Foreword

Those who cannot learn from history are likely not only to misunderstand the present but also, therefore, to hinder, if not to endanger, the future. This is as valid for the development of the multilateral United Nations system of organized international co-operation to promote peace and economic and social progress in larger freedom as it is for other human endeavours.

To chart the course of the activities of the United Nations, to evaluate their impact in the political, economic, social and humanitarian spheres, to assess their role in the progress of dependent peoples towards independence or in the development of international law, there is accordingly a need for an authoritative, concise and coherent account, year-by-year, of the Organization's work as a basis for sound perspective and, if required, for corrective action for the future.

The annual Yearbook of the United Nations series is designed to help meet that need.

The principal reference work of the United Nations, it is extensively used as an essential working tool by those engaged in a serious study and analysis of the international organization process and its role in today's complex world of rapid change, whether they be diplomats or other public officials, whether they be scholars, writers, teachers and teachers of teachers, journalists, librarians or others requiring readily assimilable knowledge about the United Nations family.

The Yearbook is the only single-volume series in which there is to be found an annual, fully-indexed, comprehensive, succinct account—easy to consult because it is organized by subject—of the very many discussions, decisions and activities of the United Nations and the inter-governmental organizations related to it. Also contained in each volume of the series is an organized bibliographical guide—arranged by topic and sub-topic and giving the full texts of resolutions of the principal United Nations deliberative organs—to the considerable mass of primary source material consisting of records and documents prepared to meet the essential parliamentary needs of these deliberative organs and their extensive network of subsidiaries.

Besides being a valuable reference source, the Yearbook series, as a continuing, organized source of information, is intended to contribute towards developing informed understanding of the facts and the problems involved in the progress of international co-operation through the multilateral United Nations system.

CHAPTER I

DISARMAMENT AND RELATED MATTERS

The disarmament discussion, during 1970, dealt with several collateral measures as well as the question of general and complete disarmament. Both the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament and the General Assembly gave particular attention to the need to prevent an arms race on the sea-bed. Continued concern was also expressed regarding the problems of chemical and biological weapons and a comprehensive ban on nuclear weapon testing.

The Conference of the Committee on Disarmament met in Geneva, Switzerland, from mid-February to the end of April and from mid-June to the beginning of September. When the Conference reported to the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly (which opened on 15 September 1970), it transmitted, among other things, the text of a draft treaty on the prohibition of the emplacement of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof.

On 7 December 1970, the General Assembly commended the treaty, asked that it be opened for signature and ratification at the earliest possible date and expressed hope for the widest possible adherence to the treaty. (For details, see pp. 11-14.)

In addition, the Assembly adopted ten resolutions dealing with other aspects of disarmament and arms control. Three of these pertained to general and complete disarmament, including bilateral disarmament negotiations, safeguards concerning new techniques for uranium enrichment, and a programme for general and complete disarmament. (For details, see pp. 14-16.)

Another resolution was concerned with the question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons. (For details, see pp. 22-27.)

Two resolutions concerned the suspension of nuclear and thermonuclear tests. (For details, see pp. 28-32.)

Implementation of the recommendations of the Conference of Non-Nuclear-Weapon States, in particular those concerning the peaceful uses of atomic energy, was the subject of another Assembly resolution. (For details, see pp. 32-33.) The Assembly also reviewed progress on the question of establishing an international service for nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes within the framework of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and adopted a resolution thereon. (For details, see pp. 34-36.)

By still another resolution, the Assembly called for ratification by the nuclear-weapon-States of the Protocol of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America whereby those States would undertake to respect the denuclearized status of Latin America. (For details, see pp. 36-38.)

Finally, the Assembly adopted a resolution by which, among other things, it asked for a study on the economic and social consequences of the armaments race. (For details, see pp. 39-41.)

THE CONFERENCE OF THE COMMITTEE ON DISARMAMENT

During 1970, the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) held two sessions at Geneva, Switzerland, the first from 17 February to 30 April and the second from 16 June to 3 September.

Twenty-five States continued to participate in the work of the Committee: Argentina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Hungary, India, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Sweden, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia. As in previous years, France did not participate.

The report of the Committee was submitted to the General Assembly on 11 September 1970.

The Committee reported that the Conference had continued to devote considerable attention to the question of further effective measures relating to the cessation of the nuclear arms race, in particular to the question of a comprehensive test ban treaty. Also, extensive consideration was given to various non-nuclear measures, especially to the problem of the elimination of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons.

Among the collateral measures of disarmament considered, priority was accorded to work on the draft treaty on the prohibition of the emplacement of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof.

The Conference had also given detailed attention to the question of general and complete disarmament, studying in particular the possibilities of preparing a generally acceptable programme dealing with all aspects of the cessation of the arms race and general and complete disarmament.

COMPREHENSIVE NUCLEAR TEST BAN

The great importance of securing agreement on a comprehensive test ban treaty was recognized by members of the Committee, though the basic differences between the principal parties concerned remained unchanged. (A comprehensive test ban treaty would extend to underground tests the already existing ban on tests in all other environments contained in the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water; signed in Moscow, USSR, on 5 August 1963.<sup>1)</sup>

The United States reiterated its support for a comprehensive ban on the testing of nuclear weapons, adequately verified, including provisions for on-site inspection. The USSR, as in previous years, emphasized the importance of a political will to conclude an agreement, and it held that the current state of art in the field of seismology was sufficiently advanced to ensure full effectiveness of national means of detection and verification.

It was generally considered that a comprehensive test ban was a priority objective and that the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT) being held between the United States and the USSR would have an important bearing on the achievement of that objective.

In this connexion, Sweden stated that while SALT negotiations continued, CCD should proceed with preparatory work towards a ban on underground testing of nuclear weapons. Sweden noted the advisability of underpinning, through such a ban, arms limitation measures that might be achieved through SALT. Canada felt that while SALT negotiations were proceeding, the outstanding technical problems of verification should be pursued in CCD.

It was generally felt in the Committee that any removal of the impasse on verification would depend on progress towards the improvement of seismic detection and identification techniques. Various suggestions were made with regard to technical aspects of verification. Thus, the United Kingdom submitted a working paper outlining ways to evaluate on a world-wide basis of 26 stations what detection and identification capability could be achieved in support of a treaty, given the present state of art in seismology. The United Kingdom recalled its proposal made in 1968 for an annual quota of permissible underground test explosions on a descending scale,<sup>2)</sup> which it felt could be useful in a situation wherein agreement on a comprehensive test ban had been reached in principle but where the super-powers were not yet ready to accept the immediate suspension of all tests.

Canada offered a preliminary assessment of the information submitted by Governments in the context of a proposal for creation of a world-wide exchange of seismological data. (This information had been presented to CCD by the Secretary-General who had requested it on the basis of a General Assembly decision of 16 December 1969.<sup>3</sup>)

In this connexion, Sweden stated that the replies indicated that important seismographic resources would be made available. Sweden also believed that the knowledge about identification of low-strength explosions was increasing and that the gap between 4.75 and 4.0 seismic magnitude (as measured on the so-called Richter Scale used to describe the magnitude of earthquakes) was being narrowed by technical improvements.

Sweden also referred to the draft of a treaty banning underground nuclear weapon tests, which it had submitted to CCD in 1969.<sup>4</sup> This draft had included provisions based on the concept of "verification by challenge" (a system whereby a party suspected of underground nuclear weapon testing would find it in its interest to provide all available reassuring information, including possibly an invitation to other parties to inspect). In Sweden's view, the criticism of the draft's verification clauses as being too weak was unfounded.

CHEMICAL AND BACTERIOLOGICAL (BIOLOGICAL) WEAPONS

As requested by the General Assembly on 16 December 1969,<sup>5</sup> the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament continued its work on all aspects of the problem of the elimination of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons. Discussions centred mainly on two draft proposals: the nine-power (Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR) draft convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons and on the destruction of such weapons, submitted to the General Assembly in 1969<sup>6</sup> and the draft convention for the prohibition of biological methods of warfare, submitted to CCD in 1969 by the United Kingdom.<sup>7</sup>

The basic differences in the approach of the main parties to the question of chemical and bacteriological weapons and the problem of verification in this regard remained unchanged.

The USSR and others held that a single instrument banning at the same time both chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons and based on national means of verification was the only effective approach to the problem. The problem could be resolved through a political decision, rather than by concentrating on technical issues, and the USSR believed that a separate approach to bacteriological (biological) weapons would delay indefinitely the solution of the question of chemical weapons, while at the same time stimulating research and development in this field.

The United States, the United Kingdom and several other Committee members favoured a separate treatment of biological weapons and

<sup>6</sup>Ibid., pp. 25-26. The draft convention provided that each party State would: (1) undertake not to develop, produce, stockpile or otherwise acquire chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons; (2) undertake to destroy within a fixed period of time—observing all the necessary precautions—or to divert to peaceful uses all previously accumulated chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons in its possession; (3) undertake not to assist, encourage or induce any particular State, group of States or international organization to develop, produce or otherwise acquire and stockpile such weapons; (4) be internationally responsible for compliance with the convention's provisions by legal and physical persons exercising their activities in its territory, and also by its legal and physical persons outside its territory; (5) undertake to take as soon as possible, in accordance with its constitutional procedures, the necessary legislative and administrative measures to prohibit the development, production and stockpiling of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons and to destroy such weapons; and (6) undertake to consult one another and co-operate in solving any problems that might arise in the application of the provisions of the convention.

chemical weapons. The United States declared that, while it was committed to effective control of both these weapons, it believed that a single instrument covering these two weapons was not feasible whereas a simple ban on biological weapons alone could be achieved immediately. It felt that the question of chemical weapons posed a complex problem that would require more time and effort to resolve.

On 14 April 1970, Hungary, Mongolia and Poland proposed amendments to the nine-power draft convention which, among other things, specified the right of recourse to the Security Council in the case of suspected violation of the convention's prohibitions. They also proposed the text of a draft Security Council resolution in this regard.

On 30 June 1970, the United States proposed that toxins be added to the list of agents whose use would be prohibited under the provisions of the United Kingdom draft convention on the prohibition of biological methods of warfare. The United Kingdom agreed and subsequently submitted a revision of its draft.

A number of proposals concerning the general approach to the question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons, the question of verification of a ban on these weapons, and other issues were also presented to the Committee.

These included a proposal by Morocco that the development, production and stockpiling of chemical and biological weapons should be jointly prohibited in a single convention which would enter into force for biological weapons and chemical weapons separately, when verification measures for each group of weapons had been agreed.

Compromise proposals for a verification formula were contained, in particular, in suggestions made by Sweden and Yugoslavia; these were based on the principle of national means of verification, openness of information and the concept of "verification by challenge" (a system whereby a party suspected of violations would find it in its interest to provide all available reassuring information, including possibly an invitation to other parties to inspect).

On 25 August 1970, 12 members of the Committee—Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Ethiopia, India, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan,

Sweden, the United Arab Republic and Yugoslavia—presented a joint memorandum on the question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) methods of warfare which, among other things, stated it was essential that both chemical and biological weapons should continue to be dealt with together in taking steps towards the prohibition of their development, production and stockpiling and their effective elimination from the arsenals of all States. The memorandum also declared that the issue of verification was important in the field of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons and suggested that its solution be based on a combination of national and international measures that would complement and supplement each other.

The 12-power position was welcomed by the USSR, particularly in respect of the statement that chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons should continue to be dealt with together in taking steps towards their comprehensive prohibition.

In this connexion, the United States emphasized that there were inherent differences between chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons from the standpoint of arms limitations. The United States pointed to the advantages of reaching early agreement to the greatest extent possible and urged immediate negotiation of a convention to prohibit the production and stockpiling of all biological weapons and toxins while studies proceeded on problems involved in full prohibition of chemical weapons.

In connexion with a declaration made by the United States on 25 November 1969 concerning renunciation of biological weapons, and other unilateral renunciations, Mexico proposed that, pending the negotiation of a comprehensive ban on chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons, States should renounce the use, manufacture and stockpiling of biological weapons by making unilateral declarations to coincide with the commemorative twenty-fifth session of the United Nations General Assembly (scheduled to be held in October of 1970).

Several Committee members, however, felt that such unilateral renunciations should not be regarded as a solution to the problem of prohibition of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons.

In connexion with a General Assembly decision of 16 December 1969<sup>8</sup> inviting all States which had not yet done so to accede to or ratify the Geneva Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare (signed on 17 June 1925), Japan announced that it had ratified the Protocol, without any reservations. Brazil announced that it had ratified the Protocol, while Morocco declared it had decided to ratify.

Italy and Japan urged parties to the Geneva Protocol to withdraw reservations made when acceding. Canada stated in this regard that it could consider withdrawing its reservations if an effective and verifiable total ban on chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons were concluded.

PREVENTION OF ARMS RACE ON THE SEA-BED

Bearing in mind the recommendations made by the General Assembly on 16 December 1969,<sup>9</sup> the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) gave the highest priority in 1970 to preparation of a final text of the draft treaty on the prohibition of the emplacement of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed and the ocean-floor and in the subsoil thereof. The General Assembly had discussed, in 1969, a draft treaty submitted to CCD by its Co-Chairmen, the USSR and the United States. This treaty, consisting of a preamble and eight articles, had been annexed to the report of CCD to the General Assembly.

On 23 April 1970, the USSR and the United States submitted a revised text of the draft treaty. This, to a considerable extent, took into account the proposals made at the 1969 session of the General Assembly and at the opening meetings of CCD in 1970.

This new text consisted of a preamble and 10 articles. The first article set forth the undertaking of party States not to place nuclear or other weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed and ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof.

The second article defined the outer limit of the sea-bed zone. The third article dealt with verification procedures; the fourth specified that the terms of the treaty would not prejudice the position of party States with respect to existing international conventions.

The fifth, sixth and seventh articles covered procedures for amendment, review and withdrawal. The eighth article stated that the treaty would not affect obligations under international instruments establishing nuclear-free zones.

The final two articles described procedures for signature, entry into force and authentic texts.

The revisions incorporated in this new text related to, among other things, the definition of the area covered by treaty prohibitions, verification procedure, a "disclaimer clause" in a separate article, and a stipulation that the treaty would in no way affect the obligations of parties under nuclear-free-zone treaties.

The USSR stated that the new text was the result of collective efforts and felt that it fulfilled every condition necessary for its adoption. The United States expressed the view that the new text struck a fair and delicate balance among various interests and also urged its early endorsement by the Committee.

During subsequent discussions, a number of Committee members expressed their satisfaction with this draft text of 23 April 1970. At the same time, other Committee members felt that the text might still be improved and its provisions might be further clarified through certain additional amendments.

Poland, and several others, urged the Conference to keep the question of a total demilitarization of the sea-bed on its agenda, since it considered that the proposed treaty was only a first step in this direction. Sweden and some other members favoured the incorporation in the draft treaty of a separate article committing parties to continue negotiations on further measures relating to a more comprehensive ban.

While satisfaction was generally expressed over the improvements in article III, which dealt with verification, several members felt that the verification provisions should also be further improved.

Canada regretted that the proposal it had made at the 1969 session of the General Assembly for an international verification arrangement or a reference to good offices of the Secretary-General was not reflected in the new text of the article. It was noted in this connexion that many coastal States did not possess the technology or resources necessary to carry out their own verification. Sweden felt that the failure to refer to the possibility of international control arrangements was a serious weakness of the draft treaty.

The USSR indicated its objections to the concept of a provision for international verification procedures or for the Secretary-General's good offices. These objections, it explained, were in no way associated with the person of the Secretary-General, but were a part of a wider problem beyond the framework of the proposed treaty.

On 30 July 1970, Burma, Ethiopia, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sweden, the United Arab Republic and Yugoslavia submitted two more amendments to the article concerning verification arrangements. These amendments provided for (1) notification by the party State initiating verification to other parties of the beginning and of the results of the verification procedure and (2) the establishment of appropriate international procedures for verification within the framework of the United Nations and in accordance with its Charter. Also proposed was a new article providing for continued negotiations in good faith on further measures relating to a more comprehensive ban of the use for military purposes of the sea-bed and the ocean floor.

The substance of these amendments was incorporated in another revision of the draft treaty submitted by the USSR and the United States on 1 September 1970. This text also took account of the suggestions regarding a more precise language with respect to the rights of coastal States.

The USSR and the United States explained provisions of the new draft and Argentina and Brazil made interpretative declarations.

Members of the Committee expressed satisfaction with the text of 1 September 1970 and with the consensus achieved. The hope was expressed that the new draft treaty would be commended by the Assembly and opened for signature at an early date.

GENERAL AND COMPLETE DISARMAMENT

The Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) reported to the General Assembly that it had given detailed attention to the recommendation the Assembly had made on 16 December 1969,<sup>10</sup> calling for the working out of a comprehensive programme, dealing with all aspects of the problem of cessation of the arms race and general and complete disarmament under effective international control.

Many members of CCD felt it was urgent to resume work on general and complete disarmament.

The USSR, reaffirming its continued dedication to the goal of general and complete disarmament, stressed in this connexion the importance of the 1961 United States/USSR Joint Statement of Agreed Principles for Disarmament Negotiations<sup>11</sup> and the 1962 USSR draft treaty on general and complete disarmament.<sup>12</sup> It also felt that the proposals put forward in CCD and elsewhere for revision of the 1962 draft treaty of the United States<sup>13</sup> and that of the USSR represented a positive factor.

The USSR shared the general view that the participation of the maximum number of militarily important States, particularly all nuclear-weapon powers, would be necessary in reaching any agreement on general and complete disarmament.

The United States also expressed continued support of the goal of general and complete disarmament. Progress towards that goal could not be made in a vacuum, the United States said, but would have to be accomplished by concrete progress towards a peaceful world, as had been recognized in the 1961 Joint Statement of Agreed Principles. However, the United States felt that the suggestions that it and the USSR revise their respective draft treaties for general and complete disarmament would not be productive.

In the course of the discussion on general and complete disarmament, members of the Committee stated their positions on, among other things, the interdependence of disarmament problems and questions of international peace and security, the relationship of partial disarmament measures to general and complete disarmament, the need to give due consideration to maintaining a balance between various measures to prevent armament, to limit armament and measures of disarmament. They also referred to the importance of converting resources released by disarmament to peaceful uses.

Concrete proposals were made with regard to the elaboration of a comprehensive programme of disarmament as referred to in the General Assembly's 1969 decision on the subject. No consensus was reached, though it was generally held that such a programme should come in the form of a flexible formula of specific measures that were realistic and practicable in the light of national security interests and the international climate.

Brazil suggested certain principles for disarmament negotiations, including the need to ensure that disarmament measures did not affect adversely the economic, scientific and technological development of developing nations or prejudice or prejudice unresolved juridical and other questions in any outside field.

India proposed that the 1961 Joint Statement of Agreed Principles for Disarmament Negotiations could be elaborated into a comprehensive programme of disarmament.

Romania elaborated its ideas on the contents of a programme for the Disarmament Decade (1970s) and suggested further specific steps leading to disarmament, including a proposal for the establishment of a nuclear-free zone in the Balkans.

The United States felt that the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament should look at proposed measures in the light of present world realities and should determine whether particular measures should be elaborated immediately or later, without trying to agree, however, on a particular order of measures which, the United States felt, would be futile if not harmful.

The USSR favoured the elaboration of a disarmament programme that was realistic, flexible and based on the 1961 Joint Statement of Agreed Principles, as well as on the concrete results achieved in the field of disarmament so far. In the view of the USSR, such a programme should not be related to any specific period of time or to a time-table, but the Committee should seek to achieve the earliest possible agreement on the most urgent measures.

Specific proposals concerning a comprehensive programme of disarmament were submitted by several CCD members. The Netherlands, for instance, submitted an analysis of steps that should lead towards such a comprehensive programme.

Italy made various proposals concerning the approach to the goals, the principles and the main elements of a comprehensive disarmament programme. Italy also proposed a programme of studies on the question of the reduction of armed forces and conventional disarmament within the framework of a comprehensive programme and the undertaking to open negotiations for such reductions.

On 27 August 1970, Mexico, Sweden and Yugoslavia submitted a draft plan for a comprehensive programme of disarmament. This contained principles and proposals as to elements and phases of the programme and procedures for its implementation. The draft plan stated that the aim of such a comprehensive programme was to achieve tangible progress towards the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control in a world in which international peace and security prevailed and economic and social progress were attained.

The Committee noted in its report to the General Assembly that in view of the great importance and complexity of these questions, as well as the wealth of concrete considerations and proposals meriting broad and thorough study by Governments and further discussion in the Committee, it intended to continue discussion of general and complete disarmament in 1971.

OTHER DISARMAMENT MEASURES

As requested by another General Assembly decision taken on 16 December 1969,<sup>14</sup> the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament gave consideration to the military implications of laser technology. The Committee agreed with the views contained in an analysis submitted by the Netherlands to the effect that the highly speculative character of the conceivable military applications of laser technology for weapons purposes did not seem to substantiate the need for arms control consideration at this time, although further developments in this field should be followed attentively.

CONSIDERATION OF DISARMAMENT QUESTIONS BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly, which opened on 15 September 1970, had seven disarmament items on its agenda. Five of these items were included by virtue of resolutions adopted by the Assembly in 1969, namely: the question of general and complete disarmament; the question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons; the urgent need for suspension of nuclear and thermonuclear tests; implementation of the results of the Conference of Non-Nuclear-Weapon States; and the establishment, within the framework of the International Atomic Energy Agency, of an international service for nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes under appropriate international control.

The question of signature and ratification of Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) was included in the agenda on the request of 11 Latin American States, and an item dealing with the economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security was proposed for inclusion by Romania.

These items were taken up mainly in the Assembly's First Committee, which decided to discuss all seven agenda items together in general debate, and to consider separately the draft resolutions relating to each item. The First Committee's discussions were conducted at meetings held between 2 November and 2 December 1970.

In all, 11 resolutions were adopted by the General Assembly. Four dealt with the question of general and complete disarmament, including the treaty prohibiting nuclear arms on the sea-bed, the bilateral disarmament negotiations, safeguards concerning new techniques for uranium enrichment, and the achievement of disarmament. Two resolutions were concerned with the cessation of nuclear weapon tests. The remainder dealt with: the question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons; implementation of the results of the Conference of Non-Nuclear-Weapon States; establishment of an international service for nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes; ratification by nuclear-weapon States of additional Protocol II to the Treaty of Tlatelolco (by which those States would, among other things, respect the denuclearized status of Latin America); and the economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its effects on world peace and security.

General and Complete Disarmament

General Assembly discussion in 1970 touched upon many aspects of the question of general and complete disarmament, including nuclear and conventional disarmament, the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, the Strategic Arms Limitations Talks (SALT) between the USSR and the United States, and the Disarmament Decade.

Discussion took place mainly in the Assembly's First Committee. Among the reports and statements before the Committee was a declaration on peace and disarmament by the Nobel Peace Prize laureates, which was presented to the President of the twenty-fifth (1970) session of the General Assembly and to the Secretary-General on 21 September 1970. The declaration was circulated at the request of Mexico, Sweden and Yugoslavia. Also before the Committee was a letter from the Permanent Representative of Hungary addressed to the President of the General Assembly, transmitting a letter from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the German Democratic Republic with which was enclosed a statement on the question of disarmament and arms limitation.

In the course of the session, four aspects of general and complete disarmament were considered and acted upon by the Assembly. These were: (1) the draft treaty on the prohibition of the emplacement of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof, submitted by the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) as requested by the Assembly on 16 December 1969;<sup>15</sup> (2) a halt in the nuclear arms race and a cessation of all testing and deployment of offensive and defensive nuclear-weapon systems; (3) new techniques for uranium enrichment; and (4) a comprehensive programme of disarmament.

TREATY BANNING NUCLEAR WEAPONS FROM SEA-BED

The General Assembly had before it the text for the draft treaty on the prohibition of the emplacement of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof, as transmitted by CCD. The text was jointly sponsored in CCD by the USSR and the United States, Co-Chairmen of that body.

The text was generally viewed by First Committee Members as an important, even if limited, achievement, whose significance would progressively increase. Satisfaction was expressed that the negotiations had been successful, and that many countries had contributed to the elaboration of the draft.

On 6 December 1970, the General Assembly commended the Treaty, asked depositary Governments to open the Treaty for signature and ratification at the earliest possible date, and expressed hope for the widest possible adherence to the Treaty.

In taking this decision, the Assembly expressed its conviction that the prevention of a nuclear arms race on the sea-bed and the ocean floor served the interests of maintaining world peace, reducing international tensions and strengthening friendly relations among States. It also recognized the common interest of mankind in the reservation of the sea-bed and the ocean floor exclusively for peaceful purposes and was convinced the Treaty would further the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter.

The Treaty contained a preamble and 11 articles.

By the first article, the parties to the Treaty would undertake not to emplant or emplace on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof, beyond the outer limit of a sea-bed zone, any nuclear weapons or any other types of weapons of mass destruction, as well as structures, launching installations or any other facilities specifically designed for storing, testing or using such weapons. Within such sea-bed zone, these undertakings would not apply either to the coastal State or to the sea-bed beneath its territorial waters.

The second article of the Treaty stated that the outer limit of the sea-bed zone referred to in article I was coterminous with the 12-mile outer limit of the zone referred to in the Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone, signed at Geneva on 29 April 1958, and was to be measured in accordance with the provisions of that Convention.

Article III of the Treaty defined the right of each party to the Treaty to verify through observation the activities of other party States on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof, beyond the 12-mile zone, provided that observation did not interfere with such activities.

If, after observations, reasonable doubts remained concerning the fulfilment of Treaty obligations, a party State having such doubts and the party State responsible for the activities giving rise to the doubts were to first consult; then, if doubts persisted, the party having doubts was to notify other parties and the parties concerned were to co-operate on further procedures for verification, as might be agreed. The parties in the region of the activities, including any coastal State, and any other party so requesting were to be entitled to participate in such consultation and co-operation.

If the State responsible for the activities giving rise to reasonable doubts was not identifiable by observation of the object, structure, installation or other facility, the party State having doubts was to notify and make inquiries of party States in the region of the activities and of any other party State. If it was ascertained through these inquiries that a particular party State was responsible for the activities, that party State should consult and co-operate with other parties as provided in this article. If the identity of the State responsible for the activities could not be ascertained through inquiries, then further verification procedures, including inspection, might be undertaken by the inquiring party.

If consultation and co-operation procedures had not removed the doubts and there remained a serious question concerning fulfilment of the Treaty obligations, a party State might, in accordance with the provisions of the United Nations Charter, refer the matter to the Security Council which might take action in accordance with the Charter.

Verification might be undertaken by any party State using its own means, or with the full or partial assistance of any other party State, or through appropriate international procedures within the framework of the United Nations and in accordance with its Charter.

Verification procedures under the Treaty were to be conducted with due regard for rights recognized under international law, including the freedoms of the high seas and the rights of coastal States with respect to the exploration and exploitation of their continental shelves.

Article IV contained a disclaimer clause stating that nothing in the Treaty should be interpreted as supporting or prejudicing the position of any party State with respect to existing international conventions, including the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone, or with respect to rights or claims which such party State might assert, or with respect to recognition or non-recognition of rights or claims asserted by any other State, related to waters off its coasts, including, inter alia, territorial seas and contiguous zones, or to the sea-bed and the ocean floor, including continental shelves.

By article V, the parties would undertake to continue negotiations in good faith concerning further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed, the ocean floor, and in the subsoil thereof.

Articles VI, VII and VIII dealt with provisions for amendments, review of the Treaty and the right to withdraw from the Treaty.

Article IX provided that the Treaty would in no way affect the obligations assumed by party States to the Treaty under international instruments establishing zones free from nuclear weapons.

Articles X and XI dealt with signature, ratification and entry into force and authentic texts.

The General Assembly's decision to commend the Treaty was set forth in resolution 2660 (XXV), adopted by a recorded vote of 104 to 2, with 2 abstentions. (For text of resolution and Treaty, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

of the resolution on 17 November 1970, approving it by a roll-call vote of 91 to 2, with 6 abstentions. Prior to approving the text, the First Committee voted on a series of Peruvian amendments.

One of these, an amendment to the preamble, was adopted. By this, the Assembly recognized that it was in the general interest of mankind to ensure that the sea-bed and the ocean floor were used exclusively for peaceful purposes. (The original text would have had the Assembly recognize the common interest of mankind in the progress of the exploration and use of the sea-bed and the ocean floor for peaceful purposes.)

Other amendments by Peru were intended to revise certain parts of the text of the Treaty. These were, however, rejected. Among them were amendments which would in effect remove references in articles I-IV to the definition of the outer limit of the sea-bed zone as referred to in the Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone, signed at Geneva on 29 April 1958.

The sponsors of the resolution in the First Committee were Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Burma, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ethiopia, Finland, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Somalia, Sudan, Sweden, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia.

During the First Committee's debate on the draft treaty, Mexico put two questions to the USSR and the United States, Co-Chairmen of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament and co-sponsors of the draft treaty. These questions dealt with the meaning and scope of certain specific provisions of the draft treaty.

With reference to the provision of the draft treaty (article I, paragraph 2), which stated that the undertakings not to emplace nuclear weapons (contained in paragraph 1) "shall not apply either to the coastal State or to the sea-bed beneath its territorial waters," Mexico requested an explanation of the significance and the scope of the exception applied to the sea-bed of the territorial waters of the coastal State.

Mexico also questioned the significance and scope of the provision (article I, paragraph 3) wherein parties undertook not to assist, encourage or induce any State to carry out prohibited activities in connexion with the article which stated that treaty provisions should not affect the obligations of parties under international instruments establishing nuclear-weapon-free zones (article IX). Mexico asked whether the statements made on this question at a CCD meeting on 1 September 1970 by the USSR and the United States representatives represented the authorized interpretations of their respective Governments.

The United States replied that it considered that the provision which was the subject of Mexico's first inquiry (article I, paragraph 2) did not in any way affect the sovereignty, under international law, of the coastal State over its territorial waters and its sea-bed within the zone mentioned in the same paragraph and, consequently, the provisions of this paragraph left intact and unimpaired all rights of the coastal State derived from that sovereignty.

To put the matter in an affirmative manner, the United States said, this provision was designed to leave unaffected the sovereign authority and control of the coastal State within such territorial sea. The intention of the provision was simply to describe the scope of the treaty's obligations. It was, of course, fully consistent with the disclaimer clause in article IV of the treaty (which provided that nothing in the treaty would prejudice States' rights or claims with respect to international conventions), in that it did not support or prejudice the position of any State with respect to rights or claims related to waters off its coast, including, among other things, territorial seas.

In reply to Mexico's second question, the United States confirmed that the position it had expressed in CCD on 1 September to the effect that the provision in the current draft treaty for an undertaking not to assist, encourage or induce any State to carry out prohibited activities, would be fully applicable within any nuclear-free zone. Therefore, the provision would seem to achieve the objectives of the proposals made by Mexico at the General Assembly session in 1969 that the treaty include provisions: (1) to ensure that the treaty could not be interpreted as affecting obligations establishing nuclear-free zones; and (2) for an undertaking not to contribute to a violation of such obligations.

On the same point, the USSR confirmed that its official position remained that which it had given on 1 September 1970 in CCD to the effect that it interpreted the obligation involved in the treaty provision in question as fully covering the Mexican proposals.

The USSR stated that with regard to Mexico's question concerning article I, paragraph 2 of the treaty, no interpretation of that paragraph could in any way prejudice the sovereignty of a coastal State in connexion with its territorial waters and the sea-bed beneath those waters within the 12-mile zone mentioned in that paragraph. Therefore that provision must be interpreted as embodying the intangible rights of all coastal States arising from such sovereignty under international law.

In addition, the USSR stressed the need to be mindful of the fact that article IV of the treaty on the sea-bed specifically stated that the treaty in no way prejudiced the rights or claims of the coastal States in matters of territorial waters. The treaty, the USSR noted, related only to problems concerning the matter of the demilitarization of the sea-bed.

BILATERAL DISARMAMENT TALKS

During the General Assembly's discussions in 1970 of nuclear disarmament, reference was made in the First Committee to the Assembly's appeal of 16 December 1969<sup>16</sup> to the USSR and the United States to agree, as an urgent preliminary measure, on a moratorium on further testing and deployment of new offensive and defensive strategic nuclear-weapon systems.

On 7 December 1970, the Assembly noted with satisfaction the continuation of bilateral negotiations between the USSR and the United States on the limitation of offensive and defensive strategic nuclear-weapon systems (the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks known as SALT). Expressing the belief that the possibilities for rapid success in the talks would increase if the nuclear-weapon powers halted development of new nuclear weapons, the Assembly then urged those powers to bring about an immediate halt in the nuclear arms race and to cease all testing as well as deployment of offensive and defensive nuclear-weapon systems.

The Assembly's decisions in this respect were set forth in resolution 2661 A (XXV) adopted by 102 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions.

The text was adopted on the proposal of the First Committee which approved it on 30 November 1970 by 80 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions. The sponsors of the text in the First Committee were Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Ethiopia, India, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sweden, the United Arab Republic and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In the course of the First Committee's discussion of this resolution, and in connexion with the Assembly's 1969 appeal for a moratorium on further testing and deployment of new offensive and defensive strategic nuclear-weapon systems,<sup>17</sup> some Members appealed that the parties to the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT) should not take steps that could reduce prospects for agreement. Those supporting the resolution emphasized that it did not imply any criticism of SALT. Canada, expressing support for the resolution, stated that it was unrealistic to expect rapid progress from the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks, which involved the most fundamental security interests of the parties. The Netherlands, abstaining in the vote, said it would not be opportune to make specific recommendations concerning the conduct of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks.

URANIUM-ENRICHMENT SAFEGUARDS

Also dealt with by the General Assembly in 1970 was the necessity of ensuring safeguards in the employment of new techniques for uranium enrichment. On 7 December, the Assembly decided to ask the International Atomic Energy Agency to pay attention also to such safeguards and to report to the Assembly in 1971 on its consideration of this subject.

The Assembly's decision was set forth in resolution 2661 B (XXV) which was adopted by 107 votes to 0, with 7 abstentions. The First

Committee approved the text on 30 November 1970 by 91 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions, on the proposal of Malta. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

PROPOSALS FOR DISARMAMENT PROGRAMMES

During the First Committee's debate in 1970 on the question of a comprehensive disarmament programme, references were made to proposals submitted earlier in the year to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) by Italy and the Netherlands, and, particularly, to the draft disarmament programme submitted jointly by Mexico, Sweden and Yugoslavia to CCD.

On 16 December 1969, the General Assembly asked CCD to work out, while continuing intensive negotiations on collateral measures, a comprehensive programme dealing with all aspects of the problem of the cessation of the arms race and general and complete disarmament under effective international control, which would provide a guideline to chart the course of its further work and negotiations.<sup>18</sup>

On 18 November 1970, Ireland, Mexico, Morocco, Pakistan, Sweden and Yugoslavia submitted a draft resolution to the First Committee, to which was annexed a comprehensive programme of disarmament substantively similar to that which three of them—Mexico, Sweden and Yugoslavia—had submitted earlier in the year to CCD. Subsequently, the six States submitted their proposals for the comprehensive programme of disarmament separately from the six-power draft resolution.

In the introduction to this six-power programme, it was stated that the programme had been elaborated in compliance with a General Assembly request of 16 December 1969,<sup>19</sup> declaring the decade of the 1970s as a Disarmament Decade and calling on Governments to intensify efforts for a treaty on general and complete disarmament. The sponsors believed that the Assembly's request implied that the comprehensive programme of disarmament should embrace not only the work of CCD but all negotiations and other acts on this matter, in whatever forum and form they might take place, and that the programme should include effective procedures to facilitate co-ordination and ensure that the Assembly be kept informed, so as to permit it the proper performance of its functions.

The aim of the comprehensive programme, it was stated, was to achieve tangible progress in making general and complete disarmament under effective international control a reality.

Among the principles outlined for the programme were the following:

The measures in the comprehensive programme should be carried out in accordance with the USSR/United States Joint Statement of Agreed Principles for Disarmament Negotiations of September 1961.<sup>20</sup>

The highest priority should be given to disarmament measures dealing with nuclear and chemical and biological weapons.

The problem of general and complete disarmament should be given intensive treatment, parallel to the negotiations of partial disarmament measures, including measures to prevent, limit and reduce armaments, in order to facilitate further clarifications of positions and possibilities, including the revision and updating of the existing draft treaties submitted (in 1962) by the USSR and the United States.<sup>21</sup>

The principle of balanced disarmament should be kept in mind. Particular efforts would have to be undertaken by militarily important powers in order to reduce the gap between them and other countries. The final solution of limiting and reducing conventional armaments could only be obtained within the framework of general and complete disarmament.

Verification methods formed an indispensable part of disarmament measures. As a rule, a combination of several mutually reinforcing methods should be employed.

The comprehensive programme should be correlated with other United Nations programmes for peace-keeping and international security. Progress in one, however, should not be made dependent on the other.

When concluding disarmament agreements, any adverse effects on the scientific, technological or economic future of nations should be avoided.

A substantial portion of savings derived from disarmament should be devoted to economic and social development.

In disarmament agreements, every effort should be made not to prejudge or prejudice juridical or other unresolved issues in any outside field.

Concerted efforts should be made to associate militarily significant States, in particular all nuclear-weapon powers, with disarmament negotiations.

The United Nations should be kept informed of all disarmament efforts, whether unilateral, bilateral or multilateral, and public opinion should be given adequate information about armament and disarmament so as to bring its influence to bear on disarmament efforts.

Elements and phases of the six-power disarmament programme included the disarmament treaties already in force or in preparation. The fulfilment of the obligations arising from these treaties was emphasized.

Other measures proposed by the six-power disarmament programme covered: various aspects of the prevention and limitation of nuclear and conventional armaments; reduction of all arms, armed forces and military expenditures; and, as the final stage of the comprehensive programme, conclusion of a treaty on general and complete disarmament under effective international control, providing for the prohibition and elimination of nuclear weapons and the reduction of conventional armaments and armed forces to levels required for the maintenance of internal order and for international peace-keeping.

The six-power proposal for a disarmament programme also stressed the inter-relationship between disarmament, international security, the peaceful settlement of disputes and creating a climate of confidence. Parallel with negotiations for disarmament there should be negotiations in the appropriate forums for the establishment and development of United Nations peace-making and peace-keeping machinery and procedures.

It was also proposed that the General Assembly should review and revise the programme and that the United Nations Disarmament Commission might be reactivated and given part of this task. The practice of asking the Secretary-General to prepare studies on concrete questions should be continued and the advisability of studying specific disarmament problems should be explored in CCD. Also, there should be more scientific exchanges among scientists and experts from various countries, and universities should be encouraged to establish continuing courses to study disarmament problems.

Finally, a study of the feasibility of convening a world disarmament conference of all States should be made.

The outcome of the Assembly discussions was a resolution whereby the Assembly, reaffirming once again the responsibility of the United Nations in the attainment of general and complete disarmament which was the most important question currently facing the world, urged the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to make more intensive efforts to bring about a faster pace towards the achievement of measures of disarmament.

The Assembly also recommended that CCD take into account in its further work and its negotiations the comprehensive programme of disarmament submitted by Ireland, Mexico, Morocco, Pakistan, Sweden and Yugoslavia to the General Assembly, as well as other disarmament suggestions presented or to be presented.

These decisions of the Assembly were embodied in resolution 2661 C (XXV), adopted at a plenary meeting on 7 December 1970 by a roll-call vote of 106 to 0, with 10 abstentions.

The General Assembly acted on the recommendation of the First Committee, which had approved the text of the resolution on 3 December by a roll-call vote of 91 to 0, with 11 abstentions, on the proposal of Argentina, Brazil, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ireland, Italy, Malta, Mexico, Morocco, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sweden, Uruguay, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

ANNEX

TREATY ON THE PROHIBITION OF THE EMBLACEMENT OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS AND OTHER WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION ON THE SEA-BED AND THE OCEAN FLOOR AND IN THE SUBSOIL THEREOF

The States Parties to this Treaty,

Recognizing the common interest of mankind in the progress of the exploration and use of the sea-bed and the ocean floor for peaceful purposes,

Considering that the prevention of a nuclear arms race on the sea-bed and the ocean floor serves the interests of maintaining world peace, reduces international tensions and strengthens friendly relations among States,

Convinced that this Treaty constitutes a step towards the exclusion of the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof from the arms race,

Convinced that this Treaty constitutes a step towards a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control, and determined to continue negotiations to this end,

Convinced that this Treaty will further the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in a manner consistent with the principles of international law and without infringing the freedoms of the high seas,

Have agreed as follows:

Article I

1. The States Parties to this Treaty undertake not to emplant or emplace on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof beyond the outer limit of a sea-bed zone, as defined in article II, any nuclear weapons or any other types of weapons of mass destruction as well as structures, launching installations or any other facilities specifically designed for storing, testing or using such weapons.

2. The undertakings of paragraph 1 of this article shall also apply to the sea-bed zone referred to in the same paragraph, except that within such sea-bed zone, they shall not apply either to the coastal State or to the sea-bed beneath its territorial waters.

3. The States Parties to this Treaty undertake not to assist, encourage or induce any State to carry out activities referred to in paragraph 1 of this article and not to participate in any other way in such actions.

Article II

For the purpose of this Treaty, the outer limit of the sea-bed zone referred to in article I shall be co-terminous with the twelve-mile outer limit of the zone referred to in part II of the Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone, signed at Geneva on 29 April 1958, and shall be measured in accordance with the provisions of part I, section II, of that Convention and in accordance with international law.

Article III

1. In order to promote the objectives of and ensure compliance with the provisions of this Treaty, each State Party to the Treaty shall have the right to verify through observation the activities of other States Parties to the Treaty on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof beyond the zone referred to in article I, provided that observation does not interfere with such activities.

2. If after such observation reasonable doubts remain concerning the fulfilment of the obligations assumed under the Treaty, the State Party having such doubts and the State Party that is responsible for the activities giving rise to the doubts shall consult with a view to removing the doubts. If the doubts persist, the State Party having such doubts shall notify the other States Parties, and the Parties concerned shall co-operate on such further procedures for verification as may be agreed, including appropriate inspection of objects, structures, installations or other facilities that reasonably may be expected to be of a kind described in article I. The Parties in the region of the activities, including any coastal State, and any other Party so requesting, shall be entitled to participate in such consultation and co-operation. After completion of the further procedures for verification, an appropriate report shall be circulated to other Parties by the Party that initiated such procedures.

3. If the State responsible for the activities giving rise to the reasonable doubts is not identifiable by observation of the object, structure, installation or other facility, the State Party having such doubts shall notify and make appropriate inquiries of States Parties in the region of the activities and of any other State Party. If it is ascertained through these inquiries that a particular State Party is responsible for the activities, that State Party shall consult and co-operate with other Parties as provided in paragraph 2 of this article. If the identity of the State responsible for the activities cannot be ascertained through these inquiries, then further verification procedures, including inspection, may be undertaken by the inquiring State Party, which shall invite the participation of the Parties in the region of the activities, including any coastal State, and of any other Party desiring to co-operate.

4. If consultation and co-operation pursuant to paragraphs 2 and 3 of this article have not removed the doubts concerning the activities and there remains a serious question concerning fulfilment of the obligations assumed under this Treaty, a State Party may, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, refer the matter to the Security Council, which may take action in accordance with the Charter.

5. Verification pursuant to this article may be undertaken by any State Party using its own means, or with the full or partial assistance of any other State Party, or through appropriate international procedures within the framework of the United Nations and in accordance with its Charter.

6. Verification activities pursuant to this Treaty shall not interfere with activities of other States Parties and shall be conducted with due regard for rights recognized under international law, including the freedoms of the high seas and the rights of coastal States with respect to the exploration and exploitation of their continental shelves.

Article IV

Nothing in this Treaty shall be interpreted as supporting or prejudicing the position of any State Party with respect to existing international conventions, including the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone, or with respect to rights or claims which such State Party may assert, or with respect to recognition or non-recognition of rights or claims asserted by any other State, related to waters off its coasts, including, inter alia, territorial seas and contiguous zones, or to the sea-bed and the ocean floor, including continental shelves.

Article V

The Parties to this Treaty undertake to continue negotiations in good faith concerning further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof.

Article VI

Any State Party may propose amendments to this Treaty. Amendments shall enter into force for each State Party accepting the amendments upon their acceptance by a majority of the States Parties to the Treaty and, thereafter, for each remaining State Party on the date of acceptance by it.

Article VII

Five years after the entry into force of this Treaty, a conference of Parties to the Treaty shall be held at Geneva, Switzerland, in order to review the operation of this Treaty with a view to assuring that the purposes of the preamble and the provisions of the Treaty are being realized. Such review shall take into account any relevant technological developments. The review conference shall determine, in accordance with the views of a majority of those Parties attending, whether and when an additional review conference shall be convened.

Article VIII

Each State Party to this Treaty shall in exercising its national sovereignty have the right to withdraw from this Treaty if it decides that extraordinary events related to the subject-matter of this Treaty have jeopardized the supreme interests of its country. It shall give notice of such withdrawal to all other States Parties to the Treaty and to the United Nations Security Council three months in advance. Such notice shall include a statement of the extraordinary events it considers to have jeopardized its supreme interests.

Article IX

The provisions of this Treaty shall in no way affect the obligations assumed by States Parties to the Treaty under international instruments establishing zones free from nuclear weapons.

Article X

1. This Treaty shall be open for signature to all States. Any State which does not sign the Treaty before its entry into force in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article may accede to it at any time.

2. This Treaty shall be subject to ratification by signatory States. Instruments of ratification and of accession shall be deposited with the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, which are hereby designated the Depositary Governments.

3. This Treaty shall enter into force after the deposit of instruments of ratification by twenty-two Governments, including the Governments designated as Depositary Governments of this Treaty.

4. For States whose instruments of ratification or accession are deposited after the entry into force of this Treaty, it shall enter into force on the date of the deposit of their instruments of ratification or accession.

5. The Depositary Governments shall promptly inform the Governments of all signatory and acceding States of the date of each signature, of the date of deposit of each instrument of ratification or of accession, of the date of the entry into force of this Treaty, and of the receipt of other notices.

6. This Treaty shall be registered by the Depositary Governments pursuant to Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

Article XI

This Treaty, the Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts of which are equally authentic, shall be deposited in the archives of the Depositary Governments. Duly certified copies of this Treaty shall be transmitted by the Depositary Governments to the Governments of the States signatory and acceding thereto.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto, have signed this Treaty.

Recalling its resolution 2602 E (XXIV) of 16 December 1969,

Further recalling its resolution 1722(XVI) of 20 December 1961, by which it welcomed the joint statement of agreed principles for disarmament negotiations, submitted on 20 September 1961 by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America,

Reaffirming once again the responsibility of the United Nations in the attainment of general and complete disarmament, which is the most important question facing the world today,

Considering that it has declared the decade of the 1970s as the Disarmament Decade,

Having considered the working papers on a comprehensive programme of disarmament submitted by the Netherlands on 24 February 1970 and by Italy on 19 August 1970, and the draft comprehensive programme of disarmament submitted by Mexico, Sweden and Yugoslavia on 27 August 1970 to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament,

Having considered also the opinions expressed in the debates of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament and of the First Committee concerning the question of a comprehensive programme of disarmament,

1. Urges the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to make more intensive efforts to bring about a faster pace towards the achievement of disarmament measures;

2. Expresses its appreciation of the important and constructive documents and views submitted at the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, including the working papers on a comprehensive programme of disarmament submitted by the Netherlands on 24 February 1970 and by Italy on 19 August 1970, and the draft comprehensive programme of disarmament submitted by Mexico, Sweden and Yugoslavia on 27 August 1970, and of the comprehensive programme of disarmament submitted to the General Assembly by Ireland, Mexico, Morocco, Pakistan, Sweden and Yugoslavia on 1 December 1970;

3. Recommends to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament that it take into account in its further work and its negotiations the comprehensive programme of disarmament submitted on 1 December 1970, as well as other disarmament suggestions presented or to be presented in the future.

Question of Chemical and Bacteriological (Biological) Weapons

Also considered at the 1970 session of the General Assembly was the question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons. Discussion was held mainly in the Assembly's First Committee, which had before it the 1970 report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) to the General Assembly and the revised text of a draft convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons and on the destruction of such weapons, submitted to the General Assembly on 23 October 1970 by the following nine States: Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR. (The first version of this nine-power text was submitted to the General Assembly in 1969.<sup>22</sup>)

Also before the Committee was a draft convention prohibiting biological methods of warfare, submitted by the United Kingdom to CCD on 18 August 1970 and appended to CCD's report to the Assembly.

Participants in the debate indicated there was a growing concern over the continued development of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons and an increasing sense of urgency to reach an effective solution.

Differences of opinion which had been expressed in previous years and at the 1970 meetings of CCD (see pp. 5-7 above) were reflected again in the debate, in the draft conventions under discussion and in the draft resolutions submitted to the First Committee.

Thus, the USSR and many other Members continued to support a joint treatment of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons in a comprehensive convention. On the other hand, the United States, the United Kingdom and some others continued to believe that it would be possible and preferable to reach early agreement on a separate convention banning biological weapons as a first step.

In this connexion, France observed that it could not see how separating chemical and biological weapons could facilitate a solution of the problem; Ireland felt that the elimination of chemical weapons might be postponed indefinitely if only biological weapons were banned at first. Canada said that a high priority should be given to efforts to prohibit both types of weapons; it felt, however, that the difficulties in making progress on one should not rule out progress on the other. Norway believed that the prohibition of chemical and biological weapons could be discussed concurrently.

Japan, Kenya, Lebanon, Pakistan and Sudan welcomed the principle of joint treatment of chemical and biological weapons advocated in the nine-power draft convention submitted to the General Assembly. Kenya considered that joint treatment was justified since both were covered by the Geneva Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare (signed on 17 June 1925). Lebanon believed that an agreement should cover both types of weapons, despite inspection problems for the production of chemical weapons.

Norway noted that the objective should be an effective ban on the use, development, production and stockpiling of chemical and biological weapons, including a ban on the use in war of herbicides and tear gas, and that such a ban must be backed by a credible guarantee that it would be respected by all nations. Several countries, including Malta and New Zealand, felt that the enforcement procedures proposed under the nine-power draft convention were not satisfactory.

The argument was advanced by Committee Members opposing the concept of dealing with biological weapons alone that such an approach would undermine the Geneva Protocol. The USSR argued that the proposal to prohibit only biological weapons could be regarded as an attempt to balk at finding agreement on banning chemical weapons and to maintain chemical weapons for military purposes.

Many States also spoke on the draft convention submitted by the United Kingdom at the

Conference of the Committee on Disarmament. The United Kingdom maintained that further delay on an agreement banning biological weapons could be dangerous and that a joint prohibition of chemical and biological weapons could never be agreed.

The United States continued to believe it would be possible and desirable to reach early agreement on a separate convention prohibiting biological weapons, noting that the declared intentions of many of the countries capable of making and using these weapons were such that agreement to ban production and stockpiling should be within reach. The United States observed that it had proposed, and the United Kingdom had accepted, the inclusion of toxins in the biological weapons draft convention.

Australia, Belgium, China, Denmark, Greece, Italy, Nepal, the Netherlands and New Zealand specifically supported the objectives of the United Kingdom draft convention and the proposals for early agreement on a separate convention.

The need to strengthen the Geneva Protocol by universal accession, as well as observance, was stressed in the debate by many Members, among them Austria, Brazil, the Byelorussian SSR, China, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Lebanon, Libya, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sudan, Turkey, Venezuela and the USSR. The United States, for instance, recalled that the Geneva Protocol had been sent to the United States Senate for ratification.

The adherence to the Protocol by a number of States in 1970 was welcomed. Yugoslavia informed the General Assembly of its decision to renounce unilaterally the manufacture and use of chemical and biological weapons. Belgium and the United Kingdom stated that such unilateral declarations were valuable. The latter emphasized, however, the need for proper multilateral instruments binding Governments and their successors.

Canada said it did not possess or produce either chemical or biological agents of warfare and had no intention, under any circumstances, of acquiring or using such agents. However, until a verifiable agreement could be concluded, it had to reserve the right to retaliate if these weapons were used against the civil population or the armed forces of Canada or of its allies.

Nepal and Italy held that all reservations which had been made to the Geneva Protocol should be withdrawn. Ethiopia suggested that CCD should investigate the means of removing these reservations of signatory States.

During the First Committee's debate, the 12 members of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament who described themselves as non-aligned (Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Ethiopia, India, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sweden, the United Arab Republic and Yugoslavia) referred to certain of the principles included in the joint memorandum on chemical and biological weapons which they had submitted to CCD on 25 August 1970. These principles were: (1) it was urgent and important to reach agreement to halt the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical and biological weapons; (2) chemical and biological weapons should continue to be dealt with together in taking further steps towards their prohibition; and (3) the issue of verification was important and should be based upon a combination of appropriate national and international measures, which would complement and supplement each other.

Colombia, Indonesia and Venezuela associated themselves with the objectives and principles of the joint memorandum, stressing it was essential that both chemical and biological weapons continue to be dealt with together.

It was generally agreed that the question of verification was an important element of a ban on chemical and biological weapons. However, the views of Members differed considerably in this regard.

The United States appealed for the development of an acceptable system of verification, which would ensure effective implementation of the prohibition. The United Kingdom felt that the work of CCD on the question of verification was disappointing, as none of the ideas so far advanced adequately safeguarded an agreement to ban chemical weapons at this time.

On the other hand, the USSR and others, including Bulgaria, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, considered that verification, as envisaged in the nine-power draft convention which was based on a combination of complementary national and international measures, would ensure an acceptable system of control and guarantee effective compliance with treaty prohibitions. The USSR stressed that given the peculiar nature of chemical and biological weapons, the production of which was closely related to the peaceful production of chemical and biological substances, a type of verification involving control posts and inspection teams would be impossible.

Indonesia, Kenya, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sierra Leone, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Venezuela agreed with the position that verification should be based on a combination of appropriate national and international measures. China and France felt that the procedures envisaged in the 12-power joint memorandum did not provide with sufficient clarity for satisfactory methods of enforcing prohibition.

Japan suggested there should be a full discussion of the problem of effective verification before proceeding to legal formulation. The following substantive matters should be further examined: (1) the problem relating to recourse to the Secretary-General for investigation of suspected violations, as well as to the setting up of a roster of experts to assist the Secretary-General in this task; (2) the establishment of criteria for an investigation, including the possibility of using the facilities of existing international organizations; (3) the question of ensuring that the treaty ban would not hinder the production of chemical and biological agents for peaceful purposes, as well as the problem of banning ancillary equipment which could facilitate chemical and biological warfare; (4) the establishment of a statistical reporting system as possible evidence for a violation complaint; and (5) the question of safe and efficient methods of diversion or destruction of weapons.

These Japanese suggestions were supported by Australia, Denmark, France and New Zealand, among others. France felt that such a report should be prepared for the 1971 session of the General Assembly. New Zealand considered that a study on verification procedures for biological weapons might be carried out within CCD by qualified international experts.

Canada, Cyprus and Nigeria referred to the possibility of "verification by challenge" within the context of a ban on chemical and biological weapons. ("Verification by challenge" is a system originally proposed by Sweden whereby a party suspected of violations would find it in its interest to provide all available reassuring information.) Canada held, however, that chemical weapons posed problems of a different dimension; measures additional to "verification by challenge" might be necessary, and there might be need for both national and international procedures. Further definition of these procedures remained, in Canada's view, one of the highest priority items for CCD consideration.

Nigeria agreed that while the concept of "verification by challenge" could be applied to a ban on biological weapons, it would be inadequate in the case of chemical weapons. Neither intensive on-site inspection nor national self-control would constitute satisfactory verification, in Nigeria's view. Such verification of chemical weapons should be based on a combination of appropriate national and international measures.

Nepal said that the existing techniques for monitoring the production and field testing of chemical weapons constituted adequate verification, consistent with the low risk involved in any possible violation of a moratorium. However, as in the case of a comprehensive test ban, Nepal added, the decision on verification arrangements was basically a political one.

During the debate, France stressed the need in any action taken by the Assembly for assurances with regard to verification. France also had doubts as to the wisdom of having the question of banning chemical and biological weapons dealt with in CCD, a procedure, France felt, which had so far failed to yield the expected results.

Three draft resolutions were submitted in the First Committee. One was proposed by the United Kingdom, another jointly by Hungary, Mongolia and Poland and the third by the following 13 States: Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Ethiopia, India, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sweden, Tunisia, the United Arab Republic and Yugoslavia.

The United Kingdom text, which was not pressed to a vote, would have had the General Assembly:

(1) call anew for strict observance of the principles and objectives of the 1925 Geneva

Protocol and urge all States which had not yet done so to accede to or ratify the Geneva Protocol;

(2) welcome the action of a number of States in the course of 1970 to become parties to the Geneva Protocol and, in particular, the accession or ratification of Brazil, Ecuador, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Malawi, Malta and Morocco;

(3) take note of the report of CCD, containing an account of the extensive discussions of all aspects of the problems of chemical and biological weapons, and the number of concrete and positive proposals put forward in CCD in the search for effective ways of safeguarding and verifying any agreements in the field of chemical and biological weapons;

(4) take note in particular of: (a) the draft convention for the prohibition of biological methods of warfare submitted on 18 August 1970 in CCD by the United Kingdom, which incorporated a United States proposal to prohibit toxins; (b) the nine-power draft convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons and on the destruction of such weapons submitted to the General Assembly on 23 October 1970; (c) the 12-power joint memorandum submitted to CCD on 25 August 1970 and the important and helpful contributions made by CCD members; (d) the useful working papers and expert views put forward in CCD;

(5) request CCD to give urgent consideration to reaching agreement on effective measures to deal with the problems of chemical and biological weapons, taking account of the proposals referred to above;

(6) request the Secretary-General to transmit to CCD First Committee records relating to questions connected with the problems of chemical and biological weapons;

(7) request CCD to report to the General Assembly in 1971 on progress achieved in this field.

The text proposed by Hungary, Mongolia and Poland, which also was not pressed to a vote, would have had the General Assembly:

(1) reaffirm its resolution of 5 December 1966<sup>23</sup> (which called for strict observance of and accession to the 1925 Geneva Protocol) and call anew for strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Geneva Protocol;

(2) invite all States which had not yet done so to accede to or ratify the Geneva Protocol;

(3) take note of the nine-power draft convention submitted to the General Assembly on 23 October 1970 and of the revised draft convention for the prohibition of biological methods of warfare submitted in CCD by the United Kingdom, as well as other proposals, including the 12-power joint memorandum submitted in CCD on 25 August 1970;

(4) request CCD to give urgent consideration to reaching agreement on a complete prohibition and elimination of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons;

(5) consider that such an agreement should provide for joint and full prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons and the exclusion of these means of warfare from the arsenals of States through their destruction or diversion for peaceful uses;

(6) request CCD to report to the General Assembly in 1971 on progress in all aspects of this problem;

(7) appeal to all States, pending agreement on a complete ban of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons to take all the necessary steps to facilitate and achieve at the earliest possible time such a prohibition and elimination of these weapons;

(8) request the Secretary-General to transmit to CCD all First Committee records relating to this question.

The 13-power draft resolution was approved by the First Committee and was adopted by the General Assembly at a plenary meeting on 7 December 1970.

In adopting this resolution, the Assembly took note of the increasing concern of the international community over developments in the field of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons and expressed its deep conviction that the prospects for international peace and security, as well as the achievement of the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control, would be enhanced if the development, production and stockpiling of chemical and bacteriological (biological) agents for purposes of war were to end and if those agents were eliminated from all military arsenals.

The Assembly then reaffirmed its resolution of 5 December 1966<sup>24</sup> (which called for strict observance of and accession to the 1925 Geneva Protocol) and called anew for strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Geneva Protocol. It invited all States which had not already done so to accede to or ratify the Geneva Protocol.

Further, the Assembly took note of the various draft conventions and proposals on the question of prohibiting biological and chemical weapons, namely: the United Kingdom draft convention for the prohibition of biological methods of warfare submitted to CCD on 18 August 1970; the nine-power draft convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons submitted to the General Assembly on 23 October 1970; the working papers and suggestions put forward in CCD and the First Committee; and the 12-power joint memorandum on the question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) methods of warfare submitted on 25 August 1970 to CCD.

The Assembly commended the following basic approach, contained in the 12-power joint memorandum, for reaching an effective solution to the problem of chemical and bacteriological (biological) methods of warfare:

(a) it was urgent and important to reach agreement on the problem of chemical and bacteriological (biological) methods of warfare;

(b) both chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons should continue to be dealt with together in taking steps towards the prohibition of their development, production and stockpiling, and their effective elimination from the arsenals of all States;

(c) the issue of verification was important in the field of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons; verification should be based on a combination of appropriate national and international measures, which would complement and supplement each other, thereby providing an acceptable system that would ensure the effective implementation of the prohibition.

The Assembly requested CCD to continue its consideration of the question with a view to prohibiting urgently the development, production and stockpiling of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons and to eliminating them from the arsenals of all States.

The Assembly asked CCD to report to it in 1971 on the results achieved, and it asked the Secretary-General to provide CCD with all First Committee records on the question.

The text of the resolution was approved by the First Committee on 19 November 1970 by 94 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions. It was adopted by the Assembly by 113 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, as resolution 2662 (XXV).

RESOLUTION 2662(XXV), as recommended by First Committee, A/8179, adopted by Assembly on 7 December 1970, meeting 1919, by 113 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the increasing concern of the international community over developments in the field of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons,

Recalling its resolutions 2454 A(XXIII) of 20 December 1968 and 2603 B(XXIV) of 16 December 1969,

Having considered the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament,

Noting the report entitled Chemical and Bacteriological (Biological) Weapons and the Effects of Their Possible Use, prepared by the Secretary-General in accordance with General Assembly resolution 2454 A(XXIII), with the assistance of consultant experts, and the report of the World Health Organization's group of consultants entitled Health Aspects of Chemical and Biological Weapons,

Deeply convinced that the prospects for international peace and security, as well as the achievement of the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control, would be enhanced if the development, production and stockpiling of chemical and bacteriological (biological) agents for purposes of war were to end and if those agents were eliminated from all military arsenals,

Conscious of the need to maintain inviolate the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and to ensure its universal applicability,

Conscious of the urgent need for all States that have not already done so to accede to the Geneva Protocol,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 2162 B(XXI) of 5 December 1966 and calls anew for the strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925;

2. Invites all States that have not already done so to accede to or ratify the Geneva Protocol;

3. Takes note of:

(a) The revised draft Convention for the Prohibition of Biological Methods of Warfare, submitted on 18 August 1970 to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland;

(b) The revised draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Chemical and Bacteriological (Biological) Weapons and on the Destruction of Such Weapons, submitted on 23 October 1970 to the General Assembly by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics;

(c) The working papers, expert views and suggestions put forward in the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament and in the First Committee;

4. Takes further note of the joint memorandum on the question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) methods of warfare, submitted on 25 August 1970 to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament by Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Ethiopia, India, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sweden, the United Arab Republic and Yugoslavia;

5. Commends the following basic approach, contained in the joint memorandum, for reaching an effective solution to the problem of chemical and bacteriological (biological) methods of warfare:

(a) It is urgent and important to reach agreement on the problem of chemical and bacteriological (biological) methods of warfare;

(b) Both chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons should continue to be dealt with together in taking steps towards the prohibition of their development, production and stockpiling and their effective elimination from the arsenals of all States;

(c) The issue of verification is important in the field of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons, and verification should be based on a combination of appropriate national and international measures, which would complement and supplement each other, thereby providing an acceptable system that would ensure the effective implementation of the prohibition;

6. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to continue its consideration of the problem of chemical and bacteriological (biological) methods of warfare, with a view to prohibiting urgently the development, production and stockpiling of those weapons and to their elimination from the arsenals of all States;

7. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to submit a report on the results achieved to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament all documents and records of the First Committee relating to questions connected with the problem of chemical and bacteriological (biological) methods of warfare.

Suspension of Nuclear and Thermonuclear Tests

The General Assembly, at its 1970 session, again discussed the question of the urgent need for suspension of nuclear and thermonuclear tests. In this connexion, the Assembly had before it the 1970 report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) and a note by the Secretary-General on information from Governments relating to the creation of a world-wide exchange of seismological data.

Discussion took place mainly in the Assembly's First Committee. The debate indicated there was general agreement that the continuation of underground nuclear weapon tests constituted one of the most acute and dangerous aspects of the arms race and that a decision to ban such tests would therefore contribute significantly to further progress in the disarmament field.

Stressing the urgency of the problem, Brazil, Cyprus, Ecuador, Japan, Sierra Leone, Sweden, Venezuela and Yugoslavia deplored the fact that three nuclear weapons had been exploded on the eve of the General Assembly session to commemorate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations.

The United States reiterated its previous position on the question (i.e. that sizable man-made explosions could not be identified as such, despite considerable progress in the verification field). The United States said it favoured the international exchange of seismological data.

The USSR, as it had in the past, indicated its willingness to conclude a treaty on the basis of national means of verification without on-site inspection.

The United Kingdom stressed that a comprehensive test ban remained a major aim of its policy.

Australia, Austria, Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Hungary, Ireland, Lebanon, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, Sweden and Yugoslavia were among other Members who called for the early achievement of an agreement prohibiting all nuclear weapon tests.

Referring to the continued Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT) between the United States and the USSR, Burma, Finland, Ireland, Lebanon, Liberia, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, the Philippines, Sierra Leone and others expressed the hope that an agreement at these talks would facilitate negotiations on a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Pakistan, on the other hand, felt that to argue that the conclusion of a comprehensive test ban treaty should await the outcome of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks was weak and unconvincing.

Finland believed that, while the question of a comprehensive test ban was intimately linked to SALT, this should not prevent CCD from continuing its work on this question.

The United Kingdom, although agreeing that a link existed between a comprehensive test ban and the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks, also maintained that much could be done in the area of verification and seismic detection without awaiting the outcome of SALT.

Several Members, among them Cyprus, the Philippines and Sierra Leone, recommended that the General Assembly renew its appeal for a moratorium on testing and deployment of strategic nuclear systems. Indonesia and Sweden also felt that the United States and the USSR should halt, for the duration of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks, all testing of nuclear weapons and strategic missiles. Liberia suggested that CCD should recommend the suspension of all nuclear weapon tests during the talks.

