Eradication of poverty

In response to a 1989 request by the General Assembly,(28) the Secretary-General submitted a report in October 1991 on international cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries.(29) The report discussed the general causes, nature and incidence of poverty and the impact of the international economic environment on poverty during the 1980s. It also summarized the experience of developing countries concerning the eradication of poverty and proposed international policy measures to eradicate it. It stated that domestic policies to reduce and eventually eliminate poverty would have to be accompanied by long-term external support. Expanded assistance programmes for the poor would need to go hand in hand with greater opportunities for the productive use of their labour. Although some countries had reduced poverty without rapid economic growth and at modest levels of per capita income, poverty eradication was clearly facilitated by sustained growth. Developing countries would have the central role, but their efforts had to be complemented by industrial-country policies in debt relief, trade, finance and poverty-oriented technical assistance.

The report proposed international policy measures to improve the international economic environment and reorient official development assistance (ODA).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/141 without vote.

International cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development

Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990,

Reaffirming also its resolutions 43/195 of 20 December 1988, 44/212 of 22 December 1989 and 45/213 of 21 December 1990,

Noting that the eradication of poverty in developing countries has become a top-priority development objective for the 1990s,

Stressing that effective national policies supported by a favourable international economic environment can promote growth and development in developing countries, thus increasing their capacity to undertake social and economic programmes to eradicate poverty,

Noting that efforts made so far nationally and internationally to eradicate poverty have not had a significant impact on the problem of increasing poverty,

Aware that achieving the objective of eradicating poverty requires more concerted action at all levels,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on international cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries;

2. Stresses the importance of domestic policies, including effective budgetary policies, to mobilize and allocate domestic resources for the eradication of poverty through, inter alia, the implementation of food, health, education, housing and population programmes;

3. Reiterates that a supportive international economic environment is crucial to the success of efforts of developing countries to deal with the eradication of poverty;

4. Reiterates its request to the international community to adopt specific and effective measures designed to increase financial flows to developing countries, including attainment of the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance, as well as of the targets for the least developed countries adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, in order to strengthen the efforts of developing countries to eradicate poverty;

5. Calls upon the international community to implement technical cooperation programmes in order to improve the situation in the areas of food, health, education, population and housing and meet other basic needs of the populations of developing countries, in particular the poorest groups among them, and, in this context, reaffirms that, with respect to the transfer of technology on concessional and preferential terms, in particular to developing countries, effective modalities should be examined with a view to implementing and enhancing that transfer as much as possible;

6. Encourages the international community, as well as the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to support the programmes of developing countries, including human resources development programmes, in order to strengthen endogenous technical capacities and generate opportunities for production and employment;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the progress made in coordinating actions, in cooperation with governmental and non-governmental organizations and other multilateral bodies, to formulate improved and enhanced action-oriented technical cooperation programmes for the eradication of poverty in developing countries, within the framework of the United Nations system, in accordance with the policies, priorities and strategies of those countries;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session an item entitled "International cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries".

Industrial development cooperation

In response to a 1990 request by the General Assembly,(30) the United Nations Secretariat submitted to the Economic and Social Council in July 1991 a report by the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) on industrial development cooperation and the diversification and modernization of productive activities in developing countries.(31) The report's comments and recommendations were based largely on UNIDO's medium-term plan for 1990-1995, on resolutions and decisions on the subject adopted by the 1989 UNIDO General Conference and by the Industrial Development Board, as well as on a 1990 cross-organizational programme analysis of the activities of the United Nations system in industrial development.(32)

In line with the Assembly's request that the recommendations be prepared in close cooperation with other parts of the United Nations system, a draft of the report was transmitted to the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), which did not have time to review it. UNIDO therefore invited concerned organizations to submit comments and suggestions to it by 31 May 1991. Replies, but not detailed comments, were received within the deadline from the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization and the International Fund for Agricultural Development.

The report described the international economic environment, noting that the trend towards an integrated global industrial economy was leading to fierce competition where only the fittest enterprises would survive. It was recommended that the Assembly might wish to request UNIDO to prepare a study of long-term world industrial structure, which could address: employment generation; changing terms of trade; environmentally sustainable industrial development; changes in the direction, structure and modalities of international trade and resource flows; new perceptions of the role of government; and modalities and priorities in human resource development.

As to UNIDO's general approach, the report recommended that UNIDO should strengthen human resource development especially where recipients of UNIDO assistance were determined to implement national programmes to upgrade their industrial structure. Given the central role of human resource development in industrial development, UNIDO should take the initiative to formulate an action plan on training in the fields of applied research, engineering and entrepreneurship for industrial development, ensuring the inclusion of women in the target groups. The report recommended that, with regard to the integration of women in development, the Assembly might wish to emphasize the need to consider women in the process of human resource planning in order to increase their participation at national, regional and international decision-making levels, thus recognizing and promoting their contribution to industrial development. The report also made recommendations relating to modernization and the challenge of technology, diversification and industrial recovery, the regional dimension and inter-agency coordination.

By decision 1991/292 of 26 July 1991, the Council took note of the UNIDO Director-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In September, the UNIDO Director-General's report was submitted to the General Assembly as a report of the Secretary-General.(33)

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 46/146 without vote.

Industrial development cooperation and the diversification and modernization of productive activities in developing countries
The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 45/196 of 21 December 1990, as well as other resolutions in the field of industrial development cooperation,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, in particular paragraphs 2 and 4 thereof,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes with interest the proposal of the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for a study on the structure of world industrialization from the long-term perspective as a contribution to the overall assessment of and needs for industrial development in developing countries, and recommends that the Industrial Development Board should consider the proposal at its next session and report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

3. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General and the Administrative Committee on Coordination to submit the reports referred to in paragraphs 9 and 10 of resolution 45/196 in time for consideration by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

4. Decides that the item entitled "Industrial development cooperation and the diversification and modernization of productive activities in developing countries" should, from the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly, be considered on a biennial basis.

International Development Strategy for the Fourth UN Development Decade

In preparation for the 1991 Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and ACC (see below), the ACC Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives (Geneva, 19-22 March 1991)(34) prepared a background paper on the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1991-2000), adopted by the General Assembly in 1990.<sup>(35)</sup>

The Joint Meetings (New York, 22, 23 and 25 October 1991)(<sup>36</sup>) reaffirmed the validity of the Strategy's goals and objectives, stating that the goals could and must be realized and that human development was a central issue. It was recognized that national Governments bore the main responsibility for realizing the Strategy's objectives and that the role of the United Nations system was largely supportive in that regard. It could be particularly effective in strengthening the endogenous capacity of developing countries, including at the institutional level.

The Joint Meetings agreed that, given the close interrelationships between the Strategy's goals and objectives and those of the 1990 Declaration on International Economic Cooperation,<sup>(14)</sup> consideration should be given to combining the review and appraisal exercises envisaged for each of them.

South Commission report

In response to a 1990 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(37)</sup> an informal discussion of the report The Challenge to the South: The Report of the South Commission took place on 3 July 1991, during the second regular session of the Economic and Social Council. The Secretary-General transmitted to the Council in June a report<sup>(38)</sup> containing the views of bodies of the United Nations system and of Governments on the conclusions and recommendations contained in the Commission's report, particularly in its overview and summary.<sup>(39)</sup> Replies were received from 11 Governments, EC, nine United Nations bodies and six specialized agencies and related organizations.

In September,<sup>(40)</sup> the Council President submitted a report to the General Assembly on the outcome of the informal exchange on the Commission's report. There was broad acknowledgement that the political momentum generated by the report should be maintained and that the wide-ranging process recommended by it should be launched and sustained. Effective follow-up and implementation were the responsibility of individual developing countries, of various mechanisms for South-South cooperation, of the countries of the North, and of the United Nations and multilateral institutions.

As an initial step, emphasis was placed on wide distribution of the report so that it could give rise to debate, learning, further thought and action. Given the practical difficulties of distribution and reaching readers in developing countries, it was proposed that UNDP allocate funding for purchase and distribution of the report to libraries, academic institutions, media and government institutions in the South. Further, UNDP offices in developing countries should serve as focal points to distribute the report.

The view was widely shared that the report should be kept alive and dynamic through periodic reviews and updating of its analysis and recommendations and that mechanisms should be set up for that purpose. It was proposed in that regard that Governments, international organizations and other institutions should study and act on the report, particularly on those recommendations within their spheres of competence, and report regularly to the Assembly on action taken and progress made; UNCTAD, UNDP and other United Nations developmental bodies should support countries of the South in implementing the report, with UNDP in particular being called on to support financially implementation of its recommendations; and the Secretary-General should set up small working groups of North and South representatives to consider how to implement various proposals under a six-point programme of action within the ambit of the North-South dialogue, growth in interdependence and the need for a development-oriented international system supportive of sustainable and self-reliant national development efforts of the developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 46/155 without vote.

Report of the South Commission

Recalling its resolution 45/195 of 21 December 1990,

Recognizing the relevance of the report entitled The Challenge to the South: The Report of the South Commission in addressing the challenges of the South in the 1990s, especially the North-South dialogue, trade, finance, technology, regional cooperation and integration among developing countries,

Taking note of the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council on the outcome of the informal exchange of views held in the Council on the report of the South Commission,

1. Urges Member States, international organizations and other relevant institutions to study the report of the South Commission with a view to putting into effect its recommendations, as appropriate;

2. Invites the United Nations Development Programme to provide support for the distribution of the report of the South Commission in the developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, in order to enhance economic and technical cooperation among the developing countries;

3. Urges the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme, the regional commissions and other developmental bodies of the United Nations to support developing countries in implementing the relevant recommendations of the report of the South Commission, with special emphasis on economic and technical cooperation among developing countries;

4. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme and the regional commissions to follow, within their respective spheres of competence, the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the South Commission by the parties concerned, as appropriate;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon, as appropriate, to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

Economic and social trends and policy

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic Survey 1991(1) noted that economic activity slowed down worldwide in 1990, but not for any one dominant reason. Despite globalization and growing interdependence, different forces were at work in the various regions. Unexpected political developments produced severe economic shocks and seemed to alter many of the premises for future development. The political reform efforts in Eastern Europe, the German unification and the turmoil in the USSR produced considerable economic disarray and sharp drops in output. The crisis in the Persian Gulf sent a shock-wave through the world economy as oil prices soared, but order in oil markets was soon restored. The region itself was profoundly affected and Iraq's and Kuwait's economic partners suffered losses of different kinds. The impact on the world economy, however, seemed to have been smaller than feared.

The recession deepened and growth slowed in the industrialized countries, except Germany and Japan, and in several countries industrial output actually declined. In Latin America some reform programmes seemed to hold while others collapsed, but for the continent as a whole there was a slight decline in output. Output grew about as fast as population in Africa, which was better than in the past, but recovery and genuine development continued to seem remote. In many parts of Asia, however, growth was vigorous and sustained.

The effect of those changes was to slow the growth of global output. World population in 1990 was estimated at 5.3 billion and growing at 1.8 per cent per year, which outstripped economic output. Those trends still prevailed in 1991, and the Secretariat's forecast pointed to zero growth for the year for the world as a whole—a decline in per capita output close to 2 per cent. Some recovery was expected in 1992 but even then per capita output in Africa and Latin America was expected to be only barely maintained.

In its review of the prospects for the world economy, the Trade and Development Report, 1991(2) noted that 1990 marked a significant further slackening of the pace of world economic activity, continuing a trend that had begun in 1989. However, in a number of countries and regions previous growth rates were sustained; the overall slow-down in activity was largely the result of deceleration in some developed market economies, a slight decline in output in Latin America and a sharp drop in the level of activity in countries of Central and Eastern Europe.

Development planning and public administration

Development planning

The Committee for Development Planning held its twenty-seventh session in New York (22-26 April 1991).(1) It stated that the generally bleak outlook could be greatly improved by better economic policies. At the international level, greater efforts were required to provide financial support to underpin the reform programmes of developing countries and of the countries in Eastern Europe and the USSR. Coordinated policy measures, including fiscal adjustment in some developed market economies, were needed to reduce real interest rates and to complete the resolution of the international debt crisis. The Uruguay Round of General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade negotiations was in danger of losing momentum and needed to be brought to a satisfactory conclusion if developing countries' export prospects were to be improved. Effective economic policies in developing countries to encourage entrepreneurship, stimulate investment and expand exports needed to be continued and should be implemented by more countries. In sub-Saharan Africa, reform efforts by national Governments needed to be intensified and supported by improvements in both the volume and the quality of aid provided by developed market economies.

Addressing the question of reforms in Eastern Europe and the USSR and their impact on developing countries, CDP concluded that developing countries needed to put in place viable trade policies to strengthen their own competitiveness and to avail themselves of opportunities emerging in the reforming countries themselves. For developing countries with substantial trade relations with Eastern Europe and the USSR, it might be helpful, said CDP, if some barter, counter-trade and clearing arrangements were retained and phased out gradually. To compete effectively for foreign direct investment with the Eastern European countries, developing countries would have to improve domestic investment conditions and invest adequately in developing their human resources. CDP also concluded that the donor community had to ensure that official financial assistance to Eastern Europe was based on the principle of additionality so as not to affect adversely financial support for developing countries' structural adjustment and longer-term development programmes. In addition, consideration should be given to special programmes of assistance for low-income developing countries experiencing severe adjustment problems as a consequence of economic and political changes in Eastern Europe and the USSR.

CDP also reached a number of policy conclusions with regard to international financial cooperation for development (see PART III, Chapter IV) and criteria for identifying LDCs (see below).

In decision 1991/276 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of CDP's 1991 report.

Public administration

The Tenth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance was held in New York (4-13 September 1991)(2) in accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1991/205 of 7 February 1991.

Role of the public sector in promoting economic development

In accordance with a 1987 request by the Economic and Social Council,(3) the Secretary-General in May 1991 submitted his fourth comprehensive report on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries.(4) In preparation for the report, the United Nations Department of Technical Cooperation for Development, in cooperation with the United Nations Environment Programme, conducted an interregional seminar on the subject (Nairobi, Kenya, 9-15 January).

The report discussed national economic frameworks: economic reform, structural adjustment, development priorities and economic policies; mobilization of financial resources and human resource development; rationalization of the role of public enterprises and their effective operation; and the development of appropriate relations between the public sector and other sectors.

In its conclusions, the report stated that common guidelines to be kept in mind by countries seeking to redefine the public sector's role were: policy makers needed to set realistic development goals and identify workable approaches and feasible strategies for achieving them; the public sector should correct the common practice of neglecting to place strong emphasis on providing a stable regulatory framework and the rule of law; if seeking to reduce the role of the public sector in business and commercial operations, Governments should encourage a gradual increase in the private sector's responsibilities for most commercial activity through incentives and support; and the public sector should seek to reform itself where feasible and possible.

By decision 1991/276 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report, as did the General Assembly by decision 46/454 of 20 December.

Developing countries

Least developed countries

The special problems of the officially designated least developed countries were considered in several United Nations forums during 1991, including UNCTAD, the UNDP Governing Council and ACC.

Following action by the General Assembly in December, the number of countries on the United Nations list of LDCs rose to 47: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia.

Criteria for identification of LDCs

In accordance with a decision of the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (1990)<sup>(1)</sup> CDP in 1991 completed its review of the criteria for designating the least developed among the developing countries. The Conference had suggested that CDP might wish to utilize the experience of UNCTAD in its review of LDCs.

UNCTAD action. The Meeting of Experts on Criteria for Identifying the Least Developed among the Developing Countries was held in New York (30 and 31 January 1991).<sup>(2)</sup> In reviewing the existing criteria—per capita gross domestic product (GDP), share of manufacturing output in GDP, and adult literacy rate—the experts discussed both policy and technical issues. With regard to frequency of review of the list and mechanisms for graduation from it, the experts felt that the list should be regularly reviewed, taking into account not only countries whose situation had worsened so that they would qualify for inclusion, but also those whose performance had brought them to standards of living which would no longer justify special treatment and measures in their favour. Review of the list could take place every five years without prejudice to new candidates being considered in the meantime. Inputs to the review could be provided as part of the work related to the global monitoring of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s (see below). The experts recommended that decisions on inclusion in the list and graduation from it should be taken by the General Assembly.

CDP action. In April,<sup>(3)</sup> CDP completed its review of the adequacy of the criteria for identifying LDCs, a process it had begun in 1988.

With regard to the criteria, CDP stated that LDCs should be defined as those low-income countries suffering from long-term handicaps to growth, particularly low levels of human resource development and/or severe structural weaknesses. The relative level of poverty could be measured by per capita income; the continued use of per capita GDP (annual average for the latest three years for which data were available) seemed to be most practical. Regarding the measurement of human resource development, an augmented physical quality of life index (APQLI), comprising four indicators—life expectancy at birth, per capita calorie supply, combined primary and secondary school enrolment ratio, and adult literacy rate—was considered appropriate. Two main structural weaknesses were considered: natural handicaps and low economic diversification. Handicaps, such as having a small population, being geographically isolated (island countries), being land-locked or having high risks of climatic disaster, could be measured by an index of instability of agricultural production or by proneness to droughts, floods and cyclones on a case-by-case basis. Economic diversification could be measured by a composite index (EDI), comprising the share of manufacturing in GDP, the share of employment in industry, per capita electricity consumption and the export concentration ratio. CDP decided that, in addition to examining the two proposed composite indices, it would be helpful, particularly in borderline cases, to examine the component indicators constituting them. CDP considered that population size should be taken into account explicitly and that countries with more than 75 million inhabitants should not be considered for inclusion.

CDP therefore recommended an inclusion rule, whereby a country would qualify if it met four formal criteria—population size, per capita income, APQLI and EDI, subject to CDP's judgement on the natural endowment index and its component indicators, exports of petroleum as a percentage of total exports and ODA as a percentage of GNP; or if it met the population and per capita income criteria, and APQLI or EDI, and was land-locked, was a small country with a population of 1 million or less, or suffered from frequent severe climatic risks such as drought, floods and cyclones. Inclusion would be subject to CDP's judgement on other considerations. Should an assessment be inconclusive, CDP might commission in-depth country studies.

Also recommended was a graduation rule, whereby a country would be graduated from the list if it exceeded the cut-off point on the per capita income criterion relevant at the time a review was carried out and the cut-off point on either APQLI or EDI for three years, or if it exceeded the cut-off point on both APQLI and EDI, even if its per capita income remained below the cut-off point. Margins by which the cut-off points needed to be exceeded were set at $100 per capita income, five points on APQLI and three points on EDI. CDP believed that a general review of the list should be made by it every three years and should include all low-income countries. Thus, countries would not need to request their inclusion in the list.

On the basis of the above criteria and their application, CDP recommended that all countries on the list be retained, except Botswana, and that six new countries—Cambodia, Ghana, Madagascar, Solomon Islands, Zaire and Zambia—be included.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1991/275 of 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council decided that further consideration of the CDP recommendations regarding the criteria for identifying LDCs should be carried out by the General Assembly, taking into account views expressed on the subject at the Council's July session. The Council invited interested Governments to make their comments available to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/206 without vote. Although Ghana was recommended by CDP for inclusion on the list of LDCs, it requested that no action be taken on the recommendation until it had studied the available statistical data.

Report of the Committee for Development Planning: criteria for identifying the least developed countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/206 of 21 December 1990, on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s,

Recalling also the recommendation of the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on the criteria for identifying the least developed among developing countries,

Taking note of paragraph (b) of Economic and Social Council decision 1991/275 of 26 July 1991, on chapter V of the report of the Committee for Development Planning on its twenty-seventh session,

Recognizing that the decision to include any country in the group of least developed countries should be made with its due consent,

1. Notes with appreciation the new criteria for identifying the least developed among the developing countries and the graduation rules recommended by the Committee for Development Planning, and requests the Committee to consider further possible improvements in the criteria and their applications and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session through the Economic and Social Council;

2. Requests the Committee for Development Planning to undertake every three years a general review of the list of low-income countries, with a view to identifying which of those countries should qualify for inclusion in, or should be graduated from, the list of least developed countries, and to present this review to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council;

3. Decides that the General Assembly will act on the recommendations of the Committee for Development Planning for the inclusion of a country in the list of least developed countries, provided the country concerned has signified its consent;

4. Stresses that there is need for a smooth transition of the countries graduating out of the group of least developed countries, with a view to avoiding disruption to their development plans, programmes and projects, and invites Governments, international organizations and other concerned parties to take appropriate steps to ensure such a smooth transition;

5. Decides, in this context, that the graduation of a country will be completed following a transitional period of three years, which will commence immediately after the General Assembly has taken note of the finding of the Committee for Development Planning to graduate that country;

6. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee for Development Planning regarding the inclusion of Cambodia, Madagascar, Solomon Islands, Zaire and Zambia in the list of least developed countries;

7. Takes note of the finding of the Committee for Development Planning to graduate Botswana from the list of least developed countries, and decides that its graduation from the list will be completed following a transition period of three years, in accordance with paragraph 5 of the present resolution;

8. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to report to the Conference at its eighth session on the resource and other implications of the application of the new criteria for identifying the least developed countries on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to follow his report to the Conference with a report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the same subject.

Programme of Action for the 1990s

Throughout 1991, United Nations bodies monitored the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted in 1990 by a United Nations conference (known as the Paris Conference)(1) and endorsed by the General Assembly later that year,(4)

In response to a request by the Assembly, the Secretary-General submitted a report in October 1991(5) on implementation of the Programme of Action. The report, prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat, gave an overview of the recent economic performance of LDCs and policies and measures adopted by them in line with the Programme of Action. It then reviewed the progress achieved in the first year of the Programme's implementation and described the mechanisms put in place for its review and monitoring. The report also set out the arrangements made for the implementation, follow-up and monitoring and review of the Programme of Action, describing measures taken by the United Nations system and presenting information on international support measures taken since the Paris Conference in the fields of external resources, debt and trade.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the report stated that the vast majority of LDCs were engaged in the restructuring of their economies. Often this was being carried out in partnership with multilateral agencies of the United Nations system and the developed and other developing countries. Cooperative arrangements to strengthen the country-review process as a principal instrument for policy dialogue and coordination of aid efforts had been initiated. Since the Conference, six consultative and aid groups under the aegis of the World Bank and four round-table meetings under the aegis of UNDP had taken place.

With regard to the flow of ODA, the report noted that, in 1990, it tended only partially to reflect the new commitments undertaken in Paris. The exigencies of the recovery and the reform process underlined the importance of the effective implementation of measures to increase substantially the level of external support to LDCs in line with the undertakings set out in the Programme of Action for various categories of donor countries. However, even a significant increase in ODA in line with those undertakings was not projected to meet fully the external capital requirements of LDCs through the 1990s. Ways to raise additional financing would need to be sought, particularly through expanding non-debt-creating flows and increased export earnings.

Also in its conclusions, the report touched on other matters of concern to LDCs, including debt relief, trade performance, environmental and developmental considerations and the reform of political institutions.

UNCTAD action. On 22 March,<sup>(6)</sup> the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board emphasized the need for implementation of the Programme of Action by all parties as a matter of urgency. It took note of steps being taken by the UNCTAD secretariat concerning follow-up, monitoring and review of the Programme's implementation, including arrangements for the annual review by the Board. In that regard it asked all Governments and the United Nations system to extend cooperation to UNCTAD in implementing its mandate. Donor Governments and other donors, particularly UNDP, were called on to support UNCTAD's technical cooperation activities for LDCs. It urged all Governments, international and multilateral organizations, regional integration organizations and non-governmental organizations to continue to pay special attention to the problems of LDCs and urged their development partners to provide support and assistance to LDCs.

UNDP action. In a May report,<sup>(7)</sup> the UNDP Administrator discussed the Special Measures Fund for LDCs (SMF/LDC) and UNDP's role in the follow-up and implementation of the Programme of Action. He noted that the areas of aid coordination, policy analysis and economic management had been highlighted in the Programme as priority issues requiring support by multilateral agencies like UNDP. He was convinced that SMF/LDC had a crucial role to play in the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) as a catalytic source of funds to assist LDCs to strengthen their own capacities to coordinate and manage their own programmes of external assistance. However, resources pledged to SMF/LDC for 1991 were almost nil and its viability was regrettably in doubt. If the existing resource situation was allowed to continue, it would limit the opportunity for UNDP to fulfil its role as an accepted neutral and objective partner in development with LDCs in their most important and sensitive areas of development, namely, coordination and management of economic aid.

The overall role of UNDP, said the Administrator, would be guided by a strategy that recognized the responsibility to concentrate UNDP resources for support to the particular development needs of LDCs. While the special attention paid to Africa had to continue, he was aware that LDCs in other regions and other developing countries whose development characteristics approximated those found in LDCs would continue to require considerable UNDP support. That strategy would seek to use all funds under the Administrator to help LDCs to strengthen their capacity to manage their development process.

On 25 June,<sup>(8)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council endorsed the Administrator's actions to assist in implementing the Programme of Action. It requested that his recommendations to strengthen the capacity of LDCs for economic management and aid coordination be incorporated in the country programmes of LDCs as a mainstream activity. The Administrator was asked to inform the Council in 1993 on specific measures taken by UNDP to address the special needs and priorities. The donor community was called on to continue its contributions to SMF/LDC to meet the particular development needs of LDCs and to preserve the viability of the Fund.

ACC action. An inter-agency consultation on the follow-up to the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s was held at Geneva on 1 and 2 July 1991.<sup>(9)</sup> It discussed arrangements at the global level for review and monitoring of progress in implementing the Programme, follow-up at the national level, including review of the outcome of country-review meetings held to date, and action by individual organizations in implementing the Programme within their fields of competence and agency contributions to the global-level follow-up. The consultation was also briefed on developments regarding the criteria for identifying LDCs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/156 without vote.

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/206 of 21 December 1990, in which it endorsed the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries,

Deeply concerned about the continuing deterioration in the socio-economic situation of the least developed countries as a whole and the adverse impact of the recent unforeseen external developments and other emergencies on their overall socio-economic situation,

Recalling the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, in which it was stated, inter alia, that it would be essential to stem the increasing marginalization of the least developed countries and to reactivate their growth and development through comprehensive national action and international support measures,

Reaffirming the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, in which Member States stressed, inter alia, the need for full implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990,

Recalling that the prime objective of the Programme of Action is to arrest the further deterioration in the socio-economic situation of those countries, to reactivate and accelerate their growth and development and, in the process, to set them on the path of sustained growth and development,

Reaffirming the basic principles outlined in the Programme of Action as the basis for action by the least developed countries and their development partners, including international organizations, financial institutions and development funds, to promote fundamental, growth-oriented transformation of the economies of those countries,

Recalling the solemn commitment of the international community, as contained in the Paris Declaration, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to implement the Programme of Action throughout the 1990s,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Calls upon all Governments, international and multi-lateral organizations, financial institutions and development funds, the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and all other organizations concerned to take concrete measures to implement fully the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s as a matter of urgency;

3. Reaffirms that the least developed countries have the primary responsibility for the formulation and effective implementation of national policies and priorities for their growth and development and should continue to implement the commitments they undertook at the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris in 1990, and, in that context, welcomes the fundamental and far-reaching changes that have been or are being initiated in the least developed countries;

4. Stresses that the implementation of growth and development-oriented domestic policy initiatives by the least developed countries deserves the increased support of all their development partners;

5. Strongly urges the international community, in particular the donor countries, to implement fully and expeditiously their commitments in all areas, as set out in the Programme of Action, so as to provide adequate external support to the least developed countries, and keep under review the possibility of implementing further new steps in specific areas of importance to the least developed countries;

6. Welcomes the decision to upgrade to a division the unit of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development that deals, inter alia, with the least developed countries, and expresses the hope that the division will concentrate more fully on the problems and requirements of the least developed countries;

7. Invites the governing bodies of the organs, organizations, agencies and programmes of the United Nations system to continue to take the necessary and appropriate measures for effective implementation of and follow-up to the Programme of Action within their respective spheres of competence and according to their mandates;

8. Invites the preparatory bodies of all relevant forthcoming major meetings and conferences of the United Nations system to take into account the outcome of the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in conformity with paragraph 142 of the Programme of Action, to continue to ensure the full mobilization and coordination of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in the implementation and follow-up of the Programme of Action, in close collaboration with the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation, the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the secretariats of the regional commissions and the lead agencies for the aid groups;

10. Calls upon all relevant organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to establish focal points for the least developed countries, if they have not already been established, and to strengthen the existing ones in order to involve them actively in the implementation of the Programme of Action throughout the 1990s, and also calls upon those organs, organizations and programmes to take steps to implement the recommendations contained in the Programme of Action that fall within their area of competence;

11. Urges all Governments, international and multi-lateral organizations, regional economic integration organizations and relevant non-governmental organizations to continue to pay special attention to the problems of the least developed countries, and, in this regard, deeply appreciates the Tokyo Forum on the development problems of the least developed countries, organized in Tokyo from 13 to 15 May 1991 by the Government of Japan in collaboration with the United Nations Capital Development Fund;

12. Deeply appreciates the contributions of individual countries to specific United Nations programmes for the least developed countries;

13. Emphasizes once again the importance of economic and technical cooperation between the least developed countries and other developing countries, and, in that regard, highly recommends mechanisms of economic and technical cooperation among developing countries to strengthen the development efforts of the least developed countries, and urges the development partners to assist in such activities;

14. Stresses the importance of effective follow-up and monitoring mechanisms for the Programme of Action, and, in that context, requests the Secretary-General to mobilize extrabudgetary resources to ensure the participation of at least one representative of each least developed country at the spring session of the Trade and Development Board, which, in accordance with the provisions of the Programme of Action and General Assembly resolution 45/206, will undertake the annual review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action;

15. Calls upon the international community to continue to assist the land-locked and island least developed countries in addressing their special problems, in line with the relevant recommendations contained in the Programme of Action;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to report, on a continuing basis, on the implementation of the provisions of the Programme of Action.

Land-locked developing countries

In response to a General Assembly request of 1989,<sup>(10)</sup> the Secretary-General, by a note of 18 October 1991,<sup>(11)</sup> transmitted a report of the UNCTAD secretariat on progress in implementing specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries.

The report stated that the international community viewed with deep concern the problems faced by the land-locked developing countries—many of which were also LDCs—linked to their geographical handicaps. The difficulties of being land-locked permeated every aspect of the development process, with the impact on the evolution of external trade being particularly severe. The additional transport costs borne by land-locked countries constrained export development and increased the price of imports, having an adverse effect on their terms of trade.

In its conclusions and policy recommendations, the report stated that during the 1980s land-locked countries had pursued three basic objectives with regard to transit transport: reduced transit transport costs through investing in improvements to operational services in transit transport corridors; diversified their transit routes and reduced dependence on the facilities of a single coastal country; and promoted the development of their indigenous international transport services sector.

While progress had been made, there were still major deficiencies in the overall transit transport systems. Major issues requiring attention were: maintenance of existing facilities and their effective utilization; new investments, particularly with regard to containerization and facilities for handling containers; liberalization of trade in transit transport services at a regional level; agreement on regional transit regimes and their effective implementation; external assistance by donor agencies earmarked for the transportation sector; ratification and implementation of international conventions related to transit transport and adherence to such conventions; adoption by land-locked countries of development strategies that maximized economic linkages among and between economic sectors as part of the longer-term effort to reduce disadvantages inherent in their geographical location; and the improvement of the managerial capacity and skills of personnel involved in transit operations.

An addendum to the UNCTAD report<sup>(12)</sup> contained summaries of information regarding specific action related to land-locked developing countries received from 9 countries, 16 United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, and 8 inter-governmental organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/212 without vote.

Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 44/214 of 22 December 1989 and all other relevant resolutions of the United Nations relating to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries,

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness and isolation from world markets, and prohibitive transit costs and risks impose serious constraints on the overall socio-economic development efforts of the land-locked developing countries,

Recognizing also that fifteen of the twenty-one land-locked developing countries are also classified by the United Nations as least developed countries and that their geographical situation is an added constraint on their overall ability to cope with the challenges of development,

Recognizing further that most transit countries are themselves developing countries facing serious economic problems, including the lack of adequate infrastructure in the transport sector,

Recalling that measures to deal with the transit problems of land-locked developing countries require close cooperation and collaboration between those countries and their transit neighbours,

Recalling the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, adopted on 10 December 1982,

Recognizing the important role played by bilateral cooperative arrangements and regional and subregional integration in alleviating the transit problems of the land-locked developing countries and improving the transit-transport systems in land-locked and transit developing countries,

Noting the importance of strengthening the existing international support measures with a view to further addressing the problems of land-locked developing countries,

1. Reaffirms the right of access of land-locked countries to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit States by all means of transport, in accordance with international law;

2. Reaffirms also that transit developing countries, in the exercise of their full sovereignty over their territory, have the right to take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for land-locked developing countries should in no way infringe upon their legitimate interests;

3. Calls upon both the land-locked developing countries and their transit neighbours, within the spirit of South/South cooperation, including bilateral cooperation, to implement measures to strengthen further their cooperative and collaborative efforts in dealing with their transit problems;

4. Appeals to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to implement, as a matter of urgency and priority, the specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries envisaged in the previous resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, adopted at the eighteenth special session of the General Assembly and contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and in the relevant provisions of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s;

5. Invites the land-locked developing countries and their transit neighbours to intensify further their cooperative arrangements for the development of transit infrastructures, institutions and services to facilitate the movement of goods in transit with financial and technical assistance from donors and international agencies;

6. Emphasizes that assistance for the improvement of transit-transport facilities and services should be integrated into the overall economic development strategy of the land-locked developing countries and that donor assistance should consequently take into account the requirement for long-term restructuring of the economies of the land-locked developing countries;

7. Urges donor countries and multilateral financial and development institutions to provide land-locked and transit developing countries with appropriate financial and technical assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and transit infrastructures and facilities, including alternative routes and improved communications;

8. Requests the United Nations Development Programme, as appropriate, further to promote subregional, regional and interregional projects and programmes and to expand its support in the transport and communication sectors to the land-locked and transit developing countries and its technical cooperation for development geared towards promoting national and collective self-reliance among them;

9. Notes with appreciation the contribution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in formulating international measures to deal with the special problems of the land-locked developing countries, and urges the Conference, inter alia, to keep under constant review the evolution of transit-transport infrastructure facilities, institutions and services, monitor the implementation of agreed measures, collaborate in all relevant initiatives, including those of private sector and non-governmental organizations, and serve as a focal point for cross-regional issues of interest to land-locked developing countries;

10. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to carry out, within the overall level of resources for the biennium 1992-1993, specific studies in the following areas, inter alia, bearing in mind the need to address the concerns of transit developing countries, and to report on the results of the studies to the Trade and Development Board and to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session:

(a) Implications of high transit costs on the overall development of the land-locked developing countries;

(b) Identification of specific areas in the context of subregional and regional cooperation for the promotion and integration of transit infrastructure and services and harmonization of transit-transport policies and legislation and the assessment of regional trade possibilities for the expansion of the trade sector of land-locked developing countries;

(c) Improvement of current transit insurance regimes;

(d) Application of new information technology to improve transit services;

(e) Identification of specific training needs to improve the managerial capacities and the skills of personnel involved in transit operations to ensure effective utilization of transit-transport facilities;

(f) Development and expansion of all other alternatives and/or complements to ground transportation in order to improve the access of land-locked countries to foreign markets;

11. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in collaboration with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and, where relevant, the executive heads of the subregional economic groupings, to convene in 1992-1993 subregional symposia/workshops of experts of land-locked and transit developing countries on the basis of the studies mentioned in paragraph 10 above and in other relevant studies;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to convene in 1993 a meeting of governmental experts from land-locked and transit developing countries and representatives of donor countries and financial and development institutions to review and propose appropriate concrete action to address the problems of land-locked developing countries, to be forwarded to the Trade and Development Board and to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session for appropriate action;

13. Calls on the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to take appropriate measures to enhance the capacity of the Conference, within existing resources for the biennium 1992-1993, in the area dealing with land-locked and island developing countries so as to ensure the effective implementation of the activities called for in the present resolution and of existing measures in support of land-locked developing countries;

14. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the progress being made to address the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries, and requests him to prepare another report, taking into account the provisions of the present resolution, for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 1991, a year marked by the widening of the economic gap between the industrialized North and the developing South, the United Nations continued its efforts to alleviate the situation in the developing countries. During 1990 the organizations of the United Nations system provided a total of $8.5 billion to those countries in official development assistance. Of that amount, $4.7 billion was given in grants and $3.8 billion in concessional loans. Concessional resources (development grants and concessional loans) grew by 16 per cent in 1990 against a net decline in 1989.

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)—the central funding and coordinating body in the system for matters of technical assistance for developing countries—spent a total of $1.4 billion on field programme activities in 1991, rising from about $1 billion in the previous year. Regionally, Africa absorbed 37.2 per cent of field programme expenditures, the largest proportion.

The United Nations system was increasingly aware of the need to develop new ways to address, in programmatic terms, the problems facing developing countries. During 1991, UNDP focused attention on formulating plans for its fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) with an approach to planning and implementation in terms of broad, multidisciplinary, long-lasting programmes rather than sets of individual or more specific projects.

The United Nations Department of Technical Cooperation for Development had 980 technical cooperation projects under execution in 1991, with a total delivery of $178.1 million in project expenditures. Projects financed by UNDP represented $119.6 million, and the remainder were financed by other United Nations organizations and trust funds.

The United Nations Volunteers programme (UNV) continued to grow in 1991, with UNV specialists and field workers rising from 1,801 at the end of 1989 to an estimated 2,080 at the end of 1991. The majority of UNV assignments were in agriculture, community development, health and education. Following the pattern of previous years, nearly three quarters of all UNV assignments were in the least developed countries (LDCs) and in land-locked and small-island States; roughly half of them were in Africa and some 30 per cent were in Asia and the Pacific.

In May/June, the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries held its seventh session and adopted a number of decisions on strengthening such cooperation. In December, those decisions were endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 46/159.

In 1991, the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) marked the twenty-fifth anniversary of its establishment as a multilateral agency providing small-scale capital assistance to officially designated LDCs and other countries regarded as LDCs. It was a record year for UNCDF in terms of new project commitments, which reached $82 million. The Fund's activities continued to be driven by national priorities and by UNDP's areas of focus, particularly poverty eradication and grass-roots participation, women in development and environmental protection.

The General Assembly, in resolution 46/219, took action on a broad range of aspects relating to operational activities of the United Nations system. It stressed the responsibility of Governments in determining their development programmes and that national execution should be the norm for United Nations-funded programmes.

General aspects

The Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation (DIEC), in his 1991 annual report on operational activities for development<sup>(1)</sup> gave an overview of some main trends and acute problems in development. He noted that at the time of rapid political change, particularly in East-West relations and political reforms in all regions of the world, leading to an increasing number of elected Governments, the economic gap between the industrialized North and the developing South was widening. Economic growth was not keeping pace with population increases in developing countries. It was estimated that about 1.2 billion people lived in absolute poverty in developing countries. Hunger affected a large part of the population in those countries, and, according to the World Food Council, at the end of 1989 some 550 million people were poor and undernourished and the number of hungry people seemed to be increasing. Although the majority of hungry people still lived in Asia, the largest increase was occurring in Africa. The growth of the population in the developing countries in the 1990s was projected at well over 20 per cent, the largest growth in any decade in history. The population issue had consequently been included in international and national development strategies because it was an intrinsic part of economic and social development.

In the 1990s, the problem of increased flows of refugees and displaced persons and the human and financial implications of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) had also hampered development.

The operational activities of the United Nations system would play a role in assisting developing countries, particularly the poorest, in finding development-oriented solutions, the Director-General said. Major international strategies adopted by the General Assembly in 1990, including the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries<sup>(2)</sup> and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade<sup>(3)</sup> had set goals for operational activities.

A first practical step by the United Nations system towards meeting specific national circumstances was the issuance in April 1991 of a guidance note to resident coordinators and country teams on development goals and strategies. The note was supplemented by brief summaries of priority activities which the system was willing to support. United Nations organizations generally supported the Assembly's 1989 resolution on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development<sup>(4)</sup> which contained specific requests addressed to their governing bodies. Through the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), a number of steps were taken in response to that resolution, including: preparation of draft guidelines on enhancing programming processes; support for the review on the field network; strengthening the resident coordinator system through the issuance of guidelines; agreed criteria for the selection of resident coordinators and of field representatives; initial guidance on the goals for the 1990s; national execution and full utilization of national capacities; and the adoption of an inter-organizational position on common premises. A series of seven workshops was started at the International Labour Organisation (ILO) Training Centre at Turin, Italy, to strengthen the management of field coordination for senior United Nations representatives.

With regard to resource flows, the Director-General said that there was an urgent need to provide substantial concessional resources to developing countries so that they could revive their economic growth. It was also urgent that the developed countries meet the agreed international target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product (GNP) for official development assistance (ODA).

Included in the Director-General's report was a section on United Nations efforts to integrate women in development, as requested by the General Assembly in 1989<sup>(5)</sup> and a section on United Nations assistance to foster the role of entrepreneurship in the development process, as requested by the Assembly in 1990.<sup>(6)</sup> Additional information on both those areas was provided in an addendum<sup>(7)</sup>

In two addenda to his report, the Director-General provided statistical data on operational activities. One gave finalized information for 1988 and 1989<sup>(8)</sup> supplementing preliminary statistical information provided in earlier reports, and another provided statistical data on operational activities for development for the year 1990.<sup>(9)</sup> A further addendum<sup>(10)</sup> dealt with field representation (see below).

JIU action. The Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), in a report on technical cooperation and the use of national professional project personnel (NPPP)<sup>(11)</sup> transmitted to the General Assembly in May 1991, analysed the contribution of NPPP to implementing technical cooperation of the United Nations system as a means to assist countries in their economic and social development. JIU, noting the trend towards greater use of NPPP, recommended that UNDP establish its own system for collecting and disseminating statistical data on the use of NPPP. The data should be gathered with the help of resident representatives and resident coordinators in the field, and of the headquarters of organizations involved. They should specify not only sources of finance, but also different types of contract and the duration of contracts in man-months. JIU recommended that the DIEC Director-General analyse those data in his annual report and make recommendations for a more efficient NPPP policy.

The increasing use of NPPP did not necessarily meet with the approval of the host countries; it was rarely based on prior analysis showing that it enabled the objectives of technical cooperation for development to be achieved more effectively than if international expertise had been used. Therefore, JIU recommended that the United Nations: use technical cooperation funds to pay for the transfer of expertise by using international experts whenever such expertise was lacking in a country; mobilize more local resources in expertise, making use of government execution and subcontracting to national institutions; and make more use of the expert capacity of developing countries by mobilizing more experts from those countries as international experts.

ACC comments. In October<sup>(12)</sup> ACC regretted that the JIU report, which raised questions about the original assumption that the increased use of NPPP was cost-effective and fostered the development of national expertise, did not take a broad view of the issue but rather dealt with matters of relative secondary importance. According to ACC, it was evident from the wide use of NPPP that they represented a vital element in providing Governments with additional sources of expertise. Given the rapid changes in the nature of the development process, including increased national execution, an extension of cooperation with Governments to a variety of non-governmental entities, increased use of United Nations Volunteers, the growing number of qualified nationals living abroad who were willing to return to their countries of origin, and other possible sources of technical advisory support, ACC would have preferred a more comprehensive review. It said that certain issues needed to be discussed further, such as criteria for selection, recruitment, remuneration, status of NPPP working on regional projects away from home, the role of NPPP in strengthening institutional infrastructure, and the role of national directors. Regarding the JIU recommendations, ACC said on the whole it had no difficulty with them, but stated that they were rather limited in scope.

The General Assembly, by decision 46/466 of 20 December 1991, took note of the JIU report on NPPP and the ACC comments on it.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Third (Programme and Coordination) Committee of the Economic and Social Council considered in July current issues with respect to operational activities for development. The discussion took place at the mid-point between the 1989 triennial policy review of operational activities by the General Assembly<sup>(1)</sup> and the next triennial review to be held in 1992, thus giving an opportunity for participants to assess progress in the reform of operational activities and to delineate some key areas where improvements were needed.

By decision 1991/296 of 26 July, the Council decided to annex to its annual report<sup>(13)</sup> the summary of the Third Committee's discussion, prepared by the Vice-Chairman. By decision 1991/299 of the same date, the Council took note of several documents, including the report of the Director-General on the operational activities of the United Nations system<sup>(1)</sup>

On 20 December 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/219 without vote.

Operational activities of the United Nations system

20 December 1991 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Draft by Ireland (A/46/L.54); agenda item 82.

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 5th Committee 53; plenary 79.

For its consideration of the subject, the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had before it a draft resolution<sup>(14)</sup> transmitted to it by the Assembly in 1990.<sup>(15)</sup> Ghana, on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries,<sup>(16)</sup> and Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain and the United Kingdom<sup>(17)</sup> also submitted draft texts.

Following informal consultations on the latter two drafts, the Committee's Vice-Chairman submitted a further text<sup>(18)</sup> which was orally corrected by Pakistan. Since that draft was unavailable to the Committee in all official United Nations languages, it was agreed that the Chairman, as the representative of Ireland, would submit it for discussion and adoption by the Assembly in plenary. The other two drafts were therefore withdrawn and it was decided to take no action on the text transmitted by the Assembly in 1990.

In other action, the Assembly, in decision 46/465 of 20 December, requested the Economic and Social Council to consider discussing the question of strengthening the operational activities of the United Nations system at its regular session of 1992, taking into account the recommendations of the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and ACC. At those meetings (New York, 22, 23 and 25 October 1991),<sup>(19)</sup> it was proposed that the Council consider strengthening the United Nations work in operational activities, including the coordinating role to be played by the Council. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Council in 1992 an analytical report on strengthening the operational activities of the United Nations system, including the governance and financing aspects.

Financing of operational activities

Expenditures

In an addendum to his 1991 annual report on operational activities for development<sup>(20)</sup> the DIEC Director-General gave statistics on expenditures for United Nations operational activities for 1990. During that year, the organizations of the United Nations system provided $8.5 billion for such activities. Of that amount, $4.7 billion was given in grants and $3.8 billion in concessional loans.

The operational activities of the United Nations provided grants assistance of two sorts—development-oriented activities and the humanitarian and relief assistance provided by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) and the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator (UNDRO). That assistance could be distinguished from non-concessional and concessional loans provided by the World Bank, including the International Development Association (IDA), and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD).

Concessional resources (development grants and concessional loans) grew by 16 per cent in 1990 against a net decline in 1989. In 1990, transfers by IDA amounted to $3.7 billion, representing over half of total concessional assistance to individual countries. Of that amount, more than one third was devoted to countries where GNP per capita was less than $250 and over nine tenths to those where GNP per capita was less than $500. Overall, those resources amounted to $1.26 per capita in 1990. In the poorest countries—those with GNP per capita below $250—total assistance was $5.24 per capita, and those where per capita GNP was less than $500, the total was $1.19 per capita.

About half of all concessional development assistance (including grants) in 1990 was provided to countries classified as least developed (LDCs). In LDCs, the resources distributed amounted to $7.08 per capita. Grant assistance for development consisted of both financial contributions provided through a number of institutions and food aid channelled through the World Food Programme (WFP). The largest distributors of grant assistance were UNDP (30 per cent), WFP (25.3 per cent) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) (15.5 per cent).

Grant-funded development assistance was provided for a wide range of sectors: health (24 per cent); agriculture, forestry and fisheries (18 per cent); humanitarian aid and relief (13 per cent); general development (7 per cent); population (5 per cent); natural resources (5 per cent); industry (5 per cent); transport (4 per cent); education (4 per cent); science and technology (3 per cent); culture (3 per cent); and other areas (9 per cent). Implementation of the grant-financed development activities was undertaken by 29 organizations and agencies of the system, together with Governments, some non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and other non-United Nations entities. UNDP continued to play its central funding and coordinating role for development grant assistance within the United Nations system. United Nations agencies (24 in 1990) executed 70 per cent of UNDP-funded programmes. The main executing agencies for UNDP were the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) ($175 million or 17 per cent), UNDP ($135 million or 13 per cent), Governments ($125 million or 12 per cent), the United Nations Department of Technical Cooperation for Development (DTCD) ($118 million or 11 per cent), the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) ($94 million or 9 per cent), the World Bank ($75 million or 7 per cent) and ILO ($67 million or 6 per cent). The total of all others amounted to $246 million or 25 per cent.

Contributions

Contributions from Governments and other sources for operational activities for development were reported by the Director-General for the year 1990 in his 1991 report on operational activities.<sup>(9)</sup> Contributions for the United Nations system's development activities totalled $9.476 billion. This represented a decrease of less than 1 per cent from the total for 1989 of $9.51 billion.

Contributions in 1990, both from assessments through regular budgets and voluntary donations to UNDP, UNDP-administered funds and United Nations specialized agencies, amounted to $4.253 billion, as compared to $4.088 billion for 1989.

In 1990, contributions to the World Bank Group and IFAD totalled $4.287 billion, as compared to $4.608 billion the year before. Contributions for refugee, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities amounted to $836 million in 1990 ($814 million in 1989).

UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities

The 1991 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was held in New York on 5 and 6 November to receive government pledges for 1992 to United Nations funds and programmes concerned with development and related assistance.

In a note to the General Assembly issued in October<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretary-General listed contributions pledged or paid as at 30 June 1991 to 24 United Nations funds and programmes at the 1990 pledging conference, totalling $1,619.5 million.

Field representation

The Director-General's 1991 report on operational activities provided information on field representation of the United Nations, including data on field offices and personnel. That information was supplemented by an addendum<sup>(10)</sup> providing descriptions of field representation among organizations of the system between 1983 and 1990, a progress report on national execution, and facts on common premises and shared facilities of the system in developing countries.

In establishing field offices, organizations usually applied well-established criteria. However, available data did not permit an assessment of the cost-effectiveness of the current field representation in relation to programme volume. Governing bodies approved the opening of new offices and determined their functions. Consultations between agencies were not held for that purpose, except when it was a question of integrating an agency representation in the field mission of another. Changes in location and closures of offices were few and usually reflected compelling local events, such as civil strife. UNHCR was an exception because it closed offices whenever a refugee situation was resolved. Recently, there had been a sharp drop in long-term internationally recruited project staff due to a large increase of short-term consultants and nationally recruited staff. That change had had an impact on field offices.

Overall, the field networks of the organizations had grown modestly but steadily since 1983. UNDP offices had not changed in number during that period. UNHCR was the most flexible, adapting its field structure to crises of a natural or political character as they arose. The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) had expanded due to the increased complexity of its programmes. The number of United Nations information centres (UNICs) had increased by four. In 1983, 21 offices were headed by a resident coordinator and in 1990 25 operated that way. Four specialized agencies—ILO, FAO, UNESCO and UNIDO—had increased their presence in developing countries.

The development of multidisciplinary programmes was primarily the responsibility of the country concerned. The challenge before the United Nations system was how best to create collaborative programmes in a multidisciplinary programme approach, a concept upheld by the Assembly in 1989.<sup>(4)</sup> The United Nations involvement was aimed at enabling a country to make the best use of its own resources, to strengthen those resources and to build up additional institutional capacity based on a national strategy. The role of the resident coordinator was to develop the multidisciplinary dimension of development assistance, taking into account the requirements of the country concerned.

The Director-General noted a growing trend towards collaboration among United Nations organizations, strongly influenced by the attitude of the Government concerned towards greater integration. There was also a trend towards increased resort to national execution. Execution, which covered the management of technical cooperation, was the responsibility of recipient Governments. Different implementation arrangements were utilized, depending on local needs. The specialized agencies were expected to continue their participation in project identification, formulation, monitoring and evaluation.

Register of Development Activities

In April, ACC submitted to the Economic and Social Council a report summarizing the results of a survey of end-users of the Register of Development Activities<sup>(21)</sup> In the light of the survey's results, ACC proposed to continue publication of the Register but would ask the Advisory Committee for the Coordination of Information Systems to examine to what extent additional needs of users could be met while retaining the basic format.

By decision 1991/293 of 26 July, the Council took note of the ACC report.

Technical cooperation through UNDP

In his annual report for 1991,<sup>(1)</sup> the UNDP Administrator said that during the year UNDP focused on reorienting its operational activities, based on the principles outlined by the General Assembly in 1989.<sup>(2)</sup> The new orientation was based on the following principles: national plans and objectives were the only viable frame of reference for technical cooperation; technical cooperation had to be integrated with national plans and objectives for relevance and impact; technical cooperation should follow a programme approach, i.e., by supporting priority national development objectives; the responsibility for national development lay with the Government; technical cooperation had to be flexible, responding to new needs as they arose; the goal of technical cooperation was to build national capacity for development; and where national capacities existed, they should be utilized fully.

In the context of the United Nations, the principles meant that operational activities should be coordinated both within the system and with external cooperation offered by donors outside the system. A few features were new or had been newly articulated: the promotion of the programme approach and the emphasis on impact and results rather than output; the concept of comparative advantage among donors; and the clear placing of prime responsibility for the effectiveness of technical cooperation with national authorities. New country programmes would be more supportive of national objectives than previous ones, which had tended to support a number of stand-alone national projects. During 1991, UNDP attempted to define the term "programme approach" and concluded that the key point was that "programme" referred exclusively to a national programme (or, by extension, to a regional programme) and not to that of a donor.

In 1991, UNDP estimated income was $1,222 million, a decrease from $1,239 million for 1990. Of the 1991 total, $949 million came from voluntary pledges, as compared to $1,002 million for 1990. Other major sources included cost-sharing contributions by recipient Governments ($219 million), trust funds established by the Administrator ($24 million), contributions to local office costs ($15 million) and Government cash-counterpart contributions ($10 million). In addition, UNDP administered seven funds during 1991 which provided an income of $81 million, bringing UNDP total income for 1991 to $1,303 million.

The seven funds administered by UNDP in 1991 were: the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF); the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE); the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD); the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO); the United Nations Volunteers (UNV); the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM); and the UNDP Energy Account.

Based on the results of the United Nations Pledging Conference held in November 1991 and on the estimates of contributions from countries that were unable to pledge, 1992 voluntary contributions to UNDP were projected to reach $1,065 million. If contributions to UNDP-administered funds were included, as well as cost-sharing and trust fund contributions, total 1992 income was expected to reach $1,300 million.

Four countries raised their contributions by 8 per cent or more—Austria, Belgium, France and Spain. Among the recipient countries, Czechoslovakia, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Guinea, Hungary, Lesotho and Poland announced substantial increases in pledges, India increased its contribution by 40 per cent, and eight pledged $1 million or more: China, Hungary, India, Mexico, Republic of Korea, Saudi Arabia, Sri Lanka, Thailand. Sweden's multi-year pledge indicated a 1992 contribution that would continue to make it the second largest donor, close behind the United States. Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and Norway were expected to be the other top 10 donors.

Expenditures on field programme activities totalled $1,134 million in 1991, rising from $1,046 million in 1990. About half of that amount was spent on project personnel, 18 per cent for project equipment, 16 per cent for subcontracts, 14 per cent for training and the remainder for miscellaneous expenses such as maintenance and operational costs.

Traditionally, the largest share of field programme resources came from the indicative planning figures (IPFs)—almost 72 per cent in 1991. Cost-sharing contributions made up 22 per cent of those resources, Special Programme Resources (SPR) 22 per cent and the Special Measures Fund for LDCs 2 per cent.

Regionally, 37.2 per cent of field programme expenditures were spent in Africa, 30.5 per cent in Asia and the Pacific, 16.8 per cent in Latin America and the Caribbean, and 9.4 per cent in Arab States and Europe. The rest was used for interregional and global projects. In terms of sectoral distribution, about 25 per cent was allocated for general development issues, policy and planning; agriculture received 18 per cent; industry, 11 per cent; natural resources, 10 per cent; and transport and communications, 7 per cent.

There were 1,129 new projects approved during 1991, a decrease of 127 from the previous year. In dollar terms, the cost of new projects was about $690 million, compared to $850 million in 1990. Of the $690 million for new projects, 38 per cent represented cost-sharing from Governments and third-party donors. UNDP also helped to attract about $8.3 billion in follow-up investment from donors in 1991, which was used mainly for capital and infrastructural improvement.

UNDP Governing Council

In 1991, the UNDP Governing Council held in New York an organizational meeting from 19 to 22 February, a special session to consider pending issues also from 19 to 22 February, and its regular thirty-eighth session from 3 to 25 June, resumed from 16 to 20 September.<sup>(c)</sup> At the organizational meeting, the Council adopted decisions on the schedule of its meetings in 1991 and other organizational matters,<sup>(d)</sup> and on the mandate, membership, organization, work programme and financial arrangements of its Standing Committee for Programme Matters.<sup>(e)</sup> The UNDP Administrator submitted a report on the Standing Committee,<sup>(f)</sup> which was to consider major issues related to programme matters and review country, regional, interregional and global programmes and projects. It was to be composed of all members of the Council.

At the special session, the Council adopted two decisions, one on SPR and the other on the annual review of the financial situation (see below).

During the regular thirty-eighth session, the Council's Budgetary and Finance Committee met between 3 and 21 June to consider financial, budgetary and administrative matters, the Standing Committee for Programme Matters met between 6 and 21 June to consider programme implementation, planning, SPR, its programme of work, and programmes of UNFPA. The Drafting Group of the Council met between 7 and 21 June to consider proposals for draft decisions. Informal consultations on support costs successor arrangements were held between 6 and 20 June.

In June, the Council adopted 49 decisions; those not covered in this chapter dealt with: human development; integration of women in development; the role of UNDP in combating the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and AIDS; the private sector in development; the International Year for the World's Indigenous People; drug abuse control and crop substitution; special assistance to Namibia, the role of UNDP in African economic recovery and development; LDCs; refugees, displaced persons and returnees; assistance to the Palestinian people; assistance to Yemen; assistance to Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Yemen; the UNDP Gulf Task Force; emergency aid to the Philippines; UNDP participation in international cooperation to address and mitigate the consequences of the Chernobyl nuclear powerplant accident; technical cooperation in the transformation of Eastern European economies; UNFPA; UNFSTD and UNRFRNRE; UNSO; and UNIFEM. One decision was adopted at the resumed session, on SPR.

On 3 June,<sup>(7)</sup> the Council approved the agenda and organization of work for its thirty-eighth session. On 21 June,<sup>(8)</sup> it decided to review in 1992 the issue of the venue of its sessions. Having considered a report of the Administrator on biennialization or triennialization of subjects on its agenda,<sup>(9)</sup> the Council, on 25 June,<sup>(10)</sup> requested the Administrator to update the table of subjects considered by the Council in 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993. He was also asked to continue his efforts to improve the quality, reduce the quantity and accelerate the distribution of documentation requested by the Council. The Council allocated up to $200,000 per biennium for preparation of such documents with a view to their early circulation to delegations. Also on 25 June,<sup>(11)</sup> the Council agreed on a schedule of its future sessions and those of its subsidiary bodies. On the same date, it adopted the provisional agenda for its 1992 session.<sup>(12)</sup>

Standing Committee for Programme Matters.

Following a 1990 Council decision<sup>(13)</sup> to merge the Committee of the Whole and its Working Group, the Standing Committee for Programme Matters began to function in 1991, holding its first inter-session meeting in New York from 6 to 10 May. It also met during the thirty-eighth (6 to 21 June) and resumed thirty-eighth (16 to 19 September) session of the Governing Council.

In January, the Administrator, after holding informal consultations, issued a note<sup>(6)</sup> on issues requiring clarification in connection with the Committee, including scope, mandate, membership, agenda, reporting procedures, Bureau, rules of procedure, reporting and decisions, records, timing of sessions and field visits. On 22 February<sup>(5)</sup> the Governing Council adopted a decision covering those issues and authorizing budgetary provisions for the Standing Committee's session.

In May,<sup>(14)</sup> the Committee reviewed country and intercountry programmes, evaluations of UNDP programmes, the 1991 programme of work, and the UNDP Gulf Task Force. In June,<sup>(15)</sup> it considered UNFPA programmes, UNDP programme implementation and planning, and its future work programme. It made recommendations to the Council in the form of four draft decisions. In September,<sup>(16)</sup> the Committee considered SPR, reviewed programme proposals and considered the Administrator's response to those proposals. A draft decision on SPR was submitted to the Council for consideration.

UNDP operational activities

Country and intercountry programmes

The Administrator submitted to the Governing Council's special session in February the fourth and final report<sup>(17)</sup> in a series on mid-term reviews of country and intercountry programmes (142 in all) carried out during the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991). The report summarized the conclusions of 44 reviews completed since January 1990. Addenda to the report<sup>(18)</sup> contained mid-term reviews of Angola, Costa Rica, Jamaica, Maldives, Nigeria, Pakistan, Yemen and the regional programme for the Arab States and Europe.

On 21 June<sup>(19)</sup> the Governing Council approved the Global Research Programme to Develop Sustainable Rice Production Systems that Minimize the Need for Pesticides, Herbicides and Synthetic Nitrogen Fertilizers—International Rice Research Institute. It also approved six country programmes for Bangladesh, Cape Verde, China, Cuba, Indonesia and Tunisia; took note of the one-year extensions of country programmes for Mongolia, Nepal, the Philippines and Uruguay; and approved the second one-year extensions of country programmes for Argentina and Venezuela.

Country programmes by region

In a note issued in February 1991 on implementation of selected country programmes,<sup>(20)</sup> the UNDP Administrator described the salient features of the activities of the four Regional Bureaux of UNDP during 1990. Information on 1991 was provided in the Administrator's annual report.<sup>(1)</sup>

Africa

Political events in Africa affected UNDP activities during 1991. About 20 countries, including South Africa, took steps towards more democratic regimes. Not all changes were positive, however. In Ethiopia and Zaire, technical cooperation personnel had to be evacuated and programme implementation came to a standstill. The situation in Liberia and Mozambique remained unresolved and advances towards democratization in Togo were in balance at the end of the year. In the area of emergency assistance, UNDP was called on for emergency operations in Liberia and to provide logistic support and assistance in distributing relief supplies. In the realm of governance, UNDP provided funds from IPFs to help develop constitutional arrangements for a multi-party political regime in Ghana and technical cooperation for the electoral process in Angola.

The critical economic situation in the region continued to hamper development, with about a quarter of the countries, faced with declining prices for most commodity exports and a heavy debt burden, having difficulty in pursuing economic reforms. The overall growth rate of the region reached only 2.25 per cent, or about 1 per cent below population growth.

UNDP activities in the region included assistance in formulating the draft treaty of the African Economic Community of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), including finalizing the treaty protocols, carrying out studies on setting up a secretariat, defining the relationship between the Community and the regional groupings, and establishing a data bank network. The treaty of the Community was signed in June 1991 by the heads of OAU member States.

Six projects were approved in 1991 under the Global Environment Facility that UNDP sponsored for the region. Five were regional projects covering protection of international waters, biological diversity conservation and reduction of global warming. A four-year multi-agency women-in-development initiative targeted women in the agricultural sector and demonstrated the benefits of providing women with agricultural extension services. A major new UNDP endeavour supported national efforts to prepare long-term perspective studies. The $10 million regional project would provide catalytic support, facilitate the interface between prospective works undertaken in Africa and industrialized countries, develop a network of African specialists and institutions, and maintain a data bank. It would also organize workshops to share experience between African countries and establish two regional teams to provide technical help and facilitate the national process.

The HIV/AIDS epidemic was another area that received significant attention in UNDP programmes in 1991. Many African countries were putting in place programmes to control and manage the impact of the disease. A regional project was designed to raise awareness of the socio-economic as well as the health implications of the epidemic. In the area of human development, eight countries began preparing national human development strategies.

National technical cooperation assessments and programmes (NATCAPs) were at varying stages in 33 African countries in 1991, from the preliminary mission and preparatory work plan as in the Congo, through sectoral studies and data collection in Senegal, to the elaboration of technical cooperation programmes in the Gambia and Malawi.

Revised procedures and guidelines for the round-table process, by which individual LDCs could consult with their aid partners on their assistance requirements, were discussed at a workshop for resident representatives and field economists at Geneva in May 1991. During the year, 3 round-table meetings and 13 related sectoral meetings were held, with encouraging results.

Asia and the Pacific

The economies of the Asian and Pacific countries expanded at a rate of 5.4 per cent in 1990, but the growth rate for 1991 was expected to be slower since the non-oil-exporting countries were affected by such unfavourable developments as high oil import costs and loss of foreign exchange earnings. Those developments aggravated the macroeconomic imbalance and adversely affected the welfare of the poor and vulnerable groups. Several countries were obliged to adjust their economies, giving increased attention to the poor under the structural adjustment processes.

In 1991, 245 projects were approved and the total IPF and cost-sharing funds committed by recipient countries and third parties amounted to approximately $231 million. The total programme expenditure for the region was estimated at $295 million.

A total of 75 nationally executed projects became operational in 1991. They included some of the 57 nationally executed projects, valued at $30 million, which were approved during the year. The field offices took steps to train government staff in the operational and financial management of the nationally executed projects and programmes.

Foremost of the UNDP initiatives launched in 1991 were those taken to assist Governments in human development. In Pakistan, for example, a report was issued detailing a cost strategy for achieving human development objectives during the 1990s, which would serve as a basis for formulating the fifth country programme and for securing external assistance requirements. The initiative in Viet Nam focused on preparing a master plan for the Quang Ninh province, a particularly disadvantaged region accounting for the large majority of the "boat people" refugees to Hong Kong and elsewhere. A statistical study that focused on social well-being was designed to determine variations in social development among the 27 provinces of Indonesia, where more than 30 million people lived in poverty. In Bangladesh, an initiative focused on an analysis of levels and past trends in human development and made recommendations on future strategies to promote human development. In May, UNDP organized a meeting at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, of resident representatives from the region and other UNDP staff, which resulted in an action plan calling for an enhanced response to poverty in the region in the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996).

UNDP field offices continued to play an active role in aid coordination. Round-table meetings were held for Maldives in October and for the Marshall Islands and Tuvalu in December. Following the signing of peace agreements for Cambodia on 23 October 1991, UNDP organized a donor consultation meeting in New York on 11 November to focus on rehabilitation needs during the transitional period leading up to the holding of free and fair elections and the formation of a new Government. Aid coordination was the subject of a consultation meeting at Ulan Bator on 9 and 10 October of donors to Mongolia.

UNDP also initiated environment programmes in 1991. From the Global Environment Facility, co-managed by UNDP, the World Bank and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), eight national and three regional projects were programmed. Projects in Bangladesh, Iran, Malaysia, the Philippines and Thailand were aimed at redressing the problem of ozone depletion.

Ten countries of the region took advantage of the Management Development Programme in 1991, with $17 million approved for projects during the year. Those projects, focusing mainly on transitional economies, such as those of China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Myanmar and Viet Nam, related to support of government management reforms and structural changes in the economy. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Indonesia, Maldives, Papua New Guinea and Sri Lanka also availed themselves of the programme.

A number of IPF-financed projects assisted rural populations to improve living standards. In the Pacific, a project involved the local leadership in the Cook Islands, Kiribati, the Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Tokelau and Tuvalu. In Maldives, in the Indian Ocean, small-scale projects were in such areas as boat building, subsistence agriculture, clean water, and rainwater catchment tanks.

Projects for the rehabilitation of basic infrastructure and food production in Afghanistan were financed by IPFs and the United Nations Office of the Coordinator for Afghanistan. In northern Pakistan, a project provided assistance to upgrade the productivity of livestock and raise the living standards of small farmers. A UNDP project in Indonesia assisted the Government in upgrading rural water supply and sanitation planning, implementation and maintenance.

Twelve projects designed for the transfer of technology and amounting to over $26 million were approved in 1991. In addition to the country IPF-financed projects, a number of intercountry projects were approved, with the aim of transferring technology in the fields of telecommunications, transport, agriculture and forestry. The largest programme for the transfer of technology approved in 1991 was the $15 million leather sector programme in India, a nationally executed programme providing training and high technology equipment to upgrade skills, product design and quality and pollution control. A regional project on industrial application of isotopes and radiation technology provided assistance to 12 countries.

Arab States and Europe

The UNDP Regional Bureau for Arab States and Europe faced unforeseen circumstances in 1991—the Persian Gulf crisis, emergencies in the Horn of Africa, historical changes in Eastern and Central Europe, and rapid transitions in a number of countries from centralized to market economies.

Almost all countries in the region were affected by the Persian Gulf crisis. In Kuwait, the field office was reopened in March 1991 and a programming exercise was undertaken to help define technical cooperation requirements. The field office in Iraq was reopened after the war to help provide logistical support to humanitarian and relief efforts. A regional project for rinderpest control was implemented to control a threatening epidemic.

In February, the UNDP Administrator approved $4 million from SPR to help other countries in the region affected by the Persian Gulf crisis to move beyond the emergency and to revive economic development activities. The SPR funds were managed by the UNDP Gulf Task Force, an inter-bureau body headed by the Director of the Regional Bureau, which helped to coordinate and plan the UNDP response to the emergency. Assistance was provided to 25 countries, primarily for humanitarian relief, human development/returnees, and impact assessment and programme formulation. Some assistance was also made available for environment, management of the economic impact of the crisis and rehabilitation of institutions and infrastructure.

A number of countries in the Horn of Africa continued to face drought and civil strife. In the Sudan, UNDP continued its planning and coordination of drought relief and humanitarian activities in areas affected by the civil war and the severe drought. The special 1991 UNDP Drought Operation for the Sudan, which involved NGOs and a number of United Nations specialized agencies, initiated community-based food-for-work programmes and built water supply systems. Somalia suffered political instability, civil war, breakdown of law and order, mass displacement of people, and lack of minimal social services. In January 1991, UNDP was forced to suspend all programmes and evacuate the field office staff there to Nairobi, Kenya. From Nairobi, UNDP led the inter-agency task force to assess the emergency assistance needs of the Somali population and coordinate humanitarian aid.

The 15-year-old civil war ended in Lebanon in 1991. In July, UNDP led an inter-agency needs as-assessment mission to Lebanon and an aid coordination meeting was held in Paris in December.

Albania faced an economic crisis in 1991 as it moved to change the structure of its economy. UNDP responded by opening an office and organizing an inter-agency humanitarian mission, whose report was presented to a donors meeting at Brussels, Belgium.

Economies in Eastern and Central Europe and in a number of Arab countries in North Africa underwent transformation in 1991; in every instance UNDP was requested to respond to new technical cooperation requirements. In Europe, UNDP moved to assist Governments in their transition process and to devise a strategy which would not redirect ODA resources away from developing countries. Following consultations with policy makers in the countries concerned, UNDP submitted a broad strategy to the Governing Council redefining its role in the region. The strategy approved by the Council on 25 June 1991<sup>(2)</sup> became the framework for preparing country programmes for the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996). Among the first significant initiatives that emerged from linking a programme approach to donor and funding was approval of a programme to clean up the Danube River Basin. A similar proposal was being negotiated for the Black Sea.

Another major initiative was the Turn-around Management Programme, a $38 million programme to assist seven countries to field senior managers from the West to work closely with their counterparts in State-owned enterprises. UNDP also sponsored a regional privatization network and funded 175 short-term consultants in Europe in 1991 for a total of 278 working months.

In the Arab region, Yemen, after unification in May 1990, began merging two different socioeconomic systems and government administrations. UNDP's response focused on supporting national development capacities. UNDP undertook extensive studies to help transform Algeria to a more market-oriented economy. In Egypt, it helped build national capacity for the Government's economic reform and structural adjustment programme.

The Arab regional programme achieved its highest delivery rate in 1991: $11.8 million. Many networks established between national institutions through the regional programme became fully operational in 1991. For example, in the area of food security, new varieties of grains were developed and the information was shared with farmers in countries which depended on those crops for food security. Networking on modernizing Arab telecommunications networks led to cooperation in research and development. The Mediterranean Environment Technical Assistance Programme became operational in 1991 with networks between cities in the programme, to which UNDP, the World Bank, the European Investment Bank and the European Community (EC) contributed. Another example of regional collaboration on the environment was the establishment of the Centre for Environment and Development in the Arab Region and Europe at Cairo, Egypt. Work was completed in 1991 for the inauguration of the first regional Software Technology Centre at Cairo in January 1992. Two other centres, one in Kuwait and the other in Tunisia, were planned. In collaboration with the African Development Bank and EC, UNDP co-financed a feasibility study for the creation of a Maghreb International Bank to increase foreign investment flows into the Maghreb countries, promote the private sector and support economic integration.

While responding to a number of unpredictable situations in the region, UNDP prepared for the fifth programming cycle. Seven country programmes in the Arab region would be submitted to the Council in 1992. For Eastern and Central Europe, a strategy document was prepared as a guide for the first country programmes following the historic changes. Three country programmes and the Europe intercountry programme were prepared. For countries particularly struck with hardships in 1991, such as Somalia and the Sudan, the preparation of new country programmes was postponed.

A mission was sent to five net contributor countries (Bahrain, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Oman, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates) to help define their fifth cycle programmes. It was confirmed that those countries would continue to need UNDP presence and technical cooperation in the fifth cycle.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Latin America and the Caribbean underwent a number of changes in 1991: established democracies were widening the process of consultation; privatization was replacing the public sector in the economic sectors; and government-led policies were giving way to market-led policies. At the same time, GNP per capita continued to fall, by 10 per cent between 1980 and 1990, with the result that an estimated 270 million of Latin America's 450 million people lived in poverty. In meeting these challenges, UNDP had to adjust to a sharp decline in IPF resources for the region compared with the 1987-1991 cycle. As a result, UNDP focused on a national programme approach and capacity-building, reflected in increased national execution and implementation. Plans to compensate for the cut in allocated IPF resources—from $58 million to $30 million—included the mobilization of $40 million in additional resources.

UNDP was involved in democratization processes, for instance, in setting up elections in Guyana and promoting decentralization in Colombia. In the case of Colombia, assistance ranged from the national rehabilitation plan, which carried out activities in regions of conflict, to fiscal decentralization, whereby the municipal level became the major beneficiary. A regional programme, through the Latin American Centre of Administration for Development, provided technical advisory services directly to presidential offices on policy formulation and coordination as well as to municipalities with new authority under decentralization schemes.

UNDP played a unique role in 1991 through prompt assistance to the new Government of Peru. Expertise was provided to formulate emergency programmes in economic stabilization, structural reforms and social development, and UNDP regular resources were used for immediate initiation of activities until bilateral and multilateral donors completed their approval processes.

In Argentina, UNDP was involved in restructuring the public sector at both the central and municipal levels and in privatization initiatives in the petrochemical sector. In Bolivia and the Dominican Republic, UNDP assisted in introducing reforms in the fiscal system, the Central Bank and industry and agriculture. Other major UNDP initiatives included those in Guyana, where it financed a UNIDO-executed project to privatize almost 50 per cent of the State-owned enterprises. UNDP played a role in the national reconciliation in El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua, bringing the parties together to achieve reconstruction and development. Among its initiatives addressing poverty, UNDP, together with the World Bank and the Interamerican Development Bank, the private sector and NGOs, provided social emergency funds and social investment funds. UNDP was involved in the preparatory and implementation phases of such funds in Bolivia, the Dominican Republic and Mexico and provided support to social investment funds in El Salvador and Guatemala.

In the area of modernization of the productive sector, innovation and competitiveness, UNDP assisted in developing technology management in Costa Rica and in the introduction of new technologies and the development of human resources in Mexico. A project in the Dominican Republic involved UNDP assistance in setting up and supporting a joint venture between the Government, the private dairy-farming population of some 3,500 families and the marketing sector. Technical cooperation was provided at the farm level, milk collection centres were established to facilitate marketing, and credit was arranged through the Agricultural Bank. Milk production increased by some 70 per cent over a two-year period.

During preparation of the fifth cycle programmes, Governments emphasized the environment as an important sector. Brazil, Colombia and Venezuela made the environment the major area of concentration. Argentina, Brazil and Honduras sought UNDP assistance in preparing national environment plans.

In response to the Central American Peace Plan (see PART ONE, Chapter II), UNDP continued to play the lead role in implementing the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America.

Programme planning and management

Preparations, which began in 1990, for UNDP's fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) became UNDP's principal task in 1991. It attempted to align the new country programmes with the philosophy and guidelines put forward by the General Assembly in 1989.<sup>(2)</sup>

The new country programmes, the majority of which were designed to coincide more or less with the period of the cycle, identified national priority objectives for human development. They outlined the scope and nature of external cooperation, reviewed past experience to draw lessons for future programming, described the strategy for the optimal use of UNDP resources, and outlined areas of concentration for future UNDP cooperation. The programmes indicated what the expected impact would be and outlined other donor contributions. In addition, they presented management issues such as arrangements for the execution and monitoring of the country programmes.

In his annual report for 1991,<sup>(3)</sup> the Administrator stated that the substantive content of the new country programmes derived from the national priorities of recipient countries. However, the UNDP mandate and its own areas of focus also guided the selection of programme areas and determined the nature of the UNDP contribution. Consequently, there was a strong focus on the environment and the sustainable use of natural resources; poverty eradication and widespread participation in development; management development; the role of women in development; the transfer and adaptation of technology; and technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC).

National execution

In response to a 1990 request of the Governing Council,<sup>(22)</sup> the Administrator submitted a report on national execution,<sup>(23)</sup> containing proposals for assisting recipient Governments to build up their programme management and administrative capacities. His response had been prepared after consultations with Governments and the United Nations specialized agencies and reflected the legislative mandates contained in a 1989 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(2)</sup> which included a call for national execution of UNDP programmes and projects as the preferred modality. National execution was a practice that had increased with each programming cycle, with the aim of strengthening national capacity for self-reliance. It was based on the principle that development was a national process to which the international community could contribute.

With regard to strengthening that self-reliance, the Administrator proposed that: the introduction or expansion of national execution should begin with a comprehensive discussion with the Government concerned on the sectors or intersectoral programmes in which national execution would be introduced; at the country level, the Government would be briefed on the choices available to it throughout the programming cycle; and, since a critical capacity needed to support national execution was managerial, UNDP could assist in obtaining managerial services from outside the Government, particularly in setting up the appropriate management structure to support and execute the programmes.

With reference to national execution and the programme approach, UNDP could assist in formulating sectoral programmes, managing national programmes by mobilizing managerial resources, mobilizing financial resources and supporting a range of technical cooperation needs for institutional strengthening.

In order to streamline implementation, UNDP would review essential governmental procedures and systems, such as procurement of equipment and services, recruitment of personnel, financial systems and reporting and auditing systems.

With regard to the role of United Nations specialized agencies, the Administrator stated that their primary substantive involvement should be at the programme level and proposed that they should help to assess national capacities for execution in their sectors of competence and assist in formulating sectoral strategies and programmes through the technical support facility being established at the programme level. It was suggested that a multi-agency effort, led by UNDP, be organized to launch national execution in a country. The purpose of that effort would be to: carry out interdisciplinary studies at the country level; participate in an analysis of administrative and technical capacities and blockages existing in making effective use of such capacities; and assist in organizing training in executing and managing development programmes. The Administrator suggested that the establishment of an inter-agency facility to create and enhance national capacities for execution and management of development programmes be considered.

Concerning accountability of UNDP for the effective use of resources and quality of implementation, the Administrator proposed that efforts to make improvements in this area should be increased through training and development of national monitoring capacity. Auditing and financial reporting should also be improved.

On 21 June,<sup>(24)</sup> the Governing Council emphasized that promoting national execution should be country-specific and recognized the responsibility of the recipient Governments to determine the modality and manner of execution. The Council agreed that recipient countries should receive assistance in: identifying, building and strengthening sustainable national capacities; executing and implementing UNDP activities; mobilizing, coordinating and using the analytical, technical and managerial capacities of the United Nations system; and facilitating the exercise of choice with regard to implementation modalities.

The Council encouraged: simplifying, harmonizing and adapting rules and procedures governing programmes and projects; shifting the specialized agencies away from project operations and administrative support towards providing analytical and technical advice and support; providing information to enable assumption of responsibility for national execution by recipient countries; taking measures, including decentralization, at the field level to facilitate capacity-building for national execution; and assisting countries to strengthen their national units responsible for technical cooperation.

Agreeing that programme-level assistance to national capacity-building would help to ensure that programmes and projects were nationally managed in an integrated manner, the Council stated that UNDP, in collaboration with United Nations agencies, should: assist national organizations in assessing technical and managerial capacities at the programme level and in formulating sectoral, cross-sectoral and subsectoral development programmes; and assist in the transfer of skills necessary for developing self-sustained institutions with a capacity to deal with multisectoral linkages. The Council requested the Administrator to develop guidelines on assistance to Governments in formulating and implementing national capacity-building strategies, on the roles of UNDP, agencies and recipient Governments in national execution, and on utilization for national execution of technical support resources. In addition, he was asked to review and make proposals on the issue of delegation of authority to the resident representative for approving nationally executed projects and programmes, in light of the decentralization process to the field level, and to report to the Council in 1992.

The General Assembly, in resolution 46/219, took note of the Council's decision and stressed that the national execution modality should be the norm for programmes and projects funded by the United Nations system, taking into account the needs and capacities of developing countries.

Programme evaluation

In March 1991,<sup>(25)</sup> the UNDP Administrator issued the eighth annual report on programme evaluation, summarizing UNDP's programme analysis and evaluation work during 1990, carried out by the Central Evaluation Office (CEO). Three major evaluations had been undertaken on NATCAPS, Social Dimensions of Adjustment (SDA) and aid coordination capacity in LDSs. Other major exercises dealt with metrology, disaster and development, and urbanization. The report also discussed the feedback of evaluation results into UNDP's work, described collaboration with other institutions, Governments and executing agencies, and outlined the evaluation work planned for 1991.

On 21 June,<sup>(26)</sup> the Governing Council stressed the importance of programme-level evaluations for measuring the impact of UNDP assistance, including its effectiveness in achieving the overall goals of national capacity-building. It re-emphasized the need to ensure feedback of lessons learned through evaluations into the programming and preparation of UNDP activities.

An April report of the Administrator<sup>(27)</sup> summarized the principal findings and recommendations of, and the Administrator's comments on, evaluations of SDA, NATCAPS and UNDP assistance to intergovernmental organizations in Africa.

With regard to the SDA project, which aimed to help participating Governments to integrate social concerns into their structural adjustment programmes, the report found that it reflected the desire of participating agencies to be responsive to social concerns and needs of their member countries. It had developed guidelines for establishing an information system on the social impact of adjustment programmes. However, the evaluation had brought out some important weaknesses in the project, including an overemphasis on data gathering, insufficient experience in carrying out the social action programme, and the unnecessary use of loans to finance national projects. It was recommended that: the project should be continued after completion of its current phase in June 1991, with substantial changes in focus and organizational structure; the World Bank should no longer be the sole executing agency but should be joined by other qualified agencies and organizations; each participating country should deal with only one agency for formulating the SDA project, choosing the agency according to the specialization most appropriate for its priorities; and UNDP should become the secretariat of SDA. The Administrator stated that, on the whole, UNDP regarded the evaluation report as a useful basis for improving the functioning of the SDA project. He favoured the continuation of SDA-related activities during the fifth programming cycle and recommended a new project focused on structural adjustment and social development in Africa.

The NATCAP initiative had been introduced to build national capacities as an indispensable element for long-term development in Africa and as a response to the need to make the most effective use of technical cooperation resources for that purpose. The evaluation found that generally the NATCAP methodology defined in 1989 had proved appropriate and creative and had been successful in inducing a process of review and programming in some 30 countries. The recommendations focused on three areas: strengthening the preparation of NATCAPS; sharpening their conceptual focus on human resources and institutional capacity-building; and bringing the management and back-stopping of NATCAPs into line with their central role of encouraging self-reliant development. The Administrator stated that the evaluation presented a balanced assessment of NATCAP concepts and results and endorsed its recommendations, which UNDP was actively following up.

UNDP assistance to intergovernmental organizations in Africa was the subject of an independent evaluation undertaken in October/November 1990. During the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991), UNDP approved 51 regional and subregional integration projects in favour of a number of intergovernmental organizations, with a budget of nearly $39 million, an amount that was considered far from adequate to have an appreciable impact, given the prevailing economic and financial crisis in the region. Recommendations of the evaluation report included the following: OAU and the other intergovernmental organizations should rationalize their objectives in order to avoid duplication and adopt acceptable standards of management, administration and accountability in using funds; the international community should support African regional institutions with much higher resources; UNDP should adopt long-term plans (15 to 20 years) in terms of allocation and utilization of resources; UNDP should help those institutions to build the capacity to administer, manage and control the efficient implementation of projects; and the Regional Bureau for Africa should increasingly decentralize the administration and management of regional projects. The Administrator stated that UNDP was taking the evaluation's recommendations into account in formulating and implementing its fifth cycle inter-country programme for Africa. With regard to decentralization, three regional programme officers had already been fielded, in addition to UNDP representation at OAU and the Economic Commission for Africa.

In 1991,(28) preliminary figures showed that 69 mid-term evaluations were completed, compared with 129 the previous year, as were 58 terminal evaluations, compared with 99 in 1990. There were two cluster evaluations in 1991, compared with six in 1990. Those exercises covered several associated projects through a single evaluation and therefore were viewed as a cost-effective means of assessment.

On 21 June,(29) the Governing Council urged the Administrator to implement the recommendations of the evaluation reports. He was requested to implement recommendations made by the Steering Committee of the SDA project: SDA should further focus on developing and executing projects on a country basis; country projects should concentrate more on policy analysis and policy advice; SDA needed a clearer priority focus; reports should be more problem-oriented; and the Steering Committee's function should be made clearer. In a decision of the same date on budget estimates for 1992-1993,(30) the Council emphasized the importance of evaluation as a means of improving the quality of UNDP operations and requested the Administrator to reassess, in the context of his proposed workload study, the technical capacity of CEO, with a view to strengthening it within the proposed budget.

Preparations for the fifth programming cycle

As requested by the Governing Council in 1990 (31) the Administrator reported on preparations for the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996).(32) In particular, he discussed the possibility of introducing special drawing rights (SDRs) as the unit of account, net contributor provisions, and the factors used in calculating country IPFs (the amount UNDP allotted for projects in each country).

On the basis of an analysis made by the ACC Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Financial and Budgetary Questions), the Administrator recommended that the question of introducing SDRs as the unit of account should not be pursued for the time being because it would create administrative complications and would not have major benefits.

In regard to the net contributor issue, he recommended that those provisions that applied to countries with 1989 per capita GNP above $3,000 and to island developing countries with a population of less than 2 million and with a per capita GNP above $4,200 should be introduced more gradually in the fifth programming cycle than was the case in the fourth cycle. The possibility of establishing a threshold beyond which countries would no longer be entitled to an IPF was also discussed.

The Administrator also discussed the weight coefficients of per capita GNP and population used in calculating country IPFs, which, according to his report, should be viewed broadly in the context of the underlying principles and objectives for distributing resources. Due to the highly constrained, complex nature of the system for allocating IPF resources, which was not responsive to changing priorities, he recommended that a review be held of the entire system in the context of the sixth programming cycle.

On 25 June,(33) the Governing Council decided that countries with a per capita GNP above $6,000 or small island developing countries with a population of less than 2 million and a per capita GNP above $7,500 should not be issued an IPF in the fifth cycle. Those countries would continue to be considered recipients of UNDP resources under the country IPFs and be entitled to participate as recipients in other components of UNDP, including projects financed under the regional and interregional IPFs and from SPR.

The Council approved the Administrator's proposed methods for calculating IPFs and the programme planning arrangements in the fifth cycle for countries with a per capita GNP above $3,000 but not more than $6,000 and for small island developing countries with a population of less than 2 million and a per capita GNP above $4,200 but not more than $7,500, which did or did not have net contributor obligations in the fourth cycle. The Council decided that the IPF for those countries should be provided from the $11.55 million set aside for them and that the provisions to provide them with not less than 60 per cent of their country IPFs in the fourth cycle should be adjusted accordingly. Those countries would be entitled to programme up to 60 per cent of their IPFs, and additional programming would be authorized at the end of each year of the cycle if they had made voluntary contributions equivalent to the IPF expenditure that year and had met their field office cost obligations. The Council decided that, if the per capita GNP of a country in any year between 1990 and 1996 fell below the established threshold, the methods for calculating its IPF and programme planning arrangements would become those that would have applied if its 1989 per capita GNP had been at the lower per capita GNP for that year.

The Governing Council approved the provisions for the maintenance of field offices as proposed by the Administrator, except that countries with programme activities exceeding $15 million in the course of the fifth cycle could be provided with a resident representative and deputy financed by UNDP, and that countries with programme activities exceeding $10 million could be provided with a resident representative. Field offices in countries not meeting those programme-level criteria should not be closed provided that maintaining an office would entail no cost to UNDP.

The Administrator was requested to consult with the countries covered by the decision on the projected level of their programme expenditures, the size of their field offices, the required local office contributions in the programming cycle and the participation of other United Nations agencies in those costs, and to report to the Governing Council in 1992 on the results of those discussions. He was asked to prepare a paper on the methodology for allocating programme resources in the sixth cycle for the Council's consideration in 1993.

Also on 25 June,(34) the Council, emphasizing the importance of the regional dimension to all regions in global priority issues, such as environment and development, and poverty, as well as the increasing relevance of regional integration, decided that the issue of the regional IPF should be reviewed at the mid-term review exercise in 1994.

Efficiency of programming

In a decision of 25 June,(35) the Governing Council, noting the desirability of greater relevance and effectiveness of UNDP-funded activities, and recognizing the need for better knowledge of areas in which UNDP had been particularly efficient, requested the Administrator, in consultation with the DIEC Director-General, to provide an analytical report in 1993 on those specific activities and services in which UNDP was most effective in achieving development goals.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/297 of 26 July 1991, endorsed the Governing Council's decision.

Procurement

In response to a 1990 request of the Governing Council,(36) the Administrator issued a report in June 1991 on procurement of goods and services from developing countries.(37) The report gave the recommendations of an analysis of the 15 per cent price-preferential system undertaken by the Inter-Agency procurement Services Office (IAPSO) and described other efforts taken by the United Nations system to increase procurement from developing countries.

The report stated that it was evident that the preferential 15 per cent price proviso had not worked. However, other efforts had been successful and had resulted in increased procurement from developing countries in recent years. The Administrator recommended that the United Nations system continue to build on the achievements to date and that the following areas should continue to receive priority attention: refinement of consolidated guidelines for procurement; implementation of the common system database; strengthening of national capabilities; project formulation and instructions; market knowledge; human resources development; dissemination of advance information of business opportunities; and strengthening of focal points and efforts at the local level.

On 21 June,(38) the Governing Council noted the progress made in procurement from developing countries and urged specialized agencies to give preference to such suppliers, keeping in mind the principle of universality, and in conformity with international competitive bidding and the Financial Regulations of the United Nations. It stressed the need to ensure that consideration was given to the desire for long-term sustainability, maintenance and compatibility with local requirements. Specialized agencies were urged to give advance information on business opportunities to IAPSO and to disseminate it systematically, in particular to developing countries. They were also asked to provide IAPSO with statistical information on procurement, including international experts, consultants, national experts, fellowships and volunteers, broken down by gender, for inclusion in the Administrator's annual report. The Council requested the Administrator to ensure that further support was given to the measures he recommended for increasing procurement from developing countries, and to report on progress in 1993. In regard to the 15 per cent price-preferential system, the Council decided that it had no merit and that the arrangement should be discontinued; it requested the Administrator to submit proposals in 1993 for more effective mechanisms for increasing procurement from developing countries.

Financing

In his annual review of the financial situation in 1991,(39) the UNDP Administrator stated that total income was $1.2 billion and total expenditure was $1.5 billion. That resulted in a net deficit of income over expenditure of $299.2 million. As a result of the deficit of the main programme, the balance of UNDP general resources decreased from $467.3 million at 31 December 1990 to $166.7 million at 31 December 1991 ($145.6 million if accumulated non-convertible currencies were excluded).

Total income in 1991 was $132.4 million less than projected, resulting primarily from decreases in voluntary contributions and miscellaneous income, which included losses on exchange. During 1991, the impact of exchange rates on the value of contributions to UNDP had been significant. The value of pledges to UNDP in 1991 amounted to $1 billion, some $83 million less than the value as at 31 December 1990. In real terms, at fixed exchange rates, contributions had grown by approximately 4 per cent.

Cost-sharing contributions increased significantly for the second year in a row, as did extra-budgetary income. Income from all other sources changed only slightly. The reduced income from voluntary contributions could be attributed to two factors: the impact of exchange rates and the fact that several major donors were unable to pay their pledges in full during the year. The decrease in miscellaneous income reflected exchange rate losses of $52.1 million, which offset interest earnings of $78 million. The increase in cost-sharing contributions at $218.8 million was $49.6 million more than projected. Extrabudgetary income exceeded expectations by $19.6 million, primarily as a result of the change in structure of the budget presentation approved by the Council on 21 June 1991.(30)

Total expenditures in 1991 amounted to $1.5 billion, which was $94.1 million more than forecast and $150.6 million more than in 1990. IPF expenditures exceeded projections by 1.4 per cent and, at $871.8 million including IPF add-on expenditure, were 2.7 per cent higher than in 1990. Expenditures under the Special Measures Fund for LDCs(SMF/LDC) amounted to $13 million, 25 per cent less than in 1990. Cost-sharing expenditures increased substantially, by $65.5 million over 1990, to $195.9 million, a 50 per cent increase. The biennial budget expenditure was $14.5 million higher than forecast, as was extrabudgetary expenditure.

It became evident during 1991, said the Administrator, in view of resource projections, that IPF expenditures needed to be stabilized, leading towards modest reductions in 1992 and 1993. That adjustment would take account of the decline in resources, which became apparent in the course of the year and which was accelerated by the substantial appreciation of the United States dollar versus the currencies of other major donors.

On 21 June 1991,(40) the Governing Council took note of the Administrator's annual review of the financial situation in 1990(41) and the forecast for expenditures for 1991 and 1992, in which expenditure continued to exceed income, with the result of a reduced balance of resources at the end of 1992. The Council requested the Administrator to continue to monitor closely the level of contributions and expenditures and the balance of available resources. It authorized him to increase the level of the Household Appliance Rental Scheme to $850,000 and to reduce the funds for rehabilitation to $1.55 million. Noting the marked decrease in contributions to SMF/LDC, the Council decided that the Administrator should continue to execute projects funded from SMF/LDC until the available funds had been fully used. The Council approved payment of additional support-cost reimbursements with respect to project delivery in 1990 by UNIDO and the World Meteorological Organization (WMO).

On 22 February 1991,(42) the Council took note of an oral report of the Assistant Administrator and Director of the Bureau for Finance and Administration on the financial situation.

Budgets

Revised 1990-1991 budget

Revised budget estimates for 1990-1991 were submitted by the Administrator to the Governing Council in April 1991.(43) The revised estimates totalled $534.7 million (gross), compared with original appropriations of $507.5 million approved by the Council in 1989.(44) The total figure comprised three areas of appropriations: UNDP core activities, programme support and development activities, and trust funds.

For UNDP core activities, the revised estimates were $441.5 million (gross) and $410.5 million (net). The 1.6 per cent increase ($7.2 million) over the approved appropriations was attributable to cost adjustments (additional staff costs such as hardship and mobility allowances, education grant and rental subsidy) of $5.6 million and an inflation adjustment of $4 million, offset by a currency adjustment of $2.4 million.

Revised estimates relating to programme support and development activities for 1990-1991 amounted to $66.8 million. The additional $5 million or 8.2 per cent over the approved appropriations was attributable to a volume increase for the Office for Project Services (OPS) and UNV of $1.5 million, a cost adjustment of $1.5 million, a currency adjustment of $1.5 million and an inflation adjustment of $0.5 million.

Revised estimates for trust funds (UNCDF, UNRFPNRE and UNFSTD, UNSO and UNIFEM) amounted to $26.4 million. The additional $0.3 million or 1 per cent over the approved 1990-1991 approved amount was attributable to a cost adjustment of $0.08 million, a currency adjustment of $0.02 million and an inflation adjustment of $0.2 million.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) commented that it had no objections to the revised appropriation structure put forward for the 1990-1991 budget. In a report to the Council in May,(45) however, it noted that information on estimated extrabudgetary income from external sources was essential to providing the full picture of total resources available to all units, particularly vis-à-vis OPS, which previously had been treated in a different manner.

On 21 June,(46) the Governing Council approved revised appropriations in the amount of $534.7 million (gross) to finance the 1990-1991 budget and resolved that the income estimates of $30.9 million would be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $503.8 million. It also approved the revised budget estimates in respect of OPS and UNV.

1992-1993 budget

The UNDP budget estimates for the 1992-1993 biennium, submitted by the Administrator in April,(43) totalled $611.2 million. That amount comprised appropriations of $482 million (gross) and $450 million (net) for UNDP core activities, $100.4 million for UNDP programme support and development activities, and $28.9 million for trust funds (UNSO, UNCDF, UNRFRNRE/UNFSTD, UNIFEM).

The $482 million for core activities in 1992-1993 represented an increase of $40.5 million or 9.2 per cent over the previous biennium. It included a volume decrease of $23.3 million (mainly due to the reduction of 96 core headquarters posts and the transfer of funds from the core budget to programme support and development activities). Of the total core budget, $333.8 million related to the field, while $148.2 million related to headquarters.

Programme support and development activities, estimated to amount to $100.4 million, would increase by $22.9 million, mainly due to the transfer of resources, including $14.5 million from the core budget.

With regard to trust funds, estimated to total $28.9 million for the biennium, the $2.5 million increase was attributable to cost increases of $3.5 million and a volume decrease of $1 million.

ACABQ considered the UNDP 1992-1993 budget and commented on it in May.(45) It noted that the budget reflected presentational changes, which, in the Administrator's view, responded to concerns regarding the delineation of programme, programme support and administrative expenditure and the need to take into account the Governing Council's wishes regarding the development of thematic priorities. It discussed the staff reductions, reclassifications of posts and restructuring proposed by the Administrator, and found that the justifications provided for reclassifications were, in most instances, insufficient. ACABQ stated that the budget documentation was voluminous and complex and recommended that the Administrator submit a simpler and more cohesive report in the future.

On 21 June,(30) the Governing Council approved revised appropriations in the amount of $611.4 million gross to finance the 1992-1993 budget, and resolved that the income estimates of $32 million should be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $579.4 million. Regarding the presentation of budget estimates, it requested the Administrator to present a more streamlined budget document with a succinct summary of his proposals. While welcoming the Administrator's proposal to implement volume reductions in the headquarters core budget, the Council expressed concern that the share of overall resources for the operational budget was projected to increase from 15.5 to 16.1 per cent. Stressing that resources should be used primarily for programme activities, the Council asked the Administrator to reduce administrative expenditures. He was also asked to review field office staffing requirements, taking into account the need for an appropriate balance between administrative and programme costs, and to consider further redeployment of posts from headquarters to the field. The Council recommended that the distribution of resources among field offices should reflect the distribution of programme resources approved in 1990.(31) It approved the opening of three new field offices in Europe on a temporary basis and decided to take a final decision no later than 1993. It also approved the Administrator's proposals to streamline administrative support functions between the UNDP European Office at Geneva, UNV and the United Nations Office at Geneva (UNOG). The Administrator was requested to review the organizational structure and functions of the UNDP Office at Geneva in the 1994-1995 budget estimates.

With regard to staff reclassifications, the Council stressed that their implementation should involve no financial implications and reiterated that all reclassifications of Professional posts were subject to the Council's approval after consideration by ACABQ. It approved proposed reclassifications within the framework of the Administrator's recommendations for volume reductions at headquarters and urged him to keep the number of upward reclassifications to a minimum, particularly at the more senior levels.

The Council noted the Administrator's intention to present to it an evaluation of the experience with field economists in Africa. It emphasized the importance of evaluation in improving the quality of UNDP operations and asked the Administrator to reassess the technical capacity of CEO with a view to strengthening it within the proposed budget.

The Council welcomed the Administrator's proposal to delineate between administrative, programme support and programme costs and stressed the importance of an equally clear delineation between programme expenditures and programme support and development activities (including new programme development and core budget expenditures). It emphasized that the revised appropriation structure should not result in arbitrary transfer of expenses from the core budget to programme support and development activities, and requested the Administrator to develop more specific criteria for allocation of posts to those activities and to report to the Council thereon in the context of the 1994-1995 budget estimates. He was further asked to review the justification for charging the economist programme to the programme support and development activities line. The Council approved a number of posts for the Humanitarian Programme, on a temporary basis.

The Administrator was asked to elaborate the criteria used by OPS for project acceptance, to review the OPS appropriation mechanism and to report to the Council in 1992. Classification of two senior posts in OPS was approved on a temporary basis.

The Administrator was requested to review the cost elements charged to the UNDP budget not related to the delivery of the IPF programme, as well as costs incurred on behalf of UNDP by others, and to analyse appropriate sources of funding for those elements. He was also requested to report to the Council in 1993 on the experiences and use of the development support services.

Audit reports

The Governing Council had before it the financial report and audited financial statements of UNDP for 1989, including the review by the Board of Auditors,(47) and the views of ACABQ on them.(48) It also considered the audited financial statements of the executing agencies for 1989, the reports of the external auditors and the Administrator thereon,(49) and the report of the Administrator on the audit report of UNDP itself.(50)

On 21 June,(51) the Council recognized that the audit report of UNDP might remain qualified so long as audit confirmation of programme expenditure incurred by executing agencies had not been received by the Board of Auditors at the time the Board issued its opinion on UNDP accounts. The Administrator was requested to urge organizations executing projects or programmes to submit audit confirmation of programme expenditure on a timely basis. Noting the efforts by Governments acting as executing agencies to comply with audit requirements, the Council requested UNDP to assist Governments, within IPF resources, to strengthen their capacity to comply with audit requirements for national execution of UNDP-funded projects.

The Council requested the Administrator to discuss with the Board of Auditors the level of programme expenditure executed by Governments acting as executing agencies and supported by audit certification, which would be sufficient to remove the qualification, and urged him, in cooperation with the executing agencies, to report in 1992 on specific corrective action to implement the recommendations of the external auditors, which related to UNDP-funded activities.

The Administrator was also urged to keep under review controls to deter fraud and abuse in paying staff entitlements and allowances.

UNDP-administered funds

Within its appropriation structure, UNDP included distinct appropriations for the resources of certain trust funds administered by it. In 1991, they included UNCDF, UNRFNRE/UNFSTD, UNSO and UNIFEM. In the 1992-1993 budget estimates,(43) the Administrator said that post reductions applied to the headquarters core budget of UNDP were not applied to trust funds, but he had decided to freeze all new staffing proposals for UNCDF, UNRFNRE/UNFSTD and UNSO pending further consideration of the issues raised regarding the management and staffing levels of the trust funds. UNIFEM was excluded from that decision, as two more posts were being proposed for it.

In its review of the budget estimates,(45) ACABQ questioned the decision not to apply post reductions to trust funds, particularly in view of a statement by external management consultants (see below) that the greatest potential for streamlining could be found within the non-core units. ACABQ noted that no information was provided on project delivery of the funds in a given year, which would be useful so that the Council could see the relation between delivery and the size of the administrative bud et.

On 21 June,(30) the Governing Council requested the Administrator to include resource projections for each trust fund in future budget presentations. It took note of his proposals regarding technical support budgets of UNCDF, UNRFNRE and UNIFEM and asked him to include complete reports thereon in future budget estimates. The Council approved the Administrator's staffing proposals for UNIFEM and his proposed reclassifications relating to UNSO and UNCDF, on the understanding that there would be no financial implications for the 1992-1993 biennium.

support costs

In accordance with 1990 Governing Council decision(52) the Administrator submitted a progress report in January 1991(53) on agency support costs. Extensive consultations had been held and were continuing with the Specialized agencies in various forums such as ACC and its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities). Other consultative meetings had been convened by UNDP and discussions had been held with individual agencies. The Administrator noted that the 1990 Council decision, combined with other legislation, placed the United Nations operational activities on a course of change and reform, which required him to make proposals to the Council on its implementation. The Council had made a distinction between the five large agencies which were mandated to follow the new regime of support cost arrangements (FAO, ILO, UNESCO, UNIDO and DTCD) and the other agencies. In his communications with the agencies, the Administrator had emphasized both the need to adhere to the principles enumerated in the Council's 1990 decision and the fact that there was an implicit limitation on the costs of successor arrangements in the fifth programming cycle so as not to exceed the amounts which had been earmarked for fifth cycle resources.

The Council considered the Administrator's progress report on support cost successor arrangements at its special session held in February 1991 and referred the subject to a working group to provide further guidance to the Administrator for a comprehensive report. The group was not able to conclude its work before the Council's regular session; however, the Administrator submitted a further progress report in May,<sup>(54)</sup> which included a summary of understandings reached at a working group meeting held from 20 to 29 February.

On 25 June,<sup>(55)</sup> the Council reaffirmed that successor arrangements were to serve the purpose of UNDP and as such should: continue to reflect the principles of tripartite partnership as a distinctive characteristic of UNDP assistance, irrespective of execution modality; promote coherence and coordination in the system's operational activities; facilitate the further assumption by Governments of the management of United Nations-financed programmes; reinforce the Administrator's accountability and that of agencies providing support services; be structured to strengthen capacities for technical support; seek to ensure cost-efficiency, enhanced quality, cost transparency and effectiveness in implementing UNDP-assisted programmes and projects through greater openness and competitiveness in providing services; and continue the principle of cost-sharing between UNDP and agencies.

The Council decided that the new regime of support cost successor arrangements would apply from 1 January 1992 to the five large agencies mentioned above. Agencies not part of the new regime were invited to consider participating in it in the light of experience gained. The Council decided on an allocation of resources to the various provisions of the successor arrangements to agency support costs for the fifth programming cycle and annexed it to its decision. It acknowledged that the apportionment of funds for technical support services at the programme and project levels, referred to as TSS-1 and TSS-2, respectively, for the fifth programming cycle had been largely arbitrary and experimental, and considered that future total allocations should be related to the level of UNDP programmable resources attributable to the sphere of competence of the agencies participating in the new regime. For the purpose of determining allocations for technical support services for the sixth programming cycle, the Council decided that an external evaluation would be carried out, which would include an analysis of the need for and experience with TSS-1 and TSS-2. It decided that the financial expenditure ceiling for planning successor arrangements for the fifth programming cycle would be 14 per cent of programmable resources.

The Council authorized the establishment of TSS-1 and TSS-2 at specific levels and provided guidelines to govern the uses and management of those facilities. In view of the innovative nature of the TSS-1 facility, the Council decided to examine its allocation in 1994. It authorized a further provision of $20 million to provide technical support for national execution, to be managed in accordance with the TSS-2 guidelines and taking into account the importance of capacity-building for national execution in developing countries.

The principles of and the arrangements for the new support cost regime for country projects would also be applied to intercountry projects and SPR-funded projects. A number of transitional arrangements were decided upon for agencies currently using the old regime which might elect to adopt the new regime.

The Council decided that the common schedule of reimbursement rates applicable to the agencies participating in the new regime would also apply to UNDP-financed projects implemented by OPS from 1 January 1992, and that payments should be drawn from the respective sub-lines for IPF-funded projects and from resources set aside for that purpose for SPR-funded projects.

In agreement with the World Bank Group, the Council decided to reduce, from 11 per cent under the existing arrangements to a 10 per cent flat rate from the respective sub-lines as of 1 January 1992, the rate of support costs payable for projects financed from UNDP core resources and implemented by the Group.

The Administrator was requested to present to the Council in 1992, after consultations with the agencies, proposals for monitoring and evaluation of the new arrangements. The Council decided to monitor the implementation of the new arrangements and requested the Administrator to prepare an annual progress report to include information on the status of the financial provisions of the successor arrangements and an analysis of the impact of the new arrangements on the sectoral distribution of projects.

The General Assembly, in resolution 46/219, took note of the UNDP decision on support cost successor arrangements.

Financial provision for support cost arrangements

The Administrator, in his January report on agency support costs,<sup>(53)</sup> stated that the introduction of the new arrangements would require a substantial amount of work by UNDP to ensure a smooth introduction of the new system. In 1990,<sup>(52)</sup> he had been requested to undertake extensive consultations with agencies and to commission a study on the differential rate structure and on the feasibility, benefits and costs of a cost-measurement system. Some staff costs to carry out those tasks had been paid for from the core budget. Additional costs for consultants, staff and travel would amount to $420,000, he estimated.

The Governing Council, on 25 June,<sup>(56)</sup> authorized the Administrator to charge up to $420,000 to the support cost line of the fourth programming cycle for the purposes required.

Sectoral support

In April 1991, the Administrator submitted a report to the Governing Council on sectoral support,<sup>(57)</sup> the provision of mostly short-term assistance to Governments and to UNDP resident representatives in determining the nature of technical cooperation programmes, whether financed by UNDP or other sources.

In 1990,<sup>(58)</sup> the Council had requested the Administrator to recommend how $30 million, allocated for the fifth cycle for sectoral support, should be distributed between the programme of the UNIDO country directors and the sectoral support programmes of the smaller technical agencies. In his report,<sup>(57)</sup> the Administrator recommended that those funds be distributed in the same proportion as in the fourth cycle, i.e., $3.8 million per annum for UNIDO and $2.2 million per annum for the smaller agencies.

A second request by the Council in 1990<sup>(59)</sup> dealt with the possible complementarity of the sectoral support programmes with the new support cost arrangements and whether an eventual merger of the sectoral support programme with the provisions of the technical support services of the new support cost arrangements should be considered. The Administrator recommended that the sectoral support programme be continued in the fifth programming cycle. Because of the complementarity, as pointed out by the Council, it was recommended that the programme be reviewed as part of the evaluation of the new arrangements and consultations with the smaller agencies, scheduled for 1993.

The Administrator supported the request of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) to receive financing from the sectoral support programme, joining the smaller technical agencies approved for participation in the programme: IMO, the International Trade Centre, ITU, UNCTAD, UPU, WIPO, WMO, WTO, IAEA, the United Nations

Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations (TNCs).

On 25 June,<sup>(60)</sup> the Governing Council accepted the Administrator's proposal on allocation of sectoral support funds and authorized him to add ICAO to the list of smaller technical agencies participating in the sectoral support programme. The Council invited the Industrial Development Board to address the question of financing the UNIDO country directors' programme in the light of the successor arrangements to support costs. It also decided that the sectoral support programme would be reviewed as part of the evaluation of the new support cost arrangements and consultations with the smaller technical agencies in 1993.

Special Programme Resources

At its special session in February, the Governing Council adopted a decision on SPR.<sup>(61)</sup> Noting that in accordance with resource planning criteria adopted in 1990,<sup>(58)</sup> SPR totalled 7 per cent of programmable resources in the fifth programming cycle, the Council stressed the importance of SPR as a catalyst in assuring that the other resources of the programme achieved the objective of building the national capacity of developing countries and its role in improving the quality of UNDP-funded technical assistance. The Administrator was requested to report to the Council on disbursements during the previous year under each SPR category, on the geographical distribution of disbursements, and on the amount of funds committed under each category. The Council also drew up a programme outline for the Administrator to follow in providing information for approval of commitment of resources for each subcategory of SPR allocations.

In addition, the Council decided that SPR totalling $313 million would be earmarked during the fifth programming cycle for six categories of programmes: disaster mitigation; thematic activities; other special and/or new activities; aid coordination; programme development; and assistance to the Palestinian people. A total of $16 million would be allocated for contingencies.

The Administrator responded to the Council's request by submitting in May a report on SPR programming,<sup>(62)</sup> which gave an overview of SPR and a summary of the programming documents for each of the subcategories of SPR, with the exception of social dimensions of adjustment, transfer and adaptation of technology for development, and TCDC, which would be submitted in 1992. For each specific area of focus and subcategory, a programme or task manager would be designated to develop, elaborate and manage the programme. Mechanisms would be established for the coordination of activities in the six areas of focus and programme development. Within the guidelines for the six areas of focus, procedures would be established to ensure that SPR activities achieved the objective of supporting, strengthening and supplementing IPF-funded activities. Thus, activities would be developed through a continuous dialogue between field offices and headquarters.

The Council, on 20 September, adopted a decision on general guidelines and approval procedures for SPR.(63) It authorized the Administrator to release up to 15 per cent of the fifth programming cycle allocation for each subcategory of SPR for which documentation was received by the Council in 1991. It requested him to submit in 1992 revised programming documents for each subcategory, drawing on the Council's February 1991 decision(61) and views expressed by delegations during the resumed thirty-eighth (September) session. Those documents would be considered approved by the Council unless delegations raised objections at its special session in February 1992. The Administrator therefore was authorized to release the remainder of the fifth programming cycle SPR allocation and requested to ensure that: SPR-funded activities were made in response to requests from recipient countries; clear accountability for each subcategory was established; SPR approval procedures were streamlined; performance indicators for each subcategory for monitoring and impact evaluation were developed; and systematic utilization of evaluation results in future programming was ensured. The Council also requested the Administrator to submit reviews of the subcategories within the first three years of the fifth programming cycle, so that the Council could reallocate funds among the categories for the remainder of the cycle.

By decision 1991/317 of 17 October, the Economic and Social Council took note of an extract from the UNDP Governing Council's report on its resumed thirty-eighth session, which contained its decision on general guidelines and approval procedures for SPR.

Funding strategy

In response to a 1990 decision of the Governing Council,(64) the Administrator submitted a report in April 1991 on the implementation of a funding strategy for UNDP.(65) The report dealt with projecting a sharper image of UNDP, building on UNDP's comparative advantages, enhancing national capacity, coordination of programming and funding, and improvement of programme quality and effectiveness.

Staff-related matters

Senior management structure

In 1990,(66) the Governing Council had welcomed the intention of the Administrator to engage an external consulting firm to make recommendations on the future senior management structure of UNDP. The report by a firm of international management consultants was submitted to the Council in March and April 1991.(67) The Administrator also submitted his comments on the consultants' report.(68) He noted that the broad strategies proposed were to a large extent a reinforcement of the process of change already under way in UNDP, and stated that the consultants had pointed out that only limited savings could be expected from the changes proposed at the senior management levels. The report did not elaborate on indirect savings at the Professional and General Service levels resulting from reductions, nor did it identify the savings from the proposed merger of trust funds with the proposed Bureau for Programmes and Policy and the regional bureaux. Considerable savings were promised at headquarters as a result of strategic decentralization, but were only mentioned as potential savings, not as fact. The Administrator wished to maintain two senior-level positions he considered necessary. He agreed with various proposals regarding regional bureaux.

ACABQ submitted its comments on the reports in May.(45) It agreed with the consultants' view that UNDP activities and methods of operation had grown without an overall coordinated plan and that many of the crucial organizational issues could not be resolved without an explicit UNDP strategy.

With regard to the proposal for the regional bureaux and division managers, ACABQ believed that the creation of those posts required prior approval of the Council, which the Administrator should seek with a full analysis and justification for his proposals. Furthermore, ACABQ recommended that the Council neither take a decision on the matter at that time, nor act on the other recommendations accepted by the Administrator, but defer such decisions until the special session in February 1992.

On 25 June,(69) the Council recognized that the consultants' report and the Administrator's comments were proposals for consideration in a continuing reform process to ensure efficiency and efficacy in responding to needs for technical cooperation in developing countries. It also recognized the need for strengthening the policy and strategy formulation capacity of UNDP, and the advantages of managerial decentralization. Noting the intention of the Administrator to reduce the number of units reporting directly to him, the Council urged him to make proposals for reducing high-level posts and other senior-level (D-1 and D-2) posts.

The Administrator was requested to present in 1992 a plan of action with his recommendations on management structure and their impact, including financial implications. The plan of action should include further information on the concepts of division manager and strategy group, including information on functions, responsibilities, authority and accountability. Information on ops was also requested, taking into account ACABQ's comments, the new support cost arrangements, renewed emphasis on national capacity-building and national execution, the findings of the Board of External Auditors and internal management analysis of UNDP. The Council requested the Administrator, in his plan of action, to provide information on the legal status of the Council's secretariat, also being the secretariat for UNFPA and DTCD. It also requested him to provide information on accountability and quality control mechanisms which would accompany any change in the delegation of authority, as well as a description of the internal quality control mechanisms of UNDP and project review and approval processes in the field and at headquarters.

Other technical cooperation

UN programmes

The United Nations continued to provide technical cooperation assistance for economic and social development during 1991, mainly through DTCD. Those activities were described by the Secretary-General in his annual report to the UNDP Governing Council on United Nations technical cooperation activities.(1) In addition to DTCD, organizations engaged in technical cooperation included the regional commissions, UNHCS, UNCTAD, the Centre for Human Rights, the United Nations Office at Vienna, the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat, the United Nations Centre on TNCs and UNEP. They accounted for project expenditures on behalf of UNDP and UNFPA, with DTCD responsible for almost three quarters of the total.

During 1991, DTCD was closely involved with UNDP and the four other principal United Nations agencies affected (ILO, FAO, UNIDO and UNESCO) in working out the modalities for successful conduct of the new support costs regime (see above). Similarly, United Nations Headquarters (including the Office of the DICE Director-General, the Controller, DTCD and the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs) and the regional commissions were engaged with UNFPA in delineating planned new arrangements in the area of population.

In 1991, the United Nations system delivered a technical cooperation programme of $285 million, compared with $277 million in 1990, representing a 3 per cent increase in project expenditures.

DTCD activities

In his annual report on technical cooperation activities,(1) the Secretary-General said that healthy trends continued in DTCD performance in 1991. It had 980 technical cooperation projects under execution, with a total delivery of $182 million in project expenditures against budgets of $225 million. Projects financed by UNDP represented $119.6 million; those financed by UNFPA accounted for $23.2 million; $28.4 million was financed by trust funds; and $6.9 million was expended under the United Nations regular programme of technical cooperation.

On a geographical basis, the DTCD-executed programme included expenditures of $83.5 million for Africa; $50.7 million for Asia and the Pacific; $34.3 million for the Middle East, Mediterranean, Europe and interregional projects; and $9.6 million for the Americas. The largest growth was in Africa, where the programme increased by $7.4 million. Project delivery in Africa remained the largest, with 47 per cent of total delivery.

By sector, the distribution of project expenditures was as follows: natural resources and energy, $63.1 million; development planning, $37.1 million; statistics, $26 million; public administration and finance, $25 million; population, $10.7 million; social development, $5.8 million; the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, $5.5 million; and others, $4.9 million. Natural resources and energy, which included work in minerals, energy, water and infrastructure, comprised 35 per cent of the DTCD total.

By component, DTCD delivery in 1991 included $94.9 million for project personnel, $32.1 million for training, $29.2 million for equipment, $12.3 million for subcontracted services and $9.6 million for miscellaneous expenses. The component which showed the largest growth was training, which rose by $5.3 million, an increase of 20 per cent.

In 1991, DTCD was engaged with UNDP and others in developing a programme approach to technical cooperation rather than sets of individual and more specific projects. An example of a 1991 mission conducted under this approach focused on one country's bureau of statistics. Rather than targeting data-processing improvements in that bureau alone, plans were made for a sequence of endeavours to help several ministries improve the data they supplied, and to help the bureau improve the timeliness and utility of the information it distributed to them and other users.

DTED developed new initiatives in several areas in 1991. Electoral administration became a new area of ID expertise, within its mandate, to help strengthen public-sector institutions for effective governance. Strengthening government capacity for national execution was another area of emphasis, and DTCD held two pilot workshops, both dealing with administration of project personnel. DTED also focused on aid accountability. Another new area of concern was economies in transition; in September, DTCD organized a meeting in Moscow for participants from 17 countries of Asia, Eastern and Western Europe, and Latin America to discuss government steps to adjust to the transition from centrally planned economies. An innovative effort, begun in 1990 and funded by the United Nations regular programme of technical assistance and Japan, was a project to finance the human, institutional, technical and management capacities of developing countries in development planning, with a special focus on Africa, commonly known as the Africa Initiative. The project supported workshops, needs assessment studies and upgrading of planning institutions.

DTCD continued its efforts to strengthen the monitoring and evaluation of its programmes and projects, with particular emphasis on assessments of socio-economic and environmental impacts. More was being directed towards obtaining project sustainability, which had often been hampered by insufficiency of government funding to maintain project operations and to meet staffing requirements. A total of 41 in-depth evaluations of DTCD-executed projects took place in 1991. Of those, 32 were for UNDP-funded projects and the remainder were funded by UNFPA. The breakdown by substantive area was water (10), population (7), statistics (7), public administration and finance (6), minerals (4), development planning

(3), energy (3) and infrastructure (1). In 1991, DTCD participated in the seventh inter-agency group meeting on evaluation. As follow-up, it prepared a brief for UNDP with information on its experience in monitoring and evaluating nationally executed projects, including comments on entry points for agency participation in those exercises.

Under the United Nations regular programme of technical cooperation, DTCD responded to priority needs through short-term advisory services, training activities and experimental projects. During 1991, it organized 30 workshops and seminars with regular programme support and provided advisory services in all sectors.

Recruitment of project personnel, mainly through the Technical Assistance Recruitment and Administration Service, increased in 1991 to 812 international appointments. By region of assignment, they were sent to Africa (406), Asia and the Pacific (276), Latin America (67) and North America and the Caribbean (63). In terms of region of origin, 369 came from Europe, 263 from North America, 97 from Latin America and 86 from Asia and the Pacific.

A total of 5,312 training awards were implemented in 1991, including fellowships, study tours, seminars and workshops, as compared with 4,453 in 1990. Fellows and participants from 131 countries were trained in 106 host countries. Most placements were made in the United States, followed by Japan, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United Kingdom and Zimbabwe. Over half of all trainees were placed in developing countries, a total of 2,877. DTCD continued to encourage the participation of women and in 1991 granted 998 awards to women, compared with 772 in 1990.

On 25 June 1991,(2) the UNDP Governing Council, taking note of the Secretary-General's report on the 1990 technical cooperation activities of the United Nations(3) urged UNDP and UNFPA to use to full advantage the technical competence and services available from DTCD. It welcomed DTCD efforts to increase national capacities for project execution and implementation and encouraged it to continue such work, including training in the process aspects of technical cooperation and for strengthening of central management and implementation units within government offices, upon request. DTCD was requested to continue to provide information on its capabilities and services so that their nature and availability would become more widely known.

UNDP-DTCD cooperation

As requested by the Governing Council in 1990,(4) the Administrator reported in May 1991 on cooperation between UNDP and DTCD(5) They had responded to the Council's call to establish a more effective division of labour, a complementary relationship, and ways to eliminate duplicative administrative support activities. The Administrator reported that some progress had been made, including agreement to work more closely with OPS. Noting that the need for cooperation had been an issue of concern for a number of years, the Administrator said that the two organizations would review the draft guidelines for collaboration, submitted to the Council in 1987,<sup>(6)</sup> with a view to implementing them. Although the guidelines had never been finalized and agreed to, there had been some cooperation through the use of technical capabilities of DTCD in OPS-executed projects. Arrangements were discussed whereby DTCD would participate as an observer in meetings of the OPS Project Acceptance Committee, which reviewed all projects for which OPS execution was sought and decided on the implementation feasibility of a project as well as the need and source of technical inputs.

