit within 20 days of the date of adoption of this resolution a report to the Security Council for decision on measures to be taken in order to implement paragraphs 1 (a), (b) and (c), estimates of the humanitarian requirements of Iraq set out in paragraph 2 above and of the amount of Iraq's financial obligations set out in paragraph 3 above up to the end of the period of the authorization in paragraph 1 above, as well as the method for taking the necessary legal measures to ensure that the purposes of this resolution are carried out and the method for taking account of the costs of transportation of such Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General in consultation with the International Committee of the Red Cross to submit within 20 days of the date of adoption of this resolution a report to the Security Council on activities undertaken in accordance with paragraph 31 of resolution 687(1991) in connection with facilitating the repatriation or return of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or their remains present in Iraq on or after 2 August 1990;

7. Requires the Government of Iraq to provide to the Secretary-General and appropriate international organizations, on the first day of the month immediately following the adoption of the present resolution and on the first day of each month thereafter until further notice, a statement of the gold and foreign currency reserves it holds whether in Iraq or elsewhere;

8. Calls upon all States to cooperate fully in the implementation of this resolution;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Abstaining: Yemen.

Speaking before the adoption of the resolution, Iraq said the provisions of the text impinged on its national sovereignty and imposed a foreign guardianship on its people, thus depriving its legitimate Government of its powers and responsibilities with respect to its citizens. It gave foreign Powers the right to control Iraq's natural resources and subordinated the humanitarian objective of the inter-agency mission to suspect political motives. It undermined the provisions of resolution 687(1991) and converted the partial lifting of the sanctions into colonialist restrictions that would rob Iraq of its right to full sovereignty, interfere in its internal affairs, plunder its oil wealth and usurp its right to dispose of its own funds.

Whereas the text should have sought to accommodate the report's proposal for the sale of oil to finance urgent humanitarian relief, it allowed other States instead, through a slow and complicated mechanism, to purchase limited amounts of Iraqi oil. It laid stress, not on humanitarian relief, but on the payment of sums for the expenses of the Special Commission dealing with the destruction of weapons, of the Iraq-Kuwait Border Demarcation Commission and of the United Nations Compensation Fund and for expenses incurred by the restitution of Kuwaiti property.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a report of 4 September 1991, (197) the Secretary-General submitted his recommendations for implementing the provisions of resolution 706(1991) in a manner to promote and satisfy effectively its objectives and purposes. Annexed were estimates of Iraq's humanitarian requirements and the Executive Delegate's proposals for in-country monitoring of the distribution of the emergency imports to meet those requirements, dated 28 and 27 August, respectively.

According to the series of specific recommendations, Iraq, through the State Organization for the Marketing of Oil, its oil authority, would market and sell the petroleum, free on board Ceyhan (Turkey). Contract terms would stipulate that: the contract would enter into force only on approval by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) (Committee on sanctions), following notification to it by the State in which the purchaser was based; the purchaser would deposit the proceeds from the sale into a United Nations escrow account, administered by the Secretary-General in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations; the purchaser would open a letter of credit, issued by a reputable international bank, for each transaction providing for payment into the escrow account; and the oil would be shipped via the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline from Iraq to Turkey.

The Committee on sanctions would have ultimate responsibility for monitoring the sale of Iraqi oil, with the assistance of independent inspection agents appointed by the United Nations, to verify that every contract included the terms mentioned above and that the sale price was reasonable. The Committee would adopt procedures for the prompt approval of contracts; the States of the purchasers' location would do likewise for the submission of contracts. The inspection agents, stationed at Iraqi access points to the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline, at the Iraq-Turkey border and at the Yumurtalik loading terminal, would ensure that the quantity and quality of the oil delivered were in accord with contract terms and properly approved.

The Council resolution approving the current report should incorporate explicit language setting forth the immunity of the oil, requiring Iraq to take all steps to accord immunity to the oil and calling on Turkey to ensure that the oil not be subject to legal proceedings while in Turkish jurisdiction. The escrow account, to be set up as a United Nations account protected by the immunities of the United Nations, would enjoy additional protection from establishing it in a bank of a country whose national laws enjoyed maximum protection from third-party claims. The resolution should further include explicit language ensuring the immunities of the escrow account.

Iraq would undertake necessary purchases to meet its humanitarian needs, the purchases and deliveries to be monitored by the United Nations with the assistance of the inspection agents. Iraq's list of humanitarian needs would be submitted for approval to the Committee on sanctions through the Office of the Executive Delegate. On approval, the Committee would notify the Secretary-General to authorize payments from the escrow account; the Office of the Executive Delegate would in turn notify Iraq to initiate purchases and deliveries.

The inspection agents would evaluate, verify and monitor every element of the transaction up to the entry points to Iraq. Partial payment might be made to suppliers at delivery time, the remainder to be paid when approved by the Committee on sanctions, subject to confirmation of contract compliance and approval by the Office of the Executive Delegate. Government agencies would arrange movement of goods to designated centres and notify the Office of the Executive Delegate accordingly to enable the United Nations agencies to set up monitoring arrangements in accordance with the Executive Delegate's proposals.

General recommendations concerned the release of funds from escrow in three equal tranches, the first tranche to be released following the adoption of an enabling resolution on the matter; increasing, at the appropriate time, the $1.6 billion ceiling set for meeting Iraq's humanitarian needs; the question of allowing assets held in favour of Iraq or any voluntary contributions to be deposited into the escrow account as a sub-account; and a suggestion that transportation costs for the Iraqi petroleum payable to Turkey be met in cash or in kind, such as the export of oil over and above the quantity necessary to meet the requirements of resolution 706(1991).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (19 September)

The Security Council met on 19 September 1991 to consider the Secretary-General's report and a related draft resolution. At its request, Iraq was invited to participate without the right to vote under rule 37<sup>b</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Following statements by Iraq, Yemen and Cuba, the Council adopted resolution 712(1991).

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions and in particular resolutions 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, 686(1991) of 2 March 1991, 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, 688(1991) of 5 April 1991, 692(1991) of 20 May 1991, 699(1991) of 17 June 1991, and 705(1991) and 706(1991) of 15 August 1991,

Expressing its appreciation for the report dated 4 September 1991 submitted by the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraph 5 of resolution 706(1991),

Reaffirming its concern about the nutritional and health situation of the Iraqi civilian population and the risk of a further deterioration of this situation, and underlining the need in this context for fully up-to-date assessments of the situation in all parts of Iraq as a basis for the equitable distribution of humanitarian relief to all segments of the Iraqi civilian population,

Recalling that the activities to be carried out by or on behalf of the Secretary-General to meet the purposes referred to in resolution 706(1991) and the present resolution enjoy the privileges and immunities of the United Nations,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Confirms the figure mentioned in paragraph 1 of resolution 706(1991) as the sum authorized for the purpose of that paragraph, and reaffirms its intention to review this sum on the basis of its ongoing assessment of the needs and requirements, in accordance with paragraph 1 (d) of resolution 706(1991);

2. Invites the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) to authorize immediately, pursuant to paragraph 1 (d) of resolution 706(1991), the release by the Secretary-General from the escrow account of the first one-third portion of the sum referred to in paragraph 1 above, such release to take place as required subject to the availability of funds in the account and, in the case of payments, to finance the purchase of foodstuffs, medicines and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs that have been notified or approved in accordance with existing procedures, subject to compliance with the procedures laid down in the report of the Secretary-General as approved in paragraph 3 below;

3. Approves the recommendations in the Secretary-General's report as contained in its paragraphs 57 (d) and 58;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General and the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) to cooperate, in close consultation with the Government of Iraq, on a continuing basis to ensure the most effective implementation of the scheme approved in the present resolution;

5. Decides that petroleum and petroleum products subject to resolution 706(1991) shall while under Iraqi title be immune from legal proceedings and not be subject to any form of attachment, garnishment or execution, and that all States shall take any steps that may be necessary under their respective domestic legal systems to assure this protection, and to ensure that the proceeds of sale are not diverted from the purposes laid down in resolution 706(1991);

6. Reaffirms that the escrow account to be established by the United Nations and administered by the Secretary-General to meet the purposes of resolution 706(1991) and the present resolution, like the Compensation Fund established by resolution 692(1991), enjoys the privileges and immunities of the United Nations;

7. Reaffirms that the inspectors and other experts on mission for the United Nations, appointed for the purpose of the present resolution, enjoy privileges and immunities in accordance with the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, and demands that Iraq allow them full freedom of movement and all necessary facilities;

8. Confirms that funds contributed from other sources may if desired, in accordance with paragraph 1 (c) of resolution 706(1991), be deposited into the escrow account as a sub-account and be immediately available to meet Iraq's humanitarian needs as referred to in paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991) without any of the obligatory deductions and administrative costs specified in paragraphs 2 and 3 of resolution 706(1991);

9. Urges that any provision to Iraq of foodstuffs, medicines or other items of a humanitarian character, in addition to those purchased with the funds referred to in paragraph 1 of the present resolution, be undertaken through arrangements that assure their equitable distribution to meet humanitarian needs;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take the actions necessary to implement the above decisions, and authorizes him to enter into any arrangements or agreements necessary to accomplish this;

11. Calls upon States to cooperate fully in the implementation of resolution 706(1991) and the present resolution, in particular with respect to any measures regarding the import of petroleum and petroleum products and the export of foodstuffs, medicines and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs as referred to in paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991), and also with respect to the privileges and immunities of the United Nations and its personnel implementing the present resolution, and to ensure that there are no diversions from the purposes laid down in these resolutions;

12. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 712(1991)

Meeting 3008

Against: Cuba.

Abstaining: Yemen.

Commenting on the text, Iraq said paragraph 1 confirming the ceiling of $1.6 billion totally ignored Iraq's humanitarian needs as recommended by the Executive Delegate, and thus fell short by $800 million. Paragraph 2 took no account of the usual provision in oil-marketing contracts of a payment period of two to four months from the date of shipment, making no funds available during that period; nor did it allow Iraq to export oil in the free market, thus lowering the price of oil. Paragraph 3, besides ignoring the expenses of producing and transporting oil within Iraq and limiting transit through Turkey, made for illegal intervention in bilateral agreements between Iraq and Turkey, flouting existing agreements between them. Paragraph 6, according privileges and immunities to United Nations personnel regardless of position, as well as full freedom of movement, flouted Iraqi laws and international conventions on diplomatic privileges and immunities. While the text called for continuing consultations between Iraq and the Committee on sanctions, it deliberately ignored consultations on Iraq's import needs.

Action by the Committee on sanctions. On 19 September 1991,<sup>(198)</sup> the Committee on sanctions informed the Secretary-General of its decision to authorize him, pursuant to paragraph 1 (d) of Security Council resolution 706(1991), to release the first one-third portion of the $1.6 billion from the United Nations escrow account. The release was to take place subject to the availability of funds in the account and, in the case of payments to finance the purchase of essential materials and supplies to meet Iraqi humanitarian needs, subject to compliance with the procedures laid down in the Secretary-General's report as approved by the Council.

By a decision of 15 October,(199) the Committee laid down a series of procedures to be employed with respect to the monitoring and verification of the sale of oil from Iraq and the corresponding purchase by Iraq of foodstuffs, medicines, materials and supplies for essential civilian needs, as well as to the related payment into and from the United Nations escrow account established for the purpose.

Other assistance

During 1991, the Syrian Arab Republic, on 31 January,(200) and Djibouti, on 8 February,(201) informed the Secretary-General that, as a result of their compliance with Security Council resolution 661(1990)(202) imposing economic sanctions against Iraq, they were confronted with special economic problems and so were applying for assistance as provided for by Article 50 of the United Nations Charter.

In keeping with the task entrusted to it by the Council, also in 1990,(203) to examine requests for such assistance and make recommendations for appropriate action, the Committee on sanctions, on 18 March,(204) transmitted to the Council President two decisions it had adopted on behalf of the two States. By the decisions, the Committee appealed to all States to provide immediate technical, financial and material assistance to mitigate the adverse impact on the economies of the two applicant States, and invited the competent organs of the United Nations system to review their programmes of assistance with a view to alleviating the problems of the two States; it asked the Secretary-General regularly to seek information on action taken in this regard and to report to the Council.

The Council President conveyed those decisions to the Secretary-General on 21 March(205) with a request that he implement the actions requested of him.

On 22 March,(206) Djibouti and the Syrian Arab Republic joined 19 other States similarly suffering from the adverse consequences of their compliance with the economic sanctions against Iraq-Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, India, Jordan, Lebanon, Mauritania, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Seychelles, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Tunisia, Uruguay, Viet Nam, Yemen and Yugoslavia-in addressing a memorandum to the Council President. Invoking Article 50 of the Charter, they appealed to donor States for urgent assistance by allocating additional financial resources through bilateral channels and by supporting actions of the competent United Nations organs and specialized agencies. They requested economic assistance, as well as cooperation with them in trade, employment and other areas, and asked the Council to give renewed attention to their problems with a view to finding quick and effective solutions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (29 April)

The Security Council, following consultations among its members on the appeal, met on 29 April 1991 and authorized its President to make the following statement on its behalf(207)

“The members of the Security Council have considered the memorandum dated 22 March 1991 which was addressed to the President of the Security Council by the 21 States which have invoked Article 50 of the United Nations Charter owing to the special economic problems arising from the implementation of the sanctions imposed against Iraq and Kuwait under Council resolution 661(1990).

“The members of the Security Council have taken note of the Secretary-General’s oral report to them on 11 April 1991, in which he supported the appeal launched by the 21 States that have invoked Article 50. The Secretary-General further informed the Council on 26 April 1991 of the conclusions reached by the Administrative Committee on Coordination at the session it has just held in Paris, where members of the Committee agreed to vigorously pursue their efforts to respond effectively to the needs of countries most affected by the implementation of resolution 661(1990). The Secretary-General will coordinate through the Committee, within the framework of this assistance, the activities of organizations of the United Nations system.

“The members of the Security Council have taken note of the replies from a number of States (Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Luxembourg on behalf of the European Community and its 12 member States, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland, USSR, United Kingdom and United States) which have furnished specific information on the assistance they have provided to various affected countries; they have also taken note of the replies from officials of international financial institutions, such as those received from the President of the World Bank and the Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund. They invite other Member States and international financial institutions and organizations to inform the Secretary-General as soon as possible of the measures that they have taken on behalf of the States which have invoked Article 50.

“The members of the Security Council make a solemn appeal to States, international financial institutions and United Nations bodies to respond positively and speedily to the recommendations of the Security Council Committee established under resolution 661(1990) for assistance to countries which find themselves confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of those measures imposed by resolution 661(1990) and which have invoked Article 50.

“The members of the Security Council note that the procedure established under Article 50 of the Charter remains in effect.”

Chapter IV

Europe

The tide of micro-nationalism that began to rise in 1989, and swept through Central and Eastern Europe and the USSR, led to the splintering of the USSR in 1991 into 15 new States that were its former constituent republics. Of these, the Baltic States of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, which were the first to declare independence, were admitted to membership of the United Nations in September.

Reverting to their Balkan pluralism in 1991 were four of the six republics comprising Yugoslavia: Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Macedonia and Slovenia, which unilaterally declared independence between June and October. The declarations resulted in armed conflicts with the Republic of Serbia, which disapproved of them, and in ethnic strife within the four republics. Several cease-fire agreements, negotiated through the efforts of the European Community, had failed to take hold. The escalating violence was brought to the attention of the Security Council in September. By three resolutions, the Council sought to bring about acceptance of a cease-fire by all the Yugoslav parties so that a United Nations peace-keeping operation might be deployed to establish the conditions necessary for negotiations on Yugoslavia's future.

Eastern Europe*USSR

The constituent republics of the USSR—Armenia, Azerbaijan, the Byelorussian SSR, Estonia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Moldavian SSR, the Russian Soviet Federative Socialist Republic (Russian Federation), Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, the Ukrainian SSR and Uzbekistan—broke away from the 1922 Union Treaty on the Formation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and declared their independence in 1991. On 21 December, 11 of these constituted the Commonwealth of Independent States and decided to support continuance by the Russian Federation of the membership held by the dissolved USSR in the United Nations, including its permanent membership in the Security Council and in other international organizations.

The Secretary-General was officially informed of these developments through a series of communications, including a declaration of 20 August 1991 by the 12-member European Community (EC)<sup>(1)</sup> condemning the attempted coup d'état in the USSR on 19 August by a so-called State Committee for the State of Emergency to remove President Mikhail Gorbachev from office and seize all power.

Following that event, the Supreme Soviet of Ukraine, on 24 August, adopted the Act of Declaration of Independence of Ukraine, transmitted to the Secretary-General on 26 August. The text of the law on the succession of Ukraine, adopted on 22 September, was transmitted to the Secretary-General on 22 October.<sup>(2)</sup> The Supreme Soviet of the Byelorussian SSR adopted an act on 25 August<sup>(3)</sup> under which the Declaration on the State Sovereignty of the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic of 27 July 1990 was accorded the status of constitutional law. The Republic of Moldova (formerly Moldavian SSR) proclaimed its independence on 27 August and the Republic of Georgia on 28 August re-established its state independence of 26 May 1918. Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania on 26 August were the first three republics to break away and declare their independence from the USSR.

A joint declaration on the Baltic States, issued at a meeting on 6 September at Brussels, Belgium, between the EC Ministers for Foreign Affairs and European Commission representatives and the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, marked the restoration of sovereignty and independence of the Baltic States.

On 27 December<sup>(4)</sup> Belarus transmitted seven documents, all signed at Alma Ata, Kazakhstan, on 21 December by the Commonwealth members: (a) a Protocol to the Agreement to include the following 11 States in the Commonwealth: Azerbaijan, Armenia, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Moldova, Russian Federation, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan and Ukraine; (b) the Alma Ata Declaration on cooperation between the Commonwealth parties in accordance with the principle of equality and on maintenance of international security under a unified command of the common strategic military forces and joint control over nuclear weapons; (c) minutes of the meeting on proposals for the restructuring of the armed forces; (d) an agreement on the Commonwealth's coordinating bodies; (e) a decision supporting continuance by the Russian Federation of the USSR membership in the United Nations, in the Security Council and in other international organizations; (f) an agreement on joint measures concerning nuclear weapons; and (g) a statement by Belarus on the strict observance of human rights and the peaceful resolution of disputes.

Lithuania applied for membership in the United Nations on 29 August and Estonia and Latvia on 30 August. (For Security Council and General Assembly actions on those applications, see PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

Yugoslavia situation

Four of the six republics comprising Yugoslavia—Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Macedonia, Montenegro, Serbia and Slovenia—unilaterally declared independence during 1991: the Republics of Croatia and Slovenia, on 25 June, following earlier référéndums in both republics; the Republic of Macedonia, by a referendum on 8 September; and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which proclaimed its sovereignty by assembly vote on 15 October, causing the Serbian members of the assembly to walk out and the Serbian community to affirm separateness. The Republic of Serbia strongly disapproved of those declarations and expressed grave concern over the fate of some 600,000 Serbs resident in Croatia and of Serbs resident in Bosnia and Herzegovina. This raised questions of border delineations of those two republics with Serbia and resulted in the eruption of violence in a country where political boundaries rarely coincided precisely with demographic distribution.

In the face of escalating violence, EC, at Yugoslavia's initiative, assumed a negotiating role to bring about a cessation of hostilities and promote a peaceful dialogue. Its initiatives were outlined in a series of declarations, brought to the attention of the Security Council jointly by three of its members: Belgium, France and the United Kingdom. They included the dispatch of a Ministerial Troika to work out a cease-fire; enlisting the assistance of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) (the forum of 35 participating States, including Canada and the United States, for the periodic review of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, adopted in 1975 at Helsinki, Finland, and for a wider political dialogue in a more united Europe) and of the Western European Union (WEU) (set up in 1955 and reactivated in 1984 to harmonize the views of its nine members on security and defence questions); the dispatch of a mission to monitor (a) implementation of a cease-fire accompanied by the return of all forces to their previous positions and (b) a three-month suspension of the declarations of independence; and the application of an embargo<sup>(5)</sup> on armaments and military equipment to the whole of Yugoslavia. Following a decision by the Yugoslav Federal Presidency on 18 July to withdraw the Yugoslav People's Army (JNA) from Slovenia, EC expressed hope for the early start of negotiations<sup>(6)</sup>.

Expressing dismay at the increasing violence in Croatia and active JNA support of the Serbian side, EC, on 27 August<sup>(7)</sup> decided to convene a peace conference to bring together, on the Yugoslav side, the Federal Presidency, the Federal Government and the Presidents of the republics, and, on the EC side, the President of the Council of Ministers and Commission representatives; and establish an arbitration procedure to be administered by a five-member arbitration commission, two appointed by the Federal Presidency and three by EC. On 3 September<sup>(8)</sup> EC welcomed the acceptance by all Yugoslav parties of the goals and instruments for a solution to the crisis and their signing of a cease-fire agreement and a memorandum of understanding on the extension of the EC monitoring mission; it also announced that the Conference on Yugoslavia would convene at The Hague, Netherlands, on 7 September, at which the arbitration procedure would be set up; it hoped for a normalization of the situation to permit EC to put into effect financial protocols to contribute to Yugoslavia's economic recovery.

Considering it evident that the existence of a new situation in Yugoslavia called for new relationships and structures, EC, on 19 September<sup>(9)</sup> declared that it would accept any outcome resulting from negotiations conducted in good faith but reiterated the principles they had originally enunciated: the unacceptability of the use of force and of the change of borders by force which it was determined not to recognize, respect for the rights of all who lived in Yugoslavia, and the need to take account of all legitimate concerns and aspirations.

Australia, on 19 September<sup>(10)</sup> informed the Secretary-General of its belief that the situation had deteriorated to the point where the international community needed to reinforce EC efforts through the United Nations and that, as a first step, the Council should consider the issue as a matter of urgency.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

The Security Council convened on 25 September 1991 in response to requests from Austria<sup>(11)</sup> Canada<sup>(12)</sup> and Hungary<sup>(13)</sup> that it urgently consider the deteriorating situation in Yugoslavia, which they feared could endanger international peace and security. Yugoslavia welcomed the meeting and, at its request<sup>(14)</sup> was invited to participate without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37<sup>a</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

At the same meeting, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 713(1991).

The Security Council,

Conscious of the fact that Yugoslavia has welcomed the convening of a Security Council meeting through a letter conveyed by the Permanent Representative of Yugoslavia to the President of the Security Council,

Having heard the statement by the Foreign Minister of Yugoslavia,

Deeply concerned by the fighting in Yugoslavia which is causing a heavy loss of human life and material damage, and by the consequences for the countries of the region, in particular in the border areas of neighbouring countries,

Concerned that the continuation of this situation constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Recalling its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling also the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Commending the efforts undertaken by the European Community and its member States, with the support of the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, to restore peace and dialogue in Yugoslavia, through, inter alia, the implementation of a cease-fire including the sending of observers, the convening of a Conference on Yugoslavia, including the mechanisms set forth within it, and the suspension of the delivery of all weapons and military equipment to Yugoslavia,

Recalling the relevant principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and, in this context, noting the Declaration of 3 September 1991 of the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe that no territorial gains or changes within Yugoslavia brought about by violence are acceptable,

Noting also the agreement for a cease-fire concluded on 17 September 1991 in Igalo, and also that signed on 22 September 1991,

Alarmed by the violations of the cease-fire and the continuation of the fighting,

Taking note of the letter dated 19 September 1991 to the President of the Security Council from the Permanent Representative of Austria,

Taking note also of the letters dated 19 September 1991 and 20 September 1991 to the President of the Security Council from, respectively, the Permanent Representative of Canada and the Permanent Representative of Hungary,

Taking note also of the letters dated 5 July 1991, 12 July 1991, 22 July 1991, 6 August 1991, 7 August 1991, 21 August 1991, 29 August 1991, 4 September 1991, 19 September 1991 and 20 September 1991, from the Permanent Representative of the Netherlands, the Permanent Representative of Czechoslovakia, the Permanent Representatives of Belgium, France and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of Austria and the Permanent Representative of Australia,

1. Expresses its full support for the collective efforts for peace and dialogue in Yugoslavia undertaken under the auspices of the member States of the European Community with the support of the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe consistent with the principles of that Conference;

2. Supports fully all arrangements and measures resulting from such collective efforts as those described above, in particular of assistance and support to the cease-fire observers, to consolidate an effective end to hostilities in Yugoslavia and the smooth functioning of the process instituted within the framework of the Conference on Yugoslavia;

3. Invites to this end the Secretary-General to offer his assistance without delay, in consultation with the Government of Yugoslavia and all those promoting the efforts referred to above, and to report as soon as possible to the Security Council;

4. Strongly urges all parties to abide strictly by the cease-fire agreements of 17 September 1991 and 22 September 1991;

5. Appeals urgently to and encourages all parties to settle their disputes peacefully and through negotiation at the Conference on Yugoslavia, including through the mechanisms set forth within it;

6. Decides, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, that all States shall, for the purposes of establishing peace and stability in Yugoslavia, immediately implement a general and complete embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Yugoslavia until the Security Council decides otherwise following consultation between the Secretary-General and the Government of Yugoslavia;

7. Calls on all States to refrain from any action which might contribute to increasing tension and to impeding or delaying a peaceful and negotiated outcome to the conflict in Yugoslavia, which would permit all Yugoslavs to decide upon and to construct their future in peace;

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter until a peaceful solution is achieved.

Security Council resolution 713(1991)

25 September 1991 Meeting 3009 Adopted unanimously

5-nation draft (S/23067).

Sponsors: Austria, Belgium, France, USSR, United Kingdom.

Before adoption of the resolution, Yugoslavia stated that when Yugoslavia had been placed on the Council's agenda four decades before, it was to defend its sovereign right to live in peace and to unimpeded development and to determine its own destiny; it was now on the agenda to defend Yugoslavia from itself. The Yugoslav crisis was part of the present turmoil besetting Central and Eastern Europe, the USSR and other parts of the world. While it was neither possible nor useful to deal with all the causes of the crisis, which threatened peace and security on a large scale, no factor on the Yugoslav scene was completely free from guilt, for none had lived up to its responsibilities. The most tragic events had occurred in Croatia, where Croat and Serb alike had paid a heavy toll in human life, in homes ruined and in historical monuments damaged.

<sup>a</sup> Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

Mutually exclusive political options had pushed the opposing sides deeper into strife. That was why Yugoslavia initiated and welcomed the EC peace action under CSCE auspices. However, deep mutual distrust and heated passions feeding upon the past, unilateral acts, the policy of fait accompli and the use of force had blocked all efforts towards a peaceful and democratic resolution of the crisis. The cease-fire agreement of 1 September, reaffirmed at Igalo (Montenegro, Yugoslavia) on 17 September, had not been completely honoured. The urgency of the moment, when an apparent breakthrough appeared to have been made, was a genuine readiness on the part of the international community, and, more importantly, of all Yugoslav parties, to consolidate peace and to open political dialogue on the country's future within the framework of the Conference on Yugoslavia currently meeting at The Hague.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). On 25 October 1991, the Secretary-General reported<sup>(15)</sup> on his activities to promote the collective efforts of EC and the States participating in CSCE, as well as on developments in Yugoslavia. Upon adoption of Security Council resolution 713(1991), he transmitted the text to all States, and on 2 October issued a public appeal calling on all Yugoslav parties to reduce the hostilities. On 8 October, he announced that Cyrus R. Vance (United States) had agreed to act as his Personal Envoy and to undertake a mission to Yugoslavia, to obtain first-hand information on the situation. The Secretary-General also consulted with: the Chairman of the Conference on Yugoslavia; Yugoslavia's Secretary for Foreign Affairs and Stjepan Mesic, the President of the Federal Presidency, in his private capacity; the President of the EC Council of Ministers; Germany's Foreign Minister and CSCE Chairman; senior government officials of the States bordering Yugoslavia; the Foreign Ministers of the five permanent members of the Security Council; and all other concerned parties.

The Personal Envoy visited Yugoslavia from 11 to 18 October, during which he met with the President of the Federal Presidency and with all of its other members. He visited the six republics, meeting with the President and senior officials of each. At The Hague he attended two plenary sessions of the Conference on Yugoslavia and conferred with the EC Council President. At Bonn he conferred with the CSCE Chairman.

The Personal Envoy was briefed on the functioning of the monitoring mission set up by EC and CSCE with the cooperation of Yugoslav authorities. In Croatia, the mission was governed by memoranda of understanding of 13 July and 1 September, extended sine die on 14 October; it was mandated to monitor and help stabilize the cease-fire and to monitor the release and return of prisoners in cooperation with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). In Bosnia and Herzegovina, the mission was governed by an open-ended memorandum of 1 October and mandated to assist in maintaining peace and, in the event of conflict, to help establish the facts so as to avoid further deterioration.

The current situation in Yugoslavia was described as not only serious but in constant flux. While earlier fighting in Slovenia abated in July, heavy fighting had persisted in Croatia, between JNA, supplementary military units and irregular Serb forces on the one side, and the Croatian territorial and irregular forces on the other. Ports and all JNA military barracks and facilities had been blockaded, airspace dosed, and communications and services disrupted. Civilian areas had persistently been subjected to direct fire from artillery and rocket batteries and from armoured, naval and air units, causing high civilian casualties. Moreover, there had been forced evacuations of large numbers of civilians, suggesting an attempt to alter the demographic composition of certain areas for territorial advantage.

The Personal Envoy's mission was preceded by two major developments. First, on 3 October, four members of the full eight-member Federal Presidency decided on the manner in which the Presidency should henceforth be conducted. Second, on 4 October, the Presidents of Croatia and Serbia and the Federal Secretary for National Defence agreed on a twin-track approach to formulating a political solution based on the recognition of the independence of republics wishing it; such recognition would be granted in the framework of a general settlement to include: a loose association of sovereign or independent republics; adequate arrangements for the protection of minorities, incorporating human rights guarantees and possible special status for certain areas; and no unilateral border changes.

The Personal Envoy attended the fifth and sixth plenary meetings, on 14 and 18 October, of the Conference on Yugoslavia (which had first met on 7 September and held other meetings on 4, 10, 22 and 25 October). At the sixth plenary meeting, the Conference Chairman presented a paper on draft arrangements for a general settlement with the following components: sovereign and independent republics with international personality for those wishing it; a free association of the republics with an international personality; comprehensive arrangements, including supervisory mechanisms for the protection of human rights and special status for certain groups and areas; European involvement where appropriate; and recognition of due independence, within existing borders, unless otherwise agreed, of those republics wishing it. The republics would recognize that cooperation among them and the creation of the association was part of the process of building a new Europe, envisaged in the Charter of Paris for a New Europe of November 1990, that would improve prospects for cooperation and closer relations with EC.

The Presidents of five republics expressed general agreement to work on the basis of the draft paper. Serbia's President, however, considered the draft unsuitable for detailed discussion. It was criticized by the Federal Vice-President, who presided over the Presidency, for recognizing the legality of unilateral secession, which undermined Yugoslavia's existing, internationally recognized constitutional order. At the Conference meeting on 22 October, he circulated a paper on points of departure for resolving the political crisis; he and his three colleagues declined to attend the seventh plenary meeting at The Hague on 25 October.

The Personal Envoy reported that, despite the occasional participation of the full eight-member Presidency at the Conference, the de facto authority of the central Government in Yugoslavia had been seriously impaired since 3 October; as a result, JNA no longer had political direction from a civilian authority that enjoyed the support of all of Yugoslavia's republics and communities. He added, however, that resolution 713(1991) was well received by all sides and that each of his interlocutors wanted the Security Council's interest in the situation maintained.

It was clear from the report that the recent course of events, including the hardening of the positions, gave little cause for encouragement, suggesting that time was running out for an agreed settlement. Notwithstanding the parties' failure to reach a consensus on the proposed constitutional arrangements, the Conference on Yugoslavia would maintain its efforts to forge a settlement.

With regard to the humanitarian aspects, indications were that the internally displaced persons numbered about 300,000 and could increase to 400,000 by the end of 1991. The short-term assistance supplied by relatives and friends was not sustainable. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) was already assisting refugees arriving in Austria, Hungary and Italy.

Yugoslavia's economy, already in difficulties before the hostilities, was in a rapid downward spiral. Production in all sectors had fallen off dramatically, fiscal policy had collapsed, inflation had accelerated, the financial system had split apart, the communications infrastructure had been severely disrupted, and trade and remittances from overseas had declined precipitously.

Seven annexes to the report provided additional information on: the Personal Envoy's mission, the agreement on a twin-track approach by the Yugoslav parties on 4 October, the cease-fire agreement they signed at The Hague on 18 October, the humanitarian and economic situation, the proposed arrangements for a general settlement of the crisis, and proposed treaty provisions for a convention governing new relations between the republics.

Letter of the Secretary-General. On 24 November 1991,<sup>(16)</sup> the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that, as he had indicated earlier in informal consultations, he had asked his Personal Envoy, who had recently come from Yugoslavia on a second mission, from 3 to 9 November, to return to that country for a third time with a small team of United Nations officials. The purpose was to discuss with the principal parties to the conflict the feasibility of deploying a United Nations peace-keeping operation in the country. This was in response to indications that such an operation would be desired by the Presidents of the Republics of Croatia and Serbia and by Yugoslavia's Secretary of State for National Defence.

As a result of the Envoy's intensive consultations with the three parties between 17 and 23 November, they signed an agreement on 23 November at Geneva which provided for the immediate lifting by Croatia of its blockade of Yugoslav army barracks in Croatia, the immediate withdrawal from Croatia of personnel and military equipment, and a cease-fire with effect from 24 November. The agreement stipulated that the parties facilitate delivery of humanitarian assistance.

Each of the parties, having been apprised of the concept of a peace-keeping operation, its mandate, organization and areas of deployment, wanted emplacement of the operation as soon as possible. It was agreed, however, that the areas needed further defining, a task which the Personal Envoy was asked to carry forward.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

At the request of France<sup>(17)</sup> and Germany<sup>(18)</sup> the Security Council met on 27 November 1991 to consider the situation in Yugoslavia further. The Council had before it, in addition to the Secretary-General's letter of 24 November, a request of 26 November<sup>(19)</sup> from Yugoslavia for the prompt establishment of a United Nations peace-keeping operation, consultations on which should be concluded with the immediate return to Yugoslavia of the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy. At its request, Yugoslavia was invited to participate without the right to vote in accordance with rule 37<sup>a</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

In the light of the urgency of the matter, a draft resolution was read out to the Council, which unanimously adopted it as resolution 721(1991).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 713(1991) of 25 September 1991, Considering the request by the Government of Yugoslavia for the establishment of a peace-keeping operation in Yugoslavia, as conveyed in the letter of 26 November 1991 addressed by the Permanent Representative of Yugoslavia to the President of the Security Council,

Deeply concerned by the fighting in Yugoslavia and by the serious violations of earlier cease-fire agreements, which have caused heavy loss of human life and widespread material damage, and by the consequences for the countries of the region,

Noting that the continuation and aggravation of this situation constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Considering also the letter addressed on 24 November 1991 by the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council on the mission of his Personal Envoy to Yugoslavia and the annexed agreement signed in Geneva on 23 November 1991,

Considering further the fact, as conveyed in the letter addressed on 24 November 1991 by the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council, that each one of the Yugoslav participants in the meeting with the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General stated that they wanted to see the deployment of a United Nations peace-keeping operation as soon as possible,

1. Approves the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy and expresses the hope that they will pursue their contacts with the Yugoslav parties, as rapidly as possible, so that the Secretary-General can present early recommendations to the Security Council including for the possible establishment of a United Nations peace-keeping operation in Yugoslavia;

2. Endorses the statement made by the Personal Envoy of the Secretary-General to the parties that the deployment of a United Nations peace-keeping operation cannot be envisaged without, inter alia, full compliance by all parties with the agreement signed in Geneva on 23 November 1991 and annexed to the letter of the Secretary-General;

3. Strongly urges the Yugoslav parties to comply fully with that agreement;

4. Undertakes to examine and take appropriate action without delay upon the recommendations of the Secretary-General mentioned above, including in particular any recommendation for the possible establishment of a United Nations peace-keeping operation in Yugoslavia;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter until a peaceful solution is achieved.

Security Council resolution 721(1991)

27 November 1991 Meeting 3018 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23245).

Report of the Secretary-General (December).

The Secretary-General reported on 11 December 1991(20) that, following adoption of Security Council resolution 721(1991), he had asked his Personal Envoy to undertake a fourth mission to Yugoslavia, from 1 to 9 December. Its purpose was to urge the three Yugoslav parties to comply fully with their commitments as agreed at Geneva on 23 November, and to pursue discussions on the establishment of a peace-keeping operation in the country. At the same time, a small team led by the Secretariat's Director of the Field Operations Division undertook a preliminary examination of the country's logistical environment.

Discussions with the parties centred on the difficulties attending Croatia's lifting of its remaining blockade of JNA installations and facilities at Zagreb and at Split, and the serious difficulty that arose regarding the disposition of the JNA military aircraft maintenance facility on the outskirts of Zagreb, which Croatia blockaded on 3 December. The difficulties were resolved on 8 December, as reflected in a joint statement of the parties annexed to the report. While that part of the 23 November agreement was proceeding, the unconditional cease-fire remained unimplemented. A number of artillery and other attacks took place in Croatia during the week of 25 November, and, on 6 December, the civilian population in the historic centre of Dubrovnik was attacked by artillery. Tactical advances by regular JNA units and Serbian irregular armed groups in the direction of Osijek in Croatia were also reported. Meanwhile, JNA had accused Croatian forces of numerous provocative cease-fire violations.

All aspects of a peace-keeping operation were discussed at length with the parties, the Personal Envoy stressing that emplacement of that operation depended on sustained evidence that they were seriously implementing their agreement of 23 November. The concept and operational plan that emerged from those discussions were set out in detail in a working paper given to the three parties; a copy was annexed to the report.

Based on the Envoy's report, the Secretary-General observed that the conditions for establishing a peace-keeping operation in Yugoslavia still did not exist. He could not recommend so expensive and innovative a step, unless the Yugoslav leaders were willing and able to implement agreements they had signed. Stressing that he saw no reason for further cease-fire agreements in the current conflict, he invited the Council to consider ways by which it could ensure compliance with agreements.

The Secretary-General further observed that the general situation continued to worsen, particularly in the humanitarian area. He urged Governments to respond positively to the funding appeal for an initial six-month programme valued at $24.3 million, to be undertaken jointly by the United Nations Children's Fund, UNHCR and the World Health Organization.

Also annexed to the report was the Secretary-General's letter of 10 December to the President of the EC Council of Ministers expressing deep worry that any early, selective recognition of declarations of independence could fuel an explosive situation, especially in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Macedonia, and serious consequences for the entire Balkan region could ensue. He thus cautioned against uncoordinated actions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

The Security Council met on 15 December 1991. It invited Yugoslavia to participate under rule 37<sup>a</sup> of its provisional rules of procedure. Having considered the Secretary-General's report, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 724(1991).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 713(1991) of 25 September 1991 and 721(1991) of 27 November 1991,

Recalling its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recalling also the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Determined to ensure that the general and complete embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Yugoslavia imposed by resolution 713(1991) is effectively applied,

Commending the initiatives taken by the Secretary-General in the humanitarian field,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 11 December 1991 and expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for it;

2. Endorses in particular the views expressed in paragraph 21 of the Secretary-General's report that the conditions for establishing a peace-keeping operation in Yugoslavia still do not exist and in paragraph 24 that full compliance with the Geneva Agreement of 23 November 1991 would permit accelerated consideration of the question of establishing a United Nations peace-keeping operation in Yugoslavia;

3. Concurs in particular with the Secretary-General's observation that the international community is prepared to assist the Yugoslav peoples, if the conditions described in his report are met, and, in that context, endorses his offer to send to Yugoslavia a small group of personnel, including military personnel, as part of the continuing mission of his Personal Envoy, to carry forward preparations for possible deployment of a peace-keeping operation;

4. Underlines the view that the purpose of the deployment of any United Nations peace-keeping operation in Yugoslavia would be to enable all parties to settle their disputes peacefully, including through the processes of the Conference on Yugoslavia;

5. Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations:

(a) Requests all States to report to the Secretary-General within 20 days on the measures they have instituted for meeting the obligations set out in paragraph 6 of resolution 713(1991) to implement a general and complete embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Yugoslavia;

(b) Decides to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its Provisional Rules of Procedure, a Committee of the Security Council consisting of all the members of the Council, to undertake the following tasks and to report on its work to the Council with its observations and recommendations:

(iv) To recommend appropriate measures in response to violations of the general and complete embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Yugoslavia and provide information on a regular basis to the Secretary-General for general distribution to Member States;

(c) Calls upon all States to cooperate fully with the Committee in the fulfilment of its tasks concerning the effective implementation of the provisions of paragraph 6 of resolution 713(1991);

(d) Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Committee and to make the necessary arrangements in the Secretariat for this purpose;

6. Undertakes to consider ways by which compliance with the commitments entered into by the parties may be achieved;

7. Strongly urges all States and parties to refrain from any action which might contribute to increasing tension, to inhibiting the establishment of an effective cease-fire and to impeding or delaying a peaceful and negotiated outcome to the conflict in Yugoslavia, which would permit all the peoples of Yugoslavia to decide upon and to construct their future in peace;

8. Encourages the Secretary-General to pursue his humanitarian efforts in Yugoslavia, in liaison with the International Committee of the Red Cross, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Children's Fund and other appropriate humanitarian organizations, to take urgent practical steps to tackle the critical needs of the people of Yugoslavia, including displaced persons and the most vulnerable groups affected by the conflict, and to assist in the voluntary return of displaced persons to their homes;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter until a peaceful solution is achieved.

Chapter V

Middle East

Throughout 1991, the search for a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict continued to be vigorously pursued by various organs and bodies of the United Nations. Although not held under United Nations auspices, the peace conference that took place at Madrid, Spain in October/November under the co-sponsorship of the USSR and the United States was welcomed by the General Assembly as a significant step towards the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East. At the same time, the Assembly considered that the convening of an international Middle East peace conference under United Nations auspices and with the participation of all parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, would contribute to the promotion of peace.

The Palestine question—reaffirmed by the Assembly as the core of the Middle East situation—was kept under review by the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian rights). The Committee recalled the principles for a solution to the question and for a comprehensive peace, and expressed its support for the intifadah, the Palestinian uprising, which entered its fourth year in December. It underlined the necessity for protecting the Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied territory and affirmed the United Nations responsibility for assistance to promote their socio-economic development. The Assembly endorsed the Committee's recommendations and drew the Security Council's attention to the fact that action was still pending on its original (1976) recommendations concerning realization of the Palestinians' inalienable rights.

The United Nations Department of Public Information continued its special information programme on the Palestine question, with special emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America, and was requested by the Assembly to do so again during 1992-1993.

Assistance to Palestinians was provided by various United Nations organizations. The Assembly called for the immediate lifting of Israeli restrictions hindering the implementation of assistance projects and called for an increase in assistance, taking into account the economic losses of the Palestinians as a result of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

The situation in Lebanon was marked by continued hostilities and violence throughout the year.

However, the Government was able to extend its authority beyond the greater Beirut area. Militias were successfully disbanded and their weapons turned over to the Lebanese army. In the most southern part of the country, however, Israel consolidated its hold over the area it controlled, increasingly separating it from the rest of Lebanon. The Security Council twice extended, for periods of six months each, the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon. The Council members also reaffirmed their commitment to the full sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries, and asserted that any State should refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State.

The Council similarly twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, which continued to supervise the observance of the cease-fire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic in the Golan Heights and to ensure that there were no military forces in the area of separation between the two countries. The Assembly again declared null and void Israel's 1981 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the Golan Heights, which, it said, had resulted in their effective annexation.

The Committee on Palestinian rights and the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories reported a further deteriorating situation of the Palestinian inhabitants of the occupied territories, especially in the West Bank and Gaza, with increasing violence, extended curfews and restrictions of movement in the wake of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf. The Security Council considered the situation, expressed concern about the violence in Gaza and deplored the expulsion of Palestinians. The Council unanimously declared that such expulsion was in violation of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) and that Israel must refrain from deporting Palestinians and ensure the safe and immediate return of all those deported.

The Assembly demanded that Israel desist from certain policies and practices, comply with the fourth Geneva Convention, desist from changing the territories' status and demographic composition, and rescind its expulsion of Palestinian leaders as well as its measures against Palestinian detainees and educational institutions. The Assembly also strongly deplored the extensive confiscation of land, diversion of water resources and depletion of natural and economic resources by Israel, as well as the displacement and deportation of the population. Israel's practices in violation of human rights in the territories were also considered by the Commission on Human Rights (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East continued its assistance to over 2.5 million Palestine refugees who were living in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Middle East situation

The General Assembly welcomed the peace conference on the Middle East held at Madrid (30 October-1 November), co-sponsored by the USSR and the United States, as a significant step towards the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region (resolution 46/75). At the same time, the Assembly considered that the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East, under United Nations auspices and with the participation of all parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict on an equal footing, would contribute to the promotion of peace in the region. In other action (resolution 46/82 A), the Assembly reaffirmed that a just and comprehensive Middle East settlement could not be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), the representative of the Palestinian people.

The Secretary-General reported that although the Madrid conference was being conducted outside the United Nations framework, that process had the support of the parties concerned and had as its basis Security Council resolutions 242(1967)(1) and 338(1973).<sup>(2)</sup> He expressed the hope that the momentum generated by the conference would be sustained and that lasting peace that had so long been denied to all the peoples of the Middle East would become a reality. He noted, following the Madrid conference, that prospects for progress in the peace process had been enhanced. The Secretary-General's Special Representative to the Middle East, Edouard Brunner (Switzerland), attended the conference as an observer, having been appointed Special Representative by the Secretary-General on 22 March to replace Gunnar Jarring (Sweden), who resigned after serving in that capacity since 1967.

In other related developments, the General Assembly, in a virtually unprecedented action on 16 December 1991, by resolution 46/86, repealed the 1975 resolution by which it had determined that Zionism was a form of racism and racial discrimination.<sup>(3)</sup>

Reports of the Secretary-General. In a report of November 1991 on various aspects of the situation in the Middle East<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that in the light of the circumstances prevailing in the region, he had decided to reactivate the mission of the Special Representative to the Middle East, a post in which Gunnar Jarring had served with great distinction in the years immediately following Council resolution 242(1967) on Middle East peace. While the mission had been dormant for a lengthy interval, it had never officially ended. Following the resignation of Mr. Jarring on 11 January 1991, the Secretary-General announced his intention to designate a successor and, after consultations with the Council, he appointed Edouard Brunner to the post, a step welcomed by the Council members.

In his remarks to the Council, the Secretary-General acknowledged the importance of the initiative launched by the United States; he reiterated that he had always supported bilateral initiatives in the search for a just and lasting peace in the Middle East and that, to this end, any step undertaken by Mr. Brunner or himself would be aimed at assisting such efforts.

The Secretary-General added in his report that he had followed with keen interest the intensive and often arduous bilateral diplomatic efforts during the previous few months that culminated in an agreement by the parties to enter into negotiations, under the co-sponsorship of the United States and the USSR, aimed at achieving—in the words of the letter of invitation to the peace conference—"a just, lasting and comprehensive peace settlement through direct negotiations on two tracks, between Israel and the Arab States, and between Israel and the Palestinians". In that connection, it was important to note, the Secretary-General said, that although the process was being conducted outside the United Nations framework, it had the support of the parties concerned and had as its basis Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), which had long been recognized as the cornerstone of a comprehensive settlement. He concluded his report with a tribute to the Madrid conference, which he termed historic, and to the initial round of bilateral discussions that followed.

In a report of October<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted replies received from two Member States—Trinidad and Tobago and Ukraine—to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement three Assembly resolutions of 1990 relating to the Middle East situation. By two of those resolutions<sup>(6)</sup> the Assembly had called on States to adopt a number of measures concerning relations with Israel and had called on the States concerned to abide by the relevant United Nations resolutions. By the third resolution<sup>(7)</sup> it had requested the Secretary-General to report periodically to the Security Council on the development of the situation and to submit in 1991 a comprehensive report covering the developments in the Middle East in all their aspects.