The problem of detection and identification of underground tests was again debated. The United States and Australia continued to maintain that, on the basis of the existing technical information, an effective comprehensive test ban treaty could not be achieved without on-site inspection. The United Kingdom agreed that events in the low kiloton range could not yet be defined by long-range seismic monitors.

Japan and Norway felt that continued efforts had to be made to solve technical problems of verification, which were blocking progress towards a comprehensive test ban.

Lebanon and the Philippines took the view that only a combination of national and international means of detection could overcome the present difficulties.

Sweden, on the other hand, was of the opinion that test ban monitoring through seismological measures had been much improved and further improvements were in sight. Cyprus, Ecuador, Ireland and Kenya believed that the means of detection and identification were adequate for the conclusion of a treaty prohibiting underground tests.

The USSR maintained that many countries possessed effective and reliable means for identification of underground nuclear tests and that the requirement for on-site inspection therefore only blocked agreement; this position was also taken by other Eastern European countries.

Denmark, Indonesia, Japan, Nigeria, the Philippines and the United Arab Republic were among those addressing themselves to the question of a "threshold" ban, recommending that underground tests above a certain threshold (i.e. above a specified level on the Richter scale used to measure the magnitude of earthquakes) should be prohibited. Indonesia and the Netherlands suggested that agreement on a "threshold" ban be achieved in combination with "verification by challenge" or inspection by invitation. ("Verification by challenge" is a system whereby a party suspected of underground nuclear weapon testing would find it in its interest to provide all available reassuring information, including possibly an invitation to other parties to inspect.)

Denmark felt that, while awaiting the outcome of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks, the permissible range of test explosions should be narrowed.

Sweden noted that a Pugwash Conference had concluded that tests above a certain threshold should be banned as a minimum, while Canada noted that an international system of exchange of seismic data might contribute to a threshold treaty, pending negotiation of a comprehensive test ban.

The United Kingdom recalled its proposal made to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament in 1968 that a special committee be established to consider suspected infringement of a comprehensive test ban treaty, coupled with an annual quota for tests diminishing to nil over a period of years.<sup>25</sup> The Netherlands also referred to the United Kingdom's proposal to set up a committee or panel of impartial inspectors, and felt it should be examined further in CCD.

The USSR and its supporters stressed the view that cessation of nuclear tests was primarily a political problem which could be solved only with the required political will. Burma, Ethiopia, Indonesia, Nigeria, the United Arab Republic and Yugoslavia similarly emphasized the need for a political willingness as a prerequisite for any agreement.

Discussing the international exchange of seismological data and the information Governments had provided in response to the inquiry the General Assembly had, on 16 December 1969, asked the Secretary-General to circulate,<sup>26</sup> Canada felt such an exchange could play an essential role in providing assurance of compliance with whatever international agreement or agreements might be negotiated to supplement a partial test ban treaty.

The United States said the role of seismic capabilities would be a vital one; work in that area should continue.

Many Members believed that the replies to the inquiry were encouraging. They thought that if all Governments co-operated in such an exchange, it would contribute to the achievement of a comprehensive test ban treaty. Finland, Indonesia, Italy, Norway and Venezuela were among Members holding this view.

Ghana, Kenya, Turkey and the United Arab Republic believed that, as a result of the replies, a widely acceptable system could be evolved that might expedite the solution of the question of a comprehensive test ban.

Austria held that the replies of Governments had considerably improved the means and resources for seismic monitoring of a comprehensive test ban. Others, including Australia, Belgium and Nigeria, felt that much could be done in further improving the network of seismic stations and seismic facilities; they believed CCD should continue its study of this question.

The USSR said it was inappropriate that the solution of the problem of achieving a comprehensive test ban treaty be replaced with a series of studies and investigations in the field of seismology. If agreement was to be achieved on the basis of national means of detection, the USSR was ready to take part in the large-scale international exchange of seismological data, which it was already doing. Several other Eastern European countries indicated their willingness to undertake an exchange of seismological data on a voluntary basis with other parties to a comprehensive test ban treaty.

The General Assembly's decisions arising from the discussion were set forth in two resolutions adopted on 7 December 1970.

By the first of these, the Assembly expressed its appreciation for the information received thus far in response to the request it had made on 16 December 1969 for information pertaining to the exchange of seismological data.<sup>27</sup>

The Assembly urged Governments to consider and, wherever possible, to implement methods of improving their capability to contribute high-quality seismic data with assured international availability, taking into account the suggestions presented to CCD. It invited those Governments that were in a position to do so to consider lending their assistance in the improvement of world-wide seismological capabilities in order to facilitate, through the assured international availability of seismic data, the achievement of a comprehensive test ban. The Assembly also invited members of CCD to co-operate in further study of this issue.

These decisions were contained in resolution 2663 A (XXV) which was approved by the First Committee on 18 November 1970 by a roll-call vote of 74 to O, with 14 abstentions and adopted by the Assembly at a plenary meeting on 7 December by 102 votes to O, with 13 abstentions. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In adopting the second resolution, the Assembly urged all States that had not yet done so to adhere without further delay to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water, signed in Moscow on 5 August 1963. It called upon all nuclear-weapon States to suspend nuclear weapon tests in all environments and asked CCD to continue, as a matter of urgency, its deliberations on a treaty banning underground nuclear weapon tests. It also asked CCD to report to it in 1971 on the results of its deliberations.

These Assembly decisions were contained in resolution 2663 B (XXV). The text was approved by the First Committee on 18 November 1969 by a vote of 88 to O, with 1 abstention and was adopted by the Assembly at a plenary meeting on 7 December by 112 votes to O, with 1 abstention. RESOLUTION 2663 A (xxv), as recommended by First Committee, A/8180, adopted by Assembly on 7 December 1970, meeting 1919, by 102 votes to 0, with 13 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the urgent need for the cessation of nuclear and thermonuclear weapon tests, including those carried out underground,

Taking into account the determination expressed by the parties in the preamble of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water, signed in Moscow on 5 August 1963, to continue negotiations to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time,

Taking also into account the undertaking by the parties in article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to the cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament, and on a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Recalling its resolutions 2163 (XXI) of 5 December 1966, 2343 (XXII) of 19 December 1967, 2455 (XXIII) of 20 December 1968 and 2604 (XXIV) of 16 December 1969,

Recalling further that in the above-mentioned resolutions the General Assembly expressed the hope that States would contribute to an effective international exchange of seismic data,

Noting the responses submitted up to the present date to the request for information circulated by the Secretary-General pursuant to resolution 2604 (XXIV),

Having considered the report submitted on 11 September 1970 by the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, and in particular the annexes thereto concerned with facilitating the achievement of a comprehensive test ban through the international exchange of seismic data,

1. Expresses its appreciation of the information received thus far in response to the request made by the Secretary-General pursuant to General Assembly resolution 2604 (XXIV);

2. Urges Governments to consider and, wherever possible, to implement methods of improving their capability to contribute high-quality seismic data with assured international availability, taking into account the suggestions contained in the documents annexed to the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, and invites those Governments that are in a position to do so to consider lending their assistance in the improvement of worldwide seismological capabilities in order to facilitate, through the assured international availability of seismic data, the achievement of a comprehensive test ban;

A/8180. Report of First Committee, draft resolution B.

RESOLUTION 2663 B (xxv), as recommended by First Committee, A/8180, adopted by Assembly on 7 December 1970, meeting 1919, by 112 votes to 0, with 1 abstention.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the urgent need for suspension of nuclear and thermonuclear tests and the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions 1762 (XVII) of 6 November 1962, 1910 (XVIII) of 27 November 1963, 2032 (XX) of 3 December 1965, 2163 (XXI) of 5 December 1966, 2343 (XXII) of 19 December 1967, 2455 (XXIII) of 20 December 1968 and 2604 B (XXIV) of 16 December 1969,

Noting with regret that all States have not yet adhered to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water, signed in Moscow on 5 August 1963,

Noting with increasing concern that nuclear weapon tests in the atmosphere and underground are continuing,

Taking into account that several concrete suggestions have been set forth in the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament as to possible provisions in a treaty banning underground nuclear weapon tests,

1. Urges all States that have not yet done so to adhere without further delay to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water;

2. Calls upon all nuclear-weapon States to suspend nuclear weapon tests in all environments;

3. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to continue, as a matter of urgency, its deliberations on a treaty banning underground nuclear weapon tests, taking into account the proposals already made in the Conference as well as the views expressed at the current session of the General Assembly, and to submit to the Assembly at its twenty-sixth session a special report on the results of its deliberations.

Implementation of Results of Conference of Non-Nuclear-Weapon States

The Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly in 1970 on the implementation of the results of the Conference of Non-Nuclear-Weapon States (held from 29 August to 28 September 1968 at Geneva, Switzerland). This report was based on information supplied by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), on action taken by those organizations in the past year concerning the Conference recommendations.

The information provided by IAEA indicated that further progress had been made in improving and simplifying the Agency's safeguards procedure. The Safeguards Committee had been established by the Agency's Board of Governors and had been requested to provide the Board with advice on the safeguards agreements to be negotiated with States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and also to discuss the problem of safeguards financing. Other measures taken to advance the Agency's safeguards work were also detailed. The Agency reported, in addition, on developments concerning the International Nuclear Information System, increased financing for technical aid, and requirements for major nuclear projects in developing countries during the next decade.

The International Bank stated that it continued to be prepared to consider requests for the financing of nuclear energy projects whenever they represented the most advantageous of the alternatives for expanding generating capacity in its member countries. The status of projects designed to assist developing countries to use nuclear technology in furthering their development was reported by UNDP, while FAO referred to data previously submitted on the application of nuclear energy to food and agriculture.

During the First Committee's general debate on disarmament questions, a few Committee Members referred to various aspects of the implementation of the resolutions of the Conference. Austria noted that the IAEA report was encouraging and very useful, even though it repeated in a somewhat different presentation the Agency's annual report to the General Assembly (see pp. 34-35). In this connexion, the need to eliminate possible duplication in the presentation of IAEA reports and their consideration by the Assembly was stressed by a number of Members.

Ireland said that it had been the practice to consider the annual report of IAEA to the Assembly in plenary meetings, with little substantive debate on its contents, while much of the report was usually relevant to the work of the First Committee. In future perhaps, Ireland suggested, the IAEA report should be allocated to the First Committee, or, alternatively, IAEA should be requested to prepare an annual report to the First Committee on its work in areas related to disarmament.

The United Republic of Tanzania noted that the resolutions of the Conference of Non-Nuclear-Weapon States concerning peaceful uses of nuclear energy were still awaiting implementation. Sierra Leone believed that the promotion of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, including nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes, was receiving due attention in IAEA. Argentina expressed appreciation of the Agency's efforts to comply with the resolutions of the Conference, but noted that, while IAEA's technical assistance to developing countries in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy had increased in 1969, the resources allocated for that purpose followed a descending curve compared to the total activities of IAEA.

On 7 December 1970, the General Assembly recommended that the international sources of finance should keep under review their policies regarding the financing of meritorious nuclear projects, bearing in mind not only the short-range but also the long-range contribution such projects might make to economic and technical development. It asked the specialized agencies, IAEA, and other bodies to pursue as appropriate their action concerning the recommendations contained in the resolutions of the Conference of Non-Nuclear-Weapon States.

The Assembly further asked IAEA to report to it again in 1971 on the question of the implementation of the results of the Conference of Non-Nuclear-Weapon States.

These decisions were taken with the adoption of resolution 2664(XXV) by 106 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions. The text was recommended to the Assembly by the First Committee, which approved it on 25 November, by 70 votes to 0, with 8 abstentions. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Assembly's resolution was based on a proposal put forward in the First Committee by Argentina, Austria, Brazil, Denmark, Finland, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands and Pakistan.

International Service for Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes

When the General Assembly took up the question of the establishment within the framework of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) of an international service for nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes it had before it a report from the Agency on developments in the past year.

Among other things, IAEA reported a panel on peaceful nuclear explosions, which met in March 1970, heard summary statements on national activities concerned with peaceful nuclear explosions and made recommendations for Agency activities. These recommendations included proposals for preparation of an introductory review of the technology for peaceful nuclear explosions, the publication of a multilingual glossary of terms and the promotion of education, training and research. Plans were made for further panel meetings to deal with aspects of the technology.

The Agency advised that it had published a bibliography on peaceful nuclear explosions and had arranged for the exchange of information on this subject through its International Nuclear Information System. The Agency was also beginning studies on its role in the international observation of peaceful nuclear explosions.

Following the general discussion in the Assembly's First Committee on disarmament questions, the Assembly took the following decisions relating to an international service for nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes: it commended IAEA for its efforts to compile and evaluate information on the present status of the technology and to make it available on an international scale; and it asked IAEA to continue and intensify its programme in this field.

The Assembly's decisions to this effect were set out in resolution 2665 (XXV), adopted on 7 December 1970 by 109 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions. The text was recommended to the Assembly by the First Committee, which approved it on 25 November by 89 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal sponsored by Austria, Canada, Denmark, Japan, Mexico and the Netherlands.

In the course of the debate, the United States and the USSR reaffirmed that the technology involved in producing nuclear explosive devices for peaceful purposes was indistinguishable from that involved in producing nuclear weapons. Production of any such explosive device by a non-nuclear-weapon State would, they said, thus be equivalent to the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Pakistan agreed that this was an incontestable fact, which was recognized in articles I, II and V of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.<sup>28</sup> (Among other things, these articles prohibit the transfer to or reception by non-nuclear-weapon States of nuclear weapons or explosive devices, as well as assistance in their manufacture.) Pakistan added that preparations being made in some non-nuclear-weapon States to manufacture and explode nuclear devices would lead to a qualitatively new situation endangering not only regional security but also the security of the world. The General Assembly should take cognizance of this impending threat and act to meet it, so as to safeguard the non-proliferation regime. An international service for peaceful nuclear explosions should be established urgently, and Pakistan expected that the report of IAEA to the General Assembly in 1971 would contain positive indications of the early establishment of such a service.

Argentina, Burma, India, Kenya and Zambia also spoke in support of the establishment of an international service for peaceful nuclear explosions within IAEA, but they stressed at the same time that the benefits of this service must be made available to all States on a basis of equality and regardless of whether they were parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.

Burma stated that guarantees of equitable treatment existed under the statute of IAEA; these should not be vitiated by restrictive or discriminatory conditions.

Kenya added that article V of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons

(providing for the benefits from peaceful applications of nuclear explosions to be made available to non-nuclear-weapon States party to the Treaty) should be implemented without delay, independently of a service within the framework of IAEA.

India held that the question of peaceful nuclear explosions could only be considered in the larger context of the development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. This technology should be available to all States, and all should be free to acquire knowledge in this field and to use such knowledge. It was not the knowledge as such, but its misuse, that is diversion of fissile material to production of nuclear weapons, which constituted a threat to peace.

The need for further study on the question within IAEA was stressed by Austria, Ireland, Pakistan and the United Kingdom. Ireland referred to the Fourth Conference on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy (scheduled for September 1971) as an opportunity to assess and accelerate progress in this respect.

Denmark stated that, with regard to the legal aspects of peaceful nuclear explosions, the disarmament organs of the United Nations and the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) should be consulted to voice their opinion on possible amendments to the Partial Test Ban Treaty of 1963 (banning nuclear weapon tests in the atmosphere, in outer space and under water<sup>29</sup>).

India added that a correct and equitable solution to the question could be found only in the context of a complete test ban and that the principles governing the creation of an international regime for peaceful nuclear explosions should be discussed at the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament.

Sweden proposed that CCD submit a draft treaty setting forth general international rules and regulations for the conduct of peaceful nuclear explosions. The draft should be submitted to the General Assembly in 1971, prior to the deadline for IAEA safeguards agreements (as called for by the provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons).

Burma referred with approval to the Swedish draft treaty banning underground nuclear weapon tests because it envisaged the regulation of peaceful nuclear explosions as the subject of a specially negotiated international agreement that could most appropriately be worked out in the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament.

Treaty for Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America

In 1970, the General Assembly discussed the status of the signature and ratification of the Protocol (Additional Protocol II) to the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) which called for nuclear-weapon powers to undertake to respect the denuclearized status of Latin America and also undertook not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against the parties to the Treaty.<sup>30</sup>

The question was put on the General Assembly agenda at the request of Barbados, Bolivia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua and Uruguay.

During the debate, which took place in the Assembly's First Committee, Mexico noted that the Latin American countries had worked long and hard to create their nuclear-free zone and therefore felt they had a right to receive the co-operation of the nuclear powers in respecting and guaranteeing the zone. Mexico also made the point that the commitments sought from the nuclear powers were far from burdensome and in no way departed from the obligations arising from the United Nations Charter.

While the Additional Protocol was in force for the United Kingdom and would, hopefully, soon be in force for the United States, the Protocol had not as yet been signed by the other three nuclear powers. There had been repeated statements in the General Assembly in favour of nuclear-free zones, Mexico added, and the Latin American States felt there had been ample time for the nuclear powers to have completed their study of the Protocol.

Colombia, Ecuador, Guatemala, Uruguay and Venezuela supported Mexico's appeal.

Ireland said the effectiveness of the Treaty of Tlatelolco would be greatly enhanced if Additional Protocol II were signed and ratified by all nuclear-weapon States. Spain also called for the adherence of all nuclear-weapon powers. Burma pointed out that the viability of a nuclear-free zone would be less than credible without a formal commitment of the nuclear powers to respect and guarantee that zone.

Noting that after four years only one nuclear power had ratified the Additional Protocols to the Treaty, the United Republic of Tanzania said this negative attitude of the other nuclear powers, with the exception in this regard of the People's Republic of China, was consistent with their refusal to give any undertaking not to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States parties to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

Romania reiterated its position in favour of nuclear-free zones, which, when appropriately guaranteed by the nuclear powers, would constitute an important contribution to the elimination of the nuclear threat. Ethiopia noted that such a zone must be completely free of nuclear weapons.

Support for the aims and purposes of the Treaty was expressed by many other Members, including China, Liberia, Morocco, Sierra Leone, Sudan and Turkey.

The United Kingdom urged other nuclear-weapon States to ratify Additional Protocol II, and also called on States in the Treaty area to ratify the Treaty. The United States noted that Additional Protocol II had been transmitted to the United States Senate for ratification.

France commented that, in the absence of genuine nuclear disarmament, it had demonstrated its sympathy for the denuclearization of Latin America and had given assurances to the Treaty's sponsors before the Treaty was concluded.

The USSR stressed that it was in favour of the creation of nuclear-free zones in various parts of the world and was ready to assume the obligation to respect the status of nuclear-free zones pertaining to various countries in

Latin America. The USSR reiterated a statement it had made previously that it was prepared to assume such an undertaking towards Mexico, as reflected in the USSR-Mexico communique of 30 May 1968, and that it would be prepared to take similar action towards other Latin American countries which, like Mexico, might make their territory completely nuclear-free.

On 7 December 1970, the General Assembly reaffirmed the appeals it had addressed in 1967 and 1968 to the nuclear-weapon States to sign and ratify Additional Protocol II to the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America as soon as possible. The Assembly noted with satisfaction that one of those States had already signed and ratified the Protocol and that another, having signed it, was engaged currently in the ratification process.

In addition, the Assembly deplored the fact that not all nuclear-weapon States had as yet signed the Protocol; it decided to consider the matter again in 1971 and it asked the Secretary-General to transmit those decisions to the nuclear-weapon States.

The Assembly's decisions were embodied in resolution 2666 (XXV), adopted by a recorded vote of 104 to 0, with 12 abstentions. The text was recommended to the Assembly by the First Committee, which approved it on 18 November 1970 by a roll-call vote of 71 to 0, with 11 abstentions.

The sponsors of the resolution were Barbados, Bolivia, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Peru, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay and Venezuela.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1911 (XVIII) of 27 November 1963, in which it expressed its confidence that the States that possess nuclear weapons would give their full co-operation for the effective realization of the initiative aimed at the military denuclearization of Latin America,

Recalling also its resolution 2286 (XXII) of 5 December 1967, in which it welcomed with special satisfaction the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) and declared that the Treaty constituted an event of historic significance in the efforts to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security,

Bearing in mind that the Treaty has an Additional Protocol II, which was opened for signature by States possessing nuclear weapons on 14 February 1967,

Noting that the Conference of Non-Nuclear-Weapon States, in its resolution B, expressed the conviction that, for the maximum effectiveness of any treaty establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone, the co-operation of the nuclear-weapon States is necessary and that such co-operation should take the form of commitments likewise undertaken in a formal international instrument which is legally binding, such as a treaty, convention or protocol,

Considering that accession to that Protocol only entails the following obligations for the nuclear-weapon States:

(a) To respect, in all its express aims and provisions, the statute of denuclearization of Latin America in respect of warlike purposes, as defined, delimited and set forth in the Treaty of Tlatelolco,

(b) Not to contribute in any way to the performance of acts involving a violation of the obligations of article 1 of the Treaty in the territories to which the Treaty applies,

(c) Not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against the contracting parties of the Treaty,

Convinced that these obligations are entirely in conformity with the general obligations assumed under the Charter of the United Nations, which every Member of the Organization has solemnly undertaken to fulfil in good faith, as set forth in Article 2 of the Charter,

Noting that, despite the appeals that the General Assembly has addressed to them on two occasions, in resolutions 2286 (XXII) of 5 December 1967 and

2456B (XXIII) of 20 December 1968, and the appeals they have received from the Conference of Non-Nuclear-Weapon States, in resolution B, and from the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America, in resolution 1(I), only two of the States that possess nuclear weapons have so far signed Additional Protocol II and only one has ratified it,

Noting also that the Treaty of Tlatelolco, which has been signed by twenty-two Latin American States, is already in force for sixteen of them,

Bearing in mind the repeatedly stated declarations of the nuclear-weapon States to the effect that nuclear-weapon-free zones established on the initiative of the States within the zone should be supported,

Noting that the Treaty of Tlatelolco is the only one it has been possible to conclude for the establishment of such a zone in a densely populated area and that, as a result of the Treaty, there already exists a statute of total absence of nuclear weapons covering an area of 6.6 million square kilometres with a population of approximately 117 million inhabitants,

Noting also that the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America has been duly established in conformity with the Treaty and became operative on 2 September 1969,

1. Reaffirms the appeals it has addressed to the nuclear-weapon States, in its resolutions 2286 (XXII) and 2456 B (XXIII), to sign and ratify Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) as soon as possible and urges them to avoid further delay in the fulfilment of such appeals;

2. Notes with satisfaction that one of those States has already signed and ratified the Protocol and that another has signed it and is now actively engaged in the ratification process;

3. Deplores that not all nuclear-weapon States have as yet signed the Protocol;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its twenty-sixth session an item entitled "Status of the implementation of General Assembly resolution 2666 (XXV) concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)";

5. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange for transmittal of the present resolution to the nuclear-weapon States and to inform the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session of any measure adopted by them in order to implement it.

OTHER DOCUMENTS

A/8076. Letter of 16 September 1970 from Mexico (transmitting letter of 11 September 1970 from President of General Conference of Agency for Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (OPANAL), annexing resolutions adopted by General Conference of OPANAL at 2nd part of its first session, 7-11 September 1970).

Economic and Social Consequences of the Armaments Race

At its 1970 session, the General Assembly had before it a Romanian proposal for discussion of the economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security. In putting forward this proposal, Romania stressed that between 1964 and 1970 more than a trillion dollars had been spent for arms and armed forces. The arms race had an adverse effect on the economic and social life of all States and, in the first place, on the developing countries and represented a factor of tension and mistrust in inter-State relations; it could not strengthen peace, since the accumulation and improvement of ever greater military arsenals offered the necessary instruments for breaching the peace. The freezing and reduction of military budgets, a halt of the arms race and gradual progress towards disarmament would help to make material, financial and human resources available, which could serve the interests of various States and help the developing countries.

When the question was discussed in the Assembly's First Committee, the Romanian initiative was supported by many Members, including Afghanistan, Argentina, Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Colombia, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Kenya, Lebanon, Morocco, the Netherlands, Rwanda, Spain, Sudan, Sweden, Turkey, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, Uruguay, Venezuela and Yugoslavia. The interrelation between disarmament and development was stressed by many of these speakers.

Sweden stressed that the costs of the arms race raised very great problems, as military budgets already equalled the total income of the poorer half of mankind. Sweden noted that the Secretary-General had recently proposed an expert study of the economic and social consequences of the arms race and that studies had been undertaken in the Economic and Social Council and in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on a related subject—namely, the conversion to peaceful uses of the resources released by disarmament (see pp. 405-8). Sweden felt that a broadening of such studies was indicated.

Brazil said that the stockpiling of weapons of mass destruction was a serious setback for the cause of economic development; if the nations of the world were to dedicate to the United Nations Development Programme 1 per cent of what they allocated for military expenditures, this would multiply by ten the programmes and activities of economic development.

Austria, Cyprus and Iran held that a study of the economic and social consequences of the arms race would contribute to a better understanding of the crucial problems connected with it. India and Yugoslavia stated that a comprehensive international expert study on the arms race would help in keeping the focus on general and complete disarmament, with the highest priority being given to the measures in the field of nuclear disarmament.

Ecuador stressed that the impact of tremendous military expenditures on world production had caused an imbalance even in the economies of the great powers, because arms were not economically viable and inevitably created inflation. Argentina believed that disarmament and development were closely interrelated; the vast resources released by disarmament should be assigned to the development of economically backward States.

Ireland noted that world military expenditures did not rise in 1969 and a fall of about 2 per cent was expected in 1970. However, military expenditures in developing countries, although only 10 per cent of the total, had been rising faster than those of the developed countries. Ireland favoured the preparation of a study on the economic and social consequences of the arms race, but it should exclude any reference to the harmful effects on international peace and security, as this might complicate the task.

The United States said that, to be useful, a report on the economic and social consequences of the arms race would have to weigh carefully and objectively the consequences of all arms expenditures, nuclear and conventional. The value of the report would be enhanced by the extent to which Governments heeded the request for co-operation, and particularly the extent to which they would provide relevant data on their military expenditures over the past several years. The study should be concerned with economic and social questions to a large extent.

Following the discussion, the General Assembly adopted a resolution calling on all States to take effective steps for the cessation and reversal of the arms race and for the achievement of steady progress in disarmament.

In adopting this resolution, the Assembly expressed its awareness of the threat to mankind posed by the ever spiralling arms race, especially in view of the existing large stockpiles of, and impending new qualitative advances in, nuclear armaments. The Assembly also took cognizance of the continuously increasing world military expenditures and was convinced that unless vigorous measures were taken without delay to stop the arms race, giving the highest priority to nuclear disarmament, military expenditures were likely to increase at an even greater rate during the 1970s.

Expressing deep concern that the arms race, nuclear and conventional, constituted one of the heaviest burdens which peoples everywhere had to bear, and that it absorbed immense material wealth, human energy and intellectual resources, the Assembly was convinced that the elimination of this enormous waste of wealth and talent would have a positive impact, especially on the developing countries, where the need for skilled personnel and the lack of material and financial resources were most keenly felt.

The Assembly was also convinced that a halt in the arms race would greatly facilitate the achievement by nations of their economic and social goals and would contribute effectively to the improvement of international relations and the maintenance of world peace and security.

Conscious that it was the fundamental task of the United Nations to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security and determined to take appropriate steps to bring the arms race to a halt and make progress towards general and complete disarmament, which was the most important question facing the world today, the Assembly expressed the wish to promote the elaboration and implementation of a comprehensive programme for disarmament which would also facilitate the United Nations development programmes during the 1970s.

The Assembly believed that thorough consideration of the main aspects of the arms race would facilitate a better understanding and evaluation of its negative consequences and of the great dangers with which it was fraught. Issuing its call to all States to act to stop the arms race, it then asked the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to continue to pay urgent attention to all questions meant to put an end to the arms race, particularly in the nuclear field.

The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General to prepare a report, for consideration in 1971, on the economic and social consequences of the arms race and of military expenditures. Governments were asked to extend full co-operation to the Secretary-General, as were non-governmental organizations and international institutions and organizations.

The Assembly's decisions to this effect were taken unanimously on 7 December 1970 with the adoption of resolution 2667 (XXV). The text was recommended to the Assembly by the First Committee, which approved it unanimously on 25 November.

The sponsors of this resolution in the First Committee were: Austria, Canada, Colombia, Cyprus, Denmark, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Madagascar, Mali, Mexico, Morocco, the Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, Uruguay and Yugoslavia.

On 11 December 1970, the General Assembly asked the Secretary-General to suggest means to establish a link between the Disarmament Decade and the Second United Nations Development Decade, both Decades of the 1970s, so that an appropriate share of the resources released as a consequence of progress towards general and complete disarmament would be used to increase economic and social assistance to developing countries. The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General to propose measures to mobilize world public opinion in support of such a link.

These requests were contained in resolution 2685 (XXV), adopted on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second Committee. (See pp. 405-8 for further information.)

CHAPTER II

THE PEACEFUL USES OF OUTER SPACE

During 1970, questions relating to the scientific, technical and legal aspects of international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space continued to be taken up by various United Nations bodies, including the General Assembly, its Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and the latter's two Sub-Committees and Working Group on Direct Broadcast Satellites.

The Legal Sub-Committee concentrated its work on a convention on liability for damage caused by objects launched into outer space. The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee considered questions on earth resources surveying, the exchange of information on national and international space activities, and training and education, among other things.

When, later in the year, the General Assembly examined the question of outer space, it took decisions concerning: questions related to the draft convention on liability for damage caused by objects launched into outer space; the work of the Working Group on Direct Broadcast Satellites, which had been requested to study cultural, legal, social and other implications of direct broadcasting satellite services; the work of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its programme in general; and technical measures that might be taken by the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) to mitigate the harmful effects of typhoons and storms in various parts of the world and to minimize their destructive potentials.

Details of these and other decisions taken during 1970 on the peaceful uses of outer space are described in the sections below.

LEGAL ASPECTS OF THE PEACEFUL USES OF OUTER SPACE

In 1970, the General Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its Legal Sub-Committee continued work on a draft convention on liability for damage caused by the launching of objects into outer space. The Committee also received proposals on the definition of outer space, the utilization of outer space and celestial bodies, and the various implications of space communications.

At its ninth session, held in Geneva, Switzerland, from 8 June to 3 July 1970, the Legal Sub-Committee reached agreement on the title, the preamble and 13 articles of the draft convention on liability. However, no agreement was reached on the two main outstanding issues, concerning the settlement of claims and "applicable law" (the measure of damages). (For further details, see below, pp. 43-45.)

The report of the Legal Sub-Committee was considered by the Committee on Outer Space at its thirteenth session held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 1 to 17 September 1970. The Committee concluded that, although a solution of the two outstanding issues was not in prospect, the completion of a liability convention should remain its firm priority task.

The Committee's report was taken up later in the year by the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session (which opened on 15 September).

On 16 December, recognizing the importance of international co-operation in developing the rule of law in the exploration and peaceful uses of outer space, the Assembly affirmed that until an effective convention was concluded an unsatisfactory situation would exist in which the remedies for damage caused by space objects were inadequate for the needs of the nations and peoples of the world. It expressed its deep regret that, notwithstanding some progress towards the preparation of a draft convention on liability, the Committee had not been able to complete the drafting of a convention.

The Assembly urged the Committee to intensify the effort to reach agreement and noted in this connexion that the main obstacle to agreement lay in differences of opinion within the Committee on two main issues: the legal rules to be applied for determining compensation payable to the victims of damage and the procedures for the settlement of claims.

The Assembly also expressed the view that a condition of a satisfactory convention on liability was that it should contain provisions that would ensure the payment of a full measure of compensation to victims and effective procedures that would lead to the prompt and equitable settlement of claims. The Assembly urged the Committee to make a decisive effort to reach early agreement on texts embodying these principles with a view to submitting a draft convention on liability to the Assembly in 1971.

The Assembly's decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 2733 B (XXV), adopted at a plenary meeting, by 108 votes to 8, with 2 abstentions. In so doing, the Assembly acted on the recommendation of its First Committee, which had approved the text on 11 December 1970, by a roll-call vote of 85 to 8, with 6 abstentions, on a proposal by Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Burma, Canada, France, India, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Japan, Lebanon, Liberia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Sweden and the United Kingdom. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Also on 16 December, the General Assembly requested the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to continue to study questions relative to the definition of outer space and the utilization of outer space and celestial bodies, including various implications of space communications.

The Assembly also invited those States that had not yet become parties to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies<sup>1</sup> and the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space<sup>2</sup> to give consideration to ratifying or acceding to these agreements so that they might have the broadest possible effect.

These decisions were among those embodied in the Assembly's resolution 2733 C (XXV), which was adopted at a plenary meeting, by 110 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Assembly's First Committee.

(For further information on resolution 2733 C (XXV) 3 which was concerned for the most part with the scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space, see below, pp. 47-54. For text of this resolution, see pp. 53-54.)

LIABILITY FOR DAMAGE

CAUSED BY OBJECTS

LAUNCHED INTO OUTER SPACE

The question of liability for damage caused by objects launched into outer space was the only issue discussed at the session of the Legal Sub-Committee held in June and July of 1970.

The Legal Sub-Committee had before it five draft conventions on liability submitted at its earlier sessions by Belgium, Hungary, India, Italy and the United States, respectively.<sup>3</sup> Also before the Sub-Committee was a letter sent to its Chairman, on 27 April 1970, by the Chairman of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. This contained a resume of the results of consultations and negotiations held between members of the Outer Space Committee, in Geneva in April 1970, on the question of a draft convention on liability.

In addition, in the course of the Sub-Committee's plenary meetings, proposals were submitted: (a) by Belgium, on the relationships between a liability convention and other international agreements; (b) jointly by Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Italy, Japan, Sweden and the United Kingdom, on the question of the measure of compensation and the competence of the claims commission; and (c) jointly by Bulgaria, Hungary and the USSR, on the question of applicable law and on the settlement of disputes.

In the course of the discussions in the Sub-Committee's Working Group, various other proposals and working papers were submitted by each of the following: Argentina, Belgium, Bulgaria, France, Hungary, India, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Working Group reaffirmed, with certain modifications, the texts on which agreement had been reached at the 1969 session of the Legal Sub-Committee pertaining to definitions, the presentation of claims, and the pursuit of remedies available in the launching State or under other international agreements.<sup>4</sup> It also reaffirmed the Sub-Committee's decision that there would be no general provision in the text of the convention relating to joinder of claims.

The Working Group also examined other texts approved by the Sub-Committee in 1969 and all relevant new proposals.

After substantive reformulation of the provisions, the Working Group approved the texts of articles on the fields of application of the convention, the question of joint liability, the form of compensation, and time-limits for presentation of claims.

The texts approved by the Working Group were referred, thereafter, to the Drafting Group which, in the first instance, reached agreement on the sub-division of certain provisions into separate articles and on the order in which the texts should be arranged in a draft convention. It was understood in the Drafting Group that this order would be provisional, pending agreement on the placing of eventual articles on issues not yet settled.

The texts of the draft articles were examined and modified by the Drafting Group, which also considered two working papers on the preamble to the draft convention, submitted by Hungary and the United Kingdom, respectively. It was the view of the Drafting Group that there should be no titles for individual articles of the convention, and that it was not necessary to take up the final clauses.

A number of the texts referred to the Drafting Group were subject to extensive drafting changes to ensure precision in wording and consistency in the use of terminology throughout the articles of the convention.

The texts approved by the Drafting Group, which comprised the title of the draft convention, the preamble and 12 articles, were considered and approved by the Working Group after certain changes. A proposal by Belgium on the relationship between the convention and other international agreements was also approved by the Working Group as an additional article. Thereafter, the texts were approved by the Legal Sub-Committee.

Certain members, however, approved these texts subject to some conditions or reservations.

No agreement was reached by the Legal Sub-Committee on two main issues, namely, the settlement of claims and the question of measure of damages (applicable law). The Sub-Committee also postponed a decision on the proposals concerning the question of international inter-governmental organizations.

In explaining their position on the two main issues, Argentina, Australia, Canada, Italy, Japan, Sweden and the United Kingdom, and others, maintained, in respect of applicable law, that in order to ensure that a victim-oriented convention provided for a prompt and comprehensive compensation of damage it should be based on the rule that each victim is to be restored in full to the condition equivalent to that which would have existed if the damage had not occurred. They further argued that in giving effect to this rule, account should be taken of the law of the place where the damage occurred, since only that law provided for a proper assessment and compensation of damage, as well as of relevant principles of international law.

On the question of settlement of claims, the view of these members was that, failing agreement between the parties, provision should be made for an impartial tribunal to assess the merits of a claim and establish the amount of compensation. The decision of the tribunal should be final and binding, they thought.

The view of Bulgaria, Hungary, Poland, the USSR, among others, was that the compensation of the entire damage could best be accomplished through the application of the law of the launching State or of international law, since the law of the place where the damage occurred could be incomplete with regard to properly compensating the victim. In respect of settlement of claims, they opposed the concept of binding arbitration on the grounds that such an approach would be tantamount to an infringement of the sovereignty of States, since, under the Outer Space Treaty,<sup>5</sup> States bore the final responsibility for all national activities in outer space.

On the same question, Brazil referred to its compromise proposal of 1969 to the effect that a decision of an arbitration commission should be final and binding if the parties had so decided; otherwise, it would be of a recommendatory nature. The representative of Brazil explained that the efficacy of the commission's decision would in any event depend on the good faith of the parties concerned.

Belgium stated that, in the spirit of compromise, it could be satisfied with an arbitration commission's decision being politically and morally binding rather than legally binding.

France said it might accept the procedure for settling disputes that could lead merely to a recommendation or conclusions, provided that the composition of the settlement commission was such as to ensure its impartiality and effectiveness and that its decision was final and published.

The preamble to the draft convention on liability for damage caused by objects launched into outer space, as approved by the Legal Sub-Committee, recognized, among other things, the need to elaborate international rules and procedures to ensure, in particular, prompt and equitable compensation for victims of damage caused by space objects.

The 13 articles of the draft dealt, among other things, with:

(1) Definitions of the terms "damage," "launching," "launching State" and "space objects";

(2) Absolute liability of a launching State for damage on the surface of the earth and to aircraft in flight;

(3) Liability of a launching State to be based on fault, if damage was caused by one space object to another elsewhere than on the surface of the earth;

(4) In the case of damage to a third State as a result of a collision of two space objects, joint and several liability of the two launching States with the apportionment of the burden of compensation between them in accordance with the extent to which they were at fault;

(5) Joint and several liability of States jointly launching a space object; right of a State which paid compensation for damage to claim indemnification by other participants in a joint launching—States from whose territory or facility an object was launched;

(6) Exoneration from absolute liability to the extent that the damage had resulted from gross negligence or intentional act or omission of the State presenting the claim or of natural or juridical persons it represented; no exoneration if damage resulted from activities inconsistent with international law, the United Nations Charter or the Outer Space Treaty;

(7) Non-applicability of the convention to nationals of the launching States and to foreign nationals who participated in the operation of the space object or were in the immediate vicinity of the launching or recovery area at the invitation of the launching State;

(8) Unless States concerned had agreed otherwise, payment of compensation to be made in the currency of the State presenting a claim or, at the request of that State, in the currency of the launching State;

(9) Presentation of a claim on behalf of natural or juridical persons to be made by one of the States concerned in the following order: (a) State of nationality, (b) State on whose territory the damage occurred, or (c) another State in regard to its permanent residents;

(10) Presentation of a claim through diplomatic channels or, in the absence of diplomatic relations, through another State at the request of the State presenting a claim;

(11) One-year time-limit for the presentation of claims from the date of the occurrence of damage or the identification of the launching State;

(12) Prior exhaustion of local remedies not required for presentation of a claim; and pursuance of a claim in the courts, administrative tribunals or agencies of a launching State;

(13) Relations between States under other agreements in force not affected by the convention and States not prevented from concluding agreements reaffirming, supplementing or extending its provisions.

DEFINITION OF OUTER SPACE AND USE OF OUTER SPACE AND CELESTIAL BODIES

During 1970, the Legal Sub-Committee had before it a background paper prepared by the Secretariat on the questions of the definition and/or delimitation of outer space, as well as a report of the Working Group on Direct Broadcast Satellites.

Two proposals were submitted to the Sub-Committee by Argentina: a draft agreement on the principles governing activities in the use of the natural resources of the moon and other celestial bodies, and a draft international agreement on activities carried out through remote-sensing satellite surveys on earth resources.

The Legal Sub-Committee was not, however, able to consider these questions in 1970 but expressed the wish to have the questions appear as priority items on the agenda of its next session (due to be held in 1971) to the extent that agreement might have been reached in the meantime on the draft convention on liability.

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the importance of international co-operation in developing the rule of law in the exploration and peaceful uses of outer space,

Recalling that, in its resolutions 1963 (XVIII) of 13 December 1963, 2130 (XX) of 21 December 1965 and 2222 (XXI) of 19 December 1966, it requested

Recalling that in its resolution 2345 (XXII) of 19 December 1967, in which it commended the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space, it also called upon the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to complete urgently the draft convention on liability,

Recalling also its resolution 2453 B (XXIII) of 20 December 1968, in which it requested the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to complete urgently the draft convention on liability and to submit it to the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth session,

Recalling further its resolution 2601 B (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it urged the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to complete the draft convention on liability in time for final consideration by the General Assembly during its twenty-fifth session and emphasized that the convention was intended to establish international rules and procedures concerning liability for damage caused by the launching of objects into outer space and to ensure, in particular, prompt and equitable compensation for damage,

Affirming that until an effective convention is concluded an unsatisfactory situation will exist in which the remedies for damage caused by space objects are inadequate for the needs of the nations and peoples of the world,

Aware that various proposals have been submitted to the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and that a number of provisions have been agreed upon, although subject to certain conditions and reservations, in its Legal Sub-Committee,

1. Takes note of the efforts made by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its Legal Sub-Committee at their sessions in 1970 to complete the preparation of a draft convention on liability, for submission to the General Assembly at its current session;

2. Expresses its deep regret that, notwithstanding some progress towards this objective, the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space has not yet been able to complete the drafting of a convention on liability, a subject which it has had under consideration for the past seven years;

3. Affirms that the early conclusion of an effective and generally acceptable convention on liability should remain the firm priority task of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and urges the Committee to intensify its efforts to reach agreement;

SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL ASPECTS OF THE PEACEFUL USES OF OUTER SPACE

During 1970, various scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space were considered by the General Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and its Working Group on Direct Broadcast Satellites, as well as by the General Assembly itself. (For details on discussion of the legal aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space, see above, pp. 42-47.)

Among Assembly decisions concerning international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space was a recommendation that United Nations Member States and regional and international organizations, including broadcasting associations, should promote co-operation at regional and other levels to allow all parties to share in the establishment and operation of regional satellite broadcasting services and/or in programme planning and production. The Assembly also invited the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to continue to promote the use of satellite broadcasting services.

In endorsing the recommendations and decisions in the report of its Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, the Assembly requested the Committee to continue to study questions relative to the definition of outer space and the utilization of outer space and celestial bodies, including various implications of space communications. It also welcomed the efforts of the Committee to promote such practical applications of space technology as earth resources surveying.

In another of its decisions, the General Assembly expressed its concern over the devastating effects of typhoons and storms in various parts of the world and recommended that the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) take, if necessary, further action for mobilizing pertinent resources with a view to obtaining data and discovering ways of mitigating the harmful effects of the storms.

Details of these and other decisions are presented in the sections that follow.

REPORTS OF SUB-COMMITTEE, WORKING GROUP AND COMMITTEE ON PEACEFUL USES OF OUTER SPACE

SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL SUB-COMMITTEE

During 1970, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space considered a number of proposals and suggestions covering a wide area of practical applications. At its meetings held from 14 to 24 April 1970, the Sub-Committee discussed earth resources surveying, as well as proposals designed to promote international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space, including the exchange of information on national and international space activities, training and education and United Nations-sponsored international rocket-launching facilities.

In the field of remote earth resources surveying techniques, the Sub-Committee recommended, among other things, that it should be authorized to determine at its next session whether and when to convene a working group on earth resources surveying with special reference to satellites.

The Sub-Committee recommended further that Member States conducting space application programmes should invite study and close observation of those programmes by technical panels, to be organized by the Secretary-General, with membership comprising representatives of interested States, particularly those of developing States.

On education and training, the Sub-Committee drew the attention of its members to the announcements by the United States and Italy offering, respectively, up to 10 graduate university scholarships each year, and up to 10 free training courses each year, on the various applications of space technology. The scholarships would be available to qualified persons nominated through the United Nations.

The Sub-Committee also considered the question of the registration and identification of objects launched into outer space, with a view to supplying information to the Legal Sub-Committee for such purposes as the imputation of liability for damage. The Sub-Committee concluded that no significant difficulty was to be expected in identifying space objects orbiting or surviving re-entry but that for reasons of economy and safety, an international marking system was not considered practical at the present time.

On the question of co-ordination, the Sub-Committee expressed the view that the rapid pace of development in the exploration and practical uses of space might result in different bodies within the United Nations becoming involved in various aspects of international space co-operation, and that duplication should be avoided. In view of the fact that the Economic and Social Council would take up the subject of earth resources surveys in July 1970, the Sub-Committee asked the Secretary-General to bring to the Council's attention the Sub-Committee's recommendations concerning earth resources satellites.

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee also recommended that the Committee should consider at its next session the question of co-ordination in this field, taking into account the results of the July 1970 session of the Economic and Social Council.

WORKING GROUP ON

DIRECT BROADCAST SATELLITES

The Working Group on Direct Broadcast Satellites, at its meetings held from 11 to 21 May 1970, adopted conclusions and recommendations on the implications of direct broadcast satellites services in the social, cultural, legal and other areas and on arrangements for international co-operation in this field.

The Working Group concluded that, although direct broadcasts from satellites could considerably benefit the peoples of all countries, this medium of communication, if abused, could disturb cultural, religious and social modes and could seriously affect the legitimate interests of States in whose territory foreign satellites television broadcasts might be received.

Recognizing that the deployment and use of satellite broadcasting services would require large-scale international co-operation, the Working Group devoted a good deal of attention to legal questions and to the elaboration of general principles. It noted the existence of a number of international legal instruments, such as the Charter of the United Nations, the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,<sup>6</sup> and relevant General Assembly resolutions.

Several speakers expressed the view that these principles and legal instruments should be complemented by the adoption of more specific principles; others considered such an effort premature and felt that it might hinder rather than promote international co-operation in the field of direct broadcast satellite systems.

The Working Group considered that the United Nations, through the Committee on Outer Space, should play a co-ordinating role in the field of satellite broadcasting. Member States, the United Nations Development Programme and other international agencies, the Working Group thought, should work to assist the developing countries in benefiting from satellite broadcasting and in developing skills and techniques required for its application in the countries or regions concerned.

Noting that while arrangements on a global basis might ultimately be desirable, the Working Group considered that international co-operation might be more effectively brought about in the near future through regional arrangements. It considered that existing arrangements among international broadcasting organizations might serve as a basis for the development of future regional arrangements among States.

USES OF OUTER SPACE

The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space discussed the organization of its work for the year and that of its subsidiary bodies during meetings held from 20 to 23 January 1970. It considered the reports of its three subsidiary bodies—the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, the Legal Sub-Committee and the Working Group on Direct Broadcast Satellites—at meetings held from 1 to 17 September 1970.

After reviewing the work of its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, the Committee on Outer Space endorsed the various measures recommended for the promotion of further exchange of information, practical applications of space technology, education and training, and international co-operation in general in the peaceful exploration and use of outer space.

The Committee also endorsed the recommendation for continued United Nations sponsorship of the Thumba Equatorial Rocket Launching Station, in India, and the Rocket Launching Station at Mar del Plata, Argentina. It welcomed in this connexion statements made during the debate reaffirming the availability of the Italian equatorial San Marco mobile range and the French Space Centre at Kourou, French Guiana, for international co-operative projects.

In reviewing the progress made in the field of practical applications of technology, the Committee considered the report submitted by the Expert on Applications of Space Technology, who had been appointed by the Secretary-General to the Outer Space Affairs Division of the United Nations Secretariat to devote full time to the promotion of international co-operation in the practical applications of space technology.

The Committee endorsed the recommendations set out in the Expert's report with regard to various technical panels to be held during 1971 and the granting of fellowships by Member States with a view to enhancing international co-operation in the field of practical applications; and it welcomed the statements of Brazil, Mexico and the United States that they had invited such technical panels to observe the practical applications of space technology in progress in their countries, and the statement by India that it had the intention of doing so. The Committee also welcomed the offers of scholarships by Italy and the United States for training in the various aspects of space technology.

In its review of the question of earth resources surveying by satellites, the Committee authorized its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee to determine at its next meeting, due to be held in 1971, whether, at what time, and in what specific frame of reference to convene a working group on earth resources surveying with special reference to satellites.

With regard to direct broadcast satellites, the Committee on Outer Space endorsed the Working Group's conclusion that the United Nations, through the Committee, should play a co-ordinating role in connexion with the work of other interested international organizations. The Committee also endorsed the view that the emphasis in international co-operation in this field should be on a regional level.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The General Assembly considered the recommendations of its Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space during its twenty-fifth session, which opened on 15 September 1970.

On the question of direct broadcast satellites, the Assembly, in a resolution adopted on 16 December 1970, among other things noted that the first satellite-borne instructional television experiment for direct reception into community receivers would be undertaken in India as early as 1973-1974, thereby making it possible to enrich life in isolated communities, and it recognized that the use of satellite-borne television for educational and training purposes, particularly in developing countries, could in many instances contribute towards national programmes of integration, community development and economic, social and cultural development.

The Assembly also recommended to United Nations Member States and to regional and international organizations, including broadcasting associations, that they promote and encourage international co-operation at regional and other levels in order, among other things, to allow all participating parties to share in the establishment and operation of regional satellite broadcasting services and/or in programme planning and production.

The Assembly drew the attention of Member States, specialized agencies and other interested international organizations to the potential benefits to be derived from direct broadcast satellite services and recommended that they and other such bodies should promote international co-operation in this field.

On the same subject, the Assembly among other things invited the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) to continue to take the necessary steps to promote the use of satellite broadcasting services by Member States and requested it to transmit, when available, to the Committee on Outer Space information about the use of the geostationary orbit and the frequency spectrum.

The Assembly also invited the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to continue to promote the use of satellite broadcasting for the advancement of education and training, science and culture and, in consultation with appropriate inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and broadcasting associations, to endeavour to solve problems falling within its mandate.

These decisions having to do with direct broadcast satellites were embodied in the Assembly's resolution 2733 A (XXV), adopted at a plenary meeting by 118 votes to 0. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its First Committee, which had approved the text on 11 December 1970 by 91 votes to 0, with 8 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal sponsored by Australia, Canada, Cyprus, India, Iran, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Following its discussion of the activities of the Committee on Outer Space in general, the General Assembly endorsed the recommendations and decisions contained in the Committee's report. The Assembly thereby reaffirmed its belief that communication by means of satellites should be available to the nations of the world as soon as practicable on a global and non-discriminatory basis, and it recommended that States parties to negotiations concerning international arrangements in the field of satellite communication should constantly bear this principle in mind.

The Assembly welcomed the efforts of the Committee on Outer Space to encourage international programmes to promote such practical applications of space technology as earth resources surveying, and commended to the attention of Member States, specialized agencies and interested United Nations bodies the new programmes and proposals, including technical panels and the utilization of internationally-sponsored training opportunities, to promote international benefits from space applications noted by the Committee in its report.

In connexion with its consideration of the work of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, the Assembly also: took note of the recommendations of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee that the travel and subsistence of participants in the technical panels should be funded by their own Governments, but that the United Nations might give timely assistance to exceptional cases; welcomed the efforts of Member States to share the practical benefits which might be derived from their programmes in space technology, including earth resources surveying; and requested the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, as authorized by the Committee on Outer Space, to determine at its next session whether, at what time, and in what specific frame of reference to convene a working group on earth resources surveying, with special reference to satellites.

In addition, the Assembly welcomed the efforts of United Nations Member States to keep the Committee on Outer Space fully informed of their activities and invited all Member States to do so. It also recalled the Committee's recommendation that Member States give consideration to designating specific offices or individuals within their Governments as a point of contact for communications on the promotion of the application of space technology, and urged the Member States which had not yet designated a point of contact to do so.

Approving the continuing sponsorship by the United Nations of the Thumba Equatorial Rocket Launching Station and the Mar del Plata Station, the Assembly recommended that Member States give consideration to the use of these facilities for appropriate space research activities.

The Assembly also noted that the Secretary-General continued to maintain a public registry of objects launched into orbit or beyond on the basis of information furnished by Member States. (See below, p. 55.)

Further, it endorsed the recommendation of the Committee that the Secretary-General be requested to issue an index of existing international instruments relating to or bearing upon broadcasting satellite services.

Finally, the Assembly requested the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency to furnish the Committee with progress reports on their work in the field of the peaceful uses of outer space, and requested the Committee to continue its work and to report to the Assembly at its twenty-sixth session, due to be held in 1971.

These decisions, among others, were embodied in the Assembly's resolution 2733 C (XXV), which was adopted at a plenary meeting on 16 December 1970 by a vote of 110 to 0, with 9 abstentions. The Assembly took this action on the recommendation of its First Committee, which had approved the text on 11 December 1970, by 82 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions, on a proposal of Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, France, Iran, Italy, Japan, Lebanon, Morocco, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, as amended by Turkey. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In the course of the Committee's consideration of the draft resolution, two amendments were submitted.

The one sponsored by Turkey was adopted on 11 December 1970, by 40 votes to 8, with 43 abstentions. This was to have the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, in its convening of a working group on earth resources surveying, take into account the importance of appropriate co-ordination with the Committee on Natural Resources, established by the Economic and Social Council on 27 July 1970.

A second amendment, submitted by Czechoslovakia, Hungary and the USSR, would have inserted an additional operative paragraph by which the Assembly would have urged the Committee on Outer Space to complete a generally acceptable draft convention on liability in time for consideration by the Assembly at its 1971 session. On 11 December 1970, the First Committee decided, by a vote of 35 to 23, with 37 abstentions, that there was no need to vote on this amendment, since the Committee had already approved a resolution on the subject, later adopted by the Assembly as resolution 2733 B (XXV) (see above, pp. 46-47).

In yet another resolution adopted on 16 December, the General Assembly expressed its concern over the devastating and harmful effects of typhoons and storms in various parts of the world, particularly in Asia, and stated its belief that the scientific and technical capabilities that had conquered space could help conquer this environmental scourge.

After noting, among other things, the co-ordinating role in this field of the joint Typhoon Committee of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) and the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, the Assembly recommended that WMO take, if necessary, further appropriate action for mobilizing capable scientists, technologists and other pertinent resources, with a view to obtaining basic meteorological data and discovering ways and means of mitigating the harmful effects of these storms and removing or minimizing their destructive potentials.

By this text, the Assembly also called upon United Nations Member States to make efforts within their means to implement fully the World Weather Watch plan of WMO, and requested WMO to submit a report through the Secretary-General to the Committee on Outer Space at its next session, due to be held in 1971, and to such other United Nations bodies as might be appropriate.

These decisions were embodied in the Assembly's resolution 2733 D (XXV), adopted at a plenary meeting by a vote of 121 to 0. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its First Committee, which had approved the text on 11 December 1970, by a roll-call vote of 98 to 0, with 0 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal by Australia, Canada, Japan, Madagascar, Pakistan, the Philippines, Thailand and the United States. The General Assembly, Concerned over the devastating and harmful effects of typhoons and storms in various parts of the world, particularly in Asia,

Believing that man's present scientific and technical capabilities that have conquered space could help conquer this environmental scourge,

Recalling its resolutions 1721 (XVI) of 20 December 1961 and 1802(XVII) of 14 December 1962, and noting the work being undertaken and progress achieved in response to them, as indicated by the World Meteorological Organization in its annual reports to the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space,

Noting further the co-ordinating role in this field of the joint Typhoon Committee of the World Meteorological Organization and the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, the discussions on this subject held in that forum and the recent decision to transfer the Typhoon Committee secretariat to Manila.

1. Recommends that the World Meteorological Organization take, if necessary, further appropriate action for mobilizing capable scientists, technologists and other pertinent resources from any or all nations with a view to obtaining basic meteorological data and discovering ways and means of mitigating the

REGISTRATION OF SPACE LAUNCHINGS

In 1970, Member States launching objects into orbit around the earth or further into space continued to supply information on space launchings to the United Nations in accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 20 December 1961.<sup>7</sup> Ten notifications were received during the year and distributed as documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. (Notifications included objects launched during the latter part of 1969, as well as during 1970.)

Japan registered the launching of one space vehicle during the period. The USSR registered the launchings of 71 space vehicles. The United States submitted information on 48 launchings, which covered 113 functional and non-functional objects placed into orbit around the earth and into heliocentric and selenocentric orbits.

CHAPTER III

QUESTIONS CONCERNING THE USES OF ATOMIC ENERGY

THE EFFECTS OF ATOMIC RADIATION

The 15-member United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its twentieth session at Geneva, Switzerland, from 21 to 25 September 1970.

On the basis of reviews prepared by the United Nations Secretariat, the Scientific Committee discussed recent information on genetic effects of radiation, induction of cancer by radiation, effects of radiation on the immune response, doses from medical and occupational exposure, and radioactive contamination of the environment. It expressed its intention of submitting a report to the General Assembly in 1972 dealing with such evaluations of risk as it might make after its consideration of these subjects.

The Committee also discussed the contribution that might be made from its experience on radiation problems to the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, due to be held in 1972. (See pp. 449-52.)

On the problem of radioactive contamination of the environment, the Scientific Committee recalled that so far it had been mainly concerned with doses and risks from global contamination by radio-nuclides released by atmospheric nuclear explosions, and that it had largely based its conclusions on data it had requested of Members of the United Nations and members of specialized agencies and of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Because peaceful applications of nuclear energy, particularly for the generation of electricity, were now rapidly increasing, the Committee decided that in its future reviews of environmental contamination it would also give detailed attention to contamination resulting from these applications and from applications of radioactive isotopes in medicine, industry, research and other miscellaneous fields.

To enable it to assess the respective contributions of these activities to the radiation exposure of human populations and the attendant risks, the Scientific Committee invited Members of the United Nations and members of specialized agencies and of IAEA to submit data on releases of radio-nuclides into the environment and on measured or estimated radiation doses received by populations, including local population groups such as those that might be subject to unusual exposures because of their habitat or diet.

The Committee noted that in this connexion it would value information, including data on discharge rates, relating to releases of specific radio-nuclides into the environment from such types of installations as nuclear-fuel manufacturing and reprocessing plants, nuclear power reactors and research centres, isotope production plants, and large isotope application centres, such as hospitals and factories.

The Committee also indicated its interest in concentrations of specific radio-nuclides in air, water, foodstuffs and human tissues, and felt that any quantitative information relating to the entry of radio-nuclides into and through food chains would be of value in its work.

Later in 1970, the General Assembly considered the report of the Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation. Among other decisions, the Assembly commended the Scientific Committee for the valuable contributions it had made to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels and effects of atomic radiation.

The Assembly also drew attention to the Committee's invitation to Members of the United Nations and members of specialized agencies and of IAEA to submit data that would enable it to assess the effects of peaceful uses of nuclear energy on the radiation exposure of human populations.

Commending the Scientific Committee for the discussion it had had on the contribution that might be made to the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, the Assembly recommended that the Secretary-General fully utilize the relevant experience of the Committee in the further preparations for this Conference.

These decisions, among others, were embodied in resolution 2623 (XXV), unanimously adopted by the Assembly at a plenary meeting on 13 October 1970. In so doing, the Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Special Political Committee, which had unanimously approved the text on 2 October 1970, on a proposal of Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia, France, Japan, Mexico, Morocco, New Zealand, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States. #### FOURTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE PEACEFUL USES OF ATOMIC ENERGY

Acting on a General Assembly request of 15 December 1969<sup>1</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on 10 November 1970 on the status of preparations for the Fourth International Conference on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy, which would continue the series of international conferences on this subject held in 1955, 1958 and 1964,<sup>2</sup> at which emphasis was placed on the scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of atomic energy.

The Secretary-General reported that the United Nations Scientific Advisory Committee, at meetings held in April 1970, had decided that the dates of the Fourth Conference would be 6 to 16 September 1971 and that it would be held in Geneva, Switzerland.

Details of the agenda and the rules of procedure of the Conference, the theme of which was to be "Benefits for Mankind from the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy," were to be based essentially on those of the previous conference, held in 1964, with minor modifications to reflect the Assembly's wish that the 1971 Conference be less costly and that the agenda be designed to interest economists and planners as well as scientists and technologists. The estimated cost of the Conference to the United Nations had been reduced from the $932,280 approved by the General Assembly in 1969 to $728,500.

The Secretary-General also reported that, on 26 June 1970, all Members of the United Nations and all members of the specialized agencies and of the International Atomic Energy

Agency (IAEA) had been invited to participate in the Conference. Details of the provisional agenda and the rules of procedure of the Conference and information on the scientific exhibition (the theme of which was to be "Atoms for Development") were sent to the invitees.

The report of the Secretary-General proposed that 15 inter-governmental organizations that were usually invited to attend scientific symposia organized by IAEA be invited to send representatives to the Conference and to contribute papers in their field of activity.

The report noted that the Scientific Advisory Committee had recommended that the President of the Fourth Conference be a representative of the United States.

The report also pointed out that the number of papers to be accepted by the Conference would be limited to approximately 500 (a reduction of some 40 per cent from the number accepted by the 1964 Conference).

On 3 December 1970., the General Assembly, noting it was of the view that the Conference would contribute to the more effective dissemination of knowledge and technology concerning the peaceful uses of atomic energy among Member States, especially among the developing countries, endorsed the proposals put forward in the Secretary-General's report.

The Assembly also approved the provisional agenda and noted the reductions in the cost estimates for the Conference.

These decisions were among those embodied in resolution 2651 (XXV), which was adopted by the Assembly at a plenary meeting, without objection, on a proposal by Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Also on 3 December 1970, the Secretary-General announced the appointment of Glenn T. Seaborg as President of the Fourth International Conference on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 2406 (XXIII) of 16 December 1968 and 2575 (XXIV) of 15 December 1969 concerning the holding of the Fourth International Conference on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, together with the provisional agenda prepared by the United Nations Scientific Advisory Committee,

Being of the view that the Conference will contribute to the more effective dissemination of knowledge and technology concerning the peaceful uses of atomic energy among Member States, especially among the developing countries,

1. Endorses the proposals contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the convening of the Fourth International Conference on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy at Geneva in the autumn of 1971 ;

2. Notes with appreciation the contributions and close co-operation of the International Atomic Energy Agency in the preparations for the Conference;

3. Commends the United Nations Scientific Advisory Committee for its work in drawing up the provisional agenda for the Conference;

4. Approves the provisional agenda for the Conference;

5. Notes with satisfaction that the Secretary-General's consideration for the needs of economy, without prejudice to the success of the Conference, has already led to reductions in the costs for 1972 and expresses the hope that the same consideration will be applied to the costs for 1971.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC ENERGY AGENCY

The annual report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), for the year 1969-1970, was discussed by the General Assembly on 4

December 1970 during its twenty-fifth session.

Introducing the report, the Director-General of IAEA stressed the need for universal acceptance of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,<sup>3</sup> which had come into force early in 1970, the first year of what had been designated by the General Assembly as the Disarmament Decade.<sup>4</sup> A Safeguards Committee had been set up by IAEA, he added, to advise on the Agency's responsibilities under the Treaty in relation to safeguards. Membership of the Committee would be open to all IAEA member States.

Outside the framework of the Non-Proliferation Treaty, the Director-General noted, IAEA's safeguards activities had continued to increase. The Agency was currently party to 44 agreements involving 32 States, and covering 10 nuclear-power reactors and 68 other reactors.

The Director-General also said that the first international meeting on the peaceful uses of nuclear explosives had been held by the Agency in 1970.

In addition, the Director-General briefly described some of the other activities of IAEA in such fields as nuclear power development, nuclear technology and the developing countries, and the use of nuclear energy and its effect on the environment.

Members taking part in the discussion welcomed the coming into force of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons. A number of speakers stressed the importance of the creation and development of a safeguards system. One point made in this regard was that the important new tasks of the IAEA in this field should not be accomplished at the expense of its task of encouraging the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Also emphasized in the discussion was the need to keep a balance between the Agency's promotional activities and its regulatory functions.

Representatives of some States, commenting on the need for an equitable solution to the problem of financing the costs of safeguards measures, expressed the hope that a solution on financing, not damaging to the developing countries, would be found.

Generally welcomed was the decision (subject to ratification) of the IAEA General Conference (held in Vienna, Austria, from 22 to 28 September 1970), to expand the Board of Governors of IAEA in order to reflect the increased membership of the Agency.

Czechoslovakia and the USSR expressed the view that the composition of the Board of Governors should be such as not to upset the political balance among individual groups of countries as it existed at the time of the Agency's establishment.

Other points stressed by various speakers in the Assembly's debate on the Agency's annual report included: the importance to developing countries of nuclear technology; the value of IAEA'S technical co-operation activities; IAEA'S responsibilities with regard to limiting and avoiding pollution of the environment; and the usefulness of the International Nuclear Information System, established in 1970 within the framework of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

On 4 December 1970, the General Assembly expressing appreciation for the role IAEA was playing in the peaceful application of nuclear energy for the welfare of Member States, also commended the work being undertaken by IAEA to meet its safeguards responsibilities. The Agency was invited to study the records of the 1970 session of the General Assembly relating to its activities and to take them into account in its future work.

These decisions, and others, were embodied in resolution 2655 (XXV), adopted without vote by the Assembly on the basis of a proposal sponsored by India, the Netherlands and Poland. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

CHAPTER IV

PROMOTING THE PEACEFUL USES OF THE SEA-BED

On 17 December 1970, the General Assembly adopted a Declaration of Principles Governing the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor, and the Subsoil Thereof, beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction.

On the same date, the Assembly also: decided to convene a conference on the law of the sea, to be held in 1973; enlarged the membership of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of the Sea-Bed and Ocean Floor beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction (Sea-Bed Committee) and instructed it to undertake preparatory work for the conference; and requested the Secretary-General to prepare reports on problems connected with the exploitation of the sea-bed and ocean floor and on the special problems of land-locked countries.

Earlier, on 7 December 1970, the General Assembly had adopted a resolution by which it commended to States the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof. (For further information, see pp. 11-14.)