The Administrator proposed two other areas for further cooperation-round-table meetings and NATCAPs, and management development programmes. Frequently those projects were UNDP-funded and DTCD-executed in such areas as sectoral and national planning, public administration and aid coordination. Other areas to be examined for closer collaboration were computerized rosters of experts, procurement and fellowship placement on projects.

The Governing Council, on 25 June,<sup>(7)</sup> noted that efforts to intensify DTCD-UNDP cooperation had been limited. It requested the Administrator, in close association with the Secretary-General, to initiate a study on all options of closer cooperation and to submit a report in 1992. The Council decided to forward its views on that report in time to contribute to the General Assembly's 1992 review of the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields.

United Nations Volunteers

In a report on UNV for the biennium 1990-1991,<sup>(8)</sup> the Administrator said the programme continued to enjoy growing support from Governments and United Nations agencies, and the number of UNV specialists and Domestic Development Service (DDS) field workers serving in the field rose from 1,801 at the end of 1989 to an estimated 2,080 at the end of 1991. The regional and sectoral distribution of UNV activity followed a pattern similar to that of previous years: nearly three quarters of all UNV assignments were in LDCs and other land-locked and small island States; and about half of the assignments were in Africa, some 30 per cent in Asia and the Pacific, and the remainder were distributed between the Arab States and Europe, and Latin America and the Caribbean. The majority of assignments were in agriculture, community development, health and education.

Some new trends were reported during the biennium: there was a greater sophistication in technical roles, along with sharp growth in DDS grassroots activities; and volunteers had taken on more training functions, as well as supervisory responsibilities in agency-executed projects, and had given greater emphasis to national capacity-building. Those changes reflected the growing recognition of the professionalism and quality of UNV specialists and DDS field workers by Governments and United Nations agencies. In 1990 and 1991, the UNV roster remained at about 5,500 candidates from 131 countries.

UNV-executed projects, which accounted for about 55 per cent of all UNV assignments, were managed by Governments or national organizations which set directions and gave technical guidance, while UNV provided assistance through the recruitment of specialists. UNV cooperated with United Nations agencies at the project level, where agencies provided technical supervision, through either team leaders or consultancies.

An increasingly important role played by UNV during the preceding few years had been to assist national programmes of post-crisis rehabilitation and reconstruction (as with programmes in Afghanistan, Angola and Mozambique), or to support capacity-building in the context of long-standing relief programmes (as in Ethiopia). UNV had also become involved in immediate, short-term responses to emergency situations. As part of its efforts to streamline and decentralize UNV headquarters functions, a computer program was designed to support the functions of the Programme Officers in the field, known as the Programme Officer Support System. In 1991, UNV embarked on the design of a comprehensive management information system covering every aspect of its areas of responsibility, including recruitment, monitoring, administration and financial accounting.

The Special Voluntary Fund (SVF) was used to pay for part of the external costs of UNV specialists and DDS field workers, but it accounted for less than one third of the total external costs of volunteers, the rest coming from project budgets. Since contributions had remained at a modest level, SVF had become insufficient to meet future commitments (repatriation, return travel, etc.) to serving volunteers. Consequently, the use of SVF for that purpose was no longer tenable. The Administrator proposed that, starting on 1 January 1992, the full external costs of volunteers would be charged to project budgets. The remaining funds would cover other start-up costs.

A UNV workshop on TCDC and NGO networks (Kathmandu, Nepal, 29 and 30 November 1991), funded by UNDP and organized by UNV in response to a 1989 Governing Council request,(9) explored the potential of the DDS activities of UNV as a means of TCDC with a view to initiating new activities of that kind. The workshop concluded that the introduction of TCDC modalities into UNV/DDS was relevant, feasible and necessary for UNV to promote networks among participating organizations. UNV was requested to establish a plan of action, and, as a first step, establish a database incorporating details on all NGOs participating in the UNV/DDS programme.

The third UNV intergovernmental meeting (Kathmandu, 1-6 December) marked the twentieth anniversary of UNV. It was attended by over 200 participants who shared experience and ideas on the roles of volunteers in development work and humanitarian assistance. They represented Governments, the United Nations system, including UNDP, national focal points in developing countries, UNV cooperating organizations, NGOs and volunteers themselves.

On 21 June,(10) the Governing Council requested the Administrator to consider streamlining the administrative functions of the UNV programme, particularly through further decentralization of routine decision-making authority to the field, with a view to achieving an overall reduction of administrative staff, particularly support staff, at UNV headquarters.

Technical cooperation among developing countries

In his annual report for 1991,(11) the Administrator stated that, with a view to developing an effective strategy for TCDC in the 1990s, the major categories of activities and mechanisms supported by the UNDP Special Unit for TCDC during the fourth programming cycle were evaluated during 1991. The findings and recommendations of the evaluation were included in the strategy for TCDC for the fifth cycle and beyond. They included: integration of the TCDC modality into national development activities and into the programmes and activities supported by the United Nations development system; increased efforts to focus SPR on strengthening the capacity of developing country institutions to apply the TCDC modality; and the improvement of the quality and volume of information in the TCDC information referral system (TCDC-INRES).

In line with that strategy, the Special Unit provided support during 1991 to activities of a promotional and catalytic nature, leading to sustained exchanges among public- and private-sector institutions in participating countries. Priority areas of concentration included human resources development, food and agriculture, the environment, primary health care, transfer of technology and South-South trade.

Three sector-specific exercises were held in 1991: the Philippines hosted a meeting to negotiate and finalize agreements in the food and agriculture sector with 22 countries participating; 40 developing countries engaged in a similar exercise at New Delhi, with Indian institutions pledging 148 training opportunities for the participating countries; and small- and medium-scale enterprises for electronic goods were the focus of a third series of consultations at Seoul, Republic of Korea, where institutions from 23 developing countries finalized agreements. Thirty-four joint ventures were also agreed on between private enterprises of the Republic of Korea and participating countries.

TCDC promotional activities were also undertaken by bringing participants together to exchange information and technology in subjects such as: solar energy, biogas technology and practices; biotechnology and human health; behavioural change for the prevention of HIV/AIDS; environment and deforestation; low-cost housing construction technology; ethnobotany; and the promotion of technology-based enterprises.

As a result of continued vigorous promotion of TCDC-INRES and recognition of its potential, use of the system greatly increased during 1991 when it handled more than 1,200 formal requests for referrals, compared to 750 in 1990.

In his report on United Nations technical cooperation activities,(1) the Secretary-General said that DTCD in 1991 supported further promotional and operational activities focusing on TCDC. In keeping with the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing TCDC,(12) DTCD emphasized the use of developing country capacities in its work. Under the regular programme of technical cooperation, workshops and seminars facilitated the exchange of expertise and networking among developing countries, while pilot projects tested new approaches. TCDC aspects were incorporated in them so as to make use of related experiences in other developing countries. Resources and talents from developing countries were an important part of project delivery. In 1991, some 41 per cent of DTCD-appointed experts and consultants were from developing countries. Of the training placements made, 54 per cent were located in developing countries. Procurement of equipment from developing countries amounted to $15.6 million or 48 per cent. As a result of guidelines issued in 1990 to ensure that consideration be given to firms from developing countries in procurement of equipment and supplies, greater use of such sources became evident.

An example of DTCD collaboration with the UNDP Special Unit for TCDC in 1991 was support for a TCDC training workshop in Ecuador. DTCD also provided substantive and organizational support to the interregional TCDC exercise scheduled for Ecuador in 1992, which would focus on mining and related environmental matters. In another new step, DTCD in 1991 participated in a meeting of the TCDC focal points of Latin America and the Caribbean and of national directors of technical cooperation, held in Venezuela in September. New programme activities in cooperation with the Latin America Economic System, which was the TCDC focal point for the region, were being developed as follow-up.

A meeting of Governments of developing countries with executing agencies of the United Nations development system on TCDC was held in New York on 23 and 24 May 1991,<sup>(13)</sup> in accordance with a 1987 decision of the High-level Committee on the Review of TCDC.<sup>(14)</sup> The Governments of 41 developing countries were represented, as were 22 United Nations organizations. The meeting reviewed the activities of the system in supporting and promoting TCDC since the adoption in 1978 of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action.<sup>(12)</sup> It adopted recommendations on enhancing the use of TCDC in the activities of the organizations, as follows: the reports of the annual meetings of TCDC focal points of United Nations organizations should be considered by ACC; a special meeting of TCDC focal points, to be convened by early 1992, should consider draft guidelines for the review of TCDC policies and procedures in the organizations; the draft guidelines should be submitted through ACC to the High-level Committee for its consideration and adoption, for subsequent implementation by organizations; the implementation of the guidelines should be monitored by ACC; and information on problems encountered in the implementation of the guidelines should be provided by the Administrator in his biennial reports to the Committee.

Action by the Committee on TCDC. The seventh session of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries was held in New York from 28 to 31 May 1991;<sup>(15)</sup> a further meeting was held on 6 June to adopt its report.

The Committee had before it a report by the UNDP Administrator<sup>(16)</sup> on progress made in implementing the tasks entrusted to the United Nations development system by the Buenos Aires Plan of Action. The report, based on information provided by 22 organizations and bodies, covered the 1989-1990 biennium. Most organizations had carried out promotional and operational activities in support of TCDC during that period. The use of developing countries' capacity by the organizations in their technical cooperation programmes generally continued to expand. However, it remained difficult to quantify in financial terms the progress achieved. Some quantitative measure against which progress from period to period could be assessed was needed to improve statistical procedures for tracking financial support for TCDC. Some confusion still existed among organizations as to which activities qualified as TCDC and which did not.

Available information showed that the system's efforts were concentrated heavily on promotional activities and that initiatives from previous years continued to be followed up and expanded, particularly in the area of networking.

The report noted that there was no question that the Buenos Aires Plan of Action remained valid, and it was clear that the system accepted it as its framework and mandate for the support of TCDC. Experience since its adoption had led to refinements in the theory and practice of TCDC. The Administrator proposed that a comprehensive review of that experience, focusing on policy, mechanisms and operational issues would be timely and could contribute to formulating an integrated strategy for the promotion and support of TCDC in UNDP's fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) and in all other technical cooperation programmes of the system.

In response to a 1989 request by the Committee,<sup>(17)</sup> the Administrator submitted a report on progress made in 1989-1990 in strengthening and improving intergovernmental TCDC programming exercises.<sup>(18)</sup> It reviewed the objectives and methods deployed in organizing exercises, and lessons learned in the process. The Administrator drew some preliminary conclusions pending the outcome of an ongoing in-depth evaluation of the exercises by the Special Unit for TCDC. He stated that TCDC programming exercises had played a role in promoting the use of TCDC modalities for implementing development projects, but there was a growing need for external financial resources to facilitate timely implementation of the activities agreed to in them. There was also a need for Governments to establish, through national TCDC focal points, appropriate systems of follow-up on agreements reached at exercises, to be complemented by UNDP's stepped-up capacity to monitor, report and evaluate the effectiveness of the effort. In addition, national focal points needed to be strengthened.

The Administrator, as requested by the Committee in 1989,<sup>(19)</sup> reported on information received from some Governments and intergovernmental organizations on TCDC policy and related matters, promotional and operational TCDC activities and financial arrangements.<sup>(20)</sup> He stated that there was an indication that the use of TCDC was on the increase, taking the form of bilateral agreements and joint development undertakings. The level of information received, as reflected in the quantity and quality of responses, continued to be a cause for concern about the capacity of Governments and intergovernmental organizations to gather and report information on those activities. They were urged to enhance their capacities to collect and disseminate information on TCDC activities. The level of participation of women in TCDC activities, as reflected in the data provided by some developing countries, showed a trend to involve women. The Committee had before it another report on the subject of women in TCDC.<sup>(21)</sup>

In addition, the Committee considered a report by the Administrator<sup>(22)</sup> summarizing comments from United Nations organizations on the report of a group of governmental experts on the rules, regulations and procedures of the organizations concerning TCDC. The group of 13 governmental experts had met in New York in April 1990.<sup>(23)</sup> The Administrator concluded that promoting and integrating TCDC in the programmes and activities of organizations had been accomplished at a slower pace because of attitudinal, procedural and financial constraints. To deal with the problem, he recommended: enhancing awareness of TCDC in the organizations through information, orientation and training activities; strengthening of the organizations' focal points for TCDC; expansion of financial resources for TCDC; modification where necessary of the organizations' policies and procedures concerning TCDC; and an overall effort to mainstream TCDC into programme and project cycles. He also recommended that a meeting of TCDC focal points of the organizations be convened in 1992, devoted to preparing guidelines for the review of policies and procedures in relevant organizations; the guidelines should be monitored by ACC.

In April 1991,<sup>(24)</sup> the Administrator submitted to the Committee the report of the third meeting of the TCDC focal points of United Nations organizations (Geneva, 5 and 6 June 1990).

On 6 June, the Committee adopted 12 decisions recommended by its working group. In one,<sup>(25)</sup> it endorsed the Administrator's proposal that an overall framework for the promotion and application of TCDC in the 1990s should be formulated in accordance with the guidelines of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action. The Administrator was to report to the Committee at its next (1993) session on such a strategy.

In another decision,<sup>(26)</sup> the Committee encouraged Governments of developing countries that had bilateral TCDC projects through past programming exercises to continue to provide the necessary resources for their implementation, including support from their IPFs. The Administrator was requested to undertake follow-up and evaluation of the programming exercises and to mobilize financial support for projects agreed by the concerned countries.

In a decision on information from Governments and intergovernmental organizations on TCD activities,<sup>(27)</sup> the Committee encouraged developing countries to strengthen their national focal points for TCDC. It requested the Special Unit for TCDC to improve formats and questionnaires to Governments when requesting information from them on TCDC, to provide clear definitions of TCDC and of different categories of TCDC, and to include in the questionnaires a breakdown of TCDC personnel between experts from developed and developing countries.

By a decision on the role of women in TCDC,<sup>(28)</sup> the Committee expressed concern at the little progress in this area and the lack of practical relevance achieved by the system in integrating women in TCDC. It decided that the Special Unit for TCDC should take certain steps to enhance this process and requested the Administrator to report on the subject in 1993.

In a further decision,<sup>(29)</sup> the Committee recommended to the Governing Council the convening in 1992 of a special meeting of TCDC focal points of United Nations organizations to be devoted to preparing guidelines for the review of policies and procedures concerning TCDC. It recommended that guidelines be reviewed and monitored by ACC for implementation by the organizations.

In a decision on implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action,<sup>(30)</sup> the Committee urged United Nations organizations to develop the capability to measure in quantitative and financial terms their support for TCDC activities. It considered that the figures in the Administrator's report<sup>(16)</sup> gave an inaccurate representation of TCDC support. The Committee requested that the next meeting of TCDC focal points address the question of defining TCDC and develop a common methodology for identifying, evaluating, reporting and following up on their TCDC activities. Reporting at future sessions of the Committee would be based on a single document containing an analysis of the information provided by the organizations, with recommendations where appropriate. Those organizations were called on to implement the recommendations of the third (1990) meeting of TCDC focal points.

Another decision<sup>(31)</sup> dealt with the 1990 publication The Challenge to the South: The Report of the South Commission, particularly its contents regarding the role of South-South cooperation. The Committee welcomed the inclusion in its own programme of work of an item on consideration of a report by the Administrator on the extent to which the South Commission's recommendations on TCDC could be implemented. It invited the Administrator, in cooperation with the DIEC Director-General, to prepare the report.

By another decision,<sup>(32)</sup> the Committee welcomed the decision of Morocco to host an international consultative meeting on TCDC in 1992 to examine ways to enhance that form of cooperation, taking into account progress in implementing the Buenos Aires Plan of Action. The Committee called on the United Nations system, especially UNDP, to support Morocco in organizing the meeting and requested the Administrator to report in 1993 on the outcome of the meeting.

By a decision on a North-South round table on TCDC,<sup>(33)</sup> the Committee invited donor countries to give attention to TCDC in their foreign aid allocations and urged Governments to organize a North-South round table comprising a number of countries and personalities to assess general issues of TCDC.

In a further decision,<sup>(34)</sup> the Committee underlined the need to take follow-up action on the 1982 Economic Commission for Africa (ECA)/Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) Joint Meeting of Governmental Experts from Africa and Latin America on Economic and Technical Cooperation,<sup>(35)</sup> and on its proposals in the areas of interregional cooperation among developing countries, namely, trade and finance, science and technology, and human resources. To that end, it urged ECA and ECLAC to start consultations with a view to implementing the first of those proposals-establishing a trade network between the two regions-invited them to consider establishing trade networks in their respective regions to be linked up interregionally on completion of the regional stage, and requested them to reinforce existing contacts with regional and subregional organizations like the Economic Community of West African States and the Latin American Economic System, as well as development finance institutions such as the Inter-American Development Bank and the African Development Bank. The Committee requested the Administrator to engage action with the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/GATT and UNCTAD to ensure their involvement in implementing such a trade network project, and to report to the UNDP Governing Council in 1992.

The Committee approved the Provisional agenda for its eighth (1993) session<sup>(36)</sup>

UNDP Governing Council action. On 25 June,<sup>(37)</sup> the Governing Council requested the Administrator to ensure that the necessary measures were taken for the use of the TCDC modality in the formulation, preparation, execution and evaluation of projects financed from regional, interregional and global programmes and from national IPFs, and in projects financed from SPR in the fifth programming cycle. He was invited to report to the Council in 1993 on those measures.

In addition, the Council took note of the Administrator's report on views of United Nations organizations on the report of the group of governmental experts on the rules, regulations and procedures of such organizations concerning TCDC.<sup>(22)</sup> It also welcomed the decision of the High-level Committee<sup>(29)</sup> containing its recommendation on the preparation of guidelines for the coordination and review of policies and procedures concerning TCDC in United Nations organizations. It requested the Administrator, in cooperation with other United Nations organizations, to facilitate the implementation of that decision and to report to the Council in 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 46/159 without vote.

Technical cooperation among developing countries

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,<sup>a</sup> and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,<sup>b</sup>

Recalling its resolutions 33/134 of 19 December 1978, in which it endorsed the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, and 44/222 of 22 December 1989, as well as other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Stressing that technical cooperation among developing countries is an indispensable and integral part of their efforts to accelerate development and should act as a springboard for enhancing the integration of the developing countries into the international economy based on equity and mutual benefit,

Also stressing that technical cooperation among developing countries remains a key element in global economic cooperation, its purpose being not to displace North-South cooperation with South-South cooperation but to complement the former within a cooperative framework that is truly universal,

Reaffirming that, while developing countries have the primary responsibility for promoting technical cooperation among themselves, developed countries and the United Nations system should assist and support such activities and that the United Nations system should play a prominent role as promoter and catalyst of technical cooperation among developing countries; in accordance with the Buenos Aires Plan of Action.

1. Reaffirming the continued validity of the recommendations of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries and the importance of technical cooperation among developing countries;

2. Endorses the decisions adopted by the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries at its seventh session;

3. Urges all Member States, the United Nations Development Programme and other relevant organs, organizations, bodies and programmes of the United Nations system to give high priority in their particular fields of activity to the support, including financial support, of activities in technical cooperation among developing countries;

4. Urges the United Nations Development Programme to take the lead in assisting developing countries in overcoming the problems encountered in their efforts to promote and implement activities in technical cooperation among developing countries;

5. Calls upon the international community to take the necessary measures to implement the commitments agreed upon in the context of technical cooperation among developing countries;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

19 December 1991 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/46/645/Add.5) without vote, 10 December (meeting 57); draft by Ghana for Group of 77 (A/C.2/46/L.18), orally revised; agenda item 77 (d).

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 2nd Committee 22, 33, 56, 57; plenary 78.

The Assembly, by decision 46/464 of 20 December, decided to request the Economic and Social Council to consider among the various proposals for themes on coordination, at its regular session of 1992, a theme on TCDC as a modality in the formulation, preparation, execution and evaluation of the projects implemented by the organs, organizations, bodies, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system in the economic, social and related fields.

By decision 46/439 of 19 December, the Assembly took note of two notes by the Secretary-General explaining that he and the UNDP Administrator, because they had been requested to report to the Assembly and the High-level Committee on the same subjects, had cooperated in producing one document on each issue. By a note of 17 October,<sup>(38)</sup> the Secretary-General explained that this was the case in the report on progress in implementing the tasks entrusted to the United Nations system by the Buenos Aires Plan of Action,<sup>(16)</sup> and the report on information from some Governments and intergovernmental organizations on their TCDC activities.<sup>(20)</sup> Similarly, by a note of 15 October,<sup>(39)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that he and the Administrator had cooperated in producing a report on strengthening intergovernmental programming exercises for TCDC.<sup>(18)</sup>

Implementation of JIU recommendations

As requested by the High-level Committee in 1989,<sup>(40)</sup> the Administrator submitted a report on the implementation of recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on support for the Buenos Aires Plan of Action.<sup>(41)</sup> Those recommendations, drafted in 1985<sup>(42)</sup> were commented on by 22 of the 36 agencies and organizations that were invited to provide information. The Administrator concluded that, when the latest information was compared with the situation as described in a similar report two years earlier, little had changed. The recommendations of JIU were being implemented selectively and in varying degrees by the organizations, in accordance with their own mandates and programming and budgetary procedures. Despite the uneven implementation of the recommendations, organizations appeared to take TCDC seriously, although not on the scale that Governments would prefer.

The Committee, on 6 June,<sup>(30)</sup> reaffirmed that the 1985 JIU recommendations remained valid, and called for their full implementation.

Staffing of the Special Unit for TCDC

In April 1991, the Administrator, noting that the High-level Committee in 1989 had called for greater financial and personnel support to the Special Unit for TCDC,<sup>(43)</sup> reported to the Committee on the Unit's staffing.<sup>(44)</sup> He said he had endeavoured to maintain the staffing at approximately the same level as reported in 1989—seven established Professional and higher-level posts, and eight General Service posts. In addition, two temporary Professional and two General Service posts had been provided under SPR funding. By reducing the headquarters core posts by one Professional post and one General Service post, and by regularizing the temporary posts at the same time, the result would be an increase from seven Professional and eight General Service posts to eight Professional and nine General Service posts.

On 6 June,<sup>(45)</sup> the Committee took note of the report and recommended that the status of those staff members funded by SPR be regularized. It also recommended that the Unit be maintained with a view to strengthening its capacities and invited the UNDP Governing Council to review the staffing level in relation to its functions and growing responsibilities. The Committee welcomed the inclusion of the Director of the Unit in the UNDP Action Committee, and called on the Administrator to include the Unit in other internal decision-making bodies and to enable it to participate in all policy and operational issues, in project approval, in programming processes, and in regional meetings of regional bureaux, in order to ensure that TCDC received the attention it deserved.

UN Capital Development Fund

The year 1991 marked the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations Capital Development Fund, a multilateral agency providing small-scale capital assistance to officially designated LDCs and other countries regarded as LDCs.

In his annual report for 1991,<sup>(1)</sup> the UNDP Administrator stated that it had been a record year for UNCDF in terms of new project commitments, which reached $82 million. He noted that UNCDF, at the beginning of the year, had undertaken a review of its programming process with the goal of increasing its efficiency and achieving greater coordination and harmonization with UNDP. The Fund's activities continued to be driven by national priorities and by UNDP's areas of focus, particularly poverty eradication and grass-roots participation, women in development and environmental protection.

To the extent feasible, the Fund promoted the subcontracting of qualified national companies and maximum user participation. In the Lao People's Democratic Republic, a road construction project would be implemented under professional service contracts with two national construction companies and, in Botswana, local contractors would carry out building works for four community junior secondary schools financed under a UNCDF loan of $4.8 million. In Malawi, 1,000 boreholes would be rehabilitated over a 30-month period and equipped with locally manufactured hand-pumps; 250,000 beneficiary villagers would be mobilized and organized to operate and maintain the pumps.

During 1991, 20 project evaluations were undertaken, two of which were particularly noteworthy. A biogas project in Nepal was having a positive effect on conserving fuel-wood and reducing imports of kerosene and chemical fertilizers; it had also made the rural population more conscious of the environmental implications of deforestation. In the Gambia, the application of solar-voltaic technology in rural areas had greatly reduced the consumption of imported kerosene and improved the reliability of the energy supply in rural health centres.

A review of participatory mechanisms with UNCDF programmes was launched to assess the relation between the Fund's small-scale investment and its impact on the organization and mobilization of the beneficiary communities. Of four case-studies undertaken, two were completed—one in Mali and one in Guinea. Preliminary findings suggested that the area concentration approach had had a significant, positive impact on the lives of the population.

In response to a 1981 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(2)</sup> the UNDP Administrator submitted to the Governing Council a broad biennial policy review of UNCDF.<sup>(3)</sup> In addition to reviewing the Fund's operations in 1989 and 1990 and the experience gained with the different funding modalities used, the report provided information on its operations and financial status under its modified partial-funding system.

On 25 June,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council invited UNCDF to maintain its existing country coverage, benefiting LDCs first and foremost. It noted that implementation of the partial-funding formula had allowed for high levels of programming and approved its continued implementation. UNCDF was encouraged to continue to foster creativity with a view to enhancing the impact of its activities on the beneficiary countries. The Council noted use of the Fund's loan facility and urged the Administrator to continue to use it selectively, according to the circumstances of the country or project concerned. The Administrator was also asked to report on progress in 1993 and outline his plans for the facility's future. In addition, he was invited in his next report to address the Fund's experiences with revolving funds and the findings of a study undertaken by UNCDF on participatory activities. The Council urged the Administrator to follow up on the findings of evaluations undertaken and to take steps to strengthen the Fund's capacity to deliver the desired level and quality of assistance to lower-income groups in recipient countries, including assuring that its project design, review and approval processes were consistent with and appropriate to the Fund's character as a grant capital assistance investment fund. The Council expressed its appreciation, in the Fund's twenty-fifth anniversary year, to Governments for contributions made to the Fund and renewed its appeal for continued growth in resources.

Chapter III

Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief

In 1991, the United Nations system continued to strive towards a more unified, coordinated approach in providing special assistance to countries with severe economic difficulties. Many of these problems were exacerbated by the frequency of disasters, both natural and man-made.

The final review and appraisal of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 was held in 1991, noting that, in spite of much progress toward democratization, the economic and social situation in Africa actually worsened with the general downward trend in the global economy. Special economic assistance was provided to Chad, Djibouti, Namibia and other front-line States bordering South Africa.

The International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction was well under way in 1991, with several major meetings and events, as the United Nations system, particularly the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator, continued its disaster relief and mitigation activities. With a view to strengthening collective United Nations efforts in that area, the General Assembly adopted guiding principles and other recommendations for the handling of emergency situations, including early warning, prevention, preparedness and stand-by capacity, consolidated appeals and strengthened coordination and leadership (resolution 46/182).

Emergency relief was offered to Bangladesh in the wake of a cyclone, to the Philippines after the eruption of Mount Pinatubo, and to countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region to help combat desertification. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations continued its fight against locust, grasshopper and screw-worm infestations.

The Secretary-General appointed the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna as the Coordinator of United Nations activities related to the 1986 accident at Chernobyl. An ad hoc inter-agency task force, established in April, was to be involved for five years in all aspects of international assistance efforts. The Economic and Social Council welcomed the United Nations response to the accident and the practical measures to facilitate elaboration and presentation of a joint plan to alleviate its effects (resolution 1991/51). At the Chernobyl Pledging Conference in September, a total of $8 million was received or pledged, together with a significant amount of in-kind assistance.

Economic assistance was afforded to Angola and Liberia for rehabilitation, as was emergency assistance to Somalia and the Sudan during civil conflict. In view of the critical humanitarian situation in the Horn of Africa, the Secretary-General established a new Special Emergency Programme for the area.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America continued pursuant to a three-year extension and included Panama as a full participant. Costa Rica and Panama received emergency assistance after severe damage by an earthquake, as did Haiti for its rapidly deteriorating social and economic situation.

The Gulf Task Force continued in 1991 assisting countries in the Middle East affected by the hostilities in the Persian Gulf. Assistance was also granted to Lebanon and Yemen for continuance of their respective reconstruction and development programmes.

Economic assistance

The United Nations continued in 1991 to provide special assistance to a number of developing countries faced with particularly severe economic problems. A wide range of adverse economic conditions, often accompanied by damaging climatic events or conflict, jeopardized development in those countries. Several organizations of the United Nations system participated in the final review and appraisal of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAAERD).

Critical situation in Africa

In response to a 1989 request of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission for Social Development in February 1991 a report on the critical social situation in Africa,<sup>(2)</sup> which reviewed current trends and recent developments. It noted that it was not clear what impact the recent slowing and predicted downturn in the world economy would have on Africa as a whole and on each economy and society, but that it was not likely to be a favourable one.

Social conditions in Africa were also a topic covered in the Secretary-General's interim report on the world social situation.<sup>(3)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1991/6 without vote.

Critical social situation in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969 containing the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, which provides the framework for international cooperation in the field of social development,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 39/29 of 3 December 1984 and 40/40 of 2 December 1985, which led to the convening of the thirteenth special session of the General Assembly, devoted to the critical economic situation in Africa, at which the Assembly adopted by consensus resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, to which the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 is annexed,

Recalling further its resolution 1989/46 of 24 May 1989, in which the Secretary-General was requested, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, the Economic Commission for Africa and the African Development Bank, to prepare a report providing an in-depth evaluation of the critical social situation in Africa, paying particular attention to the obstacles to the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action.

Recognizing that progress in the social and economic fields is an essential priority for developing countries,

Taking into account the fact that in Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990, the Governments of African States reaffirmed their primary responsibility for the economic and social development of their countries, identified areas for priority action, and undertook to mobilize and utilize domestic resources for the achievement of their priority objectives,

Reiterating that the African social and economic crisis is a development crisis that concerns the international community as a whole and that greater realization of the rich physical and human potential of the continent should be an integral part of a common strategy to promote the economic and social advancement of peoples,

Recognizing the efforts being made by African Governments to redress some of the acute social problems confronting them,

Stressing that the prospects for concerted implementation of Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990 are being affected by an unfavourable external economic environment, debt-servicing obligations and the rate of flow of development finance,

1. Takes note of the interim report of the Secretary-General on the world social situation;

2. Appeals to the international community, the States members of the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to increase their cooperation and assistance to enhance the efforts made by the African countries to establish or improve their infrastructure, through the creation of a favourable economic environment;

3. Regrets that the report of the Secretary-General on the critical social situation in Africa, prepared in response to Council resolution 1989/46, failed to meet the requirements set out in paragraph 3 of that resolution;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to direct the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa, in cooperation with the African Development Bank and, as appropriate, the Organization of African Unity, to prepare once again, for submission to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-third session, a report providing an in-depth evaluation of the critical social situation in Africa, paying particular attention to the obstacles to the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, including the impact of structural adjustment policies on the social situation in Africa;

5. Decides that the Commission for Social Development should consider at its thirty-third session the report on the critical social situation in Africa, in the context of its review of the world social situation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/6

30 May 1991 Meeting 12 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1991/85) without vote, 16 May (meeting 6); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1991/26); agenda item 7.

Final review and appraisal of the implementation of UNPAAERD

In 1990,<sup>(4)</sup> the General Assembly had established an Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the final review and appraisal of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, adopted by the Assembly in 1986.<sup>(5)</sup> The Ad Hoc Committee met in New York for an organizational session on 9 April 1991 and from 3 to 14 September. On 14 September, it decided to transmit to the Assembly for adoption a draft resolution, with an annex containing the conclusions of the final review and appraisal (see below).

The Ad Hoc Committee had before it a report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of UNPAAERD,<sup>(7)</sup> which noted that economic and social conditions in Africa had actually worsened during 1986-1990, despite many far-reaching actions and reforms undertaken by African countries, including notable progress towards democratization. The report provided an assessment of the African economy and the impact of international and external constraints on it, economic reform measures undertaken, a review and appraisal of actions taken by African countries, the international community and the United Nations system to implement UNPAAERD, and recommendations on measures to implement growth and development goals for the 1990s and beyond. It concluded that, from the starting point that people were the means and the end of the development process-making human development a priority-elements of an agreement were taking shape that would include: the need to increase agricultural productivity and food security; an enabling environment to foster initiative and enterprise; expansion of productive employment opportunities; empowerment of people, good governance and accountability; action on regional economic integration; and short-term adjustment measures included within a long-term perspective of structural transformation.

An addendum to the report,<sup>(8)</sup> prepared in response to a 1990 request of the Assembly,<sup>(9)</sup> dealt with diversification in the commodity sector in Africa at the national, subregional and regional levels with the support of the international community.

The Ad Hoc Committee also had before it a letter of 21 June<sup>(10)</sup> from Zambia, transmitting a memorandum by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), and a letter of 20 August<sup>(11)</sup> from Nigeria, transmitting Africa's submission on the final review and appraisal of the implementation of UNPAAERD.

UNCTAD action. To assist the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in making its intergovernmental input to the General Assembly's final review and appraisal of UNPAAERD, the UNCTAD Secretary-General submitted a report<sup>(12)</sup> describing action taken towards its implementation by the African countries and the international community. The report concluded with recommendations regarding possible measures needed to bring about accelerated and sustained growth in the region beyond 1991.

On 22 March 1991,<sup>(13)</sup> the Board reaffirmed the primary responsibility of African countries for their economic recovery and development and commended those that were making efforts to implement reforms and structural adjustment measures. It urged that structural adjustment policies supported by international financial institutions should take into account longer-term developmental objectives and seek to ensure a positive social impact. African countries, in implementing structural adjustment and reform programmes, were called on to take into account environmental and overall developmental objectives, as well as technological and financial needs. The Board urged the international community to pursue its efforts to provide additional resource support for UNPAAERD objectives and stressed the need for continuing efforts towards effective debt-relief measures for African countries. All countries were called on to improve access for Africa's commodity exports and the international community was urged to continue to strengthen its support for Africa's diversification efforts and its efforts to achieve subregional and regional integration and economic and technical cooperation. The Board requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to continue to assist African countries, including analysis and research relating to problems of interest to Africa and technical cooperation programmes, and to ensure that needs appraisal missions would cover all regions of Africa. The international community, especially donor countries and institutions, were asked to provide additional voluntary resources for technical and other UNCTAD programmes of assistance for Africa. The Board recommended that the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole consider continuing African and international efforts within the objectives defined in UNPAAERD.

UNDP action. In response to a 1990 decision of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP),<sup>(14)</sup> the UNDP Administrator submitted in May 1991 a report<sup>(15)</sup> on the role of UNDP in the implementation of UNPAAERD. The report described UNDP's support in setting up consultative mechanisms under UNPAAERD and enhancing regional and country programmes in Africa, as well as initiatives undertaken to address issues of major concern to African countries, including aid coordination, assessment and programming of technical cooperation, management of their economies and public sector institutions, poverty alleviation and technical cooperation among developing countries. It also outlined UNDP's participation in the overall review of UNPAAERD and possible successor arrangements.

Also in response to the 1990 decision, the Administrator submitted a report evaluating the Social Dimensions of Adjustment (SDA) project, national technical cooperation assessments and programmes (NATCAPs), and UNDP assistance to intergovernmental organizations in Africa.<sup>(16)</sup>

On 25 June,<sup>(17)</sup> the Governing Council requested the Administrator to strengthen UNDP's role in assisting African countries in support of long-term development in the region, taking into account the final review of UNPAAERD. He was also asked to help African Governments and subregional economic groups to prepare long-term perspective studies for socio-economic development and to build policy analysis and implementation capacities in the African countries in order to enhance the use of available expertise. UNDP was asked to continue to assist intergovernmental organizations in Africa and to implement NATCAPs, the SDA project, and the Structural Adjustment Advisory Teams for Africa programme, taking into account their evaluation reports.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/151 without vote.

Final review and appraisal of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990

ANNEX

I. Assessment of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990

A. Preamble

1. The United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 did not quite become a focal point for economic policy or for resource mobilization on behalf of Africa.

2. Furthermore, the Programme of Action proved to be too optimistic in two basic senses. First, the concept of a global compact at the continental level was difficult to achieve. Specific arrangements, such as World Bank consultative groups and United Nations Development Programme round-table discussions for individual nations, were not always directly related to the goals and targets of the Programme of Action. Second, hopes for a favourable external economic environment for Africa during the period 1986-1990 were not fulfilled. Sharp export price falls, real interest rate increases, and declines in private sector investment and loans all severely limited the positive effects of efforts made by Africa and its development partners. The Programme of Action itself was silent regarding who was to act if unforeseen exogenous contingencies threw the Programme of Action off course; also, its review machinery did not clearly address this issue.

3. In most African States, it is recognized that revised economic reforms and good governance are a key to economic development. It is also accepted that recovery and renewed development will take longer to achieve than was hoped and projected in 1986 by Africa, as well as by donor States and international financial institutions.

4. Bilateral cooperating partners have recognized that speedy, low-cost turn-arounds are the exception, not the rule, or as several have explicitly noted, the timeframe for economic transformation and for agreed agendas for action should be seen in terms of decades, not years. In addition, perception has come much closer to African warnings of the damage done by the debt overhang and worsening terms of trade. Substantial action to overcome these obstacles to African recovery is now agreed to be urgent.

5. The World Bank recognizes that sustained structural adjustment without rapid return to positive real per capita growth rates is difficult, especially in a context of broadening participation and political liberalization. The World Bank also views increased spending on human investment, infrastructure and reduction of absolute poverty as a central priority now that structural adjustment is placed in a ten- to fifteen-year time perspective, gradually phasing into structural transformation. These views are also widely shared by the donor communities and by African Governments. In general, the results achieved by those countries that have embarked on structural transformation have been better than those of countries that have not.

6. The reworking of United Nations system programmes in Africa around the goals of the Programme of Action was real and sustained but, by itself, was by no means large enough to place those goals at the centre of policy dialogue or resource mobilization.

7. Over the period 1986-1990 there developed broad agreement on the lines of short- and medium-term policy and on the need for that policy to lay the foundations for long-term sustainable growth and transformation. The African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-economic Recovery and Transformation,<sup>a</sup> adopted by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa on 10 April 1989, and the World Bank long-term perspective study illustrate this in their very broad range of agreement on goals and instruments. The remaining divergence, while substantial, is largely on issues of timing, sequencing, contexts and balance of instruments. A reduction of the external debt burden of most African States and an enabling environment would make a valuable contribution to sustained development. A consensus needs to develop on how this can be achieved.

8. At some point in the 1990s, a legitimate post-apartheid Government will emerge in South Africa, whose changing role in the economy of Africa will be significant but cannot yet be defined. Because a high rate of absolute poverty and very low human investment in a majority of its people will be the heritage of apartheid, post-apartheid South Africa may require external resource inflows, including official development assistance, although these inflows cannot yet be quantified and are not included in the total targets presented for Africa and its development partners in the 1990s.

9. Many of the African States have made progress in meeting their policy restructuring and resource reallocation commitments. However, none of the goals of the Programme of Action were fully realized. Targets for growth, food security, human investment and debt reduction were missed, so declines rather than hoped-for increases have been recorded by many States and for Africa as a whole.

10. One of the principal causes of this decline was that only two thirds of the countries pursued sustained economic reform. Those that did received increased donor assistance and achieved modest gains in per capita gross domestic product, agricultural production and exports. Other countries continued to decline in these indices, causing negative performance for Africa as a whole.

11. The reasons for this record of non-success are clear. The bilateral and multilateral achievements with respect to net real resource transfers and debt burden reduction were below expectations. A number of African States did not, in fact, fully achieve policy and resource allocation adjustment and transformation. Africa suffered from a serious fall in commodity earnings. War and certain exogenous events, such as drought and collapse in the terms of trade, imposed devastating costs. Another reason for this record of non-success may have been inadequate United Nations and Government debate or dialogue on the experience gained in the implementation of the Programme of Action.

12. However, the Programme of Action was far from being a failure. It assisted in focusing the attention of African and other Governments on the basic economic, human and governance problems of Africa. By doing so, it did achieve policy and efficiency gains and averted a more severe decline in net resource inflows. As a result, the economic decline afflicting Africa from 1981 to 1985 was slowed and, in many countries, halted. Furthermore, the process of African policy restructuring and its interaction with the analyses of external partners have led to substantial lessons of experience for all concerned.

B. Some aspects of the performance of the African economy, 1986-1990

13. Taken as a whole, the performance of the African economies from 1986 to 1990, the period of the Programme of Action, was not satisfactory, with overall growth averaging less than 2.5 per cent a year. The economic performance of the African economy was, it is true, somewhat better than during the period 1980-1985. But output, in per capita terms, continued to fall.

14. The decrease in overall performance was in part accounted for by the unsatisfactory export situation. While 1986-1990 export volume increased an average of 10 per cent a year above that of the period 1981-1985, representing an annual growth of almost 4 per cent, earnings from exports were 18 per cent lower, which represented an annual average decline of 6 per cent. Trade gains fell below expectations by an amount exceeding 50 billion United States dollars. Furthermore, in many key commodity areas, Africa suffered a decline in market share.

15. The benefits of reform in the vital agricultural sector, though often positive, were limited in certain countries by such factors as natural disasters, war or civil strife and a fall in prices from export crops. The human condition of many millions of Africans continued to worsen. Absolute poverty rose in Africa. If present trends hold, Africa risks becoming, by 1995, in terms of human deprivation, the most afflicted region in the world. African Governments made efforts to improve public services. Some progress was recorded in certain areas, as was indicated by the United Nations Development Programme in the Human Development Report 1990, but taken as a whole, the results were insufficient.

16. It would, however, be wrong to paint a totally sombre picture of the economic results of the 1986-1990 period. Growth of output in the majority of African economies had begun, by 1989-1990, to equal or exceed population growth. Important policy reforms had been undertaken and priority given to the restoration of infrastructure and human investment together with measures to encourage enterprise. The quantitative decline of export volumes that was typical of the 1970s and the deterioration of basic public services that characterized the 1981-1985 period have, in a majority of cases, been halted or partially reversed. Requirements for good governance, human investment, an enabling environment and the reduction of absolute poverty are being articulated and brought into operation. A sounder basis for greater production and for improvement in the human condition now exist in many African countries. Recent developments in the world political situation and on the continent give hope for drastic cuts in military expenditures. There is broad agreement everywhere that people are both the objective of and the most important means to the development and improvement of their living standards. The convictions of Africans on this are reflected in the Khartoum Declaration: Towards A Human-focused Approach to Socio-economic Recovery and Development,<sup>b</sup> adopted in 1988, the African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-economic Recovery and Transformation,<sup>a</sup> adopted in 1989, and the African Charter for Popular Participation in Development and Transformation,<sup>c</sup> adopted in 1990.

C. Actions of the African countries

Policy reforms

17. A majority of the African countries initiated and carried out substantial policy transformations during the 1986-1990 period. These have emphasized rationalization and liberalization of prices, especially exchange rates, food price structures and interest rates; prioritization of public expenditure towards human investment and infrastructure; and, where practicable, reduction of military expenditure. These policy reforms also aim at more efficient public sector management, enabling measures to facilitate enterprise and production and the broadening of access to economic and political participation (especially for women and poor rural households), and they include measures to reduce poverty, especially absolute poverty.

18. These policy steps were considered necessary, though generally risky and costly in social and political terms. For most countries undertaking and persisting in them, they have halted declines in per capita production. However, when such policies require extended periods of constant or lowered consumption, they face rising domestic opposition. Their continuation is frequently dependent on being able to show enhanced positive results. In a minority of cases, policy transformations have not been attempted or have been abandoned in the face of high initial costs and apparently low positive results in the Programme of Action period. While understandable, in most cases this has led directly to continued decline of the economies and of the conditions of the peoples concerned, while also hampering increased participation and improved governance. While the efforts of the African Governments are key to economic progress, the donor community has a role in supporting these efforts.

Agricultural development and other sectors in support of agriculture

19. In general, agricultural policies and resource allocations have been prioritized. These have included price and marketing structure reforms, restoration of infrastructure, redesigned research and extension services. They also include programmes to increase the resilience of small farmers to adverse economic circumstances. The results have been positive but inadequate—a 4 per cent annual agricultural output growth rate is widely recognized as essential (for example, in the World Bank long-term perspective study) but only 2 per cent has been attained to date. The southern African subregion has reached a 3 per cent trend equal to population growth. Constraints include inadequate technical knowledge; inefficient research and extension; falling world prices; inadequate access to inputs, despite services prioritization to domestic capacity rehabilitation; limited effective access of the poor, especially access by women farmers to agriculture services and markets; inadequate financial resource availability at both national and farm-household level, and high-cost public and private sector marketing systems.

Drought, desertification and environment

20. Drought, desertification and environmental degradation have received attention based on fuller recognition that Africa is more threatened by them than is any other region. However, improved water conservation and use, afforestation and family forestry as part of mixed farming, crop pattern alteration to lower vulnerability to drought, and other measures have had limited results.

This is partly a factor of limited knowledge and experience and the short time since priorities were changed; but it also reflects the lack of resources to implement policies and the impact of pressure to export. Often, the result has been further soil impoverishment.

Human resources and human conditions

21. The rise in the proportion of people in absolute poverty to 30 per cent in Africa and 60 per cent in the worst afflicted countries demonstrates the impact of war, drought and resource shortages. In countries ravaged by war and natural calamities, in spite of efforts by the donor community to provide improved early warning systems and increased emergency assistance, the scarcity of food supplies led to famine. In some countries, emergency relief assistance could not be provided quickly enough to avert the displacement of large numbers of persons and prevent casualties. Food for work (paid in cash or food) programmes have been devised and implemented at the micro-level, as well as more generally in some States, to help rehabilitate drought, flood and war victims.

22. Priority attention to human development—both in resource allocations and in restructuring to improve efficiency and access to basic services—has been a central theme in over half the African States. It has halted the rapid decline in access to basic services and the deterioration in their quality that occurred during the period 1981-1985, but has achieved clear improvements in only a minority of cases. In many cases, efficiency-improving policies were only partially employed, partly because they required resources that were not available.

23. Human-centred concerns, such as those expressed during the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and in the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, have deeply influenced African thinking. Appropriate programmes are now emerging and policy rethinking is more generally in process. However, the results to date are limited, partly because of brief experience and partly because integrating new elements into mainline programmes—especially in agriculture, education and employment—has proven difficult. In the context of limited increase in resources for all programmes, difficult choices must be made in allocating available resources, often resulting in cuts in existing activities. Only in health services has reorientation to support the needs of women and children made sustained progress over the 1986-1990 period, notably in mother and child health care and immunization.

24. Population policies have been adopted by most African Governments. However, it is unclear how much impact they have had to date. The link between the provision of educational and technical services, on the one hand, and other key elements such as reduced infant mortality, enhanced food security, reduced malnutrition and enhanced female education, on the other hand, remains to be adequately worked out in a majority of cases. In cases where the link has been articulated and applied, there is evidence of a rapidly increasing use of services and declining family size. It is generally realized in Africa and by Africa's development partners that Africa's rapid rate of population growth, averaging over 3 per cent per year, slows the rate of Africa's recovery and development, thus constituting a development issue to be dealt with seriously. During the period of the Programme of Action, there has been a clear downward trend in per capita health spending in real dollar terms, despite gains made in such areas as mother and child health care and immunization. Some diseases made a resurgence in Africa in the 1980s as health expenditures declined, with roughly two out of every three Africans now suffering from one or more debilitating diseases. The problem of declining health services is exacerbated by the continuing phenomenon of the "brain drain" with respect to trained personnel in the health field.

25. Over the 1986-1990 period, war imposed heavy human as well as financial costs on Africa (45 billion dollars in southern Africa alone, according to United Nations estimates). As of 1990, efforts to achieve peace have made substantial progress in southern Africa and other parts of the continent. The consolidation of survival policies and infrastructural safeguards is crucial in those areas, as is their more effective pursuit in the remaining war-ravaged States.

Trade and commodities

26. African States have given priority to policies to restore export growth. The quantitative rise in export growth to 4 per cent indicates considerable success. Unfortunately, declines in terms of trade have more than cancelled out this achievement in real export-value terms. African States have sought to act on the Programme of Action priority focus of commodity market Improvement. Market prices for basic commodities, in general, continued to fall. Compensation or stabilization schemes were unable to compensate for declining commodity revenues during the period of the Programme of Action. African Governments were unable to move rapidly towards structural diversification and transformation of export patterns. Furthermore, Africa has in many cases lost market share in the face of new sources of competition, although some countries have adopted policies to regain it.

Debt service

27. African States have developed a common set of guidelines for agreed debt and debt-service reduction (African Common Position on Africa's External Debt Crisis (1987)), which was updated in 1989 and discussed at the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly, and they have devoted on average 30 per cent of export earnings to debt service. The 30 per cent of export earnings paid out covered only about 60 per cent of the debt service payable. The balance was largely rescheduled in ways that stretched out the repayments of the obligations without reducing them or it was added onto rising arrears balances. The Programme of Action goal of resolving the African external debt crisis remains largely unmet. External debt (largely from increased arrears, rescheduled amounts and accrued interest) rose 35 per cent between 1986 and 1990. Although many donor countries cancelled or rescheduled debt on concessional terms, both before and during the Programme of Action period—for example, at the Third Francophone Conference of Heads of State and Government, held at Dakar in May 1989—in accordance, inter alia, with relevant United Nations resolutions, a substantial portion of that external debt remains extremely difficult to service. The debt burden complicated Africa's task of increasing investment and rational planning with respect to fiscal and external accounts. A number of creditor countries and institutions have recently put forward proposals involving greater debt and debt-service reduction for low-income countries, many of which are located in Africa. Since 1985, the Paris Club has eased the terms on which official bilateral debt is rescheduled for the severely indebted low-income countries, many of which are located in Africa. In June 1988, at the Toronto Economic Summit, the group of seven major industrialized countries reached an agreement consisting of options to be chosen by creditor countries, which include partial write-offs, longer repayment periods and concessional interest rates.<sup>d</sup> At the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, in September 1990, there was a call for the cancellation of all official bilateral debt owed by least developed countries and other low-income countries that faced severe debt problems and were implementing sound economic policies in the context of International Monetary Fund programmes.<sup>e</sup> Another proposal was made to modify the Toronto terms of rescheduling by Paris Club creditors in a number of ways. In 1991, the group of seven major industrialized countries agreed on the need for additional debt-relief measures, going well beyond the relief already granted under the Toronto terms. The Trinidad and Tobago terms,<sup>f</sup> proposed in September 1990, as well as other proposals, are now under consideration in the Paris Club. An early agreement on these proposals, combined with appropriate adjustment actions by the African countries themselves, would make a genuine contribution to improving the economic prospects of the countries concerned. More recently, bolder initiatives, such as the recent debt-reduction agreements, have aroused high expectations among debt-distressed countries in Africa. The Personal Representative of the Secretary-General on debt proposed the cancellation of 90 per cent of the bilateral debt service of poor countries and the conversion of the remainder to highly concessional long-term loans. He also proposed that Toronto-type debt relief should be extended to African middle-income countries, as well as more concessional development financing.

Social and political stability

28. Problems associated with governance, accountability and the international economic environment have constrained African growth and development. These problems have hampered domestic savings and private investment flows, which are critical for increased productivity and growth. There is recognition within Africa of the link between improved governance and accountability, a favourable international economic environment and successful long-term development. There has been progress in improving participation and stability in Africa during the period of the Programme of Action. The number of States severely affected by war has been reduced. The freedom of people to pursue their daily lives and livelihood without fear of violence or arbitrary intervention by any person or institution has risen. Participation and human rights have been endorsed in the African Charter for Popular Participation in Development and Transformation. Progress in policies and practices to promote participation and make rights more secure is visible in many States. The enjoyment of human rights under the rule of law is becoming more strongly enshrined.

Implementation at the regional and subregional levels

29. Subregional and regional implementation have received significant attention! especially in eastern and southern Africa. The small size of virtually all African States means that many common goals can be pursued more efficiently in common, or on a coordinated basis, than separately. The Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States has made significant progress towards enabling trade expansion via tariff preference, commercial clearing facilitation and documentary plus-procedural harmonization. The Southern African Development Coordination Conference has coordinated transport and communications rehabilitation and development, knowledge creation (especially in agriculture and food security), production expansion and the mobilization of domestic and external finance for regionally identified priority projects, with substantial positive results. Other groupings-the Economic Community of West African States, the Arab Maghreb Union, the Union of Central African States and the Economic Community of Central African States-have had important results. The Organization of African Unity has increased its economic policy analysis and coordination capacity, leading to the African Common Position on Africa's External Debt Crisis (1987) and to the adoption on 3 June 1991 at Abuja, Nigeria, of the Treaty establishing the African Economic Community.

D. Actions of the international community

Governments of resource-transferring countries

Resource flows

30. Donor Governments understood the need in the Programme of Action for complementary resources to support the reforms and transformations to which the African States have committed themselves. A significant number have sought to act accordingly and have maintained or increased real resource transfers via official development assistance since 1985, despite, in several cases, significant budgetary constraints of their own. They have remained committed to Africa in the context of new needs in western Asia, as well as in central and eastern Europe. However, despite the fact that sub-Saharan African countries received, on a per capita basis, significantly larger official development assistance than other low- and middle-income countries and despite a 50 per cent current price increase in official development assistance to sub-Saharan Africa, the effects of this assistance have not met expectations.

31. Bilateral official development assistance, broadly defined, rose in current prices from 10.6 to 16.8 billion dollars. However, in constant 1986 prices, the change was from 13.1 to 13.9 billion dollars, only marginally over 1 per cent per year. Meanwhile, net export credits fell 50 per cent even in current terms, from over 2 billion dollars in 1985 to 1 billion dollars in 1990. Net private flows other than from non-governmental organizations fell from 1.8 billion dollars to 1.4 billion dollars in current prices. Non-governmental organization flows rose in current terms from 1 billion to 1.6 billion dollars, or about 1 per cent per year in constant price terms.

Trade and commodities

32. Action to enhance African market access and diversification of exports and to reduce instability and catastrophic falls in commodity prices, as well as to provide compensatory finance for declines, was featured prominently in the Programme of Action. Protectionist barriers persist. African economies still depend on commodity exports, and diversification represents one of the highest priorities. The Stabex<sup>g</sup> and Sysmin<sup>h</sup> systems and the Swiss Compensatory Financing Programme already exist. Various constraints, including conditionality and interest rates, restrict access to International Monetary Fund compensatory facilities. After having reached a peak in the 1970s, commodity prices have collapsed to unprecedentedly low levels. Although exports grew in volume by 10 per cent during the 1986-1990 period over the 1981-1985 period, the share of African exports in world trade was dropping dramatically during the 1986-1990 period.

Debt obligations

33. Debt discussion has continued, and in the past two years creditor country positions have altered significantly. In order to strengthen efforts to relieve the debt burden, creditor countries have presented a number of proposals for further debt alleviation. The proposed Trinidad and Tobago terms would provide for a 50 per cent debt-burden reduction-by write-offs, interest-rate cuts or repayment spread-out-on official debt, including guaranteed export credits for low-income debt-distressed countries pursuing serious policy reforms and transformations. Recent debt-reduction agreements take similar approaches to debt-distressed middle- and low-income countries. Some donor countries have proposed cuts of up to 80 per cent for the most severely debt-distressed low-income sub-Saharan African economies. The Trinidad and Tobago terms envisage similar cuts in commercial external debt, with the present secondary market price (usually under 25 per cent of face value for debt-distressed countries and under 10 per cent for several African ones) as the starting point. Some buy-ups, by individual donors or under World Bank auspices, have taken place.

34. These shifts have been too recent to have a major impact to date. However, they do augur well for the 1990s. About 3 per cent of Africa's debt burden was cancelled or rescheduled at concessional interest rates over the 1986-1990 period. Because this was largely on concessional loans, debt service due was reduced by under 2 per cent and debt service actually being paid was reduced by only 1 per cent. Other rescheduling did not reduce the total burden of payment (indeed by lengthening the period over which interest was payable, the rescheduling often raised it) but simply shifted it forward, providing some relief from arrears build-up for a year or two at a time.

Technical and other external assistance

35. Technical assistance was approximately 25 per cent of official development assistance throughout the period. Problems remained, such as inadequate recipient participation in the selection of experts and the accountability of technical assistance personnel to national institutions and in the decision-making processes in Africa. The enhanced number of donor-paid and other technical-assistance personnel and the increased hiring of African nationals for such posts did increase short-term capability but at the price of fragmenting national policy formulation and implementation and of threatening longer-term African institutional and public service capacity-building. More positively, joint ventures with African training institutions and the creation, by the African Development Bank, the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank, of the African Capacity Building Foundation were encouraging developments.

United Nations system

36. The United Nations system—including the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund—sought to influence and to support African efforts to regain development through structural adjustment and transformation of policies and resource allocations. Multilateral official development finance rose from 5.3 billion dollars in 1985 to 8.5 billion dollars in 1990 or from 5.8 billion dollars to 6.5 billion dollars in 1986 constant prices.

37. A substantial portion of the increase was centred on the World Bank, whose lending increased from an overall average of about 1.8 billion dollars during the 1981-1985 fiscal period to around 3 billion dollars during the 1986-1991 fiscal period. With respect to International Development Association replenishments eight and nine, sub-Saharan Africa's share of a sustained constant total was raised from 33 per cent to 50 per cent. In addition, the World Bank spearheaded a Special Programme of Assistance for Africa to mobilize and coordinate bilateral funds, which provided 18 billion dollars in adjustment assistance and debt relief to twenty-three eligible African countries between 1988 and 1990. The World Bank also helped fund the African Capacity Building Foundation to assist in developing the central economic analysis and management units in African Governments.

38. The International Monetary Fund reduced net drawings by African States by 2 billion dollars during the 1985-1990 period. While 8-9 per cent short-term drawings were unsuitable for African requirements, the Structural Adjustment Facility and its extended version, which are long-term low-interest facilities, remain less than half-utilized and did not fully offset reduction in standard terms drawings.

39. Other United Nations agencies raised disbursements on behalf of Africa to about 1.5 billion dollars and to 50 per cent of all resources provided globally, in particular through special programmes for African countries affected by drought and desertification. While their programmes were focused mainly on and tested against the Programme of Action goals, they were limited in constant-price terms. This limitation flowed from the financial stringency confronting most United Nations agencies, and the United Nations Development Programme in particular, during the period 1986-1990.

South-South cooperation

40. Global South-South cooperation with Africa was enhanced during the 1986-1990 period. The focus was primarily on southern African economic and human survival in the face of destabilization. The Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund<sup>1</sup> established by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries raised and disbursed not insignificant resources in this respect. Bilaterally, several South economies provided substantial technical and financial support to Africa.

Non-governmental organizations

41. Non-governmental organizations, as noted, increased resource transfers to Africa. In some cases these transfers assisted the strengthening of African non-governmental organizations and worked in partnership with or through them. In the North, the non-governmental organizations were among the most effective publicists and resource mobilizers for Africa in general and the Programme of Action in particular. The International Conference on Popular Participation in the Recovery and Development Process in Africa, held at Arusha in February 1990, marked the recognition by both African and cooperating States that African non-governmental organizations and similar groupings had a crucial role in transforming human-centred development and good governance from goals into realities.<sup>c</sup>

Structural adjustment programmes

42. Structural adjustment describes a set of actions by African Governments responding to their perceptions of the policy requirements needed to restore economic balance and to mobilize external resources for recovery and structural transformation. Likewise, structural adjustment programmes incorporated the views of the World Bank and bilateral resource donors of the macroeconomic policy weaknesses that hampered effective response to economic shocks in many African States.

43. Prior to 1985, structural adjustment programmes, as the World Bank acknowledged in the long-term perspective study, were often too short term in approach and, as a result, depended too heavily on demand reduction. Since 1985 there has been a shift towards supply expansion, initially underwritten largely by external resource flows but, subsequently, partly by renewed growth of domestic output. Human investment and poverty reduction have emerged as major themes in structural adjustment and increased effort is being devoted to integrating them with the other macroeconomic policy goals.

44. Structural adjustment programmes, when also oriented towards the medium- and long-term development needs of the countries that have been implementing them and when persisted in, have, on average, resulted in output growth equal to or above population growth and also in significant increases in external resource inflows. Equally, most have resulted in a halting of previous declines in human investment and basic services spending. But their record on reduction of inflation, reduction of trade deficits and a reduction in numbers of people living in absolute poverty is much more uneven and not yet satisfactory, as the World Bank long-term perspective study notes. How to resolve these problems and to ensure that new rounds of African-owned country programmes achieve both sustainable growth and a substantial improvement in the human condition is a crucial question for the 1990s, which the African Governments, the World Bank, the United Nations Development Programme, and other resource providers are focusing on in national consultative groups, round-table discussions and other forums.

II. United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s

A. Preamble

1. The final review and appraisal of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990

offers yet another opportunity for renewing the commitment of the international community to support Africa's own efforts to achieve self-sustaining socio-economic growth and development. It is also an occasion to refocus world attention on the socio-economic difficulties which continue to face the African countries. Africa's development is primarily the responsibility of Africans. The international community accepts the principle of shared responsibility and full partnership with Africa and therefore commits itself to giving full and tangible support to the African efforts.

2. The circumstances which led to the adoption of the Programme of Action are as valid today as they were in 1986. Assessments made by African countries themselves or by the Secretary-General and many other organizations and independent observers point to the fact that Africa's socio-economic conditions actually worsened overall over the past live years of the Programme of Action period.

3. The current critical economic situation in Africa calls for solidarity among States Members to act in concert to address the problem. The international community renews its efforts to assist Africa, as enunciated under the Programme of Action and in General Assembly resolution 43/27 of 18 November 1988, in which the Assembly stated, inter alia, that "the African economic crisis is one that concerns the international community as a whole" and that "the Programme of Action provides an important framework for cooperation between Africa and the international community", which needs to be renewed in the 1990s.

4. That is why the international community and the countries of Africa should renew their commitment to an agenda of cooperation for sustainable social and economic development of Africa in the 1990s. The agenda is specific and clearly focused on goals and targets to be achieved within that time-frame.

5. A desirable objective should be an average real growth rate of at least 6 per cent per annum of gross national product throughout the period of the New Agenda in order for the continent to achieve sustained and sustainable economic growth and equitable development, increase income and eradicate poverty.

6. The New Agenda has as its priority objectives the accelerated transformation, integration, diversification and growth of the African economies, in order to strengthen them within the world economy, reduce their vulnerability to external shocks and increase their dynamism, internalize the process of development and enhance self-reliance.

7. The New Agenda also accords special attention to human development and increased productive employment, and promotes rapid progress towards the achievement of human-oriented goals by the year 2000 in the areas of life expectancy, integration of women in development, child and maternal mortality, nutrition, health, water and sanitation, basic education and shelter.

8. Peace is an indispensable prerequisite for development. The end of the cold war has opened up opportunities for the peaceful resolution of conflicts and for the intensification of international cooperation for development, particularly with Africa. Peace initiatives by African countries should be encouraged and pursued in order to bring an end to war, destabilization and internal conflicts so as to facilitate the creation of optimal conditions for development. The international community as a whole should endeavour to cooperate with and support the efforts of African countries for a rapid restoration of peace, normalization of life for uprooted populations and national socio-economic reconstruction. Resources freed from military expenditures in all countries can be redirected to socio-economic growth and development.

9. In order to achieve these broad objectives, it is necessary for the international community to enter into a new and stronger accord with Africa, which would spell out clearly the firm commitment of the international community to support and assist Africa in its efforts to implement successfully its development agenda and to reduce, if not entirely eliminate, external impediments and obstacles to Africa's accelerated socio-economic transformation. This New Agenda reflects a mutuality of commitments and accountability and is in two parts: what Africa commits itself to do and what the international community commits itself to do.

B. International Agenda

1. Africa's responsibility and commitment

(a) Achievement of sustained and sustainable growth and development

10. Africa is committed to the implementation of policies for the transformation of the structure of its economies in order to achieve growth and development on a sustained and sustainable basis. African countries will persist with necessary reforms and pursue improvement of domestic economic management, including effective mobilization and utilization of domestic resources.

(b) Promotion of regional and subregional economic cooperation and integration

11. Africa is resolved to pursue with vigour the policy of achieving effective regional and subregional economic cooperation and integration and is thus committed to the establishment of the African Economic Community—the treaty of which was signed by African leaders on 3 June 1991 at Abuja, Nigeria—and to the effective functioning of its subregional organizations—namely, the Preferential Trade Area of Eastern and Southern African States, the Economic Community of West African States, the Arab Maghreb Union and the Southern African Development Coordination Conference. Africa believes that regional and subregional cooperation and integration will bring about effective transformation of its economies.

12. Africa is committed to the promotion of sectorial integration of its economies and to ensuring the development and maintenance of reliable networks of agricultural, physical, industrial and institutional infrastructures on the continent. Africa will focus its efforts on the implementation of programmes for the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa and the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa.

(c) Intensification of the democratization process

13. Africa is determined to press ahead with the democratization of development and the full implementation of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, the African Charter for Popular Participation in Development and Transformation, and the Declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the Political and Socio-economic Situation in Africa and the Fundamental Changes Taking Place in the World, adopted on 11 July 1990. Africa is convinced that growth and development on a sustained and sustainable basis can come about only as a result of the full participation of the people in the development process, and to this end continues to be committed to pursuing the process of democratization.

(d) Investment promotion

14. Africa is also committed to the creation of an enabling environment that attracts foreign and domestic direct investment, encourages savings, induces the return of flight capital and promotes the full participation by the private sector, including non-governmental organizations, in the growth and development process. Farmers-in particular, small farmers-informal-sector traders and crafts people, and entrepreneurs constitute important elements in the productive base of the economy.

(e) Human dimension

15. Africa is equally committed to improving the human rights and the living standards of its people, including the reduction of poverty. Africa is further committed to ensuring equality of opportunity for women at all levels and giving adequate attention to the needs of children.

16. African countries are committed to the intensification of their efforts in human resource development and capacity-building, especially in science, technology and management, and to taking measures to arrest and reverse the brain drain.

(f) Environment and development

17. Africa is fully committed to the promotion of sustainable development at all levels of socio-economic activity. Through the Bamako Convention, adopted on 30 January 1991 at Bamako, Africa took the decisive step of banning the import of toxic waste into Africa. Moreover, the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification remains a viable framework for cooperation in the field of desertification. The international community is called upon to contribute more effectively to the implementation of the Plan. The programme of relevant subregional organizations should continue to receive the full support of Africa and the international community. Africa is keenly participating in international negotiations on climate change, bio-diversity and the preparatory process of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to be held in 1992. In all these negotiations, Africa is fully convinced that the problems of environment and development should be tackled in an integrated and balanced manner, fully taking into account the "polluter pays" principle.

(g) Population and development

18. Africa is committed to the deliberate and systematic integration of population factors into the development process in order, inter alia, to contain the tremendous strain and stress that a rapid rate of population growth puts on development. To that end, Africa will continue the efforts initiated in 1984 under the Kilimanjaro Programme of Action for African Population and Self-Reliant Development, which currently constitutes Africa's framework for devising and implementing national population policies in all their interrelated aspects, including a reduction in maternal and child mortality and provisions for family planning and female education and the achievement of substantial and sustained increases in the quality of life and standard of living of the entire population. In this regard, reference is also made to the Amsterdam Declaration on a Better Life for Future Generations, adopted by the International Forum on Population in the Twenty-first Century, held at Amsterdam from 6 to 9 November 1989.<sup>1</sup>

(h) Agriculture, rural development and food security

19. Africa is committed to the continued pursuit of policies and strategies in the agricultural and rural development sectors in order fully to integrate rural economies into their national contexts and to achieve food security and strengthen self-reliance in food. Africa is committed to the improvement of agricultural policies, the enhancement of agricultural productivity, the improvement of distribution mechanisms, and the establishment of reliable market schemes, credit systems and adequate storage facilities. Efforts will be made to provide food producers-particularly women-with the necessary resources.

(i) South-South cooperation

20. Africa is determined to intensify South-South cooperation which Africa is convinced is an indispensable element for the success of the New Agenda for international cooperation.

(j) Role of non-governmental organizations

21. The focus of the International Agenda on popular participation, human resource development and capacity-building calls for an increased role for non-governmental organizations (African and non-African) in various areas, including the promotion of indigenous small-scale businesses, especially in the rural sector, community development projects, training etc. African non-governmental organizations should particularly be involved, without any administrative impediment, in the mobilization and efficient utilization of domestic resources.

2. Responsibility and commitment of the international community

22. The international community commits itself to assisting Africa in its efforts to achieve accelerated growth and human-centred development on a sustained and sustainable basis. Such support will cover the areas discussed below.

(a) Solution of Africa's debt problem

23. Africa's debt burden constitutes a critical bottleneck constraining the recovery and development of the continent. Therefore, a major priority is to tackle Africa's external debt problem which is a serious threat to the continent's recovery and long-term development prospects. In spite of the implementation of several international initiatives, the situation has not significantly improved. Africa's external debt exceeded 270 billion dollars in 1990, with the ratio of external debt to gross domestic product and to exports amounting to over 90 per cent and 334 per cent, respectively. The servicing of this debt accounts for over 30 per cent of the continent's exports.

24. This situation calls for innovative and bold measures to solve Africa's debt problems and the intensification of efforts in the context of the evolving international debt strategy on the part of all concerned. The international community, therefore, in support of Africa's economic reform efforts, undertakes to seek to find durable solutions to the African debt crisis.

25. At the London Economic Summit in July 1991,<sup>k</sup> the group of seven major industrialized countries agreed that Africa deserved special attention. Participants called for additional debt relief measures in favour of the poorest, most indebted countries, that go well beyond the Toronto terms. It called on the Paris Club to continue its discussion on how these measures can best be implemented promptly.

26. Recognizing the magnitude of Africa's debt problem, the measures envisioned by this New Agenda include:

(a) A further cancellation or reduction of official development assistance debt and debt service;

(b) Additional relief for official bilateral debt or debt service;

(c) Encouragement of the write-off of private commercial debt and the use of such techniques as debt-equity swaps, the use of debt where appropriate for the establishment of export-oriented joint ventures, debt buy-backs, debt for environment schemes and debt for poverty alleviation through greater use of the appropriate facilities;

(d) Serious consideration to continuing to work towards a growth-oriented solution of the problems of African developing countries with serious debt-servicing problems, including those whose debt is mainly to official creditors or to multilateral institutions;

(e) Early implementation of the International Monetary Fund quota increase under the Ninth General Review and the associated Third Amendment to the Articles of Agreement.

27. Additional measures should take into account the need for Africa to benefit from new financial flows, particularly official development assistance.

28. The international community should continue to give serious consideration to the proposal calling for the organization of an international conference on Africa's external indebtedness.

(b) Resource flows

29. A critical element of the support from the international community is the provision of adequate resource flows to Africa. These resources are needed to contribute to achieving sustained real growth in gross national product per capita. To achieve an average annual growth rate of real gross national product of at least 6 per cent by African countries over the course of the 1990s the Secretary-General has estimated that a minimum of 30 billion dollars in net official development assistance is required in 1992, after which the real net official development assistance would need to grow at an average rate of 4 per cent per annum. The international community undertakes to pursue its efforts to provide additional resource flows to Africa which will complement domestic efforts and financial resources, bearing in mind these targets. The international community also reaffirms its commitment to work in order to attain the accepted United Nations targets of devoting 0.7 per cent of gross national product to official development assistance as well as the agreed targets established at the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries.

30. The international community would introduce measures and devise programmes to encourage direct foreign investment in African countries and support the policy changes undertaken by African countries to attract foreign investment.

(c) Commodities

31. Diversification is a strategic short- and long-term solution to the severe commodity problem in Africa which has impeded its economic recovery and development. In order to support effectively efforts to diversify commodity exports and boost earnings, the international community, particularly the major trading partners, commit themselves to grant improved market access to Africa's exports through substantial reduction in or removal of trade barriers. To this end, the international community should ensure an early balanced and successful conclusion of the Uruguay Round. The international community commits itself to correct imperfections in commodity markets.

32. In the short term, the international community recognizes the importance of compensatory financing through such schemes as the Compensatory and Contingency Financing Facility of the International Monetary Fund, Stabex, Sysmin and the Swiss Compensatory Financing Programme and, where appropriate, will examine the means of improving the scope and operations of these schemes. Efforts at international cooperation among producers and consumers of commodities of particular importance to Africa should be renewed, with a view to increasing export earnings of Africa from such commodities through processing and technical assistance.

(d) Support for the diversification of the African economies

33. Diversification of the African economies provides a major way out of commodity export dependence and its related problems and contributes to the achievement of more dynamic and resilient economies. While such diversification is primarily the responsibility of African countries, the international community recognizes that additional resources will be required to support Africa's diversification programmes, including development of specific infrastructural and support services and the development of information networks and related services for diversification programmes and projects.

34. The international community notes the proposal that an African diversification fund should be established to provide an essential focal point to galvanize the technical assistance that is required and to provide additional finance for the development and implementation of diversification programmes and projects.

35. A study on the need for and the feasibility of the establishment of a diversification fund for Africa's commodities should urgently be undertaken by the Secretary-General for presentation in 1993 to the General Assembly together with the comments and observations of Member States. The international community will continue to support Africa's effort.

(e) Trade

36. In order to support effectively efforts to diversify Africa's economies and to boost export earnings, the international community commits itself to a substantial reduction in or removal of tariff and non-tariff barriers affecting African exports, particularly of processed, semi-processed and manufactured products, and to ensure continued preferential arrangements currently enjoyed by African exports. In this end, the international community should ensure an early balanced and successful conclusion of the Uruguay Round.

(f) Support for regional economic environment, science and technology

37. The international community intends to support African countries in their efforts to establish the African Economic Community, strengthen the functioning of the existing subregional intergovernmental organizations and implement joint programmes and projects.

38. Support will also be given to arresting environmental degradation and to enhancing the scientific and technological capacities of African countries.

(g) Role of the United Nations system

39. The United Nations system should play a major role in the implementation of the International Agenda. First and foremost! the various United Nations organizations and specialized agencies, in their respective areas and sectors, should devise specific programmes for Africa which are consistent with the elements of the Agenda, and devote adequate resources for their implementation. In this regard, special consideration should be given to programmes that are essential in fostering the economic integration of the African region, such as those related to the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa and the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, as well as other relevant programmes submitted by regional and subregional organizations.

40. The United Nations system should also contribute to ensuring an efficient follow-up and monitoring of the implementation of the International Agenda. Specifically, a continuous assessment of Africa's performance in the areas outlined in the Agenda would have a great impact in maintaining the momentum within and outside Africa and, eventually, for renewed commitments to the agreed objectives and targets.

(h) Role of non-African non-governmental organizations

41. Non-African non-governmental organizations should be given every encouragement to assist in the formulation and implementation of development assistance projects in the context of the International Agenda. They should also assist in promoting non-governmental organizations at the national, subregional and regional levels in Africa.

C. Follow-up, monitoring and evaluation machinery

42. The follow-up, monitoring and evaluation of the implementation of the New Agenda will require the full involvement of Governments, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system as well as the participation of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

43. To that end the following arrangements for the evaluation, assessment and monitoring of the New Agenda are adopted:

(a) In 1993 the General Assembly will conduct a preliminary consideration of the implementation of the New Agenda;

(b) In 1995 the Economic and Social Council will devote part of its high-level segment to the consideration of the implementation of the New Agenda;

(c) In 1996 the General Assembly will conduct a mid-term review of the implementation of the New Agenda;

(d) In 1998 the Economic and Social Council will devote part of its high-level segment to the implementation of the New Agenda;

(e) In the year 2000 the General Assembly will conduct the final review and assessment of the implementation of the New Agenda.

44. For the mid-term review in 1996 and the final review and assessment in the year 2000, the General Assembly will take the necessary measures, including, if required, the establishment of an ad hoc committee for the preparation of these reviews.

45. The Secretary-General, taking into account the relevant inputs from relevant organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and other competent bodies, will provide an analytical assessment of the implementation of the New Agenda and make concrete recommendations thereon to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, according to the arrangements outlined in paragraph 43 above.

46. The assessment and recommendations of the Organization of African Unity on the implementation of the New Agenda will also be submitted to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

47. The Secretary-General will ensure appropriate and adequate support for the follow-up process, including the continuation of the effective public information activities and mobilization of efforts to raise international awareness of the economic crisis in Africa.

48. The ongoing initiatives aimed at assisting Africa in its development efforts should be encouraged. In this regard, consultative groups such as the Global Coalition for Africa should assist in rallying international support for the implementation of the New Agenda. The Global Coalition for Africa may be invited to attend the meetings of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council devoted to the New Agenda for Africa.

Chad

In response to a General Assembly resolution of 1990,(18) the Secretary-General submitted a report,(19) prepared by UNDP, on special economic assistance to Chad. The report reviewed activities pursuant to the third (1990) Round-table Conference of Donors to Chad, at which a development orientation plan was submitted to donors. Four sets of sectoral consultations were held (education, training and employment; health and social affairs; environment and desertification; and promotion of the private sector) to define the strategies, programmes of action and financing arrangements.

Other assistance included that of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), which estimated that some 1.15 million people were affected by drought and that the rapid spread of disease was exacerbated in May 1991 by an outbreak of cholera. The World Health Organization continued to assist Chad in improving the national primary health care system, giving special attention to immunization. In addition to its activities in Chad as an executing agency for projects financed by UNDP/United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and trust funds, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) provided assistance through seven self-financed projects costing some $1.3 million in the areas of environment, cattle breeding, milk processing, production and consumption of market gardening produce, and rural credit. The World Food Programme (WFP) provided emergency food assistance to Chad and implemented development projects in the areas of education, food for vulnerable groups and rural development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 46/171 without vote.

Special economic assistance to Chad

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/223 of 21 December 1990 and its previous resolutions on assistance in the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Chad and on special economic assistance to that country,

Recalling the round table on assistance to Chad convened by the United Nations Development Programme at Geneva on 4 and 5 December 1985 in accordance with the arrangements agreed upon at the International Conference on Assistance to Chad, held in November 1982,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on special economic assistance to Chad, which deals, inter alia, with the status of assistance provided for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country and the progress made in organizing and executing the programme of assistance for that country,

Considering that the effects of war and recent natural calamities and disasters are compromising all the reconstruction and development efforts of the Government of Chad,

Noting with satisfaction that the third Round-table Conference of Donors to Chad, convened by the Government of Chad in cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme, was held at Geneva on 19 and 20 June 1990 and that a development orientation plan was submitted to donors on that occasion by the Government of Chad,

Recalling the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least developed Countries on 14 September 1990,<sup>a</sup> and the mutual commitments entered into on that occasion,

Also noting with satisfaction that the round table on education, training and employment was convened by the Government of Chad, in cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme, in November 1990.

Noting that sectoral round tables on technical cooperation, promotion of the private sector, health and social affairs, environment and desertification control, urban development and the advancement of women' will be organized in 1992 by the Government of Chad in cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme,

Noting also that an emergency plan on the restructuring of the army and the administration and the return of former military personnel to productive life was submitted to a conference of friends of Chad held in Paris in 1991,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States and organizations that have responded and are continuing to respond favourably to the appeals of the Government of Chad and of the Secretary-General by furnishing assistance to Chad;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to make the international community aware of the difficulties of Chad and to mobilize assistance for that country;

3. Renews the request made to all States and competent United Nations organizations and programmes, as well as international economic and financial institutions, to continue to contribute to the rehabilitation and development of Chad;

4. Expresses the wish that future round tables on Chad will be organized within the framework of the intensified follow-up decided on at the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assess, in close collaboration with the humanitarian agencies concerned, the humanitarian needs, particularly in the areas of health and food, of the displaced populations;

6. Invites all States and competent United Nations organizations and programmes which participated actively in the conference of friends of Chad, held in Paris in 1991, to participate in the different round tables to be held in N'Djamena in 1992;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to keep the situation in Chad under review and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

Djibouti

Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 1990,<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report,<sup>(19)</sup> prepared by UNDP, on special economic assistance to Djibouti. The report stated that while Djibouti was still coping with the effects of the disastrous floods of April 1989, other regional events also took their toll. In May 1991, 38,000 persons entered the country as a result of armed conflict in Ethiopia. The Persian Gulf crisis also had a direct impact on Djibouti's economy, as did disruption in trade with Ethiopia and Somalia.

Those events brought a new focus to development planning in Djibouti, underscoring the high degree of vulnerability of its economy to external events. Two areas were identified as requiring strengthening: the institutional framework and the means of the State to carry out social and economic development programmes, and manpower training. The report stated that the Government intended to minimize the social costs that could result from programmes of structural change in the economy. It concluded that even modest restructuring of the economy would encounter the problem of insufficient resources, and that assurance of adequate resources was especially important if the economic objectives were to be achieved without jeopardizing the social objectives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 46/175 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/228 of 21 December 1990 and its previous resolutions on economic assistance to Djibouti,

Recalling also the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990,<sup>a</sup> as well as the mutual commitments undertaken on that occasion and the importance to be attached to the follow-up to that Conference,

Deeply concerned about the extensive damage and devastation in Djibouti caused by the unprecedented torrential rains and floods in April 1989,

Noting with concern the destruction of thousands of dwellings, particularly in working-class areas, and the damage to major sectors of the national infrastructure, particularly the road network, the water supply, health centres and hospitals, educational establishments and other public services,

Concerning the severe damage to the scarce agricultural resources of Djibouti, including the destruction of its livestock,

Noting that the economic and social development efforts of Djibouti, which is included in the list of least developed countries, are thwarted by the negative effects of the torrential rains and floods that periodically devastate that vulnerable country, and that the implementation of reconstruction and development programmes requires the deployment of considerable resources, which exceed the real capacities of the country,

Noting also that the harsh climate and the chronic dryness preclude any agricultural activity of scale and that the persistent effects of a cyclical drought have devastating consequences for the already precarious economic and social development of Djibouti,

Noting with concern that the situation in Djibouti has been adversely affected by recent events in the Horn of Africa, and noting the recent influx of over 95,000 persons displaced from their countries, which has placed serious strains on the fragile economic, social and administrative infrastructure of the country,

Noting the extremely critical economic situation of Djibouti resulting from its geographical location and from the number of priority development projects that have been suspended in the light of the new critical international situation,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with gratitude the support provided to emergency relief operations during the floods in 1989 by various countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Declares its solidarity with the Government and people of Djibouti in the face of the devastating consequences of the torrential rains and floods and the new economic realities of Djibouti resulting in particular from the new critical situation in the Horn of Africa;

2. Endorses the evaluations and the recommendations of the various missions dispatched to Djibouti, which are taken into account in the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Calls anew upon the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the relevant organs and organizations of the United Nations system and in close collaboration with the governmental authorities, to carry out an evaluation of the requirements of Djibouti, in the light of its new and pressing needs, with a view to drawing up not only an urgent programme of rehabilitation and reconstruction, but also a sustained and adequate long-term development programme;

4. Calls upon all States, all regional and interregional organizations, non-governmental organizations and other intergovernmental agencies, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the World Bank, to provide Djibouti with substantial and appropriate assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, to enable it to cope with its special economic difficulties;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Djibouti;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a study of the economic situation of Djibouti and of the progress made in the organization and implementation of the new special programme of economic assistance for that country, in time for the question to be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

Namibia

At its April 1991 session,<sup>(21)</sup> the Committee for Development Planning (CDP) concluded that Namibia did not meet the criteria for inclusion on the list of least developed countries (see PART THREE, Chapter I) due to its relatively high gross domestic product per capita, its natural endowments and the level of the economic diversification index. It noted, however, that income distribution was highly skewed and that, as a newly independent nation, it encountered special problems in its transitional period. It recommended that the international community adopt special measures in favour of Namibia for a period of years in order to assist it in mobilizing its considerable economic potential as a newly independent nation.

UNDP action. On 25 June 1991,<sup>(22)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council, taking into account CDP's recommendation, decided to extend special assistance to Namibia during the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) equivalent to that given to a least developed country. The Council appealed to Member States and other United Nations entities to provide assistance to Namibia.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/50 without vote.

Special assistance to Namibia

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 1 of 14 September 1990, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, in which the Conference recommended that Namibia should be given special consideration in support of its economic and social development and invited the General Assembly to consider, in accordance with established procedures, the question of the inclusion of Namibia in the list of least developed countries,<sup>a</sup>

Recalling also the Declaration of the Heads of State and Government of the Least Developed Countries, issued at their meeting in New York on 1 October 1990,<sup>b</sup> in which, inter alia, the General Assembly was invited to consider the matter,

Welcoming General Assembly resolution 45/198 of 21 December 1990, in which the Assembly decided to give Namibia special consideration in support of its economic and social development, in accordance with the resolution on economic assistance and least developed country status for Namibia adopted at the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries,

Also welcoming the recommendation of the Committee for Development Planning that the international community adopt special measures in favour of Namibia for a period of years in order to assist it in mobilizing its considerable economic potential as a newly independent nation,

Taking into consideration the urgent need of Namibia for assistance in its efforts to reconstruct and strengthen its fledgling economic and social structures,

Taking note of and welcoming decision 4/90 of 23 November 1990 of the European Community by which the Community accorded Namibia a status equivalent to that of a least developed country during the first five years of the fourth Lomé Convention concluded between the Community and the States members of the African, Caribbean and Pacific Group and signed on 15 December 1989,

Taking into account decision 91/14 of 25 June 1991, adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, in which the Governing Council decided to extend special assistance to Namibia during the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) equivalent to that given to a least developed country,

Noting in particular that full information on per capita income level and other economic and social indicators of direct relevance to consultations within the Committee for Development Planning will not be available until the results of the forthcoming national census, which is being organized with the assistance of the United Nations Population Fund, are published in April 1992,

1. considers that Namibia should be given special consideration in support of its economic and social development;

2. Urgently appeals to all States Members of the United Nations and to the international economic and financial institutions concerned to respond generously to the needs of Namibia and to provide assistance on a bilateral/multilateral basis;

3. Invites States, organizations of the United Nations system and other donor agencies to grant Namibia for a number of years, as is already being done by the European Community, assistance of a scope comparable to that given to a least developed country, in order to take into account the conditions that exist in Namibia and to assist it, as a newly independent country, to mobilize its economic potential.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 46/204 without vote.

Special assistance to Namibia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/198 of 21 December 1990, on the inclusion of Namibia in the list of least developed countries, in which it decided to give Namibia special consideration in support of its economic and social development,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 643(1989) of 31 October 1989, by which the Council urgently appealed to Member States, United Nations agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to extend, in coordination with the Secretary-General, generous financial, material and technical support to the Namibian people, both during the transitional period and after independence,

Taking into account the recommendation of the Committee for Development Planning that the international community adopt special measures in favour of Namibia for a period of years in order to assist it, as a newly independent nation, in mobilizing its considerable economic potential,

Welcoming decision 91/14 adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on 25 June 1991, in which the Governing Council decided to extend to Namibia during the fifth programming cycle special assistance equivalent to that given to a least developed country,

Also welcoming Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/50 of 26 July 1991, on special assistance to Namibia,

Disasters

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

In response to a 1989 resolution,(1) by which the General Assembly proclaimed the 1990s as the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (IDNDR) and adopted an International Framework of Action for its implementation, and in response to a 1990 resolution(2) reiterating the proclamation, the Secretary-General submitted in a 1991 report(3) on the implementation of the Framework of Action. It reviewed activities undertaken at the country level and by United Nations organizations, and also outlined organizational and financial arrangements.

Noting progress in implementing the Framework of Action, the report cited the inaugural meeting of IDNDR's Special High-level Council, the first two sessions of its Scientific and Technical Committee, the establishment of national committees and focal points, the organization of major meetings, and events and activities within the United Nations system.

The Special High-level Council, established by the Secretary-General to provide advice and guidance for the Decade, at its inaugural meeting (New York, 9 and 10 October), adopted the New York Declaration, which included a series of conclusions regarding the importance of reducing vulnerability to natural disasters. The Council decided to pursue the full involvement of private and public business sectors in disaster reduction, and called for disaster mitigation efforts by national, regional and international organizations. It also decided to undertake individual activities on behalf of the Decade at all levels, particularly in increasing public awareness of natural hazards and in mobilizing resources and political support.

The Scientific and Technical Committee, charged with developing programmes to reduce losses from natural disasters, in its first annual report, recommended six actions to develop national capacities to undertake mitigation strategies within the national development process that would reduce the impact of natural hazards: endorsement of the Decade's targets; recognition of disaster prevention, warning and preparedness as integral parts of national planning for sustainable development; establishment of national committees in all countries; urging countries to contribute to disaster-reduction activities; encouragement of support for a world conference of national committee representatives, planned for 1994 as a mid-term review; and re-emphasis of the importance of natural disasters in programmes of the United Nations system. In addition, the report outlined a programme framework adopted by the Committee for the implementation of its plan, reflecting the work of the Committee's first (Bonn, Germany, 4-8 March) and second (Guatemala City, 16-20 September) sessions. The report was annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

Also in 1991 several major meetings and events were organized in connection with the Decade, including a regional symposium on IDNDR (Bangkok, Thailand, 11-15 February), a regional round table on disaster mitigation policies and management (Manila, Philippines, 29 April-3 May) and the International Conference on Disaster Communications (Tampere, Finland, 20-22 May).

Office of the UN Disaster Relief Coordinator

During 1991, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator (UNDRO) continued its international disaster relief and mitigation activities. In a report describing UNDRO activities in 1990-1991,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General said that Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the United Nations, continuing a trend of solidarity in responding to crises, reported to UNDRO international aid in cash and in kind of $2.86 billion for the two-year period, compared with $1.6 billion for the previous biennium.

Along with financial support, greater public attention was paid to the cost-effectiveness of relief operations and, within this context, relief coordination acquired renewed emphasis. As a result, UNDRO was entrusted even more than before with the task of channelling international aid. Total contributions through UNDRO amounted to $207 million, a five-fold increase over the previous biennium.

UNDRO provided assistance or support in connection with 106 disasters or emergencies over the two-year period. In 1991, the major natural disasters included cyclones in Bangladesh and Samoa, floods in China and Cambodia, an outbreak of cholera in Peru, floods and an earthquake in Afghanistan and the eruption of Mount Pinatubo in the Philippines. Man-made disasters required particular attention, notably the Iraq/Kuwait crisis, which consumed $1.4 billion in international assistance in 1991, over half of the $2.1 billion in contributions reported to UNDRO for the year.

In line with its relief coordination mandate, UNDRO participated in or led several needs-assessment missions in the aftermath of disasters. It also increased the number of information meetings held to alert the international community to disasters, to mobilize resources and to promote the exchange of information among donor Governments and organizations. The Iraq/Kuwait crisis provided an impetus to strengthen coordination efforts, resulting in several innovations expected to be useful in responding to future emergencies. The lessons learned from this crisis, which were reported in a separate case-study, inspired UNDRO's proposals to the General Assembly to strengthen its ability to fulfil its mandate, which were presented in an annex to a background paper on the strengthening of UNDRO, transmitted to the Economic and Social Council in July 1991 by the Secretary-General (see below).

In 1991, UNDRO also strengthened its preparedness activities in order to improve the international response to disasters. These activities included: expanding the storage capacity of its Pisa, Italy, warehouse, which served as a primary relief assembly centre during the Persian Gulf crisis; convening the International Search and Rescue Workshop 1991, hosted by the Austrian Government (Wattener, Lizum, Tyrol, 8-13 April), and the subsequent creation of the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group; participating in the organization of the Conference on Disaster Communications (Tampere, 20-22 May), which issued the Tampere Declaration, identifying the need for communications and remote sensing in disaster management and calling on UNDRO to convene in 1993 a conference to negotiate an intergovernmental convention on disaster communications; convening a fourth meeting of officials in charge of national emergency relief services (Geneva, 1 and 2 October) with a view to strengthening international disaster management relief and mitigation; continuing the activities of the Disaster Management Training Programme launched in 1990; preparation of a draft UNDP/UNDRO Disaster Management Manual, which set out policies and procedures for inter-agency preparedness and response; and continuing work on the UNDRO/IDNDR multilingual terminology project, including presentation of a list of proposed terms and definitions at a meeting of experts and international organization representatives (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 23-27 September) and development of a model computerized terminology database.

The declaration of IDNDR in 1990 led to an increased demand for technical assistance in the developing countries and an interest on the part of donors to increase contributions to promote disaster prevention and preparedness. The main difficulty was a shortage of experienced personnel. To address that need, UNDRO initiated several subregional projects and promoted wider international exchange of experience and methodologies in Latin America, Asia and the Mediterranean region. A special effort was made to improve the disaster management skills of local populations by conducting scenario studies in disaster-prone areas and by introducing a fellowship programme to train disaster management officials.

UNDRO made a concerted effort during the biennium to upgrade its information management system in order to improve the flow of information among relief officials, disaster managers, policy and decision makers and the public. The improvements included the addition of technical staff, switching to personal computers from a mainframe environment, establishment of a local area network, definition of specifications for an operations centre and strengthening the UNDRO information network. Finland, Germany and Japan helped finance this endeavour.

UNDRO financing

Sixty per cent of UNDRO's basic operating costs for 1990-1991 were financed from the United Nations regular budget, while voluntary government contributions and overhead charges on donor contributions provided the remaining 40 per cent. This represented a decline in the proportion financed by the United Nations, from 74 per cent in the previous two-year period. Approximately 80 per cent of the budget was used to meet personnel costs. Appropriations for UNDRO for 1990-1991 amounted to $7,508,400, nearly all of which was expended.

Contributions to UNDRO for disaster relief increased to $214.5 million in 1990-1991, from $42.5 million during the previous biennium. Extra-budgetary resources for the biennium were credited to the United Nations Trust Fund for the Strengthening of UNDRO ($3,994,418), the Trust Fund for Disaster Relief ($214,462,121), the Trust Fund for UNDRO Technical Cooperation Activities ($4,195,850), the UNDRO Account for Programme Support ($6,181,856) and the Sasakawa/UNDRO Disaster Prevention Award Endowment Fund ($155,344).

Disaster relief coordination

In response to a General Assembly request of 1990,(6) the Secretary-General submitted in July 1991 to the Economic and Social Council a background paper(7) regarding the strengthening of UNDRO's capacity to fulfil its mandate, in the light of an overall analysis of the United Nations system's capacity to respond to calls for disaster mitigation and relief assistance. The background paper described UNDRO's mandate and detailed its experience in the fields of disaster relief coordination and disaster mitigation. The paper also discussed UNDRO's resources, both financial and human, and resource constraints; addressed the need to adapt further existing United Nations procedures concerning the procurement, transport and storage of relief supplies; and included a preliminary assessment of UNDRO's experience in the situation between Iraq and Kuwait.

In response to a 1990 request of the Council,(8) the Secretary-General, in June 1991,(9) transmitted an independent study on United Nations experience, capacity and coordination arrangements in assisting refugees, displaced persons and returnees, which contained proposals also having a direct bearing on UNDRO's functioning. Also in June,(10) the Secretary-General considered that the question of UNDRO's strengthening could best be examined in the context of the system-wide review of the United Nations capacity to respond to emergency situations (see below, under "Emergency relief and assistance").

By decision 1991/289 of 26 July 1991, the Council decided to annex the summary of the general discussion on disaster relief coordination to its report to the General Assembly.(4)

Drought-stricken areas

Sub-Saharan Africa

The Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification of the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) was established in 1986,(11) with a funding target of $300 million for the first three years. With the first phase of the Programme drawing to a close, the IFAD Governing Council in May 1991 approved its continuation into a second and terminal phase.

Following the approval of three loans in 1991 for Chad, Senegal and Zambia, the Special Programme covered 21 countries. The three new projects had a combined value of $30.6 million. A further $1.4 million in grants was allocated under the Special Operations Facility. Co-financiers contributed a further $10.3 million.

Projects under the Programme aimed at the most critical sectors in the poorest areas in drought-affected and desert-prone countries, such as: rehabilitation and recovery in the smallholder farm sector; development of traditional staple food crops; small-scale water control schemes; agro-forestry and environmental rehabilitation; and institutional support and policy reorientation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1991/95 without vote.

Second phase of the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification of the International Fund for Agricultural Development

Recalling its resolution 1989/88 of 26 July 1989, in which it stressed the urgent need for substantial progress in stimulating food production in developing countries and the importance of increasing domestic food production for stimulating national economic growth and social progress in those countries and helping to resolve the problem of hunger and malnutrition in an effective way,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 45/207 of 21 December 1990, in which the Assembly urged the members of the international community to take further determined action in support of the efforts of developing countries by increasing even more the flow of resources, including concessional flows designated for agricultural development, and by increasing food aid commitments in support of the strengthened efforts of developing countries to increase mobilization and allocation of domestic resources to address food and agricultural problems, in addition to the flow of resources from developed countries, bearing in mind the need to channel this assistance through appropriate existing organizations and programmes,

Welcoming the recent appeal made by the Secretary-General in which he reminded all countries of the situation facing Africa and of the 30 million people in the continent threatened by famine,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, containing the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, in which the African countries and the international community undertook, inter alia, to devote priority attention and increased resources to reviving and developing food production and agriculture in Africa,

Recalling resolutions CM/Res.1060(XLIV), CM/Res.1119(XLVI) and CM/Res.1322(LIII) adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-fourth, forty-sixth and fifty-third ordinary sessions and endorsed by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, and resolution 721(XXVI) adopted by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, in which the Conference of Ministers appealed to the international donor community to increase the resources for the second phase of the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, with a view to achieving the target of $300 million necessary for a three-year period beginning in 1991,

Bearing in mind the mandate given to the President of the International Fund for Agricultural Development by the Governing Council of the Fund at its thirteenth session, to consult donors on the mobilization of additional resources so that the Special Programme could continue for a second phase and the authorization given to the President and to the Executive Board of the Fund by the Governing Council at its fourteenth session to initiate activities for the implementation of the second phase of the Special Programme,

Also bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 45/207 on food and agricultural problems, in which the Assembly, inter alia, invited donors to endorse resolution 60/XIII of 25 January 1990 of the Governing Council of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, concerning the possibility of additional voluntary contributions to the Special Resources for Sub-Saharan Africa for a further three years, starting in January 1991, without prejudicing deliberations on the mobilization of core funding for the Fund,

Noting with satisfaction the positive contribution made by the Fund to the economic recovery programmes of its developing member States and the assistance provided by it to the African region in accordance with the provisions of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, in particular through the first phase of its Special Programme, in which the target of $300 million was reached and the funds thus mobilized were fully committed,

Concerned about the constant deterioration in socio-economic conditions in Africa,

Greatly encouraged by formal statements made by a number of donors pledging contributions to the second phase of the Special Programme,

1. welcomes the action taken by the International Fund for Agricultural Development under its Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification, which gives priority to improving food security through measures to preserve the environment and restore existing productive capacity and to ensuring that projects once completed will yield lasting benefits;

2. Stresses the urgent need for a steady, predictable and sustained flow of resources to Africa so as to promote rehabilitation and development, especially in agriculture, and to meet urgent needs in connection with drought control and economic reform;

3. Expresses its appreciation to countries which have already made firm pledges or have indicated their intention of making contributions to the second phase of the Special Programme, covering the period 1991-1993;

4. Invites donors to endorse resolution 60/XIII of the Governing Council of the International Fund for Agricultural Development concerning the possibility of additional voluntary contributions for the second phase of the Special Programme, without prejudicing the deliberations on the integration of the Special Programme into the general activities of the Fund.

Sudano-Sahelian region

The United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) continued in 1991 under UNDP supervision to assist countries in medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programmes.<sup>(12)</sup> During the year, particular emphasis was given to the sustainable utilization of natural resources, especially the need to monitor the environment, integrate environment with development and ensure that Governments had adequate institutional capacity in those fields. To that end, UNSO cooperated with 19 of the 22 Sudano-Sahelian countries to enhance capacity in planning and coordination for the sustainable management of the environment.

In response to a General Assembly request of 1989,<sup>(13)</sup> UNSO continued to support the preparatory process for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) on the drought and desertification issue. The African common position on issues to be raised at UNCED was finalized at the African Ministerial Conference held at Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, in November; UNSO, working in a joint support committee with the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Desertification, organized meetings at which regional priorities were identified, which in turn provided important input to that position.

National components of regional programmes providing tree seeds for land rehabilitation were initiated in several countries and, as part of the UNSO Sahel Programme, village-based natural resources management for the promotion of local control and management of the productive resources and full popular participation in development continued to be financed by the Swedish International Development Agency. UNSO was also involved in pastoral community development and efforts to strengthen grass-roots aspects of UNDP and UNSO activities.

Resources pledged to UNSO for 1991 totalled $7.6 million and an additional $7.7 million was received on a multi-bilateral basis; over 100 projects were supported throughout the region.

The UNDP Governing Council, on 25 June,<sup>(14)</sup> noted the progress of UNSO and encouraged it to continue to assist government efforts in establishing sectoral strategies for the protection, rehabilitation and management of natural productive resources. It also took note of UNSO's contribution in assisting Sudano-Sahelian countries in their preparations for UNCED and renewed its appeal to Governments and organizations for contributions. ### Storms and floods

Cyclone in Bangladesh

At the resumed forty-fifth session of the General Assembly in 1991, Bangladesh stated that more than 10 million people had been affected by a cyclone and tidal wave in April, including early reports of 140,000 dead. In early May, the Secretary-General issued a special emergency appeal for $168 million to cover the immediate needs of that country.

UNICEF action. The Executive Board of UNICEF, at its 1991 session,<sup>(15)</sup> appealed to the international community to assist in alleviating the situation in Bangladesh and requested the Executive Director to continue and intensify UNICEF efforts in coordination with other United Nations agencies to reduce the suffering of children and women affected by the cyclone.

UNEP action. At its May 1991 session,<sup>(16)</sup> the UNEP Governing Council urged the UNEP Executive Director to provide and facilitate obtaining all possible assistance for the protection of the environment in Bangladesh, including an urgent case-study by UNEP on the coastal areas of the country. It appealed to Governments and international organizations to extend all possible assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 May 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/263 without vote.

Assistance to Bangladesh in the wake of the devastating cyclone

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the colossal loss of human life and the unprecedented destruction of property and infrastructure caused by the cyclone and tidal waves that struck Bangladesh on 29 April 1991,

Considering that Bangladesh is one of the least developed countries and that its situation has been worsened by the frequent recurrence of natural disasters having devastating consequences,

Aware that the coastal areas of Bangladesh are particularly vulnerable to natural calamity resulting in widespread human and material loss,

Recognizing the relief and rehabilitation efforts of the Government of Bangladesh to alleviate the suffering of disaster victims,

Recognizing also that natural disasters constitute a development problem of great magnitude, the solution of which calls for substantial resources, requiring national efforts to be supplemented by international financial and technical assistance.

Noting the appeal to the international community by the Prime Minister of Bangladesh to come forward in aid of those affected by the disastrous cyclone,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the Government and people of Bangladesh during the tragic aftermath of the disaster;

2. Appeals to all Member States, specialized agencies and other organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as international financial institutions, and to non-governmental organizations to respond urgently and generously to assist Bangladesh in its relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts and programmes following the calamity;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all possible assistance to Bangladesh to mitigate the suffering of the victims and to prevent further consequences of the disaster, particularly through the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, as well as other relevant organizations and agencies of the United Nations system.

Other disasters

Earthquake, volcanic eruption and typhoon in the Philippines

The eruption of Mount Pinatubo on the island of Luzon, Philippines, which began on 9 June, and ensuing earthquake and typhoon left at least 500 persons dead, hundreds more injured and some 250,000 homeless. Reconstruction costs were estimated at more than $500 million.

In the wake of the eruption and the subsequent typhoon, the UNDP Governing Council, on 25 June,<sup>(17)</sup> called on the Administrator and the international community to assist in the rehabilitation process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 46/177 without vote.

Emergency assistance to the Philippines

The General Assembly,

Noting with concern the great loss of life and property caused by the most recent disasters in the Philippines, namely, an earthquake, a volcanic eruption, typhoons, floods and a massive mudflow,

Taking note of decision 91/22 of 25 June 1991 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, on emergency aid to the Philippines,

Acknowledging that the earnest efforts made by the Government of the Philippines to achieve economic growth and development have been hampered by those calamities,

1. Commends the organs and organizations of the United Nations system for their prompt action in giving emergency assistance to the Philippines;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, within his mandate, to further assist the rehabilitation efforts of the Philippines to the maximum extent possible;

3. Requests all States and international organizations to extend further support to the Philippines in ways that would alleviate, for the duration of the emergency and the ensuing rehabilitation process, the economic and financial burden borne by the Philippine people.

Locust and grasshopper infestation

In May 1991,<sup>(18)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council a report of the Director-General of FAO on the implementation of the international strategy for the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa, prepared in accordance with a 1990 resolution of the Council.<sup>(19)</sup>

The Director-General stated that the overall locust situation remained calm in early 1991 with no substantial populations of desert locust, African migratory locust, red locust or brown locust reported. Grasshopper infestations were also less severe. Although the FAO Emergency Centre for Locust Operations had closed in December 1990 due to the reduction in infestations, FAO would continue with its responsibilities in the field through its regular programme activities.

On 26 July, by decision 1991/287, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Director-General's report.

Screw-worm infestation

In May 1991,<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council pursuant to its 1990 request,<sup>(21)</sup> a report of the Director-General of FAO on the screw-worm infestation in Africa. The Director-General said that FAO realized the emergency nature of the spread of the screw-worm fly, and that further spread could have catastrophic consequences for livestock and wildlife in Africa.

After successful field testing under the direction of the Screw-worm Emergency Centre for North Africa, FAO utilized the sterile insect technique for eradication. The full-scale programme commenced in February 1991 and consisted of weekly transatlantic shipments of millions of sterile insects from Mexico for dispersal over the infested area. Initial results were extremely positive, with screw-worm cases in January to April reduced to 6 from 386 recorded over the same period in 1990.

In July 1991,<sup>(22)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council a note by IFAD on the same topic, which reiterated the success of the field testing. Pursuant to a June 1990 memorandum of understanding between FAO and IFAD, giving IFAD the responsibility for resource mobilization and FAO for execution, a pledging conference was held in February 1991. In combination with a pledging conference held in 1990, some $72.2 million was pledged in cash and kind from multilateral and bilateral donors, including $27 million from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, where the problem was first discovered.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted resolution 1991/59 without vote.

Fight against the screw-worm infestation

Recalling its resolution 1990/61 of 26 July 1990, in which, inter alia, it recognized the potentially devastating effects of the screw-worm infestation on people, livestock and wildlife and the adverse socio-economic consequences thereof,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 45/207 of 21 December 1990, in which, inter alia, the Assembly urged the international community to give full support to action to eradicate the screw-worm fly, particularly in Africa, and welcomed the support already provided by donors to the collaboration between the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development on the eradication programme,

Noting with satisfaction the gratifying results of the pilot programme in virtually eradicating the screw-worm menace in the target area and restricting its spread into new areas,

Noting that the large-scale programme for the eradication of the screw-worm fly from North Africa, executed by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, with the support of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the United Nations Development Programme, the affected countries and other donors, is in an advanced stage, as evidenced by the confinement of the parasite to the originally infested zone and the currently low number of cases within this area,

Noting also that the objectives of the screw-worm eradication programme are to eliminate economic losses in the livestock sector, to remove an immense threat to the bio-diversity of the continent and to reduce the potential for human suffering through the use of an environmentally sound and sustainable method, namely the Sterile Insect Technique, to eradicate the screw-worm,

1. Takes note of the report of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the note by the International Fund for Agricultural Development;

2. Welcomes the prompt response by the International Fund for Agricultural Development in initiating the regional pilot biological control programme for the New World screw-worm in North Africa and by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in establishing the Screw-worm Emergency Centre for North Africa for the execution of the pilot and subsequent programmes, the technical support extended by the International Atomic Energy Agency and the financial support extended by the African Development Bank and the United Nations Development Programme;

3. Notes with satisfaction the progress achieved thus far through the eradication programme;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments concerned, as well as to the World Bank, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the Islamic Development Bank, the African Development Bank, the United Nations Development Programme and the Fund for International Development of the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries for their financial support for the full-scale eradication phase;

5. Requests the Governments and organizations concerned to continue to monitor the situation closely and to take further measures to bring about the complete eradication of the screw-worm in Africa;

6. Urges funding agencies and the donor community to continue to support the eradication programme to ensure its successful completion;

7. Commends the joint effort against the screw-worm as an effective demonstration of the potential of multilateral cooperation to meet a common global environmental challenge;

8. Invites the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, in cooperation with the International Fund for Agricultural Development, to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its regular session of 1992 an up-to-date report on the screw-worm eradication programme.

Chernobyl aftermath

In an October 1991 report,<sup>(23)</sup> the Secretary-General discussed international cooperation to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster of 1986, bringing up to date information submitted in June to the Economic and Social Council.<sup>(24)</sup> The report described the explosion at the nuclear power plant, measures undertaken by the Soviet authorities to counteract the disaster and related activities of the United Nations system. The Secretary-General stated that the actions undertaken in response to a 1990 General Assembly request<sup>(25)</sup> constituted only the beginning of what must be a continuing and constantly evolving process.

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/315, took note of the June report.

Pursuant to the Assembly's request,(25) the Secretary-General appointed the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna as Coordinator for international cooperation to the areas affected by the accident. Having established a small core secretariat in Vienna, she held discussions with Soviet authorities both in Moscow and in the affected republics, and submitted an outline of a concerted plan of assistance requirements to them for guidance.

In April, the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) established an Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Task Force to Address the Consequences of the Nuclear Accident at Chernobyl,(26) which was to be closely involved for five years in all aspects of international assistance efforts.

The Economic Commission for Europe, in April 1991, adopted a decision on international cooperation to mitigate the consequences of the accident.(27) The Commission called on member States to continue participating in its activities seeking to alleviate the accident's consequences.

A working group convened at Vienna in May to review and finalize the requirements for assistance into a joint plan, which covered, as of October 1991, 131 project proposals calling for outside funding in the amount of $646,480,000. In addition, Governments concerned would make counterpart contributions and investments in each case. The projects were grouped in seven sectors: health, resettlement, economic rehabilitation, socio-psychological rehabilitation, food and agriculture, environmental monitoring and clean-up, and lessons from the Chernobyl experience.

The Chernobyl Pledging Conference (New York, 20 September) resulted in receipts and pledges totalling approximately $8 million in convertible currency, the equivalent of $3.4 million in non-convertible currency and a significant amount of in-kind assistance.

At an international conference on the radiological consequences in the USSR of the Chernobyl accident (Vienna, 21-24 May 1991), experts in various radiation-related disciplines reviewed a study on the consequences of the accident conducted from mid-1990 until early 1991 by a number of international bodies, coordinated by the International Atomic Energy Agency. The study showed that there were no health disorders directly attributable to radiation exposure in the populations in the areas affected by the accident; it also found no statistically significant evidence of an increase in incidence of fetal abnormalities as a result of radiation exposure.

to consider technical and other special assistance for the areas most affected by the accident, and to inform the Council in 1992 of the progress made.

UNICEF action. At its 1991 session,(29) the Executive Board of UNICEF urged the Executive Director to consider possible technical and other special assistance to children and mothers living in the areas most affected by the accident, and requested him to continue to provide all appropriate support and assistance to the victims.

Emergency relief and assistance

Humanitarian assistance coordination within the United Nations system

In October 1991, the Secretary-General reported on the review of the capacity, experience and coordination arrangements in the United Nations system for humanitarian assistance.(1) He stated that for an international effort to respond to disasters to yield the most positive results, two conditions were essential: sufficient and readily available resources, and improved coordination within the system and with Member States, both recipients and donors, as well as with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. He noted that a number of programmes, agencies and United Nations departments were involved in prevention, mitigation and provision of assistance in emergency situations. The Secretary-General therefore made a series of recommendations which sought to be comprehensive in scope, dealing with all aspects of the handling of emergency situations. They covered early warning, prevention, preparedness and stand-by capacity, consolidated emergency appeals, and coordination and leadership. An annex to the report contained information on and analysis of the mandates, capacities and activities of United Nations organizations involved in humanitarian assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/182 without vote.

Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971 and its subsequent resolutions and decisions on humanitarian assistance, including its resolution 45/100 of 14 December 1990,

Recalling also its resolution 44/236 of 22 December 1989, the annex to which contains the International Framework of Action for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction,

Deeply concerned about the suffering of the victims of disasters and emergency situations, the loss in human lives, the flow of refugees, the mass displacement of people and the material destruction,

Mindful of the need to strengthen further and make more effective the collective efforts of the international community, in particular the United Nations system, in providing humanitarian assistance,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the review of the capacity, experience and coordination arrangements in the United Nations system for humanitarian assistance,

1. Adopts the text contained in the annex to the present resolution for the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX

I. Guiding principles

1. Humanitarian assistance is of cardinal importance for the victims of natural disasters and other emergencies.

2. Humanitarian assistance must be provided in accordance with the principles of humanity, neutrality and impartiality.

3. The sovereignty, territorial integrity and national unity of States must be fully respected in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations. In this context, humanitarian assistance should be provided with the consent of the affected country and in principle on the basis of an appeal by the affected country.

4. Each State has the responsibility first and foremost to take care of the victims of natural disasters and other emergencies occurring on its territory. Hence, the affected State has the primary role in the initiation, organization, coordination, and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory.

5. The magnitude and duration of many emergencies may be beyond the response capacity of many affected countries. International cooperation to address emergency situations and to strengthen the response capacity of affected countries is thus of great importance. Such cooperation should be provided in accordance with international law and national laws. Intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations working impartially and with strictly humanitarian motives should continue to make a significant contribution in supplementing national efforts.

6. States whose populations are in need of humanitarian assistance are called upon to facilitate the work of these organizations in implementing humanitarian assistance, in particular the supply of food, medicines, shelter and health care, for which access to victims is essential.

7. States in proximity to emergencies are urged to participate closely with the affected countries in international efforts, with a view to facilitating, to the extent possible, the transit of humanitarian assistance.

8. Special attention should be given to disaster prevention and preparedness by the Governments concerned, as well as by the international community.

9. There is a clear relationship between emergency, rehabilitation and development. In order to ensure a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation and development, emergency assistance should be provided in ways that will be supportive of recovery and long-term development. Thus, emergency measures should be seen as a step towards long-term development.

10. Economic growth and sustainable development are essential for prevention of and preparedness against natural disasters and other emergencies. Many emergencies reflect the underlying crisis in development facing developing countries. Humanitarian assistance should therefore be accompanied by a renewal of commitment to economic growth and sustainable development of developing countries. In this context, adequate resources must be made available to address their development problems.

11. Contributions for humanitarian assistance should be provided in a way which is not to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development.

12. The United Nations has a central and unique role to play in providing leadership and coordinating the efforts of the international community to support the affected countries. The United Nations should ensure the prompt and smooth delivery of relief assistance in full respect of the above-mentioned principles, bearing in mind also relevant General Assembly resolutions, including resolutions 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971 and 45/100 of 14 December 1990. The United Nations system needs to be adapted and strengthened to meet present and future challenges in an effective and coherent manner. It should be provided with resources commensurate with future requirements. The inadequacy of such resources has been one of the major constraints in the effective response of the United Nations to emergencies.

II. Prevention

13. The international community should adequately assist developing countries in strengthening their capacity in disaster prevention and mitigation, both at the national and regional levels, for example, in establishing and enhancing integrated programmes in this regard.

14. In order to reduce the impact of disasters there should be increased awareness of the need for establishing disaster mitigation strategies, particularly in disaster-prone countries. There should be greater exchange and dissemination of existing and new technical information related to the assessment, prediction and mitigation of disasters. As called for in the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, efforts should be intensified to develop measures for prevention and mitigation of natural disasters and similar emergencies through programmes of technical assistance and modalities for favourable access to, and transfer of, relevant technology.

15. The disaster management training programme recently initiated by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator and the United Nations Development Programme should be strengthened and broadened.

16. Organizations of the United Nations system involved in the funding and the provision of assistance relevant to the prevention of emergencies should be provided with sufficient and readily available resources.

17. The international community is urged to provide the necessary support and resources to programmes and activities undertaken to further the goals and objectives of the Decade.

III. Preparedness

18. International relief assistance should supplement national efforts to improve the capacities of developing countries to mitigate the effects of natural disasters expeditiously and effectively and to cope efficiently with all emergencies. The United Nations should enhance its efforts to assist developing countries to strengthen their capacity to respond to disasters, at the national and regional levels, as appropriate.

Early warning

19. On the basis of existing mandates and drawing upon monitoring arrangements available within the system, the United Nations should intensify efforts, building upon the existing capacities of relevant organizations and entities of the United Nations, for the systematic pooling, analysis and dissemination of early-warning information on natural disasters and other emergencies. In this context, the United Nations should consider making use as appropriate of the early-warning capacities of Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

20. Early-warning information should be made available in an unrestricted and timely manner to all interested Governments and concerned authorities, in particular of affected or disaster-prone countries. The capacity of disaster-prone countries to receive, use and disseminate this information should be strengthened. In this connection, the international community is urged to assist these countries upon request with the establishment and enhancement of national early-warning systems.

IV. Stand-by capacity

(a) Contingency funding arrangement

21. Organizations and entities of the United Nations system should continue to respond to requests for emergency assistance within their respective mandates. Reserve and other contingency funding arrangements of these organizations and entities should be examined by their respective governing bodies to strengthen further their operational capacities for rapid and coordinated response to emergencies.

22. In addition, there is a need for a complementary central funding mechanism to ensure the provision of adequate resources for use in the initial phase of emergencies that require a system-wide response.

23. To that end, the Secretary-General should establish under his authority a central emergency revolving fund as a cash-flow mechanism to ensure the rapid and coordinated response of the organizations of the system.

24. This fund should be put into operation with an amount of 50 million United States dollars. The fund should be financed by voluntary contributions. Consultations among potential donors should be held to this end. To achieve this target, the Secretary-General should launch an appeal to potential donors and convene a meeting of those donors in the first quarter of 1992 to secure Contributions to the fund on an assured, broad-based and additional basis.

25. Resources should be advanced to the operational organizations of the system on the understanding that they would reimburse the fund in the first instance from the voluntary contributions received in response to consolidated appeals.

26. The operation of the fund should be reviewed after two years.

(b) Additional measures for rapid response

27. The United Nations should, building upon the existing capacities of relevant organizations, establish a central register of all specialized personnel and teams of technical specialists, as well as relief supplies, equipment and services available within the United Nations system and from Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, that can be called upon at short notice by the United Nations.

28. The United Nations should continue to make appropriate arrangements with interested Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to enable it to have more expeditious access, when necessary, to their emergency relief capacities, including food reserves, emergency stockpiles and personnel, as well as logistic support. In the context of the annual report to the General Assembly mentioned in paragraph 35 (i) below, the Secretary-General is requested to report on progress in this regard.

29. Special emergency rules and procedures should be developed by the United Nations to enable all organizations to disburse quickly emergency funds, and to procure emergency supplies and equipment, as well as to recruit emergency staff.

30. Disaster-prone countries should develop special emergency procedures to expedite the rapid procurement and deployment of equipment and relief supplies.

V. Consolidated appeals

31. For emergencies requiring a coordinated response, the Secretary-General should ensure that an initial consolidated appeal covering all concerned organizations of the system, prepared in consultation with the affected State, is issued within the shortest possible time and in any event not longer than one week. In the case of prolonged emergencies, this initial appeal should be updated and elaborated within four weeks, as more information becomes available.

32. Potential donors should adopt necessary measures to increase and expedite their contributions, including setting aside, on a stand-by basis, financial and other resources that can be disbursed quickly to the United Nations system in response to the consolidated appeals of the Secretary-General.

VI. Coordination, cooperation and leadership

(a) Leadership of the Secretary-General

33. The leadership role of the Secretary-General is critical and must be strengthened to ensure better preparation for, as well as rapid and coherent response to, natural disasters and other emergencies. This should be achieved through coordinated support for prevention and preparedness measures and the optimal utilization of, inter alia, an inter-agency standing committee, consolidated appeals, a central emergency revolving fund and a register of stand-by capacities.

34. To this end, and on the understanding that the requisite resources envisaged in paragraph 24 above would be provided, a high-level official (emergency relief coordinator) would be designated by the Secretary-General to work closely with and with direct access to him, in cooperation with the relevant organizations and entities of the system dealing with humanitarian assistance and in full respect of their mandates, without prejudice to any decisions to be taken by the General Assembly on the overall restructuring of the Secretariat of the United Nations. This high-level official should combine the functions at present carried out in the coordination of United Nations response by representatives of the Secretary-General for major and complex emergencies, as well as by the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator.

35. Under the aegis of the General Assembly and working under the direction of the Secretary-General, the high-level official would have the following responsibilities:

(a) Processing requests from affected Member States for emergency assistance requiring a coordinated response;

(b) Maintaining an overview of all emergencies through, inter alia, the systematic pooling and analysis of early-warning information as envisaged in paragraph 19 above, with a view to coordinating and facilitating the humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system to those emergencies that require a coordinated response;

(c) Organizing, in consultation with the Government of the affected country, a joint inter-agency needs-assessment mission and preparing a consolidated appeal to be issued by the Secretary-General, to be followed by periodic situation reports including information on all sources of external assistance;

(d) Actively facilitating, including through negotiation if needed, the access by the operational organizations to emergency areas for the rapid provision of emergency assistance by obtaining the consent of all parties concerned, through modalities such as the establishment of temporary relief corridors where needed, days and zones of tranquility and other forms;

(e) Managing, in consultation with the operational organizations concerned, the central emergency revolving fund and assisting in the mobilization of resources;

(f) Serving as a central focal point with Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerning United Nations emergency relief operations and, when appropriate and necessary, mobilizing their emergency relief capacities, including through consultations in his capacity as Chairman of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee;

(g) Providing consolidated information, including early warning on emergencies, to all interested Governments and concerned authorities, particularly affected and disaster-prone countries, drawing on the capacities of the organizations of the system and other available sources;

(h) Actively promoting, in close collaboration with concerned organizations, the smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation and reconstruction as relief operations under his aegis are phased out;

(i) Preparing an annual report for the Secretary-General on the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance, including information on the central emergency revolving fund, to be submitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.

36. The high-level official should be supported by a secretariat based on a strengthened Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator and the consolidation of existing offices that deal with complex emergencies. This secretariat could be supplemented by staff seconded from concerned organizations of the system. The high-level official should work closely with organizations and entities of the United Nations system, as well as the International Committee of the Red Cross, the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, the International Organization for Migration and relevant non-governmental organizations. At the country level, the high-level official would maintain close contact with and provide leadership to the resident coordinators on matters relating to humanitarian assistance.