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 22 October 1991, 8 November 1991 and 15 November 1991,

Reaffirming the need for continued collective support for the decisions adopted by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982, which were confirmed by subsequent Arab summit conferences, including the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference held at Casablanca, Morocco, from 23 to 26 May 1989,

Reiterating its previous resolutions on the question of Palestine and its support for the Palestine Liberation Organization as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people,

Welcoming all efforts contributing towards the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people through the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, in accordance with the United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and to the situation in the Middle East, including Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973,

Welcoming also the world-wide support extended to the just cause of the Palestinian people and the other Arab countries in their struggle against Israeli aggression and occupation in order to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights, as affirmed by previous resolutions of the General Assembly on the question of Palestine and on the situation in the Middle East,

Gravely concerned that the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied

Arab territories still remain under Israeli occupation, that the relevant resolutions of the United Nations have not been implemented and that the Palestinian people is still denied the restoration of its land and the exercise of its inalienable national rights in conformity with international law, as reaffirmed by resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories,

Reaffirming also all relevant United Nations resolutions which stipulate that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law and that Israel must withdraw unconditionally from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories,

Gravely concerned also at Israeli policies involving the escalation and expansion of the conflict in the region, which further violate the principles of international law and endanger international peace and security,

Reaffirming further the imperative necessity and urgency of establishing a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the Charter and the principles of international law,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that the question of Palestine is the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region will be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights and the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories;

2. Reaffirms that a just and comprehensive settlement of the situation in the Middle East cannot be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people;

3. Declares once more that peace in the Middle East is indivisible and must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Middle East problem under the auspices of the United Nations and on the basis of its relevant resolutions, which ensures the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, and which enables the Palestinian people, under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization, to exercise its inalienable rights, including the right to return and the right to self-determination, national independence and the establishment of its independent sovereign State in Palestine, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations relating to the question of Palestine, in particular General Assembly resolutions ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 36/120 A to F of 10 December 1981, 37/86 A to D of 10 December 1982, 37/86 E of 20 December 1982, 38/58 A to E of 13 December 1983, 39/49 A to D of 11 December 1984, 40/96 A to D of 12 December 1985, 41/43 A to D of 2 December 1986, 42/66 A to D of 2 December 1987, 43/54 A to C of 6 December 1988, 43/175 A to C, 43/176 and 43/177 of 15 December 1988, 44/42 of 6 December 1989 and 45/68;

4. Considers the Arab peace plan adopted unanimously at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982, which was confirmed by subsequent Arab summit conferences, including the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference held at Casablanca, Morocco, from 23 to 26 May 1989, as an important contribution towards the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people through the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

5. Condemns Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and demands the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the territories occupied since 1967;

6. Rejects all agreements and arrangements which violate the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and contradict the principles of a just and comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem to ensure the establishment of a just peace in the area;

7. Deplores Israel's failure to comply with Security Council resolutions 476(1980) of 30 June 1980 and 478(1980) of 20 August 1980 and General Assembly resolutions 35/207 of 16 December 1980 and 36/226 A and B; determines that Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and to declare it as its "capital" as well as the measures to alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status are null and void and demands that they be rescinded immediately; and calls upon all Member States, the specialized agencies and all other international organizations to abide by the present resolution and all other relevant resolutions and decisions;

8. Condemns Israel's aggression, policies and practices against the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory and outside this territory, including expropriation, establishment of settlements, annexation and other aggressive and repressive measures, which are in violation of the Charter and the principles of international law and the relevant international conventions;

9. Strongly condemns the imposition by Israel of its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan, its annexationist policies and practices, the establishment of settlements, the confiscation of lands, the diversion of water resources and the imposition of Israeli citizenship on Syrian nationals, and declares that all these measures are null and void and constitute a violation of the rules and principles of international law relative to belligerent occupation, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

10. Calls upon all States not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connection with settlements in the occupied territories;

11. Strongly deplores the continuing and increasing collaboration between Israel and South Africa, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields, which constitutes a hostile act against the African and Arab States and enables Israel to enhance its nuclear capabilities;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council periodically on the development of the situation and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a comprehensive report covering the developments in the Middle East pertaining to the present resolution.

Proposed peace conference under UN auspices

In accordance with a request of 1990 by the General Assembly<sup>(8)</sup> the Secretary-General continued his efforts in 1991 with the parties concerned, and in consultation with the Security Council, as mandated in 1983,<sup>(9)</sup> to facilitate the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East, under United Nations auspices. As requested, he had, in consultation with the Council, been in continuous contact with Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and PLO. In his November 1991 report on various aspects of the Middle East situation<sup>(1)</sup> he indicated that, whereas it had not been possible to achieve agreement among the parties to participate in such a conference, the position of the parties and of the Council itself had evolved over the years.

On 26 June, in a letter to the Security Council President, the Secretary-General called on the Council to assist him in drafting his progress report on the matter, by communicating before 15 August the Council's views on the convening of a conference. As at 8 November, no reply had been received from the Council, the Secretary-General stated in a report of the same date<sup>(10)</sup> However, replies had been received from Israel and Lebanon in response to his note verbale of 27 June, in which he sought their positions, as well as those of Egypt, Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and PLO.

Israel, on 7 October, stated that it advocated direct negotiations as the only promising framework to advance the Middle East peace process and was currently engaged in a process that it hoped would result in such negotiations between Israel and its Arab neighbours, which the 1990 resolution of the Assembly was designed to subvert rather than support. It noted that the resolution was entirely irrelevant and detached from reality and support for it exemplified the inattentiveness to the positive political developments taking place outside the United Nations. Moreover, Israel insisted, while referring to Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), the Assembly resolution affirmed a series of principles which prejudged and subverted the possible outcome of peace negotiations and the very principles contained in those resolutions; it also called for the participation in the conference of PLO, a terrorist organization which could not be considered a partner to peace negotiations.

Lebanon, on 26 August, transmitted the position adopted by its Council of Ministers on 23 July, expressing support for the convening of an international conference; agreeing in principle to attend, while stating at the same time that its attendance did not imply any link between resolving the issue of Lebanon and that of the Middle East; affirming its concern for the total liberation of its territory; rejecting any attempt to settle the Palestinians in Lebanese territory; stating that the solution to the problem of the Israeli occupation of Lebanese territory lay in implementation of Council resolution 425(1978),<sup>(11)</sup> which called for the unconditional withdrawal of the occupying Israeli forces; and confirming the application of the 1949 Armistice Agreement and adherence to all its provisions<sup>(12)</sup>

Summing up his observations, the Secretary-General stated that a number of important developments had taken place since the adoption of the Assembly resolution in December 1990; in particular, a negotiating process involving the parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict had recently been launched following the convening of the Madrid peace conference on the Middle East.

The Committee on Palestinian rights decided to continue to give the utmost priority in its programme of work to promoting the early convening of the conference, and decided to take an active role in all aspects relating to its convening and the search for peace and to initiate a process of interaction with all concerned for a regular exchange of information and views.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/75 by recorded vote.

International Peace Conference on the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 8 November 1991,

Having heard the statement made on 21 November 1991 by the chairman of the observer delegation of Palestine,

Stressing that achieving a comprehensive settlement of the Middle East conflict, the core of which is the question of Palestine, will constitute a significant contribution to international peace and security,

Aware of the overwhelming support for the convening of an International Peace Conference on the Middle East and noting the endeavours of the Secretary-General in this regard,

Noting the convening at Madrid, on 30 October 1991, of the Peace Conference on the Middle East,

Preoccupied by the increasingly serious situation in the occupied Palestinian territory as a result of persistent policies and practices of Israel, the occupying Power,

Aware of the ongoing uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people since 9 December 1987, aimed at ending Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to achieve a just and comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, the core of which is the question of Palestine;

2. Considers that the convening of an International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations, with the participation of all parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, on an equal footing, and the five permanent members of the Security Council, based on Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 and the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian people, primarily the right to self-determination, would contribute to the promotion of peace in the region;

3. Reaffirms the following principles for the achievement of comprehensive peace:

(a) The withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and from the other occupied Arab territories;

(b) Guaranteeing arrangements for security of all States in the region, including those named in resolution 181(II) of 29 November 1947, within secure and internationally recognized boundaries;

(c) Resolving the problem of the Palestine refugees in conformity with General Assembly resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, and subsequent relevant resolutions;

(d) Dismantling the Israeli settlements in the territories occupied since 1967;

(e) Guaranteeing freedom of access to Holy Places, religious buildings and sites;

4. Welcomes the convening at Madrid, on 30 October 1991, of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, which constitutes a significant step towards the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region;

5. Notes the expressed desire and endeavours to place the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, under the supervision of the United Nations for a transitional period, as part of the peace process;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts with the parties concerned, and in consultation with the Security Council, for the promotion of peace in the region, and to submit progress reports on developments in this matter.

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted the reference to the Madrid peace conference in paragraph 4 and the fifth preambular paragraph by a recorded vote of 145 to 2 (Iran, Iraq).

Speaking in the Assembly on 21 November, the chairman of the observer delegation of Palestine stated that participation in the Madrid peace process had been a difficult choice for the Palestinian people, who had been languishing under Israeli occupation for many years and had witnessed many an international attempt at reaching a settlement being thwarted by Israel; none the less, the Palestine National Council, on 24 September, had decided to participate—despite unjust obstacles and conditions raised by Israel—in the hope that the Madrid conference would lead to direct negotiations between Arabs and Israelis and thus offer a chance to achieve peace for all the peoples of the region. The negotiations must achieve complete Israeli withdrawal from all Arab and Palestinian lands, including Jerusalem, as well as an end to Israeli occupation in all its forms; during the transition period, PLO, under the supervision and with the participation of the United Nations, would exercise full control of the land and its natural resources, as well as its political, economic and human affairs, on the road to complete Palestinian sovereignty. The United Nations had a major role to perform in the peace process which was based on its resolutions, its principles and its Charter.

United Nations Truce Supervision Organization

In his report of November on the Middle East situation<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General provided an overview of the three peace-keeping operations in the region: the two peace-keeping forces—the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL)—and one observer mission, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO). Apart from assisting UNDOF and UNIFIL in their tasks, UNTSO maintained two observation groups of its own, the Observer Group at Beirut (see below, under "Lebanon") and the Observer Group in Egypt, where with the Government's agreement about 50 observers had remained since 1979 when the second United Nations Emergency Force was withdrawn. In addition to liaison offices at Cairo and Ismailia, the Observer Group in Egypt maintained six observation posts in the Sinai.

Palestine question

The question of Palestine continued to be a concern of the General Assembly, which reaffirmed it to be the core of the Middle East conflict, and to its Committee on Palestinian rights. Following consideration of the Committee's report, the Assembly, in December, adopted three resolutions, endorsing the Committee's recommendations and dealing with its programme of work (46/74 A); requesting resources for and continued cooperation with the Division for Palestinian Rights (46/74 B); and requesting the Department of Public Information (DPI) to continue its special information programme on the question (46/74 C).

By resolution 46/82 B, the Assembly again determined that Israel's 1980 decision(1) to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on Jerusalem was illegal and therefore null and void. In other action, the Assembly reaffirmed the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the occupied Palestinian territory (see below), including Jerusalem (resolution 46/47 B). It demanded that Israel desist from changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the territory, including Jerusalem (46/47 C), and deplored Israel's refusal to allow the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices) access to the territory, including Jerusalem (46/47 A). A proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees was the subject of another Assembly resolution (46/46 J).

Various United Nations bodies continued to provide assistance to the Palestinians. Following the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1991/69, the General Assembly, by resolution 46/201, called for, among other things, an increase in international aid to the Palestinians.

The Committee on Palestinian rights organized in New York on 29 November the observance of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People. Statements were made by the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Security Council, the Secretary-General, the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights, PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat and the Chairman of the Committee on Israeli practices, as well as on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and several intergovernmental organizations. Expressions of solidarity were also received from 63 heads of State, Foreign Ministers and international organizations.

Activities of the Committee on Palestinian rights. The Committee on Palestinian rights continued in 1991 to follow developments in the Israeli-occupied territory and actions by Israel which the Committee regarded as violations of international law or of United Nations resolutions. It brought such actions—including Israeli settlements, Israeli exploitation of Arab-owned land and other matters affecting Palestinian rights—to the attention of the General Assembly and the Security Council.

As in previous years, the Committee reconfirmed that all Member States and Permanent Observers to the United Nations were welcome to participate as observers in its work. The Committee also decided to invite the participation of Palestine, represented by PLO. The Committee re-established its Working Group to assist in the preparation and expedition of its work.

In its annual report to the Assembly<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee and, under its guidance, the Division for Palestinian Rights undertook to expand cooperation with non-governmental organizations (NGOs), in order to heighten awareness of the Palestine question and to create conditions favourable for the full implementation of its recommendations. To that end, it held a regional seminar in Europe (Madrid, 27-30 May); two regional symposia for NGOs, one in Europe (Vienna, 26 and 27 August) and the other in North America (Montreal, Canada, 28-30 June); and the Eighth United Nations International NGO Meeting on the Question of Palestine (Vienna, 28-30 August).

In a number of communications during the year, the Committee Chairman drew the attention of the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council to urgent developments in the occupied Palestinian territory.

The Committee noted that the year had been marked by the tragic events of war, but also by renewed hopes for peace with justice in the region; solidarity with the Palestinians became an even more urgent task in the aftermath of the conflict arising from the situation between Iraq and Kuwait (see PART TWO, Chapter III), as their suffering increased manifold and their existence as a people appeared increasingly threatened. Israel's stepped-up colonization and economic strangulation of the occupied territories, its increasing violations of human rights and the growing number of Palestinian refugees made it imperative to achieve a just and comprehensive settlement of the Palestine question. At the same time, a new spirit of international cooperation in resolving regional conflicts peacefully and the current initiatives in that regard had given rise to hope concerning the peace process.

The Committee expressed continued and full support for the intifadah, the struggle of the Palestinians to end Israeli occupation and implement the proclamation of independence of November 1988. Through the intifadah, the Committee said, the Palestinian people had clearly expressed the determination to regain the exercise of their inalienable rights and had affirmed that PLO was their sole legitimate representative. The Committee reaffirmed that full respect for, and the realization of, the inalienable rights of the Palestinians were indispensable for a solution of the Palestine question. It called again on Israel to recognize and respect the national aspirations and rights of the Palestinians, and to acknowledge as well the desire of its own people for a future based on peace with justice. The Committee appealed to all progressive forces in Israel to intensify further their efforts to bring about that objective.

The Committee welcomed the convening by the United States and the USSR of a conference for achieving a comprehensive peace based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967)<sup>(3)</sup> and 338(1973)<sup>(4)</sup> and on the land-for-peace principle, to ensure security and recognition of all States in the region, including Israel, as well as the legitimate political rights of the Palestinians. The Committee hoped that such a conference would bring about a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the Palestine question based on internationally recognized principles and United Nations resolutions.

The Committee recalled that an international consensus had already been achieved on the essential principles for such a solution. In its first (1976) report to the General Assembly<sup>(5)</sup> the Committee had recommended modalities for attaining Palestinian rights, later complemented by the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the 1983 International Conference on the Question of Palestine<sup>(6)</sup> The intifadah and the Palestinian peace initiative of 1988 had led to an even wider consensus, as shown by the near-unanimous adoption of resolution 45/68 of 6 December 1990, concerning the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East, under United Nations auspices, with the participation of all parties to the conflict, including PLO, on an equal footing, and the five permanent members of the Security Council, based on Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) and the legitimate national rights of the Palestinians, primarily the right to self-determination.

The Committee recalled the principles for achieving a comprehensive peace contained in that resolution, namely, Israeli withdrawal from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and from the other occupied Arab territories; guaranteed arrangements for the security of all States in the region, including those named in a 1947 resolution of the Assembly<sup>(7)</sup> within secure and internationally recognized boundaries; resolving the problem of the Palestine refugees in conformity with a 1948 resolution of the Assembly<sup>(8)</sup> and subsequent relevant resolutions; dismantling the Israeli settlements in the territories occupied since 1967; and guaranteeing freedom of access to the Holy Places and religious buildings and sites.

Pending progress towards a political settlement, the Committee considered it to be of the utmost urgency that all necessary measures be taken to protect the Palestinians in the occupied territory, including Jerusalem, in accordance with the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (fourth Geneva Convention) and numerous Security Council and Assembly resolutions. In the past, the Committee noted, Israel's continued violation of the Convention had led to increasing casualties and the deterioration of already unbearable living conditions; a matter of special concern was the suffering inflicted on Palestinian women and children as a result of Israeli practices. The Committee considered that it was currently all the more urgent for the parties to the Convention and for the United Nations system as a whole to ensure that Israel abide by its obligations as the occupying Power and, in particular, to implement Security Council resolution 681(1990) of 20 December 1990 (which called for further development of the idea of convening a meeting of the parties to discuss possible measures to be taken by them under the Convention) and subsequent resolutions.

The Committee also expressed deep concern at the growing Israeli colonization of the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, as manifested in the intensified establishment and expansion of settlements, confiscation of land and water resources, and settler vigilantism, which created a situation that was exacerbated by the growing influx of new immigrants. The Committee considered it incumbent on the Security Council to review the matter urgently and undertake appropriate measures to deal with the situation.

The Committee reaffirmed that the United Nations had a duty and responsibility to render all assistance necessary to promote the social and economic development of the occupied territory, including Jerusalem, in preparation for the full exercise of national sovereignty; it accordingly reiterated its call on United Nations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and on Governments to sustain and increase their economic and social assistance to the Palestinians, in close co-operation with PLO.

The Committee noted with satisfaction the increased international support for attaining a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Palestine question. It believed that its programme of regional seminars, NGO meetings and other informational activities had played a valuable role in that process and it would continue to strive to achieve maximum effectiveness in the implementation of its mandate. It would continue and intensify its efforts to ensure that those meetings provided a useful forum for an in-depth consideration of the substantive issues to be addressed in any peace process, with the assistance of experts from all regions and representing diverse points of view, including Palestinians and Israelis. The Committee again invited all Governments, including the United States and Israel, to participate in its work and in the events organized under its auspices.

The Committee stated that it was greatly encouraged by the overwhelming international support for its objectives and by the intensification of international efforts in favour of a just and lasting settlement of the Palestine question, as reflected in the recommendations adopted by the regional seminar and by NGO symposia and meetings on the Palestine question (see above), organized under its auspices.

Public information activities

The Committee on Palestinian rights reviewed implementation of a 1990 General Assembly request<sup>(9)</sup> that DPI continue its 1990-1991 special information programme on the Palestine question, with particular emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America.

In its 1991 work programme, the Committee included a request to the Division for Palestinian Rights to study the feasibility of establishing a computerized database relating to the Palestine question. The Committee noted that steps were taken by the Division to initiate such a study, in cooperation with the relevant Secretariat departments.

In a February report to the Committee on Information<sup>(10)</sup> the Secretary-General provided information on United Nations public information activities on the Middle East situation and the Palestine question, which included press coverage of meetings of relevant United Nations bodies, such as the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Committee on Palestinian rights; coverage in publications; a photo mission sent by DPI from 13 October to 14 December 1990 to record Middle East peace-keeping operations; audiovisual material; and the observance of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People on 29 November, when DPI produced and distributed a special information kit to the press and officials attending the ceremony. United Nations information centres (UNICs) organized a wide variety of observances and ceremonies, among them: a solidarity meeting, organized at UNIC Brussels, Belgium, in cooperation with the Arab League and PLO, which was attended by more than 250 guests; a 10-day exhibit, organized by UNIC Lomé, Togo; and a solemn meeting organized by UNIC Paris, which included a Palestinian exhibit by PLO and was attended by more than 1,000 people.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/74 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Taking note, in particular, of the information contained in paragraphs 75 to 86 of that report,

Recalling its resolutions 45/67 C and 45/68 of 6 December 1990,

Convinced that the world-wide dissemination of accurate and comprehensive information and the role of non-governmental organizations and institutions remain of vital importance in heightening awareness of and support for the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to the establishment of an independent sovereign Palestinian State,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the action taken by the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat in compliance with General Assembly resolution 45/67 C;

2. Requests the Department of Public Information, in full cooperation and coordination with the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, to continue, with the necessary flexibility as may be required by developments affecting the question of Palestine, its special information programme on the question of Palestine for the biennium 1992-1993, with particular emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America and, in particular:

Report of the Secretary-General. In a report of October 1991<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted replies received from two Member States—Trinidad and Tobago and Ukraine—to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement a 1990 resolution of the General Assembly deploring the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem and calling on them to abide by the relevant United Nations resolutions.<sup>(12)</sup>

On 16 December 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/82 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States that had established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 22 October 1991,

1. Determines that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980), and their refusal to comply with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Assistance to Palestinians

Various organizations of the United Nations system continued to provide assistance in 1991 to the Palestinian people within the terms of their respective mandates. Notable among them were the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), which maintained an extensive programme of education, health and relief services as well as other humanitarian assistance to Palestine refugees (see below, under "Palestine refugees"); the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), whose economic and social assistance was primarily for the non-refugee population; the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), whose assistance focused on protecting and improving the environmental situation in the occupied territories; the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Assistance was also provided by the United Nations Secretariat's Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) (UNCHS), the World Food Programme (WFP), the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

In May 1991,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report providing an overview of the programme of economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people. In 1988,<sup>(14)</sup> the General Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to charge UNCHS with supervising the development of the assistance programme. In 1989,<sup>(15)</sup> the Assembly had requested the international community and United Nations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to increase their assistance to the Palestinians, in close co-operation with PLO; reiterated its call for implementation of development projects in the occupied territory; called for the treatment on a transit basis of Palestinian exports and imports passing through neighbouring ports and points of exit and entry; and called for the granting of trade concessions and preferential measures for Palestinian exports on the basis of Palestinian certificates of origin. Similarly, in 1990<sup>(16)</sup> the Assembly had requested WFP to provide food assistance to the Palestinians in the occupied territory; again requested increased assistance, in cooperation with PLO; called for the granting of trade concessions and preferential measures for Palestinian exports on the basis of Palestinian certificates of origin; and reiterated its call for the implementation of development projects.

On behalf of the Secretary-General, the UNCHS Executive Director undertook to obtain information on the implementation of those resolutions. As at 11 September 1991, replies to his request had been received from nine United Nations bodies and seven specialized agencies. They were summarized in his report.

UNCTAD activities. The Special Economic Unit within the UNCTAD secretariat concentrated its work during the period from July 1990 to June 1991 on four main areas: monitoring and analysing policies and practices of Israeli occupation authorities that hampered economic development in the occupied territory; investigating the impact of such policies and practices on key economic sectors; developing a database, including the dissemination of relevant qualitative and quantitative information on the economy of the occupied territory; and co-ordinating with and contributing to the relevant activities of United Nations organizations. In carrying out those activities, close consultations were maintained with Palestinian and other concerned authorities.

A report of UNCTAD to the Trade and Development Board reviewed the main developments in the economy of the occupied territory during the period under review. It provided updated information on the impact of the Palestinian uprising and related Israeli measures on the aggregate and sectoral performance of the Palestinian economy. Special attention was given to the impact of the recent crisis on the Palestinian economy, with particular reference to the plight of Palestinian migrant workers, as well as the effects of the declining levels of remittances and transfers to the territory and continuing deficiencies in the domestic production base. The report also identified feasible measures aimed at redressing the deteriorating economic situation.

The secretariat intensified work on an intersectoral study on the prospects for sustained economic and social development in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Within the frame of the study, 27 sectors, subsectors and issues were identified for in-depth investigation. Detailed outlines were developed and 25 studies were commissioned covering various economic and social sectors/issues, including agriculture, industry, energy, housing, water resources, population and labour, transport, services, finance, education, health, public administration and social welfare services. Work was initiated on a conceptual/analytical framework to provide technical guidelines for investigating future prospects in each field. The findings of those studies were to be integrated into a frame of reference outlining development prospects, strategies and policy options. The intersectoral study was expected to be completed in 1992.

An in-depth study was completed of tourism and related economies of the occupied territory. The study examined the performance of the sector prior to and since the Israeli occupation, including an analysis of the importance of tourism for the Palestinian economy. It focused on the factors that had constrained the performance of that sector up to 1987 and subsequently during the Palestinian uprising. Special attention was given to an assessment of its immediate outlook and needs for revival, including measures for immediate action. The prospects for sustained growth and long-term development of the sector were to be investigated separately within the frame of the intersectoral study. To the extent possible and where relevant, attempts were made to coordinate those efforts with those of the World Tourism Organization, including consultations on substantive issues.

The work of the UNCTAD secretariat on its database on the economy of the occupied territory culminated in the publication of database extracts on economic issues and related Israeli practices in the occupied territory (West Bank and Gaza Strip), from January to December 1989, the fourth in a series of monitoring reports on economic and social issues and related Israeli policies and practices in the occupied Palestinian territory. Along with the previous issues, the document was intended to constitute a cumulative chronology of major developments and related issues which dominated economic activities in the territory; serve as a source of reference for further investigation of the issues concerned; and supplement information and analysis in UNCTAD's reports and studies on the economy of the territory.

Work was intensified on the structuring of the statistical series in the secretariat's database on the economy of the territory; this entailed the identification of data sources, followed by classification, entry, verification and tabulation of available series for 1968-1987, covering national income accounts, balance of payments, external merchandise trade, population and labour force. Apart from serving as a consolidated source of quantitative information on the Palestinian economy for over 20 years of occupation, the new statistical series also provided the basis for the secretariat's current task of assessing future growth trends and establishing targets under different scenarios, in connection with the preparation of the overall intersectoral study.

In line with work programme requirements and with General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions, the secretariat intensified efforts to strengthen coordination and cooperation with an increasing number of United Nations organizations and international NGOs and others involved in work on and/or concerned with the economic and social situation of the Palestinians in the occupied territory. This included the dispatch of missions to Amman (Jordan), Cairo (Egypt) and Tunis (Tunisia). Regarding access to the occupied Palestinian territory by UNCTAD staff, Israel had not responded to UNCTAD's request on the matter.

UNDP activities. In response to a General Assembly resolution of 1990,(16) as well as other relevant resolutions and decisions of the Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the UNDP Governing Council, the UNDP programme of assistance to the Palestinian people was expanded considerably. In 1990, estimated delivery figures for development assistance in the occupied territories increased to approximately $11 million, compared to a delivery rate of $3.8 million in 1989.

In preparing for future assistance to the Palestinians during 1992-1996, the UNDP Governing Council, at its special session in February 1991, increased the resources for the programme by 25 per cent, from $12 million in 1987-1991 to $15 million. As a result, the level of central resources for the Palestinians was greater than funds earmarked by UNDP for over 90 other countries and territories.

With supplementary funding provided by other donor Governments and organizations, including the Arab Gulf Fund for United Nations Development Organizations (AGFUND), Canada, Greece, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Tunisia and the United States, UNDP's assistance programme had been active for over a decade. Since its inception in 1980, the Governing Council had allocated $40.5 million to that activity, including the 1992-1996 allocation; over $22 million had been provided in supplementary funding.

Current and future activities of the programme were to focus on opportunities for Palestinian entrepreneurship and employment, environmental concerns and human development. In 1990, the Administrator had announced the designation of a Special Representative to take up in early 1991 overall responsibility for UNDP activities in the occupied territories.

In a May 1991 report to the Governing Council,(") the Administrator stated that since its modest start in 1980, the UNDP programme had progressively become a leading provider of development assistance for the benefit of the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza.

While that assistance initially had largely been concentrated on the education and health sectors, coverage steadily widened to encompass basic infrastructure in agriculture, industry, commerce and human resources development. The programme had in recent years comprehensively addressed the complex issues of economic development and self-sufficiency. The 12 months preceding May 1991 had been particularly significant in that respect, the Administrator said, as they saw the launching of a number of important new projects in fields crucial to the future economy of the occupied territories.

Recent political events had re-emphasized the importance of employment-generating activities. At the urgent request of the Secretary-General, the Director of the programme led an inter-agency mission to the occupied territories in May 1991, in order to prepare an extensive portfolio of employment-generating projects for consideration by the donor community. Other participating organizations were the United Nations, ILO, WFP and UNRWA.

In addition to the allocation of $15 million for 1992-1996 from Special Programme Resources, UNDP's programme of assistance benefited from multi-bilateral contributions and cost-sharing arrangements for a number of specific projects. As at March 1991, eight donors had pledged contributions totalling $19,485,000; the four largest contributions were pledged by Italy ($11.5 million), Japan ($5 million), the United States and AGFUND ($1 million each).

The Administrator cited several recent significant developments. The Business Development Centre was now fully operational; several management and technical training sessions had been implemented and feasibility studies for new business ventures had been carried out. Arrangements for the credit operations were being worked out and the system was expected to be in place in the near future. Construction of the citrus processing plant in the Gaza Strip, with a capacity of 15 tons per hour, started after some delay, owing to the curfew imposed on the area as a result of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf; completion of the work was expected for the latter part of 1992, subject to availability of funds.

Also in Gaza, construction of a vegetable grading and packing facility-with the capacity to handle 7 to 8 tons of vegetables per shift-was soon to be launched; that facility was particularly important for the direct export of Palestinian produce. The Nablus industrial zone, which was to include important cold storage facilities, was almost ready; it would allow existing light industries to move away from residential areas and would facilitate the creation and operation of new ones.

In the agricultural field, final details had been worked out for the installation of modern irrigation equipment and systems in the Gaza Strip by mid-year 1991; the purpose of the project was to increase agricultural production and productivity while at the same time optimizing the use of water.

Work on the installation of a sewage collection network in the Jabalya refugee camp was well under way, and a technical assistance project to train maintenance personnel for the local sewerage system had been started in Gaza.

Two important horticultural projects, which had been the subject of intensive study for some time, were to be implemented shortly: a marketing services centre for horticultural products was to be established on the West Bank, with the active assistance of the International Trade Centre, while construction was to start on a grape processing plant previously delayed by financial difficulties.

Finally, the Administrator reported that, after lengthy delays, clearance had been received for the implementation of a poultry hatchery project and for the undertaking of a feasibility study on a fishing and commercial port in Gaza.

With regard to future directions, the Administrator said that as a result of the recent developments in the Middle East, the economic situation in the occupied territories had worsened dramatically; at the same time, it had become increasingly difficult for Palestinians to find employment in Israel. Trapped between a dramatic drop in remittances from family members living abroad, structural unemployment in the territories and employment restrictions in Israel, a large proportion of the Palestinians had nowhere to turn except to short-term emergency assistance. In those circumstances, the building of a self-sufficient economy had become of utmost urgency.

The inter-agency mission led by the Director of UNDP's assistance programme was to be the first important step in that direction. It was to be followed by a longer-term effort for the identification, formulation, resource mobilization and implementation of projects which were to serve as a basis for a dynamic and self-sustaining economy in the occupied territories. The majority of the projects currently under implementation were already playing an important role in that respect.

The $15 million allocated to the programme for the 1992-1996 programming cycle would allow the financing of a core programme which could serve as the focal point for much broader development activities to be identified and formulated by UNDP. The responsiveness of donor Governments and their willingness to complement UNDP resources with multi-bilateral funding would expand the impact of the assistance programme.

Noting the achievements of the programme, the Governing Council, on 25 June,<sup>(18)</sup> invited Governments and other donors to make financial contributions to it.

UNEP activities. In February 1989, UNEP and the World Health Organization (WHO) Regional Office for the Eastern Mediterranean (Alexandria, Egypt) had initiated a training project on water supply, sanitation and health for environmental health officers, to help improve the quality of drinking-water, sanitation and food hygiene so as to control diarrhoeal and other water-borne diseases in Palestinian refugee camps and settlements. The project was expected to run through June 1991. UNEP's contribution was approximately $30,000 in cash, while WHO contributed $15,000 in kind.

Two training courses had been held at Amman (November 1989 and February 1990) for 36 environmental officers. A manual, in Arabic and English, on water supply and sanitation was prepared and field tested; 300 copies in each of the two languages were to be published. Evaluation of the project's impact on camp conditions and the performance of trained environmental health officers was under way, with a report expected in June 1991. Future activities and follow-up depended on the evaluation mission's recommendations.

UNICEF activities. UNICEF reported that it had been supporting programmes for Palestinian children and women in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. In co-operation with UNRWA and other relevant United Nations agencies, assistance was provided in the fields of health, pre-school and primary education, women's programmes, water supply and sanitation. Emphasis was placed on reducing infant mortality through improvements in primary health care, and on promoting health education for mothers and primary school children. Special attention was given to protecting children against the six vaccine-preventable diseases, controlling diarrhoeal diseases and acute respiratory infections, and promoting safe delivery practices for mothers. Since the beginning of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf in August 1990, strenuous efforts had been made to sustain those programmes and new programmes were being planned to address the impact of the hostilities.

UNIDO activities. Since the third session of its General Conference in November 1989, UNIDO had focused on the following activities. In response to a request of UNDP's programme of assistance to the Palestinian People, UNIDO sent a mission to the occupied territories to examine the feasibility of establishing a vegetable grading and packing house to be used mainly for exports from the Gaza Strip to the countries of the European Economic Community. As a result, a technical report was prepared and submitted to UNDP in December 1989. A project document prepared by UNIDO on assistance to the plastics industry was under consideration by UNDP; the objective of the assistance was to establish a plastics testing laboratory in the occupied territories.

Negotiations were under way with the ILO International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training at Turin, Italy, to undertake a training course in pharmaceutical and chemical industries; it had been agreed that details of implementation had to be worked out in the near future. UNDP was expected to finance that activity.

The final report on the UNIDO seminar on obstacles to and prospects for the Palestinian industrial sector (Vienna, October 1989), which contained the seminar's recommendations for further assistance, was distributed in March 1990. At the same time, discussions were held with representatives of Palestine, the Arab Industrial Development and Mining Organization, ESCWA and the UNDP office at Jerusalem on ways and means of implementing those recommendations. It was agreed in principle on a meeting of those organizations in 1991.

Close cooperation and coordination with other United Nations agencies and organizations were pursued, particularly with regard to the issuance of the bulletin West Bank and Gaza update, which was covering the needs of those organizations in support of the Palestinians. Meanwhile, UNIDO took part in an inter-agency meeting (Geneva, May 1990), which dealt with ways and means of responding to the Palestinians' social and economic needs.

Following discussion of a report on UNIDO's technical assistance to the Palestinians, the Industrial Development Board, at its November 1990 session, adopted a decision requesting UNIDO to sustain and increase its assistance to the Palestinians and to undertake a number of activities, including cooperation with relevant United Nations bodies, in the efforts aimed at establishing a marketing centre for Palestinian industrial products.

Action by the Commission on Human Settlements. The Commission on Human Settlements, on 8 May 1991,<sup>(19)</sup> requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the UNCHS Executive Director and PLO, to devise a plan for implementing a shelter strategy for the Palestinians to the year 2000, as contained in the Executive Director's report on the housing requirements of the Palestinians (for details, see PART THREE, Chapter IX).

FAO activities. In accordance with a 1989 request of the FAO Conference, a mission to study and evaluate the situation of the agricultural sector in the occupied Palestinian territory took place from 23 August to 6 September 1991, the FAO Director-General reported. The mission's report, which identified a number of possible technical interventions by FAO, was attached to the Director-General's report. In the mission's view, the most urgent area for action related to citrus production in Gaza. Other possible interventions were in the areas of crop production and protection, livestock, fisheries, marketing, agro-industries, water problems, land issues, institutions, the role of women and environment.

The FAO Conference in November 1991, endorsed the approach suggested by the mission. It requested the Director-General to bring the recommendations to the attention of all potential donors and invited him to formulate projects and activities in implementation of those recommendations.

A symposium on the Palestinian agricultural sector took place in Rome (9-11 October 1991), with the participation of several United Nations bodies and consultants, and experts from the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

ILO activities. ILO pursued its efforts to implement and develop its technical assistance programme in the occupied territories. Its current projects concerned vocational training, trade union training and rehabilitation of handicapped persons. The ILO Director-General's annual report on the situation of the Arab workers in the occupied territories was submitted to the ILO Conference in June 1991.

Incidents and disputes involving Arab countries and Israel

Iraq and Israel

By decision 46/442 of 20 December 1991, the General Assembly decided to defer to a later date during its forty-sixth session and to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session consideration of the item on armed Israeli aggression against Iraqi nuclear installations, on its agenda since 1981(1) following the bombing by Israel of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad.

Lebanon

The situation in Lebanon was marked by continued hostilities and violence throughout 1991, with dire consequences, largely for the civilian population. This was reflected in several communications from Lebanon addressed to the Secretary-General during the year.(2) None the less, the Lebanese Government could extend its authority beyond the greater Beirut area towards the north, east and south. Militias previously operating in those areas were successfully disbanded and their weapons turned over to the Lebanese army, thus ensuring the return of stability and security.(3) In the most southern part of the country, however, Israel continued to consolidate its hold over the area it controlled, increasingly separating it from the rest of Lebanon. Israel reiterated that it had no territorial ambitions in Lebanon and said the "security zone" was a temporary arrangement necessary as long as the Lebanese Government was not able to exercise effectively its authority and prevent its territory from being used to launch attacks against Israel.

The boundaries of the Israeli-controlled area were not clearly defined, but were determined by the forward positions of the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) and the de facto forces (DFF) (the so-called South Lebanon Army); the area included territory adjacent to the armistice demarcation line, parts of the sectors of the Fijian, Nepalese, Irish and Finnish battalions of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) and the entire sector of the Norwegian UNIFIL battalion, as well as sizeable areas to the north of the UNIFIL area of operation. Within that area of operations, IDF and DFF had increased their military positions from 66 to 70 in January 1991, a number that decreased to 65 later in the year. Israel had also begun to establish a civil administration in the area under its control.

While taking note of the Lebanese Government's efforts to restore its authority, Israel said it was not prepared to modify the arrangements it had established on Lebanese territory, nor did it consider that UNIFIL as a peace-keeping force could replace them. Following the beginning of the Arab-Israeli peace talks, Israel added that all problems between Israel and Lebanon should be dealt with bilaterally in the framework of the peace process, including the interpretation and implementation of resolution 425(1978)(4) and subsequent Security Council resolutions.

IDF and DFF remained targets for attacks by Lebanese groups opposed to the occupation. For their part, IDF and DFF reacted vigorously to those attacks, often with heavy weapons and air support from Israel. UNIFIL often found itself caught in the crossfire. In the Norwegian UNIFIL sector, which had been entirely under Israeli control since the second Israeli invasion of Lebanon in 1982, IDF/DFF military operations had increased markedly, despite repeated UNIFIL protests.

In other developments, a long-standing intensive process of "quiet diplomacy" by the Secretary-General and his special envoy, Giandomenico Picco, led to the release in August 1991 of the first of eleven Western hostages who had been held in Lebanon. By the end of the year eight more Western hostages had been released, as well as 91 Lebanese, who had been detained in southern Lebanon without due process of law, and the remains of nine others. Efforts continued on behalf of a number of Lebanese who continued to be detained illegally.

At the request of Israel, the Secretary-General's special envoy was able to obtain conclusive information about two of its soldiers who had been missing in action in Lebanon, and the remains of another one was returned to his homeland. The process also served to resolve the fate of Lieutenant-Colonel William Higgins, a United States national, who had been serving with UNIFIL when he was abducted in February 1988, and whose captors had announced his execution in July 1989. In December 1991, the remains of Lieutenant-Colonel Higgins were finally returned to the United States hands. Also in December, the remains of another Western hostage, United States Foreign Service Officer William Buckley, were returned.

Despite intensive and continuing efforts, by the end of 1991 the fate of Alec Collett, a British journalist kidnapped in Lebanon in March 1985 while on assignment for UNRWA, had still not been resolved. Also of concern were a number of other missing people, including four Israeli soldiers, four Iranian diplomats who disappeared in Beirut in 1982, and several nationals of other countries, all of whose cases were pursued in earnest.

In statements throughout the period, the appreciation of the Secretary-General was expressed for the assistance received from Governments, noting in particular Iran, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. He also thanked the Government of Israel for having facilitated the release of so many Lebanese.

UNIFIL

During 1991, at the request of Lebanon and on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, the Security Council twice extended the mandate of UNIFIL, in January and July, each time for a six-month period.

Established by the Council in 1978(4) following Israel's invasion of Lebanon in March of that year,(5) UNIFIL was entrusted with confirming the withdrawal of Israeli forces, restoring international peace and security, and assisting the Government of Lebanon in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area. A second Israeli invasion, launched in June 1982,(6) radically altered the situation in which UNIFIL had to function. Shortly thereafter, the Council authorized the Force to carry out, in addition to its original mandate, the interim tasks of providing protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population, while maintaining its positions in its area of deployment.(*)

The Force was assisted by the Observer Group Lebanon, a group of 65 unarmed military observers organized from UNTSO and under the operational control of the UNIFIL Commander. The observers manned live observations posts along the Lebanese side of the Israel-Lebanon armistice demarcation line; they also operated four mobile teams in that part of the UNIFIL area of operation which was controlled by Israel. Two observers were assigned to UNIFIL headquarters.

In accordance with its mandate of assisting the Government of Lebanon in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the UNIFIL area, UNIFIL continued during the year to discuss with the Lebanese military authorities arrangements for a transfer to the Lebanese army of responsibility for security in certain areas currently controlled by the Force. The deployment of the Lebanese army in 1991 to other parts of southern Lebanon, including the Tyre pocket, added impetus to those discussions, as did the army's success in the village of Tayr Dibbah in mid-November, when clashes among the inhabitants had occasioned the deployment of a company-sized Lebanese army detachment.

The Force continued to oppose attempts by armed elements to enter or operate within its area of deployment. At times, this led to friction at its checkpoints, occasionally followed by harassment and threats directed at its members. As the members of the Security Council were informed at the time, two particularly serious incidents took place in September. On 13 September, one UNIFIL soldier was killed, while five others were wounded during firing by DFF/IDF on a vacant building not far from Israeli border installations where three armed Palestinians had detained 12 UNIFIL soldiers; during the incident, one of the three Palestinians was also killed and another wounded. The United Nations protested those actions to PLO and Israel. In another incident of 14 September, a Nepalese UNIFIL soldier was killed by a rocket-propelled grenade, as was one of the three unknown attackers.

As part of its mandate, UNIFIL troops detonated mines, roadside bombs and unexploded remnants of war, and dismantled ordnance of various types in the area of deployment. The Force cooperated closely on humanitarian matters with the Lebanese authorities, the United Nations agencies and programmes operating in Lebanon, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and NGOs. It continued to extend humanitarian assistance to the civilians in its area, by providing water, food, fuel and electricity, and escorting farmers. In addition, medicines, equipment and services to schools were made available from troop-contributing countries. UNIFIL medical centres provided care to an average of 3,000 civilian patients per month. At Lebanon's request, UNIFIL assisted in administering the official Baccalaureate examination to 800 students living in the Israeli-controlled area.

Commanded by Lieutenant-General Lars-Eric Wahlgren of Sweden, UNIFIL, as at January 1991, had a total strength of 5,853. However, by January 1992, its strength had decreased to 5,764 military personnel, provided by nine countries, namely, Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, Nepal, Norway and Sweden.

Report of the Secretary-General (January). On 23 January 1991, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on developments in the UNIFIL area for the six-month period since 25 July 1990.(8) He acknowledged important steps Lebanon informed him of having taken towards implementation of resolution 425(1978), notably the formation of a Government of national unity, the assumption by the Lebanese army of the control of the Greater Beirut area and a decision by the Council of Ministers to deploy the army in certain parts of southern Lebanon.(9)

The Secretary-General welcomed the progressive deployment of the army to the southern part of the country as a necessary first step towards restoring the Government's effective authority there. In his words, UNIFIL stood ready to cooperate with the Lebanese army when it reached the UNIFIL area and to begin progressively transferring to it responsibility for security. As was recognized by the Government, the feasibility of that step depended on its unhindered ability to deploy, rotate, supply and command the unit or units concerned and on those units' ability and willingness to act effectively to maintain security in the areas assigned to them. The Secretary-General hoped that all those who professed their wish to see again a strong and effective Government in Beirut would do all in their power to ensure that there was no impediment to the delicate process of deploying the Lebanese army to southern Lebanon.

Meanwhile, Israel had continued its efforts to establish and strengthen civil administrations in different locations of the area it controlled; some major towns had administrators and gendarmerie. The administrators, however, had no power other than to issue birth and death certificates, marriage licences and vehicle registrations. The General Security Service (GSS) of IDF and DFF kept a close watch on their activities. In certain towns, residents resisted attempts by IDF and DFF to establish civil administration offices, despite harassment and pressure on the local leaders. In three towns, Chebaa, Kafr Hammam and Kafr Chouba, travel restrictions were imposed on citizens who wanted to leave the Israeli-controlled area. The mayor of Kafr Hammam had been forced to leave the area when he refused the demand of GSS that he bring one of his sons back from the Bekaa valley. After the Lebanese Government had sought UNIFIL's help, UNIFIL took up the matter with IDF, which gave assurances for his safe and unconditional return to resume his official functions. In addition to the arrest of Lebanese citizens in the Israeli-controlled area, IDF/DFF had abducted a number of Lebanese from Al Mansouri and Hebbariye in the UNIFIL area, who were released as a result of UNIFIL's efforts.

UNIFIL also continued, in accordance with its mandate, to prevent its area from being used for hostile activities. In those parts of UNIFIL's area not under Israeli control, a high degree of calm and tranquillity prevailed and economic activity continued to increase. In order to foster the confidence necessary for such investment, UNIFIL established new positions close to the edge of the Israeli-controlled area; it also continued to press Israel to end the shelling of civilian targets and withdraw DFF from certain positions that were most frequently responsible for such firing and attracted attacks by armed elements. The Norwegian battalion, being deployed wholly within the Israeli-controlled area, was in a particularly difficult situation; its ability to prevent hostilities and promote normal civilian activities depended on the cooperation of IDF.

During the period covered by the report, 4 members of the Force lost their lives and 16 suffered injuries. In carrying out their duties, UNIFIL personnel were exposed to many dangers; however, progress had again been made in improving the physical security of UNIFIL's positions, including the newly established ones. Emphasizing that security for the Force could be achieved only if all the parties cooperated, respected its international and neutral status and avoided exposing its members to danger, the Secretary-General appealed to the parties to act accordingly. In view of UNIFIL's continued significant contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security in a volatile area, he recommended that its mandate be extended for another six months, as requested by Lebanon on 14 January.(9)

As an addendum to his report,(10) the Secretary-General presented a review of UNIFIL's scale and deployment, carried out by the United Nations Office for Special Political Affairs and the UNIFIL Commander, in accordance with a request by Council members agreed on during informal consultations on 31 July 1990 and confirmed by the Council President in September of that year.(11)

The review took note of the fact that UNIFIL faced certain difficulties and dangers owing to the anomaly arising from the task of preventing its area from being used for hostile activities, when those activities included resistance to an occupation against which the Security Council had repeatedly pronounced itself. The solution to that anomaly was seen in the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanese territory, as originally required by resolution 425(1978), accompanied by the process of the Lebanese army progressively assuming responsibility for security in UNIFIL's current area of deployment. That would make it possible for UNIFIL to deploy down to the international border, a process which was likely, at least initially, to create a need for an increase in the Force's strength.

For the short term, the review recommended measures for streamlining the Force, which would produce a savings of some 10 per cent in its strength. In making these recommendations, it was emphasized that the review had been carried out at a time when it was particularly difficult to judge the course of future events in southern Lebanon. While on the one hand there had been hopeful developments, notably the ending of the civil war in the Greater Beirut area and the start of a programme to reunite and strengthen the Lebanese army, on the other, Israel had given no indication that it would be ready in the immediate future to withdraw its forces completely. It must also be assumed, the report said, that various Lebanese and non-Lebanese groups would want to continue using the southern part of the country as a base from which to launch attacks against Israel, and it was likely to take time for the Lebanese Government to exercise effective authority in the south. In the medium term, it was hoped that UNIFIL could implement its original mandate by deploying to the international border; at that time, a new set of options for the Force's scale and deployment would have to be examined, including a likely expansion of its strength.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

The Security Council met on 30 January 1991 to consider the Secretary-General's report. The Council adopted resolution 684(1991) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied & the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 23 January 1991 and taking note of the observations expressed therein and in the addendum thereto of 28 January 1991, and without prejudice to the views of Member States thereon,

Taking note of the letter dated 14 January 1991 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 31 July 1991;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 416(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 684(1991)

30 January 1991 Meeting 2975 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/22170).

On the same day, following consultations, the President issued a statement on behalf of the Council members:(12)

"The members of the Security Council have noted with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), submitted in conformity with resolution 659(1990).

"They reaffirm their commitment to the full sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. In this context, they assert that any State shall refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

"As the Security Council extends the mandate of UNIFIL for a further interim period on the basis of resolution 425(1978), the members of the Council again stress the need for the implementation of that resolution in all its aspects. They express their appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his staff in this regard. They reiterate their full support for the Taif Agreement and for the recent efforts of the Lebanese Government to extend its authority over all Lebanese territory.

"The members of the Security Council take this opportunity to commend UNIFIL's troops and troop-contributing countries for their sacrifices and commitment to the cause of international peace and security under difficult circumstances."

Report of the Secretary-General (July). In Lebanon outside the Israeli-controlled area, progress in the implementation of the Taif Agreement (the national accord document approved by the Lebanese Chamber of Deputies at al Taif, Saudi Arabia, on 22 October 1989 and ratified by the Lebanese Parliament on 5 November of that year) continued, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council in a report covering the period from 23 January to 20 July 1991.(13) The Lebanese Government had declared its intention to dissolve and disarm all Lebanese and non-Lebanese militias by 30 September and had taken significant steps in that regard.

Important progress had also been achieved in the deployment of the Lebanese army in southern Lebanon, with the assistance of UNIFIL. The Force continued to discuss with the Lebanese authorities arrangements for a progressive transfer to the Lebanese army of responsibility for security in the areas controlled by the Force. The UNIFIL Commander had proposed the establishment of a joint Lebanese army-UNIFIL working group to formulate a comprehensive programme for that process, which was envisaged to proceed parallel with UNIFIL's movement southwards towards the border and the progressive withdrawal of Israeli forces from the Israeli-controlled area, thus bringing about implementation of resolution 425(1978).

Meanwhile, Israel continued to build up DFF and improve its ability to reinforce IDF inside Lebanon; as a consequence, the Israeli-controlled area was becoming increasingly separated from the rest of Lebanon. Recent weeks had seen a significant increase in resistance operations inside that area and in IDF/DFP harassment of villages to the north of it, inflicting death, injury and material loss on the civilian population. There were also many air and artillery attacks by IDF on targets to the north of the UNIFIL area. For its part, UNIFIL continued, to the best of its ability, to prevent its area from being used for hostile activities. It did everything it could to protect civilians caught up in conflict, but its ability to do so was limited when it was subjected to deliberate attack. It continued to press Israel to end the shelling of civilian targets and to withdraw DFP from positions which were most frequently responsible for such firing and attracted attacks by armed elements. UNIFIL also established further positions close to the edge of the Israeli-controlled area.

In carrying out their duty in an area where armed groups still abounded and hostilities occurred, the Force's personnel were exposed to many dangers. During the reporting period, four UNIFIL members lost their lives and seven were injured. Progress was made, however, in improving the physical security of UNIFIL's positions, including the newly established ones. The Secretary-General reiterated his appeal to all the parties to cooperate with the Force, respect its international and impartial status and avoid exposing its members to danger.

Stating that UNIFIL continued to make an important contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security, he recommended extension of its mandate for a further six-month period, until 31 January 1992, as requested by Lebanon on 15 July 1991.<sup>(14)</sup> He added that recent developments in the country had improved the prospects for the Force being able to carry out that part of its mandate that required it to assist the Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

The Security Council met on 31 July to consider the Secretary-General's report. At that meeting, it adopted resolution 701(1991) unanimously.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982, and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 21 July 1991, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Recalling the report of the Secretariat team and without prejudice to the views of Member States thereon,

Taking note of the letter dated 15 July 1991 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 31 January 1992;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 701(1991)

31 July 1991 Meeting 2997 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/22857).

After the vote and following consultations, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council members:<sup>(15)</sup>

"The members of the Security Council have noted with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) submitted in conformity with resolution 684(1991).