These actions by the General Assembly came at the end of a year during which questions relating to the sea-bed and to the law of the sea were extensively discussed in both the Sea-Bed Committee and the Assembly's First Committee.

REPORT OF SEA-BED COMMITTEE

In reporting to the General Assembly on 25 November 1970, the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of the Sea-Bed and Ocean Floor beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction (Sea-Bed Committee) said it had held an organizational meeting (26 February) and two sessions during 1970: from 2 to 26 March at United Nations Headquarters, New York, and from 3 to 28 August in Geneva, Switzerland. In addition, during 1970, the Legal Sub-Committee of the Sea-Bed Committee held a series of meetings in New York (9-24 March) and in Geneva (25-27 August), as well as a number of informal consultations in both cities, and the Economic and Technical Sub-Committee held meetings in New York (9-23 March) and in Geneva (11-24 August).

The Sea-Bed Committee recalled that by a decision of 21 December 1968 establishing the Committee, the General Assembly had instructed it to study ways of promoting international co-operation in the peaceful exploration and explotation of the sea-bed area, for the benefit of mankind.<sup>1</sup> On 15 December 1969, the Assembly had further requested the Committee to submit to it in 1970 a draft declaration of principles designed to promote international co-operation in the exploration and exploitation of the sea-bed and ocean floor, for the benefit of mankind.<sup>2</sup>

The question of drawing up a draft declaration of principles was considered by the Legal Sub-Committee at its two sessions and at informal consultations held during 1970. The Sub-Committee took into account various formal and informal proposals, including two draft resolutions submitted to it concerning the establishment of an international regime over the sea-bed and ocean floor. However, neither the Legal Sub-Committee nor the Sea-Bed Committee was able to reach agreement on the text of a draft declaration of principles for the sea-bed area.

At its August session, the Sea-Bed Committee considered at some length the question of establishing an appropriate international machinery for the promotion of the exploration and exploitation of the resources of the sea-bed area in the interests of mankind.

The basis of the Committee's discussion was a report by the Secretary-General prepared at the request of the General Assembly.<sup>3</sup> The Committee also had before it a draft United Nations convention on the international sea-bed area, submitted by the United States, and working papers on the establishment of an international regime for the sea-bed area, submitted by France and the United Kingdom.

The Secretary-General's report examined three types of machinery: machinery solely for research and the exchange of information; machinery having licensing and registering powers; and machinery having jurisdiction over all aspects of the sea-bed area.

The relationship between machinery, principles and regime was widely emphasized by Committee members. It was recognized that in view of the unprecedented nature of many of the problems that would be encountered, the machinery for the sea-bed area would be a new type of international organization for which existing institutions would not provide models. The structure of the proposed machinery, and its financial aspects, should be examined in greater detail, the Committee recommended.

The ways and means of exploiting the resources of the sea-bed and ocean floor, as well as the technical problems involved in creating an international regime for the area, were considered by the Economic and Technical Sub-Committee of the Sea-Bed Committee at its two sessions in 1970.

Although various suggestions emerged during the discussion, the Sub-Committee reported that it was not in a position to advance any concrete proposals. The Sub-Committee unanimously recommended that it be instructed at future sessions to study the issues further in order to identify suitable solutions. The Sea-Bed Committee endorsed this recommendation. It also decided to request the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive study on possible methods and criteria for the sharing by the international community of proceeds and other benefits derived from the exploitation of the resources of the area.

The question of marine pollution was discussed by both the Economic and Technical Sub-Committee and the Sea-Bed Committee, which had before them a report by the Secretary-General on marine pollution, requested by the General Assembly on 21 December 1968.<sup>4</sup>

The Sea-Bed Committee generally agreed with the statement in the Secretary-General's report that it would be impossible to exploit the resources of the deep ocean floor without interfering to some degree with the marine environment; what was needed was a definition of the permissible level of interference, which should be established by international treaty.

Note was made of the various programmes being carried out in the field of marine pollution by the United Nations and the specialized agencies. As far as its specific mandate was concerned, the Committee recognized the need for a declaration of principles on pollution and for an international regime which would assume responsibility for the prevention of pollution.

Reports of the dumping of nerve gas in the Atlantic Ocean by the United States were drawn to the Sea-Bed Committee's attention at its August session. Following a discussion, during which the United States representative gave an account of the safety measures taken by his Government in this case, the Committee adopted without objection a statement by which it requested its Chairman to convey to the Secretary-General its concern at the practice of dumping toxic, radioactive and other noxious materials on the sea-bed and the ocean floor. By the same statement, the Committee also appealed to all Governments to refrain from using the sea-bed and ocean floor as a dumping ground for materials which might cause serious damage to the marine environment.

Other points raised by the Sea-Bed Committee at its 1970 sessions concerned the importance of training nationals of developing countries in sea-bed operations and of disseminating information on the sea-bed area.

In concluding its report to the General Assembly, the Sea-Bed Committee stated that in its two-year study of the problems connected with the sea-bed and the ocean floor, it had become increasingly aware of the complexity and range of the issues involved. This was due in part to the substantial amount of information that had been accumulated, and in part to the cumulative effect of the work performed in the General Assembly and in the Committee, which had brought out a vast, interlocking array of political, security, legal, technical, economic and scientific issues.

The Committee noted that although progress had been slower than hoped for, it had been sufficient to maintain confidence in the emergence of the general agreement necessary to elaborate the basis for an international regime. The Committee added, however, that many differences remained, the resolution of which would inevitably consume more time and effort.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On 18 September 1970, the General Assembly decided to refer to its First Committee four agenda proposals dealing with the sea-bed and the law of the sea. These were: (a) the question of the reservation exclusively for peaceful purposes of the sea-bed and the ocean floor, and the sub-soil thereof, underlying the high seas beyond the limits of present national jurisdiction, and the use of their resources in the interests of mankind; (b) marine pollution and other hazardous and harmful effects which might arise from the exploration and exploitation of the sea-bed and the ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction; (C) views of Member States on the desirability of convening at an early date a conference on the law of the sea; and (d) the question of the breadth of the territorial sea and related matters.

In taking this decision, the General Assembly rejected a USSR proposal to allocate the questions of the breadth of the territorial sea and of convening a conference on the law of the sea to the Sixth (Legal) Committee.

The First Committee considered all four questions concurrently between 25 November and 16 December 1970. The Committee had before it: the report of the Sea-Bed Committee; the report by the Secretary-General on marine pollution previously considered by the Sea-Bed Committee; a report by the Secretary-General on the views of Member States on the desirability of convening at an early date a conference on the law of the sea; and a letter dated 24 November 1970 from the Chairman of the Sea-Bed Committee, transmitting the text of a draft declaration of principles governing the sea-bed and ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction.

Also available to Committee members were three working papers, prepared for the Sea-Bed Committee by France, the United Kingdom and the United States, concerning the establishment of an international regime for the sea-bed area.

Seven draft resolutions with revisions and amendments were submitted to the First Committee. These concerned: (1) a draft declaration of principles governing the sea-bed area; (2) a study of the problems arising from the exploitation of the sea-bed area; (3) a study of the special problems of land-locked countries; and (4) the convening of a conference on the law of the sea.

The Secretary-General opened the general debate with a statement in which he noted that recent developments in technology and science had drawn the problem of the sea-bed most forcibly to general attention. If the seas were to become a factor that united, and not a factor that divided and might generate new international frictions, the Secretary-General said, a course of action should be put in train which would lead to the desired goal.

ISSUES DISCUSSED

The general debate in the First Committee was wide-ranging but centred on the establishment of an international regime for the sea-bed area, on the draft declaration of principles for the area, and on the convening of a conference on the law of the sea. The questions of the breadth of the territorial sea and of marine pollution also received considerable attention.

INTERNATIONAL REGIME

There was general agreement in the First Committee that an international regime should be established for the sea-bed area. A sense of urgency about this question was reflected in the statements of a number of countries, developed and developing, coastal and land-locked, which pointed out that the sea-bed contained valuable mineral resources capable of being exploited because of recent technological advances.

The United States said man's growing need for resources was creating great pressure to develop the technology to obtain the extensive, untapped resources of the sea-bed. The oceans would become the area for new clashes of national wills unless nations were determined to find solutions through international co-operation. Every day that there was a delay reduced the opportunity for choice.

The United Kingdom said all States had an interest in reaching agreement on an international regime which would prevent a repetition of the scramble for Africa and would enable all States to equitably share the benefits.

France said the sea and sea-bed were the last frontier of exploration and exploitation. Only international co-operation in exploiting these resources could ensure orderly and normal economic development, France pointed out, and it warned against the anarchy to which unilateral actions would lead.

Sweden, which called for far-reaching internationalization of the sea-bed, said that the area of the sea-bed which might be used for international purposes was steadily shrinking because of excessive national claims.

The USSR, which favoured the establishment of a just and lasting regime in the sea-bed area, said it attached great importance to the solution of problems of international law which arose in connexion with the rapid progress in science and technology and the prospects of expanded activities of States in exploring and exploiting the sea-bed. The USSR warned against allowing the sea-bed and its resources to become objects of rapacious exploitation by monopolies of the imperialist powers, as had been the case for centuries with the natural resources of the countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America. The USSR noted, however, that in the foreseeable future, the engineering technology for industrial exploitation of the mineral resources of the sea-bed beyond the limits of the continental shelf would be lacking; this should be taken into account in determining priority for the solution of problems relating to the sea-bed.

Japan also said that the exploitation of the mineral resources of the deep was technically an extremely difficult operation, and that it would be a number of years before such exploitation would become commercially feasible. In concluding any international agreement, it was necessary to avoid actions that would slow down technological development.

The Ecuadorian representative cautioned that the subject of using the resources of the sea-bed for the benefit of mankind had become a dialogue of the deaf: the concept had different meanings for the developed and the developing countries. The danger lay in the fact that while the dialogue continued, the industrial powers would take possession of the new empire under water and create a colonialism of the sea.

Liberia also said time was not on the side of the developing nations, as the great powers were already using the oceans for food, science, mining and national defence. India said the crux of the problem was to secure equitable distribution of the benefits of an interdependent technology common to all, not just the advanced few.

Austria maintained that land-locked, shelf-locked (coastal States having a restricted continental shelf) and developing countries could participate in the exploration and exploitation of the sea-bed only through an international regime, which had to extend over an area of meaningful size. Afghanistan called for the quick establishment of a just international regime in which land-locked States would have the right of participation and of benefits. The Bolivian representative said that the interests of all land-locked States lay in the greatest possible extension of the sea-bed area beyond the present limits of national jurisdiction.

Czechoslovakia noted that the incorporation of the continental shelves into the national jurisdiction of coastal States had changed the political, economic and strategic topography of the globe. Land-locked States and States which had a steeply declining coast became poorer while other States gained access to enormous riches. The land-locked countries were therefore interested in attaining an equal participation in the exploitation of the resources of the sea-bed beyond the limits of national jurisdiction of the coastal States.

Several coastal States, while not opposing an international regime, cautioned that it should not infringe upon the rights of coastal States. Iceland said it had long believed in a true and effective internationalization of the area which would permit all States to share in the benefits that would be derived from sea-bed resources. However, Iceland added, it should be a basic principle that the exploitation of the riches of the sea-bed should not infringe upon the rights of coastal States regarding fishing and a pollution-free marine environment.

Peru expressed the fear that if an international regime was established, the real benefits from exploitation would accrue to the firms of the great powers, which alone were capable of extracting resources from the soil and subsoil. The solution was a plurality of regimes which would take into account regional needs.

Several views were put forward on the type of international machinery that should be established for the sea-bed area.

Some States—including Canada, France, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States—felt that the machinery should have as its primary purpose the exploration and exploitation of the resources of the sea-bed area. The working papers prepared by France, the United Kingdom and the United States called, among other things, for a system of licensing for these activities. Canada called for the adoption of a resources management system designed to encourage and maintain investment from a variety of sources. Canada, France, and the United Kingdom said any international machinery should not be too ambitious or complicated.

Other States, including the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Kuwait, Nigeria, Pakistan and Yugoslavia, called for the establishment of an international machinery with comprehensive powers for regulating all aspects of the sea-bed area.

Brazil said that in elaborating an international regime, two basic principles should be kept in mind: those of flexibility and of universality. Flexibility meant the recognition of regional differences and particularities of a geographical, social and economic nature. Universality meant that every State should have an equal right to participate in the policy-making, regulating, co-ordinating and supervisory activities of the machinery to be set up.

DELIMITATION OF SEA-BED AREA

It was generally recognized that the establishment of an international regime was closely linked to the problem of defining the area it would encompass. Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago said that by its resolution of 15 December 1969, the General Assembly had favoured a procedure whereby the establishment of the regime should precede delimitation of the area.<sup>5</sup> Argentina, Cyprus, Ecuador and Guyana also said priority should be given to the establishment of an international regime in order to protect the interests of those countries not yet able to explore and exploit the sea-bed area.

The USSR said that if the question of the delimitation of the area of the sea-bed beyond the limits of national jurisdiction was not determined, the whole preparation of a regime for the sea-bed would be put in jeopardy. Czechoslovakia, Romania and the Ukrainian SSR supported the view that without resolving the problem of the limits of the sea-bed area and of national jurisdiction, it would be difficult to elaborate a regime.

Other States maintained that the formulation of the regime and the delimitation of the area were two closely related questions that should be considered simultaneously. This view was expressed by Austria, Canada, Cyprus, Ethiopia, France, Ghana, Italy, Lebanon, Madagascar, Malta, Kuwait, Portugal, Singapore, the United Kingdom and the United States, among others.

Several proposals were put forth regarding the area to be covered by the international regime. The United States, in its proposals to the Sea-Bed Committee, had called for an international sea-bed area to begin at the 200-metre isobath (line of equal depth). However, Kenya said the 200-metre isobath discriminated against the African and Latin American continents, which had a narrow continental shelf. Iran said any limit based on depth alone, whether 200 metres or more, was highly discriminatory; it proposed the addition of a modest lateral distance to take account of technological advances and the rights of coastal States.

Canada made the suggestion that all ocean and sea-bed areas of the world have similar percentages of their underwater acreage reserved for the benefit of mankind, e.g. 50 or 80 per cent of the whole. Distance-depth or other formulas for defining the continental shelf were outdated, the Canadian representative said.

LIMITS OF NATIONAL JURISDICTION

Various States noted that the problem of defining the sea-bed area beyond national jurisdiction was closely linked to that of defining the limits of national jurisdiction over the seas.

It was pointed out by many Members that the 1958 and 1960 Geneva conferences on the law of the sea had failed to reach agreement on the breadth of the territorial sea, the precise limits of the continental shelf, and the nature and extent of the jurisdiction of coastal States over fisheries.

A number of States said that the four 1958 Geneva Conventions on the law of the sea<sup>6</sup> nevertheless represented existing international law and embodied a large number of rules which would have to be retained as an integral part of whatever new law was developed. This was the position of Australia, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, China, Greece, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Philippines, Portugal, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom, Uruguay and majority of States in the current international community had not participated in the two Geneva conferences. Barbados and Cameroon said they had not been party to the 1958 Geneva Conventions and did not recognize them.

The unilateral extension of territorial claims over the seas was criticized by—among others—Australia, Bolivia, Finland, France, Italy, Madagascar, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States; these Members said the question of national limits could be resolved only through multilateral agreement. Finland and Sweden said that recent unilateral claims violated the moratorium established by the General Assembly resolution of 15 December 1969, to the effect that no claim to any part of the sea-bed area beyond the limits of national jurisdiction should be recognized pending the establishment of an international regime.<sup>7</sup>

Peru questioned how unilateral action could be described as contrary to international law if there were no universal provisions to define the limits of national jurisdiction. Uruguay said there was no positive juridical principle in opposition to the right of coastal States unilaterally to determine their territorial limits.

Guyana argued that given the existing divergencies in State practice, and the absence of any generally binding convention on the subject, the only principle which could be deduced was that of the competence of States unilaterally to appreciate their limits, subject only to the criteria of adjacency and reasonableness.

Ecuador, the Philippines, Malaysia and Venezuela also defended the rights of coastal States unilaterally to determine their limits, in order to protect the interests of their populations. Peru, however, favoured a conference on the problem, believing the question should be the subject of an international understanding.

Italy said the international community must reach agreement on new and generally acceptable limits for territorial seas, building upon the existing regime for the territorial sea.

Denmark noted that the experience of the 1958 and 1960 Geneva conferences had indicated that it did not serve the interests of the international community to establish too-narrow limits for the legitimate interests of coastal States in connexion with the uses of the seas.

The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania said it was not important whether the breadth of the territorial sea was greater or lesser. What was important was to draw up new rules and regulations which would have the support of the vast majority of the nations of the world and make unilateral action unnecessary. So long as the status quo was maintained, it would be impossible to restrain many States from taking unilateral action, in particular, the developing States, which felt that the present legal conventions on the subject favoured the interests of the developed nations.

A number of Members said that the question of jurisdiction over coastal fisheries was a different problem from that of sovereignty over territorial waters and should be dealt with separately. Australia, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Italy, Finland, Madagascar, Portugal, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the USSR were among those that stressed the importance of granting special fishing rights to coastal States. Iceland said the depletion of fish stocks in the north-east Atlantic, despite well-meant but ineffective conservation efforts by international bodies in the area, illustrated the urgent need for granting coastal States much wider jurisdiction over coastal fisheries than they currently enjoyed.

MARINE POLLUTION

It was noted by Peru that marine pollution was one of the factors that had led certain countries to extend the limits of their maritime jurisdiction. Many other Members also commented on the growing threat posed by marine pollution.

The USSR said that as exploration and exploitation of the resources of the sea-bed went forward at a more rapid pace, the danger of serious pollution of the marine environment would constantly increase, if no necessary measures were taken. China observed that there was a need for a revised set of articles in a convention on pollution, or as an amendment of the relevant articles of the 1958 Geneva Conventions. Pakistan and the United Republic of Tanzania said steps should be taken towards providing compensation to the country affected by pollution, where it was directly attributable to any State or agency.

The representative of Sweden said that while marine pollution resulting from the exploration and exploitation of the sea-bed should be considered together with the establishment of an international regime, the wider aspects of marine pollution, whether of land-based or sea-based origin, should be left to the 1972 United Nations Conference on the Human Environment. A number of other Members also referred to the need for co-ordination with this Conference, as well as with the Conference on Marine Pollution, to be convened by the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization in 1973.

OTHER ISSUES

Ghana, Guyana, Jamaica, Peru and Trinidad and Tobago stressed the urgency of training nationals of developing countries in sea-bed operations, if the developing countries were to participate in a meaningful way in the regime to be established.

The Ukrainian SSR said the fundamental task continued to be a redoubling of efforts of States in the field of oceanographic research. Belgium and the USSR were among other States that referred to the need for scientific exploration of the sea-bed area.

Greece was one of several States which said that any agreement on the exploration and exploitation of the sea-bed should not affect the present status of freedom of navigation on the high seas.

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On 15 and 16 December 1970, the First Committee voted on and approved four resolutions dealing with the sea-bed and related topics. These resolutions, adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December, are described below.

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution containing a Declaration of Principles Governing the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor, and the Subsoil Thereof, beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction.

The Assembly thereby: (a) affirmed that there was an area of the sea-bed and the ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, whose precise limits were yet to be determined; (b) recognized that the existing legal regime of the high seas did not provide substantive rules for regulating the exploration of that area and the exploitation of its resources; (c) expressed its conviction that the area should be reserved exclusively for peaceful purposes and exploited and explored for the benefit of mankind as a whole; (d) expressed its belief that an international regime applying to the area, including appropriate international machinery, should be established as soon as possible; and (e) stated that the development and use of the area and its resources should be undertaken in such a manner as to foster the healthy development of the world economy and balanced growth of international trade, and to minimize any adverse economic effects caused by the fluctuation of prices of raw materials resulting from such activities.

The Assembly then set forth the following 15 principles which were to govern the sea-bed and ocean floor:

(1) The sea-bed and ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction (subsequently referred to as "the area"), and their resources, were the common heritage of mankind.

(2) The area should not be subject to appropriation by any means by States or persons, natural or juridical, and no State should claim or exercise sovereignty or sovereign rights over any part of it.

(3) No State or person, natural or juridical, should claim, exercise, or acquire rights with respect to the area or its resources incompatible with the international regime to be established and the principles of this Declaration.

(4) All activities regarding the exploration and exploitation of the resources of the area and other related activities should be governed by the international regime to be established.

(5) The area should be open to use exclusively for peaceful purposes by all States, whether coastal or land-locked, without discrimination, in accordance with the international regime to be established.

(6) States should act in the area in accordance with the applicable principles and rules of international law, in the interests of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and mutual understanding.

(7) The exploration of the area and the exploitation of its resources should be carried out for the benefit of mankind as a whole, irrespective of the geographical location of States, and taking into particular consideration the interests and needs of developing countries.

(8) The area should be reserved exclusively for peaceful purposes. One or more international agreements should be concluded as soon as possible in order to implement effectively this principle and to constitute a step towards the exclusion of the sea-bed and ocean floor from the arms race.

(9) An international regime applying to the area and its resources and including appropriate international machinery to give effect to its provisions should be established by an international treaty of a universal character. The regime should, inter alia, provide for the orderly and safe development and rational management of the area and its resources and for expanding opportunities in the use thereof, and ensure the equitable sharing by States in the benefits therefrom, taking into particular consideration the interests and needs of the developing countries, whether land-locked or coastal.

(10) States should, by various means, promote international co-operation in scientific research exclusively for peaceful purposes.

(11) Acting in conformity with the international regime to be established, States should take appropriate measures for, and co-operate in, the adoption and implementation of international rules, standards and procedures for the prevention of pollution, contamination and other hazards to the marine environment, including the coastline, and for the protection and conservation of the natural resources of the area and flora and fauna of the marine environment.

(12) In their activities in the area, including those relating to its resources, States should pay due regard to the rights and legitimate interests of coastal States in the region, as well as of all other States which might be affected by such activities.

(13) Nothing in the Declaration should affect (a) the legal status of the waters superjacent to the area or that of the space above those waters; or (b) the rights of coastal States with respect to measures to prevent, mitigate or eliminate grave and imminent danger to their coastline or related interests from pollution or threat thereof or from other hazardous occurrences resulting from or caused by any activities in the area, subject to the international regime to be established.

(14) Every State should have the responsibility to ensure that activities in the area, including those relating to its resources, whether undertaken by governmental agencies or non-governmental entities or persons under its jurisdiction or acting on its behalf, should be carried out in conformity with the international regime to be established. The same responsibility applied to international organizations and their members. Damage caused by such activities should entail liability.

(15) The parties to any dispute relating to activities in the area and its resources should resolve such dispute by the measures mentioned in Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations<sup>8</sup> and such procedures for settling disputes as might be agreed upon in the international regime to be established.

These principles were laid down in resolution 2749 (XXV), which was adopted by the Assembly by 108 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The resolution was adopted on the recommendation of the First Committee, by which it was approved on 15 December 1970 by a vote of 90 to 0, with 11 abstentions.

The text resulted from informal consultations that were held by the Chairman of the Sea-Bed Committee with members of the Committee, after that body had failed at its 1970 sessions to reach agreement on a draft declaration of principles for submission to the General Assembly (see above).

In reporting to the First Committee on 25 November, the Chairman of the Sea-Bed Committee said the consultations had been undertaken with the informal approval of the Sea-Bed Committee members. The resulting draft, in the Chairman's opinion, reflected the highest degree of agreement attainable at the current time, although it did not represent a consensus of all the members of the Committee.

The text of the draft declaration, which was communicated to the Chairman of the First Committee by a letter of 24 November, was subsequently embodied in a draft resolution sponsored in the First Committee by 46 States: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Cameroon, Canada, Ceylon, Chile, Colombia, Cyprus, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guyana, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Malta, Mexico, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sudan, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen and Yugoslavia.

During the discussion in the First Committee, an elucidation of the text was offered by the representative of El Salvador, who had served as Chairman of the Legal Sub-Committee of the Sea-Bed Committee. The Salvadorian representative said that although the text represented the adjustment of doctrinary and political positions, it was coherent and understandable and in keeping with general as well as juridical logic.

He noted further that the Declaration reflected present-day international realities insofar as it stated that the international area of the seabed had limits that were yet to be determined. The reference to limits appeared in the preamble, the representative said, because it was not a principle but a determining concept.

The Salvadorian spokesman also said the Declaration was not, and was not intended to be, a provisional regime governing the exploitation of the sea-bed, although it did represent a first step towards that regime. Nor did the text endorse or undermine the so-called moratorium that was the subject of the General Assembly resolution of 15 December 1969.<sup>9</sup>

The clear-cut intention of the Declaration of Principles, the representative of El Salvador continued, was to establish with respect to the

"The parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.

"The Security Council shall, when it deems necessary, call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means."

sea-bed completely different rules from those international custom had authorized for the utilization of the living resources of the high seas; the free use of those resources, established when technological development was still in its initial stage, was now threatening the ecological balance of the seas. The unconditional exploitation of the resources of the sea-bed would be incompatible with the Declaration, which called for the healthy development of the world economy and the minimizing of the economic effects caused by the fluctuation of prices of raw materials.

The key provision of the Declaration, which constituted a valuable instrument for the interpretation of its other provisions, the representative of El Salvador said, was the concept that the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, and their resources, were the common heritage of mankind.

Most of the States which expressed support for the Declaration of Principles stressed that it was a compromise document. Although it was fully satisfying to no Member, it managed to strike a delicate balance between many different points of view and could serve as the basis for a future international regime. This view was expressed by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Brazil, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, Ghana, Guyana, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

A number of the above States also stated that the backbone of the Declaration was its recognition that the sea-bed and ocean floor were the common heritage of mankind.

Reservations regarding various provisions of the Declaration were expressed by several States, including Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Indonesia, Italy, Libya, Madagascar, Malta, Peru, South Africa, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Venezuela. These States did not put forward any amendments, however, on the understanding that to do so would be to endanger the Declaration's delicate balance.

Australia, Belgium, Canada and the United Kingdom said the Declaration should have no legal binding force. It should not, Australia said, prejudice or restrict the scope of matters that could be determined effectively only through international agreement.

The USSR said the elaboration of a declaration on legal principles for the sea-bed which reflected the position of all the main groups of States would be a useful step towards the solution of other problems relating to the sea-bed. However, the text that had emerged from unofficial consultations among members of the Sea-Bed Committee could not be considered satisfactory: it suffered from substantial shortcomings and did not reflect the point of view of all groups of States. The text expressed in excessive detail provisions that could only be agreed upon in future and ignored many important provisions tied in with generally recognized principles of international law. Among other things, it only touched on the urgent question of the need to establish the boundaries of the area beyond national jurisdiction. Also, in the USSR's view, the concept of the common heritage led to the condoning of the establishment of capitalist monopolies over the resources of the sea-bed. For these and other reasons, the USSR was unable to support the Declaration.

The Byelorussian SSR said it could not accept the concept that the sea-bed and ocean floor were the common heritage of mankind, a kind of collective property of all peoples. The concept did not take into account the objective realities of the contemporary world, in which there were States with different social systems and different property regimes, and made more difficult the working out of legal principles consonant with the interests of all States.

Poland said the text was enigmatic from the juridical point of view; it should have been much more explicit and categorical in its provisions.

Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Romania and the Ukrainian SSR also said the text had shortcomings and they criticized the procedure for its preparation.

STUDY OF RESOURCE PROBLEMS

Also on 17 December 1970, the General Assembly took action with regard to the problems arising from the production of certain minerals from the sea-bed area beyond the limits of national jurisdiction.

The Assembly first: (a) reaffirmed that the area of the sea-bed and the ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction and its resources were the common heritage of mankind; (b) expressed its conviction that the exploration of the area and the exploitation of its resources should be carried out for the benefit of mankind as a whole, taking into account the special interests and needs of the developing countries; and (c) reaffirmed that the development of the area and its resources should be undertaken in such a manner as to foster the healthy development of the world economy and balanced growth of international trade, and to minimize any adverse economic effects caused by the fluctuation of prices of raw materials resulting from such activities. The Assembly then did the following:

It requested the Secretary-General to co-operate with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), specialized agencies and other competent organizations of the United Nations system in order to: (a) identify the problems arising from the production of certain minerals from the area beyond the limits of national jurisdiction and examine the impact they would have on the economic well-being of the developing countries, in particular on prices of mineral exports on the world market; (b) study these problems in the light of the scale of possible exploitation of the sea-bed, taking into account the world demand for raw materials and the evolution of costs and prices; and (c) propose effective solutions for dealing with these problems.

The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to submit his report thereon to the Sea-Bed Committee for its consideration in 1971 and for its recommendations, as appropriate, to foster the healthy development of the world economy and balanced growth of international trade, and to minimize any adverse economic effects caused by the fluctuation of prices of raw materials resulting from such activities.

The Secretary-General was further requested, in co-operation with UNCTAD, specialized agencies and other competent organizations of the United Nations system, to keep this matter under constant review so as to submit supplementary information annually or whenever it was necessary and recommend additional measures in the light of economic, scientific and technological developments.

Finally, the Sea-Bed Committee was asked to submit a report on this question in 1971.

These decisions of the General Assembly were embodied in resolution 2750 A (XXV), which was adopted by a vote of 104 to 0, with 16 abstentions. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The resolution was based on a draft text, which was approved by the First Committee on 15 December 1970 by a vote of 86 to 0, with 18 abstentions, and ultimately sponsored by 17 countries: Algeria, Brazil, Chile, Democratic Republic of the Congo, El Salvador, Indonesia, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Kuwait, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Pakistan, Peru, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

During the debate in the First Committee, the representative of Kuwait stated that international commodity agreements, such as those concluded within the framework of UNCTAD, had proved to be an effective method of avoiding fluctuation in the prices of raw materials produced on land and in the continental shelf. It was inevitable that the projected international machinery should impose a ceiling on the production of similar resources from the sea-bed. This was a matter of vital concern to developing countries, whose economies were still dependent on a limited number of agricultural and mineral commodities.

Chile noted that for certain developing countries, all the benefits derived from the exploitation of the sea-bed could be offset by fluctuations in the price of raw materials. A study by the Secretary-General on the subject was therefore not only necessary but urgent.

Belgium said it understood that the General Assembly would merely be requesting the preparation of a study and not taking a decision either for or against the principle on which the question was based.

Japan said the text did not take due regard of the position of States that were not rich in natural resources and were therefore importers of mineral resources.

The USSR considered that in view of the fact that the limits of the area beyond national jurisdiction had not yet been defined and that commercial exploitation of the resources of the area was not underway, the necessary data on the subject were not available.

PROBLEMS OF LAND-LOCKED COUNTRIES VIS-A-VIS EXPLOITATION OF SEA-BED

The General Assembly also took steps during its 1970 session with regard to the special problems of land-locked countries in relation to exploitation of the sea-bed.

In so doing, the Assembly recalled its earlier resolutions concerning the problems of land-locked countries; bore in mind the wide support that had been indicated for the idea of convening a conference on the law of the sea, at which the interests and needs of all States, whether land-locked or coastal, could be reconciled; noted that many of the current land-locked States Members of the United Nations had not participated in the previous United Nations conferences on the law of the sea; reaffirmed that the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, and the resources thereof, were the common heritage of mankind; and expressed its conviction that the exploration of the area and the exploitation of its resources must be carried out for the benefit of mankind, taking into account the special interests and needs of the developing countries, including the particular needs and problems of those which were land-locked.

The Assembly then requested the Secretary-General to prepare, in collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other competent bodies, an up-to-date study of the matters referred to in the memorandum dated 14 January 1958, prepared by the Secretariat, on the question of free access to the sea of land-locked countries, and to supplement that document with a report on the special problems of land-locked countries relating to the exploration and exploitation of the resources of the sea-bed and the ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction.

The Assembly further requested the Secretary-General to submit the study to the Sea-Bed Committee during 1971, so that appropriate measures might be evolved within the general framework of the law of the sea to resolve the problems of land-locked countries. The Sea-Bed

Committee was to report on this question to the General Assembly in 1971.

These actions of the General Assembly were embodied in resolution 2750 B (XXV), which was adopted on 17 December 1970 by 111 votes to 0, with 11 abstentions. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The text of the resolution was recommended by the First Committee, in which it was sponsored by Afghanistan, Austria, Bolivia, Burundi, Chad, Lesotho, Mali, Niger, Paraguay, Swaziland, Upper Volta and Zambia.

The text was approved by the First Committee on 15 December by a vote of 89 to 0, with 16 abstentions.

Earlier, at the request of Cameroon, which objected to singling out the problems of land-locked countries, separate votes were taken on the retention of two clauses of the resolution. By a vote of 74 to 2, with 27 abstentions, the First Committee voted to retain the phrase "including the particular needs and problems of those which are land-locked." in the preambular clause which stated that exploitation of the sea-bed area should be carried out for the benefit of mankind, taking into account the special interests and needs of the developing countries, including the particular needs of those which were land-locked.

By a vote of 77 to 2, with 27 abstentions, the Committee voted to retain the request to the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the special problems of land-locked countries relating to the exploration and exploitation of the sea-bed area.

During the debate in the First Committee, the representatives of Bolivia, Peru and Singapore said that land-locked countries had certain problems in common which should be studied further. The wording of the text in no way prejudged the issue, the Bolivian representative said.

Belgium argued that certain of the texts concerning the sea-bed area leaned too much in favour of the coastal States; the study to be undertaken by the Secretary-General would be one means of placing matters in more satisfactory balance. Moreover, what applied to the land-locked countries applied also mutatis mutandis to the so-called shelf-locked countries, the Belgian representative said.

CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA

During its discussion of the question of convening a conference on the law of the sea, the First Committee had before it a report by the Secretary-General setting out the views of 74 Member States on the holding of such a conference. The majority of these supported in principle the idea of convening a conference, although differing on its scope and timing. Those States that did not support the convening of a conference felt that there was no need to review or revise the 1958 Geneva Conventions on the law of the sea; at the same time, they stressed the need to resolve such outstanding problems as the definition of the breadth of the territorial waters and of the continental shelf.

Within the First Committee, there was widespread support for the idea of convening a conference on the law of the sea. Opinions differed, however, on the scope of the conference, its date and the machinery for its preparation.

The USSR said a conference could be justified only if it was convened to settle a limited number of the most urgent matters pending in the field of the law of the sea, including: the limits of the territorial sea, the use of straits for international navigation, special fishing rights for coastal States, and a more precise definition of the limits of the continental shelf. The new conference should in any case not shake the legal foundations of activities of States in the use of the oceans. This was also the view of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Romania and the Ukrainian SSR.

A preference for a conference that was limited in scope and did not attempt to deal simultaneously with all problems relating to the sea was also expressed by Austria, Denmark, Italy, New Zealand and Sweden, which said rapid progress would be more likely if the issues were dealt with in manageable packages, at one or more conferences. Noting that they were willing to accept the majority's desire for a more comprehensive conference, these States stressed the need for adequate preparation and said that such a conference should not review decisions taken at the 1958 Geneva conference on the law of the sea.

A comprehensive, far-reaching conference was favoured by a large number of States, which felt that all the issues of the sea were closely linked and could not be treated in isolation.

Argentina, Barbados, Brazil, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Cyprus, Ecuador, Ghana, Iceland, India, Indonesia, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Kenya, Kuwait, Liberia, Libya, Malaysia, Malta, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States and Uruguay favoured this approach.

Most States agreed that a conference should be held as early as possible and that it should be carefully prepared; in this regard, several States commented that the failure of the 1960 Geneva conference on the law of the sea could be attributed to the lack of adequate preparation.

Four draft resolutions concerning a conference were submitted to the First Committee.

The first draft resolution was submitted by the United States and subsequently co-sponsored by the Dominican Republic. By the operative paragraphs, the General Assembly would, inter alia:

(1) decide to convene an international conference on the law of the sea to conclude one or more international conventions with respect to: (a) an international regime for the area of the sea-bed and ocean floor, including appropriate machinery and related anti-pollution measures; (b) the breadth of the territorial sea and related matters of international straits and conservation and management of living resources of the high seas, including the interests of coastal States with respect to fisheries on the high seas; (c) the prevention of marine pollution; and (d) such other related matters as the conference might decide on; (2) request the Sea-Bed Committee to prepare for the conference draft treaty articles and other appropriate recommendations on the matters referred to above; (3) establish a preparatory committee composed of Member States (the number to be determined) named by the President of the General Assembly, to meet early in 1971 to prepare for the conference draft treaty articles and other appropriate recommendations on the breadth of the territorial sea and related matters, marine pollution, and such other related matters as the committee might refer to the conference; and (4) request the Secretary-General to convene a preparatory session of the conference for two months beginning in January

1972, and a second session for four months beginning in January 1973; all matters referred to above would be considered at both sessions of the conference, and final decisions would be taken concurrently at the 1973 session.

The United States said the highest priority should be given to fixing a definite date and over-all time frame for the conference; final decisions could not be put off beyond 1973.

Support for the United States draft was expressed by Afghanistan, Austria, Denmark, Liberia and Madagascar. These Members favoured setting an early and definite date for the conference and spelling out a clearly defined agenda.

The second draft resolution was submitted by Brazil and Trinidad and Tobago. By the operative paragraphs of the resolution, the General Assembly would, inter alia: (1) deem it desirable to convene, in the near future, a conference on the law of the sea to deal with the broad range of existing issues relating to the regimes of the high seas, the continental shelf, the territorial sea and contiguous zone, fishing and conservation of the living resources of the high seas, and questions relating to pollution and scientific research, in the light of the international regime to be established for the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction; (2) establish an ad hoc committee composed of 54 States, to be designated by the President of the General Assembly, having due regard to equitable geographical distribution; (3) instruct the ad hoc committee to make recommendations as to the agenda and procedures of the conference, in co-operation with the Sea-Bed Committee, and to report to the General Assembly at its 1971 session on the above questions.

The two-power draft, the Brazilian representative said, took into account the fact that a conference was desirable in the near future and promoted its preparation in an orderly and flexible manner; at the same time, it stressed that all aspects of the law of the sea should be considered in their interrelationship. It would be premature to establish an agenda at this point, the Brazilian representative said; if the conference was to be truly comprehensive, all countries should have the opportunity to study the broad range of issues in the field before setting an agenda.

Support for the two-power draft was expressed by Chile, Guyana, Jamaica, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Spain, the United Arab Republic and Uruguay, which favoured a general and unrestricted agenda and an open date for the conference.

Both the United States draft and the two-power text called for the creation of a special preparatory committee for the conference which would work in co-operation with the Sea-Bed Committee. Some of the Members supporting a two-committee approach, including Austria, Canada, Denmark, Kuwait and the United Kingdom, said two committees would be able to achieve results in a shorter time. It was also pointed out in this connexion that the mandate of the Sea-Bed Committee was restricted to the area of the sea-bed beyond national jurisdiction.

However, during the discussion, a consensus emerged for a single-committee approach. Two reasons were cited for the desirability of this approach: the inseparable nature of all problems of the sea, and the duplication and delay that would result from co-ordinating the work of two committees. There was also a general feeling that the preparatory body should be the Sea-Bed Committee, which should be enlarged to take in a greater number of States.

Many States also supported the setting of a target date of 1973 for the conference, as a compromise between a definite and an open date.

The third draft resolution submitted to the First Committee incorporated these views.

This draft was sponsored by seven Members: Ecuador, Guyana, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Peru and Sierra Leone.

By the operative paragraphs of the text, the General Assembly would: (1) note with satisfaction the progress made so far towards the elaboration of an international regime for the sea-bed and ocean floor; (2) decide to convene early in 1973, if possible, a conference on the law of the sea which would establish an equitable international regime, including an international machinery, for the area and the resources of the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, and deal with a precise definition of the area, as well as with the broad range of related issues, including those concerning the regimes of the high seas, the continental shelf, the territorial sea and contiguous zone, fishing and conservation of living resources of the high seas, the preservation of the marine environment, and scientific research; (3) reaffirm the mandate of the Sea-Bed Committee; (4) enlarge the Sea-Bed Committee by 29 members, taking into account equitable geographical representation; (5) instruct the enlarged Committee to hold two meetings in 1971 in order to prepare (a) the draft of a treaty embodying the international regime including an international machinery for the area and its resources; and (b) a comprehensive list of subjects and issues relating to the law of the sea which should be dealt with by the conference, and draft articles on such subjects and issues.

In introducing the draft, Jamaica said that it was a compromise text that took into account the various interests and needs of the different regional groups, coastal and land-locked, developed and developing. The sponsors felt the draft reflected the existing widespread support for a comprehensive conference and took a flexible and realistic position with regard to its date.

Support for the seven-power text as an acceptable compromise was indicated by Argentina, Ceylon, Chile, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ethiopia, India and Yugoslavia. Brazil and Trinidad and Tobago, the sponsors of the two-power draft, also found the seven-power text satisfactory.

Other Members, however, expressed various objections. Thus, the USSR, noting that the majority of States seemed to be in favour of convening an international conference on the law of the sea and in setting 1973 as the date, said the main area of contention was the conference agenda. Here the seven-power draft was unsatisfactory because it did not provide for defining the limits of national jurisdiction, without which the preparation of a regime would be put in jeopardy. The text reflected the attitude of a group of States which favoured revising the 1958 Geneva Conventions on the law of the sea, a position the USSR thought would lead to the postponement for an indeterminate period of urgent questions. The USSR could not agree that merging questions of the sea-bed with an unlimited number of questions relating to the law of the sea would help to settle the problem of the regime of the sea-bed or other pending matters.

New Zealand and the United Kingdom noted that the text gave a certain priority to the establishment of the international regime; they felt that the establishment of the regime and the delimitation of the area to which it was to apply must be given parallel treatment. New Zealand, among others, also said it was necessary to have a definite target date for the conference; the words "if possible" should therefore be deleted from the provision that called for the Assembly to convene a conference early in 1973, if possible.

Some States which did not find the seven-power draft resolution acceptable proposed a variety of amendments. In all, five sets of amendments to the revised draft were put forward by the following States: Norway; Australia, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand and the United Kingdom; Malta; Canada; and Ghana, Norway, Pakistan, Singapore and Sweden.

The most extensive amendments were sponsored by Australia, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand and the United Kingdom, and orally co-sponsored by Belgium. These amendments had as their main purpose: (1) to set a definite target date for the conference; (2) to ensure that all questions were given parallel treatment and that priority was not given to the establishment of a regime, or to any other matter; and (3) to ensure that all States which had a material interest in questions relating to the sea-bed were included on the enlarged Sea-Bed Committee.

They would call on the Assembly to convene early in 1973 a conference on the law of the sea for the purpose of concluding one or more international conventions: (a) which would establish an equitable international regime, including an international machinery, for the area and resources of the sea-bed and ocean floor, and the sub-soil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, and a precise definition of the area; (b) with respect to the breadth of the territorial sea and the directly related matters of international straits and of the interests of coastal States in regard to fisheries in adjacent areas of the high seas; (c) with respect to questions of marine pollution; (d) with respect to such other specific matters as the General Assembly might decide upon.

The amendments would also, among other things, enlarge the membership of the Sea-Bed

Committee by 39 members, to be named by the President of the General Assembly after consultation with the regional groups.

A revised version of the seven-power text was then introduced, with the addition of Haiti and Tunisia as sponsors. The nine-power draft would convene in 1973, subject to the progress achieved in the preparatory work by the Sea-Bed Committee, a conference on the law of the sea which would establish an equitable international regime, including an international machinery, for the sea-bed area beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, and arrive at a precise definition of the area, in dealing with the broad range of related issues, including those concerning the regimes of the high seas, the continental shelf, the territorial sea and contiguous zone, international straits, fishing and conservation, the prevention of pollution, and scientific research.

The United States also revised its proposal, modifying the provisions concerning the date of the conference, its agenda and the nature of the preparatory committee, in order to conform with the general pattern of other proposals.

Thus, by the operative paragraphs of the revised United States draft, the General Assembly would: (1) convene in 1973 an international conference on the law of the sea to deal with a broad range of issues relating to the law of the sea, particularly in order to conclude one or more international agreements with respect to an equitable international regime for the area and resources of the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, including appropriate international machinery, a precise definition of the area, and related anti-pollution measures, as well as the breadth of the territorial sea and the related matters of international straits and fishing rights of coastal States, the conservation of the living resources of the high seas, the prevention of marine pollution and such other related matters as the conference might decide upon; (2) determine at its 1971 session the precise date, location and other pertinent details relating to the convening of the conference, taking into account the progress made by that time; (3) enlarge the Sea-Bed Committee by an additional (to be determined) number of members, and instruct it to prepare draft treaty articles on the international regime and on other related matters.

Amendments to this text were submitted by the United Kingdom.

Following consultations between the sponsors of the three draft resolutions, as well as with other Members, a fourth text was introduced, sponsored by 25 States: Canada, Chile, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ghana, Guyana, Haiti, Iceland, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Nigeria, Norway, Peru, the Philippines, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States and Yugoslavia.

By the major provisions of the operative paragraphs of this draft, the General Assembly would: (1) note with satisfaction the progress made so far towards the elaboration of the international regime for the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction; (2) decide to convene in 1973, in accordance with the provisions set forth below, a conference on the law of the sea which would deal with the establishment of an equitable international regime, including an international machinery, for the area and resources of the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, a precise definition of the area, and a broad range of related issues; (3) decide to review in 1971 and 1972 the progress reports of the Sea-Bed Committee, in order to determine the precise agenda of the conference, its definitive date, location, duration and related arrangements, and to postpone the conference if the preparatory work was insufficient; (4) reaffirm the mandate of the Sea-Bed Committee; (5) enlarge the Sea-Bed Committee by 39 members, appointed by the Chairman of the First Committee in consultation with the regional groups and taking into account equitable geographical representation thereon; and (6) instruct the enlarged committee to hold two meetings in 1971 in order to prepare for the conference draft treaty articles embodying the international regime, including an international machinery, for the sea-bed area and resources, and a comprehensive list of subjects and issues relating to the law of the sea.

The three other draft resolutions before the First Committee were then withdrawn by the sponsors.

However, amendments to the 25-power draft resolution were submitted by the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, by Malta and Turkey and by Japan. Only those of Malta and Turkey were pressed to a vote. At the request of Malta, separate votes were taken on three amendments. By a roll-call vote of 46 to 37, with 31 abstentions, the Committee agreed to add the words "in a framework of close international co-operation" to the end of the preambular paragraph by which the General Assembly noted the need for the early and progressive development of the law of the sea.

The other two amendments were defeated by votes of 48 to 39, with 27 abstentions, and of 41 to 37, with 36 abstentions, respectively. The first amendment would have deleted the sentence that called for the General Assembly to postpone the conference, if it determined at its 1972 session that the preparatory work was insufficient. The second amendment would have changed the mandate of the Sea-Bed Committee so that it would prepare for the conference draft treaty articles embodying the international regime and the delimitation of the area to which it would apply, as well as draft treaty articles on other subjects that were to be dealt with by the conference.

The 25-power draft resolution as a whole, as amended, was approved by the First Committee on 16 December 1970, by a roll-call vote of 100 to 8, with 6 abstentions.

On the same day, and after consulting with the chairmen of the regional groups, the Chairman of the First Committee announced that the 39 members to be added to the Sea-Bed Committee would be allotted as follows: thirteen seats to the African States, eight to Latin America, nine to Asia, three to Eastern Europe, and six to Western European and other States.

The draft resolution was discussed at a plenary meeting of the General Assembly on 17 December 1970. At that time, Australia, Belgium, Finland, Greece, Guatemala, Italy, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Spain and Turkey submitted an amendment which would have enlarged the membership of the Sea-Bed Committee so as to include all States Members of the United Nations. Introducing the amendment, Spain said that because the tasks entrusted to the Committee were complex and involved all Member States, each sovereign State should have the right to defend its own interests.

An Indian sub-amendment to the 10-power amendment was submitted; this would have enlarged the membership of the Committee by 40, with the additional seat to go to the Western European group. The Indian sub-amendment was orally sub-amended by Pakistan and Tunisia so as to enlarge the Sea-Bed Committee by 44 members, with each geographical group to gain an additional seat. This sub-amendment was accepted by the sponsors of the 10-power amendment and by India, and was approved by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 102 to 1, with 17 abstentions.

The Assembly then adopted the text as a whole, as amended, as its resolution 2750 C (XXV), by a recorded vote of 108 to 7, with 6 abstentions.

The General Assembly thereby: (a) took into account the results of the consultations undertaken by the Secretary-General in accordance with its resolution of 15 December 1969,<sup>10</sup> which indicated widespread support for the holding of a comprehensive conference on the law of the sea; (b) expressed its consciousness that the problems of ocean space were closely interrelated and needed to be considered as a whole; (c) noted that the political and economic realities, scientific development and rapid technological advances of the last decade had accentuated the need for early and progressive development of the law of the sea, in a framework of close international co-operation; (d) took account of the fact that many of the current States Members of the United Nations had not taken part in the previous United Nations conferences on the law of the sea; (e) expressed its conviction that the elaboration of an equitable international regime for the sea-bed and ocean floor and subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, would facilitate agreement on the questions to be examined at such a conference; (f) affirmed that such agreements on those questions should seek to accommodate the interests and needs of all States, whether land-locked or coastal, taking into account the special interests and needs of the developing countries, whether land-locked or coastal; (g) took into consideration the report of the Sea-Bed Committee; and (h) expressed its conviction that a new conference on the law of the sea would have to be carefully prepared to ensure its success and that the preparatory work ought to start as soon as possible after the conclusion of the 1970 session of the General Assembly, drawing on the experience already accumulated in the Sea-Bed Committee and using fully the opportunity provided by the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, to be held in 1972, to further its work.

The General Assembly then took the following action. It noted with satisfaction the progress made so far towards the elaboration of the international regime for the sea-bed and ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction through the adoption of the Declaration of Principles governing the sea-bed area.

It decided to convene in 1973, in accordance with the provisions set forth below, a conference on the law of the sea which would deal with the establishment of an equitable international regime—including an international machinery—for the area and the resources of the sea-bed and the ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, a precise definition of the area, and a broad range of related issues including those concerning the regimes of the high seas, the continental shelf, the territorial sea (including the question of its breadth and the question of international straits) and contiguous zone, fishing and conservation of the living resources of the high seas (including the question of the preferential rights of coastal States), the preservation of the marine environment (including, inter alia, the prevention of pollution) and scientific research.

The Assembly decided to review, at its 1971 and 1972 sessions, reports of the Sea-Bed Committee on the progress of its preparatory work with a view to determining the precise agenda of the conference on the law of the sea, its definitive date, location and duration, and related arrangements. If the Assembly, at its 1972 session, determined the progress of the preparatory work of the Committee to be insufficient, it might decide to postpone the conference.

The Assembly then reaffirmed the mandate of the Sea-Bed Committee set forth in its resolution of 21 December 1968<sup>11</sup> as supplemented by the present resolution. It decided to enlarge the Committee by 44 members, appointed by the Chairman of the First Committee in consultation with regional groups and taking into account equitable geographical representation thereon.

The enlarged Committee was instructed to hold two sessions in Geneva, in March and in July-August 1971, in order to prepare for the conference on the law of the sea draft treaty articles embodying the international regime—including an international machinery—for the sea-bed area beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, taking into account the equitable sharing by all States in the benefits to be derived therefrom, bearing in mind the special interests and needs of developing countries, whether coastal or land-locked, on the basis of the Declaration of Principles governing the area, and a comprehensive list of subjects and issues relating to the law of the sea, which should be dealt with by the conference, and draft articles on such subjects and issues.

The Committee was also authorized to establish such subsidiary organs as it deemed necessary for the efficient performance of its functions, bearing in mind the scientific, economic, legal and technical aspects of the issues involved.

The Assembly requested the Committee to prepare, as appropriate, reports to the General Assembly on the progress of its work and requested the Secretary-General to circulate these reports to Member States and to observers to the United Nations for their comments and observations.

The Assembly also decided to invite other Member States which were not appointed to the Committee to participate as observers, and to be heard on specific points. It also, among other things, invited various inter-governmental bodies and specialized agencies concerned to co-operate fully with the enlarged Sea-Bed Committee in the implementation of this resolution, in particular by preparing such scientific and technical documentation as the Committee might request.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2340(XXII) of 18 December 1967, 2467(XXIII) of 21 December 1968 and 2574(XXIV) of 15 December 1969, concerning the area to which the title of the item refers,

Affirming that there is an area of the sea-bed and the ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, the precise limits of which are yet to be determined,

Recognizing that the existing legal regime of the high seas does not provide substantive rules for regulating the exploration of the aforesaid area and the exploitation of its resources,

Convinced that the area shall be reserved exclusively for peaceful purposes and that the exploration of the area and the exploitation of its resources shall be carried out for the benefit of mankind as a whole,

Believing it essential that an international regime applying to the area and its resources and including appropriate international machinery should be established as soon as possible,

Bearing in mind that the development and use of the area and its resources shall be undertaken in such a manner as to foster the healthy development of the world economy and balanced growth of international trade, and to minimize any adverse economic effects caused by the fluctuation of prices of raw materials resulting from such activities,

Solemnly declares that:

1. The sea-bed and ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction (hereinafter referred to as the area), as well as the resources of the area, are the common heritage of mankind.

2. The area shall not be subject to appropriation by any means by States or persons, natural or juridical, and no State shall claim or exercise sovereignty or sovereign rights over any part thereof.

3. No State or person, natural or juridical, shall claim, exercise or acquire rights with respect to the area or its resources incompatible with the international regime to be established and the principles of this Declaration.

4. All activities regarding the exploration and exploitation of the resources of the area and other related activities shall be governed by the international regime to be established.

5. The area shall be open to use exclusively for peaceful purposes by all States, whether coastal or land-locked, without discrimination, in accordance with the international regime to be established.

6. States shall act in the area in accordance with the applicable principles and rules of international law, including the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly on 24 October 1970, in the interests of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and mutual understanding.

7. The exploration of the area and the exploitation of its resources shall be carried out for the benefit of mankind as a whole, irrespective of the geographical location of States, whether land-locked or coastal, and taking into particular consideration the interests and needs of the developing countries.

8. The area shall be reserved exclusively for peaceful purposes, without prejudice to any measures which have been or may be agreed upon in the context of international negotiations undertaken in the field of disarmament and which may be applicable to a broader area. One or more international agreements shall be concluded as soon as possible in order to implement effectively this principle and to constitute a step towards the exclusion of the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof from the arms race.

9. On the basis of the principles of this Declaration, an international regime applying to the area and its resources and including appropriate international machinery to give effect to its provisions shall be established by an international treaty of a universal character, generally agreed upon. The regime shall, inter alia, provide for the orderly and safe development and rational management of the area and its resources and for expanding opportunities in the use thereof, and ensure the equitable sharing by States in the benefits derived therefrom, taking into particular consideration the interests and needs of the developing countries, whether land-locked or coastal.

10. States shall promote international co-operation in scientific research exclusively for peaceful purposes:

(a) By participation in international programmes and by encouraging co-operation in scientific research by personnel of different countries;

(b) Through effective publication of research programmes and dissemination of the results of research through international channels;

(c) By co-operation in measures to strengthen research capabilities of developing countries, including the participation of their nationals in research programmes.

No such activity shall form the legal basis for any claims with respect to any part of the area or its resources.

11. With respect to activities in the area and acting in conformity with the international regime to be established, States shall take appropriate measures for and shall co-operate in the adoption and implementation of international rules, standards and procedures for, inter alia:

(a) The prevention of pollution and contamination, and other hazards to the marine environment, including the coastline, and of interference with the ecological balance of the marine environment;

(b) The protection and conservation of the natural resources of the area and the prevention of damage to the flora and fauna of the marine environment.

12. In their activities in the area, including those relating to its resources, States shall pay due regard to the rights and legitimate interests of coastal States in the region of such activities, as well as of all other States, which may be affected by such activities. Consultations shall be maintained with the coastal States concerned with respect to activities relating to the exploration of the area and the exploitation of its resources with a view to avoiding infringement of such rights and interests.

13. Nothing herein shall affect:

(a) The legal status of the waters superjacent to the area or that of the air space above those waters;

(b) The rights of coastal States with respect to measures to prevent, mitigate or eliminate grave and imminent danger to their coastline or related interests from pollution or threat thereof or from other hazardous occurrences resulting from or caused by any activities in the area, subject to the international regime to be established.

14. Every State shall have the responsibility to ensure that activities in the area, including those relating to its resources, whether undertaken by governmental agencies, or non-governmental entities or persons under its jurisdiction, or acting on its behalf, shall be carried out in conformity with the international regime to be established. The same responsibility applies to international organizations and their members for activities undertaken by such organizations or on their behalf. Damage caused by such activities shall entail liability.

15. The parties to any dispute relating to activities in the area and its resources shall resolve such dispute by the measures mentioned in Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations and such procedures for settling disputes as may be agreed upon in the international regime to be established.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that the area of the sea-bed and the ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction and its resources are the common heritage of mankind,

Convinced that the exploration of the area and the exploitation of its resources should be carried out for the benefit of mankind as a whole, taking into account the special interests and needs of the developing countries,

Reaffirming that the development of the area and its resources shall be undertaken in such a manner as to foster the healthy development of the world economy and balanced growth of international trade, and to minimize any adverse economic effects caused by the fluctuation of prices of raw materials resulting from such activities,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to co-operate with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, specialized agencies and other competent organizations of the United Nations system in order to:

(a) Identify the problems arising from the production of certain minerals from the area beyond the limits of national jurisdiction and examine the impact they will have on the economic well-being of the developing countries, in particular on prices of mineral exports on the world market;

(b) Study these problems in the light of the scale of possible exploitation of the sea-bed, taking into account the world demand for raw materials and the evolution of costs and prices;

(c) Propose effective solutions for dealing with these problems;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit his report thereon to the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction for consideration during one of its sessions in 1971 and for making its recommendations, as appropriate, to foster the healthy development of the world economy and balanced growth of international trade and to minimize any adverse economic effects caused by the fluctuation of prices of raw materials resulting from such activities;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, specialized agencies and other competent organizations of the United Nations system, to keep this matter under constant review so as to submit supplementary information annually or whenever it is necessary and recommend additional measures in the light of economic, scientific and technological developments;

4. Calls upon the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction to submit a report on this question to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth

A/8097 and Corr.2. Report of First Committee, draft resolution II B.

RESOLUTION 2750 B (xxv), as recommended by First Committee, A/8097 and Corr.2, adopted by Assembly on 17 December 1970, meeting 1933, by 111 votes to 0, with 11 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1028(XI) of 20 February 1957 and 1105(XI) of 21 February 1957 concerning the problems of land-locked countries,

Bearing in mind the replies to the inquiries made by the Secretary-General in accordance with paragraph 1 of resolution 2574 A (XXIV) of 15 December 1969, which indicate wide support for the idea of convening a conference relating to the law of the sea, at which the interests and needs of all States, whether land-locked or coastal, could be reconciled,

Noting that many of the present land-locked States Members of the United Nations did not participate in the previous United Nations conferences on the law of the sea,

Reaffirming that the area of the sea-bed and the ocean floor, and their subsoil, lying beyond the limits of national jurisdiction together with the resources thereof are the common heritage of mankind,

Convinced that the exploration of the area and the exploitation of its resources must be carried out for the benefit of all mankind, taking into account the special interests and needs of the developing countries, including the particular needs and problems of those which are land-locked,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other competent bodies, an up-to-date study of the matters referred to in the memorandum dated 14 January 1958, prepared by the Secretariat, on the question of free access to the sea of land-locked countries and to supplement that document, in the light of the events which have occurred in the meantime, with a report on the special problems of land-locked countries relating to the exploration and exploitation of the resources of the sea-bed and the ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the above-mentioned study to the enlarged Committee on the Peaceful Uses of the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction for consideration at one of its sessions in 1971, so that appropriate measures may be evolved within the general framework of the law of the sea, to resolve the problems of land-locked countries;

3. Requests the Committee to report on this question to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 798(VIII) of 7 December 1953, 1105(XI) of 21 February 1957 and 2574A (XXIV) of 15 December 1969, Recalling further its resolutions 2340(XXII) of 18 December 1967, 2467(XXIII) of 21 December 1968 and 2574(XXIV) of 15 December 1969,

Taking into account the results of the consultations undertaken by the Secretary-General in accordance with paragraph 1 of resolution 2574 A (XXIV), which indicate widespread support for the holding of a comprehensive conference on the law of the sea,

Conscious that the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole,

Noting that the political and economic realities, scientific development and rapid technological advances of the last decade have accentuated the need for early and progressive development of the law of the sea, in a framework of close international co-operation,

Having regard to the fact that many of the present States Members of the United Nations did not take part in the previous United Nations conferences on the law of the sea,

Convinced that the elaboration of an equitable international regime for the sea-bed and the ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction would facilitate agreement on the questions to be examined at such a conference,

Affirming that such agreements on those questions should seek to accommodate the interests and needs of all States, whether land-locked or coastal, taking into account the special interests and needs of the developing countries, whether land-locked or coastal,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction,

Convinced that a new conference on the law of the sea would have to be carefully prepared to ensure its success and that the preparatory work ought to start as soon as possible after the conclusion of the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly, drawing on the experience already accumulated in the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction and using fully the opportunity provided by the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, to be held in 1972, to further its work,

1. Notes with satisfaction the progress made so far towards the elaboration of the international regime for the sea-bed and the ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction through the Declaration of Principles Governing the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor, and the Subsoil Thereof, beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction, adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1970;

2. Decides to convene in 1973, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 3 below, a conference on the law of the sea which would deal with the establishment of an equitable international regime—including an international machinery—for the area and the resources of the sea-bed and the ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, a precise definition of the area, and a broad range of related issues including those concerning the regimes of the high seas, the continental shelf, the territorial sea (including the question of its breadth and the question of international straits) and contiguous zone, fishing and conservation of the living resources of the high seas (including the question of the preferential rights of coastal States), the preservation of the marine environment (including, inter alia, the prevention of pollution) and scientific research;

3. Decides further to review, at its twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh sessions, the reports of the Committee referred to in paragraph 6 below on the progress of its preparatory work with a view to determining the precise agenda of the conference on the law of the sea, its definitive date, location and duration, and related arrangements; if the General Assembly, at its twenty-seventh session, determines the progress of the preparatory work of the Committee to be insufficient, it may decide to postpone the conference;

4. Reaffirms the mandate of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction set forth in General Assembly resolution 2467 A (XXIII) as supplemented by the present resolution;

5. Decides to enlarge the Committee by forty-four members, appointed by the Chairman of the First Committee in consultation with regional groups and taking into account equitable geographical representation thereon;

6. Instructs the enlarged Committee on the Peaceful Uses of the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction to hold two sessions in Geneva, in March and in July-August 1971, in order to prepare for the conference on the law of the sea draft treaty articles embodying the international regime—including an international machinery—for the area and the resources of the sea-bed and the ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, taking into account the equitable sharing by all States in the benefits to be derived therefrom, bearing in mind the special interests and needs of developing countries, whether coastal or land-locked, on the basis of the Declaration of Principles Governing the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor, and the Subsoil Thereof, beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction, and a comprehensive list of subjects and issues relating to the law of the sea referred to in paragraph 2 above, which should be dealt with by the conference, and draft articles on such subjects and issues;

7. Authorizes the Committee to establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the efficient performance of its functions, bearing in mind the scientific, economic, legal and technical aspects of the issues involved;

8. Requests the Committee to prepare, as appropriate, reports to the General Assembly on the progress of its work;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate those reports to Member States and to observers to the United Nations for their comments and observations;

10. Decides to invite other Member States which are not appointed to the Committee to participate as observers and to be heard on specific points;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to render the Committee all the assistance it may require in legal, economic, technical and scientific matters, including the provision of relevant records of the General Assembly and specialized agencies for the efficient performance of its functions;

12. Decides that the enlarged Committee, as well as its subsidiary organs, shall have summary records of its proceedings;

13. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and its Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and its Committee on Fisheries, the World Health Organization, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, the World Meteorological Organization, the International Atomic Energy Agency and other intergovernmental bodies and specialized agencies concerned to co-operate fully with the enlarged Committee on the Peaceful Uses of the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction in the implementation of the present resolution, in particular by preparing such scientific and technical documentation as the Committee may request.

A/8273 and Corr.1. Letter of 8 January 1971 from the Chairman of the First Committee to the Secretary-General.

CHAPTER V

REVIEW OF THE QUESTION OF PEACE-KEEPING OPERATIONS

During 1970, the General Assembly's 33-member Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations continued its work with a view to completing a comprehensive report on the United Nations military observer missions established or authorized by the Security Council for observation purposes, as requested by the General Assembly on 15 December 1969.<sup>1</sup> On 1 October 1970, the Special Committee submitted a report to the Assembly on the work of its eight-member Working Group.

Later in the year, when the Assembly took up the question of peace-keeping operations, it considered the Special Committee's report and took a number of decisions concerning the Committee's work.

CONSIDERATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, at meetings held between 20 March and 28 September 1970, approved a plan of work for its Working Group<sup>2</sup> by which the latter was to complete certain chapters of an eight-chapter study (known as Model I) of United Nations military observer missions established or authorized by the Security Council for observation purposes.

The Working Group was also to formulate the draft text of a standard agreement between the United Nations and the host country on the status of military observer missions and, if possible, to complete the preparation of a study that would deal with United Nations peace-keeping operations on a larger scale (known as Model II).

The discussion in the Working Group focused on the second chapter of the Model I study. This dealt with the establishment (formation, strength, composition and command), direction and control of observer missions.

The need for promptness in establishing observer missions, assistance to be rendered to the Security Council on military matters, and the role of the Secretary-General with regard to the establishment of observer missions were extensively discussed. There was an understanding among members that the concurrence of the host country should be sought in the selection of countries to provide military observers, auxiliary personnel and technical services for a given mission.

<sup>2</sup> The Working Group, established in April 1968, consisted of the following eight members in 1970: Canada, Czechoslovakia, France, Mexico, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom and the United States. The other members of the 33-member Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations were: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Brazil, Denmark (which replaced Sweden in December 1969), El Salvador, Ethiopia, Hungary, India, Iraq, Italy, Japan, Mauritania, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, Spain, Thailand, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

In its examination of the third chapter, dealing with legal arrangements, the Working Group considered that the legal arrangements affecting the establishment and functioning of observer missions should include in particular a standard form of agreement between the United Nations and the host country on the status of military observer missions; they should also include a standard form of agreement between the United Nations and States providing personnel, equipment, facilities and services.