37. The Secretary-General should ensure that arrangements between the high-level official and all relevant organizations are set in place, establishing responsibilities for prompt and coordinated action in the event of emergency.

(b) Inter-Agency Standing Committee

38. An Inter-Agency Standing Committee serviced by a strengthened Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator should be established under the chairmanship of the high-level official with the participation of all operational organizations and with a standing invitation to the International Committee of the Red Cross, the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, and the International Organization for Migration. Relevant non-governmental organizations can be invited to participate on an ad hoc basis. The Committee should meet as soon as possible in response to emergencies.

(c) Country-level coordination

39. Within the overall framework described above and in support of the efforts of the affected countries, the resident coordinator should normally coordinate the humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system at the country level. He/She should facilitate the preparedness of the United Nations system and assist in a speedy transition from relief to development. He/She should promote the use of all locally or regionally available relief capacities. The resident coordinator should chair an emergency operations group of field representatives and experts from the system.

VII. Continuum from relief to rehabilitation and development

40. Emergency assistance must be provided in ways that will be supportive of recovery and long-term development. Development assistance organizations of the United Nations system should be involved at an early stage and should collaborate closely with those responsible for emergency relief and recovery, within their existing mandates.

41. International cooperation and support for rehabilitation and reconstruction should continue with sustained intensity after the initial relief stage. The rehabilitation phase should be used as an opportunity to restructure and improve facilities and services destroyed by emergencies in order to enable them to withstand the impact of future emergencies.

42. International cooperation should be accelerated for the development of developing countries, thereby contributing to reducing the occurrence and impact of future disasters and emergencies.

Activities

Africa

Emergency Programme for the Horn of Africa

The overthrow of the Mengistu regime in Ethiopia in May and June 1991 resulted in substantial refugee flows in various directions. The Secretary-General immediately called an emergency meeting at Abuja, Nigeria, which led to a mission to the area. Subsequently, in response to donors and Member States, he instituted a Special Emergency Programme for the Horn of Africa, in addition to the assistance programmes for Somalia and the Sudan (see below). A consolidated inter-agency appeal was launched and, in September, the Secretary-General convened a special donors' meeting; he appealed for international assistance in support of the Programme but did not receive the desired response. To ensure that the international community would be better able to cope with the situation in 1992, joint assessment teams were set up to visit the Horn of Africa. Projections by FAO suggested that there would be very considerable needs in 1992, albeit not on the same scale as in 1991.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted resolution 1991/60 without vote.

Critical humanitarian situation in the Horn of Africa

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 45/154, 45/157, 45/160 and 45/161 of 18 December 1990,

Deeply concerned about the critical condition of millions of people threatened by famine, ill-health and civil strife, and equally concerned about the massive number of refugees and displaced persons in the Horn of Africa,

Bearing in mind the appeals made by the Secretary-General at the twenty-seventh ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, held at Abuja from 3 to 5 June 1991, and at the opening of the second regular session of 1991 of the Economic and Social Council, on 3 July, in which he invited the international community to give prompt attention to the impending catastrophic situation that threatened in the Horn of Africa and called for the mobilization of additional resources to help the countries concerned to cope with the critical humanitarian situation,

Being particularly aware that there is a link between emergency aid, rehabilitation and development and that the existence of refugees and displaced persons places a heavy burden on the social and economic infrastructures of the countries concerned,

Taking into account the serious implications of the existing situation for the development prospects of the countries concerned and the imperative need for a coordinated approach by the United Nations system as a whole,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General for his initiative in sending an inter-agency mission to the Horn of Africa to assess the emergency humanitarian assistance for the affected countries and for his untiring efforts to alert the international community to the critical situation existing in the region and the need to mobilize additional resources;

2. Appeals to the international community and to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to respond generously and promptly to the Secretary-General's appeals to meet the urgent needs already identified in the report of the inter-agency mission;

3. Appeals to all parties in the Horn of Africa to contribute constructively to the current processes of national reconciliation and regional cooperation and to the related negotiating efforts;

4. Calls upon Governments and other parties concerned in the affected countries, given the particular circumstances prevailing in those countries, to allow the international relief and development organizations and agencies, as well as the non-governmental organizations concerned, full access to the affected areas, to ensure their protection and to facilitate their efforts to provide humanitarian assistance to refugees and internally displaced persons;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Angola

In response to a 1990 resolution of the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in September 1991 a report on international assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola.<sup>(3)</sup> The report noted the activities undertaken by United Nations entities in Angola including UNDP, ECA, UNDRP, WFP, FAO, UNESCO, the World Bank, UNIDO, ICAO and IFAD. It also noted bilateral assistance by several Member States and the Commission of the European Communities.

In addition to the ongoing economic rehabilitation programmes, on 11 March 1991 the United Nations and Angola agreed to resume the Special Relief Programme for Angola, which had been launched in November 1990 but suspended the following month. On 28 March, the Secretary-General issued an appeal for the Programme, which was designed to alleviate the suffering of 1.9 million people threatened by famine as a result of the prolonged drought and civil conflict, extending it for three additional months.

In view of the signing of a peace accord between the Government of Angola and the Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola providing for a cease-fire to take effect on 31 May 1991 and for multi-party general elections in late 1992, the United Nations system entered into discussions with the Angolan authorities regarding relief operations in the immediate post-cease-fire period.

The report stated that over 6,000 tons of food had been supplied to people displaced or affected by conflict, 3,600 agricultural kits were distributed to provide farmers with the means to restart their own food production, and essentials such as blankets, clothing and tents were distributed in many provinces.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 46/142 without vote.

International assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/233 of 21 December 1990, on international assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 387(1976) of 31 March 1976, 475(1980) of 27 June 1980, 628(1989) of 16 January 1989 and other resolutions of the Council regarding international assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola, in which, inter alia, the international community was requested to render assistance to Angola,

Deeply concerned about the serious economic situation in Angola, Concerned that the drought which ravaged the central and southern portions of the country has taken thousands of human lives and caused great suffering, which is still being felt,

Taking into consideration the determined efforts that have been made by all parties concerned, which, with the signing of the Peace Accords for Angola,<sup>a</sup> pave the way for the economic and social rehabilitation of Angola,

Conscious of the need for greater engagement on the part of the international community in rendering assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on international assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola, and welcomes with appreciation the support given up until now;

2. Welcomes the signing of the Peace Accords for Angola, which have created political conditions for the economic and social rehabilitation of Angola;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the international community for the emergency humanitarian assistance rendered to Angola through the Special Relief Programme for Angola, and appeals for generous contributions for the continuation of the Programme in 1992;

4. Reiterates its appeal to the international community to continue to render material, technical and financial assistance necessary for the economic rehabilitation of Angola;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the international community, to continue to mobilize organizations and organs of the United Nations system in order to increase the level of economic assistance for Angola;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "International assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola".

Liberia

In response to a 1990 request of the General Assembly,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General reported in September 1991<sup>(5)</sup> on emergency assistance for the economic and social rehabilitation of Liberia. The report outlined the initial United Nations response to Liberia's civil conflict, which completely disrupted the social, administrative and economic infrastructure and affected over 1 million Liberians—more than half the country's population. It was agreed that the United Nations should expand the emergency relief programme to cover all parts of the country, and, to that end, joint United Nations/non-governmental organization assessment missions, organized by the Office of the Special Co-ordinator for Emergency Relief Operations, visited Liberia between 28 May and 7 June 1991.

The results of the missions provided the basis for elaborating a country-wide emergency assistance programme for one year commencing in July 1991 at a cost of $135.6 million, for which the Secretary-General issued a consolidated appeal. The programme was divided into seven sectors, with an appropriate United Nations agency responsible for each: food aid; health and medical care; water supply and sanitation; education and children in difficult circumstances; agricultural sector; refugees, returnees and displaced persons (see PART THREE, Chapter XV); and programme support. Food aid far outweighed the other sectors in cost, at an estimated $80.4 million. A number of United Nations entities, Member States and other donors made contributions in cash and kind.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 May 1991, by decision 1991/220, the Economic and Social Council took note of an oral report on emergency assistance to Liberia made on 15 May by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions, Regional Cooperation, Decolonization and Trusteeship.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 46/147 without vote.

Assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia

Recalling its resolution 45/232 of 21 December 1990,

Recalling also the statement of the Security Council of 22 January 1991 on the situation in Liberia, in which the Council, inter alia, welcomed the regional initiative of the Economic Community of West African States and called for international support for the efforts aimed at a peaceful settlement of the conflict,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on emergency assistance for the economic and social rehabilitation of Liberia,

Noting that, despite the efforts made to provide assistance for the Liberian refugees, the situation with regard to the displaced persons and the returnees remains precarious,

Noting with deep concern the devastating effects of the conflict on the Liberian economy and the urgent need to rehabilitate basic sectors of society in order to restore normalcy,

Welcoming the recent agreement reached at the fourth meeting of the Committee of Five and other members of the Standing Mediation Committee of the Economic Community of West African States, held at Yamoussoukro, Côte d'Ivoire, on the immediate encampment and disarmament of combatants and for the holding of democratic elections,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have responded and continue to respond to the appeals by the Government of Liberia and the Secretary-General for emergency assistance;

2. Also expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General for his efforts in mobilizing the international community, the United Nations system and other organizations to provide emergency assistance to Liberia, and urges that such assistance be continued, as necessary;

3. Calls upon the international community and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide Liberia with technical, financial and material assistance for the repatriation and resettlement of Liberian refugees, returnees and displaced persons and for the rehabilitation of combatants and their families, as provided for in the national action plans, which constitute important elements for facilitating the holding of democratic elections in Liberia;

4. Also calls upon the international community and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide adequate assistance to programmes and projects identified in the report of the Secretary-General;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to coordinate the work of the United Nations system and to mobilize financial, technical and material assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia;

(b) To undertake, in close collaboration with the authorities of Liberia, an overall assessment of needs, with the objective of holding as soon as possible a round-table conference of donors for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia, as a basis for the earliest resumption of the process of development;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Somalia

In accordance with a 1990 resolution of the General Assembly,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in September 1991 a report on emergency assistance to Somalia.<sup>(7)</sup> He stated that, by January 1991, all foreign diplomatic missions and international organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), had been evacuated from the capital, Mogadishu, and that the violent clashes that led to the overthrow of the Government and the ensuing inter-clan fighting caused the displacement of about one third of the country's 7 million people.

Following the establishment of a provisional Government, a task force, under the leadership of the Special Coordinator for Special Emergency Relief Operations, undertook a one-day assessment mission on 20 February to look into the security situation, hold informal talks with the authorities and meet with Somali local staff to organize a regular exchange of communications. The mission resulted in an appeal from the provisional Government to the United Nations and others for emergency assistance, and a pledge of secure office and housing accommodation for United Nations staff. The provisional Government also consented to the United Nations condition that emergency operations would have to benefit all Somalis in need, regardless of their location.

Following high-level meetings to review the situation (New York, April 1991), the Secretary-General authorized the re-establishment of a limited United Nations presence in Somalia to carry out emergency humanitarian relief activities. An ensuing security assessment mission that took place between 7 and 11 May confirmed the traumatic and appalling state of affairs of the country: fragmented and shaky administrative authorities, unstable security conditions, war injuries, food shortages, epidemics, and lack of shelter and basic public services. It found the most vulnerable groups to be refugees and returnees (see PART THREE, Chapter XV). A United Nations inter-agency needs assessment mission visited the north and centre of Somalia from 26 June to 4 July and found similar conditions. As at August, limited United Nations emergency relief staff were present at Berbera and Boroma in the north and at Mogadishu.

The report also summarized information from Member States and United Nations entities on the nature and extent of assistance provided to Somalia.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 March, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/212, included in the provisional agenda of its first regular session of 1991 an item on emergency assistance to Somalia. On 29 May, the Council adopted resolution 1991/3 without vote.

Emergency assistance to Somalia

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 1989/111 of 22 May 1989 and General Assembly resolutions 44/178 of 19 December 1989 and 45/229 of 21 December 1990,

Welcoming the action taken by the Secretary-General of sending a mission to Somalia to ascertain security conditions in preparation for the resumption of an emergency assistance programme,

Having heard the report of the Special Coordinator for Emergency Relief Operations in Somalia,

Extremely concerned at the massive displacement of the population in the affected regions of Somalia, the extensive damage to and destruction of villages, towns and cities, the heavy damage inflicted by the civil conflict on the country's infrastructure and the widespread disruption of public facilities and services,

Noting with great satisfaction the humanitarian efforts being deployed by various national and international non-governmental organizations,

Deeply appreciative of the humanitarian assistance rendered by a number of Member States to ameliorate the hardship and suffering of the affected population,

Aware of the complex political situation prevailing throughout the country and the continuation of civil strife in several areas,

1. Strongly appeals to Somalia's national leaders to do their utmost to bring about national reconciliation and to restore and promote peace and stability throughout the country;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the action taken in preparing for the resumption of United Nations assistance programmes in Somalia;

3. Also expresses its appreciation for the humanitarian assistance provided to Somalia by several countries, as well as by members of the community of non-governmental organizations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to assist in the formulation of medium- and long-term programmes for the rehabilitation and development of Somalia;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to dispatch, without delay, an inter-agency assessment mission to determine the emergency and medium-term needs of the affected population and to make recommendations on the financial and material resources required for the restoration of basic social services and physical infrastructure, including power, water, shelter, transport and communications;

6. Appeals to Member States and to international governmental and non-governmental organizations to extend generous assistance, in particular food, medicines and shelter, to the affected population through the appropriate humanitarian channels;

7. Urges the appropriate specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World

Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Health Organization, to resume their assistance programmes in Somalia in their respective fields of competence;

8. Colls upon the Secretary-General to mobilize, on an urgent basis, international humanitarian assistance to provide for the immediate needs both of the internally displaced population and of those refugees who still remain in the country;

9. Strongly recommends that relief assistance be made available to all persons who are in need, that adequate measures be taken to ensure the safe delivery of relief supplies and the safety of relief workers, and that distribution of those supplies take place under the supervision of United Nations staff members in order to ensure impartiality and fairness;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the urgency of the situation, to endeavour to apprise the Council, at its second regular session of 1991, of the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution and to arrange for a comprehensive report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 46/176 without vote.

Emergency assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/206 of 20 December 1988, 44/178 of 19 December 1989 and 45/229 of 21 December 1990 and the resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council on emergency assistance to Somalia,

Recalling also the appeal for urgent humanitarian assistance for Somalia and other countries in Africa made by the Secretary-General at the twenty-seventh ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, held at Abuja, Nigeria, from 3 to 5 June 1991,

Noting with satisfaction the measures taken by the Secretary-General to mobilize international assistance to Somalia,

Deeply concerned at the massive displacement of the population in the affected regions of Somalia, the extensive damage and destruction of villages, towns and cities, the heavy damage inflicted by the civil conflict on the infrastructure of the country and the widespread disruption of public facilities and services,

Stressing the critical need to bring the civil war to an end expeditiously and as soon as possible through the involvement of all parties,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on emergency assistance to Somalia and of the statement on the Special Emergency Programme for the Horn of Africa made before the Second Committee of the General Assembly on 31 October 1991 by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions, Regional Cooperation, Decolonization and Trusteeship,

Deeply appreciative of the humanitarian assistance rendered by a number of Member States to alleviate the hardship and suffering of the affected population,

Noting that many areas and regions are safe and accessible enough to allow immediate and urgent humanitarian assistance to be provided to all of the affected population,

Noting with great satisfaction the humanitarian efforts being deployed by the various entities of the United Nations system and by national and international non-governmental organizations,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the Member States and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have responded to the appeals of the Secretary-General and others by extending emergency assistance to Somalia;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the measures taken to mobilize emergency assistance to the affected population in Somalia;

3. Appeals to all States and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to extend emergency assistance to Somalia, taking into account the statement on the Special Emergency Programme for the Horn of Africa made before the Second Committee of the General Assembly on 31 October 1991 by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions, Regional Cooperation, Decolonization and Trusteeship;

4. Urges the concerned specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements and the United Nations Environment Programme, to resume on the most urgent basis their assistance programmes in their respective fields of competence in order to alleviate the suffering of all the affected population in accessible areas;

5. Appeals to all parties concerned to terminate hostilities and to engage in a national reconciliation process which will lead to the re-establishment of peace, order and stability and also facilitate the relief and rehabilitation efforts;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize international humanitarian assistance for Somalia;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the critical situation prevailing in Somalia, to take all necessary measures for the implementation of the present resolution, to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its regular session of 1992 of the progress made and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

Sudan

Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 1990,<sup>(8)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in September 1991 a report on emergency assistance to the Sudan and Operation Lifeline Sudan.<sup>(9)</sup> The report stated that because of the continuing civil war and a drought even more serious than that in 1984-1986, some 8 million people were at risk and, in spite of the large-scale relief operation, unacceptably high levels of malnutrition still prevailed in various parts of the country. Although the 1991 rains were above average in frequency and distribution, which enhanced crop production, they also hindered relief transport. The report noted that at least 3.5 million conflict-displaced people and millions of others left impoverished due to successive years of drought had no assurances that essential food and non-food needs could be met from their own resources. Continued conflict in the south of the country exacerbated the problem. Since the situation remained fragile, continued international assistance would be required in 1992.

Appeals were made to the international donor community by WFP and UNICEF. On 14 March 1991, the Secretary-General launched a consolidated appeal for some $716.6 million. Though the international community responded readily, the weak road and rail infrastructure made transport of vitally needed assistance extremely difficult, especially after July/August rains in the most needy areas made roads impassable. Insecurity resulting from tribal conflicts and the sheer number of village councils throughout Darfur province further complicated the situation. Funding from the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States enabled WFP to begin airlift operations in July.

Operation Lifeline Sudan, a United Nations emergency assistance programme designed to deliver relief goods through agreed "corridors of tranquility" during the civil conflict between the Government and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement (SPLM), had a difficult third year in 1991. The consequences of rigidly apportioned relief allocations and of persistent failures to open corridors of tranquility in the conflict zones had cast doubt over the viability of the Operation.

At a meeting between the United Nations Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions, Regional Cooperation, Decolonization and Trusteeship and the Chairman of the Revolutionary Command Council on 18 February, the United Nations and the Government of the Sudan renewed their commitment to the principles of the Operation and agreed that certain of its principles would be applicable to the larger programme of emergency assistance in the country. Technical discussions, begun in May to review operational modalities, focused on three broad issues: needs assessments, monitoring and management, and corridors of tranquility. All parties accepted the principle that, when so requested by the United Nations, they were obliged to ensure access routes for the safe passage of relief supplies.

Throughout 1991, the delivery of relief supplies to the conflict zone was on the basis of ad hoc arrangements orchestrated by the United Nations system. Under other arrangements, ICRC, WFP and the Lutheran World Federation resumed assistance activities in both government- and SPLM-held areas. Arrangements for food and non-food aid were made by UNICEF, FAO, the International Labour Organisation (ILO), UNDP, the United Nations Department of Technical Cooperation for Development, a number of international and local non-governmental organizations and Member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 46/178 without vote.

Emergency assistance to the Sudan and Operation Lifeline Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/8 of 18 October 1988, 43/52 of 6 December 1988, 44/12 of 24 October 1989 and 45/226 of 21 December 1990, on assistance to the Sudan,

Noting with deep concern the continuing negative impact of persistent natural disasters and armed conflict in the Sudan, which have resulted in the destruction of the socio-economic infrastructure of that country and in large numbers of displaced persons, as well as the serious consequences of the most recent drought, namely, crop failures and food shortages,

Recognizing that the Sudan continues to require, as a complement to its own efforts, strong and continued international solidarity and humanitarian support to meet the urgent requirements for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction,

Noting that the food and non-food requirements of emergency assistance to the Sudan are spelt out in the Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Special Emergency Programme for the Horn of Africa, issued in September 1991,

1. Recognizes the importance of assuring safe access for personnel providing relief assistance to all those in need;

2. Expresses its deep gratitude and appreciation to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that are providing assistance to the Government and the people of the Sudan in their relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the context of the Sudan Emergency Operation and Operation Lifeline Sudan;

3. Expresses its full appreciation to the Secretary-General and the organizations of the United Nations system for the successful coordination of and effective resource mobilization and support for the Sudan Emergency Operation and Operation Lifeline Sudan;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with the Government of the Sudan, to continue to coordinate the efforts of the United Nations system to help the Sudan in its emergency, rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes, to mobilize resources for the implementation of those programmes and to keep the international community informed of the needs of that country;

5. Calls upon the international community to contribute generously to the relief and rehabilitation requirements of displaced persons;

6. Also calls upon the international community to respond generously to the appeal made in the Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Special Emergency Programme for the Horn of Africa;

7. Urges all parties involved to offer all feasible assistance, including facilitating the movement of relief supplies and personnel, to guarantee maximum success of the Sudan Emergency Operation in all parts of the country;

8. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on emergency assistance to the Sudan and Operation Lifeline Sudan, and requests him to continue to assess the progress of the evolving emergency situation and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council of, all matters connected with the implementation of emergency and relief operations in the Sudan, and to offer briefings in the appropriate forums during the intervening period.

Central America

In response to a 1990 resolution of the General Assembly,<sup>(10)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in September 1991 a report<sup>(11)</sup> on the implementation of the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America, which had commenced in 1988 with the purpose of promoting international and regional cooperation in support of peace, democracy and development in the region. By the same 1990 resolution, the Assembly had extended the Special Plan for an additional three years beginning in 1991.

After an assessment of progress at several presidential summit meetings (Antigua, Guatemala, June 1990; Puntarenas, Costa Rica, December 1990; Tuxtla Gutiérrez, Mexico, January 1991; San Salvador, El Salvador, July 1991), new guidelines for implementation were developed and a revised strategy framework was considered. The revised strategy of the Special Plan included the continuation of activities already initiated with regard to refugees, agricultural development, infrastructure, tourism and institution-strengthening, in addition to three new priority areas: social development, environment and the private sector. As a general objective, activities were aimed at capacity-building of governmental and subregional organizations. (For details of the refugee situation in Central America, see PART THREE, Chapter XV.)

In response to a request by the Central American countries, UNDP in 1991 earmarked an additional $20 million to finance UNDP's role in promoting and executing the Special Plan during the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 46/170 without vote.

Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/1 of 7 October 1987, 43/24 of 15 November 1988, 44/10 of 23 October 1989 and 45/15 of 20 November 1990,

Recalling in particular its resolutions 42/204 of 11 December 1987, 42/231 of 12 May 1988, 43/210 of 20 December 1988, 44/182 of 19 December 1989 and 45/231 of 21 December 1990,

Recalling the importance of the efforts made by the Secretary-General with respect to the situation in Central America and the continuous involvement of the United Nations in economic cooperation in the region,

Particularly interested in continuing to address the emergency situation in Central America, and alarmed at the gravity of the economic and social crisis that continues to affect the region,

Recognizing the work being done by the United Nations Development Programme in discharging the responsibilities entrusted to it for the coordination of the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America,

Recognizing that the Republic of Panama has participated continuously in all of the intraregional coordination and decision-making mechanisms of the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America and that the Central American Presidents, in the Declaration of San Salvador of 17 July 1991,<sup>a</sup> welcomed the decision by the Government of Panama to participate fully and actively in the process of integration in Central America,

Reaffirming its conviction that peace, development and democracy are inseparable,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America, describing the status of implementation of the Special Plan;

2. Decides to approve the inclusion of the Republic of Panama as a full and formal participant in the Special Plan;

3. Welcomes decision 91/3 adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on 22 February 1991, and Council decision 91/54 of 20 September 1991, earmarking 20 million United States dollars from Special Programme Resources for the Special Plan during the fifth programming cycle;

4. Again urges all States, intergovernmental organizations, international financial institutions, the organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system and regional and subregional organs and institutions to continue participating actively in and to take steps for the implementation of activities in support of the goals and objectives of the Special Plan, bearing in mind the difficult socio-economic situation facing the Central American countries, and to support projects presented by those countries under the mechanisms of the Special Plan;

5. Stresses the urgent need for the international community to increase its technical assistance to the Central American countries and to provide them with adequate additional financial resources on soft and favourable terms, with a view to effectively promoting the development and economic growth of the region;

6. Welcomes the Joint Political Declaration and the Joint Economic Communiqué issued by the Ministerial Conference on Political Dialogue and Economic Cooperation between the member States of the European Community and the Central American countries, including Panama, and the member States of the group of cooperating countries (Colombia, Mexico and Venezuela), held at Managua on 18 and 19 March 1991, in which they reaffirmed their commitment to continue to participate in the revitalization and economic and social development of the region;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on the progress made in the implementation of the Special Plan;

8. Decides to examine and evaluate its implementation of the Special Plan at its forty-eighth session.

Costa Rica and Panama

On 22 April 1991, the Atlantic coast of Costa Rica and part of that of Panama was struck by an earthquake that registered 7.4 on the Richter scale, causing considerable loss of life and damage to both countries' infrastructure.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 May 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/262 without vote.

Emergency assistance to Costa Rica and Panama

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/169 of 11 December 1987 on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction,

Deeply concerned about the large number of afflicted persons and the destruction caused by the recent earthquake which, on 22 April 1991, struck Costa Rica and Panama,

Aware of the efforts of the Governments and peoples of the region to save lives and alleviate the suffering of the victims of the earthquake,

Aware also of the enormous effort that will be required to alleviate the grave situation caused by this natural disaster,

Welcoming the prompt response of the Governments, organs, organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system and of the international and regional agencies, the non-governmental organizations and private individuals that are providing emergency relief,

Recognizing that the magnitude of the disaster and its medium-term and long-term effects will require, as a complement to the efforts being made by the peoples and the Governments of Costa Rica and Panama, a demonstration of international solidarity and humanitarian concern to trigger broad multilateral cooperation in order to meet the immediate emergency situation in the affected areas and initiate the process of reconstruction,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Governments and peoples of Costa Rica and Panama;

2. Expresses its gratitude to all the States, international agencies and non-governmental organizations that are providing emergency relief to the affected countries;

3. Urges all States, as a matter of urgency, to contribute generously to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the affected area;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps taken to coordinate and mobilize the relief and rehabilitation efforts;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in close collaboration with the Governments of Costa Rica and Panama, and the international financial institutions and the bodies and agencies of the United Nations system to assist those countries in mobilizing the additional financial resources necessary for the implementation of the medium-term and long-term plans and programmes of rehabilitation and reconstruction.

Haiti

Pursuant to a 1990 resolution of the General Assembly,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General, through his representative, held consultations with the Government of Haiti on initiatives for launching an emergency programme, and submitted in April 1991 a report<sup>(13)</sup> on the outcome of the consultations. To prepare for the programme, two missions visited the country: the first, in January, confirmed that the new President wished to promote the welfare of the poorest social groups, mainly the inhabitants of rural areas. During the second and main mission, in March, consultations were held with government ministers, experts, managers of United Nations projects that were under way or under preparation, and representatives of bilateral programmes in Haiti. The head of the mission was provided with a list of projects that might be included in an overall package of emergency activities for which international financing was sought. That list led to the development of the main features of the proposed programme: timeliness; non-entailment of recurrent costs for the Government and non-interference with the normal operation of the Administration; and concern primarily for three areas—communications, water supply and education.

The mission observed impassable portions of the country's major highway, a lack of running water to whole parts of the population, insufficient electric power, a lack of schools, a truancy rate of some 50 per cent of school-age children, a lack of seeds and basic implements for farming and a danger of endemic diseases such as rabies and anthrax. In addition, the per capita gross domestic product had been declining since 1980 and three quarters of the children suffered from malnutrition.

The Secretary-General stressed that the purpose of the emergency programme was to give local communities a tangible sign of the Government's determination not to delay the commencement of activities that would help to form medium- and long-term programmes aimed at meeting the urgent needs of the people.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 May 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/257 B without vote.

Special emergency assistance to Haiti

B

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/2 of 10 October 1990 and 45/257 A of 21 December 1990,

Conscious of the worsening of the economic and social problems affecting Haiti,

Convinced of the need to launch, as soon as possible, an emergency programme that expresses the support of the international community for the democratization and reconstruction process under way in Haiti,

1. Takes note with interest of the report of the Secretary-General of 26 April 1991;

2. Renews its appeal to Member States, international financial institutions, the specialized agencies and organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to provide immediately the special assistance which Haiti requires in order to support the efforts made by its people and Government in their struggle for democracy and economic survival;

3. Requests to this end the Secretary-General to provide immediately all possible assistance to the launching of a programme of action that will have an immediate impact on the needy population until medium- and long-term assistance programmes can be implemented and taking into account the fundamental choices of the Haitian Government;

4. Expresses the hope that this programme will be transmitted to the competent international institutions and will be ready for implementation before the meeting of the Consultative Group of the World Bank in Paris on 10 July 1991.

Middle East and Western Asia

Gulf Task Force

Following the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, which began with the invasion of Kuwait by Iraq on 2 August 1990 and continued into 1991 (see PART TWO, Chapter III), a group of 21 countries submitted a letter of 22 March 1991 to the Security Council President,<sup>(14)</sup> estimating their losses as a result of complying with the provisions of a 1990 Council resolution<sup>(15)</sup> at over $30 billion. The appeal was supported by the Secretary-General in an oral report of 11 April to the Council. The Secretary-General further informed the Council on 26 April of the conclusions reached by ACC, whereby members of ACC agreed to pursue vigorously their efforts to respond effectively to the needs of countries most affected by implementation of the 1990 resolution. The Secretary-General would coordinate through ACC, within the framework of that assistance, the activities of the United Nations organizations. Also in April,<sup>(16)</sup> the Council called on States, international financial institutions and United Nations bodies to assist the affected countries.

In order to assist in the move from emergency relief to development, the UNDP Administrator established a Gulf Task Force and, with the approval of the UNDP Governing Council in February, allocated up to $4 million from Special Programme Resources to help in emergency relief, as well as to respond to the social and economic needs created by the crisis.<sup>(17)</sup>

The impact of the Persian Gulf hostilities on developing countries was analysed in a May report of the Administrator. The report also summarized emergency relief activities and proposed initiatives in three priority areas: human development and returnees, the environment, and management of the economic impact of the crisis.

On 25 June,<sup>(18)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council requested the Administrator to prepare a programme to help revive the social and economic development and the environment of the countries affected by the crisis. In response to that request, the Administrator submitted in November a report<sup>(19)</sup> on behalf of the Gulf Task Force which contained proposals received from affected countries as well as regional proposals.

Also in response to the Governing Council's request, a meeting of the international community was convened (New York, 16 December 1991) with a view to establishing a funding strategy for the proposals of the Task Force.<sup>(20)</sup> Taking into account the views expressed at the meeting, the Administrator proposed a two-pronged approach: country-specific and regional. Country-specific activities would continue to be handled bilaterally, while UNDP would concentrate its efforts on regional programmes as follows: $9.5 million for a UNDP/ILO proposal for human development and returnees; $3 million, sought from the donor community, for the revival of trade in Central and Eastern Europe and for energy; and, under UNEP leadership, funding for environmental proposals would be further refined. The Administrator concluded that by that strategy it would be possible to reach many of the most seriously affected countries. The UNDP Gulf Task Force, its duties complete, would cease to function after the February 1992 special session of the Governing Council. Thereafter, UNDP or the international and regional bodies concerned would coordinate activities.

Lebanon

In response to a 1990 resolution of the General Assembly<sup>(21)</sup>, the Secretary-General submitted in October 1991 a report on progress in the implementation of assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon.<sup>(22)</sup> The March ratification the Charter for National Reconciliation by the Lebanese National Assembly laid the plan for the dissolution of the three major Lebanese militias, offering the first real hope for progress. In the light of these developments, the Government started to address issues related to rehabilitation of its infrastructure, economic policy and fiscal authority, including that of the public sector.

During the reporting period (1 August 1990–31 July 1991), the United Nations maintained a minimum presence of senior personnel and continued core activities related to humanitarian assistance, including the programme of United Nations Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon (UNARDOL) and that of other United Nations entities and specialized agencies. The Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs and Secretariat Services coordinated the system-wide programmes through UNARDOL and provided overall policy guidelines. He also organized at United Nations Headquarters the Inter-Agency Working Group on Lebanon, comprising United Nations specialized agencies and programmes in Lebanon, to monitor the political environment and review the mobilization of assistance.

After a review of the security situation in Lebanon by a United Nations mission in May, the Secretary-General relaxed the security constraint, allowing the Under-Secretary-General, in his capacity as coordinator for UNARDOL, to dispatch an inter-agency needs assessment mission to Lebanon from 14 to 24 July to assess the country's reconstruction and development requirements. The mission comprised 17 United Nations organizations and agencies led by UNDP and was given the full cooperation of the Government.

In November,<sup>(23)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted the final report of the inter-agency mission to the General Assembly. The report gave a historical and current overview of the situation, outlined national priorities and strategies and presented a needs assessment with costs. The mission determined that the technical assistance needs for Lebanon translated into a total of $232.2 million, with $120.3 million for the immediate term. Capital requirements for a few selected sectors—telecommunications, electricity, water supply, environment, education and agriculture—were estimated at some $3.706 billion and food aid would total some $45 million.

The report concluded that the major driving force behind the country's reconstruction must come from the private sector, both within Lebanon and from expatriate Lebanese capital, and that every effort must be made to tap Lebanese resources to the fullest as the active participation of national funds would constitute a sine qua non for a successful reconstruction programme. It also concluded that while the decimated infrastructure was of top priority, equal priority must be given to immediate humanitarian needs; however, none of these tasks could be accomplished unless national security was guaranteed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted resolution 1991/61 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 45/225 of 21 December 1990 and the previous resolutions of the General Assembly concerning international assistance for the reconstruction of Lebanon, in which the Assembly called upon the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to intensify their programmes of assistance and to expand them in response to the pressing needs of Lebanon,

Aware of the deteriorating socio-economic conditions of the people of Lebanon and the magnitude of their unmet needs,

Noting with deep concern the unprecedented inflation in Lebanon in recent years and the catastrophic decline in the value of the Lebanese pound,

1. Calls upon all Member States and all organizations of the United Nations system to continue and intensify their efforts to provide all possible assistance to the Government of Lebanon in its reconstruction and development efforts, in accordance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council at its regular session of 1992 a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 46/173 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/225 of 21 December 1990 and its previous resolutions on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/61 of 26 July 1991 and other relevant resolutions and decisions previously adopted by the Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and of the statement made before the Second Committee of the General Assembly on 31 October 1991 by the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs and Secretariat Services, in his capacity as coordinator of system-wide assistance to Lebanon, Acknowledging the efforts of the international community, and in particular those of the Arab Tripartite Committee on Lebanon and of Mr. Bettino Craxi in his capacity as Special Adviser to the Secretary-General, towards the reconstruction and development of Lebanon,

Noting with deep concern the grave economic situation in Lebanon caused by the tragic events of the last sixteen years and, in particular, the severe destruction of its infrastructure and the near collapse of basic services,

Reaffirming the urgent need to initiate international action to assist the Government of Lebanon in rebuilding the country and restoring its human and technical capacities,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report and for his efforts to mobilize assistance to Lebanon;

2. Commends the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs and Secretariat Services for his coordination of system-wide assistance to Lebanon;

3. Calls upon Member States and international and regional organizations to provide financial and technical assistance to Lebanon and to give it priority in their programmes of assistance for reconstruction whenever possible;

4. Calls upon all organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to expand their assistance in response to the pressing needs of Lebanon and to take the necessary steps to ensure that their offices in Beirut are adequately staffed at the senior level;

5. Invites the Secretary-General:

(a) To intensify his efforts to mobilize all possible assistance to Lebanon;

(b) To consider favourably the nomination of a resident coordinator in Beirut to coordinate all United Nations programmes of assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon;

(c) To report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Yemen

In response to a 1990 request of the General Assembly,<sup>(24)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in June 1991 a report<sup>(25)</sup> on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Yemen. The report also referred to the concern expressed by the Assembly in 1990<sup>(26)</sup> regarding the burden facing Yemen as a result of the merger of the economic and social infrastructures of the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen—two least developed countries—following their unification in May 1990, in addition to new burdens resulting from the situation between Iraq and Kuwait.

The Secretary-General reported that the Government of Yemen had decided to postpone the start of the country's development plan originally scheduled for 1992-1996 in order to reconsider its emergency and longer-term development priorities. The torrential rains and floods which struck Yemen in 1982 and 1989 causing unprecedented death and destruction had already constrained the implementation of the second (1980-1985) and third (1986-1990) five-year plans of Democratic Yemen.

UNDP, the International Development Association and the Islamic Development Bank continued or resumed rehabilitation projects in 1991. The Secretary-General urged the international community to continue to support the Government of Yemen in its efforts.

On 25 June 1991,<sup>(27)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council requested the Administrator to consider allocating funds to Yemen and emphasized the need to implement its 1990 decision to allocate no less than the combined indicative planning figures of the former separate Yemens. The Administrator was also asked to take account of the scale of problems caused by returnees to Yemen, owing to developments in the Horn of Africa and the Persian Gulf, when providing resources from the Special Programme for the Countries Most Affected by the Gulf Crisis.

Yemen was struck by an earthquake on 22 November, followed by a cyclone on 25 November, rendering thousands of persons homeless and causing serious damage.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted resolution 1991/62 without vote.

Assistance to Yemen

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Yemen,

Noting that, in his report, the Secretary-General emphasized that the continuous assistance and support of the international community to the Government of Yemen remained essential and imperative and that the General Assembly, in its resolution 45/193 of 21 December 1990, had called upon States and governmental and international non-governmental organizations to extend their assistance in support of the national efforts to improve the economic and social infrastructure of Yemen,

Taking into consideration previous resolutions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and international organizations and specialized agencies in this regard, in particular those adopted since the unification of Yemen, which is one of the least developed countries, and with a view to enabling Yemen to shoulder the burdens placed upon it as a result of unification and recent events and to implement its development plans and programmes,

1. Urges the international community to continue to respond to United Nations resolutions concerning assistance to Yemen in order to enable it to formulate and implement short- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes and shoulder the burdens placed upon it by recent events, which have prevented Yemen from continuing to formulate and implement its economic and social plans;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his endeavours and requests him to continue to coordinate the activities of United Nations organizations with a view to assisting Yemen in the mobilization of its resources, the implementation of its reconstruction and development programmes and the reintegration of its socio-economic institutions and structures, and to report thereon to the Council at its regular session of 1992.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 46/179 without vote.

Emergency assistance to Yemen

The General Assembly,

Concerned that Yemen was struck by an earthquake on 22 November 1991, followed by a cyclone on 25 November 1991,

Expressing grave anxiety at the serious consequences of these natural disasters and, above all, the plight of thousands of persons and the damage caused to a great number of buildings and facilities, in addition to other material damage,

Appreciating the efforts undertaken at the national level,

Calls upon Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to extend emergency assistance to Yemen to enable it to deal with these disasters.

Chapter IV

International trade, finance and transport

Although changes in the world economy had brought prosperity to many parts of the world, the position of most of the developing countries had been deteriorating for some time, the Secretary-General stated in his 1991 report on the work of the United Nations. World trade had increased fairly rapidly but not so the exports and imports of developing countries. Foreign direct investment flows had quadrupled in the 1980s but the share of developing countries had fallen sharply. As a result of the debt crisis, the indebted countries as a whole were suffering a net outflow of resources. The external debt of capital-importing countries, which was less than $600 billion in 1988, had reached $1.2 trillion. Income per capita had declined in many parts of the world during the preceding decade. All that had fed the forces leading to violent strife; it had exacerbated health and ecological problems; it had alarmingly increased the ranks of the poor and the displaced. More than 1 billion people lived in absolute poverty.

Taking up the question of trade and development, the Economic and Social Council in July urged Governments to halt and reverse protectionism (resolution 1991/52) and requested the United Nations regional commissions to elaborate projects relating to international trade facilitation (1991/76).

In December, the General Assembly urged the participants in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations to achieve a successful and balanced outcome (46/209). It urged Governments, the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system to present their views to the Secretary-General on the strengthening of international organizations in the area of multilateral trade (46/207). Further, the Assembly stressed the need to improve the database of the Trade Control Measures Information System (46/211).

On the question of the international debt crisis and development, the Assembly emphasized the need for additional debt-relief measures (46/148). It decided to defer until 1992 consideration of a proposal to establish an advisory commission on debt and development (decision 46/433). It took note of the Secretary-General's report on the recent evolution of the international debt strategy (46/434).

The Assembly decided to convene the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD VIII) at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, in 1992 (45/261). It also decided to consider in 1992 the convening of an international conference on the financing of development (46/205).

In the area of international transport, the Council requested the Secretary-General to incorporate, publish and circulate the new recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods (1991/57). The Assembly decided that a United Nations/International Maritime Organization conference on a draft convention on maritime liens and mortgages would be held in 1993 (46/213).

International trade

The Trade and Development Report, 1991,<sup>(1)</sup> prepared by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), stated that the growth of world trade decelerated from 7 per cent in 1989 to 4.3 per cent in 1990, a trend that was continuing in 1991. The recession in a number of developed countries was one of the negative influences on international trade; it was reinforced by disruptions to trade caused by the Persian Gulf conflict and by changes in Central and Eastern Europe. The unification of Germany resulted in a large increase in that country's import demand, to the benefit of world trade. For other economies in transition, the severe economic reversals experienced during 1990 resulted in large declines in import and export volumes.

The world trade pattern was also influenced by changes in the exchange rates of the major trading nations. The depreciation of the dollar reinforced the effects of the recession in the United States by further reducing the rate of growth of its imports below the world average. The growth of United States exports also slowed, but continued to exceed the world average. The rate of growth of European Economic Community (EEC) exports to third countries fell and was well below the world average, while its import growth rose and was well above the average.

Overall, the trade volume performance of developing countries in 1990 was mixed. There was considerable deceleration in the growth of exports from South and South-East Asia for the second consecutive year, owing mainly to a sharp slow-down in exports of the four more industrialized economies of the region. Also for the second consecutive year, Latin America recorded negligible export growth, particularly for non-energy products. However, results were highly varied among countries. In Africa, the volume of exports registered an unusual spurt in 1990, but much of it was due to higher oil exports by the region's few energy-exporting countries. In China, after a setback in 1989, exports recovered the momentum characteristic of the 1980s, while imports fell substantially in response to restrictive macroeconomic policies.

The World Economic Survey 1991(2) reported that although the 4 per cent growth rate in the volume of world merchandise trade in 1990 marked a significant slow-down from 1988 and 1989, that rate of expansion represented the sixth consecutive year in which the increase in world trade exceeded the growth of world output, so that trade could once again be seen as one of the more dynamic elements in the world economy.

The driving force behind the relative vigour of world trade was the rapid increase in the import volume of Germany and other large economies of Western Europe (Belgium, France, Italy, Netherlands, Spain, United Kingdom), several developing economies in Asia (Hong Kong, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Republic of Korea, Singapore, Thailand), and some African (Algeria, Morocco, Nigeria) and Latin American (Mexico, Peru) economies. The rate of growth in the volume of imports of Japan remained somewhat above the world average, as it had been since 1986. In Saudi Arabia and some other oil exporters in the Persian Gulf area, the large increases in oil export revenues did not lead to a spurt in import demand as in the past. The additional funds were partly used as financial contributions to the coalition forces in the Persian Gulf crisis.

On the export side, there was a rapid expansion in the export volume of the United States and the United Kingdom. The depreciation of the dollar helped exports of the United States, whose volume grew by about 8 per cent. France, Japan and the Netherlands also increased their exports at a higher rate than the world average: between 5.5 and 6.5 per cent. Among large developing economies, only Argentina, China, India, Malaysia and Thailand recorded export increases of 10 per cent or above.

Trade policy

The Trade and Development Report, 1991,(1) noted that the developed market-economy countries had forfeited their position in the vanguard of trade liberalization; some developing countries and economies in transition (such as Chile, Mexico and Poland) had assumed the pioneering role, with many others following their example. There had been a recent widespread movement among developing countries towards trade liberalization, both unilaterally and within trading groups. As part of their transformation into market-oriented economies, there was a similar trend in most of the former centrally planned economies.

Within the developed market economies, however, the commitment to trade liberalization had eroded. Agreements had been reached in the latter half of the 1980s on a number of arrangements to reduce the trade barriers among those countries themselves and some measures had been taken to reduce barriers to imports from developing countries. However, they had usually been selective both in product coverage and in geographical scope.

Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations

After more than four years of negotiations, said the Trade and Development Report, 1991,(1) the Uruguay Round—the eighth round of multilateral trade negotiations, launched in 1986(2) under the aegis of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) (see also PART SEVEN, Chapter XVIII)—could not be concluded within the agreed time-frame at the Ministerial Meeting of the Trade Negotiations Committee (Brussels, Belgium, 3-7 December 1990). The negotiations had to be suspended because of a number of political deadlocks, first of all in the area of agriculture. There were also wide divergencies in some other key areas, such as anti-dumping and trade-related investment measures. After the Trade Negotiations Committee formally decided in February 1991 to restart negotiations in all areas, a new negotiating structure was agreed upon in April, reducing the number of negotiating groups to encourage substantive negotiations and help achieve political breakthroughs with the minimum delay. However, the new groups were able to start work only in June 1991 and when the Trade Negotiations Committee met on 30 July key political decisions still remained to be taken.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/52 without vote.

Trade and development

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the report of the Trade and Development Board on the second part of its thirty-seventh session,

Expressing satisfaction with the contribution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to the final assessment of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 and to the follow-up of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s,<sup>a</sup>

Noting with appreciation the Economic Declaration from the Summit of the seven major industrialized countries held in London in July 1991, in which it is stated that no issue has more far-reaching implications for the future prospects of the world economy than the successful conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations,<sup>b</sup>

Reaffirming the importance of an early, successful and balanced conclusion to the Uruguay Round,

1. Urges all Governments to fulfil their commitments undertaken in the Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations and the Mid-Term Review Agreements, to halt and reverse protectionism;

2. Expresses concern about the persistence of protectionist measures which adversely affect trade and development, in particular that of developing countries, and, in this respect, emphasizes the importance of an early, comprehensive and balanced outcome of the Uruguay Round, with the widest possible participation, resulting in the liberalization and expansion of world trade to the benefit of all countries, especially developing countries, in terms of both exports and substantially increased market access, taking into account the need to strengthen the economies and contribute to the growth and development of developing countries;

3. Notes with appreciation the extensive unilateral trade liberalization measures implemented in particular by an increasing number of developing countries, and emphasizes the need for the international community to support those measures through an improved and conducive external economic environment;

4. Emphasizes the importance of the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to be held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, in February 1992, as an opportunity to address crucial issues in the field of trade and development in an action-oriented manner, with a view to revitalizing growth and development, in particular of developing countries, and contributing to the strengthening of multilateral cooperation.

Recalling also its resolution 45/203 of 21 December 1990, on the Trade and Development Board,

Considering that the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to be held in Colombia in 1992, provides, with its development-oriented agenda, a timely opportunity to advance the dialogue on major development issues, taking into account the global political, economic and technological changes of the recent past,

Considering Trade and Development Board resolution 396(XXXVIII) of 4 October 1991, on debt and development problems of developing countries, as part of the continuing contribution of the Board to the search for a durable solution to the problems of the external indebtedness of developing countries, as well as to the substantive preparations for the eighth session of the Conference,

Reiterating that the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations should result in a substantial and balanced outcome in all areas involved, including areas of particular importance to developing countries,

Noting that the Trade and Development Report, 1991, constitutes a valuable contribution to the debate on the interdependence of the problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system, as well as to the understanding of the issues examined within the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Trade and Development Board on the second part of its thirty-seventh session and the first part of its thirty-eighth session,<sup>a</sup> and urges all Member States to give effect to the provisions of the resolutions and decisions adopted by the Board;

2. Notes with appreciation the contribution made by the Trade and Development Board to the understanding of the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system, taking into account the needs of developing countries;

3. Reaffirms the need for all countries to fulfil their responsibilities in strengthening the rules and disciplines of the multilateral trading system for the benefit of all countries and, to this end, urges all participants in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations to adopt a constructive and comprehensive approach thereto in order to achieve a successful and balanced outcome in accordance with the Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round;

4. Reiterates its invitation to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, at its eighth session, to assess the outcome of the Uruguay Round, in particular in areas of interest or concern to developing countries;

5. Welcomes Trade and Development Board resolution 394(XXXVIII) of 4 October 1991, on economic cooperation among developing countries and problems of trade and trade financing, as a further step in the implementation of the Caracas Programme of Action, stresses the need for continued support by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to the process of economic cooperation among developing countries through studies, extension of expertise and technical assistance and, in this connection, invites the United Nations Development Programme and other funding institutions to continue to provide financial support to this process;

6. Also welcomes the progress achieved so far in the substantive preparations for the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

7. Stresses the crucial importance of the eighth session of the Conference in advancing the development dialogue and in giving new impetus to multilateral economic cooperation, and affirms the need to achieve at that session a positive, action-oriented outcome in the interrelated areas of trade, resources for development, technology, commodities and services, which, in particular, will be instrumental in the revitalization of the development process of the developing countries, will strengthen further the impact of the work of the Conference on national and international policy-making and will contribute to the implementation of the commitments and policies contained in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990.

Approved by Second Committee (A/46/645/Add.2) without vote, 4 December (meeting 55); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/46/L.96), based on informal consultations on draft by Ghana for Group of 77 (A/C.2/46/L.53); agenda item 77 (a).

Strengthening institutional trade arrangements

In response to 1990 resolutions of the Economic and Social Council(4) and the General Assembly(5) the Secretary-General submitted in June 1991 a note to the Council(6) on institutional developments related to the strengthening of international organizations in the area of multilateral trade.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General had written to 25 specialized agencies and organizations and programmes of the United Nations, requesting their views on the subject, and, as at 29 May, had received replies from 6; other organizations had indicated that replies would be forthcoming.

In a note to the General Assembly in October(7) the Secretary-General reported that replies had been received from a total of 16 United Nations bodies, and the UNCTAD secretariat had circulated a note verbale to Governments requesting their views. An annex to the Secretary-

General's note outlined the historical background and various proposals for strengthening international organizations in the area of multilateral trade; it commented on the needs and opportunities presented by the current international political and economic atmosphere, taking into account the views expressed and reflecting certain ideas that appeared to merit consideration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/207 without vote.

Strengthening international organizations in the area of multilateral trade

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990,

Recalling its resolution 45/201 of 21 December 1990,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General concerning institutional developments related to the strengthening of international organizations in the area of multilateral trade,

1. Urges all Governments and the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to endeavour to present their views to the Secretary-General on this matter;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, an updated report, taking into account the outcome of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations and the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

Protectionism and structural adjustment

In March 1991, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) carried out its annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment. The UNCTAD secretariat submitted a report(8) which discussed restrictions to trade, major structural developments in the world economy and export prospects of developing countries. Part I (restrictions to trade) covered developments in trade actions and trade legislation in 1990, an assessment of official trade intervention and selected issues (tariffs, changing market access conditions for imports from the USSR and countries in Eastern Europe, agriculture, and market access for African countries). Part II (major structural developments) covered structural change and economic integration in Europe; structural policies and trade-related enterprise strategies in Japan and implications for exports from developing countries; structural adjustment in the United States and exports from developing countries; and economic liberalization, exchange rate policy and export supply capability. An addendum provided statistical data and other information.

A note by the UNCTAD secretariat<sup>(9)</sup> transmitted information provided by 16 member States and EEC for the annual review.

A report by the UNCTAD secretariat on structural adjustment, the evolving international trading system and economic integration among developing countries<sup>(10)</sup> was submitted to the Meeting of Heads of Secretariats of Economic Cooperation and Integration Groupings of Developing Countries (second session, Geneva, 28 January-1 February). The first session of the Meeting in 1989<sup>(11)</sup> had identified priority areas where new initiatives were required to revitalize the integration process among developing countries. It was becoming apparent, however, that revitalization required new strategies in the face of two major challenges: one devolved from the adjustment process in member States of economic groupings; the second arose from a resurgence of interest in developed market-economy countries towards consolidation and widening of their internal economic space as a key element in enhancing trade and development. Both would have a major impact on the international trading system.

In addition, tasks vital to consolidating the integration process in developing countries were as follows: development of production-investment cooperation; revival of the traditional area of integration—trade liberalization—as a stimulus for intraregional trade expansion and industrial development; consultation within integration groupings on policies relating to monetary and financial cooperation; coordination of tax reform; and improvement of communication channels and inland transportation networks.

In another report to the Meeting,<sup>(12)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat discussed trade cooperation and monetary and financial cooperation, and reviewed recent developments in major economic cooperation and integration groupings of developing countries.

Trade preferences

Generalized system of preferences

TDB's Special Committee on Preferences held its eighteenth session at Geneva from 10 to 17 May 1991.<sup>(13)</sup> It considered the fourteenth general report<sup>(14)</sup> by the UNCTAD secretariat on the implementation of the generalized system of preferences (GSP). The report described changes and improvements in GSP and gave updated information on its trade effects. It noted that EEC had temporarily extended preferential treatment to Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia and had recognized Namibia as a beneficiary of its scheme, as had Norway, Switzerland and the United States. EEC and United States schemes had been extended to cover new products, while the graduation of four Asian GSP beneficiaries from the United States scheme had resulted in a large set of products, previously excluded by competitive need limits, to be redesignated as eligible for duty-free treatment. To assist four Andean Group countries to reduce dependence on drugs through expansion of non-traditional exports, EEC and the United States were providing special treatment on a temporary basis. Japan's GSP scheme, the first to complete its 10-year period, had been endorsed for an extension of another 10 years until March 2001, provided appropriate action was taken by the Japanese Government.

The report included a summary of a paper on the incidence of non-tariff measures (NTMs) on imports of GSP-covered products. It indicated that almost one quarter ($7.7 billion) of covered products ($33.3 billion) in 1986 trade terms would have been affected by NTMs applied by 10 countries of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) in 1989.

Updating the trade effects of GSP to cover the most recent period for which information was available, the report stated that total imports of OECD preference-giving countries in 1988, other than Australia and New Zealand, amounted to roughly $371 billion, of which $282 billion were most-favoured-nation dutiable. However, of that amount, only $138 billion consisted of products actually covered by schemes and $56.4 billion of the covered imports actually received preferential treatment. Although GSP utilization rates varied from one scheme to another, under those of EEC and the United States the rates declined between 1987 and 1988, indicating the importance of limitations inherent in those two schemes.

The Special Committee also considered a report<sup>(15)</sup> on technical cooperation activities in connection with GSP during 1990.

On 17 May,<sup>(16)</sup> the Special Committee welcomed Japan's extension of its scheme to the end of March 2001, the intention for a renewed European Community GSP scheme for 1991-2000, the indefinite schemes of Norway and Sweden, and similar intent expressed by some other preference-giving countries. It called on preference-giving countries to extend, strengthen and improve their schemes, while recognizing that developing countries should make complementary efforts to use fully the benefits from potential trade advantages created by GSP. It also called on them to consider comprehensive product coverage, to provide for meaningful preferential tariff margins, to consider granting deeper tariff cuts aimed at duty-free treatment under GSP for products of export interest to developing countries, and to try to reduce limitations and restrictions on preferential imports and frequent withdrawals of preferential benefits so as to impart stability and predictability to the schemes; it recognized that the review of some schemes under way provided an opportunity for them to do so.

The Special Committee recognized that safeguard measures in the GSP context, if taken, should be based on exceptionality, temporariness, consultative procedures and objective criteria, and that NTMs linked to GSP schemes could significantly reduce the benefits from those schemes; it expressed concern at the incidence of NTMs. It recommended that preference-giving countries continue to simplify and improve their rules of origin and recognized the potential contribution which preference-giving country content in the rules of origin could make in stimulating economic cooperation and two-way trade, particularly between developed and developing countries. It called on preference-giving countries to implement the provisions of the Paris Declaration, adopted by the Second (1990) United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (LDCs),<sup>(17)</sup> in respect of GSP measures in favour of LDCs and agreed that special consideration should be given to products of export interest to them, particularly the provision of duty-free access.

The UNCTAD secretariat was asked, in preparing documentation for the Special Committee's next session, to take into account developments, including the Uruguay Round, affecting market access of developing countries in areas of export interest to them. The Special Committee affirmed the importance of GSP in providing preferential market access to developing countries and recognized that the eighth session of UNCTAD (UNCTAD VIII) would provide an opportunity for further consideration of GSP as an important instrument of development cooperation.

With regard to technical cooperation activities relating to GSP, the Special Committee urged that such cooperation take into account its recommendations and that the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and other donors provide the financial and in-kind support required to meet increasing demands for technical assistance, with special attention to the needs of LDCs. It expressed appreciation for assistance provided for the GSP computerized information system's first phase and invited countries, UNDP and other donors to provide assistance for the next phase.

Also on 17 May,<sup>(18)</sup> the Special Committee made technical modifications to the notes on the back of certificates of origin, with effect from 1 January 1992.

Technical cooperation

The UNCTAD technical cooperation programme on GSP and other trade laws consisted in 1991 of two UNDP-financed regional projects (Asia and the Pacific, Africa), two UNDP-financed national projects (Indonesia, Zimbabwe), an interregional project financed by Japan, associate experts financed by Italy and Japan and a Geneva-based UNCTAD interregional programme which provided logistical, administrative and technical support to all projects.

Delivery of technical cooperation activities on GSP and other trade laws remained high in 1991,<sup>(19)</sup> due mainly to an increasing interest in those laws shown by beneficiaries and made possible by UNDP and trust fund contributions by UNCTAD member States. In 1991, total extra-budgetary funding for GSP activities amounted to $1.5 million, of which UNDP accounted for about $680,000. Trust fund contributions amounted to $883,000, of which trust funds for specific purposes totalled $605,000, in-kind contributions, $162,000, and central trust funds, $115,700.

During the year, 44 activities were undertaken in all regions of the world; they included 26 training seminars/workshops and 12 advisory missions aimed primarily at assisting preference-receiving countries to establish or upgrade GSP focal points. In all, 1,431 participants from 54 preference-receiving countries took part in training activities.

Growing training activities in Africa and Central and Eastern Europe were creating an increased awareness and interest in GSP. Furthermore, it was expected that when the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations was concluded, there would be more requests for seminars and advisory missions on other trade laws, particularly from Asia and Latin America, since Uruguay Round agreements would, to a large extent, form new trade laws. The UNCTAD programme was particularly important for developing countries with newly emerging export supply capabilities as it could assist them to increase the foreign exchange earnings needed to attain their development objectives.

Technical cooperation related to GSP and other trade laws was evaluated in a report by the UNCTAD secretariat.<sup>(20)</sup> The report considered programme objectives and design, resources and implementation, and offered an overall assessment, conclusions and recommendations.

Trade promotion and facilitation

During 1991, United Nations bodies continued to assist developing countries to promote their exports and to facilitate the movement of goods in international commerce, the main originator of technical cooperation projects in that area being the International Trade Centre (ITC).

International Trade Centre

During 1991, ITC, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and GATT, continued its technical cooperation activities, serving as the focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in formulating and implementing trade promotion programmes.

After many years of expansion, the technical cooperation delivery of ITC declined by 6 per cent in 1991, reaching $33.6 million. While the drop in implementation was less pronounced (2 per cent) for trust-fund activities, it reached 9 per cent for technical cooperation projects funded by UNDP. The shares of UNDP and trust-fund financed activities were thus reversed in 1991, that of the latter increasing from 49 per cent to 51 per cent.

A number of factors were responsible for the overall decline in implementation; they included the fact that many UNDP-funded projects had to be completed owing to consolidation by UNDP of country and regional/subregional programmes during the last year of its fourth programming cycle (1987-1991). The conflict in the Middle East adversely affected project implementation in that region. The long preparatory periods required for the UNDP programme approach and the preparations for its fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) also caused delays.

The shift to a market/export orientation and the liberalization of imports in many countries as well as renewed emphasis world-wide on the private sector particularly influenced subprogrammes on the institutional infrastructure for trade promotion at the national level (subprogramme 1), export market development (subprogramme 2), specialized national trade promotion services (subprogramme 3), and import operations and techniques (subprogramme 6). Subprogramme 1 changed its focus towards creating a market-friendly economic environment, the accomplishment of which required effective institutions to design and carry out government reform measures. Various technical cooperation projects on institutional aspects were implemented in Bangladesh, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, the Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Honduras, Indonesia, Jordan, Morocco, Nepal, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia. The subprogramme assisted in creating the Foreign Trade Ministry in Colombia and participated in efforts to transform Viet Nam into a market economy.

Subprogramme 2 placed priority on enhancing the market position of developing countries, particularly LDCs, to enable them to confront keener competition on international markets, to take advantage of the rapid growth of certain markets (for example, in South-East Asia) and to take into account the considerable reduction in the absorption capacities of other markets (in Central and Eastern Europe). Adequate and timely trade information remained the cornerstone of a competitive export development and market penetration programme. In 1991, 6 subregional projects and 31 national projects were undertaken with trade information inputs and related data-processing applications.

Subprogramme 3 helped establish or strengthen national institutional capacities for providing up-to-date and accessible essential promotional services to exporters. Subprogramme 4 (commodity promotion) involved the formulation, planning and implementation of generic promotion programmes for selected commodities. ITC activities focused mainly on jute and sisal products. Subprogramme 5 (human resource development for trade promotion) continued to provide training opportunities at the national, subregional, regional and interregional levels. ITC was increasingly providing direct training in the more technical aspects of export development and trade promotion; greater emphasis was being given to imparting practical skills to entrepreneurs engaged in export development. Subprogramme 6 concentrated on assisting enterprises facing the more competitive environment of the 1990s in their import practices and on the simplification of import procedures as part of governmental economic reform policies. It continued to focus its assistance on the individual enterprise.

ITC devoted more than 30 per cent of its technical cooperation delivery in 1991 to LDCs. Under subprogramme 7 (technical cooperation with LDCs), it undertook missions in Afghanistan, Benin, Botswana, Cape Verde, Djibouti, Lesotho, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mozambique, Nepal, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, and Uganda. Subprogramme 8 provided technical assistance to chambers of commerce and other business organizations.

According to the annual report on ITC activities,<sup>(21)</sup> the structural and other changes affecting international trade in 1991 would continue to have an impact on the competitive position of developing countries and of their export products. ITC would therefore need to strengthen its capacity to respond to the rapid evolution of international trade opportunities and competitive situations. More crucially, it would have to sharpen its capacity to anticipate the consequences of such changes on the competitive positions of developing countries and to develop and test methodologies for analysing trade and other economic data.

The Group's general recommendations included the following: global priorities—such as LDCs, women in development, the environmental aspects of trade, rural development and human resource development—should be considered in all relevant ITC activities; ITC should take further steps to monitor and report regularly on its programme priorities; assistance to LDCs should be strengthened in view of their major trade development problems and their low economic growth; ITC should pursue sustainability as a goal in formulating and implementing its technical cooperation activities; ITC should continue to coordinate its programme with national, regional and international organizations, including non-governmental organizations; the research and development and technical backstopping activities of ITC should be further emphasized by collaboration with other bodies working in the same areas; and increased resources should be provided to ITC to enable it to expand its technical cooperation activities for developing countries.

Reviewing ITC activities by subprogramme, JAG recommended that increased efforts be made to foster the exchange of experiences among trade promotion organizations; ITC should develop databases, information briefs and files to support its work; findings arising from technical cooperation activities should be disseminated within the concerned sector and country; ITC should pursue efforts to integrate environmental considerations into its work and review its policy on trade in services; it should expand its support to commodity-exporting countries and to recognized international commodity bodies; it should expand its technical cooperation in human resource development, widely disseminate its paper on strengthening training capacities and foster networking among training institutions; further follow-up action should be taken on JAG recommendations concerning the establishment of an import management intelligence system, the management of imported inputs for export production, import operations under financial aid and credits, and the import of up-to-date technology; ITC should ensure that its programme of technical cooperation with LDCs has a maximum impact on ITC activities; and ITC should reinforce its technical cooperation activities with chambers of commerce and business organizations.

Global trust fund

At ITC's technical meeting (Geneva, 28-30 January 1991),<sup>(26)</sup> Sweden proposed that an ITC global trust fund for technical cooperation be established; such a funding arrangement would not prevent the continuation of the current arrangement under which individual donors earmarked contributions.<sup>(22)</sup> Priorities would be set out by JAG. Sweden also proposed the creation of a committee for continuous consultations among recipient countries, donors and ITC.

The proposal was considered at the April 1991 meeting of JAG, which recommended that a working group be established to study funding reforms for ITC as well as the objectives, mandate and modalities of the consultative committee. The Chairman of JAG subsequently held consultations with government representatives during May and formed a 21-member Working Group on Funding Reform relating to Trust Fund Contributions. The Working Group held meetings on 3 June, 3 July, 13 September, 11 and 30 October and 7 November. It considered the Swedish proposal and other proposals by Canada, China and Switzerland. A proposal for setting up the trust fund and committee was formulated for submission to the ITC technical meeting in 1992.

Financial report

On 20 December 1991, by resolution 46/183, the General Assembly accepted the interim report of the Board of Auditors on ITC<sup>(27)</sup> for the first year of the biennium 1990-1991.

Trade facilitation

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/76 without vote.

Promotion of interregional cooperation in the area of international trade facilitation

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1989/118 of 28 July 1989, in which it invited the regional commissions to formulate, jointly with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, a draft proposal for interregional cooperation for the facilitation of international trade, and in particular the phased application of the Rules for Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transport (EDIFACT),

Noting the support expressed by the regional commissions for the project, including relevant resolutions and decisions,

Recalling its resolution 1990/74 of 27 July 1990,

Conscious of the need for coordinated action at the global level to ensure the effective promotion of international trade facilitation,

Aware that elaboration and implementation of the project would require extrabudgetary resources,

1. Requests the regional commissions, jointly with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to elaborate specific projects relating to interregional cooperation on international trade facilitation and submit them to bilateral donors and funding organizations;

2. Invites all States to support these initiatives;

3. Requests the United Nations Development Programme and other funding organizations to consider favourably the specific projects submitted by the regional commissions and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

4. Requests bilateral donors to consider extending appropriate financial and expert assistance in the implementation of the projects.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/76

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Restrictive business practices

The UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices held its tenth session at Geneva from 21 to 25 October 1991.<sup>(28)</sup>

The Group had before it a note by the UNCTAD secretariat<sup>(29)</sup> containing extracts of replies received from States and regional groups on action taken by them to meet their commitments to the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (known as the Set);<sup>(30)</sup> other notes by the secretariat on technical assistance, advisory and training programmes<sup>(31)</sup> and on information and consultations on restrictive business practices;<sup>(32)</sup> a revised draft by the secretariat of possible elements for articles of a model law or laws on restrictive business practices, and commentaries on the elements;<sup>(33)</sup> and a report by the secretariat on the concentration of market power, through mergers, take-overs, joint ventures and other acquisitions of control, and its effects on international markets.<sup>(34)</sup>

On 25 October, the Group adopted its agreed conclusions. It welcomed the work done by the secretariat on the study of the concentration of market power and requested it to finalize a further draft of the study. The Group also requested the secretariat to prepare an annotated outline of a possible study on competition policy issues related to industrialization in developing countries; to prepare a further draft of possible elements for articles of a model law or laws on restrictive business practices; to continue updating the Handbook on Restrictive Business Practices Legislation; and to simplify the proposed check-lists for information and consultations. Recognizing the importance of technical assistance as a means of securing the implementation of the Set, the Group noted that resources were not sufficient to meet the needs for assistance and called on States, in particular developed countries, and UNDP to provide assistance. Further, the Group welcomed the multilateral and bilateral consultations among experts on competition issues that had taken place during the tenth session, and requested the secretariat to continue to facilitate those consultations.

Commodities

Primary commodities continued to be the mainstay of a large number of developing countries, the World Economic Survey 1991 stated.<sup>(35)</sup> By the end of the 1980s, non-fuel commodities accounted for more than 40 per cent of total exports of developing countries other than the fuel exporters and the major exporters of manufactures. The volume of exports of those commodities continued to increase in the second half of the 1980s, partly in response to higher demand in the industrial economies, which was not, however, high enough to lift commodity prices significantly from the record low they had fallen to by mid-decade. The ineffectiveness of most commodity agreements, continuing over-supply of some products, and the ongoing fall in the materials intensity of output in industrial countries contributed to the persistent weakness of commodity prices.

The combined dollar price index of non-fuel commodity exports of developing countries declined by about 6 per cent in 1990. Since the United States dollar depreciated against other major currencies in 1990, that understated the fall in commodity prices even in nominal terms. The combined special drawing rights (SDR) index of prices declined by some 11 per cent. In real terms—in terms of manufactures they would buy—commodity prices declined even more sharply, by about 15 per cent. There was little sign of recovery in 1991. In the first quarter of the year nominal prices were 4 per cent lower in dollar terms and about 10 per cent lower in SDR terms.

Among food items, rice prices declined by some 10 per cent, while sugar remained practically unchanged. Tropical beverages fell. Coffee, the largest single item of non-fuel primary exports of the developing countries, declined by more than 20 per cent on average to the lowest level since 1986, while cocoa, the second most important item in the group, barely increased in dollar terms from its record low of 1989. Mineral and metal prices showed some diversity of trends, but declined on average. In contrast to non-fuel prices, oil prices increased sharply in 1990 as a result of the Persian Gulf conflict. Prices, on average, rose by some 27 per cent over their 1989 level. Oil prices fell in the first quarter of 1991, but remained above prices in 1989 or the first half of 1990.

The Trade and Development Report, 1991,<sup>(1)</sup> said that tropical beverage prices dramatically illustrated the plight of commodity-producing developing countries. World market prices for coffee, cocoa and tea, as a group, had been falling at an average annual rate of 11 per cent since 1982. Coffee prices reached a 15-year low in 1990 and, while the volume exported increased by 4 per cent, export earnings declined by 22 per cent. That was catastrophic for many countries in Africa and Central America for which coffee accounted for the bulk of export revenue. Although global cocoa consumption had continued to grow, 1990 was the seventh consecutive year of surplus production; the resulting growth in stocks intensified the downward pressure on prices, which hit a new low in early 1991.

A round table on international commodity policies, organized by UNCTAD and the USSR, was held in Moscow from 20 to 24 May 1991,<sup>(35)</sup> in the context of preparations for UNCTAD VIII. Experts from Governments, industry and academic circles and representatives of international commodity organizations participated. Its purpose was to stimulate new ideas on how to maximize the contribution of the commodity sector to growth and development. Five issues were taken up: Was continued reliance on commodities as an engine of growth a viable option? What would be the effects on commodities of increased consciousness of environmental and health considerations? Could technology provide a solution to the problems of the commodity sector? How could an enabling environment be created to stimulate the contribution of the commodity sector to development? How could the balance between world supply and demand for commodities be improved?

The UNCTAD Secretary-General stated that the dominant feature of the 1980s had been the prevalence of very depressed real commodity prices by historical standards. The solution of the commodity crisis required sound policies in both developed and developing countries; the success of such policies was dependent on their compatibility and consistency, and could only be achieved by an international commodity policy, which was the challenge for the 1990s.

A seminar on the promotion of cooperation between commodity-producing countries was held (Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, 6 and 7 June 1991), attended by representatives of countries of Africa, Latin America and Asia which were among the principal producers of coffee, cocoa, natural rubber, cotton, palm oil and wood. Participants discussed the current situation regarding commodities, factors useful for revitalizing cooperation between producer countries, and relations with consumer countries.

Common Fund for Commodities

The Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities, a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing, had entered into force in 1989. The Fund became operational in that year. As specified in the Agreement, the Fund is an autonomous international organization which might, if it wished, seek specialized agency status with the United Nations. It had not, as of 31 December 1991, decided to seek such status.

Signatures and ratifications

As at 31 December 1991,<sup>(36)</sup> the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities had been signed by 119 States and EEC, and 105 States and EEC had formally adhered by ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to it.

Individual commodities

Agricultural commodities

Cocoa. The International Cocoa Agreement, 1986,<sup>(37)</sup> was extended, in part, by a decision of the International Cocoa Council, for a period of two years, effective 1 October 1990. As at 31 July 1991, 18 exporting countries (Brazil, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, Gabon, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Jamaica, Mexico, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Sierra Leone, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Venezuela), 22 consuming countries (Belgium, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, USSR, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia) and EEC had either deposited instruments of ratification or stated their intent to apply the Agreement provisionally. The time-limit for deposit of instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval and the validity of the standard conditions of accession were extended to 30 September 1992.

Reconfirming the acceptance of producers and consumers to continue the search for adequate solutions to the problems of the world cocoa economy, the Council (fourteenth special session, 19 and 20 June 1991) established a preparatory working group to explore the possibilities of a new cocoa agreement. The group met twice in 1991 (10-14 September, 13-15 November).

Coffee. The International Coffee Agreement, 1983, due to expire on 30 September 1992, was extended in 1991 by the International Coffee Council to the end of September 1993, in order that negotiations on a new agreement could be undertaken. To this end, the Council (fifty-seventh session, 23-27 September 1991) established a working group, open to all members, to review proposals and ideas for a new agreement with economic provisions.

Jute and jute products. The International Agreement on Jute and Jute Products, 1989, had been expected to enter into force on 1 January 1991. That proved not to be possible. Pursuant to article 40, paragraph 3, of the Agreement, the Secretary-General of UNCTAD invited those Governments which had signed the Agreement, or which had deposited instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval or had notified the depositary that they would apply the Agreement provisionally, to a meeting on 12 April 1991<sup>(38)</sup> to decide whether to put the Agreement into force provisionally or definitively among themselves in whole or in part. At the meeting, the participants decided to put the 1989 Agreement into force provisionally among themselves in whole. They further decided that the Agreement would enter into force definitively when the requirements set forth in article 40, paragraph 1, had been met, without necessitating a further meeting of the Governments concerned. As at 31 December 1991, the following had deposited instruments of ratification or provisional application of the Agreement: exporting countries—Bangladesh, China, India; importing countries—Australia, Belgium, Denmark, EEC, Egypt, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United States.

Sugar. The International Sugar Agreement, 1987,<sup>(39)</sup> which was to expire on 31 December 1992, was extended for a further year to 31 December 1993 with the aim of allowing members to negotiate a new agreement. To that end, at its meeting in May 1991, the Sugar Council established a working group to consider the terms of a new administrative agreement to succeed the 1987 Agreement.

During 1991, the group met four times; the basic working document was the articles of the 1987 Agreement, on which delegations indicated whether or not they wished amendments to be made.

Minerals and metals

Bauxite. An ad hoc review meeting on bauxite was held from 13 to 17 May 1991.<sup>(40)</sup> The meeting was convened as a result of consultations with producers and consumers. Bauxite-producing countries had proposed that a permanent forum be established to promote discussions between producers and consumers on all questions related to the bauxite/alumina/aluminium industry. The meeting focused on substantive rather than institutional issues, in order to determine in what areas a dialogue between producers and consumers might be useful. Taking into account that views on the desirability of establishing a dialogue seemed to be converging, it was agreed to convene a second review meeting in 1992, which would focus on an examination of the need and the level of support for a producer/consumer forum.

Copper. The terms of reference for an International Copper Study Group were negotiated at the United Nations Conference on Copper, 1988, which met in two parts (13-24 June 1988, 20-24 February 1989) and was attended by 49 States and EEC. It had been envisaged that the terms of reference would enter into force on 30 June 1990 but the condition for that was not met.

As at 6 November 1991, 12 countries had notified their definitive or provisional acceptance of the terms of reference: Belgium, Chile, China, Finland, Greece, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Spain, United States. These countries accounted for 36 per cent of trade in copper as defined in the annex to the terms of reference, a percentage point lower than that required for automatic provisional entry into force.

Pursuant to paragraph 22 (d) of the terms of reference, the Secretary-General of UNCTAD on behalf of the depositary invited those States and intergovernmental organizations that had notified their acceptance of those terms of reference to a meeting on 7 and 8 November 1991,<sup>(41)</sup> to decide whether or not to put the terms of reference into force provisionally or definitively among themselves. After an exchange of views, the meeting agreed that the International Copper Study Group should be established and requested the depositary to convene a further meeting in order that a decision could be taken to put the terms of reference into force.

Iron Ore. The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Iron Ore held its fifth session from 21 to 23 October 1991.<sup>(42)</sup> Major parties in the iron-ore market, including all the main producers and consumers, expected a levelling in 1992 of the sustained activity which had characterized the iron ore industry during 1990-1991. Government officials and a large number of industry advisers from leading companies exchanged views on the current situation and outlook for iron ore.

The Group had before it a report on the market situation and outlook, which included a section dealing with technological and environmental issues, and a bibliography on iron ore and iron ore statistics 1989/90, including year-to-date statistics and forecasts for 1991 and 1992.

Tin. The United Nations Tin Conference, 1988, met from 21 November to 2 December 1988 and from 29 March to 7 April 1989. In 1989, it adopted the terms of reference of an International Tin Study Group. Paragraph 21 (a) of the terms of reference required States accounting for 70 per cent of trade in tin to notify the depositary of their acceptance of the terms of reference. As at 31 December 1991, 10 countries (Belgium, France, Greece, Indonesia, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Netherlands, Nigeria, Portugal, Thailand) and EEC, representing only 34.88 per cent of world trade, had notified their definitive or provisional acceptance of the terms of reference.

Tungsten. At its twenty-third session (18-22 November 1991),<sup>(43)</sup> the Committee on Tungsten provided an opportunity for the representatives of Government and industry in both tungsten-producing and -consuming countries to discuss ways to facilitate international consultations on tungsten trade, to improve statistics on tungsten and to follow the evolution of the world tungsten market.

The Committee had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on recent developments and short-term outlook in the tungsten market, analysing developments in demand and supply, mine capacity, trade policy and price evolution.

The Committee was designated as an International Commodity Body by the Common Fund for Commodities in 1990. The Committee was called upon to consider the sponsoring of project proposals for financing under the Second Account of the Fund. Projects would be related to research and development aimed at strengthening competitiveness in the tungsten industry, at finding new applications for tungsten and balancing supply with demand. In that connection, the Committee had before it a secretariat document on the consideration of project proposals by Governments and industry which could be submitted for possible financing under the Second Account.

China presented project proposals for consideration by the Committee. Because of the technical nature of the proposals, the Committee agreed to hold an ad hoc meeting in 1992 to examine them further as well as other projects under formulation by the industry.

Environment and trade

In response to a 1990 TDB request,<sup>(44)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat, in August 1991,<sup>(45)</sup> submitted a report on policies and mechanisms for achieving sustainable development. Three substantive implications were underlined. First, in the perspective of sustainable development and poverty reduction, the solution to environmental problems arising within particular sectors had to be sought beyond sectoral boundaries. For example, large cities were a major and growing issue in developing countries. Appropriate spatial planning or, even more fundamental, appropriate choice of economic strategies would not only alleviate the environmental impact of big cities, but would also improve the living conditions of both the urban and the rural poor. Policies and mechanisms were no substitute for strategies; they could only influence their implementation.

Secondly, only simple problems could be tackled by a single policy or mechanism. For most of the issues involved in the interface between sustainable development and environmentally sensitive sectors, a mix of policies and mechanisms was indispensable. The specific nature of the mix depended on the institutional structures and capacities in the areas directly concerned.

Thirdly, one of the key concepts in the definition of sustainable development advanced by the World Commission on Environment and Development in 1987<sup>(46)</sup> was the idea of limitations imposed by the state of technology and social organization on the environment's ability to meet current and future needs. Technology was itself a mechanism for implementing environmental policy. Particular technologies could be developed to meet specific environmental needs. The development of technology in turn determined the direction in which the economy moved through time. Social organization might open or block one route or another. The policy mix should vary from place to place as a result of differences in social organization. Any environmental mix, whether based on regulations or market mechanisms, must take into account the administrative, managerial and institutional structures of the countries concerned.

The report concluded that the market did not spontaneously take the key issues of sustainable and environmentally sound development into its functioning. If economic mechanisms were to be used, the market must be constrained by legal and regulatory measures which established a framework within which the market would take into account those factors. Economic mechanisms had a role to play among the policy instruments for achieving sustainable development. However, they had their limits, in that in particular cases non-economic instruments might achieve the policy objectives more quickly, certainly, cheaply or fairly.

On 4 October,<sup>(47)</sup> TDB urged the intergovernmental bodies of UNCTAD to incorporate the objective of sustainable development into their work; considered that the report on policies and mechanisms for achieving sustainable development<sup>(45)</sup> constituted a useful analysis; requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to complete the analysis and to study the impact on trade of environmental measures taken nationally or internationally; agreed that transfer and development of environmentally sound technologies was an essential component of a successful strategy for sustainable development; and requested UNCTAD to provide technical assistance to developing countries, especially LDCs, on the developmental aspects of environmental issues.

On 20 December, by resolution 46/208, the General Assembly welcomed the efforts of UNCTAD to integrate the concept of sustainable development in its work; stressed the importance of UNCTAD's contribution to the preparatory work for the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and to the follow-up to that Conference; and invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to pursue studies and other work on the development and application of environmentally sound technologies.

Also on 4 October,<sup>(48)</sup> TDB invited the UNCTAD secretariat to make use of the information collected by ITC and GATT to facilitate UNCTAD's collection of data on environmental measures related to trade in the Trade Control Measures Information System and to continue to make information from the System available on request.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 46/211.

Adjustment of the Trade Control Measures Information System of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as called for by the General Assembly in resolution 45/210

The General Assembly,

Stressing the principle of free and fair global trade, which should be conducive to the significant enhancement of the trade and development prospects of all countries, in particular developing countries, and the importance to that end of promoting transparency with regard to national trade measures,

Recalling Trade and Development Board decision 354(XXXIV) of 10 May 1988, in which the Board recognized that the computerized database on trade measures was a valuable source of information on general and product-specific trade measures and authorized the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to provide, on request, the information contained in that database,

Recalling also paragraph 1 (b) of its resolution 45/210 of 21 December 1990, in which it called for the adjustment of the Trade Control Measures Information System of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to monitor environmental regulations for possible protectionism and to monitor non-tariff measures that have a bearing on the environment, in accordance with paragraph 6 of Trade and Development Board decision 384(XXXVII) of 12 October 1990,

1. Welcomes Trade and Development Board decision 395(XXXVIII) of 4 October 1991, in which the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development was invited to make use of the information collected by and held in the International Trade Centre, as well as the General Agreement on

Tariffs and Trade and other relevant organizations, for the purpose of facilitating collection by the Conference of data on environmental measures related to trade in the Trade Control Measures Information System, and to continue to make available, on request, information from the System;

2. Notes the initial steps taken by the secretariat of the Conference to introduce the adjustments in the System called for by the General Assembly in resolution 45/210;

3. Also notes the measures initiated by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to disseminate the information contained in the database, and invites Member States that have not yet done so to designate focal points to facilitate the exchange and dissemination of information contained in the System;

4. Stresses the need to improve further and strengthen the database, including an expansion of its coverage of countries and measures and more continuous updating of the information contained therein, with a view to enhancing its utility for trade negotiations and export promotion, as well as for analytical purposes, and requests the Secretary-General of the Conference to take all the additional measures necessary to expedite the work required, in particular the adjustment of the System called for by the Assembly in resolution 45/210, and to promote, where appropriate, and facilitate the dissemination of information from the System and any analysis thereof, pursuant to paragraph 5 of Trade and Development Board resolution 393(XXXVIII) of 4 October 1991.

Finance

Financial policy

In the report on its April 1991 session,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee for Development Planning concluded that to enable developing countries implementing structural adjustment programmes to bear the short-term costs of those programmes, there was an urgent need for additional assistance in the 1990s. When implementing economic reforms, developing countries needed to reconsider the pattern of public consumption and capital expenditure and the enhancement of efficiency in production.

In addition, the utilization of a part of the "peace dividend" for development purposes should be supported. Concerted efforts by the super-Powers were needed to prevent wars in the third world. Development assistance to combat poverty and environmental pollution should be channelled to poor countries. Recent trends towards democratization in the developing countries needed to be supported by financial assistance. An effective way to increase the poorer developing countries' resources was to reduce their debt burden through a significant cancellation of outstanding debt. Debt cancellation was also needed to enable debt-distressed middle-income countries to regain creditworthiness at a level adequate for the resumption of growth.

The outlook for development finance was still bleak, according to the World Economic Survey 1997.<sup>(2)</sup> The transfer of financial resources from developing to developed countries remained a serious problem for a number of heavily indebted Latin American countries, but it had also arisen from the repayment of debt by successful Asian borrowers. More disturbing was the drying up of development finance in general and the protracted debt crisis.

The debt crisis seemed to have moved into a phase characterized by greater realism and a convergence of views. Debtors in impossible situations had suspended payments, and bank creditors, most of which had already made provisions for that eventuality, tended to yield to realities. The International Monetary Fund (IMF) had found ways to mobilize support to cope with arrears to the Fund. However, this form of crisis management left the issue of new finance unsolved.

Official development assistance (ODA) to developing countries that qualified for it was not expected to grow any faster than the gross domestic product in the donor countries; it had slowed down, and the risk that some ODA would be diverted towards Eastern Europe could not be ruled out. It had already happened in the case of food aid. The international financial institutions had reached the point where they were not contributing significant net resources. It was a widespread view that development finance would be in short supply in years to come.

The Trade and Development Report, 1991,<sup>(3)</sup> noted that financial innovation and the process of deregulation of financial markets had made interest rates and asset prices more variable, rendering flows of funds more unstable, and had increased the potential instability of the financial system. Those changes had so damaged balance sheets in the financial sector that refinancing would represent a major factor impeding the recovery from recession in the developed market economies. The shocks on the side of finance thus suggested that there would not be a rapid opening and expansion of developed economies' markets to the exports of developing countries, nor would there be substantial additional flows of finance to developing countries.

Development financing

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/274, took note of a proposal by the Secretary-General to consider the convening of an international conference on development financing and referred the matter to the General Assembly.

In a note to the Assembly in October,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General reiterated his proposal that such a conference might initiate its work in 1992 in close association with the World Bank and IMF. He stated that a positive transformation of the world economy required the strengthening of multilateral financial institutions and that a significant increase in the financial resources of the World Bank, IMF, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the regional development banks and the development funds and agencies of the United Nations was crucial. Resources could be freed for development purposes from two areas: both developed and developing countries could reduce their military expenditures, and countries could decrease the amount spent on protectionist measures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/205 without vote.

Convening of an international conference on the financing of development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution

S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990,

Recalling its resolution 45/234 of 21 December 1990, on the implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, as well as other relevant resolutions in the field of international economic cooperation,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 1991/274 of 26 July 1991 concerning the convening of an international conference on the financing of development,

Noting with interest the remark of the Secretary-General, in his report on the work of the Organization, that a reinvigoration of the North/South dialogue had become more urgent than ever,

Noting also with interest the proposal made by the Secretary-General, in the same report, that consideration should be given to the convening of an international conference on the financing of development,

Taking note with interest of the note by the Secretary-General on the convening of an international conference on the financing of development,

1. Decides to consider at its forty-seventh session the issue of the convening of such an international conference;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session an item entitled "International conference on the financing of development" and requests the Secretary-General, in close consultation with the multilateral financing institutions, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the item.

20 December 1991 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/46/727/Add.2) without vote, 11 December (meeting 58); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/46/L.105), based on informal consultations on draft by Ghana for Group of 77 (A/C.2/46/L.31); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 2nd Committee 28, 31, 32, 51, 53, 56, 58; plenary 79.

On 19 December, by decision 46/438, the Assembly deferred consideration of an item on a proposed international conference on money and finance for development until its 1992 session. A draft resolution on the subject,<sup>(5)</sup> consideration of which had been deferred in previous years, most recently in 1990,<sup>(6)</sup> was again submitted.

Debt problems of developing countries

Concern about the international strategy for restructuring commercial debt had been expressed previously, the World Economic Survey 1991 stated.<sup>(7)</sup> Results were turning out more or less as expected. The negotiation process continued to be long and arduous owing to the complexity of the packages and diverging interests among creditors, although increased flexibility was evidenced by the addition and modification of financial instruments used in the various agreements. Debt-service relief had not been large and the multilateral and other official funds available to support the enhancements had not been sufficient to encourage the banks to swap a large share of their bank debt for less risky bonds.

Except for those countries still to negotiate a "Brady agreement", an initiative centred on voluntary, market-based debt and debt-service reduction with the support of the multilateral financial organizations and other official creditors, further debt reduction could be expected only through debt conversions. It seemed indicative that debt-for-equity swaps regained momentum in 1990, with large portions of the debt being retired, particularly in the financing of privatization programmes, where their potential inflationary consequences could be minimized.

In accordance with a 1990 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(7)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report in September 1991 on the recent evolution of the international debt strategy.<sup>(8)</sup> The report covered statistical indicators of indebtedness, debt owed to official bilateral creditors, to commercial banks, and to multilateral creditors, and the debt problems of countries affected by the hostilities in the Persian Gulf.

The debt crisis was entering its second decade and it would be premature to assert that its end was near, the Secretary-General stated. General-purpose lending in limited quantities had thus far been resumed only to Chile and Mexico. Funds were otherwise usually channelled to companies that already had an international reputation, were financially strong, and were large generators of foreign currency. Few companies in developing countries met those requirements.

Overall, prospects for augmented private-capital inflows in the near future were limited. It had been widely accepted that the mushrooming of commercial bank loans to sovereign borrowers that occurred during the 1970s would not be repeated. After the catastrophic experience of the 1980s, it seemed that banks would revert to their traditional role of suppliers of trade finance and project-related credits, which was not to say that credit would be easily available even for those purposes.

Meanwhile, there was room to improve the effectiveness of the current debt strategy by raising the scale of debt reduction and enlarging the scope of debt eligible for restructuring, the Secretary-General said. The actual degree of relief needed in any particular case had to be seen in terms of the overall financing needs of the adjustment programme and of a realistic appraisal of the medium-term debt-carrying capacity of the economy. Application of that more comprehensive approach would help countries remove the investment disincentives associated with the debt overhang and the uncertainties generated by frequent reschedulings.

The Trade and Development Report, 1991,(3) observed that the principal official creditors of the Paris Club, an informal grouping of creditors meeting at the French Treasury, had recently taken some significant steps to improve the terms of rescheduling for official bilateral debts. The Report stressed that the 50 per cent debt reduction granted to Egypt and Poland was a significant step in advancing the international debt strategy, as the concept of debt reduction was currently applied to middle-income countries.

As for the poorest countries, the Report acknowledged the growing recognition among the Group of Seven creditor countries of a need for additional debt-relief measures. The 1988 "Toronto terms" marked a major advance in the debt strategy since, for the first time, creditor Governments accepted the principle of concessional relief on non-concessional debt; however, their impact on the financial situation of developing countries was limited because of the scheme's low concessionality. A number of further agreements on and proposals for debt-relief measures were made in 1990, such as: a proposal by the Netherlands calling for total cancellation of all official debt owed by least developed and other low-income countries facing severe debt problems; a United Kingdom proposal calling for cancellation of up to two thirds of eligible debt by low-income countries (the so-called "Trinidad terms"); the "Houston terms" consisting of lengthened repayment terms; an announcement by France to lower interest rates on non-concessional loans to four middle-income countries of sub-Saharan Africa; and a programme to reduce the official debt obligations of Latin American countries to the United States, within the "Enterprise for the Americas Initiative" dealing with the region's trade, investment and debt.

Elaborating further on modalities of debt reduction, the Report stated that any debt reduction should be carried out in a single operation rather than through a policy of tranching. It was reasoned that the former method would remove once and for all not only all the investment disincentives associated with the debt overhang, but also the uncertainties generated by repeated reschedulings.

On 4 October 1991,(4) TDB adopted a resolution on the debt and development problems of developing countries, which, inter alia, welcomed the recent improvements in the debt strategy, which included debt and debt-service reductions as a central element; agreed that there was a need for continuing efforts, through the international debt strategy, in both the short and long run, with a view to promoting accelerated growth, sustainable development and a rapid return to creditworthiness in developing countries; and further agreed that at UNCTAD VIII discussions would be held to foster a positive outcome in support of the dynamic reinforcement of the international debt strategy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/148 without vote.

International debt crisis and development: enhanced international cooperation towards a durable solution to the external debt problems of developing countries

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 41/202 of 8 December 1986, 42/198 of 11 December 1987, 43/198 of 20 December 1988, 44/205 of 22 December 1989 and 45/214 of 21 December 1990,

Also reaffirming the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990 and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries,

Taking note of Trade and Development Board resolution 396(XXXVIII) of 4 October 1991,

Welcoming the progress made in the context of recent developments in the evolving international debt strategy, which include debt and debt-service reduction as central elements,

Also welcoming recent actions taken by the international community to reduce or cancel the official bilateral debt owed by least developed countries and other low-income countries, in support of the adjustment efforts made by those countries to stabilize their economies,

Stressing the need to agree to proceed rapidly towards the implementation of recent initiatives and measures to reduce the volume of external debt and debt servicing and to provide debt relief,

Noting with appreciation the continued efforts to formulate and implement innovative and bold proposals and initiatives to address the debt problems, such as those taken under the Toronto terms, the Trinidad terms, the Netherlands initiative, the French initiative, the Houston terms and the Enterprise for the Americas Initiative,

Also noting with appreciation the recommendations contained in the report of the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General on Debt,<sup>a</sup>

Noting the proposals made by developing countries and regional organizations, including the Organization of African Unity and the Latin American Economic System,

Reiterating the need for an early and durable solution to the debt problems of developing countries and for forestalling their proliferation,

Stressing the need, in addition to debt-relief measures that include debt and debt-service reduction, for new financial flows to debtor developing countries,

Noting with interest the initial implementation of the rights-accumulation approach, addressing the problem of arrears with regard to multilateral debt,

Welcoming the increased cooperation among the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and other multilateral financial institutions, and recognizing the need to avoid cross-conditionality,

Emphasizing the importance for debtor developing countries to continue to pursue and intensify their efforts in their stabilization and structural adjustment programmes,

Expressing its concern that in many developing countries the burden of debt and debt service constitutes one of the major obstacles to the acceleration of growth and development and eradication of poverty despite the often strenuous stabilization and structural adjustment programmes of these countries,

1. Urges Member States and multilateral financial institutions, within their prerogatives, to work towards an early, growth-oriented and development-oriented solution to the external debt problems, and, in this connection, urges them to intensify their efforts for the full implementation of General Assembly resolution 45/214;

2. Notes with interest the measures already taken by the international community and agrees that there is a need for continuing efforts, through the evolving international debt strategy, in both the short and long term, to achieve an early and durable solution to the external debt problems;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continuing efforts to promote understanding and to improve the relationship among debtor and creditor countries and multilateral financial institutions with a view to contributing towards a durable solution to the external debt problems of developing countries;

4. Emphasizes the importance for debtor developing countries to continue to pursue and intensify their efforts in their stabilization and structural adjustment programmes, to raise savings and investment, reduce inflation and improve efficiency, taking into account their individual characteristics and the vulnerability of the poorer strata of their populations;

5. Recognizes the need of the debtor developing countries for a supportive international economic environment, as regards, inter alia, terms of trade, commodity prices, improved market access and trade practices, and, in this connection, stresses the urgent need for a balanced and successful outcome of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, which would result in the liberalization and expansion of world trade to the benefit of all countries, in particular the developing countries;

6. Stresses the need, in addition to debt-relief measures that include debt and debt-service reduction, for new financial flows to debtor developing countries, and urges the creditor countries and the multilateral financial institutions to continue to extend concessional financial assistance, as appropriate, in order to support the implementation by the developing countries of their stabilization and structural adjustment programmes so as to enable them to extricate themselves from the debt overhang and to assist them in achieving economic growth and development;

7. Urges creditor countries, private banks and, within their prerogatives, multilateral financial institutions to consider the extension of appropriate new financial support to developing countries, in particular the low-income countries with substantial debt burdens that continue at great cost to service the debt and meet their international obligations;

8. Stresses the urgent need for additional debt-relief measures, including further cancellation or reduction of debt and debt service related to official development assistance, as well as other official bilateral debt and debt service, in particular that of low-income countries, and welcomes, in this regard, the call made at the Economic Summit Conference, held in London from 15 to 17 July 1991, by the seven major industrialized nations for additional debt-relief measures in favour of the poorest, most indebted countries that go well beyond the Toronto terms;

9. Also stresses the need for more urgent action with regard to the commercial debt owed by developing countries through increased efforts and improved access to and expanded use of existing facilities and arrangements, and encourages the continued consideration and, where appropriate, wider application of innovative measures, such as debt-for-equity swaps, debt swaps for the protection of nature and debt-for-development swaps, as contributions towards addressing the external debt problems of all indebted developing countries concerned;

10. Notes the substantial debt relief and debt reduction agreed to by the Paris Club in favour of two middle-income countries;

11. Further stresses the need for the continued examination, in the relevant forum, of appropriate debt-relief measures in favour of indebted low-income and lower-middle-income countries;

12. Urges the multilateral financial institutions to continue to provide support for debt and debt-service reduction packages with the necessary flexibility under their established guidelines, and also urges that earnest attention be given to continuing to work towards a growth-oriented solution of problems of developing countries that are having serious debt-servicing difficulties, including those whose debt is mainly to official creditors, or to multilateral financial institutions;

13. Recognizes the urgent need to continue to provide a social safety net to vulnerable groups most adversely affected by the implementation of economic reform programmes in the debtor countries, in particular low-income groups, in order to ensure social and political stability;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Approved by Second Committee (A/46/731) without vote, 11 December (meeting 58); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/46/L.119), based on informal consultations on draft by Ghana for Group of 77 (A/C.2/46/L.38) and orally revised; agenda item 81.
Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 2nd Committee 22-25, 40, 58; plenary 77.

Also on 18 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on the recent evolution of the international debt strategy (decision 46/434), and deferred until its forty-seventh (1992) session consideration of a draft decision<sup>(10)</sup> on the establishment of an advisory commission on debt and development (decision 46/433).

Trade financing

In 1989,<sup>(1)</sup> the Committee on Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries had called on the Secretary-General to undertake a study of the problems of trade financing in developing countries, in particular on how to support and strengthen further existing mechanisms. It had also asked him to examine the feasibility of establishing a commercially viable interregional mechanism for financing South-South trade in non-traditional exports based on participation from developing countries and with a financial structure based on paid-in capital from participating countries.

Responding to that request, the UNCTAD secretariat submitted a report in July 1991 to TDB considering the case for such an interregional facility.<sup>(2)</sup> The report outlined a proposal for the facility, considered related issues, and reviewed the question of trade finance.

The general aspects of such a facility supporting non-traditional exports of developing countries, types of facilities and financing, types of risk, capitalization, asset and liquidity management, institutional arrangements and financial feasibility were taken up in a first supplement.<sup>(3)</sup> In a second supplement,<sup>(4)</sup> the secretariat dealt with trade financing in developing countries, assessing and evaluating existing schemes and future requirements.

Taxation

On 15 May, by decision 1991/215, the Economic and Social Council decided that the sixth meeting of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters, which was to have been held at Geneva from 9 to 13 December 1991, would be held from 11 to 17 December 1991.

In December, the Group discussed, among other things, the impact of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries;<sup>(5)</sup> the exchange of information under tax treaties;<sup>(6)</sup> information on the national tax administrations of United Nations Member States;<sup>(7)</sup> and the exchange of tax information.<sup>(8)</sup>

A subgroup, which met in New York from 10 to 12 June, submitted a working paper<sup>(9)</sup> to the Group. It covered the procedures, processes and modalities of exchanges of information, problems arising out of the taxation of income from the transfer of technology, the impact of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention, and improvement in the organization of national tax administrations.

Transport

Transport and sustainable development

The UNCTAD secretariat submitted to TDB in August 1991 an interim report on the question of transport in relation to policies and mechanisms for achieving sustainable development<sup>(1)</sup> in accordance with a 1990 TDB request.<sup>(2)</sup> Among other elements, the report covered the economic and ecological significance of the transport sector, mechanisms for transport policy, the polluter-pays principle, local-level rural transport, international transport systems and urban transport.

TDB, in October 1991,<sup>(3)</sup> considered the report a useful analysis, as it illustrated the applicability in developed and developing countries and emphasized that solutions to environmental as well as developmental problems had also to be sought across sectoral boundaries. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to complete the analysis and provide a full report in 1992.

Multimodal transport

Several studies were prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat for the Group of Experts on Multimodal Transport, covering such subjects as practical problems faced by Governments and commercial parties involved in multimodal transport operations to and from developing countries;<sup>(4)</sup> problems and requirements arising from the broad economic reforms and restructuring in selected countries;<sup>(5)</sup> block train services in multimodal transport;<sup>(6)</sup> the effects of electronic data processing and interchange on transport organizations and users;<sup>(7)</sup> developments in the field of container standards;<sup>(8)</sup> and suggestions of elements for a new programme of work for the Committee on Shipping in the areas of multimodal transport and containerization and technological developments.<sup>(9)</sup>

As in previous years, workshops in English, French and Spanish for senior government officials and senior executives of transport companies interested in the introduction of multimodal transport were held in various developing countries as well as in countries in transition to a market economy. Work on the development of the MULTISHIP programmes continued. The third Multimodal Transport Newsletter was published by the secretariat.

Maritime transport

The resumed session of the Review Conference on the Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences (Geneva, 21 May-7 June 1991),<sup>(10)</sup> by a consensus resolution, reaffirmed the validity of the Convention, which had entered into force in 1983.<sup>(11)</sup> It adopted six guidelines: three related to the modalities of implementation, two by amplifying the role of Governments in Code implementation and the other by recognizing collective consultations by a group of national shippers' councils. The other three guidelines related to technological and structural changes in liner shipping: two were designed to include multimodal transport services and transshipment services explicitly within the trade-sharing provisions of the Code, while the other was intended to include container slot-chartering and space-chartering within the Code concept of chartered tonnage.

The Convention had 75 States parties as at 31 December 1991.<sup>(12)</sup>

Main developments in international shipping and related fields which took place in 1990 were analysed in detail in UNCTAD's annual Review of Maritime Transport.<sup>(13)</sup>

Ports

The UNCTAD secretariat, through a programme of research, training and technical assistance, aimed at improving the performance of ports and at raising the awareness of the benefits of ports acting as a trading centre that added value to goods transiting the port area.

A study requested by the Ad Hoc Group of Port Experts was prepared, analysing the new role of ports and indicating how ports could play that new role.<sup>(14)</sup> Another study on the principles of management and modern organization of ports<sup>(15)</sup> was completed; it provided guidelines on the organization of a national port system and described various tools available to port managers. An informal meeting of port lawyers from developed and developing countries met at Geneva in November to discuss the first draft of a study on legal and regulatory aspects of port management.

A report prepared by the secretariat on computerized information systems for port operations (guidelines for port managers on the use of computers) was submitted to TDB in April.<sup>(16)</sup>

International maritime legislation

The thirteenth session of the Working Group on International Shipping Legislation (Geneva, 11-19 November 1991)<sup>(17)</sup> discussed the subject of general average, having before it a secretariat report presenting a preliminary review of general average. The Working Group adopted a decision requesting the secretariat to approach, in close consultation with the Comité Maritime International, the insurance industry, including the International Union of Marine Insurance, and international organizations representing commercial parties involved with general average, to study the extent to which insurance arrangements could simplify the operation of the general average system. It further requested the secretariat to consult developing countries and the commercial interests involved in general average on their experiences and also to obtain some relevant statistics, in particular on the time and expenses involved in general average settlements.

Draft convention on maritime liens and mortgages

In order to achieve greater international uniformity and establish a widely acceptable international legal instrument governing maritime liens and mortgages, a joint UNCTAD/International Maritime Organization (IMO) intergovernmental group of experts had been working since 1986<sup>(19)</sup> on a draft convention on the subject.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/213 without vote.

United Nations/International Maritime Organization Conference of Plenipotentiaries on a Draft Convention on Maritime Liens and Mortgages

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the importance of the subject of maritime liens and mortgages in ship financing and in the development of national merchant fleets,

Emphasizing the need for international uniformity and for the establishment of a widely acceptable international legal instrument governing the subject of maritime liens and mortgages,

Recognizing the desirability of facilitating the harmonious and orderly development of world trade,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and to the International Maritime Organization for the valuable work done in preparing a draft convention on maritime liens and mortgages;

2. Decides that a United Nations/International Maritime Organization Conference of Plenipotentiaries on a Draft Convention on Maritime Liens and Mortgages shall be convened at Geneva during the first half of 1993 for a period of three weeks to consider the draft convention and to embody the results of its work in a convention on maritime liens and mortgages;

3. Decides that the following shall be invited:

participate in the Conference in that capacity, in accordance with Assembly resolution 3237(XXIX) of 22 November 1974;

(d) Representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity in its region; these representatives would participate in the Conference in the capacity of observers, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3280(XXIX) of 10 December 1974;

(f) Intergovernmental bodies in consultative status with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the International Maritime Organization, which should be represented by observers at the Conference;

(g) Directly concerned non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the International Maritime Organization, which should be represented by observers at the Conference;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Secretary-General of the International Maritime Organization to make the necessary arrangements, within existing resources, for holding the Conference at Geneva, to submit to the Conference all relevant documentation, including the rules of procedure of the Conference, and to arrange for the necessary staff, facilities and services that it will require;

5. Decides that the languages of the Conference shall be those used in the General Assembly and its Main Committees.

Container ship leasing

The UNCTAD secretariat submitted in September a report to TDB on container ship leasing.<sup>(20)</sup> The report covered leasing as an alternative in ship financing; rights, obligations and risks under ship-leasing contracts; and the United Nations Institute for Unification of Private Law Convention on International Financial Leasing, adopted in 1988.

The report concluded that a comparison of the various advantages and disadvantages showed that ship leasing could not serve as a general solution to all problems concerning ship financing, but was one way of meeting the financial requirements for the acquisition of vessels. The increasing costs of building properly equipped modern vessels on the one hand, and the permanent shortage of sufficient capital in many developing countries on the other, made ship leasing attractive. Leasing presented an important opportunity for developing countries to invest in the capital-intensive container ship business. However, a practical and workable internationally unified legal framework was urgently needed.

Technical assistance and training

UNCTAD's technical cooperation and training activities declined slightly in 1991, with 37 projects having a total value of $3.2 million executed during the year (compared to 43 projects totalling $3.7 million in 1990).

The TRAINMAR programme, which was helping to promote a greater maritime transport training capability in developing countries, continued to expand; by the end of 1991, 43 training centres worldwide were participating in the programme. More than 20 policy seminars in multimodal transport, container terminal development policy, equipment maintenance and strategic planning in shipping were conducted.

Implementation of the various modules of the Advance Cargo Information System in Africa continued, including: satellite transmission of manifests from Europe via INMARSAT; the harbour master module installed in the ports of Mombasa, Kenya, and Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania; the railtracker operational on five railways and the tutorial used to train operators; uniform systems of rail and port statistics and performance indicators; and development work on roadtracker and laketracker.

New projects initiated included advice to the General National Maritime Transport Company in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya; a subregional project, carried out in collaboration with IMO, to update and harmonize maritime legislation in Central America; and development of a policy course on port pricing under the Improving Port Performance training programme. Work also started on the preparation of a seminar on the new commercial role of ports.

Transport of dangerous goods

The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, which did not meet in 1991, published the seventh edition of its recommendations.<sup>(21)</sup> The Committee and its subsidiary bodies were developing recommendations in the light of technical progress, the advent of new substances and materials, the exigencies of modern transport systems, and the need to ensure the safety of people, property and the environment. In a May 1991 report of the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(22)</sup> the work of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies during 1989-1990 was described. After 30 years, the report said, the main thrust of the Committee was changing. For the first two decades, the Committee was taken up with elaborating technical recommendations and persuading regulatory authorities to recognize them. During the past decade, United Nations recommendations had become the acknowledged source of technical provisions. The Committee's role was currently twofold: to adapt recommendations to technological progress and to respond to suggestions from the modal authorities for amending them.

The Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods held its fourth (Geneva, 1-12 July)(23) and fifth (Geneva, 2-13 December)(24) sessions in 1991, while the Committee was scheduled to meet again in 1992.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1991/57.

Work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1983/7 of 26 May 1983, 1985/9 of 28 May 1985, 1986/66 of 23 July 1986, 1987/54 of 28 May 1987 and 1989/104 of 27 July 1989,

Noting the ever-increasing volume of dangerous goods in worldwide commerce and the rapid expansion of technology and innovation,

Bearing in mind the continuing need to meet the growing concern for the protection of life, property and the environment through the safe transport of dangerous goods while facilitating trade,

Aware that, in order to achieve internationally harmonized laws, the specialized agencies and other international organizations and interested Member States are committed to taking the recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods as a basis for the formulation of their requirements and regulations and therefore rely on the work of the Committee,

Recognizing the increasing need for cooperation with other international bodies, such as the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Environment Programme, the World Health Organization and the European Economic Community, involved in activities related to the transport of dangerous goods,

Reaffirming the desirability of widening the decision-making base of the Committee by encouraging the participation of developing countries and other non-member countries in its future work,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods during the biennium 1989-1990 and of the new and amended recommendations approved by the Committee for inclusion in its existing recommendations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To incorporate in the existing recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods all the new and amended recommendations approved by the Committee at its sixteenth session;

(b) To publish the new and amended recommendations in all the official languages of the United Nations, in the most cost-effective manner, not later than the end of 1991;

(c) To circulate the new and amended recommendations immediately after their publication to the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international organizations concerned;

3. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international organizations concerned to transmit to the Secretary-General their views on the Committee's work, together with any comments they may wish to make on the amended recommendations;

4. Invites all interested Governments and the international organizations concerned, when developing appropriate codes and regulations, to take full account of the recommendations of the Committee;

5. Recommends once again that adequate funding be provided to support the work of the Committee as indicated in the report of the Committee on its sixteenth session, if possible by setting up a special fund;

6. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make available, within existing resources, the staff necessary for the adequate servicing of the Committee, namely one additional Professional and one additional General Service post, and regrets that the requests made in its resolutions 1983/7, 1985/9, 1986/66, 1987/54 and 1989/104 have not yet been met;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council in 1993 on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/57

Conferences and meetings

UNCTAD VIII

By a resolution of 22 March 1991,(1) TDB expressed understanding of the difficulties encountered by Uruguay in hosting the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. It welcomed the offer of Colombia to host the session at Cartagena de Indias, and agreed that the session should take place there from 8 to 25 February 1992.

Date and venue of the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/205 of 21 December 1990 on the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Taking note of Trade and Development Board resolution 39I(XXXVII) of 22 March 1991, in which the Board took note of the communication circulated by the Uruguayan authorities and expressed its full understanding of the difficulties encountered by the Government of Uruguay to host the eighth session of the Conference and recommended that the session of the Conference should take place at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 8 to 25 February 1992,

Taking note with appreciation of the arrangements for the preparatory process for the eighth session of the Conference endorsed by the Trade and Development Board at the second part of its thirty-seventh session,

UNCTAD programme

The Trade and Development Board—the executive body of UNCTAD—held three sessions at Geneva in 1991. The second part of its thirty-seventh session was held from 11 to 22 March;(2) the first part of its thirty-eighth session, from 23 September to 4 October;(3) and the first part of its seventeenth special session, to discuss the preparations for UNCTAD VIII, from 2 to 13 December.(4)

The Board adopted six resolutions and three decisions during 1991. At its March session, it adopted a resolution on the date and venue of UNCTAD VIII (see above). Another resolution dealt with UNCTAD's intergovernmental input into the Assembly's final review and appraisal of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990.<sup>(5)</sup> For details on the Programme of Action, see PART THREE, Chapter III.) A third resolution related to the review of the progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s.(6) The three resolutions at its September/October session concerned UNCTAD's contribution to sustainable development,(7) economic cooperation among developing countries and problems of trade and trade financing,(8) and the debt and development problems of developing countries.(9) An October decision, on export promotion and continued cooperation between ITC, UNCTAD and GATT, related to UNCTAD's collection of data on environmental measures bearing on trade in the Trade Control Measures Information System.(10) In December, the Board began its consideration of the work of, and the preparations for, UNCTAD VIII; no resolutions or decisions were adopted.

Aspects of UNCTAD's programme were dealt with in a number of General Assembly resolutions, including those on regional economic integration among developing countries (resolution 46/145); the New Agenda for Africa for the 1990s (resolution 46/151); the criteria for identifying LDCs (resolution 46/206); the strengthening of international organizations in the area of multilateral trade (resolution 46/207); environment and international trade (resolution 46/208); specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries (resolution 46/212); and an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology (resolution 46/214).

Programme budget

At its twentieth session (Geneva, 16-19 April 1991),(11) the UNCTAD Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget reviewed the UNCTAD section of the proposed United Nations programme budget for 1992-1993, which it approved at its closing meeting, while noting in its agreed conclusions that UNCTAD VIII might affect the content and orientation of the work programme of UNCTAD during the biennium.

The Committee for Programme and Coordination, at its 1991 session,(12) recommended approval by the General Assembly of the programme narrative of the section relating to UNCTAD of the proposed programme budget for 1992-1993. On 20 December, the Assembly approved an appropriation of $90,477,100 for UNCTAD in the framework of the 1992-1993 budget.

Technical cooperation

UNCTAD's estimated project expenditures for 1991 amounted to about $20 million. Activities, funded mainly by UNDP, but also from funds-in-trust contributions, were carried out in the following sectors: trade policies, GSP, restrictive business practices/competition policies, trade negotiations, role of services in the economy, and transfer and development of technology; financial resources: insurance and debt management (for the latter, an agreement was reached with the World Bank on a joint programme to provide debt management technical assistance service); trade facilitation, including UNCTAD's Automated System of Customs Data installed in more than 30 countries, which had become UNCTAD's largest single technical cooperation programme; and technical cooperation in the areas of shipping services and multimodal transport, management of ports and training and human resource development in the maritime sector. A new programme on human resources development in the trade sector, TRAINFORTRADE, was begun in 1991 and a number of activities were initiated to assist in the implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

Chapter V

Transnational corporations

During 1991, transnational corporations (TNCs) continued to attract the attention of the international community in view of their major impact on global investment flows and international development and trade.

The Commission on Transnational Corporations considered, among other things, the role of TNCs in South Africa, the code of conduct on TNCs, TNCs and international economic relations, and corrupt practices in international business transactions. The Commission discussed the activities of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and its own contribution and that of the Centre to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED). The Commission's Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts reviewed international standards of accounting and reporting.

In July, the Economic and Social Council called on all TNCs to stop operations in South Africa and requested the Secretary-General to continue to collect information on the activities of TNCs there (1991/54). The Council requested the Secretary-General to report on the latest trends in foreign direct investment and affirmed that the Preparatory Committee for UNCED should consider TNCs' commitment to and possible positive role in the protection of the environment (1991/55). The Council renewed the mandate of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting (1991/56).

Draft code of conduct

The Commission on TNCs, at its April/May session, continued to consider work related to a draft code of conduct on transnational corporations, first considered in 1975.(1)

In a February report to the Commission,(2) the Secretary-General described progress made in negotiations on the code in 1990. Two of the most difficult outstanding issues had been settled on the question of non-interference in the internal affairs of host countries and the standard governing nationalization and compensation. However, it was not possible to reach consensus on the remaining outstanding issues. The General Assembly, in a 1990 resolution,(3) had decided to intensify consultations aimed at achieving an early agreement on the code, for adoption by the Assembly in 1991.

By a note of October 1991 to the General Assembly,(4) the Secretary-General transmitted a report by the President of the forty-fifth (1990) session of the Assembly on the outcome of those consultations. He stated that he had held informal consultations in New York (22-26 April, 24 and 25 June and 24-26 September) and in Geneva (12 July), in addition to writing to all Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Member States (and observers) requesting their personal attention to the endeavour. At the outset of the consultations, the President had offered specific proposals aimed at disposing of some lingering concerns. Those proposals were considered as offering a constructive and realistic opportunity for agreement by the majority of delegations, while some delegations said that some provisions did not meet their concerns. Others proposed that the consultations be postponed until the results of several meetings which could have a bearing on the code of conduct—including the ongoing Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, UNCED (1992) and the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (1992)—were known. Still others thought that the results of those meetings would affect only a few provisions of the code and did not have to hold up the negotiations. Towards the end of the consultations, consensus emerged that further intergovernmental consultations should be held in June/July 1992 and that the Secretariat should continue to clarify further the outstanding issues and review developments relevant to the consultations.

In decision 46/454 of 20 December 1991, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the report by the President of the Assembly.

Bilateral, regional and international arrangements

In a February report to the Commission on TNCs,(5) the Secretary-General surveyed international, regional and bilateral arrangements and agreements related to TNCs, concentrating on bilateral investment treaties. It covered such issues as the definition of investment and investors; conditions for the entry of foreign direct investment; promotion of investment; general standards of treatment, including most-favoured-nation treatment; transfer of payments; performance requirements; dispossession of the investor; settlement of disputes; and standards of corporate behaviour. The Secretary-General noted that 70 treaties had been signed since 1988, primarily due to actions by Central and Eastern European countries, so that the total number of bilateral investment treaties exceeded 370. He concluded that the proliferation of bilateral treaties did not, however, substitute for a comprehensive multilateral instrument, such as the code of conduct, which prescribed standards of corporate conduct as well as minimum standards for the treatment of foreign investors and TNCs. Also, bilateral treaties could be more effective in assuring the promotion of foreign investment by incorporating concrete provisions in that regard.

At its April/May session,(6) the Commission on TNCs took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested the Centre on TNCs to continue its work in that area, taking into account the views expressed by the Commission.

Standards of accounting and reporting

At its ninth session (New York, 5-15 March 1991),(1) the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting had before it reports by the Secret General on current developments at the global(2) and national(3) levels in the field of accounting and reporting by TNCs; accounting for and by joint ventures;(4) accounting for environmental protection measures;(5) accounting and reporting during and after the transition from public to private enterprises;(6) organization of the accounting profession and the role and qualification of auditors; 7, description of the databases available in the comprehensive information system;(8) and appropriate measures to give effect to the work of the Group.(9)

The Group considered current developments in accounting from a global perspective, in particular important efforts under way to harmonize accounting standards and to deal with such problems as accounting for new financial instruments and intangible assets. Accounting developments in Central and Eastern Europe, where the pace of change had been particularly rapid, were reviewed. It was hoped that those countries would benefit from international accounting standards and international guidelines in education and auditing.

With regard to measures to give effect to its work, the Group decided that its mandate should be renewed and extended from a three-year to a five-year period so that sessions on general subjects and on specific subjects could be held in alternate years. There should also be a shift towards technical cooperation to meet the needs of developing countries and countries in transition in the development of the accounting profession and standard-setting. It was decided to hold sessions on general subjects in 1992, 1994 and 1996 and sessions on specific subjects in 1993 and 1995.

In May,(10) the Commission on TNCs recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the mandate of the group be renewed and extended from three to five years.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1991/56 without vote.

Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/44 of 11 May 1979 and 1982/67 of 27 October 1982 and resolution 1988/1 adopted by the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its fourteenth session,

Having considered the report of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting on its ninth session,

Acting upon the recommendation of the Group at its ninth session concerning its future work,

Decides to renew the existing mandate of the Group, contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/67, and to extend its duration from three years to five years so that paragraph 4 (h) of that resolution reads:

"That the Commission on Transnational Corporations, at its annual session, shall keep under review the work of the Group; in particular, it shall review the mandate, terms of reference and achievements of the Group after five years, with a view to deciding on the advisability of its continuation;".

Commission on TNCs

The Commission on TNCs held its seventeenth session in New York from 10 to 19 April 1991, and a resumed session on 7, 10 and 15 May.(1) On 13

May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/214, decided to reconvene the Commission's seventeenth session for one meeting.

The Commission reviewed the rapid growth in foreign direct investment in the 1980s and discussed recent developments related to TNCs and international economic relations, activities of the Centre on the Commission's contribution to UNCED, the code of conduct on TNCs, activities of TNCs in South Africa, the role of TNCs in services, international standards of accounting and reporting, strengthening the negotiating capacity of developing countries in their dealings with TNCs, a comprehensive information system, and provisional agendas for its eighteenth and nineteenth sessions.

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report (decision 1991/286) and approved the provisional agendas and documentation for its eighteenth and nineteenth sessions (decision 1991/285).

TNCs in South Africa

In a March report on TNCs with interests in South Africa,(2) the Secretary-General noted that despite the large amount of disinvestment, some 550 to 600 TNCs remained active in that country, employing about 175,000 people. Many companies that had disposed of their equity holdings in South Africa maintained other links, such as trade-mark use and buy-back options. The report included a list of companies based in 18 countries that had disposed of their equity interests in South Africa, as well as a list of companies from 15 countries which had equity interests there of more than 10 per cent.

Another March report, by the Centre on TNCs,(3) on TNCs in South Africa noted that disinvestment from the country had continued in 1990, at a slow pace. With significant steps towards the dismantling of apartheid, the call for economic sanctions had been put on hold and a "wait-and-see" attitude characterized the activities of TNCs and many of their home Governments. The report described the effect of restrictive measures by the international community on South Africa and the effect of sanctions on the South African economy, and discussed the role of TNCs in training in post-apartheid South Africa.

At its April/May session,(1) the Commission on TNCs took note of the two reports and requested the Centre to prepare, for its eighteenth (1992) session, a report on the activities of TNCs in South Africa, including an updated review of the responsibilities of home countries with respect to TNCs operating there, a critical review of the social responsibility programmes of such companies and any further results with respect to the feasibility study for a comprehensive training programme for black South Africans. The Commission also requested the Centre to update the list of TNCs with interests in South Africa, including companies that reinvested and the terms and conditions of such reinvestment. The Commission reiterated its call to all TNCs to stop immediately any operations in South Africa and all forms of trade and economic links with the racist minority regime.

Contribution to UNCED

Pursuant to a 1990 resolution of the Economic and Social Council,(4) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on TNCs in March 1991 an interim version of a comprehensive report on the Commission's contribution to the work of the Preparatory Committee for the 1992 UNCED.(5) It outlined possible measures that could encourage and mobilize TNCs to protect and enhance the environment while contributing to development. Five main themes on which the Commission could make recommendations to the Preparatory Committee were identified: internationally agreed standards and instruments; transfer of environmentally sound technology to developing countries on favourable terms; international environmental management; prevention of environmental deterioration; and additional supportive measures. The report pointed out possible contributions by TNCs, such as providing developing countries with environmentally sound investments that generated manufacturing exports and diversified the economy away from dependence on volatile commodity markets. Within the scope of current negotiations on such issues as climate change, biotechnology and biodiversity, it would be possible to address the specific responsibilities of industrial firms and TNCs. The report concluded that the international agenda for the 1990s and beyond could well focus on the need for global policies and instruments to channel and harness the enormous potential that TNCs possessed in order to attain the objectives of sustainable development, while seeking means to control negative impacts. However, sustainable development could not be accomplished by TNCs alone; even the most committed firms could not operate sustainably unless Governments had in place a policy framework conducive to sustainable economic and social development.