"They reaffirm their commitment to the full sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. In this context, they assert that any State shall refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

"As the Security Council extends the mandate of UNIFIL for a further interim period on the basis of resolution 425(1978), the members of the Council again stress the need for the implementation of that resolution in all its aspects. They express their appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his staff in this regard. They reiterate their full support for the Taif Agreement and commend the Lebanese Government for the recent successful deployment of its army in the Sidon and Tyre regions in the process of extending its authority over all Lebanese territory.

"The members of the Security Council take this opportunity to commend UNIFIL's troops and troop-contributing countries for their sacrifices and commitment to the cause of international peace and security under difficult circumstances."

Further reports of the Secretary-General. In a special report of 29 November,<sup>(16)</sup> the Secretary-General described the circumstances that led to the killing of an Irish UNIFIL soldier on 15 November. He also gave an overview of the recent increase in tension and hostilities in the UNIFIL area and neighbouring parts of southern Lebanon, most of which took place near IDF/DFP positions close to population centres and in areas where UNIFIL's deployment overlapped the Israeli-controlled area.

According to UNIFIL reports, clashes between armed elements and IDF/DFP increased from an average of just over one per month from January through March to more than live per month during the subsequent period, and shooting incidents increased from a monthly average of about 300 to around 450, reaching 847 in October. A similar increase in resistance activities, with an increased use of roadside bombs, and IDF/DFP retaliation north of the UNIFIL area were observed. As examples, the Secretary-General cited the detonation of a roadside bomb in Jarmaq on 20 October, in which three IDF soldiers were killed and two others injured; in retaliation, IDF/DFP shelled and conducted air strikes against the Nabatiyeh-Iklim Tuffah areas for five days. Following the retaliatory fire by IDF/DFP, which was in response to a roadside bomb attack south of Brashit on 23 August and lasted nine days, leaving one civilian killed and four wounded, the Lebanese population in the villages under attack fled; by 1 November, about 70 per cent were still absent. Since August, at least 11 Lebanese civilians had been killed and 30 wounded by roadside bombs and retaliatory fire. In a particularly tragic incident on 19 November, IDF/DFP made an incursion in the UNIFIL area at Majdal Silm, kidnapping four men, injuring two women and three children and demolishing two houses; a 10-year-old girl who pleaded with DFP personnel not to abduct her father was shot dead.

Firings—almost all by IDF/DFP—at or close to UNIFIL's positions also increased, from a monthly average of about 6 in January-March to 22 in April and 68 in August-October.

In order to reduce hostilities, avoid further hardship for the civilians and prevent additional UNIFIL casualties, the Secretary-General said he had proposed to Israel that it withdraw IDF/DFP personnel from the most affected positions, which would then be taken over by UNIFIL.

An intensification of hostilities between IDF/DFP and Lebanese resistance groups was also noted in a later report covering developments in the UNIFIL area since 21 July.<sup>(17)</sup> The number of firings by IDF/DFP at or close to UNIFIL positions increased substantially during that period, while operations by resistance groups—49 between August and December—claimed a number of casualties, including civilians. IDF/DFP increasingly reacted to attacks by firing indiscriminately into nearby villages. UNIFIL continued to do all it could to protect civilians caught up in the conflict, although its ability to do so was limited by the amount of firing directed at it.

UNIFIL financing

Assessments totalling $1,985.7 million had been apportioned among Member States in respect of UNIFIL for the period from its inception on 19 March 1978 to 31 January 1992, against which contributions totalling $1,685.2 million had been received. As stated by the Secretary-General,<sup>(18)</sup> the outstanding balance of $300.5 million included an amount of $19.6 million due from China, transferred to a special account in accordance with a 1981 resolution of the General Assembly,<sup>(19)</sup> leaving an amount due of $280.9 million as at 30 November 1991.

Owing to the shortfall, UNIFIL could not meet its obligations on a current basis, particularly those due to the troop-contributing States, which had never been paid on a current and full basis in accordance with established rates. The UNIFIL Suspense Account, set up in 1979<sup>(20)</sup> to facilitate reimbursement to them for the costs of equipment and supplies to UNIFIL, had thus far not achieved that purpose. As at 31 October 1991, an estimated amount of $146.4 million was due to former and current troop-contributing States for troop costs; in addition, an estimated $13.1 million was due to Governments for contingent-owned equipment.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) was informed that the interim financial statement of 30 June 1991 for UNIFIL covering the 12-month period from 1 February 1989 to 31 January 1990 showed a "surplus" balance of $8,235,545, representing excess of income over expenditure; "income" included assessed contributions, irrespective of collectibility. In view of the unpaid assessments, the Secretary-General proposed the suspension of certain financial regulations; ACABQ said it intended to review the matter in the context of a performance report for the period from 1 February 1991 to 31 January 1992.<sup>(21)</sup>

The Secretary-General estimated the costs of UNIFIL for the period from 1 February 1992 to 31 January 1993 at $160,044,000 gross ($157,068,000 net), or $13,337,000 gross ($13,089,000 net) per month, based on an average Force strength of 5,850 troops. For the 12-month period beginning 1 February 1991, the General Assembly in 1990<sup>(22)</sup> had authorized commitments at a monthly rate not to exceed $12,789,000 gross ($12,557,000 net); it had also renewed its invitation to Member States to make voluntary contributions. As at 31 October 1991, voluntary contributions totalling some $6.6 million had been received from Governments, approximately $2 million of which had been contributed by Switzerland during the financial period from 1 February 1991 to 31 January 1992. In addition, Switzerland donated services and supplies in the amount of approximately $63,000.

In the event that decisions of the Security Council on the status of UNIFIL for mandate periods after 31 January 1992 would entail additional costs over the limit and during the period of authorization and/or appropriation, the Secretary-General would seek the necessary additional commitment authorization from the Assembly if it was then in regular session or, if it was not, by initial recourse to Assembly resolution 46/187 on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the 1992-1993 biennium, with the prior concurrence of ACABQ. In the latter case, should the amounts required exceed the financial limit stipulated in that resolution, it would be necessary to reconvene the Assembly to consider the matter.

ACABQ expressed concern about the disproportionate increase in civilian staff costs from $15.7 million in 1990-1991 to $22.1 million in 1992-1993. It was informed that the vacancy factor used for 1992-1993 was 18 per cent compared to an average of 29 per cent from February 1991 to January 1992. The Committee was of the view that it was unlikely that in 1992 the vacancy rate would be reduced to 18 per cent in view of the large number of new missions and the continued need to redeploy staff from established missions; it recommended that the projected vacancy rate be adjusted, which would result in savings. It further recommended a review of the basis and frequency of the salary scales for local staff, taking into account the payment by other agencies in the area. ACABQ was informed that, as at 30 September 1991, 132 local employees were on board, financed by general temporary assistance ($1,194,000), in addition to the established 208 local-level posts. It believed that the number of established and temporary local staff apart from personnel under contractual services ($400,000) was high and that there was a possibility for savings. It further noted that the temporary staff were part of the UNIFIL establishment and should be listed in the staffing table.

ACABQ noted that the cost estimates for premises were proposed to increase from $2.7 million in 1990-1991 to $5 million in 1992-1993, including the construction of a new headquarters building. It was not fully convinced of the need for such a substantial increase and was of the view that economies could be made. With regard to transportation, it noted the proposed purchase of 157 new vehicles for replacement at a cost of $4.3 million and a provision of $5.3 million for vehicle spare parts and commercial repairs. It believed that there was a need for economy in the purchase and maintenance of vehicles.

The Committee further noted that the provision for the support account for peace-keeping operations was decreasing from $2,151,000 in 1990-1991 to $1,876,000 in 1992-1993, while the civilian staff costs in the mission area were increasing considerably during the same period. It pointed out that over the previous two years the applied average ratio at UNIFIL was substantially higher than approved by the Assembly in resolution 45/258; it intended to review in 1992 the current rate and methodology on which the rate was based, in the context of its review of the budgets and financial status of the various peace-keeping operations.

ACABQ recommended that the Assembly appropriate $153,468,000 gross ($150,684,000 net) or $12,789,000 gross ($12,557,000 net) per month—authorized under a 1990 Assembly resolution(22) for the period 1 February 1991 to 31 January 1992. Subject to the decision of the Security Council on the renewal of UNIFIL after 31 January 1992, ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve commitment authority up to the level of $13,337,000 gross ($13,089,000 net) per month, with its prior concurrence. It expected that economies would be made and be reflected in a performance report for that period, which it requested for early 1992. On that basis, and subject to a Council decision to renew UNIFIL after 31 July 1992, it would make its recommendations as to the actual requirements.

In his January and July 1991 reports on UNIFIL, the Secretary-General drew the Security Council's attention to the continuing gravity of the Force's financial situation and urged Member States to pay their assessments promptly and in full and to clear all remaining arrears. This was all the more important, he said, as after nearly 13 years in the field, UNIFIL faced a growing need to replace equipment that had become obsolete or unserviceable—a fact recognized by the Assembly, which had increased UNIFIL's budget for the one-year period beginning 1 February 1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/194 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, by which the Council established the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was Council resolution 701(1991) of 31 July 1991,

Recalling its resolution S-8/2 of 21 April 1978 on the financing of the Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 45/244 of 21 December 1990,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 11 of the report of the Advisory Committee,

Recalling its resolution 34/9 E of 17 December 1979 and the subsequent resolutions in which it decided that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations should be suspended, the latest of which was resolution 45/244,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force by certain Governments,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Force on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States, resulting from the withholding of contributions by certain Member States,

Concerned also that the surplus balances in the Special Account for the Force have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Force,

Concerned further that the implementation of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the Force,

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section I, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution S-8/2 the amount of 153,468,000 United States dollars gross (150,684,000 dollars net) authorized and apportioned by the Assembly in paragraphs 2 and 3 of its resolution 45/244 for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon from 1 February 1991 to 31 January 1992, inclusive;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the Force at a rate not to exceed 13,337,000 dollars gross (13,089,000 dollars net) per month for the period beginning 1 February 1992, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 701(1991), subject to obtaining the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions for the actual level of commitments to be entered into for each mandate period that may be approved subsequent to 31 January 1992;

3. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amounts referred to in paragraph 2 above among Member States in accordance with the composition of

4. Decides also that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-sixth session regarding the scale of assessments;

5. Decides further that Estonia shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-sixth session regarding the scale of assessments;

6. Decides that the Federated States of Micronesia shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-sixth session regarding the scale of assessments;

9. Decides that the Marshall Islands shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-sixth session regarding the scale of assessments;

10. Decides also that the Republic of Korea shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-sixth session regarding the scale of assessments;

11. Decides further that, in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, 'the contributions to the Force until 31 January 1992 of the Member States referred to in paragraphs 4 to 10 above shall be treated as miscellaneous income to be set off against the apportionments referred to in paragraph 1 above;

12. Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of 8,235,545 dollars, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 34/9 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly;

Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) continued to supervise the observance of the cease-fire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic in the Golan Heights. Its mandate was again renewed by the Security Council. In 1991, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights also dealt with the situation in the Golan Heights in the light of Israel's 1981 decision<sup>(23)</sup> to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Israeli-occupied territories (see below and PART THREE, Chapter X).

UNDOF

Established by the Security Council in 1974,<sup>(24)</sup> as called for by the Agreement on Disengagement of Forces between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic concluded that year,<sup>(25)</sup> UNDOF was charged with supervising the observance of the cease-fire between the two countries in the Golan Heights area and ensuring that there were no military forces in the area of separation between their forces. UNDOF remained deployed within and close to the separation area, with its headquarters located at Damascus. Its mandate was renewed twice in 1991, in May and November, each time for a six-month period.

Activities

Reports of the Secretary-General. Before the expiration of the mandate of UNDOF on 31 May and 30 November 1991, the Secretary-General submitted reports to the Security Council on the activities of the Force for two six-month periods, from 24 November 1990 to 20 May 1991<sup>(26)</sup> and from 21 May to 20 November 1991.<sup>(27)</sup>

The Secretary-General stated that UNDOF had continued to perform its functions effectively with the cooperation of the parties and that the situation in the Israel-Syria sector had remained generally quiet and the cease-fire had been maintained, with the exception of one serious incident on the night of 22/23 September, when three armed elements were killed at 500 metres east of the cease-fire line, which was within the Syrian-administered area, by fire from an IDF position on the slopes of Mount Hermon. The return of the bodies to the families who resided in Lebanon was arranged and conducted by ICRC.

UNDOF continued to supervise the area of separation by means of static positions and observation posts manned 24 hours a day, foot and mobile patrols operating day and night at irregular intervals on predetermined routes, and temporary outposts and patrols on specific assignments.

Fortnightly inspections of armament and forces in the area of limitation were conducted with the assistance of liaison officers from the parties who accompanied the inspection teams. UNDOF also lent its assistance and good offices on request from the parties. While UNDOF continued to receive cooperation from the parties, both had placed restrictions on the movement and activities of its inspection teams in certain areas. In this respect, the Secretary-General noted that the Protocol to the Agreement on Disengagement provided for the freedom of movement necessary for the discharge of UNDOF's mission; he would continue to exert all possible efforts to correct the situation with regard to restrictions on the freedom of movement.

Under a programme undertaken by the Syrian authorities, civilians continued to return to the area of separation, the population of which had doubled since the start of UNDOF's mandate. In exercising its administrative responsibility, the Syrian Arab Republic had stationed police in the area of separation. UNDOF had adjusted its operations accordingly to take account of those developments and to continue carrying out effectively its supervisory tasks under the Agreement on Disengagement.

UNDOF remained concerned for the safety of Syrian shepherds who grazed their flock close to and west of the separation line. Intensified patrolling of new mine-cleared paths and the establishment from time to time of standing patrols in those areas helped prevent incidents, as did the grazing security fence in the southern part of the area of separation. New patrol paths were under construction.

In addition, UNDOF continued its mine-clearing operations, clearing a total area of 83,750 square metres during the periods under review, and finding and destroying, among other ammunition, 2 anti-tank mines, 9 cluster bombs, 9 artillery shells, 2 mortar shells and 210 anti-tank shells.

Despite the current quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the Secretary-General cautioned that the Middle East situation as a whole continued to be potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so, unless a comprehensive Middle East settlement was reached. Stating in each report that he considered UNDOF's continued presence in the area to be essential, the Secretary-General, with the Syrian Arab Republic's assent and Israel's agreement, recommended that its mandate be extended for a further six months, until 30 November 1991 in the first instance and until 31 May 1992 in the second.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1991, without debate, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 695(1991).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 30 November 1991;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement Security Council resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 695(1991)

30 May 1991 Meeting 2990 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/22650).

On 29 November, again without debate, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 722(1991).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 31 May 1992;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement Security Council resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 722(1991)

29 November 1991 Meeting 3019 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/23250).

Following the adoption of each resolution, the President made the following statement:(28)

"In connection with the resolution just adopted on the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, I have been authorized to make the following complementary statement on behalf of the Security Council:

"As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph 23 (24 in the November report): 'Despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached.' That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council."

Composition

As of November 1991, UNDOF had a strength of 1,331 troops. It was composed of contingents from four countries-Austria, 533; Canada, 220; Finland, 414; and Poland, 157 (including one officer deployed as military adviser to the representative of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan)-and of 7 United Nations military observers detailed from UNTSO. Assisting the Force as required were UNTSO observers assigned to the Israel-Syria Mixed Armistice Commission.

Change of Commander

On 26 April 1991,(29) the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the Commander of UNDOF, Major-General Adolf Radauer (Austria), would end his tour of duty on 30 September. Following the usual consultations with the parties, the Secretary-General proposed-subject to the renewal of the Force's mandate by the Council-to appoint Major-General Roman Miszta (Poland) to the post of UNDOF Commander with effect from 1 October.

The Council President responded on 3 May(30) that the Secretary-General's letter had been brought to the attention of the Council members, who agreed with his proposal.

Financing

In December 1991,(31) the Secretary-General reported that he had received $901.8 million in contributions for UNDOF—for the period from its inception to 30 November 1991—and for the United Nations Emergency Force, established at the end of 1973 and liquidated in 1980. The unpaid assessed balance totalled $55 million, which included $36 million due from China, transferred to a special account in accordance with a 1981 General Assembly resolution,(19) leaving $19 million due in contributions.

According to the interim financial statement of 30 June 1991 covering the period from 1 December 1989 to 30 November 1990, the UNDOF account showed a "surplus" balance of $6,790,883, representing excess of income over expenditure; "income" included assessed contributions, irrespective of collectibility. The Secretary-General proposed to suspend certain financial regulations which required that the "surplus" be surrendered as credits to Member States; he suggested instead that it be entered into the suspense account established pursuant to a 1978 Assembly resolution.<sup>(32)</sup>

The Secretary-General noted that a more favourable preferential exchange rate was introduced by the Syrian authorities in September 1991; with that rate, an increase in reported income was expected due to a larger gain on currency exchange.

Recalling that in 1990<sup>(33)</sup> ACABQ also had recommended that he pursue his negotiations with the host countries concerned to obtain more preferential conditions for the construction and rental of UNDOF premises and accommodation, the Secretary-General stated that the Organization continued to explore the feasibility of relocating by acquiring a United Nations-owned headquarters complex for UNDOF at Damascus; however, no suitable locations had been identified and preliminary studies indicated quite high cost estimates for the construction of new premises.

In connection with the past and future financing of UNDOF, the Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly appropriate $20,679,000 gross ($20,199,000 net) for UNDOF for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1991, authorized and apportioned in 1990,<sup>(34)</sup> and that it approve an amount of $21,384,000 gross ($20,835,000 net) for its operation from 1 December 1991 to 30 November 1992.

ACABQ, also in December 1991,<sup>(21)</sup> concurred with these appropriation recommendations. It further recommended that the Assembly appropriate and assess an amount of $21,384,000 gross ($20,835,000 net) for the period from 1 December 1991 to 31 May 1992 and that it authorize monthly commitments not exceeding $3,564,000 gross ($3,472,500 net) for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1992, subject to the decision by the Security Council on the renewal of UNDOF after 31 May 1992.

With regard to the Secretary-General's proposal to suspend certain provisions of the financial regulations to allow the surplus balance to be entered into the suspense account, ACABQ said that in view of the status of the assessed contributions to UNDOF and the fact that full reimbursement in accordance with the standard rates had been made on a current basis to troop-contributing States, it saw no need for a suspension and recommended that the surplus be credited to Member States. It stated its intention to examine at a later stage the rate at which outstanding obligations in respect of all peace-keeping operations were liquidated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/193 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, by which the Council established the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was Council resolution 722(1991) of 29 November 1991,

4. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 above, their respective share in the estimated income of 7,500 dollars other than staff assessment income approved for the period from 1 December 1991 to 31 May 1992, inclusive; 1,250 dollars, being the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1991, and the balance, that is, 6,250 dollars, for the period from 1 January to 31 May 1992, inclusive;

5. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 541,500 dollars approved for the period from 1 December 1991 to 31 May 1992, inclusive; 90,250 dollars, being the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1991, and the balance, that is, 451,250 dollars, for the period from 1 January to 31 May 1992, inclusive;

6. Decides further that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-sixth session regarding the scale of assessments;

16. Invites voluntary contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/192 A of 21 December 1989;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

General Assembly resolution 46/193

20 December 1991 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Territories occupied by Israel

The territories occupied by Israel as a result of previous armed conflicts in the Middle East comprised the West Bank of the Jordan River (including East Jerusalem), the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights. While events in the Persian Gulf dominated international attention, clashes, confrontations and Israeli countermeasures continued in the West Bank and Gaza Strip where the Palestinian uprising, or intifadah, entered its fifth year in early December. As in previous years, its intensity varied, with periods of relative quiet punctuated by violent confrontations and high casualties. According to reports by UNRWA, by the end of June 1991, 988 Palestinians had been killed and more than 70,000 injured since the outbreak of the uprising on 9 December 1987. Between 1 July 1990 and 30 June 1991 alone, 32 Palestinians were killed in Gaza and 125 in the West Bank. The lack of concrete results of the intifadah, compounded by the outcome of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, aggravated frustration among the Palestinian community and led to the continued killing of alleged collaborators with Israel (83 in Gaza and 41 in the West Bank between 1 July 1990 and 30 June 1991).

Large numbers of Palestinians were arrested and detained, often without charge or trial; it was estimated that 14,000 persons—including 64 UNRWA staff members—from the occupied territories were detained by Israeli authorities, approximately 9,000 in military detention centres and 5,000 in prisons. There were frequent complaints about conditions and ill-treatment, and, on 23 June, a hunger strike began to protest against conditions at Nafha prison in the Negev desert which spread quickly to other prisons and detention centres in Israel and the occupied territories.

Following the tragic events at Haram Al-Sharif in Jerusalem on 8 October 1990, when 17 Palestinians were killed and more than 150 wounded in clashes with the Israeli security forces, the Security Council adopted a resolution<sup>(1)</sup> condemning Israel's actions. Having received a report of the Secretary-General on ways and means of ensuring the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians under Israeli occupation,<sup>(2)</sup> submitted in accordance with that and a later resolution,<sup>(3)</sup> the Council, in December of that year,<sup>(4)</sup> requested him to monitor and observe the situation regarding Palestinians under Israeli occupation and to keep it regularly informed. The first of those reports was presented to the Council in April 1991.

At the outset of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, Israel, invoking heightened security concerns, imposed a comprehensive curfew on the Gaza Strip and large portions of the West Bank. Socio-economic conditions in the occupied territory—already seriously affected by three years of the intifadah, loss of remittances from the Persian Gulf and a drop in local income—became critical. Reduction of domestic and export revenue and increased security measures dramatically aggravated unemployment and weakened the Palestinian economy still further. The education system in the territories was brought to a virtual standstill for most of January and February due to curfews, while further curfews, strikes and closure orders continued to affect it throughout the year.

At the same time, the establishment and expansion of Israeli settlements in both the West Bank and Gaza were accelerated. Between 9 March and 9 April in the West Bank alone, an estimated 68,000 dunums of land were expropriated or surveyed for expropriation. Other Israeli measures—such as allocation of more water to settlers than to Palestinians and the punitive uprooting of olive and citrus trees—inflicted further damage on a fragile economy.

Most significant among the security measures imposed by Israel was the tightening of control of the movement of Palestinians within the occupied territories and to Israel and foreign destinations. A new pass system, devised in November 1990, was implemented on a large scale after the end of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf. Palestinians from the West Bank and Gaza required a travel pass to enter Israel or East Jerusalem, the economic, cultural and religious focus of the West Bank and home to most of the important Palestinian professional institutions, organizations and medical facilities. The pass system split the West Bank and tended to isolate East Jerusalem since it was all but impossible to travel from the south of the West Bank to the north without passing through the city.

In 1991, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices) presented three periodic reports—the latest in October—covering developments in the territories between 1 September 1990 and 22 August 1991.<sup>(5)</sup> On the basis of the information and evidence before it, the Committee concluded that the human rights situation of the Palestinians and other Arabs in the occupied territories deteriorated to such an extent that the population was reaching a state of mere survival.

The persistence of that negative trend, intensified by the accumulated hardships of more than three years of struggle and by the repercussions of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, derived from the fundamental reality which, the Committee said, it had stressed since the outset of its activities, namely, that occupation itself constituted a violation of human rights. During the period under consideration, Israel had continued to pursue a general policy based on the claim that certain territories it occupied since 1967 were part of the State of Israel; this policy had led to the annexation of Jerusalem and the Golan Heights and the imposition of Israeli law there. It also had resulted in the establishment of settlements in the territories, expropriation of property, transfer of Israeli citizens including Jewish immigrants to the territories, and inducing the Palestinian and other Arab population to leave their homeland.

The Committee's observations were based on oral information received through testimonies of persons having first-hand experience of the human rights situation in the territories, as well as written information gathered from various sources, including newspaper reports. From among those oral and written sources of information, the Committee included in its reports relevant excerpts and summaries. For the purpose of collecting oral testimonies, the Committee again organized hearings at Damascus, Amman, Cairo and Geneva. It continued to monitor statements by Israeli government members that reflected Israeli policy in the territories and reports on measures taken to implement that policy. In carrying out its mandate, the Committee benefited from the cooperation of Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic as well as Palestinian representatives.

The Palestinians and other Arabs in the occupied territories continued to suffer a heavy toll of casualties, the Committee noted, as Israel continued to implement harsh measures in trying to quell the popular uprising. Disproportionate force was used against civilians, including live ammunition and other cruel means, and severe injuries resulted from shooting, beating and tear-gas inhalation.

Various elements added to the suffering of a population living below the poverty line and exposed it to severe physical and psychological stress. Among them were a prolonged and continuous curfew, difficult access to basic necessities such as food and medical treatment, damage to agriculture and loss of income as a result of curfews or regulations limiting freedom of movement, search and arrest operations, property seizure and tree uprooting, and systematic house demolitions as a collective punishment. Freedom of expression was affected by the closure of newspapers, news offices and the harassment of journalists. The temporary denial of access to places of worship severely limited the freedom of religion. In spite of international protests, the expulsion of Palestinians from the territories for alleged security reasons was resumed. The practice of preventive or administrative detention continued. In addition, Palestinians were frequently denied legal guarantees, including the right to a fair trial. There were repeated allegations of torture and systematic ill-treatment of prisoners, including minors. Repressive measures, raised to the status of an official policy, were meant to quell Palestinian and Arab resistance, the Committee noted.

Acts of aggression by Israeli settlers against Arab civilians further contributed to the climate of fear and tension. The creation of new settlements, in particular in Jerusalem, Israel's declared intention to establish more and increase drastically the settler population in the near future (including through the settlement of recently arrived Jewish immigrants), and harassment of Palestinians to incite them to leave their homeland seemed to indicate, in the Committee's view, a deliberate will to modify the territories' demographic composition. Similarly, the prolonged closures of a number of universities, schools and even kindergartens, the denial of proper educational facilities and the harassment of teachers and students seemed to indicate the implementation of a deliberate policy aimed at lowering education standards. The Committee stressed again that Israel's policy violated its obligations under the fourth Geneva Convention and several other human rights instruments and United Nations resolutions.

The overall picture for the period from 1 September 1990 to 22 August 1991 revealed, in the Special Committee's view, a further deterioration in the enjoyment of basic human rights, fundamental freedoms and living conditions. In the face of this and in order to avoid another major explosion in the region, the international community needed to renew its efforts to convince Israel to put an end to its practices. A comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict should be negotiated which would guarantee the rights of all the peoples in the region.

In the meantime, the Committee recommended once more urgent measures to safeguard the Palestinian and Arab population's basic human rights, including the following: full application by Israel of the fourth Geneva Convention, the main international instrument of humanitarian law applying to the territories; full compliance with all General Assembly and Security Council resolutions pertinent to the Palestine question, as well as other relevant resolutions adopted by ILO, UNESCO and WHO; creation of conditions of confidence and security conducive to promoting respect for human rights, as well as the convening of a peace conference with the participation of all parties concerned by the Arab-Israeli conflict; full cooperation of the Israeli authorities with ICRC in protecting detained persons, in particular by ensuring full access of ICRC representatives to them; full support by Member States of ICRC's activities in the territories, and additional assistance, including funds to finance extra activities required by the unprecedented increase in the number of detained persons; full support by Member States of UNRWA activities; and unrestricted cooperation of Israel with UNRWA and full respect of UNRWA's privileges and immunities.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a Security Council resolution of 1990,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in April 1991<sup>(6)</sup> his first progress report on the situation affecting the Palestinians under Israeli occupation for the period from 20 December 1990 to 28 February 1991. Most of the information had been provided by UNRWA—which, the Secretary-General said, was playing a major role in helping him to carry out his obligations under the Council resolution—its continuous interaction with the Palestinians enabling it to gain first-hand knowledge of their day-to-day life, including Israeli practices affecting them.

The period covered by the report could not but be viewed against the backdrop of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, which had had direct repercussions in the territories, the Secretary-General said. On the economic level, Iraq's invasion of Kuwait proved devastating for the territories, as remittances and transfers from the Gulf region plummeted. On the political level, widespread Palestinian support for Iraq led to increased tension between the inhabitants of the territories and Israeli security forces and, more broadly, cost the Palestinians much goodwill among the Israeli public. The tension was exacerbated by the 8 October 1990 incidents at the Al-Haram Al-Sharif and other Holy Places of Jerusalem, in which at least 17 Palestinians were killed and 150 wounded by Israeli security forces and more than 20 Israeli civilians and police were wounded by Palestinians. Those tragic events again highlighted the need for greater safety and protection of the Palestinians living under Israeli occupation. Following the incidents, the Council adopted in October two resolutions on the situation in the territories<sup>(1,3)</sup> and, in accordance with requests contained in them, the Secretary-General submitted on 31 October a report which put forward ideas concerning the Palestinians' safety and protection.<sup>(2)</sup>

The weeks prior to the Council's December resolution<sup>(4)</sup> were marked by a spate of violent incidents involving Israelis and Palestinians, in Israel as well as in the territories, with bloodshed and loss of life on both sides. As the atmosphere deteriorated, restrictions were imposed on travel to Israel and East Jerusalem by Palestinian residents of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, a policy that affected in particular labourers who worked inside Israel. Israel's decision to resume deportations further aggravated tensions. Particularly violent clashes in Gaza on 29 December 1990 clearly illustrated how an incident involving a few individuals could quickly escalate into a widespread confrontation during which hundreds of people might be hurt; they also demonstrated the depth of mistrust and anger between Palestinian residents and the security forces.

The curfews imposed on the territories during January and February 1991 led to a decline in such clashes, with an attendant drop in casualties. However, the practice of confining Palestinians throughout the West Bank and Gaza Strip to their homes for weeks brought severe hardship to the population as a whole. As the likelihood of war in the area increased, special security precautions were taken in Israel and the territories and normal life was disrupted. The curfews imposed on the territories were extended well beyond the time when Israeli citizens began their daily routines.

Those issues were addressed by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Jean-Claude Aimé, when he visited the area from 1 to 11 March. Given his arrival shortly after the cessation of hostilities in the Persian Gulf, virtually everyone was preoccupied with the aftermath of the crisis and its long-term implications. On the Palestinian side, there was great uneasiness and apprehension about what the future would hold. Of immediate concern was the severe economic situation in the territories and the fact that tens of thousands of Palestinian labourers continued to be without work. The Palestinians with whom the Special Representative met expressed alarm at the renewed policy of deportations and at the number of Palestinians who had been detained without charge. There was great bitterness that primary and secondary education had again been interrupted by the curfews and continued to be denied altogether at the university level. Resentment was expressed that, despite Israel's stated position that security measures were necessary in the light of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, tax raids were none the less conducted during the general curfew.

The Special Representative emphasized those Palestinian concerns in his meetings with Israeli officials, who felt that the curfew had been warranted on security grounds, given that the population as a whole had sided with Iraq; at the same time, they acknowledged that the economic situation in the territories was deteriorating. They stated that some of the Palestinians who had previously worked in Israel would gradually be reabsorbed into the Israeli labour market; an alternative source of employment would have to be found for those who would not be given jobs. In the light of that, the Secretary-General asked UNDP to look into the possibility of sending an economic mission to the territories, the principal objective of which would be to develop income-generating projects.

In view of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, Israel clearly had a right to take what it considered to be appropriate measures to defend itself in the face of the threat articulated against it, the Secretary-General said; yet, under the fourth Geneva Convention, it also had the obligation at all times to protect the Palestinian civilians under its control, and the civil defence precautions undertaken by Israel on behalf of those civilians were inadequate. The extended curfew imposed undue hardship and the continuation of practices such as deportations, administrative detentions and collective punishments (school closures and demolition of houses)-all of which were violations of the Convention-were cause for concern.

Reiterating some of his views conveyed in a report of October 1990,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that the issue was what practical steps could be taken by the international community to ensure the safety and protection of the Palestinians under Israeli occupation. The numerous appeals to Israel to abide by its obligations under the fourth Geneva Convention had been ineffective. It was evident that for any measure of protection to be ensured, Israel's cooperation was absolutely essential. Given the special responsibility of the high contracting parties for ensuring respect for the Convention, they might wish to call for a meeting to discuss possible measures that might be taken under the Convention.

The idea of such a meeting was strengthened, according to the Secretary-General, by the fact that the Council had itself repeatedly drawn attention to their responsibilities, most recently in its December resolution by which it called on the parties to the Convention to ensure respect by Israel for its obligations. The idea was not, as some had suggested, to politicize the issue but rather to exchange views on measures outlined in the Convention-such as the appointment of a protecting Power, conciliation and the inquiry procedure-which could have the beneficial effect of enhancing the safety and protection of the Palestinians. In that connection it should be noted, the Secretary-General said, that each of those measures required the consent of the occupying Power.

In the meantime, he would continue to pursue his mandate under the December 1990 resolution for which, he said, there was less than full support even though it had been adopted unanimously. In a statement to the Council at the time of the resolution's adoption, Israel expressed its opposition, describing the resolution as unfairly singling it out and noting that the mandates of the United Nations personnel in the area had been agreed on; in Israel's view, it would be both highly inappropriate and impractical that a resolution of the Council should alter such an agreed-upon basis. The Alternate Permanent Observer of Palestine expressed the view that the resolution represented less than what had been sought and did not reflect the position which the Council should have adopted in view of the current situation in the territories, including Jerusalem, and in view of the volatile situation in the Middle East in general.

The Secretary-General said he viewed the resolution as a positive step aimed at providing increased safety and protection for the Palestinians under occupation; if that objective could be achieved, the prevailing atmosphere of mistrust and fear which undermined prospects of dialogue would be dissipated and would facilitate the search for a peaceful settlement of a conflict that had brought untold suffering to both peoples.

In a report of October 1991,<sup>(7)</sup> the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that Israel had not replied to his March request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement a 1990 Assembly resolution<sup>(8)</sup> demanding that Israel desist from certain policies and practices in the occupied territories. He also reported that he had drawn the attention of States and international organizations, including the specialized agencies, to the Assembly's call not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the territories and to avoid actions, including those in the field of aid, that might be used by Israel in its annexation or other policies. He informed the Assembly that in response to the resolution's request that widest circulation of the reports of the Committee on Israeli practices and of information regarding its activities and findings be ensured, DPI had undertaken press coverage of all meetings of relevant bodies, including the Committee; press releases on regional seminars and symposia organized by the Committee on Palestinian rights, as well as press releases containing statements of the Secretary-General on the Palestine question and the situation in the territories; the continued distribution of a number of pertinent publications; the production of a video on the visit of the President of the forty-fifth Assembly session to the territories, as well as the world-wide distribution of the video About the UN: Palestine; the production of 59 radio programmes on the Palestine question and related topics between January and June 1991; co-sponsorship of two national encounters for journalists on the question (Brussels, 22 May; Bonn, Germany, 24 May); and a briefing in New York for NGOs on the United Nations perspective on Palestinian rights.

19. Reiterates its call upon all States, in particular those States parties to the Convention, in accordance with article 1 thereof, and upon international organizations, including the specialized agencies, not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel, the occupying Power, in the occupied territories and to avoid actions, including those in the field of aid, that might be used by Israel in its pursuit of the policies of annexation and colonization or any of the other policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

20. Urges all the High Contracting Parties to the Convention to respond to the inquiry submitted to them by the Secretary-General in accordance with paragraph 6 of Security Council resolution 681(1990);

21. Requests the Special Committee, pending early termination of the Israeli occupation, to continue to investigate Israeli policies and practices in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, to consult, as appropriate, with the International Committee of the Red Cross according to its regulations in order to ensure that the welfare and human rights of the peoples of the occupied territories are safeguarded and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arises thereafter;

22. Also requests the Special Committee to submit regularly to the Secretary-General periodic reports on the present situation in the occupied Palestinian territory;

23. Further requests the Special Committee to continue to investigate the treatment of prisoners in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

24. Condemns Israel's refusal to permit persons from the occupied Palestinian territory to appear as witnesses before the Special Committee and to participate in conferences and meetings held outside the occupied Palestinian territory;

25. Condemns Israel's latest attack against the Sharia Islamic Court in occupied Jerusalem on 18 November 1991, when Israeli forces took away important documents and papers;

26. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, return immediately all documents and papers that were taken away from the Sharia Islamic Court in occupied Jerusalem, to the officials of the said Court;

27. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To provide all necessary facilities to the Special Committee, including those required for its visits to the occupied territories, so that it may investigate the Israeli policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

(b) To continue to make available such additional staff as may be necessary to assist the Special Committee in the performance of its tasks;

(c) To circulate regularly and periodically the reports mentioned in paragraph 21 above to Member States;

(d) To ensure the widest circulation of the reports of the Special Committee and of information regarding its activities and findings, by all means available, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat and, where necessary, to reprint those reports of the Special Committee that are no longer available;

(e) To report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the tasks entrusted to him in the present resolution;

28. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories".

1. Condemns those policies and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, which violate the human rights of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and, in particular, such acts as the opening of fire by the Israeli army and settlers that result in the killing and wounding of defenceless Palestinian civilians, the beating and breaking of bones, the deportation of Palestinian civilians, the imposition of restrictive economic measures, the demolition of houses, the ransacking of real or personal property belonging

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council convened on several occasions in 1991 to consider the situation in the occupied territories. On 4 January, the President informed the Council of a letter of the same date<sup>(9)</sup> from the Alternate Permanent Observer of Palestine to the United Nations requesting that, in accordance with the Council's previous practice, an invitation be extended to him to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President added that the requested invitation was not made pursuant to rule 37<sup>a</sup> or rule 39<sup>b</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure but that, if it was approved, the Council would invite the Observer to participate, not under rule 37 or 39, but with the same rights of participation as under rule 37.

The request was approved by 11 votes in favour (Austria, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Ecuador, India, Romania, USSR, Yemen, Zaire, Zimbabwe) to 1 against (United States), with 3 abstentions (Belgium, France, United Kingdom).

Before the vote, the United States, which had requested it, stated its opposition, saying the Council did not have before it a valid request to participate and observers did not have the right to participate at their own request. The representative of PLO should be granted permission to participate only if the request complied with rule 39. The United States did not agree with recent practice which appeared selectively to try to enhance, through ad hoc departures from the rules, the prestige of those wishing to speak in the Council.

During the Council's consideration, the President drew attention to two letters, from the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine<sup>(10)</sup> and from the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights<sup>(11)</sup> Both charged Israel with escalating during December 1990 its violence against Palestinians, indiscriminately shooting and killing them. According to a recent report of the Database Project on Palestinian Human Rights, the Committee Chairman said, the latest killings had brought the death toll among Palestinians since the beginning of the intifadah, to more than 900. On 29 December 1990, Associated Press had reported that Israeli troops shot and killed five Palestinians in the Gaza Strip in what was described as the bloodiest clash there since May, and The New York Times had reported on 30 December that the number of Palestinians wounded the previous day could reach as many as 250, more than 100 of them in the Rajah refugee camp.

<sup>a</sup> Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

<sup>b</sup> Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Following consultations, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council members<sup>(12)</sup>

Meeting number. SC 2473.

"The members of the Security Council are deeply concerned about recent acts of violence in Gaza, especially actions by Israeli security forces against Palestinians, which led to scores of casualties among those civilians.

"The members of the Council deplore those actions, particularly the shooting of civilians. They reaffirm the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to all the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and request that Israel, the occupying Power, fully comply with the provisions of the Convention.

"The members of the Council reaffirm their positions, most recently expressed in Security Council resolution 681(1990), and support the work of the Secretary-General in implementing the said resolution. The members of the Council further urge intensified efforts by all who can contribute to reducing conflict and tension in order to achieve peace in the area."

The Council met again on 27 March. In the interim, on 9 January, Yemen had requested an immediate meeting on the situation in the territories<sup>(13)</sup> By the same vote as at the January meeting, the Council invited the Deputy Permanent Observer of Palestine, at his request<sup>(14)</sup> to participate in its debate with the same rights of participation as under rule 37. The United States, which again requested the vote, reiterated its objections to what it called special and ad hoc departures from orderly procedure.

Following consultations, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council members<sup>(15)</sup>

Meeting number. SC 2980.

"The members of the Security Council are gravely concerned by the continued deterioration of the situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and especially by the current serious situation resulting from the imposition of curfews by Israel.

"The members of the Security Council deplore the decision of 24 March 1991 by the Government of Israel to expel four Palestinian civilians, in violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, which is applicable to the above-mentioned territories, and in contravention of relevant resolutions of the Security Council.

"The members of the Security Council also call upon Israel to desist from deporting Palestinians and to ensure the safe return of those deported.

"Recalling Security Council resolution 681(1990) and other Security Council resolutions, the members of the Security Council will keep the situation described in paragraph 1 above under review."

After the four Palestinians were again expelled from Gaza on 18 May (for details, see below), Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Ecuador, India, Yemen, Zaire and Zimbabwe called for the urgent convening of the Council<sup>(16)</sup>

The Council met on 24 May. With its consent, Algeria, Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, Malaysia and the United Arab Emirates were invited, at their request, to participate, under rule 37, in the discussion without the right to vote.

The request from the Deputy Permanent Observer of Palestine<sup>(17)</sup> that an invitation be extended to him to participate in the debate was again approved by 11 votes to 1, with 3 abstentions. The United States again expressed its objection to inviting the Observer with the same rights of participation as under rule 37.

After statements by several speakers, including the Observer and Israel, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 694(1991).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 681(1990) of 20 December 1990,

Having learned with deep concern and consternation that Israel has, in violation of its obligations under the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and acting in opposition to relevant Security Council resolutions, and to the detriment of efforts to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, deported four Palestinian civilians on 18 May 1991,

1. Declares that the action of the Israeli authorities of deporting four Palestinians on 18 May is in violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, which is applicable to all the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Deplores this action and reiterates that Israel, the occupying Power, must refrain from deporting any Palestinian civilian from the occupied territories and ensure the safe and immediate return of all those deported;

3. Decides to keep the situation under review.

Security Council resolution 694(1991)

24 May 1991 Meeting 2989 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/22633).

Other action. Following consideration of a report of the Executive Director on the environmental situation in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, the Governing Council of UNEP, on 31 May, stressed the need for Israel to bear its responsibility as occupying Power by taking measures to conserve the natural resources, halt environmental deterioration, protect the human environment and ensure the well-being of the territories' citizens (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

Fourth Geneva Convention

The Security Council, in December 1990, (4) had requested the Secretary-General, in cooperation with ICRC, to develop further the idea of convening a meeting of the high contracting parties to the fourth Geneva Convention to discuss possible measures that might be taken by them under the Convention. By a note verbale of 21 March 1991 to the Secretary-General<sup>(18)</sup> Israel categorically objected to the idea, saying that there was no precedent for such a meeting and no basis in the Convention for its convening which would rather constitute a subversion and abuse of the Convention and would undermine rather than contribute to its goals. The proposal was an astonishing act of singling out Israel and a dangerous move to politicize an international humanitarian law instrument. Israel's reservation with respect to the Convention's formal application vis-à-vis the territories was widely known; nevertheless, it had undertaken to apply all of the Convention's humanitarian provisions on a de facto basis. In doing so, it cooperated fully and was in regular contact with ICRC to enable it to fulfil its functions under the Convention.

In his progress report of April 1991 on the situation affecting the Palestinians under Israeli occupation<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General repeated his belief that a meeting of the parties to the Convention could facilitate discussion of possible measures to ensure the safety and protection of Palestinians in the occupied territories. In a report of September 1991<sup>(19)</sup> he informed the General Assembly that Israel had not replied to his 25 March request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement an Assembly resolution of 1990<sup>(20)</sup> demanding that it acknowledge and comply with the Convention in the territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/47 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980, in which, inter alia, the Council affirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Convention,

Noting that Israel and the concerned Arab States whose territories have been occupied by Israel since June 1967 are parties to that Convention,

Taking into account that States parties to the Convention undertake, in accordance with article 1 thereof, not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

Palestinian detainees

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

Between 1 September 1990 and 22 August 1991, grave deficiencies continued to be witnessed in the administration of justice, according to the Committee on Israeli practices. The "quick justice" policy pursued by Israel was illustrated by the large number of detentions, including administrative detentions. It was exemplified by a 27 June report of Ha'aretz that IDF on 26 June had amended the law on military courts in the territories, enabling a single-justice bench to impose prison sentences of up to 10 years, whereas before only a three-justice bench could impose sentences of over 5 years. According to military sources, the reason for the amendment was that, since the outbreak of the uprising, courts in the territories had been overburdened. Another illustration of the arbitrary nature of the administration of justice was the administrative detention imposed on 29 January for six months on Sari Nusseibeh, considered to be one of the leading moderate Palestinian intellectuals in the territories. Although the Defence Minister stated that Nusseibeh was detained for the subversive activity of collecting security information for Iraqi intelligence, especially after missile attacks on Israel, the detention was later reduced to three months on a suggestion by the Jerusalem District Court judge who expressed the conviction that the detention was simply preventive, justified by the state of war.

The Committee was particularly concerned about the severity of the sentences imposed on the Arab population as opposed to the leniency towards Israelis charged with killing or ill-treating Arabs. The situation of detainees also continued to be a source of grave preoccupation during the period under consideration, and the very high number of Arab civilians detained since the beginning of the uprising contributed to a further deterioration of the status and treatment of prisoners. On 21 December 1990, Ha'aretz reported that, according to the Judge Advocate-General, over 70,000 residents of the territories had been arrested since the beginning of the uprising. On 15 July 1991, the commander of the military police reported that 9,128 residents were currently held in military prisons, including 580 in administrative detention. Some 4,891 of the persons detained were convicted prisoners serving sentences, while 2,966 were pre-trial detainees and 691 "regular detainees". Detainees continued to be held in prisons and detention centres inside Israel itself, such as Ansar 3 (Ketziot), in violation of relevant provisions of article 76 of the fourth Geneva Convention. According to several reports, detainees, including minors and women, had continued to be subjected to various forms of ill-treatment, both physical and psychological. Reference could be made in that connection to the report issued by the Israeli human rights group Betzelem on 21 March on the basis of interviews with 41 Palestinian detainees, who alleged having been tortured during interrogation over the past three years, having been subjected to severe beatings, food and sleep deprivation, threats to harm family members, prolonged confinement in tiny refrigerated cells, being tied up in painful positions, having their heads covered with a sack and being made to sit on wet floors for several hours. None of the 41 were convicted, or even suspected of "hostile terrorist activity". Other complaints by detainees, often leading to protests in the form of widespread hunger strikes, included inadequate food and medical treatment, overcrowding of cells, lack of sanitary facilities and lack of proper arrangements for meetings between detainees and their lawyers or family members.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1991,<sup>(21)</sup> the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that Israel had not replied to his March request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement an Assembly resolution of 1990<sup>(22)</sup> calling on Israel to release all Palestinians and other Arabs arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

Expulsion and deportation of Palestinians

In its report of October 1991, the Committee on Israeli practices said that the period under review witnessed a resumption of deportations on "security grounds" from the territories, carried out in spite of a wave of international protest against this violation of article 49 of the fourth Geneva Convention, including unanimous Security Council resolutions against such illegal practice. On 9 January<sup>(23)</sup> Lebanon charged Israel with having expelled and deported four Palestinians from the Gaza Strip to Lebanon, through the so-called "security zone". On 18 May 1991, four Gaza Strip residents were expelled to Lebanon, after the High Court of Justice rejected their petition against deportation. Another pre-occupying element was the trend to expel Palestinians without a valid residence permit. According to a report by Ha'aretz and The Jerusalem Post, Betzlem stated in a press conference on 15 August that at least 20 women married to Palestinians had recently been ordered to leave the West Bank with their children despite a declared policy of the State Attorney's office that non-resident wives and children of West Bank residents would not be deported.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following Israel's 24 March decision to expel four Palestinians—Hashim Ahmed Ali, Jamal Abid El Nasser Abu Jabal, Jamal Mohammed Abu-Eljedian and Muin Mohammad Husam—from Gaza<sup>(24)</sup> the Security Council President on 27 March issued a statement on behalf of the Council members deploring that decision and calling on Israel to refrain from deporting Palestinians and to ensure the safe return of those deported. (For details of the Council's consideration of the matter, within the context of the situation in the occupied territories, see above.) According to The New York Times of 25 March, the deportations had been ordered following stabbing attacks against Israelis, although the four men had not been accused of being involved in any of the attacks<sup>(25)</sup>

The four were again expelled from the Gaza Strip on 18 May<sup>(26)</sup> and transported by an Israeli military helicopter to the so-called "security zone" in southern Lebanon, where they were taken in two civilian cars to the Lebanese army checkpoint at Marj el-Zouhour in the southern Bekaa valley<sup>(27)</sup> Recalling the Council's 27 March statement, the Secretary-General on 20 May strongly deplored the deportations. On 24 May, the Council adopted resolution 694(1991) deploring Israel's action and declaring it a violation of the fourth Geneva Convention (for details, see above).

In a statement before the Council, Israel said the four expelled Palestinians were convicted criminals prominent in instigating and perpetrating violence and were leaders of local terror squads who bore direct responsibility for murderous terror attacks committed under orders from abroad, for which they were tried and convicted. Three of them had been released from prison in a 1985 prisoner exchange, on the condition that they refrained from further terrorist activities; however, they continued to foment and direct violent attacks, notwithstanding repeated detentions.

Expulsions were a measure of last resort and were carried out only in extreme cases when all other measures proved ineffective. The four individuals who received expulsion orders were given the opportunity to appeal, first to an Advisory Committee attached to the Regional Commander, and subsequently to the Israel Supreme Court sitting as a High Court of Justice, which decided to uphold the orders. The Court had determined on a number of occasions that article 49 of the fourth Geneva Convention could not be viewed as anything but a reference to arbitrary mass and individual deportations such as were carried out during the Second World War for the purposes of extermination and forced labour; the article could not detract from Israel's obligation to preserve public safety nor from its right to take measures necessary to preserve its own security.