With regard to the fourth chapter of the Model I study—on financial agreements for the establishment and functioning of observer missions—discussion on the preparation of advance estimates of financial implications continued. The Working Group also discussed the method and sources of financing and the responsibility for meeting costs to participating States over and above the costs of maintaining the same military personnel in their own countries.

During the discussion in the Special Committee, regret was generally expressed that the Working Group had been unable to complete its work, in spite of the encouraging progress that was evident in the previous year's report of the Working Group.<sup>3</sup>

There was recognition that agreement among the major powers was essential for the resolution of the remaining difficulties. However, Australia, Japan and Pakistan suggested that such a view should not imply abdication of responsibility on the part of the Special Committee or of any Members of the United Nations.

In a report dated 1 October 1970, which it submitted to the General Assembly, the Special Committee stated there was a general concurrence in principle that, although it had not been possible to reach agreement on fundamental questions, the method of the Working Group offered the best available way for seeking agreement on the question of peace-keeping operations. Suggestions were nevertheless put forward to ensure more frequent reporting by the Working Group to the Special Committee, thus enabling the Committee to play a more active role in the deliberations.

The Special Committee noted it had been recognized that the issues with which the Working Group was faced were of a fundamental nature and could not, without jeopardizing a final positive result, be resolved in haste. Accordingly, it believed that more time was required for consultations directed towards reaching agreement on the study on military observer missions; the additional time would also facilitate progress on the study dealing with peace-keeping operations on a larger scale.

In the introduction to his annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization, covering the period 16 June 1969–15 June 1970, the Secretary-General stated that what now seemed necessary was a political consensus at a higher level, among the major powers, on the very difficult outstanding questions relating to the roles of the Military Staff Committee, the Security Council and the Secretary-General in the management and financing of United Nations military observer groups. He stated it would be unfortunate if the wealth of experience gained by the Secretariat in the management of peace-keeping operations were not fully taken into consideration in the resolution of these remaining problems.

The Secretary-General also felt that a crucial aspect of the Special Committee's mandate should not be overlooked, namely, the desirability of overcoming the present financial difficulties of the Organization. Because of his special responsibility in that respect, the Secretary-General appealed once again to the members of the Special Committee, as well as to all United Nations Member States, to focus their attention on the important question of peace-keeping operations.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

During the General Assembly's twenty-fifth session, which opened on 15 September 1970, the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations was allocated to the Special Political Committee for consideration.

The Chairman of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations (Mexico) stated that for lack of progress in the solution of the constitutional problems facing it, the Committee had decided to follow the method of preparing models. What was required, he said, was to extend the scope of collective peace-keeping so as to bring in measures not expressly provided for in the United Nations Charter; since the operations involved had not been provided for in the Charter, the only basis for their acceptance was unanimity.

The establishment of the Working Group had made informal negotiations easier, but it had also created a new problem, the Chairman said, because those members of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations who were not members of the Working Group had felt excluded, in spite of efforts to keep them informed.

Meanwhile, he stated, the work of the Committee had not progressed fast enough; the study of observer missions had been even vaguer than in 1969<sup>4</sup> and the developed countries had not taken advantage of the twenty-fifth anniversary celebration of the United Nations, in 1970, to try to solve the financial problems of the Organization by making voluntary contributions.

The Chairman said it was regrettable that in five years the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations had been unable to do anything to improve the financial stability of the United Nations. He noted that, in order for this particular Committee to work more effectively, the General Assembly might consider re-constituting it by altering or rotating its membership or by giving it precise instructions.

The majority of the speakers who took part in the discussion in the Assembly's Special Political Committee expressed disappointment over the lack of progress by the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, but they supported the idea of renewing the latter's mandate. Ghana, however, expressed doubts about the advisability of renewing the mandate.

Australia, Canada, Cyprus, Denmark, Greece, Iran, Ireland, Japan, Kenya, Lebanon, Madagascar, Nepal, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan and Yugoslavia expressed the opinion that although agreement between the major powers on the fundamental issues of peace-keeping was necessary, if a way out of the current impasse were to be found, the United Nations membership as a whole also had its duties which should not be abdicated.

The working methods of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations were of concern to several speakers.

Yugoslavia suggested that the Special Committee should re-examine its methods, as well as those of the Working Group, in order to achieve broader participation by the members of the Special Committee in the negotiating process. The possibility of wider representation in the Special Committee's Working Group was suggested.

Expressing similar views, Ceylon, Denmark and India thought that more frequent reporting by the Working Group would also enable the Special Committee to play a more active role.

Italy, supported by Argentina and Iran, suggested that consideration be given to the idea of increasing the Working Group by including all members of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations who were also members of the Security Council.

Morocco, supported by Turkey, suggested that work in 1971 might be concentrated on one issue at a time with the hope of reaching a consensus; more working groups could be set up, so that different aspects of a problem could be discussed simultaneously, the results of the discussions always being studied by the Special Committee at its plenary meetings.

Turning to the general question of the responsibility for peace-keeping operations, Canada thought that the major unresolved issue was the extent of the responsibilities of the Security Council and the Secretary-General in the management of peace-keeping operations.

Supported by Australia, Finland, Kenya and Nepal, Canada maintained that a possible solution could be found by creating a subsidiary organ of the Security Council under Article 29 of the United Nations Charter (which states that the Security Council may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions), or, in certain cases, by means of the Military Staff Committee.

Finland saw no contradiction between the roles of the Secretary-General and the Security Council, but thought that the concept of collective responsibility must be upheld.

Australia, Austria and Lebanon, among others, maintained that the General Assembly was as important as the Security Council in peace-keeping operations because it had the power to suggest measures to preserve the peace when the Security Council might be deadlocked.

The representative of Italy deemed it necessary to keep all options open and not spend too much time defining too minutely the powers and responsibilities of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Secretary-General with regard to peace-keeping operations.

Australia, Norway and Sierra Leone stressed that it was important not to adopt specific proposals which might harden disagreement. They believed that Member States favoured approaching the problem from a more pragmatic view than before, setting limited goals and trying to advance step by step instead of trying to solve everything at once.

The spokesman for Pakistan said it was for the Security Council to determine the role of the Secretary-General in peace-keeping and the extent to which he should be delegated authority and be permitted to exercise it, but it was inevitable, he thought, that the Secretary-General would find himself in circumstances where he had to act on his own initiative. The effectiveness of his action would depend on the confidence of United Nations Member States, he added, just as any peace-keeping arrangements evolved would be effective only if all Members had due respect for the Organization's decisions and implemented them scrupulously.

If the United Nations were to carry out its main function effectively, the representative of the United States said, it direly needed improved stand-by arrangements, better advance planning and equitable financing on the basis of collective financial responsibility. While it was necessary to continue the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations and its Working Group to see whether agreement could be reached on guidelines for the first two peace-keeping models (see above, pp. 83-84), this did not mean that the General Assembly could not act on certain concrete and specific measures to strengthen United Nations peace-keeping.

The chief practical difficulty, in the view of the United States representative, was to determine which body should have the power to establish and control peace-keeping operations.

The problem was to agree on guidelines that reconciled the political authority of the Security Council with the need for a single executive body responsible for the operational decisions that could not be made effectively by a deliberative body.

Three other considerations were essential, he thought: first, the United Nations must preserve and improve its capacity to deploy peace-keeping forces promptly in an emergency; second, the expenses entailed by peace-keeping operations should be the collective responsibility of all United Nations Member States; lastly, men and facilities must be in readiness for peace-keeping emergencies.

France considered that, in order to determine the main principles for action, it was necessary to return to the provisions of the Charter, which in fact defined very clearly the general terms of reference of the different United Nations bodies. Only by reference to the Articles of the Charter could answers be found to the fundamental questions of peace-keeping, questions which were of an institutional nature.

United Nations peace-keeping operations, the representative of the USSR said, must be carried out strictly in accordance with the provisions and principles of the Charter and in particular with the principle that armed forces must not be used, save in the common interest. However, he said, some United Nations Members, while officially advocating a speedy solution to the problem, were in fact hampering progress by departing from positions on which agreement had been reached in earlier stages of the discussions.

Certain States, the USSR representative continued, were pursuing a policy to ensure that de facto responsibility for various aspects of United Nations peace-keeping operations remained with those who held key positions in the United Nations Secretariat, while the Security Council, entrusted under the Charter with primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, was to remain practically excluded from the administration of those operations.

Attempts were also being made to exclude the Military Staff Committee from participation in such operations, he said, in spite of the fact that that body had been established to advise and assist the Security Council on all questions relating to the Council's military requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security and the employment and command of forces placed at its disposal.

Expressing similar views, the representatives of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland argued that with reasonable mutual accommodation, agreement could be reached on all unresolved questions. What was needed, they thought, was a comprehensive system, based on respect for the Charter, guaranteeing that peace-keeping operations would not be misused for the narrow interests of certain States or groups of States.

They added that the financial problems of peace-keeping operations were essentially political and therefore could not be solved independently from the basic political problems. Furthermore, the planning and conduct of the operations envisaged should be the responsibility of the Military Staff Committee, possibly with the participation of interested United Nations Member States. The principle of equitable geographical representation, in their view, should apply also to the composition of the military command, so as to guarantee that operations would be conducted in the interests of collective security.

The representative of the United Kingdom pointed out that the failure of the United Nations to reach agreement on its most important task of peace-keeping had increased fears about the future of the United Nations as a whole. However, some of these fears, he thought, were due to the fact that very little was known about the exact state of negotiations on the subject between two major powers.

In his view, there could be no United Nations policy on peace-keeping unless its two largest Member States had agreed upon it; it was natural for the General Assembly and the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to expect that they should be informed on the progress of negotiations between them.

On the question of financing United Nations peace-keeping operations, Brazil put forward the idea of establishing a pre-financing plan to which the members of the Security Council would contribute. Payments could be made in two annual instalments, it said, and the contributions of non-permanent members would be fully returned when they left the Security Council. According to Brazil's suggestion, sums actually expended for such pre-financed peace-keeping operations would be refunded from contributions made by the membership of the Organization as might be determined by the General Assembly; the fund would be replenished only to the extent that members of the Security Council had contributed.

Also on the question of financing peace-keeping operations, the representative of Kuwait introduced a draft resolution, co-sponsored by Senegal and Swaziland, whereby the General Assembly would, among other things, have decided to establish a permanent fund for peace-keeping operations.

By the preambular paragraphs of this three-power draft resolution, the Assembly would have reaffirmed that all Member States were bound under the Charter to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of peace, and emphasized the fundamental role of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security. It would also have stated its belief that the lack of reliable arrangements for collective security within the United Nations system had made it possible for some States to commit breaches of international peace and security.

The Assembly would, in addition, have stated its conviction that it was a primary duty of the United Nations to give prompt assistance at all times to any States whose territorial integrity or political independence was threatened and that peace-keeping operations could only be effective if sufficient funds were always available for the financing of peace-keeping operations.

Also, by the preamble, the Assembly would have recognized the primary responsibility and authority of the Security Council in respect of the maintenance of international peace and security and the special responsibility of the permanent members of the Security Council in the field of international peace and security, and borne in mind the handicaps which had reduced effectiveness in meeting these responsibilities.

Finally, by the preamble, the Assembly would have stated its determination to ensure that future peace-keeping operations should be properly authorized and reliably financed, with due regard to the special position given by the Charter to the permanent members of the Security Council and the responsibility the Charter imposed on all Member States.

By the first operative paragraph of the three-power text, the Assembly would have decided:

(a) to establish a permanent fund for peace-keeping operations in accordance with the following criteria: the fund should be independent of the regular budget; contributions to it should be compulsory; and the main financial burden should be borne by the permanent members of the Security Council, and the rest be met by other developed countries and, to a smaller extent, by developing countries whose contributions should not exceed their economic means;

(b) the fund would be placed under the authority of the Security Council;

(c) those resources of the fund not depleted by peace-keeping operations should be placed at the disposal of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, to be used for accelerating economic and social development in the developing countries; and

(d) the UNDP and the Bank should undertake to provide the United Nations with resources that might be required at any time to finance any peace-keeping operation to be carried out in the implementation of a Security Council resolution, within the limits of the amount placed at their disposal, including its accrued interest.

By the second operative paragraph of the three-power text, the Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General:

(a) to name a group of experts entrusted with the following tasks: to study the question of the apportionment of the resources of the fund and to recommend an appropriate scale of assessment; and to determine, in consultation with UNDP and the Bank, the appropriate modalities for the implementation of the suggestions contained in the first operative paragraph of the draft resolution concerning contributions to the proposed fund;

(b) to undertake a comprehensive study on the question of establishing a training centre for United Nations observers and administrative and commanding officers for peace-keeping operations; and

(c) to report to the General Assembly on these matters in 1971.

The three-power proposal was not pressed to a vote, on the understanding that it would be transmitted to the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations and that a report on it would be submitted to the General Assembly in 1971.

Instead, the Special Political Committee approved, on 13 November 1970, a proposal sponsored by nine Members, which was subsequently adopted by the General Assembly at a plenary meeting on 8 December 1970.

By the preamble to this resolution, the Assembly among other things noted with regret that the mandate entrusted to the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations had not as yet been fulfilled, and expressed its consciousness that the problems with which the Committee had been faced were of a fundamental nature, and that the Committee believed more time was required. The Assembly also made the point that problems of such a fundamental nature required further consultations within the context of the United Nations in order to enable the Committee to fulfil its mandate.

The Assembly bore in mind the concern of Member States, as expressed in solemn declarations adopted on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, over the need to reach an early agreement for carrying out United Nations peace-keeping operations consistent with the Charter of the United Nations.

By the operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Assembly stressed the importance of achieving agreed guidelines to enhance the effectiveness of United Nations peace-keeping operations consistent with the Charter. To this end, it urged the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to accelerate its work.

The Special Committee was instructed to intensify its efforts with a view to completing, by 1 May 1971, its report on the United Nations military observer missions established or authorized by the Security Council for observation purposes, and to determine, in the light of the progress achieved by that date, whether alternative methods were advisable for the early fulfilment of its mandate to reach an agreement on peace-keeping operations in conformity with the Charter.

The Assembly asked the Special Committee to study carefully the suggestions, proposals and documents submitted to it on this question and to report back in 1971.

The Special Committee was also directed to submit a completed comprehensive report to the Assembly in 1971 on the United Nations military observer missions as well as a progress report on any other models of peace-keeping operations.

The decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 2670(XXV), adopted, unanimously, by the Assembly on the recommendation of its Special Political Committee, which had approved the text unanimously on a proposal by Canada, Czechoslovakia, France, Mexico, Sierra Leone, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom and the United States. The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965, 2053 A(XX) of 15 December 1965, 2249(S-V) of 23 May 1967, 2308(XXII) of 13 December 1967 and 2451(XXIII) of 19 December 1968,

Recalling in particular its resolution 2576(XXIV) of 15 December 1969, in which it requested the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to continue its work and to submit to the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session a comprehensive report on the United Nations military observers established or authorized by the Security Council for observation purposes pursuant to Council resolutions, as well as a progress report on such work as the Special Committee might be able to undertake on any other models of peace-keeping operations,

Having received and examined the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations of 1 October 1970,

Noting with regret that the mandate entrusted to the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations has not as yet been fulfilled,

Conscious nevertheless that the problems with which the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations has been faced are of a fundamental nature and that the Special Committee believes that more time is required,

Realizing that problems of such a fundamental nature require further consultations within the context of the United Nations in order to enable the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to fulfil its mandate,

Bearing in mind the concern of Member States, as expressed in solemn declarations adopted on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, over the need to reach an early agreement for carrying out United Nations peace-keeping operations consistent with the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations;

2. Stresses the importance of achieving agreed guidelines to enhance the effectiveness of United Nations peace-keeping operations consistent with the Charter and to this end urges the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to accelerate its work;

3. Instructs the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to intensify its efforts with a view to completing, by 1 May 1971, its report on the United Nations military observers established or authorized by the Security Council for observation purposes pursuant to Council resolutions and to determine, in the light of the progress achieved by that date, whether alternative methods are advisable for the early fulfilment by the Special Committee of its mandate to reach an agreement on peace-keeping operations in conformity with the Charter;

4. Notes with interest the suggestions, proposals and documents submitted on this item during the present session and transmits to the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations the records of the debates on the item at this session, together with the documents put forward in the course of those debates;

5. Requests the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, in the course of its further deliberations, to study carefully and to take full account of the views expressed and the suggestions, proposals and documents submitted at the present session, and to report on them to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session, as appropriate, within the context of its work;

6. Directs the Special Committee on Peace-keeping

Operations to submit to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session a completed comprehensive report on the United Nations military observers established or authorized by the Security Council for observation purposes pursuant to Council resolutions, as well as a progress report on any other models of peace-keeping operations.

CHAPTER VI

THE STRENGTHENING OF INTERNATIONAL SECURITY

The question of strengthening international security was discussed at length during the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly, which opened on 15 September 1970. It was considered by the Assembly's First Committee at meetings held in September, October and December 1970.

On 16 December, the Assembly adopted the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security by which, among other things, it reaffirmed the universal and unconditional validity of the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter as the basis for relations among States.

The First Committee had before it, for this discussion, a report by the Secretary-General on communications received from Member States on the subject of the strengthening of international security. Referring in his report to the views and suggestions of Member States, the Secretary-General said that they indicated the great importance which Members attached to the subject.

Summarizing his own views, the Secretary-General felt that the greatest obstacle to the strengthening of international security in recent years arose from the growing tendency of States to revert to force as a means of resolving international differences. The maintenance of international peace and security was not only the primary goal of the United Nations, but also the sine qua non for the very existence and progress of mankind. Modern society had no alternative to annihilation than to strengthen the force of law against the law of force.

One of the main prerequisites for strengthening international security, he said, was that all States rededicate themselves to, and respect, the norms of international behaviour and morality set out in the United Nations Charter. The timeliness of such a rededication in the twenty-fifth anniversary year of the United Nations was underlined by the existing conflicts and tensions in various regions of the world, particularly in South-East Asia, the Middle East and southern Africa, and by the urgent need to find ways of alleviating those tensions through fresh actions taken by States and through the strengthening of the peace-keeping and peace-making functions of the United Nations.

The Secretary-General recalled past suggestions he had made for enhancing the capacity of the United Nations, particularly of the Security Council, in maintaining international peace and security. He reiterated his conviction that the full potential of the United Nations as an instrument for the maintenance of international peace and security could only be realized when the principle of universality of membership was more fully applied.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General stated that, while important differences existed among States concerning the principles to be proclaimed by the United Nations for strengthening international security, those differences were by no means irreconcilable.

Also before the Committee were letters dated 8 July and 1 October 1970 from the Permanent Representative of Poland to the Secretary-General and the President of the General Assembly, respectively, transmitting two communications from the Government of the German Democratic Republic on the question of the strengthening of international security.

PROPOSALS BEFORE FIRST COMMITTEE

During its discussion of the question of the strengthening of international security, the First

Committee considered four drafts of declarations or resolutions, as well as various amendments. After the discussion, the sponsors of the four drafts held consultations and ultimately drafted a single text that was approved by the Committee and adopted by the General Assembly (see below). The four earlier draft texts were not pressed to votes. Each of the four, summarized in the following paragraphs, reflected the particular measures that their respective sponsors considered necessary to strengthen international security.

The first of the four texts submitted was sponsored by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR.

By it, the Assembly would have noted, among other things, in preambular paragraphs: its consideration that the most important tasks specified in the United Nations Charter were the maintenance of international peace and security and the adoption of collective measures to this end; its desire to ensure for all States a free and sovereign existence; its concern that in various parts of the world military conflicts were still taking place; its consideration that the extensive development of peaceful co-operation between all States was one of the major factors which helped to strengthen international peace and security; and its affirmation that the strengthening of international security called for concerted action by all States to relax international tension.

By the operative parts of this eight-power draft, the Assembly would have declared that, in the interest of strengthening international security, it was necessary for States to:

(1) abide strictly in their international relations by the purposes and principles of the United Nations, including the principles of the sovereignty, equality and territorial inviolability of each State, non-interference in internal affairs and respect for the right of all peoples freely to choose their social system;

(2) refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State;

(3) abide strictly by the principles of the inadmissibility of military occupation and of the acquisition of territory through war or the use of force in violation of the Charter;

(4) implement fully the decisions of the Security Council on the peaceful settlement of armed conflicts and the withdrawal of forces from territories occupied as a result of such conflicts, as well as other Security Council decisions aimed at the maintenance of international peace and security;

(5) comply with decisions of the Security Council taken to suppress acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace;

(6) cease all military and other action for the suppression of the liberation movements of peoples still under colonial or racist domination and assist them in attaining independence in accordance with their inalienable right to self-determination;

(7) settle all disputes between States by peaceful means and, to that end, make fuller use of the procedures and methods provided for in the Charter;

(8) contribute to the attainment of agreement on general and complete disarmament under strict international control and the adoption of nuclear disarmament measures by all nuclear States, and also agreement on regional and other individual measures to end the arms race;

(9) develop international co-operation on a regional basis for the purpose of strengthening security in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, with the participation of all States in each region;

(10) accelerate the attainment of agreement on a definition of aggression and on United Nations peace-keeping operations, on the basis of strict compliance with the Charter;

(11) ensure full implementation of the principle of the universality of the United Nations; and

(12) be guided by the consideration that the strengthening of international security contributed to the social and economic progress of all peoples, including the developing countries, which would in turn contribute to the creation of conditions of stability necessary for peaceful and friendly relations and co-operation among States.

The second text before the Committee, sponsored by Australia, Belgium, Canada, Italy, Japan and the Netherlands, would have had the Assembly note the following points, inter alia, in preambular paragraphs: its reaffirmation that the strengthening of international security was a question of cardinal importance that required concerted action by all Member States, based on the political will to implement urgent measures aimed at establishing a lasting peace and eliminating the causes of insecurity and tension likely to create conflicts; its conviction that international security was contingent on the strict observance of the principles and provisions of the Charter; its endorsement of the concern expressed by Member States over the slow pace of progress in the negotiation of agreements on arms control and disarmament; that it was mindful that regional arrangements or agencies acting consistently with the purposes and principles of the United Nations could be effective instruments for strengthening international security; and its recognition that there was a direct interaction between the maintenance of international security and economic and social development.

By the operative parts of this six-power draft resolution, the Assembly would have:

(1) reaffirmed the unconditional validity of the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter, in particular the non-use of force or threat of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State; the peaceful settlement of international disputes; non-intervention in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any State; co-operation with one another in accordance with the Charter; equal rights and self-determination of peoples; sovereign equality of States; and fulfilment in good faith of the obligations assumed under the Charter;

(2) reaffirmed that regional arrangements or agencies should deal with such matters relating to the maintenance of peace and security as were appropriate for regional action, provided that their activities were consistent with the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Charter;<sup>1</sup>

(3) recognized that international peace and security depended upon strict and universal observance of the principles of the Charter, particularly respect for the sovereign equality, political independence and territorial integrity of States, irrespective of their size or political or social system, and for the right of their peoples to determine their own destinies free of external intervention, coercion or constraint, especially involving the threat or use of force, overt or covert;

(4) reaffirmed the obligations of Member States to resolve international disputes through the procedures for peaceful settlement enumerated in Article 33 of the Charter;<sup>2</sup>

(5) recalled that under the Charter legal disputes should as a general rule be referred to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Court's Statute, and accordingly recommended the fullest possible utilization of the Court;

(6) urged that greater advantage be taken of the Secretary-General's good offices and that greater use be made of improved methods of fact-finding and conciliation;

(7) called for the intensification of concerted efforts, both multilateral and bilateral, for effective measures relating to the cessation of the nuclear and conventional arms race, nuclear disarmament and the elimination of other weapons of mass destruction, and for the conclusion of collateral measures as well as for a comprehensive programme of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control;

(8) recognized that progress in that field would make the Disarmament Decade a significant step towards a more secure and peaceful world in which human and material resources would be more effectively devoted to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being;

(9) urged all Member States to respond to the need for more effective, dynamic and flexible procedures for peace-making efforts and peace-keeping operations as one of the main means under the Charter for controlling situations where danger of international conflict arose;

(10) further urged Member States to support the efforts of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations towards the setting up of such efficient agreed procedures;

(11) drawn attention to the need to ensure, on the basis of collective responsibility, that United Nations peace-keeping functions were reliably and equitably financed;

(12) called upon Member States to respect

the resolutions of the competent organs of the Organization concerning international peace and security and, in particular, to abide by the decisions of the Security Council, upon which the Charter had conferred primary responsibility in that respect;

(13) welcomed the decision of the Security Council to hold periodic meetings;

(14) recommended to the Security Council that consideration be given to creating appropriate subsidiary organs for the pacific settlement of disputes and for monitoring and restraining the flow of armaments towards areas of tension or conflict;

(15) invited Member States to do their utmost to enhance the authority and effectiveness of the Security Council and of its decisions by ensuring the faithful application of the Charter provision (contained in Article 23) that in the election of members of the Security Council, due regard be specially paid to the contribution of Member States of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization;

(16) recalled the duty of Member States to assist the United Nations in the early completion of the process of decolonization, having due regard to the freely expressed will of the peoples concerned, and the implementation of the principle of equal rights and self-determination;

(17) affirmed the need for continued, concerted and sustained action to promote international stability through a better and more effective system of international co-operation whereby the prevailing disparities in economic and social development might be banished and prosperity secured for all;

(18) urged, to that end, intensified efforts during the Second United Nations Development Decade to create conditions of stability and well-being and to ensure a minimum standard of living through economic and social progress and development, promoted through joint and concentrated action by developing and developed countries;

(19) called upon Member States to promote universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with the Charter;

(20) urged Member States to reaffirm their will to respect fully the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law;

(21) recommended the intensification of efforts towards the progressive development and codification of international law.

The third text before the Committee was sponsored by 23 Latin American countries: Argentina, Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay and Venezuela.

The 23-power draft would have had the Assembly, among other things in preambular paragraphs, declare that the strengthening of international security was a question of fundamental importance that required concerted action by all States, based on the political will to promote international co-operation and to adopt and implement urgent measures aimed at eliminating causes of insecurity and tension.

By the preamble, it would also have had the Assembly: reaffirm that fidelity to the Charter and its principles were essential requirements for establishing world peace based on justice; express its conviction that the strengthening of international security required the full utilization and strengthening of the United Nations and that the enormous resources freed by disarmament should be channelled especially to the promotion of economic development of the developing countries; express its awareness of the close link between the strengthening of international security and the achievement of concrete and substantial progress towards disarmament; express its conviction that the economic development of the developing countries and the elimination of the inequalities between those countries and the developed countries were essential to the strengthening of international security; and to express its belief that effective measures were needed to eliminate, once and for all, systems of colonial and racial oppression.

By the operative paragraphs of the 23-power draft, the Assembly would have:

(1) reaffirmed the unconditional validity of the purposes and principles of the Charter as the basis of relations between nations, irrespective of their size, geographical location, development, or political or social system;

(2) reaffirmed that peace and security required all States to respect strictly the principles and to comply fully with the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations, and to base their conduct faithfully on the ideas and standards set out in the Charter Preamble, and that consequently efforts to strengthen international security would only achieve lasting and irreversible results in so far as they were carried out within the framework of the Charter and were aimed at establishing an international order which ensured justice for all States;

(3) reaffirmed that all States Members of the United Nations were bound to respect the sovereign equality of all States, to fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in the Charter, to settle their international disputes by peaceful means, to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations and to give the United Nations, within the framework of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the assistance provided therein for the maintenance or re-establishment of international peace and security;

(4) reaffirmed that in case of conflict between the obligations of Members under the Charter and those assumed by them under any other international agreement, the former should prevail;

(5) reaffirmed its responsibility with regard to the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with Articles 10, 11, 12 and 14 of the Charter;<sup>3</sup>

(6) urged all States to comply with the decisions of the Security Council and other competent United Nations bodies concerning international peace and security;

(7) expressed grave concern over the slow progress of the negotiations on general and complete disarmament, and urged all States to make urgent and concerted efforts within the framework of the Disarmament Decade for the early cessation of the nuclear arms race, the elimination of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, and the conclusion of a treaty on general and complete disarmament under effective international control;

(8) reiterated the need to undertake, within the framework of the Second United Nations Development Decade, urgent and concerted global action to reduce and eliminate, once and for all, the economic gap between developed and developing countries, which was a prerequisite for the establishment of international peace and the strengthening of the security of all nations;

(9) affirmed its belief that there was a close connexion between the strengthening of international security, the economic development of the developing countries and disarmament, so that any progress towards any of those objectives would constitute progress towards all of them;

(10) affirmed that lasting peace presupposes effective respect for and full exercise of human rights, and that the elimination of violations of those rights was essential for the strengthening of international security;

(11) affirmed that the continuance of colonial domination seriously weakened international peace and constituted a serious threat to the security of nations;

(12) expressed its belief that the achievement of universality of the United Nations would make its actions for strengthening international security more effective;

(13) considered that regional co-operation governed by the provisions of the Charter and based on strict respect for the sovereignty and independence of States could contribute to strengthening international security;

(14) called upon all Member States to respond to the urgent need for more effective, dynamic and flexible procedures in the efforts to establish peace and in peace-keeping operations as the principal means for controlling situations involving a danger of international conflict;

(15) welcomed the decision of the Security Council to hold periodic meetings;

(16) recommended to the Security Council that, in accordance with the Charter, it should consider the desirability of establishing appropriate subsidiary organs for the peaceful settlement of international disputes in cases where such disputes were under its consideration;

(17) decided to include the item under discussion in the provisional agenda of the Assembly's 1971 session.

The fourth proposal before the Committee was sponsored by 33 Members—Afghanistan, <sup>3</sup> See APPENDIX II for text of Articles 10, 11, 12 and 14 of the Charter.

Algeria, Burundi, Cameroon, Ceylon, Cyprus, Ghana, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sudan, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The preambular paragraphs of this 33-power text would have had the Assembly, among other things: emphasize the need for the strengthening of the United Nations as a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter and for the establishment of an effective system of collective security based on the participation of all States; determine to develop friendly relations and co-operation among nations; be convinced that peace built upon justice would bring about stability and security conducive to the achievement of rapid social and economic development and the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination, including apartheid.

In the preambular parts of the 33-power draft, the Assembly would also have expressed its deep concern that military conflicts, acts of aggression, threats or use of force, foreign occupation of territories and interference in the internal affairs of other States created tension and threatened universal peace and security.

It would also have noted its powers under Article 11 of the Charter to consider general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security and that it was mindful of the primary responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security under the Charter; and, further, would have noted that the steady strengthening and expansion of the domain of mutual co-operation within international, regional and bilateral frameworks, in accordance with the Charter, would contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security.

By the operative paragraphs of the 33-power text, the General Assembly would have declared that all States should:

(1) adhere strictly to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, including the principles of sovereign equality of States, the renunciation of the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity and political independence of any State, settlement of international disputes by peaceful means, non-interference in internal affairs, co-operation with one another, equal rights of people and their inalienable rights to self-determination, and fulfilment in good faith of their international obligations;

(2) be guided in their international conduct by the principles elaborated in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States (see pp. 789-92);

(3) respect the principles of the Charter and international law and observe them in their relations with all States;

(4) recognize that, in case of conflict between the obligations arising under the Charter and those assumed under any other international agreement, the former should prevail;

(5) adhere strictly to the principle of non-use of force as a means of settling international disputes and the principles of the inviolability of established frontiers, the inadmissibility of military occupation resulting from the use of force, and the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by conquest, in contravention of the provisions of the Charter, and refrain from recognizing as legal any such territorial acquisition;

(6) refrain from any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a State or of its political independence;

(7) pursue vigorously the universality of the United Nations;

(8) continue their efforts to bring about the dissolution of great-power military alliances, in the interest of promoting peace and relaxing international tensions, under circumstances ensuring the security of all States and peoples;

(9) desist from any forcible action which would deprive peoples still under colonial domination of their inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and independence, discontinue all military and other acts of suppression of liberation movements of such peoples, remove any impediments to the attainment of their independence in accordance with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,<sup>4</sup> and render assistance to the United Nations in order to bring about the complete liquidation of colonialism, and all other forms of foreign domination;

(10) condemn the policy of apartheid of the Government of South Africa and all manifestations of racial discrimination, and reaffirm the legitimacy of the struggles of oppressed peoples to attain their fundamental rights and freedoms and self-determination;

(11) contribute towards the attainment of early agreement on general and complete disarmament, including nuclear disarmament, under effective international control and towards preparing and implementing a programme for the Disarmament Decade, as well as ensure that the benefits of the technology of peaceful uses of nuclear energy be available to all States without discrimination;

(12) undertake within the Second United Nations Development Decade concerted international action towards the reduction and ultimate elimination of the gap between developed and developing countries;

(13) settle their international disputes peacefully by means provided for in the Charter;

(14) accelerate the attainment of agreement on a definition of aggression;

(15) make renewed efforts to settle all questions relating to United Nations peace-keeping operations in conformity with the Charter;

(16) expedite the activation of enforcement measures envisaged under Chapter VII of the Charter;<sup>5</sup>

(17) implement the resolutions of the Security Council and of the pertinent United Nations organs on the peaceful settlement of disputes and the maintenance of international peace and security, in accordance with their obligations under the Charter;

(18) support the decision of the Security Council to hold periodic meetings;

(19) reaffirm the responsibility of the General Assembly in accordance with the provisions of Article 14 of the Charter<sup>6</sup> to recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation deemed likely to impair friendly relations among nations, including situations resulting from a violation of the provisions of the Charter;

(20) promote mutual co-operation between States at the international, regional and bilateral levels, as a significant contribution to the strengthening of international security;

(21) achieve universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(22) intensify efforts towards the progressive development and codification of international law; and

(23) emphasize the need for the United Nations to exert continuous efforts to strengthen international peace and security, and decide to place the item on the agenda of the Assembly's 1971 session.

Thailand submitted amendments applicable to these four drafts. Among other things, the Thai amendments would have added an operative paragraph to the various texts, calling upon the Security Council and particularly its permanent members to exert greater efforts to discharge more effectively their primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, especially in areas where they were most critically affected.

Amendments refining the wording of the 33-power draft text were submitted by Pakistan. In another proposed amendment to that text, Pakistan called for the deletion of the paragraph calling for States to be guided in their international conduct by the principles elaborated in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States.

There was considerable discussion of the four draft proposals and the amendments in the First Committee (see below for summary of discussions), after which informal consultations were held among sponsors of the proposals and other interested Members, with a view to formulating a single text. A drafting group was ultimately set up, consisting of two representatives of the sponsors of each of the draft resolutions—Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Ecuador, India, Italy, Poland and Yugoslavia.

DISCUSSION IN FIRST COMMITTEE

Introducing the eight-power draft declaration, the USSR spokesman said that the commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations provided an opportunity to evaluate the central and fundamental task of the Organization, that of maintaining peace and strengthening international security. That task had become especially acute at the present time, he said, since dangerous armed conflicts that threatened international peace subsisted in various parts of the world, such as Viet-Nam and the Middle East, and inhuman policies of racism and apartheid continued to keep peoples in other areas under subjugation.

The sponsors of the eight-power draft, he said, had made their proposal in the conviction that a wide-ranging declaration rather than a resolution should result from the consideration of the question at the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly.

The USSR representative said the sponsors thought that in order to strengthen international security it was of paramount importance that relations between States be based on the principles of the Charter, in particular the principles of the sovereignty, equality and territorial inviolability of each State, of non-interference in the internal affairs of other States and of refraining from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State.

They advocated increasing the role of the Security Council and stressed the need for the full implementation of its decisions on the peaceful settlement of armed conflicts and the withdrawal of forces from territories occupied as a result of such conflicts and for compliance with Security Council decisions taken in the exercise of its powers to suppress acts of aggression and other breaches of the peace.

The representative of Italy, who introduced the six-power draft resolution, said that the issue of international security was a complex one involving practically all the major problems confronting the world and therefore commanded global solutions in the framework of a comprehensive, all-embracing plan of action. What was really needed, he said, was a new start to far-reaching actions in five fields: the strengthening of the United Nations, disarmament, peace-keeping, peace-making, and social and economic progress.

Australia, Belgium, Canada, Italy, Japan and the Netherlands, the sponsors of the six-power draft, said that it was intended to reflect all the principles of the Charter without any attempts at selectivity. They felt that to strengthen international security every organ of the United Nations should be fully utilized, including the International Court of Justice, and recourse should be had to all the machinery provided for in the Charter. While they recognized the primary role of the Security Council in matters relating to international security, they could not accept the enlargement of its powers at the expense of other United Nations organs.

The sponsors of the six-power draft emphasized the need for establishing guidelines on peace-keeping, with equitable apportionment of expenses.

They also stressed that Charter principles should be included specifically to avoid any reinterpretation of the Charter; several other Members, among them China and Madagascar, voiced this opinion also.

The representative of Brazil, speaking for the sponsors of the 23-power draft resolution, said that they did not consider peace as a state of absence of war or as a state of tension at a tolerable level. They sought world peace based on justice and the guarantee of security for all nations. To them, peace was identified with security for all nations, big or small, and security with development.

He explained that their proposal tried to bring out the close relationship between the concepts of strengthening international security, economic development of the developing countries, and disarmament, so that progress in any of those directions would constitute progress towards them all. Their proposed text sought to strengthen international security through a strengthening of the United Nations as a political institution and as a centre for negotiation.

The sponsors of the 23-power draft text felt that efforts to strengthen international security and relax tensions could have lasting results only if they were carried out within the framework of the Charter, which provided not only the principles but also the machinery for that purpose. They said that international security must not be based on a precarious balance of power, but on strict compliance with the principles and purposes of the Charter.

tion, the representative of Zambia observed that a striking feature of the four drafts was their similarity and the number of points of agreement. He said that the 33-power draft was the outcome of the collective experience of the sponsoring countries, which had traditionally kept free from the major military alliances and the major ideological divisions that had threatened peace and security.

Sponsors of the 33-power draft text said that the quest for international security required more than the reaffirmation of the principles and purposes of the Charter; it called for a political will on the part of all States to respect and implement its provisions in their international relations. They spoke in particular of the principles of the non-use of force as a means of settling international disputes, the inviolability of international frontiers, the inadmissibility of military occupation resulting from the use of force and the acquisition of territory by conquest in contravention of the principles of the Charter.

The principles and measures set out in their draft text, the sponsors of the 33-power draft said, reflected the position on the issues of peace and security set out in the Declaration on Peace, Independence and Development adopted at the Third Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Lusaka, Zambia, in September of 1970.

In the discussion held in the First Committee, almost all speakers expressed their faith in the Charter. They noted that the achievement of international security lay with Members having the will to carry out its principles and purposes.

Much of the debate concerned wording and emphasis; the general idea that the Assembly should make a unanimous statement on the subject was accepted by virtually all speakers.

The United States representative called for a brief and simple resolution.

Senegal noted that a basic problem was in the different interpretations of the Charter.

Israel stated that the question was essentially one of renewing the collective faith in the Charter.

The representative of the United Kingdom stressed that first and foremost it was the principles of the Charter that united Members. He believed that they should be set at the head of any resolution on international peace and security both to ensure that a coherent body of United Nations doctrine and practice would be built up and to guard against the creation of ambiguity or contradictions which might distort the emphasis of the Charter and give grounds for false interpretations. Above all, he felt, thus to set forth the principles would make clear that renunciation of the use of force must lead automatically to the peaceful settlement of international disputes, which in his Government's view was the basic assumption of the work of the United Nations in the field of international peace and security.

Most of the speakers commented on the special concerns of their countries on strengthening international security, and many referred to the need to deal peacefully with the conflicts in the Middle East and in Viet-Nam.

Certain representatives of African, Arab and Asian States, for example, observed that, while the international community had warded off the dangers of a world conflict, it was clear that it had done so essentially at the cost of persistent localized conflicts. There could be no real international peace or security, they said, unless United States troops in Indo-China were withdrawn and the right of the peoples of Indo-China freely to determine their own destiny was recognized, unless Israel withdrew from the Arab territories it occupied, unless military and economic support of colonial and racist regimes in Africa was halted, and unless assistance was given to the liberation struggles of peoples under colonial domination. The conflicts in the Middle East and Viet-Nam, they said, had the potentiality of sudden escalation.

The United States said it was taking concrete and effective action to strengthen international peace and security; it had announced new proposals for establishing peace in Indo-China, and had undertaken an initiative designed to promote a peaceful settlement in the Middle East. It was making and would continue to make concrete proposals to improve United Nations peace-keeping operations and the procedures for the peaceful settlement of disputes, to encourage resort to the International Court of Justice, to establish a United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to forbid the emplacement of weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed and to set up an international regime for the exploitation of the resources of the sea-bed for the benefit of all mankind.

A number of sponsors of the 33-power draft stressed the importance of improving the capacity and effectiveness of United Nations peace-keeping operations, particularly for the security of medium-sized and small States.

Thus, Kuwait suggested the establishment of a permanent fund for peace-keeping operations, contributions to which should be compulsory, and suggested that the resources of the fund not devoted to peace-keeping be utilized by the United Nations Development Programme and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development to promote economic development.

Uruguay supported the Kuwaiti proposal as being consonant with the link between peace and development emphasized by the Latin American States.

The view that the power of the Security Council and the role of the Secretary-General should be invigorated or strengthened was expressed in various ways with various suggestions offered by Belgium, Cambodia, the Central African Republic, Greece, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Morocco, the Netherlands, Poland, Syria, Thailand, Uganda and the Ukrainian SSR, among others.

Chile and Peru, however, said that there was a tendency to stress the powers of the Security Council and not those conferred by the Charter on the General Assembly, a body that clearly reflected international public opinion.

The Ivory Coast and Kuwait pointed out that in the maintenance of international peace and security the powers and responsibilities of the Security Council and of the General Assembly should be considered complementary.

While recognizing that the permanent members of the Security Council had a special responsibility under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security, India said that there was a general feeling that the small and medium powers did not have an adequate opportunity to participate in international decision-making. India thought that consultations would foster a spirit of partnership and give greater authority to the decisions made.

Some States, including Japan and the Philippines, advocated the fuller utilization of the International Court of Justice in the peaceful settlement of disputes, but others indicated varying degrees of dissatisfaction with the performance of the Court. Kenya, for example, said that while it was not opposed to the suggestion of greater recourse to the Court, there had been genuine difficulties that had led to dissatisfaction with the Court.

The representative of France observed that the qualitative and quantitative arms race and constant technological progress in the field of defensive and offensive weapons clearly showed that there could be no real international security in the absence of a genuine effort towards general and complete disarmament. Agreement among the nuclear powers on the destruction and the prohibition of manufacture of nuclear weapons was essential, he said, and in the field of conventional weapons, balanced disarmament in successive stages also had to be agreed upon.

The sponsors of the 23-power draft—all Latin American States—expressed grave concern over the slow progress of negotiations on disarmament and advocated the early conclusion of a treaty on general and complete disarmament which would relate both to nuclear and conventional weapons.

Peru felt that in the field of disarmament the General Assembly could, without undermining the competence of the Security Council, play a vital role.

The representative of Trinidad and Tobago pointed out that some three years earlier the Latin American group of States had presented to the General Assembly the Treaty of Tlatelolco for the denuclearization of Latin America<sup>7</sup> and had urged the powers with interests in the western hemisphere and the nuclear powers to sign and ratify its two additional protocols.

Other speakers stressed the importance of early agreement on general and complete disarmament and advocated the preparation and implementation of a programme for the Disarmament Decade, as well as measures to ensure that the benefits of the technology of peaceful uses of nuclear energy be made available to all States without discrimination.

The relationship between economic development and the strengthening of international security was seen as vital by many, including Algeria, Australia, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Chile, Ecuador, Ethiopia, France, Indonesia, Iraq, Israel, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Laos, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Mali, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Peru, the Philippines, Romania, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

In the view of Chile, there was an important link between the Disarmament Decade and the Second United Nations Development Decade.

Afghanistan, expressing a similar view, stressed that the eradication of hunger, ignorance and disease was necessary to the interests of peace and security.

Venezuela said that although development could not depend on disarmament, the resources liberated by disarmament could doubtless be a powerful motive force behind development.

The dangers of racial discrimination and specifically the perpetuation of oppression in southern Africa were referred to by Algeria, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Ceylon, Chile, Ecuador, India, Kenya, Libya, Mali, Mongolia, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia.

Ethiopia deplored the situation in which minority groups held millions of Africans under subjugation, and the Ivory Coast said that the complete liberation of those millions of Africans was an essential prerequisite for peace in Africa. Several speakers were critical of States that supplied arms to colonialist and racist regimes in Africa; the United Republic of Tanzania feared that those arms might in future be used against neighbouring States.

The question of regional arrangements and their relationships to the United Nations was discussed by Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Madagascar, Mongolia, Poland and Yugoslavia.

Some representatives emphasized that regional organizations must act in a manner consistent with the Charter and that the domination of a region by any one State was to be avoided. Others argued that all States in a region should participate in regional arrangements.

Canada was opposed to any formulation that declared it necessary for all States in a region to participate in regional arrangements as that implied that some purely geographical consideration should override cultural, social or economic affinities.

The United Kingdom agreed with this view, stating it would seem strange to suggest that independent African States enter into a regional agreement with the Republic of South Africa.

Australia was of the view that regional arrangements were one of the most helpful ways of pooling knowledge and resources and developing a common awareness of problems and the means of coping with them.

Ceylon voiced opposition to regional systems of a military character, saying that such systems, to be effective, must involve the participation of one or more of the major powers and could not fail to make the system subservient to their interests.

A number of European States considered the convening of a European conference on security and co-operation important.

Poland said it was actively interested in such a conference. Romania felt that a European conference would stimulate mutual confidence.

Austria noted it had endeavoured to make a contribution towards such a conference by outlining relevant proposals.

The treaty on co-operation and non-aggression concluded in 1970 between the USSR and the Federal Republic of Germany was referred to as an initiative towards the easing of international tension. Among those referring to the treaty were Belgium, Bulgaria and the USSR.

The USSR stressed that it was particularly important to state directly and unambiguously that it was inadmissible to tolerate military occupation or the acquisition of territory through military action or the use of force.

In this connexion, the Byelorussian SSR pointed out that the six-power draft text made no mention of the inadmissibility of military occupation, nor of the need to respect strictly Security Council decisions concerning the withdrawal of forces from territories occupied as a result of force.

The importance of universality in the United Nations was stressed by Afghanistan, Algeria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Ceylon, Chad, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Ethiopia, France, Hungary, Iraq, Kenya, Libya, Mali, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Poland, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, and others.

In that connexion, China said that the Charter nowhere spoke of universality.

Among the other points raised in the debate were the importance of reaching early agreement on a definition of aggression, the need to ensure greater respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the need to accelerate efforts towards the progressive development and codification of international law.

DECISION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On 16 December 1970, the General Assembly adopted a Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security that solemnly reaffirmed the universal and unconditional validity of the purposes and principles of the Charter.

By the preamble to the Declaration, the Assembly among other things recalled the determination of the peoples of the United Nations, as proclaimed by the Charter, to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war; considered that, in order to fulfil the purposes and principles of the United Nations, Member States must strictly abide by all provisions of the Charter; and noted that it had in mind the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States (see pp. 788-92) in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

By the operative parts of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, the General Assembly:

(1) solemnly reaffirmed the universal and unconditional validity of the purposes and principles of the Charter as the basis of relations among States irrespective of their size, geographical location, level of development or political, economic and social systems;

(2) called upon all States to adhere strictly in their international relations to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, including the principle that States should refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State and the principle of peaceful settlement of disputes, non-intervention in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any State, co-operation with one another in accordance with the Charter, equal rights and self-determination of peoples, sovereign equality of States, and fulfilment in good faith of the obligations assumed under the Charter;

(3) reaffirmed that in the event of a conflict between the obligations under the Charter and those assumed under other international agreements, the former should prevail;

(4) reaffirmed that States must respect the sovereignty of other States and the right of peoples to determine their own destinies, free of external intervention, coercion, or constraint, especially involving the threat or use of force, overt or covert, and refrain from any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of any other State or country;

(5) affirmed that every State had the duty to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity and political independence of any other State, and that the territory of a State should not be the object of military occupation resulting from the use of force in contravention of the Charter, that the territory of a State should not be the object of acquisition by another State resulting from the threat or use of force, that no territorial acquisition resulting from the threat or use of force should be recognized as legal, and that every State had the duty to refrain from organizing, instigating, assisting or participating in acts of civil strife or terrorist acts in another State;

(6) urged Member States to fully use and seek improved implementation of the means and methods provided for in the Charter for the peaceful settlement of any dispute or situation, the continuance of which was likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, including negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, good offices including those of the Secretary-General, or other peaceful means of their own choice, it being understood that the Security Council in dealing with such disputes or situations should also take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the Court's Statute;

(7) urged all Member States to respond to the immediate need to agree on guidelines for more effective peace-keeping operations in accordance with the Charter, which could increase the effectiveness of the United Nations in dealing with situations endangering international peace and security, and to support the efforts of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to reach agreement on all questions relating to such operations, as well as on provisions for their appropriate and equitable financing;

(8) recognized the need for effective, dynamic and flexible measures, in accordance with the Charter, to prevent and remove threats to the peace, suppress acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and in particular for measures to build, maintain and restore international peace and security;

(9) recommended that the Security Council take steps to facilitate the conclusion of the agreements envisaged in Article 43 of the Charter<sup>8</sup> in order to develop fully its capacity for enforcement action as provided for by the Charter;

(10) recommended that the Security Council consider—in conformity with Article 29 of the Charter<sup>9</sup>—the desirability of establishing subsidiary organs, on an ad hoc basis, and with the participation of the parties concerned, when conditions so warranted, to assist the Council in the performance of its functions;

(11) recommended that all States contribute to the efforts to ensure peace and security and to establish, in accordance with the Charter, an effective system of universal collective security without military alliances;

(12) invited Member States to do their utmost to enhance the authority and effectiveness of the Security Council and of its decisions;

(13) called upon the Security Council, including the permanent members, to intensify efforts to discharge, in conformity with the Charter, its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security;

(14) recommended that Member States support the efforts of the Special Committee on the Question of Defining Aggression to bring its work to a successful conclusion, thus achieving the definition of aggression as soon as possible;

(15) reaffirmed the Assembly's competence to discuss and recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation which it deemed likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among States, including situations resulting from a violation of the Charter provisions setting forth the purposes and principles of the United Nations;

(16) urged all Member States to implement the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with their obligations under Article 25 of the Charter<sup>10</sup> and to respect the resolutions of United Nations organs responsible for the maintenance of international peace and security and the peaceful settlement of disputes;

(17) urged Member States to reaffirm their will to respect fully their obligations under international law and to continue and intensify efforts towards the progressive development and codification of international law;

(18) called upon all States to desist from any forcible or other action which deprived peoples, in particular those still under colonial or any other form of external domination, of their inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and independence and to refrain from military and repressive measures aimed at preventing the attainment of independence by all dependent peoples in accordance with the Charter and in furtherance of the objectives of the General Assembly's Declaration on the granting of independence, and render assistance to the United Nations and, in accordance with the Charter, to the oppressed peoples in their legitimate struggle in order to bring about the speedy elimination of colonialism or any other form of external domination;

(19) affirmed its belief that there was a close connexion between the strengthening of international security, disarmament and the economic development of countries, so that progress towards one of those objectives would constitute progress towards all of them;

(20) urged all States, particularly the nuclear-weapon States, to make urgent and concerted efforts within the framework of the Disarmament Decade and through other means for the cessation and reversal of the nuclear and conventional arms race, the elimination of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, and the conclusion of a treaty on general and complete disarmament under effective international control, as well as ensure that the benefits of the technology of the peaceful use of nuclear energy should be available to all States without discrimination;

(21) reiterated the need to undertake, within the framework of the Second United Nations Development Decade, urgent and concerted international action based on a global strategy aimed at reducing and eliminating the economic gap between developed and developing countries, which was closely and essentially correlated to the strengthening of the security of all nations and the establishment of lasting peace;

(22) reaffirmed that universal respect for and full exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms and the elimination of the violation of those rights were urgent and essential to the strengthening of international security and resolutely condemned all forms of oppression, tyranny and discrimination;

(23) condemned the criminal policy of apartheid of the Government of South Africa and reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed peoples to attain their human rights and fundamental freedoms and self-determination;

(24) expressed its conviction that the achievement of universality of the United Nations would increase its effectiveness in strengthening international peace and security;

(25) considered that the promotion of international co-operation, including regional, sub-regional and bilateral co-operation among States, in keeping with the provisions of the Charter and based on the principle of equal rights and on strict respect for the sovereignty and independence of States, could contribute to the strengthening of international security;

(26) welcomed the Security Council's decision to hold periodic meetings and expressed the hope that those meetings would make an important contribution to the strengthening of international security; and

(27) emphasized the need for the United Nations to exert continuous efforts for the strengthening of international peace and security and requested the Secretary-General to report to the 1971 session of the General Assembly on steps taken in pursuance of the Declaration.

The decisions enumerated in the Declaration were embodied in resolution 2734(XXV), adopted by the Assembly by 120 votes to 1, with 1 abstention.

The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its First Committee, which had approved the text on 14 December 1970, by a roll-call vote of 106 to 1, with 1 abstention.

The sponsors of the text were: Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Colombia, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Nigeria, Panama, Paraguay, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

Before the final vote on the draft declaration as a whole, the First Committee had decided to include an additional operative paragraph, the text of which was based on an amendment proposed by Thailand and orally revised by Saudi Arabia. By that paragraph, the Assembly called upon the Security Council, including the permanent members, to intensify efforts to discharge its primary responsibility for the maintenance of peace and security.

The Saudi-Arabian sub-amendment, which was a revision of the Thailand amendment, was approved by the First Committee by 41 votes to 7, with 53 abstentions. Consequently, the Committee did not vote on the Thai text.

The Committee also approved—by a roll-call vote of 81 votes to 1, with 5 abstentions—amendments submitted by Pakistan, including one to add references (in the operative paragraph dealing with the rights of colonial peoples) to peoples under "any form of external domination."

When the question of strengthening international security was discussed in the plenary meeting of the General Assembly, a number of representatives spoke in explanation of vote.

The United Kingdom said that, although it had reservations about the Declaration, it saw it as representing a balance of views and defining the common interests of States.

Poland said the Declaration defined the most urgent tasks and the priorities of foreign policies.

According to Brazil, the Declaration was a repudiation of theories of balance of power and of power satellites.

India described it as a right step in the right direction in the right time.

Speaking generally in favour of the Declaration, Tunisia noted that the prohibition on incitement to civil war should not apply to colonial situations.

Noting that it was the initiator of the Assembly's discussion of the question of strengthening international security, the USSR said it had been motivated by the need to strengthen the main tasks of the United Nations with regard to peace and security.

RESOLUTION 2734(xxv), as recommended by First Committee, A/8096, adopted by Assembly on 16 December 1970, meeting 1932, by 120 votes to 1, with 1 abstention.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the determination of the peoples of the United Nations, as proclaimed by the Charter, to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, and to this end to live together in peace with one another as good neighbours and to unite their strength to maintain international peace and security,

Considering that in order to fulfil the purposes and principles of the United Nations Member States must strictly abide by all provisions of the Charter,

Recalling its resolution 2606(XXIV) of 16 December 1969 in which the General Assembly, inter alia, expressed the desire that the twenty-fifth year of the Organization's existence should be marked by new initiatives to promote peace, security, disarmament and economic and social progress for all mankind and the conviction of the urgent need to make the United Nations more effective as an instrument for maintaining international peace and security,

Mindful of the observations, proposals and suggestions advanced during the debate at the twenty-fourth session of the General Assembly or presented subsequently by Governments of Member States concerning the attainment of this objective, and of the report submitted by the Secretary-General in conformity with paragraph 5 of resolution 2606(XXIV),

Having in mind the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, adopted unanimously at the current session,

Conscious of its duty to examine in depth the present international situation and to study the means and recourses provided by the relevant provisions of the Charter in order to build peace, security and co-operation in the world,

1. Solemnly reaffirms the universal and unconditional validity of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations as the basis of relations among States irrespective of their size, geographical location, level of development or political, economic and social systems and declares that the breach of these principles cannot be justified in any circumstances whatsoever;

2. Calls upon all States to adhere strictly in their international relations to the purposes and principles of the Charter, including the principle that States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations; the principle that States shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered; the duty not to intervene in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any State, in accordance with the Charter; the duty of States to co-operate with one another in accordance with the Charter; the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples; the principle of sovereign equality of States; and the principle that States shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the Charter;

3. Solemnly reaffirms that, in the event of a conflict between the obligations of the Members of the United Nations under the Charter and their obligations under any other international agreement, their obligations under the Charter shall prevail;

4. Solemnly reaffirms that States must fully respect the sovereignty of other States and the right of peoples to determine their own destinies, free of external intervention, coercion or constraint, especially involving the threat or use of force, overt or covert, and refrain from any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of any other State or country;

5. Solemnly reaffirms that every State has the duty to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity and political independence of any other State, and that the territory of a State shall not be the object of military occupation resulting from the use of force in contravention of the provisions of the Charter, that the territory of a State shall not be the object of acquisition by another State resulting from the threat or use of force, that no territorial acquisition resulting from the threat or use of force shall be recognized as legal and that every State has the duty to refrain from organizing, instigating, assisting or participating in acts of civil strife or terrorist acts in another State;

6. Urges Member States to make full use and seek improved implementation of the means and methods provided for in the Charter for the exclusively peaceful settlement of any dispute or any situation, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, including negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, good offices including those of the Secretary-General, or other peaceful means of their own choice, it being understood that the Security Council in dealing with such disputes or situations should also take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court;

7. Urges all Member States to respond to the immediate need to agree on guidelines for more effective peace-keeping operations in accordance with the Charter, which could increase the effectiveness of the United Nations in dealing with situations endangering international peace and security, and consequently to support the efforts of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to reach agreement on all questions relating to such operations, as well as on provisions for their appropriate and equitable financing;

8. Recognizes the need for effective, dynamic and flexible measures, in accordance with the Charter, to prevent and remove threats to the peace, suppress acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and in particular for measures to build, maintain and restore international peace and security;

9. Recommends that the Security Council take steps to facilitate the conclusion of the agreements envisaged in Article 43 of the Charter in order fully to develop its capacity for enforcement action as provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter;

10. Recommends that the Security Council consider, in conformity with Article 29 of the Charter, whenever appropriate and necessary, the desirability of establishing subsidiary organs, on an ad hoc basis, and with the participation of the parties concerned, when conditions so warrant, to assist the Council in the performance of its functions as defined in the Charter;

11. Recommends that all States contribute to the efforts to ensure peace and security for all nations and to establish, in accordance with the Charter, an effective system of universal collective security without military alliances;

12. Invites Member States to do their utmost to enhance by all possible means the authority and effectiveness of the Security Council and of its decisions;

13. Calls upon the Security Council, including the permanent members, to intensify efforts to discharge, in conformity with the Charter, its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security;

14. Recommends that Member States support the efforts of the Special Committee on the Question of Defining Aggression to bring its work to a successful conclusion, thus achieving the definition of aggression as soon as possible;

15. Reaffirms its competence under the Charter to discuss and recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among States, including situations resulting from a violation of the provisions of the Charter setting forth the purposes and principles of the United Nations;

16. Urges all Member States to implement the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with their obligations under Article 25 of the Charter and to respect, as provided for in the Charter, the resolutions of United Nations organs responsible for the maintenance of international peace and security and the peaceful settlement of disputes;

17. Urges Member States to reaffirm their will to respect fully their obligations under international law in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter and to continue and intensify the efforts towards the progressive development and codification of international law;

18. Calls upon all States to desist from any forcible or other action which deprives peoples, in particular those still under colonial or any other form of external domination, of their inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and independence and to refrain from military and repressive measures aimed at preventing the attainment of independence by all dependent peoples in accordance with the Charter and in furtherance of the objectives of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, and render assistance to the United Nations and, in accordance with the Charter, to the oppressed peoples in their legitimate struggle in order to bring about the speedy elimination of colonialism or any other form of external domination;

19. Affirms its belief that there is a close connexion between the strengthening of international security, disarmament and the economic development of countries, so that any progress made towards any of these objectives will constitute progress towards all of them;

20. Urges all States, particularly the nuclear-weapon States, to make urgent and concerted efforts within the framework of the Disarmament Decade and through other means for the cessation and reversal of the nuclear and conventional arms race at an early date, the elimination of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction and the conclusion of a treaty on general and complete disarmament under effective international control, as well as to ensure that the benefits of the technology of the peaceful use of nuclear energy shall be available to all States, to the maximum extent possible, without discrimination;

21. Emphatically reiterates the need to undertake, within the framework of the Second United Nations Development Decade, urgent and concerted international action based on a global strategy aimed at reducing and eliminating as soon as possible the economic gap between developed and developing countries, which is closely and essentially correlated to the strengthening of the security of all nations and the establishment of lasting international peace;

22. Solemnly reaffirms that universal respect for and full exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms and the elimination of the violation of those rights are urgent and essential to the strengthening of international security, and hence resolutely condemns all forms of oppression, tyranny and discrimination, particularly racism and racial discrimination, wherever they occur;

23. Resolutely condemns the criminal policy of apartheid of the Government of South Africa and reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed peoples to attain their human rights and fundamental freedoms and self-determination;

24. Expresses its conviction that the achievement of universality of the United Nations, in accordance with the Charter, would increase its effectiveness in strengthening international peace and security;

25. Considers that the promotion of international co-operation, including regional, subregional and bilateral co-operation among States, in keeping with the provisions of the Charter and based on the principle of equal rights and on strict respect for the sovereignty and independence of States, can contribute to the strengthening of international security;

26. Welcomes the decision of the Security Council to hold periodic meetings in accordance with Article

28, paragraph 2, of the Charter and expresses the hope that these meetings will make an important contribution to the strengthening of international security;

27. Emphasizes the need for the United Nations to exert continuous efforts for the strengthening of international peace and security and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session on steps taken in pursuance of the present Declaration.

CHAPTER VII

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE UNITED NATIONS

In celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations,, a number of activities were organized both in New York and elsewhere during 1970.

On 26 June, a special commemorative meeting of the signing of the Charter was held in San Francisco (United States). In July, a World Youth Assembly met at United Nations Headquarters, New York. In October, the General Assembly held a commemorative session, during which it adopted several major documents, including a Declaration on the Occasion of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary. The pages that follow give details of these and other activities held in connexion with the anniversary.

OBSERVANCE AT SAN FRANCISCO

At the invitation of the City of San Francisco, representatives of Member Governments, the Secretary-General and senior officials of the Secretariat took part in ceremonies marking the twenty-fifth anniversary of the signing of the Charter of the United Nations in that city on 26 June 1945.

Detailed plans for the celebration were formulated and executed by the Mayor's Citizens' Committee of San Francisco in collaboration with the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Assembly's Committee for the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the United Nations, which had been established by an Assembly decision of 31 October 1969.<sup>1</sup>

On 26 June 1970, a commemorative meeting was held at the Opera House in San Francisco. Speakers on the occasion were the representatives of the host Government and the municipality, the Secretary-General, the President of the twenty-fourth session of the General Assembly, representatives of each of the five geographical regions represented within the United Nations membership, three past Presidents of the General Assembly, one representative of the specialized agencies and the Chairman of the Committee for the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the United Nations.

OBSERVANCE BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

COMMEMORATIVE SESSION

In celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the coming into force of the Charter of the United Nations, the General Assembly held a commemorative session from 14 to 24 October 1970.

The Heads of State or Government of 44 Members participated in the commemorative session, as did two Vice-Presidents, four Deputy Prime Ministers, 92 Ministers for Foreign Affairs and a number of special envoys designated by their Heads of State or Government. (For further details concerning participation in the session, see APPENDIX III.)

The commemorative session ended on 24 October with the formal adoption of three documents—namely, the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations (see pp. 788-92), the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade (see pp. 319-29) and the Declaration on the Occasion of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the United Nations.

DECLARATION ON THE OCCASION OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

On 24 October 1970, the General Assembly adopted a Declaration by which the representatives of the Member States of the United Nations solemnly declared that in furtherance of the anniversary objectives of peace, justice and progress, they reaffirmed their dedication to the Charter of the United Nations and their will to carry out the obligations contained in the Charter.

By the Declaration, the deep conviction that the United Nations could provide a most effective means to strengthen the freedom and independence of nations was reaffirmed, as was the determination to respect the principles of international law concerning friendly relations and co-operation among States.

The Assembly said it would exert its utmost efforts to develop such relations among all States, irrespective of their political, economic and social systems, on the basis of strict observance of the principles of the Charter, and in particular the principle of sovereign equality of States, the principle that States should refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, the principle that they should settle their international disputes by peaceful means, the duty not to intervene in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any State, and the principle that States should fulfil in good faith obligations assumed by them in accordance with the Charter.

The Assembly said the progressive development and codification of international law should be advanced in order to promote the rule of law among nations, and it welcomed the adoption of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States.

The Assembly also reaffirmed its determination to take concrete steps to fulfil the central task of the United Nations—the preservation of international peace and security—since the solution to many other crucial problems, notably those of disarmament and economic development, was inseparably linked thereto, and to reach agreement on more effective procedures for carrying out United Nations peace-keeping consistent with the Charter.

All Member States were invited to resort more often to the peaceful settlement of international disputes and conflicts by the means provided for in the Charter, notably through negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration and judicial settlement, making use as appropriate of the relevant organs of the United Nations, as well as through resort to regional agencies or arrangements or other peaceful means of their own choice.

On the threshold of the Disarmament Decade, the Assembly welcomed the important international agreements that had been achieved in the limitation of armaments, especially nuclear arms, and called upon all Governments to renew their determination to make concrete progress towards the elimination of the arms race and the achievement of general and complete disarmament under effective international control.

Acclaiming the role of the United Nations in the previous 25 years in the process of the liberation of peoples of colonial, Trust and other non-self-governing Territories, the Assembly noted that many Territories and peoples continued to be denied their right to self-determination and independence, particularly in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia, Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau), by certain recalcitrant States and by the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia.

The Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of all colonial peoples to self-determination, freedom and independence and condemned all actions that deprived any people of these rights.

In recognizing the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples for their freedom by all appropriate means at their disposal, the Assembly called upon all Governments to comply with the provisions of the Charter, taking into account the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>2</sup> The Assembly re-emphasized that these countries and peoples were entitled, in their just struggle, to seek and to receive all necessary moral and material help in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter.