In an addendum to the report,(6) the Secretary-General surveyed the work of the Centre on TNCs in the area of TNCs and environmental protection and its participation in UNCED. He identified five themes under which the Centre's ongoing work could be classified: measures to mobilize TNCs to contribute to sustainable development; environmentally sound technologies and products; advisory assistance on environmental regulations in developing countries; contribution to international environmental conventions and agreements; and accounting and reporting standards for sustainable development. Among the proposals discussed was the establishment of an environment fund financed by TNCs to support projects in developing countries, which the Centre had begun to examine through a feasibility study. The Centre held regular coordinating meetings with the Secretary-General of UNCED and assisted in the preparation of documents for the Preparatory Committee.

At its April/May session,(1) the Commission on TNCs requested that a report be submitted to it in 1992, containing the final version of the comprehensive and analytical study. It also asked for a progress report on ongoing projects of the Centre to be submitted at that time. The Centre's Executive Director was requested to transmit to UNCED's Secretary-General the Commission's action-oriented recommendations regarding TNCs and sustainable development, along with the interim version of the comprehensive and analytical study, for consideration by the Preparatory Committee.

26 July 1991 Meeting 31 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/124) without vote. 24 July (meeting 18): draft by Commission on TNCs IE/1991/31; agenda item 8 (d).

Corrupt practices

At its April/May session,(7) the Commission on TNCs requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the status of United Nations efforts to address the issue of corrupt practices in international business transactions and to circulate it to Member States for the July 1991 session of the Economic and Social Council for the consultations towards a final agreement on the draft code of conduct on TNCs.

That report,(8) issued in July, considered the problem of illicit payments in general, and its potential political, economic, social, legal and moral challenges for policy makers. It noted that national laws were not always effective against illicit payments in international commercial transactions and that action at the international level was necessary. Most efforts at the United Nations had concentrated on the drafting of an international agreement. An overview of that agreement showed a substantial degree of consensus on the issue, although the General Assembly had so far taken no action to convene a conference to complete the instrument.

By decision 1991/286 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

TNCs and international economic relations

In addressing questions relating to TNCs and international economic relations, the Commission on TNCs at its April/May session had before it five reports by the Secretary-General, requested at previous sessions, dealing with foreign direct investment and the impact of transnational banks and service corporations on developing countries.

A March report(9) surveyed the global structure of foreign direct investment, focusing on the role of the triad (the United States, the European Community (EC) and Japan), and the policy implications that stemmed from it. It noted that foreign direct investment grew rapidly towards the end of the 1980s, reaching nearly $200 billion in 1989, with $163 billion invested in developed countries and $30 billion in developing countries. Three fourths of the investment in developing countries went to 10 countries. Some other findings were: the triad accounted for 80 per cent of world-wide outward stocks and flows; the rate of growth of foreign direct investment within the triad had outpaced that in the rest of the world; and TNCs from the triad appeared to be building integrated core networks of affiliates clustered around their home country.

The Commission requested the Secretariat to continue its work on the subject in the light of suggestions made by delegations and to submit to it in 1992 reports dealing with trends in foreign direct investment and the role of TNCs in world development.

In a report on determinants of foreign direct investment and their policy implications,<sup>(10)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that a survey by the Centre on TNCs had found that the most important determinants of foreign direct investment were: the firm-specific assets that underlay the competitive advantages of TNCs; the ability of TNCs to gain from internalizing market relationships; the strengths of particular host countries as locations for foreign production by TNCs; and policies of host and home countries.

In a February report on transnational banks and the external indebtedness of developing countries,<sup>(11)</sup> the Secretary-General noted that while the debt of developing countries to transnational banks had shown a downward trend in recent years, there were some trends in the opposite direction: the prices of the debt instruments on the secondary markets had continued to decline; their debt-servicing capacity had not improved; and negative transfers from transnational banks to highly indebted countries had increased. In a report on transnational banks and debt-equity conversions,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that debt-equity swaps had brought significant debt reduction to only one country (Chile), while appearing to have induced additional foreign direct investment in most countries, directly or as a catalyst. The long-term impact of debt-equity swaps on the balance of payments was ambiguous, and it was stressed that they were only one of the policy tools in debt reduction. In a report on the impact of transnational service corporations on developing countries,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General found that such corporations could play a useful role by injecting a dose of competition into the service markets of developing countries. He pointed out that transnational service corporations could have stronger social and cultural influences in host developing countries than industrial corporations.

The Commission on TNCs took note of the reports on transnational banks and service corporations and requested the Centre on TNCs to continue further work on the former in the light of the Commission's discussions. It requested the Secretary-General to conduct further in-depth research and technical cooperation in the area of services, taking into account the deliberations of the Commission, and to submit a report thereon in 1992.

For action by the Economic and Social Council on TNCs and international economic relations, see resolution 1991/55, section I.

Centre on TNCs

In February 1991, the Secretary-General submitted a report<sup>(1)</sup> on the activities of the Centre on TNCs, the main Secretariat unit for TNC-related matters, including the activities of the Centre's joint units with the regional commissions. In April, the Secretariat proposed the programme of work of the Centre and its joint units for the biennium 1992-1993. It suggested that the programme on TNCs be implemented through the following subprogrammes: securing an effective code of conduct and other international arrangements and agreements relating to TNCs; minimizing the negative effects of TNCs and enhancing their contribution to development; and strengthening the capacity of host developing countries in dealing with matters related to TNCs.

Information system

The Centre's information system continued to be a major component of its research and technical cooperation activities. Increasing requests from developing countries for assistance in implementing information systems components had redefined the Centre's approach in developing information systems on TNCs, shifting from an emphasis on the Centre's own research to the investment and negotiating needs of developing countries.

In developing its information system on TNCs, the Centre continued its work on a six-volume Handbook on Foreign Direct Investment, a major collection of foreign direct investment statistics, corporate data, legal information and reference to bibliographic sources. The Handbook was a joint undertaking of the Centre and its joint units with the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC). The Centre continued to collect micro-economic and financial information on TNCs, expanding its existing collection of the world's largest extractive and manufacturing TNCs, as well as starting a collection of information on the largest corporations in service industries. A collection of existing national and regional laws and regulations relating to the activities of TNCs was updated. The Centre continued to collect and make available on government request contracts and agreements negotiated with the TNCs. It assisted users at the national level in the building and management of information resources on TNCs.

The Centre continued to respond to requests from Governments for assistance in developing and relining national information systems on TNCs. Pursuant to a recommendation of a 1988 workshop on developing such systems, the Centre undertook to develop a set of basic information to be incorporated into them.

There was a marked increase in the use of the Centre's information services. In 1990 there had been 2,610 requests for information, along with about 2,500 short, usually verbal, queries. The Centre attributed the increase to the installation throughout the Centre of modern information technologies.

Joint units with the regional commissions

The joint units established by the Centre on TNCs with the five regional commissions, serving as focal points for its activities in the respective regions, made important contributions in the fields of research, information and liaison with Governments.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Joint Unit established with the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) focused its research on: the first part of a study on the petrochemical industry in the Persian Gulf countries and the role of TNCs; an input to the Centre's study on TNCs and sustainable development; and a project on Japanese direct investment in Europe. The Joint Unit contributed to the establishment of the Romanian Agency for the Promotion of Foreign Investment and Economic Assistance, continued its liaison work for the Centre with international organizations, Governments and governmental agencies in the European region and continued work on setting up in Geneva the Regional Documentation Unit on TNCs.

The Joint Unit established with ESCAP undertook the following research projects: impact of TNCs in the international trade of primary commodities; transnational technology towards the year 2000; TNCs and selected services industries of developing countries in Asia and the Pacific; and an evaluation of the contribution of TNCs to technology transfer in the export processing zones and science parks in developing countries of the region. The Unit continued to collect, analyse and disseminate to member States information and data relating to the activities of TNCs in the region. It also continued to provide technical and information assistance and disseminated information to ESCAP member States and its 13 focal points in the region.

The Joint Unit established with ECLAC focused its research activities on the following three areas: national experiences and policy alternatives with regard to foreign direct investment, case-studies having been undertaken on Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Mexico and Peru; industrial restructuring and international competitiveness; and activities of transnational banks and the financial sector. The Unit contributed to the Centre's technical paper on "Debt equity conversion: a guide for decision-makers" and on the Handbook on Foreign Direct Investment.

The Joint Unit established with ECA undertook research on TNCs within the context of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, with emphasis on: the role of TNCs in African least developed countries; TNCs in the services sector of African countries; and development of an African information system on TNCs. The Unit collected micro- and macro-data relating to operations of TNCs for the Centre's Handbook on Foreign Direct Investment and initiated two case-studies on intra-African mechanisms for the promotion of foreign direct investment in selected subregions. It supported the technical assistance and advisory services activities carried out by ECA in collaboration with the Centre. During 1990, missions were undertaken to Ethiopia, Ghana, Nigeria and the United Republic of Tanzania to review issues relating to less developed countries.

The Joint Unit established with the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia prepared, in cooperation with the Joint Unit with ECE, a draft of the first part of a technical study on Arab petrochemicals and rising protectionism in the developed market economies: the case of EC. The operation of the Unit was suspended in August 1990 owing to the prevailing situation in Baghdad, Iraq.

Research

During 1990, the Centre on TNCs finalized volume VIII of the series National Legislation and Regulations relating to Transnational Corporations.<sup>(2)</sup> As part of the preparation of the Handbook on Foreign Direct Investment, the legal framework for TNCs in some 100 countries was documented. The Centre also began a study on intellectual property rights and foreign direct investment. It completed two studies on investment policies in developing countries entitled "National policies in foreign direct investment flows". Another study, on trade-related investment measures and their impact on trade and development, was being completed in cooperation with UNCTAD. In line with a 1990 resolution of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(3)</sup> which encouraged the Centre to undertake country-specific studies on the contribution of foreign direct investment to development, the Centre undertook two assessment studies on Bangladesh.

The Centre published in two volumes the full proceedings of the second (1989) public hearings on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia.<sup>(4)</sup> It also conducted a survey of the corporate environmental policies, programmes and procedures of about 1,000 TNCs. A study on regulations governing the disclosure of risk information by industry, including TNCs, and the lessons for industrial environmental protection in developing countries was finalized as a United Nations technical paper.(5) The Centre contributed to the fifth edition of the consolidated list of products whose consumption and/or sale had been banned or restricted, in cooperation with the World Health Organization and the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs. The Centre and the United Nations Centre on Human Rights began a project aimed at identifying TNCs operating on indigenous peoples' land.

A guide for decision-makers on debt equity conversions(6) was completed. Issues relating to the impact of transnational service corporations on host developing countries were examined in studies entitled Transnational Corporations, Services and the Uruguay Round(7) and New Issues in the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations.(8) A study entitled Transborder Data Flows and Mexico(9) examined the role played by TNCs in the growing telematics and data services markets in that country.

The Centre worked on a study(10) which examined the determinants of foreign direct investment, particularly in developing countries. The impact of regional economic integration on foreign direct investment and implications for developing countries were analysed in Regional Economic Integration and Transnational Corporations in the 1990s: Europe 1992, North America, and Developing Countries.(11) The implications of free economic zones for foreign direct investment in Central and Eastern Europe were examined in The Role of Free Economic Zones in the USSR and Eastern Europe (12) and The Challenge of Free Economic Zones in Central and Eastern Europe: International Perspectives.(13)

Technical cooperation

The Centre on TNCs continued to provide technical assistance in matters relating to foreign investment and technology transfer to developing countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America and also to countries in Central and Eastern Europe. Advisory and information services were rendered to 43 countries at an average of 2.4 projects for each country. The majority of the projects related to the formulation of foreign investment regimes; design of investment promotion strategies; drafting of model contracts and agreements; and establishment and streamlining of institutional mechanisms and administrative frameworks for the promotion, selection, approval and monitoring of foreign investments and technology transfer. The Centre organized 34 training activities in 1990.

The Centre continued to provide advice in three areas of negotiation: investment agreements for new commercial projects; renegotiation of existing investment agreements; and privatization. Technical assistance was provided to countries which had recently liberalized their policies towards foreign investment: Afghanistan, Angola, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ethiopia, Mongolia, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nicaragua.

Several countries were assisted in the formulation and drafting of legislation on investment. Namibia was assisted in its formulation of a basic investment code. A number of countries in Africa and the Pacific region were assisted in their formulation of petroleum laws. Four African countries and two island countries of the Pacific region requested the Centre's assistance in reviewing and redrafting their mining legislation. Several regional integration movements received assistance in training and the harmonization of investment policies: the Preferential Trade Area of Eastern and Southern African States; the 13 English-speaking countries of the Caribbean Community and its seven-member subgrouping, the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States; and the Association of South-East Asian Nations.

Financing

The resources for the implementation of the programme on TNCs were made available from the United Nations regular budget and from extra-budgetary funds provided by donor States.(1) Regular budget allocations for the biennium 1990-1991 reflected post reductions effected in pursuance of the Secretary-General's decisions on staffing cuts.

Total extrabudgetary resources in 1990 amounted to $6,119,066. Contributions to the Centre's Trust Fund were $2,224,955 and interest income amounted to $50,000. The Fund's closing balance in 1990 was $2,979,908. Resources made available by UNDP totalled $2,633,164.

Total expenditure in 1990 amounted to $3,895,092, of which advisory projects accounted for $1,629,684 and workshops and other training activities $1,547,314

Chapter VI

Natural resources, energy and cartography

The utilization of natural resources and problems of energy continued to be dealt with by several United Nations bodies and organs in 1991. The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration entered into a new phase of its 18-year existence as the first replenishments from successful projects were received.

Environmental concerns became more prominent in many areas, such as in the management of water resources. Commenting on a strategy for the 1990s, the Secretary-General stated that the lack of integration of economic, environmental and engineering aspects into water development had been a major reason for the limited achievements under the 1977 Mar del Plata Action Plan for the development of water resources. The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1991/84 on an International Conference on Water and the Environment to be held in 1992, affirmed the vital importance of water as a finite and fragile resource.

The possibilities of new and renewable sources of energy continued to be explored. Nuclear energy had the potential to lessen significantly the impact of energy consumption on the environment, but its social acceptability remained in question, due in part to the 1986 Chernobyl nuclear accident (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

The Twelfth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific was held in February 1991.

Natural resources

Exploration

UN Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

In 1991, the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE)—administered by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)—continued to assist developing countries to search for new sources of both solid minerals and geothermal energy and to bring the results of previous discoveries to the investment stage.

As a major turn of events, the Fund began receiving replenishment payments in 1991 following the discovery by a UNRFNRE project of a large chromium deposit in the Philippines. The in situ value of the discovery was estimated at $45 million. Other successful UNRFNRE projects included the discovery and development to the production stage of a high-grade silver deposit in Ecuador, the in situ value of which amounted to an estimated $25 million.

Established by the General Assembly in 1973,(1) the Fund was to be financed from voluntary contributions, donations in cash and kind, and payments by recipient participating States equal to a percentage of the value of the natural resources produced under Fund-assisted projects. The replenishment payment by the Philippines in 1991 was the first such payment.

In accordance with a 1990 decision by the UNDP Governing Council,(2) management of UNRFNRE and the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD) see PART THREE, Chapter VII) was entrusted to a single office while maintaining the single identity of each Fund and its respective operating procedure and mandate. As a consequence of the merger, administrative expenditures, such as personnel and office costs, were reduced considerably.

In a report of February 1991 to the Governing Council,(3) the UNDP Administrator stated that, although the Fund had finally reached the stage where replenishments from successful projects were forthcoming, it could not sustain a viable level of project activities unless financial contributions were substantially improved.

On 25 June,(4) the Governing Council noted the reduced administrative costs of UNRFNRE achieved through integrating its management with that of UNFSTD and welcomed the first replenishment payment. It recognized the efforts made to sustain the Fund's activities despite limited financial resources and appealed to Member States to contribute. The approval by the Administrator of the minimum work for an offshore mineral exploration project in Sri Lanka and a gold exploration project in the United Republic of Tanzania was noted by the Council, which approved possible additional expenditures for both projects.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1991/91 without vote.

United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3167(XXVIII) of 17 December 1973 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1762(LIV) of 18 May 1973, concerning the establishment of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration,

Recalling also its resolutions 1987/11 of 26 May 1987 and 1989/9 of 22 May 1989,

Recognizing the important role of the Fund in providing assistance to developing countries in the development of their natural resources,

Noting the efforts made to sustain the activities of the Fund despite limited financial support,

Noting also the requirement of continued financial support for the Fund, bearing in mind the need to ensure its revolving nature through replenishment contributions,

1. Takes note of the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme;

2. Welcomes the first replenishment payment received by the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration as a result of the discovery and exploitation of a chromite deposit in the Philippines, and notes the active participation of the Fund in connection with the successful discovery of a high-grade silver deposit in Ecuador;

3. Takes note of the efforts made to reduce administrative costs by integrating the management of the Fund with that of the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development;

4. Calls upon Member States to consider increasing their financial support for the Fund, in particular by means of voluntary contributions.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/91

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/125) without vote. 23 July (meeting 16); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1991/29); agenda item 8 (e).

New techniques for natural resources exploration and assessment

At its March/April 1991 session, the Committee on Natural Resources discussed new techniques, including remote sensing, for identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources. It had before it a report of the Secretary-General on information referral systems on satellite remote-sensing data.<sup>(5)</sup> The report described the expanding use of remote-sensing technology and provided information on access to remote-sensing systems through commercial outlets. It also summarized the technical cooperation activities in remote sensing of the United Nations Department of Technical Cooperation for Development (DTCD).

The report stated that global networks for acquiring and disseminating remote-sensing data commercially had been established over the past few years, as had large data banks and referral systems. Given the continuing financial constraints of the United Nations, it was recommended that Member States take advantage of those facilities.

The report suggested that the Committee might consider the expertise and facilities available in DTDC for promoting the use of remote sensing in resources exploration, especially for developing countries. Promotion could include a clearing-house function in connection with disseminating information to Member States and continuing to integrate remote-sensing data sets into projects for exploring natural resources.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1991/89 without vote.

New techniques, including remote sensing, for identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 41/65 of 3 December 1986 on principles relating to remote sensing of the Earth from outer space,

Recalling further its resolutions 1987/9 of 26 May 1987 and 1989/8 of 22 May 1989,

Bearing in mind the important role of remote-sensing data in the process of identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources,

Recognizing the need for developing countries to have access to the information obtained by remote sensing in order to optimize the use of their natural resources,

Stressing the contribution that developed countries can make in assisting the developing countries to integrate satellite remote-sensing data into their national mapping programmes,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on information referral systems on satellite remote-sensing data;

2. Calls upon the developed countries to share more of their technical capacity in remote sensing with the developing countries;

3. Recommends that the Department of Technical Cooperation for Development of the Secretariat, in cooperation with appropriate organizations of the United Nations system and with the assistance of satellite launching States and organizations, to compile, for dissemination to developing countries, information on new data sets and the conditions under which such data can be obtained and the modalities for doing so;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to strengthen the capability of the developing countries in the application of remote-sensing techniques for the identification and subsequent exploration, exploitation and development of natural resources through workshops, seminars and training courses to be organized at the regional or country level in developing countries;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its thirteenth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/89

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/125) without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1991/29); agenda item 8 (e).

Disaster prevention and mitigation

In a report of March 1991 to the Committee on Natural Resources,(6) the Secretary-General discussed disaster prevention and mitigation in developing and utilizing natural resources. He listed information received from seven organs of the United Nations system and seven of its specialized agencies regarding the types of disaster or hazard they dealt with; annexed to the report was a synoptic table indicating the potential of organizations and agencies to contribute to disaster prevention and mitigation in developing and utilizing natural resources.

By decision 1991/306 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to continue to coordinate, through existing mechanisms, the activities of the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system as they related to disaster prevention and mitigation in developing and utilizing natural resources.

Permanent sovereignty over natural resources

In a report of March 1991(7) submitted in response to a 1989 request by the Economic and Social Council,(8) the Secretary-General discussed salient issues in the exercise of permanent sovereignty over natural resources. He reviewed investment policies; recent developments in legislation and regulation; contracts and negotiations with regard to mining agreements; international cooperation arrangements related to the exercise of permanent sovereignty; environmental considerations; water and permanent sovereignty; and technical cooperation.

As to mineral investment, the situation was highly unsatisfactory for most developing countries. In a number of them, although investment capital was available in theory, capital markets were insufficiently developed for financing, the high-risk phase of exploration and the high-cost phase of mine development. Developing countries reinvested a much smaller percentage of mining revenues in mineral exploration than did developed countries where such exploration was pursued by private corporations. It had therefore been proposed that national mineral development funds be established, fed by a percentage of mining income, in order to finance training, maintenance of government mining services and mineral exploration and maintenance of the reserve base of the country otherwise subject to continuous depletion by production.

With regard to measures to encourage mineral investment, there was a need for information, training and advisory services in connection with mineral economics and the preparation and appraisal of mineral feasibility studies. The report suggested that the Committee on Natural Resources might consider preparing guidelines on feasibility studies and mineral economics of direct concern to developing countries; the modalities by which the United Nations could facilitate the flow of mineral financing to developing countries; the possibility of undertaking a study of current methods of mining and petroleum finance; and the establishment of a database within the United Nations on available mineral and petroleum investment opportunities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1991/88 without vote.

Permanent sovereignty over natural resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also its resolutions 1987/12 of 26 May 1987 and 1989/10 of 22 May 1989,

Reaffirming that all countries, in particular developing countries, have the inherent and sovereign right to determine freely the use of their natural resources,

Stressing the importance for all countries, in particular the developing countries, to make the optimum use of their natural resources in order to strengthen and promote their economic and social development,

Concerned about the present international economic situation, in particular its impact on developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on permanent sovereignty over natural resources;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources;

3. Encourages the Department of Technical Cooperation for Development of the Secretariat to continue to play an active role in providing advisory services to Governments, at their request, to support them in exercising their inalienable right of permanent sovereignty over their natural resources, inter alia, in exploring for, developing and managing their natural resources, as well as advisory services for policy and planning, legislation and taxation, contract negotiation and contract auditing and management, and investment promotion and financing, and encourages the Department to continue to organize seminars that bring together experts and representatives of international companies and developing countries;

4. Takes note of the activities of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, which is the focal point for matters related to transnational corporations and which is concerned with the whole range of issues that arise in dealing with relations between host countries and transnational corporations in various sectors, and encourages the Centre to continue to provide information and analyses to Governments, at their request, aimed at strengthening their capabilities, based on the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its thirteenth session a concise, updated report on permanent sovereignty over natural resources.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/88

28 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/125), without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1991/29); agenda item 8 (e).

Committee on Natural Resources

The Committee on Natural Resources held its twelfth session in New York from 25 March to 5 April 1991.<sup>(9)</sup> It discussed mineral, energy and water resources; permanent sovereignty over natural resources; new techniques, including remote sensing, for identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources; coordination of programmes within the United Nations system; disaster prevention and mitigation; and the activities of UNFPA. The Committee recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption eight draft resolutions and three draft decisions. It also adopted a decision,<sup>(10)</sup> by which it requested its Chairman to invite, on an experimental basis, experts to hold an informal exchange of views on trends and salient issues in natural resources, preferably six months before its next (1993) session.

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/307, took note of the report of the Committee and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its 1993 session.

Coordination of UN activities

In a report of March 1991,<sup>(11)</sup> submitted in response to a 1989 Economic and Social Council request,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General gave an overview of activities and existing priorities and objectives of the United Nations system in water, mineral and energy resources. In pursuance of another request of the Council,<sup>(13)</sup> he also discussed the activities of the system regarding the impact of financial constraints affecting developing countries in the development, conservation and maintenance of their natural resources and related infrastructures.

The activities of the various organs and units of the system in natural resources followed the priorities laid out in the relevant legislative instruments. However, the objectives and priorities of most units and organs concerned had been adjusted in the light of emerging global issues and concerns within the international community. Such was the case, for example, for a number of entities that had placed greater emphasis on the need for rational management and use of natural resources within the broad context of sustainable development and concern for the environment. As to the impact of financial constraints, many developing countries had only limited financial resources for investment and development. The adverse economic climate and prevailing conditions of the 1980s had placed further financial constraints on their development, conservation and maintenance of natural resources.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1991/90 without vote.

Coordination of programmes within the United Nations system in the field of natural resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind section I of General Assembly resolution 45/253 of 21 December 1990 on the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 and, in particular, programme 19 of the medium-term plan, on natural resources,

Recalling its resolutions 1987/13 of 26 May 1987 and 1989/12 of 22 May 1989,

Convinced of the need to increase the effectiveness and relevance of the work of the United Nations system in the field of natural resources,

Stressing the crucial role of natural resources for economic growth and development, particularly that of the developing countries,

Welcoming the enhanced coordination of the activities of the United Nations system in the field of natural resources, particularly in water resources,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the United Nations system in water, mineral and energy resources;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its thirteenth session an updated report containing an overview of the activities of the United Nations system regarding water, mineral and energy resources, identifying the organizations or units within the United Nations system mandated to carry out work in those fields and assessing the extent to which the guidelines provided by the Committee have been followed;

3. Welcomes with appreciation the coordination mechanisms for water and sanitation issues, including the inter-agency Steering Committee for Water Supply and Sanitation, the Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources of the Administrative Committee on Coordination and the Water Supply and Sanitation Collaborative Council;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to include in the annual report of the Committee, to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its regular session of 1992, a section on the most effective ways and means of enhancing coordination in the mineral and energy sectors;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to Prepare a compilation of the relevant decisions emanating from the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in the area of natural resources for priority consideration by the Committee on Natural Resources at its thirteenth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/90

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/125) without vote, 23 July (meeting 161: draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1991/29); agenda item 8 (e).

Mineral resources

At the end of 1991, DTCO had a total of 92 operational projects covering all aspects of mineral resources development. Continuing a 1990 trend, many projects included an investment promotion component, and Africa received the bulk of assistance. More than 100 advisory missions were undertaken to developing countries covering all mineral sector areas, with several missions concerned with mineral exploration and processing, strengthening of institutions and training, investment promotion, mineral sector planning and programming, diamond drilling and geophysics, and several other missions requiring highly specialized expertise. D-ED delivered $20 million for mineral resources projects in 1991.

Four international seminars took place in 1991: an international round table on mining and the environment (Berlin, 25-28 June), jointly organized with the German Foundation for International Development, produced a set of environmental guidelines for the mining industry, Governments and international institutions; an international seminar on mining taxation (Montreal, 30 September-4 October), jointly organized with the Canadian Institute of Mining, Metallurgy and Petroleum, discussed issues of major importance for all mining operations and new projects; an international seminar on laterite ore acid leaching technology (Moa, 11-15 November) was organized in cooperation with Cuba; and an interregional seminar on applied finance for natural resources (Bangkok, 9-14 December) was organized in cooperation with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific.

In March/April, the Committee on Natural Resources had before it a report of the Secretary-General on trends and salient issues in the development of mineral resources: a review of recent supply, demand/consumption and price trends,<sup>(14)</sup> prepared in response to a 1989 resolution of the Economic and Social Council.<sup>(15)</sup> The report discussed consumption patterns for industrial base metals and for steel and ferro-alloys, and production patterns for non-ferrous metals, precious metals and minor metals. It also addressed new materials and their uses and attempted to define their impact on the development of the extractive industry. The report illustrated recent trends in stocks and prices and forecast metal and mineral markets in the light of anticipated future metal production and demand. Finally, it looked into mineral exploration trends and investigated the financing mechanisms available for mining projects.

In accordance with the same 1989 resolution,<sup>(15)</sup> the Secretary-General also submitted a report on small-scale mining prospects in developing countries.<sup>(16)</sup> It described recent activities in small-scale mining; national, regional and international policies to promote that segment of the extractive industry; human resources development, training and technical cooperation; and the results of the Fifth Tripartite Technical Meeting for Mines other than Coal Mines convened by the International Labour Organisation (Geneva, March/April 1990).

The report concluded that interest in small-scale mining continued to be strong in many developing countries. Such mining had been identified as an economic activity providing significant employment opportunities, utilizing numerous small, otherwise unexploitable mineralizations with moderate lead-time, capital and skilled-labour requirements. At the national level, the establishment of accountable organizational structures, such as cooperatives, small miners' associations or small private firms, would be necessary in order to eliminate environmentally and socially unacceptable practices; accumulation of funds for land rehabilitation collected from producers was an important complementary measure. Regional beneficiation facilities and purchasing centres had a strong promotional effect in small-scale metal mining districts, the report said. Plant-hire schemes and special loan arrangements had also proved highly encouraging and should be made available wherever justified by the extent of small-scale mining activities.

Other conclusions were: regional marketing of precious minerals through commercial banks offered an option requiring little investment where a network of branch offices existed; the pooling of technical assistance, utilizing existing regional organizations as coordinating mechanisms, could accelerate promotion and enhance its efficiency; and transfer of technology would have to increase between developing countries. Human resource development was also a key issue in small-scale mining and extensive technical assistance comprising training programmes implemented in producing operations or special demonstration mines was required.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1991/87 without vote.

Trends and salient issues in the development of mineral resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,

Stressing the significance of mineral resources in the economic and social development of the developing countries,

Reaffirming the permanent sovereignty of States over their natural resources,

Recognizing the need for substantial flows of financial resources and transfer of technology to the developing countries to enable them to explore and develop their mineral resources,

Acknowledging the important role that the United Nations system can play in the field of mineral resources, through, inter alia, its technical cooperation activities and advisory services in support of mineral resources exploration and development in the developing countries,

Bearing in mind the invaluable impact of small-scale mining on the economic and social development process of the developing countries and its identification as an economic activity providing significant employment opportunities,

Aware of the need to balance small-scale mining operations with the improvement of social working conditions and benefits and the consideration of health and safety hazards,

1. ## Water resources

Implementation of the

Mar del Plata Action Plan

In accordance with a 1989 request by the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(17)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources in February 1991 a report on strategies and measures for the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan in the 1990s.<sup>(18)</sup> The Action Plan had been adopted in 1977 by the United Nations Water Conference.<sup>(19)</sup> The report gave an overview of progress achieved and problems encountered in implementing the Plan, identified critical issues for action in the 1990s and proposed a strategy for the decade to accelerate implementation of the Plan.

Although the areas for action identified by the 1977 Conference still provided a valid framework, experience since then had highlighted a number of issues calling for priority within a national water strategy for the 1990s: emphasis on the management of water as a finite resource, on the coordination and integration of water and land-use policies for sustainable development, and on overall planning for drought alleviation, water conservation and mitigation of losses in flood-prone areas; in addition, systematic measurement and monitoring of surface and groundwater should be instituted or improved; a more efficient use of water was required for both rain-fed and irrigated agriculture for increased, sustainable food production; to expand the coverage of drinking-water supply and sanitation, attention should be given to rural and peri-urban populations, to the management of solid and liquid wastes, and to the environmental impact of water and sanitation programmes; greater efforts should be made to strengthen institutions and develop human resources in order to enhance the capacity for the development and management of water-related programmes; national and international resources should be mobilized for technical cooperation and investment; and public information programmes should be enhanced to promote the strategy and awareness of water and related issues.

The report listed recommendations for action at the national level regarding water resources assessment, drinking-water supply and sanitation, water and sustainable agricultural development, water quality, and water and related human resources management. Each of the elements also warranted support at the regional and international levels. To make a strategy for the 1990s more meaningful, the United Nations system could play a major catalytic role in bringing about international support for an integrated approach to water resources planning and management. The failure to integrate economic, environmental and engineering aspects into water development had been a major reason for the limited achievements under the Action Plan, especially in its long-term objectives.

In terms of cooperation at the national level, United Nations organizations could play an important role in assisting Governments with interdisciplinary missions to assess their water resources situation rapidly. Such missions would clarify policy objectives and formulate strategies for sustainable water resources development, evaluate institutional and human resources capacity requirements and create a framework for a renewed effort in identifying priorities, integrating policies and formulating programmes for accelerated water resources development.

United Nations activities in water resources were also discussed in another report of the Secretary-General,<sup>(11)</sup> which focused on coordination within the Organization in the area of natural resources (see above).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1991/85 without vote.

Water resources development and progress in the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade.

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 32/158 of 19 December 1977, in which the Assembly approved the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 45/181 of 21 December 1990 on the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade,

Alarmed at the fact that at the end of the Decade one in three people in the developing countries still lacks access to water and sanitation services,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on strategies and measures for the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan in the 1990s;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the United Nations system in water, mineral and energy resources;

3. 4. Stresses that the ultimate goal of the Mar del Plata Action Plan is to promote the level of preparedness needed to avoid a water crisis of global dimensions through the efficient and productive use and management of scarce water resources, which are vital to development, taking into consideration environmental concerns, including those related to the semi-arid and arid regions of developing countries;

5. Emphasizes that the 1990s will require an intensification of national efforts and international development cooperation in order to ensure the efficient and productive use and management of scarce water resources;

6. Reaffirms the urgent need for new strategies for integrated water resources development and management, including strategies in the areas of finance and technology, to manage the growing demand for water and to achieve long-term sustainability of the water resources sector;

7. Stresses the need to strengthen and increase international assistance, including technical assistance, human resources development and exchange of information, in order to support the efforts of developing countries;

8. Urges the appropriate organs, organizations and Programmes of the United Nations system to assign a high degree of priority to activities, projects and programmes related to water resources undertaken at all levels by developing countries;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its thirteenth session, for consideration and follow-up, an analytical

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/125) without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1991/29): agenda item 8 (e).

Also on 26 July, the Council, by decision 1991/305, transmitted resolution 1991/84 to the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (third session, Geneva, 12 August-4 September 1991).

Technical cooperation

During 1991, delivery in the water resources sector by DTCD was $23 million, with 107 projects under execution; advisory missions were undertaken in water resources planning, engineering, legislation, rural water supply and computer applications to surface and groundwater development and management. The promotion of women's role and participation in water resources development, particularly in water supply and sanitation, was also given considerable importance. Among the meetings organized by DTC in 1991 were a workshop on overexploitation of aquifers in developing countries (Gran Canaria, Canary Islands, Spain, 20-24 April) and an international seminar on environmental aspects of water resources development (Asenovgrad, Bulgaria, 7-16 October).

Energy

Energy resources development

Various aspects of energy resources development were discussed by the Committee on Natural Resources at its March/April 1991 session.(1) The Committee considered a report of the Secretary-General on trends and salient issues in energy resources,(2) which presented a broad and long-range view of the future production and use of energy. Energy developments in developing countries were given particular attention. The three-part report considered the future intensity of energy use, gave an overview of the potential and prospects of world energy supplies, and discussed the role of public policy.

Also before the Committee was a report by the Secretary-General on energy-saving strategies and measures to improve the efficient utilization of electric power systems,(3) submitted in response to a 1989 request of the Economic and Social Council.(4) The report summarized critical issues involved in the efficient generation, transmission, distribution and utilization of electric power, and emphasized the cost-effectiveness of powerplant operation, maintenance and rehabilitation programmes. In a series of recommendations to the Committee, the report urged the United Nations to enhance its activities in energy conservation, power-loss reduction and powerplant rehabilitation programmes. It noted that systematic plant operation and maintenance would reduce power losses, stressing that the rehabilitation of existing powerplants should be accorded the highest priority by financing institutions, assistance agencies and developing country Governments.

Also in response to a 1989 request of the Council(4) the Secretary-General submitted a report on technical cooperation programmes on the exploration, development and efficient use of energy resources.(5) The report described the energy outlook for the 1990s, particularly for the developing countries, and identified priorities for technical cooperation programmes in the early part of the decade. Various strategies and modalities for technical assistance employed by DTC in response to those priorities were outlined. The report then gave an overview of DTC's technical cooperation activities, including projects, international meetings, publications and computer software.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1991/86 without vote.

Development and efficient use of energy resources

The Economic and Social Council.

Recalling the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 40/208 of 17 December 1985 and 45/209 of 21 December 1990 on the development of the energy resources of developing countries,

Recalling further its resolutions 1987/10 of 26 May 1987 and 1989/6 of 22 May 1989,

Recognizing that the revitalization of economic growth and development of developing countries and the integration of economies in transition into the world economy may lead in certain cases to an increase in energy demand,

Recognizing also that in view of increased energy demand, new and additional investments and strengthened energy policies, including conservation and efficient management of energy resources, will be needed to prevent energy shortages,

Concerned that energy shortages in developing countries are causing a serious disruption of economic activities,

Affirming that the exploitation of energy sources in developing countries, including available hydropower potential and other sources of energy, if adequately developed with appropriate capital and technological inputs, could contribute to the solution of energy shortages in those countries,

Reaffirming that the developing countries have the primary responsibility for their strategies and policies for the exploration and development of their energy resources, including the need to mobilize financial resources, internal and external, in order to develop their national technical skills and capabilities in the energy sector,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on energy resources;

2. Reaffirms the need for the United Nations system to intensify its efforts to promote the international exchange of experience and knowledge and the flow of efficient technologies, especially new and emerging ones, to developing countries;

3. Acknowledges the need to facilitate access for developing countries to energy-efficient technologies and research and, in that context, calls upon the United Nations system and developed countries to support the development of national endeavours of developing countries, as well as regional and interregional cooperation;

4. Calls upon the international community, including developed countries, to make technology and financial resources available to the developing countries to enable them to fully develop their potential capability in the field of new and renewable sources of energy, including their vast hydropower potential;

5. Urges multilateral and regional financial institutions, as well as donor countries, to allocate financial resources to promote programmes and technical cooperation projects in support of the development of energy resources in the developing countries;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its thirteenth session a report on trends and salient issues in energy, containing information on ways and means of enhancing energy efficiency and conservation and of promoting the development of economically viable energy resources, and containing relevant conclusions and recommendations of international and regional seminars, workshops and conferences, organized by the United Nations, that address energy issues;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee at its thirteenth session a report on ways and means by which the energy policy objectives proposed by the World Bank to the developing countries and the policies and objectives contained in the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade could correspond;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee at its thirteenth session a report on programmes under way and planned for human resources development in the field of energy, including measures for required institutional strengthening through advisory services, on-the-job training, external fellowships and comprehensive training packages.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/96

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/125) without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1991/29): agenda item 8 (e).

Technical cooperation

During 1991, DTCD executed 104 projects in the energy field with a delivery of $13 million. Missions provided advice on energy policy, resource evaluation and exploration, project design and feasibility studies in the areas of petroleum, coal, natural gas, electric power, energy planning, energy conservation, geothermal, solar, wind and multisource renewable energy packages, information systems and microcomputer-based energy analysis. Advisory services relating to environmental aspects of energy development focused on energy efficiency in the industry, transport and residential/commercial end-use sectors; reduction of technical and non-technical losses in electric power systems; reduction of emissions and waste management in industry; demonstration of solar, wind and biomass technologies; and promotion of clean coal technologies.

Meetings on energy issues organized by DTCD during 1991 included: a meeting on energy and environment in the development process (Beijing, China, 6-12 June); workshops on microcomputer applications for national energy planning (Quito, Ecuador, 15-19 April and 24-28 June); a symposium on management of the economic and environmental aspects in the coal mining industry (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 21-24 October); a workshop on geothermal energy training (Leyte, Philippines, 11-15 November); and a consultative meeting on energy, environment and development (Stockholm, Sweden, 13-15 November).

New and renewable energy sources

Convened by a 1990 decision of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy,<sup>(6)</sup> the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on New and Renewable Sources of Energy met in New York from 26 to 30 August 1991.<sup>(7)</sup> The Group assessed and reviewed implementation of the 1981 Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy.<sup>(8)</sup> It discussed the Programme's objectives, policy areas and areas for priority action, the world energy situation, progress achieved in implementing the Programme during the 1980s and the factors bearing on its implementation. The Group concluded that the main thrust of the Programme continued to be valid, but a review of its priorities might be required to reflect the changes that had taken place in the past decade in areas such as energy, ecology, finance, economic growth and the state of development and application of new and renewable sources of energy technologies. Priorities differed among countries depending on their resource endowment and their particular economic, technical and social circumstances. The Group made a number of recommendations for specific action at the national and international levels.

In accordance with a 1990 resolution of the General Assembly<sup>(9)</sup> requesting the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive and analytical study on new and renewable sources of energy with a view to contributing to the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation (DIEC) established a high-level group of experts—the United Nations Solar Energy Group on Environment and Development (UNSEGED)—to prepare a first quality report.

During 1991, the Group held meetings in Rome (20-22 March), Snekkersten, Denmark (25-28 April), Munich, Germany (17-19 June), and Oslo, Norway (17 and 18 October). A follow-up meeting was held at Harare, Zimbabwe, from 14 to 17 November. In its final report,<sup>(10)</sup> adopted in Oslo, UNSEGED noted that developing a sustainable global energy system based on renewable energy sources would require fundamental structural, economic and institutional changes in industrialized and developing countries, none of which could be achieved without political will, international cooperation and public and private involvement. A long-term approach was vital for developing the physical, policy and institutional infrastructure needed for utilizing renewable energy sources and implementing such an approach would require transitional and foundation-building policies.

The Group recommended policies for adoption at the national and international levels, saying it believed that a strong international institutional arrangement was needed to carry out those tasks and give renewable energy visibility and weight in such areas of international negotiations as the framework convention on climate change. The creation of an international renewable energy agency responsible for promoting renewable energy sources was recommended.

The Consultative Group of High-level Experts on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, convened by the DIEC Director-General, the United Nations University and the Italian Agency for New Technology, Energy and Environment, met at Rome (17 and 18 March 1991). The Consultative Group, established as a follow-up to the 1987 Colloquium of High-level Experts on New and Renewable Sources of Energy,<sup>(11)</sup> adopted a pre-feasibility survey on a proposed network of centres of excellence of international scope on new and renewable sources of energy. The Group recommended the initial establishment of two centres, one in Algeria and the other in China. Others would follow, up to a total of 8 to 10 centres, which would form an international network.

At its tenth session (Geneva, 25 and 26 March 1991),<sup>(12)</sup> the ACC Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy discussed the activities and coordination of those activities being carried out throughout the United Nations system.

Nuclear energy

IAEA report

Total installed nuclear power-generating capacity in the world amounted to 326.6 gigawatts in 1991. During the year, four nuclear powerplants were connected to electricity grids in Bulgaria, China, France and Japan, bringing the world's total number of operating reactors to 420. In addition, 76 reactors were being constructed in 16 countries. (See PART SEVEN, Chapter I, for further information on IAEA activities.)

In August 1991,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted the 1990 report of IAEA to the General Assembly. Presenting and updating the report on 21 October, the IAEA Director General discussed the Agency's work in Iraq on the basis of Security Council resolutions (see PART TWO, Chapter III), progress in the non-proliferation regime (see PART ONE, Chapter II), nuclear safety, environment, development and energy, the transfer of nuclear techniques for development and IAEA's role in the medium term.

At the request of the USSR, IAEA helped organize in 1990 and 1991 an international assessment of the radiological and health consequences of the 1986 Chernobyl nuclear accident (see PART THREE, Chapter III). The accident had triggered a broad IAEA programme aimed at the gradual creation of an international nuclear safety regime. Basic principles of nuclear safety had been worked out, safety standards had been updated and many new services using international experts had been offered to member States—often against payment by them. Developments in Eastern and Central Europe, including the USSR, had led to a strong interest in examining and upgrading nuclear power safety in the region; IAEA was engaged as a focal point for efforts in that regard. A special project was set up to determine the safety of the oldest type of Soviet-designed reactors.

As to environmental issues, the potential of nuclear power to reduce the emissions of carbon dioxide resulting from the burning of all fossil fuels—believed to contribute to global warming—was the most interesting, but also the most controversial question, the Director General stated. A number of organizations, including IAEA, the United Nations Environment Programme, the World Bank, the World Health Organization and the Commission of the European Communities, had organized a joint comparative study of the environmental and health effects of different electricity generation systems and of the prospects of increasing efficiency in energy use or of forgoing energy services. The study was discussed at a senior expert symposium at Helsinki, Finland, in May. The symposium concluded that the global demand for electricity would continue to increase, subject only to constraints on economic growth, and that efficiency improvements had the potential to reduce environmental impacts substantially and should be pursued vigorously; however, such improvements would not eliminate the need for new plants to meet the growing energy demand. Nuclear power was the most likely non-fossil source that could be deployed on a large scale and its costs were competitive with fossil fuels for base-load generation. Nuclear energy therefore had the potential to make a significant contribution towards reducing carbon emissions, but its social acceptability remained in question.

Non-power-related nuclear techniques in technical cooperation with developing countries were also pursued by IAEA in such areas as medicine, agriculture and industry. An example of how the Agency had helped to transform a nuclear technique was the removal of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxides from flue gases in coal power stations. Through the use of electron beams, the gases were transformed into fertilizers. In April 1991, a pilot plant, installed at a thermal power station in Warsaw, Poland, started up as the largest demonstration plant of its kind. Approximately 90 per cent of the sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxides could be removed by two electron beam machines of 50 kilowatts each.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 November 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/16 by recorded vote.

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency The General Assembly,

Cartography

During 1991, 17 DTCD projects in cartography continued in 13 developing countries. They included institution-building, transfer of technical expertise to national cartographic and hydrographic institutions and provision of training and equipment. A total of 29 fellowships and four grants for study tours were awarded for studies in photogrammetry, cadastral land registration systems, cartographic and photographic procedures, cartography, digital mapping, computer communications and networking, cadastral surveying and land information, geodetic science and hydrography.

UN Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific

The Twelfth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific was held at Bangkok, Thailand, from 20 to 28 February 1991.<sup>(1)</sup> The Conference recognized the importance of the regional conferences as a focal point for regional cooperation as well as the possible transfer of technology and know-how. The agendas of previous conferences were reviewed in the light of needs and requirements for the regions. It was stressed that the theme for future conferences should be forward-looking rather than report on past accomplishments. Future agendas should include the current state and issues of surveying, charting and mapping on the national level, new trends in technology and their application, human resources development, and regional cooperation and technology transfer. Recognizing the increasingly rapid developments in technology, the Conference recommended that cartographic conferences be held at three-year instead of four-year intervals. Accordingly, the Thirteenth Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific should be held in 1994 and a technical meeting held prior to that.

On 28 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/222, took note of the report of the Twelfth Conference and endorsed its recommendation that the Thirteenth Conference be held in 1994.

Standardization of geographical names

The United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names held its fifteenth session at Geneva from 11 to 19 November 1991 to prepare input to the Sixth United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names, planned for August 1992.

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/281, had set the date for the fifteenth session of the Group of Experts.

Chapter VII

Science and technology

The United Nations continued its efforts in 1991 to strengthen the scientific and technological capacities of developing countries. Ecological concerns were addressed by many bodies dealing with science and technology and were reflected in resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development.

The merger of the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development, which financed scientific and technological activities in developing countries, with the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration resulted in considerable savings.

Consultations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology were the most intensive and cooperative since the suspension of the code negotiation in 1985. Differences between developing countries and developed market-economy countries remained, but for the first time there was an agreement to resume negotiations on the basis of a fresh approach.

The Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, at its April/May session, focused on endogenous capacity-building in science and technology, the financing of science and technology activities, and environmentally sound technologies. Policy advice to the Intergovernmental Committee was provided by the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development. The Centre for Science and Technology for Development and the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development of the Administrative Committee on Coordination addressed issues relating to greater harmonization within the United Nations system in science and technology activities.

Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action

General aspects

The Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, adopted in 1979,<sup>(1)</sup> continued to be implemented by several United Nations bodies and organizations in 1991. The Programme of Action's basic goals had been reaffirmed by the General Assembly in 1989,<sup>(2)</sup> following an end-of-decade review.

In a report of March 1991<sup>(3)</sup> to the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, the Secretary-General stated that programmes supporting the endogenous capacity-building of developing nations were one of the activities concentrated on by the Centre for Science and Technology for Development, as a part of implementing the Vienna Programme of Action. The Intergovernmental Committee, in a May resolution,<sup>(4)</sup> recommended that countries increase efforts to support the process of endogenous capacity-building in science and technology, taking into account the Vienna Programme and its basic goals; and that, at the global level, a more diversified, innovative and flexible approach be sought to finance endogenous capacity-building in science and technology in order to enhance a broad coalition of resources drawn from domestic, bilateral and multilateral sources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 46/165 without vote.

Science and technology for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/14 A of 26 October 1989, on the end-of-decade review of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development and its revitalization,

Recalling also the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, in which the General Assembly stressed in particular the need for developed countries and international organizations to support the efforts of developing countries to create and develop endogenous capacities in the area of scientific and technological capability,

Recalling that the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, at its thirty-seventh session, decided that building and strengthening national capacity for the transfer and adaptation of technology for development should be one of the areas on which the United Nations Development Programme should focus attention,

Taking note of the report of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development on its eleventh session,

Reaffirming that knowledge is the crucial determinant of progress and that science and technology have a critical role in the reactivation of development, especially in developing countries,

Conscious that new and emerging technologies, such as information technologies and new materials, are radically shifting the comparative advantages between different countries, thereby constituting both an opportunity and a challenge to policy makers and international organizations,

Recognising that access to and capacity to generate environmentally sound technologies is essential for the full incorporation of environmental concerns into national development strategies,

Recognizing that the United Nations should play a central role in the enhancement of assistance to build the endogenous capacity of developing countries in science and technology and to facilitate their access to technologies on favourable terms,

Reaffirming the role of the Centre for Science and Technology for Development of the Secretariat as the focal point, inter alia, for technological assessment within the United Nations system and, where possible, for relations with Governments and non-governmental organizations concerning technological assessment activity in Member States,

Recognizing that the role and relevance of the United Nations in this critically important area needs further enhancement and strengthening to respond more forcefully to the emerging needs of developing countries,

Bearing in mind its resolution 45/264 of 13 May 1991 on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields and without prejudice to its implementation,

1. Endorses resolution 1(XI) of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development;

2. Urges that national efforts and international development cooperation, in particular through supportive financial and technical assistance from donor Governments, multilateral lending institutions and international agencies, be intensified and strengthened towards endogenous capacity-building in science and technology in developing countries;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and on the basis of the discussion by the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development of the substantive theme of its twelfth session, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a comprehensive, analytical report on ways and means of strengthening endogenous capacity-building in science and technology in the developing countries;

4. Requests the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development at its twelfth session, or possible successor arrangements, after reviewing the report of the Secretary-General on the matter, submitted to it in response to resolution 1(XI), to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session concrete proposals for organizing a more effective coalition of resources to meet the scientific and technological needs of developing countries.

Proposed global information network

In response to a 1990 request of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report in June 1991 on international cooperation in the field of informatics.<sup>(6)</sup> The report provided information on the activities undertaken by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to reinforce international cooperation in that field and provide a basis for adequate development and utilization of informatics in developing countries. It noted that of all expenditure on informatics and information technologies in general, 95 per cent was incurred in the industrialized countries and barely 5 per cent in the developing countries.

UNESCO accorded high priority to training activities within the framework of its regular programme and budget, organizing training courses on teleinformatics, software engineering, expert systems and artificial intelligence. The Intergovernmental Informatics Programme (IIP), financed mainly from voluntary contributions from member States and to a lesser degree from UNESCO's regular budget, gave priority to the implementation of major regional informatics projects, including the creation of regional academic networks. The bureau of IIP approved 15 projects in March 1991: 2 in Africa (Senegal, Uganda), 8 in Latin America and the Caribbean (Argentina, Chile, Colombia, Cuba (2), Ecuador (2), Uruguay) and 5 in Asia and the Pacific (China, Indonesia, Iran, New Zealand, Sri Lanka).

The report stated that the United Nations framework appeared to be the most appropriate one from which to launch international cooperation in informatics, which would need inter-agency cooperation. Three organizations were more concerned than the others by the development of the new technologies in general: UNESCO with regard to training, research and innovation; the International Telecommunication Union with regard to the development of telecommunications; and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization with regard to the establishment of industrial processes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1991/71 without vote.

International cooperation in the field of informatics

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 1989/179 of 27 July 1989, its resolution 1990/58 of 26 July 1990 and decision 7.1 adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its one hundred and thirty-first session,

Taking note of the follow-up report on international cooperation in the field of informatics prepared by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Considering the existing disparities in the level of development of informatics between the developed and developing countries,

Reaffirming the importance of the development of informatics as an instrument of international cooperation and endogenous development,

1. Recommends that more effective use be made of the existing coordinating mechanisms, with a view to regular consultations and coordination concerning informatics within the United Nations system, including consultations and coordination between the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, through its Intergovernmental Informatics Programme, the International Telecommunication Union and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;

2. Invites the above-mentioned organizations to continue to reinforce their subprogrammes concerning international cooperation and regional strategies in informatics in developing countries, in particular the Informafrika project of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

3. Invites Member States to encourage and promote activities to expand the endogenous skills of their populations in the field of informatics, and calls upon donor countries to make voluntary contributions to the Intergovernmental Informatics Programme of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, with a view to strengthening its ability to provide appropriate support for projects in the field of informatics for the benefit of developing countries;

4. Decides to keep this issue under review and to examine it at its regular session of 1992, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at that session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 199/171

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Financial resources for science and technology

Resource mobilization

At its January 1991 session,(1) the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development noted that more than 80 per cent of the funds for scientific and technological activities in developing countries came from domestic sources and less than 20 per cent from international sources. Recognizing the difficulties of generating a single major fund to finance such activities and given the different objectives and guidelines of different donors, the Committee recommended that: developing countries recognize the contributions to be made by an endogenous science and technology capability when formulating their development strategies; there be a greater coordination of donor agencies, which could eventually lead to a loose coalition in which a small international agency acted as a matchmaker between donor and recipients; and each project be assessed for its likely contribution to endogenous capacity-building, given the fact that most projects appeared not to leave behind an enhanced local science and technology capability.

UN Fund for Science and Technology for Development

The United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD) continued in 1991 to finance and implement activities to strengthen the endogenous scientific and technological capacities of developing countries. It focused on five priority programmes: national science and technology strategies; technology innovation and entrepreneurship; technology information; quality control and maintenance; and new and renewable sources of energy.

The year was the first whole year UNFSTD operated under joint management with the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE). In 1990, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) had approved the UNDP Administrator's proposal to entrust the management of the two funds to a single office, while maintaining their identity and their respective operating procedures. The Administrator, in a report of February 1991(2) to the Governing Council, stated that that decision had resulted in considerable reductions in administrative expenditures, from a total of 11 Professionals to 5 and from 13 to 8 General Service staff.

Pursuant to a 1987 resolution of the Intergovernmental Committee,(3) UNFSTD concentrated on a small number of selected areas in science, technology and energy, designed to strengthen national capacity in the areas of transfer and adaptation of technology for development. During 1989 and 1990, the Fund supported about 40 ongoing projects and had an active pipeline of about 20 projects.

The estimated income of UNFSTD for 1991 and 1992 was $0.6 million in core contributions, $1.8 million in non-core contributions, such as from trust funds and cost-sharing, and $0.2 million in interest income. The Fund's expenditure in 1989 and 1990 amounted to $8.3 million. The UNDP Administrator stated that UNFSTD would probably have to continue to rely considerably on sub-trust-fund contributions and on relatively small contributions from a large number of developing countries. Despite the savings in administrative costs, an increase in income would be necessary to sustain a viable level of programme activities in the future; it had been estimated that the minimum requirement for UNFSTD was $5 million annually.

UNDP action. On 25 June 1991,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council took note of the reduced administrative costs and savings achieved through the integration of UNFSTD and UNRFRN under a single management. The Council recognized the efforts made to sustain the activities of both funds despite limited resources and expressed its appreciation of the consolidation of UNFSTD activities through concentration on a limited number of priority areas. It renewed its appeal to Member States to contribute to the financial resources of the funds in order for them to fulfil their mandates.

Intergovernmental Committee action. The Intergovernmental Committee, at its April/May session,<sup>(5)</sup> took note of the important work undertaken by UNFSTD and its status as an identifiable entity within UNDP under the policy guidance of the Intergovernmental Committee. The Committee requested the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with UNFSTD, to submit to it proposals for action on organizing a more effective coalition of resources.

Operational activities

In the field of helping developing countries to devise strategies and structures in science and technology, UNFSTD provided continued assistance to Burundi, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Jordan and the Gulf Cooperation Council, as well as to a regional project, implemented by the Asian Institute of Technology (Bangkok, Thailand). National coordinators and steering committees were set up for an ambitious programme for Cape Verde, Jamaica, Pakistan, Togo, Uganda and Viet Nam, based on a new approach with endogenous capacity-building as its centre-piece.

UNFSTD ran a programme of technological innovation and entrepreneurship based on the concept of the technology business incubator. Projects that started in 1989 and 1990 under that programme were INOTECH in Trinidad; four incubation centres in China (Wuhan, Guangzhou, Tianjin, Shenzhen); projects in four African countries (Côte d'Ivoire, Gabon, Nigeria, Zimbabwe); and preparatory work in India, the Philippines and Thailand. New project activities started in early 1991 in Togo and Turkey and others were planned in Chile, Poland, the Republic of Korea and Thailand.

In the area of technology information, by far the largest project continued to be the technological information pilot system, an information exchange among over 2,000 users in 10 countries in Africa, the Arab States, Asia and Latin America. Preparations were made to establish two other projects: the technology expert knowledge system, a computer-based system connecting UNDP field offices worldwide; and the science and technology referral systems for journalists, to be set up in the Philippines and possibly other developing countries. In the field of quality control and maintenance, a project to assist countries in the Southern African Development Coordination Conference to maintain their scientific instruments proceeded with the support of UNFSTD.

Institutional arrangements

Intergovernmental Committee

The Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development held its eleventh session in 1991 (New York, 22 April-3 May)<sup>(1)</sup> and adopted a four-part resolution on environmentally sound technology; activities of the United Nations system on science and technology for development; endogenous capacity-building; and financing science and technology activities.

By decision 1991/284 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Intergovernmental Committee's report.

Advisory Committee

The Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development, at its eleventh session (New York, 14-18 January 1991),<sup>(2)</sup> focused on sustainable development and environmentally sound technology assessment; endogenous capacity-building through international cooperation; technology missions, a problem-oriented, multisectoral approach to technological development; and the financing of science and technology for development.

The Advisory Committee found that the current approach of submitting its views to the Intergovernmental Committee every two years was unsatisfactory; the issue of mobilizing science and technology for development was too urgent for such a long delay. It expressed the wish to receive the view of the Intergovernmental Committee on the matter and to be in greater contact with those benefiting from its advice. Three possible themes for the Committee's future work programme were identified: the contribution of science and technology to the development of small developing countries; the management of technical change-new approaches to industrialization in the context of economic restructuring of developing countries; and global technology missions.

At its April/May session, the Intergovernmental Committee requested the Advisory Committee to continue to develop operational criteria to facilitate the design and assessment of programmes and activities to strengthen the endogenous scientific and technological capabilities of developing countries.(3)

Centre for science and technology

Serving as the secretariat for the Intergovernmental Committee, the Advisory Committee and the ACC Task Force, the Centre for Science and Technology for Development continued in 1991 to provide support for the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action.

The Centre continued its efforts to maintain an up-to-date registry of national focal points for science and technology for development. As requested by the Intergovernmental Committee in 1982,(4) the Secretary-General presented in March 1991 an updated list of national focal points.(5) The registry listed the 159 Member States of the United Nations and the five non-member States maintaining permanent observer missions at Headquarters.

Also in March,(6) the Secretary-General described the activities of the Centre. In consonance with the orientation given by the Intergovernmental Committee since 1986,(7) the Centre's activities were concentrated on four sub-programmes: endogenous capacity-building and resource mobilization; the Advanced Technology Assessment System; coordination and harmonization of activities of the United Nations system in science and technology for development; and information services to facilitate access by developing countries to information on science and technology.

The Intergovernmental Committee, at its April/May session,(3) requested the Centre, in cooperation with other United Nations bodies, to prepare a comprehensive study on the utilization and marketing of energy technologies, focusing on policy issues and options for an effective transfer and application of environmentally sound technologies, and to report to it in 1993. The Committee also requested the Executive Director of the Centre, in cooperation with other relevant bodies, to advise countries, in particular developing countries, in environmental impact assessment and development of environmentally sound technologies, in both the public and private sectors. The Centre was to take steps towards the full implementation of the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and endorsed by the General Assembly in 1990.(8) The Intergovernmental Committee urged the Centre to continue to pursue actively the involvement of the private sector in endogenous capacity-building projects and to support and participate in programmes of research and development of technology in the least developed countries. The Centre was asked to organize workshops and other activities to explore the methodologies for and organization of technology monitoring, assessment and forecasting.

Coordination in the UN system

ACC Task Force

The Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, established by ACC to promote closer cooperation among United Nations bodies, held its twelfth session in New York (6-8 February).(9) It focused on how to transfer effectively environmentally sound technologies to developing countries and how to ensure their participation in research and development of such technologies; progress on endogenous capacity-building projects and inter-agency missions; and new and emerging areas of science and technology, especially biotechnology. The Task Force decided to continue its endogenous capacity-building projects and to integrate inter-agency missions as an element in those projects. It suggested that the Intergovernmental Committee take up two topics as possible themes for its next session: management of technology in support of least developed and small developing countries; and the conversion of military technologies for civilian use.

Technology transfer

UNCTAD activities. The activities of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in the field of technology transfer were channelled mostly through the Advisory Service on Transfer of Technology (ASTT). Priority attention was devoted to strengthening the technological capacities of developing countries, with special emphasis on the least developed countries, giving priority to activities in the field of human resource development, and to assisting and strengthening research and development institutions as a means of promoting technological innovation.<sup>(1)</sup>

In a report of January 1991<sup>(2)</sup> to the Trade and Development Board, the UNCTAD secretariat stated that there was a need to accelerate technology transfer and development in order to increase the skill and knowledge base upon which environmentally sound production decisions were made. There had been growth in the flow of capital goods and foreign direct investment to a limited number of countries in developing Asia in the second half of the 1980s, but only modest growth in the majority of developing countries, compared to the first half of the decade. There was a strong possibility that the industrial and technological polarization between developed and developing countries, as well as among developing countries themselves, would increase. The completion of the single European Economic Community (EEC) market in 1992 would affect the transfer of and investment in technology; in the short to medium term, it would do so chiefly by diverting investment and technology flows from countries exporting manufactures to EEC.

At its eighth session (Geneva, 22-30 April 1991), the UNCTAD Committee on Transfer of Technology adopted a resolution,<sup>(3)</sup> in which it requested the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare a comprehensive study on the interrelationships among technology, trade, services, availability of financial resources and investment at the global level, particularly in so far as the trade and development prospects of developing countries were concerned. That study should take into account all major developments in the world economy having implications for the transfer of technology to developing countries. The Committee recommended that ASTT give priority to human resource development; identify developing countries' needs in the area of transfer and development of technology and innovation, including new and advanced technologies; and assist those countries in strengthening their capacity for evaluation, selection and acquisition of technology.

Draft code of conduct

In response to a General Assembly resolution of 1990,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNCTAD Secretary-General reported on the outcome of consultations held in April 1991 on the draft international code of conduct on the transfer of technology.<sup>(5)</sup> He stated that the consultations had been the most intensive and cooperative that had been held since suspension of the code negotiations in 1985. For the first time, there had been general agreement in principle on the need to resume negotiations on the draft code on the basis of a fresh approach. Despite that, a positive outcome had not been secured, mainly because of differences between developing and developed countries on the treatment of restrictive practices in transfer of technology transactions.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General warned that the prospects for agreement might become dimmer unless the favourable momentum created at the consultations could be sustained and possibly concretized in an agreement on the terms of reference for an intergovernmental group of experts to draw up recommendations on a fresh approach to the concept of a code. He suggested the following options that Governments might consider in order to further the negotiations: the General Assembly could convene the proposed intergovernmental group of experts on the basis of the draft terms of reference, annexed to the report; or the Assembly could refer the whole matter, including the completion of the formulation of the terms of reference and the possible convening of a group of experts, to the eighth (1992) session of UNCTAD for appropriate action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 46/214 without vote.

International code of conduct on the transfer of technology

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/204 of 21 December 1990, on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the consultations carried out in 1991 on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology;

2. Decides to transmit that report to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its eighth session;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the outcome of the consideration of the report by the Conference at its eighth session.

Chapter VIII

Environment

In 1991, the interdependency of environment and development and the global scale of the issue was highlighted by the United Nations as it continued to prepare for the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED). The Preparatory Committee for UNCED held two sessions during the year, while several other forums were also involved in the preparations.

Meanwhile, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) continued to monitor the environment and encourage and coordinate sound environmental practices. Together with the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank, UNEP became the implementing agency for the Global Environment Facility, a new pilot financing operation established to assist developing countries meet specific challenges to the environment in a way that would bring global benefits.

General aspects

Environment and development

Preparations for the 1992 conference

In 1989,<sup>(1)</sup> the General Assembly decided to convene in 1992 a United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and to establish a preparatory committee for the Conference, open to all Member States of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies. The Preparatory Committee held its first session in 1990 and two sessions in 1991 (Geneva, 18 March-5 April; 12 August-4 September).<sup>(2)</sup> Three working groups met in conjunction with the Committee: working group I on the protection of the atmosphere, land resources, conservation of biological diversity and environmentally sound management of biotechnology; II on the protection of the oceans and freshwater resources and the environmentally sound management of wastes and of toxic chemicals, as well as the prevention of illegal international traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes; and III on legal, institutional and related matters.

At its second session, the Committee discussed the preparatory activities of the Conference secretariat; recent actions of intergovernmental and other bodies of relevance to the preparatory process; and cross-sectoral issues. The issues included poverty and environmental degradation, environment and development, financial resources, transfer of technology, environmental health aspects of development, and environmental and development education and public awareness. The Committee adopted decisions on such matters as the participation of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in its sessions, cross-sectoral issues, indigenous people and local communities, climate change, biological diversity, environmentally sound management of biotechnology, protection and management of land resources, combating deforestation, environmentally sound management of hazardous wastes, protection of oceans and freshwater resources.

At its third session, the Committee discussed Agenda 21, proposals for action in all major areas affecting the relationship between the environment and the economy. It requested the UNCED Secretary-General to integrate the needs of developing countries into all Agenda 21 programme documents. It decided that Agenda 21 should take into account the provision of new financial resources required by developing countries; the transfer of technology to them; differentiation of actions to be taken by developed countries, developing countries and international organizations; and recognition of the social, economic and developmental needs of developing countries. It also decided that Agenda 21 should include a heading entitled "Means of implementation", which would cover financing and cost evaluation, scientific and technological means, human resources development, and building the capacity of developing countries for action in the area of environment protection and promotion of development.

The Committee adopted decisions on other environment and development questions, including human settlements, women, youth, forests, desertification and drought, a survey of existing agreements and instruments, and the prevention and settlement of environmental disputes. It adopted a provisional agenda for its fourth session in 1992.

The UNEP Governing Council decided at its sixteenth session (Nairobi, Kenya, 20-31 May 1991) that its seventeenth session would focus on follow-up actions to UNCED.<sup>(3)</sup> It suggested that the UNCED Preparatory Committee consider the feasibility of linking existing environmental databases with new systems for collection of development data generated by the Conference.

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1991/84, invited Governments to engage in the preparatory process leading up to the International Conference on Water and the Environment in 1992 and to UNCED. By decision 1991/305, the Council transmitted the resolution to the UNCED Preparatory Committee at its third session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 46/168.

Decides to extend the validity and use of the Voluntary Fund established by its resolution 44/228 of 22 December 1989 in order to assist developing countries in participating fully and effectively in the Conference, requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the necessary resources to ensure the full participation of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, in the Conference and its subsidiary organs, and urges Governments to contribute urgently and generously to the Voluntary Fund in order to achieve that goal;

12. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session an item entitled "Report of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development", and, in this regard, requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session the report on the Conference.

On 4 October,(4) the Trade and Development Board-the executive body of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD)-adopted a resolution stressing the importance of the contribution of UNCTAD to the preparatory process of UNCED and to its follow-up. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to study the impact on trade, particularly that of developing countries, of environmental measures. It agreed that the transfer and development of environmentally sound technologies were essential components of sustainable development, and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to suggest modalities to support the efforts of developing countries in respect of access to, transfer of and creation and development of such technologies. It further requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to provide technical assistance to developing countries, in particular the least developed, on environmental issues.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 46/208.

Environment and international trade

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/210 of 21 December 1990, on environment and international trade,

Welcoming Trade and Development Board resolution 393(XXXVIII) of 4 October 1991, on the contribution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, within its mandate, to sustainable development, in which the Board, inter alia, reaffirmed the importance of an integrated perspective of environment and development in order to tackle successfully the root causes of underdevelopment and environmental degradation and achieve the objective of sustainable development in all countries,

1. welcomes the efforts of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to integrate increasingly the concept of sustainable development in its ongoing work, and encourages the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to pursue that process;

2. Stresses the importance of the contribution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, within its mandate, to the preparatory process for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and to the follow-up to that Conference;

3. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to take the necessary action to pursue and expedite, where appropriate, the studies and other work requested in paragraph 7 of Trade and Development Board resolution 393(XXXVIII), taking into account what is being done by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in this area, so that they may in addition contribute effectively, within the mandate of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to the preparatory process for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and its follow-up.

General Assembly resolution 46/208

20 December 1991 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/46/645/Add.2) without vote, 4 December (meeting 55); draft by Vice-Chairmen (A/C.2/46/L.95), based on informal consultations on draft by Ghana for Group of 77 (A/C.2/46/L.52); agenda item 77 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 2nd Committee 41, 45, 51, 55; plenary 79.

Environmental perspective

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1989 General Assembly resolution,(5) submitted a report to the Assembly in April 1991(6) regarding the implementation of resolutions it adopted in 1987 on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond(7) and on the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development.(8) The Secretary-General reported on a number of developments, including action at the national level and by the United Nations system, bilateral and multilateral development cooperation, and international cooperation on global environmental concerns. He concluded that a feature of the progress made in implementing the resolutions was the high political profile of environmental issues and an upsurge in awareness-raising and consensus-building on environmental priorities and their relationship to development.

Commitment at the policy level by Governments and organizations and various approaches to translate that commitment into needed procedures, methods, institutional arrangements, finance, training, technical cooperation and other instruments had gradually appeared, he said. However, experience in dealing effectively with the challenge of environmentally sound and sustainable development was still in a formative stage.

In May,(9) the UNEP Governing Council took note of the Secretary-General's report and transmitted it to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, and to the UNCED Preparatory Committee.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/313, and the Assembly, by decision 46/463, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

International conventions

The UNEP Executive Director reported in March(10) on the progress made in the preparation of an international legal instrument on biological diversity. He stated that the second session of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts on Biological Diversity (Nairobi, 25 February-6 March) had revised and adopted its rules of procedure, elected its Bureau and decided that two sub-working groups should be established: sub-working group I would deal with general issues such as fundamental principles, general obligations, conservation measures and the relationship with other legal instruments; sub-working group II would consider issues of access to biodiversity and related technologies.

In May,(11) the UNEP Governing Council, having considered the report of the Executive Director, decided to rename the Ad Hoc Working Group the "Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for a Convention on Biological Diversity"; it affirmed that the change of name did not mean a new negotiating body or affect the continuity of the process of elaborating the convention.

The Governing Council also took note in May of a December 1990 report(12) of the Executive Director on international conventions and protocols in the area of the environment. His report listed new conventions and changes in the status of existing ones. The Council(13) authorized the Executive Director to transmit the report to the General Assembly. It requested him to make it available, together with the Register of International Treaties and Other Agreements in the Field of the Environment,(14) to the UNCED Preparatory Committee and called on him to cooperate with the Committee in reviewing the effectiveness of the conventions. The Council also called on States that had not done so to sign, ratify and implement the existing conventions and protocols.

In December, by decision 46/463, the General Assembly took note of a note by the Secretary-General transmitting the Executive Director's report.(15)

Climate change convention

In 1990,(16) the General Assembly had established an Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for the preparation of a framework convention on climate change prior to UNCED in 1992.

The UNEP Governing Council adopted a decision in May 1991 on climate change,(17) which covered the protection of global climate, the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee, the UNEP/World Meteorological Organization (WMO) Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, and the World Climate Programme.

The Secretary-General reported in October 1991(18) that the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee had held three sessions (Washington, D.C., 4-14 February;(19) Geneva, 19-28 June(20) and 9-20 September(21). He noted the participation by States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, financial support for the participation of developing countries, the progress of work, relations with the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, and secretariat arrangements and their funding.

A fourth session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee was held at Geneva from 9 to 20 December.(22)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 46/169.

Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/53 of 6 December 1988 and 44/207 of 22 December 1989, in which it recognized climate change as a common concern of mankind, and resolution 45/212 of 21 December 1990, by which it established a single intergovernmental negotiating process for the preparation of a framework convention on climate change,

Reiterating the objective that an effective framework convention, containing appropriate commitments, and any related legal instruments as might be agreed upon should be completed Prior to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and opened for signature during the Conference in June 1992,

United Nations Conference on Environment and Development of the report of the Chairman of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee on possible future steps in the field of climate change;

5. Also notes with appreciation the contributions made to the special voluntary fund, established in accordance with paragraph 10 of its resolution 45/21.2 to ensure that developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, as well as small island developing countries, are able to participate fully and effectively in the negotiating process, and invites present and potential contributors to provide the additional and timely funding needed to ensure adequate support for the participation of developing countries in the negotiating process in 1992;

6. Further notes with appreciation the initial contributions made to the trust fund for the negotiating process, established in accordance with paragraph 20 of its resolution 45/212, and invites present and new contributors to provide additional funding in 1992;

8. Reiterates its request to the Chairman of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee, on behalf of the Committee, to submit a report to the 'United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992 on the outcome of the negotiations, as well as on possible future steps in the field of climate change;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the outcome of the negotiations on the framework convention on climate change and the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution and on possible future requirements in relation to climate change;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind".

World Environment Academy

In a March report,(23) the UNEP Executive Director provided information on activities carried out by UNEP in connection with the possibility of establishing a World Environment Academy. The report also contained a description of the possible objectives, nature, structure, location and cost of such an Academy.

The Governing Council, in May,(24) stated that it realized that the establishment of the Academy should be considered within the context of the discussion on legal and institutional issues that was taking place in the UNCED Preparatory Committee. It requested the Executive Director to bring the matter to the attention of the Committee.

Environmental activities

Environmental monitoring and assessment

Earthwatch, the environmental assessment arm of UNEP, was composed of three units-the Global Environmental Monitoring System (GEMS), the International Environmental Information System (INFOTERRA) and the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (IRPTC). Earthwatch shared activities among those units and exchanged data between them.

Global Environmental Monitoring System

The GEMS mandate called for coordinating the collection of data at the global, regional and national levels and making that information available to those responsible for managing the environment and natural resources. There were seven interrelated monitoring areas within GEMS: renewable resources, climate, health, long-range transboundary pollution, integrated monitoring (simultaneous monitoring of pollutants and ecosystems), oceans and the Global Resource Information Database (GRID).

Environmental contaminants affected humans via air, water or food and through dermal contact. To estimate the total exposure to those pollutants, an integrated approach was applied in Human Exposure Assessment Locations (HEALS) which measured actual human exposure rather than ambient pollutant concentrations. Reports on HEALS pilot phase studies conducted in seven countries (Brazil, China, India, Japan, Sweden, United States and Yugoslavia) and covering nitrogen oxides, lead, cadmium and organic chemicals were distributed in 1991.

The GEMS/AIR programme analysed the effects of urban air pollutants on human health. During 1991, data from participating cities up to 1990 were collected and analysed. A synoptic report based on data for 10 cities (Bangkok, Beijing, Bombay, London, São Paulo, Shanghai, Tehran, Tokyo, Wrocław and Zagreb) was prepared.

The WHO/UNEP GEMS/WATER programme, which started in 1990, continued in 1991. The second session of the GEMS/WATER steering committee was held (Geneva, February). A UNEP/WMO/WHO consultation on information needs for water quality assessment and management was held (Bratislava, August). A regional workshop for countries that recently joined the programme was conducted (Rostov-on-Don, October).

INFOTERRA

By 1991, INFOTERRA, UNEP's environmental information system, had grown to a network of 140 countries. During the year, over 21,500 users from more than 95 countries made use of the network's information services. Its network of sources and databases was revamped, and a revised third edition of the INFOTERRA Thesaurus of Environmental Terms was published.

The INFOTERRA Advisory Committee held its fifth meeting (London, May), making recommendations for the further development of the network. Several countries (Botswana, Ghana, Togo and Zimbabwe) held national INFOTERRA seminars which brought together sources and potential users of the network.

Four new Special Sectoral Sources joined the network, bringing the total to 32. They were the Monitoring and Assessment Research Centre (for environmental data); the World Conservation Monitoring Centre (for biological diversity); the WHO Division of Environmental Health (for environmental health); and the Global Centre for Environmental Research (for global changes).

1991 state of the world environment

The 1991 state of the world environment report(1) discussed developments in the socio-economic environment, environmental quality, biological diversity, shared water resources and the marine environment. Air pollution continued to be a major environmental problem in most countries. Although levels of sulphur dioxide, suspended particulate matter, nitrogen oxides and carbon monoxide emissions declined or at least stabilized in many urban areas, about half of the population of urban areas worldwide were still exposed to unhealthy levels of sulphur dioxide and to excessive levels of particulates. Acidic deposition continued to be a major international environmental issue, threatening fisheries, agriculture and wildlife; it had been implicated as one of the reasons for the extensive dieback of forests in Europe. Studies in a number of countries had shown that the rate of deforestation was higher than previously estimated. New estimates indicated that global tropical deforestation was in the range of 14 million to 20 million hectares per year. More than 60 countries had decided to prepare national forestry action plans to guide management of their forests.

Further progress had been made to protect stratospheric ozone from depletion. The 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer,(2) which came into force on 1 January 1989, had been strengthened. At a 1990 meeting in London, the parties agreed that controlled chlorofluorocarbons should be phased out by 2000 with intermediate cuts of 50 per cent by 1995 and 85 per cent by 1997. Halons and carbon tetrachloride were also to be phased out by 2000.

The goals set by the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990)—to provide all people with clean water supplies and adequate sanitation facilities by 1990—were not achieved. There were still some 1.2 billion people without access to safe, clean water and 1.8 billion without appropriate sanitation.

As to biological diversity, experts had concluded that 25 per cent of the Earth's total biological diversity was at serious risk of extinction during the next 20 to 30 years.

On 31 May,(3) the Governing Council called the attention of Governments to the report. It requested the Executive Director to continue to accord high priority to the negotiation of a convention on biological diversity, to accelerate activities related to the environmentally sound management of shared water resources, to develop measures facilitating improved protection of ocean and coastal resources, and to address the serious, growing problem of land-based sources of marine pollution.

Harmonization of environmental measurement

On 31 May,(4) the Governing Council noted the establishment of the Office for Harmonization of Environmental Measurement at Munich, Germany. It further noted that apart from the voluntary contributions of Germany no other financial contribution had been forthcoming, and that without such contributions the project would have to be terminated. It requested the Executive Director to continue contacting Governments to seek support for the project. It also requested the Office to continue to conduct its activities in close cooperation with the competent United Nations agencies.

Emerging environmental issues

In February,(5) the Executive Director submitted a report on emerging environmental issues, focusing on the issue of new technologies and also giving a brief description of the issues of municipal waste, plastics and the ecological situation in the Arctic.

On 31 May,(6) the Governing Council took note of the report and requested the Executive Director to review the issue of new technologies and to report in 1993 on reuse of waste-water, volatile organic compounds in air and tropospheric ozone.

Protection against harmful products and wastes

In accordance with a 1989 resolution of the General Assembly,(7) the Secretary-General submitted a June report(8) on traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes, protection against products harmful to health and the environment, and control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal.

The UNEP Executive Director had established an Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts to develop elements which might be included in a protocol on liability and compensation for damage resulting from the transboundary movement and disposal of hazardous and other wastes. The Working Group held its second session at Nairobi, Kenya (6-9 March 1991), with the participation of experts from 61 countries, and agreed upon a set of elements which might be included in a protocol on liability and compensation for damage resulting from the transboundary movement and disposal of hazardous and other wastes.

The Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Global Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes (Basel Conference), convened by the UNEP Executive Director in 1989, had adopted the Basel Convention. By the end of April 1991, 53 countries had signed the Basel Convention and 10 had ratified, approved or acceded to it.

On 31 May,(9) the Governing Council adopted a decision requesting the UNEP Executive Director to prepare draft elements of an action programme for environmentally sound management of hazardous waste and urging Governments that had not yet adhered to the Basel Convention to do so.

By decision 1991/313, adopted on 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report, as did the General Assembly by decision 46/463 of 20 December.

Also in May,(10) the Council took note of an updated report of the Executive Director(11) on the list of selected environmentally harmful chemical substances, processes and phenomena of global significance. The Council requested the Executive Director to refer the report to Governments, relevant intergovernmental and international organizations, industry and NGOs; to obtain their comments on the report; and to review the use made of the list.

In a decision on toxic chemicals,(12) the Council urged Governments that had not yet done so to designate national authorities for the implementation of the amended London Guidelines, which it had adopted in 1989.(13) It recommended that UNEP continue developing model national legislation to assist in the implementation of the Guidelines. The Executive Director was requested to invite the various private-sector parties involved in the international trade in chemicals to enter into commitments aimed at achieving the objectives of the Guidelines and to prepare a code of ethics on the international trade in chemicals.

Environmental emergencies

In May 1991,(14) the Executive Director transmitted a report of the Secretary-General on monitoring, assessing and anticipating environmental emergencies. Prepared in response to a 1989 request of the General Assembly,(15) the report described the mandate of Earthwatch since 1972 and current monitoring, assessment and early-warning activities within and outside the United Nations system, the role of UNEP, issues to be addressed as potential threats, and the views of Governments.

The report concluded that Earthwatch should be at the interface between environment and development at the global level, providing the bridge between science, policy and action. It should be the mechanism by which development was determined to be sustainable or not. It should define the limits to certain kinds of human activity on the planet, and issue warnings when those limits were approached or exceeded. The report defined four principal outputs or reports that Earthwatch should provide: reviews of basic monitoring/assessment requirements, assessment reports, warnings of environmental threats, and policy responses and management options.

The report recommended the strengthening of inter-agency cooperation and of monitoring and assessment. It stated that United Nations specialized agencies, other United Nations organizations and non-governmental international bodies often did not have sufficient resources to carry out their basic monitoring and assessment responsibilities effectively. If Governments wished to develop the existing Earthwatch operated by UNEP into a strong and effective system, it was essential that additional resources be made available. An estimate of the annual costs was about $200 million.

On 31 May,(16) the Governing Council took note of the Secretary-General's report. It recommended that Earthwatch should identify global and regional environmental monitoring and as-assessment needs; coordinate and harmonize monitoring and assessment programmes; prepare comprehensive assessment statements, inventories and analytical statements; warn of emerging environmental threats; advise of causal relationships of observed environmental changes; and suggest policy responses and management options where necessary. The Council further recommended that Earthwatch should pay particular attention to the interface between environment and development and it requested the Executive Director to continue to strengthen the environmental monitoring and assessment capacities of developing countries.

The subject of early warning and forecasting of environmental emergencies was dealt with in a March report of the UNEP Executive Director.<sup>(17)</sup> The report considered the role of the Governing Council in strengthening international legal instruments in the area of the environment as well as in the resolution of environmental conflicts, and the establishment of a United Nations centre for urgent environmental assistance and of a corps of volunteers, or Green Brigade, for the environment.

On 31 May,<sup>(18)</sup> the Governing Council endorsed the Executive Director's proposal to proceed on an experimental basis with the development of a United Nations centre for urgent environmental assistance. The centre would act in cooperation with other United Nations agencies and focus on the assessment of and responses to man-made environmental emergencies. The mechanism would act upon the request of the Governments concerned and maintain rosters of experts and a list of appropriate equipment to be used in such emergencies. The Council decided to establish the centre at the beginning of 1992 for a period of 18 months.

Also on 31 May,<sup>(19)</sup> the Council took note of reports of the Executive Director on hazardous environmental events, including the 1989 Alaska oil spill<sup>(20)</sup> and the environmental implications of the armed conflict between Iraq and Kuwait.<sup>(21)</sup> The Council requested the Executive Director to bring to the attention of Governments the events described in the reports, to prepare a scientific report on the environmental effects of the Iraq/Kuwait conflict, and to keep under review the long-term impacts of the Alaskan oil spill.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/217 without vote.

International cooperation in the monitoring, assessment and anticipation of environmental threats and in assistance in cases of environmental emergency

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 44/224 of 22 December 1989, on international cooperation in the monitoring, assessment and anticipation of environmental threats and in assistance in cases of environmental emergency,

Also reaffirming its resolution 44/228 of 22 December 1989, on the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Taking note of decision 16/37 of 31 May 1991 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, on early warning and forecasting of environmental emergencies, and decision 16/9 of 31 May 1991, on a United Nations centre for urgent environmental assistance, in which the Governing Council, inter alia, endorsed the proposal of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to proceed with the development of a United Nations centre for urgent environmental assistance and decided to establish such a centre on an experimental basis at the beginning of 1992 for a period of eighteen months,

Recognizing the importance of providing the centre for urgent environmental assistance, to be established on an experimental basis, with information on expertise and appropriate equipment that could be utilized for dealing with environmental emergencies,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the monitoring, assessment and anticipation of environmental emergencies and relevant parts of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its sixteenth session,

1. Stresses the need to strengthen international cooperation in the monitoring, assessment and anticipation of environmental threats and the rendering of assistance in cases of environmental emergency;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the monitoring, assessment and anticipation of environmental emergencies and invites the Secretary-General to convey it to the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

20 December 1991 Meeting 79 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/46/645/Add.6) without vote, 11 December (meeting 58); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/46/L.108), based on informal consultations on draft by Belarus, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Samoa, Trinidad and Tobago, Ukraine and USSR (A/C.2/46/L.88); agenda item 77 (e).

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 2nd Committee 51, 53-56; plenary 79.

Industrial accidents

In a January report,<sup>(22)</sup> the Executive Director considered industrial accidents and the development of the programme of awareness and preparedness for emergencies at the local level (APELL). The Governing Council, in 1989,<sup>(23)</sup> had requested him to set up a network of organizations and experts to exchange information and prevent industrial accidents that might have a negative impact on the environment.

On 31 May,<sup>(24)</sup> the Council called on Governments, the international community and world industry to continue to support the APELL process through financial contributions or technical assistance. Taking note of the progress made in identifying organizations and experts capable of providing information and assistance in the case of emergencies, the Council requested the Executive Director to continue to develop the APELL process as well as the exchange of technology for the prevention of industrial accidents and the provision of assistance in the case of emergencies.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1991/51, welcomed the measures taken in response to the Chernobyl nuclear power plant accident and invited Governments and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide cooperation to the areas affected by the accident.

Global climate

The UNEP Executive Director submitted a report in March(25) on the question of climate change. He reported that the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change met for its fifth plenary session in Geneva from 13 to 15 March 1991. The Panel established new working procedures and adopted its budget for the period 1991-1992. It set up task forces to address the following key issues: how to assess national net greenhouse gases, prediction of the regional distribution of climate change and associated impact studies, energy-related and forestry-related issues, vulnerability to sea-level rise, and emission scenarios.

A negotiating committee on a framework convention on climate change held its first meeting (Washington, D.C., 4-14 February 1991). The committee established two working groups to assist it in negotiating an international instrument to reduce global climate warming. Working Group I was to deal with commitments for reducing greenhouse gas emissions, additional financial resources to enable developing countries to fulfil their obligations under the convention, technology transfer, and the special needs of developing countries. Working Group II was to consider the legal and institutional mechanisms of preparing the convention.

On 31 May,(26) the Governing Council adopted a four-part decision on climate change-protection of global climate, the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for a Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, and the World Climate Programme. Under part one, it urged States to support actions aimed at the protection of the global climate for current and future generations.

Under part two, it requested the Executive Director to support the intergovernmental negotiating process and the secretariat of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee. Under part three, it urged Governments to strengthen their participation in the work carried out by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, urged Governments and organizations to increase their cash contributions to the Panel's Trust Fund, and requested the Executive Director to intensify cooperation between UNEP and the Panel in the area of climate change impact assessments, including case-studies on the vulnerability to sea-level rise of small island countries and low-lying coastal areas.

Under part four, the Council requested the Executive Director to resume responsibility for the World Climate Impact Assessment and Response Strategies Programme, to join WMO and other international agencies in the future development of the World Climate Programme, and to support research efforts and strengthen public information programmes.

In another development, UNEP held a seminar on methodologies for climate impact studies (Karimba, Zambia, 16-21 June) for 20 participants from southern Africa. It also supported several international conferences on global warming, including a conference at the University of Tsukuba (Japan) in January and a follow-up workshop to identify national research topics (Tsukuba, March).

Sea-level rise

Pursuant to a 1989 request of the General Assembly,(27) the Secretary-General submitted a report in April 1991,(28) on the possible adverse effects of sea-level rise on islands and coastal areas. The report covered global concerns and United Nations efforts at the regional and global levels. It stated that sea-level rise was a problem that would preoccupy the international community for a long time to come. It concluded that the impact of sea-level rise might become a decisive factor in the future social and economic development of affected areas; that coastal settlements and structures such as harbours and airports were specifically vulnerable; that more attention needed to be given to conservation of soil, groundwater, mangroves and coral reefs because they contributed to the resilience of the coastal environment; and that the direct rise in sea level and temperature will be highly site-specific. The report suggested that in-depth assessment of the potential impact of sea-level rise and expected climate changes be carried out.

The Secretary-General invited the Assembly to note the critical problems that would be created for many islands and low-lying coastal areas by sea-level rise, and said it might wish to urge the international community to develop special programmes of assistance to reduce their vulnerability.

On 31 May,(29) the Governing Council took note of the Secretary-General's report. The Council urged Governments, United Nations specialized agencies, particularly the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (IOC/UNESCO), and international organizations, as well as relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to participate in the activities of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and regional seas programme of UNEP. It requested that the regional seas programme facilitate the building by developing countries of their own capability to assess their vulnerability to sea-level rise and other potential impacts of climate change, identify appropriate response strategies and develop integrated coastal management plans in association with the Intergovernmental Panel.

By decision 1991/313, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report, as did the General Assembly by decision 46/463.

Atmosphere

The Working Party on Atmosphere of UNCED met at Geneva from 10 to 11 June 1991. UNEP participated in the discussions of the Working Party, which was charged with the finalization of papers covering transboundary air pollution, protection of the atmosphere—cross-sectoral issues, and options for Agenda 21.

Protection of the ozone layer

In 1991, UNEP continued work on implementing the decisions of the parties to the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer<sup>(30)</sup> and its Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer. As at the end of December 1991, 81 countries and EEC were parties to the Vienna Convention and 74 countries and EEC were parties to the Montreal Protocol. In 1991, the separate ozone secretariat became operational to implement the decisions of the parties.

Under the Vienna Convention, the first meeting of the ozone research managers of the parties to it was organized jointly by UNEP and WMO (Geneva, 13-15 March). National and global research needs and goals were discussed, including research related to health and to the environmental effects of ozone modification.

The Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal Experts on Non-Compliance with the Montreal Protocol held its second (Geneva, 8-10 April) and third (Geneva, 5-8 November) meetings. Non-compliance procedures were elaborated.

The Executive Committee of the Interim Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Montreal Protocol met five times in 1991.

The Second Meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Vienna Convention and the Third Meeting of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol were held (Nairobi, 17-19 June).

On 31 May,<sup>(31)</sup> the Governing Council noted that, as at 22 May, only $10,197,609, from a total of nine States, had been contributed to the Interim Multilateral Ozone Fund. The Council urged States that had not done so to ratify, accept or approve the Montreal Protocol and endorsed the efforts of the Executive Director to promote the establishment of the Interim Multilateral Ozone Fund and to implement the UNEP programme of work for the Executive Committee of the Fund.

Desertification and drought control

In a March report,<sup>(32)</sup> the Executive Director discussed implementation of the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (PACD),<sup>(33)</sup> including measures to enhance the work of the Inter-Agency Working Group on Desertification, and ways and means of enhancing the efficiency of the Consultative Group for Desertification Control (DESCON). He also examined the implementation of the Plan of Action in the Sudano-Sahelian region.

The Executive Director stated that desertification and deforestation currently affected more than 75 countries in dry regions. In the developing countries, poverty and related bad land-use practices were responsible for severe damage to fragile ecosystems. Similar damage in the developed countries was due to excessive applications of agrochemicals with detrimental side-effects on soil, water, air and human health. There was general agreement among the affected nations that the problems of land degradation and desertification required long-term international financial assistance. However, the major events during 1989-1990 militated against international commitments for aid in anti-desertification efforts.

As to the implementation of PACD, UNEP, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) agreed on a joint thematic programme for the biennium 1990-1991 for assistance to Bahrain, Oman, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen in the preparation of national plans of action to combat desertification. UNEP continued to assist other Governments that were at different stages in development of their respective action plans, namely, Argentina, Mongolia, Peru and Tunisia.

External evaluation of PACD

In an addendum<sup>(34)</sup> to his March 1991 report on implementation of the Plan of Action, the UNEP Executive Director transmitted the findings of an external evaluation of PACD. The evaluation considered the validity of the Plan's premises, the validity and feasibility of its recommendations, the mechanisms for its implementation and financing and the causes of the shortcomings in its implementation. It concluded that the main causes of the lack of implementation of the Plan were that both Governments and the donor community did not give it priority. Additionally, PACD was too ambitious for the resources available.

The evaluation criticized the Plan for its lack of focus and for omitting socio-economic factors associated with desertification that should be better understood by decision makers. Nevertheless, it concluded that the Plan was still a useful tool for experts and technicians involved in designing methods for combating desertification. There was an urgent need for the preparation of the revised version of PACD and its guidelines. The following issues should be emphasized: training in the methodologies of monitoring physical and social indicators of desertification, research to increase the accuracy and practicality of those methodologies, and assisting developing countries in developing systems for monitoring desertification.

Apart from political will, the keys to the successful implementation of the Plan were coordination between Governments, donors and the international community, and more efficient use of existing resources and new resources. Given the current concern for the environment, the time was ripe for such an initiative.

On 31 May,<sup>(35)</sup> the Governing Council adopted a five-part decision on desertification, covering the implementation of PACD, financing and other measures to support it, implementation of the Plan in the Sudano-Sahelian region, the external evaluation of the Plan, and the implementation of a 1989 General Assembly resolution on the Plan.<sup>(36)</sup>

Reports of the Secretary-General. During 1991, the Secretary-General submitted three reports on desertification. In April,<sup>(37)</sup> responding to a 1989 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(36)</sup> he presented a report on the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification. The report covered progress achieved, studies on financing anti-desertification programmes, the Special Account and Consultative Group for desertification control, and an evaluation of a UNEP/UNDP joint venture to support the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO).

On 26 July, in decision 1991/314, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report.

In July,<sup>(38)</sup> in accordance with a 1989 request of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(39)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on the situation of countries stricken by drought and desertification in Africa. He covered the drought situation, 1988-1990; desertification, 1989-1990; effects of recurrent drought and desertification; and initiatives relating to them. He concluded that in spite of the efforts being made, there had been no real success in overcoming drought and desertification problems. Progress would continue to be hampered unless strategic frameworks were integrated in the overall planning process. Much more coordination was necessary to avoid duplication, economize on scarce resources, ensure more efficient intervention and target appropriate objectives. Projects should be designed in close cooperation with target populations. To ensure effective participation, land ownership or guaranteed title to the products of the land must be secured and marketing and price mechanisms should be adjusted to ensure a fair return to the farmers. Desertification control and utilization of the resource base in a sustainable manner were a long-term process requiring very flexible approaches to project design. To accommodate growing pressure on the land, there should be an increasing focus on developing alternative and supplementary production systems that were environmentally sound.

In October,<sup>(40)</sup> the Secretary-General presented a report on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification in 1989-1990 and the activities of UNSO, 1989-1990.

UNEP activities. During 1991, UNEP entered into agreements with the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, ESCWA, UNDP, FAO, the Argentine Institute for the Study of Arid Zones, the Peruvian National Office for Natural Resources Evaluation and the Centre for International Projects, among others, to carry out activities in the implementation of PACD.

Under a two-year memorandum of understanding between ESCWA, FAO and UNEP, assistance was provided to Bahrain, Oman, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen to prepare national plans of action to combat desertification. The final draft of the Yemen national plan was published in Arabic in 1991.

The draft national plan for Mongolia was prepared with UNEP financial assistance through the Centre for International Projects in 1991.

UNEP organized training courses on various aspects of combating and controlling desertification. Training was conducted on a regional basis for a total of 79 specialists from developing countries.

Under the publications programme, the World Desertification Bibliography Database, containing 3,897 entries through 1988, was published in 1991. Issues 18 and 19 of the Desertification Control Bulletin were published in English.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted three resolutions related to control of drought and desertification. Resolution 1991/95 was adopted without vote.

Second phase of the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification of the International Fund for Agricultural Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1989/88 of 26 July 1989, in which it stressed the urgent need for substantial progress in stimulating food production in developing countries and the importance of increasing domestic food production for stimulating national economic growth and social progress in those countries and helping to resolve the problem of hunger and malnutrition in an effective way,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 45/207 of 21 December 1990, in which the Assembly urged the members of the international community to take further determined action in support of the efforts of developing countries by increasing even more the flow of resources, including concessional flows designated for agricultural development, and by increasing food aid commitments in support of the strengthened efforts of developing countries to increase mobilization and allocation of domestic resources to address food and agricultural problems, in addition to the flow of resources from developed countries, bearing in mind the need to channel this assistance through appropriate existing organizations and programmes,

Welcoming the recent appeal made by the Secretary-General in which he reminded all countries of the situation facing Africa and of the 30 million people in the continent threatened by famine,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, containing the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, in which the African countries and the international community undertook, inter alia, to devote priority attention and increased resources to reviving and developing food production and agriculture in Africa,

Recalling resolutions CM/Res.1060(XLIV), CM/Res.1119(XLVI) and CM/Res.1322(LIII) adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-fourth, forty-sixth and fifty-third ordinary sessions and endorsed by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, and resolution 721(XXVI) adopted by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, in which the Conference of Ministers appealed to the international donor community to increase the resources for the second phase of the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, with a view to achieving the target of $300 million necessary for a three-year period beginning in 1991,

Bearing in mind the mandate given to the President of the International Fund for Agricultural Development by the Governing Council of the Fund at its thirteenth session, to consult donors on the mobilization of additional resources so that the Social Programme could continue for a second phase, and the authorization given to the President and to the Executive Board of the Fund by the Governing Council at its fourteenth session to initiate activities for the implementation of the second phase of the Special Programme,

Also bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 45/207 on food and agricultural problems, in which the Assembly, inter alia, invited donors to endorse resolution 60/XIII of 25 January 1990 of the Governing Council of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, concerning the possibility of additional voluntary contributions to the Special Resources for Sub-Saharan Africa for a further three years, starting in January 1991, without prejudicing deliberations on the mobilization of core funding for the Fund,

Noting with satisfaction the positive contribution made by the Fund to the economic recovery programmes of its developing member States and the assistance provided by it to the African region in accordance with the provisions of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, in particular through the first phase of its Special Programme, in which the target of $300 million was reached and the funds thus mobilized were fully committed,

Concerned about the constant deterioration in socioeconomic conditions in Africa,

Greatly encouraged by formal statements made by a number of donors pledging contributions to the second phase of the Special Programme,

1. Welcomes the action taken by the International Fund for Agricultural Development under its Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification, which gives priority to improving food security through measures to preserve the environment and restore existing productive capacity and to ensuring that projects once completed will yield lasting benefits;

2. Stresses the urgent need for a steady, predictable and sustained flow of resources to Africa so as to promote rehabilitation and development, especially in agriculture, and to meet urgent needs in connection with drought control and economic reform;

3. Expresses its appreciation to countries which have already made firm pledges or have indicated their intention of making contributions to the second phase of the Special Programme, covering the period 1991-1993;

4. Invites donors to endorse resolution 60/XIII of the Governing Council of the International Fund for Agricultural Development concerning the possibility of additional voluntary contributions for the second phase of the Special Programme, without prejudicing the deliberations on the integration of the Special Programme into the general activities of the Fund.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/95

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/126) without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by Senegal for African States (E/1991/C.1/L.4), orally revised; agenda item 8(j).

On the same date, the Council adopted resolution 1991/96, also without vote.

Countries stricken by desertification and drought in; Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 39/208 of 17 December 1984, 40/175 of 17 December 1985 and 42/188 of 11 December 1987 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/44 of 21 July 1986,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 40/209 of 17 December 1985, by which the Assembly rationalized its consideration of desertification and drought issues,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 44/172 A of 19 December 1989 on the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Recalling that the General Assembly, in its resolution 44/228 of 22 December 1989, included protection and management of land resources by, inter alia combating deforestation, desertification and drought among environmental issues of major concern, and paid renewed attention to drought and desertification in its enunciation of the goals and objectives of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Deeply concerned about the dramatic effects of accelerating desertification, which have caused a substantial decline in agricultural output and served, in particular, to aggravate the current economic crisis in Africa,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on countries stricken by desertification and drought in Africa,

Taking note of the work of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on this question and of Governing Council decision 15/23 of 25 May 1989,

Noting the important contribution made by the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in helping the countries of the region to prepare for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and encouraging the Office to continue and intensify its efforts in that area,

Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office for having organized consultative meetings of the Sudano-Sahelian countries at Ouagadougou from 13 to 15 February 1991 and at Cairo from 8 to 10 July 1991, in preparation for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and for the detailed preparations it made for those meetings in the countries concerned with such partners as the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development,

Welcoming the results and resolutions of the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification in the countries of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Economic Community of West African States, in the Maghreb countries, in Egypt and in the Sudan (COMIDES), held at Dakar in July 1984 and November 1985 and at Algiers in October 1988,

Welcoming also the renewed efforts of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office aimed at increasing support for the countries and organizations concerned and at cooperating with them, in particular with the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development,

Aware of the efforts that are already being made in the African region, inter alia, to combat desertification and drought, and the commitments made at the consultative meeting of the Sudano-Sahelian countries held at Cairo in July 1991, organized by the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, and at the African Regional Conference on Environment and Sustainable Development, held at Kampala in June 1989,

Bearing in mind the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office,

Acknowledging that, in view of the scale and gravity of desertification and drought, programmes to combat those scourges require financial and human resources beyond the means of the countries concerned,

Noting with appreciation that the Sixteenth Regional Conference for Africa of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations endorsed an International Scheme for the Conservation and Rehabilitation of African Lands, with a view to giving to the countries of the region the means of developing their own programmes for the fight against land degradation, including desertification,

1. Reaffirms the need for sustained implementation of General Assembly resolution 44/172 A;

2. Recognizes the commendable, sustained efforts made by the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel to combat desertification and drought, and welcomes its fruitful cooperation with Governments and United Nations organs and bodies;

3. Appeals urgently to the international community, particularly donor countries, to continue to support the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development and the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification in the countries of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, and the Economic Community of West African States, in the Maghreb countries, in Egypt and in the Sudan (COMIDES);

4. Welcomes with satisfaction the progress made by the International Fund for Agricultural Development through its Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification;

5. Stresses the fundamental importance of South-South cooperation in executing programmes to combat desertification and drought and of the support of the international community that is necessary for such cooperation;

6. Recalls with satisfaction the interest expressed at the Summit of the seven major industrialized countries, held in Paris from 14 to 16 July 1989, in aspects of the struggle against desertification and, specifically, in the planned observatory for the Sahara and the Sahel;

7. Notes with appreciation the solidarity with which the international community has responded to the assistance needs resulting from the emergency in Africa, particularly with regard to food aid, emergency medical assistance and the fight against grasshoppers and locusts;

8. Recommends that, within the framework of bilateral and multilateral development assistance programmes, the fight against desertification and drought should be given priority attention in keeping with the scope of those problems;

9. Invites the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office to increase its efforts to mobilize additional resources in support of efforts of the countries within its purview and of the relevant regional organizations, notably the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development;

10. Urges the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office to continue to help the Sudano-Sahelian countries to prepare for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and the follow-up activities resulting therefrom;

11. Invites the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to continue to provide the countries of the region with all the technical assistance required to implement the recommendations of the International Scheme for the Conservation and Rehabilitation of African Lands, and invites the international community to support the Scheme and initiatives within the framework of the implementation of national programmes for the control of desertification and drought and to support the recommendations of the Conference on Agriculture and the Environment, organized by the Government of the Netherlands and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at 's-Hertogenbosch, the Netherlands, from 15 to 19 April 1991;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to place greater emphasis, in the World Economic Survey, on the situation and prospects of all countries stricken by desertification and drought;

13. Further requests the Secretary-General, given the urgency of the situation of the countries stricken by desertification and drought, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the countries concerned, taking into account the work being done on the subject in the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and to put forward specific, coordinated proposals for action, with due regard for the results of the third session of the Preparatory Committee of relevance to the issue.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/96

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/126) without vote, 24 July (meeting 161; draft by Vice-Chairman (E/1991/C.1/L.16), based on informal consultations on draft by Senegal for African States, Australia, France, Pakistan and Viet Nam (E/1991/C.1/L.9); agenda item 8(j).

Also on 26 July, the Council adopted resolution 1991/97 without vote.

Combating aridity, soil erosion, salinity, water-logging, desertification and the effects of drought in South Asia

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/172 A of 19 December 1989, in which the imperative need to address desertification in the framework of the interdependence of nations was stressed,

Aware that South Asia, one of the most populous regions in the world, contains significant areas subject to aridity, soil erosion, salinity, water-logging, desertification and the effects of drought, which affect the lives of millions of people and the entire environment of the region,

Bearing in mind the work already undertaken on desertification and drought in South Asia by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and other agencies,

Noting that no comprehensive assessment has been made of this problem in the region,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in close collaboration with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on

Environment and Development and other international and national development assistance organizations, to undertake a study, within existing resources, to assess the extent of this problem and its effects on the peoples of the region, and to provide a framework for national and international cooperative efforts, through appropriate existing organizations of the United Nations system, donor and international development institutions and national organizations and programmes, to tackle this problem in its physical and human dimension, and to submit the study to the Economic and Social Council in 1992;

2. Appeals to the international community to provide expertise and assistance to further national efforts, in the South Asian countries concerned, to take concrete action to ameliorate the situation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/97

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/126) without vote, 24 July (meeting 18); draft by Vice-Chairman (E/1991/C.1/L.20), based on informal consultations on 27-nation draft (E/1991/C.1/L.10); agenda item 8 (j).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 46/161.

Combating desertification and drought

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/172 of 19 December 1977, by which it approved the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, and all its subsequent resolutions on the subject,

Recalling also its resolutions 44/228 of 22 December 1989, on the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and 45/212 of 21 December 1990, on protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind, as well as its decision 44/437 of 19 December 1989, on countries stricken by desertification and drought,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 44/172 A and B of 19 December 1989, concerning the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, in which the General Assembly invited the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, through its Preparatory Committee, to accord high priority to desertification control;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification in 1989-1990, including its implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region, and requests the Secretary-General to forward that report, as well as the report requested by the Assembly in paragraph 7 of its resolution 44/172 A, to the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development at its fourth session;

3. Endorses decisions 16/22 A to E of 31 May 1991 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and decision 91/41 of 25 June 1991 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme;

4. Also endorses decision 3/16 of 4 September 1991 of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, in which the Committee requested the Secretary-General of the Conference to submit to the Committee at its fourth session a report on the financial, technical and institutional needs to implement effectively and efficiently the decisions of the Conference regarding desertification control;

5. Welcomes the priority that will be given to the consideration of desertification by the Preparatory Committee at its fourth session;

6. Welcomes the efforts to combat desertification and drought undertaken by African subregional organizations, such as the Permanent Inter-State Committee for Drought Control in the Sahel, the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development, the Southern African Development Coordination Conference, the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification and the Arab Maghreb Union, and the setting up of the Sahel and Sahara observatory;

7. Also Welcomes the continued and substantial technical and financial assistance by the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office to the countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region at the national and regional level in their preparations for the Conference, and encourages the Office to continue and intensify its assistance in that area;

8. Invites the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, within the framework of United Nations Development Programme round tables and/or the World Bank consultative group, to assist the Governments of the countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region in organizing sectoral/thematic round tables in order to mobilize adequate resources for the protection and sound management of natural resources to arrest and reverse the process of desertification;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in light of the decisions of the Conference regarding desertification and drought, to highlight any requirements necessary to implement those decisions in a report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

19 December 1991 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/46/645/Add.7) without vote, 10 December (meeting 57); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/46/L.109) based on informal consultations on draft by Benin, Central African Republic, France, Germany, Kenya and Mauritania (A/C.2/46/L.81); agenda item 77 (f). Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 2nd Committee 53, 57; plenary 78.

Also on 19 December, by decision 46/440, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on the situation of African countries stricken by drought and desertification.<sup>(38)</sup>

Marine ecosystems

In May,<sup>(41)</sup> the UNEP Executive Director submitted the draft highlights and table of contents of a report on strategies for the protection and development of the oceans and coastal areas, commissioned by UNEP and IOC/UNESCO. Once completed, the document was to provide the basis for common strategies of IOC and UNEP in dealing with marine and coastal affairs, and thus strengthen their capacity to respond in a more coherent way to environmental problems.

The table of contents was to cover the strategies for the protection and development of the oceans and coastal areas; the main problems, their causes and possible remedies; coastal and near shore zone management for sustainable development; management of open oceans; response to environmental emergencies; input from science; education and public awareness; strengthening of national institutions; NGOs; business and trade communities and financial institutions; international cooperation; economic and funding considerations; and institutional and financial arrangements for the implementation of proposed strategies.

The highlights considered the importance of the oceans, coastal areas and their resources, as well as problems, causes and remedies.

On 31 May <sup>(42)</sup> the Governing Council welcomed the continuing cooperation between UNEP and IOC, approved their completion of the strategy document, and requested the UNEP Executive Director to arrange for the completed document to be submitted to the next regular session of the Council and to the UNCED Preparatory Committee.

UNEP activities. In 1991, the Oceans and Coastal Areas Programme Activity Centre of UNEP continued to strengthen its Regional Seas Programme. UNEP participated in the organization of the Intergovernmental Meeting on Land-Based Sources of Marine Pollution (Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada, 6-10 May). On 19 and 20 December, UNEP met with IOC in Paris to amend the draft strategy for the development and protection of oceans and coastal areas and then forwarded it to UNCED.

Living marine resources

Drift-net fishing

In response to a 1990 resolution of the General Assembly,<sup>(43)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report in November<sup>(44)</sup> on large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas.

The Secretary-General had sent a note verbale to all members of the international community, drawing attention to the Assembly's proposed restrictions on large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing. Letters had also been addressed to the intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and scientific institutions with expertise in living marine resources.

Based in part on replies received, the report described activities of intergovernmental organizations and reviewed the extent of large-scale pelagic drift-net fisheries by regions of the world's oceans and species.

By decision 46/463 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/215 without vote.

Large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/225 and 45/197, concerning large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas, including enclosed and semi-enclosed seas, which took into account the concerns of the developing countries and were adopted by consensus on 22 December 1989 and 21 December 1990, respectively,

Also recalling, in particular, that the General Assembly recommended that all members of the international community agree to certain measures specified in the operative paragraphs of resolution 44/225,

Further recalling the relevant principles elaborated in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, which are referred to in the seventh to tenth preambular paragraphs of resolution 44/225,

Expressing deep concern about reports of expansion of large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing activities on the high seas in contravention of resolutions 44/225 and 45/197, including attempts to expand large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing in the high seas areas of the Indian Ocean,

Commending the unilateral, regional and international efforts that have been undertaken by members of the international community and international organizations to implement and support the objectives of resolutions 44/225 and 45/197,

Noting that at the Twenty-second South Pacific Forum, held at Palikir on 29 and 30 July 1991, the heads of Government reaffirmed their opposition to large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing, and in this regard, inter alia, welcomed the entry into force on 17 May 1991 of the Convention for the Prohibition of Fishing with Long Drift-nets in the South Pacific,

Recalling the Castries Declaration, in which the Authority of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States resolved to establish a regional regime for the regulation and management of the pelagic resources in the Lesser Antilles region that would outlaw the use of drift-nets and called upon other States in the region to cooperate in this regard.

Welcoming the actions taken that have resulted in the cessation of all large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing activities in the South Pacific in advance of the date stipulated in paragraph 4 (b) of resolution 44/225 for the termination of such activities,

Also welcoming the decision of other members of the international community to cease large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing on the high seas,

Commending the efforts of many members of the international community to compile data on large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing and to submit their findings to the Secretary-General:

Noting the contributions to the report of the Secretary-General made by some members of the international community and by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Noting also the significant concerns expressed by members of the international community and competent regional fisheries bodies regarding the impact of large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing on the marine environment.

Noting further that, in accordance with paragraph 3 of resolution 44/225, some members of the international community have reviewed the best available scientific data on the impact of large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing and have failed to conclude that this practice has no adverse impact which threatens the conservation and sustainable management of living marine resources,

Noting that the grounds for concerns expressed in resolutions 44/225 and 45/197 about the unacceptable impact of large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing have been confirmed and that evidence has not demonstrated that the impact can be fully prevented,

Recognizing that a moratorium on large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing is required, notwithstanding that it will have adverse socio-economic effects on the communities involved in high seas pelagic drift-net fishing operations,

1. Recalls its resolutions 44/225 and 45/197;

2. Commends the efforts jointly to collect statistically sound data regarding large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing in the North Pacific Ocean, which were reviewed at the meeting of scientists held at Sidney, Canada, in June 1991, and presented at the symposium on the high seas drift-net fisheries in the North Pacific Ocean, held at Tokyo in November 1991 under the auspices of the International North Pacific Fisheries Commission:

3. Calls upon all members of the international community to implement resolutions 44/225 and 45/197 by, inter alia, taking the following actions:

(a) Beginning on 1 January 1992, reduce fishing effort in existing large-scale pelagic high seas drift-net fisheries by, inter alia, reducing the number of vessels involved, the length of the nets and the area of operation, so as to achieve, by 30 June 1992, a 50 per cent reduction in fishing effort;

(b) Continue to ensure that the areas of operation of large-scale pelagic high seas drift-net fishing are not expanded and, beginning on 1 January 1992, are further reduced in accordance with paragraph 3 (a) of the present resolution;

(c) Ensure that a global moratorium on all large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing is fully implemented on the high seas of the world's oceans and seas, including enclosed seas and semi-enclosed seas, by 31 December 1992;

4. Reaffirms the importance it attaches to compliance with the present resolution and encourages all members of the international community to take measures, individually and collectively, to prevent large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing operations on the high seas of the world's oceans and seas, including enclosed seas and semi-enclosed seas;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all members of the international community, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and well-established scientific institutions with expertise in relation to living marine resources;

6. Requests the members and organizations referred to above to submit to the Secretary-General information concerning activities or conduct inconsistent with the terms of the present resolution;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Programme and finances of UNEP

Public information

In 1991, UNEP continued to inform the world community about its priority programme activities, including biodiversity, oceans and coastal areas, desertification and ozone depletion, through pamphlets, booklets, features and news releases, as well as background papers delivered at media seminars on the environment. Special information kits were produced for African Governments, NGOs and media on oceans and coastal areas, biodiversity and biotechnology, hazardous wastes and land and water. The electronic media were provided with a radio programme on biodiversity and a video film on preserving the East African coastline. UNEP continued to support the production of television programmes through the Television Trust for the Environment and the distribution of up-to-date programmes on environmental issues to television stations in developing countries. It also continued to work with the information sections of other United Nations agencies and with the Department of Public Information at United Nations Headquarters in New York.

On 5 June, World Environment Day, ceremonies in Stockholm, Sweden, focused on climate change—the need for global partnership. An information package on the subject was distributed to Governments, NGOs and the media.

As part of an effort to make publications commercially available, a total of 29 publications were produced of which 16 represented new co-publishing agreements with external publishers. An atlas on desertification was published.

UNEP continued to coordinate an outreach network, a coalition of more than 500 local, national and international bodies which disseminated material on environment and health in Arabic, French, Portuguese and Spanish. The material was used, for example, in curriculum development and for children's magazines.

An international environmental photographic competition, "Focus on Your World", was launched.

Finances

UNEP Fund

On 31 May,<sup>(1)</sup> the UNEP Governing Council approved the UNEP programme budget for 1992-1993 and the supplementary programme for 1990-1991.

The Council<sup>(2)</sup> reconfirmed the target of $100 million for contributions to the Environment Fund by the year 1992. It noted the Executive Director's view that contributions of $250 million would be required by 1995 to allow UNEP to fulfil its tasks, and also noted with concern that while the overall level of contributions to the Environment Fund had increased, the number of countries contributing to the Fund had decreased. It approved an appropriation of $150 million for Fund programme activities in 1992-1993 and an additional appropriation of $30 million on the understanding that it be used only when additional resources became available.

The Council approved<sup>(3)</sup> an initial appropriation of $37.1 million for the programme and programme support costs budget for 1992-1993 and a supplementary appropriation of $3.7 million.

Trust funds

On 31 May,<sup>(4)</sup> the Governing Council noted with approval the establishment by the Executive Director of ten technical cooperation trust funds, the extension of live others and the closure of four. It approved, subject to the approval of the Secretary-General, the extension of three general trust funds and approved, subject to confirmation by the Governments concerned and the approval of the Secretary-General, the extension of eight other general trust funds. It also noted the establishment by the Executive Director of the Trust Fund for the Interim Multilateral Fund under the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer(5) from 1991 to 1993.

Global environment facility

In a May 1991 report,(6) the UNEP Executive Director discussed the Global Environment Facility (GEF), a pilot innovative financing operation to help developing countries meet specific challenges to the environment in a way that would bring global benefits. Countries participating in GEF invited UNEP, together with UNDP and the World Bank, to become implementing agencies for the Facility. GEF became operational at a meeting of the participants (Washington, D.C., 1 and 2 May 1991). The participants outlined goals for GEF in four areas: reducing emissions of greenhouse gases, protecting the ozone layer from further depletion, preserving the variety of biosystems and diversity of species of the earth, and protecting international waters. Under the mandate given to UNEP, the Executive Director had established in April 1991 a 12-member Scientific and Technical Advisory Panel to provide guidance on projects.

On 31 May,(7) the UNEP Governing Council welcomed the establishment of GEF, and endorsed the actions taken by the Executive Director to support its establishment. It noted that UNEP was required to help ensure that the policy framework for GEF was consistent with existing environmental conventions and related legal instruments, and further, that it was to help developing countries to define their needs to deal with environmental issues supported by the Facility.

UNEP Council

1991 session

At its sixteenth session, held at Nairobi from 20 to 31 May 1991, the UNEP Governing Council adopted decisions on environmental and administrative matters that were contained in its report on the session.(s)

It adopted decisions concerning military conflicts and the environment, hazardous environmental events, desertification, sea-level rise, cholera and microbial pollution of the coastal waters of the South-East Pacific, hazardous waste, toxic chemicals, early warning and forecasting of environmental emergencies, and protection of the ozone layer.

On 31 May,(9) the Council decided to hold a special session from 3 to 5 February 1992 at Nairobi to consider the state-of-the-environment report to be presented to UNCED.

By decision 1991/313, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the UNEP Governing Council on its 1991 session while, by decision 46/462, the General Assembly took note of the report and the decisions adopted therein.

Environmental aspects of political, economic and other issues

Military conflicts and the environment

In May 1991,(1) the UNEP Executive Director submitted a report on the environmental consequences of the armed conflict between Iraq and Kuwait. A three-person expert mission had been sent in February to the region to make a preliminary impact assessment, paying particular attention to the environmental problems posed by oil slicks, and to establish a structure for a continued flow of objective environmental information.

UNEP also dispatched a senior staff member to Bahrain to help in the revitalization of the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment (ROPME) and to assist it in the implementation of its role in coordinating the activities of United Nations agencies, other organizations, and Governments providing assistance. Following the approval at a ROPME meeting of the UNEP framework of action, UNEP developed a draft action plan for the mitigation, elimination and rehabilitation and protection of the environment in the region. The draft action plan, which was approved at the second United Nations inter-agency consultation (Geneva, 15 March), envisaged placement of a task team core group in Kuwait by the middle of April and the completion of high-priority surveys, assessments and action plan designs within 90 days thereafter. The focus of the action plan was four separate but interlinked areas: the coastal and marine environment, the atmosphere, inland terrestrial areas, and hazardous wastes.

With respect to the environmental consequences of the conflict, the burning of the oil wells in Kuwait was the most widely known. There were insufficient data to state with any certainty the probable effects of the smoke plumes on human and ecosystem health. Despite massive releases of crude oil into the sea, surveys of a United Mission in April failed to find any extensive oil slicks, although there were patches of sheen. The conflict had led to three kinds of land degradation: defensive constructions and trenches filled with oil to be lit during battle; off-the-road vehicle movements resulting in tracks that broke up both the vegetation cover and the upper soil layer which could lead to erosion by wind and water; and explosion damage from bombs, missiles and shells resulting in craters. Mines and unexploded ordnance posed one of the most serious and potentially long-lasting threats to the environment of Kuwait.

A June note(2) by the Secretariat dealt with economic, social and environmental consequences of the situation between Iraq and Kuwait. It discussed rise and volatility of oil prices, flight of migrant workers, impact on trade and tourism, and measures taken in support of affected countries and peoples.

On 31 May,(3) the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to increase his efforts to enhance cooperation and involvement of United Nations agencies and organizations and Governments willing and able to provide expertise and resources needed to deal with the environmental impacts in the affected regions; to revitalize ROPME; to strengthen its secretariat and its marine emergency mutual aid centre; and to assist other regional organizations concerned in the exercise.

The Council also appealed to Governments, in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against another State. It recommended that Governments consider identifying weapons, hostile devices and ways of using such techniques that would cause particularly serious effects on the environment, and to consider efforts in appropriate forums to strengthen international law prohibiting such weapons, hostile devices and ways of using such techniques. In June, UNEP organized a seminar in Geneva, in collaboration with the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, on disarmament, environment and development and their relevance to the least developed countries. Also in June, in collaboration with the Peace Research Institute of Oslo and the Life and Peace Institute, UNEP organized a training course at Uppsala, Sweden, on cooperation on environmental security and conflict resolution in the Horn of Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/216 by recorded vote.