The Observer for Palestine said that since the beginning of the intifadah, Israel had overtly deported 70 Palestinians and several hundred others under various pretexts. Those deportations had gone hand in hand with a feverish escalation in building new settlements and expanding older ones, particularly in the past few months. Thousands of homes were being demolished, curfews imposed, universities closed, Palestinian land and wealth expropriated and the Palestinians' livelihoods destroyed. Oppression and mistreatment were escalating, with hundreds being killed and wounded each week and thousands being detained. All that increased the urgent need to provide international protection for the Palestinians under occupation until that occupation was brought to an end.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September(28) the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that no reply had been received from Israel to his March request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement the 1990 Assembly demand<sup>(29)</sup> that Israel cease deporting Palestinians and facilitate their immediate return.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/47 E by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 605(1987) of 22 December 1987, 607(1988) of 5 January 1988, 608(1988) of 14 January 1988, 636(1989) of 6 July 1989, 641(1989) of 30 August 1989, 672(1990) of 12 October 1990, 673(1990) of 24 October 1990, 681(1990) of 20 December 1990 and 694(1991) of 24 May 1991,

"Article 49

"Individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive . . .",

Reaffirming the applicability of the Convention to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

1. Strongly deplores the continuing disregard by Israel, the occupying Power, of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the Security Council and resolutions of the General Assembly;

2. Demands that the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, rescind the illegal measures taken by its authorities in deporting Palestinians and that it facilitate their immediate return;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to cease forthwith the deportation of Palestinians and to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Israeli measures against educational institutions

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

According to a report by Betzelem, closure orders affected all West Bank schools during the 1990/91 academic year; during a certain period, primary schools and even kindergartens were ordered closed, the Special Committee reported in its October 1991 report. These long periods of interruption of the educational process, together with severe shortages of classrooms and adequate teaching materials, and the banning by military authorities of attempts by teachers to provide for alternative education outside the closed schools and universities, led to a dramatic decline of the educational level, particularly among young children.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1991,<sup>(30)</sup> the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that no reply had been received from Israel to his March request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement the 1990 Assembly demand<sup>(31)</sup> that it rescind all actions and measures against educational institutions, ensure their freedom and refrain from hindering their effective operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/47 G by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, tional and cultural situation in the occupied Palestinian territory,

1. Reaffirms the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

2. Condemns Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculty members in schools, universities and other educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territory, especially the opening of fire on defenceless students, causing many casualties;

3. Also condemns the systematic Israeli campaign of repression against and closing of universities, schools and other educational and vocational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territory, in large numbers and for prolonged periods, restricting and impeding the academic activities of Palestinian universities by subjecting the selection of courses, textbooks and educational programmes, the admission of students and the appointment of faculty members to the control and supervision of the military occupation authorities, in flagrant contravention of the Convention;

4. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply with the provisions of that Convention, rescind all actions and measures taken against all educational institutions, ensure the freedom of those institutions and refrain forthwith from hindering the effective operation of the universities, schools and other educational institutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Golan Heights

The Special Committee's report also contained information on the situation in the Golan Heights, which were, like other territories occupied by Israel, affected by intensified settlements policy (see below) and other Israeli practices, such as the issuance of Israeli identity cards for Syrian nationals who were residents of the Golan Heights. According to a statement of the Syrian Ministry of Foreign Affairs in September<sup>(32)</sup> 27 such nationals were being detained because they refused to carry Israeli identification cards.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1991,<sup>(33)</sup> the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that no reply had been received from Israel to his March request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement the 1990 Assembly call<sup>(34)</sup> on Israel to desist from repressive measures against the Golan population.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/47 F by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 have been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/88 E of 10 December 1982, 38/79 F of 15 December 1983, 39/95 F of 14 December 1984, 40/161 F of 16 December 1985, 41/63 F of 3 December 1986, 42/160 F of 8 December 1987, 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/58 F of 6 December 1988, 44/2 of 6 October 1989, 44/48 F of 8 December 1989 and 45/74 F of 11 December 1990,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 11 September 1991,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of Israel's decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and that all territories thus occupied by Israel must be returned,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, Reaffirming the applicability of the Convention to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

1. Strongly condemns Israel, the occupying Power, for its refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, particularly Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan was null and void and without international legal effect and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, should rescind forthwith its decision;

2. Condemns the persistence of Israel in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan are null and void, constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

Israeli settlements

Illustrations of Israel's settlements policy were provided in the October 1991 report of the Committee on Israeli practices. The Deputy Housing Minister had declared on 20 February that it was planned to build several thousand houses in the territories over the coming three years, including 2,000 during the 1991 fiscal year. That intention was further confirmed on 1 May when it was reported by Ha'aretz that the Housing Ministry was planning to build 24,000 new housing units in the West Bank, to accommodate 88,000 Jews. On 2 July, it was reported that the Ministry had set up a special office to oversee settlement activities in the territories, with a view to accelerating construction and expanding existing settlements. According to a report of 2 July in Ha'aretz and The Jerusalem Post, the planned construction could increase the Jewish population in the territories by half a million. The accelerated settlements policy was particularly noticeable in the Jerusalem area where, for instance, it was reported by Ha'aretz on 27 May that an outline plan for the settlement of Ma'aleh Adumim, east of Jerusalem, provided for expanding the settlement over approximately 50 per cent of its current surface, thus almost linking it with the eastern neighbourhoods of Jerusalem. The trend to settle new immigrants arriving in Israel in the territories also persisted during the reporting period. The Permanent Observer for Palestine said on 10 May<sup>(35)</sup> that Israel planned to settle 1 million Jews in Jerusalem and 36,000 residential units were to be built in the area between Al Khalil and Bethlehem, in addition to the 3,000 in Jerusalem currently under construction.

As an example of the determination to expand settlements in the Golan Heights, the Committee cited the declaration of the Minister of Housing before the Knesset on 18 March 1991, according to which the Jewish population in the Golan Heights would be tripled by building over 2,400 new housing units during the next two years. He said the building programme was a concrete statement of Israel's intention to remain in the Golan Heights. Another illustration of that policy was the announcement on 21 May that a new settlement called "Kanaf" was to be inaugurated and that two others were planned in the Golan. On 23 July, it was announced by the head of the Golan Heights Regional Council that four new settlements would be set up shortly and that new immigrants would settle there.

According to the Syrian Arab Republic<sup>(36)</sup> 43 settlements had been established by Israel in the Golan Heights and the number of Israeli settlers there exceeded 12,400 as of May 1991. On 21 May, the Israeli Minister of Housing, Ariel Sharon, had declared that he would like to double the number of settlements in the Golan Heights. Those Israeli practices were impeding peace efforts, the Syrian Arab Republic said. In November<sup>(37)</sup> it stated that the Israeli Ministers of Agriculture and Housing had inaugurated a new settlement, which was in principle to be settled by 70 Jewish families from the USSR; in a speech given on that occasion, the Housing Minister had called for an expansion of the Jewish population in the Golan Heights in order to ensure its control by Israel. According to the Syrian Arab Republic, the number of Jewish settlers had meanwhile reached 13,400.

The period under review was also marked by violence and aggression by Israeli settlers against the Palestinian and other Arab population. An example of indiscriminately violent behaviour of settlers was an incident on 18 February 1991 involving a settler from Teqo'a, near Bethlehem, who on 24 February confessed that he had fired his sub-machine-gun while his car was stopped at a make-shift road block in Beit Sahour. A bullet struck and killed a 14-year-old Palestinian in the kitchen of his home. Another illustration was an incident on 12 May at A-Ram junction, north of Jerusalem, when settlers from Shiloh opened fire on an Arab minibus, injuring a 4- and a 5-year-old child. The settlers claimed that the passengers had thrown cans at their bus and the minibus had tried to run their bus off the road. One of the injured boys had to be hospitalized. Another serious incident occurred on 8 June 1991, when a settler shot dead an Arab shepherd.

Further establishment and expansion of settlements, following confiscation of homes and lands of Palestinians, and an increase in illegal activities by Israeli settlers were reported later in the year. The Permanent Observer of Palestine to the United Nations, on 13 December<sup>(38)</sup> charged that the Israeli Cabinet had endorsed and approved the building of 200 new housing units in the neighbourhood of Silwan in East Jerusalem. The Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights, on 16 December<sup>(39)</sup> quoted several reports on settlement activities. According to a Reuters news agency report of 12 December, approximately 30 Jewish settlers, protected by large numbers of police, had forced entry into six Palestinian houses in Silwan and expelled the occupants. The settlers had moved in following an Israeli Cabinet decision authorizing them to remain in Silwan after they had attempted for two months to dispossess the Palestinian home-owners. On 13 December, The New York Times reported that the Housing Minister had encouraged and financed the settlers' action. As reported by the same newspaper, in the last few years, Jewish nationalist movements had, with government backing, taken over houses in the Old City's Muslim and Christian quarters. According to a 19 November report of the Jerusalem-based Information Centre on Human Rights in Palestine, Israeli information officers and forces had on the previous day broken into the Islamic Court and other premises in East Jerusalem, seizing archives dating back 500 years, some of which related to the ownership of land and buildings in Jerusalem.

On 20 June<sup>(40)</sup> Yemen, as Chairman of the Group of Arab States, requested a Security Council meeting to consider Israeli settlement activity in the territories.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September<sup>(41)</sup> the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that no reply had been received from Israel to his March request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement the 1990 Assembly demand<sup>(42)</sup> that it desist from taking any action that would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly,

Expressing grave anxiety and concern about the serious situation prevailing in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, as a result of the continued Israeli occupation and the measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories,

Recalling the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988 and 31 October 1990, and taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 9 April 1991 and 11 September 1991,

Confirming that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

1. Determines that all such measures and actions taken by Israel in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967 are in violation of the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, constitute a serious obstacle to the efforts to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and therefore have no legal validity;

2. Strongly deplores the persistence of Israel in carrying out such measures, in particular the establishment of settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

3. Demands that Israel comply strictly with its international obligations in accordance with the principles of international law and the provisions of the said Convention;

4. Demands once more that Israel, the occupying Power, desist forthwith from taking any action that would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

5. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Convention to respect and to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Living conditions of Palestinians

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a General Assembly request of 1989,<sup>(43)</sup>

the Secretary-General submitted in June 1991 a report on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territory.<sup>(44)</sup> The report offered an outline for a three-part study of the problems and prospects of the Palestinian economy and its potentials in various sectors. The first part was an assessment of the economic and social situation in the occupied territory, while part two examined prospects for the development of various economic sectors. Based on the results of the conclusions reached, the study would then try to formulate a consolidated substantive framework for the growth and development of the Palestinian economy into the year 2000, outlining strategy guidelines and options for action at various levels.

The Secretary-General reported that, in line with the work plan for preparation of the study, the secretariat of UNCTAD had embarked on a number of activities. Within the study's scope, a total of 25 sectors, subsectors and issues had been identified for in-depth investigation leading to the preparation of specific studies for which detailed outlines—corresponding to the three parts of the general outline of the overall intersectoral study—had been developed. The studies were to cover the following: population and demography; public administration; aggregate economic and social performance; labour, employment and human resources; money and banking; public finance; agriculture; manufacturing industries; mining and quarrying; energy resources and development needs; public utilities; housing and construction; Israeli settlements; merchandise trade; services; transport and communications; education system; public health conditions and services; social welfare services; women in development; international assistance; socio-economic statistics; water resources; dynamics of social change; and tourism and related activities.

Aside from 27 experts commissioned to prepare those studies, a team of senior development experts had been engaged to assist the UNCTAD secretariat in the evaluation and review of the individual studies and in investigating prospects for the future development of the occupied territories.

The outlines for the specific studies had also been brought to the attention of the relevant United Nations organizations, programmes and departments, including FAO, UNIDO, UNESCO, WHO, ILO, UNRWA, UNCHS and UNDP, as well as the United Nations Departments of International Economic and Social Affairs and of Technical Cooperation for Development, the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and ESCWA. All had indicated their willingness to cooperate in the preparation of the intersectoral study; the majority of them had also provided UNCTAD with substantive contributions to the study. UNDP, through logistical support provided by its programme of assistance to the Palestinian people, offered to facilitate UNCTAD's task in undertaking the specific studies.

Similar contacts had been established with regional Arab and other organizations involved in providing assistance to the Palestinians, some of which also contributed financially.

UNCTAD also held consultations with government authorities in Egypt and Jordan and with representatives of Palestine, one of the objectives being to identify complementarities between the economies of the region and to investigate possibilities of exploiting and promoting such complementarities for the benefit of all concerned. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was in contact with Israel with a view to holding similar consultations.

Parallel to embarking on the preparation of the specific studies, UNCTAD intensified work on developing its database on the economy in the occupied territories and on developing a conceptual/analytical framework to provide technical guidelines for investigating future prospects in each of the economic and social fields where specific studies were being prepared. Upon completion of that framework and finalization of part one of the specific studies, a meeting of experts involved in those studies was to be convened to examine and adopt guidelines, thus providing a common basis for the further studies. The major findings emerging from the specific studies would be consolidated into a substantive frame of reference outlining immediate problems and needs, growth and development prospects, strategies and policy options. In view of the recent crisis in the region and the difficulties encountered in commencing the preparation of the intersectoral study, work on the project was expected to be completed during the first semester of 1992 with the final report and other related documentation appearing soon thereafter.

Israeli land and water practices

In accordance with requests of the Economic and Social Council, the most recent in 1990,<sup>(45)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in June 1991<sup>(46)</sup> a report on Israeli land and water practices in the occupied territories, prepared by ESCWA.

The report stated that since occupying the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights in June 1967, Israel had enacted a series of laws, regulations and decrees that allowed it to seize Arab land and property, as well as sources of water, including groundwater in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and from the Jordan River. It had full control over 7,113 square kilometres of land (West Bank: 5,573 square kilometres; Gaza Strip: 360 square kilometres; Golan Heights: 1,180 square kilometres), with a population of 1.5 million according to a 1988 census, as well as over the water resources of the occupied territories. As a result of its 1982 invasion of Lebanon, Israel had gained complete control of the land and water resources of southern Lebanon, particularly in the lower Litani River basin.

Israel's land and water policies formed an integral part of its settlements policies, as the key mechanism for controlling the territories. The area of Arab land under irrigation had been reduced (110,000 and 120,000 square kilometres in the West Bank and Gaza, respectively, according to a 1990 ESCWA study), while irrigated areas in the Israeli settlements had been increased and those in Israel covered 1,850,000 square kilometres. Furthermore, restrictions were imposed on agricultural expansion and the use of water by the Palestinian inhabitants. Total annual water consumption in the West Bank and in Gaza was 125 million and 103 million cubic metres, respectively, compared to 1,770 million cubic metres in Israel; per capita water consumption was 139, 172 and 411 cubic metres, respectively. The Water Commission of the Israeli Ministry of Agriculture estimated that by the year 2000, Israel and the territories would be faced with an annual water supply deficit of 828 million cubic metres.

Conflict and competition over land and water resources continued to prevail, with an adverse impact on the Palestinians' living conditions; Israeli settlements in the Jordan valley, for example, competed directly with Arab villages for the limited resources. Of the usable groundwater reserves in the West Bank, estimated at about 600 million cubic metres per year, Israel was pumping approximately 500 million cubic metres for its use. Deep wells drilled by Israel in the territories affected the level and quantity of water in Arab wells, reducing their productive capacity and drying up some of them, which affected the agricultural land that depended on them for irrigation. Overexploitation of groundwater in the Gaza Strip and the great increase in water use by Israeli settlers also resulted in increased salinity through sea-water intrusion; approximately 50 per cent of the wells in Gaza had become unfit for human use and most of them unfit for irrigation.

In the Golan Heights, Israeli land and settlement policies had brought a constant increase in the population of Israeli settlers (41 per cent from June 1983 to December 1988, while the non-Israeli population increased by 13.2 per cent). As in the West Bank and Gaza, Israel's practices aimed at confiscating land and gaining control of water resources reduced the area under cultivation, curtailed local development and lowered the level of income from agriculture. The sharing of limited agricultural and water resources with Israeli settlers aggravated the difficulties facing the Arab economy; the marketing of apples, the only exportable product, had been subjected to restrictions and to competition from Israeli settlements.

Connected with the confiscation of Arab land was the uprooting of fruit trees; according to the Ministry of Labour in Jordan, the number of trees uprooted from Arab farms in 1989 by Israel was no less than 30,000, of which 16,928 were olive trees. The number of towns and villages affected was 138.

According to an UNCTAD study on recent economic developments in the occupied territory<sup>(47)</sup> Israel's land and water policies had brought about radical changes in the territories' economic structure and had adversely affected economic growth and development. Agriculture remained the backbone of development, despite its declining contribution to the gross domestic product (from 32 per cent in 1978 to 28 per cent in 1984, in constant prices). Total cultivated area had decreased from 36 per cent in 1966 to 27 per cent in 1984 in the West Bank, and from 55 per cent in 1966 to 28 per cent in 1985 in the Gaza Strip. Confiscation of land had also adversely affected agricultural production. Income from agriculture declined from $237 million in 1981 to $204 million in 1985 in the West Bank and from $66 million to $61 million in the Gaza Strip.

A 1990 ILO report on the situation of workers of the occupied Arab territories came to similar conclusions: endogenous development efforts were frequently frustrated or undone for administrative or security reasons; agricultural performance was disappointing for lack of land, water and markets; despite increased productivity as a result of the introduction of new technologies, marketing opportunities were lacking; and agricultural employment dropped from almost 60,000 workers (40 per cent) in 1970 to 38,500 (25 per cent) in 1987.

The reduction in the number of job opportunities and the spread of unemployment had been among the adverse consequences of the confiscation of agricultural land, the Secretary-General's report said, and had led to an increase in the number of workers emigrating to Jordan and member countries of the Gulf Cooperation Council in search of livelihood.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/280 of 26 July, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

In September<sup>(48)</sup> the Permanent Observer of Palestine to the United Nations called attention to reports that Israel was on the verge of drilling another water well in the Bethlehem area—the fifth such well for the residents of West Jerusalem—while almost no new permits were granted to Palestinians for the drilling of new wells. For Jewish settlers, 35 to 40 new wells had been drilled in the Gaza Strip and 25 in the West Bank.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/199 by recorded vote.

Adverse economic effects of Israeli settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied since 1967

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, and Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980, General Assembly resolution 45/74 of 11 December 1990 and the other resolutions affirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

Expressing its concern at the ongoing establishment by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, and the settlement of new immigrants therein,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Deplores the establishment of settlements by Israel in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the other Arab territories occupied since 1967, and regards those practices as unlawful and therefore without any legal effect;
3. Recognizes that the continuing establishment of settlements and their ongoing enlargement in the Palestinian territory and the other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967 and the settlement of new immigrants have adverse consequences for the economic and social development of the Arab population of those territories;
4. Strongly deplores Israel's practices in the occupied Palestinian territory and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, in particular its extensive confiscation of land, its diversion of water resources, its depletion of the natural and economic resources of the occupied territories and its displacement and deportation of the population of those territories;
5. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the Palestinian people and the population of the Syrian Golan to their natural and economic resources, and regards any infringement thereof as being without any legal validity;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the economic and social consequences of the establishment of settlements by Israel in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the Syrian Golan.

Palestine refugees

In 1991, the number of Palestine refugees to whom the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East—with a staff of 18,500, mainly teachers and health workers—provided education, health, relief and social services, and general assistance through a network of 632 schools, 104 health centres and points, and numerous other installations, had grown to slightly over 2.5 million. The environment in which UNRWA delivered those services was particularly difficult in the West Bank and Gaza Strip due to the continuing uprising, or intifadah, and in Lebanon which emerged slowly from a long civil war. The hostilities in the Persian Gulf (see PART TWO, Chapter III) also affected the refugees as well as UNRWA in a number of ways.

UNRWA activities and various aspects of the Palestine refugee problem were addressed by the General Assembly, which in December adopted 11 resolutions on: assistance to Palestine refugees (46/46 A) and to displaced persons (46/46 C); the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA (46/46 B); scholarships for higher education and vocational training (46/46 D); refugees in Israeli-occupied territory (46/46 E); resumption of ration distribution to Palestine refugees (46/46 F); return of refugees displaced since 1967 (46/46 G); revenues from refugees' properties (46/46 H); refugee protection (46/46 I); proposed University of Jerusalem for Palestine refugees (46/46 J); and protection of Palestinian students and educational institutions and safeguarding of UNRWA facilities (46/46 K).

UN Agency for Palestine refugees

As at 30 June 1991, Palestine refugees registered with UNRWA numbered 2,519,000, living in and outside camps in five areas of operation: the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The events in the region considerably affected the Agency's work between 1 July 1990 and 30 June 1991, the period covered by the UNRWA Commissioner-General's report<sup>(1)</sup> In the months following the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait on 2 August 1990, UNRWA was part of the international efforts to provide emergency assistance to the hundreds of thousands who fled into Jordan. Between August 1990 and March 1991, approximately 250,000 persons holding Jordanian passports arrived in Jordan, the majority of whom were of Palestinian origin and many of whom were registered refugees. UNRWA assisted in supplying food and establishing sanitary facilities and provided health teams.

After the outbreak of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, UNRWA also took emergency measures to alleviate the suffering caused by the imposition of a lengthy comprehensive curfew on the West Bank and Gaza Strip, by distributing food to the entire refugee population as well as needy non-refugees, i.e., approximately 135,000 families in Gaza and 160,000 in the West Bank. In the aftermath of the hostilities, UNRWA had to respond to the sharp deterioration of the socio-economic conditions of the Palestinians, especially in the occupied territory, by expanding the scope and volume of its existing income-generating activities, embarking on a programme of investment in small and medium-sized enterprises and related economic infrastructure and stepping up job creation through its own construction programmes. It planned to introduce new courses in its vocational training centres and to strengthen existing ones, to help intensify skills training, job creation and income-generation. With the intifadah continuing, almost 14,000 Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza sought emergency medical attention in the local hospitals and UNRWA health centres, suffering from beatings, tear-gas inhalation and rubber-bullet or live ammunition wounds. In 1991, UNRWA's combined regular and emergency budget for the occupied territory was $135 million.

The hostilities in the Persian Gulf had severe effects on Jordan, with hundreds of thousands of evacuees, many of them Palestinian, flowing into the country from Kuwait, Iraq and other Persian Gulf States. UNRWA assisted extensively in the provision of aid and expertise during the evacuation process. The demand for material assistance continued to increase as more people fell below the poverty line. By the end of the reporting period, approximately 31,000 refugees (i.e., 3.25 per cent of the refugee population) were registered in the special hardship assistance programme. Substantially larger funding was provided for repair or reconstruction of the shelters of special hardship families. Approximately 2,500 eligible Palestine refugee children returning to Jordan from Gulf countries were accommodated in UNRWA schools there.

In addition, UNRWA was taking steps to assess the needs of the Palestinians remaining in Kuwait.

The improving security situation in Lebanon and the process of re-establishing government authority and order allowed UNRWA to exercise a greater degree of control over its operations there. After 15 years of civil war, UNRWA was taking steps to assess and address the problem of children's education which had suffered to a great extent. Among other pressing issues facing UNRWA in Lebanon was high unemployment and the need to find homes for up to 7,000 Palestinian squatter families likely to be displaced by the return of property owners.

In Lebanon, too, the hostilities in the Persian Gulf added to an already difficult socio-economic situation. Emergency distribution of food aid continued to segments of the refugee population, including families displaced by internal fighting or Israeli aerial incursions. At the end of June 1991, more than 35,000 refugees there were registered in the special hardship assistance programme, representing 13.13 per cent of the refugee population.

In the Syrian Arab Republic, UNRWA operations ran comparatively smoothly. An agreement reached with the Government on home visits to refugees by UNRWA social workers resulted in substantial benefits in the relief and social services programme. Affecting the Agency's activities was the fact that many school buildings were inadequate or dilapidated and a substantial amount of construction was required to bring them up to an acceptable standard. Discussions were continuing with the Government on the status of Jaramana camp where construction of an airport road and a new municipal sewage line was being planned.

Primary health care services were provided to about 253,000 Palestine refugees through a network of 22 health centres, 10 laboratories, 7 dental clinics, 1 specialist clinic and 19 diabetes clinics. In addition, medical teams were temporarily deployed during the hostilities in the Persian Gulf in two emergency camps near the border with Iraq.

A new health care centre at Lattakia and a mother and child health centre at Yarmouk were constructed and started operating. Contractual agreements with eight private hospitals where UNRWA subsidized beds at official government rates were maintained at revised higher rates.

During the year under review, education—general education, vocational, technical and teacher training, and university scholarships for higher education—remained the Agency's largest programme. It followed the curricula of the host Governments and was operated with UNESCO technical assistance. In spite of unusually difficult circumstances, the programme continued to provide basic services and accommodated approximately 3,500 new Palestine refugee pupils who were forced to flee from some Persian Gulf countries. Extrabudgetary contributions permitted the continuation of a construction programme to replace dilapidated or inadequate school premises, although construction could not keep pace with need. New semi-professional courses in physiotherapy, computer science and electronics were introduced at UNRWA training centres. Over 365,000 children in grades 1-9 (1-10 in Lebanon) were served, as were over 5,100 young adults who were trained in vocational trades, technical and semi-professional fields, or as school teachers. In addition, over 640 students were awarded university scholarships.

A lack of adequate classrooms necessitated the scheduling of more than 77.5 per cent of general education classes in double shifts. Budgetary resources for school construction were used in 1990/91 to avoid triple shifting, as well as to prevent overcrowding and to replace inadequate premises. In the West Bank and Gaza, many construction projects were held up in prolonged review by the occupation authorities. At the same time, pupils there sustained a significant loss of school time for the fourth year in a row. By the end of June 1991, over 40 per cent of school days had been lost, owing to curfews, disturbances, military closures and strikes. Through Agency negotiations with the occupation authorities, the school year in the West Bank and Gaza was extended to the end of June, which provided only partial compensation. Interruptions also affected the territory's four vocational and teacher training centres which were closed for most of January and February 1991 during the general curfew.

To help counter the loss of educational services, UNRWA staff developed and produced self-learning materials and audiovisual aids that were distributed to students. Necessitated by comprehensive reforms in the education system of Jordan, plans were developed for substantial improvements of UNRWA's general education programme in Jordan and the West Bank, including the addition of a tenth year, the hiring of additional teachers and the upgrading of teachers' qualifications.

UNRWA's health programme—the main objective of which was to meet basic health needs of the refugee population—provided primary health care in the form of medical care services, health protection and promotion services, environmental health services in camps, and nutrition and supplementary feeding to vulnerable population groups. The demand on UNRWA's health care services continued to be high in all fields owing to rapid inflation, increased costs of medical care and worsening socio-economic conditions.

To find solutions to the operational and managerial difficulties encountered in health care centres, UNRWA further expanded the application of patient-flow analysis in coordination with WHO and the Centers for Disease Control (Atlanta, United States), in order to improve staff utilization and reorganize general clinic and maternal and child health services. It developed new strategies for the control of non-communicable diseases and management of nutritional disorders, including a programme for control of diabetes mellitus in coordination with WHO, a programme for management of iron-deficiency anaemia among children and women and of growth retardation in children. Arrangements were made to ensure implementation of the new strategies beginning in 1991, including provision of necessary laboratory support and essential supplies.

In collaboration with WHO's Global Programme on AIDS, an assessment of blood transfusion services in non-governmental hospitals in the West Bank and Gaza was carried out and a short-term plan of action for HIV/AIDS prevention and control was developed. Subsequently, WHO provided funds for implementing that plan, with special emphasis on epidemiological surveillance, staff training and improved blood safety measures. Implementation started with the provision of supplies of HIV rapid test kits to non-governmental hospitals and the training of blood technologists. In view of the noticeable increase in mental health disorders among Palestinians, especially children, two modest mental health projects were started, one in coordination with the Community Mental Health Programme, Gaza, and another in coordination with WHO in the West Bank.

One of UNRWA's major achievements during the reporting period was the progress attained in upgrading the capacity of the emergency medical care system at the primary level in Gaza and the West Bank by training health personnel and by providing emergency kits for basic life support and cardio-pulmonary resuscitation, as well as ambulances and surgical equipment to all UNRWA health centres. Those improvements, which were based on recommendations of a WHO team that carried out a needs assessment in 1989, enabled the health care system to cope with the heavy casualty toll, stabilization of cases prior to evacuation to hospitals and resuscitation of seriously wounded persons.

WHO also reassessed UNRWA's oral health programme in all five areas in April and May 1991, to review progress achieved since 1986; dental care services were expanded through additional teams, equipment and mobile units.

UNRWA attempted to bring the level of water supply, liquid waste disposal and general sanitation in camps, especially in Gaza, the West Bank and Lebanon, nearer to international standards. Although its plans to integrate camp environmental health infrastructure with municipal systems continued to be hampered by lack of comprehensive technical planning and coordination, as well as by inadequate funding, some progress was made.

In the light of the findings of a nutrition survey conducted during May and June 1990 in coordination with WHO and the Centers for Disease Control, the high-cost, low-impact midday meal programme for preschool and school children was replaced by a dry ration programme; the savings achieved as a result of reduced operating costs were allocated to other pressing primary health care improvements, with special emphasis on implementation of the newly introduced health strategies and construction and expansion of additional health facilities.

Increasingly heavy demands were placed on UNRWA as a result of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, particularly in the occupied territories; UNRWA's relief and social services programme continued to support and to facilitate the self-reliance of those Palestine refugees who suffered the greatest socio-economic disadvantages. Direct material and financial aid was provided to those refugee families without a male adult medically fit to earn an income and without other identifiable means of financial support. In emergencies, this aid was extended to affected refugee and non-refugee communities, as a temporary relief measure. Some 7.5 per cent of the refugee population Agency-wide received assistance under the special hardship programme; the percentage was the highest in Gaza and Lebanon (approximately 13 per cent) and the lowest in Jordan (3.25 per cent). The special hardship programme was to assist the most needy families by assuring minimum standards of nutrition, shelter and clothing, and with cash grants in the case of a particular family crisis. The value of the aid was about $120 per person annually, most of it as donations in kind.

At the same time as providing direct relief, UNRWA promoted initiatives aimed at longer-term improvement of the social and economic status of disadvantaged refugees and their communities, without prejudice to their rights recognized by the General Assembly to return to their homes or receive compensation for their losses, and within the constraints imposed by political circumstances. The key component of the programme was income-generation and related skill-training for disadvantaged refugees, including women, young people and the disabled. It was decided in early 1991 that UNRWA should expand its income-generating activities in both scope and volume through a wider-ranging programme of investment in small and medium-sized enterprises, related economic infrastructure and technical assistance to create employment for Palestinians, principally in the West Bank, Gaza and Jordan, but also in Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. A fund-raising campaign was launched to that end.

Mindful of the fact that the growth of the Palestine refugee population and their basic social and economic needs had to be anticipated and planned for in a more systematic fashion, UNRWA was developing more comprehensive information on the size and population growth rates of the registered refugees, estimating longer-range requirements for services and installations, including the replacement of ageing facilities, environmental infrastructure and staffing needs.

The overall growth rate of the Palestine refugee population registered with UNRWA was about 3 per cent per year, among the highest in the world. Of particular concern to the Agency was the estimated growth rate of 3.5 to 4 per cent among registered refugees in Gaza, which was already struggling with extremely overcrowded conditions in the camps. At such a rate of growth, the refugee population in Gaza was expected to double in less than 20 years. The registered refugee population in the West Bank was also growing rapidly, at rates slightly above 3 per cent annually, producing even more pressure to provide employment for new workers. Similar problems could be anticipated in other fields of UNRWA operations, the Commissioner-General stated. Combined with the effects of the Persian Gulf hostilities, those demographic realities made it clear that UNRWA's current level of services could not be maintained, far less improved, without increased contributions.

On 4 March 1991, liter Turkmen (Turkey) assumed the post of UNRWA Commissioner-General, replacing Giorgio Giacomelli (Italy) who had served in that capacity since November 1985.

From 3 to 7 January 1991, Guido de Marco (Malta), President of the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly, visited Palestine refugee camps in Gaza, the West Bank and Jordan, accompanied by the UNRWA Commissioner-General. He was the first Assembly President ever to visit such camps. He also met with high-level Israeli officials to discuss the question of Palestine refugees. At a press conference at Amman on 7 January, the President described the state of tension in the occupied territories as a powder keg and urged implementation of United Nations resolutions calling for an international peace conference on the Middle East to defuse it. He also called on Member States to increase their financial support for UNRWA. A comprehensive report on the visit was transmitted to the Secretary-General by the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights<sup>(2)</sup>

On 9 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/46 A by recorded vote.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/73 A of 11 December 1990 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1990 to 30 June 1991,

1. Notes with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly in paragraph 2 of its resolution 513(VI) of 26 January 1952 for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

3. Reiterates its request that the headquarters of the Agency should be relocated to its former site within its area of operations as soon as practicable;

4. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III), and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but no later than 1 September 1992;

5. Direct attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the Agency, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

6. Notes with profound concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, this increased level of income to the Agency is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the present year and that, at currently foreseen levels of giving, deficits will recur each year;

7. Calls upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the report of the Commissioner-General, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions.

UNRWA financing

The Commissioner-General, in his report to the General Assembly,<sup>(*)</sup> stated that UNRAWA was in relatively healthy financial condition in 1991; there was, however, no room for complacency since events in the Middle East and elsewhere seemed likely to generate claims to limited donor funds in 1992 and beyond. In that regard, it was disappointing that UNRWA's efforts received significant financial support mainly from one section of the international community. Broadening the Agency's base was therefore a major priority.

In 1991, a total of $240,910,000 ($215,216,000 in cash and $25,694,000 in kind) was received under UNRWA's General Fund. In addition, $18,990,000 was received for ongoing activities. Expenditures for the year totalled $231,700,221 under the General Fund, plus $21,122,328 for ongoing activities. For 1992-1993, the Commissioner-General estimated expenditures under the General Fund at $513 million (including $42.4 million in food and services donations), which was an increase of $60.1 million, or 13.3 per cent, over the approved General Fund budget for 1991.

A significant change was to be made in 1992 to UNRWA's financial and budgetary procedures, when the Agency would move to a biennial budgetary cycle in order to reduce the workload, bring UNRWA in line with most of the United Nations system and facilitate planning and efficient use of resources.

It was also decided to give more attention to longer-range strategic planning and reviews of refugee population growth and related requirements, to help project future financial needs and priorities.

Working Group on UNRWA financing

The Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA held three meetings in 1991, on 12 September, 18 October and 7 November.

In its report to the General Assembly,<sup>(3)</sup> the Working Group noted that UNRWA had received sufficient funding to deliver the essential parts of its programmes in 1990. There were indications that it would be able to do so again in 1991, although the construction budget was showing a shortfall of about $4.5 million for 1991.

For the base programme of extraordinary measures in Lebanon and the occupied territory (EMLOT), funded from special contributions, sufficient contributions had been received during the first half of 1991 to secure the programme's funding at its current annual cash level of some $17 million, which financed additional medical and relief services, as well as other forms of general assistance, in Lebanon, the West Bank and Gaza. The fund for the expanded programme of assistance (EPA), established in 1998 to finance a $65 million programme of infrastructural improvements, especially in the camps, had received contributions and pledges of $36 million. Cash contributions to the Gaza Hospital Fund, established in 1990 to finance construction, equipping and the first three years' running costs of a badly needed 200-bed general hospital, were currently estimated at some $3.5 million, although discussions with a major donor indicated that the total construction costs would soon be funded, leaving a shortfall in the order of $20 million.

With the intifadah continuing and socio-economic conditions worsening, it appeared certain that services under the EMLOT programme would continue to be needed beyond 1991. The cash portion of the 1992 EMLOT budget, excluding in-kind food for displaced and needy refugees, was estimated at $15 million minimum. Additional funding might have to be sought for small-scale income-generating projects not only in the occupied territory but also in the other fields of operation. EPA and the Gaza Hospital Fund remained undersubscribed. Summing up UNRWA'S needs, the Working Group said that, in addition to contributions needed to finance the Agency's regular budget of $263 million for the General Fund and funded ongoing activities, as well as the $14 million under the regular budget for capital and special projects, the following amounts were required: about $15 million in cash for EMLOT; a further $30 million to complete funding of the original EPA, which was to include an as yet undetermined amount for income-generation projects in all live fields; and $20 million remaining to be secured for the Gaza Hospital Fund.

Commending the current Commissioner-General and his predecessor for their fund-raising efforts, the Working Group shared his concern about the funding prospects for 1992. UNRWA'S regular programme expenditure was once again expected to increase by 5 per cent in order to meet a growing number of beneficiaries, especially schoolchildren, and to cover unavoidable increases in prices and staff salaries. It seemed inevitable that an increase in contributions was necessary to cover expected regular programme expenditure. The Working Group was particularly concerned at the state of funding for the emergency-related programmes financed under EMLOT, EPA and the Gaza Hospital Fund, which were vital to the well-being of the refugee population and others in need in Lebanon, the West Bank and Gaza; their discontinuance or any reduction could have disturbing humanitarian and political consequences. The Working Group also noted the additional needs of the refugees resulting from the deteriorating socio-economic conditions in the aftermath of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf and commended UNRWA for its response as well as for the measures it planned to meet those needs. Inevitably, those new initiatives would place an even greater burden on resources and would require special fund-raising efforts and generous responses from the international community.

The Working Group strongly urged that Governments that did not contribute to UNRWA start doing so; those that had contributed only relatively small amounts increase their contributions; those that had contributed generously continue to do so and strive to increase their contributions; and Governments consider making special contributions in support of the emergency-related programmes and construction projects that would not affect their contributions to the regular programmes.

The Working Group also suggested that consideration be given to holding an International Information Day on UNRWA to make the Agency better known, with the aim of broadening its base of financial support. Noting that the burden of supporting UNRWA continued to be borne by relatively few countries, the Working Group emphasized the need to make special efforts to broaden the financial support base and suggested that the wealthier Governments in the region be encouraged to increase their contributions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/46 B without vote.

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791(XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 45/73 B of 11 December 1990 and the previous resolutions on this question,

Recalling also its decision 36/462 of 16 March 1982, whereby it took note of the special report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and adopted the recommendations contained therein,

Having Considered the report of the Working Group,

Taking into account the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1990 to 30 June 1991,

Deeply concerned about the critical financial situation of the Agency, which has affected and affects the continuation of the provision of the necessary Agency services to the Palestine refugees, including the emergency-related programmes,

Emphasizing the continuing need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at the present minimum level, the activities of the Agency, as well as to enable the Agency to carry out essential construction,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the financial security of the Agency;

2. Takes note with approval of the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in cooperation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, for the financing of the Agency for a further period of one year;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the Working Group for the conduct of its work.

General Assembly resolution 46/46 B

9 December 1991 Meeting 66 Adopted without vote

Accounts for 1990

Following the audit of the UNRWA financial statements for the year ended 31 December 1990, the Board of Auditors made several recommendations,<sup>(4)</sup> summarized also in a July 1991 note of the Secretary-General.<sup>(5)</sup> ACABQ commented on the Board's report in October.<sup>(6)</sup>

The General Assembly, by resolution 46/183, accepted the financial report and audited financial statements of UNRWA and the Board's audit opinions and report on them, and requested that the Commissioner-General report in 1992 on steps taken to implement the Board's recommendations.

Legal matters

UNRWA staff

The number of staff arrested and detained without charge or trial decreased marginally between 1 July 1990 and 30 June 1991, but still remained at a high level. Of a total of 160 staff members arrested and detained, 110 were released without charge or trial, 7 were charged, tried and sentenced, and 43 were still in detention.

The Agency remained unable to obtain adequate and timely information on the reasons for the arrest and detention of its staff members. In the absence of such information, it could not be ascertained whether the staff member's official functions were involved.

The treatment of staff members in detention continued to cause concern. Staff were subjected to beatings and various other forms of physical abuse. In several cases, staff members encountered rough treatment at the hands of local authorities in the course of their official duties. In the Gaza Strip alone, 132 instances of mistreatment of UNRWA staff were recorded during the reporting year.

UNRWA also continued to experience difficulties in visiting detained staff members, but gained limited access to 12 members from the West Bank held in prisons and detention centres, including eight in detention centres in Israel. It also had access to 20 detained staff members from the Gaza Strip, including staff at a detention centre in Israel, but was not allowed access to detained staff in other fields.

UNRWA continued to encounter difficulties in the movement of staff in and out of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. There were substantial delays in the clearance of staff for travel, which was refused in some cases. The movement of staff within the occupied territory was again seriously affected by frequent curfews and the designation of areas as closed military zones. Israel continued to insist that local staff could move during curfews only if they had permits issued by the civil administration. Delays in the issue or renewal of the permits meant that UNRWA'S operations were impeded, in particular during the lengthy curfews imposed in January 1991 during the hostilities in the Persian Gulf. Restrictions on access to Israel and East Jerusalem imposed by the authorities on residents of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip also resulted in delay and impediment to staff members' free movement.

UNRWA services and premises

As reported by the Commissioner-General, during the period from 1 July 1990 to 30 June 1991, there were 251 incursions into UNRWA installations by members of the Israeli security forces in the West Bank and 367 such incursions in the Gaza Strip. At times those involved both injury to staff members and damage to Agency property. UNRWA recorded 201 incidents in which health clinic premises were entered, including 153 in the Gaza Strip alone.

Of particular concern were incidents in which health centres were forcibly closed, or UNRWA ambulance services interfered with and sometimes prevented from operating. For example, the 24-hour emergency service provided at UNRWA clinics upon commencement of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf was substantially impeded by Israeli security forces at Tulkarm camp in the West Bank, where the clinic was prevented from functioning effectively except in the morning; there were occasions on which UNRWA ambulances were shot at and others prevented from transporting patients to clinics and hospitals.

The demolition of houses and camp shelters for punitive reasons continued. In refugee camps in the West Bank, Israel demolished 18 rooms in 10 shelters, affecting 10 families totalling 40 persons, and sealed a further 29 rooms, affecting 9 families of a total of 80 persons. Some 43 additional dwellings outside the camps were also demolished. In the Gaza Strip, the most serious incident occurred at Bureij camp; in September 1990, following the killing in the camp of an Israeli soldier, 63 rooms in shelters housing 39 families and a total of 33 shops were demolished, either for punitive reasons or for the stated ground of road-widening. A further 46 rooms in 10 shelters housing 23 families were sealed for punitive reasons. In addition, Israel demolished 114 rooms in 29 shelters, affecting 64 families totalling 379 persons. A further 34 rooms in camps were sealed, affecting 17 families, or some 108 persons. UNRWA protested those actions as being incompatible with articles 33 and 53 of the fourth Geneva Convention. Israel continued to object to the reconstruction of demolished shelters in camps, despite earlier assurances by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs that no such objections would be raised.

Israel continued to insist that UNRWA construction be subjected to newly instituted and detailed building regulations. A considerable amount of much-needed construction, particularly in the Gaza Strip, was blocked for that reason or subjected to lengthy delays. The Agency expressed its willingness to engage in appropriate consultation and coordination of its construction activities.

There were substantial delays during the year in clearing through Israeli ports a large number of items urgently needed for UNRWA's official use; although the items were eventually cleared, some of them had meanwhile been sold off by the Israeli authorities. UNRWA was claiming compensation.

Since Israel's announcement in July 1988 that owing to temporary budgetary constraints, it could not pay clearance, warehousing and transport charges due to UNRWA under the Comay-Micheltmore Agreement of 1967, the Agency continued to advance such sums, on the understanding that this was a purely temporary measure and that eventual reimbursement by Israel would take place. By the end of June 1991, the amount so advanced by UNRWA stood at $5.95 million.

In resolution 46/46 K, the General Assembly condemned the repeated Israeli raids on UNRWA premises and installations and called on Israel to refrain from such acts.

Claims for compensation

In 1991, UNRWA reported that no progress had been made with regard to its claims against the Governments of: Israel (for loss and damage to UNRWA property during the 1967 Middle East hostilities, Israel's invasion of Lebanon in 1982 and its military action before then); Jordan (arising out of the 1967 hostilities and the disturbances of 1970 and 1971); and the Syrian Arab Republic (relating mainly to the levy of certain taxes from which UNRWA believed it was exempt under existing agreements). Those claims had been reported in 1986.<sup>(7)</sup> The Secretary-General, in October 1991,<sup>(8)</sup> also stated that there had been no progress with regard to UNRWA claims against Israel resulting from its 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

In resolution 46/46 I, the General Assembly called again on Israel to compensate UNRWA for damages to its property and facilities resulting from its invasion of Lebanon, without prejudice to Israel's responsibility for all damages resulting from that invasion.

Other aspects

Displaced persons

Humanitarian assistance

In 1991, in addition to providing relief in the form of basic food commodities, blankets, clothing, shelter repair and cash grants, UNRWA continued to provide a small measure of humanitarian assistance to persons who had been displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities in the Middle East but who were not registered with UNRWA as refugees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/46 C without vote.

Assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/73 C of 11 December 1990 and all its previous resolutions on the question,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1990 to 30 June 1991,

Concerned about the continued human suffering resulting from the hostilities in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 45/73 C and all its previous resolutions on the question;

2. Endorses, bearing in mind the objectives of those resolutions, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance as far as practicable, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to other persons in the area who are at present displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities;

3. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously for the above purposes to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

Repatriation of refugees

In October 1991,<sup>(9)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on a 2 July reply of Israel to the General Assembly's 1990 call on it to take immediate steps for the return of all displaced inhabitants and to desist from measures obstructing their return. Israel stated that its position on the matter had been set out fully in successive annual replies, the latest having been the subject of a 1990 report by the Secretary-General,<sup>(11)</sup> as a result of its continued effort to review individual cases of resettlement based on each case's merits, approximately 78,473 persons had already returned to the administered territories.

The Secretary-General reported at the same time on information from UNRWA on the return of refugees registered with it. Since UNRWA was not involved in arrangements for either refugees or displaced persons not registered as refugees, its information was based on requests by returning registered refugees for the transfer of their service entitlements to their areas of return; UNRWA was not necessarily aware of the return of registered refugees who had not made such requests. Agency records indicated that, between 1 July 1990 and 30 June 1991, 254 registered refugees had returned to the West Bank and 47 to the Gaza Strip. Some of them might not have been displaced in 1967 but might be family members of a displaced registered refugee whom they had accompanied on return or later joined. About 12,000 displaced refugees were known by UNRWA to have returned to the occupied territory since June 1967. It was unable to estimate the total number of displaced inhabitants who had returned, as it kept records only of registered refugees, and even those records, particularly with respect to location of registered refugees, might be incomplete.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/46 G by recorded vote.

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1990 to 30 June 1991,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of all displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and declares once more that any attempt to restrict, or to attach conditions to, the free exercise of the right to return by any displaced person is inconsistent with that inalienable right and is inadmissible;

Food aid

The Secretary-General reported in October 1991<sup>(12)</sup> that UNRWA continued to provide food assistance to the most needy sector of the refugee population-special hardship cases-who numbered 155,980 persons in December 1990. The Agency also continued its emergency distributions of basic commodities, such as flour, rice, sugar, animal protein and skim milk, to those in need, including non-registered Palestinians in the occupied territory and Lebanon. In 1990, 17,600 tons of those commodities had been distributed to 676,000 recipients in the Gaza Strip; 15,300 tons to 322,000 persons in the West Bank; and 6,000 tons to 435,000 in Lebanon. Given the lack of additional resources, it had not been possible for the Commissioner-General to consider resumption of a general distribution of basic food rations to all refugees as requested by the Assembly in several resolutions, most recently in 1990.<sup>(13)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/46 F by recorded vote.

Resumption of the ration distribution to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 F of 16 December 1981, 37/120 F of 16 December 1982, 38/83 F of 15 December 1983, 39/99 F of 14 December 1984, 40/165 F of 16 December 1985, 41/69 F of 3 December 1986, 42/69 F of 2 December 1987, 43/57 F of 6 December 1988, 44/47 F of 8 December 1989, 45/73 F of 11 December 1990 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 302(IV) of 8 December 1949,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1990 to 30 June 1991,

Deeply Concerned about the interruption by the Agency, owing to financial difficulties, of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields,

1. Regrets that its resolutions 37/120 F, 38/83 F, 39/99 F, 40/165 F, 41/69 F, 42/69 F, 43/57 F, 44/47 F and 45/73 F have not been implemented;

2. Calls me again upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible and to offer the necessary resources to meet the needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the interruption by the Agency of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions;

3. Requests the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to resume on a continuing basis the interrupted general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Education and training services

Protection of Palestinian

students and educational institutions

In October 1991,<sup>(14)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on a 2 July reply of Israel to the General Assembly's 1990 call on it to open immediately all closed educational institutions, a large number of which were operated by UNRWA, and to refrain from closing them thereafter.

Israel stated that the 1990 resolution of the Assembly<sup>(15)</sup> was unbalanced, distorting its role and policy which remained to encourage improvement and development of the education system in Judea, Samaria and the Gaza District. During its administration, the level of education and literacy in those territories had markedly improved and many new institutions of learning were established. Since December 1987, however, the schools were frequently exploited as centres for organizing and launching violent activities, and unrest was caused by marked extremists, affiliated with PLO and other groups, who forcibly entered classrooms during school hours and compelled students to join violent demonstrations. Measures taken by the authorities were a direct result of, and in reaction to, those activities. They had been extremely successful and had enabled Israel to permit five of the seven institutions of higher learning in the territories to reopen. Four of them-Al-Bireh University, Bethlehem University, Abu-Dis University and the Islamic University in Hebron-had in fact opened their doors and permission had been granted to Al-Najah University to reopen, on the condition that the student body would not interfere in the formation of the faculty. Although the University's administration had agreed to that condition, it was subsequently subjected to hostile threats from extremist elements and the University was therefore not reopened. The re-opening of Bir Zeit University would be considered based on the experience of the other institutions.