<sup>2</sup> See Y.U.N., 1960, pp. 49-50, text of resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960.

The Assembly strongly condemned the evil policy of apartheid, which was a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind, and, like nazism, was contrary to the principles of the Charter. It reaffirmed its determination to spare no effort, including support to those who struggled against it, to secure the elimination of apartheid in South Africa. It also condemned all forms of oppression and tyranny wherever they occurred and racism and the practice of racial discrimination in all its manifestations.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Human Rights Covenants, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide were cited by the Assembly as landmarks in international co-operation and in the recognition and protection of the rights of every individual, without distinction.

Although some progress had been achieved in furthering the Charter objectives of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, serious violations of human rights were still being committed, the Assembly noted. It pledged itself to a continued and determined struggle against all violations of the rights and fundamental freedoms of human beings, by eliminating the basic causes of such violations, by promoting universal respect for the dignity of all people without regard to race, colour, sex, language or religion, and in particular through greater use of the facilities provided by the United Nations in accordance with the Charter.

The Assembly stated that economic and social development was essential to peace, international security and justice. International efforts must be on a scale commensurate with the problem. In this context, the activities of the United Nations system designed to secure the economic and social progress of all countries, in particular the developing countries, should be further strengthened and increased.

All Governments were urged to give their full support to the most complete and effective implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, which coincided with and was linked to the Disarmament Decade.

The General Assembly reaffirmed its intention to make full use of the unprecedented opportunities created by advances in science and technology for the benefit of peoples everywhere in such fields as outer space, the peaceful uses of the sea-bed and the improvement of the quality of the environment, so that the developed and the developing countries could share equitably in scientific and technical advances, thus contributing to the acceleration of economic development throughout the world.

Noting that universality in terms of membership in the Organization had not been achieved, the Assembly expressed the hope that in the near future all peace-loving States that accepted and were able and willing to carry out the obligations of the Charter would become Members.

Further, it was desirable to find ways and means to strengthen the Organization's effectiveness in dealing with the growing volume and complexity of its work in all areas of its activities, and notably that relating to the strengthening of international security, including a more rational division and co-ordination of work among the various bodies of the United Nations system.

In conclusion, the Assembly expressed its belief that mankind was confronted by a critical and urgent choice: increased peaceful co-operation and progress or disunity and conflict, even annihilation. The representatives of the Member States of the United Nations reaffirmed their determination to do their utmost to ensure a lasting peace on earth and to observe the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter. They expressed full confidence that the actions of the United Nations would be conducive to the advancement of mankind along the road to peace, justice and progress.

The Declaration was embodied in resolution 2627(XXV), which the Assembly adopted without vote on 24 October 1970, on the recommendation of its Committee for the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the United Nations.

COMMITTEE ACTION

The Committee for the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the United Nations, which had been established by the General Assembly for the purpose, among other things, of preparing a suitable text for the final document or documents to be adopted during the commemorative session,<sup>3</sup> met frequently between February and October 1970.

During some 45 meetings, the Committee and its Working Group, which was formed to prepare a draft declaration, considered and amended a suggested text. The topics to be covered in the declaration were agreed upon early in the discussion. Whether the document was to be general or specific, however, was in question throughout the discussions, as points of wording and emphasis were debated.

Thus, in the paragraph having to do with the peaceful settlement of disputes, some representatives favoured referring specifically to the International Court of Justice; others opposed specific mention of that body. On the question of disarmament, some favoured reference to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;<sup>4</sup> others preferred a more general wording.

There was lengthy debate on the wording of the paragraph having to do with the process of liberation of peoples of colonial, Trust and other non-self-governing Territories and of the paragraph on apartheid. Here the discussion concerned the wording of particular phrases, the way that apartheid was to be described, and whether or not there should be specific mention in those paragraphs of particular countries whose regimes were judged as not having complied with United Nations principles.

On 9 October 1970, the Committee for the Twenty-fifth Anniversary submitted its first report, to which was annexed the text of a draft declaration for consideration by the General Assembly.

The Committee noted in its report that certain representatives had not been able to obtain instructions from their Governments in time to give final clearance to the text. Several representatives had also expressed reservations that would be found in the records of the Committee.

On 13 October 1970, when the General Assembly considered the report, the President of the Assembly stated that a consensus had emerged to the effect that all proposed amendments submitted to the plenary should be referred to the Committee for the Twenty-fifth Anniversary, which would consider them and report back.

Under this mandate, the Committee devoted eight meetings to the consideration of various amendments. The ideas contained in individual amendments submitted by Chile, by Romania and by Yugoslavia were incorporated into the draft text by the Committee in a form accepted by the sponsors. These amendments essentially suggested changes in wording that were not controversial and that clarified ideas in the paragraphs reaffirming Charter principles.

In the case of amendments submitted by Bulgaria and by Italy, respectively, the sponsors, in order to facilitate the achievement of an agreed text by consensus, did not insist on having the proposals contained in their amendments considered by the Committee.

The Bulgarian amendment would have added to the paragraph concerning disarmament the idea that measures such as the prohibition and destruction of chemical and bacteriological weapons, the prohibition of the use of the seabed for military purposes, the establishment of denuclearized zones in various parts of the world, and the adoption of measures to halt the nuclear arms race and bring about nuclear disarmament, with the participation of all powers possessing such weapons, would be effective steps towards the attainment of that objective. It would also have said that the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons should become a universally accepted international agreement to which all States would adhere.

The Italian amendments applied to the paragraph having to do with the peaceful settlement of disputes and to the penultimate paragraph, which concerned ways and means to strengthen the effectiveness of the Organization.

By the first Italian suggestion, the Assembly would have invited all Member States to resort more often to the peaceful settlement of international disputes and conflicts by the means provided for in the Charter and would have urged all Member States particularly to resort more than heretofore to the judicial settlement of disputes and to accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice. All relevant organs and organizations were to seek advisory opinions of the Court whenever necessary.

The second Italian amendment would, among other things, have noted that it was necessary (rather than "desirable," as in the text presented to the Assembly) to undertake a thorough review of the structure, procedures and working methods of the United Nations in order to strengthen the Organization's effectiveness.

New texts for the paragraphs having to do with the process of liberation of colonial peoples and with apartheid were submitted by 24 African States, namely: Algeria, Burundi, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Gambia, Guinea, Libya, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Nigeria, the People's Republic of the Congo, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Tunisia, Uganda, Upper Volta, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia.

The Committee was not able to reach agreement on these texts.

The African proposals would have had the Assembly do the following:

In the paragraph on colonial peoples, it would (a) specifically refer to Portugal and South Africa as being States that had denied peoples their right to self-determination; and (b) include the idea that armed struggle was considered a legitimate means in the struggle of colonial peoples for their freedom.

In the paragraph concerning apartheid, it would (a) describe apartheid as a crime against mankind; and (b) delete the reference to nazism and to "all forms of oppression and tyranny wherever they occur."

On 21 October, the Committee for the Twenty-fifth Anniversary submitted a second report to the General Assembly, wherein it noted with regret that it was unable to present a consensus text, since agreement had not been possible on the wording of the paragraphs having to do with the liberation of colonial peoples and with apartheid.

In an addition to its second report, however, submitted the next day, draft texts of the two paragraphs in question were presented to the Assembly.

On the basis of suggestions by Canada to revise the African proposals, the Committee had finally agreed on the wording of these texts and was thus able to present to the General Assembly a complete text of the draft declaration.

CONSIDERATION BY ASSEMBLY

Formal action for the adoption of the Declaration on the Occasion of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the United Nations took place in a plenary meeting of the Assembly on 24 October 1970.

Earlier, on 22 October, representatives of a number of Member States explained their positions on the Declaration or made interpretations or reservations concerning it.

Most of the speakers who explained their positions commented on the spirit of compromise that had characterized the discussions of the Committee on the Twenty-fifth Anniversary.

The majority of those who spoke presented reservations concerning the paragraphs in the Declaration having to do with colonial peoples and with apartheid.

Portugal, wishing to place on record its rejection of the paragraph on the liberation of colonial peoples, requested a separate vote on that paragraph, but the motion was rejected by a vote of 58 to 13, with 14 abstentions.

The representative of Portugal stated that the document contained grave accusations that had serious implications. The Declaration, he said, sought to legitimize the use of violence in the Portuguese overseas provinces, in flagrant violation of the Charter. He noted that Portugal would not participate in the Assembly meeting when the Declaration was to be adopted.

South Africa dissociated itself from the Declaration because of the paragraphs on colonial peoples and on apartheid. It held that the paragraph on apartheid constituted interference in the domestic affairs of South Africa. With regard to the paragraph on colonial peoples, the South African representative said that it was unacceptable because it insinuated that the objectives of South Africa in South West Africa were to deny the rights of indigenous people to self-determination, an insinuation that was a distortion of his country's aims there.

A South African request for a recorded vote on the Declaration as a whole was withdrawn on the understanding that the record would show South Africa's strong dissociation from the Declaration.

Other speakers, including Italy and Spain, were concerned that the wording of the paragraph on the liberation of colonial peoples would lead to misinterpretation.

Australia, the United Kingdom and the United States felt that the language of that paragraph was too extreme.

The United Kingdom reaffirmed that it did not regard anything in that paragraph as implying condonation of violence or of external support for it. In accepting the wording of the paragraph, the United Kingdom was in no way changing its stated attitude towards the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>5</sup> Further, the United Kingdom noted that the use of the word "crime" in the paragraph on apartheid carried with it no technical legal connotations.

France also reserved its position on the paragraph on colonial peoples, stating that parts of that paragraph did not conform with the principles of the Charter.

Brazil and the United States were among those that objected, among other things, to the singling out of a particular Member of the United Nations in the paragraph on apartheid. The United States also felt that such a Declaration should not cite specific instances of oppression while ignoring other equally obvious examples.

A number of speakers, on the other hand, objected to the language of the paragraphs on colonial peoples and on apartheid because they felt it was not sufficiently specific.

Algeria, Nigeria, Uganda, the USSR and the United Republic of Tanzania were among those taking this position. Nigeria and Uganda would have favoured the more specific language contained in the original African amendments to the Declaration.

The representative of Uganda said he was completely dissatisfied with the text of the Declaration. Referring to a passage in the text that referred to apartheid as a "crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind," he stated that apartheid was a crime against mankind and should have been described that way. Were there to have been a vote on the entire Declaration, he would have cast a negative vote, he said.

The USSR supported the African position and would have preferred the Declaration to have been more specific in the paragraphs on colonial peoples and on apartheid. Like the sponsors of the African amendment, the USSR considered that the struggle of the peoples of the colonies for their liberation was legal, including armed struggle. Similarly, the USSR considered apartheid a crime against mankind.

Turning to other parts of the Declaration, the USSR noted that it was convinced that more attention should have been paid in the document to the problems of strengthening international security, the fight against imperialist aggression and its consequences, disarmament, elimination of the remnants of colonialism and other matters.

Cuba also expressed reservations concerning the omission in the Declaration of an emphasis on imperialism, which, in Cuba's view, was the main factor that had damaged the Organization.

Albania found the Declaration unacceptable because, among other things, it made no mention of the grave situation that prevailed in the United Nations as a result of the pernicious influence exercised by the United States and also by the USSR. Albania felt also that the Declaration completely disregarded the fact that the United Nations had for 20 years denied the People's Republic of China its legitimate rights.

The representative of Syria said it was his understanding that the principle of non-admissibility of acquisition of territory through the use of force and the illegality of foreign military occupation was an integral part of the Declaration. He also noted that though the role of the United Nations in the process of the liberation of colonial peoples was acclaimed, that process had not been applied to Palestine, which had been disposed of in a manner contrary to the right of self-determination as enshrined in the Charter.

Brazil noted that it would have welcomed a stronger emphasis in the Declaration on general guiding principles in the field of security and on the role of the United Nations in the peaceful settlement of disputes. Brazil also regretted the absence of a more forceful paragraph on economic co-operation, a clearer reference to the strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, and a more explicit mention of the role to be played by science and technology in the process of economic development.

Italy noted that in a spirit of accommodation and conciliation it had not insisted on its amendments, but that it was especially attached to the idea of promoting a greater role for the International Court of Justice. It was also in favour of a thorough review of the structure and the procedure of work of the United Nations.

The United States supported the Italian proposal concerning the International Court of Justice and also would have favoured more explicit language on the improvement of the Organization's administration and procedures.

In addition, the representative of the United States said he would have preferred to see more reference to practical and constructive steps to strengthen United Nations peace-keeping and a reaffirmation of the need for collective financial responsibility in this regard.

In the field of human rights, the United States would have favoured stronger reference to support for United Nations machinery furthering the implementation of human rights.

OTHER RELEVANT ASSEMBLY DECISIONS

In addition to the Declaration on the Occasion of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the United Nations, the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, the Assembly adopted a number of other major documents during its twenty-fifth regular session.

On 14 December 1970, the General Assembly held a special ceremony to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>6</sup> Two days before, the Assembly had adopted a programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence. (For details of the programme, in resolution 2621 (XXV), see pp. 706-8.)

On 16 December, the Assembly adopted a Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, by which, among other things, it reaffirmed the universal and unconditional validity of the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter as the basis for relations among States. (For details of the Declaration, in resolution 2734 (XXV), see pp. 105-7.)

A Declaration of Principles Governing the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor, and the Subsoil Thereof, beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction, was adopted by the Assembly on 17 December 1970. (For details of resolution 2749 (XXV) containing the Declaration, see pp. 78-79.)

WORLD YOUTH ASSEMBLY

A World Youth Assembly was held at United Nations Headquarters in New York from 9 through 17 July 1970, as part of the observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations. Convened as a result of a General Assembly decision of 31 October 1969,<sup>7</sup> the Youth Assembly was held for the purpose of drawing the attention of youth to the principal problems before the United Nations, providing opportunities for them to express their views on problems of peace and progress and inviting them to indicate how they would wish to support the United Nations.

All United Nations Member States were invited to submit the names of up to five young people to participate in the World Youth Assembly. Participants from several non-self-governing territories also attended the Youth Assembly. In addition, 126 young people were selected from international youth and student organizations. There were 646 participants, all of whom were admitted to the Youth Assembly on an equal basis and exercised the same rights.

It had been suggested by the General Assembly's Preparatory Committee for the Twenty-fifth Anniversary that those who would attend the Youth Assembly would do so as representatives of the young people of their lands as a whole and not as representatives of their specific youth groups or as delegates from their Governments; they would not be under the instructions of their Governments.

The suggested age-limit of participants was to be 25, but appropriate national bodies would exercise due discretion in this matter.

The expenses connected with the World Youth Assembly other than the related conference servicing costs were met from a voluntary fund created for the purpose.

Following a nomination procedure based on regional meetings, the Youth Assembly elected an 18-member Steering Committee during the opening plenary meeting. The Steering Committee designated Pedro Henriquez (Chile) as Temporary Chairman for the first and second plenary meetings and subsequently designated Lars Thalen (Sweden) as Permanent Chairman. At its third plenary meeting, the Assembly accepted the proposed agenda, which comprised four major topics: world peace; development; education; and man and environment.

Subsequently, a commission was formed to deal with each of these topics. Each commission elected its own officers, determined its agenda, and presented a report to the Youth Assembly in plenary session.

The four commission reports as well as a statement by the Steering Committee were noted by the Youth Assembly, which as a final act adopted a message addressed to the General Assembly of the United Nations. These statements and reports were contained in a report which was not issued as a document of the United Nations but which was made available to the Permanent Missions to the United Nations, the participants in the World Youth Assembly and international youth and other non-governmental organizations concerned.

On 11 November 1970, the General Assembly welcomed the fact that the World Youth Assembly had provided a platform for fruitful exchanges among its participants and a forum through which youth could support the activities of the United Nations and its system of organizations.

The General Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to consult Governments and specialized agencies concerned on the possibility of convening, in the future, world youth assemblies in the light of the experiences gained during the organization of the first one, especially keeping in mind the need for rules of procedure that would ensure fair treatment and the full participation of all youth representatives, for a truly universal representation and for the strict observance of freedom of speech, as well as the financial implications and other relevant aspects. The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General to submit, when appropriate, a report.

These decisions were among those contained in resolution 2633 (XXV), adopted by the General Assembly on 11 November 1970, which dealt with "youth, its education in the respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, its problems and needs, and its participation in national development." (For text of resolution, see pp. 581-83; and for further information on matters concerning youth, pp. 578-83.)

On 12 December 1970, the General Assembly, without adopting a formal resolution on the matter, took note of the report of the Committee for the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the United Nations concerning the World Youth Assembly, which had been issued on 11 November 1970.

OTHER ASPECTS OF COMMEMORATION

On 6 July 1970, a special ceremony commemorating the anniversary was held at the United Nations Office in Geneva, in conjunction with the opening of the summer session of the Economic and Social Council. The specialized agencies and other organizations in the United Nations system organized similar commemorative meetings.

By its decision of 31 October 1969,<sup>8</sup> the General Assembly had, among other things, appealed to all Member States to give urgent consideration at the time of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations to the ratification of, or accession to, a number of multilateral instruments that had been adopted, endorsed or supported by the United Nations and that had not entered into force for lack of sufficient ratifications or accessions or that had entered into force but could be strengthened by additional ratifications or accessions. In 1970, the Secretary-General received a number of communications from Member States saying that they had responded to this appeal.

Messages were also received from organizations and governments extending greetings on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations.

Commemorative stamps inscribed with the theme of the twenty-fifth anniversary—"Peace, justice and progress"—were issued by the United Nations. Special stamps in observance of the anniversary were also issued by 101 Member States.

Also, commemorative medals bearing the theme were struck. These were presented to the Heads of State or Government who participated in the commemoration. Smaller medals were placed on sale for the public.

Scrolls were presented to 524 United Nations staff members who had entered the service of the United Nations before or during 1946 and were still with the Organization during the commemoration.

The United Nations organized public information activities for the anniversary—special film and television programmes, meetings and seminars. Similar activities took place on national levels.

RESOLUTION 2627(xxxv), as recommended by Committee for 25th Anniversary of United Nations, A/8103/Add.1.2, adopted without vote by Assembly on 24 October 1970, meeting 1883.

The General Assembly
Adopts the following Declaration:

DECLARATION ON THE OCCASION OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE UNITED NATIONS

We, the representatives of the States Members of the United Nations, assembled at United Nations Headquarters on 24 October 1970 on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the coming into force of the Charter of the United Nations, now solemnly declare that:

1. In furtherance of the anniversary objectives of peace, justice and progress, we reaffirm our dedication to the Charter of the United Nations and our will to carry out the obligations contained in the Charter.

2. The United Nations, despite its limitations, has, in its role as a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in attaining the purposes mentioned in Article 1 of the Charter, made an important contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security, to developing friendly relations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to achieving international co-operation in economic, social, cultural and humanitarian fields. We reaffirm our deep conviction that the United Nations can provide a most effective means to strengthen the freedom and independence of nations.

3. In pursuance of the purposes of the Charter, we reaffirm our determination to respect the principles of international law concerning friendly relations and co-operation among States. We will exert our utmost efforts to develop such relations among all States, irrespective of their political, economic and social systems, on the basis of strict observance of the principles of the Charter, and in particular the principle of sovereign equality of States, the principle that States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, the principle that they shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means, the duty not to intervene in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any State, the duty of States to co-operate with one another in accordance with the Charter, and the principle that States shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the Charter. The progressive development and codification of international law, in which important progress was made during the first twenty-five years of the United Nations, should be advanced in order to promote the rule of law among nations. In this connexion we particularly welcome the adoption today of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

4. Despite the achievements of the United Nations, a grave situation of insecurity still confronts the Organization and armed conflicts occur in various parts of the world, while at the same time the arms race and arms expenditure continue and a large part of humanity is suffering from economic under-development. We reaffirm our determination to take concrete steps to fulfil the central task of the United Nations—the preservation of international peace and security—since the solution to many other crucial problems, notably those of disarmament and economic development, is inseparably linked thereto, and to reach agreement on more effective procedures for carrying out United Nations peace-keeping consistent with the Charter. We invite all Member States to resort more often to the peaceful settlement of international disputes and conflicts by the means provided for in the Charter, notably through negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration and judicial settlement, making use as appropriate of the relevant organs of the United Nations, as well as through resort to regional agencies or arrangements or other peaceful means of their own choice.

5. On the threshold of the Disarmament Decade, we welcome the important international agreements which have already been achieved in the limitation of armaments, especially nuclear arms. Conscious of the long and difficult search for ways to halt and reverse the arms race and of the grave threat to international peace posed by the continuing development of sophisticated weapons, we look forward to the early conclusion of further agreements of this kind and to moving forward from arms limitation to a reduction of armaments and to disarmament everywhere, particularly in the nuclear field, with the participation of all nuclear Powers. We call upon all Governments to renew their determination to make concrete progress towards the elimination of the arms race and the achievement of the final goal—general and complete disarmament under effective international control.

6. We acclaim the role of the United Nations in the past twenty-five years in the process of the liberation of peoples of colonial, Trust and other Non-Self-Governing Territories. As a result of this welcome development, the number of sovereign States in the Organization has been greatly increased and colonial empires have virtually disappeared. Despite these achievements, many Territories and peoples continue to be denied their right to self-determination and independence, particularly in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia, Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau), in deliberate and deplorable defiance of the United Nations and world opinion by certain recalcitrant States and by the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia. We reaffirm the inalienable right of all colonial peoples to self-determination, freedom and independence and condemn all actions which deprive any people of these rights. In recognizing the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples for their freedom by all appropriate means at their disposal, we call upon all Governments to comply in this respect with the provisions of the Charter, taking into account the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples adopted by the United Nations in 1960. We re-emphasize that these countries and peoples are entitled, in their just struggle, to seek and to receive all necessary moral and material help in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter.

7. We strongly condemn the evil policy of apartheid, which is a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind and, like nazism, is contrary to the principles of the Charter. We reaffirm our determination to spare no effort, including support to those who struggle against it, in accordance with the letter and spirit of the Charter, to secure the elimination of apartheid in South Africa. We also condemn all forms of oppression and tyranny wherever they occur and racism and the practice of racial discrimination in all its manifestations.

8. The United Nations has endeavoured in its first twenty-five years to further the Charter objectives of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all. The international conventions and declarations concluded under its auspices give expression to the moral conscience of mankind and represent humanitarian standards for all members of the international community. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide constitute a landmark in international co-operation and in the recognition and protection of the rights of every individual without any distinction. Although some progress has been achieved, serious violations of human rights are still being committed against individuals and groups in several regions of the world. We pledge ourselves to a continued and determined struggle against all violations of the rights and fundamental freedoms of human beings, by eliminating the basic causes of such violations, by promoting universal respect for the dignity of all people without regard to race, colour, sex, language or religion, and in particular through greater use of the facilities provided by the United Nations in accordance with the Charter.

9. During the past twenty-five years, efforts have been made, by adopting specific measures and by fashioning and employing new institutions, to give concrete substance to the fundamental objectives enshrined in the Charter, to create conditions of stability and well-being and to ensure a minimum standard of living consistent with human dignity. We are convinced that such economic and social development is essential to peace, international security and justice. The nations of the world have, therefore, resolved to seek a better and more effective system of international co-operation whereby the prevailing disparities may be banished and prosperity secured for all. International efforts for economic and technical co-operation must be on a scale commensurate with that of the problem itself. In this context, the activities of the United Nations system designed to secure the economic and social progress of all countries, in particular the developing countries, which have grown significantly in the past twenty-five years, should be further strengthened and increased. Partial, sporadic and half-hearted measures will not suffice. On the occasion of this anniversary, we have proclaimed the 1970s to be the Second United Nations Development Decade, which coincides with and is linked to the Disarmament Decade, and have adopted the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade. We urge all Governments to give their full support to its most complete and effective implementation in order to realize the fundamental objectives of the Charter.

10. The new frontiers of science and technology demand greater international co-operation. We reaffirm our intention to make full use, inter alia, through the United Nations, of the unprecedented opportunities created by advances in science and technology for the benefit of peoples everywhere in such fields as outer space, the peaceful uses of the sea-bed beyond national jurisdiction and the improvement of the quality of the environment, so that the developed and developing countries can share equitably scientific and technical advances, thus contributing to the acceleration of economic development throughout the world.

11. The great increase in the membership of the Organization since 1945 testifies to its vitality; however, universality in terms of membership in the Organization has not yet been achieved. We express the hope that in the near future all other peace-loving States which accept and, in the judgement of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out the obligations of the Charter will become Members. It is furthermore desirable to find ways and means to strengthen the Organization's effectiveness in dealing with the growing volume and complexity of its work in all areas of its activities, and notably those relating to the strengthening of international peace and security, including a more rational division and co-ordination of work among the various agencies and organizations of the United Nations system.

12. Mankind is confronted today by a critical and urgent choice: either increased peaceful co-operation and progress or disunity and conflict, even annihilation. We, the representatives of the States Members of the United Nations, solemnly observing the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, reaffirm our determination to do our utmost to ensure a lasting peace on earth and to observe the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter, and express full confidence that the actions of the United Nations will be conducive to the advancement of mankind along the road to peace, justice and progress.

CHAPTER VIII

QUESTIONS RELATING TO AFRICA

MATTERS CONCERNING SOUTH AFRICA'S APARTHEID POLICIES

In July 1970, the Security Council again considered the question of race conflict in South Africa resulting from the policies of apartheid of the Government of the Republic of South Africa.

The Council—on 23 July—condemned the violations of the arms embargo it had called for in 1963 and 1964, and it called on States to take a series of measures to strengthen the embargo.

Also during the year, the General Assembly's 11-member Special Committee on the Policies of Apartheid of the Government of the Republic of South Africa continued to consider various aspects of the question, reporting to the Assembly and to the Security Council in October. The Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council also examined a number of aspects of the question and made several recommendations to the General Assembly.

The Assembly considered these reports and recommendations at its twenty-fifth session, which opened on 15 September 1970. The Assembly acted first on the question of violations of the arms embargo which had been called for by the Security Council. On 13 October, it adopted a resolution calling on all States to take immediate steps to implement fully the provisions of the Security Council's resolution of 23 July 1970 concerning the sale of arms to South Africa and supply of technical assistance to South Africa in the manufacture of arms.

Later, on 8 December 1970, the Assembly took a series of decisions on the question of the apartheid policies of the South African Government.

Among other things, the Assembly declared that the policies of apartheid were a negation of the United Nations Charter and constituted a crime against humanity. The Assembly reaffirmed its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of South Africa to eliminate by all means at their disposal apartheid and racial discrimination and to attain majority rule in the country as a whole, based on universal suffrage.

The Assembly also condemned the establishment of Bantustans—the so-called homelands—as fraudulent and prejudicial to the territorial integrity of the State and the unity of its people.

Once again, it drew the attention of the Security Council to the grave situation in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole and recommended that the Council resume urgently the consideration of effective measures, including those under Chapter VII of the Charter.<sup>1</sup> States were urged to terminate official relations and all military, economic, technical and other co-operation with South Africa, to end tariff and other preference to South African exports and facilities for investment in South Africa and to suspend cultural, educational, sporting and other exchanges.

The Assembly also adopted resolutions by which it: asked the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), to promote as appropriate, economic, social and humanitarian assistance to the oppressed South African People; and called for a United Nations information campaign against apartheid assisted by Member States, specialized agencies, regional organizations, anti-apartheid movements and other non-governmental organizations.

By another resolution, which sought to focus international attention on apartheid during the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1971), the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to promote the widest possible campaign against apartheid in 1971. At the same time, the Assembly invited national and regional trade-union organizations to observe the International Year by organizing various types of activities against apartheid.

Still another resolution appealed for contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa and authorized aid to voluntary organizations engaged in providing relief and assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in Namibia and Southern Rhodesia to the extent that additional voluntary contributions were received for that purpose.

Many other decisions taken by the General Assembly also referred to the question of the apartheid policies of the South African Government. Included among these were resolutions dealing with the elimination of racial discrimination, the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, measures to be taken against nazism and racial intolerance, the punishment of war criminals and persons who had committed crimes against humanity, the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, the co-operation of the specialized agencies and international institutions in achieving the goals of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the programme of action for the full implementation of that Declaration.

The Assembly also adopted a resolution referring to the credentials of the representatives of South Africa.

Finally, the Declaration adopted by the Assembly on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the coming into force of the United Nations Charter reaffirmed the determination of the Organization to secure the elimination of apartheid in South Africa.

These and other decisions of United Nations organs are described in the sections below.

Political and Related Developments

CONSIDERATION BY SECURITY COUNCIL

On 2 July 1970, the Chairman of the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Policies of Apartheid of the Government of the Republic of South Africa informed the President of the Security Council that the Special Committee had decided to bring to the Council's attention the question of the arms embargo against South Africa. The Committee also was transmitting to the Council a note on the military forces and equipment of South Africa.

Recalling the Security Council's decision of 18 June 1964<sup>2</sup> by which the Council had reaffirmed its previous call upon all States to observe the arms embargo against South Africa, the Special Committee pointed out that the arms embargo had not been fully implemented by all States and that South Africa had continued to receive technical assistance and foreign capital to expand the manufacture of military equipment. The Special Committee therefore recommended that the Security Council call on all States to implement fully, without reservations and restrictive interpretations, the previous Council resolutions concerning the arms embargo against South Africa and cease other forms of military assistance.

On 15 July 1970, the representatives of 40 Member States requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to resume consideration of the question of race conflict in South Africa resulting from the policies of apartheid of the Government of the Republic of South Africa with a view to examining in particular the situation arising from the violations of the arms embargo called for in Security Council resolutions. Those violations, the 40-power request stated, had enabled the South African Government to amass considerable military power which it used not only to impose its racist policies but also to flout United Nations decisions concerning Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the Portuguese-occupied territories of Angola and Mozambique.

The Security Council considered the matter at five meetings held between 17 and 23 July 1970. Ghana, India, Mauritius, Pakistan and Somalia were invited, at their request, to participate without vote.

At the outset of the discussion, the representative of Mauritius, speaking on behalf of the African group of States at the United Nations, said that the arms embargo had been the only concrete measure the Security Council had taken on the question of apartheid since 1960, when the question came before it following the Sharpeville massacre.

Despite that embargo, South Africa had continued to receive arms, military equipment and spare parts, as well as licences and technical and other assistance to expand the manufacture of arms, ammunition, military vehicles and other equipment. The Mauritian representative stated that France, which had been the major supplier, according to material prepared by the Special Committee on Apartheid, had argued—along with other Western countries—that the embargo covered only arms which could be used for internal repression and did not apply to arms and equipment for external defence.

The African States, he continued, considered that such a distinction was not valid, since South Africa had committed itself not only to repressing organized opposition to its own racial policies, but also to a policy of military and economic support of the white minority regimes elsewhere in southern Africa. The African States hoped that those who were contravening the embargo would realize that they were sowing the seeds of a violent conflict in the whole of Africa which would certainly involve other nations.

The representative of Mauritius said the African States were disturbed by recent press reports that the newly elected British Government might lift the arms embargo and resume the sale of arms to South Africa. Other press reports indicated that France and the Federal Republic of Germany were preparing to supply South Africa with arms if the United Kingdom did not. The action reportedly contemplated by the United Kingdom, he said, would seriously prejudice efforts to uphold the purposes of the United Nations Charter and fundamental freedoms and human rights in South Africa. The African States hoped the Security Council would face up to its responsibilities and take all necessary steps to strengthen its arms embargo and make it mandatory.

Similar views were expressed by representatives of other African and of Asian States. Ghana, Nepal, Sierra Leone, Somalia and Zambia maintained that the arms embargo against South Africa had been weakened from the start by the reservations of some States and had been made virtually ineffective by the non-compliance of others. Among the points made by the representatives were the following:

The Security Council should discredit attempts to undermine the force of the arms embargo by unrealistic distinctions among types of weapons; arms sent to South Africa were used against the liberation movements.

There was no external threat against South Africa; the only threat to its security came from the vast majority of Africans in that country who were determined to put an end to white supremacy and exercise their inalienable right to freedom and independence.

To furnish arms and military equipment to the South African regime on whatever ground was an act of international irresponsibility and showed a callous disregard of world public opinion, especially since South Africa had extended its apartheid policies to the international territory of Namibia.

These States urged the Security Council to strengthen the embargo and eliminate the many loop-holes in its application, secure universal adherence to the embargo and call upon those States which had violated it to refrain from doing so.

Somalia suggested two measures in addition to several which had been recommended to the Security Council by the Special Committee: a prohibition on the supply of military patents to South Africa; and effective action by all States to discourage skilled technicians from emigrating to South Africa to work in the armaments industry. Somalia's representative maintained that the authority of the Security Council had been flouted by defiance of the arms embargo. If the Council remained indifferent to these violations, its moral and constitutional position would be seriously impaired.

The representative of India, referring to debate in the British House of Lords on the intended plan of the United Kingdom to renew arms supplies to South Africa, stated that arguments advanced to justify that plan were not convincing. For example, he said, the Simons-town Agreement (an exchange of letters of 30 June 1955) on defence matters between the United Kingdom and the Republic of South Africa was out of date and irrelevant and the argument that there was a communist threat or a threat by the USSR in the area was not credible.

The only threat to peace and security in the southern half of Africa came from the South African regime's covert aggression and subversion against neighbouring independent countries and colonial peoples struggling for their freedom. United Nations action against South Africa had proved unsuccessful because of exports of armaments by certain States to that country.

India proposed measures that the Security Council should take to implement its previous resolutions on the arms embargo, as follows.

First, it said, effective steps should be taken to prevent the flow of arms and military hardware to South Africa directly or through third parties. Second, the supply of and spare parts for all vehicles and equipment for the South African armed forces should be withheld. Third, all kinds of investment and technical assistance, including licences, should be prohibited, and, fourth, all military training of South African forces should be discontinued. Also, the Security Council might consider the establishment of a sub-committee to keep the question of the embargo under constant review.

The representative of Syria said the Council should respond to the just and minimal request of the African countries for the strengthening of the arms embargo, so as to diminish the capabilities of the Pretoria regime to inflict more harm on the African majority subjected to the practice of apartheid, on the Namibians subjected to foreign rule and denied their rights, and on the neighbouring African States.

The representative of Ghana declared that his Government would regard the United Kingdom's resumption of the sale of arms to South Africa as a racist alignment aimed at buttressing Western European supremacy in southern Africa. He said that while the socialist countries of Eastern Europe had scrupulously complied with the arms embargo resolutions, Western countries had generally violated them whenever it suited their purpose. He criticized France, which, he said, had become the principal arms supplier to South Africa and he asserted that other countries involved in such supplies were Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and Switzerland.

Pakistan said that any increase in South Africa's capability for external defence would inevitably and automatically strengthen its means for enforcement of its apartheid policies. The permanent members of the Security Council must make unqualified commitments on the arms embargo, for to interpret these commitments as partial, to admit loop-holes in the Council's resolutions on the embargo and subject it to changing doctrines or strategic defence was to thwart the objectives and undermine the basis of those resolutions. Pakistan believed it was entirely within the power of the Security Council to act decisively and prevent the situation in southern Africa from becoming worse.

The representative of the USSR said that the Security Council, while condemning the racist regime in South Africa, should draw attention to the economic and military policies of the Western powers, which promoted the survival of that regime and enabled it to maintain its racist policies by force. As was clear from the data cited in the Council, the Western powers had never fully complied with the embargo; however, the reported intention of the United Kingdom to resume arms sales to South Africa opened the way to all kinds of military assistance to South Africa and represented a challenge to the principles of the United Nations Charter and a total disregard of the Council's decisions. The USSR supported the African States' call for the strengthening of the arms embargo and its full implementation.

In the course of the Security Council discussions, the representative of the United Kingdom read to the Council a statement made in Parliament by the Foreign Secretary of the United Kingdom. The statement expressed the United Kingdom's intention to consider the export to South Africa of certain categories of arms for the specific purpose of maritime defence related to the security of the vital sea route around southern Africa in order to give effect to the purposes of the Simonstown Agreement. The statement added that under no circumstances would there be sales of arms for the enforcement of the policies of apartheid or internal repression. It indicated that consultations were being held with Commonwealth Governments and with the South African Government, and no decisions would be taken pending completion of those discussions.

The representative of the United Kingdom emphasized that no decision had yet been taken and said that some of the fears expressed in the Council had gone far beyond any actions his Government had in mind. There was no question, he said, of lifting the arms embargo as a whole; or of selling arms to South Africa for the enforcement of apartheid or internal repression.

France reaffirmed its opposition to apartheid and said it fully understood the feelings of the African countries that had felt it necessary once again to draw the Council's attention to the deplorable situation in South Africa.

However, France's position, explained to the Council in 1963, had been that if the Council were to adopt enforcement measures and interfere directly in the international affairs of a Member State, it would exceed its authority under the United Nations Charter. So far, the Council had avoided recourse to Chapter VII of the Charter.<sup>3</sup> Member States had replied to the appeal to end sales of military material to South Africa and some had made reservations to their commitments, doubtless feeling that a Member State could not be denied the right to self-defence recognized by Article 51 of the Charter.<sup>4</sup> They had therefore drawn a distinction between arms for external defence and arms for internal repression.

France's original undertaking to take all steps necessary to prevent the sale to South Africa of arms which might be used for repression had subsequently been expanded to cover equipment and material for the manufacture of such weapons. France, therefore, could not accept the assertions made in the Council that it had violated the arms embargo against South Africa.

The French representative said he was authorized to state that his Government was anxious to avoid anything that could jeopardize the security of the African countries, particularly of Zambia, and would accordingly consider whether it was appropriate to take additional steps along those lines.

On 23 July 1970, the Security Council decided to reiterate its call on States to observe strictly the arms embargo. The Council also took decisions on several other aspects of the question.

Again condemning the policies of apartheid and the measures being taken by South Africa to enforce and extend those policies beyond its borders, the Council recognized the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for their human and political rights as set forth in the United Nations Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

The Council expressed grave concern at the persistent refusal of South Africa to abandon its racist policies and to abide by the Security Council and General Assembly resolutions relating to southern Africa. The Council also expressed grave concern at the situation arising from the violation of the arms embargo and was convinced that the embargo should be strengthened.

Further, it was convinced that the situation resulting from the continued application of the policies of apartheid and the constant build-up of the South African military and police forces constituted a potential threat to international peace and security. The Council also felt that the extensive arms build-up of the military forces of South Africa posed a real threat to the security and sovereignty of independent African States opposed to South Africa's racial policies, especially neighbours.

The Council then reiterated its total opposition to the South African Government's policies of apartheid; reaffirmed its previous resolutions on this question; and condemned the violations of the arms embargo.

The Council called on States to strengthen the arms embargo by: (a) implementing fully the arms embargo against South Africa unconditionally and without reservations whatsoever; (b) withholding the supply of all vehicles and equipment for use of the armed forces and paramilitary organizations of South Africa; (c) ceasing the supply of spare parts for all vehicles and military equipment used by the armed forces and paramilitary organizations of South Africa; (d) revoking all licences and military patents granted to the South African Government or to South African companies for the manufacture of arms and ammunition, aircraft and naval craft or other military vehicles and by refraining from further granting such licences and patents; (e) prohibiting investment in, or technical assistance for, the manufacture of arms and ammunition, aircraft, naval craft or other military vehicles; (f) ceasing provision of military training for members of the South African armed forces and all other forms of military co-operation with South Africa; (g) undertaking the appropriate action to give effect to the above measures.

The Council asked the Secretary-General to follow closely the implementation of these decisions and to report to it from time to time.

These decisions were set forth in the Council's resolution 282(1970), adopted by a vote of 12 to 0, with 3 abstentions (France, the United Kingdom and the United States). The resolution was proposed by Burundi, Nepal, Sierra Leone, Syria and Zambia.

Prior to the vote, the representative of Zambia, appealing to all Council members to join in condemning apartheid, said the sponsors had modified the text to meet the objections of certain members. Particularly, in the preambular part, he said, the situation resulting from the continued build-up of South African military and police forces was described as constituting a "potential" threat to international peace and security, rather than a "serious" threat.

The representative of the United States, explaining his abstention, said his country abhorred and rejected the doctrine of apartheid. It considered that policy and its repressive implementation as violations of South Africa's undertakings under the United Nations Charter. For that reason, the United States, which in 1962 had voluntarily prohibited the sale to South Africa of arms which might be used to enforce apartheid, had voted for the 1963 Council resolution establishing the embargo,<sup>5</sup> had fully carried out its obligations and intended to continue to do so. Current deliveries of arms to South Africa, he said, consisted entirely of spare parts supplied under contracts made before 31 December 1963, the effective date of the United States embargo.

With regard to the resolution before the Council, the United States supported its basic intent and many of its specific provisions, but it could not support the text in its entirety. The more sweeping provisions went beyond the limits to which the United States could commit itself; they could not command the wide support in the Council needed to make them effective and might, on the contrary, weaken the measure of compliance required to give practical effect to the recommendations of the Council.

The representative of the United Kingdom said it was clear that the provisions of the resolution did not involve Chapter VII of the Charter.<sup>6</sup> The United Kingdom was not opposed to the mention of a "potential" threat to international peace and security, as that adequately reflected the real and understandable fears of South Africa's neighbours concerning that country's intentions towards them. However, the use of the term "violations" (of the arms embargo) was not suitable in referring to Security Council recommendations. Furthermore, when the Council made those recommendations in 1963, the United Kingdom had made known its views on how it would carry them out.

Nothing was further from the facts, the United Kingdom spokesman added, than the impression created by some speakers that the British Government's operation of the embargo was more formal than real. As had been made clear by the study that the Special Committee on Apartheid had transmitted to the Security Council (see above), the United Kingdom currently supplied only a small proportion of the arms received by South Africa and had willingly forgone orders worth tens of millions of pounds.

With reference to the specific measures to strengthen the embargo called for by the Council, the United Kingdom representative said that the wide-ranging nature of these measures would conflict with the United Kingdom's existing commitments. For those reasons, the United Kingdom had abstained in the vote.

The representative of Mauritius, speaking on behalf of the African group of States at the United Nations expressed regrets at the abstentions by France, the United Kingdom and the United States, but hoped that they would cooperate in the implementation of the resolution or, at least, not hamper its implementation.

On 9 October 1970, the Executive Secretary of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) sent to the President of the Security Council the texts of two resolutions on the situation in southern Africa adopted at the seventh session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, in September 1970.

By one resolution, pertaining to the supply of arms to South Africa, the OAU Assembly had, among other things, asked its Chairman to write to the Heads of Governments concerned strongly deploring their action of selling arms to South Africa and requesting them to cease forthwith all actions contravening the resolutions of the Security Council relative to southern Africa.

By the second resolution, the OAU Assembly had, among other things, called for more effective measures against South Africa and condemned the Governments and international financial interests which collaborated with that Government.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON APARTHEID

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Policies of Apartheid of the Government of the Republic of South Africa submitted its report to the Security Council and the General Assembly on 10 September 1970. The report reviewed the Special Committee's work during 1970 and new developments in South Africa in the past year. The report also presented the Committee's conclusions and recommendations for consideration by the Assembly and the Council.

The Special Committee noted with concern that the South African Government had, in violation of relevant United Nations resolutions, continued to subject the leaders of the oppressed people of South Africa and the militant opponents of apartheid to its repressive laws. It further noted that that Government's pursuit of the widest and severest application of the measures of racial separation and segregation had intensified racial bitterness and increased the dangers of violent conflict inside South Africa. The threat of a violent racial conflict was all the more serious because the South African Government's rejection of the peaceful means advocated by the United Nations for an equitable settlement of the situation had deepened the conviction of the oppressed South African people and their liberation movement that their inalienable rights and freedoms could be achieved only through armed struggle and underground activities.

Further, the South African Government, by committing itself to the military support of the white minority regimes in southern Africa, had threatened the security of neighbouring independent States which supported the opponents of apartheid.

The Special Committee pointed out that the South African Government had been encouraged to undertake its aggressive policies in the area by the assistance it had received from other States in building up its military and police forces. In a report of 2 July 1970 to the Security Council on that subject, the Special Committee had emphasized the growth of South Africa's military power despite the Security Council's arms embargo, and had rejected the distinction drawn by States that had contributed to the military build-up in South Africa between arms for internal repression or enforcement of the policies of apartheid and arms for external defence.

While noting with satisfaction that the Security Council, on 23 July 1970, by the terms of resolution 282(1970) (see pp. 146-47 below for text), had expressed its concern about the situation arising from the violations of its arms embargo, the Special Committee nevertheless expressed regret that three permanent members of the Council—France, the United Kingdom and the United States—had abstained during the voting on that resolution. The Special Committee also expressed regret that the Council's resolution of 23 July had not been made mandatory on all Member States. It felt that the situation was sufficiently grave to merit measures of a mandatory character under the Charter of the United Nations.

The Special Committee on the Policies of Apartheid further stated that countries maintaining economic and trade relations with South Africa were contributing to the consolidation of the regime through their economic co-operation. It suggested that until such time as the Security Council imposed effective universally applied mandatory sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter,<sup>7</sup> the international community should institute other measures which would have some impact on that country's economy.

Recommending increased moral, political and material assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa, the Special Committee suggested that part of such assistance should cover technical training in various fields and should include the provision of printing and other equipment that would enable the liberation movement to conduct an effective information campaign.

In the framework of the international campaign against apartheid, the Special Committee drew attention to the insidious propaganda of the South African Government aimed at making its racial policies internationally acceptable. The Committee suggested that studies of South African propaganda and its operation in countries which still maintained relations with South Africa, as well as appropriate measures to counteract it, be undertaken. In the meantime, the General Assembly should appeal to all States to intensify their scrutiny of, and take appropriate measures in line with their domestic laws against the activities of all organizations which were acting as overt and covert lobbies for South African and pro-apartheid propaganda.

While considering that all the mass media should be used in promoting the international campaign, the Special Committee recommended in particular the wider use of radio and urged the provision of adequate assistance to the Organization of African Unity (OAU) for undertaking regular broadcasts on apartheid to southern Africa. The Special Committee also suggested that publications on various aspects of apartheid should cover a wide range of subjects and be issued in more languages.

Finally, the Special Committee reaffirmed its conviction that the success of the struggle of the non-white population of South Africa for equality and justice would depend on United Nations Member States taking strong and resolute action in support of that struggle. The Committee attributed lack of progress on that score to two factors: the intransigence of the South African Government; and the unco-operative attitude of those States that continued to maintain diplomatic, economic and other relations with it.

The Special Committee on the Policies of Apartheid also reported on its 1970 observance of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination—21 March. A special meeting in New York on 20 March was attended by representatives of virtually all Member States, the specialized agencies of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity.

After hearing statements by the Secretary-General, the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, the Chairman of the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa and the Chairman of the Special Committee, the meeting observed a minute of silence in memory of all victims of apartheid and racial discrimination the world over.

The International Day was also observed at governmental and non-governmental levels in many parts of the world. Thirteen Governments announced pledges or contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa and to the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa on the occasion of the International Day.

DECISIONS OF COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS AND ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

DECISIONS OF COMMISSION

At its meetings in February and March 1970, the Commission on Human Rights took several decisions concerning the policies of apartheid. By a decision dealing with the programme for observance in 1971 of the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, the Commission included the policies of apartheid among the aspects of racial discrimination which it intended to review in 1971, in order to identify obstacles to eliminating racial discrimination. The Commission declared, in this connexion, that it found the apartheid policies to be the most reprehensible manifestation of racial discrimination, and it urged Governments as part of their observance of the International Year to declare their abhorrence and condemnation of apartheid and racial discrimination, particularly in southern Africa.

The Commission also asked specialized agencies to launch a world-wide campaign to publicize the evils of apartheid; it asked States to sign relevant international conventions and to bring pressure to bear on those States that violated United Nations resolutions dealing with the elimination of racism, including apartheid, nazism and colonialism. (See also p. 499.)

Another Commission decision, which referred to measures to be taken against nazism and racial intolerance, included apartheid among the ideologies and practices to be eradicated. (See also pp. 508-9.)

By still another decision, the Commission approved the text of a resolution on the question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including policies of racial discrimination and segregation and of apartheid, with particular reference to colonial territories. This resolution was proposed for adoption to the Economic and Social Council; it set forth the text of a resolution which the Council would ask the General Assembly to adopt. (See below pages 127 and 141-42 for Council and Assembly decisions.)

DECISIONS OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

On 6 June 1969, the Economic and Social Council had asked the Secretary-General to prepare a report setting forth the terms of reference of the United Nations organs dealing with violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in southern Africa, a brief survey of the relevant activities so far undertaken by the different organs and also a statement of the activities in this connexion undertaken by the specialized agencies, particularly the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). The report was requested in connexion with the Council's interest in co-ordinating United Nations activities relating to apartheid in southern Africa.

The Secretary-General submitted the report to the Council in May 1970. He reviewed the terms of reference and activities in this respect of the General Assembly, the Security Council, its subsidiary organs, the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary organ, the Commission on Human Rights. Also reviewed were the activities of two subsidiary organs of the Human Rights Commission—Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts appointed by the Human Rights Commission.

In addition, the report covered the terms of reference of the Secretariat and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the activities of the specialized agencies concerned.

On 27 May 1970, the Economic and Social Council took note of this report.

Other Council decisions which referred to the policies of apartheid dealt with the punishment of war criminals and of persons who had committed crimes against humanity, with the question of violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and with allegations of infringements of trade-union rights.

The Council, by the adoption of resolution 1500(XLVIII), recommended that the General Assembly adopt a draft resolution which, among other things, would condemn war crimes and crimes against humanity being committed as a result of aggressive wars and the policies of racism, apartheid and colonialism and would call upon the States concerned to bring to trial persons guilty of such crimes. (See below, pp. 143, for General Assembly action, and 571-72, for further details.)

The Council also asked the General Assembly to adopt a resolution on violations of human rights which would be concerned in some detail with various aspects of the policies of apartheid. It took this action in adopting resolution 1501 (XLVIII). See below, pp. 141-42, for General Assembly action and pp. 517-19 for further details.)

The third Council resolution—1509(XLVIII)—was concerned with the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on allegations of the infringements of trade-union rights. The Council condemned the continuing suppression of trade-union rights in southern Africa, and, among other things, authorized further investigation of this situation. (For further details, see pp. 564-65.)

GENERAL ASPECTS

An item relating to the policies of apartheid of the Government of the Republic of South Africa was included in the agenda of the twenty-fifth (1970) session of the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Assembly's General Committee.

During the discussion regarding the adoption of the agenda, the representative of South Africa, reaffirming the reservations on the item which his Government had expressed in the past, stated that its inclusion in the agenda and its subsequent consideration would contravene Article 2, paragraph 7, of the United Nations Charter, which precludes the United Nations from intervening in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State.<sup>8</sup>

The Assembly, however, approved the inclusion of the item in the agenda, allocating it to the Special Political Committee.

The Rapporteur of the Special Committee on Apartheid (the shortened nomenclature approved by the Assembly in 1970; see below, page 140) presented the Committee's report to the Special Political Committee, saying that the continuing deterioration of the situation in South Africa was a source of grave concern to the international community. He declared that the efforts of the United Nations over the past 25 years had proved fruitless, the arms embargo was being violated, and the South African Government continued to receive the support of some major powers and its principal trading partners, most of them Member States. Further,

<sup>8</sup> Article 2, paragraph 7, of the United Nations Charter states: "Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII."

South Africa had intensified its policies of segregation and had achieved a phenomenal growth in its military equipment of all kinds. The Rapporteur drew attention to the more stringent measures for racial separation and discrimination which had been enforced in South Africa since the general election of April 1970, with franchise restricted to whites.

Although the anti-apartheid Labour Party had won a majority in the elections to the Coloured Persons' Representative Council, the Government had packed the Council with its own nominees, the Rapporteur said. Among the new laws aimed at further eroding the rights of the majority non-white population was the Bantu Homelands Citizenship Act (Act No. 26 of 1970) which was intended to bind every African legally and constitutionally to his own ethnic and cultural group.

Harassment, house arrest, imprisonment, exile or deportation continued to be the lot of opponents of apartheid, he continued. Accordingly, the proportion of prisoners in relation to South Africa's total population was probably the highest in the world. The intensification of apartheid had resulted in such increased racial bitterness and antagonism that it posed a serious threat of a large-scale conflict in the area. It was only by applying effective coercive measures, such as economic sanctions, against South Africa that the threat could be averted.

The Chairman of the Special Committee on Apartheid, who also addressed the Special Political Committee, referred to published evidence which indicted the practice of apartheid as a crime against humanity. The elimination of apartheid constituted the greatest moral challenge of the times. He emphasized the urgent need for the United Nations to continue and extend its efforts to combat apartheid and pointed out the danger that some Member States would drift into apathy and frustration as a result of the refusal of several industrial countries to comply with relevant United Nations resolutions on the subject.

Some States, he continued, hoped that dissemination of pertinent information would in time induce peoples to force their Governments to act against apartheid, but there might not be time for such hopes to materialize before a racial conflict erupted in South Africa. It was vital to disseminate information about the conditions in that country so as to counteract the insidious South African racist propaganda that pretended all was well.

Citing parallels between apartheid and slavery, the Chairman declared that the complex of laws and regulations which enforced apartheid ensured that the privileges and profits of the white minority would be perpetuated while the black majority lived in subjection and misery. Apartheid was the South African Government's solution to the problem of how to dispossess the African in his own land and at the same time create a permanent, abundant and cheap labour force. The success of this attempt amounted to the enslavement of a people.

The Chairman of the Special Committee on Apartheid rebutted a claim which had been made by the South African Foreign Minister that since his Government acceded to power in 1948 it had promoted self-determination for the disenfranchised of that country. Emphasizing the inequity of apportioning 13 per cent of the territory to 70 per cent of the population, he referred to a study prepared for the Special Committee on Apartheid which showed that the so-called homelands (Bantustans) for the black population were all over-populated and in very poor areas where the economy was based almost entirely on subsistence agriculture. In contrast, the white community, though constituting only 19 per cent of the population, occupied 87 per cent of the best and richest parts of the territory. This arrangement had been imposed upon the blacks by the racist regime, which meted out ruthless punishment to anyone who opposed it.

Turning to another claim by the South African Foreign Minister that all peoples in South Africa possessed self-government in varying forms and at varying levels of development, the Chairman of the Special Committee on Apartheid stated that outside the Bantustans black people had no political rights of any kind. Even within the Bantustans the political activity of the non-whites was of the most elementary kind, directed by the whites and characterized by complete subordination to the will and power of the white regime. It must be concluded, he said, in the face of such clearly established evidence, that the aim of the Bantu-

Stan policy was not self-determination but the gradual and systematic extermination of the black people of South Africa.

The Chairman of the Special Committee on Apartheid observed that the trading partners of South Africa sustained the regime by their material and moral support. As in the past, the representatives of France, the United Kingdom and the United States had resolutely condemned apartheid, but beyond words the situation demanded a resolve by the great powers to withdraw from the web of greed that had been woven in South Africa. Investment in apartheid yielded the world's highest dividends; for example, in 1969, the United States journal, Business Week, reported that United States investments there yielded a return of between 17 and 26 per cent. It was not surprising, therefore, that the most enthusiastic lobbyists in Western capitals for the South African regime were business and finance groups.

The success of sanctions, the Chairman declared, depended on a decision by South Africa's main trading partners to implement the relevant resolutions of the United Nations. He suggested that the States involved meet, either informally or under the auspices of the United Nations, to discuss concerted action to implement the trade embargo while softening the impact of such action on the more vulnerable economies.

Continuing, he emphasized the need to isolate South Africa completely—by the severance of diplomatic and other links—until it changed its racist policies. United Nations inertia, he warned, would lead inevitably to greater conflict within the country which, in turn, could well endanger international peace and security. The realization of the futility of depending on the international community for action against apartheid had crystallized in the liberation movement of South Africa, which was growing in effectiveness.

The Chairman noted two developments in the campaign against apartheid. One was the determination of the South African people to resort to armed struggle, and the other was that people, as opposed to Governments, were becoming more and more aware of the implications of apartheid and of their moral obligations in the matter.

He cited the action of the World Council of Churches in voting a substantial sum for the support of the liberation movements in Africa and said it served to underline the fact that the minority racist regimes had effectively barred any alternatives to armed struggle. The strong stand taken against apartheid by many international and national sports organizations was also encouraging. Further, university students all over the world were raising protests against apartheid.

The dissemination of knowledge about apartheid and the consequent development of anti-apartheid attitudes in non-governmental organizations and in all those who would, he hoped, influence Governments, was a long-term process. Given the prevailing trends, a terrible racial conflict might erupt within and outside southern Africa before that process had had time to work.

The Special Political Committee began its discussion of the question of apartheid by considering methods to strengthen the arms embargo against South Africa. In this connexion, reference was made to the fact that during its seventh session (held in September 1970 at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia), the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) had decided to send a mission of Foreign Ministers, led by President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia, to countries selling arms to South Africa or thought to be potential arms suppliers to that country. Reference was also made to the recent announcement that the newly elected Conservative Party Government in the United Kingdom would rescind the limited arms embargo instituted by the former Labour Government.

A 52-power draft resolution by which the Assembly would call for full implementation of the arms embargo was put before the Special Political Committee on 8 October 1970. It was approved by the Committee the following day and adopted by the Assembly at a plenary meeting on 13 October.

The Assembly thus expressed serious concern at reports that the Security Council's resolution of 23 July 1970 calling on all States to strengthen the arms embargo against South Africa (see pp. 146-147 for text) was not yet being implemented by some States. It expressed also its grave concern about the continued build-up of the South African military and police forces and the consequent aggravation of the situation in southern Africa, and it took note of the OAU Assembly's decision to mandate a delegation of five African States to urge the Governments concerned to stop selling arms to South Africa and also to stop assisting in the manufacture of arms in South Africa.

The Assembly then called upon all States to take immediate steps to implement fully the provisions of the Security Council's resolution of 23 July 1970 and asked the Secretary-General to follow closely the implementation of this Assembly resolution and to report not later than 10 December 1970.

These decisions were contained in resolution 2624 (XXV).

After voting separately on the preambular paragraphs referring to the build-up of South African military and police forces and the decision of the OAU Assembly, and also on the operative paragraph calling on all States to implement fully the Security Council's decision, the Special Political Committee approved the text of the resolution as a whole by a roll-call vote of 94 to 2, with 7 abstentions. The Assembly adopted the text by a roll-call vote of 98 to 2, with 9 abstentions.

The sponsors of the resolution were: Afghanistan, Algeria, Barbados, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Ceylon, Chad, Chile, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, Kenya, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Syria, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

During the discussion of this Assembly resolution, the representative of Finland stated that his Government understood that the purpose of the text was not to pronounce on the substance of the matter, but rather to reaffirm the overwhelming support of Member States for the Security Council's resolution of 23 July 1970.

Denmark, Indonesia, Nigeria, Somalia and the USSR were among others who spoke in support of the resolution.

The Canadian representative stated that while Canada fully sympathized with the principles underlying the text, it had no choice but to abstain from voting on it because the essence of the question it referred to was then under review by the Canadian Government. His country had not violated the general arms embargo imposed by the Security Council against South Africa by its resolution of 23 July 1970. Nevertheless, Canada still furnished some spare parts for military equipment that it had supplied to South Africa prior to the adoption of the Security Council's resolution of 7 August 1963.<sup>9</sup>

The representative of Malawi contended that an arms embargo should also be applied to certain parts of Africa which were receiving arms from countries in Eastern Europe as it would be unwise to ignore the balance of power in southern Africa. He said Malawi would vote against the resolution.

Following approval of the resolution concerning the arms embargo against South Africa, the Special Political Committee returned to a general discussion of the policies of apartheid of the South African Government. These policies were unanimously condemned as a violation of the principles of the United Nations Charter as well as of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

A majority of the Members deplored the failure of the United Nations to take effective measures to end the policies of apartheid, particularly as the Organization had been considering the question in one form or another for 25 years. They maintained that the responsibility for such failure rested with South Africa's main trading partners—the traditional ones as well as the new. They held that by refusing to implement various United Nations resolutions calling for the severance of economic political and other ties with South Africa, that country's main trading partners—most of them Members of the United Nations and three of them permanent members of the Security Council—had ensured the survival of the apartheid regime. Those countries, it was stated, had given more weight to economic considerations than to moral principles. Their refusal to co-operate in implementing United Nations resolutions had not only emboldened the South African Government to increase its recalcitrant and defiant attitude towards the United Nations but was also undermining the prestige and authority of the Organization.

A number of representatives, among them those of Ghana, Haiti, Hungary, Iraq, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco and Sudan, held the view that the United Nations should consider the possibility of either suspending or expelling South Africa from membership of the Organization, as that country's continued violation of its obligations under the Charter, manifested by its gross denial of human rights to the majority of the population, jeopardized the continued authority and effectiveness of the United Nations.

The representative of Mexico stated that since it had proved impossible to implement provisions under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter,<sup>10</sup> it was pointless to go on insisting on it, especially as the Charter contained provisions for other effective ways of bringing pressure to bear on South Africa with a view to forcing it to end its universally condemned policy of apartheid. Referring to Article 5 of the Charter, which provided for the suspension of a Member State against which preventive or enforcement action had been taken by the Security Council,<sup>11</sup> he maintained that suspension from membership, while not relieving the State from any of its obligations, would deprive it of the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership. Preventive and enforcement action had been taken against South Africa under the Security Council's resolutions of 7 August 1963, 4 December 1963 and 23 July 1970.<sup>12</sup> In Mexico's view, therefore, nothing debarred the General Assembly, in the exercise of its powers under Article 11 of the Charter, from inviting the Security Council to consider a recommendation to suspend the rights and privileges of the Republic of South Africa.<sup>13</sup> Under Article 5 of the Charter, the Security Council could restore those rights once the South African Government had abolished its policy of apartheid.

Mexico preferred suspension of South Africa under Article 5 of the Charter instead of expulsion, its representative added, since under the former sanction South Africa's obligations under the Charter to uphold human rights would remain unaffected and thus binding on it.

The representative of Venezuela gave qualified support to the idea of suspending South Africa's membership but expressed the fear that such an action might prove to be counter-productive because it would remove the only existing restriction on that country's freedom of action—its annual appearance before the General Assembly, where the great majority of nations repudiated its conduct. He felt that so long as there were nations which refused to comply with United Nations resolutions regarding trade and other relations with the South African Government, suspension would be as ineffective as those measures already adopted by the General Assembly.

Venezuela proposed that consideration be given to the possibility of preparing a specific, legally binding multilateral instrument on international measures relating to the South African Government's policy of apartheid, embracing the provisions laid down in the various resolutions adopted by the United Nations and supplementing them where appropriate. Such an instrument would then be submitted for the consideration of Governments and opened for signature by them. Some States had explained that one of the factors which made it difficult to comply with United Nations decisions was that it was impossible to ensure that they would be respected as legally binding domestically. That difficulty would be obviated if the relevant provisions of United Nations resolutions were embodied in an instrument which would be transformed into law by the signatory countries in accordance with their different constitutional procedures. The instrument Venezuela envisaged could, among other things, provide for the progressive withdrawal of investments from South Africa over a reasonable period to reduce any unfavourable effects on the economies of signatories, and also alleviate the material losses such a step might entail for some States.

<sup>11</sup> Article 5 of the Charter states: "A Member of the United Nations against which preventive or enforcement action has been taken by the Security Council may be suspended from the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. The exercise of these rights and privileges may be restored by the Security Council."

Norway's spokesman held that any decision to suspend South Africa from exercising its rights and privileges of membership would cut off channels of communication which might still influence its Government and people. Suspension would also violate the principle of universality which was so strongly advocated at the current session of the General Assembly.

A number of representatives, among them those of Libya, Malaysia, Morocco, Poland, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Republic of Tanzania, believed that the only step likely to produce any results in the desired goal of eliminating apartheid was the imposition of total mandatory and universally applied economic sanctions. It was further suggested that such sanctions be backed by force, if need be.

Italy's spokesman said that, under the Charter, sanctions and related measures were the prerogative of the Security Council; such measures should be decided on in accordance with the provisions of the Charter.

The representative of the USSR held that apartheid in South Africa was not a local phenomenon; the racist regime had extended its aggressive policies to the non-white population of the occupied territory of Namibia and was suppressing the national liberation movement on the African continent. The forces of South African racism were uniting with Southern Rhodesian racism and Portuguese colonialism in an effort to maintain the supremacy of the white minority. All those regimes employed the same military and political strategy for ensuring their supremacy. They represented a direct danger to neighbouring African States and, particularly in the case of South Africa, constituted a threat to international peace and security.

The USSR representative went on to say that South Africa was able openly to defy the generally accepted principles of international law and humanity and to repudiate its obligations under the United Nations Charter because of the increasing political, economic and military support that it received from a number of Western States. In that connexion, the intention of the United Kingdom Government to resume the sale of arms to South Africa was nothing less than a challenge to public opinion, the principles of the Charter and the decisions of the Security Council.

The amount of foreign investments in South Africa and the profits derived by foreign monopolies from the exploitation of the African population were well known, the USSR representative continued. The foreign monopolies and the South African racists were united by a common bond of material interests which prevailed over moral or humanitarian principles.

The progressive forces of the world were trying to compel the racists of South Africa to abandon their scandalous policy and the imperialist powers to end their support of the South African regime, the USSR spokesman said. The USSR had always favoured the adoption of the most effective measures, in conformity with the Charter, to eliminate racial discrimination and apartheid.

A number of Members including Algeria, the Central African Republic, Ethiopia, Iraq, Morocco, Nigeria and Poland, pledged continued moral, material and military assistance for the oppressed peoples of southern Africa. Others, among them Cuba and Sudan, argued that an armed struggle was the only solution to the evils and endless exploitation and humiliation of apartheid. The representative of Ethiopia said that if the alternatives were either to use force or to abandon the cause of freedom and justice, force must be resorted to as the lesser of two evils.

On the other hand, some Members, including Denmark, Norway and Japan, contended that the United Nations could not be a party to violence and the use of armed force. They said that non-violent means might in the long run be more effective and that the primary task of the United Nations was peace-keeping.

Cameroon and Ceylon commended the World Council of Churches on its decision to contribute funds to the liberation movements in southern Africa and expressed the hope that its example would be emulated by like-minded international organizations.

Senegal suggested a high level dialogue with the authorities of the countries that were supplying arms to South Africa and sustaining that country in other ways in order to explain to them the serious situation and the consequences of their actions.