International cooperation to mitigate the environmental consequences on Kuwait and other countries in the region resulting from the situation between Iraq and Kuwait

The General Assembly,

Aware of the disastrous situation caused in Kuwait and neighbouring areas by the torching and destruction of hundreds of its oil wells and of the other environmental consequences on the atmosphere, land and marine life,

Bearing in mind all relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular section E of resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991,

Having taken note of the report submitted by the Secretary-General to the Security Council describing the nature and extent of the environmental damage suffered by Kuwait,

Having also taken note of decision 16/11 A adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on 31 May 1991,

Profoundly concerned at the deterioration in the environment as a consequence of the damage, especially the threat posed to the health and well-being of the people of Kuwait and the people of the region, and the adverse impact on the economic activities of Kuwait and other countries of the region, including the effects on livestock, agriculture and fishing, as well as on wildlife,

Acknowledging the fact that dealing with this catastrophe goes beyond the capabilities of the countries of the region and, in that regard, recognizing the need for strengthened international cooperation to deal with the issue,

Noting with appreciation the appointment by the Secretary-General of an Under-Secretary-General as his Personal Representative to coordinate United Nations efforts in this field,

Also noting with appreciation the efforts already undertaken by the Member States of the region, other States, the organizations of the United Nations system, and governmental and non-governmental organizations to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of this environmental catastrophe,

Bearing in mind the effective work of the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment and the inter-agency task force established under the leadership of the United Nations Environment Programme especially for the environmental situation in the region, and the plan of action,

Expressing its special appreciation to the Governments which have extended financial support to the two trust funds established for the purpose by the Secretary-General of the International Maritime Organization and the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Emphasizing the need to continue to take comprehensive measures to study and mitigate these environmental consequences within a framework of sustained and coordinated international cooperation,

1. Urgently appeals to all States Members of the United Nations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, scientific bodies and individuals to provide assistance for programmes aimed at the study and mitigation of the environmental deterioration of the region and for strengthening the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment and its role in coordinating the implementation of these programmes;

2. Calls upon the organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, in particular the International Maritime Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme, to pursue their efforts to assess and counteract the short-term as well as long-term impact of the environmental deterioration of the region;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, through his Personal Representative, to render assistance to the members of the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment in the formulation and implementation of a coordinated and consolidated programme of action comprising costed project profiles, to help identify all possible resources for the programme of action and, inter alia, for strengthening the environmental capacities of the members of the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment to surmount the problem, and to allocate, within existing resources, the minimum resources required to enable his Personal Representative to continue to help coordinate the activities of the United Nations system to that end;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session a sub-item entitled "International cooperation to mitigate the environmental consequences on Kuwait and other countries in the region resulting from the situation between Iraq and Kuwait" under the item entitled "Development and international economic cooperation".

Effects of chemical weapons on health and environment

In a January report,<sup>(4)</sup> the UNEP Executive Director dealt with the effects of chemical warfare on human health and the environment. The report consisted of three parts: describing the various types of chemical weapons; the behaviour of chemical warfare agents in the environment and the threat such agents posed to individuals, crops and livestock; and the legal, diplomatic and cultural constraints on the use of chemical weapons.

The report concluded that chemical weapons could pose a serious threat to the civilian population. Inadvertent exposure could become an especially serious problem in military theatres with a high population density or in which refugees were on the move. Intentional exposure might even involve the inhabitants of entire cities. Human exposure to chemical weapons could lead to acute suffering, often with rapid death as the outcome. Medical intervention might be largely ineffectual and survivors might experience a range of debilitating long-term effects. The environment, including both flora and fauna, could be damaged either inadvertently or by intent. Overall ecosystem disruption could have catastrophic consequences, with ecological recovery taking years, decades, or even centuries.

On 31 May,<sup>(5)</sup> the Governing Council unequivocally condemned chemical warfare, took note of the report of the Executive Director, and requested him to make it available to the Conference on Disarmament.

On 9 December, the General Assembly, by decision 46/417, took note that the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict was being addressed at the twenty-sixth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent (Budapest, Hungary, 29 November–6 December), and requested the Secretary-General to report on the results of the Conference.

Environmental situation in the Israeli-occupied territories

In a March report,<sup>(6)</sup> the UNEP Executive Director described the environmental situation in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories. In order to develop the report, he had drawn on the experience of a group of consultants and sent notes to involved countries and organizations requesting information on particular issues. However, Israel did not respond to the Executive Director's note, no consultant was allowed to visit the occupied territories and thus no data were officially received or collected from Israel outlining the Israeli position. The report dealt with such issues as land and water, human settlements and housing, ecology, sanitation and human health, education and manpower development, and institutional arrangements and legislation.

The Executive Director concluded that the environment of the occupied territories called for close and careful management if its balance was to be maintained and its quality enhanced. He recommended that steps be taken by UNDP, UNEP and other relevant organizations with the aim of preserving the resources, halting the deterioration of the environment and enhancing the general quality of life in the occupied territories. In view of the lack of agreement among the parties directly involved in the issues covered in the report on much of the basic data, he also recommended that an international group of experts composed of representatives of Israel and the Palestinians and other Arabs in the occupied territories, as well as technical experts from the United Nations system, be entrusted with the preparation of an up-to-date database on the environment in the territories. An in-depth study should be conducted of the totality of the environmental problems of the occupied territories and their present and potential resource base as a human habitat.

On 31 May,<sup>(7)</sup> the Governing Council took note of the report, regretting that Israel did not provide the information requested. The Council stressed the need for Israel as occupying Power to take the necessary measures to conserve the natural resources, halt environmental deterioration, protect the human environment and ensure the well-being of the citizens in the occupied territories. The Council urged the international community to provide various forms of support and assistance for the implementation of the decision and it requested the Executive Director to take measures to complete a database of information about the environmental situation in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories.

Transfer of environmentally sound technology

In January,<sup>(8)</sup> the UNEP Executive Director reported on progress made in implementing the Cleaner Production Programme on the transfer of environmentally sound technology. As part of the first stage of the Programme, the International Cleaner Production Information Clearing-house (ICPIC) had been set up as a computer-based information exchange system, which had more than 450 case-studies of cleaner production methods; a bibliography of more than 400 frequently referenced publications; a directory of international experts; a calendar of training events, seminars and meetings; and a description of industry waste-minimization programmes.

Eight working groups of international experts had been established to collect industry-specific information on cleaner production technologies and experts, while other working groups were created for four highly polluting industrial sectors (leather tanning, textiles, metal finishing and solvents) and on the petroleum and pulp and paper industries. The information gathered by the working groups was made available world-wide through ICPIC. Also established was a working group on data networking, and, in cooperation with the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, a working group on policies, strategies and instruments, focusing initially on regulatory and non-regulatory incentives for the promotion of cleaner production. The newsletter Cleaner Production, issued twice a year in English and French, reported on experiences and activities in cleaner production in the world and also served as a link between the various partners involved.

On 31 May,<sup>(9)</sup> the Governing Council noted the progress made in the gathering, processing and world-wide dissemination of information on cleaner production by ICPIC and the inputs from the working groups of the Cleaner Production Programme. The Council called on Governments, non-governmental organizations, industry associations and academics to develop and initiate cleaner production activities and to participate in their implementation. It called on the Executive Director to support the initiation and development of cleaner production activities in different regions; to develop educational and training activities to help institutions and Governments in developing cleaner production programmes; and to promote the identification of ways and means to facilitate access by and transfer of technology to developing countries in respect of cleaner production methods, techniques and technologies.

Chapter IX

Population and human settlements

Major activities of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) in 1991 focused on maternal/child health care and family planning; information, education and communication; basic data collection; utilization of population data and research for policy formulation and development planning; and women, population and development. Special programme interests were dominated by continued efforts to control the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) pandemic and activities to improve understanding of the link between population and environmental concerns. UNFPA assisted some 3,900 technical cooperation projects of country, regional and intercountry nature. It approved 287 new country projects, amounting to $28.3 million.

The Economic and Social Council emphasized that population, sustained economic growth and sustainable development would be the overall theme of a 1994 International Conference on Population and Development. The Population Commission acting as the Preparatory Committee for the Conference considered the Conference's objectives, nature, organization and financial implications.

The United Nations Centre for Human Settlements, also known as Habitat, continued to assist developing countries in all aspects of human settlements activities, including technical cooperation, research and development and information dissemination. As the lead agency in the United Nations system for coordinating activities related to the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, Habitat worked towards the goal of facilitating the provision of adequate shelter for all.

The Commission on Human Settlements considered as its major themes the use of energy by households, in construction and in production of building materials, emphasizing energy sources which were new and renewable and minimized pollution, and human settlements in relation to sustainable development within the Global Strategy for Shelter. It recommended for adoption by the General Assembly a Plan of Action for 1992-1993 to implement the Strategy and, for consideration of the Assembly in 1992, the convening, possibly in 1997, of a second United Nations conference on human settlements.

Population

Follow-up to the 1984 Conference

As a follow-up to the 1984 International Conference on Population,<sup>(1)</sup> and as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1986<sup>(2)</sup> and 1987,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted two reports on population questions to the Council through the Population Commission. One report outlined the activities of the United Nations system in the field of population and the other dealt with monitoring multilateral population assistance (see below).

UNFPA activities. Pursuant to a request of 1987<sup>(3)</sup> of the Economic and Social Council, the UNFPA Executive Director submitted a report through the Population Commission on the Fund's activities, 1989-1990.<sup>(4)</sup> The report reviewed the following aspects of the UNFPA work programme: family planning; information, education and communication; basic data collection; utilization of population data and research for policy formulation and development planning; women, population and development; and special programmes (youth, ageing and AIDS).

The Executive Director noted that progress in reducing birth rates had been slower than expected and the quality of life in many countries had worsened. He identified the two areas of environmental impact posing the greatest threat to human welfare and survival: soil and forest degradation in developing countries and global warming. He pointed out that investments in human resource development improved the quality of life and were the quickest way to reduce population growth rates. Noting that UNFPA believed that restoring impetus to development required immediate action, he outlined areas for such action including: shifting development priorities towards social sectors; attacking poverty; shifting to cleaner technologies, energy efficiency and resource conservation; and reducing overall rates of population growth.

1994 International Conference on Population and Development

In 1989, the Economic and Social Council had decided to convene, in 1994, under the auspices of the United Nations, an international meeting on population.<sup>(5)</sup> In July 1991, it decided that the meeting would be called the International Conference on Population and Development (see below).

Preparatory activities

The Population Commission acting as the Preparatory Committee for the 1994 International Meeting on Population (New York, 4-8 March 1991)<sup>(6)</sup> recommended a draft text to the Economic and Social Council concerning the Conference (see below). The Committee considered a broad variety of activities relating to the Conference, including its nature, objectives, organization and financial implications.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to an Economic and Social Council resolution of 1989,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in February 1991 a report<sup>(7)</sup> presenting the objectives of the Conference, which were to assess progress made and identify the obstacles encountered in fulfilling the recommendations of the World Population Plan of Action adopted in 1974;<sup>(8)</sup> to maintain and strengthen awareness of population issues; to provide guidance on the treatment of population issues for the next decade; and to adopt a consolidated updated set of recommendations. The Secretary-General discussed the nature of the preparatory work, including the convening of expert group meetings and regional population conferences; the assignment of responsibilities for the preparatory activities, including setting up a steering committee and an inter-agency task force; the role of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs); and the financial implications of the preparatory activities and the Conference.

In November,<sup>(9)</sup> the Secretary-General estimated the cost of preparing and holding the Conference at $5.7 million.

Also in November,<sup>(10)</sup> the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) reported on the administrative and financial arrangements for the Conference, stating that the figures given by the Secretary-General were based on New York costing and that the actual requirements would depend, in part, on the Preparatory Committee's decision regarding the Conference's venue.

UN Population Fund

UNFPA activities

The bulk of UNFPA assistance in 1991 went to maternal and child health care and family planning (MCH/FP) services, followed by information, education and communication programmes, basic data collection, utilization of population data and research for policy formulation and development planning, and women, population and development activities. Work also proceeded on special programme interests such as youth, ageing, AIDS and population and the environment.

Total UNFPA income in 1991 was $224.2 million. There were 96 donors, including two first-time donors (Gabon and Guinea). The Fund's ongoing efforts to seek additional resources through multi-bilateral and other arrangements generated an additional $8 million during 1991 for projects with allocations totalling $12.5 million at year's end. Project allocations amounted to $212 million, while expenditures were approximately $227.3 million, including $120.9 million for country programmes, $49.9 million for inter-country (regional and interregional) programmes, $42.3 million for administrative and programme support services, and field office costs of $18.7 million. Agency support costs amounted to $14.2 million.

At the end of 1991, UNFPA was assisting 3,910 projects—2,883 country and 1,027 intercountry projects.

Assistance to MCH/FP programmes totalled $93.7 million, or 44.2 per cent of total allocations. Emphasis was given to improving the quality and accessibility of family planning services, integrating family planning with maternal and child health services, improving and developing contraceptive technologies, strengthening MCH/FP management information and logistics systems and addressing the special needs of adolescents in terms of their reproductive health. UNFPA continued to give strong support to the Safe Motherhood Initiative and continued to provide technical assistance to develop MCH/FP training programmes at all levels. It undertook missions to Laval University and the University of Montreal (Canada) and the Tunis Centre of International Family Planning Training (Tunisia) to review the suitability of the curricula and training methods for UNFPA programme needs. In collaboration with the Université Libre de Bruxelles (Belgium), UNFPA helped design a family planning training manual, covering clinical techniques and programme management.

In addition, UNFPA supported efforts to develop and improve contraceptive technologies and monitor their safety, effectiveness and acceptability. Assistance was provided to the World Health Organization (WHO) for research activities, to the Population Council to introduce NORPLANT subdermal contraceptive implants in 12 countries, and to the International Organization for Chemical Science in Development for work on innovative contraceptive techniques.

In a study to estimate contraceptive requirements in developing countries in the 1990s, UNFPA designed a methodology to determine and project contraceptive needs. Four expert group meetings discussed the study's objectives, methodology, initial findings and preliminary conclusions. The study's results were discussed at a consultative meeting (New York, 25 and 26 February 1991) and, following its recommendations, efforts were made to prepare more detailed estimates of contraceptive requirements in 17 selected countries and to explore areas such as programme needs to ensure effective and coordinated procurement, maintenance and distribution of contraceptive commodities, options for local production and future resource needs. A further consultative meeting (New York, 31 May) agreed on the need to carry out a number of in-depth country studies on contraceptive requirements and logistics management.

The UNFPA Executive Director submitted a report to the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) on contraceptive requirements and demand for contraceptive commodities in developing countries in the 1990s.<sup>(11)</sup> On 25 June 1991,<sup>(12)</sup> the Council asked UNFPA to develop and refine, at the request of the countries concerned, country-specific estimates for contraceptive needs, and to assist in developing local production facilities, as well as to help build national capacity for self-reliance in contraceptive supply and management. Following the Council's decision, a working group and the Governments concerned decided that country-specific studies would initially be carried out in Nepal, Pakistan and Zimbabwe during 1992.

UNFPA assistance for information, education and communication activities amounted to $37.8 million, or 17.8 per cent of all programme allocations. Assistance continued to aim at consolidating population education in formal school systems and extending population education to selected groups in the non-formal sector, such as parents, illiterate adults and workers. The Fund also supported training in interpersonal communications for distinct groups in cooperatives and the workplace and provided assistance to develop training manuals to help parents become important sources of information for their children. In the area of adolescent reproductive health, UNFPA-assisted programmes began to shift from a traditional approach focused on family life education to a more innovative concept of combining education and services. The new approach included recruiting youth coordinators and peer counsellors to provide backup services at youth centres and using youth clubs for community-based services.

Basic data collection received $18.9 million in assistance, or 8.9 per cent of total allocations. The Fund continued to support efforts to develop cost-effective sampling techniques and analytical procedures to address problems with statistical estimation and improve civil registration and vital statistics systems. It also continued its collaborative intercensus training programme for sub-Saharan African nationals in the use of sampling techniques, census cartography and computer data processing. Another collaborative endeavour, the Pan-Arab Project for Child Development survey, covering the Persian Gulf States and six other countries in the Arab region, continued to produce survey findings for selected Gulf countries. Moreover, UNFPA supported efforts to design gender-sensitive census and survey questionnaires to ensure that adequate, disaggregated information on women would be collected, analysed and disseminated.

In 1991, UNFPA allocated $14.5 million to support the 1991 round of population censuses (approximately half of which went to projects in Africa), $2.3 million to conduct population sample surveys through country projects (roughly three quarters of which went in equal portions to Africa and the Arab States and Europe) and $2 million to establish or strengthen civil registration and vital statistics systems.

Some $42.3 million or 19.8 per cent of UNFPA assistance was devoted to programmes on population dynamics, formulation and evaluation of population policies and programmes, and policy implementation. Those programmes sought to strengthen national technical capacities to undertake research and analysis and to set up institutional arrangements to formulate and implement population policies as an integral part of socio-economic development planning. UNFPA also supported discussions between and among developed and developing countries on the causes and consequences of international migration and refugee movements.

Support to research efforts, training personnel in demographic analysis and integrating population factors into development planning were also important targets of UNFPA assistance. Activities included organizing seminars, workshops and courses and granting fellowships. In addition, UNFPA'S Global Programme of Training in Population and Development continued.

UNFPA assistance for women, population and development activities totalled $9.6 million, or 4.5 per cent of all programme allocations. Efforts continued to focus on integrating women's concerns into all UNFPA-funded population programmes. The third meeting of UNFPA'S External Advisory Panel on Women, Population and Development (New York, 13 and 14 February 1991) discussed the role of women in MCH/FP programmes; critical linkages between women, population and the environment; the importance of micro-enterprises in improving the status of women; the role of grassroots organizations in promoting women's issues and enabling women to participate more actively in the development process; and the critical need for appropriate staff training in the area of women, population and development. The Panel's recommendations were incorporated into the UNFPA Executive Director's report to the UNDP Governing Council on the implementation of the strategy to strengthen the capacity of the Fund to deal with issues concerning women, population and development (1987-1990).<sup>(13)</sup> The report focused on developments during the final two years of the strategy and stated that the strategy had increased awareness among the Fund's staff of the vital linkage between ameliorating the status of women and sustaining development initiatives.

On 25 June 1991,<sup>(12)</sup> the Governing Council approved the extension of the strategy for another four years (1991-1994), addressing priority areas concerning: design of comprehensive training programmes; development of a comprehensive reporting mechanism; improvement of the technical dimension of assistance to women, population and development programmes; and strengthening links with local NGOs.

Regarding women's health, major UNFPA-funded activities in 1991 included a project to strengthen the national committees of the Inter-African Committee for Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children in Ethiopia, the Gambia, Nigeria and the Sudan. Training for trainers was provided at the International Labour Organisation (ILO) Training Centre (Turin, Italy) in designing and developing multi-media training materials for information campaigns in those countries. WHO was executing a project to provide women's organizations with a better understanding of the inter-relationships between women's health and family planning and between women's health and their social and economic status. Activities were under way to prepare, test and disseminate appropriate training materials.

Special programme interests-youth, ageing, AIDS and population and the environment-received $2.4 million, or 1.05 per cent of total allocations. During 1991, UNFPA took steps to ensure effective implementation of its policy on youth, which culminated in a consultation on ways to strengthen its youth activities (New York, 10 and 11 October). The year saw the conclusion of several interregional youth projects with a high degree of participation by young people, including one to generate methodologies to improve the reproductive health of adolescents and one to develop approaches to integrate population education into rural youth programmes.

As in previous years, UNFPA continued to focus on research, training and promoting awareness of population ageing and its social and economic implications. UNFPA-supported activities were carried out mainly at the global and regional levels by United Nations agencies and organizations and international NGOs.

AIDS prevention and control activities followed the strategy set forth by the WHO Special Programme on AIDS.(14) The Fund distributed a compilation of such activities in 32 countries and prepared an information paper for the UNDP Governing Council tracing the history and extent of UNFPA support for AIDS prevention since the formulation of the Fund's policy guidelines in 1987. In addition, UNFPA provided technical and financial assistance to WHO to prepare guidelines on AIDS prevention for MCH/FP programme managers. The Governing Council, in June,(12) noted UNFPA's efforts to integrate AIDS prevention activities in MCH/FP programmes and encouraged it to continue its cooperation with WHO and other agencies. It asked UNFPA to develop country-specific estimates for contraceptive needs, taking into account condom requirements to prevent AIDS.

As to population and the environment, UNFPA focused on building national capacity through policy analysis and research, awareness creation and training. It funded projects aimed at improving the understanding of the interrelationship between population and the environment and translating that information into ways to integrate population factors into planning for sustainable development. It also contributed to preparations for the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. Other efforts included support to the World Conservation Union to develop a guide for devising national conservation strategies.

Country and intercountry programmes

In 1991, UNFPA concentrated on the needs of 55 priority countries, of which 31 were in Africa, 16 in Asia and the Pacific, 5 in the Arab States and 3 in Latin America and the Caribbean. Of the resources allocated to country programmes and projects, $107.4 million or 71.5 per cent was allocated to those countries. Allocations for intercountry activities (regional and interregional) totalled $61.9 million, or 29.2 per cent.

On 25 June 1991,(15) the UNDP Governing Council approved UNFPA's intercountry programme for 1992-1995, comprising the interregional programme and regional programmes for sub-Saharan Africa, the Arab States and Europe, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean.@ In addition, the Council approved multi-year programmes for Albania, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, the Congo, the Dominican Republic, Honduras, India, Malaysia, Mauritania, Morocco, the Niger and Tunisia, and a subregional programme for the English-speaking Caribbean.

UNFPA again emphasized implementation of its strategy for assistance to sub-Saharan Africa(17) to help mitigate the effects of economic difficulties at the international and national levels affecting investment in the social sector. A status report on the strategy outlined UNFPA financial support for implementation, the strategy's programme areas-population policy and development planning; MCH/FP; population information, education and communication; and population, women and development-and operational constraints and problems.(18) The report noted that UNFPA expenditures for country and regional activities in sub-Saharan Africa had increased from $21.9 million in 1986 to an estimated $50.2 million in 1990. Resources provided through multi-bilateral arrangements rose from $350,000 to an estimated $3.9 million in the same period. The report concluded that the UNFPA strategy had greatly contributed to the increasing momentum in sub-Saharan Africa to deal with population issues and had made progress in achieving its objectives.

On 25 June 1991,(12) the UNDP Governing Council, noting the report on the strategy, encouraged the Fund to continue its assistance to the strategy's priority areas: intensifying public information, education and communication programmes; encouraging the integration of population into development planning and formulating and implementing population policies; supporting birth-spacing/family planning information and service programmes; and contributing to improving the status of women, as well as to institutional strengthening.

Responding to emerging needs in Central and Eastern Europe, UNFPA fielded assessment missions in 1991 to Bulgaria, Poland and Romania at their request. It organized reviews of the regional activities of the Economic Commission for Europe, WHO's regional office in Europe, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Planned Parenthood Federation to understand better how to address such emerging needs.

Work programmes

In a report on the work plan for 1992-1995 and request for approval authority,(19) the UNFPA Executive Director provided information on estimates of new programmable resources for 1992-1995 by year; resource distribution; distribution of total programmable resources for 1992-1995 among country and intercountry activities and services; average annual distribution of country activities by region for those years; amounts for country activities already programmed for 1991-1995; and average annual distribution of intercountry activities by region for 1992-1995. The Executive Director proposed an increase in the Fund's operational reserve. Another report<sup>(20)</sup> gave the status of financial implementation of UNDP Governing Council-approved UNFPA programmes and projects, including details of expenditures and allocations.

On 25 June 1991,<sup>(21)</sup> the Council approved the work plan for 1992-1995 and a new programme expenditure level of $201.3 million for 1992. While endorsing the Executive Director's programme resource proposals, the Council decided that the level of the operational reserve should be modified, from 25 per cent of expected contributions to 20 per cent. It endorsed the following estimates for new programmable resources for 1993-1995 (subject to actual contributions): $225.7 million for 1993, $255.6 million for 1994 and $281.9 million for 1995.

Programme planning and evaluation

The introduction in 1989 of the Programme Review and Strategy Development (PRSD) exercise, combining needs assessment, country programme evaluation and strategy development, brought about a shift in focus of UNFPA country programme evaluations, which were thereafter to be carried out as an integral part of the PRSD exercise rather than as a separate undertaking. A major aim was to ensure not only that evaluation would be taken into account in all phases of the programme cycle, but also that evaluation results would be fed directly into programme formulation.

In 1991, UNFPA undertook PRSD missions to Africa (Benin, Botswana, Burundi, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Gabon, Gambia, Guinea, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Namibia, Nigeria, Senegal, Swaziland, United Republic of Tanzania), the Arab States (Egypt, Jordan, Sudan, Yemen), Asia and the Pacific (Lao People's Democratic Republic, Nepal, Pakistan, South Pacific subregion, Thailand) and Latin America (Brazil, Paraguay, Peru). In addition, it carried out independent evaluations of WHO's western Pacific and South-East Asia population programmes, the United Nations Department of Technical Cooperation for Development (DTCD) global programme in Africa and Asia and the WHO/Pan American Health Organization population programme.

Financial and administrative questions

1992- 1993 budget

In 1991, the UNDP Governing Council had before it budget estimates for UNFPA administrative and programme support services for the 1992-1993 biennium.<sup>(22)</sup> The total biennial budget amounted to $110.9 million gross, or a 23.2 per cent increase compared to the revised 1990-1991 estimates of $90.1 million.

On 21 June,<sup>(23)</sup> the Council, having considered the budget estimates, a note by the Executive Director on the UNFPA Reserve for Field Accommodation,<sup>(24)</sup> a report on Fund publications,<sup>(25)</sup> the annual financial review, 1990,<sup>(26)</sup> audit reports for the year ended 31 December 1989<sup>(27)</sup> and a report of ACABQ<sup>(28)</sup> approved gross appropriations of $110,610,800 to finance 1992-1993 administrative and programme support services and agreed that overhead credits available to UNFPA estimated at $6 million and the miscellaneous income from trust funds for support services in the amount of $500,000 should be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $104,110,800. The Executive Director was authorized to transfer credits between programmes within reasonable limits, with the concurrence of ACABQ. The Council also approved additional posts requested in the biennial budget estimates.

Also before the Council was a report on proposed UNFPA successor arrangements for agency support costs.<sup>(29)</sup> The new arrangement was intended to reinforce UNFPA's partnership with other United Nations entities, including the specialized agencies, so that countries could avail themselves of the full range of technical support and experience of the United Nations system. It was to consist of technical support for country programmes and projects and a partial reimbursement of indirect administrative and operational services. The technical support services were to be drawn from national institutions and experts, country programme technical support teams stationed in the subregion or region and technical specialists and coordinators at agency headquarters and some regional offices. An inter-agency task force was to monitor the performance of the technical support services arrangement, which would be evaluated after three years. The report also reviewed current agency support-cost arrangements for the provision of technical assistance for population programmes/projects and specified changes for the period 1992-1995.

On 25 June,<sup>(30)</sup> the Governing Council decided that UNFPA successor arrangements should provide coordinated, effective and timely support for population programmes and policies in developing countries; utilize and maximize national and regional capacities in the area of population activities; utilize the most appropriate and competitive sources of technical assistance; bring technical services and advice much closer to field-level activities in developing countries; facilitate the further assumption by Governments of the management of programmes and projects financed by UNFPA, consistent with greater national execution of such programmes; and continue cost-sharing between UNFPA and United Nations agencies participating in the new arrangements. It endorsed the principle of a team approach in assisting UNFPA representatives and country directors in providing, coordinating and managing technical advisory services and backstopping and agreed to the use of an inter-agency task force as an advisory body. The Council, taking note of a United Nations decision to participate fully in UNFPA successor support-cost arrangements effective 1 January 1993, authorized the UNFPA Executive Director to commit $130.3 million over the 1992-1995 period, not exceeding 13.8 per cent of programmable resources, and to allocate the funds for technical support services and for administrative and operational services, based on a compensation arrangement with executing agencies of 7.5 per cent of project expenditures. The Council decided that the use of funds released by a reduction of the costs of administrative and operational services would need its approval.

Other population activities

Population Commission

The Population Commission, at its twenty-sixth session (New York, 27 February-7 March 1991),<sup>(31)</sup> reviewed action taken by the United Nations to implement the recommendations of the 1974 World Population Conference,<sup>(32)</sup> programme implementation, the proposed programme of work for 1992-1993 and the follow-up of the recommendations of the 1984 International Conference on Population.<sup>(1)</sup> The Commission also met, in open-ended session, as the Preparatory Committee for the 1994 International Meeting on Population.<sup>(6)</sup> Issues discussed included demographic trends, population policies and programmes, population and development, international cooperation and assistance, dissemination of population information, technical cooperation and demographic and social statistics.

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/308, approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's twenty-seventh (1993) session.

Population work programme

In response to Economic and Social Council requests of 1986<sup>(2)</sup> and 1987,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Population Commission an overview of population activities carried out by various organizations of the United Nations system during 1988-1989.<sup>(33)</sup>

The overview covered socio-economic development, the environment and population; the role and status of women; development of population policies; population goals; and the promotion of knowledge and policy. The institutional framework and legislative background, organizational structure and resources, and coordination mechanisms within the United Nations system were described.

In a report on monitoring multilateral population assistance,<sup>(34)</sup> the Secretary-General concluded that the United Nations system had strengthened the substantive content of its population programmes and had increased its volume of financial assistance to developing countries. Assistance to such programmes had increased from $180 million in 1987 to $270 million in 1989, with some 75 per cent of those resources coming from UNFPA. Family planning integrated with maternal and child health continued to receive the bulk of multilateral resources for population. Increased resources went to special programmes, especially to projects to improve the status and living conditions of women, and support for population programmes in Africa continued.

The Secretary-General also submitted two reports on the progress of work of the United Nations Secretariat in the area of population, 1989-1990. One report,<sup>(35)</sup> describing progress achieved by the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, covered its activities dealing with world demographic analysis, demographic projections, population policies, population and development, monitoring and review and appraisal, factors affecting patterns of reproduction and dissemination of information. The other report<sup>(36)</sup> gave an account of technical cooperation activities carried out by DTCD from 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1990. It considered support of projects in training in demography and population and development; evaluation and analysis of population and demographic data; and population policy and development planning. Analysis and evaluation of technical cooperation activities were also considered. Those activities were carried out with the financial support of UNFPA and UNDP. Annexed to the report was a summary of DTCD technical cooperation activities in the area of population statistics.

1992-1993 work programme

In January 1991,<sup>(37)</sup> the Secretary-General, reporting on the proposed work programme for the 1992-1993 biennium, said it was designed to carry out research of the highest priority at the global level, disseminate research findings in the most effective manner possible and provide substantive and operational support for technical cooperation projects.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/92, without vote.

Work programme in the field of population

The Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/92

26 July 1991 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/125) without vote, 23 July (meeting 16); draft by Population Commission (E/1991/27); agenda item 8 (f).

Technical cooperation

In a report on the 1991 technical cooperation programme of DTCD,<sup>(38)</sup> the Secretary-General said the Department had 108 population projects with a delivery of $11 million. One third of the projects were in the area of institutional development for training and research in population and development.

Analysis of census data had been incorporated into the census programmes of most developing countries. DTCD continued to help Governments train their personnel in demographic analysis, with a DTCD project on computer software for population activities supplying most software packages for such training.

In development planning, attention focused on strengthening national institutional capabilities; studies on the interrelationship between population variables and development factors; the use of integrated models for policy formulation and integration of population variables in development planning; strengthening the capacity of national staff; and dissemination of information.

Of DTCD's 42 training/research projects, 17 were executed in Africa, 9 in Latin America, 8 in Asia, 3 in West Asia and 1 in Europe. Two of the remaining were interregional/global training programmes, while the rest were intercountry projects. Most projects concentrated on developing local teaching materials and providing a full range of local services, such as awareness-raising among mass-media communicators, political decision-makers and religious groups.

Under the DTCD fellowship programme in population, 210 new fellowships were awarded to 139 men and 71 women from 60 developing countries. Most fellowships aimed at updating technical skills and providing selected participation in international workshops.

Population trends and policies

In a report of January 1991 on monitoring world population trends and policies,<sup>(39)</sup> the Secretary-General examined age structure changes from 1950 to 1990 and the current situation and projections. Trends discussed included population growth, mortality, fertility, urbanization, and internal and international migration.

Population and the environment

The Secretary-General presented an overview of research findings on the impact of rapid population growth on the environment in rural areas of selected developing countries.<sup>(40)</sup> He described the environmental impact of increasing population pressures on agricultural land in three critical ecological zones: along the margins of tropical rain forests, along the edges of deserts and in long-settled, densely populated regions.

UN Population Award

In June, the Secretary-General presented the 1991 United Nations Population Award to Julia J. Henderson (United States), a social development leader associated with the United Nations and the International Planned Parenthood Federation, and to the Centro de Estudios de Población y Paterinidad Responsable, an Ecuadorian NGO engaged in population studies. Each received a diploma, a gold medal and $10,000.

The award's recipients, chosen annually by the Committee for the Award, are individuals or institutions that have made outstanding contributions to increasing the awareness of population problems and to their solutions.

Human settlements

Commission on Human Settlements

At its thirteenth session (Harare, Zimbabwe, 29 April-8 May 1991),(1) the Commission on Human Settlements recommended that the General Assembly adopt the 1992-1993 Plan of Action to implement the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000,(2) adopted by the Assembly in 1988.(3) It further recommended that in 1992 the Assembly consider the convening, possibly in 1997, of a second United Nations conference on human settlements. The Commission asked the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) to meet at least four times a year with a Committee of Permanent Representatives to UNCHS to review progress made in implementing the Centre's programme and Commission resolutions.(4)

Other topics dealt with by the Commission included housing conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories, assistance to victims of apartheid, promoting the advancement of women in human settlements development and management, and environmental aspects of human settlements, such as sustainable development and water and sanitation. As regards training and cooperation, the Commission requested the UNCHS Executive Director to activate a specialized regional training centre for human settlements in Amman, Jordan.(5)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1991/311 of 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's report,(1) on the understanding that the Committee of Permanent Representatives to UNCHS remained of a purely informal character, and transmitted the report to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, by decision 46/441, took note of the Commission's report.

1993 session

On 7 May 1991,(6) the Commission, recalling its 1987 decision(7) regarding the selection of two themes for each session and having considered the Executive Director's report on themes for consideration by the Commission at its fourteenth (1993) session,(8) requested the Executive Director to prepare two papers for that session—one on improving municipal management and another on appropriate, intermediate, cost-effective building materials, technologies and transfer mechanisms for housing delivery. It also decided to take up in 1995 the theme of land policies with emphasis on access and affordability to low-income groups.

Human settlements activities

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000

In 1988, the General Assembly had adopted the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 to facilitate the provision of shelter for all by then,(3) designated the Commission on Human Settlements as the intergovernmental body responsible for coordinating, evaluating and monitoring it, and requested the Commission to report biennially on progress made. In 1989,(9) the Assembly considered the first report of the Commission on the implementation of the Strategy.(10) The first phase of the Strategy covered 1989-1991, while the second covered 1992-1994.

In January 1991,(2) the UNCHS Executive Director submitted the second report to the Commission on the implementation of the Strategy, covering the period 1989-1990 and describing briefly action taken by UNCHS, Member States, the United Nations system and bilateral, multilateral, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. The Executive Director concluded that while a positive beginning had been made, in the majority of developing countries much greater efforts were needed to apply the guidelines for national action provided in the Strategy. Annexed to his report was a Plan of Action for 1992-1993 and a timetable for its implementation.

In an earlier report, the Executive Director had set out monitoring guidelines for national shelter strategies.(11)

The Commission, on 7 May 1991,(12) having considered the Executive Director's draft of the second report of the Commission to the Assembly on the Strategy's implementation,(13) decided to incorporate into the draft additions and amendments submitted by delegations relating to their respective countries, and to submit the revised report to the Assembly.<sup>(14)</sup>

On 8 May, (15) the Commission adopted its second report, including the Plan of Action for 1992-1993.(14) The Commission asked Governments to intensify efforts towards formulating and implementing national shelter strategies, using the Guidelines for National Action contained in the Strategy(16) and the Plan of Action for 1992-1993. Urging the private sector to expand its operations to provide shelter to middle- and low-income people, the Commission invited Governments to work with the private sector to create a legal framework in areas such as finance, taxation, regulation, standards and procedures affecting shelter. It urged community-based organizations and NGOs to strengthen successful approaches to shelter problems and explore new ways to address shelter issues. The Commission recommended that Governments adopt a cost-effective monitoring system for national shelter strategies and develop and apply indicators for assessing the performance of the national shelter sector. It urged Governments to prepare annual progress reports and to submit them to the Executive Director to enable him to prepare his reports on implementation of the Strategy for consideration by the Commission.

The Commission requested the Executive Director to extend further assistance to Governments to intensify national action in implementing the Strategy and to continue to use it as an overall guide for the Centre's work programme for all biennial work programmes up to the year 2000. It asked him to submit a report in 1993 on the implementation of the next phase of the Strategy and recommended to the Assembly adoption of a draft resolution (see below).

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/312, took note of the Executive Director's note on the second report of the Commission on the implementation of the Strategy.(14)

Shelter-sector performance indicators

On 8 May 1991,(17) the Commission called on Member States to make provisions for a database system to facilitate decision-making, planning, implementation and monitoring and to assist research concerning housing and infrastructure to achieve shelter for all by 2000. It requested the Executive Director, together with international organizations and volunteering member countries, to complete the design of and test an internationally comparable set of key quantitative and policy-sensitive indicators, under development by UNCHS and the World Bank,(18) which were to assist Governments in monitoring progress towards a well-functioning shelter sector in accordance with the objectives of the Strategy. The Commission recommended that requesting Governments be provided technical and financial assistance in collecting and maintaining data on shelter indicators by the international community, and that Governments prepare progress reports, for presentation in 1993, on meeting the Strategy's objectives based on the initial set of key quantitative and policy-sensitive indicators.

The Commission requested the Executive Director to develop and implement a database method for collecting, analysing, maintaining and disseminating the national indicator data biannually, and to prepare a report on monitoring the Strategy in preparation for a debate in 1993. It also recommended that a theme of its fifteenth (1995) session be a review of national action to provide housing for all since the 1976 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements,(19) including steps to be taken in the last five years of the century to advance the goal of adequate housing for all by the year 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/163 without vote.

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolution 43/181 of 20 December 1988, in which it designated the Commission on Human Settlements as the intergovernmental body for coordinating, evaluating and monitoring the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000,

Recalling also its resolution 44/173 of 19 December 1989, in which it considered the first report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, submitted pursuant to paragraph 7 of resolution 43/181,

Recognizing that the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 provides a framework for Governments to facilitate adequate shelter for all and that, through shelter and services, the Global Strategy also addresses the issues of alleviation of poverty, improvement of health, participation of women, improvement of the living environment of people and promotion of sustainable development,

Emphasising that the operational focus for promoting the objective of facilitating shelter for all is action at the national level within the framework of national shelter strategies which are integrated with macroeconomic policies for optimum utilization of natural and human resources and are based on standards that are nationally appropriate and socially acceptable,

Emphasising also that the adoption of enabling shelter strategies can mobilize resources on a sustainable basis and facilitate access to available resources by all population groups,

Noting that such mobilization of national resources through enabling shelter strategies could partially alleviate economic constraints that affect many countries,

Having considered the second report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000,

Noting with satisfaction that a number of Governments have initiated or reformulated national shelter strategies, based on the principle of enabling all actors in the shelter sector, and that many other Governments have initiated action on particular components of a national shelter strategy,

Noting also with satisfaction the support given to the implementation of the Global Strategy by donor Governments, international bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Cognizant of the importance of maintaining the momentum already generated at the national and international levels for the implementation of the Global Strategy,

1. Commends Governments which are revising, consolidating, formulating or implementing their national shelter strategies based on the enabling principles of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000;

2. Urges those Governments which have not already initiated action towards formulation of a national shelter strategy based on the enabling principles, or have taken only tentative steps so far, to increase their efforts, using the Guidelines for National Action contained in the Global Strategy, involving governmental, private sector and non-governmental actors in the shelter sector, assuring the participation of men and women and paying special attention to gender issues, in the formulation, implementation and monitoring of national shelter strategies in order to achieve the objective of facilitating shelter for all by the year 2000;

3. Recommends that all Governments adopt a cost-effective system for monitoring progress of national shelter strategies and also adopt, as far as is feasible, guidelines prepared by the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat);

4. Also urge Governments to integrate fully the environmental dimension in the formulation and implementation of national shelter strategies, following, for example, the synopsis of environmental checkpoints contained in the report of the Executive Director on the significance of human settlements and the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 to the concept of sustainable development;

5. Invites Governments to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation in order to facilitate implementation of the Global Strategy;

6. Urges the organizations of the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, and other multilateral and bilateral agencies to provide increased financial and other support to Governments for the implementation of the Plan of Action of the Global Strategy;

7. Adopts the Plan of Action for 1992-1993 for the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, and urges all Governments, appropriate United Nations organizations, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to prepare and implement their specific plans of action.

19 December 1991 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/46/645/Add.8) without vote, 11 December (meeting 58); draft by Commission on Human Settlements (A/46/8); agenda item 77 (g).

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 2nd Committee 48-50, 52, 58; plenary 78.

Conference on human settlements

Considering that it was highly opportune to convene a United Nations conference on human settlements to review past policies and set a strategy and guidelines for national, regional and international action, the Commission, on 8 May 1991,(20) recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution (see below).

The Commission requested the Executive Director to report on the preparation of a report (requested in the resolution) on a possible conference to Governments through Permanent Representatives, focal points or government-designated officials and to the Commission in 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/164 without vote.

United Nations Conference on Human Settlements

The General Assembly,

Recalling the recommendations adopted by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, which form the basis for national action and international cooperation in the field of human settlements,

Recalling also its resolution 32/162 of 19 December 1977, by which it established the Commission on Human Settlements and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) in order, inter alia, to achieve greater coherence and effectiveness in human settlements activities within the United Nations system,

Noting with appreciation that the Commission on Human Settlements and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), in line with the objectives and responsibilities set out in resolution 32/162, have succeeded in placing human settlements higher on the agenda for national action and international cooperation and in promoting increased understanding of the links between people, settlements, environment and development,

Noting that the successive work programmes of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) have addressed all the recommendations adopted by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements and, in addition, have provided specific guidance in various fields of human settlements, such as shelter, urban management, the role of women, training, community participation, finance, building materials, environment and sustainable development,

Noting in particular that, since the establishment of the Commission and the Centre, Governments have achieved substantial advances in the planning, development and management of human settlements, thus improving the living conditions of a large number of people,

Noting also that bilateral and multilateral agencies and institutions have gradually increased their emphasis on and level of technical and other assistance in the field of human settlements,

Noting further that non-governmental and community-based organizations and the private sector have increased their contributions towards improving living conditions and building new shelters and settlements,

Recognizing that programmes such as the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, observed in 1987, and the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, currently being implemented, provide the framework for focusing on the critical issue of shelter and services and have succeeded in substantially increasing awareness and in placing the provision of shelter and services in the broader context of social and economic development,

Noting with concern that in many developing countries achievements in policies, programmes and projects at the national level in the field of human settlements have not been sufficient to arrest or reverse deterioration in the living conditions of people in both urban and rural areas,

Recognizing moreover that past experience as well as current trends and developments and projections in human settlements and related fields of poverty, population, environment and development make it clear that there is a need for an in-depth review and assessment of the strategies that have been put in place,

Convinced that proper planning, development and management of human settlements will lead to economic and social progress and thereby alleviate poverty and promote development that is environmentally sound and sustainable in the long run,

Also convinced that a world-wide conference with broad, multidisciplinary and high-level participation can provide a suitable forum for considering the current situation in the planning, development and management of human settlements in the context of prevailing and expected social, economic and environmental conditions,

Considering that such a conference should, inter alia:

(a) Review trends in policies and programmes undertaken by countries and international organizations to implement the recommendations adopted by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, held at Vancouver, Canada, in 1976;

(b) Conduct a mid-term review of the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and, if necessary, make recommendations which would ensure the realization by the year 2000 of the objectives of the Global Strategy;

(c) Review and determine the substantive role and contribution of the human settlements sector in the light of the experience gained and of the results of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to be held at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 1 to 12 June 1992;

(d) Review trends in economic and social development as they affect planning and development of human settlements and make recommendations for future action at national and international levels,

Bearing in mind its resolution 40/243 of 18 December 1985, on the pattern of conferences,

1. Decides to consider at its forty-seventh session the question of convening, possibly in 1997, a United Nations conference on human settlements (Habitat II) with a view to taking a decision at that session on the objectives, content, scope and timing of such a conference and the modalities and financial implications of holding it;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), to prepare a report on the objectives, content and scope of such a conference and preparations and other modalities for the conference, and to include a statement on the financial implications of the preparations for and convening of the conference;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit the report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

General Assembly resolution 46/164

19 December 1991 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/46/645/Add.8) without vote, 11 December (meeting 58); draft by Commission on Human Settlements (A/46/8); agenda item 77 (g).

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 2nd Committee 48-50, 52, 58; plenary 78.

Human settlements and political, economic and social issues

Assistance to victims of apartheid

On 8 May 1991,(21) the Commission strongly condemned South Africa for its policy of forced mass removal of the African population from their homes and the hardship caused thereby through the imprisonment of women and men opposing such removals. It commended the Organization of African Unity and others for supporting the struggle against apartheid. It called on the international community to support national liberation movements in their rejection of proposals for new legislation on land without involvement and in complete disregard of the needs of the landless and homeless Black community in South Africa, and urged South Africa to consult the African community in developing equitable land policies and legislation. The Commission also called on the international community to continue providing assistance to displaced and homeless victims of apartheid and asked the Executive Director to intensify efforts to provide increased technical training and other forms of assistance.

Homeless Palestinians

In January 1991, the Executive Director reported on housing requirements of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories,(22) reviewing demographic trends there from 1987 to 2007, current housing conditions, housing needs from 1988 to 2007 and a housing development strategy.

By 21 votes to 1, with 15 abstentions, the Commission(23) strongly condemned the continued establishment of Israeli settlements in the Palestinian territories and the housing of new settlers in them. It further condemned Israel's refusal to accept a UNCHS fact-finding mission to the occupied territories to investigate housing conditions. It asked the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Director and in cooperation with the Palestine Liberation Organization, to devise a plan for implementing a shelter strategy for the Palestinian people to the year 2000, as contained in the Executive Director's report, together with the provision of necessary funds.

Women and human settlements

On 8 May 1991,<sup>(24)</sup> the Commission, urging Governments to identify methods that strengthened the role of women in settlement and development, requested the Executive Director to strengthen the UNCHS role and competence in gender-sensitive shelter strategy development, increase efforts to provide support to Governments in this regard review and develop a more comprehensive policy on women in development and manage the financial resources of UNCHS to ensure adequate financial and administrative support to the Centre's women in development focal point. It asked Governments and UNCHS to develop closer cooperation with the Habitat International Coalition Women and Shelter Network and similar NGOs.

Also on 8 May,<sup>(25)</sup> the Commission drew the attention of Governments and relevant organizations to the potential available for developing and improving the environment in many countries, through strengthened participation of women in decision-making processes and management concerning human settlement developments.

Shelter and extreme poverty

Urging Governments, particularly in developing countries, to consider reallocating resources and to explore innovative financing mechanisms towards alleviating the lack of adequate shelter for marginal societal groups, the Commission, on 8 May 1991,<sup>(26)</sup> recommended that they review, modify and amend building regulations, planning standards, land policy, legislation and taxation to facilitate and increase housing stocks for those groups. It urged funding agencies to consider more favourably the provision of grant funds and concessionary loans to assist developing countries, and urged Governments to channel the vast labour resources available among the critically poor towards useful contributions to the housing sector, including construction of their own shelter. The Commission requested the Executive Director to continue and intensify research into innovative least-cost construction solutions and new methods of finance mobilization towards shelter for the critically poor, and to prepare a study, in consultation with ILO, on the relationship between underemployment and unemployment and shelter provision, including integrated employment-linked shelter-delivery options, for submission to the Commission in 1993. It suggested that the findings and recommendations from such a study be brought to the attention of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) (1992) to ensure consideration of the issue at the Conference.

Environmental aspects of human settlements

Water and environmental sanitation

The Commission, on 8 May 1991,<sup>(27)</sup> noting the convening of an international conference on water and the environment, scheduled for January 1992 at Dublin, Ireland, as part of UNCED preparations, asked the Executive Director to take an active part in the United Nations system's effort to elaborate an action-oriented outcome of that conference, particularly the human settlements and urban dimension of the international programmes and national action plans. It recommended that a major objective of national efforts and international cooperation be the provision of safe water and environmental sanitation for all and that the following aspects be reflected in programmes and plans: importance of water as a finite and fragile resource; development of effective water-resource management; concepts established within the WHO Health for All Strategy (see PART SEVEN, Chapter V) and the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990); the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000; and commitment by the international community to provide resources to achieve the objectives, including the role of the United Nations and multilateral financial organizations. It asked the Executive Director to cooperate with other United Nations organizations, in particular WHO, UNDP, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the United Nations Children's Fund, UNFPA and the United Nations Development Fund for Women, in elaborating UNCHS contributions to the Dublin conference. It also asked him to participate in and make a substantive contribution to the conference and to give priority in the 1992-1993 work programme to the human settlements and urban dimension of water and environmental sanitation.

Sustainable development

In 1991, UNCHS published a report, People, Settlements, Environment and Development: Improving the Living Environment for a Sustainable Future,<sup>(28)</sup> which discussed and made recommendations concerning sustainable development in relation to specific human settlements-related issues, such as human settlements management; land-resource management; water-supply policies; sanitation and wastewater management; solid-waste management policies; sustainable energy systems for human settlements; transport policies; and construction-sector policies.

The Executive Director reported in January 1991<sup>(29)</sup> on the significance of human settlements and the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 to sustainable development, emphasizing the relationship between economic development, improving the living conditions of the poor and managing and planning settlements. The report reviewed the sustainability of current settlement conditions and trends. Concerning shelter and the significance of the Global Strategy for the goal of sustainable development, the report maintained that the Strategy and its specific recommendations were useful tools for achieving development objectives in a sustainable context. It also examined the Strategy's impact on ecological sustainability. Annexed to the report was a synopsis of environmental checkpoints for the preparation and review of national shelter strategies.

The Commission, on 8 May 1991,<sup>(30)</sup> endorsed the report People, Settlements, Environment and Development and the Executive Director's report. It asked the Executive Director to transmit those reports to the Secretary-General of UNCED, recommending that the preparatory process of the Conference consider them as substantive contributions from UNCHS.

The Commission affirmed that human settlements related to seven of the main issues contained in a 1989 General Assembly resolution on UNCED,<sup>(31)</sup> namely, protection of the atmosphere, protection of the quality and supply of freshwater resources, protection of the oceans and coastal areas, protection and management of land resources, environmentally sound management of wastes, improvement of the living and working environment of the poor in urban slums and rural areas, and protection of human health conditions. The Commission requested the Executive Director to make further technical contributions to the UNCED preparatory process, focused on the above issues. It recommended that the UNCED Preparatory Committee, in preparing "Agenda 21", an action programme for the twenty-first century to be adopted by UNCED, consider human settlements in all related issues. It also recommended that Agenda 21 include: a costed and targeted capacity-building programme to implement the Global Strategy (that programme should aim at improving living conditions of the poor and make reference to the development and transfer of know-how and other inputs for the development of institutions, community participation, empowerment of women, housing finance systems, construction sector, land delivery and legislation and regulation); and a costed and targeted settlements management programme concerned with the management of water resources, solid and liquid wastes and land-use management. The Commission requested the Executive Director to continue to provide inputs to the UNCED secretariat and recommended that the important and distinct role of human settlements programmes be strengthened and expanded to include all aspects of an environmentally sound and sustainable approach to human settlements, taking into account the results of UNCED.

The Commission urged the Executive Director, in accordance with the Strategy, to emphasize work elements which could address and reverse undesirable environmental implications of settlement growth, especially in urban slums, by improvements in urban management. It strongly urged him, Governments and international organizations in their work on human settlements and environmental matters to consider the needs of the poor in urban slums and rural areas and also the needs of women-headed households. It appealed to Governments to support the Executive Director in those initiatives and to incorporate the approach to human settlements and sustainable development in their inputs and national reports to the UNCED preparatory process and to UNCED itself.

Recommending that Governments emphasize the exchange of experience, personnel and materials with other countries, particularly developing ones, the Commission appealed to Governments in countries with environmentally and physically unsustainable urban transport patterns to develop sustainable ones. It asked Governments to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation to facilitate the Centre's implementation of activities mentioned above and asked the Executive Director to prepare a report, for submission in 1993, on the results of UNCED, with special reference to human settlements issues.

1990 Intergovernmental Meeting. On 8 May 1991,<sup>(32)</sup> welcoming an Intergovernmental Meeting on Human Settlements and Sustainable Development (The Hague, Netherlands, November 1990), the Commission requested the Executive Director to implement the Meeting's proposals for its future work.<sup>(33)</sup> The proposals concerned a list of building materials and components which were potentially environmentally harmful; an inventory of research conducted by prominent research institutions on human settlements and sustainable development; an analysis to assist States in their performance regarding integrated life-cycle management, quality improvement, and efficiency in energy use in the field of housing, building and planning; an analysis of the environmental impact of activities of major firms involved in producing, importing and exporting building and construction materials and components; evaluation of large-scale (new) settlement developments—particularly those supported by international funding—as to their environmental sustainability; a study on the feasibility of establishing an international system or network for exchange and transfer of information and documentation on human settlements and sustainable development; and an inventory of training institutions for human settlements and sustainable development to facilitate the training of personnel for settlements management.

The Commission asked that the proposals be implemented in cooperation with the UNEP Executive Director and other relevant United Nations bodies. It further requested the UNCHS Executive Director to report on progress in 1993, while making information available and circulating it to Governments by 30 April 1992, on the understanding that one of the proposals—analysis of the environmental impact of activities of major firms—be broadened to cover an analysis of the environmental impact of the entire building and construction industry. The Commission appealed to Governments to assist in implementing the proposals by providing the necessary resources, in cash and/or in kind.

Energy

The Executive Director reported on the use of energy by households and in construction and production of building materials.<sup>(34)</sup> Regarding energy efficiency and sustainable energy availability in urban and rural households, he discussed strategies for developing countries, such as improving rural energy management, extending low-cost electricity to the urban poor, conducting surveys and collecting data, setting up decentralized and integrated energy systems, establishing training centres, promoting local manufacture and financing renewable-energy technologies. In developed countries, strategies included using efficient technologies, conducting surveys and collecting data.

Among the strategies for improving energy-use efficiency and reducing pollution problems in construction and production of building materials were optimizing the designs of buildings, improving energy efficiency in building-materials production and site-management of energy efficiency in construction.

The Executive Director presented proposals for national and international action to improve energy-use efficiency. He stressed the need for international cooperation to help developing countries introduce renewable-energy technologies for household use. The foremost need in the construction industry was to stimulate an energy-consciousness and to demonstrate the financial benefits of energy saving. Capacity-building in the developing countries was essential to improve energy efficiency in construction, to prevent the international transfer of polluting and wasteful technologies from developed to developing countries and to manage the transfer of energy-efficient and clean technologies to the best advantage of recipient countries.

The Commission, on 8 May 1991,<sup>(35)</sup> recommended that Governments consider implementing the measures described in the Executive Director's report. It emphasized that sustainable development of human settlements could best be achieved through rational, judicious and efficient use of energy by households, in construction and in production of building materials. It recommended that Governments encourage the use of proven renewable technologies and urged them to respond to the fact that women were the main end-users of household energy and that policies to improve energy efficiency must be based on the users' attitudes, behaviour patterns and motivation for change.

The Commission called on Governments to encourage improving energy efficiency and pollution control by design of buildings and in building-materials production and construction industries, and recommended that they provide necessary incentives to energy-conservation programmes and investments. It urged them to promote appropriate standards, specifications and building regulations to reduce energy consumption and to support clean, energy-efficient technologies. The Commission called on the international community to support programmes to improve energy efficiency and pollution control, with emphasis on developing countries, and recommended that UNCHS strengthen coordination with relevant United Nations organizations.

The Commission asked the Executive Director to include in the UNCHS work programme technical publications, background studies on marketability, profitability and consumer acceptance, and demonstration projects to promote new and renewable sources of energy and energy-efficient and clean technologies in the household, in the production of building materials and in on-site construction operations in developing countries. It further appealed to Governments and the international community to facilitate the establishment of research, demonstration and information-dissemination organizations, to create awareness of and to disseminate research findings on new and renewable and energy-efficient technologies in developing countries.

UN Centre for Human Settlements

Activities

The 1990-1991 UNCHS work programme<sup>(36)</sup> had eight subprogrammes: policies and strategies, settlement planning, shelter and community services, the indigenous construction sector, low-cost infrastructure, land, mobilization of finance, and institutions and management.

Under the first subprogramme, subregional seminars on national shelter strategies were held to assist Governments, the private sector and NGOs in implementing the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000. Short-term advisory services in formulating and implementing national shelter strategies were provided to a number of countries to back up national seminars and workshops. A technical report, Developing a National Shelter Strategy: Lessons from Four Countries, was published. Work continued on the second Global report on Human Settlements—studies and analysis of global conditions and trends, urbanization and sustainable development issues—and Shelter: From Projects to National Strategies a summary of action taken by some 130 Governments towards achieving the objectives of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (IYSH) (1987). A new statistical research programme, the City Data Programme, was launched.

Under the settlement planning subprogramme, case-studies on metropolitan management in Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, and Quito, Ecuador, were prepared for a technical publication. A research paper, "National rural settlement development programmes in developing countries", drew on the contributions of local consultants in Algeria, Bangladesh, Brazil, Cuba, Ecuador, Ghana and Honduras. High priority continued to be given to women's issues, with a focal point on women in human settlements development joining UNCHS. A report on a strategy for the full participation of women in all phases of the Global Strategy, including a plan of action, was published.

Shelter and community services focused on preparing and publishing a study on the contribution of cooperative movements to provide shelter to the poor; assessing experience in shelter delivery for the poor; advisory services to assist Governments in enabling shelter strategies and in developing community participation under the Global Strategy; and preparing two training modules on women in human settlements for national human settlements agencies. Training courses on community participation included a workshop on housing in development (Nairobi, Kenya); a course on microcomputer applications for urban transport in developing countries (Warsaw, Poland); a workshop on regional strategy for local government training for South Asia (Pokhara, Nepal); a seminar on a support system for local government training (Lima, Peru); and a training-of-trainers course (Ibarra, Ecuador). A long-term cooperation agreement with Denmark allowed UNCHS to continue its community participation programme in Bolivia, Sri Lanka and Zambia and to merge it with a new initiative to establish and operate community facilities in Costa Rica, Ecuador, Ghana and Uganda.

As to indigenous construction, national workshops on building maintenance strategy were held in India and Kenya, and an international workshop in Bulgaria. The United Nations Industrial Development Organization and UNCHS jointly held two international consultations, on the wood and wood products industry (Vienna) and on the building materials industry (Athens, Greece). The Commonwealth Science Council/UNCHS Journal of the Network of African Countries on Local Building Materials and Technologies continued to be published. Advisory services were provided to Governments on developing the building materials industry and promoting and organizing the construction industry under the Global Strategy.

Concerning low-cost infrastructure, research on solid-waste management, environmental health, water supply, transport and energy, with emphasis on sustainable human settlements development, provided input to UNCED and various organizations. Advisory services were provided on transport planning and on low-cost infrastructure provision and maintenance. Publications included a study on optimizing the use of energy sources in building materials production in developing countries; a technical paper on comparative modal efficiencies in transport in developing countries; and studies on stormwater drainage systems for human settlements.

Under the subprogramme on land, efforts intensified to devise land policies and land-management systems and instruments that would bring about an adequate and affordable supply of land to meet all settlement functions, with particular attention to the needs of disadvantaged groups, including women. A technical publication, Guidelines for the Improvement of Land-registration and Land-information Systems in Developing Countries, outlined measures to that end. Advisory services were provided to Governments on land-records management systems.

Human settlements financing focused on the problems of integrating housing finance systems with overall systems for national development financing. Strategies were prepared on integrating employment-generating activities with shelter development. Research continued on income generation in the construction and building materials sector. Publications included Finance for Shelter and Services as a Component of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and Building-related Income Generation for Women—Lessons from Experience. Advisory services were provided to assist Governments with integrating employment generation into shelter development and with developing housing finance systems under the Global Strategy.

The human settlements institutions and management subprogramme focused on establishing appropriate training institutions for developing countries, including advisory services to such institutions.

During 1991, UNCHS supported 285 technical cooperation programmes and projects in 100 countries, of which 87 projects were in least developed countries, with an overall budget of $44 million.<sup>(37)</sup> There were 33 short-term special advisory services missions focusing on data management and geographical information systems, building materials and low-cost construction technology, and human settlements finance.

UNCHS information activities included the production of the IYSH Bulletin, the Shelter Bulletin, Habitat News, and promotional material for World Habitat Day. Among video productions in 1991 were "A Future for the Past", on renovation/restoration efforts in Zanzibar, and a training package of six videos on community participation in Sri Lanka. A database for the Habitat Directory was created as an update, and the Documentation Service Bulletin, Bibliographic Notes and a List of Library Accessions were produced; an Addendum to the UNCHS Trilingual Thesaurus was published. During the year, 11 data advisory missions related to interregional advisory activities were made to Egypt, Finland, Malawi, Sri Lanka, Uganda, the United Arab Emirates, Yemen and Zimbabwe.

Urban Management Programme

The joint UNCHS/UNDP/World Bank Urban Management Programme (UMP), begun in 1986 and designed for a 10-year period, was the first major multilateral effort to support developing countries in improving urban management. UMP dealt with issues of effective land management, municipal finance and administration, infrastructure and urban environmental management, and was beginning to focus on capacity-building at the national and local levels.

An operational arm of UMP's urban environmental component, the Sustainable Cities Programme, launched by UNCHS in 1990, was a global technical cooperation programme to support municipal authorities in improving their environmental planning and management capacity. In 1991, the Programme's activities were initiated in Chile, Egypt, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Poland and the United Republic of Tanzania.

On 8 May 1991,<sup>(38)</sup> the Commission asked UNCHS, in conjunction with its partners in UMP, to accelerate the availability of its first-phase products-policy framework papers, tools and discussion series papers-to members, and develop mechanisms to respond rapidly and effectively to the demand for participation in UMP and the Sustainable Cities Programme capacity-building activities, involving wherever feasible NGOs. It urged UNCHS to ensure the incorporation of women's perspectives in the planning, strategy and implementation at all levels of UMP and recommended that member Governments extend and deepen partnership arrangements and utilize UMP as a mechanism for increasing collaboration and coordination in addressing human settlements management.

Accident at Chernobyl

Taking note of the Secretary-General's 1990 report<sup>(39)</sup> on international cooperation to address and mitigate the consequences of the 1986 accident at the Chernobyl nuclear powerplant in the Ukrainian SSR,<sup>(40)</sup> part of which outlined the UNCHS role in resettling the population from the radiation-affected areas, the Commission, on 8 May 1991,<sup>(41)</sup> commended the Executive Director for efforts made to implement Economic and Social Council<sup>(42)</sup> and General Assembly<sup>(43)</sup> resolutions of 1990. It asked him, in consultation with the Coordinator of the United Nations Chernobyl programme, to identify projects for the resettlement of people from the affected areas, and to make efforts in accelerating the implementation of the project of technical cooperation in the field of human settlements in the Byelorussian SSR, the area most affected by the consequences of the accident.

Small and medium-sized towns

On 8 May 1991,<sup>(44)</sup> the Commission recommended that Governments intensify efforts to strengthen the management capabilities of local authorities, with special emphasis at the lowest level and in close cooperation, whenever possible, with local NGOs, and that UNCHS, in collaboration with the relevant agencies, provide technical and financial assistance. It urged Governments to promote preparation of medium- and long-term plans for tertiary- and secondary-level urban centres in addition to bigger cities, according to a rational order focusing on land utilization, infrastructure, services and housing. The Commission asked the international community to assist Governments in achieving those objectives by way of financial and technical assistance.

Work programme

On 7 May 1991,<sup>(45)</sup> the Commission, after considering the Executive Director's report on the draft 1992-1993 work programme for UNCHS,<sup>(46)</sup> and noting that it was largely based on previous decisions and recommendations and that certain programme elements could not be changed because they were financed by non-programmable funds, decided to revise programme priorities to emphasize the effectiveness of national policies in providing human settlements funds; low-cost water and sanitation technology and management; biomass-energy technologies; appropriate buildings materials and construction technology and transfer mechanisms; printed material on small-scale technologies for construction; video films on small-scale technologies for building materials; and a workshop on appropriate building materials and construction technology and transfer mechanisms.

Coordination

By a resolution of 8 May 1991,<sup>(47)</sup> the Commission, having considered the Executive Director's reports on the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination on in-depth evaluation of the major human settlements programme,<sup>(48)</sup> on coordination and cooperation within the United Nations system,<sup>(49)</sup> and on cooperation with intergovernmental organizations outside the United Nations system and with NGOs,<sup>(50)</sup> as well as the joint progress report of the Executive Directors of UNCHS and UNEP,<sup>(51)</sup> decided that coordination and cooperation should continue and be further improved and consider areas such as energy, transport and natural and man-made disasters. It asked the Executive Director to submit the text of the resolution to the UNCED Secretary-General for action.

On 7 May,<sup>(52)</sup> the Commission requested the Executive Director to communicate his report on the Commission's contribution to UNCED<sup>(28)</sup> and the report of discussions at its 1991 session on the comprehensive triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system<sup>(53)</sup> to the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation.

On 8 May,<sup>(54)</sup> the Commission asked the Executive Director to examine the possibility of convening a meeting of governmental, non-governmental and community-based organizations to discuss all aspects, possibilities and modalities for increased international government/non-governmental cooperation in human settlements, provided additional means became available.

Global Parliamentarians on Habitat

At the fifth meeting of the Global Parliamentarians on Habitat (Harare, 30 April and 1 May 1991), the Chairman highlighted the role of Parliamentarians and drew attention to the critical links between natural and living environments. The meeting stressed the importance of disseminating information on legislation and the exchange of experience among Parliamentarians, and endorsed the view that more dwellings should be built.

Taking note of the decisions and recommendations made at the meeting, which were annexed to a Commission resolution of 8 May 1991,<sup>(55)</sup> the Commission requested the Executive Director to extend support to the 1992 Conference of Global Parliamentarians on Human Settlements and Development, scheduled to be held in Canada.

Financing

During the 1990-1991 biennium, the UNCHS work programme was financed from the United Nations regular budget and from extrabudgetary resources. Programme support income from projects financed by UNDP and trust funds amounted to $5.9 million, while income for the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation was $18 million.

UNCHS project delivery amounted to $63.1 million, including projects financed by UNDP ($40.7 million), the Foundation ($12.1 million) and other sources ($10.4 million).

UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation

The status of voluntary contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation as at 1 March 1991,<sup>(56)</sup> consisted of unpaid pledges of $746,982 and pledges for 1991 of $4.81 million.

At a pledging meeting held during the Commission's 1991 session, new pledges were made to the Foundation amounting to $1.9 million ($958,073 for 1991 and $947,666 for 1992). In addition, some 30 countries pledged $2.4 million at the November United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities.

In 1991, contributions to the Foundation totalled $7.6 million from 66 countries. Pledges for future years amounted to $2.36 million as at 31 December 1991.

Chapter X

Human rights

In 1991, the United Nations continued its efforts to foster human rights and fundamental freedoms world-wide and to curtail their violations.

Protection of detained persons was again a substantial part of the United Nations work in human rights. The Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances continued to investigate cases and the Commission on Human Rights established a working group of independent experts to investigate cases of detention imposed arbitrarily or otherwise. Another working group was set up to consider a draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced or involuntary disappearances.

Work progressed on other draft declarations concerning freedom and non-discrimination in respect of everyone to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country; the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms; the rights of indigenous peoples; and the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities.

The Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights (1993) held its first session in September. Preparations were undertaken for the International Year for the World's Indigenous People (1993). In December, the General Assembly outlined the Year's programme of activities (resolution 46/128).

The Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty, entered into force on 11 July; it had been adopted by the General Assembly in 1989. In December, the Assembly adopted a declaration on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights (46/81). Also in December, the Assembly adopted the Principles for the Protection of Persons with Mental Illness and for the Improvement of Health Care (46/119).

Situations involving alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were again examined.

Action on these and other human rights issues taken by the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session, held at Geneva from 28 January to 8 March 1991, was embodied in 82 resolutions and 10 decisions; those by its Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its forty-third session, held also at Geneva from 5 to 30 August, numbered 39 resolutions and 19 decisions.

Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993)

Implementation of the Programme for the Decade

In 1991, United Nations efforts to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination were carried out in accordance with the plan of activities for 1985-1989 put forward in 1984<sup>(1)</sup> and the plan approved by the General Assembly in 1987,<sup>(2)</sup> covering the remainder of the Decade, 1990-1993.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General, in January 1991, reported to the Commission on Human Rights<sup>(3)</sup> on activities of United Nations bodies, national legislation to combat racism and racial discrimination, seminars and training courses, the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade and the plan of activities for the Second Decade.

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council requests of 1985<sup>(4)</sup> and 1990,<sup>(5)</sup> he submitted, in April 1991,<sup>(6)</sup> his annual report summarizing activities undertaken or contemplated by Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to achieve the Decade's objectives. The report also discussed efforts taken by the Coordinator of United Nations activities under the Second Decade pursuant to his 1990 mandate,<sup>(7)</sup> seminars and training courses and the plan of activities for the Second Decade. By a 13 September note,<sup>(8)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted the report to the General Assembly.

In September,<sup>(9)</sup> the Coordinator for the Second Decade submitted a note to the Assembly updating the Secretary-General's April report.

Human Rights Commission action. On 22 February 1991,<sup>(10)</sup> the Commission commended

all States that had ratified or acceded to the international instruments relevant to the Decade and appealed to others to do the same. It urged cooperation from States and international organizations in implementing those activities for the 1985-1989 plan not yet undertaken and the plan for 1990-1993 and appealed for generous contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade. Within the 1990-1993 plan of activities, the Commission selected as its topic for 1992 the treatment of political prisoners and detainees in South Africa, particularly women and children; as its topic for 1993, it decided on the global survey on the extent of dissemination of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.<sup>(11)</sup> The Commission recommended that the Assembly take steps to launch a third decade to combat racism and racial discrimination, to begin in 1993, and asked the Secretary-General to continue to accord the highest priority to measures to combat apartheid. It also asked him to continue to keep it informed of measures taken to ensure that the resources for implementing the Second Decade's activities were included in the 1990-1991 budget and in the proposed 1992-1993 budget and also to inform it annually of progress made in carrying out the 1992-1993 plan of activities so that the Commission could make its contribution thereto. The Commission further asked the Secretary-General: to prepare and finalize, with the assistance of experts, a handbook of recourse procedures for victims of racism and racial discrimination; to distribute widely among Governments, United Nations organs and specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations a report on a 1990 seminar on the political, historical, economic, social and cultural factors contributing to racism, racial discrimination and apartheid;<sup>(12)</sup> and to organize in 1991 a meeting of representatives of national institutions and organizations promoting tolerance and harmony and combating racism and racial discrimination.

In May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/234, approved the Commission's requests to prepare and finalize a handbook of recourse procedures for victims of racism and racial discrimination and to hold a meeting in 1991 of representatives of national institutions and organizations promoting tolerance and harmony and combating racism and racial discrimination with a view to exchanging experience on promoting such objectives. The meeting was subsequently postponed.

Subcommission action. On 20 August 1991,<sup>(13)</sup> the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities adopted a resolution on measures to combat racism and racial discrimination and the role of the Subcommission.

Other action. At its thirty-ninth session (Geneva, 4-22 March 1991), the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), having noted that an important focus of the Second Decade was the implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in 1965<sup>(11)</sup> and in force since 1969,<sup>(14)</sup> on 18 March 1991<sup>(15)</sup> called on the Assembly to encourage those States which had not done so to become parties to the Convention. In addition, the Subcommission and CERD met jointly on 19 August 1991 to exchange views on preventing racial discrimination.

A second inter-agency consultation was convened by the Coordinator for United Nations Activities under the Second Decade (Geneva, 19 April 1991).<sup>(9)</sup> The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) had submitted to the Commission on Human Rights, in January,<sup>(16)</sup> its contribution to the second inter-agency consultation, outlining activities planned for 1991 and proposals for improving coordination and cooperation.

Bearing in mind the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989 and contained in the annex thereto,

Noting with deep concern the decisions of certain Governments to relax the existing measures even before apartheid is eradicated and a non-racial democratic society is established in South Africa,

Expressing deep concern that the lack of resolve on the part of the South African regime to end the violence in that country could lead to further escalation of tension and loss of more lives,

7. Welcomes the adoption by the General Assembly of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their

Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its objective set forth in the Charter of the United Nations to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming also its firm determination and its commitment to eradicate totally and unconditionally racism in all its forms, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 14 December 1960,

Recalling further the two World Conferences to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva in 1978 and 1983,

Noting with grave concern that, despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the two Decades for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination have not been attained and that millions of human beings continue to this day to be the victims of varied forms of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 45/105 of 14 December 1990,

Emphasising once again the necessity of attaining the objectives of the Second Decade,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General and his report submitted within the framework of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

1. Declares once again that all forms of racism and racial discrimination, particularly in their institutionalized form, such as apartheid, or resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity, are among the most serious violations of human rights in the contemporary world and must be combated by all available means;

2. Decides that the international community, in general, and the United Nations, in particular, should continue to give the highest priority to programmes for combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid and intensify their efforts, during the latter part of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, to provide assistance and relief to the victims of racism and all forms of racial discrimination and apartheid, especially in South Africa and in occupied territories and territories under alien domination;

11. Considers that all the parts of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination should receive equal attention in order to attain the objectives of the Second Decade;

12. Regrets that part of the programme for the period 1983-1989 has not yet been implemented because of lack of adequate resources, as indicated in the report of the Secretary-General;

Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1991,(17) there were 130 parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination adopted by the General Assembly in 1965(11) and in force since 1969.(18) Estonia and Zimbabwe became parties during 1991.

The Commission on Human Rights, in February,(10) appealed to those States that had not yet done so to ratify, accede to and implement the Convention, among other international instruments to combat racism.

Revision of the Convention

Communication. By a letter of 21 November 1991,(19) Australia requested a revision of the Convention, pursuant to article 23, amending article 8, paragraph 6.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted decision 46/429 without vote.

Consideration of the request for the revision of article 8, paragraph 6, of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

At its 75th plenary meeting, on 17 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, aware that the Government of Australia had made a written request for the revision of article 8, paragraph 6, of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, by substituting, for existing paragraph 6, a new paragraph reading "The Secretary-General shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee under the Convention", and by adding a new paragraph, as paragraph 7, reading "The members of the Committee established under the present Convention shall receive emoluments from United Nations resources on such terms and conditions as the General Assembly may decide", and having noted that article 23 of the Convention required the General Assembly to decide upon the steps, if any, to be taken in respect of such a request, decided:

(a) To request the States parties to the Convention to consider the proposed revision at their next meeting in January 1992;

(b) To request the meeting of States parties to limit the scope of any revision of the Convention to the question of arrangements for meeting the expenses of members of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination while they are performing Committee duties, as provided for in article 8, paragraph 6, of the Convention.

General Assembly decision 46/429

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/46/721) without vote, 29 November (meeting 55); draft by Australia (A/C.3/46/L.47); agenda item 98.

Financial implications. 5th Committee A/46/778; S-G. A/C.3/46/L.35, A/C.5/46/58.

Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 3rd Committee 38, 40-55; 5th Committee 51, 52; plenary 75.

Implementation of the Convention

CERD activities. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, set up under article 8 of the Convention, held two sessions in 1991, both at Geneva: the thirty-ninth from 4 to 22 March and the fortieth from 5 to 23 August.

Most of the Committee's work was devoted to examining reports submitted by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions. After considering reports by 29 States under article 9 of the Convention, the Committee provided, in its report to the General Assembly on its 1990-1991 activities,<sup>(20)</sup> a summary of its members' views on each country report and of statements made by the States parties concerned. Regarding reporting obligations under article 9, the Committee, on 18 March,<sup>(21)</sup> adopted a decision on delays in submission of periodic reports in which it called on the Secretary-General to encourage States parties to consider ways by which all States might be brought to fulfil their obligation. In a decision of 13 August,<sup>(22)</sup> the Committee stated that, in examining reports of States parties, Committee members required access to governmental and non-governmental sources of information.

In conformity with article 15 of the Convention, CERD considered documents related to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted to it by the Trusteeship Council (see PART FOUR, Chapter I) and by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The Committee decided to draw the attention of the General Assembly and relevant United Nations bodies to its observations on the reports of its three working groups-Atlantic Ocean and Caribbean Territories, including Gibraltar; Pacific and Indian Ocean Territories; and African Territories-and to the fact that it found it impossible to fulfil its functions under article 15 as the documents furnished by United Nations bodies did not contain valid information concerning measures directly related to the Convention's principles and objectives. It requested that competent bodies furnish it with material expressly referred to in article 15, paragraph 2 (a), of the Convention (i.e., petitions as well as reports concerning legislative, judicial, administrative or other measures applied by the administrative Powers within the Territories).

The Committee continued to consider, in conformity with article 14 of the Convention, communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming violation of their rights under the Convention by a State party recognizing CERD competence to receive and consider such communications. Fourteen of the States parties-Algeria, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Senegal, Sweden and Uruguay-had declared such recognition. The text of the Committee's opinion on the sole communication considered was annexed to its report.

CERD also considered activities to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (see above) and in August adopted a decision on the World Conference on Human Rights (see under "Advancement of human rights"), recommending that improving the implementation of existing human rights standards and instruments should be a major focus of the preparatory process.

Following an Assembly request of December 1990,<sup>(23)</sup> the Secretary-General in May 1991 outlined to the States parties to the Convention ways to establish a more secure basis for financing the expenses of CERD members and invited them to submit their replies by 31 August.<sup>(24)</sup> As at 30 September, 20 replies were received, with 16 States parties agreeing to establish a contingency reserve fund and four not concurring with the proposal. In the absence of unanimous agreement, it was recommended that the question be taken up in January 1992 during the next scheduled meeting of States parties to the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/83 without vote.

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and its resolutions on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, as well as its other relevant resolutions on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Reiterating the importance of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, which is one of the most widely accepted human rights instruments adopted under the auspices of the United Nations,

Aware of the importance of the contributions of the Committee to the efforts of the United Nations to combat racism and all other forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin,

Reiterating once again the need to intensify the struggle for the elimination of racism and racial discrimination throughout the world, especially the elimination of the system of apartheid in South Africa,

Emphasising the obligation of all States parties to the Convention to take legislative, judicial and other measures in order to secure full implementation of the provisions of the Convention,

Recalling the urgent appeals made by the Secretary-General, the General Assembly, the meetings of States parties to the Convention and the Committee itself to the States parties to honour their financial obligations under the Convention,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of the members of the Committee to explore ways and means to overcome the Committee's current financial crisis,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee,

1. Expresses its profound concern at the fact that a number of States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination have still not fulfilled their financial obligations;

2. Expresses once again its concern that such a situation may lead to a further delay in the discharge of the substantive obligations of the Committee under the Convention;

3. Commends the Committee for its work with regard to the implementation of the Convention and the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the work of its thirty-ninth and fortieth sessions;

5. Calls upon States parties to fulfil their obligations under article 9, paragraph 1, of the Convention, to submit in due time their periodic reports on measures taken to implement the Convention and to pay their outstanding contributions and, if possible, their contributions for 1992 before 1 February 1992, so as to enable the Committee to meet regularly;

6. Strongly appeals to all States parties, especially those in arrears, to fulfil their financial obligations under article 8, paragraph 6, of the Convention;

7. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to explore the possibilities for establishing a more secure basis for the future financing of all the costs of the Committee, taking into account the views and proposals of States parties, submitted in accordance with paragraph 7 of General Assembly resolution 45/88 of 14 December 1990;

8. Calls upon the States parties, as a matter of priority, to consider all possibilities for establishing a more secure basis for the future financing of all the costs of the Committee;

9. Notes that the Secretary-General has proposed in his report that the States parties at their next meeting should consider the question of the establishment of a "contingency reserve fund";

10. Requests the Secretary-General to invite those States parties that are in arrears to pay the amounts in arrears, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

11. Decides to consider at its forty-seventh session, under the item entitled "Elimination of racism and racial discrimination", the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee and the report of the Committee.

Other aspects of discrimination

Religious freedom

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In January 1991,<sup>(25)</sup> Special Rapporteur Angelo Vidal d'Almeida Ribeiro (Portugal), appointed in 1986,<sup>(26)</sup> submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a report containing information from 35 Governments on their legislative provisions to restrict religious intolerance and discrimination. He discussed allegations of infringements of the rights and freedoms set out in the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and Discrimination Based on Religious Belief.<sup>(27)</sup> The Special Rapporteur pointed out that many persons continued to be detained for religious reasons and were in some cases subjected to torture and ill-treatment, including death.

He urged States to ratify the relevant international instruments and recommended that they continue to consider preparing a separate binding instrument. He believed that States should constantly monitor their legislation and make available administrative and judicial remedies. He recommended increased dissemination of the principles contained in the 1981 Declaration to law-makers, judges, lawyers and civil servants, encouraging them to eliminate the causes of religious intolerance. He pointed to the importance of countries availing themselves of the advisory services offered by the United Nations to help draft new legislative provisions or adapt existing legislation to the principles set out in the 1981 Declaration.

Human Rights Commission action. As requested by the General Assembly in 1990,<sup>(28)</sup> the Commission continued in 1991 to consider measures to implement the 1981 Declaration. On 5 March 1991,<sup>(29)</sup> in the context of the Declaration's tenth anniversary, the Commission urged States to consider further measures to promote its implementation. It considered it desirable to enhance United Nations promotional activities relating to freedom of religion or belief and to ensure that measures were taken to that end in the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights (see under "Advancement of human rights"). The Commission asked the Secretary-General to accord priority to disseminating the Declaration in all official United Nations languages and in national languages and to invite NGOs to consider what further role they could play in disseminating the Declaration. It called on Governments to cooperate with its Special Rapporteur and asked the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to enable him to report to the Commission in 1992.

The Commission's request to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur was approved on 31 May by Economic and Social Council decision 1991/245.

Subcommission action. On 20 August 1991,<sup>(30)</sup> the Subcommission adopted a resolution on the elimination of all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/131 without vote.

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the need to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling its resolution 45/136 of 14 December 1990, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration,

Encouraged by the efforts being made by the Commission on Human Rights and by the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to study relevant developments affecting the implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/27 of 2 March 1990 and Economic and Social Council decision 1990/229 of 25 May 1990, by which the mandate of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate was extended for two years,

Recognizing that it is desirable to enhance the promotional and public information activities of the United Nations in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and that both Governments and non-governmental organizations have an important role to play in this domain,

Emphasising that non-governmental organizations and religious bodies and groups at every level have an important role to play in the promotion of tolerance and the protection of freedom of religion or belief by, inter alia, engaging in the examination of the most effective means to promote the implementation of the Declaration,

Conscious of the importance of education in ensuring tolerance of religion and belief,

Seriously concerned that intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief continue to occur in many parts of the world and that in some respects the incidence thereof has increased,

Believing that further efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and to eliminate all forms of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief,

Recalling that 1991 marks the tenth anniversary of the proclamation by the General Assembly of the Declaration and that this provides an opportunity to reinforce efforts aimed at the effective implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling also that the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the working paper prepared by Mr. Theo van Boven, member of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, which contained a compilation of provisions relevant to the elimination of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, as well as the issues and factors to be considered before any drafting of a further binding international instrument, and emphasizing, in this connection, the relevance of General Assembly resolution 41/120 of 4 December 1986 entitled "Setting international standards in the field of human rights",

1. Reaffirms that freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is a right guaranteed to all without discrimination;

2. ## Indigenous populations

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,(32) the Commission on Human Rights recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the Working Group on Indigenous Populations (see below) be authorized to meet for 10 days prior to the Subcommission's 1991 session to intensify its efforts to complete a draft declaration on indigenous rights. It asked the Secretary-General to: assist the Group and its Chairman-Rapporteur; transmit the Group's 1990 report<sup>(33)</sup> to Governments, indigenous peoples and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for comments and suggestions on the texts contained in the annexes; prepare a note on the financial implications of convening one or more future sessions of the Group in Latin America or the Asia and Pacific region; organize a regional training course in Latin America on the United Nations, human rights and indigenous people; and ensure that the Group's sessions were provided with interpretation and documentation in English and Spanish. The Commission appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to consider favourably requests for contributions to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations, established by a 1985 Assembly resolution.<sup>(34)</sup>

As requested by the Commission, the Secretary-General, in a June 1991 note,<sup>(35)</sup> gave financial implications of convening one or more of the Group's future meetings in Latin America or Asia.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/249, authorized the Working Group to meet for ten working days prior to the Subcommission's 1991 session and approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to assist the Group and its Chairman-Rapporteur and to ensure that all meetings were provided with interpretation and documentation in English and Spanish.

Working Group activities. At its ninth session (Geneva, 22 July–2 August 1991), the Working Group on Indigenous Populations,<sup>(36)</sup> having completed the first reading of the draft universal declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, agreed to submit the revised text to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and indigenous peoples' organizations, requesting their comments. Annexed to the Group's report were the amended preambular and operative paragraphs of the draft declaration.

Subcommission action. On 29 August 1991, the Subcommission adopted resolutions dealing with the draft universal declaration,<sup>(37)</sup> ownership and control of the cultural property of indigenous peoples,<sup>(38)</sup> and economic and social relations between indigenous peoples and States.<sup>(39)</sup> On the same date,<sup>(40)</sup> it adopted a decision on the study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations.

Other action. A meeting of experts to review the experience of countries in the operation of schemes of internal self-government for indigenous peoples was held at Nuuk, Greenland, from 24 to 28 September.<sup>(41)</sup> The meeting of experts adopted a number of conclusions and recommendations for action to be taken by States to assist indigenous people in self-government. It also recommended that: existing advisory services and technical assistance programmes within the United Nations system should be used to finance training for indigenous peoples and autonomous and self-governmental institutions; the United Nations should deal with the rights of indigenous people and their protection on a permanent basis; the Commission on Human Rights should consider establishing international monitoring mechanisms for indigenous peoples; and its conclusions and recommendations should be considered for inclusion among the themes of the International Year for the World's Indigenous People. The Secretary-General was requested to give the widest possible distribution to the report, recommendations and working papers of the meeting.

International Year for the World's indigenous People (1993)

In 1991, preparations for the International Year for the World's Indigenous People (1993), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1990,<sup>(42)</sup> were undertaken by the Commission on Human Rights, its Subcommission, the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), Governments, intergovernmental organizations and indigenous peoples' organizations.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,<sup>(43)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights recommended that specialized agencies, regional commissions and other United Nations organizations, in considering their contributions to the success of the Year, be guided by how their operational activities could most effectively contribute to solving problems faced by indigenous people and how indigenous people could play an important role in planning, implementing and evaluating projects which might affect them. It asked Member States to inform the Secretary-General of their initiatives and to propose themes for the Year. The Secretary-General was asked, in preparing the Year's draft programme of activities, to consider the work of the Subcommission and the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and specific recommendations for coordinating and implementing the draft programme. He was also asked to accept and administer voluntary contributions from Governments, intergovernmental organizations and indigenous and non-indigenous organizations to fund the Year's programme activities.

Subcommission action. On 29 August 1991, the Subcommission adopted a resolution<sup>(44)</sup> and a decision<sup>(45)</sup> on the Year.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a General Assembly request of December 1990,<sup>(42)</sup> the Secretary-General, in October 1991, summarized replies received from Governments, intergovernmental organizations, indigenous peoples' organizations and NGOs, as at 30 September 1991, on their planned activities for the Year.<sup>(46)</sup> He reported on proposed guidelines for the Year concerning international cooperation, participation and raising public awareness, as well as on a draft programme of activities for the Year and arrangements for its coordination and financing.

Working Group activities. At its ninth session,<sup>(36)</sup> the Working Group on Indigenous Populations suggested that an appropriate central theme for the Year might be empowerment through partnership. It endorsed the recommendations, contained in a working paper prepared by Special Rapporteurs Asbjorn Eide (Norway) and Christy Mbonu (Nigeria),<sup>(47)</sup> that the General Assembly designate a United Nations coordinator for the Year and that opening ceremonies for the Year be held at the Assembly in New York on or about 12 October 1992.

Other action. The formulation of concrete plans for the contributions of UNDP and UNICEF to the Year's objectives was requested in 1991 by their respective governing organs.<sup>(48, 49)</sup>

At its April/May 1991 session, the UNICEF Executive Board called on the UNICEF secretariat to formulate concrete plans for UNICEF's contribution to the Year.<sup>(48)</sup>

On 5 April 1991,<sup>(50)</sup> the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (1992) asked the Secretary-General of the Conference, in preparing reports for the Preparatory Committee, to take into account: traditional knowledge and practices of indigenous people and their relationship to the environment; means of strengthening those practices in the context of economic growth and development; and the relevance of those practices to the issues of environment and development. It invited Governments, international organizations and NGOs to provide information on those issues to the secretariat.

On 4 September,<sup>(51)</sup> the Preparatory Committee adopted a decision regarding the opportunity afforded by the Year as a first step towards mobilizing international technical and financial cooperation for the self-development of indigenous people and their communities. It invited the President of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations to contribute to the work of the secretariat and to participate in the deliberations of the Preparatory Committee.

Protection of minorities

Draft declaration

Activities related to the protection of minorities continued to focus in 1991 on the elaboration of a declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities. As in previous years, the Commission on Human Rights set up an informal open-ended working group which met from 4 to 18 February and on 28 February 1991. Annexed to the group's report<sup>(55)</sup> were the texts of articles 1 and 2, on which preliminary agreement had been reached, and the texts which remained to be adopted in second reading—articles 3 to 8 and a new article.

On 6 March 1991,<sup>(56)</sup> the Commission recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

Following authorization by the Council (see below), the working group met from 2 to 13 December and adopted in second reading the draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities which was annexed to the group's report.<sup>(57)</sup> It also considered suggestions submitted by an informal drafting group for preambular and operative paragraphs for inclusion in a resolution accompanying the draft declaration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By resolution 1991/30, adopted without vote on 31 May 1991 on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council authorized an open-ended working group to hold twenty fully serviced meetings in December 1991 to complete its second reading of the draft declaration and asked the Secretary-General to provide the working group with all the assistance required.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Having decided in 1990<sup>(58)</sup> to defer consideration of a draft resolution<sup>(59)</sup> on non-discrimination and protection of minorities until 1991, the General Assembly, on 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 46/115 without vote.

Non-discrimination and protection of minorities

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that one of the main purposes of the United Nations, as proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations, is to achieve international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Noting the importance of the effective implementation of international human rights instruments with regard to the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, linguistic and religious minorities,

Welcoming the increased attention given by the human rights treaty bodies to the non-discrimination and protection of minorities,

Aware of the provisions of article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights concerning the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities,

Considering that the United Nations has an important role to play regarding the protection of minorities,

Bearing in mind the work done so far within the United Nations system, in particular by the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Noting the important achievements in this regard in regional, subregional and bilateral frameworks, which can provide a useful source of inspiration for future United Nations activities,

Stressing the need to ensure for all, without discrimination of any kind, full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and, in particular, to accomplish the elaboration of a draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities,

Recalling its decision 45/434 of 18 December 1990 and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/61 of 6 March 1991, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/30 of 31 May 1991, in which the Council authorised the holding of an inter-sessional session of the open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to enable the working group to complete its second reading of the draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, with a view to submitting the text to the Commission at its forty-eighth session,

1. Encourages the Commission on Human Rights to complete the final text of the draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities as soon as possible and to transmit it for adoption to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session of the work done by the Commission on Human Rights with regard to the draft declaration;

3. Decides to keep the issue of the elaboration of the draft declaration on its agenda under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Minority problems

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,<sup>(60)</sup> the Commission endorsed the methods proposed by the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur (Asbjorn Eide, Norway) in a 1990 report <sup>(61)</sup> for the further study of possible ways and means of facilitating the peaceful and constructive problems involving minorities and requested him to submit a preliminary report to the Subcommission.

On 31 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/250, approved the Commission's requests to the Special Rapporteur to submit a preliminary report to the Subcommission and to the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance he might require, including a technical meeting of experts for three days.

Subcommission action. On 28 August 1991, the Subcommission adopted two resolutions concerning minorities, one on facilitating the peaceful and constructive solution of their problems,<sup>(62)</sup> in which it requested the Secretary-General to prepare, with the cooperation of the Special Rapporteur, the technical meeting of experts on minorities with a view to its taking place in 1992, and another concerning persons belonging to the Roma (gypsy) community.<sup>(63)</sup>

Report of the Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Asbjorn Eide (Norway) submitted in June his preliminary report,<sup>(64)</sup> as requested by the Commission. He presented guidelines relating to: non-discrimination and full participation; rights of minorities and the stability of States; dangers of ethnic conflict for security; measures for the effective protection of human rights; the role of development in removing economic and social obstacles; and protecting also the rights of majorities.

HIV- and AIDS-related discrimination

Report of the Special Rapporteur. The Subcommission's Special Rapporteur, Louis Varela Quirós (Costa Rica), submitted in July 1991 a progress report on discrimination against human immunodeficiency virus (HIV)-infected people or people with acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), having submitted a preliminary report in 1990.<sup>(66)</sup>

Subcommission action. On 29 August 1991,<sup>(67)</sup> the Subcommission decided to ask the Special Rapporteur to submit his final report in 1992 and requested the Secretary-General to give him the assistance he needed.

Civil and political rights

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocol

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1991, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966(1) and in force since 1976,(2) had been ratified or acceded to by 100 and 60 States, respectively.(3) Albania, Estonia, Grenada, Haiti, Israel, Lithuania, Nepal and Zimbabwe became parties to the Covenant in 1991. Australia, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Lithuania, Mongolia, Nepal, Poland, Ukraine and the USSR acceded to the Optional Protocol.

The Second Optional Protocol, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty—adopted and opened for signature, ratification or accession by the General Assembly in 1989(4)—entered into force on 11 July 1991 in accordance with the provisions of its article 8. As at 31 December 1991, the Second Optional Protocol had been ratified or acceded to by 10 States. In 1991, Finland, Iceland, the Netherlands, Norway, Romania and Spain had ratified the Protocol.

In his annual report to the Assembly on the International Covenants on Human Rights,(5) the Secretary-General provided information on the status of the Covenant and the Optional Protocols as at 1 August 1991 (see under “Advancement of human rights”).

Human Rights Commission action. On 22 February 1991,(6) the Commission on Human Rights appealed to States that had not done so to become parties to the Covenant and Optional Protocols and to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant. A similar appeal was made by the Assembly later in the year in resolution 46/113. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide technical assistance to States not parties to the Covenant with a view to assisting them to ratify it or accede thereto and requested him to report in 1992 on the Status of the Covenant and its Optional Protocols.

Implementation

Human Rights Committee activities. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions in 1991: the forty-first in New York from 25 March to 12 April; and the forty-second from 8 to 26 July and forty-third from 21 October to 8 November, both at Geneva.

At those sessions, the Committee considered reports from 13 States—Austria, Ecuador, India, Iraq (2 reports), Jordan, Madagascar, Morocco, Panama, Poland, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden and the United Kingdom—under article 40 of the Covenant. It adopted views on seven communications from individuals claiming that their rights under the Covenant had been violated. The cases concerned France (3) and Jamaica (4). The Committee decided that six other such communications were inadmissible. Annexed to the Committee’s report(7) was the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on Communications, designated in 1989,(8) to expedite the processing of new communications.

In other action, the Committee adopted and annexed to its report recommendations to the preparatory committee of the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights (see under “Advancement of human rights”). At its March/April session, it considered texts updating its general comments on articles 7 and 10 of the Covenant which prohibit torture and forced subjection to medical or scientific experimentation and urge humane treatment of prisoners, as submitted by its working group. General comments were intended to assist States parties to fulfil their reporting obligations and to promote implementation of the Covenant. By a 12 April note,(9) the Secretary-General stated that the complexity of those issues precluded the Committee’s completion of its work and it was anticipated that the comments would be adopted later in 1991 for consideration by the Economic and Social Council in 1992.

In October/November, the Committee adopted an update of a general comment on article 7 which, among other things, stated that the law must prohibit the use or admissibility in judicial proceedings of incriminatory statements or confessions obtained through torture or ill-treatment.<sup>(10)</sup>

Taking note of the Committee's report, the Assembly, in resolution 46/113, requested the Secretary-General to give more publicity to the Committee's work.

State of siege or emergency

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,<sup>(11)</sup> the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council a draft concerning the work of the Special Rapporteur on human rights and states of emergency (see below). On the same date,<sup>(12)</sup> it requested its Subcommission to consider the effectiveness of habeas corpus and similar remedies during states of emergency and to formulate suggestions thereon.

The Commission,<sup>(6)</sup> as did the Assembly later in the year in resolution 46/113, underlined the necessity for strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the Covenant and the need for States parties to provide the fullest possible information during states of emergency, so that the justification and appropriateness of measures taken in those circumstances could be assessed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/262, endorsed a 1990 Subcommission request<sup>(13)</sup> to the Special Rapporteur to continue to update the list on states of emergency and to present in his annual report to the Subcommission and the Commission draft standard provisions on emergency situations. It also endorsed the Subcommission's request that the Secretary-General provide the Special Rapporteur with all the assistance he might require.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In June, the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur Leandro Despouy (Argentina) submitted his fourth annual report and information on 61 States which, since 1 January 1985, had proclaimed, extended or terminated a state of emergency.<sup>(14)</sup> Previous reports were issued in 1987,<sup>(15)</sup> 1988<sup>(16)</sup> and 1989.<sup>(17)</sup> The Special Rapporteur also discussed the internal and international legality of states of emergency, their effect on human rights, and criteria and model legal provisions applicable in such situations. Annexed to his report were draft guidelines for developing legislation on states of emergency, a dated list of replies received from Governments, United Nations bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and a list of specialized publications.

Subcommission action. On 28 August 1991,<sup>(18)</sup> the Subcommission requested the Secretary-General to transmit the Special Rapporteur's updated report to two experts-Louis Joinet (France) and Rafael Rivas Posada (Colombia)-asking them to study that report and comment thereon at the Subcommission's 1992 session. Also on that date,<sup>(19)</sup> the Subcommission adopted a resolution concerning habeas corpus.

Self-determination of peoples

By four resolutions adopted in 1991, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the right to self-determination of the people of Afghanistan,<sup>(20)</sup> Palestine, South Africa<sup>(22)</sup> and Western Sahara.<sup>(23)</sup> A fifth resolution<sup>(24)</sup> adopted under the item pertained to the use of mercenaries as a means to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination. In addition, the Commission adopted a decision on Cambodia,<sup>(25)</sup> stressing that a political settlement of the conflict there would help achieve the exercise of the right to self-determination for the Cambodian people.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In 1991, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the right to self-determination, a right it repeatedly reaffirmed for individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 46/88 without vote.

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of an increasing number of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third, forty-fourth, forty-fifth, forty-sixth and forty-seventh sessions,

Reaffirming its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981, 37/42 of 3 December 1982, 38/16 of 22 November 1983, 39/18 of 23 November 1984, 40/24 of 29 November 1985, 41/100 of 4 December 1986, 42/94 of 7 December 1987, 43/105 of 8 December 1988, 44/80 of 8 December 1989 and 45/131 of 14 December 1990,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,<sup>a</sup>

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, particularly the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of these acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts, and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this issue to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

Also on 16 December, on the Third Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted resolution 46/87 by recorded vote.

Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its faith in the importance of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Reaffirming also the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, national sovereignty and territorial integrity and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples as imperatives for the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Reaffirming further the obligation of all Member States to comply with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the resolutions of the United Nations regarding the exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial and foreign domination,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) and all relevant resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Considering the urgent need of Namibia for assistance in its efforts to reconstruct and strengthen its fledgling economic and social structures,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption at Harare on 21 August 1989 of the Declaration of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Organization of African Unity on Southern Africa on the question of South Africa and its subsequent endorsement by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, as well as the report of the Monitoring Group of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Organization of African Unity on Southern Africa, and the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1989,

Taking note of the Abuja Declaration on South Africa, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-seventh ordinary session, held at Abuja, Nigeria, from 3 to 5 June 1991,<sup>a</sup>

Reaffirming that the system of apartheid imposed on the South African people constitutes a violation of the fundamental rights of that people, a crime against humanity and a threat to regional peace and security,

Deeply concerned that in spite of the National Peace Accord signed on 14 September 1991, acts of assassination of members and leaders of national liberation movements in South Africa are still continuing,

Recalling its resolution 44/244, adopted by consensus on 17 September 1990, in which, inter alia, it called upon the South African regime to abide fully by the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa,

Noting that, while some significant legal and political measures in the right direction have been undertaken by the apartheid regime, apartheid is still in place,

Noting with concern that political trials and the detention of opponents of apartheid continue in South Africa and in total disregard of the provisions of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa,

Welcoming the decisions by the national liberation movements to work towards unity, as evidenced in the agreement to convene the patriotic front conference,

Deeply concerned about the current wave of violence in South Africa resulting from the continued existence of apartheid policies, practices and structures as well as from actions of those forces opposed to the democratic transformation of the country,

Gravely concerned that a number of South African patriots remain on death row,

Noting with grave concern that despite the efforts by the Government towards a negotiated settlement of the conflict in Mozambique, there continues to be a senseless war, which has claimed a high toll in human lives and destruction of property,

Reaffirming the national unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling the Geneva Declaration on Palestine and the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine,

Considering that the continuation of the Israeli oppressive measures and the denial of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, sovereignty, independence and return to Palestine constitute a serious threat to international peace and security,

Bearing in mind United Nations resolutions related to the question of Palestine and the rights of the Palestinian people,

Deeply concerned and alarmed at the deplorable consequences of Israel's acts of aggression against Lebanon and its practices in and its continuing occupation of parts of southern Lebanon, as well as its refusal to implement the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978,

1. Calls upon all States to implement fully and faithfully all the relevant resolutions of the United Nations regarding the exercise of the right to self-determination and independence by peoples under colonial and foreign domination;

2. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples for independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial domination, apartheid and foreign occupation, in all forms and by all available means;

3. Reaffirms also the inalienable right of the Palestinian people and all peoples under foreign occupation and colonial domination to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without foreign interference;

4. Calls upon those Governments that do not recognize the right to self-determination and independence of all peoples still under colonial domination, alien subjugation and foreign occupation to do so;

5. Calls upon Israel to refrain from the constant deliberate violations of the fundamental rights of the Palestinian people, which constitute an obstacle to the achievement of self-determination and independence by the Palestinian people and the ongoing efforts towards comprehensive peace in the region;

6. Urges all States, the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as other international organizations, to extend their support to the Palestinian people through its sole and legitimate representative, the Palestine Liberation Organization, in its struggle to regain its right to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

7. Urgently appeals to all States, the organizations of the United Nations system and other international organizations to assist in the reconstruction and economic development of Namibia;

8. Reaffirms its rejection of the so-called "tri-cameral constitution" of 1983 as null and void, and reiterates that peace in South Africa can be guaranteed only by the establishment of majority rule through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and undivided South Africa;

9. Strongly urges the apartheid regime to respond positively to the provisions of the Declaration of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Organization of African Unity on Southern Africa on the question of South Africa, and the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa;

10. Determines that the South African racist regime must take additional steps to implement fully the profound and irreversible changes called for in the Declaration on Apartheid;

11. Welcomes the signing of the National Peace Accord on 14 September 1991 by the African National Congress of South Africa, the Inkatha Freedom Party and the South African regime as a significant contribution towards the ending of political violence in South Africa;

12. Calls for an immediate end to violence and calls upon the South African regime to take urgent action to end it through, inter alia, strict adherence to the National Peace Accord;

13. Strongly condemns the establishment and use of armed terrorist groups by South Africa with a view to pitting them against the national liberation movements and destabilizing the legitimate Governments of southern Africa;

14. Again demands the immediate application of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, imposed under Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, by all countries and more particularly by those countries that maintain military and nuclear cooperation with the racist Pretoria regime and continue to supply it with related matériel;

15. Expresses its deep concern about the actions by certain countries whose premature relaxation of existing measures against the South African regime in flagrant violation of the United Nations consensus declaration encourages the regime to persist in its oppression of the black majority with regard to their right to self-determination;

16. Strongly urges the international community, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 45/130 of 14 December 1990, to continue to extend maximum assistance to Lesotho to enable it to fulfil its international humanitarian obligations towards refugees;

17. Commends the Government of Angola for its political will, diplomatic flexibility and constructive spirit in the search for a negotiated solution to the problems of southern Africa;

18. Demands that the Pretoria regime continue to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola and the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of that State, and demands the immediate payment of compensation to Angola for damages caused, in accordance with the relevant decisions and resolutions of the Security Council;

19. Demands that the racist regime of South Africa pay full and adequate compensation to Botswana for the loss of life and damage to property resulting from the unprovoked and unwarranted military attacks of 14 June

1985, 19 May 1986 and 20 June 1988 on the capital of Botswana;

20. Commends the efforts by the Government of Mozambique towards a negotiated settlement of the conflict in that country, and calls for immediate cessation of the massacres of defenceless people and the destruction of economic and social infrastructures perpetrated by externally supported armed terrorists;

21. Takes note with satisfaction of Security Council resolution 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, approving the Secretary-General's report on the holding of a referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, and fully supports the Secretary-General in his efforts to implement the plan for the settlement of the question of Western Sahara in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity;

22. Notes the contacts between the Government of the Comoros and the Government of France in the search for a just solution to the problem of the integration of the Comorian island of Mayotte into the Comoros, in accordance with the resolutions of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations on the question;

23. Strongly condemns the continued violation of the human rights of the peoples still under colonial domination and alien subjugation;

24. Calls for a substantial increase in all forms of assistance given by all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid through national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity;

25. Reaffirms that the practice of using mercenaries against sovereign States and national liberation movements constitutes a criminal act, and calls upon the Governments of all countries to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in their territories and the transit of mercenaries through their territories to be punishable offences and prohibiting their nationals from serving as mercenaries, and to report on such legislation to the Secretary-General;

26. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of all persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence, full respect for their fundamental individual rights and compliance with article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, under which no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment;

27. Expresses its appreciation for the material and other forms of assistance that peoples under colonial rule continue to receive from Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations, and calls for a substantial increase in that assistance;

28. ## Afghanistan

Commission on Human Rights action. On 15 February 1991,(20) the Commission requested the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative to continue to facilitate the early realization of a comprehensive political settlement in accordance with the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan, concluded at Geneva on 14 April 1988,(26) and a 1990 General Assembly resolution.(27) It called on all parties concerned to work towards a political solution, the cessation of hostilities and the creation of conditions which would enable Afghan refugees to return voluntarily to their homeland in safety and honour. Appealing to States and organizations to continue to extend humanitarian relief assistance to Afghan refugees in coordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), it called on States to provide adequate financial and material resources to the Coordinator for United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan to repatriate and rehabilitate speedily the Afghan refugees and to reconstruct that country economically and socially.

Cambodia

Commission on Human Rights action. On 15 February 1991,(25) the Commission welcomed the September 1990 Security Council endorsement of the framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodian conflict(28) and noted an October 1990 General Assembly resolution on the situation there.<sup>(29)</sup> Taking into consideration that the 1989 Paris Conference on Cambodia should be reconvened to elaborate and adopt a comprehensive political settlement, it stressed that the peace process would help achieve the right to self-determination for the Cambodian people through free and fair elections organized and conducted by the United Nations. Recognizing the need to promote respect for the human rights of the Cambodian people and the role of the Commission, it decided to keep the situation under review in 1992.

Subcommission action. The Subcommission, on 23 August 1991,<sup>(30)</sup> adopted by a secret ballot vote of 14 to 4, with 4 abstentions, a resolution calling on the Secretary-General to dispatch to Cambodia and to refugee camps in Thailand a special mission to examine the human rights situation there, formulate proposals to prevent further violations, and report to the Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference prior to the Conference's next meeting. It asked that teaching human rights to the Cambodian people be organized through appropriate channels.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1991/269 without vote.

Situation in Cambodia

1. At its 13th plenary meeting, on 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, deeply concerned about the protection of human rights in Cambodia, endorsed Commission on Human Rights decision 1991/104 of 15 February 1991 and reaffirmed the right of the people of Cambodia to exercise their fundamental freedoms and human rights, including their right to self-determination.

2. The Council welcomed Security Council resolution 668(1990) of 20 September 1990 and General Assembly resolution 45/3 of 15 October 1990 endorsing the framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodian conflict, which has been accepted in its entirety by all the Cambodian parties as the basis for settling the Cambodian conflict. The Council also welcomed the draft agreements of 26 November 1990<sup>a</sup> and the final statement of 23 December 1990,<sup>a</sup> of the meeting between the co-chairmen of the Paris Conference on Cambodia and members of the Supreme National Council of Cambodia.

3. The Council further welcomed the formation of a Supreme National Council as the unique legitimate body and source of authority in which, throughout the transitional period, the independence, national sovereignty and unity of Cambodia is embodied. The Council urged that, in working towards the goal of a comprehensive political settlement, the Cambodian leaders should cooperate in assuming their responsibilities in order to achieve national reconciliation.

4. The Council also urged all parties to the conflict to exercise maximum self-restraint so as to create a climate conducive to the achievement and implementation of a comprehensive political settlement, as reiterated in the appeal of the co-chairmen of the Paris Conference on Cambodia and the Secretary-General of the United Nations on 22 April 1991 for a voluntary cease-fire in Cambodia.

5. The Council expressed the hope that the Paris Conference on Cambodia would be reconvened as soon as possible in order to adopt the agreement on a comprehensive political settlement and that a detailed plan of implementation would be drawn up in accordance with the agreement, providing, inter alia, for the full restoration of the human rights of the Cambodian people, including their inalienable right to self-determination in free and fair elections organized and conducted by the United Nations in a neutral political environment with full respect for the national sovereignty of Cambodia, and recognizing the need to promote and encourage respect for and full observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Cambodia.

6. The Council once again expressed its grave concern at the plight of the Cambodian displaced persons still stranded in Thailand as a result of the continuing hostilities in Cambodia.

7. The Council requested the Secretary-General to continue to monitor closely the developments in Cambodia and to intensify efforts, including the use of his good offices, to bring about a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodian problem and to promote and encourage respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Cambodia.

Economic and Social Council decision 1991/269

31 May 1991                      Meeting 13                      Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1991/86) without vote, 24 May (meeting 16); draft by Chairman (E/1991/C.2/L.15); agenda item 8.

Palestinians

Commission on Human Rights action. By a resolution of 15 February 1991,<sup>(21)</sup> adopted by a roll-call vote of 29 to 1, with 12 abstentions, the Commission condemned Israel for its continued occupation of the Palestinian territory and called on it to withdraw. It reaffirmed the right of the Palestinians to self-determination and to recover their rights by all means in accordance with the Charter and United Nations resolutions, and affirmed that the intifadah of the Palestinian people against the Israeli occupation since 8 December 1987 was legitimate resistance against the Israeli military occupation (for details on the intifadah, see PART TWO, Chapter V). It reaffirmed its support for the call to convene an international peace conference on the Middle East, with the participation of Security Council permanent members and the parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). Urging States, United Nations organs, specialized agencies and other international organizations to support and assist the Palestinians through their representative, PLO, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to make available, prior to its 1992 session, information on the implementation of its resolution, to transmit it to Israel with a view to its implementation and to report to the Commission in 1992.

Subcommission action. On 23 August 1991,<sup>(31)</sup> the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 16 to 2, with 4 abstentions, similarly condemned Israel and requested the Secretary-General to provide in 1992 an updated list of reports, studies, statistics and other documents relating to the question of Palestine and other Arab occupied territories, with the texts of relevant United Nations decisions and resolutions and the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories, and with all other information relevant to the implementation of its resolution.

South Africa

The Commission on Human Rights, on 1 March 1991,<sup>(23)</sup> condemned the civil, political, economic, social and cultural human rights violations under apartheid in South Africa. Reaffirming the right of South Africans to eradicate apartheid and participate fully in a transition to a democratic and elected government and administration based on a universal equal and non-racial franchise, the Commission further reaffirmed the international consensus in condemning apartheid as expressed in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by the General Assembly in 1989.<sup>(32)</sup> It urged South Africa to repeal all discriminatory and repressive legislation under apartheid and proceed to negotiate for a democratic non-racial government with representatives of the people. The Commission called on South Africa to negotiate an agreement with all parties on transitional arrangements to draw up and adopt a new constitution for the transition to a democratic order, including the holding of elections. Calling on the international community to maintain all necessary measures against South Africa to create a climate conducive to such negotiations, it reiterated its call to all Governments to observe fully the 1977 mandatory arms embargo and the request to the Security Council to monitor that embargo.<sup>(33)</sup>

Subcommission action. By a secret ballot of 20 to 0, with 1 abstention, the Subcommission, on 23 August 1991,<sup>(34)</sup> urged the international community to maintain sanctions and other forms of international pressure against South Africa and condemned nuclear, military and economic collaboration with that country.

Western Sahara

The Commission on Human Rights, on 15 February 1991,<sup>(22)</sup> reaffirmed that the question of Western Sahara was one of decolonization to be completed through the exercise of the people's right to self-determination and independence. It noted the dispatch to Western Sahara and neighbouring countries of a technical mission to refine administrative aspects of an outlined plan<sup>(35)</sup> and to obtain information of a further report by the Secretary-General to the Security Council containing, in particular, a cost estimate of a United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara. Expressing support for efforts of the Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the Secretary-General to promote a solution in accordance with a 1985 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(36)</sup> the Commission urged them to intensify their efforts to fulfil the conditions for holding a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, without administrative or military constraints, organized and supervised by the United Nations in cooperation with OAU. It appealed to Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro to cooperate and complete the peace process to settle the question of Western Sahara. The Commission asked the OAU Secretary-General to keep the United Nations Secretary-General informed of the progress achieved in implementing OAU decisions and also asked the Secretary-General to follow closely the situation with a view to implementing a 1990 Assembly resolution<sup>(37)</sup> and to report to the Assembly in 1991.

Mercenaries

Human Rights Commission action. On 22 February 1991,<sup>(24)</sup> the Commission, reaffirming that the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries should be considered as offences of grave concern, called on all States which had not yet done so to consider acceding to or ratifying the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries.<sup>(38)</sup> Taking note of the Special Rapporteur's report covering 1990,<sup>(39)</sup> it requested him to submit a preliminary report to the General Assembly later in the year (see below) and to report to the Commission in 1992.

On 31 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/233, approved the Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur to submit a preliminary report (see below).

On 5 March,<sup>(40)</sup> the Commission asked all special rapporteurs and working groups to continue paying particular attention to the adverse effect on the enjoyment of human rights of acts of violence committed by armed groups, regardless of their origin, that spread terror among the population, and by drug traffickers, in their forthcoming reports on the situation of human rights in those countries where such acts of violence occurred. It also asked the Secretary-General to continue collecting information on the question from all relevant sources and to make it available to the special rapporteurs and working groups concerned.

Reports of the Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a 1990 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(41)</sup> and in response to the Commission's request, the Secretary-General, by a September 1991 note,<sup>(42)</sup> transmitted a preliminary report prepared by Special Rapporteur Enrique Bernales Ballesteros (Peru). He considered information on mercenary activities in internal armed conflicts as well as the adverse effect on the enjoyment of human rights of acts committed by armed groups which spread terror among the population and by drug traffickers, who, he said, frequently acted together. He noted that to this tie should be added mercenary activities which established a complex criminal association with acts of violence that could, among other things, affect the sovereignty of a State and the stability of a legitimately constituted Government and be detrimental to the right to self-determination of a people.

He had considered charges filed with the United Nations Centre for Human Rights by El Salvador, Guatemala, Peru, the Philippines and Rwanda. He recommended that United Nations organs continue to consider the issue as a matter of high priority and intensify their consideration until an appropriate legal framework was found and punitive measures to be applied under legislation against such groups were formulated.

In December, the Special Rapporteur reported on the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination.<sup>(43)</sup> He described his own activities during 1991 and gave details of correspondence received from Member States concerning mercenary activities. He then discussed mercenary activities in Africa, the evolution of the conflict in Central America and the consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of acts of violence committed by armed groups and drug traffickers.

Reporting on the status of the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries,<sup>(38)</sup> the Special Rapporteur stated that only four States had signed and ratified or acceded to the Convention: Maldives, Seychelles, Suriname and Togo; 14 States had signed it: Angola, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Congo, Germany, Italy, Morocco, Nigeria, Poland, Romania, Ukrainian SSR, Uruguay, Yugoslavia and Zaire. In accordance with article 19, the Convention was to enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the twenty-second instrument of ratification or accession.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that United Nations organs suggest that Member States: include provisions in their domestic legislation defining the recruitment of mercenaries as an offence; enter into extradition agreements with regard to mercenary acts; and categorize as aggravating factors the training of mercenaries in their territory and the involvement of mercenaries in concurrent acts such as trafficking in arms, drugs and currency. He further recommended that all States be urged to consider ratifying or acceding to the 1989 Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/89 by recorded vote.

Use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/34 of 4 December 1989 on the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries and 45/132 of 14 December 1990 on the use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination,

Recognizing that the activities of mercenaries are contrary to the fundamental principles of international law, such as non-interference in the internal affairs of States, territorial integrity and independence, and impede the process of the self-determination of peoples struggling against colonialism, racism and apartheid and all forms of foreign domination,

Recalling all of its relevant resolutions, in which, inter alia, it condemned any State that permitted or tolerated the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations, especially those of developing countries, or of fighting against national liberation movements, and recalling also the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, as well as of the Organization of African Unity,

Deeply concerned about the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the short-term and long-term negative effects on the economy of southern African countries resulting from mercenary aggression,

Convinced that it is necessary to develop international cooperation among States for the prevention, prosecution and punishment of such offences,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption of the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, and welcoming the fulfilment of the provisions of paragraph 2 of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/29 of 5 March 1991, as reflected in the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission,

3. Reaffirms that the use of mercenaries and their recruitment, financing and training are offences of grave concern to all States and violate the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Notes with serious concern the use by the racist South African regime of groups of armed mercenaries against national liberation movements and for the destabilization of the Governments of southern African States;

5. Denounces any State that persists in the recruitment, or permits or tolerates the recruitment, of mercenaries and provides facilities to them for launching armed aggression against other States;

6. Urges all States to take the necessary steps and to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to ensure, by both administrative and legislative measures, that the territory of those States and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries, or for the planning of activities designed to destabilize or overthrow the Government of any State and to fight the national liberation movements struggling against racism, apartheid, colonial domination and foreign intervention or occupation;

7. Calls upon all States to extend humanitarian assistance to victims of situations resulting from the use of mercenaries, as well as from colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation;

8. Reaffirms that to use channels of humanitarian and other assistance to finance, train and arm mercenaries is inadmissible;

9. Calls upon all States which have not yet done so to consider taking early action to accede to or to ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries;

10. Requests the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the use of mercenaries, especially in view of the additional elements highlighted in his report.

Rights of detained persons

Administration of justice

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,(12) the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to establish a consolidated list of provisions within the various United Nations standards relating to human rights in the administration of justice with a view to drafting model texts for national legislation. It asked the Subcommission, on the basis of that list, to: study the implementation of United Nations norms and standards in this area and identify problems that might impinge on their effective implementation; recommend solutions with action-oriented proposals; take action to elaborate model texts for national legislation; and consider the effectiveness of habeas corpus and similar remedies during states of emergency and formulate suggestions thereon. It further requested the Subcommission to report to it in 1992 and asked the Secretary-General to coordinate the Subcommission's activities with the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and to invite a representative of the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs to interchange ideas with the Subcommittee's Working Group on Detention.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to the Commission's request, the Secretary-General, in a September 1991 note,<sup>(44)</sup> reported that he had prepared a consolidated list of provisions in the various United Nations standards relating to human rights in the administration of justice.<sup>(45)</sup> He also stated that the Working Group on Detention had considered some aspects of the question (see below).

The Secretary-General presented to the Subcommittee in July succinct information on the work of the Human Rights Committee, CERD, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (see PART TWO, Chapter V), and activities within the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme as they related to human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment.<sup>(46)</sup>

By an earlier note,<sup>(47)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission the decisions taken at the Eighth (1990) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (Havana, Cuba) relevant to human rights.<sup>(48)</sup>

Subcommission action. On 28 August 1991,<sup>(49)</sup> the Subcommission recommended to the Commission for adoption a draft resolution on habeas corpus.

In November 1991,<sup>(50)</sup> the Subcommission submitted to the Commission for consideration at its 1992 session a report stating that, among other things, it had entrusted its Working Group on Detention with the tasks outlined in the Commission's 5 March resolution.<sup>(12)</sup>

Approved by Third Committee (A/46/721) without vote, 29 November (meeting 55); 27-nation draft (A/C.3/46/L.38), orally revised: agenda item 98. ## Treatment of prisoners and detainees

Reports of the Secretary-General. In connection with the Subcommission's review of developments in the administration of justice and the human rights of detainees, the Secretary-General submitted in June 1991 a report, with a later addendum,<sup>(51)</sup> summarizing information from 17 Governments. Also in June,<sup>(52)</sup> he summarized material from one United Nations body, two specialized agencies and two intergovernmental organizations. By a July note,<sup>(53)</sup> he presented a synopsis of material from NGOs.

Working Group on Detention

A five-member sessional Working Group on Detention, set up by the Subcommission on Human Rights, met at Geneva on 12, 14 and 15 August<sup>(54)</sup> to evaluate the 1991 synopsis of material received from NGOS<sup>(55)</sup> and to discuss a new United Nations programme on crime prevention and criminal justice which was being established. (See also PART THREE, Chapter XII.) Considering habeas corpus, the Group reached consensus that it should be a non-derogable right. The Group discussed the imposition of the death penalty, particularly on persons under 18 years of age, and the human rights of detained juveniles (see below). Special Rapporteur Miguel Alfonso Martinez (Cuba) presented a working paper on the privatization of prisons,<sup>(56)</sup> proposing that: the Subcommission consider the issue in 1992; Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations be requested to submit their views to the Secretary-General; and the Secretary-General submit in 1992 the said responses compiled and presented with analytical comment. By a 28 August 1991 decision,<sup>(56)</sup> the Subcommission endorsed the Special Rapporteur's proposals.