Most schools and training centres were closed for one month as a result of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, and additional days were missed because of security problems. Various schools lost still more days of class-time upon instructions to close from extremist groups such as PLO and Hamas. Due to those disruptions, the school year was extended to 10 June in Gaza and 1 July in Judea and Samaria in order to compensate for missed school days. Extremist elements, however, continued to disrupt the school system, through both violent agitation and frequent strikes.

All those facts were ignored by the Assembly resolution, Israel said, adding that it would continue making every effort to normalize the educational environment within the difficult security situation.

According to the Commissioner-General, during the period from 1 July 1990 to 30 June 1991, there were 251 cases of unauthorized entry into UNRWA premises in the West Bank, 140 of them into schools. In the Gaza Strip, of the 367 unauthorized entries, 150 related to schools. UNRWA took up those cases with the Israeli authorities who, in a number of instances, claimed that the premises were entered because stones had been thrown from within, or stone-throwers were being chased into the premises.

During the same period, there was one fatality and 1,678 cases of injury among students and trainees at UNRWA educational institutions in the West Bank. The corresponding figures for the Gaza Strip were one fatality and 1,503 injuries. Those casualties were attributable to beatings, tear-gas inhalation, rubber bullets and live ammunition. In addition, 286 students and trainees in the West Bank and 181 in Gaza were detained, of whom 174 and 146, respectively, were released by 30 June 1991.

The 1990/91 academic year was interrupted virtually continuously from 31 December until 20 March as a result of military closures and the general curfew imposed during the hostilities in the Persian Gulf. Apart from that interruption, the centres operated for the most part normally, with some additional days lost due to strikes. The first semester ended in late June 1991, with the second semester scheduled to continue immediately through and beyond the summer until completion of the academic year.

In the West Bank, 40 per cent of school time was lost between September 1990 and June 1991, due primarily to military closures, general strikes and curfews. Most seriously affected were the schools at Tulkarm camp, which the 2,208 students attended for only 33 days from the beginning of the academic year until classes were allowed to reopen on 12 June 1991 after negotiations between UNRWA and Israel. In the Gaza Strip, 41 per cent of school time was lost from September 1990 to June 1991.

During the reporting period, UNRWA provided students in the West Bank and Gaza with distance education and self-learning materials. Preliminary analysis of UNRWA-administered achievement tests showed a detrimental effect on educational performance, especially in the lower elementary grades and on subjects such as mathematics and sciences. Israel took the position that UNRWA should conform to the school openings and times of schools run by the civil administration. UNRWA did not agree, but was forced to end the school year at the same time as schools operated by the civil administration because security considerations were invoked and a military closure order served on UNRWA.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/46 K by recorded vote.

Gravely concerned and alarmed by the deteriorating situation in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al Quds"

As requested by the General Assembly in 1990,<sup>(16)</sup> the Secretary-General reported in October 1991<sup>(17)</sup> on the establishment of a university for Palestine refugees at Jerusalem. The proposed university, first considered by the Assembly in 1980,<sup>(18)</sup> had since been the subject of annual reports by the Secretary-General with regard to measures taken towards its establishment, including a functional feasibility study. In order to assist in completing the study, the Rector of the United Nations University, at the Secretary-General's request, made available the services of an expert to visit the area and meet with Israeli officials.

By a note verbale of 10 September 1991, the Secretary-General, referring to the Assembly's request, asked Israel to facilitate the expert's visit, which would take place at a mutually convenient date. Recalling Israel's position on the proposed university, as well as clarifications already given by the Secretariat to the questions raised by Israel, the Secretary-General expressed the opinion that such questions could be best discussed on the occasion of the expert's visit.

On 25 September, Israel replied that its position remained unchanged, as it had already clarified in a note verbale of 2 July on the 1990 Assembly resolution, whose sponsors, it said, sought to exploit higher education in order to politicize issues totally extraneous to genuine academic pursuits. Accordingly, Israel believed it not to be beneficial for the proposed visit to take place.

In view of that position, the Secretary-General concluded, it had not been possible to complete the feasibility study as planned.

Scholarships

The Secretary-General reported in October 1991(19) on responses to the 1990 appeal of the General Assembly<sup>(20)</sup> for special allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestine refugees, for which UNRWA acted as recipient and trustee.

For the academic years 1989/90 and 1990/91, a total of 141 awards were made by Japan which had contributed $1 million in 1989, to be spent over a five-year period. Those awards, while not specifically in response to Assembly resolutions, were in keeping with their spirit. Among United Nations agencies, UNESCO had allocated $183,960 to Palestine under the UNESCO Participation Programme for 1990-1991. WHO continued offering a postgraduate training fellowship programme aimed at developing the technical and managerial skills of the staff of UNRWA's Department of Health, and at meeting future replacement needs under the various health disciplines.

Property rights

Report of the Secretary-General. In August 1991,<sup>(21)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on revenues derived from Palestine refugee property, as requested by a General Assembly resolution of 1990.<sup>(22)</sup> He had transmitted the resolution to Israel, with a request for information on its implementation, and had brought the relevant provisions to the attention of the Chairman of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine. He had also drawn the attention of all Member States to the Assembly's call for pertinent information in their possession concerning Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel; only Israel had replied at the time of reporting.

Israel advised on 2 July that its position had been set out in statements to the Special Political Committee and in a 1990 report of the Secretary-General.<sup>(23)</sup> There was no legal basis for taking the steps proposed, as property rights within the borders of a sovereign State were exclusively subject to that State's domestic laws; the right of States to regulate and dispose of property within their territory (and income derived from that property) was a generally accepted principle. Significantly, the resolution's sponsors had not suggested that similar steps be taken regarding the confiscated Jewish property in Arab countries. As a result of the 1948 war, approximately 800,000 Jewish refugees from Arab countries were resettled in Israel; the property they had left behind, estimated to be worth billions of dollars, was expropriated by the Arab countries in which they had lived. There could be no difference in law, justice or equity between the claims of Arab and Jewish property owners, Israel asserted.

Report of the Conciliation Commission. The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in its report covering the period from

1 September 1990 to 31 August 1991,<sup>(24)</sup> stated that the circumstances that had limited its possibilities of action regarding compensation for Palestine refugee properties remained unchanged. The events that had occurred in the area since the previous reporting period had further complicated an already complex situation. The Commission continued to hope, however, that the situation and related circumstances in the region would improve towards a comprehensive, just and lasting Middle East peace, thus enabling it to carry forward its work in accordance with the 1948 resolution setting forth its mandate.<sup>(25)</sup>

Referring to prospects for implementing paragraph 11 of that resolution, by which the Assembly resolved that the refugees wishing to return to their homes should be permitted to do so at the earliest practicable date, and that compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return and for loss or damage to property, the Commission noted that the examination of various ways in which it might be possible to intensify its efforts towards that end had compelled the conclusion that all the ways envisaged presupposed substantial changes in the situation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/46 H by recorded vote.

Revenues derived from Palestine refugees' properties

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/13 A to F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 C of 16 December 1981, 37/120 H of 16 December 1982, 38/83 of 15 December 1983, 39/99 H of 14 December 1984, 40/165 H of 16 December 1985, 41/69 H of 3 December 1986, 42/69 H of 2 December 1987, 43/57 H of 6 December 1988, 44/47 H of 8 December 1989, 45/73 H of 11 December 1990 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Recalling in particular its resolution 394(V) of 14 December 1950, in which it directed the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in consultation with the parties concerned, to prescribe measures for the protection of the rights, property and interests of the Palestine Arab refugees,

Taking note of the completion of the programme of identification and evaluation of Arab property, as announced by the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine in its twenty-second progress report, and of the fact that the Land Office had a schedule of Arab owners and file of documents defining the location, area and other particulars of Arab property,

1. ## Refugee protection

The Secretary-General reported in October 1991<sup>(8)</sup> on implementation of a General Assembly resolution of 1990<sup>(26)</sup> holding Israel responsible for the security of the Palestine refugees in the occupied territory and calling on it to compensate UNRWA for the damage to its property and facilities resulting from Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

The Secretary-General stated that Israel, replying to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to comply with the resolution, said on 2 July 1991 that its position had been fully set out in statements to the Special Political Committee and in a 1990 report of the Secretary-General<sup>(27)</sup>. The adoption of the resolution was hypocritical, anachronistic and out of place. Despite its withdrawal from Lebanon in 1985, it was still being blamed for the "suffering of the Palestinians" in Lebanon and for Arab persecution of Palestinian refugees. In recent years, thousands of Palestinians had been killed and wounded in Lebanese refugee camps in vicious fighting totally unconnected with Israel; likewise, Palestinian refugee camps in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic were the scenes of considerable human misery. The selective and distorted presentation of the Palestinian refugees' situation in Arab countries clearly illustrated the resolution's double standards and the blatant disregard for the refugees' general welfare. Notwithstanding Israel's innumerable appeals, the United Nations remained silent about the systematic assassination campaign during which over 437 Palestinians had been murdered in cold blood by PLO and other terrorist death squads since December 1987. Israel asserted that in keeping with international law, it alone was competent to ensure full protection of the inhabitants of Judea, Samaria and the Gaza District.

In consultation with the Secretary-General, the UNRWA Commissioner-General had continued his efforts in support of the Palestine refugees' safety and legal and human rights. In that connection, UNRWA international staff in the occupied territory, in particular Refugee Affairs officers, continued to play an important role in helping to reduce tension and prevent maltreatment of refugees, especially vulnerable groups such as women and children. The Commissioner-General also protested to Israel against excessive use of force, collective punishments, punitive demolitions, sealing of shelters and other such measures, as a failure on Israel's part to uphold standards required under international humanitarian law.

Following Israel's withdrawal from the Saida and Tyre areas in 1985, there was nothing further to state in the context of the current report regarding the Palestine refugees in Lebanon.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/46 I by recorded vote.

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1990 to 30 June 1991,

Gravely concerned and alarmed by the deteriorating situation in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Talking into account the need to consider measures for the impartial protection of the Palestinian civilian population under Israeli occupation,

Referring to the humanitarian principles of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and to the obligations arising from the regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907,

4. Urges the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue their efforts in support of the upholding of the safety and security and the legal and human rights of the Palestine refugees in all the territories under Israeli occupation since 1967;

5. Calls once again upon Israel to desist forthwith from acts of aggression against the Lebanese and Palestinian population in Lebanon, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations and the norms of international law;

6. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, release forthwith all arbitrarily detained Palestine refugees, including the employees of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

7. Calls once again upon Israel to compensate the Agency for damages to its property and facilities resulting from the invasion of Lebanon by Israel in 1982, without prejudice to the responsibility of the latter for all damages resulting from that invasion, as well as for other damages resulting from the policies and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, in the occupied Palestinian territory;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-seventh session, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Removal and resettlement of refugees

In October 1991,<sup>(28)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on a 2 July reply of Israel to the General Assembly's 1990 demand<sup>(29)</sup> that it desist from removing and resettling Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by it since 1967 and from destroying their shelters. Israel stated that its position had been set forth in successive annual replies to the Secretary-General in recent years, the latest of them contained in his 1990 report on the subject.<sup>(30)</sup> It considered the 1990 resolution unbalanced and distorted in that it intentionally ignored the improved living conditions in Gaza, including the considerable increase of pupils and the significant drop in the illiteracy rate, the extensive development of medical care and the improvement of environmental services.

Nothing was more indicative of that approach than the resolution's condemnation of refugee rehabilitation projects. Since 1967, Israel had initiated community development projects in Gaza enabling some 20,000 families, approximately 150,000 persons, to leave the refugee camps on a voluntary basis and relocate to nearby residential areas. Israel's vital role in planning and implementing those housing projects had been recognized by the Secretary-General<sup>(31)</sup> and the UNRWA Commissioner-General in 1985. The resolution's request that the Secretary-General resume issuing identity cards irrespective of the refugees' need for them was yet another indication of its political bias.

Notwithstanding subversive efforts to the contrary, Israel declared that it was determined to pursue the task of improving the refugees' living conditions through projects such as the refugee housing programmes and it would welcome all assistance from the international community in that regard.

As described by the Commissioner-General, Israel continued to demolish and seal refugee shelters in the West Bank and Gaza Strip on punitive grounds. UNRWA was following up with Israeli authorities the rehousing of refugees affected by the 1971 demolitions in Gaza. In his 1990 report, the Secretary-General had referred to the status of 87 families categorized as living in hardship conditions. The situation on 30 June 1991 remained virtually the same: of those families, 12 continued to live in conditions of hardship, 19 remained unsatisfactorily and 37 satisfactorily housed, and 18 had previously purchased houses in Israeli-sponsored projects. One family had bought land and built a house. The situation of the 12 families living in hardship conditions had been checked several times during the reporting period; despite repeated assurances by Israel that they would be rehoused, no progress had been made.

During the reporting period, the Commissioner-General obtained the following information relating to refugee shelters demolished by Israel on the grounds that they had been built without proper authority on State land outside camp boundaries. There was no change in the situation of the families living on the northern perimeter of Jabalia camp who had been told by Israel in 1989 to remove some of their shelter extensions; no demolitions had taken place so far, but the shelters remained isolated by the bulldozing around them. Similarly, the situation of the 35 families whose shelters on the perimeter of Beach camp were demolished in 1983 remained the same as in 1990. There was no change in the situation of the families who, at the instance of the Israeli authorities, had agreed to relocate from Block Q of Rafah camp to the Tel-es-Sultan housing project; some families still remained in their shelters, of which 13 were isolated by sand ramparts.

No new plots of land in housing projects in the Gaza Strip were allocated by Israel for refugees living in camps. No new movements took place from camps to housing projects. An additional 35 plots of land in the Tel-es-Sultan housing project were allocated to families from the so-called Canada camp.

According to information available to the Commissioner-General, Israel had to date allocated approximately 3,914 plots in the Gaza Strip for housing projects. A total of 2,605 plots had been built on by 3,714 refugee families comprising 22,946 persons; buildings on 236 plots were under construction; 936 plots were still vacant and 137 had been built on by non-refugee families. In addition, 3,034 refugee families, consisting of 18,823 persons, had moved into 2,666 housing units consisting of 5,893 rooms.

Refugee families were continuing to purchase plots at subsidized rates for the construction of houses in the Israeli-developed projects in the Beit Lahiya, Nazleh and Tel-es-Sultan areas. Construction of multi-storey apartment blocks at sheikh Radwan, sponsored by Israel and offered for sale on completion, was continuing, but had slowed down due to the prevailing situation.

With regard to the Assembly's request in 1990 that the Commissioner-General address the acute situation of the Palestine refugees in the Israeli-occupied territory and extend all UNRWA services to them, the Commissioner-General advised that, since 1988, in addition to providing all its regular services, UNRWA had been providing emergency food, medical and other assistance to those in need. UNRWA had also begun a longer-term programme to upgrade infrastructure, especially in the camps, and to improve economic and social conditions.

The Secretary-General regretted that he was unable to comply with the Assembly's request that he resume issuing identification cards to all Palestine refugees and their descendants in the occupied territory, irrespective of whether or not they were recipients of UNRWA rations and services. Under an agreement followed for 40 years, he said, all refugee families registered with UNRWA were in possession of Agency-issued registration cards. While those cards indicated the number of family members and their eligibility for services, they were not identification cards and had a much more limited purpose. The Commissioner-General had pointed out that UNRWA issued a registration card reflecting data about the refugee family concerned, which was entered on the registration roll at the time of registration. While the need for documentation such as required in the 1990 resolution, was appreciated, the Commissioner-General did not have the means to issue identity cards as such. He would, however, keep the situation under review to see whether appropriate documentation regarding the registration status of individual members of refugee families could be issued.

On 9 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/46 E by recorded vote.

Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967

1. Strongly reiterates its demand that Israel desist from the removal and resettlement of Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 and from the destruction of their shelters;

2. Requests the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to address the acute situation of the Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory oc-

Chapter VI

Regional economic and social activities

The five United Nations regional commissions continued their efforts to promote economic and social development in their respective regions during 1991.

During the first half of 1991, three of the five commissions held their regular sessions. The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), after holding a resumed forty-fifth session on 14 December 1990, held its forty-sixth session at Geneva from 9 to 19 April; the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) held its forty-seventh session at Seoul, Republic of Korea, from 1 to 10 April; and the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) held its twenty-sixth session/seventeenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 9 to 13 May and the twelfth meeting of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole from 29 April to 7 May. The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) did not meet in 1991. The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) was scheduled to meet in April 1991, but the session was postponed for a year in view of the situation prevailing at the time in the region.

Among the resolutions adopted at the July 1991 session of the Economic and Social Council concerning issues of interest to the regional commissions were: admission of Macau as an associate member of ESCAP (resolution 1991/79); admission of Kiribati as a full member of ESCAP (1991/80); the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1991-2000) (1991/81); acceleration of the economic integration process in Africa and strengthening of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (1991/82); and the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1991-2000) (1991/83).

Regional cooperation

The executive secretaries of the regional commissions, meeting under the chairmanship of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation (DIEC) at Vienna on 13 and 14 March 1991, discussed the social consequences of economic development and change. They expressed strong concerns about the lack of sufficient resources to deal with those problems, noting that increased conflict and unrest could result if the resource situation was not resolved. They said the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, adopted by the General Assembly in 1990,<sup>(1)</sup> was not a programme of action. Each Government and agency would need to develop its own strategy, and the regional commissions had an important role to play in developing regional strategies or approaches.

A general concern of the meeting was the question of integration of activities for economic and social development. It was acknowledged that the two should be intertwined, leading to a comprehensive approach to development. The meeting stressed the need for improved coordination of activities, which should be strengthened both among the regional commissions and between the commissions and the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs. The executive secretaries welcomed the opportunity for increased collaboration with the Centre, in particular in the planning and preparation of conferences and seminars, in sharing information and experience and in technical cooperation activities. The meeting endorsed a number of concrete proposals for increased cooperation between the commissions and the Centre, including improved planning and coordination of implementation of medium-term plans and biennial programme budgets, improved preparation of substantive documentation and an expanded programme of technical cooperation in the social field.

In a June 1991 report to the Economic and Social Council on regional co-operation,<sup>(*)</sup> which included an account of the meeting of the executive secretaries, the Secretary-General outlined the work of the five regional commissions, drawing attention to matters and decisions requiring action by the Council. He said issues relating to the strengthening of the role of the regional commissions must be viewed in the larger context of the restructuring of the economic and social units of the United Nations system as a whole. The quality of United Nations delivery in the economic and social sectors would depend in no small measure on the degree to which its operational activities were conceived, programmed and implemented within an integrated and multidisciplinary framework central to the regional approach. That appreach had become increasingly important in terms of dealing with differentiated social and economic problems and as a basis for concerted action among Member States in the face of new challenges raised by global trends and problems.

On the relationship between the regional commissions and United Nations agencies, the Secretary-General stated that the scope for its further strengthening existed. Based on experience so far, the commissions believed that that could be achieved through the greater use of established mechanisms of joint divisions, units and similar arrangements. Technical missions and inter-agency groups could be established for special programmes.

The Secretary-General recalled that to help improve coordination and avoid duplication of functions, the General Assembly in 1977<sup>(3)</sup> had urged the organizations of the United Nations system to achieve a common definition of regions and identical locations of regional and subregional offices. Specialized agencies could locate their regional and subregional offices in the same cities as the regional commissions. It would also seem advisable that agencies establishing or strengthening their regional offices did so in close consultation with the commissions.

The Secretary-General said the decades of experience accumulated by the commissions would be in high demand as emphasis was laid on multisectoral and multidisciplinary dimensions in country development plans and programmes. That new orientation by developing countries augured well for a new look to be taken at how to implement a recommendation put forward by a consultant commissioned by the DIEC Director-General in 1987. The consultant had proposed that the regional commissions should have the first option as executing agent, while recognizing the special competence of the specialized agencies and of the United Nations Department of Technical Cooperation for Development.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/304 of 26 July, took note of the Secretary-General's report. By decision 1991/276 of the same date, the Council took note of a number of documents pertaining to regional development, including the summaries of: the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1990;<sup>(4)</sup> the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1990;<sup>(5)</sup> the economic survey of Europe, 1990-1991;<sup>(6)</sup> the survey of economic and social conditions in Africa, 1989-1990;<sup>(7)</sup> and the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 1990.<sup>(8)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/145 without vote.

Regional economic integration among developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,

Recalling also its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990, proclaiming the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,

Bearing in mind that regional economic integration is important in expanding trade and investments, particularly in developing countries, and regional economic integration everywhere has the potential to strengthen global economic growth, especially if accompanied by openness to the outside world,

Recalling further its resolution 45/203 of 21 December 1990, on the Trade and Development Board, in which it invited the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Trade and Development Board, as appropriate, to continue to follow closely and analyse developments that have a major impact on international trade relations, including economic integration and policy reform in the world economy, technological change and the growing linkage between flows of investment and trade,

Bearing in mind decision 91/10 of 25 June 1991 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, in which it was decided that regional economic integration between developing countries should be included among the specific areas of analysis of regional programmes,

Bearing in mind also the relevant provisions of decision 90/34 of 23 June 1990 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/76 of 26 July 1991, which encourages interregional cooperation in order to facilitate international trade,

Reaffirming that an open multilateral trading system is essential for the promotion of economic growth and development,

Convinced of the link between regional economic integration among developing countries and the promotion of growth and development and of the need to promote more economic cooperation between the members of the international community,

Noting the economic policy measures adopted by the developing countries to facilitate their efficient and competitive participation in the contemporary world economy,

Recalling that regional initiatives have been agreed upon to set the process of economic integration in motion within specific time-frames and with clearly defined objectives,

Aware of the need to coordinate measures at the international level to guarantee the effective and efficient promotion of activities that encourage regional economic integration and, thus, economic integration among developing countries,

Recognizing the need to support, inter alia, the preparation of studies and implementation of measures to facilitate trade, as well as harmonization of the macroecoconomic policies and legal systems of the countries concerned, and to explore the technological aspects of such industrial reconversion processes as might be economically necessary during the process of integration.

1. Points to the substantive importance of integration among developing countries, both for the international community in general and, in particular, for the strengthening of growth and socio-economic development in the developing countries;

2. Decides that in the context of the next revision of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, to be held in 1992, activities promoting regional economic integration among developing countries should be given special attention, and recommends that these activities be included as separate subprogrammes under the Department of Technical Cooperation for Development of the Secretariat, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions, where appropriate, in the programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995, taking into account the need for coordination and the avoidance of duplication;

4. Requests the regional commissions, together with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to contribute to the identification, preparation and implementation of specific projects to facilitate economic integration, and to submit them to bilateral donors, regional development banks and financial institutions for their consideration;

4. Invites all States and regional economic integration organizations to support these initiatives;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 46/145

17 December 1991 Meeting 76 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/46/739) without vote, 27 November (meeting 52); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/46/L.93), based on informal consultations on draft by Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Paraguay, Peru and Uruguay (A/C.2/46/L.15); agenda item 69. Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 2nd Committee 10, 11, 17, 27, 52, 53; plenary 76.

Mandate of the regional commissions

The Conference of Ministers of ECA, concerned that the decentralization process of the 1970s and the inherent focus on the regional dimensions of development had been greatly reversed, adopted on 12 May 1991 a resolution on the revitalization of the mandate and operational framework of ECA.<sup>(9)</sup> The resolution, inter alia, invited the DIEC Director-General to consider convening an ad hoc group meeting of high-level experts drawn from the respective regions in the second half of 1991 to discuss the revision of the mandate of the regional commissions and thus provide an intellectual input into the current process of restructuring and decentralizing United Nations assistance to countries of the regions.

By decision 1991/302 of 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council took note of the resolution and endorsed the convening of a meeting of high-level experts.

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa held its twenty-sixth session/seventeenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers<sup>(1)</sup> from 9 to 13 May 1991 at Addis Ababa, during which it reviewed the continent's economic and social performance and its transformation, recovery and adjustment. The Ministers considered the final review and appraisal of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAERD)<sup>(2)</sup> as well as a progress report on the follow-up on the African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery and Transformation (AAF-SAP). Other issues dealt with were the strengthening of the subregional economic integration process; the establishment of the African Economic Community; reorganization of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (MULPOCs); and preparation of the programme for the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1991-2000).

The Ministers also considered problems relating to natural resources and environment in Africa, social development and humanitarian affairs, in particular the state of social development on the continent, policy challenges for the 1990s, and the changing socio-economic conditions of women in the region.

The Conference of Ministers adopted 21 resolutions covering issues such as the implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action and the Final Act of Lagos at national, subregional and regional levels; strengthening population information infrastructures in support of population programmes in Africa; the acceleration of the economic integration process in Africa and strengthening of MULPOCs; revitalization of mining industries in Africa; the ECA programme of work and priorities for 1992-1993; and the Persian Gulf crisis Compensation Fund. The resolution on the Fund requested the General Assembly to extend the mandate of the Compensation Fund so that African States which suffered from the consequences of the war would be eligible for relief and compensation.<sup>(3)</sup>

Resolutions submitted to the Economic and Social Council for action were on a Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1991-2000) (IDDA II), a Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1991-2000) and proposed United Nations Population Fund technical support teams for Africa. Issues brought to the attention of the Council included women in development, improvement of the status of women in the secretariat of ECA and contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development.

The Conference of Ministers also adopted a memorandum to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly on the final review and appraisal of the implementation of UNPAAERD. It decided on 12 May that African Governments, United Nations organizations and ECA, in particular, should embark on activities that would facilitate the economic integration process in Africa.<sup>(4)</sup> It called on the United Nations Secretary-General to launch a comprehensive process of reviewing and updating of the legislative framework of the regional commissions, with a view to defining their current role and funding mechanisms, and urged United Nations agencies and bodies involved in technical assistance to decentralize staff and establish joint units, sections and divisions with the secretariats of the regional commissions.<sup>(5)</sup>

In a message to the Conference, the Secretary-General said the underlying principles and objectives of the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa,<sup>(6)</sup> UNPAAERD, AAF-SAP and the African Charter for Popular Participation in Development and Transformation, adopted at the International Conference on Popular Participation in the Recovery and Development Process in Africa (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 1990) were crucial for the rapid recovery and transformation of the African economies.

The Secretary-General said the emergence of a united, multiracial and democratic South Africa and its eventual integration into the international community and the mainstream of Africa's political, economic and social life would mean the realization of a long-standing objective of the United Nations. Africa needed increased attention and support from the international community to meet its challenges. It also needed peace and political stability.

Paying tribute to the ECA Executive Secretary, Adebayo Adedeji, who was retiring at the end of July 1991 after over 16 years as the head of ECA, the Secretary-General said he would leave behind a mature institution with considerable weight in general public policy in Africa and in decision-making at the international level.

The Executive Secretary, in his statement, listed seven issues which should be on Africa's development policy agenda for the 1990s, including reaffirmation of the continuing relevance and validity of Africa's continental blueprints; subordination of all policy instruments, including adjustment measures, to long-term development and transformation; the development of an internal capacity and capability to respond to change and to external shocks; and achievement of total and complete congruence between stated goals and priorities and allocation and utilization of Africa's own resources. He also said Africa must deal with human resources development, economic cooperation and continental integration. African people must also redefine their identity, values and aspirations.

Among ECA's subsidiary bodies which met during the year were: the sixth session of the Joint Conference of African Planners, Statisticians and Demographers, which decided on an action plan for statistical development of the continent in the 1990s; and the sixth meeting of the Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment, which directed that the Executive Secretary prepare, in consultation with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and other relevant organizations, a regional project for the development of building materials industries in Africa within the programme of IDDA II (see below), for inclusion in the UNDP fifth programming cycle (1992-1996).

At the fourth Regional Conference on the Development and Utilization of Mineral Resources in Africa, held from 25 to 27 March 1991, the Ministers decided that the ECA secretariat should conduct studies, in close cooperation with UNIDO and the International Labour Organisation (ILO), to revitalize small-scale and semi-industrial gold mining operations and to formulate recommendations for policy improvement.

The eleventh meeting of the Conference of Chief Executives of ECA-sponsored Regional and Subregional Institutions met on 23 and 24 April 1991 and made a number of recommendations, including enhancement of cooperation between their institutions and the African Development Bank. The tenth meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Industry decided that ECA should undertake an evaluation of the subregional and regional industrial development support in order to strengthen those which were viable. The main outcome of the seventh meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development was a recommendation calling for the establishment of a Conference of African Ministers of Science and Technology for Development.

These and other developments were reflected in the biennial report of the Executive Secretary, 1990-1991.<sup>(7)</sup>

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

Reviewing the economic and social conditions in Africa during 1990-1991,<sup>(7)</sup> the Executive Secretary said the 1980s turned out to be a lost decade for the region, with the continent moving from one crisis to another. The two years, 1990 and 1991, had seen what he described as a weak recovery of African economies, with output growing more or less in line with population. The overall growth was 2.3 per cent in 1991, compared with 3.2 per cent in 1990 and 2.7 per cent in 1989. Commodity prices fell to new lows in 1990, particularly for such traditional exports as coffee and cocoa, while mineral prices lost most of the gains made in the bull market of the late 1980s.

Agriculture improved markedly in 1991 after the very poor crop of 1990. Although the overall food situation was satisfactory, an emergency situation persisted in the Horn of Africa and, to a lesser extent, in Angola, Liberia, Mozambique, Sierra Leone and Zaïre.

Output in the mining sector rose by only 2.3 per cent in 1991, compared to 7 per cent in 1990, while oil production increased by 5 per cent, compared to 10 per cent in 1990. Lower oil and metal prices reduced export revenues and forced many mineral-exporting countries to reduce imports or suppress their growth. As a proportion of total output, the manufacturing industry showed little or no progress, remaining at less than 12 per cent. With the exception of a handful of countries, industrialization failed generally. The social conditions deteriorated even faster during the 1980s, the Executive Secretary said.

To help accelerate transformation, integration, diversification and growth of the African economies, essentially through the internalization of the development process and enhancing self-reliance, the General Assembly, by resolution 46/151 of 18 December 1991, adopted the United Nations Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s as a successor programme to UNPAERD.

Debt

There was no significant progress in 1990-1991 on the African debt issue, which as of late 1991 stood at $275.1 billion. Africa's debt burden accounted for about 72.8 per cent of regional gross domestic product (GDP), while actual debt service, which rose from $25.7 billion in 1990 to $26.3 billion in 1991, absorbed 27.5 per cent of export earnings. Commenting on the Africa debt crisis in detail, ECA said sub-Saharan Africa's debt ratio, the highest in the world, remained at an unsustainable 81.1 per cent, while the debt-service ratio, though lower than in 1988 when it amounted to 26.4 per cent, rose to 21.2 per cent in 1991 from 20.9 per cent in 1990. The share of multilateral and bilateral creditors in the total debt was predominant in sub-Saharan Africa (82.6 per cent of total debt), in contrast to North Africa, where private creditors accounted for 25 per cent. In 1991, sub-Saharan Africa was the main recipient of donor grants amounting to $6 billion, $3.8 billion of which came from multilateral institutions and $2.2 billion from Governments.

Trade

Within the framework of a general slow-down in world trade in 1991, Africa's exports fell by 5.6 per cent in value and increased by about 3 per cent in volume. Aggregate imports on the other hand increased by 3.6 per cent in terms of value, even though the rise in volume was only 2.4 per cent.

Discussing the ongoing Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and its effect on Africa, ECA said there were several elements in the draft Final Act which were of particular interest to African countries. Of special concern were the new areas of services-trade-related investment measures and trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights-where African States were particularly weak. It said the lumping together of the various issues for negotiations in a single Final Act to be administered by an umbrella body-the Multilateral Trade Organization-posed a number of problems for African countries, in particular the possibility of cross-retaliation between, for example, trade in goods and trade in services, or between those and policies on trade-related investment measures and trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights.

Forests

Another critical issue was the negative impact of over-exploitation of tropical forests and savannah woodlands which were being lost at the alarming rate of over 5 million hectares annually. ECA said in its economic report on Africa, 1992,<sup>(8)</sup> that more than 50 per cent of the original forest cover in some countries had disappeared in the past 15 years, and the situation was reaching critical proportions in others. The overall tree cover in Africa was currently less than 30 per cent.

ECA said that the damaging effects of deforestation and the consequent desertification that had for some time been increasing at the rate of 7 to 20 kilometres per annum had been greatly amplified during the African crisis of the 1980s. There was need therefore to intensify anti-desertification activities and to develop research in soil and water conservation and deforestation control and sustainability.

Subregional economic performance

According to a summary of the survey of economic and social conditions in Africa, 1991-1992,<sup>(9)</sup> there were significant variations and divergence in the economic performance of the various subregions and economic groupings. Output performance in 1991 was weak and generally poorer than in 1990, except in North Africa, where it grew by 3.4 per cent against 2.8 per cent in 1990, mainly due to a recovery in agriculture and tourism. In West Africa, which performed better than the average for the whole region, output grew by 3.2 per cent. East Africa and southern Africa performed poorly with 1.5 per cent and 1.3 per cent growth, respectively, in 1991, while the Central African subregion was the hardest hit by the economic downturn with a negative growth of 3.6 per cent.

As a group, the African least developed countries (LDCs) performed poorly in 1991, with their output growth dropping from 2 per cent in 1990 to only 1.3 per cent in 1991. The oil exporters in the region did not do as well in 1991 owing to lower oil prices and persistent structural problems. They recorded a growth rate of 3.3 per cent, compared to 4 per cent in 1990. Whereas the oil exporters maintained their modest gains in 1991, the economies of the non-oil countries slipped, with growth falling sharply from 3 per cent in 1989 to 1.5 per cent and 0.6 per cent in 1990 and 1991, respectively.

Social trends

Africa's social scene deteriorated further in 1991 in terms of such critical indicators as education and health, said the summary of the survey of economic and social conditions in Africa, 1991-1992.<sup>(9)</sup> That notwithstanding, special attention was being given to the improvement of the social context of development, notably through progressive recognition of and efforts to introduce democratic practices and structures. The health sector continued to face daunting problems as lack of financial resources greatly constrained government efforts to improve health conditions. Infant, child and maternal morbidity and mortality rates continued to rise.

With regard to the education sector, despite the considerable strides made, projections indicated that the number of illiterates would increase rather than decrease in sub-Saharan Africa by the year 2000. About 90 per cent of the adult population remained illiterate, with 90 per cent of them concentrated in rural areas. The decline in gross enrolment ratio at the first level, which characterized the closing years of the 1980s, had continued into the 1990s. ECA, in its economic report on Africa, 1992,<sup>(8)</sup> observed that social development policy on education must aim, in the 1990s, at increasing literacy rates and gross enrolment ratios. In particular, special attention must be directed to gender parity in terms of primary school enrolment. Education at all levels should emphasize the orientation to self-reliance, self-employment and the acquisition of basic skills.

The unemployment situation also worsened further in 1991, as the rate of expansion of employment (2.4 per cent) continued to fall short of the rate of population growth (3.1 per cent). With current rates of GDP growth, prospects for employment expansion in the 1990s remained bleak.

A number of African States had recognized the need to solve internal disputes through peaceful means and to restore the rule of law. Progress had also been made in the march towards democratization. During 1991, peaceful transfer of power through elections was accomplished in a number of African countries. Free elections based on multi-party democracy were also planned in many others.

ECA commented that a significant improvement in the social situation in Africa in the 1990s would require the articulation of a national social policy in each African country and its vigorous implementation within the framework of integrated socio-economic development policies and programmes.

AIDS

In a discussion of the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) crisis in Africa,(s) ECA said the number of cases reported by African countries to the World Health Organization (WHO) in 1991 and early 1992 was about 129,270 compared with 42,167 for the period 1979-1988. Underreporting, for various reasons, was thought to be rampant, but WHO had estimated nevertheless that the number of people infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) in Africa was over 6 million. As many as one third of pregnant women attending some identified urban antenatal clinics were HIV-infected. Consequently, it was projected by WHO that 5 million to 10 million HIV-infected children would have been born in Africa by the year 2000.

There was evidence, according to ECA, that the system of information, education and communication had not had the desired impact on HIV/AIDS prevention. Denial, complacency and stigmatization of infected persons had combined to impede prevention and control efforts. There was need therefore for aggressive social mobilization, centred on community participation, with local community opinion leaders being central to the process, if the pandemic was to be effectively brought under control.

Activities in 1990-1991

Development policy and regional economic cooperation activities

In his biennial report for 1990-1991,<sup>(7)</sup> the Executive Secretary said that African countries had not, on the whole, been able to master and fully utilize modern technology and the know-how that was generally the key to modern economic development. No fundamental change had taken place in agricultural technology and farming practices in Africa. Thus, despite the process of policy reforms and the adjustment programmes that had been carried out, economic recovery in Africa had remained rather slow while the prospects for longer-term development and transformation were as dim as ever.

ECA's main objective as an executing agency was to assist its member States to achieve higher levels of economic cooperation and regional integration and to promote action for social and economic development. It identified the following as issues crucial to the development of the region: environmental protection; natural resources development; agricultural development with emphasis on food production and food security; economic cooperation and integration; transport and telecommunications; and trade and industrial development, including activities to promote the effective involvement of women in development.

ECA programmes in the area of development issues and policies covered the development of planning, cooperation, coordination and information services at the national, subregional and regional levels.

A crucial area in which ECA was active during the period under review concerned the implementation at all levels of UNPAAERD (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Two missions visited selected countries in the Gisenyi (Rwanda) and Yaoundé (Cameroon) MULPOCs subregions and evaluated efforts made to implement UNPAAERD at the subregional, regional, national and international levels. The MULPOCs, under their new mandate adopted by the ECA Conference of Ministers in April 1990, reinforced their cooperative arrangements with the intergovernmental organizations existing in their respective areas. They were also involved in the implementation of multisectoral projects.

ECA observed that the development of the operational activities of the MULPOCs was to a great extent hampered by the decrease in extra-budgetary resources provided to them. It noted, however, that steps were being taken to make them more effective in delivering outputs to their member States.

In the area of socio-economic analysis, planning and projections, activities consisted principally of the preparation of annual surveys of the economic and social conditions in the African region as a whole and an annual economic report on the region. The secretariat also undertook activities relating to research on topical planning issues of particular interest to Africa, such as the impact of the Persian Gulf hostilities on African countries, the informal sector in selected African countries and restructuring and planning of financial markets. One study examined planning practices in Africa and proposed changes in development planning in line with the strategies and objectives of AFF-SAP.

Activities in favour of Africa's LDCs in 1990-1991 included the preparation of an annual survey of their economic and social conditions and an assessment of the outcome of the Second (1990) United Nations Conference on LDCs on the long-term development strategy in Africa (African countries accounted for 32 of the 47 LDCs). The secretariat also undertook studies on employment policies and agricultural pricing in LDCs.

Operational activities included assistance to African countries in development planning, preparation of models and forecasting and advisory services related to development policies and issues. On the whole, activities centred on improvements in the overall policy framework and the development priorities in the region, with most of the activities geared towards the rationalization of economic integration efforts in the various subregions. According to ECA, significant progress had been achieved, especially in West Africa, where the Authority of the Heads of State and Government of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) had adopted a resolution on the setting up of a single economic community in the subregion.

As regards technical cooperation among developing countries, ECA said its secretariat had formulated proposals aimed at more aggressiveness on the part of African countries and inter-governmental organizations in the search for partnerships in the South. Towards that end, ECA and the African Development Bank had established a South-South Partnership Centre which remained to be financed.

The Pan-African Documentation and Information System (PADIS), which was established to assist ECA member States in developing their information support for development planning, carried out a series of activities, including network building, advisory services and other forms of technical cooperation on information management and development. PADIS had undertaken database development and, through a project on computer networking in Africa, was testing many newly developed forms of information technology. On-line services were being developed for world-wide utilization through the PADIS computer networking. A training workshop in data communications was held at Addis Ababa from 25 February to 1 March 1991 for participants from 14 countries of the region. Despite the enormous contributions it had made in information management techniques, PADIS itself faced budgetary difficulties. The secretariat said the institution would require more money to ensure continuation of its programmes beyond 1991.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/82 without vote.

Acceleration of the economic integration process in Africa and strengthening of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres

The Economic and Social Council,

Concerned about the slow process of subregional economic integration in Africa as evidenced, inter alia, by the low level of intra-subregional trade, the persistence of customs barriers between States members of the Economic Commission for Africa, the non-existence of a common external tariff and the absence of harmonized sectoral policies in the fields of agriculture, industry, transport, energy, trade and monetary affairs,

Recalling resolution 61(XXII) of 24 April 1987 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa on the acceleration of subregional economic integration in Africa and the new role of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres,

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/92

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/122/Add.1) without vote, 24 July (meeting 18); draft by ECA (E/1991/97), orally amended by Vice-Chairmen: agenda item 7.

Also on 26 July 1991, in decision 1991/303, the Council said it adopted resolution 1991/82 on the understanding that the administrative and financial implications relating to paragraph 7 thereof would be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session in the context of its consideration of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993.

Public administration and finance

ECA activities in the area of public administration and finance were aimed at enhancing the management capacity of the public services; reforming public enterprises and other management organizations; improving budgetary and financial management in government; reforming taxation systems and policies; and improving tax administration.

The ECA secretariat continued efforts to ensure that funding for a project negotiated with UNDP, a special action programme in administration and management in Africa, would continue beyond the 1990-1991 biennium.

Natural resources

ECA work in the area of natural resources sought to address the problems of inadequate indigenous capabilities for the exploration, exploitation, development and management of natural resources; lack of information on natural resources endowment of large and unexplored areas; and non-integration of natural resources development within national and multinational socio-economic development programmes and projects in African countries. Assistance covered such areas as policy development and the development of technical and managerial expertise for mineral exploration and utilization.

The secretariat organized a regional workshop on the contribution of the African non-fuel mineral sectors towards the region's economic advancement. Other operational activities undertaken included the provision of advisory services to the Governments of Chad and the Congo on prospects for enhancing trona production and strengthening the operation of the Central African Mineral Resources Development Centre, respectively. Similarly, advisory services were provided to the Eastern and Southern African Mineral Resources Development Centre and to ECOWAS on the feasibility of establishing a West African Mineral Resources Development Centre.

The secretariat reported that the biennial conference of ministers responsible for mineral resources development in the African region was increasingly becoming a popular event for the exchange and the formulation of appropriate mineral development policies in the continent. The role of the private sector in mineral development was fully recognized and various cooperative arrangements among the countries were evolving in the sector of mineral resources development.

In the area of water resources, activities focused on research and analysis of policy, planning and development strategy; provision of advisory services; organization and convening of intergovernmental regional meetings; and promotion of information exchange. A study on Africa's implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan, adopted at the 1977 United Nations Water Conference,<sup>(10)</sup> showed that the major responsibility for the development of water resources rested with national Governments, while the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and the donor communities collaborated to support those efforts.

Other studies conducted by the secretariat dealt with non-conventional methods of developing new water sources and a strategy for the conservation and rational use of water sources in North African countries. In the area of cartography and remote sensing, activities focused on the development of institutional capability, programme coordination and promotion of international and regional cooperation, as well as the development of a cartographic database and remote sensing and its application. A seminar was organized for African decision makers to sensitize the region on the use of remote sensing and geographic information systems for resource development and management.

Energy and development

ECA activities in the energy sector during the period under review were aimed at assisting African member States to develop indigenous energy resources and to formulate energy policies. Towards that end, emphasis was laid on integration of energy policies and planning into overall socio-economic planning; development of institutional arrangements; studies of development of small oil, natural gas, coal and peat resources for local uses; and promotion of the development of new and renewable sources of energy and cooperation in the energy sector. A study was carried out on the modalities of strengthening the institutional arrangements for management in the energy sector. Another study provided guidelines for small-scale development of oil, natural gas, coal and peat in Madagascar and Burundi. The objectives of those studies were to analyse the availability of those conventional sources of energy and discuss the aspects of their practical utilization.

Using three selected African member States (Burundi, Rwanda and Zaire) as a test case, the secretariat analysed the problems surrounding the efficient use of energy and proposed actions and strategies for energy development and its optimal use. ECA continued to support the African Regional Centre for Solar Energy. It also provided advisory services to the ECOWAS secretariat in the preparation of the terms of reference of the UNDP-financed study on the development of hydropower resources and interconnection of electrical grids in the West African subregion.

International trade and development finance

ECA's work in trade and finance was organized under the following: domestic trade and finance; intra-African trade; trade with non-African countries; international financial and monetary policies; and trade information, marketing research and trade promotion. The major focus was on trade promotion and development and financial and monetary policies development. Activities carried out during the biennium were geared towards enhancing the negotiating position of African States at the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, scheduled for February 1992 (see PART THREE, Chapter IV).

In the area of domestic trade, the secretariat carried out a survey on the need for the integration of women in the modern business sector, establishing in the process their significant contribution to its development. Specific attention was also paid to the development of trade information as a medium for promoting intra-African trade and trade with non-African countries.

The secretariat's activities on international financial and monetary policies also provided input to the fourth meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Finance (Addis Ababa, December 1991). Resolutions adopted at that meeting included one on the African debt crisis and the role of indigenous banking and financial institutions in the mobilization of financial resources for development.

Transnational corporations

The thrust of ECA's work on transnational corporations (TNCs) centred on research, the results of which were intended to provide a comprehensive information base to ECA member States regarding the activities and the impact of TNCs on the African socio-economic development process. During the period under review, research focused, within the framework of UNPAERD, on: the role of TNCs in African LDCs; TNCs in the services sector in selected African countries; development of an African information system on TNCs; foreign direct investment and African development financing; and the role of TNCs in the transfer of technology to African developing countries.

Industrial development

ECA activities in industrial development centred primarily on four areas: development and promotion of capabilities for the formulation of industrial policies and strategies; design of industrial programmes and projects; promotion of technological and entrepreneurial capabilities; and the building up of subregional and regional institutions for industrial development in the fields of technology, production, standardization and management. In that respect, ECA undertook a number of research studies and provided advisory services to member States to develop and promote capabilities for the formulation of industrial policies and strategies geared at improving the industrial environment. It also organized subregional workshops and seminars for government officials and individual entrepreneurs.

Overall, the Commission's work was organized under the following areas: policy development, planning and institution-building; development of basic industries; development of agro-based and forest-based industries; and development of small-scale industries. Those were implemented within the context of the preparation of the programme of IDDA II (see below). The draft programme was adopted by the tenth meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Industry (Dakar, Senegal, 25-31 July 1991).

The Commission helped African countries ensure the implementation of the objectives of IDDA II, with particular attention being paid to multinational or subregional enterprises in chemical, metal and engineering industries. It actively promoted subregional and regional industrial cooperation in various fields and provided technical support to regional institutions, such as the African Regional Centre for Engineering Design and Manufacturing. A series of workshops was held, including one organized for middle-level managers and planners on industrial planning, data and policy formulation (Yaoundé, Cameroon, 25-27 November).

Among the reports published by the secretariat was one on the possibility of the establishment of an African regional network for agricultural chemicals and machinery. A number of technical publications on a wide range of subjects were also prepared, including guidelines on the manufacture of irrigation equipment and of equipment for processing cereals, tubers and vegetable oils in Africa.

Activities carried out by the secretariat on small-scale industries focused on assisting African countries to formulate policies, strategies and supportive measures for the development and promotion of industrial entrepreneurial capabilities.

Within the framework of bilateral cooperation between India and ECA, a number of activities were undertaken to assist African Governments and individual entrepreneurs in policy and project development in the small-scale sector. A study tour of India by African entrepreneurs and policy makers was undertaken to expose them to inexpensive technologies for the manufacture of essential consumer and engineering products. A workshop on various issues on the development of small-scale industries, held in Côte d'Ivoire within the framework of the Indo-ECA project, endorsed the establishment of a South-South partnership promotion centre under the joint sponsorship of the African Development Bank and ECA.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/81 without vote.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/81

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/122/Add.1) without vote, 22 July (meeting 15); draft by ECA (E/1991/97); agenda item 7.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, by decision 46/458, the General Assembly endorsed Council resolution 1991/81, in particular paragraph 4. It also took note with appreciation of a resolution on IDDA II, adopted on 22 November by the General Conference of UNIDO.

Manufacturing industry

Growth of the manufacturing sector of the African economies continued to be hampered by a number of constraints, including structural problems, heavy dependence on external inputs and large cuts in public sector investment, according to the economic report on Africa, 1992.<sup>(8)</sup> The aftermath of the Persian Gulf hostilities and civil disturbances across the region further constrained the manufacturing industry, whose share in Africa's total output remained very low, at an average of 10.5 per cent in 1989-1991, compared with 11 per cent during 1988-1990. While in 1990, the manufacturing sector had shown some early signs of recovery with a growth rate of 2.1 per cent, the figure for 1991 was only 1.3 per cent, a reversal to the 1989 growth level.

The declining trend in foreign direct investment in the African region continued in 1991. Also carried forward in 1991 were various industrial policy initiatives undertaken by regional and international financial institutions in 1990 to stimulate industrial growth. In conjunction with investment incentives provided by African Governments to industrial development, export processing zones were being set up in a number of countries in the region to attract foreign investment and to promote export of manufactures. Privatization and divestiture exercises continued on a wider scale in Africa in the 1990-1991 period. IDDA II was being used as a benchmark for the preparation of national industrial strategies and policies, ECA said.

The aim of IDDA II, as with the first IDDA,<sup>(11)</sup> was to develop an integrated, broad-based industrial sector in Africa with emphasis on entrepreneurial and skills development, small and medium-sized enterprises, food production and processing industries, clothing and textile industries and energy. The manufacturing industry in Africa was expected to share in the economic upturn and recovery forecast for the region as a whole in 1992.

Food and agriculture

ECA collaborated with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) in carrying out programmes in the area of food and agriculture, with the main thrust centred on agricultural development policy, planning and programming; agricultural production, institutions and marketing; and integrated rural development. It produced guidelines on the reinforcement of policy measures as a basis for the mobilization and efficient utilization of domestic resources in the implementation of agricultural investment programmes and projects.