The Netherlands proposed that sustained efforts be made to persuade the Government of South Africa to adopt a more enlightened outlook in its racial policies. It was essential to maintain contacts on the official level, as well as with the churches, the press, youth organizations or other groups that might be capable of influencing public opinion.

Several representatives, among them those of Colombia, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Italy, Norway and Sweden, emphasized the importance of the dissemination of information on apartheid, thereby mobilizing world public opinion against it. They expressed support for activities aimed not only at promoting greater international awareness of the evils of apartheid but also at securing better understanding of the international community's efforts to eradicate apartheid.

The representative of Malawi maintained that the solution to apartheid was not to be found in the propagation of strongly worded resolutions. While he did not oppose the dissemination of information on apartheid, he pointed out that publications and news broadcasts reached only those already informed about apartheid. He also said that it would be wishful thinking to believe that anti-apartheid documents ever reached South Africa. He expressed doubts as to the effectiveness of the proposed radio programmes to be broadcast to that country, adding that only programmes broadcast by the Government radio stations could be received there.

The outcome of the general debate was set forth in six resolutions adopted by the Assembly on 8 December 1970. One of these—resolution 2671 E (XXV)—dealing with the United Nations Trust Fund is reported in another section of this chapter (pp. 154-56). The others are described below.

By the first of these resolutions, the Assembly, recognizing the need for greater co-ordination of efforts by the United Nations to promote concerted international action for the elimination of apartheid in South Africa, requested the Special Committee on Apartheid constantly to review all aspects of the policies of apartheid in South Africa and its international repercussions. This review was to include: (a) legislative, administrative and other racially discriminatory measures in South Africa and their effects; (b) repression of opponents of apartheid; (c) efforts by the South African Government to extend its inhuman policies beyond the borders of South Africa; and (d) ways and means of promoting concerted international action to secure the elimination of apartheid. The Committee was asked to report from time to time, as appropriate, to the General Assembly or the Security Council, or both.

The Assembly drew the attention of all United Nations organs concerned to this decision so that undue duplication of efforts might be avoided. It decided to expand the membership of the Special Committee on Apartheid by not more than seven additional members and requested the Assembly President to appoint the additional members taking into account the principle of equitable geographical distribution.

This resolution—2671 A (XXV)—was adopted by the General Assembly by 105 votes to 2, with 6 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, which approved the text on 4 November 1970 by a roll-call vote of 97 to 1, with 5 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The sponsors of this resolution were: Afghanistan, Algeria, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Ceylon, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Morocco, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Syria, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The second resolution adopted by the Assembly called for assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa. On 29 October 1970, the rep-representative of Zambia introduced a draft of the text in the Special Political Committee.

By the operative part of this draft resolution, the Assembly would: (1) request the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), to take all appropriate steps to promote assistance by Governments, organizations and individuals, to the oppressed people of South Africa, in their legitimate struggle against apartheid; (2) appeal to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute generously, in consultation with OAU, towards such assistance; (3) request the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly, from time to time as appropriate, on the implementation of this resolution.

On 4 November, a revised version of the text was submitted, which specified the nature of the assistance contemplated for the oppressed people of South Africa to be in the "economic, social and humanitarian fields."

The Special Political Committee approved the revised draft resolution by 103 votes to 1, with 1 abstention, on 4 November and the Assembly adopted it on 8 December as resolution 2671 B (XXV), by a vote of 111 to 2, with 1 abstention. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The sponsors of the resolution in the Special Political Committee were: Afghanistan, Algeria, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Ceylon, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Libya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Morocco, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Syria, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The third Assembly resolution dealt with an information campaign against apartheid. On 29 October 1970, the representative of Malaysia submitted a draft resolution in the Special Political Committee eventually sponsored by the following 45 States: Afghanistan, Algeria, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Ceylon, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, India, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Morocco, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sudan, Syria, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly would (1) request the Secretary-General to take appropriate steps to ensure the widest dissemination of information on the evils and dangers of apartheid, taking into account the recommendations of the Special Committee on Apartheid; (2) invite Member States to lend their co-operation to the Secretary-General in dissemination of information in their countries and in territories under their administration; (3) invite specialized agencies, regional organizations, anti-apartheid movements and other non-governmental organizations to help the United Nations information campaign against apartheid; (4) request the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Special Committee on Apartheid, to arrange for the preparation of special studies and papers on the evils of apartheid and, through the Secretariat's Office of Public Information and Unit on Apartheid, to increase their dissemination in various languages; (5) request the Secretary-General, in the light of the Assembly's resolution of 20 November 1969 (welcoming the Manifesto on Southern Africa and expressing its intention, acting in co-operation with OAU, to intensify efforts to find a solution to the grave situation in southern Africa)<sup>14</sup> to make arrangements with OAU and provide appropriate assistance to OAU as necessary, for initiating broadcasts to southern Africa of programmes on international concern over apartheid and the objectives of the United Nations; (6) authorize the Secretary-General to encourage and assist anti-apartheid movements, United Nations associations and other non-governmental organizations to publish and disseminate widely information provided by the United Nations on the evils and dangers of apartheid and of international efforts against apartheid; and (7) request the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly in 1971 on the implementation of this resolution.

On 17 November, a revised version of the text was put before the Special Political Committee. This draft provided for the inclusion of a preambular paragraph, by which the Assembly would take note of the recommendation by the Special Committee on Apartheid that the United Nations should co-operate with OAU in undertaking regular broadcasts on apartheid to South Africa and to southern Africa as a whole and of the statement of the Assistant Secretary-General for Public Information on the consultations with OAU on this subject.

The operative paragraph calling for the initiation of these broadcasts was revised so that the Assembly would request the Secretary-General, in the light of the declaration set forth in the Assembly's resolution of 20 November 1969,<sup>15</sup> to make appropriate arrangements in co-operation with OAU to initiate regular broadcasts to southern Africa of programmes on international concern over apartheid and on the objectives of the United Nations.

A new operative paragraph would have the Assembly authorize the Secretary-General to incur initial expenditures up to a maximum of $20,000 in 1971 for assistance to OAU for the production and distribution of such programmes in the languages of southern Africa and request him to make a special report to the General Assembly in 1971 on such arrangements.

Several representatives, including those of Hungary and the USSR, expressed reservations about the financial implications of the draft resolution.

The representative of Somalia, commenting on the proposed financial assistance to OAU for radio broadcasts to southern Africa and the reservations of Members on the question, held that OAU was a regional organization recognized under the United Nations Charter. It was therefore a partner of the Organization and not an alien body. The apostles of apartheid, he said, horrified at any gathering of whites and blacks under the banner of justice and the rule of law, had, through the South African radio, increased their campaign of vilification and systematic propaganda against the United Nations, OAU and any individual or group which rose to the defence of the oppressed peoples of South Africa. The United Nations was in duty bound to counteract such propaganda by radio since every anti-apartheid publication was banned in South Africa.

The representative of Somalia added that the sponsors sought to authorize the Secretary-General to pursue his negotiations so that broadcasts could begin as soon as possible, preferably in the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1971). The proposal was in fact for mutual assistance in the context of common action to achieve a common goal. He reaffirmed the conviction of the sponsors that the activities envisaged were not only desirable but essential to the success of the international campaign against the policies of apartheid.

A second revision of the draft text was submitted to the Special Political Committee on 23 November. It was sponsored by the same 45 States. The two operative paragraphs of the former text referring to the initiation of broadcasts to southern Africa were replaced by three paragraphs by which the Assembly would: (1) welcome the readiness of OAU to undertake, in co-operation with the United Nations, weekly broadcasts to southern Africa; (2) request the Secretary-General to take appropriate steps to continue to make available an adequate number of radio programmes and material to Member States willing to provide facilities on their national broadcasting stations for broadcasts to southern Africa of programmes on international concern over apartheid and on the objectives of the United Nations; and (3) request the Secretary-General, in the light of the Assembly's resolution of 20 November 1969, to continue consultations with OAU on means for collaboration between that organization and the United Nations in order to intensify the international information campaign against apartheid, and to report with proposals to the 1971 session of the General Assembly on all aspects of the matter, including any required technical co-operation and financial arrangements.

Prior to voting, Canada proposed—and the sponsors accepted—the addition, in the operative paragraph welcoming the readiness of OAU to undertake broadcasts, of the words "United Nations material" after the words "weekly broadcasts."

Speaking before the vote in the Special Political Committee, France announced it would be able to vote for the draft, and added that the United Nations had sound reasons for enlightening populations about apartheid. The French spokesman stated that in improving the methods of imparting information—a work of persuasion and conversion—the necessary attention must be paid to the Charter, which must not be violated in the process of inducing a Member State (South Africa) to stop violating it. It was on the condition that the Secretary-General would not yield his responsibility to OAU and that he would confine his assistance to the lending of current documents that France would support the operative paragraph welcoming OAU's readiness to undertake, in co-operation with the United Nations, weekly broadcasts of United Nations material to southern Africa.

France hoped that the adoption of the resolution would facilitate changes in the methods used by the Secretariat for dissemination of information, since it had hitherto spent considerable amounts of money on distribution of documents written in a language unintelligible to hundreds of millions of people. France considered that the changes contemplated in the draft resolution would lead to a quantitative improvement of information, would entail the elimination of an excessive number of documents written in one language only, and result in substantial economies.

The Special Political Committee approved the revised text on 24 November 1970, by 89 votes to 0, with 7 abstentions. The text was adopted by the General Assembly on 8 December, by a vote of 107 to 2, with 6 abstentions, as resolution 2671 C (XXV).

The Assembly thereby asked the Secretary-General to take appropriate steps to ensure the widest dissemination of information on the evils and dangers of apartheid, taking into account the recommendations of the Special Committee on Apartheid. It invited Member States to co-operate in the dissemination of such information and invited specialized agencies, regional organizations, anti-apartheid movements and other non-governmental organizations to help the United Nations information campaign against apartheid.

The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Special Committee on Apartheid, to arrange for the preparation of special studies and papers on the evils of apartheid and, through the Office of Public Information and the Unit on Apartheid of the Secretariat to increase the dissemination of such information in various languages.

Also, the Assembly welcomed the readiness of OAU to undertake, in co-operation with the United Nations, weekly broadcasts of United Nations material to southern Africa. It asked the Secretary-General to take appropriate steps to continue to make available an adequate number of radio programmes and material to Member States willing to provide facilities on their national radio stations for broadcasts to southern Africa of programmes on international concern over apartheid and on the objectives of the United Nations.

Further, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General, in the light of the General Assembly resolution of 20 November 1969,<sup>16</sup> to continue consultations with OAU on the means of collaboration between that organization and the United Nations in order to intensify the international information campaign against apartheid and asked him to report in 1971 on all aspects of the matter, including any required technical co-operation and financial arrangements.

The Secretary-General was authorized to encourage and assist anti-apartheid movements, United Nations associations and other non-governmental organizations to publish and disseminate widely information provided by the United Nations on the evils and dangers of apartheid.

Still another resolution was concerned with aspects of the international campaign against apartheid during the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1971).

By this resolution, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to take appropriate steps, in consultation with the Special Committee on Apartheid, to promote the widest possible campaign against apartheid during the International Year.

The Assembly asked and authorized the Special Committee, within the budgetary provision to be made for this purpose at the current session: (a) to hold consultations with experts and representatives of the oppressed people of South Africa as well as anti-apartheid movements; (b) to send a mission from United Nations Headquarters to consult with specialized agencies, regional organizations and non-governmental organizations on means to promote further concerted international action against apartheid; (c) to send representatives to the United Nations seminar at Yaounde (Cameroon), as well as to international conferences on apartheid during the International Year.

The Assembly invited all national and regional trade-union organizations to observe the International Year by organizing seminars, symposia, conferences and other activities against apartheid and to report to the Special Committee on ways and means by which the international campaign against apartheid could best be promoted through the trade-union movement.

The Assembly also asked the Special Committee, in consultation with OAU and the International Labour Organisation, to report in 1971 on the possibility of holding an international conference of trade unions in 1972 and on any alternative proposals from principal trade-union federations for promoting concerted action against apartheid by the trade-union movement at the national and international levels.

Finally, it urged all States and organizations to observe the International Year in solidarity with the legitimate struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa.

This resolution was eventually sponsored by Afghanistan, Algeria, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Ceylon, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritius, Morocco, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, the Philippines, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Syria, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The Assembly adopted the text on 8 December 1970, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, by 106 votes to 2, with 7 abstentions, as resolution 2671 D (XXV). It was approved by the Special Political Committee on 4 November by 94 votes to 1, with 8 abstentions.

By a final resolution on the subject of apartheid policies, also adopted on 8 December 1970, the Assembly—in the preambular parts—expressed grave concern over the aggravation of the situation in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole because of the inhuman and aggressive policies of apartheid pursued by the Government of South Africa in defiance of United Nations resolutions, in violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in contravention of its obligations under the United Nations Charter.

The Assembly expressed deep concern over the increasing military build-up of South Africa, which constituted a grave danger to the cause of peace and security on the African continent, and it noted with indignation the continued persecution and torture of African patriots and other opponents of apartheid by the Government of South Africa under the Terrorism Act of 1967 and other ruthless repressive legislation.

Also, the Assembly was convinced that the establishment of Bantustans in South Africa was designed to deprive the majority of the people of their inalienable rights and to destroy the unity of the South African people.

It noted that a number of States continued to maintain official relations with the South African regime despite United Nations resolutions and expressed its recognition that the adoption by the Security Council of appropriate measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter<sup>17</sup> and their full implementation were essential.

By the operative parts of the resolution, the General Assembly declared that the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa were a negation of the United Nations Charter and constituted a crime against humanity. It reaffirmed its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of South Africa to eliminate, by all means at their disposal, apartheid and racial discrimination and to attain majority rule in the country as a whole, based on universal suffrage.

The Assembly condemned the establishment by the racist minority Government of South Africa of Bantustans in so-called African reserves as fraudulent, a violation of the principles of self-determination and prejudicial to the territorial integrity of the State and the unity of its people.

It again called upon the South African Government to end all repressive measures against African patriots and other opponents of apartheid, and to liberate all persons imprisoned, interned or subjected to other restriction for their opposition to apartheid.

Also, the Assembly strongly deplored the continued co-operation by certain States and foreign economic interests with South Africa in the military, economic, political and other fields, as such co-operation encouraged the South African Government in the pursuit of its inhuman policies.

It again drew the attention of the Security Council to the grave situation in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole and recommended that the Council resume urgently the consideration of effective measures, in the light of relevant General Assembly resolutions, including measures under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The Assembly urged all States: (a) to terminate diplomatic, consular and other official relations with the South African Government; (b) to terminate all military, economic, technical and other co-operation with South Africa; (c) to end tariff and other preferences to South African exports and facilities for investment in South Africa; and (d) to ensure that companies registered in their countries and their nationals complied with United Nations resolutions on this question.

Further, it requested all States and organizations to suspend cultural, educational, sporting and other exchanges with the racist regime and with organizations or institutions in South Africa which practised apartheid; and it commended the international and national sporting organizations for their contribution to the international campaign against apartheid by their boycott of South African teams selected under apartheid policies.

The Assembly asked the Special Committee on Apartheid to report to it in 1971 on continued collaboration by States with the South African Government, with particular reference to requests it had made on 21 November 1969,<sup>18</sup> namely: (a) to desist from collaborating with the Government of South Africa by taking steps to prohibit financial and economic interests under their national jurisdiction from co-operating with the Government of South Africa and companies registered in South Africa; (b) to prohibit airlines and shipping lines registered in their countries from providing services to and from South Africa and to deny all facilities to air flights and shipping services to and from South Africa; (c) to refrain from extending loans, investments and technical assistance to the Government of South Africa and companies registered in South Africa; (d) to take appropriate measures to dissuade the main trading partners of South Africa and economic and financial interests from collaborating with the Government of South Africa and companies registered in South Africa.

The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General to convene, early in 1971, a joint meeting of the Special Committee on Apartheid, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and the United Nations Council for Namibia, in order to consider the interrelationship of the problems of southern Africa and propose measures for greater co-ordination and more effective action, so that the three bodies could take the results of the meetings into account in their programmes of work.

Finally it asked the Secretary-General to report to it in 1971 on the implementation of its recommendation to the Security Council and its request to States regarding termination of official and economic relations with South Africa and suspension of cultural, educational and sporting exchanges.

Also, the Secretary-General was asked to report on the requested joint meeting of the bodies concerned with southern Africa.

The text adopted by the General Assembly was recommended to it by the Special Political Committee, which approved it on 24 November 1970 by a roll-call vote of 76 to 5, with 17 abstentions. Prior to voting on the text as a whole, the Special Political Committee took separate roll-call votes on the operative paragraph condemning the establishment of Bantustans and on that asking the Secretary-General to convene a joint meeting of the three organs concerned with the situation in southern Africa in order to consider measures for greater co-ordination. These paragraphs were approved.

The Assembly adopted the text as its resolution 2671 F (XXV), by a recorded vote of 91 to 6, with 16 abstentions.

The sponsors of the resolution were: Afghanistan, Algeria, Bulgaria, Burma, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Hungary, India, Libya, Malaysia, Mali, Mongolia, Morocco, Pakistan, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Syria, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

During the discussion of the text in the Special Political Committee, the representative of Colombia expressed concern about the operative paragraph of the text which would authorize the people of South Africa to use "all means at their disposal" to eliminate apartheid. Nevertheless, Colombia would vote in favour of the resolution as a whole, in order to reaffirm its complete repudiation of apartheid.

Uruguay raised a similar objection to the same provision.

The representative of Sweden, speaking in explanation of abstentions by Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden, expressed gratification that some of the Committee's resolutions had been adopted almost unanimously. He found it particularly encouraging that a wide measure of agreement had been reached on the resolutions concerning the arms embargo and the question of humanitarian aid to southern Africa. The objections of the five Nordic countries related to the paragraphs calling on States to adopt sanctions against South Africa in practically every aspect of international relations and also to the paragraphs endorsing the use of force and violence.

The United Kingdom spokesman said the United Kingdom had voted against the resolution because it considered some of its provisions to be inappropriate, particularly those advocating measures under Chapter VII of the Charter and the appeal for the isolation of South Africa.

Instead of the use of force and the isolation of South Africa, the United Kingdom considered that contacts, dialogue and persuasion had always been an effective means of bringing about lasting changes.

He also made reference to resolutions relating to the policy of apartheid which had been recommended by other Main Committees of the General Assembly and said there was some confusion with regard to a concerted approach towards eliminating the policy of apartheid.

Other Members, including Canada, Iran, Ireland, Japan, Mexico and Turkey, had reservations on certain provisions of the resolution.

Canada, expressing regret that it had been obliged to abstain in the vote, said it had serious reservations with regard to those paragraphs in which Member States were urged to isolate South Africa. Isolation would strengthen the South African Government in its determination to apply its policy of apartheid, in Canada's view. Also, Canada considered that only the Security Council could determine whether measures provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter should be applied. While Canada supported various practical, peaceful measures to combat apartheid, it was unable to support measures that might lead to an armed conflict in South Africa and southern Africa.

An additional draft resolution, concerning the implications of the crime of apartheid in the terms of international law, was introduced in the Special Political Committee. By the operative part of this text the Assembly would have requested the Special Committee on Apartheid to arrange for an expert study to be made on the implications of the policy and practice of apartheid in the terms of international law.

The proposal was sponsored by Burma, Cyprus, Guinea, India, Senegal, Somalia, Southern Yemen, Syria, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The sponsors withdrew the draft text, stating that they did so pending the result of a study of the question of apartheid as a crime against humanity, a study which a group of experts had been requested to carry out by the Commission on Human Rights.

By a decision taken on 8 December 1970 without adoption of a resolution, the Assembly shortened the name of the Special Committee on the Policies of Apartheid of the Government of the Republic of South Africa to "Special Committee on Apartheid." This decision was taken on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, supporting a recommendation of the Special Committee on Apartheid.

OTHER GENERAL ASSEMBLY DECISIONS

The General Assembly, at its twenty-fifth session, adopted a number of other resolutions which referred to apartheid and racial discrimination. These are described below.

DECLARATION ON GRANTING INDEPENDENCE TO COLONIAL COUNTRIES AND PEOPLES

Two resolutions of the Assembly's twenty-fifth session referred to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

One of these was concerned with a programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration. Among the provisions was one whereby the Assembly drew the attention of the Security Council to the need to continue to give special attention to the problems of southern Africa by adopting measures to ensure the full implementation of the General Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960 on the granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples<sup>19</sup> and of its own resolutions, and in particular to give careful consideration to the question of imposing sanctions upon South Africa and Portugal, in view of their refusal to carry out the relevant decisions of the Security Council. Also the Assembly drew the attention of the Council to the need to give urgent consideration to the question of imposing fully and unconditionally, under international supervision, an embargo on arms of all kinds to the Government of South Africa and the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia.

The Assembly also declared that Member States should intensify their efforts to oppose collaboration between the regimes of South Africa and Portugal and the illegal racist regime of Southern Rhodesia and to end the political, military, economic and other forms of aid received by the above-mentioned regimes, which enabled them to persist in their policy of colonial domination.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 2621 (XXV) adopted on 12 October 1970. (For details, see pp. 706-8.)

By the second resolution dealing with the Declaration on the granting of independence, the Assembly reiterated its conviction that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations—including racism, apartheid and activities of foreign economic and other interests which exploited colonial peoples—and the attempts of some colonial powers to suppress national liberation movements by repressive activities against colonial peoples were incompatible with the United Nations Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the granting of independence and posed a threat to international peace and security.

Strongly deploring the attitude of those States which continued to co-operate with the Governments of Portugal and South Africa and with the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia, the Assembly among other things asked all States, as well as the specialized agencies and international institutions, to withhold assistance of any kind from the Governments of Portugal and South Africa and from the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia until they renounced their policy of colonial domination and racial discrimination.

These decisions were contained in resolution 2708 (XXV) adopted on 14 December 1970. (For details, see pp. 709-10.)

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY DECLARATION

On the twenty-fifth anniversary of the coming into force of the United Nations Charter—24 October 1970—the General Assembly adopted a Declaration by which, among other things, it strongly condemned the evil policy of apartheid.

Describing apartheid as a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind and, like nazism, contrary to the principles of the Charter, the Assembly reaffirmed its determination to spare no effort, including support to those who struggled against it, in accordance with the letter and spirit of the Charter, to secure the elimination of apartheid in South Africa. The Assembly also condemned all forms of oppression and tyranny wherever they occurred and racism and the practice of racial discrimination in all its manifestations.

In other provisions of the Declaration, the Assembly referred to serious violations of human rights in several regions of the world and pledged a continuing and determined struggle against all violations of the rights and fundamental freedoms of human beings.

The Assembly's Declaration was set forth in resolution 2627(XXV).

VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly took a series of decisions concerning violations of human rights, with particular reference to the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa. The Assembly took these decisions in adopting a resolution recommended to it by the Economic and Social Council and by its own Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee.

The Assembly reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggles of the peoples of southern Africa to oppose the policies of apartheid, racial discrimination and colonialism and to assert their right to self-determination.

It again condemned any and every practice of torture and ill-treatment of prisoners and detainees in prisons and in police custody in South Africa, and it reaffirmed that the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, of 30 August 1955, applied to all political prisoners or detainees, in prison or in police custody throughout South Africa, Namibia—a territory under direct United Nations responsibility and at present under illegal South African occupation—the rebel United Kingdom colony of Southern Rhodesia and the African territories under Portuguese domination.

Also condemned was the trial of the 22 Africans held under the Suppression of Communism

Act and their subsequent re-arrest under the Terrorism Act of 1967.

Continuing, the Assembly reaffirmed the following, among other things:

(i) The condition of political prisoners in South Africa continued to cause alarm.

(ii) The increasing co-operation between the Government of South Africa and the illegal racist regime in Southern Rhodesia posed a further and continuing threat to the opponents of the two regimes and to captured freedom fighters.

(iii) Sections 10 and 29 of the (South African) General Law Amendment Act, 1969, concerning the Bureau of State Security, not only constituted one of the most sinister pieces of legislation in recent years, but also contributed decisively towards making South Africa a complete police State, and the working of that law was also contrary to article 11, paragraph 1, of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, since it prevented the accused from proving his innocence.<sup>20</sup>

(iv) Many political prisoners and detainees had died in South African prisons during 1969, in conditions which warranted a full inquiry.

(v) James Lenkoe, a political prisoner in South Africa, did not commit suicide as reported, but died as a result of electric shocks administered to various parts of his body.

(vi) The practice of compelling prisoners to testify against their erstwhile comrades was reprehensible.

The Assembly called upon the Government of South Africa to implement the recommendations contained in earlier reports of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts (on the treatment of political prisoners in South Africa) and also to take the following actions: (a) to disband immediately the Bureau of State Security; (b) to discontinue the practice by which political detainees were compelled to testify against their former colleagues; (c) to release immediately and unconditionally the 22 Africans re-arrested on 16 February 1970 under the Terrorism Act; (d) to grant full access at all trials of political opponents of the regime to independent outside observers; and (e) to permit a full and impartial investigation into the deaths of political prisoners and detainees in the gaols as well as to indemnify fully the families of the deceased.

In addition, the Assembly condemned once again the actions of those Governments which continued to maintain diplomatic, economic, cultural and other relations with the Government of South Africa and with the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia in violation of United Nations resolutions. The Governments in question were called upon urgently to consider breaking off such relations.

These Assembly decisions were contained in resolution 2714(XXV).

(For further information., see pp. 514-17.)

ELIMINATION OF DISCRIMINATION

Two General Assembly resolutions dealt with the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination.

The preambular section of the first of these resolutions expressed the Assembly's conviction that apartheid constituted a crime against humanity and its awareness that racism and apartheid continued to be instruments of colonialism, imperialism and economic exploitation and were a total negation of the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter.

Further, expressing alarm that South Africa blatantly continued to pursue its policy of racial discrimination and apartheid in flagrant violation of the purposes and principles of the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and relevant United Nations resolutions, the Assembly considered that the extensive arms build-up of the military forces in southern Africa posed a real threat to the security and sovereignty of independent African States opposed to racial discrimination and to the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Assembly, in the operative part of the resolution, reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of all oppressed peoples everywhere, and in particular those of South Africa, Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and territories under Portuguese colonial domination, to obtain racial equality by all possible means, and it called for increased and continued moral and material support to them.

The Assembly condemned the unholy alliance between South Africa, Portugal and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia designed to suppress the struggle of the peoples of southern Africa against racism, apartheid, economic exploitation and colonial domination. It declared that any State whose official policy or practice was based on racial discrimination, such as apartheid, contravened the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter and should therefore have no place in the United Nations.

Condemning the activities of those States, which by political, economic and military collaboration with the racist regimes of southern Africa enabled and encouraged those regimes in the enforcement and perpetuation of their policy of apartheid and other forms of racial discrimination, the Assembly called upon Governments which continued to maintain official relations with the Government of South Africa and other racist regimes in southern Africa to terminate such relations immediately in accordance with Assembly and Security Council resolutions.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2646(XXV), adopted on 30 November 1970, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Third Committee. (For details, see pp. 506-7.)

The second of the Assembly resolutions on the subject of the elimination of racial discrimination—2647(XXV)—was also adopted on 30 November on the recommendation of the Third Committee.

The Assembly thereby solemnly reiterated its condemnation of all forms of racial discrimination wherever they might occur, and particularly of apartheid, as a flagrant contradiction of the spirit and the letter of the United Nations Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It deplored the persistence of such practices.

The Assembly appealed to Governments of countries where forms of racial discrimination persisted and to Governments which officially applied such policies as apartheid to take without delay all measures necessary to end them and to ensure respect for human rights in accordance with the Charter.

A number of other decisions were contained in this resolution. The Assembly, for instance, vehemently affirmed the need for all men to be given an equal chance and to be enabled to live and work together in an atmosphere of mutual trust and tolerance, without discrimination and with full respect for the national and cultural identity of peoples or distinct ethnic groups. It also urged Member States to do their utmost to eliminate racial discrimination in community life and to encourage the development of multiracial activities.

MEASURES TO BE TAKEN AGAINST NAZISM AND RACIAL INTOLERANCE

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly—in a decision concerning measures against nazism and racial intolerance—resolutely condemned nazism, racism, apartheid and other totalitarian and colonial ideologies and practices which were based on terror and racial intolerance. It called on States during 1971, the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, to take all effective measures to combat contemporary manifestations of nazism and other forms of racial intolerance.

This decision was embodied in resolution 2713 (XXV), adopted on the recommendation of the Third Committee.

PUNISHMENT OF WAR CRIMINALS

Another Assembly resolution, dealing with the question of punishment of war criminals and of persons who had committed crimes against humanity, condemned the war crimes and crimes against humanity being committed as a result of aggressive wars and the policies of racism, apartheid and colonialism and called upon the States concerned to bring to trial persons guilty of such crimes.

This Assembly resolution—2712 (XXV)—was adopted on 15 December 1970, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Third Committee.

(For details, see pp. 572-73.)

CO-OPERATION OF SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

One of the General Assembly's decisions on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples was concerned with the cooperation of the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations.

Among the provisions of this decision was one whereby the specialized agencies and the organizations concerned were urged to take steps for full implementation of relevant resolutions relating to assistance to national liberation movements and discontinuance of all collaboration with the Governments of Portugal and South Africa, as well as with the minority regime in Southern Rhodesia.

Also, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in particular the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund, were urged again to take steps to withhold financial, economic, technical and other assistance from the Governments of Portugal and South Africa until they renounced their policies of racial discrimination and colonial domination.

This decision was set forth in resolution 2704 (XXV), adopted on 14 December 1970 on the recommendation of the Assembly's Fourth Committee.

CREDENTIALS

At a plenary meeting of the General Assembly on 23 October 1970, the representative of Somalia stated that Somalia did not recognize the South African delegation as representative of all peoples of South Africa, black and white. Citing rule 29 of the General Assembly's rules of procedure,<sup>21</sup> he challenged the credentials of the South African representatives and moved that the Assembly request its Committee on Credentials to consider as a matter of urgency the credentials of the delegation currently occupying the seat of South Africa and make a special report on the matter by 27 October.

The representative of Nigeria supported the Somali motion to examine the credentials of

<sup>21</sup> Rule 29 of the Assembly's rules of procedure states: "Any representative to whose admission a Member has made objection shall be seated provisionally with the same rights as other representatives, until the Credentials Committee has reported and the General Assembly has given its decision."

the representatives of the apartheid regime, bearing in mind the provisions of Article 4, paragraph 1, of the United Nations Charter.<sup>22</sup>

The President of the Assembly drew attention to rule 80 of the rules of procedure which, among other things, stipulated that copies of proposals should be circulated to all delegations not later than the day preceding the meeting at which action on such a proposal would be sought. To forestall a procedural debate, he suggested that the Under-Secretary-General for General Assembly Affairs be requested to draw the attention of the Credentials Committee to the motion. This was agreed.

At the Credentials Committee meeting on 26 October 1970, the Under-Secretary-General for General Assembly Affairs and Legal Counsel referred, inter alia, to the oral motion made by Somalia and Nigeria. The USSR representative, supporting the Somali view, suggested that the Credentials Committee should place on record in its report to the Assembly that it had been informed of the motion challenging South Africa's credentials. The representative of Poland associated himself with this position.

The representative of Greece observed that the Assembly had expressed the wish that the Committee look into the matter of the South African delegation's credentials as a matter of urgency, and that had been done. He added that the Committee had earlier approved all credentials properly submitted, including those of the representatives of South Africa.

The Chairman of the Credentials Committee said that by holding its meeting that day, the Committee had met the request made in the Somali proposal and had accordingly fulfilled its mandate. He suggested that the Committee's report to the Assembly should include reference to the fact that the Committee had been apprised of the Somali proposal and should also refer to the support that proposal had received from other Members.

The Chairman further proposed that the Committee should recommend to the General Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution approving the first report of the Credentials Committee. The Chairman's proposal was approved by 6 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions.

At a plenary meeting of the Assembly on 11

November 1970, an amendment to the draft resolution recommended by the Credentials Committee was proposed by 10 Members: Cameroon, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ghana, Guinea, Mauritania, Nigeria, the People's Republic of the Congo, Senegal, Somalia and the United Arab Republic. By this amendment, the General Assembly would approve the first report of the Credentials Committee, "except with regard to the credentials of the representatives of the Government of South Africa."

The Assembly also had before it a statement by the United Nations Legal Counsel on the scope of "credentials" in rule 27 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly.<sup>23</sup> This statement was submitted at the request of the President of the General Assembly.

Defining General Assembly credentials, the Legal Counsel pointed out that, unlike the acceptance of credentials in bilateral relations, the question of recognition of a Government of a Member State was not involved and substantial issues concerning the status of Governments did not arise, with the exception of certain instances involving rival claimants.

Also, regarding questions raised in the past with respect to the credentials of the representatives of South Africa and Hungary, where there was no rival claimant, the representatives were not precluded from participation in meetings and the General Assembly had decided to take no action on the credentials of those representatives.

Should the Assembly, where there is no question of rival claimants, reject credentials satisfying the requirements of rule 27 for the purpose of excluding a Member State from participating in the meetings, the Legal Counsel went on to state, this would have the effect of suspending a Member State from the exercise of rights and privileges of membership in a manner not foreseen by the Charter.

<sup>22</sup> Article 4, paragraph 1 of the Charter states: "Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations."

<sup>23</sup> Rule 27 of the Assembly's rules of procedure states: "The credentials of representatives and the names of members of a delegation shall be submitted to the Secretary-General if possible not less than one week before the date fixed for the opening of the session. The credentials shall be issued either by the Head of the State or Government or by the Minister for Foreign Affairs."

After recalling Article 5 of the Charter, which set out requirements on action to suspend a Member State from the rights and privileges of membership, the Legal Counsel held that participation in Assembly meetings was quite clearly one of the important rights and privileges of membership and that suspension of this right through the rejection of credentials would not satisfy the requirements of Article 5 and would therefore be contrary to the Charter.<sup>24</sup>

The President of the General Assembly, in replying to a question by the representative of Saudi Arabia, stated that a vote in favour of the 10-power amendment would mean a very strong condemnation of the policies pursued by the Government of South Africa, and constitute a very solemn warning to that Government. The amendment did not seem to him to mean that the South African delegation would be unseated or that it could not continue to sit in the Assembly. He added that as he understood it, the adoption of the amendment would not affect the rights and privileges of membership of South Africa.

A number of representatives, among them those of Cameroon, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Mauritania, Nigeria, the People's Republic of the Congo, Somalia, Syria, Yugoslavia and Zambia, spoke in support of the amendment. They contended that by its illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as its continued adherence to and enforcement of apartheid in South Africa, the white minority Government of South Africa had not only frustrated the work of the United Nations but had also shown that it was unwilling to and indeed incapable of fulfilling its obligations under the Charter.

On the other hand, Australia, Canada, France, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela, among others, maintained that the question at issue (with respect to credentials) was whether or not the requirements under rule 27 of the Assembly's rules of procedure had been fulfilled. They expressed the belief that the consideration of credentials was strictly a technical and legal matter. They also felt that if the credentials of delegations were challenged on the grounds that some Member States disapproved of the domestic policies of other States they would create precedents which could jeopardize the existence of the United Nations.

On 13 November, the representative of Saudi Arabia submitted a sub-amendment. By the sub-amendment, as orally revised, the Assembly would note that notwithstanding the authenticity of the signature appended to the credentials of the representatives of the Government of South Africa, the authorities of South Africa who issued those credentials did not represent a large segment of the population of South Africa which the said authorities claimed to represent.

The Assembly rejected a request that the Saudi Arabian amendment be voted upon first and it then approved the 10-power amendment by a roll-call vote of 60 to 42, with 12 abstentions. The Saudi Arabian text was then withdrawn.

The text proposed by the Credentials Committee, as amended, was then adopted by the Assembly by 71 votes to 2, with 45 abstentions as resolution 2636(XXV).

The Assembly thereby approved the first report of the Credentials Committee, except with regard to the credentials of the representatives of the Government of South Africa.

EDUCATION AND TRAINING ABROAD OF SOUTH AFRICANS

During 1970, a total of 179 South African students were studying abroad in 22 countries on scholarships granted under the consolidated United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, established by the General Assembly in 1967.<sup>25</sup>

Applications received from South Africans during the period 1 October 1969 to 31 October 1970 totalled 178. Forty-nine new awards were granted and 130 were extended.

The Security Council,

Having considered the question of race conflict in South Africa resulting from the policies of apartheid of the Government of the Republic of South Africa, as submitted by forty Member States,

Reiterating its condemnation of the evil and abhorrent policies of apartheid and the measures being taken by the Government of South Africa to enforce and extend those policies beyond its borders,

Recognizing the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa in pursuance of their human and political rights as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Gravely concerned by the persistent refusal of the Government of South Africa to abandon its racist policies and to abide by the resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly on this question and others relating to southern Africa,

Gravely concerned by the situation arising from violations of the arms embargo called for in its resolutions 181(1963) of 7 August 1963, 182(1963) of 4 December 1963 and 191(1964) of 18 June 1964,

Convinced of the need to strengthen the arms embargo called for in the above resolutions,

Convinced further that the situation resulting from the continued application of the policies of apartheid and the constant build-up of the South African military and police forces, made possible by the continued acquisition of arms, military vehicles and other equipment and of spare parts for military equipment from a number of Member States and by local manufacture of arms and ammunition under licences granted by some Member States, constitutes a potential threat to international peace and security,

Recognizing that the extensive arms build-up of the military forces of South Africa poses a real threat to the security and sovereignty of independent African States opposed to the racial policies of the Government of South Africa, in particular the neighbouring States,

1. Reiterates its total opposition to the policies of apartheid of the Government of the Republic of South Africa;

2. Reaffirms its resolutions 181(1963), 182(1963) and 191(1964);

3. Condemns the violations of the arms embargo called for in resolutions 181(1963), 182(1963) and 191(1964);

4. Calls upon all States to strengthen the arms embargo

(a) By implementing fully the arms embargo against South Africa unconditionally and without reservations whatsoever;

(b) By withholding the supply of all vehicles and equipment for use of the armed forces and paramilitary organizations of South Africa;

(c) By ceasing the supply of spare parts for all vehicles and military equipment used by the armed forces and paramilitary organizations of South Africa;

(d) By revoking all licences and military patents granted to the South African Government or to South African companies for the manufacture of arms and ammunition, aircraft and naval craft or other military vehicles and by refraining from further granting such licences and patents;

(e) By prohibiting investment in, or technical assistance for, the manufacture of arms and ammunition, aircraft, naval craft, or other military vehicles;

(f) By ceasing provision of military training for members of the South African armed forces and all other forms of military co-operation with South Africa;

(g) By undertaking the appropriate action to give effect to the above measures;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to follow closely the implementation of the present resolution and report to the Security Council from time to time;

6. Calls upon all States to observe strictly the arms embargo against South Africa and to assist effectively in the implementation of the present resolution.

The General Assembly,

Convinced of the importance of keeping world public opinion fully informed of the evils and dangers of apartheid in South Africa, and of United Nations efforts to secure the elimination of this policy,

Considering the contribution that specialized agencies, regional organizations, Member States and non-governmental organizations can make in this respect,

Taking note of the relevant recommendations contained in the report of the Special Committee on Apartheid,

The General Assembly,

Noting with grave concern that the racist Government of South Africa has intensified its inhuman and aggressive policies of apartheid,

Recognizing the need for the implementation of more effective measures to secure the speedy elimination of apartheid in South Africa,

Noting that the year 1971 has been proclaimed the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Recognizing further the valuable role which non-governmental organizations can play in the international campaign against apartheid,

Believing that it would be desirable to hold an international conference of trade unions to promote concerted action by trade unions against apartheid,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate steps, in consultation with the Special Committee on Apartheid, to promote the widest possible campaign against apartheid during the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

2. Requests and authorizes the Special Committee, within the budgetary provision to be made for this purpose at the present session:

(a) To hold consultations with experts and representatives of the oppressed people of South Africa, as well as anti-apartheid movements;

(b) To send a mission from United Nations Headquarters to consult with the specialized agencies, regional organizations and non-governmental organizations on means to promote further concerted international action against apartheid;

(c) To send representatives to the United Nations seminar at Yaounde, as well as to international conferences on apartheid, during the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

3. Invites all national and regional trade-union organizations to observe the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination by organizing seminars, symposia, conferences and other activities against apartheid and to report to the Special Committee on ways and means by which the international campaign against apartheid can best be promoted through the trade-union movement;

4. Requests the Special Committee, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity and the International Labour Organisation, to report to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session on the possibility of holding an international conference of trade unions in 1972, and on any alternative proposals which it may receive from the principal trade-union federations, for promoting concerted action against apartheid by the trade-union movement at the national and international levels;

5. Urges all States and organizations to observe the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination in solidarity with the legitimate struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions and those of the Security Council on the question of apartheid,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee on Apartheid,

Taking note of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its seventh ordinary session and by the Third Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries on the question of apartheid,

Gravely concerned over the aggravation of the situation in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole, because of the inhuman and aggressive policies of apartheid pursued by the Government of South Africa in defiance of United Nations resolutions, in violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in contravention of its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Expressing deep concern over the increasing military build-up of South Africa, which constitutes a grave danger to the cause of peace and security on the African continent,

Noting with indignation the continued persecution and torture of African patriots and other opponents of apartheid by the Government of South Africa under the Terrorism Act of 1967 and other ruthless repressive legislation,

Convinced that the establishment of "Bantustans" in South Africa is designed to deprive the majority of the people of their inalienable rights and to destroy the unity of the South African people,

Noting that, as reported by the Special Committee, a number of States continue to maintain diplomatic, consular and other official relations with the South African regime despite United Nations resolutions,

Recognizing that the adoption by the Security Council of appropriate measures under Chapter VII of the Charter and their full implementation are essential,

1. Declares that the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa are a negation of the Charter of the United Nations and constitute a crime against humanity;

2. Reaffirms its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of South Africa to eliminate, by all means at their disposal, apartheid and racial discrimination and to attain majority rule in the country as a whole, based on universal suffrage;

3. Condemns the establishment by the racist minority Government of South Africa of "Bantustans" in so-called African reserves as fraudulent, a violation of the principle of self-determination and prejudicial to the territorial integrity of the State and the unity of its people;

4. Again calls upon the Government of South Africa to end all repressive measures against African patriots and other opponents of apartheid and to liberate all persons imprisoned, interned or subjected to other restrictions for their opposition to apartheid;

5. Strongly deplores the continued co-operation by certain States and foreign economic interests with South Africa in the military, economic, political and other fields, as such co-operation encourages the Government of South Africa in the pursuit of its inhuman policies;

6. Again draws the attention of the Security Council to the grave situation in South Africa and in southern Africa as a whole and recommends that the Council resume urgently the consideration of effective measures, in the light of relevant General Assembly resolutions, including those under Chapter VII of the Charter;

7. Urges all States:

(a) To terminate diplomatic, consular and other official relations with the Government of South Africa;

(b) To terminate all military, economic, technical and other co-operation with South Africa;

(c) To end tariff and other preferences to South African exports and facilities for investment in South Africa;

(d) To ensure that companies registered in their countries and their nationals comply with the United Nations resolutions on this question;

8. Requests all States and organizations to suspend cultural, educational, sporting and other exchanges with the racist regime and with organizations or institutions in South Africa which practise apartheid'.

9. Commends the international and national sporting organizations for their contribution to the international campaign against apartheid by their boycott of South African teams selected under apartheid policies;

10. Requests the Special Committee on Apartheid to prepare reports for the General Assembly, at its twenty-sixth session, on continued collaboration by States with the Government of South Africa, with particular reference to the requests contained in paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 2506 B (XXIV) of 21 November 1969, namely:

(a) To desist from collaborating with the Government of South Africa, by taking steps to prohibit financial and economic interests under their national jurisdiction from co-operating with the Government of South Africa and companies registered in South Africa;

(b) To prohibit airlines and shipping lines registered in their countries from providing services to and from South Africa and to deny all facilities to air flights and shipping services to and from South Africa;

(c) To refrain from extending loans, investments and technical assistance to the Government of South Africa and companies registered in South Africa;

(d) To take appropriate measures to dissuade the main trading partners of South Africa and economic and financial interests from collaborating with the Government of South Africa and companies registered in South Africa;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to convene, early in 1971, a joint meeting of the Special Committee on Apartheid, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the United Nations Council for Namibia, in order to consider the interrelationships of the problems of southern Africa and to propose measures for greater co-ordination and more effective action, so that the three organs can take the results of the meeting into account in their programmes of work;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session on the implementation of paragraphs 6, 7, 8 and 11 above.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

REPORTS OF SECRETARY-GENERAL AND COMMITTEE OF TRUSTEES

On 13 October 1970, the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa stated in a report to the General Assembly that in the year since the last report, the Fund had received contributions from 21 Governments totalling $218,232. Several pledges were outstanding. Four grants totalling $216,000 were made during the period under review.

A register was opened at United Nations Headquarters on the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (21 March) for the receipt of contributions from the public for the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa and the Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa. This action had been recommended by the Commission on Human Rights. Including the contributions to this register, the total of contributions to the Trust Fund since its inception was $1,081,720, and the total of grants made from it, $1,000,400.

The Committee of Trustees noted that the financial requirements of voluntary organizations had continued to increase because of the continued discriminatory and repressive actions of the South African Government, notably the persecution of persons under the Terrorism Act of 1967, and it hoped that more generous contributions would be forthcoming.

The Committee suggested that Member States and organizations should consider making annual special contributions on the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and also and especially during 1971—the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

The Committee called for continued dissemination of information on the repression of opponents of apartheid by the South African Government and the increasing hardships faced by victims of the repression and their families. It felt that this would encourage organizations and individuals to contribute.

A second report by the Secretary-General to the 1970 session of the General Assembly dealt with the question of enlarging the scope of the Trust Fund. On 11 December 1969, the Assembly had asked the Secretary-General to study the question of enlarging the scope of the Trust Fund to cover persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia and also those victims of Portuguese colonial practices in Africa.<sup>26</sup>

In his report, the Secretary-General stated that he and the Committee of Trustees shared the view that contributions to the Trust Fund had not been adequate to cover increasing need in South Africa; enlargement of the scope of the Trust Fund might thus oblige the Committee to reduce the level of grants for victims of apartheid in South Africa.

In view of this, it was suggested that the Assembly might authorize the Committee of Trustees to decide on grants to voluntary organizations aiding such persons and their families in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia, to the extent that additional voluntary contributions were received for this purpose.

With regard to victims of Portuguese colonial practices, the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees noted that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees was already engaged in promoting assistance for the large number of refugees from Portuguese colonial territories and that provision for other pressing needs in those territories was under consideration by competent organs of the United Nations and the specialized agencies concerned. It therefore seemed neither practicable nor desirable to expand the scope of the Trust Fund with respect to those territories. Instead, new appeals should be made for more generous contributions to the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The report of the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees was discussed in 1970 mainly in the General Assembly's Special Political Committee. The Acting Chairman of the Committee of Trustees told the Special Political Committee that during the past year the cumulative total of contributions to the Trust Fund and of grants made had exceeded $1 million. Those contributions and grants represented international condemnation of the ruthless actions of the South African Government against opponents of apartheid, as well as world-wide sympathy for its victims and their families.

The Acting Chairman said that repression in South Africa had been intensified during the five years of the Trust Fund's existence, and he cited the case of 22 Africans, including Mrs. Winnie Mandela, who had been detained incommunicado for long periods in 1969 under the Terrorism Act. Even though the charges against these persons had been dismissed in February 1970, the police had immediately rearrested the defendants in court and again detained them in solitary confinement. It was after mass protests by lawyers, professors and students in both South Africa and abroad that the Government charged 19 of them, together with another prisoner, Benjamin Ramotse, who had been in detention for two years. The Courts had acquitted the 19 once again, but sentenced Mr. Ramotse to 15 years imprisonment. After the court decision, the Government had arbitrarily proceeded to issue banning orders against those who had been acquitted, prohibiting them from attending meetings and subjecting them to other restrictions.

It was in situations of that nature, the Acting Chairman said, that the Trust Fund endeavoured to help organizations to provide a minimum of relief to the victims of such inhuman treatment. The Committee of Trustees had taken every possible precaution to see that the grants from the Fund were used only for the humanitarian purposes of the Fund.

Increasing demands for humanitarian assistance had outpaced contributions to the Fund, leaving it with no reserve for emergencies. The Acting Chairman therefore appealed urgently to all Members for increased contributions, especially during 1971.

Drawing attention to the Secretary-General's report on the question of enlarging the scope of the Trust Fund, he stated that the Committee of Trustees would have great misgivings about that proposed measure unless additional contributions were forthcoming, since such an expansion of the terms of reference of the Fund might otherwise lead to a reduction in assistance to South Africans.

On 8 December 1970, the General Assembly decided to authorize the Committee of Trustees to decide on grants from the Trust Fund to voluntary organizations engaged in providing relief and assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in Namibia and Southern Rhodesia and to their families, to the extent that additional voluntary contributions were received for that purpose.

The Assembly appealed for generous direct contributions to voluntary organizations engaged in providing relief and assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia and again appealed to all States, organizations and individuals for generous contributions to the Trust Fund in order to enable it to meet the increasing needs.

The Assembly's decisions on this matter were embodied in resolution 2671 E (XXV) adopted by 111 votes to 2, with 1 abstention. The text was adopted on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, which approved it on 4 November 1970, by 97 votes to 1. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The following 20 States sponsored the resolution in the Special Political Committee: Cameroon, Denmark, Ethiopia, Finland, Ghana, Guinea, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iran, Mali, Morocco, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Senegal, Somalia, Sweden, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

THE SITUATION IN SOUTHERN RHODESIA

During 1970, the situation in Southern Rhodesia continued to receive the consideration of United Nations bodies, including the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as the Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the (1960) Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

These bodies were concerned with bringing to an end the situation in Southern Rhodesia created by the white minority regime of Ian Smith—which had unilaterally declared its independence from the United Kingdom in 1965 and, early in March 1970, had declared itself a republic—and with enabling the African people of the territory to exercise their basic human rights, in particular their inalienable right to freedom and independence in accordance with the 1960 Declaration on granting independence.<sup>27</sup>

At meetings in March 1970, the Security Council failed to adopt two resolutions on the question—one put forward by the United Kingdom and the other by five African and Asian States—and then adopted a Finnish proposal by which, among other things, it "condemned the illegal proclamation of republican status" of the territory by the illegal regime and decided that Member States should refrain from recognizing the illegal regime or rendering any assistance to it. The Council also reaffirmed its previous decisions calling for sanctions against the illegal regime.

On 17 November 1970, the Security Council adopted another resolution on the question whereby, among other things, it called upon the United Kingdom, as the administering power, to take urgent and effective measures to bring to an end the illegal rebellion in Southern Rhodesia and enable the people to exercise their right to self-determination. It decided that the sanctions against the territory would remain in force, deplored the attitude of States which persisted in giving assistance to the illegal regime and urged all States not to grant any form of recognition to it.

The General Assembly's Special Committee on implementation of the Declaration on granting independence to colonial countries and peoples adopted a consensus on 9 March 1970 by which, among other things, it strongly condemned the purported assumption of republican status and other illegal acts by the racist minority regime. The Special Committee also adopted a resolution on the question of Southern Rhodesia later in 1970.

The Commission on Human Rights, in a consensus adopted on 3 March 1970, also condemned the establishment of a republic by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, regarding such an act as being fraught with serious danger to the existence of the human rights of the vast majority of the territory's population.

At its twenty-fifth session, later in 1970, the General Assembly on 3 December adopted a resolution by which, among other things, it declared illegal all measures taken by the racist minority regime, including the purported assumption of republican status; condemned the failure of the United Kingdom to take effective measures to bring down the illegal regime and to transfer power to the people of Zimbabwe [Southern Rhodesia] on the basis of majority rule; and drew the Security Council's attention to the need for widening the scope of the sanctions against the illegal regime and imposing sanctions against South Africa and Portugal, whose Governments had refused to carry out the mandatory decisions of the Security Council.

Details of these decisions and other related matters are described in the sections below.

CONSIDERATION BY SECURITY COUNCIL (3-18 MARCH 1970)

On 3 March 1970, the United Kingdom informed the President of the Security Council that "the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia has purported to declare the dissolution of its illegal parliament and the assumption of republican status." That declaration, like the 1965 declaration of independence<sup>28</sup> and subsequent acts, was illegal, the United Kingdom said, and it requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the question.

When the Security Council met on the matter on 6 March, it had before it a draft resolution submitted by the United Kingdom by which the Council would, after recalling its resolution of 12 November 1965,<sup>29</sup> condemn the illegal acts of the racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia since 1965, including the purported assumption of republican status, and again require all States not to recognize that illegal regime and to refrain from any assistance to it.

Opening the Council's debate, the United Kingdom representative introduced a revised text of his draft resolution according to which the Council, after recalling its previous resolutions on the question, would: (1) condemn the illegal acts of the racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia, including the purported assumption of republican status; and (2) decide, in accordance with Article 41 of the United Nations Charter,<sup>30</sup> that all Member States of the United Nations should refrain from recognizing that illegal regime or from rendering any assistance to it, and urge States not Members of the United Nations, having regard to the principles stated in Article 2 of the Charter,<sup>31</sup> to act accordingly.

The United Kingdom representative then asked the Council to concentrate on a single, immediate purpose—namely, to deny firmly and unanimously, on behalf of the whole world, recognition of the republican status purportedly declared by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia. That regime, he said, wanted capital, trade, immigrants. It wanted to achieve a weakening of international will to maintain and enforce the economic sanctions against it. Most of all, it wanted recognition. Members of the Council, he added, should act together without delay by adopting the United Kingdom's draft resolution.

At the request of Zambia, the Council adjourned until 11 March. It then took up a letter dated 6 March from the representatives of 39 African Member States also requesting an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the deteriorating situation in Southern Rhodesia resulting from the proclamation of a so-called republic by the illegal racist minority regime. During the discussion, Algeria, India, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Senegal and Yugoslavia were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The Foreign Minister of Zambia—speaking, he said, on behalf of the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity (OAU)—expressed disappointment at what he called the extremely limited nature of the action requested by the United Kingdom; the African people were not interested in merely condemning the declara-

<sup>30</sup> Article 41 of the Charter states: "The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and it may call upon the Members of the United Nations to apply such measures. These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations."

"The Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles.

"1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members.

"2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.

"3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

"4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

"5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

"6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

"7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII."

tion of republican status. The crux of the matter was the rebellion itself, he said, and he appealed to the United Kingdom, if it genuinely shared with the African countries the goal of bringing down the rebel regime, to hold serious discussions with them about the future of Zimbabwe. The African countries believed that the United Kingdom was eminently capable of adopting more effective measures to achieve that goal, including the use of force. The United Kingdom, he said, had a duty to explain its real intentions on the question, as its policy appeared to be one of duplicity and prevarication.

The Zambian Foreign Minister said that at the direction of OAU, he was specifically requesting the Council to condemn the illegal regime and deny it recognition; to require all States, the specialized agencies and other organs of the United Nations to ensure that no act was performed by anyone or any institution whatsoever on behalf of that regime; and to require all States, in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter,<sup>32</sup> to sever immediately all consular, economic, military or any other relations with the illegal regime, including all means of communication.

The United Kingdom stressed it had never maintained that the matter before the Council was solely a question of recognition; the United Kingdom did not retract from any of the Council's decisions on the question, which should be fully and energetically implemented, its representative said.

During the discussion, the other members of the Council and the representatives invited to participate in the debate agreed that recognition ought to be denied to the regime, and that the widest possible support ought to be given to any measures the Council might decide to take. However, several speakers who did not regard the United Kingdom draft resolution as going far enough also considered that more drastic measures would have to be taken against South Africa and Portugal because of the intransigence of those two countries in blatantly and openly defying the sanctions against Southern Rhodesia.

The African and Asian representatives in particular felt strongly that the situation had reached a stage where only the use of force which they said the United Kingdom had frequently employed in many of its colonial territories, could dislodge the illegal regime.

The USSR representative, describing the failure of the sanctions policy, quoted figures showing a high level of investment by Western countries in Southern Rhodesia and South Africa and of trade with South Africa.

On 12 March, Burundi, Nepal, Sierra Leone, Syria and Zambia submitted a draft resolution which was subsequently amended.

By the preambular part of this text, the Council would: reaffirm its previous resolutions on the question of Southern Rhodesia, and in particular its resolution of 16 December 1966,<sup>33</sup> by which it determined that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security; and express concern that the situation in Southern Rhodesia had deteriorated further as a result of the proclamation of a so-called republic and that the measures so far taken had proved inadequate to resolve the situation.

The Council would further express concern that the Council's decisions had not been fully complied with by all States, and note that South Africa and Portugal, in particular, in contravention of Article 25 of the Charter,<sup>34</sup> had not only continued to trade with the illegal racist minority regime—contrary to the terms of the relevant Council resolutions—but had in fact given active assistance to that regime, enabling it to counter the effects of measures decided upon by the Council.

By this text, the Council would also note in particular the continued presence of South African forces in the territory of Zimbabwe. It would affirm the primary responsibility of the United Kingdom to enable the people of Zimbabwe to exercise their right of self-determination and independence and reaffirm their inalienable right to freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle for that right.

Stating that it was acting under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, the Security Council would, by the provisions of the operative part of the text:

(1) condemn the proclamation of a so-called republic in Zimbabwe by the racist minority regime in Salisbury and declare null and void any form of government not based on the principle of majority rule;

(2) decide that all States Members of the United Nations should refrain from recognizing that illegal regime and urge non-Member States to act accordingly;

(3) call upon all States to take measures as appropriate, at the national level, to ensure that any act performed by officials and institutions of the illegal regime or by persons and organizations purporting to act for it or in its behalf should not be accorded any official recognition, including judicial notice, by the competent organs of their State;

(4) emphasize the responsibility of the United Kingdom, as the administering power, with regard to the situation prevailing in Southern Rhodesia;

(5) condemn the persistent refusal of the United Kingdom to use force to end the rebellion in Southern Rhodesia and enable the people of Zimbabwe to exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

(6) decide that all States should immediately sever diplomatic, consular, economic, military and other relations with the illegal racist minority regime, including railway, maritime, air transport, postal, telegraphic and wireless communications and other means of communication;

(7) request the United Kingdom to rescind or withdraw any existing agreements on the basis of which foreign consular, trade and other representation might at that time be maintained in or with Southern Rhodesia;

(8) condemn the assistance given by Portugal, South Africa and other imperialist powers to the illegal regime in defiance of Security Council resolutions and demand the immediate withdrawal of South African troops from the territory;

(9) decide that Member States and members of the specialized agencies should apply against South Africa and Portugal the measures set out in the Council's resolution of 29 May 1968<sup>35</sup> and in this resolution;

(10) call upon all Member States and members of the specialized agencies to carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with their obligations under the Charter;

(11) call upon all Member States, and in particular those with primary responsibility under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security, to assist effectively in the implementation of the measures called for by the resolution;

(12) urge all States to render moral and material assistance to the national liberation movements of Zimbabwe to enable them to regain their freedom and independence;

(13) ask all States to report to the Secretary-General on the measures taken to implement the resolution; and

(14) ask the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the progress made in implementing the resolution.

Introducing the five-power resolution, the Syrian representative said that its sponsors still believed in the ability of the United Kingdom to fulfil its obligations with regard to Southern Rhodesia, given the material and moral backing of the United Nations. They urged the Council, nevertheless, to adopt the draft resolution, which would ensure the end of the racist regime and grant to all the people of Zimbabwe their right to an independent government based on majority rule and equal citizenship among its people.

Discussion of the draft resolutions submitted by the United Kingdom and by the five powers continued during meetings of the Security Council on 13 and 17 March.

The United States representative doubted the wisdom of extending sanctions to South Africa and Portugal or of imposing a communications ban against Southern Rhodesia—a move inconsistent with his country's long tradition of freedom of movement and speech. His country would not contemplate leaving its citizens stranded anywhere in the world without the means of travel or communication. Such unrealistic courses of action, he said, would over-extend the capacity of the United Nations and merely demonstrate its limitations.

The spokesman for the United Kingdom reaffirmed his Government's position against the use of force and the extension of sanctions. The United Kingdom, he said, was no longer in a position to use force in a non-self-governing territory where there had not been a British army or administrative official since 1923. Nor could the United Kingdom go beyond the arms embargo already imposed against South Africa, because a full campaign of economic sanctions backed by a blockade would require resources beyond the capacity of the United Nations and would mean economic suicide for the United Kingdom.

The representative of Finland urged the Council to respond to the appeal made by the Foreign Minister of Zambia by taking further measures to increase international pressure on the illegal regime. He pointed out, however, that neither of the draft resolutions before the Council appeared to ensure the unanimity necessary to make the pressure more effective. Consequently, he put forward certain suggestions. These were later incorporated in a draft resolution (see below).

Before proceeding to a vote, on 17 March, the Council rejected two requests for adjournment by the United Kingdom and the United States, respectively. The Council then voted on the draft resolutions submitted by the United Kingdom and by the five powers. The United Kingdom draft received 5 votes in favour, 0 against, with 10 abstentions, and was not adopted, having failed to receive the required majority.

Before the vote on the five-power draft, Spain asked for separate votes on the eighth operative paragraph—by which the Council would condemn the assistance given by Portugal, South Africa and other imperialist powers to the illegal regime and demand the immediate withdrawal of South African troops from the territory—and on the ninth operative paragraph—by which the Council would decide that the sanctions provided for in this resolution and in the Council's resolution of 29 May 1968<sup>36</sup> should also be applied against South Africa and Portugal. Each paragraph received 7 votes in favour to 0 against, with 8 abstentions, and were thus not adopted, having failed to obtain the required majority.

The vote on the remainder of the five-power draft resolution as a whole was 9 in favour, 2 against (United Kingdom, United States), with 4 abstentions, and was not adopted, owing to the negative votes of two permanent members of the Council.

The United Kingdom representative expressed regret that the Council had been pressed to vote at once rather than making a further effort to find common ground.

The sponsors of the five-power draft rejected that view and said they had tried unsuccessfully to obtain the United Kingdom's support for their text, which encompassed the proposals made by the United Kingdom. They also expressed regret that the vetoes cast by the United Kingdom and the United States had defeated the only measures that had a chance of bringing down the rebel regime. Similar views were expressed by Poland and the USSR.

The representative of Finland then formally introduced a draft resolution which the Council considered and decided to vote upon the following day.

By the preambular part of the Finnish text, as later revised, the Security Council would, among other things, reaffirm previous resolutions on the question and would note with grave concern that: (a) the measures so far taken had failed to bring to an end the rebellion in Southern Rhodesia; (b) some States, contrary to Council decisions and their obligations under the Charter, had failed to prevent trade with the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia; (c) Portugal and South Africa had continued to give assistance to the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia, thus diminishing the effects of the measures decided upon by the Security Council; and (d) the situation in Southern Rhodesia continued to deteriorate as a result of the introduction by the illegal regime of new measures, including the purported assumption of republican status, aimed at repressing the African people in violation of the General Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960 (containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples).<sup>37</sup>

The Council would then recognize the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of Southern Rhodesia to secure the enjoyment of their rights as set forth in the Charter and in conformity with the objectives of the Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960,, and would reaffirm that the current situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security.

Stating that it was acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council would then, by the operative parts of the text:

(1) condemn the illegal proclamation of republican status of the territory by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia;

(2) decide that Member States should refrain from recognizing or rendering assistance to that regime;

(3) call upon Member States to take appropriate measures, at the national level, to ensure that any act performed by officials and institutions of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia should not be accorded any recognition, official or otherwise, including judicial notice, by the competent organs of their State;

(4) reaffirm the primary responsibility of the United Kingdom Government for enabling the people of Zimbabwe to exercise their right to self-determination and independence and urge that Government to discharge its responsibility;

(5) condemn all measures of political repression, including arrests, detentions, trials and executions, which violated the fundamental freedoms and rights of the people of Southern Rhodesia;

(6) condemn the policies of South Africa and Portugal, which continued to have political, economic, military and other relations with the illegal regime in violation of the relevant United Nations resolutions;

(7) demand the immediate withdrawal of South African police and armed personnel from the territory of Southern Rhodesia;

(8) call upon Member States to take more stringent measures to prevent any circumvention by their nationals, organizations, companies and other institutions of the decisions taken by the Security Council in its resolutions of 16 December 1966<sup>38</sup> and 29 May 1968;<sup>39</sup>

(9) decide, in accordance with Article 41 of the Charter<sup>40</sup> and in furthering the objective of ending the rebellion, that Member States should: (a) immediately sever all diplomatic, consular, trade, military and other relations with the illegal regime and terminate any representation they might maintain in the territory; and (b) immediately interrupt any existing means of transportation to and from Southern Rhodesia;

(10) ask the United Kingdom, as the administering power, to rescind or withdraw any existing agreements on the basis of which foreign consular, trade and other representation might at present be maintained in or with Southern Rhodesia;

(11) ask Member States to take all possible further action under Article 41 of the Charter to deal with the situation in Southern Rhodesia;

(12) call upon Member States to take appropriate action to suspend any membership or associate membership that the illegal regime had in specialized agencies of the United Nations;

(13) urge member States of any international or regional organizations to suspend the membership of the illegal regime from their respective organizations and to refuse any request for membership from it;

(14) urge Member States to increase moral and material assistance to the people of Southern Rhodesia in their legitimate struggle to achieve freedom and independence;

(15) ask specialized agencies and other international organizations concerned, in consultation with OAU, to give assistance to refugees from Southern Rhodesia and those suffering from oppression by the illegal regime;

(16) ask Member States, the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other international organizations in the United Nations system to make an urgent effort to increase their assistance to Zambia as a matter of priority to help it solve such special economic problems as it might be confronted with arising from the carrying out of Security Council decisions on this question;

(17) call upon Member States, in particular those with primary responsibility under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security, to assist effectively in the implementation of the measures called for by the present resolution;

(18) urge non-Member States to act in accordance with this resolution, having regard to Article 2 of the Charter;<sup>41</sup>

(19) call upon Member States to report to the Secretary-General by 1 June 1970 on measures taken to implement this resolution;

(20) ask the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the progress of the implementation of the resolution, the first report to be made not later than 1 July 1970;

(21) decide that the Committee of the Security Council established in pursuance of its resolution of 29 May 1968 be entrusted with the responsibility of: (a) examining the reports submitted by the Secretary-General; (b) seeking from Member States such further information regarding the effective implementation of the resolution as the Committee might consider necessary for the proper discharge of its duty to report to the Security Council; and (c) studying ways and means by which Member States could carry out more effectively the Security Council's decisions regarding sanctions against the illegal regime and making recommendations to the Council;

(22) ask the United Kingdom to continue to give maximum assistance to the Committee and to provide the Committee with any information it might receive in order that the measures envisaged in this resolution, as well as in the Council's resolutions of 16 December 1966 and 29 May 1968, might be rendered fully effective;

(23) call upon Member States, as well as the specialized agencies, to supply such information as might be sought by the Committee in pursuance of this resolution; and

(24) decide to maintain the question on its agenda for further action as appropriate in the light of developments.