Torture and cruel treatment

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In January 1991, Special Rapporteur Peter H. Kooijmans (Netherlands) submitted his sixth report to the Commission.<sup>(57)</sup> He said that he continued to receive requests for urgent action or information concerning persons who were allegedly being tortured or about whom it was feared that they might be so. He brought 70 of those cases to the immediate attention of the respective Governments, appealing to them to ensure humane treatment of persons in detention. Details on the contents of those appeals and of government replies were given in the report. The Special Rapporteur reported on his visit to the Philippines from 1 to 10 October 1990, in response to that country's invitation, where he had met with alleged victims of torture and NGOs concerned with human rights and visited prisons and detention centres.

The Special Rapporteur recommended establishing a treaty-based mechanism of periodic inspections of places of detention, as presented in a draft optional protocol to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. He also made a number of other recommendations, some of which were taken up by the Commission in a March resolution (see below).

Human Rights Commission action. Commending the Special Rapporteur for his report, the Commission, on 5 March 1991, (58) stressed his conclusions and recommendations concerning: instituting a system of periodic visits by independent experts to places of detention; declaring illegal incommunicado detention under national law; adopting legal provisions giving a detainee prompt access to legal counsel after arrest and making it obligatory to inform relatives of the arrest and place of detention; organizing proper medical inspection; interrogating detainees at official interrogation centres, recording such interrogations and forbidding blindfolding or hooding; and establishing an independent authority to receive complaints about torture or other maltreatment. It endorsed the Special Rapporteur's recommendation that those responsible for acts of torture should be brought to trial and, if found guilty, severely punished. The Commission called on all States to sign and accede to or ratify the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. (59) It encouraged Governments to consider inviting the Special Rapporteur to visit their country to enable him to fulfil his mandate more effectively.

On 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/240, approved the Commission's encouragement to Governments to consider inviting the Special Rapporteur to visit their country.

Convention against torture

As at 31 December 1991, 64 States had ratified or acceded to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment, nine of them in 1991. (3) The Convention was adopted by the General Assembly in 1984, (59) opened for signature in 1985, and entered into force in 1987. (60) The optional provisions of articles 21 and 22 (under which a party recognized the competence of the Committee against Torture, set up under the Convention, to receive and consider communications to the effect that a party claimed that another was not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and to receive communications from or on behalf of individuals claiming to be victims of a violation of the Convention by a State party) also entered into force in 1987; (60) 29 parties had made the required declarations. The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 1 January 1991(61) and at 1 August 1991. (62)

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,(63) the Commission urged all States to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority; it asked all ratifying or acceding States and those States parties that had not done so to consider making the declaration provided for in articles 21 and 22. It requested the Secretary-General to continue submitting annual reports on the Convention's status and to ensure the provision of appropriate staff and facilities for the effective functioning of the Committee against Torture.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 46/428, of 16 December 1991, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the status of the Convention and asked him to report on it again in 1992.

Draft optional protocol

In January 1991, (64) Costa Rica submitted to the Commission an updated text of the draft optional protocol to the Convention which it had originally submitted in 1980. The text had been revised by a group of independent experts from 21 countries who had met at Geneva from 29 November to 1 December 1990. The draft optional protocol would establish a system of visits to be carried out by a committee of experts to places of detention within the jurisdiction of States parties to the protocol.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991, (65) the Commission decided to consider the draft optional protocol at its 1992 session.

Committee against Torture

The Committee against Torture, established as a monitoring body under the Convention, held its sixth session at Geneva from 22 April to 3 May 1991. (66) It examined reports submitted by Algeria, Chile and Panama under article 19 of the Convention.

In April, the Committee adopted its general guidelines regarding the form and content of periodic reports to be submitted by States parties to which it added consolidated guidelines, as drawn up in consultation with all of the treaty bodies. In three closed meetings devoted to its activities under article 20, the Committee studied confidential information which appeared to contain well-founded indications that torture was systematically practised in a State party to the Convention. Under article 22, the Committee considered three communications from individuals who claimed to be victims of violations by a State party of rights recognized in the Convention, one of which was found to be inadmissible. In addition, the Committee discussed a draft optional protocol to the Convention (see above).

The Committee held its seventh session, also at Geneva, from 11 to 21 November 1991, examining reports submitted by Australia, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the United Kingdom and Uruguay. It discussed its participation in the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights, expressing the need to raise public awareness of the practice of torture and of the Committee's work.

By decision 46/430, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, took note of the Committee's report.

Fund for victims of torture

On 5 March 1991, (67) the Commission on Human Rights appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, established in 1981. (68) It asked the Secretary-General to assist in making the Fund's humanitarian work better known and to inform it annually of the Fund's operations.

In his annual report to the Assembly on the status of the Fund, (69) the Secretary-General said that at its tenth session (Geneva, 17-26 April 1991) the Fund's Board of Trustees had recommended that 72 new grants should be made, of which 58—corresponding to 59 projects and sub-projects and representing an amount of $2,025,700—dealt with continuing support for projects approved in the past; another 14 grants, for an amount of $273,000, dealt with 11 new projects and sub-projects. The total amount of the grants recommended was $2,238,700 for 1991 and $60,000 for 1992. The projects recommended by the Board, carried out in about 40 countries and benefiting persons from many others, focused on supporting programmes providing direct medical, psychological, social and other assistance to torture victims and their families. The Board also recommended support to training programmes for health professionals on techniques to treat victims of torture, as well as for meetings of health professionals, in which they could compare their experiences.

The Board recommended that the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights set aside time to meet as a pledging conference for United Nations voluntary funds and submitted that suggestion to the Conference's Preparatory Committee. (70)

During the period from 24 October 1990 to 30 November 1991, the Fund received $1,006,743 in contributions from 18 States. Contributions were also received from a number of individuals. In addition, pledges totalling $553,717 were made by 6 States.

Torture and inhuman treatment of detained children in South Africa

On 22 February 1991,(71) the Commission on Human Rights, vigorously condemning the detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in South Africa, demanded their immediate and unconditional release, the lifting of restrictions imposed on them and their basic and legitimate freedoms of movement, association and education. It appealed to the international community to maintain pressure on South Africa to eradicate apartheid and the inhuman practices associated with it. Requesting the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa to pay special attention to the detention, torture and other inhuman treatment of children in South Africa and to report in 1992, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Group in discharging its responsibilities. The Commission further requested all United Nations organs, specialized agencies and NGOs to launch a world-wide campaign to draw attention to monitoring and exposing the inhuman practices associated with apartheid targeted at children.

The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, in January 1991,(72) recounted testimony from witnesses and cited press reports concerning murders, arrests, torture and other ill-treatment and harassment of black children and adolescents in South Africa, often resulting from organized protests against discrimination in schools and the quality of education provided for black children. (For more details on the Group's activities, see under "Human rights violations".)

Also in January, (73) the Secretary-General noted United Nations action taken during 1990 concerning torture and inhuman treatment of children in detention in South Africa. In September, (74) he reported that information requested from United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs on the subject had not been received.

By decision 46/430, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, took note of the Secretary-General's September report.

Detention of juveniles

Reports of the Special Rapporteur. In July 1991, (75) Special Rapporteur Mary Concepcion Bautista (Philippines) provided an overview of international standards applicable to the human rights of juveniles deprived of their liberty, among them the 1985 United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules), (76) the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, (77) the 1990 United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines) and the 1990 United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty. (79) The Special Rapporteur summarized replies to a questionnaire on the application of international standards concerning human rights to juveniles received from 45 Governments, 3 specialized agencies and 17 NGOs. She recommended that countries review their legislation, forbid trying juveniles as adults, as well as detaining them, and guarantee them legal assistance.

Subcommission action. On 28 August 1991, (80) the Subcommission asked its Special Rapporteur to submit an updated report in 1992 and also asked the Secretary-General to explore the feasibility of organizing a meeting of experts under the auspices of the Centre for Human Rights, UNICEF and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs on the application of international standards concerning the human rights of detained juveniles.

Detention without charge or trial

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991, (81) the Commission, noting an analysis and recommendations in a revised 1990 report on the practice of administrative detention, (82) submitted by Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet (France), decided to create, for a three-year period, a working group of five independent experts to investigate cases of detention imposed arbitrarily or otherwise inconsistently with the international standards set forth in the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights (83) or in the relevant international legal instruments. It further decided that the working group should seek information from Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, individuals concerned, their families or their representatives. It asked the working group to carry out its task with discretion, objectivity and independence and to report to it in 1992. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide the necessary assistance to the working group.

On 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/243, approved the Commission's decision to set up a working group to investigate cases of arbitrary detention.

Working group activities. The five-member working group of independent experts held its first and second sessions from 16 to 20 September and 16 to 20 December 1991, respectively, both at Geneva. The group's preliminary report contained its views on its mandate and legal framework and discussed its methods of work. (84) The group's activities since its creation mainly consisted of transmitting letters to Governments concerning cases of alleged arbitrary detention which were reported to have occurred in their countries, and asking them to make inquiries and inform the group of the results within 90 days from the date of transmittal. In October and December the Chairman of the group sent letters to 17 countries concerning 223 cases of arbitrary detention. During its second session the group transmitted letters to nine Governments concerning 14 cases. At its December session, the group considered replies received from four Governments. In considering those cases it identified a number of situations which it decided to look into for consideration at its next session concerning failure to take pre-trial detention and detention prior to extradition into account; restricted residence; rehabilitation through labour; extradition not followed by trial; and grave and multiple violations of the right to a fair trial in certain pre-trial situations. Annexed to the report were the principles to be applied by the group in considering cases submitted to it and a model questionnaire to be completed by persons alleging arbitrary arrest or detention.

Hostage-taking

On 5 March 1991, (85) the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned the taking of hostages in all circumstances and demanded the release of all those being held. It called on States to take preventive and punitive measures and put an end to cases of abduction and unlawful restraint. It asked the Secretary-General, whenever a State so requested, to use all available means to obtain the release of hostages.

Detained UN staff members

Report of the Secretary-General. On 14 February 1991, (86) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report updating developments pertaining to the detention of international civil servants and their families. Annexed to the report was a consolidated list of staff members under arrest and detention or missing.

By an August 1991 note, (87) the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur Mary Concepcion Bautista (Philippines) stated that she had received information from two Governments, from the United Nations Security Coordinator and from six United Nations bodies and specialized agencies concerning the human rights of United Nations staff members, experts and their families. She stated that two staff members detained in Ethiopia and two in Senegal had been released. She noted that of the 125 international civil servants who had been detained, executed, missing or disappeared, about 80 were in the Middle East.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991 (88) the Commission on Human Rights appealed to Member States to respect and ensure respect for the rights of staff members and others acting under the authority of the United Nations and their families and urged them, in accordance with the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, (89) to provide adequate and prompt information concerning their arrest or detention. It further urged States to allow medical teams to investigate cases in which the health of staff members, experts and their families who were being detained was reported to have suffered and to permit medical treatment, and called on them to allow representatives of international organizations to attend hearings concerning them. It asked the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that the human rights, privileges and immunities of United Nations staff members, experts and their families were fully respected and to submit in 1992 an updated report on the situation of United Nations staff members, experts and their families detained, imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will.

Subcommission action. On 28 August 1991, (90) the Subcommission adopted a similar resolution in which it requested its Special Rapporteur to submit a final report in 1992, including practical recommendations for measures to improve on a long-term basis the protection of United Nations personnel and their families.

Status of special rapporteurs

On 5 March 1991, (91) the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to take measures to ensure that all special rapporteurs and representatives, independent experts and members of the Subcommission and of working groups established by the Commission were considered as experts on mission within the context of article VI, section 22, of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations (92) and urged States to comply with their obligations under that Convention. It also asked him to take measures to ensure the protection of United Nations officials accompanying such personnel on field missions and to report to the Commission in 1992 on action taken.

Extralegal executions

In February 1991,(93) Special Rapporteur S. Amos Wako (Kenya) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights his ninth report on summary or arbitrary executions, based on information received from Governments, NGOs, groups and individuals. He described urgent appeals and other communications transmitted to Governments, together with any replies or observations received from them, and outlined the legal and analytical framework within which he carried out his mandate. In concluding, he focused on death threats, deaths in custody, executions following inadequate trial or judicial procedures and extralegal executions in situations of internal conflict. The Special Rapporteur recommended that Governments: review national laws and regulations and the practice of judicial authorities; ensure the protection of those who played key roles in defending human rights; establish an independent body to improve cooperation between the United Nations system and all concerned organizations; include human rights instruction in primary and secondary schools, and university curricula; and include human rights law and practice in training law enforcement and military personnel. He urged international organizations to emphasize the importance of implementing international human rights norms and principles; organize seminars and training courses; and promote activities to disseminate the latest achievements in human rights. Annexed to the report were basic principles on the use of force and firearms by law enforcement officials adopted by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (1990). (48)

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991, (94) the Commission, strongly condemning the large number of summary or arbitrary executions taking place, including extralegal executions, appealed urgently to Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to take action to combat and eliminate such executions. It requested the Special Rapporteur to continue examining such executions and to respond to information he received, particularly when a summary or arbitrary execution was imminent or threatened or when such an execution had occurred. It asked the Secretary-General to provide assistance to the Special Rapporteur and to consider ways of publicizing his work and recommendations. It urged Governments to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur and to take measures to lower the level of violence and needless loss of life during situations of internal violence, disturbances, tensions and public emergency.

On 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/255, approved the Commission's request that the Secretary-General provide assistance to the Special Rapporteur.

Disappearance of persons

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,( 95) the Commission requested the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to submit in 1992 both a report on its work and recommendations to help eliminate the practice of enforced or involuntary disappearances. The Commission encouraged Governments concerned to consider inviting the Group to visit their country and asked the Secretary-General to ensure that the Group received all necessary assistance, in particular staff and resources, especially in carrying out missions and holding sessions in countries prepared to receive it, a request approved by the Economic and Social Council on 31 May 1991 in decision 1991/242. On 7 February, by decision 1991/204, the Council decided that the Group's thirty-third session, which was to be held from 6 to 10 May 1991, would be held from 18 to 22 March, and, by decision 1991/282 of 26 July, it decided that the Group's thirty-fifth session should be held at Geneva from 28 October to 8 November.

The Commission further decided to establish an open-ended inter-sessional working group to consider the draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced or involuntary disappearance, (96) which had been completed by the Group and finalized by the Subcommission in 1990. Requesting the working group to meet for two weeks before the Commission's 1992 session, it asked the Secretary-General to invite comments, for consideration by the working group, from Governments, intergovernmental agencies and NGOs on the draft declaration and to circulate those comments to Governments before the group's meeting.

Also on 5 March, (97) the Commission, commending those Governments which had invited any of the thematic Special Rapporteurs or the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to visit their country, encouraged Governments to respond expeditiously to requests for information. It invited Governments concerned to study carefully the recommendations addressed to them under thematic procedures and to keep the relevant mechanisms informed on progress made in implementing them. The Commission encouraged thematic Special Rapporteurs and the Working Group to follow closely the progress made by Governments in their investigations carried out within their respective mandates.

Note by the Secretary-General. By a note of the Secretary-General, (98) the draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced or involuntary disappearances was transmitted to the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1991/27 without vote.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances
The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/41 of 5 March 1991,

1. Authorizes an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to meet for a period of two weeks prior to the forty-eighth session of the Commission to consider the draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced or involuntary disappearances; prepared by the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, with a view to its adoption by the Commission at its forty-eighth session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all facilities to the working group for its meeting prior to the forty-eighth session of the Commission.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/27

31 May 1991 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1991/86) without vote, 24 May (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1991/22); agenda item 8.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, established in 1980,(99) held three sessions in 1991: its thirty-third (New York, 18-22 March) and thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth (Geneva, 26-31 August and 4-13 December). (100)

During those sessions, the Group held 4 meetings with government representatives and 16 with representatives of human rights organizations, associations of relatives of missing persons and families or witnesses directly concerned with reports of enforced or involuntary disappearances. Three members of the Group visited Sri Lanka at the Government's invitation from 7 to 18 October. Their report on the problem of disappearances in that country was contained in an addendum to the Working Group's report.

In 1991, the Group received some 17,000 reports of enforced or involuntary disappearances and transmitted 4,800 newly reported cases to the Governments concerned. It also transmitted to Governments 197 cases under its urgent action procedure and 34 of such cases were clarified during the year.

The Group recommended that concerned Governments improve habeas corpus, introducing legal reforms dealing with expeditious process, availability of the procedure and unimpeded access of authorities to suspected places of detention, and emphasized the need for countries to have up-to-date and accessible registers of detainees. Noting that death squad activity appeared to be on the rise, the Group urged Governments to condemn such operations. Concerning the abuse of powers by civil defence units, especially disappearances, the Group advocated laws laying down conditions for their operation. Annexed to the Group's report were graphs showing the development of disappearances for the period 1973-1990 in countries with more than 50 transmitted cases, a list of NGOs which had contacted the Group from January 1990 to December 1991 and excerpts from a statement by the Group to the first meeting of the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights (see under "Advancement of human rights").

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/125 without vote.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 concerning disappeared persons, and its resolution 45/165 of 18 December 1990 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Deeply concerned about the persistence of the practice of enforced disappearances in the world, and about the fact that, in certain cases, the families of disappeared persons have been the target of intimidation and ill-treatment.

Expressing its profound emotion at the anguish and sorrow of the families concerned, who are unsure of the fate of their relatives,

Concerned by the growing number of reports concerning harassment of witnesses of disappearances or relatives of disappeared persons,

Recalling that the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances has referred on several occasions in its reports to the importance of drafting a declaration to enable it to fulfil its task properly,

Convinced of the need to continue implementing the provisions of its resolution 33/173 and of the other United Nations resolutions on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances, with a view to finding solutions for cases of disappearances and helping to eliminate such practices,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/41 of 5 March 1991,

1. Notes with satisfaction that the open-ended working group established by Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/41 has completed its consideration of the draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced or involuntary disappearances, which will be transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights for adoption at its forty-eighth session;

2. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to give this question high priority at its forty-eighth session;

3. Appeals to Governments to take appropriate steps to prevent and suppress the practice of enforced disappearances and to take action at the national and regional levels and in cooperation with the United Nations to that end;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for its humanitarian work and thanks those Governments that have cooperated with it;

5. Recalls with satisfaction the decision made by the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-sixth session to extend for two years the term of the mandate of the Working Group, as defined in Commission resolution 20(XXXVI) of 29 February 1980, while maintaining the principle of annual reporting, and requests the Working Group to continue to fulfil its mandate in a rigorous and constructive fashion;

6. Appeals to the Governments concerned, particularly those which have not yet replied to the communications addressed to them by the Working Group, to cooperate fully with it so as to enable it, with respect for its working methods based on discretion, to perform its strictly humanitarian role, and in particular to reply more quickly to the requests for information addressed to them;

7. Encourages the Governments concerned to consider the wish of the Working Group, when such a wish is expressed, to visit their countries, thus enabling it to fulfil its mandate even more effectively;

8. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that have cooperated with the Working Group and replied to its requests for information;

9. Extends its warm thanks to those Governments which have invited the Working Group, requests them to give all necessary attention to its recommendations and invites them to inform the Working Group of any follow-up measures taken;

10. Appeals to the Governments concerned to take steps to protect the families of disappeared persons against any intimidation or ill-treatment of which they may be the target;

11. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study this question as a matter of priority and to take any step it may deem necessary to the pursuit of the task of the Working Group when it considers the report to be submitted by the Working Group to the Commission at its forty-eighth session;

12. Renews its request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all necessary facilities.

Other aspects of civil and political rights

Slavery

Working Group activities. The Subcommission's five-member Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its sixteenth session (Geneva, 29 July-2 August and 9 August 1991),<sup>(101)</sup> considered as its main theme the prevention of traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others. It reviewed developments in other contemporary forms of slavery, including slavery and the slave trade, the sale of children, child labour (see under "Other human rights violations"), child soldiers, child prostitution and pornography, slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism and debt bondage.

The Group had before it a March 1991 report of the Secretary-General submitted in response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution<sup>(102)</sup> summarizing replies from four Governments, one specialized agency, two United Nations organs and two intergovernmental organizations on the suppression of traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others<sup>(103)</sup>

Subcommission action. The Subcommission adopted on 29 August 1991 two drafts recommended by the Group, one recommending to the Commission for adoption a programme of action to prevent the traffic in persons and exploitation of the prostitution of others<sup>(104)</sup> and another concerning other matters considered by the Group.<sup>(105)</sup>

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991<sup>(106)</sup> the Commission asked the Secretary-General to invite States parties to the 1926 Slavery Convention, the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery<sup>(107)</sup> and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others<sup>(108)</sup> to submit regular reports on the situation in their countries. It invited States which had not signed or ratified the relevant Conventions to do so, or to explain in writing why they felt unable to do so. Intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations were asked to supply information to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery. The Commission encouraged its Subcommission to elaborate recommendations on ways of establishing an effective mechanism for implementing the Slavery Conventions on the basis of a 1989 study prepared by the Secretary-General<sup>(109)</sup> The Secretary-General was asked to designate the United Nations Centre for Human Rights as the focal point for coordinating United Nations activities for the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery. Recommending that a voluntary fund be established, it requested the Economic and Social Council to take further action (see below). It asked the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children (Viti Muntarhorn, Thailand) to examine ways of cooperating with the Group and asked Governments to pursue a policy of information, prevention and rehabilitation of women victims of the exploitation of prostitution and to take appropriate economic and social measures to that effect.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/35 without vote.

Suppression of the traffic in persons

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1982/20 of 10 March 1982 on the question of slavery and the slave trade in all their practices and manifestations, including the slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism, 1988/42 of 8 March 1988, 1989/35 of 6 March 1989 and 1990/63 of 7 March 1990, and taking note of Commission resolution 1991/58 of 6 March 1991 on the report of the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Recalling also its resolutions 1982/20 of 4 May 1982 and 1983/30 of 26 May 1983 on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others, 1988/34 of 27 May 1988 and 1989/74 of 24 May 1989 on the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and 1990/46 of 25 May 1990 on the suppression of the traffic in persons.

Considering that the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Economic and Social Council on the suppression of the traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others still constitutes a useful basis for further action,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Council resolution 1983/30 on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others,

Noting that only a few Member States, United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental organizations have submitted information on the steps taken to implement the recommendations contained in Council resolution 1983/30,

Gravely concerned that slavery, the slave trade and slavery-like practices still exist, that there are modern manifestations of those phenomena and that such practices represent some of the gravest violations of human rights,

Aware of the complexity of the issue of the suppression of the traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others, and the need for further coordination and cooperation to implement the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur and by various United Nations bodies,

1. Remind States parties to the Slavery Convention of 1926, the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery of 1956, and the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others of 1949 that they should submit to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities regular reports on the situation in their countries, as provided for under the relevant conventions and under Council decision 16(LVI) of 17 May 1974;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Council resolution 1983/30 on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a further report to the Council, at its regular session of 1992, on the steps taken to implement the recommendations contained in Council resolution 1983/30 by those Member States, United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental organizations that have not yet submitted such information and to make that report available to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

4. Urges the Secretary-General to ensure effective servicing of the Working Group and of other activities related to contemporary forms of slavery and slavery-like practices, and requests him to report to the Council at its regular session of 1992 on the steps taken in this regard;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to designate the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat as the focal point for the coordination of activities in the United Nations for the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery;

6. Urges the Commission on the Status of Women and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to collaborate closely with the Centre for Human Rights on the issue of the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery;

7. Endorses the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1991/58, that the supervisory bodies of the International Labour Organisation give particular attention in their work to the implementation of provisions and standards designed to ensure protection of children and other persons exposed to contemporary forms of slavery;

8. Endorses the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1991/58, that the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Committee on the Rights of the Child, when examining periodic reports of States parties, give particular attention to the implementation of, respectively, articles 8 and 24 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, articles 10, 12 and 13 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, article 6 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and articles 32, 34, 35 and 36 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, with a view to combating contemporary forms of slavery;

9. Decides to consider the question of the suppression of traffic in persons at its regular session of 1992 under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery

Freedom of movement

Working Group activities. The Subcommittee's five-member Working Group on a draft declaration on freedom and non-discrimination in respect of the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country met on 22 August 1991 to discuss the draft declaration.<sup>(110)</sup> It was agreed that a new consolidated draft and amendments and a previous draft, which were annexed to the Group's report, would serve as the basis of the Group's work. The Group, however, did not make major advances in the drafting due to the Subcommittee's heavy agenda and subsequent limited time.

Subcommittee action. On 29 August 1991,<sup>(111)</sup> the Subcommittee decided to transmit the Group's report to the Commission for its comments and guidance.

Population transfer

Subcommittee action. On 29 August 1991,<sup>(112)</sup> the Subcommittee, recognizing that population transfer affected the basic human rights and freedoms of the peoples concerned, including the original inhabitants, the people removed and settlers, decided to continue to consider that matter taking into account a working paper submitted by Christy Ezim Mbonu (Nigeria).<sup>(113)</sup>

Freedom of speech

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,<sup>(114)</sup> expressing concern at the extensive occurrence of detention of persons who exercised their right to freedom of opinion and expression, the Commission appealed to States to ensure respect and support for that right. It also appealed to them to ensure that persons seeking to exercise those rights and freedoms were not discriminated against, or harassed, in areas such as employment, housing and social services. Welcoming the intention of two Special Rapporteurs (Louis Joinet, France, and Danilo Turk, Yugoslavia) to study in greater detail measures to strengthen and promote the right to freedom of expression, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide assistance to them.

Report of the Special Rapporteurs. In July 1991<sup>(115)</sup> the Special Rapporteurs updated their 1990 preliminary report.<sup>(116)</sup> They considered comments from Subcommittee members and NGOs on their preliminary report and discussed the question of permissible restrictions on freedom of expression in the context of the struggle against racism and in armed conflicts.

Cooperation with UN human rights bodies

Note by the Secretary-General. In a note to the Commission of February 1991,<sup>(117)</sup> the Secretary-General discussed decisions and measures taken by United Nations policy-making organs with a view to protecting witnesses, complainants or persons trying to avail themselves of United Nations human rights procedures. Annexed to the report were allegations of intimidation and reprisal received and processed by special rapporteurs and working groups of the Commission.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,(118) the Commission on Human Rights requested all representatives of United Nations human rights bodies and treaty bodies monitoring the observance of human rights to continue to take urgent steps to prevent the occurrence of intimidation or reprisal. It also requested them to include in their reports a reference to allegations of intimidation or reprisal, as well as an account of action taken by them in that regard. It requested the Secretary-General to draw the attention of such representatives to its resolution and invited him to submit in 1992 a report on the subject.

On 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/254, approved the Commission's invitation to the Secretary-General to submit a report on alleged reprisals against witnesses or victims of human rights violations.

Subcommission action. On 30 August 1991,(119) the Subcommission asked Special Rapporteurs Joinet and Turk to submit a report with conclusions and recommendations taking into account comments made during discussion of its updated preliminary report(115) and asked the Secretary-General to provide them with the assistance they needed. It invited the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention and the Special Rapporteurs to pay particular attention to the situation of persons detained, ill-treated, or discriminated against for having exercised their right to freedom of opinion and expression.

Conscientious objectors

Report of the Secretary-General. In January 1991,(120) the Secretary-General summarized replies to a Commission request for comments or information on conscientious objection to military service received from 20 Governments, 3 United Nations bodies, 1 specialized agency, 1 inter-governmental organization and 8 NGOs.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,(121) the Commission requested the Secretary-General to report in 1993 on conscientious objection to military service, taking into account comments by Governments and further information received by him.

Amnesty

On 29 August 1991,(122) the Subcommission decided to request El Hadji Guisse (Senegal) and Louis Joinet (France) to expand and elaborate their August working paper(123) concerning measures to combat the increasingly widespread practice of impunity for perpetrators of serious human rights violations. The August paper updated a 1984 document prepared for a 1985 study of amnesty laws and their role in the safeguarding and promotion of human rights, prepared by Special Rapporteur Joinet.(124)

Independence of the judicial system

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,(125) the Commission welcomed recommendations made in a 1990 working paper(126) on means by which its Subcommission could monitor the implementation of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary and the protection of practising lawyers, which the Subcommission had endorsed in August 1990.(127) Taking note of a 1990 General Assembly resolution(128) welcoming the Subcommission's decision to entrust Louis Joinet (France) with preparing a report on strengthening the independence of the judiciary and protection of practising lawyers, the Commission endorsed that decision. It asked the Secretary-General to provide Mr. Joinet with all the necessary assistance to prepare that report, a request approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1991/241 of 31 May 1991. By the same decision, the Council also approved entrusting Mr. Joinet to prepare a report.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur submitted a report in June 1991,(129) aimed at setting up means for monitoring favourable practices-constitutional, legislative and practical protection implemented by many States-and adverse practices-violations of international norms-affecting the independence of the judiciary and the protection of lawyers. He described United Nations promotional and training activities concerning the independence of the judiciary and the protection of lawyers such as training courses, workshops and seminars given, which fell under advisory services and technical assistance. Information received from 19 States was analysed regarding cases of measures and practices that had served to strengthen the safeguards of independence and protection concerning judges and lawyers. Also examined were measures and practices that had weakened those safeguards. The Special Rapporteur proposed guidelines for training courses, workshops and seminars, as well as for advisory services and technical assistance, and suggested improved coordination among United Nations bodies. Other recommendations were set out in a Subcommission resolution (see below).

Subcommission action. On 29 August 1991,(130) the Subcommission endorsed the Special Rapporteur's recommendations concerning advisory services and technical assistance, particularly those ensuring wider and more effective participation of professionals and NGO representatives; providing follow-up and evaluation; and calling for increased cooperation and effective support of States in strengthening the independence of the judiciary. It decided to entrust him with preparing a further report on practices and measures which had served to strengthen or weaken the independence of the judiciary and the legal profession in accordance with United Nations standards. It asked the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the necessary assistance to complete that report and also to transmit it to Leandro Despouy (Argentina) and El Hadji Guissé (Senegal) to examine it with a view to making comments at the Subcommission's 1992 session. It further requested him to transmit its resolution to Governments and to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including professional associations of judges and lawyers, requesting them to provide specific information on practices and measures which had served to strengthen or to weaken the independence of the judiciary and the legal profession.

Right to a fair trial

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,<sup>(131)</sup> the Commission, having examined a brief report prepared by Stanislav Chernichenko (USSR) and William Treat (United States),<sup>(132)</sup> the recommendations of which had been endorsed by the Subcommission in 1990,<sup>(133)</sup> endorsed the Subcommission's decision to entrust them with preparing a study on the right to a fair trial: current recognition and measures to strengthen it. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to provide them with all the assistance they might require. It asked the two Special Rapporteurs to draft a questionnaire on the right to a fair trial and asked the Secretary-General to transmit it with the brief report to Governments, specialized agencies and NGOs for their responses and comments, and to transmit their responses to the Special Rapporteurs for consideration in connection with their study. It recommended for adoption a draft resolution by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1991/28 without vote.

Right to a fair trial

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights decision 1990/108 of 7 March 1990,<sup>a</sup> in which the Commission welcomed the decision of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to appoint Mr. Stanislav Chernichenko and Mr. William Treat as rapporteurs to prepare a report on existing international norms and standards pertaining to the right to a fair trial, and taking note of Commission resolution 1991/43 of 5 March 1991,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 41/120 of 4 December 1986 on setting international standards in the field of human rights,

Taking into account the brief report on the right to a fair trial prepared by Mr. Chernichenko and Mr. Treat,

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the two special rapporteurs with all the assistance necessary to carry out the study referred to in paragraph 1 above;

3. Requests the two special rapporteurs to draft a questionnaire on the right to a fair trial;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the questionnaire, together with the brief report on the right to a fair trial, prepared by Mr. Chernichenko and Mr. Treat, to Governments, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council for their response and comments, and to transmit the responses to the special rapporteurs for consideration in connection with the study referred to in paragraph 1 above;

5. Requests the special rapporteurs to prepare a preliminary report based upon their study and the responses to the questionnaire, proposing ways to develop the basic guarantees necessary for a fair trial into an international standard such as a model code, and to submit the report to the Subcommission for consideration at its forty-third session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-eighth session for comment.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 1 March 1991,(1) the Commission requested the Secretary-General to organize, under the 1992-1993 United Nations human rights programme, an expert seminar to discuss indicators for measuring achievements in realizing economic, social and cultural rights and to promote coordination between United Nations human rights activities and those of development agencies. It asked the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur Danilo Turk (Yugoslavia), when preparing a progress report on problems, policies and progressive measures relating to a more effective realization of economic, social and cultural rights, to take into account comments made in the Commission, and asked that priority be given to identifying practical strategies to promote the rights contained in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.(2) Concerning the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Commission encouraged States parties to the Covenant to support and cooperate with the Committee; welcomed the 1990 revised guidelines for reporting by States parties; (3) noted a 1990 recommendation by Special Rapporteur Danilo Turk to organize a seminar on social and economic indicators;(4) and endorsed the Committee's view that a series of national workshops should be organized by the Secretary-General to promote a better understanding of the Covenant. Welcoming the Committee's decision to devote one day at each of its sessions to a general discussion of one specific right or particular article of the Covenant, the Commission noted the Committee's decision to study in 1991 the question of social and economic indicators. (For details of the Committee's action in 1991, see below.)

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/235 of 31 May 1991, approved the Commission's request to organize an expert seminar.

On 22 February 1991,(5) by a roll-call vote of 31 to 2, with 9 abstentions, the Commission asked its Subcommission to submit the third report of Special Rapporteur Danilo Türk to the Commission in 1992 and requested Governments to provide him with their comments and information about their experience concerning the impact of economic adjustment policies arising from foreign debt on the enjoyment of human rights (see below).

Report of the Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur submitted in July his second progress report on the realization of economic, social and cultural rights.<sup>(6)</sup> The report updated the Subcommission's discussion of indicators to measure progress in realizing those rights and discussed the effects of internationally supported policies of structural adjustment. It provided an insight into 18 selected aspects of the relationship between structural adjustment and human rights and focused on evolving World Bank and International Monetary Fund (IMF) policies which were more comprehensive and beneficial to the realization of economic, social and cultural rights. The Special Rapporteur recommended drafting basic policy guidelines on structural adjustment and economic, social and cultural rights and identified as priority social concerns in the context of adjustment basic health care, primary education and food security.

Subcommission action. On 29 August 1991,<sup>(7)</sup> the Subcommission endorsed its Special Rapporteur's recommendations and asked him to submit his final report in 1992.

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

As at 31 December 1991, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966<sup>(2)</sup> and in force since 1976,<sup>(8)</sup> had been ratified or acceded to by 104 States. Albania, Estonia, Grenada, Israel, Lithuania, Nepal and Zimbabwe became parties to it in 1991. <sup>(9)</sup>

In his report to the Assembly on the International Covenants on Human Rights,<sup>(10)</sup> the Secretary-General provided information on the status of ratifications or accessions to and signatures of the Covenant as at 1 August 1991 (see also under "Advancement of human rights").

Implementation of the Covenant

Human Rights Commission action. On 22 February 1991,<sup>(11)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights appealed to all States that had not become parties to the Covenant to do so. It welcomed the efforts of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in preparing general comments on the provisions of the Covenant and encouraged Governments to publish and disseminate widely the Covenant's text in as many languages as possible. It asked the Secretary-General to report in 1992 on the status of the Covenant.

Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, established in 1985<sup>(12)</sup> to succeed the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, held its sixth session in Geneva from 25 November to 13 December 1991.<sup>(13)</sup> The Committee's pre-sessional Working Group, a live-member Group established in 1988<sup>(14)</sup> to meet for one week prior to each session, held its meetings in Geneva from 16 to 20 September.

Concerning the rights covered by articles 6 to 9 under the Covenant (the right to work and to favourable conditions of work, trade union rights, and the right to social security), the Committee examined reports from Afghanistan<sup>(15)</sup> and Panama;<sup>(16)</sup> under articles 10 to 12 (protection of the family, mothers and children, and the right to an adequate living standard, and to physical and mental health), a report by Panama;<sup>(17)</sup> under articles 13 to 15 (covering the rights to education, including compulsory education, and cultural participation), reports from Colombia,<sup>(18)</sup> the Democratic People's Republic of Korea,<sup>(19)</sup> Finland,<sup>(20)</sup> Panama,<sup>(21)</sup> Spain<sup>(22)</sup> and Sweden;<sup>(23)</sup> and under articles 1 to 15, reports from Afghanistan<sup>(24)</sup> and the Syrian Arab Republic.<sup>(25)</sup>

The Committee considered additional information submitted by Colombia<sup>(26)</sup> concerning the right to health, social security, rights of women and protection of mothers and families, protection of children, right to decent housing, protection of individuals in extreme poverty and the situation of indigenous communities, and by Zaire<sup>(27)</sup> concerning family and equality between men and women in marriage, the status of women and children, and the rights to proper housing, education, work and freedom of association.

The Committee recommended three draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council: one by which the Council would authorize the holding of a three-week extraordinary additional session during 1992 or 1993 to consider the long-standing backlog of States parties' reports; a second by which it would appeal to 16 States parties which had yet to submit initial reports to do so; and a third by which it would note a Committee decision to offer to send two of its members to the Dominican Republic to advise the Government with regard to large-scale evictions. Annexed to the Committee's report was the status of submission of reports in accordance with a programme established by the Council.

The Committee continued its discussion on drafting an optional protocol to the Covenant that would permit the submission of communications pertaining to some or all of the rights recognized in the Covenant. It also discussed the problems of the elderly as they related to the realization of rights recognized in the Covenant and the use of indicators to measure the degree to which economic, social and cultural rights were actually in place.

In discussing its contribution to the preparatory process for the World Conference on Human Rights, the Committee recommended that the Conference explore the establishment of a High Commissioner for Human Rights and the creation of an International Court for Human Rights.

By decision 1991/267 of 31 May, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Committee's 1990 session.<sup>(3)</sup>

Right to development

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1990 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(28)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Human Rights in January 1991 a comprehensive report summarizing comments on the right to development from 4 Governments, 11 United Nations bodies or organs, 5 specialized agencies, 9 NGOs and 1 other organization.<sup>(29)</sup> By a September 1991 note,<sup>(30)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted his report to the General Assembly.

Human Rights Commission action. On 22 February 1991,<sup>(31)</sup> by a roll-call vote of 40 to 1, with 2 abstentions, the Commission, recalling the report on the Global Consultation on the Realization of the Right to Development as a Human Right (Geneva, 8-12 January 1990),<sup>(32)</sup> asked the Secretary-General to submit concrete proposals on the effective implementation and promotion of the 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development.<sup>(33)</sup> It called on the Preparatory Committee for the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights, in examining the relationship between development and human rights, to take fully into account the 1986 Declaration.

Extreme poverty

Human Rights Commission action. On 22 February 1991,<sup>(35)</sup> the Commission, reaffirming that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constituted a violation of human dignity, called on States, specialized agencies and United Nations bodies and other international organizations to give attention to extreme poverty when expressing their views on human rights based on solidarity, pursuant to a 1989 General Assembly resolution.<sup>(36)</sup> It encouraged the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to give attention to extreme poverty and exclusion from society and recommended that the Subcommission pay particular attention to the conditions in which the poorest could convey their experience and contribute to a better understanding of their lives.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1989 Assembly resolution,<sup>(36)</sup> the Secretary-General summarized comments concerning human rights and extreme poverty received from five Governments, eight United Nations bodies,

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 46/121 without vote.

Human rights and extreme poverty

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and other international instruments concerning human rights adopted by the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 44/148 of 15 December 1989 and 44/212 of 22 December 1989 and other relevant resolutions,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/14 of 22 February 1991, in which the Commission drew the attention of the General Assembly to the contradiction between the existence of situations of extreme poverty and exclusion from society, which must be overcome, and the duty to guarantee full enjoyment of human rights,

Recalling its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990, in which it proclaimed the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, one of the main characteristics of which is the search for a significant reduction in extreme poverty and a shared responsibility of all countries,

Recognising that extreme poverty is a violation of human dignity and could constitute a threat to the right to life,

Deeply concerned at the steady increase in extreme poverty in the world and at its effect on the most vulnerable groups of society, which are thus prevented from exercising their human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Aware of the need for a better understanding of the causes of extreme poverty,

Recognizing that the elimination of widespread poverty and the full enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights are interrelated goals.

Recognizing that the "grave suffering of the great majority of human beings who live in conditions of extreme poverty demands the immediate attention of the international community and the adoption of concrete measures for the elimination of extreme poverty and social exclusion,

1. Affirms that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constitute a violation of human dignity and that urgent national and international measures are therefore required to eliminate them;

2. Stresses the need for an in-depth and complete study of the nature of the phenomenon of extreme poverty which affects mankind;

3. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to give appropriate consideration, in directing its studies of extreme poverty, to the conditions in which the poorest themselves can convey their experience and so contribute to a better understanding of their situation of social exclusion;

4. Again requests States, the specialized agencies and United Nations bodies and other international organizations, including intergovernmental organizations, to give the necessary attention to this problem;

5. Notes with appreciation the concrete measures taken by the United Nations Children's Fund to lessen the effects of extreme poverty on children and the efforts of the United Nations Development Programme to give priority to the search for a means of alleviating poverty within the framework of the relevant resolutions;

6. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its forty-seventh session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Right to own property

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights, on 1 March 1991,<sup>(40)</sup> requested its Chairman to entrust an independent expert with preparing a study on the means whereby and the degree to which respect for the right to own property alone as well as in association with others contributed to the development of individual liberty and initiative, which served to strengthen other human rights and fundamental freedoms; the Commission asked that a preliminary report be submitted at its 1992 session and a final report in 1993. It asked that the expert analyse the right to own property in relation to: personal property, including the residence of one's self and family; and economically productive property, including property associated with agriculture, commerce and industry.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/236 of 31 May 1991, approved the Commission's request to entrust an independent expert to prepare such a study.

On 29 August 1991, the Commission's Chairman appointed Luis Valencia Rodriguez (Ecuador) as the Special Rapporteur.

Right to adequate housing

Subcommission action. On 29 August 1991,<sup>(41)</sup> the Subcommission entrusted Rajindar Sacher (India) with preparing a working paper for submission in 1992 on the right to adequate housing, with a view to determining how to further the recognition and enforcement of that right. It also asked him to examine the utility of adopting an international declaration or convention on the right to adequate housing.

Forced evictions

Subcommission action. On 26 August 1991,<sup>(42)</sup> the Subcommission drew to the attention of the Commission: the illegal, null and void character of establishing settlements in occupied territories; the fact that forced eviction constituted a gross human rights violation, particularly of the right to adequate housing; and the need for immediate measures aimed at eliminating forced evictions. It recommended that the Commission encourage Governments to take policy and legislative measures to curtail forced evictions.

Popular participation and human rights

On 10 January 1991,<sup>(43)</sup> the Secretary-General summarized replies from five Governments, three United Nations organs, one specialized agency and eight NGOs regarding the extent to which the right to popular participation had been established and had evolved at the national level. The report complemented a 1985 study by the Secretary-General.(#)

The Commission, on 22 February 1991,<sup>(45)</sup> asked the Secretary-General to update his study, taking into account any further information received from Governments, United Nations organs, specialized agencies or NGOs.

Advancement of human rights

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/117 by recorded vote.

Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Charter of the United Nations the peoples of the United Nations declared their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling also the purposes and principles of the Charter to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Emphasizing the significance and validity of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenants on Human Rights in promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, in which it decided that the approach to future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights questions should take into account the concepts set forth in that resolution,

Noting with concern that many of the principles enunciated in resolution 32/130 have not yet been taken under consideration by the international community with all the necessary dynamism and objectivity,

Emphasizing the special importance of the purposes and principles proclaimed in the Declaration on the Right to Development, contained in the annex to its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling its resolutions concerning the right to development, and also its resolution 45/155 of 18 December 1990, in which it decided that one of the objectives of the World Conference on Human Rights to be held in 1993 would be to examine the relation between development and the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights as well as civil and political rights, recognizing the importance of creating the conditions whereby everyone may enjoy those rights,

Taking into the final documents of the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,<sup>a</sup>

Reiterating that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of development opportunities is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals within nations,

Expressing its particular concern about the progressive worsening of living conditions in the developing world and the negative impact thereof on the full enjoyment of human rights, and especially about the very serious economic situation of the African continent and the disastrous effects of the heavy burden of the external debt for the peoples of Africa, Asia and Latin America,

Reiterating its profound conviction that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights,

Deeply convinced that today more than ever, economic and social development and human rights are complementary elements leading to the same goal, that is, the maintenance of peace and justice among nations as the foundation for the ideals of freedom and well-being to which mankind aspires.

Reiterating that cooperation among all nations on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of every people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system, is essential for the promotion of peace and development.

Convinced that the primary aim of such international cooperation must be the achievement by all human beings of a life of freedom and dignity and freedom from want,

Considering that the efforts of the developing countries for their own development should be supported by an increased flow of resources and by the adoption of appropriate and substantive measures for creating an external environment conducive to such development,

1. Reiterates its request that the Commission on Human Rights should continue its current work on overall analysis-with a view to further promoting and strengthening human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the question of the programme and working methods of the Commission, and on the overall analysis of the alternative approaches and ways and means for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with the provisions and ideas set forth in General Assembly resolution 32/130;

2. Affirms that a primary aim of international cooperation in the field of human rights is a life of freedom, dignity and peace for all peoples and for every human being, that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from promoting and protecting the others;

3. Reaffirms that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights;

4. Reiterates once again that the international community should accord, or continue to accord, priority to the search for solutions to mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and individuals affected by situations such as those mentioned in paragraph 1 (e) of General Assembly resolution 32/130, paying due attention also to other situations of violations of human rights;

5. Considers that the issues mentioned in paragraph 4 above should be approached with due attention in the preparatory work for the World Conference on Human Rights so as to evaluate during the Conference the obstacles to achieving progress in the field of human rights;

6. Reaffirms that the right to development is an inalienable human right;

7. Reaffirms also that international peace and security are essential elements for achieving full realization of the right to development;

8. Recognizes that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent;

9. Considers it necessary for all Member States to promote international cooperation on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of every people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system, with a view to solving international economic, social and humanitarian problems;

10. Urges all States to cooperate with the Commission on Human Rights in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

11. Reaffirms once again that, in order to facilitate the full enjoyment of all human rights without diminishing personal dignity, it is necessary to promote the rights to education, work, health and proper nourishment through the adoption of measures at the national level, including those that provide for the right of workers to participate in management, as well as the adoption of measures at the international level, entailing a restructuring of existing international economic relations;

12. Decides that the approach to future work within the United Nations system on human rights matters should also take into account the content of the Declaration on the Right to Development and the need for the implementation thereof;

13. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-seventh session.

National institutions for human rights protection

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1989 General Assembly request,(1) the Secretary-General submitted in January 1991 a report and later addendum(2) updating information received since his most recent (1989) report(3) from 16 Governments concerning conceptual models of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights. By a September 1991 note,(4) the Secretary-General's report was transmitted to the Assembly.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,(5) the Commission welcomed the decision to convene a workshop with the participation of national and regional institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, to review, inter alia, their cooperation with international institutions such as the United Nations and its bodies, with a view to increasing their effectiveness. It requested the Secretary-General to publicize the proceedings of that meeting and to use the results in finalizing a manual on national institutions.

The workshop (Paris, 7-9 October 1991) discussed the role and functions of national institutions for promoting and protecting human rights and the ombudsman and similar institutions; 21 Governments presented examples of such institutions.

On 31 May, by decision 1991/264, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its forty-seventh session.(6)

With regard to the organization of its work, the Commission decided to: include in its 1991 agenda the situation of human rights in occupied Kuwait;(7) replace its item on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child with one on rights of the child and consider under it any matter relating to rights of children;(18) and consider the situation of human rights in Guatemala under item 21.(9) It also decided to invite a number of people to participate in its meetings.(10)

Pursuant to a 1990 Economic and Social Council request,(11) the Secretary-General submitted a February 1991 report on expanding the Commission's membership.(12)

Organization of the work of the 1992 session

On 31 May 1991, by decision 1991/263, the Economic and Social Council authorized 40 fully serviced additional meetings for the Commission's forty-eighth (1992) session. The Council noted that the Commission had requested its Chairman to make every effort to organize the session's work within the time normally allotted, additional meetings to be utilized only if absolutely necessary.

On 8 March,(13) the Commission had recommended to the Council the above conditions for organizing its 1992 session.

Guidelines for a revised 1993 provisional agenda

The Commission on Human Rights, on 8 March 1991,(14) decided to take note of guidelines for a revised provisional agenda for 1993. It requested the Secretary-General to prepare a working document containing a draft provisional agenda for 1993 based on those guidelines for discussion in 1992. The guidelines were annexed to the Commission's decision.

Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

Subcommission session

The Subcommission on Prevention and Discrimination and Protection of Minorities held its forty-third session at Geneva from 5 to 30 August 1991.(15) At that session, it adopted 39 resolutions and 19 decisions. In addition, it recommended to the Commission on Human Rights, its parent body, 10 draft resolutions for adoption.

The Subcommission adopted several decisions relating to: sessional working groups;(16) organization of work;(17) methods of voting concerning country situations;(18) consideration of communications; establishment of a working group on its methods of work;(20) and the composition of its working groups.(21)

Report of the Subcommission Chairman. In January 1991,(22) the Subcommission's 1990 Chairman, Danilo Türk (Yugoslavia), submitted a report on the implementation of guidelines for the Subcommission provided by the Commission in 1990.(23)

Working Group report. By a 1989 decision,(24) the Subcommission had established a Working Group of five of its members to prepare an overview and analysis of the suggestions and proposals to enable the Subcommission to better discharge its responsibilities. In 1991, the Group met on 8 and 9 August at Geneva(25) and adopted conclusions and recommendations on issues relating to studies on human rights violations.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,(26) the Commission set out guidelines for the Subcommission's work.

On 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/248, taking note of the Commission's guidelines for the Subcommission's work, approved the Commission's invitation to its Chairman to inform the Subcommission on the debate on the Subcommission's 1990 session(27) and approved a Commission request to the Subcommission Chairman to report on the implementation of the guidelines it had provided.

Strengthening the independence of the Subcommission

Taking into account the relevant opinions of the United Nations Legal Counsel, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1991/32 of 31 May 1991, interpreted rule 59 of the rules of procedure of the Council's functional commissions to mean that the Subcommission might vote on resolutions concerning allegations of human rights violations in countries by secret ballot, when so decided by a majority of its members present and voting.

The Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 23 to 4, with 15 abstentions, on 6 March 1991(28) had recommended adoption of the above resolution by the Council.

Strengthening the Centre for Human Rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,(29) the Commission on Human Rights recognized that the workload of the Centre for Human Rights had greatly increased while resources had failed to keep pace with the expansion of its responsibilities, as noted in reports of the Secretary-General.(30,31) Welcoming a 1990 General Assembly resolution(32) providing interim measures for additional human resources for the Centre, it expressed the wish that those measures be implemented as soon as possible. Reiterating its concern that programme and resource proposals for long-term solutions responding to the Centre's needs and commensurate with its workload be included in the proposed 1992-1993 programme budget, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on developments relating to the Centre at the General Assembly's 1991 session.

Also on 5 March,(33) the Commission adopted a resolution concerning the Centre's coordinating role, in which it invited the Secretary-General to ask Governments, specialized agencies and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations for their views on strengthening the Centre, with special emphasis on new directions and forms, including increasing the representation of underrepresented groups of States, notably the developing countries, in senior and policy-formulating posts, while safeguarding the principles of equitable geographical distribution, and to submit in 1992 a report setting out those views.

Note by the Secretariat. A February 1991 note by the Secretariat(34) stated that the Centre's overall needs would be further looked into by the Secretary-General in formulating the programme budget for 1992-1993 and that in making his proposals he would, in accordance with a 1990 Assembly resolution,(35) include programme and resource proposals for long-term solutions to the Centre's problems.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1990 Assembly request,(35) the Secretary-General, in an October 1991 report concerning developments relating to the activities of the Centre for Human Rights,(36) noted that increased resources were accorded at the Assembly's 1990 session(32) in response to the critical situation anticipated by the Centre in 1991. Since then, he concluded, the Centre's workload had continued to increase in response to international concerns.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/36 without vote.

Developments relating to the activities of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat
The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 45/180 of 21 December 1990, Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/23 of 5 March 1991 and Council resolution 1990/47 of 25 May 1990,

Bearing in mind also section V of General Assembly resolution 45/248 B of 21 December 1990 concerning interim measures for additional human resources for the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat,

Recognizing the important role of the Centre for Human Rights in the promotion, protection and implementation of human rights and the need to provide sufficient human resources to the Centre, particularly in view of the fact that its workload has greatly increased while resources have failed to keep pace with the expansion of its responsibilities,

1. Notes with regret that the report requested in paragraph 3 of the Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/23 has not been submitted to the Council;

2. Notes that the workload of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat has further increased owing to the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights;

3. Expresses its concern that unless appropriate financial measures are taken, the reduced efficiency of the servicing of human rights bodies by the Secretariat could be further impaired;

4. Calls upon the General Assembly to take into account the discrepancy between the resources of the Centre and its increased responsibilities and, in accordance with established procedures, to take appropriate and prompt action to rectify the problem;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 45/180 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/23, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a progress report on developments relating to the activities of the Centre for Human Rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/118 without vote.

Strengthening of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/135 of 15 December 1989 and 45/180 of 21 December 1990,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1989/46 of 6 March 1989, 1990/25 of 27 February 1990 and 1991/23 of 5 March 1991, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1990/47 of 25 May 1990 and 1991/36 of 31 May 1991,

Recalling its resolution 45/248 B of 21 December 1990, in particular, section V thereof,

Considering that the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms is one of the basic purposes of the United Nations enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and an issue of the utmost importance for the Organization,

Recalling that the Secretary-General in his report on the work of the Organization for 1991 stated that the protection of human rights had become one of the keystones in the arch of peace,

Recognizing the important role of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat in the promotion, protection and implementation of human rights and the need to provide sufficient human resources to the Centre, particularly in view of the fact that its workload has greatly increased, while resources have failed to keep pace with the expansion of its responsibilities,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and noting that, while increased resources were accorded by the General Assembly by its resolution 45/248 B, section V, in response to the critical situation faced by the Centre for Human Rights in 1991, since then, the workload of the Centre, by reason of decisions of intergovernmental and expert bodies, inter alia, has continued to increase in response to strongly felt international concerns,

Noting that the Centre for Human Rights was requested by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council to carry out additional mandates after the preparation of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993,

1. Emphasizes that, when the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 is required, adequate staffing, temporary assistance and other resources should be allocated to the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat so as to enable it to respond to its increasing workload and to its needs in order to carry out all the functions assigned to it, including those relating to the preparations for the World Conference on Human Rights to be held in 1993 and the Conference itself;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that sufficient resources are accorded to the Centre for Human Rights to enable it to carry out, in full and on time, all the mandates, including the additional ones, resulting from the decisions of intergovernmental and expert bodies;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit an interim report to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-eighth session and a final report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the developments relating to the activities of the Centre for Human Rights and on the measures taken to implement the present resolution.

Strengthening United Nations action

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991, (37) the Commission reiterated that all peoples had the right to determine freely their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development and that every State had the duty to respect that right within the provisions of the United Nations Charter (see APPENDIX II), including respect for territorial integrity. It called on Member States to base their activities for the promotion, protection and full realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the development of further international cooperation in this field, on the Charter, the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights (38) and other relevant international instruments and to refrain from activities inconsistent with that international legal framework. It underlined the continuing need for accurate, impartial and objective information on the political, economic and social situations and events in all countries. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to invite Governments to provide comments on its resolution and requested the Subcommission's Special Rapporteurs Louis Joinet (France) and Danilo Türk (Yugoslavia) to comment on it in the context of their study on the right to freedom of opinion and expression. #### GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/129 without vote.

Strengthening of United Nations action in the human rights field through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity
The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and its determination to promote social progress and better standards of living in greater freedom,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Bearing in mind equally that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling that, in accordance with Article 55 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Organization shall promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, with a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being that are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and that, in accordance with Article 56, all Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in cooperation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55,

Reiterating that Member States should continue to act in the human rights field in conformity with the provisions of the Charter,

Desirous of achieving further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that such international cooperation should be based on the principles embodied in international law, especially the Charter, as well as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant instruments,

Deeply convinced that United Nations action in this field should be based not only on a profound understanding of the broad range of problems existing in all societies but also on full respect for the political, economic and social realities of each of them, in strict compliance with the purposes and principles of the Charter and for the basic purpose of promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms through international cooperation,

Reaffirming its resolution 45/163 of 18 December 1990,

Recalling its resolutions 32/130 of 16 December 1977, 37/200 of 18 December 1982, 41/155 of 4 December 1986 and 43/155 of 8 December 1988,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 2131(XX) of 21 December 1965, 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970 and 36/103 of 9 December 1981,

Bearing in mind also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/79 of 6 March 1991,

Taking note of the recommendation made by the Commission on Human Rights in the annex to its resolution 1991/30 of 5 March 1991, that the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights, being guided by a spirit of consensus, should make suggestions aimed at ensuring the universality, objectivity and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues in United Nations human rights forums,

Aware of the fact that the promotion, protection and full exercise of all human rights and fundamental freedoms as legitimate concerns of the world community should be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity and should not be used for political ends,

Underlining the obligation that Governments have to promote and protect human rights and to carry out the responsibilities that they have undertaken under international law, especially the Charter, as well as various international instruments in the field of human rights,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect that right within the provisions of the Charter, including respect for territorial integrity;

2. Reaffirms that it is a purpose of the United Nations and the task of all Member States in cooperation with the Organization to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur;

3. Calls upon all Member States to base their activities for the protection and promotion of human rights, including the development of further international cooperation in this field, on the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and other relevant international instruments and to refrain from activities that are inconsistent with this international legal framework;

4. Considers that international cooperation in this field should make an effective and practical contribution to the urgent task of preventing mass and flagrant violations of human rights, to the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and to the strengthening of international peace and security;

5. Affirms that the promotion, protection and full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, as legitimate concerns of the world community, should be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity and should not be used for political ends;

6. Expresses its conviction that an unbiased and fair approach to human rights issues contributes to the promotion of international cooperation as well as to the effective promotion, protection and realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

7. Underlines, in this context, the continuing need for impartial and objective information on the political, economic and social situations and events of all countries;

8. Invites Member States to consider adopting, as appropriate, within the framework of their respective legal systems and in accordance with their obligations under international law, especially the Charter, as well as international human rights instruments, the measures that they may deem appropriate to achieve further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

9. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-eighth session, to continue to examine ways and means to strengthen United Nations action in this regard, on the basis of the present resolution and of Commission resolution 1991/79;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments, in responding to the request in paragraph 8 of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/79, to comment also on the present resolution and on ways and means to strengthen United Nations action in this regard, in time for the transmission of their comments to the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights and the regional conferences for their consideration;

1993 World Conference on Human Rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,<sup>(40)</sup> the Commission appealed to Member States, specialized agencies and observers to take part in the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights. It recommended that its Chairman, the chairpersons or other designated members of human rights bodies and working groups, as well as special and thematic rapporteurs, participate in the work of the Preparatory Committee. On 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/239, approved that recommendation.

The Commission also recommended that the Secretary-General of the Conference convene the Committee's first meeting at Geneva from 9 to 13 September. It set out a number of guidelines for the Committee's work and asked the Secretary-General to report in 1992 on progress made in the preparations for the Conference. Annexed to the Commission's resolution were further recommendations for the Committee's work.

Subcommission action. On 30 August 1991,<sup>(41)</sup> the Subcommission decided that its Chairman, Louis Joinet (France), should be its representative at the first session of the Preparatory Committee.

Communication. By a letter of 14 June 1991,<sup>(42)</sup> Germany reiterated its 9 May invitation to the Secretary-General to hold the 1993 United Nations World Conference on Human Rights at Berlin.

Preparatory Committee

The Preparatory Committee for the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights at its first session (Geneva, 9-13 September 1991) elected its officers, adopted its agenda and rules of procedure and discussed its organization of work.<sup>(43)</sup> It adopted a decision proposing that the provisional agenda, documentation and draft rules of procedure for the Conference be taken up at its second session and that the Conference be convened at Berlin for two weeks in 1993. It further proposed that the Secretary-General give the Conference and its preparatory process the widest possible publicity and that the General Assembly ask him to ensure full coordination of public information activities in the area of human rights within the United Nations system.

The Committee recommended that it meet for three further sessions at Geneva, twice in 1992 and once in 1993. Noting that a number of least developed countries had been unable to send representatives to its first session because of a lack of voluntary contributions provided for in a 1990 Assembly resolution<sup>(44)</sup> the Committee recommended to the Assembly that it reiterate its invitation for contributions to extrabudgetary resources for that purpose and also that the Secretariat intensify its efforts. The Committee proposed that regional meetings be convened and that the Secretary-General be asked to prepare specific documentation on human rights. It recommended that the Assembly encourage the Commission on Human Rights Chairman, the chairmen or other designated members of human rights bodies and working groups and special and thematic rapporteurs to contribute as observers by taking part in its work and that of the Conference.

Reports of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1990 General Assembly request<sup>(44)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted an August 1991 report with later addenda<sup>(45)</sup> containing views and recommendations on the Conference by 14 Governments, 3 specialized agencies, 4 United Nations bodies, 2 United Nations human rights treaty bodies and 24 NGOs.

In November 1991<sup>(46)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that the total requirements for the preparatory activities and the Conference itself would amount to $6 million.

Public information activities

The Secretary-General presented to the Commission in 1991 a report on the development of public information activities in the human rights field with special emphasis on the activities of the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights, by the Centre for Human Rights and the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI).(47)

The World Public Information Campaign, launched by the General Assembly in 1998,(48) sought to increase understanding and awareness of human rights and fundamental freedoms as well as provide education on international human rights machinery and the efforts of the United Nations to promote and protect human rights. Activities within the Campaign focused on preparing and disseminating printed information and reference materials; workshops, seminars and training courses; fellowships and internships; special human rights observances; and coverage and promotion activities.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,(49) the Commission asked the Secretary-General to ensure that recent periodic reports of States parties to treaty-monitoring bodies and summary records of discussions of them in treaty bodies were available in United Nations information centres of the submitting countries. It encouraged Member States to provide, facilitate and promote publicity for United Nations human rights activities and to accord priority to disseminating in their national and local languages the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,<sup>(50)</sup> the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights<sup>(38)</sup> and other international instruments. Urging Member States to include in their educational curricula materials relevant to a comprehensive understanding of human rights issues, it encouraged the efforts of the Centre for Human Rights to develop a manual for higher education, in cooperation with UNESCO, and, to that end, to organize a meeting of experts in 1991. The Commission asked DPI to use fully its available resources in human rights to produce materials on such issues and asked the Centre for Human Rights to coordinate the activities of the World Campaign and maintain liaison with Governments, regional and national institutions and individuals in developing and implementing those activities. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to take advantage, in implementing the World Campaign, of NGO collaboration and to submit a report in 1992 on public information activities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted decision 1991/266. Noting the importance that it had consistently attached to public information activities in the field of human rights, the Council asked the Secretary-General to undertake, as soon as possible, the preparation and publication of a brochure or booklet describing the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

Advisory services

In 1991, under the United Nations programme of advisory services in human rights established in 1955,<sup>(51)</sup> training courses were held in Brasilia, Brazil, and Caracas, Venezuela, on human rights issues, and a regional seminar on international human rights standards and administration was held at Cairo, Egypt (8-12 July). In May, Poland and the Centre for Human Rights concluded a technical cooperation accord to strengthen the promotion and protection of human rights in Poland; Bulgaria and the Centre concluded such an accord in July. In addition, a three-member United Nations expert team visited Lesotho in November to assist in the legal and technical aspects of democratic elections for parliamentary elections scheduled for 1992.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,<sup>(52)</sup> the Commission, taking note of a report by the Secretary-General on advisory services in the field of human rights,<sup>(53)</sup> asked him to: provide urgently more human and financial resources to enlarge advisory services; pursue his efforts for a medium-term plan for advisory services and technical assistance; further intensify coordination within the United Nations system for providing such services and assistance; explore possibilities offered by cooperation between the Centre for Human Rights and specialized bodies of the system; bring the need for further technical assistance in the legal field to the attention of the relevant United Nations bodies and specialized agencies; and report to the Commission in 1992 on progress made in implementing the programme of advisory services. It requested its special rapporteurs and representatives, as well as the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, to inform Governments of the possibility of availing themselves of the services provided for under the programmes of advisory services and to include in their recommendations proposals for specific projects.

Equatorial Guinea

On 6 March 1991,<sup>(54)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, commending Expert Fernando Volio Jiménez (Costa Rica) for his report on the human rights situation in Equatorial Guinea,<sup>(55)</sup> recommended that Equatorial Guinea avail itself of advisory services in the field of human rights to prepare initial reports on the situation in that country and asked the Secretary-General to continue to provide such advisory services and other forms of assistance, especially to codify basic civil and criminal laws and prepare initial reports. It urged Equatorial Guinea to establish a commission to monitor implementation of a plan of action proposed by the United Nations in 1981<sup>(56)</sup> and accepted by the Government and to draw up a general associations act to facilitate implementation of the human rights recognized in the International Covenants on Human Rights ratified by Equatorial Guinea. It requested the Secretary-General to extend the Expert's mandate to study the existing situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Equatorial Guinea and asked the Expert to report in 1992.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/260, approved extension of the Expert's mandate.

Guatemala

Human Rights Commission action. Taking note of a report by independent expert Christian Tomuschat (Germany) on the situation of human rights in Guatemala,<sup>(57)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, on 6 March 1991,<sup>(58)</sup> expressed its gratitude to Guatemala for collaborating in carrying out its advisory activities and asked the Secretary-General to continue to provide that country with advisory services. Urging Guatemala to undertake investigations to identify and bring to justice those responsible for acts of torture, disappearances, murders and extralegal executions, the Commission requested Guatemala to intensify efforts to ensure that its authorities and security forces fully respected the human rights of the Guatemalan people. It asked the Secretary-General to extend the expert's mandate and asked the expert to report in 1992.

Extension of the expert's mandate was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1991/246 of 31 May 1991.

Subcommission action. On 23 August 1991,(59) the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 19 to 1, with 1 abstention, adopted a resolution on the situation of human rights in Guatemala.

Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services

On 5 March 1991,(60) the Commission called on Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to consider making voluntary contributions to implement projects within the programme of the Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services, established in 1987. (61) It asked the Secretary-General to continue to elaborate comprehensive programmes of advisory services and technical cooperation, distinguishing between technical cooperation projects financed under the Fund and other activities such as seminars, fellowships and dissemination of documentation financed under the regular United Nations budget and within the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights. Encouraging the Secretary-General to pay due attention to the particular needs of developing countries and explore possibilities offered by the cooperation of specialized agencies with the Centre for Human Rights, it asked him to bring regularly to the attention of all Governments and of human rights organs the opportunities that existed under the Fund. It also asked him to guarantee transparency of the criteria applied, and of the rules of procedure to be followed in carrying out technical cooperation, and to report annually on the operation and administration of the Fund in a distinct part of his annual report on advisory services and technical cooperation.

International human rights instruments

Human rights treaty bodies

In 1991, there were seven human rights treaty instruments in force providing for monitoring of treaty implementation by expert bodies. These instruments and their respective treaty bodies were the: 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination(62) (CERD); 1966 International Covenant on Economie, Social and Cultural Rights(38) (Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights); 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights(38) (Human Rights Committee); 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women(63) (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women); 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment(64) (Committee against Torture); 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child(65) (Committee on the Rights of the Child); and 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid(66) (Group of Three).

Human Rights Commission action. On 1 March 1991, (67) the Commission, taking note of the conclusions and recommendations of the second meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies (Geneva, 10-14 October 1988)(68) and those of the third meeting (Geneva, 1-5 October 1990),(69) endorsed continuing efforts to streamline, rationalize and improve reporting procedures by treaty bodies and by the Secretary-General. The Commission also endorsed the third meeting's recommendation to institutionalize the meetings and asked the General Assembly to take action to enable them to be held biennially. Welcoming a February 1991 note(70) by the Secretary-General transmitting comments made by the Human Rights Committee on a 1989 study on possible long-term approaches to enhancing the effective operation of existing and prospective bodies established under United Nations human rights instruments,(71) the Commission asked him to report in 1992 on the comments of the remaining treaty bodies. He was also asked to consider establishing a committee resource room to gather and facilitate access to various sources of information indispensable for the effective functioning of various treaty bodies and to submit to the Assembly in 1991 a report examining the financial, legal and other implications of providing full funding for the operation of all human rights treaty bodies. Urging the Secretary-General to expedite the implementation of the 1990 recommendations of the Task Force on Computerization,(72) it further asked him to prepare an inventory of all international human rights standard-setting activities to facilitate better-informed decision-making.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In January 1991, (73) the Secretary-General reported to the Commission on Human Rights on progress made during 1990 in computerizing the work of human rights treaty-monitoring bodies in relation to reporting systems. He intended to invite Member States of the United Nations to make generous contributions to cover the estimated initial, one-time cost of the proposed system.

In September 1991,<sup>(74)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on progress achieved in enhancing the effective functioning of the treaty bodies.

Pursuant to a 1990 Assembly resolution,<sup>(75)</sup> the Secretary-General reported in November on the financial and legal implications of full funding for the operation of all human rights treaty bodies.<sup>(76)</sup>

Reporting obligations of States parties

Human Rights Commission action. In February 1991 <sup>(77)</sup> the Commission urged States parties to fulfil their reporting obligations under the International Covenants on Human Rights and asked the Secretary-General to consider ways to assist States parties in preparing their reports, including seminars and workshops.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1991/265, by which it appealed to the following States, which had been parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights for more than 10 years but had not submitted even the initial report required by the Covenant, to do so as soon as possible: El Salvador, the Gambia, Guinea, Kenya, Lebanon, Mali, Mauritius, Morocco, Sri Lanka and Suriname.

International Covenants on Human Rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 22 February 1991, <sup>(77)</sup> the Commission adopted a resolution on the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights, <sup>(38)</sup> which corresponded largely to resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly later in the year (see below). The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1992 on the status of the Covenants and on the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/33 without vote.

International Covenants on Human Rights The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind its important responsibilities in relation to the coordination of activities to promote the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Mindful that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights and, together with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, form the core of the International Bill of Rights,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in promoting and implementing the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its fifth session, as well as the general comments of the Human Rights Committee adopted at its thirty-ninth session,

Noting, in this regard, that a number of States Members of the United Nations have yet to become parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Considering that the effective functioning of treaty bodies established in accordance with the relevant provisions of international instruments on human rights plays a fundamental role and hence represents an important continuing concern of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights as major parts of the international effort to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Appeals strongly to all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

4. Appeals to States parties to the Covenants that have exercised their sovereign right to make reservations in accordance with relevant rules of international law to consider whether any such reservations should be reviewed;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to intensify the systematic efforts to encourage States to become parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights and, through the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, to provide technical assistance to the States that are not parties to the Covenants, with a view to assisting them in ratifying or acceding to the Covenants;

6. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties to the Covenants with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

7. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation and the need for strict observance of all the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

8. Welcomes the continuing efforts of the Human Rights Committee to strive for uniform standards in the implementation of the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and appeals to other bodies dealing with similar questions of human rights to respect those standards as expressed in the general comments of the Human Rights Committee;

9. Also welcomes the adoption by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights of a general comment at both its third and fourth sessions, and encourages the Committee to continue using that mechanism to develop a fuller appreciation of the obligations of States parties under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

10. Further welcomes the fact that the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in its general comment on article 2, paragraph 1, of the Covenant, adopted at its fifth session, dealt with the nature of obligations of States parties;

11. Invites States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in conformity with article 2, paragraph 1, of the Covenant, to consider identifying benchmarks to measure achievements in the progressive realization of the rights recognized in the Covenant and, in that context, to pay particular regard to the most vulnerable and disadvantaged groups;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights informed of the relevant activities of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Committee against Torture, the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Commission against Apartheid in Sports, the Group of Three of the Commission on Human Rights, established under the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, and, where appropriate, other functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council and the specialized agencies, and to transmit the annual reports of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to all those bodies;

13. Encourages all Governments to publicize the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in as many languages as possible, and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories;

14. Invites States parties to the Covenants, at their regular meetings in 1992, to consider the general comments adopted by the Human Rights Committee and the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

7. Notes with satisfaction that the majority of States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and an increasing number of States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights have been represented by experts in the presentation of their reports, thereby assisting the respective monitoring bodies in their work, and hopes that all States parties to both Covenants will arrange such representation in the future;

On 16 December 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/81 without vote.

Declaration on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the

International Covenants on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Mindful that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights,

Electoral processes

Periodic and genuine elections

Pursuant to a 1990 General Assembly resolution,(79) the Secretary-General submitted a November 1991 report on enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections.(80) He summarized replies received from 41 Governments, 1 specialized agency and 3 inter-governmental organizations concerning suitable approaches to permit the United Nations to respond to Member States' requests for electoral assistance. He stated that he shared the view of most Member States that electoral verification by the United Nations should remain an exceptional activity and be undertaken only in well-defined circumstances.

The Secretary-General gave an account of United Nations experience in election monitoring, focusing on Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories, including Namibia, and plans for a United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara and electoral verification in Panama, Nicaragua and Haiti. (For more details on Non-Self-Governing Territories, see PART FOUR, Chapter II; for Haiti, see PART TWO, Chapter II.)

The Secretary-General, outlining criteria which should be met before agreeing to requests for electoral verification, stated that: requests should pertain to situations with a clear international dimension; the monitoring of an election or referendum should cover the entire electoral process; broad public support must be present in the State for the United Nations to assume such a role; and there should be approval by the United Nations competent organ. He was requesting the United Nations Office for Research and the Collection of Information, with the assistance of a task force, to develop detailed guidelines and terms of reference for United Nations electoral involvement and prepare uniform criteria for assessing electoral processes and a manual for use by United Nations election monitors.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/137 by recorded vote on 17 December 1991.

Enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/146 of 15 December 1989 and 45/150 of 18 December 1990, as well as Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/51 of 7 March 1989,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Aware of its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to take part in the government of his or her country, directly or through freely chosen representatives, that everyone has the right of equal access to public service in his or her country, that the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government and that this will shall be expressed in periodic and genuine elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures,

Noting that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights provides that every citizen shall have the right and the opportunity, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin; property, birth or other status, to take part in the conduct of public affairs, directly or through freely chosen representatives, to vote and to be elected at genuine periodic elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret ballot, guaranteeing the free expression of the will of the electors, and to have access, on general terms of equality, to public service in his or her country,

Condemning the system of apartheid and any other denial or abridgement of the right to vote on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Recalling that, under the Charter, all States enjoy sovereign equality and that each State, in accordance with the will of its people, has the right freely to choose and develop its political, social, economic and cultural systems,

Recognizing that there is no single political system or electoral method that is equally suited to all nations and their people and that the efforts of the international community to enhance the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections should not call into question each State's sovereign right, in accordance with the will of its people, freely to choose and develop its political, social, economic and cultural systems, whether or not they conform to the preferences of other States,

Noting with appreciation the advisory services and technical assistance provided by the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat as well as the technical assistance provided by the Department of Technical Cooperation for Development of the Secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme to some Member States, including those in transition to democracy, at their request, and inviting those bodies to continue and intensify these efforts as requested,

Noting the electoral assistance provided to Member States at their request by the Organization,

Affirming that electoral verification by the United Nations should remain an exceptional activity of the Organization to be undertaken in well-defined circumstances, primarily in situations with a clear international dimension,

Taking note of the criteria contained in paragraph 79 of the report of the Secretary-General which ought to be met before the Organization agrees to requests for electoral verification,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Underscores the significance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which establish that the authority to govern shall be based on the will of the people, as expressed in periodic and genuine elections;

3. Stresses its conviction that periodic and genuine elections are a necessary and indispensable element of sustained efforts to protect the rights and interests of the governed and that, as a matter of practical experience, the right of everyone to take part in the government of his or her country is a crucial factor in the effective enjoyment by all of a wide range of other human rights and fundamental freedoms, embracing political, economic, social and cultural rights;

4. Declares that determining the will of the people requires an electoral process that provides an equal opportunity for all citizens to become candidates and put forward their political views, individually and in cooperation with others, as provided in national constitutions and laws;

5. Underscores the duty of each Member State, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, to respect the decisions taken by other States, in accordance with the will of their people, in freely choosing and developing their electoral institutions;

6. Reaffirms that apartheid must be abolished, that the systematic denial or abridgement of the right to vote on the grounds of race or colour is a gross violation of human rights and an affront to the conscience and dignity of mankind, and that the right to participate in a political system based on common and equal citizenship and universal franchise is essential for the exercise of the principle of periodic and genuine elections;

7. Affirms the value of the electoral assistance that the United Nations has provided at the request of some Member States, in the context of full respect for their sovereignty;

8. Believes that the international community should continue to give serious consideration to ways in which the United Nations can respond to the requests of Member States as they seek to promote and strengthen their electoral institutions and procedures;

9. Endorse the view of the Secretary-General that he should designate a senior official in the Offices of the Secretary-General to act as focal point, in addition to existing duties and in order to ensure consistency in the handling of requests of Member States organizing elections, who would assist the Secretary-General to coordinate and consider requests for electoral verification and to channel requests for electoral assistance to the appropriate office or programme, to ensure careful consideration of requests for electoral verification, to build on experience gained to develop an institutional memory, to develop and maintain a roster of international experts who could provide technical assistance as well as assist in the verification of electoral processes and to maintain contact with regional and other intergovernmental organizations to ensure appropriate working arrangements with them and the avoidance of duplication of efforts, and requests the Secretary-General to designate such an official to take on these tasks;

10. Determines that the designation of the senior official would neither pre-empt nor supersede ongoing arrangements regarding electoral assistance nor prejudice the operational arrangements for missions that the Organization may decide to undertake;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to allocate whenever appropriate, and within existing resources, a small number of staff and other resources to support the designated senior official in carrying out his or her functions;

12. Commends the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat as well as the Department of Technical Cooperation for Development of the Secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme for the advisory services and technical assistance that they have provided and continue to provide to requesting Member States, and requests that they collaborate closely with the senior official designated by the Secretary-General and inform him or her of the assistance provided and activities undertaken by them in the area of electoral assistance;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to notify the competent organ of the United Nations upon receipt of official requests from Member States for electoral verification and, upon the direction of that organ, to provide appropriate assistance;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to establish, in accordance with United Nations financial regulations, a voluntary trust fund for cases where the requesting Member State is unable to finance, in whole or in part, the electoral verification mission and to propose guidelines for disbursements therefrom;

15. Affirms the effectiveness of and the need for coordination with intergovernmental organizations, including regional organizations having international electoral assistance experience;

16. Commends the efforts of non-governmental organizations that have provided electoral assistance at the request of Member States;

17. Invites those Member States which have not responded to the Secretary-General's request, pursuant to paragraph 10 of resolution 45/150, to submit views concerning suitable approaches that will permit the Organization to respond to the requests from Member States for electoral assistance! to do so in order to enable the Secretary-General to include those views in his next report to the General Assembly;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution, on the experience of the Organization in providing electoral assistance to requesting Member States and on recommendations for providing such assistance, on the detailed guidelines and terms of reference being developed for United Nations electoral involvement and on the nature and disposition of the requests from Member States, under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Before approval of the text in the Third Committee, Cuba introduced a document(82) containing a series of proposed amendments to that draft. A motion by Luxembourg that no action be taken on those amendments was approved by a recorded vote of 61 to 22, with 33 abstentions.

Respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference

In response to a 1990 General Assembly resolution,(83) the Secretary-General summarized replies from 11 Governments concerning respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes.(84) Presenting a summary of action taken by the Commission on Human Rights at its 1991 session, the Secretary-General stated that no specific action had been taken to review the fundamental factors negatively affecting the observance of those principles, but a number of resolutions had referred to the issue of elections in the context of guaranteeing the free expression of the will of peoples. They had concerned Afghanistan;(85) Albania;(86) El Salvador;(87) Haiti;(88) South Africa;(89) and strengthening United Nations action in the field of human rights through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity.<sup>(37)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 46/430, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, took note in December of the Secretary-General's report.

On 17 December 1991, also on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/130 by recorded vote.

Respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Also recalling its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, by which it approved the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Further recalling the principle enshrined in Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter of the United Nations, which establishes that nothing contained in the Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the Charter,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the elimination of apartheid and for the establishment of a society in which all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour or creed, will enjoy equal and full political and other rights and participate freely in the determination of their destiny,

Also reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of all peoples under colonial and foreign domination, particularly the Palestinian people, for the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and national independence, which will enable them to decide freely on their own future,

Recognising that the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of any State should be respected in the holding of elections;

Also recognising that there is no single political system or single model for electoral processes equally suited to all nations and their peoples, and that political systems and electoral processes are subject to historical, political, cultural and religious factors,

Recalling its resolutions 44/147 of 15 December 1989 and 45/151 of 18 December 1990,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right, freely and without external interference, to determine their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect that right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter;

2. Reaffirms that it is the concern solely of peoples to determine methods and to establish institutions regarding the electoral process, as well as to determine the ways for its implementation according to their constitution and national legislation;

3. Also reaffirms that any activities that attempt, directly or indirectly, to interfere in the free development of national electoral processes, in particular in the developing countries, or that intend to sway the results of such processes, violate the spirit and letter of the principles established in the Charter and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Recognizes that there is no universal need for the United Nations to provide electoral assistance to Member States, except in special circumstances such as cases of decolonization, in the context of regional or international peace processes or at the request of specific sovereign States, by virtue of resolutions adopted by the Security Council or the General Assembly in each individual case, in strict conformity with the principles of sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States;

5. Urges all States to respect the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States and the sovereign right of peoples to determine their political, economic and social system;

6. Strongly appeals to all States to refrain from financing or providing, directly or indirectly, any other form of overt or covert support for political parties or groups and from taking actions to undermine the electoral processes in any country;

7. Condemns any act of armed aggression or threat or use of force against peoples, their elected Governments or their legitimate leaders;

8. Solemnly declares that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial, democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and non-fragmented South Africa, can lead to a just and lasting solution to the situation in South Africa;

9. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of all peoples under colonial and foreign domination, particularly the Palestinian people, for the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and national independence, which will enable them to determine their political, economic and social system, without interference;

10. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-eighth session, to give priority to the review of the fundamental factors that negatively affect the observance of the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Regional arrangements

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,(90) the Commission, taking note of a report by the Secretary-General on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asia and Pacific region,(91) asked him to ensure a continuing flow of human rights materials to the library of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific. Encouraging all States in that region to further consider establishing regional arrangements to promote and protect human rights, the Commission also asked him to organize a seminar to discuss that matter. It further asked him to consult the States in the region on the widest possible basis in implementing its resolution and to submit a further report in 1992 incorporating information on progress achieved.

Activities during 1991 included a workshop on human rights (Jakarta, Indonesia, 21-22 January) and a training course on international human rights standards and national legislation (Ulaanbaatar, Mongolia, 28 October-1 November). In addition, a United Nations mission to Mongolia in June 1991 provided advice on including relevant human rights clauses in that country's new constitution.

Responsibility to promote and protect human rights

Working group activities. The working group to draft a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms met at Geneva from 16 to 25 January and on 28 February 1991.(92) It provisionally adopted, at first reading, texts including elements of chapters I, III, IV and V of the draft declaration. It further considered texts including elements for the preamble and chapters I, III and V. Annexed to the group's report was a compilation of all the texts showing the state of the whole draft declaration.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,(93) urging the working group to complete its work as soon as possible, the Commission decided to continue at its 1992 session work on elaborating the draft declaration and to make meeting time available to the working group prior to and during that session. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit the working group's report to all Member States and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. It recommended a draft resolution to the Economic and Social Council, the text of which is summarized below.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/31 without vote, by which it authorized the working group to meet for two weeks prior to the Commission's 1992 session to continue work on the draft declaration. The Council also asked the Secretary-General to extend all necessary facilities to the group for its meeting.

International cooperation in human rights

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission, on 5 March 1991,(94) called on Member States to implement the international standards for the promotion and protection of human rights enshrined in the Charter, the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,(50) the 1966 International Covenants,(38) and other relevant international instruments. Urging all States to cooperate fully with United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental forums, it asked them to cooperate closely with special rapporteurs appointed by the Commission. Noting the results of a meeting of the heads of State or Government of the States participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (Paris, 30 May-23 June 1989), it reaffirmed the importance of developing effective national institutions for promoting and protecting human rights and of maintaining their independence and integrity. It asked all States and international organizations to submit to the Secretary-General their comments and views on ways to strengthen international cooperation in solving problems of a social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, for consideration at its 1992 session.

Internally displaced persons and humanitarian assistance

On 5 March 1991,<sup>(95)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, expressing concern at problems encountered by internally displaced persons and a lack of humanitarian assistance, asked Governments and international organizations to intensify their cooperation and assistance to address those problems. Stressing the importance of strict adherence by States parties to their obligations under international human rights instruments and international humanitarian law, it asked the Secretary-General to consider the protection of human rights and needs of internally displaced persons in his system-wide review aimed at ensuring an effective response by the United Nations system to the problems of refugees, displaced persons and returnees. It also asked him to submit in 1992 an analytical report on internally displaced persons, based on information submitted by Governments, specialized agencies, relevant United Nations organs and regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, a request approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1991/238 of 31 May 1991.

Subcommission action. On 29 August 1991,<sup>(96)</sup> the Subcommission invited the international community to intensify cooperation with Somalia to ensure the protection of internally displaced persons and suggested UNHCR assistance measures. It also suggested that UNESCO consider establishing a mass educational programme in technical skills and the liberal arts. The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to offer advisory services and technical assistance to restore infrastructure and support services.

PUBLICATION

Manual on Human Rights Reporting, Sales No. E.91.XIV.1.

Human rights violations

Situations involving alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were again examined in 1991 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as by special bodies and officials appointed to examine some of those situations.

In addition, situations of alleged human rights violations involving the self-determination of peoples (see above, under "Civil and political rights") were discussed with regard to Afghanistan, Cambodia, South Africa, Western Sahara and the Palestinian people.

Under a procedure established by the Council in 1970(1) to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights, the Working Group on Communications of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities met from 22 July to 2 August 1991. Following its consideration of the Working Group's confidential report, the Subcommission referred to the Commission for consideration certain situations which appeared to reveal a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested human rights violations. The Subcommission decided to defer action on certain communications until 1992 and to take no action on a communication which had been pending since its 1990 session.

South Africa

Working Group activities. In 1991, the six-member Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, established by the Commission on Human Rights in 1967,(2) prepared a preliminary report which the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly by a September 1991 note,(3) and an interim report to be submitted to the Commission in 1992. (4)

The Group's preliminary report discussed human rights developments in South Africa between February and August 1991 dealing with the repeal of apartheid legislation; constitutional negotiations; the right to life; political trials and administration of justice; freedom of expression; trade union activities and the situation of black workers; and the right to education.

In its interim report, the Group re-examined its mandate and discussed its organization of work concerning fact-finding missions aimed at gathering testimony from witnesses (London, 22-26 July, and Geneva, 29 July-2 August 1991). Subjects of inquiry dealt with by the Group concerned: the right to life, physical integrity and protection from arbitrary arrest and detention; apartheid, including bantustanization and forced population removals; right to education, right to health, and freedom of expression and of movement; right to work and freedom of association; treatment of children and adolescents; and negotiations towards a constitutional settlement. Annexed to the report was a list of apartheid laws still on the statute books as at 23 September 1991 and a list of political prisoners held and security force actions and deaths occurring between 1 July and 13 October 1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 46/430, the General Assembly took note in December of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the Group's preliminary report.

Human Rights Commission action. On 1 March 1991,(5) the Commission congratulated the Working Group for the commendable and impartial manner in which it had prepared its progress report on the 1990 human rights situation in South Africa.(6) It condemned civil, political, economic, social and cultural human rights violations under apartheid in South Africa and reaffirmed the right of the people of South Africa to eradicate apartheid and participate in a transition to a democratically elected government based on a universal equal and non-racial franchise. Commending positive changes in South Africa in 1990 under its President, F. W. de Klerk, by which some political prisoners were released, political organizations unbanned, the state of emergency lifted and the Separate Amenities Act repealed, the Commission took note of a recent major policy pronouncement by South Africa to repeal some of the basic discriminatory acts and urged it to implement its declared intentions fully and speedily.

Condemning the policy of apartheid and demanding its abolition as expressed in the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa(7) the Commission called on South Africa to repeal discriminatory and repressive legislation, release all political prisoners and detainees, contain intercommunal violence aggravated by elements opposed to the democratic transformation of South Africa, and negotiate an agreement with all parties on transitional arrangements on drawing up and adopting a new constitution, including holding elections. It called on the international community to assist the front-line States and regional efforts to resolve conflicts; promote national reconciliation and peace in southern Africa; maintain measures, including sanctions, against South Africa; adhere to the Programme of Action contained in the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid; and observe fully the mandatory arms embargo and the Security Council's 1977 request to monitor effectively the implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa.(8)

The Commission renewed the Working Group's mandate to study human rights violations in South Africa, requesting it, in cooperation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to continue investigating cases of torture and ill-treatment of detainees and the deaths of detainees in South Africa as well as infringements of trade union rights. It renewed its request to South Africa to allow the Working Group to visit that country to gather information from individuals and organizations concerning the situation of human rights in South Africa and asked the Group to submit its final report in 1993.

By decision 1991/237 of 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to renew the Working Group's mandate.

Subcommission action. By a secret ballot of 20 to none, with 1 abstention, the Subcommission, on 23 August 1991,(9) reaffirming that apartheid was a crime against humanity, condemned all collaboration, particularly nuclear, military and economic, with South Africa.

1973 Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1991, there were 91 parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,(10) which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1973(11) and entered into force in 1976.(12) In 1991, Estonia, Oman and Zimbabwe acceded to the Convention. In his annual report to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention,(13) the Secretary-General provided a list of States that had signed, ratified or acceded to it as of 1 August.

Activities of the Group of Three. The Group of Three—established under article IX of the Convention to consider reports by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions and in 1991 composed of Ethiopia, Mexico and the Philippines—held its fourteenth session at Geneva from 21 to 25 January.(14)

The Group examined, in the presence of the representatives of the reporting States, the initial report from Bolivia(15) and the second periodic report from Panama.(16)

The Group also continued to consider whether actions of transnational corporations (TNCs) operating in South Africa came under the definition of the crime of apartheid and had before it a note by the Secretary-General summarizing the views of two States parties on the subject.(17) The Group concluded that, by their complicity, TNCs must be considered, in conformity with article III (6) of the Convention, accomplices in the crime of apartheid and must be prosecuted for their responsibility in continuing that crime. It called on all States parties to incorporate provisions to that effect in their legislation.

Noting with concern that 180 reports from States parties were overdue as at 31 December 1990 and that 35 States parties had not submitted any report, as listed in a note by the Secretary-General,(18) the Group urged those parties to fulfil their reporting obligations.

The Group made a number of recommendations, some of which were incorporated into a Commission on Human Rights resolution of 22 February 1991 (see below).

Human Rights Commission action. By a 22 February 1991 resolution,(19) adopted by a roll-call vote of 29 to 1, with 12 abstentions, the Commission urged States which had not yet done so to ratify or accede to the 1973 Convention against Apartheid without delay and to ratify the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.(20) It asked the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to disseminate information on the Convention against Apartheid and its implementation and to consider drawing up model legislation to serve as a guide for States parties in implementing the Convention's provisions.

The Commission requested States parties to submit their initial reports not later than two years after the entry into force of the Convention for the States parties concerned and their periodic reports at four-year intervals, on the understanding that they might submit additional information to the Group of Three at any time in the intervening period if they wished to do so. The Commission recommended that States parties take account of the guidelines laid down by the Group in 1978 for the submission of reports,(21) and reiterated its recommendation that parties be represented during the Group's consideration of their reports. It requested the Secretary-General once again to invite States parties to express their views on the extent and responsibility of TNCs for the continued existence of apartheid and asked him to invite States parties to the Convention, specialized agencies and NGOs to provide the Commission with relevant information concerning the types of crimes of apartheid, as described in article II of the Convention. The Group was asked to continue examining the extent and nature of TNCs' responsibility for the apartheid system and legal actions that could be taken against TNCs whose operations came under the crime of apartheid, and to report to the Commission in 1993. The Commission decided that the Group should meet every two years rather than annually to consider the reports submitted by States parties.

The Commission called on States parties to terminate their dealings with TNCs which continued to do business with South Africa and appealed to them to strengthen cooperation to implement United Nations decisions concerning the prevention, suppression and punishment of the crime of apartheid. It appealed to States, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs to step up their activities to enhance public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/84 by recorded vote.

Status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/103 of 4 December 1986, 42/56 of 30 November 1987, 43/97 of 8 December 1988, 44/69 of 8 December 1989 and 45/90 of 14 December 1990,

Mindful that the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid constitutes an important international treaty in the field of human rights and serves to implement the ideals of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Reaffirming its conviction that apartheid is a crime against humanity and constitutes a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and a gross violation of human rights, seriously threatening international peace and security,

Condemning the abhorrent policy and system of apartheid and the repression it engenders, which continue to aggravate the situation in South Africa,

Emphasizing that the root cause of the conflict in southern Africa is apartheid and the racist regime's policy of destabilization against the front-line and other neighbouring States,

Deeply concerned at the continued collaboration of certain States and transnational corporations with the racist regime of South Africa, particularly in the political, economic, military and other fields, as an encouragement of its odious policy of apartheid,

Convinced that universal ratification of or accession to the Convention and the immediate implementation of its provisions will contribute to the eradication of the crime of apartheid,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

2. Commends those States parties to the Convention that have submitted their reports under article VII thereof;

3. Calls upon all States whose transnational corporations continue to do business with South Africa to take appropriate steps to terminate their dealings with South Africa;

4. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to intensify, in cooperation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, its efforts to compile and update periodically the list of individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States deemed responsible for crimes enumerated in article II of the Convention, as well as those against whom or which legal proceedings have been undertaken;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate that list among all States parties to the Convention and all Member States and to bring such facts to the attention of the public by all means of mass communication;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite the States parties to the Convention, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to provide the Commission on Human Rights with relevant information concerning the forms of the crime of apartheid, as described in article II of the Convention, committed by transnational corporations operating in South Africa;

7. Appeals to all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and international and national non-governmental organizations to step up their activities to enhance public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by the racist regime with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

8. Underlies the importance of the universal ratification of the Convention, which would be an effective contribution to the fulfilment of the ideals of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other human rights instruments;

9. Appeals once again to those States that have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Convention without further delay;

10. Request the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, through appropriate channels, to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report under General Assembly resolution 3380(XXX) of 10 November 1975 a special section concerning the implementation of the Convention.

Foreign support of South Africa

Human Rights Commission action. By a resolution of 1 March 1991,(22) adopted by a roll-call vote of 25 to 13, with 3 abstentions, the Commission vigorously condemned assistance to South Africa by major Western countries and Israel, particularly in the military field, and demanded that that assistance, which it was convinced was a hostile action against the people of South Africa and its neighbouring States, be immediately terminated. Condemning the continuing nuclear collaboration of some Western States, Israel and others with South Africa, the Commission urged them to stop supplying it with nuclear equipment and technology. Noting with appreciation measures taken by some Western States, parliamentarians, institutions, trade unions and NGOs to exert pressure on South Africa, the Commission called on them to maintain their efforts to force South Africa to comply with United Nations resolutions and decisions. It also noted the disinvestment, trade restrictions and other positive measures taken by some countries and TNCs, urging them to continue, and expressed concern that certain States were taking advantage of such measures. The Commission called on Governments that had not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures to prevent their nationals and corporations under their jurisdiction from trading, manufacturing and investing activities in South Africa, to end technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies there and to cease nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

The Commission rejected all policies that encouraged South Africa to intensify its repression of South Africans and to escalate its aggression against neighbouring States. It called on Governments to maintain sanctions and all forms of pressure against South Africa until agreement had been reached on drawing up and adopting a new constitution and holding elections. Demanding that South Africa cease acts of aggression and destabilization aimed at undermining the economies and political institutions of neighbouring States, it appealed to States, specialized agencies and regional intergovernmental organizations to cooperate with the liberation movements of southern Africa and to intensify their campaign to mobilize public opinion to maintain economic and other sanctions against South Africa. It urgently requested all specialized agencies, particularly IMF, to refrain from granting any type of loan or financial assistance to South Africa.

The Commission expressed appreciation to the Subcommittee's Special Rapporteur, Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa (Egypt), for his updated 1990 report on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to South Africa.<sup>(23)</sup> It asked the Secretary-General to give the report the widest dissemination and to issue it as a United Nations publication, and called on Governments to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur.

On 22 February 1991,<sup>(24)</sup> the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 28 to 13, with 1 abstention, recommended a draft text to the Economic and Social Council which was adopted on 31 May 1991 (see below).

Subcommission action. On 20 August 1991,(26) the Subcommittee recommended that the Commission recommend to the Economic and Social Council a resolution requesting the Special Rapporteur to continue updating his report and calling on all Governments to cooperate with him.

Trade union rights

Report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts. The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa (see above) continued in 1991 to study the situation relating to the right to work and trade union rights and the conditions of black workers. Its findings, included in its report to the Commission as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1990 (27) were submitted to the Council separately in March 1991.(28)

Note by the Secretary-General. By an April 1991 note,(29) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council the text of a February reply from South Africa referring to his May 1990 note verbale(30) regarding examination by the Council, in accordance with a 1950 Council resolution,(31) of a request from the Governing Body of the International Labour Office to consider certain allegations of the infringement of trade union rights in South Africa. South Africa stated that its representative at Geneva had been authorized to transmit a letter from the Minister of Manpower to the Director-General of the International Labour Office confirming that the Government was prepared to agree that the allegations submitted by the Congress of South African Trade Unions (COSATU) in May 1988(32) be referred to the ILO Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association, on the understanding that South Africa would have full access to all information, documents and other evidence or arguments submitted to the Conciliation Commission and be given fair opportunity to respond to it. Appended to South Africa's reply was the text of the Minister of Manpower's letter to the Director-General of the International Labour Office. In 1989, the Council had asked the Secretary-General to persist in his efforts to ensure the referral of the complaint made by COSATU to the Conciliation Commission.(33)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/37 by recorded vote.

Infringements of trade union rights in South Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1989/82 of 24 May 1989, in which it requested the Secretary-General to persist in his efforts to ensure referral of the complaint made by the Congress of South African Trade Unions to the Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association of the International Labour Organisation,

Recalling also its resolution 1990/44 of 25 May 1990,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General on allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights,

Having examined the relevant section of the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights,

Noting the evolving situation in South Africa,

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for persisting in his efforts to ensure the implementation of paragraph 9 of Council resolution 1989/82;

3. Regrets that the apartheid regime in South Africa has placed some conditions on its decision to agree that the allegations made by the Congress of South African Trade Unions should be referred to the Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association of the International Labour Organisation, and invites it to cooperate fully in the matter;

4. Decides to transmit to the Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association, through the Governing Body of the International Labour Office, the allegations of infringement of trade union rights made by the Congress of South African Trade Unions in May 1988;

5. Demands once again the unimpeded exercise of trade union rights, the immediate unconditional release of all trade unionists imprisoned for exercising their legitimate trade union rights and the cessation of the persecution of trade unionists and repression of the independent black trade union movement;

6. Takes note of the relevant section of the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights;

7. Requests the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to continue to study the situation and to report thereon to the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council;

8. Also requests the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, in discharging its mandate, to consult with the International Labour Organisation and the Special Committee against Apartheid, as well as with international and African trade union confederations;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, at its regular session of 1992, for consideration and action, as appropriate, a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Afghanistan

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a 1990 request of the Commission,<sup>(34)</sup> as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(35)</sup> Special Rapporteur Felix Ermacora (Austria) presented a January 1991 report<sup>(36)</sup> to the Commission on the human rights situation in Afghanistan, including the plight of some 5 million Afghan refugees.

The Special Rapporteur had visited Pakistan from 2 to 4 January and Afghanistan from 4 to 6 January 1991.

The military situation had remained unchanged, he noted. He observed that although the approaches to election schemes proposed by the Government and opposition parties and commanders were at odds with each other, it appeared that there was movement towards selecting genuine legitimate representatives from among various segments of the Afghan population. He emphasized the importance of ensuring the representation of the refugees.

The number of convicted political prisoners remained at 3,000; several hundred others were under interrogation. The Special Rapporteur had learned of three incidents of massive summary execution carried out in late 1990 by the opposition forces whereby hundreds of persons had been killed.

The Special Rapporteur also dealt with conditions in prisons and in a rehabilitation centre for juveniles and the refugee situation.

He recommended: support for the free return of refugees to Afghanistan; halting the conflict and banning the use of weapons of mass destruction; increasing efforts to achieve a general cease-fire; stopping acts of terrorism against civilians; expediting the exchange of prisoners; allowing ICRC to visit all prisoners; investigating the fate of Afghan orphans; improving accommodations for juvenile detainees; and vigilance by the Commission as long as no political solution existed. He reiterated recommendations presented to the General Assembly in 1990.<sup>(37)</sup>

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,<sup>(38)</sup> the Commission, noting the Special Rapporteur's report, urged all parties concerned to reiterate efforts to achieve a political solution based on the right to self-determination through democratic procedures acceptable to the Afghan people, including free and fair elections, the cessation of hostilities and the creation of conditions that would permit the free return of refugees to their homeland. It also urged them to respect the accepted humanitarian rules as set out in the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols,<sup>(39)</sup> halt the use of weapons against civilians, protect prisoners from reprisals and violence, including ill-treatment, torture and summary execution, expedite the exchange of prisoners and grant ICRC unrestricted access to all parts of the country and the right to visit all prisoners. It called on the Afghan authorities to investigate the fate of disappeared persons, apply amnesty decrees equally to foreign detainees, reduce the period during which prisoners awaited trial, treat all prisoners in accordance with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners adopted by the first United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in 1955<sup>(40)</sup> and apply to all convicted persons article 14, paragraph 3 (d) and paragraph 5, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. (41) It noted with concern allegations of atrocities committed against Afghan soldiers, civil servants and captured civilians. Expressing concern at reports that the living conditions of refugees, especially those of women and children, were becoming increasingly difficult because of the decline in international humanitarian assistance, the Commission urgently appealed to Member States and humanitarian organizations to promote the implementation of projects envisaged by the Coordinator for United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan and UNHCR programmes. It also urgently appealed to Member States, humanitarian organizations and all parties concerned to cooperate fully, especially on the subject of mine detection, to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes in safety and dignity. The Commission urged all parties concerned to undertake all measures to ensure the safety of the personnel of organizations involved in implementing United Nations humanitarian and economic assistance programmes and extend their full cooperation to the Commission and its Special Rapporteur. Deciding to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and to have him report to the Assembly in 1991 and the Commission in 1992, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to give him all necessary assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/259, approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request that he report to the Assembly in 1991 and to the Commission in 1992 and that the Secretary-General give him all necessary assistance.

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. In November 1991, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan from March to October,<sup>(42)</sup> prepared by the Special Rapporteur in accordance with the Commission's request.

The Special Rapporteur had visited Pakistan from 10 to 17 September and from 21 to 22 September, and Afghanistan from 17 to 21 September. In 1991, there were new attempts to reach a political solution to the conflict. He noted that the Secretary-General had announced a live-point peace plan containing elements which could constitute the basis for preparing the ground for restoring human rights and was encouraged by the Joint Declarations of Islamabad (Pakistan) and Tehran (Iran) of 30 July and 29 August respectively, which showed that the parties involved were aware that political steps must be taken in order to pave the way for implementing the peace plan. A joint USSR/United States statement of 13 September<sup>(43)</sup> concerning a simultaneous cut-off of arms deliveries to their respective Afghan allies indicated that they were opting for a political rather than a military solution to the conflict.

However, there were some 6 million Afghan refugees in Iran, Pakistan and other countries and heavy casualties and material losses continued among civilians, as did acts of terrorism. The fate of political prisoners under interrogation or awaiting trial or sentencing remained alarming, with allegations of ill-treatment and torture being raised. The fate of foreign prisoners also remained a matter of concern. Allegations continued to be made that prisoners held by the opposition forces were not treated in accordance with humanitarian law. Due to the conflict, Afghan society was fragmented and therefore the right to self-determination was only partially implemented and not guaranteed to refugees. On the positive side, the Special Rapporteur welcomed the dissolution of special courts of national security and the establishment of a new, unified judiciary and attorney system. In addition, the Government had recently established an institution offering legal defence assistance and consideration was being given to altering the system of capital punishment in favour of the right to life. The enjoyment of economic and social rights was more effective and better organized in government-controlled areas than in the rest of the country.

The Special Rapporteur recommended: releasing political prisoners through amnesties, pardons or exchanges of prisoners; the right to retrial for political prisoners under the new judicial system; treatment of prisoners considered as combatants in accordance with humanitarian law; reconsideration of applying capital punishment; access to legal remedies for persons under interrogation; ICRC visits to prisoners on remand, awaiting trial or awaiting sentencing held by the Ministry of State Security; and holding genuinely free and universal elections under United Nations auspices.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/136 without vote.

Situation of human rights in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and accepted humanitarian rules as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and resolved to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/37 of 24 May 1984, in which the Council requested the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a special rapporteur to examine the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, with a view to formulating proposals that could contribute to ensuring full protection of the human rights of the inhabitants of the country before, during and after the withdrawal of all foreign forces,

Recalling also its resolution 45/174 of 18 December 1990 and all its other relevant resolutions, as well as the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and decisions of the Economic and Social Council,

Taking note in particular of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/78 of 6 March 1991, in which the Commission decided to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan for one year, and of Economic and Social Council decision 1991/259 of 31 May 1991, in which the Council confirmed the extension and requested the Special Rapporteur to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan,

Emphasizing the relevance and validity for all parties concerned of the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan, concluded at Geneva on 14 April 1988,<sup>a</sup> which constitute an important step towards a comprehensive political solution,

Underlining the importance of the statement by the Secretary-General of 21 May 1991, in which he provided a five-point peace plan to serve as the basis for a comprehensive political settlement in Afghanistan, acceptable to the majority of the Afghan people,

Noting with satisfaction the joint statement of the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of 13 September 1991, on the simultaneous cut-off of weapons deliveries to the Afghan parties by 1 January 1992, and expressing the hope that such agreement will be implemented on a broader basis,

Noting with deep concern that a situation of armed conflict persists in Afghanistan, that acts of terrorism are perpetrated on a wide scale against the civilian population, that the treatment of prisoners detained in connection with the conflict usually does not conform to the humanitarian rules set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Deeply concerned that more than five million refugees are still living outside Afghanistan, that many Afghans are displaced within the country and that despite a slight improvement of the conditions for the return of refugees no massive return has been reported,

Aware that the reasons given by the refugees for not returning to Afghanistan pending the achievement of a comprehensive political solution and the establishment of a broad-based government include the continued fighting in some provinces, the use of very destructive arms in the conflict, the minefields that have been laid in many parts of the country, the lack of an effective authority in many areas, the destruction of the economy and other obstacles that would be encountered by refugees in returning to the country,

Commending the activity carried out by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross in cooperation with the Afghan authorities, as well as non-governmental organizations, in favour of the people of Afghanistan,

Taking note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan and of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein,

1. Welcomes the cooperation of the Afghan authorities with the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan;

2. Welcomes the cooperation that the Afghan authorities have extended, in particular to the Coordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan and to international organizations, such as the specialized agencies, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross;

3. Welcomes the fact that the Special Rapporteur was able to visit areas in Afghanistan not under government control;

4. Welcomes the steps taken by the Afghan authorities to reform the judicial system in order to conform it to international standards, and encourages them to continue with this process;

5. Urges all parties concerned to increase their efforts in order to achieve a comprehensive political solution based on the five points of the Secretary-General's plan on the free exercise of the right to self-determination by the people of Afghanistan through democratic procedures acceptable to them, including free and fair elections, the cessation of hostilities and the creation of conditions that will permit the free return of refugees to their homeland in safety and honour, whenever they wish, and the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms by all Afghans;

6. Also urges all parties to the conflict to respect accepted humanitarian rules as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population, to protect all prisoners from acts of reprisals and violence, including ill-treatment, torture and summary executions, to transmit to the International Committee of the Red Cross the names of all prisoners, to expedite the exchange of prisoners wherever they may be held and to grant to the Committee unrestricted access to all parts of the country and the right to visit all prisoners in accordance with its established criteria;

7. Calls upon all States and parties concerned to render all possible assistance in order to resolve the issue of all prisoners of war detained as a result of the conflict, including those from the forces loyal to the Afghan authorities and opposition groups, as an important humanitarian question;

8. Also calls upon all States and parties concerned to render all possible assistance in order to resolve the issue of the Soviet prisoners of war as an important humanitarian question;

9. Calls upon the Afghan authorities to investigate thoroughly the fate of those persons who have disappeared, to apply amnesty decrees equally to foreign detainees, to reduce the period during which prisoners await trial, to treat all prisoners, especially those awaiting trial or those in custody in juvenile rehabilitation centres, in accordance with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, adopted by the First United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and to apply to all convicted persons article 14, paragraphs 3 (d) and 5, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

10. Takes note with interest of the reply of the Soviet authorities concerning the fate of those Afghan children who are in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics;

11. Notes improvements in the treatment of prisoners and urges all the parties to the conflict to conform fully to the humanitarian rules set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977;

12. Notes with concern the allegations of atrocities that are still committed against Afghan soldiers, civil servants and captured civilians;

13. Requests the Afghan authorities to take the proper steps in order to permit activity by the political opponents, and appeals to all conflicting parties to act likewise;

14. Appeals to the Afghan authorities to commute the death sentences imposed on the persons who were allegedly involved in the attempted coup d'état of March 1991;

15. Expresses its concern at reports that the living conditions of refugees, especially those of women and children, are becoming increasingly difficult because of the decline in international humanitarian assistance;

16. Urgently appeals to all Member States, humanitarian organizations and all parties concerned to cooperate fully, especially on the subject of mine detection and clearance, in order to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes in safety and dignity, in conformity with the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan;

17. Urgent& appeals to all Member States and humanitarian organizations to continue to promote the implementation of the projects envisaged by the Coordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan and the programmes of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, especially the pilot projects for the repatriation of refugees;

18. Urges all parties concerned to undertake all necessary measures to ensure the safety of the personnel of humanitarian organizations involved in the implementation of United Nations humanitarian and economic assistance programmes relating to Afghanistan and the programmes of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

19. Also urges all parties concerned to extend their full cooperation to the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Rapporteur;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

21. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-seventh session, the situation of human rights in Afghanistan in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Cambodia

The Commission on Human Rights, its Sub-commission and the Economic and Social Council expressed concern about the protection of human rights in Cambodia (see under "Civil and political rights").

Iran

Report of the Special Representative. Special Representative Reynaldo Galindo Pohl (El Salvador) presented in February 1991 his final report on the human rights situation in Iran.<sup>(44)</sup> He had received information on alleged incidents and cases concerning the right to life; enforced or involuntary disappearances; right to freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; administration of justice; freedom of opinion, expression, press and association and the right to peaceful assembly; freedom of movement; the right to leave one's country and to return; allegations of intimidation or reprisal; situation of women; rights of children; acts of violence against civilians; freedom of religion; and the Baha'i community. The detailed allegations had been transmitted to Iran to enable it to verify their accuracy; Iran's replies were reflected in the Special Representative's report. The Special Rapporteur had submitted his interim report to the General Assembly in November 1990.<sup>(45)</sup>

The Special Representative noted a number of positive measures adopted including Iran's replies to many allegations; a favourable outcome in a number of cases submitted for consideration on humanitarian grounds; the periodic adoption of clemency measures benefiting ordinary and political prisoners; a 31 December 1990 decree requiring a defence lawyer to be present at all stages in criminal proceedings; and permission to ICRC to visit prisons and all prisoners.

Iran had acknowledged 113 executions between March and November 1990 and the media had announced several dozen executions in January 1991, mostly of persons accused of drug trafficking and others for political and ordinary offences of various kinds. Incidents of terrorism had taken place and information had been received on the persecution of Christian evangelical groups. The situation of the Baha'is continued to be uncertain, given the unequal treatment they received in different provinces and cities, depending on the ideas and temperament of individual officials.

The Special Representative recommended reducing the application of the death penalty; replacing forms of torture such as stoning and amputation with fine or imprisonment; initiating legislative and administrative reform to make national institutions compatible with international human rights instruments; equal rights for all citizens; establishing a climate of confidence and legal certainty to ensure freedom of expression; applying rules of due process of law; regular ICRC visits; authorizing the legal functioning of independent organizations; ending prior examination of books and forms of artistic creation; guaranteeing genuine freedom for the media and journalists; granting compensation to persons or family members affected by human rights violations; investigating allegations transmitted to the Government; granting clemency to convicted persons; and proceeding with a human rights teaching programme.

Annexed to the report were lists of names and particulars of persons allegedly executed in Iran, supplementary to those contained in the Special Representative's previous reports.

Human Rights Commission action. On 7 March 1991,(46) the Commission, welcoming Iran's cooperation with the Special Representative, called on Iran to comply with international human rights instruments to which it was party and ensure that all individuals, including religious groups, enjoyed the rights recognized in those instruments. It took note of Iran's invitation to ICRC to visit prisons there following the conclusion of an agreement in accordance with ICRC modalities. The Commission endorsed the Special Representative's view that displaced persons and refugees as well as victims of chemical weapons in Iran could fall within his mandate and be covered in his report. It asked the Secretary-General to respond favourably to requests for technical assistance from Iran. Requesting the Special Representative to maintain his contacts and cooperation with Iran and report on further progress regarding his recommendations, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to give him all the necessary assistance. These latter two requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1991/261 of 31 May 1991.

Subcommission action. On 23 August 1991,(47) the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 19 to 2, with 1 abstention, expressed concern at the escalating grave violations of human rights in Iran and at reports of a continuing wave of arrests and executions there and of political assassinations abroad. It called on Iran to grant ICRC access to prisons and asked the Secretary-General to inform the Subcommission in 1992 of relevant reports by special rapporteurs or bodies, as well as of steps taken by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission to prevent human rights violations in Iran.

Iraq

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 30 to 1, with 10 abstentions, the Commission, on 6 March 1991,(48) expressing grave concern at flagrant human rights violations by Iraq, urged that country to ensure full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular: to stop arbitrary and summary executions and arbitrary detention of political and religious opponents; end enforced or involuntary disappearances and torture; guarantee full respect for human rights of all persons in Iraq irrespective of their origin; and halt deportation of Iraqi citizens and allow deported persons to return and receive reparation for damage suffered. It further urged Iraq to cooperate with the Commission and help clarify pending cases of enforced or involuntary disappearances noted in the report of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances(49) and to communicate to the Commission any new human rights measures it might take. The Commission asked its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur whose mandate it would be to study human rights violations by Iraq based on information the special rapporteur might deem relevant, including information provided by inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and any comments and material provided by Iraq, and submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1991 and a report to the Commission in 1992. It called on Iraq to abide by its obligations under the International Covenants and urged it to cooperate with the Commission's special rapporteur. The Secretary-General was asked to give the special rapporteur all the assistance he needed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1991/256 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in Iraq

At its 13th plenary meeting, on 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/74 of 6 March 1991, approved the Commission's request to the Chairman of the Commission after consultation with the Bureau, to appoint an individual of recognized international standing in the field of human rights as special rapporteur of the Commission whose mandate would be to make a thorough study of the violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq and submit an interim report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session and a report to the Commission at its forty-eighth session, and also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the special rapporteur.

Economic and Social Council decision 1991/256

31 May 1991 Meeting 13 43-0-4 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1991/86) by recorded vote (43-1-4). 24 May (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1991/22); agenda item 8.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Finland, France, Germany, Guinea, Iran, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Peru, Romania, Rwanda, Somalia, Spain, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan.

On 25 June 1991, the Chairman of the Commission appointed Max van der Stoep (Netherlands) as Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Iraq.

Subcommission action. By a secret ballot of 16 to 2, with 4 abstentions, the Subcommission, on 26 August 1991,<sup>(50)</sup> expressing grave concern at flagrant and massive human rights violations committed by Iraq, urged that country to ensure full respect for human rights and called on it to allow unhindered access by international organizations to those in need of assistance and to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur.

On 29 August,<sup>(51)</sup> the Subcommission renewed its appeal to the effect that in implementing United Nations sanctions against Iraq all States and international organisations should take urgent measures to prevent the death of thousands of innocent persons and ensure that their needs for food and health care were met.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In November 1991, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report<sup>(52)</sup> by the Special Rapporteur, who had addressed a memorandum to Iraq in September concerning allegations of human rights violations to which Iraq had replied in October. Concluding that it was premature to render any definitive conclusions, he commented on specific replies by Iraq concerning arbitrary detention; disappearances; torture and inhuman or degrading practices; extrajudicial killings; control of civil disturbances; hostage-taking and the use of persons as "human shields" during hostilities; laws in force in that country; effects of amnesties; treatment of ethnic groups; religious practices and cultural properties; and access to food and health care.

The Special Rapporteur also discussed individual cases of alleged human rights abuse. He noted that on a number of questions it seemed clear, owing to the complexity of the allegations and the arguments made by Iraq, that matters of evidence and proof required closer examination. Appended to the report was a list of 78 persons reportedly disappeared in southern Iraq in March 1991 and 62 persons reportedly arrested on 20 March 1991 with the Grand Ayatollah Sayyid Abul Qasim al-Khoei.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/134 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in Iraq

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that Iraq is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling Security Council resolution 688(1991) of 5 April 1991, in which the Council demanded an end to the repression of the Iraqi civilian population and insisted that Iraq should cooperate with humanitarian organizations and ensure that the human and political rights of all Iraqi citizens are respected,

Recalling also the pertinent resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, which expressed grave concern at the flagrant violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq,

Recalling in particular Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/74 of 6 March 1991, in which the Commission requested its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur to make a thorough study of the violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq, based on all information the special rapporteur may deem relevant, including information provided by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and any comments and material provided by the Government of Iraq, and to submit an interim report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session and a report to the Commission at its forty-eighth session,

Deeply concerned by the volume and extent of allegations of human rights violations by the Government of Iraq, such as arbitrary arrests and detentions, enforced or involuntary disappearances, torture, inhuman or degrading practices, extrajudicial killings, summary or arbitrary executions, hostage-taking and use of persons as "human shields", the lack of freedom of expression and the absence of an independent judiciary,

Noting the view of the Special Rapporteur that these allegations are each day increasing and necessitate considerable and detailed examination,

Deeply concerned by the fact that chemical weapons have been used on the Kurdish civilian population, by the forced displacement of hundreds of thousands of Kurds and the destruction of Kurdish towns and villages, as well as by the situation of tens of thousands of displaced Kurds living in camps in the north of Iraq and by the deportation of thousands of Kurdish families,

Also deeply concerned by the repressive measures taken by the Government of Iraq against the Shiah communities in the south of Iraq,

Concerned especially by the alleged use of excessive force by the Government of Iraq against Iraqi civilians, in particular the Kurds and the Shiites,

Noting with interest the message conveyed to the Special Rapporteur by the Government of Iraq of its intention fully to cooperate with him, with such cooperation including acceptance of a visit to Iraq to investigate the allegations of violations of human rights in that country,

Regretting, however, that the Government of Iraq has failed to answer a considerable number of specific questions asked by the Special Rapporteur on acts being committed by the Government of Iraq that are incompatible with international human rights instruments that are binding on that Government,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur and the considerations and observations contained therein;

2. Expresses its deep concern about the numerous and detailed allegations of grave human rights violations by the Government of Iraq to which the Special Rapporteur has referred in his report, in particular:

(a) Arbitrary detention, including that of women, children and the elderly, as well as the systematic practice of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading practices, and of enforced or involuntary disappearances as a part of a general structured programme of repression aimed at quelling opposition;

(b) Extrajudicial killings, including political killings and summary or arbitrary executions throughout the country, particularly in the northern Kurdish autonomous region, in southern Shia centres and in the southern marshes;

(c) Hostage-taking and the use of persons as "human shields", a most grave and blatant violation of Iraq's obligations under international law;

3. Calls upon the Government of Iraq to release all persons arrested and detained without ever being informed of charges against them, and without access to legal counsel or due process of law;

4. Also calls upon the Government of Iraq, as a State party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to abide by its obligations under this Covenant and under other international instruments on human rights, and particularly to respect and ensure these rights for individuals irrespective of their origin within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction, including Kurds and Shiites;

5. Regrets the failure of the Government of Iraq to provide satisfactory replies to all the allegations of violations of human rights, and calls upon it to reply quickly in a comprehensive and detailed manner to these allegations so as to enable the Special Rapporteur to form an accurate assessment as a basis for his recommendations to the Commission on Human Rights;

6. Urges, therefore, the Government of Iraq to accord its full cooperation to the Special Rapporteur during his forthcoming visit to Iraq to investigate the allegations of violations of human rights;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur to fulfil his mandate;

8. Decides to continue the examination of the situation of human rights in Iraq during its forty-seventh session under the item entitled "Human rights questions", in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Kuwait under Iraqi occupation

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 41 to 1, the Commission, on 6 March 1991,<sup>(53)</sup> strongly condemned Iraqi authorities and occupying forces for their grave human rights violations against the Kuwaiti people and nationals of other States. Expressing serious concern about the destruction, dismantling and pillaging of Kuwait's economic infrastructure, which, it said, undermined the Kuwaiti people's enjoyment of their economic, social and cultural rights, the Commission demanded that Iraq comply with its obligations under the Charter and contemporary norms of international law. It condemned Iraq's rejection of the offer of Kuwait and various humanitarian organizations to send humanitarian assistance to the Kuwaiti people under occupation. It also condemned Iraq's failure to treat all prisoners of war and detained civilians in accordance with internationally recognized principles of humanitarian law and, insisting that Iraq refrain from subjecting them to acts of violence, demanded their release. The Commission further condemned Iraq for failing to ensure respect for international standards applicable under international law and to cooperate with humanitarian organizations, especially ICRC. Deciding to appoint a special rapporteur to examine human rights violations in occupied Kuwait by Iraqi forces who would report to the General Assembly as soon as possible and to the Commission in 1992, the Commission authorized the special rapporteur to seek information from Kuwait, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. It asked the special rapporteur to prepare a preliminary report as soon as possible and also asked the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted decision 1991/251 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in Kuwait under Iraqi occupation

At its 13th plenary meeting, on 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/67 of 6 March 1991, approved the Commission's decision to appoint an individual of recognized international standing as special rapporteur with a mandate to examine the human rights violations committed in occupied Kuwait by the invading and occupying forces of Iraq and to report as soon as possible to the General Assembly and to the Commission at its forty-eighth session, and also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the special rapporteur to enable him to carry out his mandate in the best possible conditions.