Fisheries

In 1990,<sup>(12)</sup> the General Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to submit in 1992, in close consultation with FAO, a report on cooperation in fisheries in Africa, including recommendations for its enhancement. In 1991, the fifth expert consultation on fish technology in Africa was held (Addis Ababa, 27-30 May) as was the second session of the Ministerial Conference on Cooperation in Fisheries among the African States Bordering the Atlantic Ocean (Dakar, 1-5 July).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/73 without vote.

Cooperation in fisheries in Africa

The Economic and Social Council.

Recalling its resolution 1990/77 of 27 July 1990,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 45/184 of 21 December 1990, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit, in close consultation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to the Assembly at its forty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council at its regular session of 1992, a report on cooperation in fisheries in Africa, including recommendations for its enhancement,

Aware of the importance of regional agreements for the promotion and development of fishery resources,

Concerned about the need to encourage these initiatives, which are directed towards attaining food self-sufficiency, improving nutrition, diversifying exports and promoting employment,

Stressing the importance of the preservation and conservation of fishery resources through regional cooperation and rational management compatible with the North-South framework of cooperation, which safeguards the interests of both the African countries of the Atlantic region and the developed countries that seek those resources,

Bearing in mind the fact that the fisheries sector can foster the development and economic growth of developing countries,

1. Expresses satisfaction with the significant progress made by the follow-up committee of the Ministerial Conference on Cooperation in Fisheries among the African States Bordering the Atlantic Ocean;

2. Takes note with satisfaction of the convening, under the chairmanship of Senegal, of the second session of the Ministerial Conference on Cooperation in Fisheries among the African States Bordering the Atlantic Ocean at Dakar from 1 to 5 July 1991, during which a number of relevant decisions were made and certain programmes prepared;

3. Welcomes the adoption by the Conference of a Regional Convention designed to regulate and strengthen cooperation among those States;

4. Takes note of the establishment of a secretariat in charge of the follow-up and implementation of that Convention;

5. Appeals to the entire international community to follow the rational management of fishery resources, including stock maintenance, in the interest both of the African States bordering the Atlantic Ocean and of the developed countries involved in exploiting those resources;

6. Requests the organizations of the United Nations system, donor States and agencies involved in providing assistance and funding to contribute generously, as appropriate, to the implementation of the programmes and projects prepared during the Conference;

7. Invites the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, in consultation with the Chairman of the Conference, to submit a report, as appropriate, to the Economic and Social Council on the progress made and the results obtained.

Science and technology

The Commission focused in 1991 on infrastructure promotion and development in its work in science and technology. Other activities covered the development and effective utilization of scientific and technological manpower and promotion of regional and interregional cooperation. The secretariat convened and serviced the biennial meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development and the meetings of its working groups. It also organized subregional meetings of the Committee at Yaounde and at Niamey, Niger. The secretariat published a report on performance review of science and technology policy institutions in a number of African countries. The findings and recommendations of the studies provided a basis for improving the structures, functions and effectiveness of science and technology machineries. Seminars and workshops organized by ECA during the period under review focused on cultural prerequisites and the role of women in the application and development of science and technology in Africa, and management of science and technology with special emphasis on new and emerging technologies and their application to development.

ECA presented lead papers articulating approaches to the integration of modern science and technology into traditional African culture and science and technology management in African countries. Other papers dealt with science and technology policy in Africa, the development of endogenous capacity in new materials technology in Africa and the impact of technological factors on African commodities and possible options.

Marine affairs

In the area of marine affairs, ECA activities included assistance to member States in the development of marine science and technology. Assistance was also provided in the development of human resources capabilities and in the development of policies, strategies and legislation at the national level for marine resources exploration, exploitation and management. A meeting of the African Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Marine Science and Technology was held (Moscow, 1-15 October 1991).

Social development and humanitarian affairs

ECA work in the area of social development and humanitarian affairs was geared towards promotion of rural development policies and actions, assistance in designing social development programmes and services, and the integration of women in development. Activities undertaken towards those ends covered policy analysis and formulation of strategies on rural development; and promotion of participation and integration of youth as well as disabled and ageing persons in development. As part of its efforts to promote the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992) (see PART THREE, Chapter XI), the secretariat published two issues of the newsletter Equal Time. In the field of ageing, it completed a regional profile on the ageing situation in Africa based on selected country studies. In the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, ECA continued supporting the work of the United Nations

African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see PART THREE, Chapter XII). It succeeded in getting UNDP funding, totalling $2 million, to cover staff remuneration and several substantive activities. The General Assembly further approved in December 1991 a grant of $180,000 for the Institute.

In the area of social policy, planning and institution building, studies were undertaken by the secretariat on the state of social development in Africa and the policy challenges for the 1990s. A report was prepared on the assessment of social development activities as reflected in the development plans of selected countries. ECA activities in the field of education and training for development and manpower employment, planning and policies was aimed at making education relevant to Africa's socio-economic needs and at making African countries appreciate the importance of human resources in socio-economic recovery and long-term development.

As part of the delivery of subprogramme activities, studies were published on trends and issues in African education; non-formal education and development; and improving the quality of teaching and learning in institutions of higher learning. Operational activities included servicing national and subregional training courses, seminars and workshops on formal and non-formal education, as well as management of training programmes and organizational development.

Environment

ECA's programme on environment in Africa in 1990-1991 was aimed at strengthening environmentally sound and sustainable development in the region within the context of UNPAAERD. Focus was directed to the development of environmental capabilities, including conservation of resources and pollution control. The secretariat took steps to prepare African States for the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED), establishing a task force to pool all relevant in-house expertise and convening a forum of eminent Africans to collect views and opinions for the benefit of countries.

The secretariat also ensured the adoption of a common African position on the major issues to be discussed at UNCED. It cooperated closely with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in drafting the African Convention on the Ban on the Importation of all Forms of Hazardous Wastes into Africa and the Control of the Transboundary Movement of Such Wastes Generated in Africa. The Convention was signed by African States at the OAU Pan-African Conference on Environment and Development (Bamako, Mali, January 1991). A progress report on the preparation of plans of action to combat desertification was submitted for discussion at the sixth meeting of the Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment in March 1991.

Population

ECA activities on population questions covered population policies and development planning, demographic analysis in the context of economic and social development and regional training and research. The secretariat presented a number of reports to the sixth session of the Joint Conference of African Planners, Statisticians and Demographers (Addis Ababa, 15-20 January 1990), including evaluation of national experiences in implementing population programmes, and the relative roles of maternal and child health care and family planning programmes.

Activities in the area of demographic analysis included life-table analysis of birth intervals with illustrative applications and a review of fertility estimates in selected African States; an analysis of mortality patterns, trends, differentials and life-tables; and guidelines on the methods of evaluating the socio-economic and demographic consequences of refugees in African countries. Work on training and research was carried out through ECA's Regional Institute for Population Studies in Accra, Ghana. ECA and the Institute jointly prepared and made available to member States a workbook on demographic data evaluation and analysis.

Human settlements

ECA concentrated its efforts in human settlements on facilitating regional and physical planning, including infrastructural planning, institution building and development of the indigenous building construction sector. Attention was given to the issues related to the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 (see PART THREE, Chapter IX), with a report being prepared on the trends and implementation problems and a technical publication providing guidelines for an integrated national policy and programmes to facilitate implementation.

Special emphasis was placed on articulating mechanisms and measures for construction sector development and development of indigenous building materials. The secretariat, through its technical publications, outlined appropriate mechanisms and financial arrangements for the promotion of small-scale building construction enterprises and investment opportunities for the development of an indigenous construction sector. It also produced a report on the use of appropriate technology in providing low-income shelter infrastructure and services in rural areas.

Integration of women in development

The African Training and Research Centre for Women (ATRCW) continued promoting the advancement of African women, focusing on planning, agriculture, domestic trade and women in scientific and technical professions. A major output was a report on changing socio-economic conditions of women in Africa in the context of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women.<sup>(13)</sup> The report revealed that greater efforts were required in the areas of higher and scientific education, access to resources and decision-making positions, employment opportunities and health facilities. The findings of the report culminated in the adoption of resolutions on women and development and on the improvement of the status of women in the ECA secretariat by the ECA Conference of Ministers in May 1991.

Special attention was given to the strengthening of the entrepreneurial capabilities of women. In that connection, an expert group meeting proposed modalities for the establishment of a regional association of women entrepreneurs and strongly recommended the establishment of a federation of African women entrepreneurs. Follow-up actions on the creation of the federation were being pursued by ATRCW. ATRCW provided advisory services to Angola, Kenya, Namibia and Zimbabwe on the best way of including women's concerns in national development plans. Efforts to secure women's access to credit were made as part of an experimental project carried out in Ethiopia, Rwanda and Uganda.

Another major concern was to improve production and management conditions for women operators in the informal sector. The secretariat continued to disseminate information on women in development, publishing an annotated bibliography on women in development and the newsletter ATRCW Update.

Transport, communications and tourism

The activities of ECA in the field of transport and communications covered general and multimodal transport issues, human resources and institutional development. The secretariat distributed to African transport institutions guidelines on the establishment of international multimodal transport operations and also assisted member States in strengthening human resources management and development of containerization.

In the area of marine transport, inland water transport and ports, technical advice was provided to member States on a whole range of relevant issues, such as the establishment of shipping companies and shippers, formulation of tariff policies for maritime transport, improvement of cargo-handling operations and management. To improve land transportation, studies were carried out on substandard sections of the trans-African highways and the harmonization of transit charges. In the railways subsector, ECA gave priority to the development of modern methods of management and operations with the view to increasing efficiency.

Particular attention was paid to the issues of repair and maintenance of railway tracks and rolling stock. Advisory services were provided to the Union of African Railways in preparation of the sectoral strategy for IDDA II.

Activities in the air transport subsector were aimed at, among other things, increasing the operational efficiency of African airlines.

Tourism received a boost with the development of plans and programmes of intra-African cooperation, building up infrastructure and development of human resources and tourism circuits. The secretariat participated in celebrations of the Year of African Tourism (1991), promoting African tourism development through technical publications and reports to meetings of regional and international organizations dealing with tourism. Related activities included the dispatch of an advisory services mission to Guinea to evaluate the development prospects of the industry and to prepare documents for structuring the tourism sector.

In the area of communications, efforts centred on assisting African countries in the formulation of policies to guide and sustain the sector's development. Work continued on the implementation of the Pan-African Telecommunications Network (PANAFTEL), which covered the terrestrial telecommunications of the whole continent.

In the field of satellite communications, priority was given to the development of the Regional African Satellite Communications System (RASCOM) project intended to supplement the terrestrial network developed under the PANAFTEL programme. A feasibility study on RASCOM was completed in 1991, and the secretariat, as a member of the executive committee for the project, convened a Special Conference of African Ministers of Telecommunications to give the directives for follow-up. The Conference decided that a dedicated satellite system was a viable option for Africa and proposed measures for achieving that objective.

In the postal subsector, emphasis was placed on the development of such modern services as electronic mail. Technical publications suggested measures for solving the problems of postal administrations in land-locked countries and recommended ways and means of improving postal services in Africa.

Transport and Communications Decade

The ECA Conference of Ministers, in May 1991,<sup>(14)</sup> approved the programme for the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1991-2000), with the secretariat playing the lead role in its implementation. ECA activities during 1992-1993 were to be oriented towards further promotion of regional cooperation for the development of transport, communications and postal services, including related issues of infrastructure and networks at country and regional levels, through the formulation of appropriate policies and programmes. They were to include working groups and subregional workshops/seminars at ECA headquarters and in various parts of the continent. Staff missions would assist African countries in finalizing their country programmes within the context of the Decade and fund-raising missions would be organized to donor countries and international financial institutions.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/83

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/122/Add.1) without vote, 24 July (meeting 18); draft by ECA (E/1991/97), orally amended by Vice-Chairman; agenda item 7.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 46/456 of 20 December, the General Assembly endorsed Council resolution 1991/83, in particular paragraph 4 inviting the Assembly to provide ECA with the necessary regular budgetary resources to enable it to carry out its responsibilities as the lead agency for the Decade.

Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar

In an interim report to the Economic and Social Council, transmitted by the Secretary-General in May 1991,<sup>(15)</sup> the secretariats of ECA and ECE affirmed that the necessary research on the project of linking Europe and Africa through the Strait of Gibraltar was being pursued in earnest. Morocco and Spain, the two countries involved, were closely following recommendations made in previous years by the Council. The report, presented in response to a 1989 Council resolution,<sup>(16)</sup> said that the technical work being done consisted of studies and sophisticated research. Various scientific institutions were involved, and the project aimed to be a driving force in that field of scientific pursuit and was likely to lead to advances in both marine science and construction methods (boring techniques, length of bridge spans, etc.).

As in the past, ECA and ECE requested the Council to underscore the international nature of the project and encourage the United Nations to participate more actively in its related studies through the two Commissions, among others. The Council was requested to confirm the mandate previously given to ECA and ECE and to allocate adequate resources to them, in order to enable them to follow developments related to the project.

The 1980 agreement between Morocco and Spain establishing the legal basis for their cooperation was strengthened by a new one in 1989, whose objective included the study of institutional schemes for the implementation of the project, as well as measures for its promotion at the international level to encourage scientific institutions to participate in the studies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/74 without vote.

Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar

Council of Europe regarding measures to encourage the construction of a major traffic artery in south-western Europe and to study thoroughly the possibility of a permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar,

Taking note of the conclusions contained in the interim report prepared in compliance with Council resolution 1989/119 by the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe on the development of the studies relating to the project for a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar,

Bearing in mind the conclusions and the recommendations of the Third International Colloquium on the Europe/Africa Permanent Fixed Link through the Strait of Gibraltar, held at Marrakesh, Morocco, from 16 to 18 May 1990 and attended by distinguished experts in the areas related to the project and by representatives of many international organizations,

Conscious of the importance of the issues linked to the project and their repercussions on the promotion of scientific and technological research at the international level,

Also conscious of the contribution of the project to the development of transport and to subregional and inter-regional physical integration,

1. Welcomes the cooperation between the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Europe, the Governments of Morocco and Spain and the Transport Study Centre for the Western Mediterranean;

2. Invites the States concerned and the competent scientific institutes and institutions to cooperate with the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Europe and the Governments of Morocco and Spain to encourage and facilitate the development of land transport infrastructures linked to the works across the Strait of Gibraltar and cooperation in regard to administrative and customs procedures;

3. Also invites the competent agencies of the United Nations system to participate in carrying out the studies relating to the project for the permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar;

4. Requests the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe to prepare an evaluation report on the studies relating to the project in the period 1982-1993 for submission to the Economic and Social Council at its regular session of 1993;

5. Calls upon the Secretary-General to allocate as far as possible sufficient resources to the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe, within existing priorities, for the preparation of the above-mentioned evaluation report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, by decision 46/457, the General Assembly endorsed Council resolution 1991/74.

Statistics

ECA activities in statistics were aimed at further development and improvement of statistical design, data collection, processing and analysis. One of the major achievements, according to the Executive Secretary's report for 1990-1991,<sup>(7)</sup> was the formulation of the Addis Ababa Plan of Action for Statistical Development in Africa in the 1990s by the Joint Conference of African Planners, Statisticians and Demographers in January 1990 and its adoption by the ECA Conference of Ministers responsible for Economic Development and Planning in May of that year. A strategy for implementing the Plan of Action was drawn up by an intergovernmental working group in July 1991. It was expected to be endorsed by the Joint Conference of African Planners, Statisticians and Demographers in 1992.

According to ECA's annual report,<sup>(1)</sup> constraints on programme performance included the increasing demands for adequate, reliable, up-to-date and relevant quantitative information for the formulation, monitoring and evaluation of policy reforms and development programmes. ECA also noted the achievements that had been made, such as the expansion of statistical data produced, an improvement in the data processing situation as well as progress being made in the building up of national capacity and self-reliance.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions

According to the ECA secretariat, administrative actions were taken during the period under review to ensure the achievement of targets set in the following areas: filling of vacancies, staff training, provision of conference services, upgrading of printing facilities and improvement in library services. There was marked improvement in the area of vacancy management. Staff development was provided at all levels and in various occupational activities, such as language training in French and English. During the biennium, women were recruited through redeployment of internal staff from headquarters and externally. As at the end of December 1991, the total number of Professional women in the secretariat was 36, representing 17 per cent of ECA staff.

The year 1991 marked the beginning of full-scale office automation in ECA, with the installation of some 365 microcomputers, 300 desk-top printers and basic applications software. The office automation programme was managed by the newly established Information Systems Section.

Work programme for 1992-1993

On 12 May 1991,<sup>(17)</sup> the ECA Conference of Ministers endorsed the work programme and priorities of ECA for 1992-1993 and urged the United Nations Secretary-General to give special consideration to ECA in providing it with adequate resources to enable it to implement fully its work programme, particularly by making available more regular budget posts, increased allocation for travel and consultancy services for the five subregional MULPOCs, the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning and PADIS. The Secretary-General was also urged to stress to the General Assembly the need to make available adequate posts and financial resources at ECA to enable it to undertake those responsibilities assigned to it under the programme on Africa's critical economic situation, recovery and development.

Date and venue of 1992 session

The Executive Secretary informed the Conference of Ministers in May 1991 that in accordance with established practice, by which the meetings of the Conference of Ministers were hosted every other year by a member State, the twenty-seventh session of the Commission/eighteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers should be held away from headquarters. If the principle of rotation among the various subregions were to apply, that meeting should be held in a country in eastern and southern Africa. Namibia informed the Conference that the next session could in principle be held at Windhoek but that confirmation would be provided only after further consultations with all concerned.

On 26 July, by decision 1991/301, the Economic and Social Council decided that the twenty-seventh session of ECA/eighteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers should be held at Windhoek in 1992, subject to further information to be provided by Namibia at the Council's 1992 organizational session.

Adebayo Adedeji Conference Centre

The Conference of Ministers, in May 1991,<sup>(18)</sup> decided that the new conference centre of ECA be named Adebayo Adedeji Conference Centre. The Ministers noted the impact and impression that the work of ECA's third and longest-serving Executive Secretary had left on the Commission and its member States through his relentless efforts to establish policies and strategies for Africa, with a view to realizing political and socio-economic integration of the continent.

In compliance with a 1987 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(19)</sup> the contract for the construction of conference and related facilities was signed in February 1991 between the United Nations and Cooperativa Muratori & Cementisti, C.M.C. di Ravenna s.v.l., Italy. Construction began on 29 April 1991 and substantial work was to be achieved within the next 36 months.

ECA cooperation with the UN

Steps were taken by ECA during the reporting period to strengthen its cooperation and collaboration with organs and specialized agencies within the United Nations system, including the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. ECA participated in meetings of the Steering Committee on Social Dimensions of Adjustment in connection with a project sponsored by UNDP/World Bank/African Development Bank (ADB); the WHO/African Advisory Committee on Health Development within ECA/WHO technical collaboration; and UNDP round tables on some African least developed, land-locked and island countries.

ECA also cooperated with other United Nations specialized agencies, such as the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and ILO. ECA worked with UNESCO on the latter's communications programme covering development information in Africa, and with the Advisory Council for the Coordination of Information Systems, a subsidiary of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to promote widespread access to databases of the United Nations system. It had exchanged databases with the FAO, ILO, UNIDO and the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs.

ECA maintained regular contact with OAU and ADB and cooperated with them in a wide range of activities. The depth of cooperation could be seen in moves to establish a joint ECA/OAU/ADB secretariat by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU. ECA worked with ADB on preparations for the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa and IDDA II. ECA collaborated closely with OAU in drawing up the treaty leading to the future establishment of the African Economic Community. ECA and OAU were instrumental in organizing the Conference on Security, Stability, Development and Cooperation in Africa in 1991.

Cooperation between SADCC and the United Nations

In an October 1991 report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Coordination Conference (SADCC),<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretary-General said SADCC had developed a programme of action comprising 565 projects, spread over nine sectors, including information and culture. The total cost of the programme as at 30 June 1991 was approximately $8.5 billion. Until 1987, SADCC's projects had covered rehabilitation and upgrading of the transport and communication infrastructure. Since then, the emphasis had shifted to promotion of investment in agriculture, industry and mining.

The 10-member SADCC (Namibia became the tenth member State in April 1990) continued to enjoy the support of various United Nations agencies in the implementation of its programme of action.

UNDP provided regional assistance to SADCC for a total value of $13,705,722 during 1987-1991, including a cost-sharing contribution of $2,758,534 and a NORAD (Nordic/SADCC) Trust Fund contribution of $3,909,091.

ECA carried out a number of activities in SADCC member States, some of which had a regional dimension. The secretariat conducted studies in the area of environment, food-marketing institutions, reduction of food-crop losses and promotion of food security. Its activities also included organization of seminars for the subregion.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/160 without vote.

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, at its forty-seventh session (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 1-10 April 1991),<sup>(1)</sup> focused attention on industrial restructuring in the region as its theme topic. By a resolution on the Seoul Plan of Action for Promoting Industrial Restructuring in Asia and the Pacific,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commission requested the convening of a meeting of senior officials of ESCAP members to examine the Plan and the modalities for achieving its objectives. Their report was to be submitted to a meeting of Ministers of Industry and Technology which, in turn, would report to ESCAP in 1992.

In the Seoul Declaration on Regional Cooperation,<sup>(3)</sup> the Commission reaffirmed its role, as mandated by the General Assembly, as the main general economic and social development centre within the United Nations system for the Asian and Pacific region. All members and associate members were urged to take concerted action to strengthen regional cooperation in order to meet effectively the economic and social development challenges in the coming decades.

In a resolution<sup>(4)</sup> on implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s, the need for which was underlined by the General Assembly in the context of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, adopted in 1990,<sup>(5)</sup> the Commission stressed that successful implementation depended on shared responsibility and strengthened partnership for the growth and development of LDCs.

Noting with concern the continuing deterioration in the overall economic and social conditions of its poor members, the Commission called on member countries to give highest priority to initiating and implementing poverty alleviation activities, incorporating them into their respective national development plans and programmes.<sup>(6)</sup> It requested the Executive Secretary to formulate policies and programmes from a regional perspective for alleviating and eventually eliminating poverty and further requested that the issue be considered at the Fourth Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Welfare and Social Development (Manila, Philippines, 7-11 October 1991), as well as at the Fourth Asian and Pacific Population Conference and the Ministerial Conference on Urbanization, both scheduled for 1992.

The Commission adopted a resolution<sup>(7)</sup> on assistance to the countries in the Asian and Pacific region affected by the hostilities in the Persian Gulf (see PART TWO, Chapter III), urging multilateral institutions to respond promptly to their needs.

Concerned at the disruption to labour migration between the regions of ESCAP and ESCWA caused by the Persian Gulf hostilities,<sup>(8)</sup> the Commission requested its Executive Secretary, in close consultation with ESCWA, to undertake a thorough analysis of the demographic, economic and social policy issues involved with a view to identifying the means to enhance the benefits to both labour-exporting and -importing countries.

In a resolution on the integration of environment and development,<sup>(9)</sup> the Commission endorsed the Asian and Pacific input to UNCED and the Regional Strategy on Environmentally Sound and Sustainable Development agreed on by a meeting of senior officials (Bangkok, Thailand, 13-19 February 1991). The Commission called for early implementation of the recommendations of the Ministerial-level Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, October 1990), in particular the Ministerial Declaration on Environmentally Sound and Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific.

By a resolution on phase II of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, 1985-1994,<sup>(10)</sup> the Commission decided that, for the second quinquennium of the Decade, the programmes should be redesigned and implemented to avoid the shortcomings identified during the first five years. Account should also be taken of new developments in the transport and communications sectors in the region during the remaining period of the Decade to coincide with the medium-term plan, 1992-1997. The Commission supported the convening of a meeting of ministers responsible for transport and communications in 1992 and urged UNDP to provide funds and United Nations organizations and agencies to coordinate their activities with the ESCAP secretariat. The Executive Secretary was requested to take the lead role in coordinating activities on the Decade; to encourage the active participation of ESCAP subregional groupings; to promote the active involvement of commercial sectors; and to submit a report with recommendations.

The Commission called for continued promotion and strengthening of regional cooperation and collaboration in remote sensing and geographic information systems, especially in the area of satellite technology applications for sustainable natural resources and environment management. It requested the incorporation of their application in its work programme as a regular programme activity.<sup>(11)</sup>

It further adopted resolutions on interregional cooperation in the area of trade facilitation, requesting the Economic and Social Council to make recommendations for funding and requesting UNDP and other multi- and bilateral donors to provide adequate resources;<sup>(12)</sup> on regional follow-up<sup>(13)</sup> to the 1990 World Summit for Children, which adopted the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for its implementation in the 1990s;<sup>(14)</sup> and on the International Year of the Family, proclaimed for 1994.<sup>(15)</sup>

Among other decisions taken at its 1991 session, the Commission endorsed the holding of a ministerial meeting on urbanization in 1992 to alert the region's political leadership to the increasingly serious problem posed by that development, and endorsed a recommendation to establish an Asia-Pacific urban forum which would provide a mechanism for promoting regional cooperation among all those dealing with urban issues.

In a message to the session, the Secretary-General said the region as a whole had shown remarkable resilience, even at a time of set-backs in the global economy; however, despite its exceptional economic performance, the gap between rich and poor had continued to widen and, while the region included one of the most important economies in the world as well as some of the most rapidly growing ones, it had the largest number of people living below subsistence level. The real challenge was to take more effective measures to reduce poverty, including those for integrating the poor into mainstream economic activities and for improved population programmes.

The ESCAP Executive Secretary drew attention to the need for effective measures to arrest the erosion in the region's economic performance. One area of urgent attention was economic and social infrastructure development, which, according to him, was generally inadequate in most developing economies of the region. The industrial restructuring process under way had opened up new vistas for regional cooperation in such fields as technology transfer, foreign investment, trade, human resources development, energy conservation and the development of small industries.

He also pointed to the critical need for effective action in the area of environment, saying the problem could hamper the region's further development unless appropriate policies and incentives were undertaken. He urged ESCAP members to take advantage of the clear potential for greater region-wide cooperation in a mutually complementary fashion.

New difficulties kept arising, demanding innovative responses that could produce results. The region faced the staggering problems of mass poverty, illiteracy and social deprivation that engulfed hundreds of millions of people. Their plight cried out for solutions, he added.

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

The annual Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 1991<sup>(16)</sup> contained two parts: a review of economic and social developments in the region; and the challenges of macroeconomic management and policy reforms.

According to a summary of the survey,<sup>(17)</sup> the region's overall economic performance remained strong during 1990-1991 despite a number of domestic constraints and a deterioration in the external sector. The average rate of growth for its developing economies was estimated at 6.4 per cent in 1991, marginally higher than the 6.1 per cent achieved in 1990. China's growth rates improved considerably, reaching 5.1 per cent in 1990 and 6.1 per cent in 1991. India, however, faced some set-backs in 1991 and was expected to achieve a lower growth rate of 3.5 per cent compared with 5 per cent in 1990 and 5.2 per cent in 1989. Rates of growth in the four larger countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Thailand, were generally lower, with an average of 6.2 per cent in 1991, compared to 7.8 per cent in 1990.

With the exception of Nepal and Pakistan, growth rates were lower in South Asia, with an average of 4.7 per cent in 1991 compared to 5.1 per cent in 1990. Viet Nam's gross national product growth rate improved to 3.2 per cent in 1991, but was still below the 4.3 per cent target.

Among the three developed countries of the region, Japan's rate of economic growth averaged 5.5 per cent during 1988-1990. Even if the Japanese economy had lost some of its export stimulus in recent years, both domestic consumption and investment demand expansion kept the economy on a growth path that did not, however, upset price stability. This was not the case for the other two high-income economies of the region, Australia and New Zealand. The former's economic growth rate was sustained at an average 3.9 per cent during 1987-1990; in 1991, however, the economy went into recession with a 1.1 per cent contraction. In New Zealand, the economic growth rate had averaged less than 1 per cent annually since 1987. Government policies in the two countries had aimed at reducing budgetary and external current account deficits, two major difficulties faced by both of them.

According to the survey, the developing economies of the region, as expected, showed great variation in their economic performance during 1990-1991. Those of North-East Asia showed improvement during the period after a 1989 slow-down. The exception was Mongolia, which was undergoing a rapid transformation from a centrally planned to a market system and experienced a decline in real income in 1991. Economic performance in South Asia suffered set-backs in 1991. Nepal's economy grew by 4 per cent, double the rate achieved in 1990, as it successfully resolved its trade and transit impasse with India. Despite difficulties, Pakistan's economic growth rate improved by a percentage point, to 5.6 per cent. Sri Lanka's GDP growth rate improved to 6.2 per cent in 1990 from 2.3 per cent in 1989, but was expected to slow down to 4.6 per cent in 1991. For Iran, the 1991 GDP growth rate was projected at 8 per cent, after a 10.5 per cent rate in 1990 and 3.6 per cent in 1989.

The economies of Hong Kong and Taiwan improved in 1990-1991, with the former's growth rate projected to rise to 4.5 per cent in 1991 from around 2.8 per cent during 1989-1990. That of Taiwan fell from 7.4 per cent in 1989 to 5.2 per cent in 1990, but was expected to again reach 7.4 per cent in 1991. The Republic of Korea's GDP, which slumped to 6.1 per cent in 1989, recovered to 9 per cent in 1990, but was expected to be lower (8.6 per cent) in 1991.

Among the region's LDCs, Afghanistan apparently made no progress towards growth or economic stability, as its real GDP continued to decline with an almost hyper-inflationary rate of price increases during 1988-1990. Bangladesh achieved economic growth rates of 5.8 per cent in 1990 and 3.6 per cent in 1991; for 1992, a growth rate of 5.7 per cent was envisaged. Bhutan's GDP slumped to 1.2 per cent real growth in 1988, but increased to 4.6 per cent in 1989. The economy of the Lao People's Democratic Republic grew strongly in 1989 and 1990, with real GDP increasing by 8.9 per cent and 8.4 per cent, respectively. In Maldives, real GDP grew at an average annual rate of over 10 per cent during 1986-1990. Myanmar achieved a growth rate of 5.6 per cent in 1990, after registering 3.6 per cent the previous year.

In Samoa, GDP declined by 3 per cent in 1990 after a 1.3 per cent upswing in 1989; growth of 1.5 per cent was forecast for 1991. Vanuatu achieved a 5 per cent growth rate in 1990, compared to 4.5 per cent in the previous year; at least 3.5 per cent growth was expected in 1991.

Natural calamities, low primary commodity prices and higher energy costs due to the Persian Gulf hostilities adversely affected the LDCs' growth performance. Kiribati, Samoa and Vanuatu suffered from falling prices of copra, an important export item.

The survey stated that the economies of most island countries of the region grew at lower rates in 1990 compared with 1989. Papua New Guinea's economy suffered actual contraction in GDP, due largely to depressed international commodity prices. A full recovery was expected in 1991 with a record 8 per cent forecast. In Fiji, real GDP increased at a 4.3 per cent rate in 1990, following an impressive 12.3 per cent growth in 1989. After recording a 6.9 per cent growth rate in 1989, the second highest for the 1980s, Solomon Islands' performance slowed to 5.6 per cent in 1990. Its growth rate was achieved despite the effects of lower international commodity prices; the agriculture sector grew by about 8 per cent in 1990. In Tonga, the GDP growth rate was a mere 0.8 per cent, compared to 1.7 per cent in 1989; the slowdown reflected the falling levels of production in agriculture, particularly in coconut products, vanilla and bananas, and fishing. A rate of 3.7 per cent growth was expected in 1991.

Countries of the region faced difficult adjustment problems in the very important trading sectors of their economies, following sharp deceleration in growth rates of world output and trade in 1990 and 1991. They were adversely affected by declining world prices of non-fuel primary commodities, which fell by 0.5 per cent in 1990 and were projected to decline further, by 7.9 per cent in 1991 and by 5.7 per cent in 1992. During 1990, world market prices of rice, coffee, tea, copra, rubber, palm oil, copper and tin remained depressed and caused considerable loss of earnings to South-East Asian countries in particular.

Total exports of the ESCAP region in 1990 amounted to $715.4 billion, representing 21.1 per cent of world exports. The developing economies' share in the regional total was 53 per cent, or 11.2 per cent of the world total. Exports from the region increased by 9.1 per cent over 1990, representing an improvement over the previous year's growth rate of 8.5 per cent. The developing Asian region's balance of payments on current account, after a nominal surplus of $0.8 billion in 1989, suffered a deficit of $1.7 billion in 1990. The deficits were projected to rise to $12.1 billion in 1991 and $10 billion in 1992, thus putting a definite end to the surpluses recorded since 1986.

The second part of the survey dealt with the challenges of macroeconomic management, focusing in particular on evolving policy adjustments and reforms in the developing ESCAP region over the preceding two decades or so. Development strategies differed significantly across the region in the 1950s and 1960s, with import substitution policies the initial choice for a strategic development approach among many developing economies. In the early and mid-1960s, however, the Republic of Korea, Singapore and Taiwan initiated shifts in their policy stance in favour of a greater outward orientation with vigorous promotion of export-led industrialization.

Those economies, together with Hong Kong, had displayed significant economic dynamism over extended periods of time. Economic growth and structural transformation among those newly industrializing economies had provided an eloquent demonstration of striking success, the survey observed. Since the second half of the 1970s, there had emerged other waves of policy adjustments and reforms to ensure more open trade and capital flows, hence a higher degree of reliance on the operation of market forces and the discipline of international costs and prices.

The development experience so far revealed that perhaps nowhere else in the third world had the nexus among trade, industrialization and technological achievements been as well established as among the region's developing economies. A dynamic base of manufacturing exports was one of the key requirements for sustained growth and restructuring. Its development and diversification, however, had to be fostered through a relatively outward-oriented trade and commercial policy regime that did not discriminate unduly between domestic sales and exports. Ancillary deregulation measures were needed to ensure commensurate and timely domestic responses to emerging signals from local and external demand.

The train of reform processes in the region's developing economies had shown kaleidoscopic approaches and characteristics. There had been no unique or universal pattern of policy reforms. It was apparent from the unfolding economic vista that the evolving transformation, through the changing international/regional division of labour, would be likely to remain both appealing and relevant to most of those economies in the 1990s and beyond; that would, however, depend on a number of factors, such as the realization of a high, rising rate of domestic savings and the general absence of sizeable and prolonged macroeconomic imbalances.

Collaboration between government and private enterprise, a crucial element in the process, was dependent on the availability of adequate skills and experienced human resources. Another problem was related to transitional costs associated with evolving policy adjustments and reforms, which usually affected the more vulnerable members of society, such as women, the young, the aged and the infirm. There was therefore a pressing need for built-in safeguards in the reform package to protect the underprivileged.

In conclusion, the survey observed that the policy-induced patterns of industrialization through deepened economic interdependence had also had a strong impact on the quality and quantity of environmental assets. The evolving restructuring process in many economies of the region thus posed another dilemma for policy management. While development was needed to mitigate dire poverty and the environmental degradation due to such poverty, growth through industrialization had also generated severe ecological strains and stresses. Promoting growth, alleviating poverty and protecting the environment had become mutually supportive objectives of the development process. Therein lay a basic challenge of the art of macroeconomic policy management faced by policy makers in a world of increasing complementarity and internationalization.

Social trends

According to the summary of the economic and social survey,<sup>(17)</sup> the question of employment of an estimated billion people of working age in the developing areas of ESCAP-home of almost three fifths of humanity-had assumed great significance. The newly industrializing economies, and recently Malaysia and Thailand, had been facing shortages of skilled labour as well as of managerial and engineering personnel for their expanding manufacturing sector. In Singapore, rapid industrialization had caused labour demand to exceed domestic supply for more than a decade, with the exception of the 1985 recession period when approximately 100,000 workplaces in manufacturing and construction were lost. In Hong Kong, unemployment and underemployment were less than 2 and 1 per cent, respectively. In the Republic of Korea, unemployment rates dropped from 4 per cent in 1985 to 2.4 per cent in 1990.

Other countries in the region faced aggravated problems in accommodating labour that agriculture could no longer profitably use or that industry and some of the service sectors had been required to release for the purpose of restructuring to achieve greater efficiency. The survey said the problem tended to appear in its most acute form in countries that had recently embarked on a restructuring process seeking to transform their economies from centrally planned systems into market-oriented ones. It also observed that unemployment statistics in the developing economies of the region masked the large group of men, women and children engaged in hazardous and exploitative work in the informal sector, who did not register as unemployed since their livelihoods were totally divorced from the formal economy. That applied especially to women. Conditions of work relating to wages, hours and protection against exploitation varied from country to country and among sectors within a country, but generally left considerable scope for improvement.

Activities in 1991

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

Among its important tasks, ESCAP continued to monitor the socio-economic situations and issues at the national, regional and international levels that might have impact on the region's development prospects. Special attention was paid to the role of economic and social infrastructure development in accelerating growth and fulfilling basic needs. With regard to international-level events of concern to the region, attention was given to the impact of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf. Analytical reports were prepared on the long-, medium- and short-term impact of recessionary and protectionist trends, the oil-dependency situation and the oil price on the overall growth of the region, as well as its energy prospects. Attention was also accorded to evaluating the status of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations on the ESCAP developing economies in relation to such issues as market access, rule-making and agriculture.

A number of development planning activities carried out by the ESCAP secretariat in 1991 included meetings and training courses on project design, preparation and appraisal techniques and management.

Implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs

In sharp contrast to the mostly high rates of growth in the developing countries, in general, economic growth in LDCs in the region remained weak and unstable, according to the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1991.<sup>(16)</sup> Lacking any significantly positive trends and suffering from basic structural weaknesses and a lack of human, material and financial resources, they were far from attaining the agreed annual growth rate of 7.2 per cent set in the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s, adopted in 1990 by a United Nations conference (known as the Paris Conference)<sup>(18)</sup> and endorsed by the General Assembly later that year.<sup>(19)</sup>

The target for raising significantly the official development assistance (ODA) flows from developed countries to 0.15 per cent of their GNP generally remained unfulfilled. While some donors achieved that target or doubled their ODA, the average contribution represented only 0.09 per cent of GNP. A number of developing countries extended assistance to LDCs within the framework of ECDC/TCDC (economic and technical cooperation among developing countries).

According to the survey, increased resources were called for from developed countries and international financial institutions to enable the developing countries of the region to intensify their assistance activities for LDCs. As envisaged in the Programme of Action, preparations were initiated for cluster meetings—one for the continental LDCs (Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, Nepal) and another for the island LDCs (Kiribati, Maldives, Samoa, Tuvalu, Vanuatu).

The meetings were aimed at improving and strengthening cooperation arrangements between LDCs and other developing countries at the regional and subregional levels and at reviewing their progress in coordination with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). According to the survey, with the addition of Cambodia and Solomon Islands, the total number of LDCs in the ESCAP region rose to 13 at the end of 1991. They accounted for about one half of the total population of all the 47 LDCs.

Special problems of Pacific States

The Commission, noting the development constraints faced by the island economies, welcomed appropriately designed technical assistance for their benefit, including the conduct of training courses on project planning. It stressed that external assistance should reflect closely the considerable diversity in economic development and factor endowments among those economies themselves. The Commission emphasized the need to recruit more Pacific island nationals to work within the secretariat so as to reflect island subregional perspectives better in ESCAP work programmes. It also reiterated the need for close collaboration and cooperation with the South Pacific Forum secretariat and the South Pacific Commission, among other Pacific regional agencies.

It expressed great appreciation of the wide range of activities implemented by the various divisions, units and offices of the secretariat for the benefit of the Pacific island countries. The increased level of technical assistance activities, including advisory services and short-term cooperation undertaken by and through the ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre in 1991, were particularly welcomed. It urged donor countries and agencies to continue assisting Pacific island developing countries, noting also that the establishment of the Pacific Trust Fund had facilitated the participation of several delegations from the Pacific in annual sessions of the Commission.

Economic and technical cooperation

The Commission urged the secretariat to intensify its catalytic efforts towards the promotion of ECDC/TCDC, in particular its emphasis on operational activities at both bilateral and multilateral levels. Noting the successful outcome of a multisectoral TCDC programming exercise meeting (Jakarta, Indonesia, July/August 1990), with the participation of 29 developing countries from Asia and the Pacific, the Middle East, Africa, Latin America and Europe, and 7 international organizations, including ESCAP, and of the seminar on people's participation and national self-reliance: issues and policy options for TCDC in the 1990s, organized in conjunction with the meeting, the Commission urged that more such exercises be organized, noting the significant benefits for least developed, land-locked and island developing countries of their participation in ECDC/TCDC activities.

The Commission welcomed the initiative of the Philippines in conducting, with the assistance of UNDP, a TCDC programming exercise in the food and agriculture sector during 1991. Pakistan informed the Commission that it would host a TCDC programming exercise in September 1991, in the field of civil air transport, to which more than 70 regional and non-regional developing countries were invited.

International trade and development finance

The main focus of the secretariat's work in international trade and development finance continued to be on enhancing national capabilities in export promotion and on expanding intraregional trade through regional cooperation on the basis of modalities such as TCDC. National and regional seminars and studies were held on trade expansion and trade facilitation. Assistance was provided to engender a sharpened perception of the implications of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations and to establish an ESCAP network which could serve as a focal point for trade facilitation in the region. The Committee on Trade, at its twenty-seventh session held in February 1991, prepared a draft resolution on interregional cooperation in the area of trade facilitation, which the Commission adopted in April.<sup>(12)</sup>

New initiatives were taken for exploiting the potential for trade expansion and cooperation in rattan and rubberwood furniture. The issue of market access was addressed through a study and a technical meeting (Bangkok, 21-26 July), followed by an intergovernmental session on the generalized system of preferences scheme scheduled for January 1992. A workshop designed to address export promotion problems of least developed and land-locked countries (Vientiane, Lao People's Democratic Republic, 19-22 August) identified the major impediments to trade and the modalities for their resolution.

Technical assistance was provided to the developing countries through market guidebooks and traders' manuals.

Transnational corporations

Recognizing the importance of TNCs in restructuring the industrial sector in the region, especially in improving the competitiveness of export industries through the introduction of modern technology, the Commission requested the secretariat to continue developing an information network and to intensify its efforts in promoting the draft code of conduct on TNCs (see PART THREE, Chapter V). The secretariat was urged to assist host country entrepreneurs in dealing with TNCs, especially with respect to technology transfer and capital input.

Activities in 1991 included an expert group meeting (Bangkok, November), which examined the role of TNCs in the export and import of primary commodities from developing countries to their major markets. A second meeting dealt with the role of TNCs in selected service industries in the region (Bangkok, December), with particular attention to the telecommunications industry. Both meetings examined recommendations to enhance the capability of host countries in negotiating with TNCs in those industries.

The Asia-Pacific TNC Review analysed various issues related to the participation of TNCs in the region, including papers on: the service industries in the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand; the commercial banking sector in Malaysia; foreign direct investment in Bangladesh; and TNCs in LDCs.

Transport and communications

The Commission urged that high priority be accorded to communications, stressing the importance it attached to the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (see below).

Intergovernmental meetings of highway and railway officials were convened in December 1991 to consider a new project on Asian land transport infrastructure development. The project, which was expected to facilitate trade and tourism in the region, was to be given high priority during phase II (1992-1996) of the Decade. Equal attention was to be given to both intraregional and interregional transport links and land transport infrastructure development. Among recommendations agreed on at the meetings were standardization of related legislation and pursuit of measures to improve road and rail transport services.

Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific

A mid-term review of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994) was carried out. To intensify its impact and objectives, the ESCAP Committee on Shipping, Transport and Communications in 1990 had recommended that the time-frame of the second half of the Decade be adjusted to cover the years 1992-1996 and a new regional action programme formulated.

The Commission, at its 1991 session, approved programme changes recommended by the Committee and endorsed its proposals on the Decade. The recommendations included continuation of programmes for the Decade, encouragement of the involvement of commercial expertise and the preparation by the secretariat of a compendium of projects undertaken in the transport and communications sectors within the region.

It was suggested that attention be focused, during the second phase of the Decade, on the use of computer-assisted training technology. Also proposed was a post-evaluation of selected workshops and seminar-cum-study tours to provide guidelines for a model training scheme and the consistent production of training materials of high quality. United Nations agencies would be involved in the programme.

The Commission agreed that the orientation initially given to the Decade remained fully valid at the start of the second phase. It further stated that the establishment of an appropriate institutional and regulatory framework, improvement of operating and management practices and training should remain the main areas of activity.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/75 without vote.

Phase II of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, 1985-1994

By decision 46/453 of 20 December 1991, the General Assembly endorsed Council resolution 1991/75, in particular paragraph 2.

Mekong River basin development

The Commission in 1991 heard a progress report from the Chairman of the Interim Committee for Co-ordination of Investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin. There had been significant policy shifts that had given greater focus to the regional mandate of the Committee. The Committee's resources had increased by 28 per cent in 1990. About an 80 per cent increase in financing would be required for the completion of a feasibility study for a mainstream project. The Chairman noted further that preparatory activities had begun in Cambodia for the collection of technical and scientific data of considerable importance to all members of the Committee. The restructuring of the Committee's secretariat was noted, particularly the emphasis on basin planning and the further training of nationals of the riparian States.

Tourism

In the area of tourism, ESCAP continued to assist developing countries of the region in deriving greater socio-economic benefits from the industry through studies on its economic and environmental impact and in meetings and seminars on investment and economic cooperation in the tourism sector in developing Asian countries of the ESCAP region (Tokyo, 15-21 October) and on promotion of sustained tourism development in Pacific island countries (Suva, Fiji, 18-22 November). Research studies were prepared on the economic impact of tourism in Indonesia, Malaysia and Thailand.

Industrial development

A draft plan of action for promoting industrial restructuring in Asia and the Pacific, prepared by the ESCAP secretariat, was welcomed by the Commission at its 1991 session. It felt that the regional cooperation measures outlined in the plan should emphasize the development of small and medium-scale industries, as well as ways and means to promote their linkages with large industries in the context of industrial restructuring. The role of Japan and of the newly industrializing economies of the region would be crucial in determining the pattern of geographical location of industrial activities. The promotion of fair and free market competition on a continuous basis would have to be recognized. The economies of the region should constantly work towards maintaining an open trading system and for the development and strengthening of regional capital markets.

The Commission(2) requested developed countries as well as United Nations agencies and other international organizations to help ESCAP members accelerate their industrial and technological development. While expressing appreciation for the secretariat's activities in the field of industrial development, it said that programmes concerning agro-allied industries and small and medium-sized industries must be strengthened. It noted the secretariat's work in promoting competitiveness and efficient resource utilization in manufacturing, human resources development policy and planning for industrial development, and investment promotion. It recommended the strengthening of the secretariat's investment promotion activities, targeting the least developed and island developing economies. In addition, the secretariat was to help strengthen national capabilities in industrial skills promotion and development as well as entrepreneurial development through regional programmes.

Natural resources and energy

The sixteenth session of the ESCAP Committee on Natural Resources and Energy (Bangkok, September 1991) was held at a time when the Commission was reorganizing its work on a thematic basis. Consequently, the Committee deliberated on three areas on which the secretariat's work was centred: natural resources management; energy management; and natural disaster reduction, with emphasis on regional cooperation. It endorsed the establishment of six specialized regional working groups which institutionalized the network for cooperation in energy resources development and management. It also called for a comprehensive approach to the revision of mining codes and investment regimes in developing countries and for assistance to enable them to gain negotiating experience in those areas.

Mineral resources

The Commission expressed considerable satisfaction with the progress made in the mineral sector, and urged the secretariat to consider establishing an appropriate mechanism to enable member countries, including the private sector, to gain access to marketing information on minerals and mineral-based products, particularly on those not quoted in the commodity exchanges.

Energy

The Commission noted the high priority given to the energy sector by member countries in the wake of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf. It endorsed the following format for regional cooperation in the energy field: commitment and active participation of member countries in the regional energy working groups; the ESCAP secretariat to act as regional focal point; and continued funding support from UNDP. It also observed that contributions from member countries would be important for the successful formulation and implementation of regional cooperative activities.

The Commission also endorsed a progress report on the UNDP-funded Regional Energy Development Programme. At its fourth session in August 1990, the Tripartite Review Conference had reviewed the status of implementation of phase IV (1990-1991) of the Programme and adopted a resolution on continued support for it beyond 1991, including an appeal to UNDP to provide substantial funding. The resolution was approved by the Commission, which also noted a UNDP statement reiterating its commitment to the Programme through UNDP's fifth programming cycle (1992-1996).

The Commission welcomed the leading role of the Pacific Energy Development Programme in organizing comprehensive energy sector reviews in Pacific island countries. It also commended the Programme for its effectiveness and responsiveness to the needs of those countries.

Water resources

The ESCAP Committee on Natural Resources and Energy noted that the region had pursued in a significant way the goals of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) and recommended that the programme be carried forward to ensure that the momentum established in the 1980s was maintained. It similarly expressed appreciation of the secretariat's work on water resources and approved its emphasis on implementation of strategies for the rational development and efficient management and utilization of water resources. Work done by the secretariat on water-related natural disaster reduction was praised by the Commission, which also urged UNDP and other donors to provide funding for activities in that area.

Among the work done by the secretariat was a compilation of regional geologic hazard maps and the application of remote sensing to natural disaster monitoring. Meetings on the subject included one organized jointly with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (see PART THREE, Chapter III) (Bangkok, February); a workshop on forecasting, preparedness and other operational measures for water-related natural disaster reduction (Bangkok, April/May); and an expert group meeting on groundwater quality and monitoring in Asia and the Pacific.

Marine affairs

The Commission noted the integrated and multidisciplinary approach pursued by the secretariat in the implementation of marine issues, within the context of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea<sup>(20)</sup> (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV), and commended it for taking steps to assist member countries in implementing their national marine policies within the framework of the Convention. Country studies on the implications of the new ocean regimes in Indonesia and Thailand published by the secretariat were also noted by the Commission.

The ESCAP Committee on Natural Resources and Energy, at its sixteenth session, observed that Pacific island countries were a very fertile ground for cooperation in marine affairs, including exploration, assessment and development of non-living resources, as well as environmental protection and preservation measures. Among the activities carried out in the area of marine affairs was an inter-agency workshop on the entry into force of the Convention.