The Council adopted the revised Finnish draft resolution on 18 March by 14 votes to 0, with 1 abstention (Spain), as resolution 277 (1970). (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

CONSIDERATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Southern Rhodesia at meetings held between 6 March and 25 August 1970.

On 6 March, the Special Committee, on a proposal by India, decided as a matter of urgency to request its Chairman to submit a draft consensus dealing with a specific aspect of the question—namely, the intention of the minority regime in Southern Rhodesia to proclaim a republic.

The Special Committee adopted the draft consensus on 9 March. Among other things, by this consensus, it strongly condemned the purported assumption of republican status and other illegal acts by the racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia. While the Special Committee had no doubt whatsoever about the illegality of these acts, it expressed concern at the extraordinarily far-reaching and arbitrary powers which the regime had now arrogated to itself to intensify the oppression of the African majority by the racist minority.

By the consensus, the Special Committee also noted that recent developments had led to a further worsening of the situation in southern Africa, constituting a dangerous threat to international peace and security, and called upon the United Kingdom, as the administering power, to take all necessary measures to put an end to that regime and to restore to the people of Zimbabwe their right to self-determination and independence.

The Special Committee also called on all States to co-operate in bringing the rebellion in Southern Rhodesia to an end by complying fully with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly.

Further, the Special Committee, having regard to the latest developments, requested all States not to extend recognition to, or to entertain diplomatic or other relations with, the illegal regime, and to refrain from any action that would assist or encourage that regime.

The Special Committee went on to state that in view of the further aggravation of the situation—which had previously been determined by the Security Council to be a threat to international peace and security—it felt that the Council should urgently consider taking further appropriate measures under the United Nations Charter to bring the rebellion to an end and to ensure the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

Prior to adoption of the consensus, the representatives of the United Kingdom, the United States, Norway and Italy expressed reservations about the statement in the consensus that the situation in southern Africa constituted a dangerous threat to international peace and security. The Security Council was the body to determine a threat to international peace and security; it had done so with respect to Southern Rhodesia but not with respect to southern Africa as a whole. They also explained that since they had not voted for several resolutions on Southern Rhodesia, they objected to that part of the consensus calling for full compliance with the relevant resolutions adopted on the question by the Security Council and the General Assembly.

The Special Committee decided that the reservations expressed would be reflected in the record of the meeting, and authorized its Chairman to transmit the consensus to the Security Council, which was then discussing the question of Southern Rhodesia.

The Special Committee subsequently considered the question of Southern Rhodesia at meetings held between 14 May and 28 July, and discussed a draft resolution on the question between 20 and 25 August. It had before it several written petitions, as well as the report of the Ad Hoc Group it had established on 21 April 1970.

The Ad Hoc Group visited Africa during May and June to establish contact with representatives of national liberation movements from colonial territories in that continent, in connexion with the Assembly's request (on 4 December 1969<sup>42</sup>) to prepare a programme of action relating to the tenth anniversary of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. Their report included, among other things, the views expressed by the following representatives of the liberation movements from Southern Rhodesia: Charles K. D. Chikerema, G. B. Nyandoro and T. F. Silundika of the Zimbabwe African People's Union (ZAPU); and Henry Hamadziripi and S. V. Mtamhanengwe of the Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU).

The petitioners said that sanctions against Southern Rhodesia could never be effective as they did not include South Africa. The United Kingdom had pressed for sanctions merely to provide a false sense of complacency to well-wishers of the Zimbabwe people.

The petitioners also felt that the United Kingdom had failed to honour its moral responsibilities towards the Zimbabwe people and that, while force must be used to bring down the minority regime, that force should be used by the people of Zimbabwe themselves and not by the United Kingdom.

Members of the Southern Rhodesian liberation movements urged that the Smith regime be isolated in all fields, whether economic, cultural or that of international sports.

All the representatives from liberation movements felt that the United Nations, which had recognized the legitimacy of their struggle, should provide them with direct material assistance.

During the discussion in the Special Committee, many representatives of African and Asian States, in particular those of Afghanistan, Ethiopia, India, Madagascar, Sierra Leone, Syria and the United Republic of Tanzania, considered that the situation in Southern Rhodesia had worsened. Despite the adoption of several resolutions by the General Assembly and the Security Council, the illegal regime in Salisbury had taken steps to entrench itself in power by adopting a new constitution and declaring the country a republic. The sanctions recommended by the United Kingdom and imposed by the United Nations had failed. The United Kingdom must reappraise its policy towards Southern Rhodesia and discharge its obligations towards the people of the territory.

The representative of Yugoslavia expressed similar views and added that the sanctions against Southern Rhodesia were violated not only by South Africa and Portugal—which should bear the consequences—but by certain other countries, with important economic interests in Southern Rhodesia and with clear influence in international relations, which had not taken measures to prevent their citizens from trading with the illegal regime.

The representatives of Bulgaria, Poland and the USSR said the sanctions had failed because South Africa and Portugal had openly defied the United Nations and established broad economic, political and military links with Southern Rhodesia. The United Kingdom and other Western powers did not respect the sanctions, they said. Western monopolies were expanding their activities and reaping fantastic profits from exploiting the Africans in southern Africa.

On 25 August 1970, the Special Committee adopted a resolution on the question of Southern Rhodesia, sponsored by Afghanistan, Ethiopia, India, Iraq, Sierra Leone, Syria, the United Republic of Tanzania and Yugoslavia. The vote was 16 to 2 (United Kingdom, United States), with 2 abstentions (Italy, Norway).

By this, the Special Committee, among other things:

(1) reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to attain that right in conformity with the provisions of the General Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960 (containing the Declaration on granting independence);<sup>43</sup>

(2) condemned the purported assumption of republican status by the illegal racist minority regime and other illegal measures to deprive the people of Zimbabwe of their legitimate rights;

(3) condemned the policies of Governments, particularly the Governments of South Africa and Portugal, which continued to have political, economic, military and other relations with the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia, in defiance of the relevant United Nations resolutions and contrary to their obligations under the Charter;

(4) condemned the continued intervention of South African armed forces in Southern Rh-

desia in violation of the Security Council's resolution of 18 March 1970 (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below for text of resolution 277 (1970));

(5) condemned the failure and refusal of the United Kingdom, as the administering power, to take effective measures to bring down the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia and to transfer power to the people of Zimbabwe on the basis of universal adult suffrage and majority rule, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

(6) called upon the United Kingdom to take effective measures, including the use of force, to put an immediate end to the illegal regime, to transfer all powers to the people of Zimbabwe on the basis of majority rule, and to ensure the immediate release of freedom fighters detained by the illegal regime;

(7) called upon all States, the specialized agencies and other international institutions associated with the United Nations, to extend, with the co-operation of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), all moral and material assistance to the national liberation movement of Zimbabwe;

(8) urged all States to work towards the isolation of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia in all aspects, including the severance of political, economic, military and other relations, as well as of contacts in the fields of culture and sports;

(9) drew the attention of the Security Council to the increasingly dangerous situation in the territory because of the further repressive measures taken by the illegal racist minority regime;

(10) stressed the necessity of extending sanctions to South Africa and Portugal, whose Governments, by refusing to carry out the mandatory decisions of the Security Council, were primarily responsible for the continuance of the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia; and

(11) decided to keep the situation in Southern Rhodesia under review.

Explaining his negative vote, the United Kingdom representative observed that the resolution referred several times to his Government and stated how it should carry out its obligations as administering power. These demands, he said, were all very familiar, as was his Government's position. He reiterated that the United Kingdom was making a further effort to reach a settlement based on five principles it had originally enunciated in 1966—including the principle of unimpeded progress to majority rule—and that any settlement was to be acceptable to the people of Southern Rhodesia as a whole.

The spokesman for the United States said his Government's position was and continued to be that there should be self-determination for all people of all races of Southern Rhodesia. The United States, he said, could not vote for the resolution as it contained unrealistic features that were present in resolutions adopted in the past by the Special Committee and the General Assembly which his Government had not supported then and could not support now.

Norway's representative said his Government stood ready to support any realistic and effective attempt to bring about the downfall of the illegal regime. Norway could not, however, support the call for the use of force by the United Kingdom and had abstained.

The Italian representative said he favoured an early solution of the problem and was ready to support concerted action in the United Nations decided upon by the Security Council. Italy had abstained in this vote, he said, because it could not support the Special Committee's call for the use of force by the United Kingdom.

DECISIONS OF COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS AND ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At its meetings in February and March 1970, the Commission on Human Rights took decisions bearing on the situation in Southern Rhodesia.

On 3 March, the Commission adopted a consensus by which it: (1) condemned the establishment of a "republic" by the illegal, racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia; (2) regarded the proclamation of such a "republic" as fraught with serious danger to the existence of the human rights of the vast majority of the population of Southern Rhodesia; (3) called on the United Kingdom, the administering power, to intervene immediately with a view to establishing constitutionality and to restore to the peoples of Zimbabwe their inalienable human rights; and (4) requested all States to refrain from extending recognition to the illegal regime or establishing any kind of relations with that regime, since such an act would substantially contribute to further entrenching the regime and intensifying its acts of repression.

The consensus was based on a proposal submitted in the Human Rights Commission by the United Arab Republic. Although some Commission members expressed doubts regarding the Commission's competence to consider a question that was under consideration in the Security Council, the consensus was approved on the understanding that the reservations advanced would be reflected in the Commission's records.

In another decision, the Commission approved the text of a resolution on the question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including policies of racial discrimination and segregation and of apartheid, in all countries, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories. This resolution, which included specific provisions concerning Southern Rhodesia, was proposed for adoption by the Economic and Social Council; it set forth the text of a resolution which the Council would ask the General Assembly to adopt.

On 27 May 1970, in adopting resolution 1501(XLVIII), the Economic and Social Council asked the General Assembly to adopt the above-mentioned resolution. (See page 179 for General Assembly action, and pp. 513-21 for further details.)

COMMUNICATIONS AND REPORTS TO SECURITY COUNCIL (MARCH-OCTOBER 1970)

In communications during March and early April 1970, the representatives of Pakistan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the USSR, Romania, Mongolia, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Israel, Haiti, Iraq and Hungary transmitted statements by their Governments or national leaders condemning and refusing to recognize the purported republican status declared by the rebel regime in Southern Rhodesia.

On 17 March, Belgium informed the Secretary-General that following the proclamation of the so-called republic of Rhodesia, Belgium had decided to break off all consular relations with Southern Rhodesia and to close its Honorary Vice-Consulate at Bulawayo.

On 14 April, in connexion with the Security Council's resolution of 18 March 1970 (277 (1970)) (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below for text), the Foreign Minister of Portugal informed the Secretary-General that his Government continued to await clarifications as requested in earlier letters regarding certain matters of a juridical and procedural nature pertaining to earlier resolutions of the Security Council on the question of Southern Rhodesia, from which the recent resolution resulted.<sup>44</sup>

On 28 April, the representative of Botswana informed the Secretary-General of the great strains that would be imposed upon Botswana's economy if it were to implement the Council's resolution of 18 March to the letter. In particular, he said, Botswana was currently negotiating a loan with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development for an infrastructure project in mining development, which would inevitably involve some economic contacts with Southern Rhodesia, especially in the field of transport.

Botswana's representative trusted that the Security Council would again show understanding of the actions of Botswana—a land-locked country whose economy was bound up with that of its neighbours. Botswana, he said, was continuing to carry out the sanctions called for by the Security Council to the limit of its capacity, notwithstanding the adverse effects on its own economic development.

On 15 June 1970, the Committee established in pursuance of Security Council resolution 253 (1968) of 29 May 1968<sup>45</sup> submitted its third report to the Council, covering its work since the submission of its second report on 12 June 1969. The report said that during that period the Committee, following the lines indicated in its second report, had:

(1) examined the reports submitted by the Secretary-General on the implementation of the resolution of 29 May 1968:

(2) considered the information provided by Member States or members of the specialized agencies in response to requests by the Committee made through the Secretary-General concerning: (a) trade of Southern Rhodesia; (b) Southern Rhodesian tobacco held in bond in various countries; (c) tobacco exported from Mozambique; (d) Southern Rhodesian tobacco exported as Malawi tobacco under forged certificate of origin; (e) television material; (f) consular and trade representation in Southern Rhodesia; and (g) airlines operating to and from Southern Rhodesia;

(3) considered the detailed trade statistics of Southern Rhodesia for the first half of 1969, as well as a note submitted by the United Kingdom containing its assessment of the effects of sanctions on the economy of Southern Rhodesia;

(4) devoted considerable attention to investigating a number of specific cases of suspected violations of the sanctions brought to its attention by States; and

(5) considered other relevant information from States concerning their actions on violations of sanctions and other related matters.

In view of the great difficulty faced by Governments in determining the true origin of goods suspected to be of Southern Rhodesian origin, the Committee had approved, on 2 September 1969, a memorandum on the application of sanctions, subsequently submitted at its request by the Secretary-General to Member States or members of the specialized agencies, indicating some points which the customs authorities of importing countries might bear in mind when investigating the origin of suspected goods. The memorandum was reproduced as an annex to the report.

Annexes to the report also included: a note on Southern Rhodesian trade, together with statistical data for 1968 and January to June 1969; and a note by the United Kingdom, dated 2 June 1970, assessing the effects of sanctions on Southern Rhodesia's economy since the illegal declaration of independence, as well as the outlook for 1970.

Other annexes contained information supplied by Governments concerning stocks of Southern Rhodesian tobacco in bond in their countries: tobacco exported from Mozambique;

Southern Rhodesian tobacco imported under false certificate of origin; export of television material to Southern Rhodesia; additional information on the 13 specific cases of suspected violations of the sanctions reported previously by the Committee; and information on 60 new cases brought to the Commission's attention since the submission of its second report.

The Committee reported that it was finding it increasingly difficult to determine precisely the magnitude of Southern Rhodesia's trade, owing to a great disparity between the data submitted by Member States and that released by the illegal regime. There was also difficulty in determining the direction of the trade, owing to the suppression of such information by the illegal regime.

However, based on all the information available to it from all sources, the Committee noted that Southern Rhodesia's export trade in 1968 was practically unchanged from the level of 1967, at $256 million. This was 42 per cent below the level of 1965—the last normal year before the illegal declaration of independence. It was estimated that exports were distributed as follows: to South Africa, $80 million; to other countries, as disclosed by recorded trade statistics, which included Southern Rhodesia's trading partners, $75 million; and to world markets not recorded by the trade statistics and probably under false certificates of origin, $100 million.

Southern Rhodesia's imports in 1968, the Committee reported, amounted to $290 million—an increase of slightly more than 10 per cent over 1967, but a decrease of 13 per cent compared with 1965. These imports were composed of $44 million traced in international trade statistics, while the remainder, which did not figure in recorded statistics, was imported from or through neighbouring countries.

For the period January to June 1969, the Committee's report stated, the data made available by the reporting countries showed imports into those countries from Southern Rhodesia of $25 million, and exports from those countries to Southern Rhodesia of $8 million.

The Committee took note of its additional responsibilities under the Security Council's resolution of 18 March 1970—in particular, that of studying ways and means by which Member States could more effectively carry out Security Council decisions regarding sanctions against the illegal regime and make recommendations to the Council.

Noting that the measures taken by the Council, including the sanctions imposed against Southern Rhodesia, had not been fully effective and had not had the desired results, the Committee agreed upon a number of observations and recommendations, including a plea that, despite the increased number of suspected cases of violations of sanctions brought to its attention, it was nevertheless highly desirable that more Member States should report such cases in detail to the Committee.

The Committee also regretted the lack of co-operation on the part of certain countries. In particular, it noted that South Africa and Portugal were continuing to trade with Southern Rhodesia, thereby considerably reducing the effectiveness of the sanctions. It recommended that the Security Council should again draw the attention of Member States, particularly those two countries, to their obligations under the Charter.

Noting that Southern Rhodesian products found markets in many countries other than South Africa and Portugal, the Committee further stressed the need for more co-operation on the part of the main maritime powers, and said it intended to consider whether the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO) could play a useful role in that regard.

On 1 July 1970, the Secretary-General issued a report containing 61 replies he had received from States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies and from the agencies or other international organizations to his requests for information on implementation of the Security Council's resolution of 18 March 1970 concerning the situation in Southern Rhodesia. An addendum to the report containing 10 additional replies was issued on 1 October.

On 5 October 1970, the representative of Brazil informed the President of the Security Council that, as an additional step taken to comply with relevant Security Council resolutions, the Brazilian Government—in order to prevent the entry into Brazil of any goods of suspected Rhodesian origin—had decided to adopt the exceptional measure of re-establishing the requirement of a certificate of origin for all goods imported from South Africa, Angola and Mozambique.

CONSIDERATION BY SECURITY COUNCIL
(NOVEMBER 1970)

On 6 November 1970, Burundi, Nepal, Sierra Leone, Syria and Zambia requested an early meeting of the Security Council to discuss the question of Southern Rhodesia in the light of what they called disturbing political and economic developments which had taken place in that rebel territory and which required the Council's attention.

The Security Council considered the question at two meetings held on 10 and 17 November 1970.

At its meeting on 10 November, the Council had before it a draft resolution submitted by the same States which had requested the meeting.

By the preamble to this text, the Security Council would reaffirm its previous resolutions on the question and express grave concern that certain States had not complied with the provisions of the resolutions concerning the application of sanctions, contrary to their obligations under Article 25 of the Charter.<sup>46</sup> It would also reaffirm the primary responsibility of the United Kingdom to enable the people of Southern Rhodesia to achieve self-determination and independence, and in particular its responsibility for bringing the illegal declaration of independence to an end. The preamble would also state that the Council was acting under Chapter VII of the Charter.

By the operative part of the draft, the Council would:

(1) call on the United Kingdom, as the administering power, not to grant independence to Southern Rhodesia without the fulfilment of majority rule;

(2) decide that the present sanctions against Southern Rhodesia would remain in force;

(3) urge all States to implement fully all Security Council resolutions on Southern Rhodesia in accordance with their obligations under Article 25 of the Charter, and deplore the attitude of those States which had persisted in giving moral, political and economic assistance to the illegal regime;

(4) urge all States in furtherance of the objectives of the Security Council not to grant any form of recognition to the illegal regime; and

(5) decide to remain actively seized of the matter.

Introducing the draft resolution, Nepal's representative said the situation in Southern Rhodesia remained extremely grave. The third report—of 15 June 1970—of the Council's Committee on sanctions, established in pursuance of resolution 253(1968),<sup>47</sup> gave, in his view, clear evidence that the policies of sanctions had failed in their objective. Southern Rhodesia continued to enjoy a substantial volume of foreign trade, owing mainly to increasing covert evasion of sanctions, insufficient vigilance on the part of certain industrial and maritime powers, and the lack of co-operation of Portugal and South Africa.

The Nepalese representative went on to say that the leaders of the illegal regime were tightening their policies on racism and strengthening further the machinery for their enforcement. It was therefore the Council's duty to take stock of the situation and consider appropriate measures to achieve the Council's common objective.

The draft resolution that the five delegations had submitted was, he said, clear and non-controversial and did not commit the Security Council to any action beyond that which it had already taken. He pointed out that the most important part of the draft resolution was the first operative paragraph (by which the Council would call on the United Kingdom, as the administering power, not to grant independence to Southern Rhodesia without the fulfilment of majority rule); this paragraph sought to clarify and state unequivocally the central issue involved in the situation in Southern Rhodesia—namely, the existence of a racist minority regime which had denied the majority their inalienable right to self-determination. The responsibility of the United Nations and of the administering power did not cease with the overthrow of the racist regime, but with the full and effective application of the principle of self-determination as recognized by the Security Council in its resolution of 20 November 1965 (217(1965)),<sup>48</sup> He and the other sponsors remained convinced that more energetic Council action was required to achieve that common goal.

Other co-sponsors of the draft resolution who spoke stressed that since the Security Council had last discussed the question of Southern Rhodesia, in March 1970, the Smith regime had consolidated its political, military and economic position and had embarked on a systematic campaign of genocide directed against leaders of the liberation movement, some of whom were dying in Rhodesian concentration camps.

They went on to say that although, statistically, sanctions had had some effect, the economy of Southern Rhodesia had survived without causing the white community any major difficulty. One of the most disturbing developments was the attitude of the new British Government towards the question of sanctions against the rebel colony and its policy in negotiations with the Smith regime.

According to Zambia, the United Kingdom appeared to be willing to accept a settlement that would leave the African majority under the control of the white minority. What mattered, in Zambia's view, was that there should be no independence which was not based on majority rule.

Support for the five-power draft resolution was expressed by the USSR and Poland. The USSR said the Security Council's decisions on Southern Rhodesia had been ineffective because the Salisbury regime received direct economic and military assistance from South Africa and Portugal and, through those countries, from Western States which continued to maintain extensive trade and other relations with those regimes. Furthermore, a number of States continued to trade directly with Southern Rhodesia and were even investing capital in that country. It was obvious that without that support the illegal regime could not maintain its tyrannical rule over the Zimbabwe people.

The USSR noted that in a General Assembly resolution (2621(XXV)) adopted on 12 October 1970, on a programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Assembly made a special appeal to the Security Council to take measures necessary to expand sanctions against the illegal regime and asked the Council to consider the question of imposing sanctions against South Africa and Portugal in view of their refusal to carry out the relevant decisions of the Council. (For text, see pp. 706-8.) It was the duty of the Council, he said, to heed those demands and adopt measures to ensure peace in Africa and free the people of Zimbabwe from the colonial yoke.

The French representative believed that the United Nations should prefer concrete initiatives taken in concert with the administering power to recommendations that would not facilitate attainment of the objectives sought. The Council could not tell the British Government what it should do. While he had no objection to the substance of the draft resolution, he found the first operative paragraph (by which the Council would call on the United Kingdom, as the administering power, not to grant independence to Southern Rhodesia without the fulfilment of majority rule) legally doubtful; its language seemed to go beyond the powers of the Council and, if it were not changed, he would have to abstain in the vote.

The United Kingdom representative said the British Government had a commitment to see whether or not there was a realistic basis for settlement of the Rhodesian problem in accordance with the five principles it had formulated. The first of those principles was that unimpeded progress to majority rule would have to be maintained and guaranteed. Another was that any settlement must be acceptable to the Rhodesian people as a whole. It was unacceptable to his Government that the Security Council should at that juncture seek to lay down any conditions for a settlement.

On the question of sanctions, the United Kingdom representative regretted that these had not achieved their major political objective. However, it was undeniable that sanctions continued to exert pressure on the Rhodesian economy and to restrict its rate of development. Far from relaxing its attitude towards sanctions, as had been alleged, the British Parliament had decided by an overwhelming vote to renew the annual legislation to impose sanctions for another year.

As to the draft resolution before the Council, he continued, it was a classic case of both too little and too much. It was too little in that two of its operative paragraphs seemed to repeat in less precise terms steps which the Council had already taken; it was too much in that the first operative paragraph attempted to bind the United Kingdom not to grant independence to Southern Rhodesia without the fulfilment of majority rule. His Government would not accept that commitment in a United Nations resolution, nor was it prepared to enter into negotiations with its negotiating position publicly dictated from outside. For those reasons, the draft resolution was unacceptable to his Government and, if it were pressed to the vote, the United Kingdom would have to vote against it.

At the same 10 November Council meeting, the five-power draft resolution was put to the vote and received 12 votes in favour to 1 against (United Kingdom), with 2 abstentions (France, United States). Because of the negative vote of a permanent member of the Security Council, the draft resolution was not adopted.

In explanation of vote, the United States representative said his Government's opposition to the illegal minority regime was clear and of long standing. The United States, he said, would have been able to vote for most of the draft resolution, but it had serious reservations about the first operative paragraph (by which the Council would call on the United Kingdom as administering power not to grant independence to Southern Rhodesia without the fulfilment of majority rule).

It seemed inconsistent to the United States, he said, to reiterate—in the preamble—the primary responsibility of the United Kingdom for self-determination in Southern Rhodesia and then in the first operative paragraph to prescribe in advance under Chapter VII of the Charter how and when that goal was to be achieved. Such a binding injunction could only complicate further an already difficult situation.

The United States, its representative continued, shared the concern of other Council members over the failure of the illegal regime to agree to majority rule, but considered it unwise to impede the achievement of that objective by prescribing too rigid a framework and time-table for its pursuit. Finally, his Government was concerned that no effort had been made to consult in advance all the members of the Council to see whether the draft resolution was, as the representative of Nepal had said, non-controversial. In the light of those substantive and procedural considerations, the United States had abstained.

On 17 November 1970, the Security Council met again to discuss the question of Southern Rhodesia and the President announced that, during consultations held since the previous meeting, a draft resolution had been prepared which appeared to have the support of all Council members. The new text was then adopted unanimously as resolution 288(1970).

By the preambular part of the text, the Security Council reaffirmed its previous resolutions on the question and expressed grave concern that certain States had not complied with the provisions of the resolutions concerning the application of sanctions, contrary to their obligations under Article 25 of the Charter.<sup>49</sup> It also reaffirmed the primary responsibility of the United Kingdom to enable the people of Southern Rhodesia to achieve self-determination and independence, and in particular its responsibility for bringing the illegal declaration of independence to an end. The Council took into account the report of its Committee on sanctions; it also stated that it was acting in accordance with previous Council decisions on Southern Rhodesia, taken under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Council:

(1) reaffirmed its condemnation of the illegal declaration of independence in Southern Rhodesia;

(2) called upon the United Kingdom, as the administering power in the discharge of its responsibility, to take urgent and effective measures to bring to an end the illegal rebellion in Southern Rhodesia and enable the people to exercise their right to self-determination, in accordance with the Charter and in conformity with the objectives of the General Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960 (containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples);<sup>50</sup>

(3) decided that the sanctions against Southern Rhodesia would remain in force;

(4) urged all States to implement fully all Security Council resolutions on Southern Rhodesia, in accordance with their obligations under Article 25 of the Charter, and deplored the attitude of those States which had persisted in giving moral, political and economic assistance to the illegal regime;

(5) further urged all States, in furtherance of the Security Council's objectives, not to grant any form of recognition to the illegal regime; and

(6) decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

After the vote, the representative of Zambia expressed his disappointment that the Security Council had been unable to pronounce itself on the question of no independence before majority rule. He had voted for the resolution because it reaffirmed all previous Council resolutions on the matter and on the understanding that it would serve to support the armed struggle of the Zimbabwe people.

Burundi said the resolution contained a clear reference to the rights of the people of Zimbabwe and the responsibility of the British Government to grant them independence as soon as possible, in accordance with the principles of the Charter.

The United Kingdom representative said that the resolution, unlike its predecessor, took account of his Government's position that it could not accept any fresh commitment in the Security Council which would restrict its attempts to discharge its responsibility for Southern Rhodesia.

The USSR representative said the Council had once again reaffirmed its condemnation of the illegal declaration of independence, had appealed to the United Kingdom to discharge and not evade its responsibility to take urgent measures to bring to an end the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, and had rejected the position taken by those States that continued to extend support to the racist regime. The resolution contained no new elements but it showed, he said, that the States of Africa and Asia did not intend to reconcile themselves to the situation created in Southern Rhodesia by the ruling racist regime.

In a telegram of 17 November to the President of the Security Council, the Foreign Minister of the German Democratic Republic noted the Council's renewed discussion of the situation in Southern Rhodesia and condemned the disregard by a number of imperialist States for the Council's decisions against the racist minority regime of Southern Rhodesia.

GENERAL ASPECTS

At its twenty-fifth (1970) session, the General Assembly referred the question of Southern Rhodesia to its Fourth Committee, which decided to consider the item together with the questions of Namibia and the territories under Portuguese administration. It further decided to hold a general debate covering all three items, it being understood that individual draft resolutions on the items would be considered separately after the conclusion of the general debate and following the hearing of petitioners. On this basis, the Fourth Committee considered the question of Southern Rhodesia at meetings held between 5 October and 20 November.

During its consideration of the question, the Fourth Committee heard a statement by George Houser, Executive Director of the American Committee on Africa. The petitioner said his organization was impressed by the attention the United Nations had given to the role of foreign economic interests in supporting the status quo of colonialism and racism in southern Africa. He also noted the appeal by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) for concerted action to discourage the activities of foreign companies and monopolies operating in the territories of the southern African minority regimes. In line with those trends, the American Committee on Africa had engaged in research and public education on the extent of United States public and private involvement in support for the southern African regimes and had called for disengagement. A campaign to eliminate foreign economic interests in minority-ruled southern Africa could, in the petitioner's view, have great impact. He suggested that specific and limited targets for action should be chosen rather than the general appeals made in most resolutions.

Following the general debate, a draft resolution was put forward in the Fourth Committee on 16 November by Afghanistan, Algeria, Burma, Burundi, the Central African Republic, Chad, Dahomey, Ethiopia, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Kenya, Libya, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Rwanda, Sudan, Syria, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

On 18 November 1970, the Fourth Committee voted on the draft resolution. A proposal by the representative of France for a separate vote on the third operative paragraph (affirming that attempts to negotiate the future of Zimbabwe with the illegal regime would be contrary to the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples) was rejected by 59 votes to 19, with 27 abstentions. The Committee then approved the draft resolution by a roll-call vote of 90 to 10, with 11 abstentions. The text was adopted on 3 December by the General Assembly as resolution 2652 (XXV), by a recorded vote of 79 in favour to 10 against, with 14 abstentions.

By the preambular part of this text, the General Assembly among other things expressed grave concern at the deteriorating situation in Southern Rhodesia, which the Security Council by its resolution 277(1970) of 18 March 1970 had reaffirmed as constituting a threat to international peace and security, resulting from the introduction by the illegal regime of new measures, including the purported assumption of republican status. (For text of resolution 277 (1970), see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Assembly also noted with regret that the sanctions adopted by the Security Council had so far failed to put an end to the illegal regime, owing primarily to the continued assistance that regime received from some States, in particular South Africa and Portugal, in violation of Article 25 of the Charter,<sup>51</sup> and of the relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions. The Assembly reaffirmed its conviction that the sanctions would not put an end to the illegal regime unless they were comprehensive, mandatory, effectively supervised, enforced and complied with, particularly by South Africa and Portugal.

The Assembly also considered that the United Kingdom had the primary responsibility for putting an end to the illegal regime and for transferring effective power to the people of Zimbabwe on the basis of majority rule.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly:

(1) reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to freedom and independence in conformity with the provisions of its resolution of 14 December 1960<sup>52</sup> (containing the Declaration on granting independence) and the legitimacy of their struggle to attain that right by all the means at their disposal;

(2) declared illegal all measures taken by the racist minority regime, including the purported assumption of republican status, to deprive the people of Zimbabwe of their legitimate rights and to entrench its policies of apartheid in Southern Rhodesia;

(3) affirmed that any attempt to negotiate the future of Zimbabwe with the illegal racist minority regime would be contrary to the provisions of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

(4) condemned the failure and refusal of the United Kingdom to take effective measures to bring down the illegal regime and to transfer power to the people of Zimbabwe on the basis of majority rule, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and called upon that Government to take such measures without further delay in fulfilment of its responsibility as the administering power;

(5) condemned the intervention of South

African armed forces in Southern Rhodesia in violation of the Security Council's resolution of 18 March 1970 (277(1970));

(6) condemned the policies of the Governments of South Africa and Portugal and other Governments that continued to maintain political, economic, military and other relations with the illegal regime in contravention of the relevant United Nations resolutions, thus violating their obligations under the Charter, and called upon those Governments to discontinue all such relations;

(7) deplored the failure of the United Kingdom to report to the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples on action taken in the implementation of the Assembly's resolution of 21 November 1969,<sup>53</sup> and called upon the United Kingdom to report to the Special Committee during its next session;

(8) called upon the United Kingdom, as the administering power, to ensure the immediate expulsion of all South African forces from Southern Rhodesia;

(9) called upon all States to ensure, under the terms of the Security Council's resolution of 18 March 1970, the immediate interruption of any existing means of transportation to and from Southern Rhodesia;

(10) called upon all States, specialized agencies and other international organizations concerned, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), to extend all moral and material assistance to the national liberation movements of Zimbabwe;

(11) called upon the United Kingdom, in view of the armed conflict in the territory and the inhuman treatment of prisoners, to ensure the application to that situation of the 1949 Geneva Conventions relative to the treatment of prisoners of war and to the protection of civilian persons in time of war;

(12) drew the Security Council's attention to the gravity of the situation arising from the intensification of suppressive activities against the people of Zimbabwe and from the armed attacks perpetrated against neighbouring States in violation of international peace and security;

(13) further drew the Council's attention to the urgent necessity of applying the following measures envisaged under Chapter VII<sup>54</sup> of the Charter: (a) widening the scope of the sanctions against the illegal racist minority regime to include all the measures laid down in Article 41<sup>55</sup> of the Charter; and (b) imposing sanctions against South Africa and Portugal, whose Governments had blatantly refused to carry out the mandatory decisions of the Security Council; and

(14) requested the Special Committee to keep the situation in the territory under review.

During the debate in the Fourth Committee, many of the resolution's sponsors said there had been no progress towards the attainment of the legitimate rights of the Zimbabwe people and that the minority regime in Salisbury had consolidated itself, proclaimed a republic and imposed its discriminatory constitution on the more than four million Africans living in Southern Rhodesia. The proposed sanctions against the illegal regime had been unsuccessful, they said, and the Security Council had failed to achieve unanimity on mandatory sanctions.

These speakers went on to say that the situation in Southern Rhodesia was deteriorating because of the continued support given to the illegal regime by South Africa and Portugal, as well as by other Western powers. Southern Rhodesia, however, was still a British colony and it was incumbent upon the United Kingdom to fulfil its obligations as the administering power and to restore legality in the territory, even by the use of force. They also called upon all governmental and inter-governmental institutions to extend their moral and material support to the Southern Rhodesian liberation movements.

The USSR representative and others maintained that the colonial regimes in southern Africa were receiving assistance from the countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) which enabled them to carry out punitive expeditions against the peoples of Africa. Without this assistance, the colonial regimes could hardly resist the struggle of the liberation movements.

With regard to sanctions, these speakers said that certain Member States were undermining United Nations decisions on economic sanctions by developing trade and other relations with Southern Rhodesia. While the Western powers were claiming that economic sanctions would bring the desired results, they opposed the extension of sanctions to South Africa and Portugal and disregarded United Nations decisions on sanctions. In addition, British, United States and Dutch companies and Western monopolies were exploiting the African people and obtaining fabulous profits in southern Africa.

The United Kingdom representative said that his Government's immediate aim was to find a solution acceptable to the people of Southern Rhodesia as a whole. In seeking this, it rejected the notion that force could contribute to a solution of the problem; such a course could do nothing to help unravel an already tragic situation. The United Kingdom was continuing its policy of sanctions against the illegal regime and no country had done more and suffered greater loss than the United Kingdom in cutting off both import and export trade with Southern Rhodesia. As a result of the sanctions, Southern Rhodesia now suffered from a serious shortage of foreign exchange and its economy faced difficulties.

The United Kingdom representative added that any differences on the question in the Fourth Committee were differences of means, not of ultimate aims. His Government had voted against the draft resolution essentially because it did not make a constructive contribution to the situation.

The representative of South Africa said that many of the provisions in the resolution were unacceptable to his Government. He reaffirmed that the issue must be settled by negotiation between the parties directly concerned and said that an early solution was vital, not only for the parties themselves but for all southern Africa.

Argentina, Bolivia, Greece, Iran, Japan, Mexico, Turkey and Uruguay, which voted in favour of the resolution, indicated that had there been a separate vote on the operative paragraph drawing the Security Council's attention to the need to widen the scope of the sanctions and impose them on South Africa and Portugal, they would have abstained. In their view, the provision encroached upon the jurisdiction of the Security Council.

Venezuela said it had voted in favour of the draft resolution on the understanding that in that same paragraph the Fourth Committee was seeking not to restrict the freedom of action of the Security Council but merely to draw attention to the need to extend the sanctions against the regime in Southern Rhodesia and to take action against States that did not comply with the Council's decisions.

Costa Rica and Mexico said that they would have abstained on the paragraph calling for moral and material assistance to the national liberation movements of Zimbabwe, if it had been voted upon separately. Reservations were also made by Greece, Guatemala, Turkey and Uruguay concerning the paragraph condemning the United Kingdom for failing to take effective measures to bring down the illegal regime and transfer power to the people on the basis of majority rule. In addition, reservations were made by Greece and Turkey with respect to the paragraph condemning the policies of those Governments continuing to maintain relations with the illegal regime and calling upon them to discontinue such relations.

The representative of Italy, who abstained on the resolution, said that had separate votes been taken he would have voted against the operative paragraph affirming that any attempt to negotiate the future of Zimbabwe with the illegal regime would be contrary to the Declaration on granting independence, as well as the operative paragraph condemning the United Kingdom for failing to bring down the illegal regime.

OTHER GENERAL ASSEMBLY DECISIONS

At its twenty-fifth session, in 1970, the General Assembly took a number of decisions which bore upon general and specific aspects of the situation in Southern Rhodesia. These are described briefly below.

PROGRAMME OF ACTION FOR
IMPLEMENTATION OF DECLARATION
ON GRANTING OF INDEPENDENCE

On the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the General Assembly on 12 October 1970 adopted a programme of action to assist in the full implementation of that Declaration. The programme included the following provisions, among others:

Member States would do their utmost to promote effective measures for the full implementation of the Declaration in all Trust, non-self-governing and other colonial territories, large and small, including the adoption by the Security Council of effective measures against Governments and regimes engaging in any form of repression of colonial peoples, which would seriously impede the maintenance of international peace and security.

Member States would render all necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of colonial territories in their struggle to attain freedom and independence.

Member States would intensify their efforts to promote the implementation of the resolutions of the Assembly and the Security Council relating to territories under colonial domination.

In this connexion, the General Assembly drew the Council's attention to the need to continue to give special attention to the problems of southern Africa by adopting measures to ensure the full implementation of the Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960 (containing the Declaration on the granting of independence)<sup>56</sup> and the Council's own resolutions, and in particular, among other things, to:

(a) widen the scope of the sanctions against the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia by declaring mandatory all the measures laid down in Article 41 of the United Nations Charter, and

(6) give urgent consideration, with a view to promoting the speedy elimination of colonialism, to the question of imposing fully and unconditionally, under international supervision, an embargo on arms of all kinds to South Africa and the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia.

Other provisions were that Member States would also intensify their efforts to oppose collaboration between the regimes of South Africa and Portugal and the illegal racist regime of Southern Rhodesia for the preservation of colonialism in southern Africa and to end the political, military, economic and other forms of aid received by these regimes, enabling them to persist in their policy of colonial domination.

Further, Member States would wage a vigorous and sustained campaign against activities and practices of foreign economic and financial and other interests operating in colonial territories for the benefit and on behalf of colonial powers and their allies, as these constituted a major obstacle to the achievement of the goals embodied in the Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960. Member States would consider the adoption of necessary steps to have their nationals and companies under their jurisdiction discontinue such activities and practices; these steps should also aim at preventing the systematic influx of foreign immigrants into colonial territories, which disrupted the integrity and social, political and cultural unity of the peoples under colonial domination.

By the terms of the programme, Member States would also carry out a sustained and vigorous campaign against all military activities and arrangements by colonial powers in territories under their administration. All freedom fighters under detention would be treated in accordance with the relevant provisions of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War. Representatives of liberation movements would be invited, whenever necessary, by the United Nations and other international organizations within the United Nations system to participate in an appropriate capacity in the proceedings of those organs relating to their countries. Efforts were to be intensified to provide increased educational opportunities for the inhabitants of non-self-governing territories and all States were called upon to render greater assistance in this field, both individually through programmes in the countries concerned and collectively by contributions through the United Nations.

(For further details about the programme of action, see pp. 689-94. For text of resolution 2621 (XXV), see pp. 706-8.)

WORK OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON
ON GRANTING OF INDEPENDENCE

Another decision relating to the work of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples was set out in resolution 2708 (XXV) adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1970.

By this, among other things the Assembly asked all States, as well as the specialized agencies and international institutions, to withhold assistance of any kind from Portugal, South Africa and the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia until they renounced their policy of colonial domination and racial discrimination. The Assembly reiterated its declaration that the practice of using mercenaries against national liberation movements in the colonial territories constituted a criminal act, and it called upon all States to take the necessary measures to prevent the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in their territory and to prohibit their nationals from serving as mercenaries.

By this resolution, the Assembly also condemned the policies, pursued by certain colonial powers in the territories under their domination, of imposing non-representative regimes and constitutions, strengthening the position of foreign economic and other interests, misleading world public opinion and encouraging the systematic influx of foreign immigrants while evicting, displacing and transferring the indigenous inhabitants to other areas, and it called upon those powers to desist from such policies.

The Special Committee was asked by the Assembly, among other things, to make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter with regard to developments in colonial territories which were likely to threaten international peace and security; the Assembly recommended that the Security Council take such suggestions fully into consideration.

The Special Committee was also asked to continue to examine the compliance of Member States with the Declaration and with other relevant resolutions on the question of decolonization—particularly those relating to the terriories under Portuguese domination, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its 1971 session.

(For further details, see pp. 695-97. For text of resolution 2708 (XXV), see pp. 709-10.)

UNIVERSAL REALIZATION OF RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

In another decision—on the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence for the effective guarantee of human rights—the General Assembly on 30 November 1970 adopted resolution 2649 (XXV).

By this, among other things, the Assembly: affirmed the legitimacy of the struggles of peoples under colonial and alien domination recognized as being entitled to the right of self-determination to restore to themselves that right by any means at their disposal; recognized the right of such peoples to seek and receive all kinds of moral and material assistance, in accordance with United Nations resolutions and the spirit of the United Nations Charter; and called upon all Governments denying the right of self-determination to recognize and observe that right in accordance with relevant international instruments and the principles and spirit of the Charter.

The Assembly also condemned Governments that denied the right to self-determination of peoples recognized as being entitled to it, especially of the peoples of southern Africa and Palestine.

FOREIGN ECONOMIC INTERESTS

Following its consideration of the activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the granting of independence in Southern Rhodesia, Namibia, territories under Portuguese domination and all other territories under colonial domination, the General Assembly adopted resolution 2703 (XXV) on 14 December 1970.

By this text, the Assembly among other things affirmed that foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in colonial territories constituted a major obstacle to political independence, as well as to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those territories by the indigenous inhabitants.

The Assembly condemned in particular the construction of the Cabora Bassa dam project, which was contrary to the vital interests of the people of Mozambique and represented a plot designed to perpetuate the domination, exploitation and oppression of the peoples of this part of Africa by Portugal and the minority racist regimes of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia, and which would lead to international tensions.

The Assembly asked the colonial powers and States concerned, whose companies were participants in the construction of the project, to withdraw their support from the scheme and end their companies' participation. It called upon the administering powers to abolish the discriminatory and unjust system of wages applied to the inhabitants of the territories under their administration and to apply one system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination.

The Assembly also asked the colonial powers and States concerned to take legislative, administrative and other measures in respect of their nationals who owned and operated enterprises in colonial territories—particularly in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the territories under Portuguese administration—in order to put a stop to their activities which were detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants. All States were asked to take effective measures to stop the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military equipment, to colonial regimes that used such assistance to suppress movements of national liberation. Colonial powers and States concerned were also asked to adopt effective measures to prevent new investments, particularly in southern Africa, which ran counter to relevant Assembly resolutions.

ELIMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

By a resolution (2646 (XXV)) on the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination, adopted on 30 November 1970, the General Assembly among other things noted with concern that the white racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia continued to operate illegally and that the measures so far taken by the United Kingdom, the administering power, to bring down the rebellion had proved insufficient and ineffective.

The Assembly expressed its conviction that the Security Council's mandatory sanctions against the illegal regime had failed owing mainly to the obstinate non-compliance of South Africa, Portugal and other States, contrary to their obligations under the Charter. It noted that many States, in flagrant disregard of previous resolutions of the Assembly and the Council, continued to maintain political, commercial, military, economic, social and other relations with South Africa and with the illegal white racist minority regimes in southern Africa.

Reiterating its determination to bring about the complete elimination of racial discrimination, the Assembly reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of all oppressed peoples everywhere, and in particular those of South Africa, Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the territories under Portuguese domination, to obtain racial equality by all possible means, and called for increased and continuing moral and material support to all peoples under colonial and alien domination struggling for self-determination and the elimination of racial discrimination.

The Assembly condemned the unholy alliance between South Africa, Portugal and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, designed to suppress the struggle of the peoples of southern Africa against racism, apartheid, economic exploitation and colonial domination. It condemned the activities of those States which, by political, economic and military collaboration with the racist regimes of southern Africa, enabled and encouraged those regimes in the enforcement and perpetuation of their racial policies, and it called for the termination of all relations with the racist regimes.

The United Kingdom was condemned by the Assembly for its reluctance to bring down the illegal white minority regime in Southern Rhodesia and was called upon to take all necessary steps to end the usurpation of the lawful rights of the people of Southern Rhodesia by the illegal regime in Salisbury and to restore to them their political, social and economic rights in accordance with the fundamental principles of international law and of the Charter. (See also pp. 501-3 and, for text of resolution 2646 (XXV), pp. 506-7.)

VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly adopted resolution 2714 (XXV) on the question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including policies of racial discrimination and segregation in all countries, particularly colonial and other dependent countries and territories. The Assembly acted in adopting the text proposed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1501 (XLVIII) of 27 May 1970, as recommended by the Human Rights Commission (see above, page 166).

By this, the Assembly, among other things reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggles of the peoples of southern Africa to oppose the policies of apartheid, racial discrimination and colonialism and to assert their right to self-determination; condemned every practice of torture and ill-treatment of prisoners, detainees and captured freedom fighters in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the African territories under Portuguese domination, as well as of persons in police custody in those territories; and reaffirmed that the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, of 30 August 1955, applied to all political prisoners or detainees—in prison or police custody throughout South Africa, Namibia, the rebel United Kingdom colony of Southern Rhodesia and the African territories under Portuguese domination.

The Assembly went on to reaffirm, among other things, that the increasing co-operation between South Africa and the illegal racist regime in Southern Rhodesia posed a further and continuing threat to the opponents of the two regimes and to captured freedom fighters; that the so-called Constitution of Rhodesia of 1969 was an illegal as well as a pernicious document and the "Declaration of Rights" embodied in it conferred few, if any, rights on non-whites; that section 84 of the 1969 "Constitution of Rhodesia"—providing that no court would inquire into or pronounce upon the validity of any law on the ground that it was inconsistent with the "Declaration of Rights"—established a clear inconsistency in the illegal "legislation" itself and, further, brought out the authoritarian and racist character of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia.

By this text, the Assembly also reaffirmed that the reserves in Southern Rhodesia consisted of poor and infertile lands into which Africans were herded like cattle and that the condition of Africans in the reserves was appalling. Nothing was being done to improve their conditions of hygiene, diet, nutrition, sanitation, health and educational standards.

The Assembly then called upon the United Kingdom to intervene more effectively than heretofore in its rebellious colony of Southern Rhodesia with a view to: (a) implementing the action proposed by the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts in its report to the Human Rights Commission; (b) liberating the Africans from the reserves in which they were concentrated in conditions of near captivity and bondage; and (c) repealing the entire so-called Constitution of Rhodesia of 1969. The United Kingdom was asked to report to the Assembly at its 1971 session as to the results of these measures.

Also by this resolution, the Assembly condemned once again the actions of those Governments which continued to maintain diplomatic, economic, cultural and other relations with South Africa and with the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia in violation of United Nations resolutions. It called upon those Governments urgently to consider breaking off such relations and, if they had not already done so, to report to the Assembly in 1971 their reasons therefor.

Finally, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to report to it in 1971 on the implementation of the resolution and also to report to the Human Rights Commission in 1971 on the measures taken to publicize the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts.

(For further information and text of resolution 2714 (XXV), see pp. 513-21.)

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY DECLARATION

On 24 October 1970, the General Assembly adopted a Declaration on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations in which, among other things, Member States acclaimed the role of the United Nations in the past 25 years in the process of the liberation of peoples of colonial, Trust and other non-self-governing territories. The number of Member States had been greatly increased and colonial empires had virtually disappeared.

Despite these achievements, the Declaration continued, many territories and peoples continued to be denied their rights to self-determination and independence—particularly in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia, Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau)—in deliberate and deplorable defiance of the United Nations and world public opinion by certain recalcitrant States and by the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia.

Members reaffirmed in the Declaration the inalienable right of all colonial peoples to self-determination, freedom and independence and condemned all actions which deprived any people of these rights. In recognizing the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples for their freedom by all appropriate means at their disposal, Members called upon all Governments to comply in this respect with the provisions of the United Nations Charter, taking into account the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. It was re-emphasized that these countries and peoples were entitled, in their just struggle, to seek and to receive all necessary moral and material help in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter.

The General Assembly adopted the Declaration as its resolution 2627 (XXV). (For text, see pp. 116-17.)

HUMAN RIGHTS IN ARMED CONFLICTS

On the question of respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the General Assembly, on 9 December 1970, adopted resolution 2674 (XXV) by which, among other things, it affirmed that the participants in resistance movements and the freedom fighters in southern Africa and territories under colonial and alien domination and foreign occupation, struggling for their liberation and self-determination, should be treated, in case of their arrest, as prisoners of war in accordance with the principles of the Hague Convention of 1907 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949. (See pp. 538-39 for text of resolution 2674 (XXV).)

CO-OPERATION OF SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

In connexion with the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (2704 (XXV)) on 14 December 1970. Among other things, it reiterated its urgent appeal to these bodies to render all possible moral and material assistance to the peoples struggling for their liberation from colonial rule and to work out, with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and, through it, of the national liberation movements, concrete programmes for assisting the peoples of Southern Rhodesia, Namibia and the territories under Portuguese administration, including in particular the populations in the liberated areas of those territories.

The Assembly also urged the specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system to discontinue all collaboration with Portugal and South Africa, as well as with the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the Assembly and the Security Council.

(See pp. 711-13 for text of resolution 2704 (XXV).)

UNITED NATIONS TRUST FUND FOR SOUTH AFRICA

Among a series of decisions taken by the General Assembly in 1970 on South Africa's policies of apartheid was one authorizing the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa to decide on grants from the Fund to voluntary organizations engaged in providing relief and assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in Namibia and Southern Rhodesia and to their families, to the extent that additional voluntary contributions were received for this purpose.

The Assembly appealed for generous direct contributions to voluntary organizations engaged in providing relief and assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, and again appealed to all States, organizations and individuals for generous contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa to enable it to meet the increasing needs.

These decisions were contained in the Assembly's resolution 2671 E (XXV), adopted on 8 December. (See pp. 155-56.)

EDUCATIONAL AND TRAINING PROGRAMME FOR SOUTHERN AFRICA

Under the consolidated United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, established by the General Assembly in 1967, 173 applications from Southern Rhodesia were received during the period from 1 October 1969 to 31 October 1970. Fifty-two new awards were made and 40 were extended. There were 38 Southern Rhodesians studying abroad in 10 countries.

(For additional information about the Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, see pp. 705-6.)

Taking into account the reports of the Committee established in pursuance of Security Council resolution 253(1968),

Noting with grave concern that:

(a) The measures so far taken have failed to bring the rebellion in Southern Rhodesia to an end,

(b) Some States, contrary to resolutions 232(1966) and 253(1968) of the Security Council and to their obligations under Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations, have failed to prevent trade with the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia,

(c) The Governments of the Republic of South Africa and Portugal have continued to give assistance to the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia, thus diminishing the effects of the measures decided upon by the Security Council,

(d) The situation in Southern Rhodesia continues to deteriorate as a result of the introduction by the illegal regime of new measures, including the purported assumption of republican status, aimed at repressing the African people in violation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Recognizing the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of Southern Rhodesia to secure the enjoyment of their rights as set forth in the Charter and in conformity with the objectives of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV),

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Southern Rhodesia,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question of Southern Rhodesia,

Bearing in mind the views expressed by representatives of national liberation movements,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling further all previous resolutions concerning the question of Southern Rhodesia adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee,

Recalling also the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, particularly its resolutions 232(1966) of 16 December 1966, 253(1968) of 29 May 1968 and 277(1970) of 18 March 1970,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of its resolution 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970 containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Gravely concerned at the deteriorating situation in Southern Rhodesia, which the Security Council in its resolution 277(1970) reaffirmed as constituting a threat to international peace and security, resulting from the introduction by the illegal racist minority regime of new measures, including the purported assumption of republican status, for the purpose of entrenching itself as well as repressing the African people in violation of General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV), and at the continued presence of South African forces in the Territory, which poses a threat to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of neighbouring African States,

Noting with deep regret that the sanctions adopted by the Security Council have so far failed to put an end to the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia, owing primarily to the continued assistance that regime receives from some States, in particular South Africa and Portugal, in violation of Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations and of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council,

Reaffirming its conviction that the sanctions will not put an end to the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia unless they are comprehensive, mandatory, effectively supervised, enforced and complied with, particularly by South Africa and Portugal,

Bearing in mind that the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, has the primary responsibility for putting an end to the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia and for transferring effective power to the people of Zimbabwe on the basis of majority rule,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to freedom and independence in conformity with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and the legitimacy of their struggle to attain that right by all the means at their disposal;

2. Declares illegal all measures taken by the racist minority regime, including the purported assumption of republican status, to deprive the people of Zimbabwe of their legitimate rights and to entrench its policies of apartheid in Southern Rhodesia;

3. Affirms that any attempt to negotiate the future of Zimbabwe with the illegal racist minority regime would be contrary to the provisions of resolution 1514(XV);

4. Condemns the failure and refusal of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to take effective measures to bring down the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia and to transfer power to the people of Zimbabwe on the basis of majority rule, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and calls upon that Government to take such measures without further delay in fulfilment of its responsibility as the administering Power;

5. Condemns the intervention of South African armed forces in Southern Rhodesia in violation of Security Council resolution 277(1970);

6. Condemns the policies of the Governments of South Africa and Portugal and other Governments that continue to maintain political, economic, military and other relations with the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia in contravention of the relevant United Nations resolutions, thus violating their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations, and calls upon those Governments to discontinue all such relations;

7. Deplores the failure of the Government of the United Kingdom to report to the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as requested in paragraph 16 of General Assembly resolution 2508 (XXIV) of 21 November 1969, on action taken in the implementation of that resolution, and calls upon the Government of the United Kingdom to submit the said report to the Special Committee during its next session;

8. Calls upon the United Kingdom, as the administering Power, to ensure the immediate expulsion of all South African forces from Southern Rhodesia;

9. Calls upon all States to ensure, under the terms of Security Council resolution 277(1970), the immediate interruption of any existing means of transportation to and from Southern Rhodesia;

10. Calls upon all States, specialized agencies and other international organizations concerned, in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity, to extend all moral and material assistance to the national liberation movements of Zimbabwe;

11. Calls upon the Government of the United Kingdom, in view of the armed conflict in the Territory and the inhuman treatment of prisoners, to ensure the application to that situation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, both dated 12 August 1949;

12. Draws the attention of the Security Council to the gravity of the situation arising from the intensification of suppressive activities against the people of Zimbabwe and from the armed attacks perpetrated against neighbouring States in violation of international peace and security;

13. Further draws the attention of the Security Council to the urgent necessity of applying the following measures envisaged under Chapter VII of the Charter:

(a) Widening the scope of the sanctions against the illegal racist minority regime to include all the measures laid down in Article 41 of the Charter;

(b) Imposing sanctions against South Africa and Portugal, whose Governments have blatantly refused to carry out the mandatory decisions of the Security Council;

14. Requests the Special Committee to keep the situation in the Territory under review.

THE QUESTION OF NAMIBIA

The question of Namibia was again considered by United Nations bodies during 1970. Decisions on the territory were taken by the Security Council, the General Assembly and the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The United Nations Council for Namibia also reported to the Assembly on its activities, and various aspects of the problem were taken up by the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights.

The Security Council adopted three resolutions on the question, one (276(1970)) on 30 January 1970, the other two (283(1970) and 284(1970)) on 29 July 1970. By the first of these the Council declared, among other things, that the continued presence of South African authorities in Namibia was illegal and that consequently all acts taken by South Africa on behalf of Namibia after the termination of the Mandate [for South West Africa] were illegal and invalid.

The Council called upon all States—particularly those having economic and other interests in Namibia—to refrain from any dealings with South Africa which were inconsistent with the above declaration. The Council also decided to set up an ad hoc sub-committee of the Council to study, in consultation with the Secretary-General, ways and means by which the relevant Council resolutions could be effectively implemented in accordance with the appropriate provisions of the United Nations Charter, in the light of the flagrant refusal of South Africa to withdraw from Namibia, and to submit its recommendations by 30 April 1970.

The Ad Hoc Sub-Committee, after submitting an interim report on 30 April, submitted, on 7 July, a series of recommendations on political, economic, legal, military and other aspects of the question. The first of the two resolutions adopted by the Security Council on 29 July was based on the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee; the second sought an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice as to the legal consequences for States of the continued presence of South Africa in Namibia, notwithstanding the Council's resolution of 30 January.

Among other things in a statement on 11 August, the Chairman of the Special Committee on the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence drew attention to the increasing use of armed force by South Africa in the territory; the intensification of racial segregation through the forcible relocation of Africans; and the continuing series of trials of freedom fighters.

The Chairman's statement also drew the Security Council's attention to the dangerous situation prevailing in Namibia and expressed the hope that the Council would take effective steps to end the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa and to enable the people of the territory to exercise their fundamental rights.

The United Nations Council for Namibia on 12 October submitted its fifth report to the General Assembly, in which it stated that the critical situation in Namibia had further deteriorated and the danger of racial war had increased. More effective measures to ensure the removal of South Africa from the territory were called for, and it recommended that the Security Council's attention be drawn to the need for such measures. It also recommended, among other things, that the General Assembly finance from the regular budget of the United Nations a comprehensive educational and training programme for Namibians and establish a United Nations Fund for Namibia to assist Namibians who suffered persecution.

At its twenty-fifth (1970) session, the General Assembly on 9 December adopted three resolutions on the question. By the first of these (2678 (XXV)), the Assembly among other things condemned South Africa for its refusal to withdraw from the territory; called on States to co-operate with the Council for Namibia and act to obtain the withdrawal of South Africa from Namibia; and invited the Security Council to consider effective measures to that end.

By the second resolution (2679(XXV)), the Assembly decided that a comprehensive United Nations Fund for Namibia should be established and asked the Secretary-General to study and report on the matter in 1971; in the meantime, the Secretary-General was authorized to make interim grants from the regular budget to enable existing United Nations programmes to provide greater assistance, as necessary, to Namibians.

The third resolution (2680(XXV)) had to do with the question of petitions concerning Namibia.

Various other resolutions of the Assembly adopted during its 1970 session had a bearing on the question of Namibia, including, among other things, decisions on: the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples; the activities of foreign economic interests impeding implementation of the Declaration; and measures to deal with racial discrimination, apartheid and violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in southern Africa.

RELATIONS BETWEEN AFRICAN STATES AND PORTUGAL

COMPLAINTS BY GUINEA AGAINST PORTUGAL

In a telegram to the Secretary-General dated 22 November 1970, the President of the Republic of Guinea charged that his country had been the object of armed aggression by Portuguese forces that day, when mercenary commando troops had landed in the capital city of Conakry and had carried out bombing raids at several points in the city. He appealed to the United Nations for the immediate dispatch of United Nations airborne troops to co-operate with the Guinean national army in repelling the aggression.

On the same day, Guinea requested the President of the Security Council to convene a meeting of the Council, as a matter of urgency, to consider the situation in Guinea.

Portugal categorically denied Guinea's accusations in a letter of 22 November 1970 addressed to the President of the Security Council, stating that the Government of Portugal was not involved in the internal affairs of Guinea.

The letter reiterated that Portugal's policy was one of scrupulous respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of countries contiguous with its boundaries and expressed the hope that the Council would therefore reject the complaint raised by Guinea.

The Security Council considered Guinea's complaint at a meeting on 22 November; the representatives of Guinea, Mali, Mauritania, Saudi Arabia and Senegal were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

In the discussion, the representative of Guinea recalled previous complaints brought against Portugal for its acts of aggression against African countries, and drew the attention of world public opinion to the military and psychological preparations said to be taking place in special training camps in Guinea (Bissau) with the purpose of invading the national territory of the Republic of Guinea.

He then recounted the alleged events that had occurred in the Republic of Guinea on the morning of 22 November and requested that the Council should demand the immediate withdrawal of Portuguese and mercenary troops and military equipment, and should condemn the Government of Portugal. He also requested that United Nations airborne and sea-borne troops be sent immediately to restore peace and security in the area.

Mali, Mauritania, Senegal, the USSR and Zambia, among others, believed Portugal to be clearly responsible for the attack on Guinea; it should be condemned forthwith for what they felt was yet another in a series of acts of aggression committed against the independent African countries bordering on Portugal's colonial territories. They demanded that the Security Council take appropriate measures without delay.

Saudi Arabia suggested that, if it should be proved ultimately through an inquiry that Portugal was responsible for the attack against Guinea, members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) should expel Portugal from their organization.

Following a brief period of consultation, a revised draft resolution, sponsored by Burundi, Nepal, Sierra Leone, Syria and Zambia, was introduced. By it the Council would: (1) demand the immediate cessation of the armed attack against the Republic of Guinea; (2) demand the immediate withdrawal of all external armed forces and mercenaries, together with the military equipment used in the armed attack against the territory of the Republic of Guinea; (3) decide to send a special mission to the Republic of Guinea to report on the situation immediately; (4) decide that this special mission be formed after consultation between the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General; and (5) decide to maintain the matter on its agenda.

Discussing the method of forming a special mission, the United States orally proposed as a formal amendment that the special mission be formed after consultations among members of the Security Council as a whole, not solely after consultation between the President of the Council and the Secretary-General.

The United States felt that if the mission were to be composed of Government representatives and not of Secretariat officials, or even of a personal representative of the Secretary-General, it would have a political complexion and therefore should be selected after consultations among all members of the Council.

Burundi and the USSR opposed the United States amendment, saying there should be no delay in the creation of a mission.

The USSR said members should place their confidence in both the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General.

The representative of Burundi said it was his understanding that the responsibilities of the President and the Secretary-General, if properly carried out in that regard, implied consultation with members of the Council.

By a vote of 3 in favour to 0 against, with 12 abstentions, the Council did not adopt the proposed amendment.

The Council unanimously adopted the five-power text as resolution 289(1970). (For text, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Speaking after the vote, the representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom said they had voted for the resolution on the understanding that, as had been stated by Burundi—one of its sponsors—the President of the Security Council would consult members of the Council about the composition of the mission.

In a report submitted to the Security Council on 24 November, the President of the Council and the Secretary-General announced that, in accordance with Security Council resolution of 22 November 1970 (289(1970)), and following consultations between them and between the President and members of the Council, it had been decided that the Special Mission to the Republic of Guinea, which would be accompanied by a member of the Secretariat, would be composed of Colombia, Finland, Nepal (Chairman), Poland and Zambia.

During and subsequent to the Council's consideration of the question, several communications concerning the situation in the Republic of Guinea were received, some addressed to the President of the Council and others to the Secretary-General, including a letter from 37 African Member States, a telegram from the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and another telegram from the Secretary-General of OAU. The communications contained statements condemning the alleged aggression against Guinea.

On 3 December, the Special Mission submitted its report to the Security Council.

It noted that in addition to meeting with the President of Guinea shortly after their arrival in Conakry early on 25 November, members of the Special Mission had held 10 meetings, some of them in joint session with a five-man Government delegation headed by the Guinean Minister for Financial Affairs. They heard statements by the head of the Government delegation, received oral or written statements from 19 diplomatic representatives in Conakry, heard statements by the African Independence Party of Guinea and Cape Verde and by various individuals, observed the material effects of the hostilities and heard seven of the 70 prisoners, who, the Government authorities said, had been captured during the invasion. Verbatim records of the 10 meetings and written statements of Government representatives were issued as an addendum to the Special Mission's report.

According to the report, a force of 350 to 400 men, taken ashore in a well-planned and skillfully executed operation, had invaded Guinea apparently with three objectives: to overthrow the Government and replace it with dissident elements, to strike at the headquarters of the African Independence Party of Guinea and Cape Verde and to free Portuguese prisoners held in Guinea.

The report concluded that the force that had invaded the Republic of Guinea on 22 November had been assembled in Guinea (Bissau) and was composed of naval and military units of the Portuguese armed forces, acting in conjunction with Guinean dissident elements from outside of Guinea.

In a letter dated 4 December referring to the Special Mission's report, Portugal declared that its Government had neither authorized nor consented to any military operation against Guinea. It protested the Special Mission's reporting to the Council without first informing the Portuguese Government of its findings, and concluded that in the circumstances the Portuguese Government rejected any resolution seeking to establish the culpability of Portuguese entities in a situation so blatantly contrary to natural justice.

In a letter of 7 December, Portugal also rejected the conclusions of the Special Mission, saying that the Mission had relied on a one-sided source of information—the Government of the Republic of Guinea—and had decided to receive evidence from the African Independence Party of Guinea and Cape Verde, a non-Guinean, anti-Portuguese political organization which sought to spread subversion and disorder in the Portuguese territory of Guinea.

The report of the Special Mission was included in the agenda of the Security Council and was considered together with the complaint by Guinea at five further meetings of the Council held between 4 and 8 December, at which the representatives of Algeria, Cuba, Ethiopia, Haiti, India, Liberia, Mauritius, Pakistan, the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen,<sup>57</sup> the People's Republic of the Congo, Somalia, Sudan, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia were also invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

On 4 December, the representative of Guinea restated the charges that Portugal had committed treacherous aggression against Guinea. Recounting in detail the events of 22 November, he said that in appealing for United Nations troops his Government had demonstrated its faith in the norms of international law and its belief in the ability of the United Nations to safeguard the sacred principles of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of its Member States. He expressed the hope that the Council would, in the light of the conclusive findings of the report, apply appropriate measures to redress the aggression which had been suffered by his country.