On 3 May 1991, the Commission's Chairman appointed Walter Kälin (Switzerland) as Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in occupied Kuwait.

Subcommission action. On 23 August 1991,<sup>(54)</sup> by a secret ballot of 16 to 4, with 2 abstentions, the Subcommission expressed its hope that the special rapporteur appointed pursuant to the Commission's resolution would give due attention to alleged gross human rights violations in Kuwait and would inform the Commission of the situation of human rights in Kuwait since the withdrawal of Iraqi forces.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In October 1991, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a preliminary report on the human rights situation in Kuwait under Iraqi occupation prepared by the Special Rapporteur.<sup>(55)</sup> Following a description of his mandate and activities, the events relating to the invasion and occupation of Kuwait (see PART TWO, Chapter III) and the general legal framework on which his report was based, he discussed the human rights situation and the corresponding guarantees of international humanitarian law concerning arbitrary arrest, detention and deportation; torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment; the right to life and arbitrary and summary execution; special protection of children and women; economic, social and cultural rights; and the problem of missing persons.

In his recommendations on the fate of missing persons, the Special Rapporteur stated that United Nations organs should urge Iraq to provide information on events occurring between 2 August 1990 and 26 February 1991 concerning: persons deported from Kuwait who might still be detained; persons arrested in Kuwait who died during or after that period while in detention as well as on the site of their graves; and executions of persons arrested in Kuwait and carried out in Kuwait or Iraq during or after that period. He recommended that United Nations organs ask Iraq to search for persons still missing and cooperate with international humanitarian organizations in that regard. He also recommended that Kuwait be asked to take measures to cooperate with international organizations to identify all remaining unidentified persons killed there. Governments concerned were urged to allow for the repatriation of persons to the country of their former residence.

Europe and the Mediterranean

Albania

Report of the Secretary-General. In February 1991, (59) the Secretary-General reported on action taken pursuant to a March 1990 Commission on Human Rights resolution concerning human rights in Albania.(60) He stated that he had requested information from Albania on steps taken to implement the resolution's provisions and had visited Albania from 11 to 13 May 1990. Annexed to the report were two communications from Albania to the Secretary-General issued in 1990 and one issued in 1991.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission, on 6 March 1991,(61) called on Albania to free all political prisoners and adopt legislative and administrative measures to meet the requirements of relevant international human rights instruments. Emphasizing that all Albanian citizens should exercise their right to vote and that measures should be taken to guarantee the free expression of the will of the electors during the next proclaimed elections, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to Albania's attention and ask it for information regarding its implementation and to report to the Commission in 1992.

Cyprus

Report of the Secretary-General. In February 1991(62) the Secretary-General reported on human rights in Cyprus pursuant to a 1990 Commission decision. (63) The Secretary-General described action taken in 1990 by the Security Council and the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus.

Human Rights Commission action. On 27 February 1991,(64) the Commission decided to postpone until 1992 debate on the question of human rights in Cyprus, on the understanding that action required by previous resolutions would continue to remain operative, including the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide a report regarding their implementation.

Romania

Report of the Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Joseph Voyame (Switzerland) in January 1991(65) outlined the main events relating to the human rights situation in Romania which had occurred since the submission of his previous report in 1990.(66) He described his activities in carrying out his mandate and analysed information compiled in connection with various human rights and fundamental freedoms and their de jure and de facto implementation.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that respect for human rights had improved considerably in Romania but that the process was far from complete. The right to life and to physical and moral integrity was guaranteed in principle and respected in general. Respect for privacy was guaranteed, but confidence had not yet been restored and many people were convinced that telephone tapping and correspondence tampering existed. With regard to the administration of criminal justice, he suggested that regulations governing places of detention be amended, as he had noted overcrowding in prisons and police stations. A number of freedoms had been completely restored, such as freedom of movement, expression and opinion, and assembly and association. The right to an adequate standard of living was affected by difficult economic conditions. The situation of the Hungarian ethnic minority was improving and the gypsy community was beginning to receive recognition.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission note that despite regrettable lapses, respect for human rights was continuing to improve. He also recommended that Romanian authorities continue to ensure that human rights were respected; pay particular attention to the points raised by him; and consider the possibility of continuing to use the Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services, particularly to establish a Human Rights Institute, which would act as a documentation, research and information centre.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission, taking note of the Special Rapporteur's report, incorporated his recommendations in a resolution of 6 March 1991.(67) It noted with appreciation Romania's readiness to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur. Extending the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year, the Commission asked him to report in 1992 and asked the Secretary-General to continue to assist him.

Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1991/253 of 31 May 1991.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Cuba

Report of the Secretary-General. In February 1991(68) the Secretary-General reported on the results of his contacts with Cuba concerning human rights since 1989, except those which by virtue of his good offices functions remained confidential. Annexed to the report was an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and Cuba and a list of persons whose cases had been raised by him with Cuban authorities.

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 22 to 6, with 15 abstentions, the Commission on 6 March 1991 (69) expressing appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report and for the efforts made through his good offices, recognized Cuba's cooperation. It asked the Secretary-General to appoint a special representative to maintain direct contact with the Government and citizens and called on Cuba to continue its cooperation. It asked the appointed special representative to report in 1992.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted decision 1991/252 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in Cuba

El Salvador

Report of the Special Representative (January). Special Representative Jose Antonio Pastor Ridruejo (Spain) submitted to the Commission a report on human rights in El Salvador, covering events in 1990.<sup>(70)</sup> He described the overall political situation and reported that the armed conflict had resulted in an alarming deterioration in living conditions. Violations of economic, social and cultural rights continued, as did politically motivated summary executions and disappearances. He noted defects in the criminal justice system in the area of investigation and fact-finding. However, he expressed optimism concerning El Salvador's determination to improve human rights.

The Special Representative recommended to El Salvador's constitutional authorities: adopting measures to prevent threats and psychological intimidation against certain sectors of the population; reforming the judicial system and establishing an efficient criminal investigation body; accelerating judicial proceedings instituted for massacres committed in late 1989; and carrying out agrarian and other structural reforms. He recommended that the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) and guerrilla organizations continue their policy of not attacking the transport and communications system and of not planting contact mines among civilians.

The Special Representative further recommended that States increase assistance to alleviate and improve the situation of Salvadorian citizens displaced, made refugees or resettled.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,<sup>(71)</sup> the Commission, commending the Special Representative for his report and endorsing his recommendations, called on the parties to the conflict to guarantee respect for humanitarian rules applicable to non-international armed conflicts, particularly regarding the evacuation of the war wounded and maimed and the non-use of explosive devices affecting civilians. It urged the parties to take all measures to ensure that in the electoral process scheduled for 10 March 1991 the will of the Salvadorian people would be expressed. The Commission requested that United Nations organs and organizations, on the basis of a 1990 General Assembly resolution<sup>(72)</sup> and its own 1990 resolution,<sup>(73)</sup> provide advice and assistance as requested by El Salvador in order to achieve higher standards in promoting and protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms. Deciding to extend the Special Representative's mandate for a year, it asked him to submit another report to the Assembly in 1991 and to the Commission in 1992.

By decision 1991/257 of 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council approved extension of the Special Representative's mandate for another year, with a report to be submitted to the Assembly in 1991 and to the Commission in 1992.

Subcommission action. By a secret ballot of 18 to 1, with 3 abstentions, the Subcommission, on 26 August 1991,<sup>(74)</sup> welcomed the conclusion of an agreement between El Salvador and FMLN for the verification of human rights obligations as an essential condition for guaranteeing a just and lasting peace and expressed satisfaction at the establishment of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL). Urging the parties to take action to eradicate human rights violations and give their fullest support to ONUSAL, it further urged them to continue negotiations until they had reached an agreement to end the armed confrontation.

Report of the Special Representative (October). As requested by the Commission, the Special Representative presented to the Assembly in October a report on the human rights situation in El Salvador in 1991,<sup>(75)</sup> in which he stated that government harassment of humanitarian, trade union and peasant organizations and resettled communities continued, as did politically motivated summary executions, although their number was slightly lower than in the previous year. He noted reports of politically motivated disappearances and expressed concern at the lack of progress in criminal proceedings instituted on many serious human rights violations committed in past years. Deaths resulting from the armed conflict among civilians continued, although their number was lower than in 1990.

The Special Representative reiterated the recommendations made in his January report (see above).

Note of the Secretary-General. By a note of 15 November 1991, the Secretary-General transmitted the second report of ONUSAL, annexed to which was a report of the Director of the ONUSAL Human Rights Division briefly describing the Mission's verification activities and the human rights situation in El Salvador.

(For further details concerning the political situation in El Salvador, see PART TWO, Chapter II.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/133 without vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights, article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocol II to the Conventions, of 1977,

Taking into account the commitments undertaken by the Central American Presidents in various joint statements on the promotion of, respect for and exercise of human rights,

Noting with satisfaction that the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional are pursuing the negotiating process that began on 4 April 1990 under the auspices of the Secretary-General, with a view to ending the armed conflict through political means as speedily as possible, promoting the democratization of the country, guaranteeing unrestricted respect for human rights and reunifying Salvadorian society,

Taking into account the establishment of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, whose initial task, as part of a comprehensive peace-keeping operation, is to verify compliance with the partial agreement on human rights signed at San José on 26 July 1990,<sup>a</sup>

Noting with satisfaction that the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional have agreed in Mexico City on important constitutional reforms on the issues relating to the armed forces, the judicial system, the electoral-system and human rights which, with the exception of the issue relating to the armed forces, have already been ratified by the Legislative Assembly, and on the establishment of the Commission on the Truth for the purpose of investigating serious acts of violence that have occurred in El Salvador since 1980,

Noting with satisfaction the agreement reached by the two parties in New York on 25 September 1991, on the basis of which the negotiating process has continued intensively and without interruption, creating hopes that the set of political agreements necessary for ending the armed conflict can be agreed upon in the shortest possible time,

Concerned that, despite a reduction in their number, serious violations of human rights and of the humanitarian rules of warfare persist,

Noting with satisfaction that, in the present context of the negotiating process, the Frente-Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional has unilaterally decided to desist from all offensive actions, urban operations and economic sabotage, and the Government of El Salvador has, for its part, decided to stop aerial bombing and the use of heavy artillery, decisions whose implementation is important in terms of increasing mutual trust and creating the necessary conditions for the achievement of a permanent cease-fire and the other objectives set out in the agreement signed at Geneva on 4 April 1990,<sup>b</sup>

1. Commends the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights for his provisional report on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, and endorses the recommendations contained therein;

2. Expresses its full support for the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador which, since 26 July 1991, has been verifying compliance with the partial agreement on human rights, and requests the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to extend all facilities required for the discharge of its functions, ensure its security and comply as promptly as possible with the recommendations made to them;

3. Expresses its satisfaction that the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, as part of their efforts to resolve the armed conflict, have signed agreements and established mechanisms for verification and monitoring in the field of human rights, full respect for which is essential to the attainment of a just and lasting peace;

4. Calls upon the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to take forthwith the actions and steps required to eradicate serious violations of human rights and of the humanitarian rules of warfare;

5. Urges the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to continue negotiations until the necessary political agreements are arrived at to put an end to the armed conflict as speedily as possible, lay firm foundations for promoting the democratization of the country, guarantee full respect for human rights and bring about the reunification of Salvadorian society;

6. Recognizes that it is an important precedent in Salvadorian penal justice to have pronounced guilty, on 25 September 1991, two soldiers, one of them of high rank, involved in the assassination of the Rector and other Jesuit priests of the Central American University, their housekeeper and her daughter, and urges the competent authorities to continue their investigation in order to determine whether other persons may have been involved, with a view to assigning responsibility as appropriate;

7. Notes with satisfaction that, in conformity with the New York Agreement, the National Commission for the Consolidation of Peace has been set up in its transitory phase, constituting a mechanism for the monitoring of and for the participation of civilian society in the process of the changes resulting from the negotiations between the parties;

8. Urges the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to strengthen the confidence-building and security measures adopted unilaterally in order to keep the armed conflicts suspended until political agreements are reached which will definitively put an end to the armed conflict and achieve the other objectives established in the agreement signed at Geneva on 4 April 1990;

9. Supports the work of mediation being done by the Secretary-General and his personal representative in the search for a political solution to the armed conflict;

10. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-seventh session, the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador, in conformity with the course of events in the country.

Haiti

Report of the Independent Expert. Independent Expert Philippe Texier (France) submitted to the Commission in January 1991 a report on the human rights situation in Haiti during 1990.(77) He noted that the instability which had been an essential feature of the long transition towards democracy that began in February 1986 did not seem to have ended. The economic situation had not improved since his last report to the Commission in 1990;(78) the population, estimated at 6.3 million, was constantly expanding and a large proportion suffered from malnutrition. More than 77 per cent were illiterate. The public debt was growing and emigration and the "boat people" phenomenon had continued. Judicial authorities were still characterized by incompetence, lack of will or independence and corruption.

The Expert visited Haiti from 25 January to 2 February 1991 to evaluate elections held on 16 December 1990 and 6 and 20 January 1991 which had made it possible to elect a President of the Republic, a Parliament consisting of two chambers, 135 three-member municipal councils and 565 three-member local district administrative councils. The Expert noted that while an era of hope had opened for the vast majority of Haitians, the transition towards democracy that was to begin would be a period of terrible fragility. Violence was still present between opponents of any form of democracy and the masses.

On the positive side, the Expert observed that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights(41) had been published in the official gazette of Haiti and the instrument of accession had been sent to United Nations Headquarters; the President Elect was to ratify those conventions which had not yet been ratified; Haiti's 1987 Constitution was fully restored and legal institutions were being set up. However, he noted that the Government and judicial authorities had not taken effective measures to investigate past and present human rights violations and had not been able to stop abuses committed by section heads in rural areas or to prevent massacres of peasants and murders of political and trade union leaders. In the Expert's opinion, obstacles to improving the human rights situation in Haiti were an ineffective judicial system; highly militarized rural areas; failure to separate the army and the police forces; failure to try persons responsible for the principal massacres; and paramilitary forces that hindered the movement towards democracy. The situation regarding economic, social and cultural rights was still very disturbing.

The Expert recommended to the Commission that it: continue to monitor human rights in Haiti; express concern at the persistence of serious human rights violations and fundamental freedoms; and express satisfaction at the smooth way in which elections had proceeded but maintain an independent expert to study the development of human rights, report on the situation and foster the provision of technical assistance.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission incorporated the Expert's recommendations in a resolution of 6 March 1991.(79) Expressing its conviction that it was important to pursue a fruitful dialogue with the new Government, the Commission asked its Chairman to appoint an independent expert to examine developments in the human rights situation in Haiti and to help devise measures to make the necessary improvements. The Commission called on the Haitian authorities to continue cooperating with the expert, who was to report in 1992.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/258 of 31 May 1991, approved the appointment of an expert and the request that the Secretary-General provide him with the necessary assistance.

(For more details concerning Haiti, see PART TWO, Chapter II.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/138 without vote.

Human rights in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States are required to promote and protect human rights and to comply with the obligations laid down in the various instruments in this field,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/77 of 6 March 1991 on the situation of human rights in Haiti,

Deeply concerned at the grave events occurring in Haiti since 29 September 1991, which abruptly and violently interrupted the democratic process in that country and have resulted in the violation of human rights and the loss of human lives,

Concerned also at the current mass exodus of Haitian nationals from the country because of the deteriorating political and economic situation since 29 September 1991,

Noting the unanimous declaration on the situation of the displaced Haitians, adopted by the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States on 22 November 1991, and the subsequent dispatch by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights of an investigating team to Haiti on 4 December 1991,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 46/7 of 11 October 1991 concerning the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti;

2. Strongly condemns the overthrow of the constitutionally elected President, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, and the use of violence and military coercion and the subsequent violation of human rights in that country;

3. Condemns also the flagrant human rights violations committed under the illegal Government set up following the coup of 29 September 1991, particularly summary executions, arbitrary arrests and detentions, torture, searches without warrant, rape, ransacking of private and public buildings, restrictions on the freedoms of movement, expression, assembly and association and the repression of popular demonstrations calling for the return of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the work it is doing in favour of the Haitian nationals fleeing the country and invites Member States to continue giving financial and material support for these efforts;

5. Calls the attention of the international community to the fate of the Haitian nationals who are fleeing the country and requests its support for the efforts undertaken to assist them;

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-eighth session to consider the report of the independent expert appointed by the Secretary-General to review the situation of human rights in Haiti, and invites the independent expert to submit an updated report to the Commission in the light of the events of 29 September 1991 and subsequent developments.

Middle East

Lebanon

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,(80) the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 41 to 1, condemned Israel for its human rights violations in southern Lebanon manifested by arbitrary detention of civilians, destruction of homes, confiscation of property, their expulsion from the occupied area, and bombardment of villages and called on Israel to end such practices immediately and implement relevant Security Council resolutions requiring its immediate, total and unconditional withdrawal from all Lebanese territory and respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity. It also called on Israel to comply with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) and to facilitate the humanitarian mission of ICRC and similar organizations. It asked the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to Israel's attention and invite Israel to provide information on its implementation. He was asked to report to the General Assembly in 1991 and to the Commission in 1992 on the results of his efforts. Those requests were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1991/268 of 31 May 1991.

In accordance with the Commission's request, the Secretary-General reported in September(81) that he had asked Israel in June for information on the implementation of the Commission's resolution; as at 6 December he had received no reply.(82)

By decision 46/430, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, took note in December of the Secretary-General's report.

Territories occupied by Israel

In 1991, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and other bodies (see PART TWO, Chapter V).

Reports of the Secretary-General. As requested in 1990,<sup>(83)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Commission in 1991 that he had brought the Commission's two resolutions on human rights violations in the Israeli-occupied territories to the attention of Governments, General Assembly and Security Council members, the Special Committee on Israeli Practices, and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People;<sup>(84)</sup> they had also been transmitted to the specialized agencies, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and international humanitarian organizations and NGOs and through United Nations press releases, publications, audiovisual programmes and journalists' encounters on the question of Palestine.

Also in accordance with a 1990 Commission request,<sup>(83)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a list of all United Nations reports issued since 9 March 1990 on the situation of the population of the occupied Arab territories.<sup>(85)</sup>

Human Rights Commission action. By a 15 February 1991 resolution,<sup>(86)</sup> adopted by a roll-call vote of 28 to 1, with 10 abstentions, the Commission condemned Israel's policies and practices which violated the human rights of the Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied territories. Affirming the right of the Palestinians to resist the Israeli occupation by all means, the Commission called on Israel to desist from all forms of violations in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories and to respect the principles of international law, and its commitments to the Charter and to withdraw from the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other occupied Arab territories in accordance with United Nations and Commission resolutions.

By another resolution adopted on the same day by a roll-call vote of 26 to 1, with 11 abstentions, <sup>(87)</sup> the Commission, reaffirming the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories, including Jerusalem, strongly condemned Israel for refusing to apply that Convention and for ill-treating and torturing Palestinian detainees and prisoners. It also strongly condemned Israel for deporting Palestinians and called on it to comply with Security Council, General Assembly and Commission resolutions providing for their return to their homeland, and to desist from this policy. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1992 on progress in implementing the resolutions, after bringing them to the attention of Governments,

United Nations organs and agencies, inter-governmental and international humanitarian organizations and NGOs.

Also on 15 February 1991,<sup>(88)</sup> the Commission strongly condemned Israel for refusing to comply with United Nations resolutions on the Syrian Golan Heights and demanded that Israel rescind its 1981 decision<sup>(89)</sup> to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the territory, which, the Commission said, was null and void and without international legal effect. Condemning Israel's persistence in changing the Golan Heights' physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status, the Commission emphasized that displaced persons must be allowed to return and recover their properties. It determined that all Israeli measures that altered the Golan Heights' character and legal status were null and void, violated international law and the fourth Geneva Convention and had no legal effect. Strongly condemning Israel for attempting to impose Israeli citizenship and identity cards on Syrians and for its practices of annexation, establishing settlements, confiscating lands, diverting water resources and imposing a boycott on agricultural products, it called on Israel to desist from its settlement designs and policies aimed against academic institutions and from its repressive measures. Once again it called on Member States not to recognize any measures and actions taken by Israel. It asked the Secretary-General to give the resolution wide publicity and report to the Commission in 1992.

By a fourth resolution, also adopted on 15 February,<sup>(90)</sup> by a roll-call vote of 38 to none, with 1 abstention, the Commission reaffirmed that the installation of Israeli civilians in the occupied territories was illegal and constituted a violation of the relevant provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention. It urged Israel to abstain from installing settlers, including immigrants, in the occupied territories.

Subcommission action. On 29 August 1992,<sup>(91)</sup> the Subcommission, by a roll-call vote of 10 to 4, with 6 abstentions, recommended a draft text to the Commission by which it would recommend that the Economic and Social Council request an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on what the legal consequences were for States arising from the building by Israel of settlements in the territories occupied since 1967, notwithstanding Security Council resolutions adopted in 1979<sup>(92)</sup> and 1980.<sup>(93)</sup>

Pursuant to a 1990 Subcommission request,<sup>(94)</sup> the Secretary-General, in July 1991, updated a list of reports, studies, statistics, documents and United Nations decisions and resolutions on Palestine and other occupied Arab territories.<sup>(95)</sup>

Other alleged human rights violations

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/223, decided to take no action on a draft introduced by Cuba concerning a United States economic embargo against Cuba and its adverse effects on the full enjoyment of human rights by the Cuban people.(96)

Mass exoduses

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,(97) the Commission invited Governments and intergovernmental and humanitarian organizations to intensify their cooperation in efforts to address the problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, and also the causes of such exoduses. It asked Governments to ensure the implementation of the relevant international instruments, so as to contribute to averting new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons, and took note of the Secretary-General's 1990 report on human rights and mass exoduses.(98) Welcoming a 1990 report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the coordination of activities related to early warning of possible refugee flows,(99) the Commission invited the Secretary-General, intergovernmental agencies and offices and international agencies to implement JIU's recommendations, particularly with regard to establishing a working group and consultative machinery within the United Nations system for early warning of possible refugee flows and displaced persons. It asked the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to develop the role of the United Nations Office for Research and the Collection of Information (ORCI) to strengthen the coordination of information-gathering and analysis with agencies so as to provide early warning of developing situations requiring the Secretary-General's attention, as well as to provide a focal point within the United Nations system for policy response, including identification of policy options. It also asked him to make the necessary information available to the competent United Nations organs bearing in mind JIU recommendations. The Commission urged the Secretary-General to allocate the necessary resources to consolidate and strengthen the system for such early-warning activities by, inter alia, computerizing ORCI, UNHCR, the Centre for Human Rights and the relevant specialized agencies, and ensuring that data collection and information handling processes were harmonized and, where possible, making use of computerized systems.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1990 Assembly request(100) and the Commission's March 1991 resolution,(97) the Secretary-General submitted in October 1991(101) a report on human rights and mass exoduses. He stated that he had made further efforts to consolidate and strengthen the United Nations role in undertaking early-warning activities. He had made his good offices available to assist in solving situations reported to him by ORCI which were likely to generate new massive flows of refugees and other displaced persons. In April,(102) the Administrative Committee on Coordination decided to establish an Ad Hoc Working Group on Early Warning regarding New Flows of Refugees and Displaced Persons. ORCI had intensified its search for additional resources to accelerate computerizing its early-warning work and had initiated close contacts with a large number of United Nations agencies and offices in order to elaborate a system-wide network for early warning of potential mass exoduses.

Annexed to the report were the views of eight Governments, one specialized agency and one NGO relating to the recommendations contained in a 1986 report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees.(103)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/127 without vote.

Human rights and mass exoduses

The General Assembly.

Mindful of its general humanitarian mandate under the Charter of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply disturbed by the increasing scale and magnitude of exoduses of refugees and displacements of population in many regions of the world and by the suffering of millions of refugees and displaced persons,

Conscious of the fact that human rights violations are one of the multiple and complex factors causing mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, as indicated in the study of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on this subject<sup>a</sup> and also in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Aware of the recommendations concerning mass exoduses made by the Commission on Human Rights to its Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and to special rapporteurs to be taken into account when studying violations of human rights in any part of the world,

Deeply preoccupied by the increasingly heavy burden being imposed, particularly upon developing countries with limited resources of their own and upon the international community as a whole, by these sudden mass exoduses and displacements of population,

Stressing the need for international cooperation aimed at averting new massive flows of refugees while providing durable solutions to actual refugee situations,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/70 of 3 December 1986, in which it endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Bearing in mind its resolution 45/153 of 18 December 1990 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/73 of 6 March 1991, as well as all previous relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights,

Welcoming the steps taken so far by the United Nations to examine the problem of massive outflows of refugees and displaced persons in all its aspects, including its root causes,

Noting that the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has specifically acknowledged the direct relationship between observance of human rights standards, refugee movements and problems of protection,

1. Reaffirms its support for the recommendation of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees that the principal organs of the United Nations should make fuller use of their respective competencies under the Charter of the United Nations for the prevention of new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

2. Again invites all Governments and intergovernmental and humanitarian organizations concerned to intensify their cooperation with and assistance to world-wide efforts to address the serious problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, and also the causes of such exoduses;

3. Requests all Governments to ensure the effective implementation of the relevant international instruments, in particular in the field of human rights, as this would contribute to averting new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

4. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to keep the question of human rights and mass exoduses under review with a view to supporting the early-warning arrangement instituted by the Secretary-General to avert new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

5. Notes with appreciation the emphasis placed by the Secretary-General in his annual report on the work of the Organization, on the need to develop the capacity of the United Nations for early warning and preventive diplomacy to help deter humanitarian crises;

6. Reiterates, in this regard, its previous resolutions on the question of human rights and mass exoduses and requests the Secretary-General, in the further development of the capacity of the Secretariat for early warning and preventive diplomacy, to pay particular attention to international cooperation to avert new flows of refugees;

7. Notes in this connection that mass movements of populations are caused by multiple and complex factors, either man-made or natural, ranging from wars and armed conflicts, invasions and aggressions, violations of human rights, forcible expulsions, economic and social factors, natural disasters, to degradation in the environment, which indicates that early warning requires an intersectoral and multidisciplinary approach;

8. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and mass exoduses, and reiterates its request that future reports include information concerning the modalities and operations of early-warning activities to avert new and massive flows of refugees;

9. Specials encourages the Secretary-General to continue to discharge the task described in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees, including the continuous monitoring of all potential outflows, and to implement the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit contained in its report entitled "The coordination of activities related to early warning of possible refugee flows";

10. requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to develop the role of the Office for Research and the Collection of Information of the Secretariat as a focal point for the operation of an effective early-warning system and the strengthening of coordination of information-gathering and analysis among United Nations agencies with a view to preventing new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

11. Reiterates the importance of the early-warning function of the Office for Research and the Collection of Information;

12. Urges the Secretary-General to allocate the necessary resources to consolidate and strengthen the system for undertaking early-warning activities in the humanitarian area by, inter alia, the computerization of the Office for Research and the Collection of Information and strengthened coordination among the relevant parts of the United Nations system, especially the Office for Research and the Collection of Information, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and the relevant specialized agencies;

13. welcomes the information in the report of the Secretary-General that a temporary post is expected to become available in the biennium 1992-1993 in order that a computer specialist can be recruited to further the development of the data system of the Office for Research and the Collection of Information;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary information available to the competent United Nations organs, bearing in mind the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit on coordination;

15. Invites bodies of the United Nations system to consider the most expedient ways and means of following up the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit on coordination;

16. welcomes the initiation of close contacts between the Office for Research and the Collection of Information and a large number of United Nations agencies and offices in pursuit of a system-wide network for early warning of potential mass exoduses;

17. welcomes also the establishment by the Administrative Committee on Coordination of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Early Warning regarding New Flows of Refugees and Displaced Persons with a mandate to develop an effective early-warning system related to possible flows of refugees and displaced persons, including practical measures of cooperation and procedures for gathering, analysing and disseminating information in a timely manner to all concerned, and to make recommendations on the need for an inter-agency consultative mechanism;

18. Urges the Ad Hoc Working Group to carry out its mandate and submit to the Administrative Committee on Coordination in 1992 its report on the early-warning mechanism to be established;

19. Emphasizes the significance of this task of the Ad Hoc Working Group in view of the continuing situation with regard to mass exoduses;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the strengthened role that he is playing in undertaking early-warning activities, especially in the humanitarian area, as well as on any further developments relating to the recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees;

21. Invites the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly informed of the efforts to follow up recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit;

22. Also invites the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session detailed information on the programmatic, institutional, administrative, financial, and managerial efforts instituted to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to avert new flows of refugees and to tackle the root causes of such outflows;

23. Decides to continue consideration of the question of human rights and mass exoduses at its forty-seventh session.

Other aspects of human rights violations

Responsibility for human rights violations

On 6 March 1991,(104) the Commission, expressing concern at human rights violations still occurring in many parts of the world, particularly, gross and systematic violations, considered that establishing further clear rules regulating responsibility for such violations could serve as one of the basic preventive guarantees aimed at averting any infringements of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It invited competent United Nations bodies to consider the question of State responsibility for violations of international obligations and appealed to States which had not yet done so to undertake legislative measures to establish appropriate legal responsibility under domestic law of those responsible for violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Restitution for human rights violations

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July, the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur, Theo van Boven (Netherlands), submitted a progress report on the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms,(105) taking into account comments on his 1989 preliminary report.(106) He discussed relevant decisions adopted by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (1990)(107) and decisions and views of international human rights organs such as the Human Rights Committee, CERD, the Committee against Torture, and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.

Subcommission action. On 29 August 1991,(108) the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur to continue his study and to submit in 1992 a second progress report and in 1993 a final report containing conclusions and recommendations.

Other human rights questions

Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions

In August 1991,(1) the Secretary-General reported on the status of the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims.(2) As at 17 July 1991, 104 States had ratified or acceded to Protocol I (on protection of victims of international armed conflicts). Five States—Australia, Chile, Djibouti, Germany, Uganda—did so in 1991. All of these parties—except 12—also adhered to Protocol II (on protection of victims of non-international conflicts). Two States—France and the Philippines—adhered only to Protocol II.

In July 1991,(3) the Secretary-General submitted to the Subcommission an analytical review of information received from 41 Governments on the scope of education provided to members of the police and armed forces. The diversity of replies received, and the fact that relevant international organizations and NGOs had not been heard in relation to the review, prevented the drafting of a comprehensive report as intended. The Secretary-General recommended that a questionnaire on the subject be sent to Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to yield more homogeneous and precise information.

Rights of the child

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1991,(4) there were 107 parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in 1989(5) and in force since 2 September 1990. In 1991, 44 States ratified or acceded to the Convention.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention in January(6) and again in August 1991.(7)

Implementation

Committee on the Rights of the Child

The first Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention (New York, 27 February-1 March 1991) elected its Chairman and other officers and adopted its agenda and rules of procedure. As provided for under the Convention, it established the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) to examine progress made by States parties in realizing the obligations undertaken. (For Committee members, see APPENDIX III.)

CRC activities. CRC held its first session at Geneva from 30 September to 18 October 1991. At that session, it elected its Chairman and other officers, adopted its agenda and rules of procedure and considered guidelines for reports to be submitted by States parties.(9) The provisions of the Convention and cooperation with specialized agencies, UNICEF and other United Nations organs and competent bodies were discussed. In an interim report,(10) the Committee made a number of recommendations concerning its sessions and those of its subsidiary bodies, sources of information, relations with other United Nations bodies and treaty bodies, information activities and the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights (see under “Advancement of human rights”). Annexed to the report was the Committee’s agenda, a list of its members and guidelines concerning the form and content of initial reports of States parties.

The Secretary-General in August 1991 submitted to CRC a list of States that had signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention as at 31 July 1991 and texts of reservations and declarations by 34 States and objections to reservations and declarations made by one State with respect to the Convention from 2 September 1990 to 31 July 1991.(11) Also in August,(12) the Secretary-General listed 57 States parties from which initial reports were due in 1992.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission, on 6 March 1991,(13) welcoming the successful conclusion of the 1990 World Summit for Children, particularly the adoption of the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration,(14) called on States that had not done so to sign, ratify or accede to the Convention on the Rights of the Child as a matter of priority. It asked the Secretary-General to provide facilities and assistance to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to it. The Commission also asked him to ensure staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of CRC and to submit a report on the status of the Convention in 1992.

UNICEF report. In February 1991,(15) UNICEF reported that it had taken measures to implement the Convention through its country programmes, monitoring the implementation of children’s rights, activities in industrialized countries and international cooperation. The UNICEF Executive Director made recommendations concerning those areas to the Executive Board.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/112 without vote.

Implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/25 of 20 November 1989, by which it adopted the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling also its resolutions 45/104 of 14 December 1990 and 45/217 of 21 December 1990, and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/74 of 7 March 1990, and taking note of Commission resolution 1991/52 of 6 March 1991,

Reaffirming that the rights of children require special protection and call for continuous improvement of the situation of children all over the world, as well as for their development and education in conditions of peace and security,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of inadequate social and economic conditions, natural disasters, armed conflicts, exploitation, illiteracy, hunger and disability, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Mindful of the important role of the United Nations Children's Fund and of the United Nations in promoting the well-being of children and their development, convinced that the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as a standard-setting accomplishment of the United Nations in the field of human rights, makes a positive contribution to protecting the rights of children and ensuring their well-being,

Bearing in mind the successful conclusion of the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, in particular the adoption of the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children, while emphasizing the need for implementation of the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s, and stressing the necessity to ensure follow-up to the Summit at the national and international levels,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention,

Bearing in mind that the Committee on the Rights of the Child held its first session from 30 September to 18 October 1991,

Encouraged by the fact that an unprecedented number of States have to date become signatories and parties to the Convention, thereby demonstrating the widespread commitment that exists to strive for the promotion and protection of the rights of the child,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

2. Recalls with deep satisfaction the entry into force of the Convention on 2 September 1990 as a major step in international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

3. Expresses its satisfaction at the number of States that have signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention since it was opened for signature, ratification and accession on 26 January 1990;

4. Calls upon all States that have not done so to sign, ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all facilities and assistance necessary for the dissemination of information on the Convention and its implementation, with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

6. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the Convention;

7. Recognises the important role of the Committee on the Rights of the Child in overseeing the effective implementation of the provisions of the Convention;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of appropriate staff and facilities so that the functions of the Committee may be carried out effectively;

9. Supports the organization of the future work of the Committee on the basis of two sessions annually, each for a duration of two or three weeks, and the establishment of a pre-sessional working group for a preliminary review of reports from States parties;

10. Decides to take appropriate action at its forty-seventh session on the recommendations of the Committee in its biennial report to be submitted to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, pursuant to article 44, paragraph 5, of the Convention;

11. Invites the Secretary-General to convene a brief meeting of the States parties to the Convention, preferably during the forty-seventh session, to determine the duration of the future meetings of the Committee, prior to the consideration of the question by the Assembly;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to consider favourably the possibility of enabling a working group of the whole of the Committee to meet in 1992, as recommended by the Committee;

13. Invites United Nations bodies and organizations, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to intensify their efforts with a view to disseminating information on and promoting understanding of the Convention;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

15. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its forty-seventh session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Sale of children,
child prostitution and pornography

Report of the Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Vitit Muntarbhorn (Thailand), appointed in 1990, gave a preliminary assessment in January 1991<sup>(16)</sup> of some of the key problems concerning the sale of children for adoption, child labour and organ transplant, and child prostitution and pornography. Obstacles identified concerned both economic and socio-cultural problems, including ingrained attitudes against women, the image of children as property of parents and acceptability of sexual exploitation in some communities. The Special Rapporteur recommended establishing an information base to help gather data and proof concerning the sale of children, child prostitution and pornography. Political and social will, programme-linked policies, development assistance and budgetary commitment were long-term requisites. He advocated greater collaboration with child-oriented strategies and agencies, parents, consumers, professional associations, the private sector, community organizations, law enforcement personnel, financial institutions and individuals.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,<sup>(17)</sup> the Commission asked its Special Rapporteur to continue his mandate and to report in 1992.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/247 of 31 May 1991, approved the Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur to continue his work and to the Secretary-General to give him all the assistance he needed.

Programme of action

Report of the Secretary-General. In January 1991<sup>(18)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted an analytical summary of comments from 21 States, 1 United Nations body, 4 specialized agencies, 7 intergovernmental organizations and 20 NGOs on the draft programme of action for prevention of sale of children, child prostitution and pornography, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights in 1990.<sup>(19)</sup> The text of the draft programme of action was annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,<sup>(20)</sup> the Commission decided to refer to the Subcommittee the draft programme of action so that it might make amendments in the light of opinions received from Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. It asked the Subcommittee to reflect, in reformulating the programme of action, the 10-point programme of the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children<sup>(14)</sup> and to give it the highest priority so that it might be adopted by the Commission in 1992. The Commission asked the Under-Secretary-General for Human Rights to provide the necessary cooperation to the Subcommittee and asked Special Rapporteur Vitit

Muntarbhorn (Thailand) to consider submitting his comments and suggestions to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery by attending its meetings.

Subcommission action. On 29 August 1991,<sup>(21)</sup> the Subcommittee decided to transmit the draft programme of action, as reformulated by the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery on the basis of comments submitted by States, specialized agencies and NGOs,<sup>(22)</sup> to the Commission.

Also in August,<sup>(23)</sup> the Subcommittee submitted a written statement prepared by UNICEF citing efforts by Governments, ILO, UNICEF and NGOs to prevent the sale of children, child prostitution and child labour.

Child labour

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,<sup>(24)</sup> the Commission decided to transmit to Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their comments a draft programme of action for the elimination of the exploitation of child labour and asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1992 a summary of their replies. Annexed to the Commission's resolution was the draft programme of action proposing an information campaign, education and vocational training, social action, development aid, labour standards, duties of States and cooperation at the local, national and international levels.

Also on 6 March 1991,<sup>(20)</sup> the Commission requested Member States to support ILO's programme on the elimination of child labour and asked the Secretary-General to submit an analytical summary of replies from Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on the draft programme of action.

Youth and human rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March 1991,<sup>(25)</sup> the Commission reaffirmed the role of youth in promoting the full enjoyment of human rights and the fact that youth attached crucial importance to promoting international peace and cooperation and the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Commission called on States, governmental and non-governmental organizations, United Nations organs and specialized agencies to devote constant attention to the exercise by young people of all human rights, including the right to education and vocational training and the right to work, with a view to ensuring full employment and the solution of the problem of unemployment among young people. It also called on States to take legislative, administrative and other action for the exercise by youth of all human rights and fundamental freedoms in order to create conditions for their active participation in programmes for the overall development of their countries.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. The Subcommission's Special Rapporteur Dumitru Mazilu (Romania) submitted a progress report in July 1991 on human rights and youth,<sup>(26)</sup> focusing on life, liberty and the security of youth and difficulties in ensuring their fundamental rights to education and work. He discussed the causes of continuing human rights violations of youth and measures to ensure and promote their rights and freedoms. He proposed that the Subcommission request the Secretary-General to ask Governments for their opinion on the protection and development of youth and that it organize consultations with major youth organizations to obtain their views on that subject. He recommended sending the text of a draft charter of the rights and freedoms of youth to various national youth organizations for their comments and to include in a final report all the problems regarding the rights and freedoms of youth. He further recommended that he be authorized to check information received concerning the gross violations of the rights and freedoms of youth through the existing means of the United Nations and that he be asked to submit his final report to the Subcommission in 1992.

Subcommission action. On 28 August 1991,<sup>(27)</sup> the Subcommission recommended a draft resolution to the Commission asking the Special Rapporteur to submit his final report in 1992.

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and children

The Subcommission's Special Rapporteur, Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco), submitted in July 1991 a final report on traditional practices affecting the health of women and children, focusing on female circumcision, preferential treatment for male children and traditional child delivery practices.<sup>(28)</sup> A preliminary report had been submitted in 1989.<sup>(29)</sup> Reporting on missions to Djibouti and Sudan at the end of 1990, the Special Rapporteur concluded that favourable progress had been made in the area of public education. She noted that a regional seminar had been held for Africa (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, 29 April-3 May 1991)<sup>(30)</sup> and that another would take place in Asia in 1992. The Special Rapporteur summarized replies on the subject from 12 Governments, 1 United Nations body, 1 specialized agency and 8 NGOs. She concluded that while progress had been made in public awareness about the harmful effects of genital mutilation, nutritional taboos and child delivery practices, son preference had not yet been sufficiently studied and dealt with. More Governments were willing to tackle the problem of such traditional practices in Africa, including taking legislative measures. The Special Rapporteur recommended calling on more Governments to adopt legislative measures and better coordination between the Centre for Human Rights, the World Health Organization, UNICEF and UNESCO. She also recommended that the Centre for Human Rights monitor progress of work undertaken by Governments, United Nations specialized agencies and NGOs and that the Centre be provided with staff to gather information, write reports, organize seminars, dispatch documents and liaise with relevant organizations.

Subcommission action. On 29 August 1991,<sup>(31)</sup> the Subcommission recommended that the Special Rapporteur's mandate be extended for two years and that the Centre for Human Rights be provided with a full-time staff member to follow the question of traditional practices affecting the health of women and children.

Mental illness

Working Group activities. Pursuant to a 1990 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(32)</sup> the Working Group on the Principles for the Protection of Persons with Mental Illness and for the Improvement of Mental Health Care, established by the Commission in 1989,<sup>(33)</sup> held its second session at Geneva from 29 October to 9 November 1990 and on 31 January 1991.<sup>(34)</sup> The Group had held its first session earlier in 1990.<sup>(35)</sup>

In 1991, the Group examined and revised the draft body of principles and guarantees for the protection of mentally ill persons and for the improvement of mental health care as submitted by the Subcommission in 1988<sup>(36)</sup> and as supplemented by comments from Governments, specialized agencies and NGOs.<sup>(37)</sup> The Group adopted the text of the complete draft instrument and revised the text of the introduction and annexed them to its report.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991, <sup>(38)</sup> the Commission endorsed the draft body of principles and decided to transmit it and the Working Group's report<sup>(34)</sup> to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council.

The exercise of the rights set forth in the present Principles may be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect the health or safety of the person concerned or of others, or otherwise to protect public safety, order, health or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.

Principle 1

Fundamental freedoms and basic rights

1. All persons have the right to the best available mental health care, which shall be part of the health and social care system.

2. All persons with a mental illness, or who are being treated as such persons, shall be treated with humanity and respect for the inherent dignity of the human person.

3. All persons with a mental illness, or who are being treated as such persons, have the right to protection from economic, sexual and other forms of exploitation, physical or other abuse and degrading treatment.

4. There shall be no discrimination on the grounds of mental illness. “Discrimination” means any distinction, exclusion or preference that has the effect of nullifying or impairing equal enjoyment of rights. Special measures solely to protect the rights, or secure the advancement, of persons with mental illness shall not be deemed to be discriminatory. Discrimination does not include any distinction, exclusion or preference undertaken in accordance with the provisions of the present Principles and necessary to protect the human rights of a person with a mental illness or of other individuals.

5. Every person with a mental illness shall have the right to exercise all civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights as recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and in other relevant instruments, such as the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons and the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment.

6. Any decision that, by reason of his or her mental illness, a person lacks legal capacity, and any decision that, in consequence of such incapacity, a personal representative shall be appointed, shall be made only after a fair hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal established by domestic law. The person whose capacity is at issue shall be entitled to be represented by a counsel. If the person whose capacity is at issue does not himself or herself secure such representation, it shall be made available without payment by that person to the extent that he or she does not have sufficient means to pay for it. The counsel shall not in the same proceedings represent a mental health facility or its personnel and shall not also represent a member of the family of the person whose capacity is at issue unless the tribunal is satisfied that there is no conflict of interest. Decisions regarding capacity and the need for a personal representative shall be reviewed at reasonable intervals prescribed by domestic law. The person whose capacity is at issue, his or her personal representative, if any, and any other interested person shall have the right to appeal to a higher court against any such decision.

7. Where a court or other competent tribunal finds that a person with mental illness is unable to manage his or her own affairs, measures shall be taken, so far as is necessary and appropriate to that person’s condition, to ensure the protection of his or her interests.

Principle 2

Protection of minors

Special care should be given within the purposes of the Principles and with in the context of domestic law relating to the protection of minors to protect the rights of minors, including, if necessary, the appointment of a personal representative other than a family member.

Principle 3

Life in the community

Every person with a mental illness shall have the right to live and work, to the extent possible, in the community.

Principle 4

Determination of mental illness

1. A determination that a person has a mental illness shall be made in accordance with internationally accepted medical standards.

2. A determination of mental illness shall never be made on the basis of political, economic or social status, or membership in a cultural, racial or religious group, or for any other reason not directly relevant to mental health status.

3. Family or professional conflict, or non-conformity with moral, social, cultural or political values or religious beliefs prevailing in a person’s community, shall never be a determining factor in the diagnosis of mental illness.

4. A background of past treatment or hospitalization as a patient shall not of itself justify any present or future determination of mental illness.

5. No person or authority shall classify a person as having, or otherwise indicate that a person has, a mental illness except for purposes directly relating to mental illness or the consequences of mental illness.

Principle 5

Medical examination

No person shall be compelled to undergo medical examination with a view to determining whether or not he or she has a mental illness except in accordance with a procedure authorized by domestic law.

Principle 6

Confidentiality

The right of confidentiality of information concerning all persons to whom the present Principles apply shall be respected.

Principle 7

Role of community and culture

1. Every patient shall have the right to be treated and cared for, as far as possible, in the community in which he or she lives.

2. Where treatment takes place in a mental health facility, a patient shall have the right, whenever possible, to be treated near his or her home or the home of his or her relatives or friends and shall have the right to return to the community as soon as possible.

3. Every patient shall have the right to treatment suited to his or her cultural background.

Principle 8

Standards of care

1. Every patient shall have the right to receive such health and social care as is appropriate to his or her health needs, and is entitled to care and treatment in accordance with the same standards as other ill persons.

2. Every patient shall be protected from harm, including unjustified medication, abuse by other patients, staff or others or other acts causing mental distress or physical discomfort.

Principle 9

Treatment

1. Every patient shall have the right to be treated in the least restrictive environment and with the least restrictive or intrusive treatment appropriate to the patient's health needs and the need to protect the physical safety of others.

2. The treatment and care of every patient shall be based on an individually prescribed plan, discussed with the patient, reviewed regularly, revised as necessary and provided by qualified professional staff.

3. Mental health care shall always be provided in accordance with applicable standards of ethics for mental health practitioners, including internationally accepted standards such as the Principles of Medical Ethics relevant to the role of health personnel, particularly physicians, in the protection of prisoners and detainees against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, adopted by the United Nations General Assembly. Mental health knowledge and skills shall never be abused.

4. The treatment of every patient shall be directed towards preserving and enhancing personal autonomy.

Principle 10

Medication

1. Medication shall meet the best health needs of the patient, shall be given to a patient only for therapeutic or diagnostic purposes and shall never be administered as a punishment or for the convenience of others. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 15 of principle 11 below, mental health practitioners shall only administer medication of known or demonstrated efficacy.

2. All medication shall be prescribed by a mental health practitioner authorized by law and shall be recorded in the patient's records.

Principle 11

Consent to treatment

1. No treatment shall be given to a patient without his or her informed consent, except as provided for in paragraphs 6, 7, 8, 13 and 15 of the present principle.

2. Informed consent is consent obtained freely, without threats or improper inducements, after appropriate disclosure to the patient of adequate and understandable information in a form and language understood by the patient on:

(a) The diagnostic assessment;

(b) The purpose, method, likely duration and expected benefit of the proposed treatment;

(c) Alternative modes of treatment, including those less intrusive;

(d) Possible pain or discomfort, risks and side-effects of the proposed treatment.

3. A patient may request the presence of a person or persons of the patient's choosing during the procedure for granting consent.

4. A patient has the right to refuse or stop treatment, except as provided for in paragraphs 6, 7, 8, 13 and 15 of the present principle. The consequences of refusing or stopping treatment must be explained to the patient.

5. A patient shall never be invited or induced to waive the right to informed consent. If the patient should seek to do so, it shall be explained to the patient that the treatment cannot be given without informed consent.

6. Except as provided in paragraphs 7, 8, 12, 13, 14 and 15 of the present principle, a proposed plan of treatment may be given to a patient without a patient's informed consent if the following conditions are satisfied:

(a) The patient is, at the relevant time, held as an involuntary patient;

(b) An independent authority, having in its possession all relevant information, including the information specified in paragraph 2 of the present principle, is satisfied that, at the relevant time, the patient lacks the capacity to give or withhold informed consent to the proposed plan of treatment or, if domestic legislation so provides, that, having regard to the patient's own safety or the safety of others, the patient unreasonably withholds such consent;

(c) The independent authority is satisfied that the proposed plan of treatment is in the best interest of the patient's health needs.

7. Paragraph 6 above does not apply to a patient with a personal representative empowered by law to consent to treatment for the patient; but, except as provided in paragraphs 12, 13, 14 and 15 of the present principle, treatment may be given to such a patient without his or her informed consent if the personal representative, having been given the information described in paragraph 2 of the present principle, consents on the patient's behalf.

8. Except as provided in paragraphs 12, 13, 14 and 15 of the present principle, treatment may also be given to any patient without the patient's informed consent if a qualified mental health practitioner authorized by law determines that it is urgently necessary in order to prevent immediate or imminent harm to the patient or to other persons. Such treatment shall not be prolonged beyond the period that is strictly necessary for this purpose.

9. Where any treatment is authorized without the patient's informed consent, every effort shall nevertheless be made to inform the patient about the nature of the treatment and any possible alternatives and to involve the patient as far as practicable in the development of the treatment plan.

10. All treatment shall be immediately recorded in the patient's medical records, with an indication of whether involuntary or voluntary.

11. Physical restraint or involuntary seclusion of a patient shall not be employed except in accordance with the officially approved procedures of the mental health facility and only when it is the only means available to prevent immediate or imminent harm to the patient or others. It shall not be prolonged beyond the period which is strictly necessary for this purpose. All instances of physical restraint or involuntary seclusion, the reasons for them and their nature and extent shall be recorded in the patient's medical record. A patient who is restrained or secluded shall be kept under humane conditions and be under the care and close and regular supervision of qualified members of the staff. A personal representative, if any and if relevant, shall be given prompt notice of any physical restraint or involuntary seclusion of the patient.

12. Sterilization shall never be carried out as a treatment for mental illness.

13. A major medical or surgical procedure may be carried out on a person with mental illness only where it is permitted by domestic law, where it is considered that it would best serve the health needs of the patient and where the patient gives informed consent, except that, where the patient is unable to give informed consent, the procedure shall be authorized only after independent review.

14. Psychosurgery and other intrusive and irreversible treatments for mental illness shall never be carried out on a patient who is an involuntary patient in a mental health facility and, to the extent that domestic law permits them to be carried out, they may be carried out on any other patient only where the patient has given informed consent and an independent external body has satisfied itself that there is genuine informed consent and that the treatment best serves the health needs of the patient.

15. Clinical trials and experimental treatment shall never be carried out on any patient without informed consent, except that a patient who is unable to give informed consent may be admitted to a clinical trial or given experimental treatment, but only with the approval of a competent, independent review body specifically constituted for this purpose.

16. In the cases specified in paragraphs 6, 7, 8, 13, 14 and 15 of the present principle, the patient or his or her personal representative, or any interested person, shall have the right to appeal to a judicial or other independent authority concerning any treatment given to him or her.

Principle 12 Notice of rights

1. A patient in a mental health facility shall be informed as soon as possible after admission, in a form and a language which the patient understands, of all his or her rights in accordance with the present Principles and under domestic law, and the information shall include an explanation of those rights and how to exercise them.

2. If and for so long as a patient is unable to understand such information, the rights of the patient shall be communicated to the personal representative, if any and if appropriate, and to the person or persons best able to represent the patient's interests and willing to do so.

3. A patient who has the necessary capacity has the right to nominate a person who should be informed on his or her behalf, as well as a person to represent his or her interests to the authorities of the facility.

Principle 13

Rights and conditions in mental health facilities

1. Every patient in a mental health facility shall, in particular, have the right to full respect for his or her:

(a) Recognition everywhere as a person before the law;

(b) Privacy;

(c) Freedom of communication, which includes freedom to communicate with other persons in the facility; freedom to send and receive uncensored private communications; freedom to receive, in private, visits from a counsel or personal representative and, at all reasonable times, from other visitors; and freedom of access to postal and telephone services and to newspapers, radio and television;

(d) Freedom of religion or belief.

2. The environment and living conditions in mental health facilities shall be as close as possible to those of the normal life of persons of similar age and in particular shall include:

(a) Facilities for recreational and leisure activities;

(b) Facilities for education;

(c) Facilities to purchase or receive items for daily living, recreation and communication;

(d) Facilities, and encouragement to use such facilities, for a patient's engagement in active occupation suited to his or her social and cultural background, and for appropriate vocational rehabilitation measures to promote reintegration in the community. These measures should include vocational guidance, vocational training and placement services to enable patients to secure or retain employment in the community.

3. In no circumstances shall a patient be subject to forced labour. Within the limits compatible with the needs of the patient and with the requirements of institutional administration, a patient shall be able to choose the type of work he or she wishes to perform.

4. The labour of a patient in a mental health facility shall not be exploited. Every such patient shall have the right to receive the same remuneration for any work which he or she does as would, according to domestic law or custom, be paid for such work to a non-patient. Every such patient shall, in any event, have the right to receive a fair share of any remuneration which is paid to the mental health facility for his or her work.

Principle 14 Resources for mental health facilities

1. A mental health facility shall have access to the same level of resources as any other health establishment, and in particular:

(a) Qualified medical and other appropriate professional staff in sufficient numbers and with adequate space to provide each patient with privacy and a programme of appropriate and active therapy;

(b) Diagnostic and therapeutic equipment for the patient;

(c) Appropriate professional care;

(d) Adequate, regular and comprehensive treatment, including supplies of medication.

2. Every mental health facility shall be inspected by the competent authorities with sufficient frequency to ensure that the conditions, treatment and care of patients comply with the present Principles.

Principle 15

Admission principles

1. Where a person needs treatment in a mental health facility, every effort shall be made to avoid involuntary admission.

2. Access to a mental health facility shall be administered in the same way as access to any other facility for any other illness.

3. Every patient not admitted involuntarily shall have the right to leave the mental health facility at any time unless the criteria for his or her retention as an involuntary patient, as set forth in principle 16 below, apply, and he or she shall be informed of that right.

Principle 16

Involuntary admission

1. A person may be admitted involuntarily to a mental health facility as a patient or, having already been admitted voluntarily as a patient, be retained as an involuntary patient in the mental health facility if, and only if, a qualified mental health practitioner authorized by law for that purpose determines, in accordance with principle 4 above, that that person has a mental illness and considers:

(a) That, because of that mental illness, there is a serious likelihood of immediate or imminent harm to that person or to other persons; or

(b) That, in the case of a person whose mental illness is severe and whose judgement is impaired, failure to admit or retain that person is likely to lead to a serious deterioration in his or her condition or will prevent the giving of appropriate treatment that can only be given by admission to a mental health facility in accordance with the principle of the least restrictive alternative.

In the case referred to in subparagraph (b), a second such mental health practitioner, independent of the first, should be consulted where possible. If such consultation takes place, the involuntary admission or retention may not take place unless the second mental health practitioner concurs.

2. Involuntary admission or retention shall initially be for a short period as specified by domestic law for observation and preliminary treatment pending review of the admission or retention by the review body. The grounds of the admission shall be communicated to the patient without delay and the fact of the admission and the grounds for it shall also be communicated promptly and in detail to the review body, to the patient's personal representative, if any, and, unless the patient objects, to the patient's family.

3. A mental health facility may receive involuntarily admitted patients only if the facility has been designated to do so by a competent authority prescribed by domestic law.

Principle 17

Review body

1. The review body shall be a judicial or other independent and impartial body established by domestic law and functioning in accordance with procedures laid down by domestic law. It shall, in formulating its decisions, have the assistance of one or more qualified and independent mental health practitioners and take their advice into account.

2. The initial review of the review body, as required by paragraph 2 of principle 16 above, of a decision to admit or retain a person as an involuntary patient shall take place as soon as possible after that decision and shall be conducted in accordance with simple and expeditious procedures as specified by domestic law.

3. The review body shall periodically review the cases of involuntary patients at reasonable intervals as specified by domestic law.

4. An involuntary patient may apply to the review body for release or voluntary status, at reasonable intervals as specified by domestic law.

5. At each review, the review body shall consider whether the criteria for involuntary admission set out in paragraph 1 of principle 16 above are still satisfied, and, if not, the patient shall be discharged as an involuntary patient.

6. If at any time the mental health practitioner responsible for the case is satisfied that the conditions for the retention of a person as an involuntary patient are no longer satisfied, he or she shall order the discharge of that person as such a patient.

7. A patient or his personal representative or any interested person shall have the right to appeal to a higher court against a decision that the patient be admitted to, or be retained in, a mental health facility.

Principle 18

Procedural safeguards

1. The patient shall be entitled to choose and appoint a counsel to represent the patient as such, including representation in any complaint procedure or appeal. If the patient does not secure such services, a counsel shall be made available without payment by the patient to the extent that the patient lacks sufficient means to pay.

2. The patient shall also be entitled to the assistance, if necessary, of the services of an interpreter. Where such services are necessary and the patient does not secure them, they shall be made available without payment by the patient to the extent that the patient lacks sufficient means to pay.

3. The patient and the patient's counsel may request and produce at any hearing an independent mental health report and any other reports and oral, written and other evidence that are relevant and admissible.

4. Copies of the patient's records and any reports and documents to be submitted shall be given to the patient and to the patient's counsel, except in special cases where it is determined that a specific disclosure to the patient would cause serious harm to the patient's health or put at risk the safety of others. As domestic law may provide, any document not given to the patient should, when this can be done in confidence, be given to the patient's personal representative and counsel. When any part of a document is withheld from a patient, the patient or the patient's counsel, if any, shall receive notice of the withholding and the reasons for it and it shall be subject to judicial review.

5. The patient and the patient's personal representative and counsel shall be entitled to attend, participate and be heard personally in any hearing.

6. If the patient or the patient's personal representative or counsel requests that a particular person be present at a hearing, that person shall be admitted unless it is determined that the person's presence could cause serious harm to the patient's health or put at risk the safety of others.

7. Any decision on whether the hearing or any part of it shall be in public or in private and may be publicly reported shall give full consideration to the patient's own wishes, to the need to respect the privacy of the patient and of other persons and to the need to prevent serious harm to the patient's health or to avoid putting at risk the safety of others.

8. The decision arising out of the hearing and the reasons for it shall be expressed in writing. Copies shall be given to the patient and his or her personal representative and counsel. In deciding whether the decision shall be published in whole or in part, full consideration shall be given to the patient's own wishes, to the need to respect his or her privacy and that of other persons, to the public interest in the open administration of justice and to the need to prevent serious harm to the patient's health or to avoid putting at risk the safety of others.

Principle 19 Access to information

1. A patient (which term in the present principle includes a former patient) shall be entitled to have access to the information concerning the patient in his or her health and personal records maintained by a mental health facility. This right may be subject to restrictions in order to prevent serious harm to the patient's health and avoid putting at risk the safety of others. As domestic law may provide, any such information not given to the patient should, when this can be done in confidence, be given to the patient's personal representative and counsel. When any of the information is withheld from a patient, the patient or the patient's counsel, if any, shall receive notice of the withholding and the reasons for it and it shall be subject to judicial review.

2. Any written comments by the patient or the patient's personal representative or counsel shall, on request, be inserted in the patient's file.

Principle 20 Criminal offenders

1. The present principle applies to persons serving sentences of imprisonment for criminal offences, or who are otherwise detained in the course of criminal proceedings or investigations against them, and who are determined to have a mental illness or who it is believed may have such an illness.

2. All such persons should receive the best available mental health care as provided in principle 1 above. The present Principles shall apply to them to the fullest extent possible, with only such limited modifications and exceptions as are necessary in the circumstances. No such modifications and exceptions shall prejudice the persons' rights under the instruments noted in paragraph 5 of principle 1 above.

3. Domestic law may authorize a court or other competent authority, acting on the basis of competent and independent medical advice, to order that such persons be admitted to a mental health facility.

4. Treatment of persons determined to have a mental illness shall in all circumstances be consistent with principle 11 above.

Principle 21 Complaints

Every patient and former patient shall have the right to make a complaint through procedures as specified by domestic law.

Principle 22 Monitoring and remedies

Science and technology

In February 1991,<sup>(41)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted the conclusions and recommendations contained in a booklet, Human Rights and Scientific and Technological Development,<sup>(42)</sup> published by the United Nations University (UNU). The publication dealt with the technological implications for development and human rights in Asia and Latin America, the norm-setting role of the United Nations and the responsibility of the scientific community for promoting human rights. It concluded that there was an urgent need to guide and channel technology so as to make it an instrument to further human rights, particularly in the developing world.

Human Rights Commission action. On 5 March 1991,<sup>(43)</sup> the Commission asked its Subcommission to consider in 1992 the UNU study, in particular the applicability of its recommendations to the work of the United Nations, and to report on any conclusions in 1993.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/126 without vote.

Human rights and scientific and technological progress

The General Assembly,

Noting that scientific and technological progress is one of the decisive factors in the development of human society, and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind for the promotion of the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Calls upon all Member States to ensure that the achievements of scientific and technological progress and the intellectual potential of mankind are used for promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

3. Also calls upon Member States to take the necessary measures to ensure that the results of science and technology are used only for the benefit of the human being and do not lead to the disturbance of the ecological environment;

4. Emphasizes that scientific knowledge and technology in health, education, housing and other social spheres should be readily available to the population as the heritage of humanity;

5. Requests the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to take into consideration the relevant provisions of the international instruments listed above in their programmes and activities;

Human rights and the environment

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 39 to 1, with 1 abstention, the Commission, on 5 March 1991,<sup>(44)</sup> endorsed a 1990 Subcommission decision<sup>(45)</sup> to entrust Special Rapporteur Fatma Zohra Ksentini (Algeria) with preparing a study on human rights and the environment and asked her to submit a report to the Subcommission in 1991 with a view to making a timely contribution to the Preparatory Committee for the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. It asked the Secretary-General to invite Governments, United Nations organs, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including indigenous peoples' organizations, to provide the Special Rapporteur with information for her report. The Commission recommended to the Preparatory Committee that the Special Rapporteur be invited to participate as an observer at its sessions.

Human rights and the environment

At its 13th plenary meeting, on 31 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/44 of 5 March 1991, approved the endorsement by the Commission of the decision of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to entrust Mrs. Fatma Zohra Ksentini, Special Rapporteur, with the task of preparing a study on human rights and the environment and requested the Secretary-General to provide her with all the assistance she may need for the completion of this task.

The Subcommission's Special Rapporteur submitted a preliminary report in August 1991.<sup>(46)</sup> She discussed provisions of various international human rights instruments relating to the environment and analysed constitutional provisions of certain countries. She also reported on the right to the environment in relation to other human rights such as indigenous peoples' rights, the right to development and human rights violations and environmental degradation. Ecological rights and implementation procedures of environmental protection standards were also considered.

Subcommission action. On 29 August 1991,<sup>(47)</sup> the Subcommission asked its Special Rapporteur to submit a progress report on human rights and the environment in 1992.

Movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and waste

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 29 to none, with 12 abstentions, the Commission, on 5 March 1991,<sup>(48)</sup> welcomed the adoption of the Bamako Convention on the Ban of the Import of All Forms of Hazardous Wastes into Africa and the Control of Transboundary Movements of Such Wastes Generated in Africa, adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) Pan-African Conference on Environment and Sustainable Development in Africa (Bamako, Mali, 23-30 January 1991), and appealed to the international community to support African States in their efforts to implement that Convention. It invited the United Nations Environment Programme and OAU to intensify collaboration on the problem of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal and decided to consider the question again in 1993.

Human rights of disabled persons

In July 1991, the Subcommission's Special Rapporteur, Leandro Despouy (Argentina), appointed in 1984,<sup>(49)</sup> submitted his final report on human rights and disability.<sup>(50)</sup> He examined basic legal concepts, factors causing disability, public information and education, prejudices and discrimination against disabled persons, and national and international policies and measures to eradicate discriminatory practices and guarantee the disabled the full enjoyment of human rights. Alternatively, he proposed, the supervisory task could be entrusted to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

Subcommission action. By a recorded vote of 23 to none, the Subcommission, on 28 August 1991,<sup>(51)</sup> welcomed the Special Rapporteur's recommendations and recommended for adoption by the Commission on Human Rights a draft resolution asking the Secretary-General to ensure that his recommendations were implemented urgently.

Human rights and peace

In August 1991,<sup>(52)</sup> Murlidhar Bhandare (India) submitted a working paper on the interrelationship between human rights, particularly the rights to life and to development, and international peace. He proposed a study on the interrelationship between international peace and the effective materialization of all human rights which would relate human rights with other areas of United Nations activities, particularly international peace, disarmament and development, and incorporate the human rights aspect into the emerging world order.

Chapter XI

Health, food and nutrition

During 1991, the United Nations continued to respond to international emergencies in the health and food areas—the continuing spread of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) and hunger, malnutrition and famine caused by man-made and natural disasters.

The World Health Organization (WHO) estimated that world-wide the number of adults with AIDS totalled more than 1 million and that 400,000 infants born infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) had developed AIDS. WHO revised upwards its global estimate of adults infected with HIV from 6-8 million to 9-10 million and forecast that by the year 2000 some 30 million adults would have been infected with HIV, while 10 million infants would have been born infected.

The World Food Council (WFC) said it was deeply concerned about the deteriorating situation of hunger and malnutrition in the world. Some 45 million people—30 million of them in Africa—were threatened by famine, many of them refugees displaced by war and civil strife. Among the millions of people afflicted by natural disasters were the survivors of deadly cyclones in Bangladesh. Less visible but no less tragic, WFC said, was the continuing crisis of chronic hunger and malnutrition. In developing countries, one out of three children under the age of five was malnourished. Malnutrition and common, preventable diseases killed 40,000 children each day.

Health

International forum on health

An international forum on health as a conditionality for economic development was held at Accra, Ghana, from 4 to 6 December 1991, sponsored by Ghana and WHO. A background paper for the forum discussed the outcomes of past development policies, functional literacy, linking economic well-being with health status, and going beyond a welfare-oriented approach.

Although there was a growing awareness of the importance of health in development, a wide gap still existed between that awareness and its concrete expression in development strategies and policies, the paper concluded. The formulation and implementation of development policies must take account of their health effects, adjusting health goals to other development goals. An essential condition was that a country or community should identify its profile of vulnerability, the changes taking place in that profile and highly vulnerable groups.

Four basic conditions recurred to form an interlinked matrix of vulnerability: poor health status; lack of functional literacy; low productivity and income-earning capacity; and a general helplessness and incapacity to gain access to and control over resources. Health status provided the best assessment of total vulnerability in a given society, revealing the other conditions of deprivation and helping to identify development needs. Improvement of health status also provided the best indicator that development processes were succeeding.

The main problem was to connect the major financial outlays made for an increase of income and improved economic well-being at the micro or macro level to the need for the protection and promotion of health so that concern for health became an integral part of economic decision-making.

There was a growing awareness that development, as it had taken place, did not provide a solution to the unsatisfactory state of health that preceded it. The widespread impairment of human health by environmental degradation, the grave risks of technological advances such as nuclear technology and biotechnology, the AIDS pandemic, the rapidity with which outbreaks of disease assumed epidemic proportions in entire regions (such as the recent cholera epidemic in Latin America), and the unpredictable consequences of changing lifestyles were among the developments that had helped to produce that awareness.

It was evident that the carrying capacity of the planet could not sustain development and the corresponding lifestyle of the wealthy industrialized countries if replicated on a global scale. On the other hand, a sustainable model of development required a set of disciplines that must eventually be universally applicable. The adjustments needed would require a shift from quantitative expansion of goods and services to quality of life. That would call for far-reaching changes both in the expectations and goals of development and in the lifestyles of the developed countries. It was suggested that global concern about health could help in evolving the model needed to promote such adjustment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 November 1991, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 46/17.

International Forum on Health-A Conditionality for Economic Development: Breaking the Cycle of Poverty and Inequity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/108 of 13 December 1985, in which it endorsed the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, and 45/129 of 14 December 1990, in which it reaffirmed the need for the Forward-looking Strategies to be translated into concrete action by Governments, as well as by organizations of the United Nations system, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Recognizing the importance of an integrated approach to the health of women in developing countries and the crucial role of women in health and development,

Recognizing also the effects of poor health on women and their socio-economic development, and emphasizing the need to accelerate the economic empowerment of women in economic development, welcoming the initiative taken by the Government of Ghana and the World Health Organization to hold an International Forum on Health—A Conditionality for Economic Development: Breaking the Cycle of Poverty and Inequity, to be hosted by the First Lady of Ghana, Mrs. Nana Konadu Agyeman-Rawlings, at Accra from 4 to 6 December 1991,

1. Welcomes the support provided by the World Health Organization in preparation for the International Forum on Health-A Conditionality for Economic Development: Breaking the Cycle of Poverty and Inequity, and requests it to continue to provide all the necessary input and to contribute to the Forum, in cooperation and coordination with appropriate United Nations organizations;

2. Invites all Member States, organizations of the United Nations system, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to participate in and support the Forum, at which special consideration will be given to improving the health status and economic situation of vulnerable and marginalized groups, especially women in developing countries;

3. Requests the Director-General of the World Health Organization, in collaboration with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, to make efforts to enable participants from the least developed countries to attend the Forum;

4. Requests the Director-General of the World Health Organization to share the results of the Forum with all Member States, organizations of the United Nations system, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other interested parties.

General Assembly resolution 46/17

18 November 1991 Meeting 48 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/46/645/Add.11 (Part A)) without vote, 5 November (meeting 321; draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/46/L.29), based on informal consultations on draft by Algeria, Egypt, Ghana, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Uganda and Zambia (A/C.2/46/L.14); agenda item 77 (i). Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 2nd Committee 18, 32; plenary 48.

Health and nutrition

During 1991, the United Nations University (UNU) continued its programme on food and nutrition for human and social development.(1) The objective of the programme was to contribute to the alleviation of hunger in developing nations, concentrating on four priorities: human nutritional needs and their fulfilment; food and nutrition policy and planning; interfaces between nutrition and agriculture; and post-harvest food conservation.

To assist in the determination of nutritional needs, UNU continued the dissemination of rapid assessment procedures (RAP). Three training workshops were held (Congo and Indonesia, March; Chile, April). At the Sixth Asian Congress of Nutrition (Malaysia, September), UNU sponsored a symposium on RAP and took part in discussions on iron deficiency and the nutritional composition of foods.

Other meetings on nutrition included a seminar on the development of high protein-energy foods from grain legumes (Ghana, February), a conference of the International Dietary Energy Consultancy Group on protein interactions (New Hampshire, United States, October) and a meeting of a task force on severe protein malnutrition (Guatemala, December).

Four issues each of the Food and Nutrition Bulletin and the Journal of Food Composition and Analysis were published.

ACC activities. The eighteenth session of the Subcommittee on Nutrition of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) was held in New York from 25 February to 1 March 1991.(2) As part of the session, the Subcommittee held a symposium on nutrition and population, which stressed the importance of women's health and the need for an integrated approach to solving the food crisis. The Subcommittee drew ACC's attention to statements it approved on nutrition and population and on iron-deficiency control. It also examined work in progress in the following areas: iodine programme; vitamin-A programme; iron; nutrition-relevant policies; International Conference on Nutrition, to be held at Rome, Italy, in 1992; ad hoc working group on food aid; reporting on the world nutrition situation; women's nutritional status; global micronutrient initiative proposal; appropriate uses of anthropometry; proposed international decade on food and nutrition in Africa; nutrition and structural adjustment; country case-studies of nutritional problems; and RAP.

At its session held in April 1991, ACC adopted the Subcommittee's statements as decisions, on nutrition and population<sup>(3)</sup> and on the control of iron deficiencies. (4)

Cholera

During 1991, outbreaks of cholera continued in Africa and Latin America. A Global Task Force on Cholera Control was established by the Director-General of WHO; task forces also were set up by some WHO regional offices.<sup>(5)</sup> WHO disseminated policy and control guidelines and worked on intercountry coordination, technical cooperation with countries and resource mobilization.

About 500,000 cholera cases and 18,000 deaths from cholera were reported to WHO in 1991. At any time during the year, there were at least 5 million children suffering from other diarrhoeal diseases and 18,000 deaths from those diseases in any two- to three-day period.

In Africa, 20 countries reported 24 per cent of the world's cholera cases and 71 per cent of the deaths in 1991. Latin America was afflicted with a cholera epidemic, beginning in January. The six countries initially affected were Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Ecuador, Mexico and Peru. The epidemic reached the countries of Central America in July. In Peru, the most seriously stricken country, more than 1,000 persons were hospitalized each month and numerous deaths were reported.

WHO emphasized the need for a rapid response to requests for emergency assistance, the use of the publicity and government concern engendered by cholera outbreaks to arouse greater interest in diarrhoeal disease control programmes, the particular need for cholera prevention, and the fact that cholera could not be eradicated while the current lack of infrastructure prevailed in developing countries. Improvement of water supply and sanitation required sustained political will, money and time.

Two United Nations bodies adopted decisions on the cholera emergency. The Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), in May,<sup>(6)</sup> requested the UNICEF Executive Director to intensify efforts to prevent and combat cholera and urged him to use his good offices to obtain the emergency sum of $2 million to treat cholera victims. He was also requested to obtain funding for programmes designed to accelerate the building of basic water supply and sanitation infrastructure. The Board called on Governments to collaborate with UNICEF and WHO and its Global Task Force on Cholera Control and on donor countries to respond to the request for support.

Also in May, in a decision on cholera and microbial pollution of the coastal waters of the South-East Pacific,<sup>(7)</sup> the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) requested the UNEP Executive Director to strengthen cholera control measures as well as to consider what support UNEP could offer to the South-East Pacific region for sanitary control.

Prevention and control of AIDS

The Secretary-General, in response to 1990 resolutions of the General Assembly<sup>(8)</sup> and the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(9)</sup> forwarded in May 1991<sup>(10)</sup> a report of the WHO Director-General on developments in the global AIDS pandemic.

World-wide surveillance of AIDS and HIV infection was coordinated by the WHO Global Programme on AIDS, the WHO Director-General stated. Reports of AIDS cases and results of seroepidemiological studies of HIV infection were received from countries and WHO collaborating centres for AIDS.

As at 1 April 1991, a total of 345,533 AIDS cases in 162 countries had been reported. More than 95 per cent of the cases were in young and middle-aged adults. However, WHO estimated that the actual cumulative number of cases in adults world-wide by early 1991 was more than 1 million. The reasons for the discrepancy included under-reporting and under-recognition of cases as well as delays in reporting to WHO.

WHO estimated that by 1991 approximately 700,000 infants had been born HIV-infected, and that an estimated 400,000 had already developed AIDS. If AIDS among infants and children was included, the current estimate of the total number of cases world-wide would be increased to more than 1.4 million. More than 90 per cent of cases among infants and children were believed to have occurred in sub-Saharan Africa.

There were two known human immunodeficiency viruses, HIV-1 and HIV-2. The predominant virus was HIV-1. To date, the majority of HIV-2 infections had been reported from countries in West Africa. Although HIV-2 appeared to be less transmissible and pathogenic than HIV-1, both viruses were thought to share the same modes of transmission, and AIDS resulting from either of them appeared to be indistinguishable.

Epidemiological studies continued to document only three modes of HIV transmission: unprotected sexual intercourse; exposure to infected blood, blood products, or donated organs or semen; and transmission from an infected mother to her fetus or infant.

In Africa, as at 1 April, more than 1,000 cases had been reported by Burundi, the Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Kenya, Malawi, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire, Zambia and Zimbabwe, and 500 to 1,000 cases by Burkina Faso, the Central African Republic and Ethiopia. While cases were first reported from Africa in 1982, about 90 per cent of the total number had been reported since 1987. An estimated total of more than 300,000 cases had occurred among adults in Africa.

In the Americas, the United States had reported 167,803 cases, or more than 80 per cent of all cases in the region. Brazil, Canada, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico and Venezuela had each reported more than 1,000 cases.

In Europe, France had reported 13,145 cases; Italy, 8,227; Spain, 7,489; Germany, 6,022; and the United Kingdom, 4,228. The lowest numbers of cases were reported from the Eastern European countries, with the exception of Romania reporting 1,226 cases and Albania reporting no cases.

In Asia and the Pacific, 53 countries reported 1 per cent of the world cumulative total, or 3,797 cases. Of that total, Australia reported 2,457 cases.

WHO revised upwards its 1990 global estimate of the number of adults infected with HIV from 6.8 million to 9.10 million, because of the continued increase in HIV infection in sub-Saharan Africa and South and South-East Asia.

During the 1990s, the number of adults with AIDS would increase rapidly, especially in developing countries. More than 3 million AIDS cases were projected to occur in adults already infected with HIV and at least another 1.2 million among adults who would become HIV-infected during the 1990s. By the year 2000, WHO estimated that about 30 million adults would have been infected with HIV and 10 million infants would have been born infected.

In light of current trends, WHO had redefined its priorities for the activities of the Global Programme on AIDS. Its six priorities were: the strengthening of existing national AIDS control programmes; a multisectoral response to AIDS prevention and control; additional studies to identify strategies which were most effective in changing behaviour and interrupting HIV transmission; the acceleration of biomedical and epidemiological research, especially with regard to new vaccines and drugs; the reinforcement of efforts to counter discrimination against HIV-infected persons, including those with AIDS; and to fight complacency about HIV infection and AIDS and denial of the problem by individuals, communities, Governments and institutions.

Activities during 1991 aimed at HIV/AIDS prevention; reduction of the social and personal impact of HIV/AIDS; and reduction and mitigation of the social and economic consequences of HIV/AIDS.

The Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation, in a June 1991 report on operational activities for development,(11) stated that the human and financial implications of the AIDS pandemic was being increasingly felt in the developing countries. Two reports on the role of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in combating HIV/AIDS were submitted by the UNDP Administrator to its Governing Council.(12) On 25 June,(13) the Council invited the Administrator to intensify his efforts to lessen the impact of the pandemic on development within the framework of the WHO/UNDP Alliance to Combat AIDS.

The WHO/UNICEF Joint Committee on Health Policy (twenty-eighth session, Geneva, 28-30 January 1991)(14) noted that UNICEF's expertise in social mobilization and communication should be invaluable in national efforts to prevent AIDS. Since 1988, UNICEF had supported AIDS prevention programmes in Africa and the Caribbean, and was beginning to do so in Thailand and other countries of South-East Asia. It was supporting some Governments in developing services for AIDS-affected women and their families.

The Joint Committee recommended that WHO and UNICEF explore for future collaboration effective interventions for behavioural change (condom use); early diagnosis and treatment of sexually transmitted diseases; integration of AIDS prevention and control activities into existing health programmes; specific focus on women in AIDS programmes; social, behavioural and biomedical research; and further development of community-based projects with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) active in HIV/AIDS control. It endorsed a proposal that WHO and UNICEF work together to promote healthy lifestyles for youth and expressed appreciation for the attention given by UNICEF to children orphaned by AIDS.

The UNICEF Executive Board(15) urged the Executive Director to take immediate further steps to develop a strategy to combat the spread of AIDS. The strategy was to include advocacy of AIDS prevention programmes; interventions for behavioural change leading to the prevention of HIV transmission; support to in-country programmes in health and education; integration of AIDS prevention and control activities into child survival and development programmes and other primary health-care activities; addressing the needs of AIDS orphans; and the development of community-based projects with NGOs.

The Commission on the Status of Women adopted a resolution(16) by which it recognized the important role of women, women's organizations, NGOs and international agencies in preventing the transmission of HIV and in caring for persons suffering from AIDS; invited Member States to evaluate and strengthen their programmes for the control of AIDS; and called on the United Nations system to ensure that sufficient resources were allocated to those programmes.

An inventory of NGOs working on AIDS in countries that received development cooperation or assistance was published jointly in 1991 by the United Nations Non-Governmental Liaison Service and WHO.<sup>(17)</sup>

ACC action. In April,<sup>(18)</sup> ACC adopted principles and strategies regarding the impact of HIV/AIDS on United Nations personnel and operational policy, covering information, education and other preventive health measures; voluntary testing, counselling and confidentiality; terms of appointment and service; and health insurance benefits programmes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Coordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/66 without vote.

Prevention and control of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS)

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1990/86 of 27 July 1990, General Assembly resolution 45/187 of 21 December 1990, relevant resolutions of the World Health Assembly and other organizations of the United Nations system, the London Declaration on AIDS Prevention,<sup>a</sup> the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children, adopted by the World Summit for Children on 30 September 1990,<sup>b</sup> and the discussions at the Seventh International Conference on AIDS, held at Florence, Italy, from 16 to 21 June 1991,

Recalling also the resolutions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the World Health Assembly concerning the need to respect the human rights and dignity of all people affected by the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), including those who live in their immediate environment, in particular their families,

Acknowledging the established leadership of the World Health Organization in mobilizing and coordinating AIDS prevention and control activities, including socio-behavioural and biomedical research,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the public and private sectors, collaborating in the implementation of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS,

Stressing the need to take full advantage of the World Health Organization/United Nations Development Programme Alliance to Combat AIDS and to strengthen its role in facilitating the implementation at the country level of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS,

Aware that AIDS can have serious social and economic consequences, particularly in countries with a high incidence of HIV infection and limited public health services and other developmental resources,

Reaffirming that the struggle against AIDS should be consistent with and divert neither attention nor resources from other national public health priorities and development goals,

Aware that at least eight million to ten million HIV infections have occurred in adults and about one million children worldwide, on the basis of which the current projection of the World Health Organization for the year 2000 is that there will be a cumulative total of about forty million HIV infections in men, women and children,

Emphasizing that the prevention and control of HIV infection and AIDS for women and children call for the strengthening and improvement of the primary health-care system and for educational and other psychological, social and economic support programmes for women, children and families,

Concerned about the growing spread of HIV infection in existing areas as well as to new areas of the world, such as South-East Asia, which, if unchecked, could lead to a substantial increase over present estimates in the number of HIV infection and AIDS cases by the year 2000,

Also concerned about the growing gap between the resources required for AIDS prevention and control and the funding available, which is insufficient to combat the pandemic,

1. Takes note of the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization on the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS;

2. Urges Governments to intensify their commitment and efforts for the prevention and control of AIDS within their countries, including mechanisms for multisectoral responses and concomitant plans;

3. Further urges Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify their efforts to mobilize the human, financial and moral resources required to address the multiple effects of the AIDS pandemic;

4. Calls upon organizations of the United Nations system, Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to coordinate their efforts with the World Health Organization in implementing the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the adverse impact of HIV infection and AIDS on the health and economic and social well-being of men, women, children and families, to intensify his efforts, in close collaboration with the Director-General of the World Health Organization and all other relevant organizations of the United Nations system, to mobilize moral, technical and financial resources and to increase and sustain national multisectoral efforts for AIDS prevention and control;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the growing evidence that the AIDS pandemic's demographic, health, social, economic and political consequences will have a very substantial impact on all sectors of society and countries, to assess the adequacy of existing and projected programmes of work responding to the pandemic, in close collaboration with the Director-General of the World Health Organization and all other appropriate organizations of the United Nations system for the purpose of developing relevant activities to support national programmes for the prevention and control of the pandemic;

7. Invites the General Assembly, at its forty-sixth session, to consider the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization and the response of the United Nations system to the AIDS pandemic and to take an appropriate decision on further action, taking into account the present resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 46/203.

Prevention and control of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/187 of 21 December 1990 and World Health Assembly resolutions WHA 41.24 of 13 May 1988, WHA 42.33 and WHA 42.34 of 19 May 1989 and WHA 43.10 of 16 May 1990, and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/66 of 26 July 1991 and of decision 1991/23 of 3 May 1991 adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund, as well as other relevant resolutions and decisions adopted by organizations of the United Nations system,

Noting with appreciation the established leadership and coordinating role of the World Health Organization and the efforts of other organizations of the United Nations system, such as the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund, and of Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the public and private sectors in combating the spread of AIDS,

Noting that the World Health Organization estimates that nine to eleven million men, women and children are currently infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), that a further ten to twenty million adults are expected to become infected and that five to ten million children are expected to be born with HIV infection during the 1990s, creating a cumulative total of some thirty to forty million infected persons by the year 2000, 90 per cent of whom will be in developing countries, and that by then ten to fifteen million children will be orphaned by the death of a parent or both parents as a result of AIDS,

Concerned that, although the reported number of HIV cases in some industrial countries is increasing more slowly than projected, there is still a continuous rapid increase in urban areas and that the pandemic is increasing dramatically in developing countries,

Recognising that the response to the pandemic must be multisectoral in order to mitigate effectively the social and economic consequences of AIDS and that all sectors of society must be mobilized in support of national programmes to provide support, care, education, counselling and resources to combat AIDS,

Emphasizing the need to counter discrimination and to respect the human rights and dignity of all persons, including those affected by HIV and AIDS, their families and those with whom they live, and noting the relevant work carried out by the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and the results of the International Consultation on AIDS and Human Rights, organized by the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat at Geneva from 26 to 28 July 1989,

Recognizing that discriminatory measures related, inter alia to quarantine, mandatory testing and coercive and/or restrictive policies dealing with travel and freedom of movement, including transfrontier movement, more often drive the disease underground, where it is more difficult to combat, but do not stop the spread,

Stressing the need to promote safer sexual practices, including responsible sexual behaviour, and to detect and treat other sexually transmitted diseases as early as possible,

Stressing, therefore, the importance of information, education and other support particularly targeted to young people to encourage behavioural practices that enable them to remain uninfected,

Also stressing the need to prevent the spread of HIV infection by any and all means of transmission, including intravenous drug use and unsafe medical practices, occurring in both specific and general population groups,

Further stressing the need to continue to address the economic and social status of women in society in order to provide them with the means to protect themselves from infection, particularly through sexual transmission,

Noting that scientific research, including social and behavioural research, is making progress in developing improved diagnostic, therapeutic and preventive technologies and pharmaceuticals, and stressing the importance of making these technologies and pharmaceuticals available as soon as possible and at an affordable price,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization on the implementation of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS;

2. Urges Member States and, where appropriate, intergovernmental organizations:

(a) To continue to give the AIDS pandemic top priority and to speak openly about AIDS and sexual behaviour within the context of their sexual, cultural and religious norms;

(b) To continue to develop strong national AIDS programmes with priority placed, in particular, on prevention of sexual transmission through the promotion of safer sexual practices, including responsible sexual behaviour, as well as on measures to prevent transmission through intravenous drug use and unsafe medical practices;

(c) To develop services, in particular for the young, in regard to information, sex education and counselling on contraception and sexually transmitted diseases, as well as on other aspects of HIV transmission, within the context of their sexual, cultural and religious norms;

(d) To ensure a multisectoral response to the socio-economic consequences of AIDS through the mobilization of all sectors of society;

(e) To encourage the private sector, community groups and non-governmental organizations to participate actively in the national response to AIDS and HIV infection by providing, inter alia, support, care, education, counselling and resources;

(f) To reinforce efforts to combat 'denial and complacency;

3. Urges Member States and, where appropriate, intergovernmental organizations to protect the human rights and dignity of HIV-infected persons, persons with AIDS and members of particular population groups and to avoid discriminatory action against and stigmatization of them in the provision of services and in employment and travel;

4. Calls upon the scientific community to continue to undertake the necessary research into social and behavioural aspects of HIV transmission and to develop the vaccines and pharmaceuticals that will provide effective means of prevention or therapy, and encourages it to make its findings available as soon as possible;

5. Requests the World Health Organization to explore the possibility of further strengthening the exchange of information among States Members of the United Nations both on the AIDS pandemic and on national AIDS-related policies designed to combat it;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the Director-General of the World Health Organization to intensify his efforts within the United Nations system, in collaboration with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the heads of the World Bank, the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Children's Fund, and all other relevant United Nations organizations:

(a) To continue to advance coordinated multisectoral implementation of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS;

(b) To support and encourage countries in developing plans to meet the economic and social consequences of the AIDS pandemic, paying attention, in particular, to women, uninfected children with HIV-infected parents or orphaned by AIDS, and elderly people left without providers and often responsible for orphaned grandchildren, as well as to those working with persons with AIDS/HIV;

(c) To mobilize the necessary resources, both human and financial, in the health and other sectors, particularly for the developing countries, to develop and implement activities and technologies for the prevention of HIV-infection/AIDS and the care of HIV-infected persons;

(d) To ensure that, in the search for prevention, cure and palliation, the concerns, needs and experience of persons with AIDS/HIV, as well as the special needs of women and children, are addressed;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the serious socio-economic consequences of the AIDS pandemic and its negative impact on development in many developing countries, in collaboration with the Director-General of the World Health Organization, to utilize fully the research, analytical capacity and experience of the United Nations system in the planning of multisectoral activities and the earmarking of funds for countries requesting assistance for those activities;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with the Director-General of the World Health Organization, to use fully the information capacity of the United Nations system to intensify public information activities with respect to HIV and AIDS;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to invite the Director-General of the World Health Organization, in close collaboration with all other appropriate bodies, organs and programmes of the United Nations system, to report, through the Secretary-General, to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution, taking into account the health aspects and all other dimensions of the pandemic.

Disabled persons

Implementation of the Programme of Action

In a report of January 1991,(19) the Secretary-General examined major issues and programme activities of the Secretariat and the regional commissions relating to social development and welfare and specific social groups, among them disabled persons. He characterized the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons<sup>(20)</sup> as revolutionary in its emphasis on the role of persons with disabilities as agents in improving their own well-being, rather than as objects of care. Current discussion stressed the right of the disabled to independent living, the need to influence society to accommodate all its members, and disabled persons acting as experts in regard to their own needs. Social policy had been adopted in many developing and developed countries aimed at changing the social and physical infrastructures to provide equal access for all to the resources necessary for self-reliant living. The task was to put into practice the new concepts that had evolved.

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1990 resolution of the General Assembly,(21) submitted a report in August 1991,(22) on the implementation of the World Programme of Action and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992). He recommended that, in view of the need to promote integrated policies on disability, Governments, United Nations bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations be requested to give priority to an integrated approach to sustainable socio-economic development. Further, a mechanism through which Governments could maintain cooperation with donor agencies and international NGOs might be developed. There was also a need for regular monitoring and evaluation, with the participation of disabled persons, identifying areas in which progress had been made as well as obstacles encountered.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly encourage Governments to elaborate rules on equalizing opportunities for the disabled and to support meetings and seminars organized by disabled persons' organizations; endorse guidelines on establishing national committees on disability; and consider continuing the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons with new terms of reference, in order to respond to a shift from awareness-raising to action.

Discussing the focus of activities related to disabled persons, the Secretary-General cited four key themes that required particular attention: facilitating the integration of disability issues into the planning of socio-economic policies, programmes and projects; promoting the recognition and protection of the rights of disabled persons; adopting a coordinated, cross-sectoral and interdisciplinary approach to disability; and establishing disabled persons' organizations and providing support for their functioning.

Other matters taken up by the Secretary-General included progress made on activities concerning disabled persons, ways to mark the end of the Decade, and preparations for a long-term strategy to the year 2000 and beyond.

Coordination of activities was considered by the ninth inter-agency meeting on the Decade (Vienna, 3-6 December). (23) Participants discussed the preparation of a long-term strategy, a draft of which was to be presented to an expert group meeting in 1992.

UN trust fund

The Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons continued to play a vital part in implementing the World Programme of Action. The Secretary-General reported on the activities of the Fund for 1989-1990. (22) At the end of 1990, the Fund had provided more $2.7 million in grants to 147 disability-related projects, of which $556,150 was disbursed for 42 projects during 1989-1990. In addition, 19 projects involving an estimated $300,000 were reviewed in 1991.

The African region accounted for 31 per cent ($171,350) of the projects supported; Asia and the Pacific, 23 per cent ($128,500); Western Asia, 20 per cent ($108,870); and Latin America and the Caribbean, 7 per cent ($41,600). One fifth of the projects ($150,520) involved support for inter-regional technical exchanges, training and research.

Training continued to be a priority area, accounting for 43 per cent of all grants, followed by establishment of organizations of or concerned with disabled persons, accounting for 30 per cent, and technical exchanges of knowledge, accounting for 20 per cent.

cial Council adopted without vote resolution 1991/g.

Establishing and strengthening national coordinating committees on disability or similar bodies

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling relevant resolutions in which the General Assembly and the Council requested the Secretary-General to assist Member States in establishing and strengthening national committees on disability or similar coordinating bodies, in particular, Assembly resolution 42/58 of 30 November 1987, in which the Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to consider convening during the second half of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, within existing resources, an inter-regional meeting of representatives of those committees or similar bodies, to enhance their capabilities,

Aware of the important role of national coordinating committees in furthering the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons,

Noting with concern that the great majority of disabled people live in developing countries and noting especially the deteriorating economic and social conditions of many developing countries, which adversely affect vulnerable groups, including disabled people, and the special difficulties they have in tackling the problems related to disability,

Taking into account the fact that countries have different cultures, customs, traditions and socio-economic levels and that national programmes are most effective when they are best suited to the country's circumstances,

Noting with appreciation the convening of the International Meeting on the Roles and Functions of National Coordinating Committees on Disability in Developing Countries at Beijing from 5 to 11 November 1990,

Having considered the Guidelines for the Establishment and Development of National Coordinating Committees on Disability or Similar Bodies, adopted by the International Meeting,

5. Invites the Secretary-General to use resources available in the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons to assist Member States in setting up and strengthening national coordinating committees or similar bodies;

6. calls upon Member States to establish national coordinating committees or similar bodies on a permanent basis and to provide them with the necessary staff and resources during and after the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, bearing in mind that their structure and methodology of work should be in conformity with the circumstances of the countries in which they are situated;

7. Recommends that the Secretary-General include the activities undertaken in relation to the Guidelines in future reports on disability-related programmes, and requests him to report to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

12. welcomes the announcement by the Government of Canada to host a United Nations expert group meeting to be held in conjunction with Independence '92 at Vancouver, Canada, in April 1992 with the objective of drawing up a long-term strategy to implement the World Programme of Action to the year 2000 and beyond, with particular focus on recommending practical and action-oriented measures that could be implemented in such fields as legislation and governing mechanisms, community-based rehabilitation, independent living, human rights aspects and economic independence and the creation of an effective international mechanism to coordinate and monitor activities for 1992 and beyond;

13. welcomes also the offer of the Government of the United States of America to host an international conference on disability, entitled "Setting National Disability Policies-An Agenda for Action";

16. Reiterates its appeal to Governments for further voluntary contributions to enable the Disabled Persons Unit to strengthen its focal-point function on issues related to disabilities;

17. Reaffirms that the resources of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons should be used to support catalytic and innovative activities in order to implement further the objectives of the World Programme of Action within the framework of the Decade and beyond, with priority given, as appropriate, to programmes and projects of the least developed countries;

18. ## Food and agriculture

Food problems

In 1991, despite a record cereal harvest the previous year, the food-security situation deteriorated in many countries, particularly in Africa and Latin America. Reporting on its seventeenth session (Helsingor, Denmark, 5-8 June 1991), (1) the World Food Council (WFC) stated that the problems of hunger and poverty were continuing to grow. Famine was affecting some 45 million people, most of them in Africa. More than 500 million people, most of them in rural areas, were chronically hungry. Despite tremendous scientific and technical advances and impressive economic progress, some 1 billion people—the equivalent of the world population 200 years earlier—were suffering from some form of food insecurity and malnutrition. In developing countries, one out of three children under the age of five was malnourished; 40,000 children were dying every day from preventable malnutrition-related diseases. The lives of millions of people were impaired by such easily treatable nutritional-deficiency diseases as vitamin-A deficiency, iodine-deficiency disorders and iron-deficiency anaemia.

World cereal production was estimated by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) to have fallen by 4 per cent in 1991, according to the Executive Director of the World Food Programme (WFP).<sup>(2)</sup> World cereal stocks were estimated to be almost 9 per cent below their opening levels at the end of the 1991/92 crop season. Cereal stocks of developed countries were estimated to have fallen by more than 16 per cent to their lowest levels since 1983/84. In addition to cereals, roots, tubers and pulses made a crucial contribution to rural food security in developing countries. Production of total staple foods in those countries rose marginally in 1991 but registered a decline in low-income food-deficit countries, resulting in a per capita reduction of over 2 per cent.

It appeared that without special efforts a substantial increase in the number of hungry and malnourished people in sub-Saharan Africa would be inevitable in the 1990s. In Latin America and the Caribbean, even a small reduction in the number of hungry people might be difficult to achieve. In Asia, a reduction of hunger would, to a large extent, depend on developments in South Asia, where the economic outlook was full of uncertainty.

Many developing countries were struggling with chronic difficulties of heavy indebtedness, high inflation, deteriorating terms of trade and low food-production growth. At least 40 low- and middle-income developing countries were struggling to recover from the severe losses incurred as a result of the situation between Iraq and Kuwait.

The food problems of Africa were analysed in a joint study by the World Bank and WFP.<sup>(3)</sup> Among the problems were low economic and rapid population growth; the precariousness of rain-fed agriculture; severe logistic constraints; and weak markets and administrative structures. The study concluded that Africa's food import needs would grow significantly in the future; that food aid was a significant development resource and should be used to attack hunger and poverty; that while the need for direct distribution of food would remain, the monetization (the sale on local markets) of non-emergency food aid should increase; that there was no evidence that food aid had been a disincentive to national food production; and that food aid should be integrated with financial and technical assistance to Africa.

WFC and UNDP held an interregional consultation (Cairo, Egypt, 22-24 April(4) on meeting the food-production challenges of the developing countries in the 1990s and beyond. The participants discussed the possible need for a renewal of the Green Revolution, which had brought about advances in rice and wheat production, particularly in Asia. They concluded that meeting the food-security challenges would require political commitment by donors and developing countries to food production and access-to-food efforts. The development of agricultural technology would play an essential role in achieving productivity increases. There was a need to work towards integrated technology systems linking research, technology transfer/extension and farm application.

In June(5) the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Economic and Social Council on trends in the international market for agricultural and tropical products; developments on the liberalization of international trade in those products; and the follow-up to the section on agriculture of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade.@)

WFC activities. The global food and development situation was considered in 1991 by WFC—the highest international body dealing with food problems. The Council expressed its concern about the deteriorating situation of hunger and malnutrition in the world. A number of suggestions for improving the Council's effectiveness were made. They included: shortening the agenda for its sessions; providing assessment and follow-up of its decisions and recommendations; requesting and making greater use of reports from other intergovernmental bodies which pursued similar objectives; considering the use of expert groups to report on special issues; and the possibility of holding biennial sessions.

In a message to the multilateral trade negotiators of the Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, WFC urged a speed agreement to liberalize world agricultural trade.(1)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/53 without vote.

Food and agriculture

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling General Assembly resolution 45/207 of 21 December 1990,

Recalling that in the international Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, agriculture is cited as one of the sectors that will provide a means of reactivating economic growth and development in the 1990s, and that the eradication of hunger and poverty is one of the priority aspects of development.

Taking note with appreciation of the conclusions and recommendations of the World Food Council at its seventeenth ministerial session, and the Message from the Ministers of the United Nations World Food Council to the Multilateral Trade Negotiators of the Uruguay Round,

Also taking note with appreciation of the Economic Declaration from the Summit of the seven major industrialized countries, held in London from 15 to 17 July 1991, in which the importance of a successful conclusion to the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations was stressed,

Stressing the importance of an adequate scientific and technological basis for increased food production and the existing linkage between agricultural research, technology transfer/extension and on-farm applications,

Welcoming the World Food Council/United Nations Development Programme Interregional Consultation on Meeting the Developing Countries' Food Production Challenges of the 1990s and Beyond, held at Cairo from 22 to 24 April 1991,

Welcoming also the Conference on Agriculture and the Environment, held at 's-Hertogenbosch, the Netherlands, from 15 to 19 April 1991, organized by the Government of the Netherlands and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and the Den Bosch Declaration and Agenda for Action on Sustainable Agriculture and Rural Development,

Stressing the importance of the assessments of food needs made by the Global Information and Early Warning System on Food and Agriculture,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on trends in the international market for agricultural and tropical products and developments in the liberalization of international trade in agricultural and tropical products,

1. Recognizes that, if the challenges of increasing food production and productivity and food security are to be met in developing countries, sustainable agricultural development in all countries should be promoted by new initiatives and sound national policies;

2. Stresses the importance to food security of sustainable agricultural development and a fair and more free system of agricultural trade, taking into account the particular interests of net-food-importing countries, and the necessity of ensuring that environmental protection concerns do not generate unjustified barriers to trade, thereby creating a new form of hidden protectionism;

3. Urges the continuation and strengthening of cooperative arrangements to facilitate the enhancement of early warning of food shortages and assessment of food needs within the framework of the Global Information and Early Warning System on Food and Agriculture;

4. Also urge an early, comprehensive and balanced conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, including the negotiations on agricultural and tropical products, in line with the Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round and the Mid-Term Agreements;

5. Endorses the Message from the Ministers of the United Nations World Food Council to the Multilateral Trade Negotiators of the Uruguay Round and the call from representatives of the seven major industrialized countries at the Summit held in London from 15 to 17 July 1991 for all contracting parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to aim at completing the Uruguay Round before the end of 1991;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the World Food Council, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, for consideration under the sub-item of the agenda entitled "Food and agricultural development", an updated comprehensive report on trends in the international market for agricultural and tropical products and developments in the liberalization of international trade in agricultural and tropical products, taking into account the share of developing countries in such trade and the possible adverse short-term effects on net-food-importing developing countries, and on the follow-up to the section on agriculture of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/53

26 July 1991 Meeting 31 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1991/123) without vote, 24 July (meeting 18); draft by Vice-Chairman (E/1991/C.1/L.17), based on consultations on draft by Ghana for Group of 77 (E/1991/C.1/L.2); agenda item 8(b).

Also on 26 July, the Council adopted resolution 1991/73 on cooperation in fisheries in Africa and resolution 1991/95 on the second phase of the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification of the International Fund for Agricultural Development.

Food aid

In 1991, WFP continued to provide developing countries with food aid for development purposes and emergency aid.

CFA activities

In 1991, the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA) held, in Rome, its first special session on 18 March(7) and its thirty-first(8) and thirty-second(9) sessions (20-27 May; 3-6 and 13 December). CFA is the governing body of WFP; it is also a forum for intergovernmental consultation on food aid from all sources.

At the special session, CFA suggested changes in the General Regulations of WFP for the first time since WFP began operations in 1963. CFA was to be enlarged from 30 to 42 States, 27 of which would be developing countries and 15 would be more economically developed countries. The Economic and Social Council and the FAO Council would elect six additional members each.

At its thirty-first session, CFA concluded that the most effective way to combat hunger and poverty was to give preference to planning and implementing development programmes that created economic opportunities for poor populations. It reiterated its support of triangular transactions, local purchases and exchanges. Reviewing the modalities of the International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR), it confirmed that the minimum annual target of 500,000 tons for IEFR should be maintained. It endorsed a WFP pledging target of $1.5 billion for the 1993-1994 biennium.

At its thirty-second session, CFA authorized a total appropriation of $190,888,700 for the WFP budget for technical advisory, administrative and servicing expenses in 1992-1993. It endorsed the establishment of a cash account, to be known as the Immediate Response Account, as a part of IEFR for the purchase and delivery of emergency food aid; the amount to be set aside from general resources for 1992 would be $7.5 million. In addition, the Account was to be supplemented by voluntary contributions so as to assure expenditure from the Account of at least $30 million annually. A working group was formed to consider WFP's cash requirements for the long term.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1991/77.

General Assembly resolution 46/22

5 December 1991 Meeting 64 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/46/727/Add.1) without vote, 15 November (meeting 42); draft recommended by ESC resolution 1991/77 (A/C.2/46/L.11); agenda item 12.

WFP activities

In 1991, WFP handled a record amount of food aid—4.8 million metric tons. The total number of development projects approved by CFA in 1991, as well as by the Executive Director, was 43, valued at $448 million. Also approved were 14 projects for refugees and displaced persons valued at $558 million. Emergency operations amounted to $391 million. WFP's activities were carried out by 2,821 staff, with staff costs totalling $53.4 million. Three quarters of WFP staff were assigned to country offices, in 82 countries.

Development assistance

As at the end of 1991, WFP was assisting 266 ongoing development projects valued at $3 billion. Most projects were in agricultural production, rural infrastructure, settlement projects and urban development. It was estimated that during the year 22 million people received WFP food through development projects.

Low-income, food-deficit countries continued to receive most of WFP's assistance. In 1991, 79 per cent of its development assistance commitments, 72 per cent of emergency aid and 96 per cent of assistance for long-term refugees went to that group of countries. WFP's expenditure to least developed countries was $578 million, 53 per cent of the total.

Emergency operations

WFP was the principal international channel for providing emergency food aid. In 1991,<sup>(10)</sup> its work was dominated by the increasing needs of victims of natural and man-made disasters. Half of all deliveries of WFP food was for emergencies and for long-term refugees and displaced persons, compared to about one third in previous years. Some 20 million people, including 14 million refugees, received emergency food aid.

Warfare and civil unrest continued to devastate a large number of countries in Africa, exacerbated by widespread drought. Further east, WFP was involved in assisting people affected by the Persian Gulf conflict, including hundreds of thousands inside Iraq. Refugees from Afghanistan in Iran and Pakistan continued to need food assistance. Bangladesh was struck by a cyclone in April which killed an estimated 138,000 people and left 10-12 million homeless.

A record 4.8 million tons of food was shipped by WFP in 1991. Up to 50 ships worldwide were on charter to WFP at any given time. Trucking fleets, composed of hundreds of vehicles in several countries, were operated by WFP. Chartered aircraft, including delivery by air-dropping, supplemented delivery by road, particularly in areas of Angola, Ethiopia and the Sudan.

WFP resources

At the end of 1991, the total multilateral pledges and contributions to WFP totalled more than $1.92 billion. Resources available to WFP for 1991-1992 were expected to be between $2.4 billion and $2.6 billion.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1991/78.

Target for World Food Programme pledges for the period 1993-1994

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the comments of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme concerning the minimum target for voluntary contributions to the Programme for the period 1993-1994,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2462(XXIII) of 20 December 1968 and 2682(XXV) of 11 December 1970, in which the Assembly recognized the experience gained by the World Food Programme in the field of multilateral food aid,

1. Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the draft resolution annexed to the present resolution;

2. Urges States Members of the United Nations and members and associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to undertake the necessary preparations for the announcement of pledges at the Fifteenth Pledging Conference for the World Food Programme.

Target for World Food Programme pledges for the period 1993-1994

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 2095(XX) of 20 December 1965 to the effect that the World Food Programme is to be reviewed before each pledging conference,

Noting that the Programme was reviewed by the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme at its thirty-first session and by the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1991,

Having considered Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/78 of 26 July 1991 and the recommendation of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes,

Recognizing the value of and continuing need for multi-lateral food aid as provided by the World Food Programme since its inception, both as a form of capital investment and for meeting emergency food needs,

1. Establishes for the period 1993-1994 a target for voluntary contributions to the World Food Programme of 1.5 billion United States dollars, of which not less than one third should be in cash and/or services, and expresses the hope that those resources will be substantially augmented by additional contributions from other sources in view of the prospective volume of sound project requests and the capacity of the Programme to operate at a higher level;

2. Urge States Members of the United Nations and members and associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and appropriate donor organizations to make every effort to ensure that the target is fully attained;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to convene a pledging conference for this purpose at United Nations Headquarters in 1992.

Chapter XII

Human resources, social and cultural development

In 1991, United Nations bodies and agencies continued to promote human resources development, literacy, social development, an improved crime prevention and criminal justice programme and cultural development.

The United Nations Development Programme issued the second Human Developments Report, which focused on public spending for human development. It concluded, among other things, that the lack of political commitment, not of financial resources, was often the real cause of human neglect.

In a report on the world social situation, the Secretary-General concluded that in developing countries, poverty, poor health and low levels of literacy, especially among women, had been major causes for concern.

Concerning crime prevention and criminal justice, the General Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council to dissolve the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and establish a commission on crime prevention and criminal justice as a new functional commission of the Council (resolution 46/152).

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization continued to combat illiteracy and to promote the return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin, as mandated by the 1970 Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property.

Human resources

Human resources development

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1990,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted, in October 1991, a report on developing human resources for development.<sup>(2)</sup> The report presented an international perspective of human resources development in the 1990s and reviewed activities of United Nations organizations in that area. The effectiveness, coordination and intensification of international activities in developing human resources were also discussed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/143 without vote.

Developing human resources for development
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/191 of 21 December 1990, on developing human resources for development, and earlier resolutions on the same subject,

Reaffirming its resolutions S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and 45/199 of 21 December 1990, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,

Reaffirming also that people are central to all development activities and that human resources development is an essential means of achieving economic, social and development goals,

Reaffirming further that human resources development should contribute to total human development, which enlarges the choices available to people in developing their lives and fulfilling their aspirations,

Recognising that the promotion of more equitable economic growth and more participatory development will result in qualitatively higher levels of human resources development,

Emphasizing the need to integrate human resources development into comprehensive strategies for human development,

Noting that, while stabilization and structural adjustment programmes are intended to promote economic growth and development, elements of such programmes can have a possible adverse impact on human resources development,

Stressing that Governments of developing countries have the primary responsibility to define and implement appropriate policies for human resources development,

Stressing also that a favourable international economic environment is crucial to enhancing human development in developing countries,

Stressing further the importance of international cooperation in supporting national efforts in human resources development in developing countries, and emphasizing that both North-South and South-South cooperation, including economic and technical cooperation among developing countries, have vital roles to play in this regard,

Emphasising the need for organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue to give priority to human resources development in developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Emphasizes that in the development of human resources an overall, well-conceived and integrated approach should be adopted, taking into account such vital areas as population, health, nutrition, water, sanitation, housing, communications, education and training, as well as the need to create more opportunities for employment, in an environment which guarantees opportunities for political freedom, popular participation, respect for human rights, justice and equity, all of which are essential for enhancing human capacities to meet the challenge of development;
3. Emphasizes also the vital importance of national capacity-building for human resources development in developing countries, and encourages organizations of the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, to intensify activities in support of national efforts in that regard;
4. Emphasizes further the vital importance of appropriate national policies and their implementation to promote human resources development through the optimal use of resources, taking due account of the importance of primary education and primary health-care programmes;
5. Stresses the importance of international support for national efforts and regional programmes for human resources development in developing countries and the need to increase the flow of resources to those countries for such activities through, inter alia, the improvement of the international economic environment;
6. Calls upon the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to coordinate their activities in support of national and regional programmes, priorities and activities in the area of human resources development through, inter alia, dialogue on policy, resource allocation and strengthening the database for planning and monitoring, as well as through appropriate, measurable, qualitative and quantitative goals for human resources development;
7. Decides to keep under constant review the progress made in human resources development, in particular during its review of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, and, in that regard, requests the Secretary-General to include in his report on the implementation of the Strategy an analysis of human resources development;
8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including specific proposals for action to enhance inter-agency coordination of the United Nations system on issues relating to human resources development, and to monitor the activities of the United Nations system in support of human resources development objectives;
9. Also requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the relevant bodies, to include in his report recommendations to help mitigate the possible adverse effects of stabilization and structural adjustment programmes on human resources development, with a view to making national policies more supportive for human resources development;
10. Decides to include in the agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Human resources development".

UNDP activities

Human Development Report

The Human Development Report 1991, prepared by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), focused on public spending for human development, examining the availability of financial resources for implementing human goals. It discussed human development and freedom; the state of human development; financing human development; efficiency in human development; the politics of reform; and a new human order. It concluded that much current spending was misdirected and inefficiently used and the lack of political commitment, not of financial resources, was often the real cause of human neglect.

Other conclusions were that the best way to achieve human development was to promote more equitable economic growth and more participatory development; adequate income-earning opportunities and properly directed public spending on human priority needs were essential for human development; the potential was enormous for restructuring national budgets and international aid in favour of human development; most countries could use existing resources more efficiently; restructuring for human development was likely only with a workable political strategy; Governments could base their plans for the next decade on comprehensive and realistically costed national strategies for human development; and the world community could establish a global compact for human development-one that placed people at the centre of every issue.

The UNDP Governing Council, on 25 June 1991,(3) requested the Administrator to convene regional consultations in New York, with the participation of Governments, so that specific human development concerns and priorities, especially those of developing countries, were taken into consideration in preparing the next report on human development and in future work of the Administrator on the report. It also requested the Administrator to report in 1992 on the outcome of the consultations.

The consultations took place between 19 September and 16 October, consisting of a plenary presentation of the outline of the 1992 report and a series of meetings with six regional groups (African States, Arab States, Asian States, Eastern European States, Latin American and Caribbean States, Western European and other States). In addition, informal consultations were held on 20 November on issues of human freedom and development.

Other UNDP activities

The Administrator reported that in 1991 UNDP organized missions to assist Governments to review their policies and resource allocations to promote human development more effectively. The missions visited Bangladesh, Botswana, Colombia, Ghana, Indonesia, Pakistan and Viet Nam.<sup>(4)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/218 without vote.

United Nations Development Programme Human Development Report

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 2688(XXV) of 11 December 1970, on the capacity of the United Nations development system, 3405(XXX) of 28 November 1975, on new dimensions in technical cooperation, 44/211 of 22 December 1989, on the comprehensive triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and 45/199 of 21 December 1990, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,

Affirming that economic growth is a means to development and a way of enlarging the choices and opportunities of people and of fostering equity, fair income distribution and the development of human resources, as well as increasing productivity,

Expressing its appreciation for the work of the United Nations development system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, in extending economic and technical assistance to the developing countries in carrying out their development activities, in accordance with the mandate given to the organization,

Welcoming those aspects of the United Nations Development Programme Human Development Reports which emphasize the importance of the participation of people in development and contain a broader concept of analysing development progress than the single criterion of per capita income,

Taking note of decision 91/6 of 25 June 1991, on human development, adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Taking into account the divergent views expressed by delegations at the thirty-eighth session of the Governing Council, during the deliberations on the annual report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme for 1990,<sup>a</sup> pertaining to the Human Development Report 1991, in particular to the incorporation and elaboration of a human freedom index therein,

Notes the intention of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to inform the Governing Council, at its special session in February 1992, of the outcome of the regional consultations held in the autumn of 1991, in order for the Governing Council to facilitate and decide on the future work in the area of human development, taking fully into account the views expressed by delegations at the special session of the Governing Council, prior to the publication of the Human Development Report 1992.

Education and literacy

Follow-up to the 1990

International Literacy Year programme

The Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) (136th session, Paris, 21 May-12 June 1991), in a decision calling for measures to combat illiteracy, authorized the UNESCO Director-General to transmit his report on the implementation of the programme for International Literacy Year (1990) to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council. The Secretary-General transmitted that report in July. The report reviewed measures being undertaken in follow-up to the Year and the World Conference on Education for All (Jomtien, Thailand, 5-9 March 1990).

By decision 1991/293 of 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/93 without vote.

International Literacy Year

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/104 of 7 December 1987, by which it proclaimed 1990 as International Literacy Year,

Recalling also its resolution 45/126 of 14 December 1990,

Recalling further that in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights the inalienable right of every individual to education is recognized,

Bearing in mind the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s,<sup>a</sup> adopted by the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990,

Mindful of the fact that eradication of illiteracy is one of the paramount objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,

Emphasizing that widespread illiteracy, especially in many developing countries, seriously hinders the process of economic and social development and the cultural and spiritual advancement of society,

Convinced that literacy, especially functional literacy and adequate education, represents an indispensable element for the development and harnessing of science, technology and human resources for economic and social progress,

Confident that International Literacy Year and the World Conference on Education for All held at Jomtien, Thailand, from 5 to 9 March 1990, resulted in increased awareness and support for literacy efforts and became a turning-point in the struggle for a literate world,

Appreciating the exemplary spirit of partnership and cooperation among the sponsors of the Jomtien Conference and underlining the importance of follow-up activities that are necessary on the international, regional and national levels in order to realize the objectives set forth in the World Declaration on Education for All,

Noting that the heads of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and other sponsors of the Jomtien Conference, in the Statement of Solidarity to Achieve Education for All, called upon all countries and the international community to join hands and to do all within their power and resources to achieve the full letter and spirit of the goal of ensuring basic education for all by the year 2000,

1. Notes with appreciation the commendable work done in implementing the programme for International Literacy Year by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, other specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system;

2. Commends those Governments which have launched national literacy programmes and attained notable progress in meeting the objectives of the Year;

3. Notes with satisfaction the firm commitment and active involvement of many non-governmental organizations, mass media and the private sector in support of the Year;

4. Invites Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to further intensify their efforts to increase literacy and achieve education for all;

5. Appeals anew to Governments, economic and financial organizations and institutions, both national and international, to lend financial and material support to the efforts to promote literacy;

6. Calls upon the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue assuming the role of lead organization in ensuring the follow-up to International Literacy Year and the World Conference on Education for All;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to submit to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session, in 1995, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the progress made and problems encountered in the quest to achieve a literate world;

8. Decides to undertake, at its fiftieth session, a mid-decade review of progress made and problems encountered in the struggle against illiteracy, under the item entitled "Social development".

UN research and training institutes

In accordance with a General Assembly request of 1990,(6) the United Nations Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation, assisted by the Rector of the United Nations University (UNU), convened a meeting of autonomous research institutes of the United Nations (Geneva, 9 July 1991),(7) including UNU, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (see below, under "Social development"), the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (see PART ONE, Chapter II), the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute, the United Nations International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII), the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning, the Economic Development Institute of the World Bank and the International Institute for Labour Studies. Entities of the United Nations Secretariat were also represented. The discussion focused on the possible collective contribution of the research institutes to the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) and on the dissemination of research results. (For details on UNCED, see PART THREE, Chapter VIII.) In addition, the meeting was briefed on progress made in preparing a register of research in the United Nations system. A joint effort of UNU and the United Nations Centre for Science and Technology for Development, the register was to be implemented in a phased manner to encompass gradually the research carried out, in progress or planned by the United Nations system in science and technology and in the political, economic and social fields.

UN Institute for Training and Research

UNITAR activities

Despite financial constraints (see below), UNITAR significantly expanded its training activities in 1991, using extrabudgetary resources in the form of special-purpose grants. During the year, 60 training programmes were carried out—compared to 28 in 1990—in which 2,053 persons participated, as against 1,216 the previous year. Major developments in 1991 included the launching of a programme of cooperation between UNITAR and the Atlanta Council for International Cooperation (United States); UNDP approval of large-scale training programmes to be implemented by UNITAR; the launching of the UNITAR pilot training programme in peace-keeping; and the expansion of the Institute's environmental and natural resources management training programme.

Activities funded under UNITAR's General Fund focused on training programmes for members of Member States' permanent missions to the United Nations and training in international law. Special-purpose grants funded training programmes in peace-keeping and academic programmes, as well as various workshops and seminars. At its Geneva Office, UNITAR activities focused on training in multilateral diplomacy and international cooperation, environmental training, debt-management training and training managers of disaster relief programmes.

Research activities of UNITAR covered the United Nations, peace and security and economic and social development, especially on energy by the UNITAR Centre for Heavy Crude and Tar Sands.

Financial situation of UNITAR

In November 1991,(7) the Secretary-General reported on the financial situation of UNITAR, including a summary of action taken by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) and the Board of Trustees of UNITAR and an account of developments pertaining to the sale of the UNITAR headquarters property.

The Secretary-General stated that income had been somewhat below expectations, while expenditures had been incurred at or close to budgeted level. Accordingly, the amount owed by UNITAR to the United Nations had continued to rise; as at 30 September, the debt, reflecting previous shortfalls and deficits, stood at $4.7 million and was expected to reach some $5.1 million by the end of the year. In addition, $4.4 million advanced by the United Nations in 1989 for the purchase of the land on which the UNITAR building stood was owed, with interest of $0.6 million. The total indebtedness of UNITAR to the United Nations was expected to reach $10.1 million at year's end.

In response to a General Assembly request of 1990,(6) the Committee on the UNITAR Headquarters Property, established by the Secretary-General, continued to explore all possible options for the sale of the building at a price that would meet the goals set by the Assembly in 1987.(8) However, the Committee was unable to do so owing to the prolonged and continued slump in the real estate market in New York.

Restructuring and future status

As requested by the General Assembly in 1990,(6) the Secretary-General, in September 1991,(9) transmitted a report prepared by an independent consultant containing recommendations aimed at restructuring UNITAR. The report stated that UNITAR's mandate remained valid, but recommended redefining it to meet better the needs of the international community. Training activities should focus on training for international cooperation, training of United Nations and specialized agency staff and training for peace-keeping operations, with activities relating to energy being transferred to the United Nations. Research work needed to be redefined and reoriented essentially as a function of training. UNITAR would be brought under UNU (see below), and most of its major training activities moved to Geneva, it being understood that UNITAR would retain an office in New York. The report stressed that it would be advisable to secure the funding of the General Fund through the inclusion of an annual budget line of about $2 million in the United Nations regular budget. The sale of the UNITAR headquarters building should not go ahead until the real estate market improved.

In November,(7) the Secretary-General presented the views of UNITAR'S Board of Trustees on the recommendations made by the independent consultant, as discussed from 9 to 11 September. The Board agreed with the consultant concerning UNITAR'S mandate and training activities and further agreed that research activities needed streamlining. Regarding placing the redesigned UNITAR under the aegis of UNU, the Board felt that the consequences of that linkage should be carefully investigated before committing the Institute. As to funding, the Board noted with concern that the new arrangements would not resolve the issue of UNITAR'S debt to the United Nations.