Food and agriculture

The focus of ESCAP activities in agriculture and rural development continued to be in three main areas: improvement of agricultural policies, planning and information systems; sustainable production and improvement of supply, distribution, marketing and use of farm inputs; and integrated rural development, with emphasis on poverty alleviation. Field work on employment strategies to involve the rural poor in income-generating activities was carried out in Bangladesh, Nepal and Viet Nam.

At its 1991 session, the Commission underlined the importance of agricultural research and development, the provision of credit to farming communities, the development of infrastructure, such as irrigation and marketing facilities, and the adoption of improved farming practices, such as the use of high-yielding seed varieties and the application of fertilizer. It said that the work of the ESCAP/FAO/UNIDO Fertilizer Advisory, Development and Information Network for Asia and the Pacific had contributed significantly to the development of the fertilizer sector in most ESCAP member countries in a cost-efficient manner.

The Commission noted the significant contribution made by the agricultural requisites scheme for Asia and the Pacific in disseminating information on pesticides, as well as in promoting their safe handling and efficient use. It endorsed a proposed project to establish a database on pesticides and the environment, for which funding was to be provided by the Commission of the European Communities. It endorsed a report on the work of the Regional Coordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops in the Humid Tropics of Asia and the Pacific and commended it for its achievements in 1990.

Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery

Activities carried out by the Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery in 1991 included an agricultural machinery exhibition and symposium (Manila, 25-29 May). The Agrimach '91 exhibition provided an opportunity for local manufacturers from 11 countries participating in the Network to showcase their products and expand their business and technical contacts. More than 100 manufacturing firms took part in the exhibition. A regional workshop on extension and popularization of agricultural machinery (Manila, 29 and 30 May) made recommendations for improving government-farmer-manufacturer linkages, involvement of NGOs and better use of mass media.

The Network arranged exchange of various machinery between Indonesia and the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Pakistan, the Philippines and Sri Lanka, and China and Nepal. Nearly 15 manufacturers and experts visited other countries on study tours arranged by the Network, with the main purpose of selecting machinery for possible introduction in their own countries. Eight machines donated by China were demonstrated at various locations in Nepal by Chinese experts. The Network also arranged, in collaboration with the Belgian Administration for Development Cooperation, an in-factory training course on the design of agricultural machinery.

The Commission endorsed the programmes of the Network, noting with interest its plans to involve manufacturers and manufacturers' associations directly in some of its activities. As previously agreed, it was announced that the Network would operate from ESCAP headquarters in Bangkok from 1 January 1992. The Commission expressed appreciation to the Philippines for hosting it in Los Baños for 13 years.

Science and technology

ESCAP continued to strengthen technological capabilities and the institutional infrastructure for science and technology in its member States. An issue paper on appropriate climate for technological capability enhancement for industrial development was prepared for consideration at a high-level expert group meeting at Bangkok in September 1991. The group was preparing for a 1992 meeting of Ministers of Industry and Technology.

The Commission directed the secretariat to formulate appropriate human resources development programmes to meet the requirements of existing conventional and new and emerging technologies, including environmentally sound technologies for industrial development. It emphasized the need for improving policy and infrastructure measures and mechanisms for efficient technology transfer and urged member States to establish a database and an operational technology information network for that purpose. The secretariat was also to explore ways of creating an active industrial consultancy service and a regional information clearing-house. At a regional meeting of directors/heads of consulting firms (New Delhi, India, September 1991), the establishment of a technical consultancy development programme in Asia and the Pacific was proposed for adoption by the Commission. The main objective of the programme was the development of local consultancy capabilities and promotion of better utilization of local consultants in national and regional projects in the ESCAP region.

The secretariat's activities in promoting science and technology included the organization of a number of exchange study visits, advisory fact-finding missions and promotion of electricity conservation in the commercial and domestic subsectors. It also organized a number of training courses in solar photovoltaic systems in the rural sector.

Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology

The thrust of the activities of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology in 1991 was environmental protection and promotion of environmentally sound technologies, waste management, human resource development, establishment of a data bank on clean technologies and a training programme on environmental technologies. Programme support was received from UNDP, the Asian Development Bank and UNIDO.

The Centre's technology promotion group introduced selected technologies, including environmentally friendly technologies relevant to developing countries of the region, and handled a number of general technology information queries. It published the bimonthly Asia-Pacific Tech Monitor, through which it disseminated information on trends in technology transfer and development, and technology policies and briefs on new products and processes.

Remote sensing

The Commission praised the success of the Regional Remote Sensing Programme, noting that participating countries had gained substantially from its numerous training activities, seminars, workshops, information services, pilot projects and consultancy services. It observed that the establishment of the Programme had had a strong impact on technology development and applications at both regional and national levels. It commended the network approach and TCDC arrangements of the Programme which, it added, were of particular importance and relevance to LDCs and small States with limited resources. The Commission strongly recommended pursuit of efforts towards regional coordination and collaboration and adopted a resolution<sup>(1)</sup> urging support for such cooperation. In line with the resolution, the ESCAP Committee on Natural Resources and Energy recommended the initiation of a regular programme on remote sensing and geographic information systems to enhance ESCAP's capability to provide technical assistance in that field.

Social and cultural development

Activities in the area of social development focused on the preparations for the Fourth Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Welfare and Social Development (Manila, October 1991), at which a declaration on a social development strategy for the ESCAP region towards the year 2000 and beyond was adopted. ESCAP was given the task of coordinating the implementation of the strategy, which was based on the three themes of eradication of absolute poverty, realization of distributive justice and enhancement of popular participation. The ESCAP secretariat continued its work on the issues of integration of women in development, emphasizing the inclusion of their concerns in development planning and the legal status of women. In the context of growing concern about the prevalence of drug abuse, a regional meeting of senior officials was organized to promote regional collaboration in drug abuse control. Guidelines for action in support of education for all were formulated at that meeting, as a regional follow-up to the World Conference for Education for All (Thailand, March 1990), and later adopted by the Commission.

The Commission stressed that the final responsibility for activities in pursuit of that goal rested with individual Governments, which should work with the relevant United Nations agencies, including UNESCO, to set national targets, particularly for female education, and to devise programmes to implement them. It called for the strengthening of ESCAP cooperation with UNESCO and others in the eradication of illiteracy and achievement of universal primary education.

The Commission requested the secretariat to continue publication of the Social Development Newsletter, with each issue focusing on a specific social development question of regional concern.

Human resources development

The Commission expressed support for the integrated approach to human resources development followed by the secretariat within the framework of the Jakarta Plan of Action on Human Resources Development in the ESCAP Region, which it had adopted in 1988. It welcomed the establishment of the ESCAP Network of National Focal Points for Human Resources Development, whose objectives included promotion of exchange of relevant experience, information and technical expertise on national approaches to improvement of human resources development. Some 31 Governments, including those of 17 least developed and Pacific island countries, had designated specific national agencies and bodies as their focal points in the Network.

The first Human Resources Development Award, 1990, for the promotion of innovative and significant human resources development efforts in the region, was presented at the 1991 session of the Commission.

A challenge ahead for the region was the rationalization and encouragement of inter-organizational cooperation at the national level among ministries and other government agencies, NGOs and private enterprises. The Commission said the Network provided the means of addressing the challenge for greater cooperation among Governments, inter-governmental organizations and donor agencies at the regional and international levels.

Population

At its 1991 session, the Commission observed that it was still premature to claim that the problem of population growth in the region had been largely solved, and that the implementation of more effective family planning services and appropriate population programmes would remain a great challenge in the 1990s and beyond. The Commission noted that for many countries it was necessary to develop an integrated approach to family planning, with special emphasis on maternal and child health services.

As determined by the ESCAP Committee on Population and Social Development (second session, Bangkok, November 1990), long-term objectives of the Commission's population programme included the promotion of an integrated approach in population planning; assistance in promoting cooperation and exchange of experience among ESCAP members, and strengthening the capability of Governments to utilize population data in support of policy formulation and programme implementation.

Governments were provided with technical assistance in analysing urbanization trends in their countries.

Advisory services, technical backstopping, training courses, workshops, information services and grants were among the information activities carried out by the Asia-Pacific Population Information Network. TCDC activities were expanded to include training workshops and arrangements for the exchange of personnel among national population information centres.

Human settlements

The Commission, expressing concern at the alarming rate of urbanization, noted that by the year 2000 the region would have 14 of the world's 22 mega-cities (with a population of over 10 million). Countries should take advantage of the dynamism of urbanization and guide the process in such a way that it supported national socio-economic development. The Commission expressed satisfaction with the initial steps taken by the secretariat to implement its 1990 resolution on urbanization strategies in the ESCAP region<sup>(21)</sup>. The strategies called for a regional plan of action to help countries tackle rapid urbanization and the convening of a ministerial conference on urbanization in late 1992 or early 1993.

The thrust of the secretariat's activities in 1991 in the field of human settlements was primarily aimed towards building capacities at the local, sub-national and national levels to enable authorities to cope with the challenge of rapid urbanization.

Under the UNDP-funded Regional Network of Local Authorities for the Management of Human Settlements (CITYNET), the secretariat undertook several initiatives to assist local authorities in managing urban areas. It carried out a study of five CITYNET cities with emphasis on informal sector involvement and community initiatives in urban environmental management. The results of the study, together with draft guidelines on promotion of innovative approaches to urban environmental management, were presented to a high-level seminar on urban environmental management (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, November 1991).

Also in November, CITYNET held its second congress at Kuala Lumpur and Penang, with 40 local governments and 16 NGOs represented. Its independent secretariat was scheduled to be located in February 1992 at Yokohama, Japan, whose mayor had been made its president. As of December 1991, the organization had 28 city governments and 20 governmental and non-governmental organizations as members and associate members, respectively.

The secretariat began the groundwork for the establishment of a network of human settlements research and training institutes to strengthen capacities in that field.

Women in development

At its 1991 session, the Commission urged the secretariat to give priority attention to certain critical regional concerns related to women, such as: inclusion of women's concerns in all aspects of development planning; enhancement of legal literacy among women; regional sharing of views and exchange of information on issues related to women in development and on gender equality; prevention of prostitution and trafficking in women; support for female-headed households and migrant women; and women's role in combating environmental degradation.

It called on the secretariat to ensure that during the observance in 1994 of the International Year of the Family, issues concerning women's status and role in the family were fully examined within the context of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women<sup>(22)</sup> It urged its members to promote legal awareness among women through coordinated effort at the national level by national focal points for the advancement of women. In addition, the Commission said efforts should be made to increase the awareness of men about women's rights.

The Commission requested the secretariat to issue the Directory of National Focal Points for the Advancement of Women in Asia and the Pacific in expanded form to provide more comprehensive information on the focal points. It expressed concern about the limited representation of women in delegations to its annual sessions, adding that the situation reflected the fact that very few women had reached the decision-making level in national Governments.

Meetings organized by the secretariat in 1991 on the subject of women in development included: an East and South-East Asian subregional workshop on the technical processing of information concerning women in development (June); a workshop of experts on the promotion of community awareness for the prevention of prostitution (August); and an inter-agency meeting on women in development (August).

Environment

The Commission directed the secretariat to explore ways of early implementation of the recommendations of the Ministerial-level Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, October 1990). It approved the region's input to UNCED, embodied in the Regional Strategy on Environmentally Sound and Sustainable Development adopted at a meeting of senior officials in February 1991. The Commission endorsed the establishment of an inter-agency Committee on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific to enhance cooperation at the regional level through exchange of information and technology transfer.

It noted the need for an emergency environmental assistance mechanism, adding that a register of experts, enterprises and organizations in that field could be prepared. It also suggested the establishment of a bank of environmentally friendly technologies.

Activities on environmental questions organized in 1991 by the secretariat included workshops and publication of case-studies.

Natural disaster reduction

The Commission expressed strong support for continuation of secretariat activities in the field of natural disaster reduction, the 1990s having been designated by the General Assembly in 1987 as the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction<sup>(23)</sup> In addition to the activities to be implemented under the support programme for the Typhoon Committee and the Panel on Tropical Cyclones, the Commission directed the secretariat to undertake studies and advisory missions as well as training seminars and expert group meetings on reduction of water-related natural disasters. It called for the convening of a workshop on cyclonic storm hydrology, urging donors to provide funding for it and for other activities on the subject.

The Commission noted with appreciation that the Philippines had pledged to continue hosting the Typhoon Committee secretariat.

It commended the Committee, which had made sustained efforts to improve flood forecasting and warning systems. The Committee had held its twenty-third session at Seoul (13-19 November 1990). UNDP was to be asked to consider funding a project on natural disaster reduction related to typhoons; the project included development of integrated river systems and management.

Statistics

The Commission continued to promote the development of statistics in its member countries through the provision of advisory services, technical meetings, training courses and study tours.

Activities in 1991 included a seminar on multi-round surveys for estimating vital statistics (Bangkok, May); a workshop on the statistical analysis of demographic and health data (Bangkok, September/October); a trainers' course on sampling and household survey methodology (New Delhi, October/November); and a workshop on managing national statistical services in the 1990s (Singapore, November).

Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific

The Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific, at Tokyo, continued to train statisticians in government services. Seventeen country courses were held in the areas of statistical computing, statistical operations, national accounts, sampling methods, statistical packages for social sciences, statistics of large and small industries, and statistics for food and agricultural policy.

The Institute continued its collaboration with the Asian Development Bank and the South Pacific Commission. It also undertook joint programmes to strengthen statistical training capabilities of national statistical offices in the ESCAP region.

Europe

The forty-sixth session of the Economic Commission for Europe took place from 9 to 17 April at Geneva in an improved climate of cooperation among the membership. The speed of the political and economic changes in the region led to a redefinition of the Commission's priorities in response to the needs and interests of member countries, particularly those in transition to market economy.

The profound changes in Central and Eastern Europe set the stage for political, economic and social transformations in the region. One of the most conspicuous features of the 1991 session was the shift from the traditional two-caucus system, reflecting the confrontational East-West relationship of the past, to a pragmatic approach to negotiations on the future activities of the Commission.

The year highlighted the magnitude of the economic problems confronting the countries of Central and Eastern Europe, which was accentuated by external shocks, such as the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, the sharp decrease in trade among countries belonging to the former Council of Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA), the effects of German unification and recession in market economies. Despite those problems, the process towards the establishment of market economies was advancing; however, to ensure the success of the reform, international financial and technical assistance would be needed more than ever.

The Charter of Paris for a New Europe, adopted at the Summit of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) in November 1990, recognized the Commission's role as an instrument for economic cooperation in the region.

ECE, as an agency for the multilateral implementation of the relevant provisions of CSCE, made substantive contributions to the Bonn Conference on Economic Cooperation in Europe (19 March-11 April 1990). While the Bonn Document laid the groundwork for a new concept of cooperation in the region, the Charter of Paris was the expression of the political will of the participating States to develop their relations in a new spirit of common principles and interests based on economic liberty, social justice and environmental responsibility as indispensable conditions for prosperity. The Bonn Conference was also aimed at promoting economic relations between the participating States, in particular by improving business conditions for commercial exchanges and industrial cooperation.

At its resumed forty-fifth session in December 1990(1) and at its April 1991 session<sup>(2)</sup> the Commission decided on five priority areas of activity: environment, transport, statistics, trade facilitation and economic analysis. In addition, great importance was assigned to activities to promote assistance to countries in transition and their integration into the European and world economies. With this end in view, emphasis was placed on practical measures and the use of informal methods of work, particularly workshops. Also, sustainable development was confirmed as a guiding principle for all relevant ECE activities.

In April, the Commission adopted six decisions on its work. They included cooperation in the field of economic analysis and assistance to countries in transition<sup>(3)</sup> cooperation in the fields of transport<sup>(4)</sup> and environment and sustainable development<sup>(5)</sup> the European Red List of Globally Threatened Animals and Plants<sup>(6)</sup> and international cooperation to address and mitigate the consequences of the 1986 accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in Ukraine (see PART THREE, Chapter III). In response to 1990 General Assembly<sup>(7)</sup> and Economic and Social Council<sup>(8)</sup> resolutions, the Commission noted the activities related to the accident initiated by a number of its subsidiary bodies and requested them and others to continue or to develop activities in that direction.<sup>(9)</sup>

It also took up the question of special assistance requested by some member Governments that had suffered losses arising from the application of a 1990 Security Council resolution on sanctions against Iraq<sup>(10)</sup>

The Commission approved its programme of work for 1991-1992 and endorsed, in principle, subject to review at its forty-seventh (1992) session, its programme of work for 1991-1995.<sup>(11)</sup>

The Principality of Liechtenstein participated in the session for the first time as a full member, following its admission to the United Nations in 1990. In July 1991, Israel was accepted as member of the Commission.

Stressing the importance of the political and economic reforms taking place in ECE member countries, the Chairman was requested to convene, at least every three months, ad hoc informal meetings of the Commission to consult on policy matters, assist in the preparations for the annual sessions, monitor progress in the work programmes and offer guidance to the Executive Secretary.

During the year under review, ECE continued to serve as both a European institution and a body of the United Nations. As such, it provided a bridge between the Organization and other economic institutions active in the region, such as the European Community (EC), the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), the Council of Europe and the newly established European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD). Member countries of ECE attached high priority to the close cooperation and coordination of activities between it and those other economic institutions to avoid duplication of work and maximize the use of resources.

Economic trends

For the world economy, 1991 was one of the worst years of the entire post-war period. According to the summary of the economic survey of Europe in 1991-1992<sup>(12)</sup> global output fell for the first time since 1945 and the growth of world trade hit a low point for the third year in succession. In the market economies of Western Europe and North America output growth was virtually zero, with a small increase in Europe offset by a fall in North America. An expected recovery in North America and the United Kingdom was forecast for the second half of 1991, but this failed to appear and compensate for the sharp slow-down in Germany and Japan. Forecasts pointed to a feeble recovery in 1992.

In Eastern Europe, the depression associated with the break-up of the centrally planned economies deepened further with domestic output levels falling by some 14 per cent, bringing the aggregate drop in output since 1988 to nearly 25 per cent. No country in the region escaped that drop in 1991, but the differences were considerable: in Bulgaria, the fall was some 23 per cent; in Czechoslovakia, Romania and Yugoslavia, it ranged between 13 and 16 per cent; and in Hungary and Poland, it was about 8 per cent. The downturn in Eastern Europe was much greater than expected, due partly to the introduction of large changes in relative price structures, which were central to price liberalization measures, and the restrictive macroeconomic policies introduced to curb accelerating inflation and budget deficits. This was amplified by the collapse of trade among the members of the former CMEA.

In the former USSR/Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), net material product fell by 15 per cent and GNP by 17 per cent, after respective falls of 2 and 4 per cent in 1990. The most urgent task facing the CIS countries was to curb inflation and budget deficits, which meant resolving the conflict between fiscally autonomous republics and ineffective central monetary control. There was growing fear that further cuts in living standards as well as rapidly rising unemployment and increasing economic strains could undermine the process of economic transformation.

According to the summary of the economic survey of Europe in 1990-1991,<sup>(13)</sup> considerable progress towards the establishment of a market economy had already been made in Poland and Hungary and, to a lesser extent, in Czechoslovakia. Elsewhere, however, progress had been slow and, in some cases, blocked either by the lack of political consensus on the objectives or profile of reform or, more fundamentally, on the domain of central government authority. In the USSR and Yugoslavia, the political struggle over the distribution of power between the federal government and the constituent republics not only had prevented the implementation of coherent programmes of economic reform but also had blocked the adoption of effective measures to deal with acute stabilization problems. Disagreements over the extent of federal government authority also existed in Czechoslovakia. Unwilling to return to the status quo ex ante, unable to move decisively onto a path of coherent reform, and incapable of confronting growing macroeconomic imbalances, those countries were drifting further into economic disarray and political instability.

Western economic assistance to Eastern Europe

The nascent democracies of Eastern Europe would be gravely threatened by a failure of the process of economic transformation, according to the summary of the economic survey of Europe in 1991-

1992.(12) To avoid such an outcome, the Western market-economy countries had launched a number of initiatives to assist countries of Eastern Europe and CIS in their attempts to restructure their economies according to market principles. In the past year, there had been an increase in the flow of official financial resources to the transition economies, an expansion of technical assistance and an improvement in access to Western markets for Eastern products. The established international financial institutions, such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF), had increased their assistance to Eastern Europe. They had now been joined by EBRD, which was inaugurated in April 1991.

Quantitative restrictions on most manufactures had been abolished or suspended by the beginning of 1991 and all the Eastern European countries had received generalized system of preferences (GSP) treatment. Agricultural, steel and textile products were subject to separate arrangements, but, for the latter two, there had been some loosening of restrictions. Important gains in access had been obtained by Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland as a result of their bilateral association agreements with EC, signed in December 1991, which provided for the phasing in of free trade in non-agricultural goods between the parties over a 10-year period.

Trade liberalization was also under way to varying degrees in the other market economies. The European Free Trade Association had concluded a free trade agreement with Czechoslovakia, and negotiations were continuing with Hungary and Poland. The United States had improved access under the Trade Enhancement Initiative. The outcome of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) was still in the balance, but a successful outcome could provide important benefits to the Eastern countries.

Between January 1990 and June 1991, total assistance committed to Eastern Europe by the Group of 24 industrialized countries amounted to $32 billion. Commitments extended to CIS between September 1990 and the end of 1991 amounted to nearly $79 billion. Of the pledges to Eastern Europe, however, only about one fifth consisted of grant aid, although there was in addition a certain grant element in some bilateral loans. The bulk of assistance to Eastern Europe and the former USSR consisted of non-concessionary finance and was, therefore, debt-creating. Virtually all loans had been at market conditions, although there was some implicit subsidy. Inflows of private capital into the Eastern countries had generally been disappointing. Private banks abroad had reduced their lending and, in general, private capital had tended to flow out of the region. That suggested that one of the main elements in the Western approach to helping the transition—promoting structural change with large amounts of foreign private capital—had not started to work.

Activities in 1991

The ECE secretariat said it was well placed to assist the countries of Central and Eastern Europe with new and promising forms of economic cooperation as they carried out their reforms. It started a series of workshops in close cooperation with host Governments and other institutions, dealing with key issues of transition such as: privatization, restructuring of State enterprises, promotion of sustainable industrial development, efficient use of energy, application of statistical practices for market economies, adaptation of transport systems, housing developments, etc. The workshops were aimed at finding viable means to ease the transition towards a market economy by making available to Governments and industry ECE's experience and that of other international organizations and the business community.

The Commission invited member Governments, EC and competent international institutions to participate actively in transition-related activities, and encouraged them to consider providing continued assistance, on a bilateral or multilateral basis, for promoting such activities<sup>(3)</sup>

International trade

The ECE Committee on the Development of Trade (fortieth session, Geneva, 2-4 December 1991) reviewed economic, trade and legislative developments in European countries, including the reforms being undertaken by the economies in transition. Special attention was given to conditions favouring foreign direct investment in the ECE region, the impact of East-West compensation trade on small and medium-sized enterprises and disparities of foreign trade statistics. A Guide to International Buy-back Contracts was published in 1991, and work began on a new guide to legal aspects of privatization.

The Committee assessed the work accomplished by ECE's Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures. The Working Party adopted a number of new messages to be submitted to trial and testing to increase the practical application of the United Nations Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transport (UN/EDIFACT) as a standard for world trade. In 1990, the team of regional rapporteurs had been expanded to include Australia/New Zealand and Japan/Singapore.

The Working Party also adopted a programme of action relating to legal issues hampering international trade procedures and the introduction of electronic data interchange. Further consideration was given to a draft proposal for interregional cooperation in the area of trade facilitation and EDIFACT, prepared by the five regional commissions and UNCTAD pursuant to a 1989 Economic and Social Council resolution.(14)

The Committee stressed the need for investment and know-how from Western companies to assist countries in transition in their economic restructuring. Emphasis was placed on the collection of more data on the qualitative development of joint ventures and their environment. A training programme was held for managers from Eastern Europe and the former USSR on East-West joint ventures. The Committee also examined a report on a workshop (Bucharest, Romania, September 1991) on the subject of foreign trade and payments reforms in the economies in transition. It adopted its programme of work for 1991-1994, which included a number of continuing activities such as analysis and review of trade trends, development and transparency of market information, promotion and diversification of intraregional trade, promotion of trade through investment and industrial cooperation.

The Committee requested the secretariat to prepare a study on the role of small and medium-sized enterprises in the economies in transition and the promotion of conditions for their greater participation in intraregional trade. The secretariat was also to organize a seminar on foreign direct investment with emphasis on the privatization process in the countries in transition. The Committee reviewed the activities of the Working Party on International Contract Practices in Industry and expressed appreciation of the results achieved, especially the preparation of the Guide on Legal Aspects of Privatization in Industry.

Industry

The Working Party on the Chemical Industry, formerly the Chemical Industry Committee, held its first session at Geneva from 2 to 4 October 1991. It adopted its programme of work for 1992-1996, including the priority ranking of programme elements, and reviewed and approved its revised terms of reference. It agreed to include in its 1993 work programme a workshop on waste treatment in industrial parks and a study tour/workshop on the rational use of raw materials and energy in the Romanian chemical industry.

The Working Party considered the draft annual review of the chemical industry (1990) and the annual bulletin of trade in chemical products for 1989 and 1990 and agreed that they should be finalized and published in 1992. It endorsed the reports of the annual meeting of rapporteurs on aromatic hydrocarbons and olefins and the meeting of experts on the periodic survey of the chemical industry. It reviewed studies on the rational use of water and its treatment in the chemical industry, on substitutes for tripolyphosphate in detergents and on engineering plastics, and agreed that work should continue on the study on management of plastic wastes in the ECE region and on the ECE directory of chemical producers and products.

It was informed of the preparations under way for a high-level meeting on cooperation and sustainable development in the chemical industry, scheduled for Warsaw, Poland, in March 1992, and of its importance for the countries of the ECE region, particularly those in transition towards market economies. A workshop on methods of improving the effectiveness of the Polish chemical industry took place at Plock, Poland, in June 1991.

The Working Party on Engineering Industries and Automation (eleventh session, Geneva, 20-22 February 1991) reviewed the role and place of engineering industries within national, regional and global economies, as well as the developments and prospects of international trade in those industries. In April, ECE approved the Working Party's work programme for 1991-1995, giving priority to the ranking of its programme elements, as well as its terms of reference. The Commission endorsed the 1989 annual review of engineering industries, also approving the preparations for the 1990 issue. It also endorsed the report of the second ad hoc meeting for the study on food-processing machinery and agreed that it should be finalized and issued in 1991.

In reviewing ongoing activities in the field of rehabilitation engineering and the need to provide technological and organizational support to economies in transition, the Working Party endorsed the results of the first workshop on the subject (Washington, D.C., June 1990), taking note of the preparations for a second workshop (Fagernes, Norway, May 1991). It further endorsed the report of the twelfth meeting on statistical questions relating to engineering industries and automation. It agreed to further study of low-waste technologies in engineering industries.

The Working Party on Steel, formerly the Steel Committee, at its first session (Geneva, 23-25 October 1991), reviewed short- and medium-term trends in the steel market, endorsed reports of expert meetings on the subject and on steel statistics, and adopted its programme of work for 1992-1996. It also considered a report of the preparatory meeting for a seminar on restructuring and management techniques in steel industries in countries in transition. It agreed to the continuation of the annual bulletins of steel statistics for Europe and of world trade in steel, and to studies on steel product quality.

A seminar on producers' and users' metallurgical requirements in the welding of steel products (Kiev, Ukraine, 16-20 September 1991) was to be followed by others on the restructuring and management techniques in steel industries in Central and Eastern Europe.

Transport

The Inland Transport Committee (fifty-fifth session, Geneva, 28 January-1 February 1991) analysed the transport situation in member countries and emerging development trends, and considered specific issues related to road, rail and inland water transport. According to the Secretary-General's June 1991 report on regional cooperation <sup>(5)</sup> a European-wide Road Safety Week proclaimed by ECE (1-7 October 1990), together with national campaigns organized in most member countries, brought strong response from Governments and the public. The Commission had continued to revise its conventions on road traffic signs and signals. In the area of combined transport, the European Agreement on Important International Combined Transport Lines and Related Installations was opened for signature in April. In further developing conventions and agreements governing international transport, particular attention was given to updating regulations and provisions for the transport of dangerous goods.

Progress had also been made in 1990 towards the development of a coherent road transport system in Europe through the revision of a number of regional conventions, including the European Agreement concerning the Work of Crews Engaged in Road Transport and the 1968 Conventions on Road Traffic.

ECE in April 1991 <sup>(6)</sup> requested the Inland Transport Committee to pay appropriate attention to the selected priority areas of vehicle construction, transport of dangerous goods and road traffic safety, as well as to questions of standardization, administration of agreements and conventions and environmental and safety problems. It underlined the importance of coordination with other international organizations and of support to the economies in transition. Finally, it reiterated its concern for the provision of adequate human and material resources for the ECE Transport Division.

Energy

As part of its efforts to adapt ECE structures and programmes to the new political and economic circumstances in Europe, ECE had decided in 1990 to consolidate the Committees on Coal, Gas and Electric Power and the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Energy into a new Committee on Energy. It had also decided that the main thrust of the energy programme should be assistance to Central and Eastern European countries, as well as the formulation of sustainable energy strategies. The proposal was implemented during 1991.

At its first session (Geneva, 12-14 November 1991), the Committee on Energy reviewed a major study on sustainable energy developments in Europe and North America, which pointed to serious deficiencies and inconsistencies. The Committee's programme was to be focused on energy reforms in Central and Eastern Europe; rational use of energy; interface between energy and the environment; energy policies and prospects; energy demand and supply issues for sustainable development; and energy trade, trade facilitation and infrastructure.

During 1991, the new Working Parties on Coal, Gas and Electric Power held their first meetings. The Working Party on Coal (28-30 October) reviewed the results of a workshop on the market adaptation of coal industries in Central and Eastern Europe. It analysed the coal situation and prospects in the ECE region and pursued its work on the United Nations/ECE uniform code of standards and procedures for the performance of draught surveys of coal cargoes.

The Working Party on Gas (21-23 January) reviewed the gas situation and natural gas markets in the ECE region and its medium- and long-term prospects. It considered progress in the elaboration of a study on interconnections and extensions of gas networks in Europe.

The Working Party on Electric Power (4-6 February) reviewed the results of a seminar on the rational use of electricity (Iassi, Romania, November 1990). It further reviewed developments and medium- and long-term prospects of electric power, and the status of electric power interconnections, particularly in Central Europe and among Balkan countries.

The Steering Committee of the "Energy Efficiency 2000" Project, aimed at reducing the gap between the energy-intensive industries of Eastern Europe and the energy-saving technologies of the West, held its first session (28-30 May 1991). The Project, declared operational as of 1 June, consisted primarily of organizing workshops and business contacts, as well as establishing a network of competent individuals, enterprises, banks and government offices. It provided an opportunity for an exchange of information on legal instruments, grants, subsidies, loan schemes and energy labelling and for listing and reviewing selected energy-efficient technologies, products and services.

Science and technology

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology (nineteenth session, Geneva, 25-27 September) considered preparations for the 1992 quadrennial review of changes in overall science and technology policies and of agreements on scientific and technological cooperation, to be carried out in close cooperation with OECD. They also discussed the organization and management of research and development in Central and Eastern Europe, and reviewed progress in the establishment and operation of the inventory of safety guidelines in biotechnology. A programme of work for 1992-1996 and revised terms of reference were adopted.

Agriculture

The Committee on Agriculture (forty-third session, Geneva, 9-12 March) reviewed European trade in agricultural products, with emphasis on economies in transition, and the market situation of selected commodities such as grains, livestock and meat, and milk and dairy products. It examined the work of its subsidiary bodies, dealing with the standardization of perishable produce, the relations between agriculture and the environment, the economy of the agri-food sector, and food and agricultural statistics, as well as the specific activities in support of economies in transition, in particular a workshop on the conversion of large collective farms into market-oriented units.

Environment

In the area of environmental protection, the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental and Water Problems, meeting at ministerial level (Espoo, Finland, 25 February-1 March 1991), adopted a Convention on Environmental Impact Assessment, which was signed in that instance by 26 Governments and EC. The Espoo Ministerial Statement was also adopted.

Rapid progress was also made on the Convention on the Use and Protection of International Waters and Lakes and on the Convention on Industrial Accidents with Transboundary Impact; both were ready for adoption and signature at the end of 1991. A protocol to the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution concerning the control of nitrogen emissions entered into force in February and negotiations started on a second sulphur protocol based on critical load, cost-effectiveness and other considerations.

At a ministerial meeting during the ninth session of the Executive Body for the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution (Geneva, November), the Protocol concerning the Control of Emissions of Volatile Organic Compounds or their Transboundary Fluxes was adopted and signed by 21 parties to the Convention. The fifth United Nations/ECE seminar on emission control technology for stationary sources was held (Nuremberg, Germany, 10-14 June).

The Senior Advisers adopted recommendations to ECE Governments on waste-water management. A synthesis report was prepared, including recommendations on the protection of inland water against eutrophication. A seminar (Oslo, Norway, 27-31 May) prepared recommendations to ECE Governments on ecosystems-based water management.

At its second session (Geneva, 18-20 December), the Joint Working Group on Environment and Economics recommended that the Senior Advisers apply the OECD guidelines on the use of economic instruments in environmental policies in ECE countries which were not members of OECD.

An ad hoc meeting (Vienna, 2-4 September) resulted in proposals on the extension to the ECE region as a whole of systems and concepts for the management of hazardous chemicals established by OECD for its member countries. Recommendations to ECE Governments on the five "R" policies (reduction, replacement, recovery, recycling and reutilization of industrial waste) were prepared. A document on environmental rights and obligations was also prepared by another ad hoc meeting (The Hague, Netherlands, 1-5 July).

Following the recommendation of the Senior Advisers, ECE adopted the European Red List of Globally Threatened Animals and Plants, and an ad hoc group (The Hague, 1 July) prepared a document on environmental rights and obligations.

Human settlements

The Committee on Human Settlements (fifty-second session, Geneva, 10-12 September 1991) discussed its activities on sustainable development of human settlements, as well as assistance to Central and East European countries—two priority areas of its programme of work. The Working Party on Housing (seventeenth session, Geneva, 12-14 November) reviewed the results of three workshops in Central and East European countries. It also discussed work on preparation of housing policy guidelines designed for those countries in reformulating their housing policies. Three other workshops were held on construction policies, planning and management in historic urban structures and resettlement problems related to the Chernobyl accident.

Standardization

The Working Party on Standardization Policies, formerly the Meeting of Government Officials Responsible for Standardization Policies, at its first session (Geneva, 13-15 May 1991), decided that the ECE standardization list in the area of coordination should be produced during its second session. It was informed that a meeting of rapporteurs and coordinators would be held immediately prior to a workshop on conformity assessment (Bucharest, September 1991), and agreed to two similar workshops there, also in 1991.

The Working Party requested delegations to give consideration to its role as the only intergovernmental forum where the coordination of standardization policies could take place in a region-wide context in meeting the challenges of the changing economic situation in the region. The Working Party adopted its programme of work for 1992-1996, including the priority ranking of programme elements. The Commission's programme in the field of standardization and related activities was transferred from trade to the industrial development programme.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians (thirty-ninth plenary session, Geneva, 17-21 June 1991) confirmed the reorientation of its work programme initiated in 1990. It renewed its offer to support Central and Eastern European statistical offices in their transition efforts to new statistical systems. The Conference also encouraged the further coordination of regional statistical cooperation, which had been triggered by the recent socio-economic changes and the resulting integration processes. The role of the Conference as a link between the global statistical system within the United Nations framework on one side and the evolving institutions organizing regional statistical cooperation on the other emerged from the discussion in broad terms.

Efforts were made to adapt the structure of the work programme, the setting of priorities and the resources available for the implementation of the Conference's work programme to the priority areas selected by ECE, namely, environment, transport, statistics, trade facilitation and economic analysis.

Organizational questions

Membership of Israel

In 1991, Israel reapplied for full membership in ECE. A previous request in 1986<sup>(16)</sup> was not conclusively determined. In its 1991 application, dated 19 April<sup>(17)</sup> Israel said it had been unable to become a member of ESCWA, the regional commission to which it should belong. It was seeking ECE membership as it had for years been an observer in ECE. In addition, it was a member and active participant in the European activities of such international organizations as ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, WMO and WTO. Its request was made without prejudice to its right to be a member of ESCWA; as soon as it took its place in ESCWA its ECE membership would come to an end.

In its annual report<sup>(2)</sup> ECE said the membership had been informed about Israel's letter and note had been taken of its application for temporary membership. The Commission said it looked forward to a decision by the Economic and Social Council towards the admission of Israel in accordance with its application.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/72 by roll-call vote.

Membership of Israel in the Economic Commission for Europe

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering the wide range of economic relations that exist between Israel and the States members of the Economic Commission for Europe,

Considering also that Israel has expressed its readiness to contribute to the work of the Commission by accepting the responsibilities inherent in full membership,

Considering further that, at its forty-sixth session, the Commission took note of the renewal of the application of Israel to the Council for temporary admission as a member of the Commission and looked forward to a decision by the Council on the admission of Israel in accordance with its application,

Decides to amend paragraph 7 of the terms of reference of the Economic Commission for Europe by adding Israel to the list of members of the Commission in accordance with its request for temporary admission as a member of the Commission, as contained in the letter dated 16 April 1991 from the Permanent Representative of Israel to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Economic and Social Council.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean did not meet in 1991, having held its twenty-third session at Caracas, Venezuela, in May 1990. Of the two key documents presented to that session—Changing Production Patterns with Social Equity<sup>(1)</sup> and on options to reduce the debt burden in Latin America and the Caribbean<sup>(2)</sup>—the first explored in detail the possible ways of ensuring that growth and social equity moved forward simultaneously. It suggested how production structures could be changed and the new patterns disseminated with greater social equity in the Latin American and Caribbean countries. It was a central point of reference for the thinking of ECLAC and, consequently, a source of inspiration for its work.

According to the ECLAC report covering the biennium from 12 May 1990 to 15 April 1992<sup>(3)</sup> the activities of the various regional forums took on greater importance and dynamism as a result of the new momentum gained by the process of subregional integration. The most notable development was the formalization of presidential meetings and the prominence given to economic and social problems.

Economic trends

Economic survey, 1991

In 1991, economic activity in Latin America and the Caribbean as a whole grew by 3 per cent, with per capita output registering its first improvement in four years, according to a summary of the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1991. (4) At the same time, inflation receded and hyperinflation was virtually eliminated. That modest progress was achieved in spite of a relatively unfavourable international environment, which was reflected in the very slow growth of exports and a significant deterioration in the terms of trade.

The slackening of external demand, however, was accompanied by a notable drop in international interest rates, which not only meant some relief for external debt service but also helped to bring about a considerable inflow of capital, partly attracted by the higher yields in the countries of the region. As a result, Latin America and the Caribbean registered a positive transfer of financial resources for the first time in 10 years. That, in turn, increased the region's import capacity in spite of the stagnation of exports, making possible a substantial expansion of imports that satisfied not only the requirements of moderate growth, but also growing demands for consumer and capital goods that had been emerging as part of trade liberalization processes.

There was a significant increase during the year in the number of countries that achieved higher growth rates, and the number that attained, or were in the process of attaining, macroeconomic stability with varying degrees of consolidation. In some cases, the expansion process forged ahead after stabilizing adjustments (as in Chile and Mexico); in others, the rate of expansion slackened as a result of adjustments implemented during the year (as in Colombia, Costa Rica, Guatemala and Paraguay); and in still others, output recovered as the economy emerged from a state of high inflation (as in Argentina). In the last few months of 1991, most of the countries of the region registered average monthly rates of inflation of between 1 and 1.5 per cent.

Over the period 1990-1991, a considerable number of countries carried out massive fiscal adjustments, under which public-sector financing needs were reduced by amounts varying between 2 and 7 per cent of GDP. Most of the remaining countries reduced their fiscal deficit by the equivalent of 1 per cent of GDP over the same period.

According to the survey, substantial non-debt-related private financial flows of different types, which to some extent represented repatriation of capital, took place in countries which had continued to maintain their macroeconomic stability and in those which had only recently undertaken domestic internal adjustment. In some countries (such as Argentina, Chile, Mexico and Venezuela), those flows included foreign investment, connected in some cases with the privatization of public enterprises, although there had also been cases of substantial portfolio investments and even bond issues.

In order to bring about a permanent reversal of the net transfer of external resources, the survey said that the inflow of private capital must be combined with a reduction in the burden of servicing the external public debt and the consolidation of a climate of confidence in economic policy and the prospects for development.

The moderate growth shown by the majority of the economies of the region did not help much to increase employment. The value of the region's merchandise exports held virtually steady at $122 billion. That marked the end of a growth trend dating back to 1987, during which exports expanded at an average annual rate of 12 per cent. Export performance was mixed. The value of the oil-producing countries' exports slipped by slightly more than 1 per cent as a result of a 9 per cent drop in unit value (chiefly because of a slump in average prices of hydrocarbons) and an 8 per cent expansion in volume. The non-oil-exporting countries, on the other hand, saw a modest increase (less than 2 per cent) in the value of their exports. Within that group, export values showed little change, whereas those of the Central American and Caribbean countries rose by 10 per cent.

External debt

According to the economic survey for 1991, there was practically no change in the external debt or:

the region (excluding the English-speaking Caribbean countries), which remained at around $426 billion. Particularly noteworthy was the United States forgiveness of the bilateral obligations of seven countries. Other elements that helped reduce the outstanding dollar debt were the revaluation of the United States currency vis-à-vis European currencies over 12 months and the extensive access of many countries to various kinds of financing unrelated to debt. On the other hand, the main expansionary influences were the borrowing on the international bond markets by some countries and the build-up of debt-service arrears by most of them.

For the region as a whole, the debt/exports ratio continued to stand at around the high level of 300 per cent for the third year running. Nevertheless, in 1991 six countries had a ratio of less than 200 per cent, compared with only one in 1988. The accrued interest exports ratio for the region went down for the fifth consecutive year, this time to 22 per cent. The decline in the coefficient—which was still excessively high—was due solely to the reduction in gross accrued interest payments (the result mainly of the drop in international interest rates and, to a lesser degree, of the reduction of bank debt and some official obligations).

Despite the substantial progress made with regard to the region's external debt, the survey said its servicing continued to be a serious structural problem, accounting for 80 per cent or more of total obligations in government budgets.

Activities in 1991

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

The ECLAC secretariat's work in the field of economic development covered both the analysis of activities undertaken by its Economic Development Division and those related to information and documentation for economic and social development carried out by the Latin American Centre for Economic and Social Documentation (CLADES). The Economic Development Division monitored the economic performance of ECLAC members, examining their development policies and strategies likely to harmonize macroeconomic stability with social equity and structural change.

As part of its ongoing activities, ECLAC published the annual Economic Panorama of Latin America, the Preliminary Overview of the Latin American Economy, which was widely distributed throughout the region, and the Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean. The publications presented, respectively, a timely overview of the economic trends of the nine major economies of the region during the period January-August 1991, the performance of the entire region during the year, and complete and comparable information and breakdowns on the region's economic trends.

CLADES provided technical assistance to member countries and institutions connected with information and documentation. It conducted training programmes in Ecuador and continued to issue periodically the Informativo INFOPLAN and the Informativo Terminológico. Under the INFOPLAN series, a special issue entitled Documentos sobre privatización con énfasis en América Latina was published.

The activities of the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES), with headquarters at Santiago, Chile, were in line with the priorities set by member States in the areas of planning, decentralization and regional and local development, and the formulation and coordination of public policies. ILPES met the region's needs in these areas through courses and seminars, advisory assistance and applied research.

The fourteenth meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Council for Planning (Montevideo, Uruguay, June) endorsed the Institute's programme of activities. Among the numerous meetings, seminars and colloquiums held was the International Colloquium on the World Economic Outlook and its Effect on the Economies of Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, April), which was jointly organized by the International Institute for Public Administration (France) and ILPES.

A seminar on the budget as an instrument for government action and for guiding private sector decisions (Mexico City, August) was organized jointly by the Department of Budgetary Policy of the Ministry of Planning and the Budget of Mexico, the Spanish Agency for International Cooperation and ILPES.

In its technical assistance activities, ILPES placed emphasis on the design and implementation of national information systems, and on investment projects and planning. Missions were carried out and the experience thus accumulated placed at the disposal of Governments through the holding of specialized seminars.

Work in the area of public sector planning was centred on management, mobilization and allocation of resources, public enterprises and the quasi-autonomous sector.

With regard to social programmes and policies, activities continued to focus on global and sectoral social policy, and the relevant institutions; in the latter area, special emphasis was placed on decentralization, local planning and municipalization.

Among activities in macroeconomic planning was the publication by ILPES of a series of documents entitled Notas sobre modernización macroeconómica, which reviewed the main theoretical aspects and methodologies for specifying the performance functions of such models. Work began on a UNDP-financed preparatory assistance project on the role of national planning bodies in strategic development management, and on the programme on social policies for Latin America, carried out jointly with the Organization of American States.

The secretariat participated in the formulation of policies in connection with the promotion of economic relations between Mexico and Central America. The proposals were submitted for consideration by authorities in the subregion.

A meeting of Central American planning ministers was held (San Salvador, El Salvador, May) to define certain aspects of social policies in the context of presidential agreements, especially the Central American Plan for Economic Action. ECLAC was requested to elaborate, in coordination with the planning ministers, a document for use as a basis for a proposal on the formulation of a regional programme to promote productive activities in the social sector.

Industrial, scientific and technical development

The Joint ECLAC/UNIDO Industry and Technology Division was responsible for activities in the industrial, scientific and technological fields. Jointly with UNESCO, it prepared an educational strategy to respond to challenges raised in the ECLAC document on changing production patterns with social equity. As part of the project, consultations were held with government authorities, political leaders, businessmen, educators, scientists, religious authorities, journalists and trade union leaders.

A seminar on the issue was organized (Santiago, December). Particular consideration was given to the telecommunications requirements inherent in social and environmentally sustainable development, with special emphasis placed on the development of an adequate infrastructure and on the creation of a space which favours the circulation of information.

Work began in July 1991, in close cooperation with the Latin American Association of Capital Goods Industries, on a project to promote that industry. A document on external trade in foreign goods in Latin America during the 1980s was published, and databases were established for a regional directory of manufacturers of machinery and equipment. Two issues (Nos. 10 and 11) of the journal Industrialización y Desarrollo Tecnológico were produced.

International trade and development finance

The ECLAC International Trade and Development Division centred its work on four major subject areas: Latin America and the Caribbean and international economic relations; economic relations between the region and others; economic integration and regional cooperation; and development finance. Special emphasis was placed on follow-up activities in connection with the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations of GATT. Reports were prepared on the region's role in the negotiations and on possible agreements and priority activities regarding technical cooperation in trade in services in the 1990s. In addition, a study was prepared on non-tariff barriers to Latin American exports in the European Economic Community (EEC).

Research was undertaken on the market outlook for selected commodities and the status of Latin American commodity exports. A study on producer services, which focused specifically on copper production in Chile, was carried out. A document was prepared on trade relations between Japan and Latin America.

ECLAC and the Latin American Institute of the Academy of Sciences of the erstwhile USSR co-sponsored a meeting in Moscow in July 1991 on the region's economic relations with the former members of CMEA. Two studies were carried out on the subject: one analysed the former USSR's economy within the framework of perestroika, the political reforms under way and their implications for Latin America and the Caribbean; the other dealt with the current status of the countries of Eastern Europe and the former USSR and the possibilities for cooperation with Latin America and the Caribbean.

Close contact was maintained with regional and subregional integration and cooperation organizations on issues relating to international trade and development finance. Studies on recent trends in respect of integration processes in the region and on the outlook and options for economic integration in the 1990s were also carried out. Another was prepared on the Latin American countries' return to private international capital markets. A joint ECLAC/UNDP regional project on finance policies for development was executed; activities focused on the regulation and supervision of the banking system and the reform of social security and institutional savings systems.

The secretariat continued to provide technical cooperation services to ESCAP members and, in several cases, new country projects were developed.

Natural resources and energy

Research was undertaken on mineral resource with corresponding documents being prepared for the Technical Meeting for the Analysis of Intra-regional Trade and the Development of the Mining and Metallurgical Sector (Lima, Peru, July). At the meeting, it was determined that need existed for a vertical integration of the sector.

Studies were carried out on mining in Bolivia, Chile, Colombia and Peru, on the region's comparative advantages in mining and metallurgical production and on the new mechanisms for promoting intraregional trade in mining products in Latin America and the Caribbean. Work was begun on the second phase of the implementation of the Latin American Regional Mining Information and Documentation System.

Support was provided to member countries on the formulation of policies for integrated water resource management and the promotion of horizontal cooperation, especially regarding the training of water project and systems managers. The ECLAC Natural Resources and Energy Division provided direct advisory assistance to State bodies on the restructuring of integrated water resource management systems.

Two projects were designed, on the development of methodologies for preparing a socio-economic evaluation of coastal resources in Latin America and an analysis of factors linked to the various sources of marine pollution in the Pacific Ocean and the seas of the south polar region.

A two-volume document containing energy statistics for Latin America and the Caribbean for the period 1960-1988 was issued and work began on the compilation of information for use in a study on energy-demand forecasting.

Transport

Assistance was provided to member countries in the development of their transport infrastructure and services. ECLAC continued to collaborate with the Meeting of Ministers for Public Works and Transport of the Southern Cone Countries, especially with respect to documentation regulating customs transit.

The Commission also worked with the World Bank and the Mexican Institute of Transport on a study of obstacles to the use of containers in Latin America. The collaboration involved research in Argentina and Chile, with further research to be conducted in Costa Rica and Mexico.

Social development

The ECLAC social development programme focused on the analysis of the roles and functions of the State, the various social actors in the region, as well as the design of social policies in accordance with each country's characteristics.

The Social Development Division, working with the Statistics and Projections Division, undertook a study of the social situation in the region, based on information gathered through household surveys and research. Other studies were carried out on trends and perspectives of social expenditure, democratic participation, and production, trafficking and consumption of drugs.