Also in November,(10) ACABQ presented its views on the recommendations of the independent consultant, stating that it agreed on the need for major change but, in its opinion, the observations of the consultant led to further questions that must be addressed before decisions could be taken on continuing UNITAR and restructuring it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/180 without vote.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/172 of 5 December 1986, 42/197 of 11 December 1987, 43/201 of 20 December 1988, 44/175 of 19 December 1989 and 45/219 of 21 December 1990,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General, the high-level independent consultant, the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and taking into account the statements made before the Second Committee of the General Assembly on this issue,

Recognizing the continuing importance and relevance of the interdisciplinary training functions within the United Nations system,

Noting that the continuing lack of a sufficiently broad base of countries providing financial support to the Institute leaves the General Fund of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research without the level of resources required to maintain a minimum training programme and institutional structure,

Deeply concerned that it has not been possible to sell the headquarters property of the Institute,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the high-level independent consultant appointed by the Secretary-General, the comments thereon contained in the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Decides that the following interim measures should be taken pending consideration of the recommendations of the Secretary-General to be contained in the report requested in paragraph 5 below:

(a) The United Nations Institute for Training and Research should focus on providing training programmes and research activities related to training;

(b) The Secretary-General should consider taking appropriate measures related to the post of Director, taking into account the relevant recommendations of the high-level consultant;

(c) The Secretary-General is authorized to take the necessary steps with regard to the disposition of the headquarters building of the Institute, including its effective utilization or sale;

3. Requests that the budgetary proposals of the Institute continue to be submitted to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions for review and comment prior to approval by the Board of Trustees of the Institute;

4. Reaffirms that the activities of the Institute that are not funded from the General Fund of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research shall continue to be funded through voluntary contributions mobilized as special-purpose grants from Governments, intergovernmental organizations, foundations and other non-governmental sources;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, on the basis of the recommendations of the high-level consultant and the comments made thereon before the Second Committee of the General Assembly, and in close consultation with the appropriate United Nations bodies, intergovernmental committees and offices of the Secretariat and in collaboration with the Board of Trustees of the Institute, as well as consultations with interested Governments, to prepare a report for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, which would, inter alia:

(a) Contain an analysis of the terms of reference, programmes and budgets and financing of all research and/or training institutes with aims similar to those of the Institute;

(b) Indicate the extent to which a system-wide rationalization of research and training can be effected and a consequent role for the Institute defined;

(c) Contain an analysis of the various options for the location of the Institute;

(d) Provide further analysis and information on the feasibility of utilizing the Institute for training in peace-keeping operations, taking note of the pilot programmes of the Institute;

(e) Indicate the results of such consultations as may be held with the Rector of the United Nations University on the proposals of the high-level consultant to associate the Institute with the University;

(j) Propose ways and means to resolve the outstanding debt of the Institute to the United Nations;

The report of the Secretary-General should conclude with a set of specific proposals on the future of the Institute, including its future financing, and the number and level of staff;

6. Requests the Secretary-General and the Institute to consider, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, financial mechanisms in order to finance the General Fund of the Institute;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the report requested in paragraphs 5 and 6 above and recommendations on the implementation of the present resolution in good time for action by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

UN University

UNU activities

In 1991,(12) the United Nations University, an autonomous academic institution within the United Nations system, focused on research, training and dissemination activities. Some 55 academic meetings-conferences, forums, seminars, symposia and workshops-were held during the year, which also saw the establishment of a new research and training centre, the UNU International Institute for Software Technology (UNUIST) (Macau).

Research was carried out in five programme areas: universal human values and global responsibilities; world economy and development; global life-support systems; advances in science and technology; and population dynamics and human welfare. Activities included seminars, workshops and training courses, and the publication of books, research papers and studies.

As to training activities, 66 UNU fellows completed their studies, compared to 37 in 1990. A total of 66 fellows, compared to 55 in 1990, started their training for periods ranging from 3 to 12 months, as follows: 12 fellows at the UNU training programme in geothermal energy at the National Energy Authority (Iceland); 8 in renewable sources of energy at the Indian Institute of Technology; 8 from countries in Africa, in remote-sensing technology at the Instituto de Pesquisas Espaciais (Brazil); 9 from Africa and Latin America, in ecology and management of inland waters at the Universidad de Sao Paulo (Brazil); 1 in science and technology policy at the Universidad Estadual de Campinas (Brazil); 17 in biotechnology at various institutions in Brazil, Colombia, Mexico and Venezuela; and 11 in food and nutrition at institutions in Guatemala, Japan, Kenya and the United States. UNU also organized short-term group training activities for a total of 317 participants in areas such as governance and conflict resolution, natural hazard reduction, geographical information system development, reservoir development and management, science and technology policy, biotechnology, alternative rural-urban configurations, and rapid assessment procedures in food and nutrition.

As to dissemination, in its second year of operation as a university press, the United Nations University Press published 21 titles under its own imprint and joint imprints with co-publishers. Among the 1991 titles were: Global Challenge and Local Response: Initiatives for Economic Regeneration in Contemporary Europe (co-published with Mansell Publishing); Human Rights and Scientific and Technological Development; The Ethnic Question: Conflicts, Developments, and Human Rights, Women, Household and Change: Current and Future Patterns; Explorations at the Edge of Time: Reinventing Democracy in the Nuclear Age (co-published with Temple University Press); Ecology and the Politics of Survival: Conflicts Over Natural Resources in India; General Trading Companies: A Comparative and Historical Study; and La cooperation arabe-africaine bilan d'une 1975-1985 (co-published with L'Harmattan). The Press also published four issues of the Food and Nutrition Bulletin and issued three others with co-publishers, Abstracts of selected solar Energy Technology, Mountain Research and Development and Food Composition Data.

In 1991, Heitor Gurgulino de Souza was appointed to a second term as UNU Rector, beginning in September 1992.

UNU Council

The UNU Council met twice during 1991, holding its thirty-seventh (Macau, 24-28 June) and thirty-eighth (Tokyo, 9-13 December) sessions.

In June, the Council focused mainly on UNU's strategy for institutional development for the 1990s and beyond. During the session, a symposium on advanced software technology for developing countries was held to mark the opening of UNUIST.

In December, the Council concentrated on the proposed budget for 1992-1993, the UNU Institute for Natural Resources in Africa and a feasibility study on the proposed establishment of a research and training centre on governance, State and society in Barcelona, Spain.

By decision 1991/221 of 28 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the UNU Council on the University's work in 1990.(13)

University for Peace

In response to a General Assembly request of 1990,(14) the Secretary-General submitted a report in October 1991,(15) on the University for Peace, an international academic institution dedicated to the search for peace through education with humanistic approaches. The University had marked its tenth anniversary in 1990.

The University was undergoing expansion and revitalization. The main project of its medium-term plan, approved by its Council in 1989, was the launching of seven master's degree programmes from 1991 to 1995. Those programmes included international relations; cooperation, integration and peace; natural resources: ecology and peace; social programming; communications for peace; human rights and peace; education for peace; and peaceful settlement of conflicts. Some 100 students were currently enrolled in master's programmes.

A Trust Fund for Peace, administered by UNDP and with a stated objective of $250 million, was established. An explanatory brochure on the Fund was annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

Also annexed was a list of the 31 States that had acceded to the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace,(16) which entered into force on 7 April 1981.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 October 1991, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/11 without vote.

Tenth anniversary of the University for Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its, resolution 34/111 of 14 December 1979 it approved the idea of establishing a University for Peace as a specialized international institute for post-graduate studies, research and the dissemination of knowledge specifically aimed at training for peace within the system of the United Nations University.

Recalling also that by its resolution 35/55 of 5 December 1980 the General Assembly approved the establishment of the University for Peace in conformity with the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace and with the Charter of the University,

Recalling further its resolution 45/8 of 24 October 1990 on the tenth anniversary of the University,

Recognizing that since its establishment ten years ago the University has suffered from financial limitations which have impeded its development of the appropriate and necessary activities for carrying out its important task,

Recognizing also that despite those limitations the University has undertaken important activities and developed programmes that can be applied to the subject matter and disciplines of education and training for peace,

Noting that the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, has established a Trust Fund for Peace consisting of voluntary contributions in order to provide the University with the means necessary to extend its sphere of activity to the rest of the world and to take full advantage of its potential capacity for education, research and support of the United Nations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to resolution 45/8;

2. Welcomes the establishment by the Secretary-General of the Trust Fund for Peace, consisting of voluntary contributions for the purpose of assisting the University for Peace to develop its activities for the promotion of peace and to ensure that it has the increasing and essential resources to pursue its future activities;

3. Invites Member States, non-governmental organizations and intergovernmental bodies as well as interested individuals and organizations to contribute to the Trust Fund;

4. Also invites Member States to accede to the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace, thus demonstrating their support of a global institution for peace studies whose mandate is the promotion of world peace;

5. Decides to include in the agenda of its forty-eighth session and biennially thereafter an item entitled "University for Peace".

Social and cultural development

Social aspects of development

World social situation

In response to a General Assembly request of 1989,(1) the Secretary-General submitted an interim report on the world social situation,(2) updating the main social issues and trends of international concern since the submission of his 1989 report on the subject(3) The interim report considered institutional changes, the growing concern with social welfare issues, problems of the environment arising from the process of development, drug abuse and the question of making available for development resources released from the cessation of the competitive build-up of armaments.

The report concluded that in developing countries, especially Africa, serious questioning had taken place of social institutions with which many countries in that region had not been able to make significant economic and social progress during the preceding four decades. (The critical social situation in Africa was dealt with in Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/6; for details, see PART THREE, Chapter III.)

In developing countries, poverty, poor health and low levels of literacy, especially among women, had been major causes for concern. The economic difficulties of the 1980s in the affected countries had put restraints on raising the volume and quality of social services.

Noteworthy progress in international cooperation had been made in combating drug abuse, protecting the environment and reducing armaments.

Annexed to the report was a draft outline of the 1993 report on the world social situation.

Indicators on social conditions and standards of living

As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1989,(4) the Secretary-General submitted in April 1991,(5) a report on social indicators, including the various ways in which they had been developed in the United Nations system and their uses, with emphasis on recent years. Stating that improving and further developing social indicators was important to the preparation of United Nations reports on the social situation, the report concluded that, although the United Nations system had made much progress in that area, important gaps remained. It recommended that more attention be given to the development of indicators on torture, censorship and the right to assemble peacefully, as well as other dimensions of human rights and freedom. Those indicators could be integrated in analyses and in composite indexes of social conditions and human well-being.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/4 without vote.

World social situation

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 40/100 of 13 December 1985 and 45/87 of 14 December 1990 and Council resolutions 1987/52 of 28 May 1987, 1989/72 of 24 May 1989 and 1990/28 of 24 May 1990,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 44/56 of 8 December 1989, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit an interim report to it in 1991, through the Commission for Social Development and the Council,

Bearing in mind the primary importance of a well-balanced report on the world social situation for increasing international awareness of the efforts being made towards achieving the goals of social progress and better standards of living, established in the Charter of the United Nations, and of the obstacles to further progress,

Deeply concerned about the continued worsening of the economic situation in many developing countries, particularly the least developed countries, as evidenced by the significant decline in living conditions, the persistence and increase of widespread poverty in a large number of those countries and the decline of their main social and economic indicators,

Bearing in mind that certain developing countries have been able to achieve some economic and social progress,

Desirous that the pace of development in the developing countries be accelerated substantially in order to enable those countries to achieve their social objectives, especially those of meeting the basic need for food, housing, education, employment and health care and winning the struggle against the scourges that endanger the health and well-being of their populations,

Recognizing that progress in the social and economic fields constitutes an essential priority for national policies, the United Nations and the international community, as well as a prerequisite for international development and peace,

Believing that there is a need for greater effort by the United Nations system to study and disseminate accurate and balanced data and material on the existing world social situation, particularly with regard to emerging trends and institutional structures that have an impact on social development,

Having considered the interim report of the Secretary-General on the world social situation,

Mindful of the need to reflect objectively on the sensitivity and importance of the social problems of developing countries,

1. Notes with concern that the interim report of the Secretary-General on the world social situation did not adequately focus on the continuing deterioration of the economic and social situation in many developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, which is the prevailing problem in many of those countries;

2. Also notes with concern that the interim report did not sufficiently take into account the concerns and guidelines specified in paragraph 4 of Council resolution 1989/72;

3. Reaffirms the request set forth in paragraph 4 of Council resolution 1989/72 that, in preparing the next report on the world social situation, the Secretary-General should give high priority to an analysis of the main indicators of social progress and standards of living and make a comprehensive analysis of the main causes and circumstances that explain negative trends in those indicators, and reaffirms also that chapters devoted to the study of specific social problems must be related to global economic and social situations, taking into account both national and international conditions;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to reorient the draft framework for the 1993 report on the world social situation so it is in consonance with the requests set forth in paragraph 4 of Council resolution 1989/72, and to submit it to the Council for consideration at its regular session of 1992;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the 1993 report, to take into account the intrinsic relationship between economic growth and social development and to analyse in depth the economic problems of the developing countries and the impact of those problems on the world social situation;

6. Recommends that the draft of the 1993 report be reviewed by the Administrative Committee on Coordination to ensure that an integrated interdisciplinary focus is given and to provide a source of information for the report;

7. Invites all appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General in the preparation of the 1993 report by making available all relevant information pertaining to their respective areas of competence.

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1987/39, 1987/40, 1987/46 and 1987/52 of 28 May 1987, 1989/72 of 24 May 1989 and 1990/28 of 24 May 1990, and taking note of Council resolution 1991/4 of 30 May 1991,

Having considered the interim report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the objective of improving the well-being of the world's population on the basis of the full and equal participation of all members of society in the process of development and the fair distribution to them of the benefits therefrom,

Conscious that each country has the sovereign right freely to adopt the economic and social system that it deems the most appropriate and that each Government has the primary responsibility of ensuring the social progress and well-being of the people,

Deeply concerned about the continued worsening of the economic and social situation in many developing countries, particularly in the least developed countries, as evidenced by the significant decline in living conditions, the persistence and increase of widespread poverty in a large number of those countries and the decline in their main social and economic indicators,

Bearing in mind that certain developing countries have achieved some economic and social progress,

Convinced that the pace of development in the developing countries should be accelerated substantially in order to enable them to achieve their social objectives, especially in meeting the basic needs for food, housing, education, employment and health care and to struggle against scourges which endanger the health and well-being of their population,

Recognizing that progress in the social and economic fields constitutes an essential priority for national policies, the United Nations and the international community, as well as a prerequisite for international development and peace,

Believing that there is a need for greater effort by the United Nations system to study and disseminate accurate and balanced data and material on the existing world social situation, particularly with regard to emerging trends and institutional structures that have an impact on social development,

Mindful of the need to reflect objectively on the sensitivity and importance of the social problems of developing countries, particularly the least developed countries,

1. Takes note of the interim report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes with concern that the interim report of the Secretary-General did not adequately focus on the continuing deterioration of the economic and social situation in many developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, which is the prevailing problem in many of those countries;

3. Notes the increasing awareness of the importance of formulating policy measures at all levels based on the interrelationship between economic growth and social progress in the achievement of overall development;

4. Notes with deep concern that despite efforts made at national levels, the economic and social situation in many developing countries, in particular in the least developed countries, continues to deteriorate;

5. Notes also with deep concern the substantial weakening of the overall position of the majority of developing countries in international trade and finance, which has been made worse by a downward trend in commodity prices, a serious deterioration in the terms of trade, the net transfer of resources from developing countries, protectionism and the serious debt burden, combined with high real interest rates;

6. Calls upon the international community to accord particular attention to the deteriorating economic and social situation in the developing countries, particularly in the least developed countries, and to ensure that emerging tendencies in global international relations do not impact negatively on the plight of those countries;

7. Calls upon all Member States to promote economic development and social progress by pursuing an inter-related set of policy measures to achieve the goals and objectives established within the framework of national plans and priorities for employment, education, health, nutrition, housing facilities, crime prevention, the well-being of children, equal opportunities for the disabled and the ageing, full participation of youth in the development process and full integration and participation of women in development;

8. Reaffirms the commitments and policies for international development cooperation as set out in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, adopted by the General Assembly at its eighteenth special session;

9. Reaffirms the validity of the principles and objectives of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development as well as the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future and calls for their effective implementation as a means of attaining a more equitable world social situation;

10. Endorses the request of the Economic and Social Council, in paragraph 4 of its resolution 1991/4, that the Secretary-General should reorient the draft framework for the 1993 report on the world social situation so that it would be in consonance with the requests set forth in paragraph 4 of Council resolution 1989/72;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the 1993 report, to take into account the intrinsic relationship between economic growth and social development and to analyse in depth the economic problems of the developing countries and the impact of those problems on the world social situation;

12. Recommends that the draft of the 1993 report be reviewed by the Administrative Committee on Coordination to ensure that an integrated interdisciplinary focus is given and to provide a source of information for the report;

13. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Work being done within the United Nations system on improving quantitative and qualitative indicators on social conditions and standards of living";

14. Invites all appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General in the preparation of future reports by making available all relevant information pertaining to their respective areas of competence;

15. Decides to consider the issue of the world social situation under the item entitled "Social development" at its forty-seventh session.

Social development

World summit for social development

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council decision 1991/230 of 30 May 1991, requesting the Secretary-General to carry out consultations with Member States on the possibility of convening a world summit for social development, the Secretary-General appointed Juan Somavia (Chile) as his Special Representative to carry out the consultations on his behalf.

The Special Representative's report on the results of his consultations with representatives of Governments in all regions and with organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) was annexed to a note by the Secretary-General.<sup>a</sup> The consultations had confirmed that there was widespread support in all regions for convening a world summit for social development. The report discussed the rationale for convening the summit, issues to be addressed by it and the summit's possible outcome. It also described the role of the United Nations and the preparatory process leading up to the summit.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/139 without vote.

Social development

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1991/230 of 30 May 1991,

Bearing in mind the general debate during the forty-sixth session of the General Assembly, mindful of the Declaration of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77, adopted on 30 September 1991, in which the Ministers reiterated the importance of social matters within the system of the United Nations, stressed the need for a concerted effort by developing countries to coordinate and harmonize their positions in this area and, in this regard, welcomed the possibility of convening a world summit for social development,<sup>a</sup>

Taking into account the debate on the question in the Third Committee and the widespread support expressed for the world summit for social development and for the consultations under way,

Taking note of the statements delivered by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation and the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna and Head of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat before the Third Committee at the forty-sixth session,

Recalling its resolution 42/125 of 7 December 1987, in which it endorsed the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future,

Recalling also its resolution 44/65 of 8 December 1989, in which it reaffirmed the validity of the Guiding Principles as an appropriate framework for future action in the field of social welfare and development,

Mindful of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, proclaimed by the Assembly in its resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969,

Conscious of the increasing international awareness of economic and social factors as important components of peace and security,

1. welcomes Economic and Social Council decision 1991/230, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to carry out consultations with all Member States on the possibility of convening a world summit for social development and to report thereon to the Council at its regular session of 1992;

2. Welcomes also the decision of the Secretary-General to appoint a special representative to carry out those consultations on his behalf, and invites the Special Representative to take due note in his report to the Secretary-General of the points of view expressed in the General Assembly and in the Third Committee on the world summit for social development;

3. Calls upon Governments to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and his Special Representative by participating actively in those consultations;

4. Requests the concerned organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to assist the Secretary-General and his Special Representative in these consultations, as appropriate;

5. Calls upon the Economic and Social Council, after considering the report of the Secretary-General requested by Council decision 1991/230, to make an appropriate recommendation to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

Monitoring social development plans and programmes

In a January 1991 report,<sup>(7)</sup> the Secretary-General discussed the monitoring of international plans and programmes of action relating to social development. He summarized the activities of the United Nations Secretariat, in particular the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA) of the United Nations Office at Vienna, and the regional commissions in the areas of social welfare, youth, ageing and disabled persons.

In a September report,<sup>(8)</sup> submitted in response to a 1989 request of the General Assembly,<sup>(9)</sup> the Secretary-General discussed progress achieved in implementing and following up the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, adopted in 1987 at an interregional consultation<sup>(10)</sup> and subsequently endorsed by the Assembly.<sup>(11)</sup> The report was based on information provided by Governments, the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, national institutions, universities and individuals. It concluded that while growing recognition of the value of the Guiding Principles and its translation into formal policy declarations could be observed, evidence of effective execution of proposals was less obvious.

The report recommended a series of actions for consideration by the Assembly. The Assembly might wish to reiterate its requests to Governments and entities of the United Nations system concerning the implementation of the Guiding Principles and call on intergovernmental bodies to collaborate more effectively with the United Nations in carrying out the recommendations of the Principles. The Assembly might also wish to urge Governments to collaborate more closely with the Secretary-General in monitoring progress. CSDHA should make greater use of existing mechanisms for system-wide coordination to achieve greater coherence and harmonization; it should establish a global informal network for collecting and disseminating information and exchanging research findings; and, as part of the preparations for the observance of the International Year of Indigenous Peoples (1993) (see PART THREE, Chapter X), a programme of policy-oriented research and development might be undertaken by it. In preparing for the observance of the International Year of the Family (1994) (see below), special attention should be given to family-oriented approaches to providing social welfare services, stressed in the Guiding Principles. A technical assistance programme should be devised for training all categories of personnel required to ensure an effective execution of micro-level programmes at the individual, family and community levels.

On 16 December 1991, the General Assembly, by decision 46/425, took note of the Secretary-General's September report.

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/90 without vote.

Monitoring of international plans and programmes of action in the field of social development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/125 of 7 December 1987, in which it endorsed the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future and requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to ensure the implementation of, and follow-up action to, the Guiding Principles,

Reaffirming the continued importance and value of strategies and plans of action in different social policy areas directly related to the Guiding Principles, notably those concerning the status of women, the ageing, youth and disabled persons, as well as crime prevention and drug abuse, based on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Recalling its resolution 44/65 of 8 December 1989, in which it decided, inter alia, that social issues as conceived in the Guiding Principles should become a major part of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade,

Stressing the validity of Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/48 of 28 May 1987 on the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to redeploy resources to ensure appropriate follow-up action to the Interregional Consultation,

Concerned about the lack of appropriate follow-up action to the comprehensive programme of the Guiding Principles in the regions of Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean and Western Asia,

1. Reaffirms the validity of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future as a major framework for action at the local, national, regional and interregional levels in the field of social welfare and development;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on major issues and programme activities of the Secretariat and the regional commissions relating to social development and welfare and specific social groups;

4. Appeals to Governments to make use of the Guiding Principles and to apply the recommendations therein, as appropriate and in accordance with their national structures, needs and objectives, to inform the Secretary-General of problems in implementation and to accelerate the follow-up action to the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes;

5. Welcomes the fact that provision was made for the implementation of the Guiding Principles in the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997<sup>a</sup> and the programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991,<sup>b</sup> as requested in its resolution 44/65;

6. Urges the Secretary-General and the organizations of the United Nations system concerned to continue to include the implementation of the Guiding Principles in their programmes of work and to assist Governments, particularly those of the developing countries, in formulating appropriate social welfare policies, so that effective programmes can be set up according to their needs;

7. Urges the executive secretaries of the regional commissions to give adequate attention to the recommendations for action at the regional level contained in the Guiding Principles;

8. Stresses the role of non-governmental and voluntary organizations in the implementation of the relevant recommendations of the Guiding Principles, particularly in social crisis management, as reflected in the proceedings of the international expert meeting on the role of voluntary organizations in crisis management: acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), drug abuse and mass migration as cases in point, held at Berlin from 18 to 22 November 1990;

9. Urges Member States in all regions to initiate regional expert group meetings devoted to issues raised in the Guiding Principles and to translate their recommendations into specific social policy activities;

10. Welcomes the idea of holding regional conferences such as the Conference of European Ministers Responsible for Social Affairs, to be held in Czechoslovakia in 1992, and the Fourth Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Welfare and Social Development, held in the Philippines from 7 to 11 October 1991;

11. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To strengthen the follow-up action to the Inter-regional Consultation by, inter alia appropriately reflecting the Guiding Principles in global programmes and events, including the preparations for and observance of the International Year of the Family in 1994;

(b) To strengthen advisory services to Governments, especially those of developing countries, focusing on the policy, institution-building capacity, planning, administration and training aspects of developmental social welfare;

(c) To ensure that the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, which is responsible for monitoring the implementation of the Guiding Principles, is provided with sufficient resources, without incurring additional expenses, through the regular budget of the United Nations, for an effective follow-up to the Interregional Consultation;

(d) To reflect appropriately resource and programme requirements for monitoring the implementation of the Guiding Principles in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993;

(e) To report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council, on the progress achieved in the implementation of and follow-up action to the Guiding Principles and the present resolution;

12. Endorses the recommendations of the Secretary-General contained in the section II, paragraph 3, of his report entitled "Implementation of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future", and emphasizes the need for activities in this field to be carried out within existing resources;

13. Decides to consider the question of the implementation of the Guiding Principles at its forty-eighth session under the item entitled "Social development".

Social development cooperation

In February 1991,(12) the Commission for Social Development considered the report on a meeting of an expert group on the social impact of the critical economic environment on developing countries: strategies for social development cooperation (Järvenpää, Finland, 17-21 September 1990).(13) The meeting was held jointly by the United Nations and Finland. The group noted that greater interest had been shown in channelling assistance and cooperation resources to support social development objectives, such as enhancing opportunities for the poorer and variously disadvantaged segments of society; strengthening institutions for the promotion of more effective popular participation and the self-help efforts of individuals, groups and communities; and improving effective cooperation between all levels of government and other agents of social development.

The group identified themes concerning the disadvantaged and vulnerable that were of immediate concern. They concerned research and data collection on the social situation; programmes enabling the disadvantaged to help themselves; advocacy by others, on behalf of the disadvantaged; priority to training personnel, such as social workers; community responsibility for identifying a programme of action for its disadvantaged groups; and State responsibility. The group stated that projects and social programmes designed to advance the interests of the disadvantaged must reflect the social and cultural background of the society, must have an impact on the root causes of the problems, and intended improvements must be sustainable.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/12 without vote.

Strategies for social development cooperation

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the Declaration on Social Progress and Development proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969,

Mindful of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 42/125 of 7 December 1987,

Recalling its resolution 1989/55 of 24 May 1989 on the social dimension of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade,

1. Notes with appreciation the convening of the Meeting of the Expert Group on the Social Impact of the Critical Economic Environment on Developing Countries: Strategies for Social Development Cooperation at Järvenpää, Finland, from 17 to 21 September 1990, under the joint auspices of the United Nations and the Government of Finland;

2. Endorses the views and suggestions contained in the report of the Expert Group and requests the Secretary-General to arrange for its wide dissemination, drawing particular attention to the suggestions and recommendations contained therein;

3. Invites organizations of the United Nations system, other international organisations and Member States to review their goals and operating procedures in the light of the considerations and suggestions offered by the Expert Group;

4. Calls upon all Member States to ensure that social concerns are fully integrated in all development cooperation projects and activities;

5. ## The family

International Year of the Family

The General Assembly, in 1989, (14) had proclaimed 1994 as the International Year of the Family and endorsed the main recommendations, objectives and principles for observing the Year as contained in the Secretary-General's comprehensive outline of a possible programme for the Year. (15) Two of those recommendations were that the theme for the Year should be "Family: resources and responsibilities in a changing world" and that the Commission for Social Development should be designated as the preparatory body and the Economic and Social Council as the coordinating body for the Year.

As requested by the Assembly in 1990, (16) the Secretary-General submitted in August 1991 a report on the progress made in preparations for the Year. (17) The report reviewed national plans for the preparation and observance of the Year and measures planned by intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and the United Nations system. The activities of the Coordinator and the secretariat of the Year were also described. As recommended by the Secretary-General, the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Year had been established.

In an earlier report, (18) the Secretary-General had set out a draft programme for the preparation and observance of the Year.

In addition, UNRISD continued its work on social indicators, a matter which had assumed increasing importance with renewed emphasis on human development in national and international policies.

During the year, the Institute published four research monographs and a number of co-publications. It published UNRISD News, a newsletter providing information on its research activities.

30 May 1991 Meeting 12 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1991/85) without vote, 16 May (meeting 6); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1991/26); agenda item 7.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1990,(21) the Secretary-General, in April 1991,(22) gave an overview of action taken by the General Assembly on the proposals recommended by the Eighth (1990) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,(23) and the initial response thereto by the Secretariat.

In August 1991,(24) he reported on progress made in implementing a 1990 Assembly resolution.(25) The report highlighted the adoption of resolution 1991/15 by the Council (see below); establishment of an intergovernmental working group to elaborate proposals for an effective crime prevention and criminal justice programme and the convening of a ministerial meeting to consider the group's report (see below); preparations for the twelfth (1992) session of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control; and strengthening the institutional capacity of the crime prevention and criminal justice programme. It discussed the initial phase of implementation of the conclusions of the Eighth Congress, including international cooperation and action against transnational crime; integrated and effective criminal justice management and crime prevention planning to enhance crime control; application of United Nations instruments and guidelines; technical cooperation; information exchange; and intensified collaboration with the United Nations human rights programme, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and specialized agencies. The Secretary-General concluded that progress in implementing the 1990 resolution had been uneven because of competing demands. The United Nations programme was attempting to implement activities simultaneously, as mandated by its intergovernmental bodies. The extensive mandate did not permit, under existing resource constraints, the necessary in-depth treatment, in spite of sporadic highly professional inputs.

On 18 December, by decision 46/435, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's August report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/15 without vote.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware of the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice under Council resolution 155 C (VII) of 13 August 1948 and General Assembly resolution 415(V) of December 1950,

Bearing in mind the important role of the United Nations in assisting Member States to formulate more effective strategies and policies to combat crime and humanize criminal justice systems,

Concerned about the escalation of crime in all its forms, particularly in its new dimensions and transnational aspects, and the violence in many parts of the world, which threatens the international community, impinges on the enjoyment of basic human rights and has a negative impact on the development process,

Recognizing the urgent need for an adequate global response to those crimes that transcend national boundaries or for any other reasons require coordinated action between States, including strengthened international mechanisms to provide criminal justice personnel with ready access to information, facilitate the exchange of technical know-how, further promote international cooperation in this field and ensure adequate coordination for practical action programmes,

Determined to ensure the continued focus on the conclusions and recommendations of the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and to make steady progress in their practical application,

Noting with concern the continuing increase in the workload of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, particularly in relation to the mandates entrusted to it by the Eighth Congress and by the General Assembly in its resolution 45/108 of 14 December 1990, and the need to prioritize its programme and to confine its activities to the areas where a positive contribution can be made through international action,

Recalling its resolution 1990/27 of 24 May 1990 concerning, inter alia, the timely implementation and proper follow-up of the recommendations of the Eighth Congress,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 45/121 of 14 December 1990, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to review the resources required to enable the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to discharge its responsibilities in accordance with the new mandates,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on crime prevention and criminal justice;

2. Welcomes the successful results of the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and urges Governments to ensure the appropriate implementation of its conclusions and recommendations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to pay particular attention to the operational aspects of the resolutions of the Eighth Congress in order to assist interested countries in promoting human resources development, reinforcing their national machinery, undertaking joint training activities and executing pilot and demonstration projects, and invites the United-nations Development Programme and the Department of Technical Cooperation for Development of the Secretariat and other relevant entities to consider giving increased support to those endeavours;

4. Stresses the importance of General Assembly resolution 45/108, on the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice, in determining mechanisms for the more efficient focusing of the programme on those activities where the United Nations can make a positive contribution to the control of crime, and requests the Secretary-General to assist in the proper organization of the intergovernmental working group and the ministerial meeting to consider the creation of an effective international crime and justice programme, called for in that resolution;

5. Notes with appreciation the offer of the Government of France to act as host for the ministerial meeting in the second half of 1991;

6. Recommends that adequate provision be made for the participation of the representatives of the least developed countries that are members of the intergovernmental working group, as well as to ensure their participation in the ministerial meeting;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to use his best endeavours to provide resources within the existing level of the regular budget, as required, for public information activities related to the preparation and servicing of the meeting of the intergovernmental working group and the ministerial meeting;

8. Invites Governments to be actively involved and to provide their support to ensure the success of the ministerial meeting;

9. Welcomes the initiative taken by the Government of Canada to establish in Canada a new international centre for criminal law reform and criminal justice policy as an institute affiliated with the United Nations, and invites the Secretary-General to conclude an agreement with the Government, as appropriate;

10. Requests the General Assembly to give priority attention to the conclusions and recommendations of the ministerial meeting, with a view to taking appropriate action thereon that would lead to the creation of an effective international crime and justice programme

11. Recommends that the General Assembly, in the light of this review, consider requesting the Secretary-General to enter into a commitment for the upgrading of the status of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, as called for in numerous General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions, the most recent of which being Assembly resolution 45/108, in a way commensurate with its increased responsibilities and required professional expertise;

12. Decides to give priority attention at its regular session of 1992 to crime prevention and criminal justice under a sub-item of the agenda entitled "Crime prevention and criminal justice".

UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme

As requested by the General Assembly in 1990,(26) an intergovernmental working group (Vienna, 5-9 August 1991)(27) met to elaborate proposals for an effective international crime prevention and criminal justice programme and suggest how that programme could most effectively be implemented.

The working group submitted its report to the Ministerial Meeting on the Creation of an Effective United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme (Paris, 21-23 November 1991), containing recommendations agreed upon by consensus in the form of a draft resolution, with an annex containing a statement of principles and programme of action of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, for adoption by the Assembly. Acknowledging that a United Nations programme devoted to crime prevention and criminal justice can only be effective with the direct involvement of Member states,

Convinced that the principal purpose of such a programme should be to provide practical assistance to States in combating both national and transnational crime,

Noting the principles contained in the Milan Plan of Action and the Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order, as well as other pertinent instruments formulated by United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and approved by the General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions in which it stressed the importance of the Commission on Human Rights and the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat with regard to respect for human rights in the administration of justice,

Recognizing the urgent need to promote and intensify international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice, and the fact that this cooperation can be effective only if it is executed with the direct participation of the receiving States, with due respect for their needs and priorities,

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary action within the overall existing United Nations resources in accordance with the financial rules and regulations of the United Nations and to provide appropriate resources for the effective functioning of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme in accordance with the principles outlined in the statement of principles and programme of action;

8. Urges all entities of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, the specialized agencies and the relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to assist the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme in fulfilling its tasks;

9. Encourages all developed countries to review their aid programmes in order to ensure that there is a full and proper contribution in the field of criminal justice within the overall context of development priorities;

(c) To endorse the role and functions of the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, in accordance with the recommendations contained in the statement of principles and programme of action;

12. Decides that the present members of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control should be invited to participate during the first two days of the inaugural session of the new commission, at the expense of their respective Governments, except in the case of Committee members from least developed countries, in order to facilitate an orderly transition;

13. Also decides to retain for the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, without prejudice to additional funds that may be made available by the Secretary-General, all funds currently allocated to the programme, as well as any savings realized by restructuring;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on measures taken to implement the statement of principles and programme of action.

ANNEX

Statement of principles and programme of action of the United Nations Crime prevention and criminal justice programme

We, Member States of the United Nations,

Assembled in Paris to consider ways and means of promoting international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice and of strengthening the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme in order to make it fully effective and responsive to the needs and priorities of Member States,

Considering that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as stated in the Charter of the United Nations, is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion,

Convinced of the urgent need for more efficient international mechanisms to assist States and to facilitate joint strategies in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, thus consolidating the role of the United Nations as the focal point in that field,

Noting the importance of the principles contained in the Milan Plan of Action and the Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order, as well as other pertinent instruments formulated by United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and approved by the General Assembly,

Reaffirming the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Bearing in mind the goals of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, specifically the reduction of criminality, more efficient and effective law enforcement and administration of justice, the observance of human rights and the promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct,

Recognizing that it is essential to elicit active support for, and to provide the means of assistance for the development of, an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and to devise appropriate implementation mechanisms,

Deeply concerned about the extent and growth of crime, with its financial, economic and social consequences,

Alarmed at the high cost of crime in both human and material terms, as well as in its new national and transnational forms, and aware of the effects of crime both on States and on individual victims,

Recognizing that the primary responsibility for crime prevention and criminal justice rests with Member States,

Emphasizing the need for strengthened regional and international cooperation to combat crime and recidivism, to effect the improved functioning of criminal justice systems, to promote respect for individual rights and to safeguard the rights of victims of crime and the general security of the public,

Aware that there is unanimity about the need to create a new, vigorous United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, as well as agreement on the need to establish an intergovernmental body for policy-making and priority-setting, to strengthen the effectiveness of the Secretariat unit within the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the United Nations Office at Vienna, and to increase technical cooperation to help countries, particularly developing countries, translate United Nations policy-guidelines into practice, including training,

Determined to translate our political will into concrete action:

(a) By creating the essential mechanisms for practical collaboration against common problems;

(b) By providing a framework for inter-State cooperation and coordination to respond to the serious new forms and transnational aspects and dimensions of crime;

(c) By establishing information exchanges concerning the implementation and effectiveness of the United Nations norms and standards in crime prevention and criminal justice;

(d) By providing means of assistance, particularly to developing countries, for more effective crime prevention and more human justice;

(e) By establishing an adequate resource base for a truly effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme,

Proclaim our strong commitment to the above-mentioned goals and agree on the following:

I. Statement of principles

1. We recognize that the world is experiencing very important changes resulting in a political climate conducive to democracy, to international cooperation, to more widespread enjoyment of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms, and to the realization of the aspirations of all nations to economic development and social welfare. Notwithstanding these developments, the world today is still beset by Violence and other forms of serious crime. These phenomena, wherever they occur, constitute a threat to the maintenance of the rule of law.

2. We believe that justice based on the rule of law is the pillar on which civilized society rests. We seek to improve its quality. A humane and efficient criminal justice system can be an instrument of equity, constructive social change and social justice, protecting basic values and peoples' inalienable rights. Every right of the individual should enjoy the protection of the law against violation, a process in which the criminal justice system plays an essential role.

3. We have in mind the fact that the lowering of the world crime rate is related to, among other factors, the improvement of the social conditions of the population. The developed countries and the developing countries are experiencing difficult situations in this respect. Nevertheless, the specific problems encountered by the developing countries justify priority being given to dealing with the situation confronting these countries.

4. We believe that rising crime is impairing the process of development and the general well-being of humanity and is causing general disquiet within our societies. If this situation continues, progress and development will be the ultimate victims of crime.

5. We also believe that the growing internationalization of crime must generate new and commensurate responses. Organized crime is exploiting the relaxation of border controls designed to foster legitimate trade and, hence, development. The incidence and scope of such crimes may increase further in the coming years unless sound preventive measures are taken. It is thus particularly important to anticipate events and to assist Member States in mounting suitable preventive and control strategies.

6. We recognize that many criminal offences have international dimensions. In this context, there is an urgent need for States to address, while respecting the sovereignty of States, problems arising in collecting evidence, extraditing offenders and promoting mutual legal assistance, for example, when such offences are committed across frontiers or when frontiers are used to escape detection or prosecution. Despite differences in legal systems, experience has shown that mutual assistance and cooperation can be effective countermeasures and can help to prevent conflicts of jurisdiction.

7. We also recognize that democracy and a better quality of life can flourish only in a context of peace and security for all. Crime poses a threat to stability and to a safe environment. Crime prevention and criminal justice, with due regard to the observance of human rights, is thus a direct contribution to the maintenance of peace and security.

8. We must ensure that any increases in the capacity and capabilities of perpetrators of crime are matched by similar increases in the capacity and capabilities of law enforcement and criminal justice authorities. By pooling our knowledge and developing suitable countermeasures, success in the prevention of crime and the reduction of victimization can be maximized. We recognize in particular the need to improve and strengthen the means of the crime prevention and control authorities in the developing countries, whose critical economic and social situation is further increasing the difficulties in this area.

9. We call on the international community to increase its support of technical cooperation and assistance activities for the benefit of all countries, including developing and smaller countries, and for the purpose of expanding and strengthening the infrastructure needed for effective crime prevention and viable, fair and humane criminal justice systems.

10. We acknowledge the contribution of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme to the international community. We note that it is a long-recognized fact that inadequate resources have been devoted to the implementation of the programme, which has in the past been inhibited from achieving its potential. We also note that a strengthening of the resources devoted to the implementation of the programme was called for by the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. We further note that the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its eleventh session, gave priority attention to the conclusions and recommendations of a subcommittee established to provide an overview of the problem of crime and to assess the most efficient means of stimulating practical international action in support of Member States, in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 44/72 of 8 December 1989. The Committee, in its resolution 11/3 of 16 February 1990,<sup>a</sup> unanimously approved a report of the subcommittee on the need for the creation of an effective international crime and justice programme.<sup>b</sup> That report, which was endorsed by the Eighth Congress, was used as an important tool for the establishment of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, in line with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 45/108.

11. We accordingly recommend intensified international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice, including the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme.

12. We are convinced that there is a need for Governments to define more clearly the role and functions of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and the secretariat of the programme and to determine priorities within that programme.

13. We strongly believe that the review of the programme should aim at strengthening its effectiveness, improving its efficiency and establishing an adequate Secretariat support structure.

(d) Training and upgrading of the skills of personnel working in the various areas of crime prevention and criminal justice;

(e) Technical assistance, including advisory services, particularly in respect of the planning, implementation and evaluation of crime prevention and criminal justice programmes, training and the use of modern communication and information techniques; such assistance may be implemented by means of, for example, fellowships, study tours, consultancies, secondments, courses, seminars and demonstration and pilot projects.

18. Within the framework of the programme, the United Nations should directly carry out the above-mentioned forms of cooperation or should act as a coordinating or facilitating agent. Special attention should be paid to the creation of mechanisms to provide flexible and appropriate assistance and to respond to the needs of Member States at their request, without duplicating the activities of other existing mechanisms.

19. For the purpose of those forms of cooperation, Member States should establish and maintain reliable and effective channels of communication among themselves and with the United Nations.

(g) Avoidance of overlapping with the activities of other entities of the United Nations system or of other organizations.

merits by applying the principles mentioned in paragraph 21 above.

The commission shall give due consideration to the need to finance such meetings, in particular in developing regions, through the regular budget of the United Nations;

(d) Action-oriented research workshops on topics selected by the commission, as part of the programme of a congress, and ancillary meetings associated with the congresses should be encouraged.

4. Organizational structure of the secretariat and of the programme

Crime prevention institutes

As requested by the General Assembly in 1990,(29) the Secretary-General submitted, in October 1991,(30) a report on the activities and financial situation of the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI). The report also described the activities of other United Nations institutes, including the United Nations Inter-regional Crime and Justice Research Institute, the United Nations Asia and Far East Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, the United Nations Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and the Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations, as well as regional institutes cooperating closely with the United Nations such as the Arab Security Studies and Training Centre and the Australian Institute of Criminology.

UNAFRI, established in 1987 and located in Uganda, conducted activities for States of the African region in training criminal justice personnel; research; collecting, exchanging and disseminating information relating to crime problems and trends; providing advisory services to Governments; and developing joint strategies and activities to prevent and control crime in Africa.

The current financial situation of UNAFRI was precarious, since only three member States of the Economic Commission for Africa had fully paid their assessed contributions for 1989-1990, while another had made a partial payment. The Economic and Social Council in 1990(31) had urged the international community to assist the Institute.

The Secretary-General concluded that a major constraint emphasized by the United Nations institutes, particularly those operating in developing countries, arose from their limited resources. He noted that the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of CSDHA had maintained close links with the United Nations institutes and pointed out that if the United Nations network of institutes was to reach its potential, it must have the capability to operate as an integrated system, linked also with the regional commissions and other relevant regional and interregional organizations, as well as the professional community.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/153 by recorded vote.

United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 45/428 of 14 December 1990 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/19 of 24 May 1990,

Considering the impact of carefully considered and formulated international standards and the world-wide improvement in the functioning of criminal justice systems,

Conscious of the vital role of regional cooperation in the tight against crime and of the potential contribution of interregional and regional institutes in the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders,

Recognizing the important role of the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in organizing, inter alia, training programmes and regional seminars, conducting research in the field of criminal justice, providing advisory opinion on policy matters, promoting and facilitating cooperation among the States of the region with the United Nations and the need to provide sufficient resources to the Institute, particularly in view of its increasing workload in response to strongly felt international concerns,

Aware of the difficulties faced by the Institute owing to the non-availability of required resources,

Aware also that resources to the Institute have failed to keep pace with the expansion of its responsibilities, owing to the fact that many States of the African region are in the category of the least developed countries and therefore lack the necessary resources with which to support the Institute,

Recalling that the Secretary-General, in his report on the work of the Organization for 1991, stressed the need for effective intergovernmental mechanisms and much stronger judicial and police cooperation among States owing to an upsurge in and transnationalization of crime,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and other United Nations institutes for crime prevention and criminal justice,

1. Calls upon Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide financial and other support to the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in the fulfilment of its objectives, particularly those concerning training, technical assistance, policy guidance, research and data collection;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that sufficient resources are provided to the Institute within the overall appropriations of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 to enable the Institute to carry out, in full and on time, all its mandates;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

Cultural development

World Decade for Cultural Development

In a May 1991 report<sup>(32)</sup> the Secretary-General and the Director-General of UNESCO reviewed the progress of the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997), proclaimed in 1986.<sup>(33)</sup> The report, covering the period 1990-1991, reviewed the implementation of the Plan of Action for the Decade,<sup>(34)</sup> measures taken by Member States and organizations of the United Nations system and the activities of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. It also discussed a mid-term review of the Decade and presented a number of proposals for conducting the review.

The report concluded that three years into the Decade, in spite of a persistent international economic crisis, awareness continued to grow within the international community. The degree of participation in the Decade suggested that a consensus might have emerged on the necessity of making the individual, the community and culture the basis of development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1991/65 without vote.

World Decade for Cultural Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/187 of 8 December 1986, in which the Assembly proclaimed the period 1988-1997 the World Decade for Cultural Development,

Taking into account General Assembly resolution 45/189 of 21 December 1990, in which the Assembly invited the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to include specific proposals on the modalities of a mid-term review, taking into account the views of Governments, in the second biennial report on progress in the implementation of the World Decade for Cultural Development to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session through the Economic and Social Council, welcoming the progress achieved and the efforts made by Member States, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and international non-governmental organizations to implement the Plan of Action for the Decade, and encouraging the continuation of such efforts,

Noting the suggestion made at the 11th meeting of the First (Economic) Committee, on 18 July 1991, that the United Nations and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization jointly establish an international commission to prepare a report on culture and development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on the progress of the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997) during the period 1990-1991;

2. Invites Governments, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and intergovernmental organizations to accord greater priority to the cultural factors affecting development, particularly in the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade;

3. Expresses support for a global mid-term review of the World Decade for Cultural Development based upon the proposals outlined in paragraph 89 of the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, on the understanding that the special debate on the Decade should take place at the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly, in 1994, and that the work involving the regional commissions should be undertaken in 1993.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/65

26 July 1991 Meeting 31 Adopted without vote

The Director-General described UNESCO's efforts to implement the 1989 recommendations of the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to Its Countries of Origin or Its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation. The recommendations adopted by the Intergovernmental Committee at its seventh session (Athens, Greece, 22-25 April 1991) were appended to the report.

Noting with satisfaction that, following its appeal, other Member States have become parties to the Convention,

1. Commends the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to Its Countries of Origin or Its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation on the work they have accomplished, in particular through the promotion of bilateral negotiations, for the return or restitution of cultural property, the preparation of inventories of movable cultural property, the reduction of illicit traffic in cultural property and the dissemination of information to the public;

Chapter XIII

Women

During 1991, the United Nations continued the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women—a set of measures adopted in 1985 to overcome obstacles to the goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985).

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its thirty-fifth session (Vienna, 27 February-8 March 1991), recommended seven resolutions and two decisions to the Economic and Social Council. Acting on those recommendations, the Council adopted resolutions on violence against women (1991/18); Palestinian women (1991/19); women and children under apartheid (1991/20) (see PART TWO, Chapter I); disabled women (1991/21); refugee and displaced women and children (1991/23) (see PART THREE, Chapter XV); national, regional and international machinery for the advancement of women (1991/22); and improving the status of women in the United Nations (1991/17) (see PART SIX, Chapter II). The Council requested the Commission, as the preparatory body for a world conference on women (1995), to assess progress made in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and identify measures to ensure the achievement of its objectives during 1995-2000.

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, at its tenth session (Vienna, 21 January-1 February), considered two initial reports and eight second periodic reports of States parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women on their implementation of the Convention. By the end of the year, the Convention had received 96 signatures and 110 ratifications or accessions.

Advancement of women

Implementation of the Nairobi Strategies

In response to a 1990 request of the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General, in September 1991, submitted a report<sup>(2)</sup> on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, adopted in 1985 by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women<sup>(3)</sup>

The report reviewed cooperation between the United Nations system and the Commission on the Status of Women in the implementation of the Strategies. The Commission and the Economic and Social Council had each adopted resolutions concerning disabled women, refugee women and children; the Commission had adopted a resolution on women migrant workers.<sup>(4)</sup> In addition, refugee women and children were assisted through programmes of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), the World Food Programme and the Special Committee against Apartheid, while the activities of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific benefited migrant women.

In June, The World's Women 1970-1990: Trends and Statistics,<sup>(5)</sup> prepared by the United Nations Statistical Office, the Division for the Advancement of Women of the United Nations Office at Vienna, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), UNIFEM and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), was released. Work continued on updating the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development,<sup>(6)</sup> a preliminary version of which was to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council through the Commission in 1993, and a final version in 1994.

The Commission's contribution to the International Conference on Population and Development (1994) began by adopting a resolution on women migrant workers; other priority themes on development for future consideration were ageing women and development and women in urban areas.

As the preparatory body for the world conference on women (1995) (see below), the Commission adopted a resolution regarding preparations for the conference<sup>(7)</sup> and decided that its title should be the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace.<sup>(8)</sup> On 28 January 1991,<sup>(9)</sup> China conveyed an invitation to the Secretary-General and to all interested parties to hold the conference at Beijing.

Within the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI), public information activities included weekly radio programmes, videos and television programmes, special print materials and the publication of Women: Challenges to the Year 2000 in English, French and Spanish.<sup>(10)</sup>

On the recommendation of the Commission, the Economic and Social Council, on 30 May 1991, adopted resolution 1991/17 urging the Secretary-General to accord greater priority to increasing the number of women in the United Nations Secretariat in posts subject to geographical distribution, particularly in senior policy-level and decision-making posts, in order to achieve an overall participation rate of 35 per cent by 1995. The system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001 was under preparation. (For more details on women in the Secretariat, see PART SIX, Chapter II.)

The report also reviewed the priority themes for consideration by the Commission in 1992 dealing with equality (closing the gap between discrimination in law and discrimination in practice); development (integrating women fully in the development process, and involving them in efforts to protect the environment as part of development); and peace (ensuring women's participation in politics and decision-making).

In accordance with a request of the Economic and Social Council of 1990,(11) the Secretary-General in an earlier report to the Commission on the Status of Women described action to increase awareness of the slow progress made in implementing the Forward-looking Strategies.(12) He stated that the Council's request for DPI to carry out a worldwide educational campaign to increase awareness of the obstacles encountered in implementing the Strategies had faced financial constraints and had to be carried out from within existing resources. DPI had coordinated a multi-media approach to ensure effective coverage of United Nations activities on women's issues including printed material; films, videos, radio and television programmes; photographs and exhibits; press coverage, including press conferences; media liaison; public inquiries; special events and activities; inter-agency co-productions; collaboration with non-governmental organizations (NGOs); and use of the resources of the 67 United Nations Information Centres and Services throughout the world. In addition, DPI had created an Inter-Agency Advisory Group on Information Activities to coordinate and promote inter-agency public information activities on women's issues.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1991, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/98 without vote.

Implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

The General Assembly.

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 44/77 of 8 December 1989, in which, inter alia, it endorsed and reaffirmed the importance of the Nairobi

Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000 and set out measures for their immediate implementation and for the overall achievement of the interrelated goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Recalling also its resolution 45/129 of 14 December 1990,

Taking into consideration the resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council on issues relating to women since its resolution 1987/18 of 26 May 1987,

Reaffirming its resolution 40/30 of 29 November 1985, in which it emphasized that the elderly must be considered an important and necessary element in the development process at all levels within a given society and that, consequently, elderly women should be considered contributors to as well as beneficiaries of development,

Reaffirming also its determination to encourage the full participation of women in economic, social, cultural, civil and political affairs and to promote development, cooperation and international peace,

Conscious of the important and constructive contribution to the improvement of the status of women made by the Commission on the Status of Women, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned,

Concerned that the resources available to the programme on advancement of women of the Secretariat are insufficient to ensure adequate support to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and effective implementation of other aspects of the programme, especially the preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women, to be held in 1995,

Regretting that the high-level interregional consultation on women in public life did not take place in 1991 as scheduled,

Recognizing the advancement of women as one of the priorities of the Organization for the biennium 1990-1991,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms paragraph 2 of section I of the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, contained in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/15 of 24 May 1990, which called for an improved pace in the implementation of the Strategies in the crucial last decade of the twentieth century, since the cost to societies of failing to implement the Strategies would be high in terms of slowed economic and social development, misuse of human resources and reduced progress for society as a whole;

3. Urges Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to implement the recommendations;

4. Calls again upon Member States to give priority to policies and programmes relating to the subtheme "Employment, health and education", in particular to literacy, for the empowerment of women, especially those in the rural areas, to meet their own needs through self-reliance and the mobilization of indigenous resources, as well as to issues relating to the role of women in economic and political decision-making, population, the environment and information;

5. Reaffirms the central role of the Commission on the Status of Women in matters related to the advancement of women, and calls upon it to continue promoting the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies to the year 2000, based on the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and the subtheme "Employment, health and education", and urges all organizations of the United Nations system to cooperate effectively with the Commission in this task;

6. Requests the Commission, when considering the priority theme relating to development during its thirty-sixth and subsequent sessions, to ensure its early contribution to the work of forthcoming major international conferences such as the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to be held in 1992, the World Conference on Human Rights, to be held in 1993, and the International Conference on Population and Development, to be held in 1994, and to address the impact of technologies on women;

7. Also requests the Commission to give special attention to women in developing countries, particularly in Africa and the least developed countries, who suffer disproportionately from the effects of the global economic crisis and the heavy external debt burden, and to recommend further measures for the equalization of opportunity and for integration of these women into the development process when considering the priority theme relating to development;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that appropriate staff from the secretariats of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Commission on the Status of Women participate in the preparatory process for the World Conference on Human Rights, as well as in the Conference itself, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985;

9. Endorses anew, Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/12 of 24 May 1990, in which the Council recommended that a world conference on women should be held in 1995 and requested that the Commission act as the preparatory body for the world conference;

10. Requests the Commission to decide on the venue of the Fourth World Conference on Women not later than at its thirty-sixth session, in accordance with Commission decision 35/102 of 8 March 1991, bearing in mind that preference should be given to the region that has not yet hosted a world conference on women;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint not later than 1992 the Secretary-General of the Conference;

12. Requests the relevant United Nations bodies to continue to provide action-oriented input when reporting to the Commission on the priority theme relating to development;

13. Notes with satisfaction the publication of The World's Women 1970-1990 through the cooperative efforts of various United Nations organizations;

14. Recommends the further development of methods of compilation and data collection in areas of concern identified by the Commission, with a view to preparing in all official languages, as a background document for the Fourth World Conference on Women, an updated edition of the publication mentioned in paragraph 13 above;

15. Emphasizes, in the framework of the Forward-looking Strategies, the importance of the total integration of women in the development process, bearing in mind the specific and urgent needs of the developing countries, and calls upon Member States to establish specific targets at each level in order to increase the participation of women in professional, management and decision-making positions in their countries;

16. Emphasizes once again the need to give urgent attention to redressing socio-economic inequities at the national and international levels as a necessary step towards the full realization of the goals and objectives of the Forward-looking Strategies;

17. Welcomes the creation of the ad hoc open-ended working group to elaborate standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities;

18. Urges that particular attention be given by the United Nations and Governments to the situation of women with disabilities and that Governments take steps to ensure the equalization of opportunities for these women in the economic, social and political fields;

19. Takes note of the Guidelines on the Protection of Refugee Women prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which provide practical means of ensuring the protection of refugee women, and which are in keeping with decisions of the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on the Status of Women on this issue;

20. Recommends that all organizations of the United Nations system include in the policy analyses of development issues, as well as in proposals for major international conferences and in development projects, the potential contribution of ageing and elderly women, as relevant;

21. Notes the relevance of the interregional consultation on women in public life to the preparation for the Fourth World Conference on Women, and requests that the Commission at its thirty-sixth session make recommendations to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council for the convening of the consultation not later than 1993;

22. Urges the Commission, the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and Governments to give particular attention to refugee women and children and migrant women, taking into account their contribution in the social, economic and political fields and the urgent need to avoid any kind of discrimination against them;

23. Requests the Secretary-General, in formulating the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001 and in integrating the Forward-looking Strategies into activities mandated by the General Assembly, to pay particular attention to the strengthening of national machineries for the advancement of women and to specific sectoral themes that cut across the three objectives, equality, development and peace, and include, in particular, literacy, education, health, population, the impact of technology on the environment and its effect on women and the full participation of women in decision-making;

24. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue updating the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, bearing in mind its importance, placing particular emphasis on the adverse impact of the difficult economic situation affecting the majority of developing countries, in particular on the condition of women, and giving special attention to worsening conditions for the incorporation of women into the labour force, as well as the impact of reduced expenditures for social services on women's opportunities for education, health and child care, and to submit a preliminary version of the updated World Survey on the Role of Women in Development to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission, in 1993 and a final version in 1994;

25. Requests Governments, when presenting candidatures for vacancies in the Secretariat, in particular at the decision-making level, to give priority to women's candidatures, and requests the Secretary-General in reviewing these candidatures to give special consideration to female candidates from underrepresented and unrepresented developing countries and to assist those countries in identifying suitable women candidates to fill vacancies at the decision-making level;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to report periodically to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission, on activities undertaken at all levels to implement the Forward-looking Strategies;

27. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide for the existing weekly radio programmes on women in the regular budget of the United Nations, making adequate provisions for broadcasts in different languages, and to develop the focal point for issues relating to women in the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, which, in concert with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, should provide a more effective public information programme relating to the advancement of women;

28. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in his report on the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, an assessment of recent developments that are relevant to the priority themes to be considered at the subsequent session of the Commission and to transmit to the Commission a summary of relevant views expressed by delegations during the debate in the Assembly;

29. Requests the Fifth Committee, in reviewing the programme on the advancement of women contained in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993, to ensure that established staffing levels, temporary assistance and other objects of expenditure are sufficient to ensure adequate support to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and effective implementation of other aspects of the programme, especially the preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women, and, if proposed resources are found to be insufficient, to determine the appropriate resource levels;

30. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on measures taken to implement the present resolution;

31. Decides to consider the question of the forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women to the year 2000 at its forty-seventh session under the item entitled "Advancement of women".

Monitoring, review and appraisal

1995 world conference on women

Pursuant to a 1990 request of the Economic and Social Council,(13) the Secretary-General reported to the Commission on the Status of Women on proposals for preparing and convening a world conference on women in 1995.(14) The aim of the conference was to review and appraise progress achieved in the implementation of the Strategies and identify measures necessary to ensure the achievement of their objectives during the last five years of the twentieth century. National review and appraisal were to be the focus of preparations for the conference. Detailed national reports on accomplishments during the last 10 years were to be emphasized, with the Commission establishing guidelines for such reports. In addition, the Commission was to review administrative and substantive preparations, oversee a public information programme informing women about the conference and examine the contribution of NGOs. Regional review and appraisal meetings organized by the regional commissions were expected to play an important role in identifying particular regional priorities and providing input at the global level. Monitoring reports were to be submitted biennially, beginning in 1992.

Statistical indicators

In February 1991,(15) the Secretary-General reported on statistical indicators relating to the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, including those on women, families and households; public life and leadership; education and training; health and child-bearing; housing, human settlements and the environment; and women's work and the economy.

Trust fund for review and appraisal

In response to a request of the Economic and Social Council of 1989,(16) the Secretary-General reported to the Commission on the Status of Women on activities during 1990-1991 funded from the Trust Fund for the Monitoring and Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women.(17) Activities proposed for funding during 1991 included information dissemination to national machinery; seminars on the integration of women in development, and on ageing women and development; information systems to support national machinery; and consultant fees and travel costs to prepare a report on women and the environment.

Interregional consultation on women in public life

The General Assembly in 1989 had endorsed the convening of an interregional consultation on women in public life(18) to be financed mainly from extrabudgetary resources. Pledges of extrabudgetary assistance to finance travel for representatives of least developed and developing countries fell far short of those required. In addition, at mid-year only 25 countries had indicated their intention to participate in the consultation scheduled to take place in September at Vienna.

Since the Assembly had considered that the consultation was an important event towards the preparations for the 1995 world conference on women,(19) it was decided to reschedule the consultation. Information on the rescheduling was to be provided to the Commission in 1992.

In 1991, the Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General outlining preparations for the consultation.(20) The report also described preparations for an expert group meeting on the role of women in public life. That meeting (Vienna, 21-24 May) recommended a draft platform that could be considered by the interregional consultation.

Communications

Pursuant to a request of the Economic and Social Council of 1990,(21) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report on the current mechanism for communications on the status of women.(22) As at the end of 1990, replies had been received from 30 Governments giving their views on whether that procedure efficiently identified communications revealing a consistent pattern of injustice and discriminatory practices against women. More than half of those Governments considered that the procedure needed modification.

Minor modifications to the procedure were recommended for consideration by the Commission, as well as options involving greater changes in the Commission's mandate or approach. The appointment of a special rapporteur and the development of an optional protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women(23) to consider individual communications alleging violations of the Convention were also suggested.

National, regional and international machinery

In response to a request of the Economic and Social Council of 1987,(24) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women a report on national, regional and international machinery, including, NGOs, for the effective integration of women in development.(25) The report described specific problems relating to national machinery and identified information acquisition, analysis and dissemination on the advancement of women as essential to the success of national machinery. It suggested that location, staff improvement, acquisition of new technologies and networking at different levels, especially with NGOs and the United Nations system, were important measures for action and areas for assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1991, acting on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/22 without vote.

National, regional and international machinery for the advancement of women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985, in which the Assembly endorsed the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Bearing in mind its resolution 1986/31 of 23 May 1986, in which it requested the Secretary-General, inter alia, to propose guidelines for national machinery to promote the advancement of women and ways to ensure the effective implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies,

Recalling its resolution 1988/30 of 26 May 1988, in which measures were proposed to strengthen national machinery for the advancement of women, which included the involvement of women's non-governmental organizations,

Mindful of its resolution 1990/15 of 24 May 1990, the annex to which contains the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and, specifically, recommendations XXIII and XXIV, which deal with national machinery,

Recalling its resolution 1990/14 of 24 May 1990, in which it urged Governments to make renewed commitments to implement the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies by strengthening their national machinery and increasing the resources devoted to programmes for the advancement of women,

Recognising that national machinery is an essential element in the promotion and implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

1. Urge countries that have not yet done so to establish, as soon as possible, and at the latest by 1995, national machinery for the advancement of women that can have a direct effect on government policy;

2. Urge Governments to provide adequate and secure political, financial, technical and human resources to enable national machinery to function effectively and have access to the highest levels of government;

3. Stresses that the provision of technical assistance to countries establishing or strengthening national machinery should be considered a priority activity by the United Nations system and donor countries;

4. Invites the national machinery of different countries to exchange information, bilaterally or multilaterally, on issues of common interest, including information on innovative policies, programmes and research;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the regional commissions and within existing resources, to promote such an exchange of information through United Nations documents, by supporting regional and subregional meetings of national machinery, by using resources from the regular budgets of the five regional commissions, by making provisions for it in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 and by annually updating and distributing the Directory of National Machinery for the Advancement of Women;

6. Reiterates its recommendation that the Secretary-General should make available the services of an inter-regional adviser, through the regular programme of technical cooperation, to assist, on request, national machinery in carrying out effectively the review and appraisal of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in preparing the reports called for in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and in preparing for the world conference on women to be held in 1995;

7. Encourages the provision of such other technical assistance as may be required by national machinery, and the sharing of support and expertise between units of such machinery, particularly those in developing countries, to facilitate the preparation of national reports for the world conference on women;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-sixth session on the activities of the appropriate bodies of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Development Fund for Women, that provide assistance to national machinery to ensure that the work being done by those bodies is complementary and does not overlap;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments to review and update the case-studies prepared for the Seminar on National Machinery for Monitoring and Improving the Status of Women, held at Vienna from 28 September to 2 October 1987, and other appropriate case-studies, to publish those case-studies as a reference manual for national machinery and to make provisions for this in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993;

10. Requests that appropriate steps be taken, within existing resources, to strengthen the capacity of the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to work with national machinery and the specialized agencies to achieve the goals of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies;

11. Urges Governments to make every effort to make information on their national machinery available and to ensure that titles accurately reflect the role of the offices concerned;

12. Requests Governments to ensure appropriate training for the staff of the national machinery and also to encourage, in management training courses, the inclusion of gender-analysis training and information on the role of national machinery;

13. Decides that an evaluation of the effectiveness of efforts to establish and improve national machinery since the adoption of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies in 1985 and an analysis of the further action that is required should be included in a report for submission to the world conference on women in 1995.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/22

30 May 1991 Meeting 12 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1991/87) without vote, 20 May (meeting 9): draft by Commission on women (E/1991/28); agenda item 9.

Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Board of Trustees of the United Nations International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) held its eleventh session in New York from 19 to 22 February 1991.<sup>(26)</sup> The Board reviewed INSTRAW's activities and considered ways of strengthening cooperation with the regional commissions, INSTRAW focal points and correspondents.

The Board adopted a series of decisions and recommendations, which it brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council. It agreed that the issue of women and poverty was of high priority for inclusion in the 1992-1993 work programme and recommended that INSTRAW initiate a project focusing on women in countries in transition. It decided that a research project on women and the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome would be undertaken at the request of the World Health Organization. The Board further recommended that INSTRAW begin a special-issue publication series, INSTRAW Review, and endorsed a project plan for the development of communications materials on women and development.

The Board also agreed to establish a Strategic Planning Committee to provide policy guidance to INSTRAW and a Finance Committee to strengthen its financial base.

INSTRAW activities

In accordance with a General Assembly request of 1989,<sup>(27)</sup> the Secretary-General, in September 1991,<sup>(28)</sup> transmitted a report on the results of INSTRAW's 1990-1991 work programme.

Reporting on the work in 1991, the Director of INSTRAW stated that, in response to a 1989 request by the Assembly,<sup>(29)</sup> a draft technical report—"Improving concepts and methods for statistics and indicators on the situation of elderly women"—was prepared and reviewed at a meeting (New York, 28-30 May 1991) organized by INSTRAW in collaboration with the United Nations Statistical Office.<sup>(30)</sup> INSTRAW provided advisory services for a workshop (Venezuela, 23-25 May 1991) to strengthen the dialogue between producers and users of statistics on women and, also in May, workshops held in the Gambia and Zambia discussed policy and statistical issues, using as training tools a handbook on methods of compiling and analysing statistics on women in the informal sector and a synthesis of pilot studies on compilation of statistics on women in the informal sector. An INSTRAW meeting on macroeconomic policy analysis of women's participation in the informal sector (Rome, Italy, 18-22 March) discussed policies for providing support to women working in the informal sector.

In 1991, INSTRAW proposed launching parallel activities with the regional commissions relating to women's involvement in the informal sector. Its consolidated proposal, based on programme suggestions made by the regional commissions and aimed at evolving a systematic approach to integrating women in national economies, was forwarded to the regional commissions for comments and suggestions, for implementation during the 1992-1993 biennium.

With regard to women, environment and sustainable development, INSTRAW prepared public information and training materials. It sponsored three women from the Caribbean region, activists in ecological recuperation or conservation of the environment, to participate in the Global Assembly of Women and the Environment (Miami, Florida, United States, November 1991).

INSTRAW also undertook research to gather information on existing communications systems and resources in Argentina, Colombia and the Dominican Republic. The project examined the potential of traditional and modern communications for the benefit of rural and urban women as well as their role in communications. Other elements included women's education in communications and through communications technologies, the effects of communications on women and the role of women in communications as agents of change. The first participatory planning meeting was held for the institutions selected to participate in the project (Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, 11-14 February 1991).

INSTRAW News was published biannually in English, French and Spanish.

INSTRAW participated in a regional seminar on economic progress of rural women in Latin America and the Caribbean organized by the International Fund for Agricultural Development with the collaboration of the Inter-American Institute for Agricultural Cooperation (San Jose Costa Rica, 17-22 June 1991). Three short-term scholarships were offered to INSTRAW's focal points, one per region for a scholar or senior researcher in programmes on statistics, on women in development and on gender, environment and sustainable development.

INSTRAW, together with UNDP, provided secretariat services for the Inter-Agency Task Force on Women, Water Supply and Sanitation. In June, INSTRAW, in cooperation with ILO, updated the multi-media training package on women, water supply and sanitation. INSTRAW also actively participated in meetings of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy.

In 1991, INSTRAW recorded contributions from Member States in the amount of $1,659,065. In addition, special contributions were received from the Economic Commission for Africa and from UNDP for the implementation of the research and training component of projects executed by them. At the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities held in November 1991, INSTRAW received pledges of contributions in an amount equivalent to $974,809 for 1992.

Women and development

Commission action. The Commission on the Status of Women, in a resolution on women and development,(1) urged Governments to adopt policies to promote economic development ensuring the integration of women's concerns. Calling on Governments, financial and other institutions and NGOs to promote measures to stimulate the economies of developing countries and provide financial services on the basis of equal opportunity for women and men, the Commission appealed to Governments, donor countries, international agencies and financial institutions to make greater efforts to support the establishment of cooperative rural banks and other development-related institutions to assist women. The Commission requested Member States to provide for specific training programmes for women aimed at developing their technical and management skills and also requested relevant specialized agencies to strengthen their efforts to support the economic advancement of rural women. It asked the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of its resolution in his biennial (1992) monitoring report on the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies.

UNICEF action. At its 1991 session,(2) the Executive Board of UNICEF discussed a progress report on achievements made in implementing UNICEF policy on women in development.(3) The report gave an analytical synopsis of the issues involved in improving the status of girls and women in different regions and highlighted successful experiences as well as shortcomings in UNICEF's sectoral programmes.

UNDP action. The Division for Women in Development of UNDP assisted in ensuring and monitoring throughout UNDP programmes and projects a substantially larger role for women, as both active participants and beneficiaries. It was also responsible for ensuring a larger role for women in UNDP. During the year, the Division continued its work in training, country programme and project design appraisal and other advocacy measures.

The UNDP Administrator in March(4) stated that country programmes submitted to the UNDP Governing Council had indicated a major increase in demand for focusing on the mainstreaming of women in development and awareness of the need to integrate gender issues at all programme levels. In 1991, six national and four subregional workshops took place with participation of government officials, United Nations specialized agencies and UNDP staff. An initiative by the Joint Consultative Group on Policy (JCGP) took place in Ethiopia to develop a country women in development strategy within which the programmes and projects of JCGP agencies could be reoriented in a more gender-responsive practice.

In February, the UNDP Governing Council allocated $8 million from its Special Programme Resources to improve the quality and effectiveness of UNDP-funded technical assistance.(5) The allocation was to contribute to building and strengthening national capacities in women in development and enable UNDP field offices to draw on those capacities for the mainstreaming of women in development in UNDP-funded technical cooperation.

On 25 June,(6) the Governing Council requested the UNDP Administrator to intensify and expand training in gender issues and development as well as UNDP coordination and cooperation with other multilateral and bilateral donors in such training. It reiterated its request that the Administrator carry out in 1992 a review on progress made since a baseline study undertaken in 1990(7) on the implementation of the UNDP mandate for women in development and report to the Council in 1993.

Other action. By a note of 12 June 1991,(8) the Secretary-General transmitted the annual report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation on operational activities for development containing separate information on United Nations efforts to integrate women in development, as requested by the General Assembly in 1989.(9)

The Director-General stated that over the past 15 years the United Nations had played a catalytic role in promoting the issue of women and development and in creating global awareness of the issue. He summarized United Nations activities for women in the areas of education, health, population, the environment, employment and decision-making in national policy, planning and programming.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1991, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/64 without vote.

Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1989/106 of 27 July 1989 on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 45/129 of 14 December 1990 on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies- for the Advancement of Women, in which the Assembly reaffirmed, inter alia, its determination to encourage the full participation of women in economic, social, cultural, civil and political affairs,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 43/101 of 8 December 1988, in which, inter alia, the Assembly recalled the Forward-looking Strategies and, in particular, the importance given therein to giving women greater access to investment finance by removing legal and institutional restrictions, promoting women's savings and providing training in and assistance with financial management, savings and investment in order to increase their income,

Recognizing that, to eradicate poverty and eliminate hunger, it is essential to mobilize the potential of all population groups in the developing countries, in particular the large number of rural poor,

Convinced that rural women's critical roles in food production, income generation, household maintenance and family welfare could be strengthened if institutions, States and communities took adequate measures to reduce the legal, financial and other constraints impeding women's effective access to productive and labour-saving resources and to support and enhance women's productive capacities and economic activities,

Bearing in mind the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, in particular article 14 thereof, in which it is stipulated, inter alia, that States parties shall take into account the particular problems faced by rural women and the significant roles which rural women play in the economic survival of their families,

Welcoming the initiative taken by a group of First Ladies to convene a Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women in Brussels on 25 February 1992 under the patronage of Her Majesty Queen Fabiola of Belgium,

Noting with interest the technical support being provided for the Summit process by the Regional Consultations in Asia, Africa, the Near East and Latin America organized by the international Fund for Agricultural Development,

1. Requests the International Fund for Agricultural Development to continue to provide all necessary input and other support for the Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women in cooperation and coordination with other appropriate United Nations organizations;

2. Urges all States, appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and relevant non-governmental organizations to participate in and support the Summit and to support its objective of developing a strategy for the economic advancement of rural women in the 1990s;

3. Expresses the hope that the Summit will give an impetus to the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and thus help rural women to assume their role in the development process and share fully in its benefits, thereby providing an important input to the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1995.

Women, environment and sustainable development

On 4 September 1991,<sup>(10)</sup> the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) (1992) asked the Secretary-General to ensure that key elements relating to women's critical economic, social and environmental contributions to sustainable development were addressed at the Conference as a distinct issue, in addition to being mainstreamed in all substantive work and documentation. It also asked him to establish mechanisms to: include a global goal in Agenda 21—an action programme for the twenty-first century to be adopted by UNCED—promoting the effective participation of women in knowledge generation, decision-making and management; recommend specific actions needed in each of the sectoral and cross-sectoral areas of Agenda 21 to ensure that progress towards sustainable development incorporated measures benefiting women; and identify human and material resources and infrastructural support needed from international, regional and national agencies, to promote women's participation in all UNCED activities.

An UNCED/UNICEF/UNFPA symposium was held on the impact of environmental degradation and poverty on women and children, entitled "Women and Children First" (Geneva, 27-30 May 1991). Eighty-six experts and resource persons from grass-roots organizations, environmental groups, United Nations agencies and Governments, focusing on the role of women and children in environmental issues not only as victims but as potential participants in solving environmental problems, concluded that an ecologically sound, sustainable development would not be possible without the full participation of women.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1991, acting on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/167 without vote.

Women, environment, population and sustainable development

The General Assembly

Integration of women in economic development programmes

In a report of October 1991 on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development, (*) the Secretary-General analysed the role of women in implementing the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1991-2000). (12) The report discussed women in the International Development Strategy, areas where the role of women in development needed to be taken into account, women's participation in decision-making as essential for designing gender-aware development policies and programmes and credit policies as an example of empowerment for women.

The Secretary-General concluded that much remained to be done to introduce gender equality into development policies and programmes. He pointed out that recognizing women's behaviour as agents of social and economic development should be an integral part of policies affecting the entire economy. The participation of women in decision-making would contribute to achieving economic goals and help identify social goals. During the Decade, efforts should be made to monitor the integration of women in the implementation of the Strategy.

In June, (13) the Secretary-General submitted a note on steps taken to implement a 1989 resolution of the Economic and Social Council, (14) which dealt with the effective mobilization and integration of women in development. He stated that the World Economic Survey continued to have a section on the socio-economic attainment of women. The World Economic Survey, 1991 (15) would be before the Council in 1991. As to preparations for updating the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, (16) the Council's and General Assembly's guidance was taken into account at the Fifteenth Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Women (Vienna, 11 and 12 March 1991). An updated progress report on that publication was to be presented to the Council in 1993. The Secretary-General pointed out that a chapter on women's work and the economy was contained in The World Women 1970-1990: Trends and Statistics. (17)

On 26 July, by decision 1991/291, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's note.

Other action. A seminar on the integration of women in development (Vienna, 9-11 December 1991), organized by the Division for the Advancement of Women of the United Nations Office at Vienna, assessed the efforts to mobilize women in development at national and international levels.

Medium-term plan for women and development

In response to a 1989 resolution of the Economic and Social Council, (18) the Secretary-General submitted a report on the extent to which the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development had been incorporated into the programmes and programme budgets of the United Nations system. (19) Progress was assessed by comparing information on activities contained in the programmes and programme budgets for the 1988-1989 and 1990-1991 bienniums. The Secretary-General concluded that many organizations of the United Nations system had increased their resources for the advancement of women in implementing the medium-term plan.

Technical cooperation

In April 1991, (20) the UNDP Administrator submitted a report to the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter II) on actions taken or planned by the organizations of the United Nations development system to ensure full access and participation of women in development through technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) and on activities to develop and improve guidelines enhancing the role of women in TCDC. The Administrator concluded that many United Nations organizations had not taken comprehensive action to identify obstacles to the role of women in TCDC. However, some organizations had undertaken actions and projects integrating women in development in TCDC, while a growing number had formulated policy, programme and project guidelines to integrate women in all their activities. Existing monitoring and evaluation mechanisms needed to be strengthened to measure the extent of women's participation in TCDC. The Administrator recommended that United Nations organizations undertake a comprehensive review and evaluation of the progress of the role of women in TCDC within their own programmes.

Women

The High-level Committee, in May 1991<sup>(21)</sup> expressed concern at the little progress and lack of practical relevance achieved by the United Nations development system in its efforts to integrate women in TCDC. The Committee decided that UNDP's Special Unit for TCDC should allocate sufficient human and financial resources for the participation of women in TCDC; assist in ensuring that full account was taken of women's needs when approving TCDC projects; continue to monitor progress made in integrating women in TCDC, with special emphasis on monitoring action-oriented efforts; and cooperate with UNDP in developing and improving guidelines to ensure women's participation in TCDC activities. It urged the organizations of the United Nations development system to support and cooperate with UNDP in integrating women in TCDC and to design specific projects to support income-generating efforts for women and facilitate women's tasks. It asked the Administrator to report in 1992 on the implementation of its decision.

In his annual report on United Nations technical cooperation,<sup>(22)</sup> the Secretary-General described women in development activities, particularly those of the Department of Technical Cooperation for Development (DTCD). DTCD revitalized its Task Force on Women in Development, which, in addition to securing more funding for women's development, had broadened its activities to include launching an innovative interdisciplinary project, demonstration of training modules and incorporation of items on women in several DTCD-sponsored seminars.

In 1991, training activities focused on testing training modules, holding seminars and encouraging Governments to increase the number of women candidates for training in projects and participation in seminars. During the year, 998 training awards were granted to women through DTCD-executed projects. The largest groupings were for population/demography, statistics, public administration and economic planning and projections. More women were also being trained in energy, geology, mining and water resources.

With the support of the United Nations Statistical Office, DTCD assisted countries in improving rural capability for developing and disseminating statistics on women and developing policies.

UN Development Fund for Women

The Consultative Committee on UNIFEM met twice in New York in 1991, from 23 to 25 January and from 3 to 6 September. The Committee recommended the replenishment of UNIFEM's mainstreaming facility, which had the unique role of empowering women to translate women in development concerns into policies, plans and programmes. It also recommended a project proposal for Namibia; the replenishment of three regional programmes for the 1992-1993 biennium-the African Investment Plan, the Asia Pacific Development Strategy and the Participatory Action Programme for Latin America and the Caribbean; a project on technological assistance to rural women's groups in Senegal; and a project on credit for women in the informal sector for the Latin American and Caribbean region. The Committee endorsed a request to create 'an advocacy facility to enable UNIFEM to coordinate better the production and distribution of materials. In establishing the Fund's response to the issue of violence against women as an obstacle to development, the Committee decided that existing funding could be used selectively to respond to relevant requests from developing countries.

In a report on the 1991 activities of the Fund<sup>(23)</sup> the UNDP Administrator stated that technical assistance and funding in Africa focused on agriculture and food security. A local NGO in Togo received assistance to develop an agricultural training curriculum for girls; the two classes of women who had graduated had formed cooperatives, with periodic technical advisory services and credit for tools, seeds and livestock. In the Gambia, UNIFEM supported a women's bureau in its mandate to advise the Government on all policies and programmes related to the contribution of women to national development.

In Asia, the Fund supported "women peasant summits" between September and November 1991 in Bangladesh, India, Nepal and Pakistan, which brought grass-roots women's concerns to the attention of decision makers.

The Fund's activities in Latin America aimed at increasing women's economic contribution through greater access to improved technologies. In Peru, three rural training centres were supported to teach improved food-processing techniques to women producer groups at the grass-roots level. UNIFEM implemented a regional Andean programme to improve the economic and political environment for the transfer of technology. Activities included increasing the awareness of policy makers of the importance of women's access to technology and support to information and exchange programmes.

In 1991, UNIFEM total income amounted to $12.9 million.

In a report of February,<sup>(24)</sup> the Administrator discussed the Fund's programme and organizational management and public support. Longer-term priorities focused on food security and trade and industry, particularly support to small-scale manufacturing and trading activities in which many women participated. Shorter-term priorities for 1991-1992 identified region-specific goals: in Africa, food security and small-enterprise development; in Asia and the Pacific, agriculture and industrial sectors; and in Latin America and the Caribbean, small enterprise and employment, agriculture and food technologies.

In October,(25) the Secretary-General transmitted the Administrator's report on UNIFEM's 1990 activities to the General Assembly.

UNDP Council action. On 25 June 1991,(26) the UNDP Governing Council commended the Fund for its increase in programme delivery and encouraged it to ensure that the quality of its programmes was sustained. It also encouraged UNIFEM to strengthen its links with United Nations development agencies, national Governments, financial institutions, women's groups, NGOs and women in academia, business and public life in order to integrate gender concerns and women into all development efforts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Emphasizing the position of the Fund as a specialized resource base for development cooperation, serving as a bridge between the needs and aspirations of women and the resources, programmes and policies for their economic development,

Bearing in mind that socio-economic inequities at the national and international levels have a detrimental effect on the situation of women in developing countries,

Noting that environmental degradation severely affects the situation of women, particularly in developing countries,

2. Commends the Fund for its support of catalytic and innovative projects that strengthen national capacity to improve the situation of women;

5. Notes with satisfaction the steady increase in contributions to the Fund and urges Governments and public and private donors to continue to extend their support of the Fund through voluntary contributions and pledges to its programmes;

6. Stresses the importance of the work of the Consultative Committee on the United Nations Development Fund for Women in policy and programme directions relating to the activities of the Fund;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of providing conference services in the relevant working languages to the Consultative Committee, bearing in mind the importance of its work;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the Fund, to be submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 39/125.

Status of women

Commission on the Status of Women

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its thirty-fifth session (Vienna, 27 February-8 March 1991),(1) recommended seven draft resolutions and two draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. They dealt with: violence against women; Palestinian women; women and children under apartheid; disabled women; refugee and displaced women and children; national, regional and international machinery for the advancement of women; and improving the status of women in the United Nations (see PART SIX, Chapter II). The draft decisions concerned the Commission's 1992 session (see below).

1992 session

On 30 May 1991, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1991/231, took note of the Commission's report and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its 1992 session. By decision 1991/232, also adopted on 30 May, the Council approved the convening of four additional meetings during the Commission's 1992 session to consider preparations for the 1995 world conference on women.

Violence against women

On 30 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/18 without vote.

Violence against women in all its forms

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in paragraph 258 of which it was stated that violence against women was a major obstacle to the achievement of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Bearing in mind the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, contained in the annex to its resolution 1990/15 of 24 May 1990, in particular the conclusion that violence against women in the family and society was pervasive and crossed lines of income, class and culture, and specifically recommendation XXII, which called for immediate action on the part of Governments, relevant agencies, women's organizations, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to address the issue of violence against women,

Recalling its resolution 1988/27 of 26 May 1988, in which it called for the continuation of the consolidation of efforts to eradicate violence against women within the family and society,

Bearing in mind the relevant recommendations of the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and of the Eighth Congress, as well as the relevant observations of the Seventh Congress,

Bearing in mind also the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 of 18 December 1979 and contained in the annex thereto, which guarantees the right of women to equal status with men,

Noting that, in its general recommendation No. 12, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women recommended that States parties should include in their periodic reports to the Committee information on measures undertaken to protect women against the incidence of all kinds of violence in everyday life occurring within the family, at the workplace or in any other area of social life,<sup>a</sup> and that the Committee had decided at its tenth session to undertake at its eleventh session a study of violence against women,<sup>b</sup>

Noting, however, that the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women does not explicitly address violence against women,

1. Calls upon Member States to recognize that violence against women must be countered by a wide variety of measures;

2. Reminds Member States that violence against women is an issue of equal rights that derives from a power imbalance between women and men in society;

3. Urges Member States to adopt, strengthen and enforce legislation prohibiting violence against women;

4. Also urges Member States to take all appropriate administrative, social and educational measures to protect women from all forms of physical or mental violence;

5. Recommends that a framework for an international instrument be developed in consultation with the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women that would address explicitly the issue of violence against women;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, through the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, to convene in 1991 or 1992 a meeting, to be funded from extrabudgetary resources, of experts representing all regions and including representatives of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, to address the issue of violence against women and to discuss the possibilities of preparing an international instrument and the elements to be contained therein, and to report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-sixth session;

7. Urges Governments at all levels to develop training programmes for members of the criminal justice and health-care systems, including police officers, doctors, nurses, social workers and members of the legal profession, to ensure sensitization to and fair administration of justice with respect to equality issues;

8. Requests Governments, international organizations, non-governmental organizations, other relevant bodies and academics to undertake research into the causes of violence against women.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/18

30 May 1991 Meeting 12 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1991/87) without vote, 20 May (meeting 9); draft by Commission on women (E/1991/28); agenda item 9.

Palestinian women

The Commission had before it a note(2) by the Secretary-General on the situation of Palestinian women, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in a 1990 resolution.(3) The Secretary-General stated that the Council's resolution also had requested that he report to the Commission in 1991 on implementation of the recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of a 1989 mission of experts to Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic,(4) taking into consideration all available information, including United Nations and specialized agency reports, expert missions, meeting reports and information from Governments and NGOs.

In view of the Council's request, the Secretary-General asked Israel to provide confirmation of its support for a visit by the mission. Israel replied that the Council's resolution had contained conclusions concerning the situation in the occupied territories which made the mission unnecessary. Israel would reconsider its position on supporting such a mission if the request to do so was not part of a resolution with a conclusive condemnatory nature. Annexed to the note was information on relief and social service programmes for Palestinian women in the occupied territories provided by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/19 by recorded vote.

Situation of and assistance to Palestinian women
The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General<sup>a</sup> and the notes by the Secretary-General<sup>b</sup> concerning the situation of Palestinian women living inside and outside the occupied Palestinian territory,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 thereof,

Recalling also its resolutions 1988/25 of 26 May 1988, 1989/34 of 24 May 1989 and 1990/11 of 24 May 1990,

Expressing concern at the persistent refusal of Israel to respect the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Taking into account the intifadah of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory against the Israeli occupation and its harmful effects on Palestinian women and children,

Dismayed at the continuation of the oppressive practices of Israel, including collective punishment, curfews, demolition of houses, closure of schools and universities, deportation, confiscation of land and measures that are particularly harmful to the Palestinian women and children in the occupied Palestinian territory,

Deeply alarmed by the continuation of the practice of settling Jewish immigrants in the territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, which is illegal and contravenes the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention,

1. Reaffirms that the basic improvement of the living conditions of the Palestinian women, their advancement, full equality and self-reliance can only be achieved through an end to the Israeli occupation and the attainment of the right of Palestinians to return to their homes, their right to self-determination and their right to establish an independent Palestinian State in accordance with United Nations resolutions;

2. Also reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian people in the territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

3. Demands that an end be put to the oppressive Israeli measures against the intifadah and the consequent suffering experienced by Palestinian women and their families in the occupied Palestinian territory;

4. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to continue to monitor the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 thereof, which concerns assistance to Palestinian women and children both inside and outside the occupied Palestinian territory;

5. Requests governmental, non-governmental and intergovernmental organizations, including organizations of the United Nations system, to continue to encourage and assist in existing income-generating activities for Palestinian women and in the creation of new jobs;

6. Requests that Palestinian women in the occupied Palestinian territory be assisted in developing small-scale industry and creating vocational training centres;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the mission of experts to Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic to investigate the condition of Palestinian women and children in order to improve the situation of Palestinian women in the occupied Palestinian territory;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his investigation of the situation of Palestinian women and children and to report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-sixth session on the implementation of the recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the mission of experts.

Vulnerable women

In response to a request of the Economic and Social Council of 1987,(8) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report on vulnerable women-heads of household, young women, migrant women, disabled women and elderly women.<sup>(9)</sup> The report discussed problems common to all groups of vulnerable women, and those that were specific to each, and made a number of conclusions and recommendations. Annexed to the report were the conclusions and recommendations adopted by an expert group meeting on vulnerable women (Vienna, 26-30 November 1990).

Refugee and displaced women and children

In accordance with a request of the Economic and Social Council of 1987(8) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report on refugee and displaced women and children.<sup>(10)</sup> The report described the problems encountered by refugee and displaced women and children regarding protection, immediate assistance and longer-term assistance such as repatriation, settlement in countries of asylum and third-country resettlement. Stressing the potential of refugee and displaced women and the importance of ensuring their full participation when their needs are analysed and programmes are designed and implemented,

3. Urges Member States, United Nations organizations and non-governmental organizations to ensure that the specific needs and resources of refugee and displaced women and children are fully considered in the planning of their activities and programmes;

4. Also urges Member States, United Nations organizations and non-governmental organizations to ensure that refugee and displaced women are provided with sufficient information to enable them to make decisions on their own future;

5. Encourages Member States and relevant organizations to provide access to individual identification and registration documents, on a non-discriminatory basis, to all refugee women and, wherever possible, children, irrespective of whether the women and children are accompanied by male family members;

6. Urges Member States and the organizations concerned to ensure the full participation of refugee and displaced women in the process of assessing their own needs and in the planning and implementing of programmes;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the system-wide review to assess the experience and capacity of various organizations in the coordination of assistance to all refugees, displaced persons and returnees assesses, in particular, the ability of those organizations to address the situation of refugee women and children;

8. Encourages international organizations to increase their capacity to respond to the needs of refugee and displaced women and children through greater coordination of their efforts;

9. Commends those Member States that, despite severe economic and development problems of their own, continue to admit large numbers of refugees into their territory, and emphasizes the importance of the international community sharing those burdens;

10. Requests all United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations, Governments, non-governmental organizations and funding agencies that play a role in the assistance and protection of refugees and displaced persons to adopt, if they have not already done so, a policy on refugee and displaced women and children that will provide for the full integration of women and children into their programmes, within their respective mandates, and will include a time-frame and procedures for implementation;

11. Urges the recruitment of staff, in particular, female field staff, who will be able to provide assistance and protection appropriate to the specific needs of refugee women and children;

12. Calls upon organizations working with refugees to ensure that key staff members undergo training to raise their awareness of the issues specific to refugee and displaced women and to provide them with skills for planning appropriate protection and assistance activities;

13. Urges that, in the collection of refugee statistics, data disaggregated by age and gender be included in order to represent the refugee population accurately.

Elimination of discrimination against women

Convention on discrimination against women

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), established in 1982(1) under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women<sup>(2)</sup> held its tenth session at Vienna from 21 January to 1 February 1991.<sup>(3)</sup>

The Committee considered two initial reports of States parties (Burkina Faso and Italy) and eight second periodic reports (Austria, Denmark, Norway, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Rwanda, Yugoslavia) on legislative, judicial, administrative and other measures they had adopted to give effect to the Convention.

CEDAW adopted a general recommendation stating that States parties should include in their reports information on the legal and social situation of unpaid women working in family enterprises and collect statistical data on women who work without payment, social security and social benefits in family-owned enterprises and take steps to guarantee payment and such benefits. The Committee approved another recommendation that States parties should encourage and support studies to measure and value the unremunerated domestic activities of women and take steps to quantify and include those activities in the gross national product. A third general recommendation stated that States parties should provide information in their reports on disabled women and on measures taken to deal with their situation, including those ensuring equal access to education and employment, health services and social security and participation in social and cultural life.

CEDAW, the treaty-monitoring body for the Convention, also discussed recommendations to improve the functioning of the human rights treaty-monitoring bodies within the United Nations system.

Annexed to the Committee's report were States parties to the Convention, CEDAW membership and status of submission of reports by States parties under article 18 of the Convention as at 1 February 1991.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a General Assembly request of 1990,(4) the Secretary-General submitted in September 1991(5) a report on training and advisory services relating to the Convention, the relationship between CEDAW and the Commission on the Status of Women and other relevant bodies, CEDAW'S public information activities and a review of resources ensuring adequate support to CEDAW and to the implementation of other aspects of the programme on advancement of women.

Other action. A South Pacific regional seminar (Rarotonga, Cook Islands, 18-22 March 1991), jointly organized by the Division for the Advancement of Women of the United Nations Office at Vienna and Australia, the Cook Islands and New Zealand, was aimed at facilitating ratification and implementation of the Convention by reviewing obstacles that countries in the region might encounter. It also served as a country-by-country overview of the situation of women in the South Pacific.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1991, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/25 without vote.

Elimination of discrimination against women in accordance with the aims of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 34/180 of 18 December 1979, by which it adopted the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 45/124 of 14 December 1990 and Council resolution 1990/17 of 24 May 1990,

Taking note of resolutions 35/1 of 4 March 1991 and 35/3 of 8 March 1991 of the Commission on the Status of Women,

Noting that in resolution 45/124, the General Assembly strongly supported the view of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women that the Secretary-General should accord higher priority within existing resources to strengthening technical and substantive support for the Committee,

Convinced that the close relationship between the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly by its resolution 44/25 of 20 November 1989, implies that the secretariats of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Committee on the Rights of the Child should work closely together,

Welcoming the general recommendations contained in the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on its tenth session,

Noting with appreciation the holding of the South Pacific regional seminar on the Convention in Rarotonga, Cook Islands, in March 1991, which recommended that all Pacific island States should accede to the Convention,

Aware that the tenth anniversary of the entry into force of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women will take place on 3 September 1991,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on its tenth session;

2. Welcomes the ratification of or accession to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women by an increasing number of Member States;

3. Urges all States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so as soon as possible;

4. Urges the Secretary-General to strengthen training in the implementation of the Convention at the national, regional and interregional levels, especially in order to assist States parties in meeting their reporting obligations;

Recommends that the strengthening of substantive and technical support for the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women be a priority in the proposed programme of work for the biennium 1992-1993 of the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat;

8. Invites the international community to mark the tenth anniversary of the entry into force of the Convention in an appropriate manner;

9. Invites States parties to the Convention to make every possible effort to submit their initial reports on the implementation of the Convention, as well as their second and subsequent periodic reports, in accordance with article 18 of the Convention and the guidelines provided by the Committee, and to cooperate fully with the Committee in the presentation of their reports;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide for, facilitate and encourage, within existing resources, the dissemination of public information relating to the Committee, its recommendations, the Convention and the concept of legal literacy, taking into account the Committee's own recommendations in that regard;

11. Recommends that a close relationship be maintained between the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Committee on the Rights of the Child and other United Nations human rights bodies, as well as between the secretariats of those Committees.

Chapter XIV

Children, youth and ageing persons

During 1991, the number of signatories to the Declaration and Plan of Action of the 1990 World Summit for Children rose to 135, and there were 107 States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The United Nations Children's Fund and the World Health Organization announced that their goal of 80 per cent coverage of universal child immunization against measles, tetanus, whooping cough, diphtheria, tuberculosis and poliomyelitis had been achieved.

In May, the Economic and Social Council considered the issue of women and children under apartheid (see PART TWO, Chapter I).

In December, the United Nations Principles for Older Persons were adopted by the General Assembly (resolution 46/91).

Children

UN Children's Fund

In 1991,(1) the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) cooperated in programmes in 127 countries (44 in Africa, 35 in Latin America and the Caribbean, 34 in Asia and 14 in the Middle East and North Africa). Programme expenditures totalled $591 million. Of that amount, $202 million (34 per cent) was spent on child health, including the expanded programme on immunization and oral rehydration therapy; $111 million (19 per cent) on emergency operations; $87 million (15 per cent) on planning advocacy and programme support; $73 million (12 per cent) on water supply and sanitation; $48 million, (8 per cent) on education; $39 million (7 per cent) on community development and organization and programmes for women and children in especially difficult circumstances; and $31 million (5 per cent) on nutrition and household food security.

The UNICEF Executive Board held its regular session in New York from 22 April to 3 May 1991.(2) It also met on 5 June(3) to elect officers for the period from 1 August 1991 to 31 July 1992.

By decision 1991/299 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Board's report on its regular session.

Programme policy

The UNICEF Executive Board reviewed the Fund's performance in 1990 and set out directions for its programme, adopting a number of decisions on policy, cooperation and cross-sectoral issues. It requested the Executive Director to identify, analyse and share information and lessons learned from initiatives that were most effective in reaching the poorest children and their families.(4) It requested that the Fund's country representatives contribute significantly to the achievement of a consensus on policies for revitalizing each country's national and local health-care systems.(5) It reaffirmed the Fund's commitment to Africa as the region of highest priority.(6)

The Board also called on(7) the UNICEF secretariat to discharge its responsibilities under the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child,(8) in cooperation with the United Nations Centre for Human Rights, the Committee on the Rights of the Child and concerned governmental and non-governmental bodies. It further called for accelerated programme implementation and emergency response in Middle East and North African countries and Djibouti where child survival, protection and education programmes had been undermined by the conflict in the Persian Gulf.(9)

Follow-up to 1990 World Summit for Children

At its 1991 regular session, the Executive Board reviewed UNICEF follow-up to the 1990 World Summit for Children and response to the Summit's World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and Plan of Action.(10) The Board urged(11) the Executive Director to ensure that UNICEF provided support to developing countries for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and Plan of Action.

UNICEF worked throughout 1991 for early ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child. By the end of the year, 107 countries had become States parties to the Convention, while another 35 had become signatories, indicating their intention to ratify.

Maurice Pate Memorial Award

The Maurice Pate Memorial Award, established in 1966(12) to commemorate the first UNICEF Executive Director, was presented in 1991(13) to the Child-to-Child Trust of the United Kingdom. The Executive Board noted the success of the innovative approach of the Trust in channelling the power of children to carry primary health-care messages to younger children, their peers, families and communities.

In other action,(14) the Board amended the procedure related to the objectives, recipients, nominations and selection for the Award.

UNICEF programmes by region

Africa

During 1991, total programme expenditures for Africa amounted to $210 million, representing 36 per cent of total UNICEF programme expenditure.

Annual growth rates of gross national product per capita remained negative for most countries in the region. In spite of debt reduction and rescheduling, debt servicing continued to impose a heavy burden. In that adverse economic climate, social service infrastructures deteriorated. Conflicts continued to plague the region: civil war disrupted services, destroyed infrastructure and killed and dislocated millions of persons.

Nevertheless, under the Plan of Action of the World Summit for Children, most countries in the region set up mechanisms to elaborate national programmes of action. UNICEF and the African Development Bank agreed on operational modalities of cooperation, particularly a cost-sharing arrangement for joint project identification and assessment.

In the area of primary health care (PHC), the Bamako Initiative(15) (see below) began to be applied in some countries of the region. Universal child immunization (UCI) was still several years away in the war-affected countries, but it was achieved in others. Health programmes paid greater attention to the region's major diseases-diarrhoeal illnesses, acute respiratory infections (ARIs) and malaria. The control of diarrhoeal illnesses, which had been limited to the distribution of oral rehydration salts, was expanded to a more holistic approach, focusing on case management, breast-feeding and water supply and sanitation.

The spread of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) threatened the gains made in mortality reduction, and new impetus was given to fighting the disease; in several countries, UNICEF supported the production of information materials and communication activities.

Emergency conditions persisted in many countries of the region. A new emergency programme for the Horn of Africa was established, which coordinated inter-agency programmes responding to emergencies. UNICEF played a key role in the United Nations post-war support and drought relief assistance programmes in Mozambique and provided essential relief materials in post-war Angola.

Americas and the Caribbean

In 1991, UNICEF programme expenditures totalled $61 million in the Americas and the Caribbean, representing 10 per cent of total programme expenditures. The economic crisis in the region forced several countries to adopt stabilization and adjustment schemes that had caused considerable hardship, especially among the most vulnerable groups. In spite of that, Governments created mechanisms to compensate for the costs of adjustment, and progress towards the survival, protection and development of children resulted. The Convention on the Rights of the Child was ratified by 25 countries in the region.

UNICEF, in cooperation with the World Health Organization (WHO) and the Pan American Health Organization, prepared measures for the control of diarrhoeal diseases and cholera. Breast-feeding was promoted region-wide. Components of the UNICEF plan included the International Code of Marketing of Breast Milk Substitutes, the UNICEF "baby-friendly" hospital initiative and the UNICEF/WHO "10 steps to successful breast-feeding". Progress was achieved, in Mexico, an agreement was reached with baby formula producers to stop free distribution of baby formula.

In examining the problems of women, three areas were given special attention: violence against girls and women; women as heads of household; and teenage pregnancy. The network of women's offices throughout South and Central America was expanded with the addition of the Caribbean sub-region. Studies on child prostitution were prepared in nine countries.

Asia

In 1991, UNICEF programme expenditure in Asia totalled $200 million, representing 34 per cent of total programme expenditure. The Convention on the Rights of the Child was ratified by most of the countries in the region.

UCI was achieved in many countries and the infrastructure for overall delivery of child survival and development services was improved. Other health initiatives were advocated, among them, safe motherhood, which included antenatal care, anaemia control during pregnancy, referral of high-risk cases and care at birth and baby-friendly hospital initiatives.

AIDS continued to spread in many countries of East Asia, notably in Thailand. All countries in the region took steps to contain the pandemic, including extensive blood testing for the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV); education and communication campaigns directed towards high-risk groups; and the provision of counselling services.

Accelerated efforts were under way, particularly in Pakistan and Sri Lanka, to provide universal access to safe water. Together with diarrhoeal diseases, ARIs accounted for about 50 per cent of deaths among children under five years of age in the East Asia and Pacific region. Countries across the region also worked to control protein deficiency malnutrition.

Middle East and North Africa

In 1991, UNICEF programme expenditure in the Middle East and North Africa totalled $90 million, or 15 per cent of total programme expenditure. Despite gains, the region included countries that continued to have high infant-mortality rates, and the gender gap between male and female literacy and female fertility rates remained the highest in the world.

Momentum gained in the region for the control of ARIs. About one third of the countries had operational programmes and preparatory steps were being taken in the remaining countries. The prevalence of iodine deficiency disorders had been mapped geographically in several countries and programmes for the production of iodized salt began.

In Iraq, Jordan and Kuwait, UNICEF supported psychosocial counselling activities for conflict-traumatized children. In post-civil war Lebanon, the UNICEF Education for Peace programme continued to expand dramatically, involving over the years 80,000 children in summer camps and other educational activities. The Fund initiated a programme of action to help children to cope effectively with psychological stress and to promote values of peace and conflict-resolution among children.

During the conflict between Iraq and Kuwait, UNICEF collaborated with other agencies in emergency operations, within the overall coordinating framework of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). In all countries, UNICEF acted as the main agency for the provision of water supply and sanitation facilities in camps.

UNICEF programmes by sector

Immunization

In October 1991, UNICEF and WHO announced that the international community had fulfilled its commitment to immunize 80 per cent of the world's children against the six major child-killer diseases before their first birthday. Since that commitment was made in 1985,(16) coverage against tuberculosis rose to 90 per cent; against poliomyelitis to 83 per cent and against diphtheria, whooping cough and tetanus to 85 per cent. Protection against measles was about 80 per cent.

During the year, UNICEF embarked on a programme to help countries become self-sufficient in vaccines. It also helped to organize the Children's Vaccination Initiative with the goal of developing new and improved vaccines. With support from WHO, UNDP, the World Bank and several national and international organizations, the Initiative aimed at the development of vaccines that would require one or two rather than multiple doses, be given earlier in life, and remain potent during transport and storage.

The UNICEF Executive Board urged(17) UNICEF to focus its contribution within the Initiative on improving sustainability and accessibility of immunization programmes by increasing the national capacity of developing countries. The Board also approved for 1991 and 1992 $2 million from general resources and $10 million in supplementary funds to support activities of the Initiative.

Breast-feeding, nutrition and growth monitoring

During 1991, UNICEF promoted a combination of short- and long-term measures to reduce malnutrition among individual families, within communities and nationally. The four main elements of the strategy were: control of nutritional deficiencies; protection, promotion and support of breast-feeding; community participation and the empowerment of households to feed themselves; and the effective use of information to improve national nutrition policies and strategies.

UNICEF and WHO launched the baby-friendly hospital initiative, which recognized the supportive role that maternity hospitals could play in the promotion and protection of breast-feeding. Twelve countries received intensive support during the year to ensure that by early 1992 major facilities would become baby-friendly. The challenge of monitoring breast-feeding goals was overcome in 1991 through the development of indicators for household and health care facilities, and 12 countries banned free or low-cost distribution of infant formula.

A policy-makers' meeting on breast-feeding in the 1990s had been held by WHO and UNICEF in August 1990 at Florence, Italy, which adopted the Innocenti Declaration on the Protection, Promotion and Support of Breast-feeding. At its 1991 session, the UNICEF Executive Board welcomed(18) the Declaration and recommended that it be the basis for UNICEF policy and action in support of infant and young child feeding. The Board requested that the Executive Director propose to the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy that a study be undertaken to examine national and multinational corporations' marketing practices for infant food and assess their impact on the well-being of mothers and children.

UNICEF support for growth monitoring and promotion was evaluated in nine countries. The evaluation showed that the amount of time and effort required to put good growth-monitoring operations into practice had been underestimated. Consequently, many activities termed "growth monitoring" had focused solely on weighing babies and too much emphasis had been given to the technical aspect of growth monitoring and not enough to the analysis of the causes of growth faltering and the promotion of appropriate actions. Based on the findings of the evaluations, a new strategy was to be developed in 1992.

The Bamako Initiative

The UNICEF Executive Board considered a report on implementation of the Bamako Initiative.<sup>(15)</sup> Since its launching in 1987<sup>(19)</sup> as a new form of community funding and management for the supply and delivery of essential drugs, the Initiative had emerged as a strategy for reviving, strengthening and extending basic health care services. The report discussed the contribution made by the Initiative to the provision of a health-care system in sub-Saharan Africa, as well as in other regions of the world. By the end of 1991, 33 countries, including 6 outside sub-Saharan Africa, had begun to address the principles of the Initiative as a way to revitalize and expand health-care systems, promote decentralization of decision-making and involve communities in the management of basic health services. Some 2,000 health-care facilities serving about 20 million persons had begun restructuring their approaches in keeping with the Initiative.

In January 1991,<sup>(20)</sup> the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy recommended that the two organizations monitor the implementation of the Initiative's guiding principles and establish methods of production for primary health drugs.

The UNICEF Executive Board endorsed<sup>(21)</sup> the recommendation of the Joint Committee. It urged UNICEF to ensure that the Initiative remained an important element in the implementation of primary health-care programmes in Africa, and it urged the international community to increase contributions in order to ensure better the effectiveness of implementation.

Education

The vision of Education for All, as articulated by the World Conference on Education for All, held at Jomtien, Thailand, in March 1990,<sup>(22')</sup> provided the framework for UNICEF education activities in 1991. During the year, UNICEF took several steps to respond effectively to the challenges of the Conference. An action plan to promote the goals of Education for All was developed to target children prior to school enrolment and during the primary school-years, and to target adults with respect to essential knowledge for living. Policy studies, analytical tools and training packages on basic education were prepared to help develop UNICEF strategies on basic education and to build institutional capacity. Six regional meetings and one headquarters seminar were held for more than 250 country representatives and senior staff; three regional training workshops on basic education were held for UNICEF programme officers. Support from the Global Basic Education Reserve Fund was approved for activities in 14 countries towards achieving Education for All goals.

Water supply and sanitation

During 1991, UNICEF cooperated in water supply and sanitation projects in 95 countries, with expenditures amounting to $83 million. Though the Fund's contribution was less than 1 per cent of global sector throughput in developing countries, it contributed to more than 15 per cent of annual global water-supply coverage. That achievement was attained through advocacy of the use of low-cost technologies, leading to significant government and community contributions. An example was the case of India, where 46 per cent of the rural population had access to safe drinking-water in 1985 and 96 per cent had such access by 1990.

Women in development

The objective of formulating national and sectoral policies for the advancement of women had yet to be achieved in many developing countries. UNICEF promoted such policies through advocacy, policy-oriented research and technical cooperation. In many countries, the low status of women was one of the major obstacles to their advancement, although significant changes had taken place in many countries in Africa, the Middle East and South Asia as a result of education, more favourable laws and demands for women's rights. New opportunities appeared to be opening for women to increase their participation and decision-making in the democratization process under way in many countries. UNICEF used advocacy as well as information gained from its substantive national situation analyses to support women in that process. Current efforts in UNICEF increasingly included men in gender-training programmes for key national officials and project managers as well as for UNICEF staff. In addition, UNICEF advocacy and social mobilization activities reached many religious and community leaders, parliamentarians and high political officials in all regions. Many countries stressed the need to intensify the mobilization of and involvement of women, particularly in women's and children's health and education, family planning and safe motherhood.

Urban basic services

The environment in which child survival and development programmes struggled to take hold was frequently seen at its bleakest in urban slums and shanty towns where urban services were overstretched or non-existent. During 1991, UNICEF advocated and implemented two parallel approaches, which undertook to ensure that sectoral programmes included a focus on urban situations and needs and to expand urban basic services (UBS) in selected centres.

In conjunction with the mayors of major cities around the world, UNICEF began an initiative entitled "mayors as defenders of children". The initiative set the stage for municipal planning and programming for meeting the goals of the 1990 World Summit for Children. Initially, it would be carried out in a few selected cities and be followed by others around the globe. It would focus on harnessing the commitment of mayors and municipalities towards attaining their cities' priority goals within the framework of national programmes of action. It was aimed especially at children of the urban poor through support to low-cost, community-managed, sustainable and replicable actions that would be based on the continuing experience of UBS programmes.

Children in especially difficult circumstances

During 1991, there was an increasing, worldwide awareness of child abuse, neglect and exploitation. The Convention on the Rights of the Child had raised awareness of and concern for the urgent need for services for children in especially difficult circumstances. More UNICEF country offices in Africa and Asia began to undertake situation analyses, and several developed new projects and programmes that received supplementary funding. A regional programme was initiated in the Middle East and North Africa that emphasized education for peace and the psychosocial rehabilitation of children affected by armed conflict. The International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), in collaboration with UNICEF, also began to expand their work in the area. New training materials and resource books were produced for children affected by armed conflict and a new publication series of case-studies and methods for programmes for children in especially difficult circumstances was launched.

Most countries, however, still had limited information about the size and nature of the problems of child abuse, neglect and exploitation. Armed conflicts continued to kill, wound and disable children, both physically and mentally, especially in Africa. Street children were being murdered in some Latin American countries, while the exploitation of children in prostitution seemed to be increasing in South Asia. Even more horrifying was the phenomenon of selling children and the high incident of HIV infection among sexually exploited children.

UNICEF finances

UNICEF income in 1991 totalled $807 million, $14 million less than in 1990. Income by source of income included: $506 million for general resources, $165 million for supplementary funds, and $136 million for emergency supplementary funds. Governments, intergovernmental organizations and the United Nations provided 73 per cent of the total income, the balance being non-governmental.

Expenditures in 1991 totalled $755 million, $6 million more than in 1990. The sum of $591 million was for total programme expenditure, $161 million for total administrative expenditures, and $3 million for write-offs and other charges.

Budget appropriations

At its 1991 session, the UNICEF Executive Board approved<sup>(23)</sup> a total of $580 million for general resources funding and a total of $795 million of supplementary resources funding for programme cooperation. For each region, the respective amounts were: Asia, $259,140,000 and $427,092,000; Africa, $144,113,000 and $196,460,000; the Middle East and North Africa, $47,050,000 and $69,745,000; the Americas and the Caribbean, $23,108,000 and $48,700,000; and interregional programmes, $106,555,000 and $52,750,000.

In a decision on global and interregional programmes and other special-purpose funds,<sup>(24)</sup> the Board requested the Executive Director to consider reducing the number of separate funds through merger or consolidation of those with similar objectives and characteristics.

The Board approved<sup>(25)</sup> the medium-term plan<sup>(26)</sup> as a framework of projections for 1991-1994, including the preparation of up to $500 million in programme expenditures from general resources to be submitted to the Board in 1992.

The Board noted<sup>(27)</sup> the financial reports for 1989 and 1990 and related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ). Also noted<sup>(28)</sup> was the financial report for the 1990 World Summit and Summit-related mobilization activities.

In other action,<sup>(29)</sup> the Board approved the revised budget estimates for the biennium 1990-1991 and budget estimates for 1992-1993. Estimates of budget expenditure for 1992-1993 were also approved.<sup>(30)</sup> In response to the number and severity of emergencies, the Board decided<sup>(31)</sup> that the level of the Emergency Reserve Fund should be increased to $7 million.

Organizational questions

The UNICEF Executive Board considered a review of UNICEF headquarters office requirements,<sup>(32)</sup> but deferred a decision on the matter to its next session.<sup>(33)</sup> It requested<sup>(34)</sup> the Executive Director, in consultation with ACABQ, to analyse the structure and format of budget documents, and it decided<sup>(35)</sup> to consider in 1992 the need for a review of the administrative structure at UNICEF headquarters.

Greeting Card Operation

During the 1990/91 season, the general public world-wide contributed $76.6 million to UNICEF general resources through the Greeting Card Operation (GCO). This was $15 million higher than the previous year. Sales volume totalled 154 million cards.

The Executive Board approved<sup>(36)</sup> the budgeted expenditures and noted the budgeted income for the fiscal year 1 May 1991 to 30 April 1992 for GCO. It also noted<sup>(37)</sup> the GCO financial report and accounts for the 1989 season and the provisional report of the 1990 season.

Inter-agency cooperation

The UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy held its twenty-eighth session at Geneva from 28 to 30 January 1991.<sup>(20)</sup> It reviewed WHO health policies and UNICEF resolutions, common goals for the health of women and children, healthy lifestyles for youth, AIDS, and the management of the peripheral health system based on primary health care.

The Executive Board amended<sup>(38)</sup> the criteria governing the election of UNICEF representatives on the two joint committees (the other being the UNESCO/UNICEF Joint Committee on Education).

Youth

In August 1991, the Secretary-General submitted a report on policies and programmes involving youth.<sup>(1)</sup> In pursuance of a 1990 resolution of the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> he had requested Member States, United Nations specialized agencies and bodies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to submit proposals for a draft world youth programme of action. As at 15 June 1991, 12 Member States, 11 non-governmental youth organizations and 16 specialized agencies and bodies of the United Nations system had replied. Their views were expressed at the eighth meeting of the Informal Inter-agency Working Group at the Technical Level on Youth (Vienna, 30 and 31 May) and the Youth Forum of the United Nations system (Vienna, 27-29 May).

The Secretary-General concluded that many significant initiatives and activities had been undertaken in the context of the 1985 International Youth Year<sup>(3)</sup> and its follow-up. However, stronger efforts were required to achieve the objectives of the Year. There was a need to review the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the area of youth in the light of newly emerging youth issues and the changing international climate. The Secretary-General recommended that a conceptual framework for a world youth programme of action be elaborated by an international team of experts, that regional expert meetings develop regional programmes of action within that conceptual framework, and, on the basis of the international and regional inputs, Member States be invited to consider preparing national youth programmes of action.

On 16 December, by decision 46/425, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Consideration by the Commission for Social Development. In February 1991,<sup>(4)</sup> the Commission for Social Development considered the problem of the integration of young people into society. It had before it a note by the Secretary-General<sup>(5)</sup> transmitting the report of the International Symposium on the Integration of Young People into Society (Toledo, Spain, June 1990).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/11 without vote.

Integration of young people into society: participation, development, peace

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that the General Assembly, in its resolution 40/14 of 18 November 1985 entitled "International Youth

Year: Participation, Development, Peace", requested the Commission for Social Development to examine, on a regular basis, specific youth issues,

Considering also that the General Assembly, in its resolution 45/103 of 14 December 1990, requested the Secretary-General to prepare a draft world youth programme of action towards the year 2000 and beyond in accordance with proposals to be submitted by Member States, the United Nations and non-governmental youth organizations and in consultation with the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the relevant inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations,

Considering further that the Council, in its resolution 1989/51 of 24 May 1989, requested the Commission for Social Development to prepare at its thirty-third session a draft programme of action to mark the tenth anniversary of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace, in 1995, and to identify future strategies in the field of youth, and, in that connection, recalling General Assembly resolution 44/59 of 8 December 1989,

Considering that, in its resolution 45/103, the General Assembly decided to devote a plenary meeting at its fiftieth session, in 1995, to youth questions,

Considering Nero that a draft programme of action to mark the tenth anniversary of the International Youth Year and a draft world youth programme of action towards the year 2000 and beyond are subjects that require special attention, study and collaboration,

Taking into account, to that end, the deliberations and suggestions of the International Symposium on the Integration of Young People into Society, held at Toledo, Spain, from 4 to 8 June 1990, and other relevant international meetings,

1. Decides that an open-ended ad hoc working group of the Commission for Social Development should be established at the thirty-third session of the Commission:

(a) To review and appraise progress achieved and obstacles identified in implementing the objectives of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace;

(b) To prepare a draft calendar of activities to mark the tenth anniversary of the International Youth Year;

(c) To prepare a draft world youth programme of action towards the year 2000 and beyond, taking into account regional youth programmes of action;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-third session, for discussion by the open-ended ad hoc working group, the draft calendar of activities and the draft world youth programme of action referred to in subparagraphs 1 (b) and (c) above.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/11

30 May 1991 Meeting 12 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1991/85) without vote, 16 May (meeting 6); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1991/26); agenda item 7.

Ageing persons

International cooperation on ageing

In accordance with a 1990 resolution of the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General, in an August 1991 report,<sup>(2)</sup> outlined international cooperation on ageing for 1992 and beyond.

The report concluded that there had been a remarkable increase in the international community's response to the ageing of populations. In the period from 1950 to 2025, the world's elderly population (persons aged 60 years and over) would have increased from 200 million to 1.2 billion, or from 8 to 14 per cent of the total global population. The developed countries were adjusting policies and programmes especially for the very old, while the developing countries were gradually introducing ageing programmes.

A broad framework for national and international action on ageing had been established when the World Assembly on Ageing in 1982 adopted the Vienna International Plan of Action on Ageing.<sup>(3)</sup> However, the implementation rate of the Plan had been poor, which had prompted the General Assembly to adopt the action programme on ageing in 1990.<sup>(4)</sup> The action programme had two themes: development of a practical strategy to improve implementation of the Plan in the decade 1992 to 2001 and a promotional campaign to mark in 1992 the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Vienna Plan. Consultations on developing a practical strategy for the decade pointed in several possible directions, including global targets, which would support the implementation of the Vienna Plan.

The United Nations Trust Fund for Ageing had since its inception in 1983 disbursed over $1 million in seed-money grants to 42 projects.<sup>(2)</sup> Contributions to the Fund had been levelling off and were inadequate to fulfil the Fund's mandate to assist developing countries to respond to the ageing of their populations.

During 1991, the Fund supported nine projects, of which four were in Africa, one in Latin America and the Caribbean and four at the interregional or global level.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1991, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1991/10 without vote.

Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Ageing and related activities

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:
[for text, see General Assembly resolution 46/91 below.]

Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/10

30 May 1991 Meeting 12 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1991/85) without vote, 16 May (meeting 6); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1991/26); agenda item 7.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 46/91 without vote.

Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Ageing and related activities

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/50 of 24 May 1989, in which the Council endorsed a draft programme of United Nations activities relating to the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the International Plan of Action on Ageing, in 1992,

Pursuant to its resolution 45/106 of 14 December 1990, in which it endorsed the action programme on ageing for 1992 and beyond as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General on the question of ageing,<sup>a</sup> invited Member States, the United Nations and non-governmental organizations to consider innovative and effective ways of cooperating on the selection of targets in the field of ageing during 1991 and 1992, and urged Member States, the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to participate in the action programme on ageing for 1992 and beyond, especially in selecting targets in the field of ageing, in organizing community-wide activities and in launching an information and fund-raising campaign to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the International Plan of Action on Ageing at the local, national, regional and global levels,

Recalling that in resolution 45/106 it endorsed also the convening of an ad hoc working group of the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-second session to monitor the activities for the tenth anniversary, especially the launching of a global information campaign, and the selection of targets that might form the basis of the third review and appraisal of the International Plan of Action on Ageing to be made by the Commission at its thirty-third session, in 1993, and recommended that the Commission should give consideration to the desirability of convening, subject to the availability of funds, regional and sectoral meetings on the selection of targets in the field of ageing during 1991 and 1992 and global consultations in 1993 and 1997,

Recalling also that in resolution 45/106, it recognized the complexity and rapidity of the ageing of the world's population and the need to have a common basis and frame of reference for the protection and promotion of the rights of the elderly, including the contribution that the elderly can and should make to society,

Aware of the plight of the elderly in developing countries, particularly the least developed among them, as well as those in difficult circumstances, such as refugees, migrant workers and victims of conflict,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1751(LIV) of 16 May 1973 on the aged and social security.

1. Recommends that the United Nations define, on the basis of the recommendations of a small expert group meeting to be held in 1992 within existing resources, targets on ageing to provide a pragmatic focus for the broad and ideal goals of the International Plan of Action on Ageing, and issue them as "Targets on ageing: programme recommendations at the national level for the year 2001";

2. Urges Member States to identify their specific national targets on ageing for the year 2001, on the basis of the proposed targets on ageing;