The Division became the focal point of inter-agency groups working in the areas of social policy and youth in an effort to ensure greater integration of their activities. It also carried out a broad study on primary and secondary education in Uruguay.

Integration of women

The Commission provided substantive support to the permanent bodies charged with assessing the issue of integration of women into Latin American and Caribbean development. One such body was the Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean and its Presiding Officers. At the tenth meeting of the Presiding Officers (Santiago, May 1990), substantive and operative activities were analysed, with emphasis being placed on the need both to link ECLAC work on women's issues to the proposal on changing production patterns with social equity and to continue to enhance the understanding of education, culture, gender relations, information and statistics. Also included were the situations of specific groups of women, such as young women, migrant women and women in the informal sector.

The meeting stressed the need for special regional projects on generating fresh resources to improve the living conditions of women in the region, through cooperation between member States and the ECLAC secretariat. Most of the activity of the Social Development Division during the period under review revolved around the preparations for and implementation of the decisions of the fifth session of the Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean (Curaçao, Netherlands Antilles, 16-19 September 1991) and the twelfth meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Conference (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 7 and 8 May 1991).

The Conference concluded that it was urgent to continue to emphasize the issue of women in the region and to support national efforts to improve their situation. Such activities, it said, should take due account of the specific characteristics of subregions, particularly the Caribbean. The Conference adopted five resolutions on the elaboration of a new plan of action on the integration of women into the economic and social development of the region; women and human resources; women and politics; women and violence; and cooperation, collaboration and networking.

Environment

ECLAC's environment programme was intended to strengthen the environmental dimension of the region's development. Technical assistance was provided to member countries in the area of strategies and policies for bringing about environmentally sustainable development. Work was done for the March 1991 Latin American and Caribbean Regional Preparatory Meeting for UNCED.

As part of an ECLAC/UNEP project to improve physical planning, heritage accounting and mechanisms for evaluating environmental degradation, efforts were made in Argentina and Colombia to strengthen municipal development policies. They were supported in the management of industrial and urban waste, with special emphasis on the study of policies for managing toxic and hazardous waste. In addition, advisory services were provided to Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica and Ecuador on the formulation of policies for environmentally sound management of urban and industrial waste. Activities, studies and advisory missions were undertaken in the island countries of the Caribbean in an effort to implement environmental regulation policies. Analyses of environmental problems undertaken in the Dominican Republic and Jamaica would enable them to elaborate environmentally sustainable development policies.

Other activities included the preparation of handbooks and the organization of two international training courses, on environmentally sustainable agricultural development and on principles and methods of environmental management.

Human settlements

In the field of human settlements, ECLAC supported the efforts of its members to achieve substantial improvement in the conditions of housing and human settlements, particularly in low-income sectors. It strengthened its research activities on the role of non-governmental and community organizations in managing the habitat.

Activities focused on four main areas: urban management; design of a statistical system to support the development of information gathering, processing and dissemination systems; improvement of the efficiency of the construction industry; and formulation of guidelines for a study on mechanisms and instruments used to finance housing and urban development. A regional technical cooperation and research project was launched in support of the local governments of five medium-sized cities. The objectives were to improve management processes, thereby increasing urban productivity, and to promote the economic and social development of cities.

Population

During 1991, the Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE), the institution within the ECLAC system responsible for the regional population programme, concentrated its activities on making national sectoral agencies capable of creating and employing population inputs in the light of the basic needs of the lower income groups, the spatial distribution of the population and migration and its impact on the development process. Emphasis on key groups such as women and the aged was strengthened. Assistance was also provided to the 1990 census operation and to the organization of population information in systematic form to facilitate low-cost and rapid retrieval by a wide variety of users. CELADE supplied regional bibliographical information from its Spanish database and promoted the exchange of information through the Latin American and Caribbean population network.

Packages for demographic analysis by microcomputer and demographic projections, as well as a long-range planning model for microcomputers, continued to be developed. Other research programmes included international migration in Latin America and population and health, and a project on national information systems for displaced populations in Central America, which was implemented in collaboration with the International Organization for Migration.

CELADE training and teaching activities included a course on population and development—the Spanish equivalent of the UNFPA Global Plan of Training in Population and Development—the fourteenth intensive regional course on demographic analysis for development (San José, Costa Rica) and various intensive national courses in demography. Short-term training activities were organized to strengthen the capacity of national institutions in applied research and to familiarize professionals from other fields with population factors. Seminars were also organized to sensitize policy makers and other officials to the role that population played in the development of their countries.

In 1991, CELADE developed an extensive programme of publications, consisting of books and monographs in addition to its three regular publications, Boletín demográfico, DOCPAL: Latin American Population Abstracts and Notas de Población.

Food and agriculture

In the field of agriculture, special attention was devoted to the preparation of studies on agro-industrial chains, which were discussed at seminars held in September and November 1990 at Santiago, Quito, Lima and Guatemala City. The proceedings of a seminar on dairy production/exports (Montevideo, July 1990) were published, as were the conclusions and recommendations of a seminar on the linkage of traditional Chilean agriculture with agro-export chains (Santiago, September 1990).

Statistics and economic projections

The Statistics and Projections Division centred its activities on the following: enlargement of the regional framework of statistical information;

statistical development and quantitative analysis; regional cooperation, dissemination and transfer of new computer technologies to the countries; prospective medium- and long-term studies on Latin American and Caribbean development; and analysis of the region's position in world production and trade.

The Division's other activities included preparatory work for a regional database on current situations, in response to several requests from Governments; the incorporation of the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System into the External Trade Data Bank for Latin America and the Caribbean; an increase in the number of variables related to capital formation in the System of National Accounts; the initiation of the preliminary stage of research on prices; and an increase in the number of countries included in the Household Survey Data Bank.

Special efforts were made to disseminate and transfer widely used computer systems, by carrying out technical cooperation missions to several countries and organizing workshops to train national experts in the use of these programmes. Assistance was provided to the United Nations Statistical Office in organizing three seminars on sampling frames and sample designs in use, to train experts from the countries on this point so they could contribute to the execution of household surveys, and advisory services were provided to several Governments in constructing models for economic projections and in elaborating prospective studies.

Along with preparing studies on the region's position in the world economy, close links were maintained with technical institutions in the region involved in prospective studies.

Transnational corporations

The joint unit of ECLAC and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations carried out research, information and technical cooperation activities to identify contributions (and the repercussions thereof) of TNCs to the development of the countries of the region. It continued to elaborate case-studies on specific countries and sectors, focusing on the interests and concerns of the Governments and economic agents of member countries.

A study was carried out on the role of foreign capital in changing production patterns or industrial restructuring in Mexico. Two studies were done on the subject of TNCs and industrial restructuring, one on the outlook for technological activities by national and transnational corporations in Brazil, and the other on industrial cooperation between developed and developing countries, analysing the case of Chile. Two other studies were done on foreign direct investment in Chile (1974-1989). In addition, a study on Brazil's experience in that area was published as a restricted document.

Other activities included the finalization of an operational handbook for the Information System for Foreign Investment Decisions and collaboration in the dissemination of the One Billion Dollar Club computer program, prepared by the Centre on TNCs. The program contains an electronic database with 150,000 pieces of information on the financial and other activities of over 700 major TNCs in the manufacturing and extraction industries.

Technical cooperation among developing countries

ECLAC continued to carry out various activities within the framework of the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries.<sup>(5)</sup> The most important of those activities was the progressive incorporation of specific TCDC elements into the implementation of some 20 technical cooperation projects in all areas of the secretariat's work programme. The projects included TCDC elements designed to achieve one or more of the following cooperation objectives: strengthening of national institutions in the corresponding sectors; development of cooperation networks and support for their operation; improvement of information systems to expedite the flow of technical cooperation supply and demand between countries; consolidation of TCDC focal points at the national level; seminars and technical meetings to facilitate the exchange of experiences in areas of interest to countries; and preparation of studies and reports identifying cooperation prospects.

The bulletin Cooperation and Development, disseminated information on TCDC support activities carried out by ECLAC.

ECLAC, together with the Latin American Economic System (SELA) and the Special Unit for TCDC of UNDP, supported the organization of the sixth annual meeting of directors of international technical cooperation (Caracas, Venezuela) and of meetings of the coordination mechanism for TCDC activities of regional bodies. A regional TCDC programming exercise in the area of international trade was organized jointly by ECLAC, UNCTAD and SELA. UNCTAD, ECLAC and ESCAP also organized a project on the promotion of cooperation among the countries of the Pacific Rim.

Draft projects were elaborated in support of activities to prevent and mitigate damage caused by natural disasters, in the context of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-1999). One project involved the design of flood-prevention systems for river basins in 15 countries of the region. Work was completed on a handbook on assessment of the socio-economic effects of natural disasters. Altogether, ECLAC implemented 120 projects during 1990-1991.

Technical cooperation assistance was offered to Brazil, Chile and Uruguay in the area of food and agriculture. Similar assistance on economic development questions, was extended to Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Haiti, Peru and Uruguay.

Technical cooperation assistance was also offered in the field of industrial, scientific and technological development. The ECLAC secretariat collaborated with the Institute for Latin American Integration on the assessment of a study on the telecommunications industry.

Other areas where TCDC assistance was provided were international trade and development finance, environment and human settlements, transport and integration of women into Latin American and Caribbean economic and social development.

Subregional activities

Caribbean

ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean, at Port of Spain, Trinidad, analysed issues relevant to the promotion of socio-economic development in the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee (CDCC) countries and focused on the initiation and implementation of projects pertinent to them. Advisory and technical cooperation activities related to food security, macroeconomic frameworks and medium-term development plans were also carried out. A seminar on project data banks and public investment programming was organized as part of the preparatory work for the First Regional Economic Conference for the Caribbean (Port of Spain, 22-29 February 1991).

Work continued on the updating, expansion and dissemination of the Trade Procedures Guide to promote trade linkages between countries of the subregion and the rest of the world. Recommendations were made on the promotion of intra-CDCC trade relations as well as between the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) and non-CARICOM member countries.

Special emphasis was placed on the social repercussions of structural adjustment programmes, with studies being done on financial issues and their impact on Caribbean economies. Other activities included assistance to promote the integration of population variables into development planning, coherent and well-structured training policies in several sectors and support for the work of the Caribbean Language Institute in eliminating language barriers.

The subregional headquarters assisted the CDCC countries in working towards the full integration of women into the national development process. Other activities included advisory services to women's bureaux, the dissemination of a bibliography on women in development and the organization and substantive servicing of meetings and workshops.

The Caribbean Documentation Centre and the Patent Information and Documentation Unit continued to process and disseminate material on social, economic and technical issues. Work was also begun on the establishment of a computer-based communication network.

The subregional headquarters coordinated the Caribbean position as part of the preparatory process leading to UNCED. It continued to serve as an interim secretariat for the Caribbean Council for Science and Technology and disseminated scientific and technological information.

TCDC activities included extension of cooperation to the Caribbean Environmental Health Institute in establishing a computerized database, and to the Inter-American Development Bank in the design of a pre-investment study on land-tenure and land-use policies of the Government of Trinidad and Tobago. Grenada, Haiti, Saint Lucia, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines were assisted in the organization of population programmes.

Mexico and Central America

ECLAC subregional headquarters for Mexico and Central America carried out activities to revive the subregion's economies and to consolidate Central American integration.

Activities focused on economic recovery, liberalization, international trade, development, sectoral transformation, poverty and social equity, and elaboration of yearly economic surveys. In addition, research was carried out on new types of agricultural exports and on industrial structure and retrofitting in Central America. Close cooperation was maintained with Governments and the Permanent Secretariat of the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration in their trade and cooperation negotiations with EEC and GATT. There were initiatives to support the restructuring of Central American integration.

An analysis was done on the possible repercussions on Central American exports of the trade regime which EEC had granted to the Andean countries. Measures for structural adjustment and coordination of macroeconomic policies were also analysed to assist cabinet-level meetings on the subregion's economy.

Technical support continued for six electric power companies and for entities in charge of the petroleum subsector. Special attention was given to a pre-feasibility study on the electrical interconnection of Colombia, Venezuela, Central America and Mexico. Advisory services on energy were provided to Cuba.

Research was carried out on the relation between energy and development, thus completing the compilation of a database on activities in the field of energy.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

An agreement signed between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System on 27 September 1991 put the seal on the cooperation between the two organizations which had been growing stronger and broader in scope since the establishment of SELA in 1975. It was signed at a meeting of the two sides called for under a General Assembly resolution of 1990.<sup>(6)</sup> The agreement called for the strengthening and expansion of cooperation and for periodic consultations on questions of concern to both organizations, particularly relating to the economic and social development of Latin America.

According to a September 1991 report of the Secretary-General,<sup>(7)</sup> an essential part of the cooperation between SELA and the United Nations was carried out through ECLAC. ECLAC and SELA shared various areas of endeavour, as well as the regional dimension of their activities, and undertook complementary tasks.

In support of a SELA-sponsored regional conference on industrialization in October, ECLAC prepared documents on changing production patterns, industrial development policies and the environment. An inter-agency meeting on social development was held at ECLAC headquarters (Santiago, 25-27 March). ECLAC supported SELA activities in the area of external economic relations by providing it with studies on the topic, and also helped to formulate negotiation agendas for the use of the countries of the region.

UNDP collaborated with SELA on a project on institutional support to SELA for 1989-1991, with a view to identifying priority areas for joint action; a project evaluation mission in May recommended maintaining cooperation, and work was begun to identify possible spheres of effort for another project. SELA also participated in inter-agency meetings for coordination of technical cooperation on biotechnology, convened by UNDP (Mexico City, March; Caracas, June).

UNESCO provided support and collaboration in the preparation of a study on piracy of intellectual property in Latin America. As follow-up to a July 1990 meeting on the subject, consultations were held, at which joint activities were planned. A second meeting of the Latin American and Caribbean Forum on Intellectual Property Policies in May 1991 also had UNESCO support. Immediately preceding that meeting, a WIPO/SELA expert group meeting took place (Caracas, 13-15 May).

Under the UNIDO/SELA second programme of cooperation for 1990-1991, priority was assigned to topics selected within the framework of the UNIDO system of consultations, including technological development and industrial restructuring, as well as assistance to SELA in the preparation of an integrated approach to economic and industrial development in Latin America and the Caribbean. Within the framework of the programme, a meeting of experts on forward technological planning for Latin America and the Caribbean was held (Caracas, 20-22 March), in conjunction with the Latin American Commission on Science and Technology.

Within the framework of a project to support trade development, funded by UNDP and executed by UNCTAD in cooperation with ECLAC, various joint projects were undertaken with SELA in the areas of the international trading system, multi-lateral trade negotiations and services. As part of the preparations for the eighth (1992) session of UNCTAD, SELA organized a seminar to promote an exchange of views concerning the concept of national governability and helped organize a Latin American coordination meeting.

These and other forms of cooperation between United Nations organs and programmes and SELA were reflected in the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 October 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/12 without vote.

Western Asia

On 11 August 1991, the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia officially resumed its activities, after nearly a year, following the Persian Gulf hostilities and subsequent temporary repatriation of staff. Owing to the unstable conditions in the region, the Commission's sixteenth session, originally scheduled for Baghdad, Iraq, in April 1991, was postponed until April 1992.

According to a summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region in 1991,<sup>(1)</sup> the Persian Gulf hostilities had dealt a severe blow to the economies of the countries there, through direct destruction of and damage to infrastructure and disruption of trade links, labour exchange, financial aid and capital flows. Regional economic cooperation and integration efforts were also set back and macroeconomic conditions in most labour-sending countries deteriorated considerably as a consequence.

The Iraqi invasion of Kuwait on 2 August 1990 and subsequent military operations caused the destruction of a significant part of the country's physical infrastructure and seriously damaged power and water desalination plants. Basic water and sewerage systems as well as hospitals were also damaged. Most important, however, was the severe damage to the country's oil industry; over 700 oil wells were either set ablaze or gravely damaged. Refineries, pipelines and storage systems were destroyed. Kuwait's installed oil-production capacity, an estimated 2.9 million barrels a day before the eruption of the hostilities, was down to naught by the time military operations ended in late February 1991. The impact of the environmental havoc wrought was immediately felt throughout the region, although its adverse long-term ecological and health-related repercussions had to be assessed.

For Iraq and its people, the hostilities and their aftermath were devastating. In addition to tens of thousands killed or wounded, the conflict greatly damaged its economic infrastructure. More than 30 major bridges across the Tigris and Euphrates rivers were reported to have been totally destroyed, and the railway system ceased to operate as a result of war-inflicted damage. Power plants, oil installations, telephone systems, military industries, many roads and private sector establishments were also damaged.

Official Iraqi estimates put the cost of reconstruction of establishments of particular importance to the economic and social life at 8 billion Iraqi dinars ($25.6 billion at the official exchange rate), of which 80 per cent ($20.5 billion) was in foreign currency. Those estimates, however, did not include various forms of social and humanitarian losses and damage both to military installations and industries and to private sector establishments. Though some reconstruction and repair had been carried out, the remaining task—given the United Nations sanctions and the poor state of the economy—was formidable.

The regrouping of ESCWA staff at Amman, Jordan, albeit under abnormal working conditions, enabled the Commission to streamline its activities. Consequently, activities with little or no bearing on the revised medium-term plan for 1992-1997 were terminated. Those of a continuous nature were postponed to the 1992-1993 biennium.

Other elements were reformulated either to lay the groundwork for activities programmed for 1992-1993 or to make their implementation possible within the time constraint of the remainder of the budget. By the end of 1991, the Commission was able to complete 44 per cent of its programmed activities, apart from a host of others dictated by the turn of events in the region.

The Israeli-Arab peace negotiations and their implications for the region were monitored by ESCWA. Another development was the unification in 1990 of Democratic Yemen with the Republic of Yemen. The problem of the large number of returnees following the Persian Gulf hostilities was studied by ESCWA with the aim of recommending measures for their integration. Other questions chosen for special attention were the planned creation by EC of a single market and its implications for the ESCWA region, and the problem of rehabilitation of war-damaged countries. Activities related to those questions were incorporated into the 1992-1993 programme budget.

Economic trends

The Persian Gulf hostilities and their aftermath continued adversely to affect economic and social performance and prospects in the ESCWA region as a whole, according to the summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 1991.<sup>(1)</sup> The region experienced a negative growth rate of 3.8 per cent in 1990 and its GDP was estimated to have contracted by a further 4.9 per cent in 1991.

The combined GDP of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) countries (Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates), which grew by 6.6 per cent in 1989, slowed down in 1990 to about 2.8 per cent and was estimated to have fallen by 0.6 per cent in 1991. Oil revenues declined, owing mainly to a drop in oil prices, with the exception of Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic. The end of the hostilities resulted in improved business confidence and an increase in both public and private sector investment expenditures in several GCC countries, particularly Saudi Arabia.

The economic impact of the hostilities on the more diversified countries of the region (Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic) was direct and severe. Their economies, and that of the occupied Palestinian territories, were closely linked to those of the GCC countries and Iraq through various channels, such as financial assistance, employment opportunities, remittances and trade. The flow of capital and workers' remittances from the GCC countries had for many years helped finance large trade and budget deficits as well as investment in those countries.

Their combined GDP, which grew by 4.5 per cent in 1989, was estimated to have fallen by 13 per cent in 1990. Preliminary data for 1991 suggested that GDP declined by a further 12.4 per cent. That poor economic performance reflected mainly the great loss of output in Iraq and to a much lesser extent in Jordan. The economy of the least developed member country in the region, namely Yemen, experienced negative growth rates in both 1990 and 1991, as the hostilities aggravated the inherent structural weaknesses of its economy. Overall, Yemen's economic performance, as measured by GDP, declined further by 4.8 per cent in 1991.

Among the more adverse effects of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf on ESCWA's labour-sending countries was the massive and sudden influx of returnees. In late 1991, the combined number of returnees to those countries was estimated at 1,947,000, i.e., 75 per cent of the total number of returnees attributed to the hostilities. Their return exerted enormous strains on social services and physical infrastructures. The absorption cost of the returnees in Jordan, for example, was estimated at $3.14 billion over a three-year period.

The government budgets of most ESCWA countries were also adversely affected by the hostilities in the Persian Gulf and their aftermath. The GCC countries, especially Saudi Arabia, sharply increased their expenditures to finance the consequences of the hostilities. In 1990, Saudi Arabia had a budget deficit of $16 billion and a similar shortfall was predicted for 1991. Kuwait's long-delayed 1991/92 budget projected a record deficit of $18.3 billion in the first full fiscal year after the hostilities.

External debt in the region continued to be on the rise; for some countries—like Egypt, Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen—the debt burden was critical, depriving them of badly needed foreign exchange. IMF urged a number of States in the region, especially those with debt repayment problems, such as Egypt and Jordan, drastically to reduce the ratio of the budget deficit to GDP as one of the basic adjustment measures.

Following current trends, the region would continue to be influenced by the aftermath of the hostilities. While reconstruction and rebuilding of Kuwait's oil industry, in particular, was expected to continue to progress rapidly, economic activities by the private sector were expected to remain relatively sluggish. Iraq was expected to continue suffering from the devastation of its economy, as well as from United Nations sanctions. ESCWA countries that had to cope with large numbers of returnees from the Persian Gulf would continue to suffer from the burden of absorbing them and from the decline in workers' remittances. Moreover, financial aid and trade relations between the GCC countries and States regarded as sympathetic to Iraq were expected to remain minimal, possibly for several years. On the other hand, economic relations might be expected to strengthen further between the GCC countries and those that supported them during the hostilities.

Sectoral developments

Oil

The Persian Gulf hostilities dealt a severe blow to oil production and export capacity in both Kuwait and Iraq. Oil production in both countries fell during 1991, while it increased in Oman, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. Oil revenues, except for Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic, were also greatly affected. The revenues of Saudi Arabia were an estimated $47.5 billion in 1991—more than twice the amount recorded in 1989—but for the ESCWA oil producers as a group, oil revenues totalled $75.6 billion in 1991, 9.7 per cent below their 1990 level.

While much less significant than that of oil, the use of natural gas in the region—which held 16.7 per cent of the world's natural gas reserves—was growing in importance at the domestic level. Interregional and intraregional gas trade remained limited, however. Countries like Egypt, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen were beginning to follow a strategy of replacing oil consumption with gas when possible to allow for increases in oil exports, while Jordan started substituting gas to allow for decreases in oil imports.

Agriculture

Notwithstanding the overwhelming importance of oil, the agricultural sector remained vital for the region because of its contribution to employment, exports and industrial development. The high priority accorded to it in the preceding 10 years had led to increased production and greater self-sufficiency in many food commodities. The gap between production and consumption of agricultural commodities in general, however, continued to widen.

The sector, like others, was also negatively affected by the Persian Gulf hostilities. It was also hurt by adverse weather conditions, water shortages, overuse of its fragile natural resource base and desertification. Those factors led to a sharp decrease in agricultural production in the region in 1991. In addition, the sector was constrained by lack of adequate economic incentives for producers, deficient pricing policies, weak and inadequate research facilities, poor storage facilities and marketing problems.

In an effort to reduce imports, Governments encouraged and supported livestock production, which increased in most countries during the year, with the exception of Iraq. Poultry meat and egg production, however, decreased by about 3 per cent and 1.46 per cent, respectively. Milk production also declined, by 1.95 per cent.

In 1990, the value of agricultural imports into the region totalled $17.3 billion, while exports amounted to $2.6 billion. Overall, most countries registered lower agricultural production in 1991. It was estimated to have declined by 2.1 per cent in the Syrian Arab Republic, 3 per cent in Egypt and Saudi Arabia, and 32 per cent in Iraq. Cereal production also decreased, by 3.83 per cent in 1991, mainly due to lower production in Iraq, Jordan and Lebanon.

Industrial development

The region's manufacturing sector was reeling from the effects of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, with the extent of the impact varying from country to country. While recovery in some countries was under way, the long-term effects of the hostilities on the growth and structure of the sector would take time to erase.

For 1990, a very sharp decline in manufacturing activity, by 18.9 per cent, was estimated, compared to a growth rate of 11.2 per cent in 1989. Information available for 1991 indicated that the performance of the manufacturing sector remained generally weak, with some subsectors (mainly food, beverages, clothing and construction) benefiting, however, from rising demand. In the GCC countries, performance in 1991 was reportedly better than in the rest of the region. Major public projects, such as Saudi Arabia's petrochemical expansion projects, Qatar's North-field gas project and aluminium projects in Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates continued to be implemented as planned.

Trade

Like the other sectors, the region's trade and balance of payments were adversely affected by the Persian Gulf hostilities. The hardest hit were Iraq and Kuwait. Trade flows stopped from August 1990 until late February 1991 for Kuwait and into 1992 for Iraq. The destruction of oil production and export facilities might affect the two countries' foreign trade and balance of payments for years to come.

Jordan and Yemen, which relied on Iraq and the GCC countries as export markets, suffered severely from the sanctions imposed on Iraq as well as from the deterioration in their political relations with the Persian Gulf States. Their balances of payments were adversely affected by the cessation of the inflow of aid from those States and by the sharper decline in workers' remittances after the repatriation of about 750,000 Yemenites and 300,000 Jordanians and Palestinians. Moreover, the hostilities not only disrupted intraregional trade but also seriously damaged prospects for regional cooperation.

Owing to the decline in the prices of oil and primary commodities, the continuation of economic sanctions against Iraq and the world economic recession, among other factors, exports of GCC countries (with the exception of Saudi Arabia) and Iraq declined in 1991. The overall geographical distribution of exports from the region showed significant changes in 1990 and 1991. The share of the developed market economies, the region's major export outlet, increased from 46.4 per cent in 1989 to 56.1 per cent in 1990, but declined slightly in 1991; the share of other developing areas declined from 21.3 per cent in 1990 to 18.3 per cent in 1991. Intraregional exports declined to 5.8 per cent, down from 6.1 per cent in 1990.

The import trade of Western Asia continued to be dominated by suppliers from developed market economies, whose share increased to 61.3 per cent in 1991, from an average of about 57 per cent in 1989 and 1990. The major trading partners remained EEC, followed by the United States and Japan. Intraregional imports declined to 7.6 per cent in 1991, down from 8 per cent in 1990.

The trade balance of the region improved in 1990, with a surplus of $4.4 billion. Aggregate international reserves (excluding Iraq) fell from $35.6 billion in 1989 to $31.4 billion in 1990, as GCC countries (in particular Saudi Arabia and Kuwait) drew heavily on their international reserves to help meet obligations and outlays related to the Persian Gulf hostilities. The decline meant less adequate provisions for imports and other necessary foreign exchange outlays, thus increasing external exposure and vulnerability.

Social trends

Following the Persian Gulf hostilities, social conditions in the region underwent significant changes with negative and far-reaching implications. According to the summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the region in 1991,(1) the changes were expected to affect all segments of the population, especially youth, women, the elderly, disabled persons and refugees.

The hostilities had added new social problems to existing ones, particularly with regard to the forced migration of large numbers of people and the subsequent disruption of long-standing political and economic ties. It had also added, in some countries, to the deteriorating social conditions, in particular those reflected by poverty, unemployment, social instability, juvenile delinquency and drug abuse, increasing numbers of disabled persons, refugees and displaced persons, and the rise in disruptive and socially unacceptable modes of behaviour.

Educational expansion and improvements, major characteristics of social development in the region, continued in 1991. The adult literacy rate for the region as a whole was believed to have reached 50 per cent. The gross enrolment rate in primary education almost reached 90 to 100 per cent in all countries except Saudi Arabia and Yemen.

Health conditions had also been undermined by the Persian Gulf hostilities, with conditions in Iraq by far the most serious. The mortality rate of Iraqi children under the age of five was said to be 380 per cent higher than before the hostilities. Lack of adequate employment opportunities, health services, education, social life and recreation had resulted in a continuing massive rural-urban migration of youth.

The unplanned return of mainly unskilled expatriate workers was very detrimental to socioeconomic conditions in the labour-sending countries of the region. Reintegration was expected to be difficult and challenging, given the magnitude of the unemployment problem in those countries and their limited financial resources.

In addition, the problem of disability in Western Asia had increased in size, as well as scope, owing to armed conflicts.

The region was characterized by a large youth population (15-24 years), estimated at about 18.7 per cent of the population. Its ratio to the total population was expected to rise to 20 per cent by the year 2005. Persons over 65 years accounted for only 3.2 per cent, a much lower ratio than the world average.

Activities in 1991

During the period under review, i.e., from mid-1990 to mid-1991, the Executive Secretary assessed short- and medium-term requirements for the continued functioning of ESCWA. While many activities included in the 1990-1991 work programme had been initiated or were in the implementation phase, few outputs were expected to be reformulated or terminated. The early regrouping of ESCWA staff would make it possible, according to the Secretary-General's report on regional cooperation,(2) to review the status of the various programmes. Activities would resume according to identified priorities.

Notwithstanding the turbulent situation in the region, ESCWA was able to carry out a number of activities when conditions permitted. It provided technical assistance and advisory services on major issues and problems facing ESCWA countries and regional institutions, in science and technology, energy, human resources development, transport, data processing, statistics, human settlements and environment. It organized an expert group meeting on the absorption of returnees in the ESCWA region, with special emphasis on opportunities in the industrial sector (Amman, 16 and 17 December 1991), and another on issues in managing technological change within the context of Arab electronics firms (Cairo, Egypt, 18 and 19 December). ESCWA also participated in the UNDP mid-term review of the fourth (1988-1992)<sup>(3)</sup> regional programme for Arab States (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, October 1990).

Monitoring the impact of the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, ESCWA prepared studies on developments in the oil markets., the financial and economic effects of the hostilities in the region, developments and issues in external trade, and the payments situation of countries of Western Asia.

The overall goal of ESCWA was to initiate and facilitate concerted action for the economic reconstruction and development of the region, to raise the level of economic activity, and to maintain and strengthen economic ties both among its members and with the rest of the world. That included emphasis on an integrated approach incorporating social aspects of development, taking account of developments such as the aftermath of the hostilities, European unification and the emergence of CIS.

Some of the key issues and problems to be addressed during the Commission's medium-term plan period (1992-1997)<sup>(4)</sup> were to include rehabilitation and reconstruction of war-affected areas; economic reconstruction; transfer of technology; employment; urbanization; population dynamics; rural poverty; housing, particularly low-cost housing; social welfare, particularly with regard to the handicapped; the changing role of the family; women in society; and the new social structure. Other issues to be tackled were the problem of returning migrant workers; external indebtedness; balance-of-payments deficits in a number of countries; and the development gap between ESCWA member States.

In addition, the Commission would continue to deal with other issues covered in the current medium-term plan: food and agriculture; development issues and policies; environment; human settlements; industrial development; international trade and development finance; natural resources; energy; population; public administration and finance; science and technology; social development and welfare; women and development; statistics; and transport and communications.

Food and agriculture

Under ESCWA's food and agricultural programme, a comprehensive work programme for the Regional Centre for Agrarian Reform and Rural Development in the Near East was completed. Two studies, on rural development in the occupied Palestinian territories and on major problems of marketing agricultural products in Jordan, were carried out. Jointly with FAO and the Institute for National Planning in Egypt, two training workshops were organized (November/December 1990, April 1991); they dealt with topics related to agricultural planning and rural development.

Activities planned in the agricultural area included workshops on policy and project analysis, planning, resource management and conservation, agricultural credit, marketing and farm management. A plan of action to combat desertification and desertification control was to be formulated.

Environment

Under ESCWA's environment programme, preparations were made for the convening of the Arab Regional Conference on Environment and Development, jointly organized with UNDP and the Council of Arab Ministers on Environment (Cairo, 9-11 September 1991). A meeting of the Preparatory Committee (Cairo, 27-29 April) approved a draft agenda for the Conference and other logistical matters. The conclusions of the Conference were to provide a regional input for the 1992 UNCED.

Natural resources and energy

As follow-up to the 1977 Mar del Plata Action Plan for the development of water resources,<sup>(5)</sup> ESCWA's Energy and Natural Resources Division completed a report on the progress achieved in implementation of the Plan in the region, especially as it pertained to institutional and water legislation and water resources management. A study was being conducted to establish a natural resources database (water and minerals) for the region. In addition, activities were carried out pertaining to the establishment of a regional water resources council and manpower training network, as well as to implementation of ESCWA/UNEP/Islamic Development Bank projects regarding the assessment of water resources using remote sensing.

With regard to monitoring energy-related activities and development in the region, the 1991 bulletin of current energy data was being prepared. A regional programme for renewable sources of energy and two case-studies on energy demands in the household sectors had been drafted. A paper on development and marketing prospects for natural gas and liquid petroleum gas in the ESCWA countries was prepared for submission to an interregional symposium on gas development and market prospects by the year 2000 and beyond, planned under the joint sponsorship of ECA, ECE, ESCWA and UNDP.

Population

ESCWA's cooperation with the United Nations Population Fund continued with regard to activities undertaken on population, including preparation of estimates on fertility, mortality, computer programming, labour force, household, school enrolment and urbanization.

Social development

The social development programme continued its activities in drug abuse control, crime prevention and the treatment of offenders, social security, ageing and disability issues.

Under the subprogramme on women and development, 13 projects were initiated to promote the contribution of women to the region's development. As an executing agency for the Arab association for women and development, ESCWA signed a project agreement.

Organizational questions

On 7 February, by decision 1991/207, the Economic and Social Council postponed for one year the sixteenth session of ESCWA, which was to have been held at Baghdad for one week in April/May 1991.

PART THREE

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic cooperation

International political and economic developments during 1991 resulted in the slowest rate of global economic growth since 1982; they included the hostilities in the Persian Gulf region, the unification of Germany, and the restructuring under way in Central and Eastern Europe. Zero growth overall was forecast, with large-scale declines in the output of Eastern Europe and recession in the developed market economies. Developing economies continued to experience problems that had persisted over most of the preceding decade.

In July, a special high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council was held to discuss the impact of the evolution of East-West relations on the growth of the world economy and, in December, the General Assembly called on the international community to consider assisting developing countries whose economies had been most affected to adapt to those changes (resolution 46/202). Also in December, the Assembly called on Member States to ensure the implementation of the 1990 Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of the Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries (46/144).

With regard to the least developed among the developing countries, the Assembly strongly urged the international community to implement their commitments as set out in the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) for the 1990s, adopted in 1990 by the Second United Nations Conference on LDCs (46/156). Noting that the Committee for Development Planning (CDP) had, at its April 1991 session, drawn up new criteria for identifying LDCs, the Assembly requested the Committee to review every three years the list of low-income countries and identify those which should qualify for inclusion in, or graduation from, the list of LDCs. It endorsed CDP's recommendation to include Cambodia, Madagascar, Solomon Islands, Zaire and Zambia in the list (46/206). As to land-locked developing countries, the Assembly urged donor countries and multilateral financial and development institutions to provide them and transit developing countries with financial and technical assistance to construct, maintain and improve their transport, storage and transit infrastructures and facilities (46/212).

International economic relations

Development and economic cooperation

Various United Nations bodies during 1991, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, discussed many issues of development and economic cooperation. In addition to its annual general discussion of international economic and social policy, the Council held a special high-level meeting to discuss the impact of the recent evolution of East-West relations on the growth of the world economy.

CDP activities. At its April 1991 session,<sup>(1)</sup> CDP noted that the world economy had shown greater resilience and stability than might have been expected during 1990 and into the beginning of 1991, given the anxiety created by the invasion of Kuwait. An increase in oil prices in 1990 was lower than expected, with a compensatory decline in early 1991, so that major shortages and balance-of-payments shifts between oil importers and exporters were avoided. Recession in some major industrial countries had increased unemployment but the recession had remained relatively mild and inflation was below 4 per cent for the most part. However, growth of global trade was expected to be modest in 1991 at some 4 per cent. In Eastern Europe and the USSR, there was a sharp fall in per capita income in 1991 which was expected to continue for at least another year but economic restructuring was proceeding in several countries. The Committee noted that growth could not be expected immediately but a sharp improvement in economic performance could occur by the mid-1990s.

Developing countries continued to show widely divergent trends, with falls in per capita output forecast in sub-Saharan Africa, parts of Latin America and Western Asia. Some countries, mainly in East Asia, had reduced economic growth from the double-digit levels of the late 1980s in order to manage inflation and ease social pressures, including unrealistic wage rise expectations that were running ahead of productivity. A number of countries that took major reform steps in the 1980s, such as Chile, Indonesia and Mexico, had also begun to grow rapidly. Countries with relatively modest but steady growth and which had avoided extremes of indebtedness were also showing that growth led to substantial poverty alleviation. In India, the proportion of people living in poverty dropped from just under 50 per cent to just under 30 per cent over the preceding decade.

For many developing countries, however, the 1990s were no better than the 1980s. Rapid population growth still undermined what little economic progress was being made and policy change continued to be slow. The recession in the industrial countries caused low prices for primary commodities, resulting in budget and balance-of-payments difficulties for countries relying on the export of one or two primary products for their foreign exchange earnings. Thus, for many sub-Saharan African countries, per capita growth was still negative.

Economic and Social Council general discussion. In accordance with a 1990 decision,<sup>(2)</sup> the Economic and Social Council, in its general discussion of international economic and social policy in July 1991, focused on the question of strengthening multilateral cooperation in international economic affairs and had before it a report of the Secretary-General on the subject.<sup>(3)</sup> The report took into account information provided by the various organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system. The first of its four sections presented a broad analysis of changes which had reshaped the international political and economic environment over the preceding few years and which had a bearing on multilateral approaches to issues of current and emerging global concern. The second section highlighted the need for concerted action and the creation of international regimes in a number of critical areas, while the third outlined some important parameters and preconditions of an enhanced and strengthened catalytic role for the United Nations as an instrument of multilateral cooperation. The last section noted some points for further consideration.

During its discussion, the Council also had before it the World Economic Survey 1991,<sup>(4)</sup> prepared by the United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs. The Survey examined the state of the world economy and trends in global output and policies, trends in international trade and in international finance and net resource transfers, international energy markets, implications of the transformations in Eastern Europe and the USSR for economic relations, international policy for reducing developing-country debt and economic aspects of military expenditure in the light of the end of the cold war. It also considered three special topics: poverty and the socio-economic attainment of women, environmental accounting and the System of National Accounts, and selected demographic indicators.

In addition to its main theme of strengthening multilateral cooperation in international economic affairs, the Council, in its general discussion, adressed the questions of its own revitalization, East-West relations, the Persian Gulf crisis, external debt and resource transfers, international trade and environment.

By decision 1991/276 of 26 July 1991, the Council took note of a number of documents under its consideration in connection with its general discussion of international economic and social policy, including the Secretary-General's report on strengthening multilateral cooperation in international economic affairs<sup>(3)</sup> and the World Economic Survey 1991.<sup>(4)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee considered the issues of development and international economic cooperation during the 1991 regular session of the General Assembly and made recommendations on a number of topics (see APPENDIX IV, agenda item 77). The Assembly took note of a list of pertinent items included in part I of the Committee's report<sup>(5)</sup> by decision 46/437 of 19 December.

In related action, the Assembly, by resolution 46/52, felt the need to examine the impact on developing countries of the current international economic situation, and decided to establish a working group of the Sixth (Legal) Committee to develop the principles and norms of international law relating to the new international economic order. It called on the Secretary-General to request Member States and international organizations to comment on the principles which deserved to receive priority attention and to include their comments in a report to the Assembly in 1993. By decision 46/461 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of the executive summary of the report of the Commonwealth Group of Experts on the Impact of Global Economic and Political Change on the Development Process entitled "Change for the better: global change and economic development",<sup>(6)</sup> requested the Secretary-General to convene a meeting for an informal exchange of views on the report's conclusions and recommendations, and invited the Economic and Social Council President to report in 1992 on the views expressed during that informal exchange: By decision 46/443, also of 20 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the launching of global negotiations on international economic cooperation for development and decided to include it in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh (1992) session.

Impact of East-West relations on the world economy

The World Economic Survey 1991 analysed the implications of the transformations in Eastern Europe and the USSR for economic relations among East, West and South.<sup>(4)</sup> The Survey addressed the policy issues of ongoing reforms in the East and their repercussions for the East-West environment, the trade and finance of the reforming countries, and the impact on the world economy in general and the developing countries in particular. It examined the status of reform and the outlook for establishing buoyant market economies in Eastern Europe and described the traditional economic interdependence of the group with the rest of the world economy. Some elements of Western assistance to the East were also discussed, followed by a summary of the critical aspects of the conditions for society-wide reforms in the East.

In addition, the Survey provided insights into the external aspects of the reform strategies and described interdependence through trade, capital movements, labour mobility and development assistance observed in the recent past, chiefly the 1980s.

UNDP Governing Council action. On 25 June 1991,(7) the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) recognized the problems faced by the Eastern European countries and the need for their integration into the world economy, as well as the role of UNDP in that process. It invited the UNDP Administrator to pursue activities within the UNDP mandate in support of the transformation and recovery of the Eastern European countries, in close consultation with all parties concerned, particularly the bilateral and multilateral institutions involved with development cooperation in those countries. The Administrator was urged to ensure that assistance to Eastern Europe would not be at the expense of UNDP resources going to developing countries and was asked to submit to the Council in 1992 country and intercountry programmes reflecting its decision.

Special high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council. In accordance with a 1990 decision of the Economic and Social Council(s) and as confirmed in decision 1991/202 of 7 February 1991, the Council held a special high-level meeting with ministerial participation at Geneva on 4 and 5 July, preceded by a preparatory meeting on 3 July.(9) The meeting considered the major policy theme of the impact of the recent evolution of East-West relations on the growth of the world economy, in particular on the economic growth and development of the developing countries, as well as on international economic cooperation.

As a contribution to the meeting's deliberations, the Secretary-General submitted a report in June 1991(10) which described the backdrop to the core issues involved and went on to discuss trade and prospects in trade, finance and debts, development assistance provided by the East, migration from the East, problems encountered in economic reform, changes in East-West relations, and events in Eastern Europe and the United Nations system.

The meeting also had before it the report on CDP's 1991 session(1)—at which CDP had, among other things, considered reforms in Eastern Europe and the USSR and their impact on developing countries—the relevant chapter of the World Economic Survey 1991(4) and a summary of the economic survey of Europe, 1990-1991.(11) In addition, Algeria submitted the declaration of the Algiers colloquium, convened by UNDP, in cooperation with the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation (DIEC) and the Government of Algeria, on the impact of the recent evolution of East-West relations on the growth of the world economy, in particular on the economic growth and development of the developing countries, as well as on international economic cooperation (4-6 May 1991).(12)

In a concluding statement, the Chairman of the special high-level meeting noted that, despite differences of opinion, participants had been unanimous in recognizing the vast scope of the changes taking place on the international scene. Although those changes were accompanied by tensions and difficulties, they also bore a message of hope for the establishment of a world order founded on equity and international solidarity. It was up to the peoples of the world, he said, to reduce those tensions, overcome those difficulties and fulfil that hope.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/202 without vote.

Implementation of the 1990

Declaration on International Economic Cooperation

In accordance with a 1990 resolution of the Economic and Social Council<sup>(13)</sup> on implementation of the 1990 Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,<sup>(14)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a note<sup>(14)</sup> to the Council containing information received from organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system on steps taken by them to implement the Declaration. As at 3 June 1991, replies had been received from 19 bodies of the system.

By decision 1991/278 of 26 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's note.

In response to a 1990 resolution of the General Assembly,<sup>(16)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in September 1991 a report<sup>(17)</sup> containing information from Governments on steps taken by them to ensure implementation of the Declaration. Replies were received from 11 Governments and from Luxembourg on behalf of the member States of the European Community (EC). On 25 April,<sup>(18)</sup> Argentina submitted to the Secretary-General information on its achievements in relation to growth and cooperation at the national, regional and global levels.

In the context of a paragraph of the Declaration by which United Nations Member States pledged themselves to advance the multilateral dialogue, to respond to the challenge and commitments contained in the Declaration through national policies and enhanced international cooperation and to keep the Declaration's implementation under political review, the Chairman of the Second Committee was asked to prepare a summary of the Committee's general discussion on the Declaration's implementation. That summary was contained in a note by the Secretariat of 29 October.<sup>(19)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/144 without vote.

Implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,

Recalling its resolution 45/234 of 21 December 1990,

1. Calls once again upon States Members of the United Nations and States members of the specialized agencies to take appropriate measures to ensure the full and effective implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and, while emphasizing the importance of steps to be taken individually or collectively to fulfil the commitments and policies of the Declaration, urges all Member States to endeavour to respond to the request of the Secretary-General for information;

3. Decides to keep the implementation of the Declaration under political review at its forty-seventh session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide, in time for consideration by the General Assembly at its forty-

Economic stabilization programmes

In response to a 1990 resolution of the General Assembly,<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report in September 1991 on economic stabilization programmes in developing countries.<sup>(21)</sup> The report discussed changing views on stabilization and adjustment issues and their socio-political and policy aspects in developing countries.

The report underscored some roles of multi-lateral financing in the context of stabilization and adjustment programmes: helping Governments prevent the aggravation of economic and social conditions of the poor; providing foreign exchange support for dollar-starving economies; facilitating debt relief and renewed access to international capital markets; increasing the credibility of local money through the provision of a financial safety net to sustain a realistic exchange rate parity; increasing overall economic flexibility through financing the costs of deregulation and other market-enhancing policies; financing the costs of adjustment associated with privatization and public-sector reforms with a view to increasing policy effectiveness and recovering investment in social and economic infrastructure; funding the implementation of sensible sectoral policies; and providing contingency support in cases of abrupt variations of interest rates or of primary commodity prices.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/154 without vote.

Economic stabilization programmes in developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,

Reaffirming its resolution 45/194 of 21 December 1990, on economic stabilization programmes in developing countries,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a comprehensive and analytical report containing an evaluation of the extent to which the efforts made by developing countries to stabilize their economies are being supported by the current international economic environment.

Coercive economic measures

The Secretary-General submitted a note in October 1991<sup>(22)</sup> on the implementation of a 1989 resolution of the General Assembly<sup>(23)</sup> which had called on the international community to adopt measures to eliminate the use of coercive measures against developing countries and asked the Secretary-General to designate an identifiable unit within the Office of the Director-General for DIEC to collect information on economic measures taken by developed countries as a means of coercion against developing countries.

He stated that the Office of the Director-General, in close cooperation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the regional commissions, intended to build on the findings of a 1989 expert group meeting<sup>(24)</sup> which had considered effective approaches to the elimination of coercive economic measures against developing countries. Work had started but was not at a sufficiently advanced stage for recommendations to be submitted to the Assembly.

With regard to the Assembly's request that a unit be designated to collect information on coercive economic measures, the note stated that the Director-General's Office needed to maintain flexibility, thereby excluding the establishment of permanent structures. The issue of coercive economic measures was being dealt with in the context of work on macroeconomic issues; cooperative arrangements would be established with UNCTAD and the regional commissions, including appropriate instruments for collecting and assessing information. That would provide a basis for submitting periodic reports, including recommendations to future Assembly sessions,

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/210 by recorded vote.

Economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its resolutions 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Reaffirming article 32 of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, which declares that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Bearing in mind the general principles governing international trade and trade policies for development contained in the relevant resolutions and rules of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade,

Reaffirming its resolutions 38/197 of 20 December 1983, 39/210 of 18 December 1984, 40/185 of 17 December 1985, 41/165 of 5 December 1986, 42/173 of 11 December 1987 and 44/215 of 22 December 1989, and considering that further work needs to be undertaken in order to implement them,

Gravely concerned that the use of coercive economic measures adversely affects the economy and development efforts of developing countries and has a general negative impact on international economic cooperation and on the world-wide effort to move towards a non-discriminatory, open trading system,

Taking into account the note by the Secretary-General prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 44/215, and his assessment of how to continue his task,

Concerned that the mandate provided in paragraph 6 of resolution 44/215 has not been fully implemented,

1. Calls upon the international community to adopt urgent and effective measures to eliminate the use by some developed countries of unilateral economic coercive measures against developing countries with the purpose of exerting, directly or indirectly, coercion on the sovereign decisions of the countries subject to those measures;

2. Deplores the fact that some developed countries continue to apply economic measures and, in some cases, have increased their scope and magnitude, as evidenced by trade restrictions, blockades, embargoes, freezing of assets and other economic sanctions incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Calls upon developed countries to refrain from making use of their predominant position in the international economy to exercise political or economic coercion through the application of economic instruments with the purpose of inducing changes in the economic, political, commercial and social policies of other countries;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue fully his mandate as contained in paragraph 6 of resolution 44/215, through the Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation and in close cooperation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

5. Also request the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Entrepreneurship and the private sector in development

In response to a 1990 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(25)</sup> the DIEC Director-General included in his annual report on operational activities<sup>(26)</sup> a section on activities being undertaken by the United Nations system to promote entrepreneurship in economic development.

Among proposals put forward by the Director-General for enhancing the role of entrepreneurship, particularly in developing countries, were: the establishment of effective information exchange on operational and related activities in the field; utilization and strengthening of national institutions to promote the private sector; and the provision by the United Nations of a forum for individual and corporate bodies, United Nations organizations, multilateral and bilateral development agencies, banks, government officials and others interested in the subject. The report also suggested that, to guide future action, United Nations organizations and other national and international organizations could pursue the following goals: support for the creation and maintenance of an enabling environment; effective utilization of human resources; continued support for ancillary services; and mobilization of external support.

Also included in the Director-General's report were fact sheets on the activities of United Nations organizations and entities in the area of entrepreneurship.

UNDP action. On 25 June,(27) the UNDP Governing Council noted the establishment within UNDP of the Division for the Private Sector in Development. It recognized the importance of an efficient public sector in creating and maintaining a conducive framework for development and took into account the private sector's role in achieving broad development objectives. The Governing Council noted that UNDP had been a catalyst for discussion involving national development efforts, including the role of the private sector, and asked the Administrator to report to it in 1992 on its involvement and comparative advantages in that area, including an outline of UNDP's strategy and role and its relations with other parts of the United Nations system.