Most members that participated in the discussion of the report and Guinea's complaint—among them Algeria, Cuba, Ethiopia, Finland, Haiti, India, Liberia, Mali, Poland, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Syria, Uganda and Zambia—commended the work of the Special Mission and, having taken note of its conclusions, said that Portugal should be condemned for its proved aggression.

<sup>57</sup> On 30 November 1970, Southern Yemen informed the United Nations that it had changed its name to the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen.

In particular, African members welcomed the findings of the report as confirmation of the authenticity of similar charges brought against Portugal but not given sufficient credence by the international community on the ground that they had not been supported by substantial and independent evidence.

They expressed the hope that the case would be taken seriously by the Security Council if the African people were to retain their confidence in the objectives and practices of the United Nations. Senegal expressed regret that the Security Council had not acceded to Guinea's request for the immediate dispatch of United Nations troops to the area and stated that they were not just seeking another condemnation of Portugal but an application against it of the measures contained in Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.<sup>58</sup>

On 8 December, the Council:

(1) endorsed the conclusions of the report of the Special Mission to the Republic of Guinea;

(2) strongly condemned the Government of Portugal for its invasion of the Republic of Guinea;

(3) demanded that full compensation by the Government of Portugal be paid to the Republic of Guinea for the extensive damage to life and property caused by the armed attack and invasion and requested the Secretary-General to assist the Government of the Republic of Guinea in the assessment of the extent of the damage involved;

(4) appealed to all States to render moral and material assistance to the Republic of Guinea to strengthen and defend its independence and territorial integrity;

(5) declared that the presence of Portuguese colonialism on the African continent was a serious threat to the peace and security of independent African States;

(6) urged all States to refrain from providing the Government of Portugal with any military and material assistance enabling it to continue its repressive actions against the peoples of the territories under its domination and against independent African States;

(7) called upon the Government of Portugal to apply without further delay to the peoples of the territories under its domination the principles of self-determination and independence in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);<sup>59</sup>

(8) solemnly warned the Government of Portugal that in the event of any repetition of armed attacks against independent African States, the Security Council would immediately consider appropriate effective steps or measures in accordance with the relevant provisions of the United Nations Charter;

(9) called upon the Government of Portugal to comply fully with all the resolutions of the Security Council, in particular the present resolution, in accordance with its obligations under Article 25 of the Charter;<sup>60</sup>

(10) requested all States, in particular Portugal's allies, to exert their influence on the Government of Portugal to ensure compliance with the provisions of the present resolution;

(11) requested the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General to follow closely the implementation of the present resolution, and

(12) decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

The Council noted in connexion with these decisions that it was gravely concerned that the invasion of the territory of the Republic of Guinea on 22 and 23 November had been carried out by naval and military units of the Portuguese armed forces and that such armed attacks directed against independent African States posed a serious threat to their peace and security.

The Council noted that it was mindful of its responsibility to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to international peace and security.

It also expressed its grief at the loss of life and extensive damage caused by the armed attack and invasion and it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau) to freedom and independence in accordance with the Charter and the provisions of the General Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960.<sup>61</sup>

The Council's decisions were embodied in resolution 290(1970), adopted by a vote of 11 to 0, with 4 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal by Burundi, Nepal, Sierra Leone, Syria and Zambia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the discussion of the draft resolution, the representative of Burundi said that as a result of consultations, the text was not exactly what the people of Guinea or of Africa had actually wanted. He appealed nevertheless for unanimity in supporting it as a means of fulfilling the Council's responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security.

Before the vote, France, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States said that although the sponsors of the draft resolution had agreed to delete from it any reference to Chapter VII of the Charter, and rightly did not commit the Council's future action under that chapter, some of its provisions still went further than was reasonably justified by the situation. Consequently, they declared their intention to abstain.

Speaking after the vote, the representative of Guinea said that the events that had taken place in Guinea had given warning to the Security Council to guard international peace and security, but he expressed disappointment that the Council had not invoked against Portugal the provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter.

Subsequent communications to the President of the Security Council, received between 19 and 28 December, contained charges and counter-charges and their repudiation by Guinea and Portugal concerning alleged violations of national territory, as well as a charge by Guinea that Portuguese and Senegalese forces were massing along its border. In a letter of 22 December, Senegal emphatically and indignantly protested the charge.

On 22 December, the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General, in pursuance of the Council's resolution of 8 December, jointly submitted an interim report on its implementation. The report stated that by 21 December no replies had been received in response to the Secretary-General's request in a note of 18 December for information from Member States of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies on the measures taken by them to give effect to the implementation of the resolution.

However, the report listed four communications received after the adoption of the resolution from Iraq, Nigeria, Singapore and the USSR, as well as messages from the Chairman of the Council of Ministers and the Secretary-General of OAU. All the communications contained statements condemning the aggression committed against Guinea.

The interim report contained the text of a telegram of 8 December 1970 sent by the Secretary-General to the Government of the Republic of Guinea informing it of his readiness to dispatch a team of officials to assist the Government in assessing the extent of the damage involved.

Also contained in the report was a reply from the President of the Republic of Guinea, dated 16 December, in which he advised the Secretary-General not to dispatch the appraisal mission, declaring that the moral and material damage caused to the Guinean nation could not be expressed in monetary terms and that the only reparation considered acceptable by his Government was the immediate recognition and proclamation of national independence for the African territories of Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau).

COMPLAINTS BY SENEGAL AND PORTUGAL

During 1970, Senegal and Portugal directed communications to the President of the Security Council charging each other with violations of territory and hostile acts.

On 8 July, Senegal complained that Portuguese aircraft had violated its territory on 4 July and had bombed three Senegalese villages on 6 July, inflicting heavy damage and loss of property. The letter also charged that Portuguese units had attacked the village of Sare Samba Diale on 22 June.

Portugal denied these charges in a letter of 16 July, stating also that on 21 June subversive elements from Senegal had penetrated the territory of Portuguese Guinea and had destroyed houses. Portugal further charged in another letter of 16 July that about 300 Senegalese subversive elements covered by artillery fire had attacked the area of Pirada on 12 and 13 July. As a result, it was charged, 15 people had died, 41 had been wounded and one was missing; in addition, 50 houses had been burned.

In a letter of 17 July, Senegal charged that Portuguese artillery based in Guinea (Bissau) had again shelled the village of Kolodinto-Niacko on 14 July, causing its total destruction, the death of two persons and the wounding of two. Referring to an attached annex that listed alleged frontier violations and attacks by Portuguese forces since December 1969, the letter added that the list would show that there had been practically continuous violations of Senegalese air space by Portugal. As a result of those acts, the letter went on, more than 31 persons had been killed, wounded or taken, 293 houses destroyed and 287 animals killed or taken.

Also in 1970, on 16 December, Senegal charged that for some time Portugal had been dropping leaflets inviting the population of the southern part of Senegal to rebel against their Government. It was also alleged that Portuguese soldiers had continued their intrusions into Senegalese territory, committing various acts of banditry.

COMPLAINT BY GAMBIA AGAINST PORTUGAL

In a letter dated 23 November 1970 addressed to the Secretary-General, the President of the Republic of the Gambia alleged that 38 mercenaries of Guinean origin, who had claimed to be in the pay of the Government of Portugal, had been found assembled on 30 September at Brufut in the southern part of the Gambia. They were reported preparing to board a Portuguese ship which was to transport them to Guinea (Bissau), where the group was to receive military training before infiltrating the Republic of Guinea. The Guineans were charged and sentenced in the Gambia, the letter noted.

After strongly protesting the infringement of its territorial waters by Portugal and the use of its territory by Portugal for subversive actions against a friendly State, the Gambia said it would not hesitate to take appropriate action against the invasion of its territory or that of a friendly State.

CHAPTER IX

QUESTIONS RELATING TO ASIA AND THE FAR EAST

REPRESENTATION OF CHINA IN THE UNITED NATIONS

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The question of the "Restoration of the lawful rights of the People's Republic of China in the United Nations" was included in the agenda of the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly, which opened on 15 September 1970.

The request for inclusion was submitted by Albania, Algeria, Cuba, Guinea, Iraq, Mali, Mauritania, the People's Republic of the Congo, Romania, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Syria, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen and Zambia. These States, in an explanatory memorandum of 31 August, said that the commemoration in 1970 of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations made it imperative that the lawful rights of the People's Republic of China in the Organization be recognized.

The decision to entrust the representation of the Chinese people to the so-called Republic of China, whose unlawful authorities remained installed on the Chinese territory of Taiwan solely because of the permanent presence of United States forces, had been based entirely on political considerations and constituted a deliberate refusal to recognize realities, the memorandum stated.

Furthermore, the memorandum went on, the persistent refusal to restore the seat in the United Nations to the People's Republic of China was a grave denial of justice and inconsistent with one of the essential principles of the Organization—that of universality. It was in the fundamental interest of the United Nations to put an end to this unacceptable situation, it said.

The restoration to the People's Republic of China of its lawful rights in the United Nations and in all its subsidiary bodies, the memorandum emphasized, was urgently necessary in order to strengthen the authority and prestige of the Organization, for no important international problem could be solved without the participation of the People's Republic of China. It was impossible, it said, to exclude China, a great nuclear power, from major decisions while at the same time requiring it to subscribe to the obligations imposed by agreements it had no part in concluding.

The memorandum went on to say that the recognition of the representatives of the Government of the People's Republic of China as the sole legitimate representatives of China in the United Nations implied the immediate expulsion of the representatives of the Chiang Kai-shek clique from the seat which they unjustly occupied in the Organization and in all bodies affiliated with it. To delay that inevitable move would only help further weaken the authority of the United Nations, the memorandum concluded.

The General Assembly discussed the question of the representation of China at nine plenary meetings between 12 and 20 November 1970, during which time three draft resolutions were submitted for consideration.

The first was sponsored by 19 States: Australia, Brazil, Costa Rica, Gabon, Gambia, Haiti, Japan, Lesotho, Madagascar, Malawi, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Paraguay, the Philippines, Spain, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo and the United States. By it, the Assembly would reaffirm the validity of its decision of 15 December 1961<sup>1</sup> that, in accordance with Article 18 of the United Nations Charter,<sup>2</sup> any proposal to change the representation of China was an important question (and hence required a two-thirds majority of the Members present and voting).

The second draft resolution was sponsored by 18 States: Albania, Algeria, Cuba, Guinea, Iraq, Mali, Mauritania, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Romania, Somalia, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Syria, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

By the preamble to this draft text, the Assembly would recall the principles of the United Nations Charter, consider that the restoration of the lawful rights of the People's Republic of China was essential both for the protection of the Charter and for the cause the United Nations must serve under the Charter, and recognize that the representatives of the Government of the People's Republic of China were the only lawful representatives of China to the United Nations.

By the operative paragraph of this text, the Assembly would decide to restore to the People's Republic of China all its rights, to recognize the representatives of its Government as the only lawful representatives of China to the United Nations, and to expel forthwith the representatives of Chiang Kai-shek from the place which they unlawfully occupied at the United Nations and in all the organizations related to it.

On 20 November, the Assembly voted on these two draft resolutions.

It first adopted the 19-power text as resolution 2642 (XXV), by a roll-call vote of 66 to 52, with 7 abstentions, thereby deciding that any proposal to change the representation of China was an important question, requiring a two-thirds majority for adoption. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

draft resolution, which called for the recognition of the representatives of the Government of the People's Republic of China as the only lawful representatives of China to the United Nations, and for the expulsion of the representatives of Chiang Kai-shek from the United Nations. The roll-call vote was 51 votes in favour, 49 against, with 25 abstentions; the text was therefore not adopted, having failed to receive a two-thirds majority.

After the voting on the first two draft resolutions, Tunisia submitted a third draft resolution, which was not pressed to a vote. By it, the General Assembly would have: (1) decided to include in the provisional agenda for its 1971 session an item entitled "Restoration of the lawful rights of the People's Republic of China in the United Nations" and to entrust the Secretary-General with the task of exploring the possibility of resolving this problem; and (2) requested the Secretary-General to report on that matter, if necessary, to the General Assembly at its 1971 session.

During the debate on the representation of China, the representative of Algeria, speaking on behalf of the sponsors of the 18-power draft resolution, which called for the recognition of the representatives of the People's Republic of China as the only lawful representatives of China in the United Nations, stated that the principle of universality was the main basis of the United Nations Charter, and yet, since 1949, there had been a refusal to recognize the legitimate rights in the United Nations of a power with more than 700 million inhabitants. This not only constituted a flagrant example of international injustice, he said, but also detracted from the authority and efficacy of the United Nations. The Organization thus suffered the disastrous consequences of the non-participation in its work of the People's Republic of China, he said. The 18-power draft resolution would give the General Assembly an opportunity to redress that situation by restoring the lawful rights of the People's Republic of China and by expelling immediately the representatives of Chiang Kai-shek from the United Nations and all its organs.

The representative of the Republic of China said that the Government for which he spoke was the legally constituted Government of China and the only authority which represented the authentic, peaceful aspirations of the Chinese people. Furthermore, he considered that to seat the Chinese Communist regime in the United Nations would be to negate the principles and purposes of the Charter, and to undercut the claim of the United Nations to being a moral force in the world. The interest of the Chinese Communist regime in the United Nations, he said, stemmed from a desire to transform the Organization into an instrument of its own policies, which were based on an exaltation of force, contrary to the objectives of the United Nations.

Among the arguments advanced by the sponsors of the draft resolution calling for the seating of the People's Republic of China were the following:

The Government of the People's Republic of China had, since 1949, exercised effective authority over the entire territory of China, with the exception of the province of Taiwan. The decision to exclude the People's Republic of China from the United Nations had been dictated not by the failure of that State to meet any of the conditions for representation but rather by the narrow political interests of a few Members, most notably the United States. There was only one Chinese State, the People's Republic of China, whose foreign policy was based on peaceful coexistence and international co-operation. The Republic of China was an artificial creation maintained on the Chinese province of Taiwan by United States military force. Any "two-Chinas concept" was politically and juridically unsound and could serve only to delay further the presence of the People's Republic of China in the United Nations. The People's Republic of China was a great nuclear power whose representation was vital both to the attainment of universality and to the pursuit of international peace and security. The co-operation of the People's Republic of China was especially vital in the fields of disarmament and economic development.

The representatives of Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Ceylon and Hungary, among others, presented views similar to those advanced by the sponsors of the 18-power draft resolution.

Many representatives, including those of France, India and Nigeria, saw the increasing diplomatic ties of the People's Republic of China as being a further basis for supporting its representation in the United Nations.

The USSR said that no departure from the principle of universality could be justified, for that principle was fundamental to the Organization's efforts to defend peace and security. Not only was the Organization founded on that principle, the USSR representative said, but the declaration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, unanimously adopted on 24 October 1970 (see pp. 116-17), had called the achievement of universality an important task of the United Nations. To deny that principle could only harm the prestige of the United Nations, he said.

The representative of Albania said that the United States determination to prevent a change in China's representation reflected not only the policy of hostility of the United States against the People's Republic of China, but also the American design to use the United Nations for world hegemony. He noted that a just resolution of the Chinese representation question would aid in the liberation of the Organization from the grasp of United States imperialism and Soviet revisionism.

Arguments advanced against the 18-power draft included the following:

The People's Republic of China, rather than having shown that it sought peaceful international co-operation, had pursued a policy of aggression and subversion. It had not explicitly expressed an interest in joining the Organization and assuming the obligations of membership, but rather had impugned the prestige of the United Nations and had tried to set its own conditions for participation. The representation of the People's Republic of China would not strengthen the United Nations by aiding in the solution of fundamental problems, but would weaken the Organization by undermining the basic principles of the Charter. The expulsion of the Republic of China, which was a founding Member of the United Nations and had fulfilled its obligations of membership, would contravene both the Charter and the principle of universality.

Sponsors of the 19-power draft resolution stated that the Assembly should again affirm its decision that any proposal to change the representation of China was an important question, requiring a two-thirds majority for adoption. The Assembly, they said, had recognized the vital importance of the question by its resolution of 15 December 1961,<sup>3</sup> and had reaffirmed that importance on numerous occasions. There was no basis for the Assembly to reverse those previous decisions.

The representative of the United States, among others, said that the proposal calling for the seating of the People's Republic of China and the expulsion of the Republic of China constituted a proposal for the admission and expulsion of Member States, which were defined as important questions in Article 18 of the Charter.<sup>4</sup> The important question procedure should be maintained, he stated, both to uphold the integrity of the Charter and to guarantee the essential protections which it provided for all Member States. It would be unjust and would set a most dangerous precedent, he added, to expel by a simple majority vote a Member State that had violated none of the rules of the Organization.

The representative of Colombia said that in addition to such juridical considerations, the repercussions of any decision to change the representation of China vested the question with importance.

Several Members, among them Colombia, Malaysia, Mauritius, Sierra Leone and Tunisia, indicated that while they did not specifically oppose the representation of the People's Republic of China in the United Nations, they could not support the expulsion of the Republic of China, which exercised effective authority over a territory and over a population larger than that of many Members of the Organization.

The representative of Japan said that any attempt to solve the question of the representation of China merely by expelling one of the two parties from the place it had legitimately occupied in the Organization, and by replacing it by the other, would result in an unjust solution.

Several representatives raised the possibility of the representation of both Governments in the United Nations, and in this connexion, the representative of Saudi Arabia suggested that a plebiscite should be held in Taiwan to determine whether it wished to remain independent or to merge with the People's Republic of China.

Malawi observed that the General Assembly, by its resolution of 14 December 1950<sup>5</sup> had agreed that when the question of the representation of a Member State became a subject of controversy within the Organization, it should be considered in the light of the purposes and principles of the Charter and the circumstances of each case.

Canada and Italy, among other supporters of the 19-power text—which reaffirmed that the question of the representation of China was an important question—felt that any decision to change the representation of China should be taken by a significant proportion of the membership, but that the will of the General Assembly should not necessarily be frustrated in the future by special voting procedures.

Algeria and the USSR regarded the application of Article 18<sup>6</sup> as an expedient procedural manoeuvre designed to frustrate the will of the majority and to prevent the restoration of the lawful rights of the People's Republic of China in the United Nations.

The question was not one of the admission of a new Member and the expulsion of a present Member, they said, but of having a founding Member of the Organization represented by its own Government. Only a simple majority was necessary for a decision to be taken by the Assembly, they said.

In this connexion, Romania and Uganda said that in every other case in which a change of government had occurred in the country of a Member State, representation had been granted by a simple majority vote to that Government exercising effective authority, in accordance with the rules of procedure for approving the credentials of the representatives of a Member State.

Introducing the draft resolution by which the Assembly would keep the question of the representation of China on the agenda of its 1971 session and entrust the Secretary-General with the task of exploring possible solutions to the problem (see above, p. 196), the representative of Tunisia said that such a resolution would enable the United Nations to demonstrate the interest of all its Members in the problem of the representation of China.

France, endorsing an appeal by Algeria that the Tunisian proposal be withdrawn, said that, as in the case of a study committee proposal of previous years,<sup>7</sup> the French objection to intervention by the Secretary-General stemmed from a conviction that all Members must assume their responsibilities with regard to the question in a clear-cut manner.

Acting upon the appeals of Algeria and France that the substantive debate not be reopened, the representative of Tunisia withdrew the draft resolution.

CREDENTIALS QUESTION

The question of the representation of China was also discussed earlier, in the General Assembly's Credentials Committee, which met on 26 October 1970 to examine the credentials of the representatives of Member States received up to that time. (For membership of Credentials Committee, see APPENDIX III.)

The USSR requested a separate vote on the credentials of what he referred to as the representatives of the Chiang Kai-shek regime.

The representative of the United States said that the Committee should accept the credentials of the Republic of China, as these credentials had been submitted in accordance with rule 27 of the General Assembly's rules of procedure<sup>8</sup> and there was no legal basis for challenging their propriety. He further observed that no change had occurred since the General Assembly had previously approved China's credentials and that the USSR proposal was an effort to deal with the substance of a question

<sup>8</sup>Rule 27 of the General Assembly's rules of procedure reads as follows: "The credentials of representatives and the names of members of a delegation shall be submitted to the Secretary-General if possible not less than one week before the date fixed for the opening of the session. The credentials shall be issued either by the Head of State or Government or by the Minister for Foreign Affairs."

that was already on the agenda of the Assembly.

Australia and Greece supported the view of the United States representative that the Committee had only to decide whether credentials were submitted in accordance with rule 27 and should not judge the merits of a particular country.

Voting on the USSR proposal, on 26 October, the Committee decided by 5 votes to 2, with 1 abstention, that the credentials submitted by the Republic of China were in accordance with rule 27 of the rules of procedure.

The Credentials Committee then adopted by 6 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, a proposal by its Chairman, by which the Committee recommended that the General Assembly approve its report.

On 13 November 1970, the General Assembly approved the report of the Credentials Committee (except with regard to the credentials of the representatives of South Africa). It did so in adopting, by a vote of 71 to 2, with 45 abstentions, resolution 2636 A (XXV). (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The following Member States expressed reservations specifically with regard to the credentials of China: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Burma, Ceylon, France, India, Mauritania, Nepal, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Syria, the USSR, Yemen and Yugoslavia.

The question of the credentials of the representatives of China was also raised in the Trusteeship Council in 1970. (See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

QUESTIONS PERTAINING TO KOREA

Discussions of questions pertaining to Korea at the General Assembly's twenty-fifth session, which opened on 15 September 1970, dealt, among other things, with: a proposal for the "withdrawal of United States and all other foreign forces occupying South Korea under the flag of the United Nations"; a proposal for the dissolution of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (UNCURK); and the annual report of UNCURK.

Also dealt with was the question of invitations to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea to take part in the discussion.

On 15 August 1970, the representatives of Algeria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mauritania, Mongolia, the People's Republic of the Congo, Poland, Somalia, Southern Yemen, Syria, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, subsequently joined by Guinea, Iraq and Romania, requested that a supplementary item entitled "Withdrawal of United States and all other foreign forces occupying South Korea under the flag of the United Nations" be included in the agenda of the twenty-fifth (1970) session of the Assembly "as a separate item."

An attached explanatory memorandum stated that the occupation of South Korea by those troops and their continued intensification of provocative acts against the Democratic People's Republic of Korea hindered peaceful unification of Korea by the Korean people themselves and constituted a grave threat to peace not only on the Korean peninsula but also in the whole region.

The same Members requested the inclusion in the agenda of the 1970 Assembly session, "as a separate item," of a supplementary item entitled "Dissolution of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea."

An attached explanatory memorandum stated that the illegally established Commission remained an obedient instrument of United States aggressive policies in Korea, and a major obstacle to Korean unification—a domestic matter which should be solved by means of direct negotiations between the two parties in Korea.

By a note dated 15 August 1970, the Secretary-General proposed the inclusion in the agenda of the Assembly's 1970 session, of a supplementary item entitled "Question of Korea: Report of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea."

In an attached explanatory memorandum, the Secretary-General stated that his request complied with a communication of 13 August 1970 from the Chairman of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (UNCURK), who, in submitting the report, had requested that it be transmitted to the Assembly for its consideration, should an item on the Korean question be included in the provisional agenda of the 1970 session.

On 18 September 1970, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its General Committee, included in its agenda three items combined under a single heading as follows: "Question of Korea: (a) Withdrawal of United States and all other foreign forces occupying South Korea under the flag of the United Nations; (b) Dissolution of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea; (c) Report of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea." They were allocated to the Assembly's First Committee for consideration.

The Assembly then approved the inclusion of the sub-item on the report of UNCURK by a recorded vote of 72 to 24, with 15 abstentions; it approved the title "Question of Korea" by a recorded vote of 71 to 24, with 16 abstentions. In the General Committee, on 17 September, the decision to include the sub-item on the UNCURK report was made by a vote of 16 to 5, with 3 abstentions, and the vote on the title was 10 to 5, with 9 abstentions.

During the discussion of these subjects, in the Assembly's First Committee, the Committee had before it the report submitted to the Secretary-General by UNCURK in accordance with an Assembly request of 25 November 1969<sup>9</sup>

In the report, which covered the period between 7 September 1969 and 13 August 1970, the Commission stated that, during the period, incidents of intrusion into the demilitarized zone south of the military demarcation line and of infiltration into the Republic of Korea, in violation of the Armistice Agreement, had resulted in the deaths of several personnel of the United Nations and of the Republic of Korea National Police. Although the violations were fewer than in previous years, they had taken more diverse forms with the use by North Korea of more sophisticated equipment to effect penetration by its agents into the Republic of Korea, and with its increasing efforts to infiltrate agents into the coastal areas of the Republic of Korea.

The report stated that the basic positions of the Republic of Korea had remained unchanged on how to effect Korean unification and on the role of the United Nations. It also declared that, although statements made by both parties asserted their intention not to resort to armed conflict, the continued denial by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea of the role of the United Nations to preserve peace in the area led to the conclusion that there had been no diminution in the existing tension and that consequently the possibility of a resumption of hostilities could not be excluded.

In addition to the UNCURK report, the First Committee had before it a letter from the United States to the President of the Security Council, dated 13 November 1970, transmitting a report of the United Nations Command covering North Korean violations of the 1953 Armistice Agreement during the period 1 August 1969 through 31 August 1970.

The report charged that while consistently refusing to implement proposals for Joint Observer Team investigations of alleged violations, thus rendering impossible any negotiation concerning those violations, the North Korean authorities had nonetheless repeatedly dispatched armed personnel across the Military Demarcation Line into the Republic of Korea on missions of ambushes, raids, murder, espionage and subversion in violation of pertinent provisions of the 1953 Armistice Agreement.

Relating particularly to the invitation aspects of the debate, the following communications from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and from the Republic of Korea were before the First Committee.

A letter dated 22 August 1970 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea transmitted to the Secretary-General a memorandum of 22 June 1970 in which it was stated that the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had repeatedly proclaimed that it had no intention of seeking to settle the question of unification of Korea by force. Recalling that Government's earlier proposals for a peaceful solution of the Korean question, the memorandum added that the basic position of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea continued to be that following withdrawal of the occupation forces, peaceful unification would be achieved by the establishment of a unified central government through North-South general elections on a democratic basis, without outside interference.

As a transitional measure, the memorandum went on, a confederation of North and South Korea could be established, allowing trade and economic co-operation, as well as scientific, cultural, social and personal contacts between the people of both parts of Korea. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea, it said, believed that to insist on "elections under United Nations supervision" was an infringement of Korean sovereignty, but it was prepared to consider the possibility of an international conference of countries concerned to help in achieving a peaceful settlement of the Korean question.

By a letter dated 31 August 1970, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement of his Government dated 29 August 1970, declaring that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea alone represented the real national interest and will of the people of North and South Korea and that that Government had always respected and would continue to respect the Charter of the United Nations and its objectives.

A third letter, to the President of the Assembly and to the Secretary-General, dated 18 September 1970, transmitted a memorandum of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea of 16 September, in which it was requested that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea participate without conditions in the United Nations discussion of the Korean question.

The memorandum also stated that the United Nations should repeal all the resolutions on the Korean question, which were termed illegal, take immediate steps to effect the withdrawal of United States and other foreign forces in South Korea unlawfully using the label of "United Nations Forces," and dissolve UNCURK.

A cable to the Chairman of the First Committee and to the Secretary-General, dated 26 October 1970, transmitted a statement of 25 October of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea which stated it had noted increasing support for an unconditional invitation to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to participate in the discussion of the Korean question. The statement declared that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea would never recognize any "resolution" fabricated arbitrarily by the United States at the United Nations without the participation and consent of the representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

By two letters dated 28 September and 7 October 1970, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Korea transmitted to the Secretary-General statements of his Government dated 26 September and 7 October 1970, respectively.

The earlier statement reaffirmed the Republic of Korea's continued unequivocal acceptance of the competence and authority of the United Nations within the terms of the Charter to take action on the Korean question; expressed support for UNCURK and for the United Nations forces in Korea; and called for the continuation of United Nations efforts aimed at seeking a solution to the question, while deploring the fact that North Korea had continued to deny such competence and authority of the United Nations.

The second statement declared that the Republic of Korea's policy with regard to the question of unification fully conformed to the repeatedly endorsed United Nations formula for holding free elections throughout Korea under United Nations supervision, representation to be in proportion to the indigenous population. The memorandum added that what the North Korean authorities really sought under the facade of "peaceful unification without outside interference" was to impose unification by force, inasmuch as ever since the 1953 Armistice Agreement the North Koreans had demonstrated their intention to take over the entire country by military means after the withdrawal of United Nations forces from Korea and the dissolution of UNCURK.

INVITATIONS TO PARTICIPATE IN DEBATE

In its consideration of the invitation aspects of the Korean question, which took place from 26 to 30 October 1970, the First Committee had before it two draft resolutions.

A 27-power draft resolution was submitted by Algeria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Ceylon, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Guinea, Hungary, Iraq, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Nigeria, the People's Republic of the Congo, Poland, Romania, Somalia, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Syria, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

By this text, the First Committee, considering that no question could be discussed equitably and effectively without the participation of the interested parties, and convinced that the participation of the representatives of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea was indispensable to the constructive consideration of questions relating to Korea, would have decided to invite simultaneously and without condition a representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and a representative of the Republic of Korea, as interested parties, to take part, without the right to vote, in the discussion of questions relating to Korea.

A 19-power draft resolution, which was adopted, was submitted by Australia, Belgium, Colombia, Costa Rica, Gabon, Gambia, Greece, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Panama, the Philippines, Rwanda, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo and the United States.

By the preamble of this text, the First Committee recalled its view that representatives of the Republic of Korea and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea might participate in the discussion of the Korean question provided they first unequivocally accepted the competence and authority of the United Nations within the terms of the Charter to take action on the Korean question, and considered that such participation would contribute to an equitable and effective discussion of the Korean question.

It noted, further, that the Republic of Korea had reaffirmed its unequivocal acceptance of the competence and authority of the United Nations, and it was mindful that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea continued to hold the view that the United Nations did not have the competence and authority to concern itself with the Korean question.

By the operative paragraphs of the text, the First Committee: (1) decided to invite a representative of the Republic of Korea to take part in the discussion of the Korean question without right of vote; and (2) reaffirmed its willingness to invite a representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to take part in the discussion of the Korean question without right of vote, provided it first unequivocally accepted the competence and authority of the United Nations within the terms of the Charter to take action on the Korean question.

On 30 October 1970, the First Committee rejected the 27-power draft resolution by a roll-call vote of 54 against to 40 in favour, with 25 abstentions. On the same day, the Committee adopted the 19-power draft resolution by a roll-call vote of 63 to 31, with 25 abstentions. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 3 November 1970, a statement issued on the same date was transmitted to the Chairman of the First Committee and to the Secretary-General by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. This stated that the Government condemned and rejected as entirely null and void the illegal "resolution" on the "conditional invitation," adding that the resolution had been forced through in the Committee as a result of the manoeuvrings of the United States imperialists in direct violation of United Nations principles.

Those that spoke in favour of the 27-power draft resolution that would have had the First Committee invite both parties without condition to participate in the discussion included Albania, Algeria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Ceylon, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Guinea, Hungary, Mali, Mongolia, the People's Republic of the Congo, Poland, Romania, Somalia, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Syria, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

They argued, inter alia., that while it was encouraging that the First Committee had unanimously decided to discuss the procedural question of invitations separately, the next logical step, in order to have a meaningful debate, was for the First Committee to issue simultaneous invitations to both parties without preconditions. To act otherwise would be unjust and without legal foundation and in contravention of United Nations principles and procedures, they said.

A number of speakers—among them those representing Albania, Algeria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Guinea, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Syria, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Republic and Zambia—held that the United Nations Charter assumed that the presence of parties to the dispute was essential for consideration of items. Algeria observed that the participation of one of the interested parties could not be conditioned on the acceptance of what he termed the illegal role of the United Nations in Korea.

Cuba, Somalia and Syria noted particularly that if the United Nations were to deal with the unification problem, the attendance of the North Korean representatives should be encouraged.

Those Members speaking in support of the 19-power draft resolution were Australia, Belgium, China, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Gabon, Gambia, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Paraguay, the Philippines, Swaziland, Thailand, the United Kingdom and the United States.

They argued that both logic and past debates demonstrated that the question of inviting representatives of Korea could not be separated from the substantive question of the legitimacy of the historic role and continuing responsibilities of the United Nations in Korea.

The representative of the Philippines was in favour of inviting both Governments if their participation would be helpful in achieving a unified, independent and democratic Korea; but Korea remained a special responsibility of the United Nations, for the United Nations had intervened in an unprovoked invasion against the Republic of Korea. The Republic of Korea, he said, accepted unequivocally the competence and authority of the United Nations to deal with the question of Korea, but the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had given no similar indication; instead it had defied United Nations resolutions, he said.

A number of Members—among them Australia, Belgium, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Panama, Paraguay, the Philippines, Togo and the United Kingdom—noted that since 1947 the United Nations had tried to create conditions that would enable Koreans to determine their future but that it had been obstructed in those efforts by the North Korean regime and its allies; logic required that acceptance of the Organization's role be a precondition for inviting non-members to the debate.

SUBSTANTIVE ASPECTS OF KOREAN QUESTION

In accordance with the First Committee's decision of 30 October 1970, the representative of the Republic of Korea was invited to take part in the Committee's discussion on the substantive aspects of the question of Korea, which took place from 19 to 24 November 1970.

PROPOSALS

Under the first sub-item of the Korean question, on the withdrawal of United States and all other foreign forces occupying South Korea under the flag of the United Nations, the Committee had before it a draft resolution submitted by the following 24 members: Algeria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Guinea, Hungary, Iraq, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, the People's Republic of the Congo, Poland, Romania, Somalia, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Syria, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen and Zambia.

By the preamble to this draft resolution, the General Assembly, bearing in mind that 17 years had passed since the conclusion of the Armistice Agreement in Korea, which Agreement had provided for the establishment of a durable peace and the withdrawal from that country of all foreign forces, would consider that in the northern half of Korea there were no foreign forces of any kind and would recognize that continued occupation of South Korea by United States and other foreign forces had no grounds and was therefore illegal.

It would also: confirm that at the meetings of the Security Council held on 25 and 27 June and 7 July 1950<sup>10</sup> no unanimous agreement had been reached among the permanent members of the Council in the discussion of the Korean question; consider that the occupation of South Korea by United States and other foreign forces was an obstacle to the peaceful unification of Korea; be mindful of the tense situation prevailing in the region; and consider that prompt and effective action should be taken to preserve peace and security in the Far East and Asia.

By the operative paragraph of the resolution, the Assembly would decide that all United States and other foreign military personnel deployed in South Korea under the title of "United Nations Forces" should be withdrawn in their entirety, with their weapons and equipment, within a period of six months following the adoption of the resolution.

A draft resolution submitted under the second sub-item, having to do with the dissolution of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (UNCURK) was sponsored by the same 24 Members that had proposed the text on the withdrawal of forces.

This second draft resolution would have the General Assembly consider that the problem of the unification of Korea should be settled by the Korean people themselves, in conformity with the principle of the right of self-determination of peoples, note that UNCURK had made no practical contribution to solution of the problem but created obstacles to such a solution, and decide to dissolve the Commission following the adoption of the resolution.

Another draft resolution, submitted under the third sub-item, concerning the report of UNCURK, was sponsored by 21 Members, namely: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Gabon, Gambia, Greece, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Panama, the Philippines, Rwanda, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo, the United Kingdom and the United States.

By the preambular paragraphs of this text, the Assembly would recognize that the continued division of Korea did not correspond to the wishes of the Korean people and constituted a source of tension that prevented the full restoration of international peace and security in the area; it would recall that the United Nations, under the Charter, was fully and rightfully empowered to take collective action to maintain peace and security and to extend its good offices in seeking a peaceful settlement in Korea in accordance with the principles and purposes of the Charter. It would also note it was anxious that progress be made towards creating conditions to facilitate the reunification of Korea on the basis of the freely expressed will of the Korean people, and express its concern at reports of further events in Korea that, if continued, could hamper efforts to create the peaceful conditions that were one of the prerequisites of the establishment of a unified and independent Korea.

By the operative paragraphs, the draft text provided that the General Assembly would:

- (1) reaffirm that the objectives of the United Nations in Korea were to bring about, by peaceful means, the establishment of a unified, independent and democratic Korea under a representative form of government, and the full restoration of international peace and security in the area;

(2) express the belief that arrangements should be made to achieve those objectives through genuinely free elections held in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

(3) call for co-operation in the easing of tensions in the area and, in particular, for the avoidance of incidents and activities in violation of the Armistice Agreement of 1953;

(4) note with approval the efforts made by UNCURK, in pursuit of its mandate, to encourage the exercise of restraint and the easing of tensions in the area and to secure maximum support, assistance and co-operation in the realization of the peaceful reunification of Korea;

(5) request UNCURK to pursue those and other efforts to achieve the United Nations objectives in Korea and to continue the tasks previously assigned to it, and to keep Members of the General Assembly informed regarding the results of those efforts and regarding the situation in the area; and

(6) note that the United Nations forces sent to Korea in accordance with United Nations resolutions had in greater part already been withdrawn, that the sole objective of the United Nations forces currently in Korea was to preserve the peace and security of the area, and that the Governments concerned were prepared to withdraw their remaining forces from Korea whenever such action was requested by the Republic of Korea or whenever the conditions for a lasting settlement formulated by the General Assembly had been fulfilled.

DECISIONS

On 24 November 1970, the First Committee voted on the three draft resolutions.

Both 24-power texts were rejected by the Committee.

The 24-power draft calling for the withdrawal of United States and other foreign forces occupying South Korea under the flag of the United Nations was rejected by a roll-call vote of 60 against to 32 in favour, with 30 abstentions.

The other 24-power text, asking for the dissolution of UNCURK, was rejected by a roll-call vote of 64 against to 32 in favour, with 26 abstentions.

The First Committee approved the 21-power draft resolution—which reaffirmed the objectives of the United Nations in Korea—by a roll-call vote of 69 to 30, with 23 abstentions.

On 7 December 1970, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted this text by a roll-call vote of 67 to 28, with 22 abstentions, as resolution 2668(XXV). (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

DISCUSSION

The three draft texts were discussed simultaneously in the First Committee.

Twenty representatives, mostly sponsors, spoke in support of the 24-power draft resolution calling for the withdrawal of foreign forces from Korea.

One of their arguments was that the so-called United Nations forces in Korea were in fact United States occupation troops acting independently of the United Nations and that their presence, under the absurd pretext of deterring aggression from the North, violated United Nations principles of self-determination of peoples, sovereignty and non-intervention in the domestic affairs of States. Their provocative acts under cover of the flag of the United Nations and the stepping up of military activities in South Korea were the principal obstacles to Korean unification, creating the threat of a new war in the Far East and rendering impossible any negotiations on the basis of the well-known constructive proposals for the peaceful and democratic reunification of the country submitted by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and to which South Korea had refused to reply.

The representatives of Albania, Czechoslovakia, Iraq, Mongolia, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and the United Republic of Tanzania stressed that unification was a domestic problem, to be decided by Koreans themselves.

Supporters of the other 24-power text—calling for the dissolution of UNCURK—among them Algeria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Iraq, the People's Republic of the Congo and Syria—said that the Commission was illegally created, that its reports were biased, and that they annually revived the cold-war atmosphere. The Commission was supporting puppet regimes, slandering and deliberately misinterpreting the peaceful policies of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and had itself made no constructive proposals on the subject, while ignoring the well-known practical measures suggested by the People's Republic for ensuring peaceful Korean reunification by the Korean people themselves without any outside interference.

The Commission was seen as an instrument serving only the national interests of the United States, violating United Nations principles of sovereignty, self-determination and non-interference in the domestic affairs of States and perpetuating the division of Korea.

The representatives of Iraq, Poland, Sudan, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR commented with approval on Chile's withdrawal from UNCURK, which had been communicated to the Secretary-General in a letter of 14 November 1970, stating that Chile wished to be in a position to explore other possibilities for action that might signify a worthwhile and disinterested contribution to the cause of peace in the area.

The Members who spoke in opposition to the two 24-power draft resolutions also supported the 21-power draft resolution which affirmed United Nations objectives in Korea. Among them were Australia, Canada, China, Gabon, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Philippines, Thailand and the United States.

They maintained that the common aim of the two 24-power proposals, as well as of proposals put forward by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, was the denial of the competence and authority of the United Nations to deal with the Korean question, and the abnegation by the Organization of its frequently reaffirmed pledge to help achieve peaceful reunification of Korea through the freely expressed will of its people. Thus the people would be exposed to the rule of force and the abdication by the Organization of its long-standing responsibilities under the Charter to the Korean people, including assurance of their rights to justice, sovereignty and self-determination.

These Members also said that dissolution of UNCURK and the withdrawal of United Nations forces from South Korea, whose presence was the result of collective action legitimately taken by the Security Council against North Korean aggression and at the request of the Republic of Korea, would be an invitation not to peaceful unification but to renewed aggression from the regime in the North.

They thought it essential that United Nations forces and UNCURK be maintained in South Korea as a safeguard against aggression and a guarantee of the security of the Republic of Korea, which had fully endorsed and co-operated with United Nations objectives in Korea. Furthermore, they argued, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea continued to deny United Nations competence and authority to deal with the Korean question, insisting that it was the only State for the Korean nation and that unification could only be achieved after the Government of the Republic of Korea was overthrown, in spite of its proposal for the establishment, as an interim measure, of a confederation of North and South.

The United Nations, these Members said, should continue to carry out the responsibility it had undertaken in 1950, maintain its presence in Korea, in the form of UNCURK and United Nations forces, in the interests of peace and security, and do everything it could to bring about a unified, independent and democratic Korea.

The representative of the Republic of Korea said his Government continued to support the repeatedly affirmed United Nations objectives and formulae for the reunification of Korea. The continued presence of United Nations forces and the maintenance of UNCURK, he added, were now even more essential in view of the constant repetition of acts of infiltration and provocation against the territory and sovereignty of the Republic of Korea on the part of the North Korean authorities, whose refusal to accept the authority of the United Nations to deal with the Korean question was well known. He said the creation of peaceful conditions in Korea was the most important prerequisite to the establishment of a unified, independent and democratic Korea in accordance with United Nations principles and as set out in relevant United Nations resolutions.

Several Members, including Australia, Canada, Lesotho, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Peru, appealed in their statements for a new and more flexible approach to the question of Korea by the parties concerned. It was felt that through conciliation, mediation and a thorough re-examination of the question, the United Nations could help in the peaceful solution of the Korean problem.

TEXT OF RESOLUTION BY FIRST COMMITTEE

The First Committee,

Recalling its view that representatives of the Republic of Korea and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea may participate in the discussion of the Korean question provided they first unequivocally accept the competence and authority of the United Nations within the terms of the Charter to take action on the Korean question,

Considering that such participation of the interested parties would contribute to an equitable and effective discussion of the Korean question,

Noting that the Republic of Korea, in a letter dated 28 September 1970 from its Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Secretary-General has again reaffirmed its unequivocal acceptance of the competence and authority of the United Nations within the terms of the Charter to take action on the Korean question,

Mindful that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea continues to hold the view that the United Nations has neither the competence nor the authority to concern itself in the Korean question, as evidenced by its statements on 22 June, 29 August and 16 September 1970,

1. Decides to invite a representative of the Republic of Korea to take part in the discussion of the Korean question without right of vote;

2. Reaffirms its willingness to invite a representative of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to take part in the discussion of the Korean question without right of vote, provided that that country first unequivocally accepts the competence and authority of the United Nations within the terms of the Charter to take action on the Korean question.

The General Assembly,

Having noted the report of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea, signed at Seoul, Korea, on 13 August 1970,

Reaffirming its resolution 2516 (XXIV) of 25 November 1969 and its previous resolutions on the question of Korea,

Recognizing that the continued division of Korea does not correspond to the wishes of the Korean people and constitutes a source of tension which prevents the full restoration of international peace and security in the area,

Recalling that the United Nations, under the Charter, is fully and rightfully empowered to take collective action to maintain peace and security and to extend its good offices in seeking a peaceful settlement in Korea in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Anxious that progress be made towards creating conditions which would facilitate the reunification of Korea on the basis of the freely expressed will of the Korean people,

Concerned at reports of further events in Korea which, if continued, could hamper efforts to create the peaceful conditions which are one of the prerequisites of the establishment of a unified and independent Korea,

1. Reaffirms that the objectives of the United Nations in Korea are to bring about, by peaceful means, the establishment of a unified, independent and democratic Korea under a representative form of government, and the full restoration of international peace and security in the area;

2. Expresses the belief that arrangements should be made to achieve these objectives through genuinely free elections held in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

3. Calls for co-operation in the easing of tensions in the area and, in particular, for the avoidance of incidents and activities in violation of the Armistice Agreement of 1953;

4. Notes with approval the efforts made by the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea, in pursuit of its mandate, to encourage the exercise of restraint and the easing of tensions in the area and to secure maximum support, assistance and co-operation in the realization of the peaceful reunification of Korea;

5. Requests the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea to pursue these and other efforts to achieve the objectives of the United Nations in Korea, to continue to carry out the tasks previously assigned to it by the General Assembly and to keep members of the Assembly informed on the situation in the area and on the results of these efforts through regular reports submitted to the Secretary-General, and to the General Assembly as appropriate;

6. Notes that the United Nations forces which were sent to Korea in accordance with United Nations resolutions have in greater part already been withdrawn, that the sole objective of the United Nations forces at present in Korea is to preserve the peace and security of the area, and that the Governments concerned are prepared to withdraw their remaining forces from Korea whenever such action is requested by the Republic of Korea or whenever the conditions for a lasting settlement formulated by the General Assembly have been fulfilled.

COMMUNICATIONS CONCERNING ALLEGED AGGRESSION AGAINST THE TERRITORY AND CIVILIAN POPULATION OF CAMBODIA

During 1970, the Government of Cambodia addressed some 60 communications to the President of the Security Council, alleging aggressive actions by foreign troops in its territory.

These communications were of two types: (i) those relating to charges of aggressive actions committed by elements of United States-South Viet-Nameese forces operating in the territory of Cambodia; and (ii) those beginning on 30 March 1970, alleging aggressive activities on the part of elements of "Viet-Cong and North Viet-Nameese forces" operating in the territory of Cambodia. (See also pp. 215-19.)

COMPLAINTS RELATING TO UNITED STATES AND SOUTH VIET-NAMESE FORCES

In 1970, Cambodia addressed frequent communications to the President of the Security Council charging that armed forces of the United States and South Viet-Nam had committed numerous aggressive actions and atrocities involving violations of Cambodian territory, air space and territorial waters.

In many of these 40 letters, Cambodia called upon the Governments of the United States and the Republic of Viet-Nam to take adequate steps to prevent the recurrence of such deliberate hostile acts against the peaceful Khmer people of Cambodia and to pay compensation for the victims.

The most frequent complaint related to the allegations that elements of the United States-South Viet-Nameese armed forces had fired with various weapons across the Cambodian frontier inflicting death and injuries on villagers and causing damage to dwellings, livestock and other property. They had crossed into Cambodian territory, often supported by armoured cars and helicopters, firing on villagers and police posts, robbing and abducting inhabitants and livestock, and planting mines and booby traps which had resulted in numerous deaths and injuries among the civilian population of Cambodia.

There were also complaints of shelling by United States-South Viet-Nameese naval vessels which frequently penetrated Cambodian waters and sometimes disembarked commandos who often killed and abducted villagers and fishermen and laid anti-personnel mines in Cambodian territory.

The letters contained similar charges against airborne elements of the United States-South Viet-Nameese air force. Helicopters and other aircraft belonging to those two Governments were said to have frequently fired on police and military posts of Cambodia, as well as on its villages and livestock, with machine-gun and rocket fire, and to have landed commandos who fired on and abducted villagers, sometimes subjecting them to lengthy questioning and physical torture. There were numerous charges that death and injury to villagers, policemen and soldiers had resulted from such unprovoked, premeditated and completely unjustifiable land, sea and air attacks on the part of elements of the United States-South Viet-Nameese air force.

On occasion, the letters charged that the intruding airplanes had dropped defoliants and poisonous chemicals that had caused sickness among the population.

The representative of the United States addressed a letter dated 9 March 1970 to the President of the Security Council containing the text of a communication that his Government had conveyed to the Government of Cambodia on 9 February 1970, concerning charges made against the United States by Cambodia in letters to the Security Council dated 3 and 18 December 1969. Those charges were in connexion with reported bombing attacks carried out by United States-South Viet-Nameese aircraft on 16 and 17 November 1969 against Cambodian defence posts in Dak Dam.

The United States Government declared that, as noted in a letter dated 11 July 1969 addressed to the President of the Security Council, it had responded directly through diplomatic channels to protests by Cambodia concerning alleged violations of its territory by forces of the United States located in the Republic of Viet-Nam, and that in such cases full investigations had been undertaken, pertinent facts conveyed to the Cambodian Government, and in those instances in which it appeared that an incursion into Cambodian territory by United States forces had occurred, the United States Government had taken the appropriate steps of apology and redress.

The United States Government also expressed its profound concern over violations of Cambodian territory, and called upon the Government of Cambodia to take the necessary measures to prevent use of its territory by "Viet-Cong-North Viet-Nameese forces." In the case of Dak Dam, it continued, the United States air strikes were directed in immediate self-defence at "Viet-Cong-North Viet-Nameese" artillery positions which had been in close proximity to the village, with every effort being made to avoid damage to the village or the Cambodian post. The United States further expressed its deep regret over the loss of life and the casualties incurred, and it offered indemnities.

COMMUNICATIONS ALLEGING ATTACKS BY "VIET-CONG AND NORTH VIET-NAMESE FORCES"

Complaints against United States and Republic of Viet-Nam forces ceased by early April 1970, and for the first time, Cambodia began to submit complaints alleging aggressive actions by "Viet-Cong and North Viet-Nameese forces."

Beginning on 30 March 1970, Cambodia addressed frequent communications to the President of the Security Council charging numerous violations of its territorial sovereignty on the part of armed units of "Viet-Cong and North Viet-Nameese forces."

In some 40 communications, the most frequent complaint related to armed incursions on the part of those forces into Khmer territory, attacks upon military posts, the engagement of Khmer defence forces in numerous clashes and the occupation of Khmer territory at several points in the country. As a result of those attacks, scores of Khmer nationals, both civilian and military, including women and children, were reported to have died, and hundreds of buildings were allegedly set on fire and destroyed.

In a letter dated 30 April, the representative of Cambodia transmitted to the President of the Security Council the text of a communique issued by his Government, denying charges in the foreign press concerning persecution of Viet-Nameese nationals in Cambodia.

The communique stated that the fight of the Khmer National Armed Forces against "the Viet-Cong-North Viet-Nameese invaders" had caused heavy losses of life and property and listed the following casualties among the Khmer population: 725 dead and missing in Kompong Cham; 1,252 dead and missing in Svay Rieng; 734 dead and missing in Kandal; 436 dead and missing in Takeo; 225 dead and missing in Kratie and Mondolkiri; and 182 dead and missing in Kampot. In addition, 700 buildings allegedly had been set on fire or destroyed in the attacks.

The communique further stated that the death of any Viet-Nameese nationals living in Cambodia in combat areas had been due to the hazards of the war, to the tactics employed by the "Viet-Cong" of mingling with the civilian population in localities where there were Viet-Nameese inhabitants, and to some of the latter who actively supported "Viet-Cong and North Viet-Nameese invaders." The communique concluded by requesting international support and reactivation of the International Control Commission.

One letter from Cambodia to the President of the Security Council, dated 6 August 1970, charged that the Khmer population was being subjected to extreme suffering through the relentless and overt criminal attacks by "North Viet-Nameese and Viet-Cong" who allegedly had killed everybody in their path and had destroyed such public buildings as hospitals, schools, monasteries, historic monuments, roads, bridges and houses of no possible military value.

In an earlier letter dated 22 June, the representative of Cambodia transmitted to the Security Council the text of a message dated 11 June 1970 from his Government, charging that on 28 May 1970 troops of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and the National Liberation Front of South Viet-Nam had penetrated into the Khmer provinces of Kompong Thom and subsequently into Siem Reap, near Thailand, where many monuments were preserved, and had attacked the city and the airfield in the immediate vicinity of the historic monuments at Angkor.

The message expressed the deep concern of the Cambodian Government and its desire to alert world opinion, lest there should be a repetition of the acts of vandalism and sacrilege allegedly committed some days earlier by the invading "Viet-Cong and North Viet-Nameese forces" in the Khmer provinces of Takeo, Kam-pot and Kompong Cham. The message recalled that Cambodia, as a contracting party to the 1954 Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the event of Armed Conflict, was making an urgent appeal to all countries, particularly the signatories to the Convention, to adopt appropriate measures to assist Cambodia in ensuring that its artistic and cultural heritage was respected and safeguarded.

Some letters stated that in their fight against the "Viet-Cong and North Viet-Nameese invaders" the Khmer forces had been assisted by "friendly aircraft" and by "friendly forces" brought in by helicopter.

One letter dated 21 December reported that clashes had occurred on Khmer territory between the armed forces of the Republic of Viet-Nam, which were also characterized as friendly forces, and "Viet-Cong-North Viet-Nameese forces," resulting in casualties on both sides.

Several letters claimed that many of the weapons captured by the Khmer troops from elements of the "Viet-Cong-North Viet-Nameese forces" had been of Chinese and USSR manufacture and that such military assistance had given a decided advantage to those forces over the Khmer national forces, which were equipped with a variety of weapons, some dating back to the First World War.

In several of its letters, the Government of Cambodia also appealed to the United Nations and to the Security Council to exercise its functions in the circumstances relating to Cambodia and expressed surprise that the Security Council, whose role was to assist a Member State which was a victim of clear-cut aggression, had remained strangely indifferent in the face of the tragedy affecting the Khmer people.

In nearly all of its communications, the Government of Cambodia declared its firm protest against what it described as the illegal and permanent occupation of Khmer territory, followed by savage attacks allegedly committed by the "Viet-Cong-North Viet-Nameese forces" against a neutral and peace-loving country—to which they had no right and with which they had no ethnic affinity—in flagrant violation of the United Nations Charter, international law and the 1954 Geneva Agreements.

The Government of Cambodia further stated that it held the Government of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and the so-called Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Viet-Nam entirely responsible for all the very serious consequences resulting from that situation, and reserved the right to take any necessary action to defend its independence, neutrality, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

(For details of communications concerning military activities in and around Viet-Nam and on the territory of Cambodia between 30 April and 30 June 1970, see pp. 215-19.)

COMMUNICATIONS CONCERNING THE SITUATION IN AND AROUND THE AREA OF VIET-NAM

Of the six communications addressed to the President of the Security Council and to the Secretary-General during 1970 dealing with the events and the situation in and around the area of Viet-Nam, three were transmitted by the United States, two by the USSR, and one by Indonesia. The Indonesian communication transmitted a letter from the Mission of the Special Representatives of the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia, Japan and Malaysia, the three-nation team appointed by the Conference of Foreign Ministers, held in Djakarta, Indonesia, on 16 and 17 May 1970, to discuss the critical situation arising out of events in Cambodia.

Although all six communications dealt in general with the situation in Viet-Nam, they were concerned primarily with the circumstances of, and the subsequent developments relating to, the undertaking of significant military activities on the territory of Cambodia by the armed forces jointly of the United States and of the Republic of Viet-Nam during the period 30 April through 30 June 1970. (See also pp. 212-14.)

In a letter of 5 May 1970 to the President of the Security Council, the United States representative alleged aggression against the Republic of Viet-Nam by North Viet-Name forces based in Cambodia and said that for five years North Viet-Nam, against the wishes of the Government of Cambodia and in violation of Cambodian neutrality, had maintained supply points and bases in Cambodia for military operations against the Republic of Viet-Nam.

In recent months, he said, North Viet-Name forces had expanded these base areas, had moved to link those bordering South Viet-Nam into one continuous chain and had pushed other bases deeper into the territory of Cambodia. North Viet-Nam had also stepped up guerrilla actions into South Viet-Nam and was concentrating forces inside Cambodia for further massive attacks into South Viet-Nam.

Accordingly, the letter explained, the United States and South Viet-Name forces had been required to take appropriate measures of self-defence, measures that were restricted in extent, purpose and time, and confined to border areas occupied by "Viet-Cong and North Viet-Name forces" and over which the Government of Cambodia no longer exercised effective control. When the purpose of these measures—which was to destroy stocks and communications equipment used for aggression against the Republic of Viet-Nam—was accomplished, United States forces and those of the Republic of Viet-Nam would promptly be withdrawn, the letter said.

Reiterating the United States continued respect for the sovereignty, independence, neutrality and territorial integrity of Cambodia, the letter concluded by referring to an address of 30 April by the President of the United States, in which he said that the purpose of defensive measures taken by the armed forces of the United States on the territory of Cambodia was to end the war in Viet-Nam, and that every possible effort would be made to achieve that end through negotiation rather than on the battlefield.

The text of a statement of 4 May 1970 by the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR was transmitted in a letter dated 8 May 1970 addressed to the President of the Security Council by the representative of the USSR. According to the Chairman's statement, the invasion of Cambodia by United States forces on the night of 30 April 1970 had created a new hotbed of war in South-East Asia.

Furthermore, the statement declared, the United States had lately been carrying out massive air raids on certain areas of North Viet-Nam, thereby grossly violating the obligation it had assumed in accordance with the understanding that had formed the basis for quadrilateral negotiations.

The statement went on to say that by unleashing war in Cambodia and resuming large-scale bombings of inhabited areas of North Viet-Nam, the United States President was rendering null and void the decision of his predecessor to end as of November 1968 all aerial bombing and other actions involving the use of force against North Viet-Nam.

The United States attempt to justify its military invasion of Cambodia by alleging that it was essential in order to save the lives of United States soldiers in South Viet-Nam was strange logic, the USSR statement said: the aggressor, having first invaded the territory of one country, then argued that somebody was threatening the lives of his soldiers and that such a threat was in his view sufficient reason for invading the territory of another neighbouring country. Such a policy, said the USSR, constituted the most flagrant arbitrariness in international affairs and had to be resolutely condemned.

Even further from the truth, said the USSR, were allegations that the transfer of hostilities to the territory of Cambodia would hasten the end of the war in Viet-Nam. It had been made to appear, it said, that expansion of the theatre of war in Indo-China would serve to reduce the scale of the fighting rather than to increase it, but the real purpose underlying the United States policy in South-East Asia was to liquidate progressive regimes in the countries of that region, to stifle national liberation movements, to hamper the social progress of the peoples and to impose colonialist methods in order to subordinate the foreign and domestic policies of the States of Indo-China to its own military and strategic interests.

In the view of the USSR, the United States invasion of Cambodia had made it obvious that there was a link between the subversive activities of certain United States agencies and the coup d'etat in Cambodia; those United States agencies and their agents were trying to create hostilities between the Khmer people and the people of Viet-Nam and were using every means possible to set the people of Asia against one another.

Further, according to the statement, all States that cherished peace and freedom should show responsibility for the further course of events and a determination to assist in rebuffing the aggressor. The actual foreign policy measures of the United States, like the invasion of Cambodia, appeared to the USSR to be radically different from previous declarations and assertions about trying to stop the war in Viet-Nam and bring the United States soldiers back home.

The statement added that the USSR for its part had always respected the neutrality and independence of Cambodia and its sovereignty and territorial integrity, that that respect had motivated its strong condemnation of the United States intervention in Cambodia and that the USSR would draw the appropriate conclusions for its policy from the course of action of the United States in South-East Asia.

The letter of 18 June from the Special Representatives of the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia, Japan and Malaysia, transmitted by Indonesia on 19 June to the President of the Security Council, stated that the Djakarta Conference, held on 16 and 17 May 1970, was convened because of increasing anxiety among the participating countries about developments in Cambodia, which in their view could have dangerous and unpredictable consequences for peace and stability in South-East Asia. (The participating countries were Australia, Indonesia, Japan, Laos, Malaysia, New Zealand, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, the Republic of Viet-Nam, Singapore and Thailand.)

The letter said that to seek peaceful means to enable the Khmer people to maintain their national sovereignty, neutrality and territorial integrity, which was the objective of the Conference, the Mission of the three Special Representatives had decided to hold discussions with the President and members of the Security Council, the Secretary-General, the Co-Chairmen of the 1954 Geneva Conference on the Problem of Restoring Peace in Indo-China, the member States of the International Control Commission, and others.

Although aware of the limitations of the United Nations to act in the matter, the Mission felt the current developments in the area could result in a situation making a peaceful settlement even more difficult. The letter noted that in its consultations with members of the Security Council, the Mission had urged that they bring their collective influence to bear on the parties concerned to seek a peaceful settlement of the conflict, by urging the Co-Chairmen and participants in the 1954 Geneva Conference and the members of the International Control Commission on Cambodia to reactivate the Commission and to consult with a view towards convening an international conference on Indo-China.

In an attached communique concerning the results of the Djakarta Conference, the participating Foreign Ministers noted with deep concern the serious situation in that country which, if allowed to continue, would further endanger peace and stability in South-East Asia.

They were unanimous in their view that the future of Cambodia should be determined by the Khmer people themselves, without any external interference and in conformity with the declared policy of Cambodia of strict neutrality and non-alignment.

In the light of these considerations, the Ministers emphatically urged that all acts of hostilities be stopped forthwith, that all foreign forces be withdrawn from the territory of Cambodia, and that an early decision be taken to convene an international conference to find a just, peaceful and effective solution to the present situation in Cambodia.

The United States representative addressed a further letter to the President of the Security Council on 1 July 1970; referring to his communication of 5 May 1970 concerning military measures taken by the United States on the territory of Cambodia, he informed the Council that United States ground forces had been withdrawn from Cambodian territory, inasmuch as the objective of destroying military equipment and supplies used in aggression against the Republic of Viet-Nam had been achieved.

The letter stated that the root of armed conflict in Cambodia was the illegal use by "Viet-Cong and North Viet-Nameese forces" of the territory of Cambodia in violation of that nation's independence, neutrality and territorial integrity, which had been guaranteed in the 1954 Geneva Agreement to which North Viet-Nam was a party.

Although the immediate threat posed by the expanded activity of "Viet-Cong and North Viet-Nameese forces" in that country had been reduced, the letter said, "Viet-Cong and North Viet-Nameese forces" remained in Cambodia in pursuance of their attack against the Republic of Viet-Nam. Therefore, the letter went on, the United States, with the Cambodian Government's approval, would conduct air missions against North Viet-Nameese efforts to move supplies and personnel through Cambodia and to re-establish bases for use in the Viet-Nam conflict. Such missions, it said, were appropriate measures of self-defence against continuing attacks against the Republic of Viet-Nam being carried on from the territory of Cambodia.

The letter concluded by saying that when the President of the United States had announced the withdrawal of ground forces, he had reiterated United States support for the sovereignty, independence, neutrality and territorial integrity of Cambodia and for the objective of a peace in which the peoples of Indo-China could develop their own societies and determine their own political future without outside interference.

On 21 July 1970, by a letter addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of the USSR transmitted a statement of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR concerning "the expansion of the aggression by United States imperialism in Indo-China." The statement declared that the first session of the Supreme Soviet had noted that the United States had extended its military operations to Cambodia and threatened to resume bombing of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam. The Supreme Soviet considered such actions a direct continuation of aggression in Viet-Nam and armed intervention in Laos on the part of the United States.

Imperialist propaganda concerning the withdrawal of United States troops from Cambodia, the statement continued, could not disguise the fact that the United States and its allies intended to continue to intervene against that State, inasmuch as the crushing of the national liberation movement of the peoples of the countries of the Indo-China peninsula, the imposition of neo-colonialist regimes in those countries and the conversion of all of Indo-China into a strategic bridge-head for the United States in South-East Asia constituted the objectives of United States policies in Viet-Nam, Cambodia and Laos. Moreover, according to the statement, the United States was preventing the various political groups in Laos from reaching a political settlement based on the programme set forth in a statement of 6 March 1970 of the Central Committee of the Patriotic Front of Laos.

The statement of the Supreme Soviet said further that in an effort to reduce losses among United States forces, the United States was making persistent attempts to shift to Asian peoples the burden of military actions against Asian peoples.

The statement emphasized that the USSR, in accordance with its international obligations, was furnishing assistance of every kind to national liberation movements. It condemned the aggressive actions in Indo-China on the part of the United States and was demanding their complete cessation.

According to the statement, the USSR was appealing to members of parliaments of all countries and to all men of goodwill to protest against those aggressive actions and to call for the immediate, complete and unconditional withdrawal from the area by the armed forces of the United States and its allies, with the granting to the peoples of Indo-China of the right to choose their own way of life without foreign intervention.

The Supreme Soviet's statement also maintained that the United States should be compelled to comply strictly with the Geneva Agreements of 1954 and 1962, and to abide by the universally recognized rules of international law.

A statement of 7 October 1970 by the President of the United States, in which he set forth new United States proposals for a negotiated settlement in Indo-China, was transmitted to the Secretary-General by a letter dated 8 October 1970 from the United States.

The President's proposals were that all armed forces throughout Indo-China should accept a cease-fire and remain in the positions they then held. This would be considered a "cease-fire-in-place," which, the President said, though not in itself an end to the conflict, would accomplish the goal of putting an end to the killing.

The United States President said that his proposal for a cease-fire-in-place, which was being put forward without pre-conditions, should be the subject for immediate negotiations and should set the stage for agreements on other matters. He added that the general principles that should apply were as follows: a cease-fire must be effectively supervised by international observers as well as by the parties themselves; it should not be the means by which either side should build up its strength by an increase in outside combat forces in any of the nations of Indo-China; it should encompass not only the fighting in Viet-Nam but also the related conflicts in all of Indo-China; finally, the proposed cease-fire should be part of a general move to end the war in Indo-China.

The proposals by the United States President suggested that after the cease-fire, an Indo-China peace conference to deal with the conflict in all three States of Indo-China should be held. However, until such time as a broader international conference had reached the stage of serious negotiations, the Paris peace talks could remain as the primary forum for reaching a negotiated settlement.

The President recalled that in the previous 20 months United States troop numbers in South Viet-Nam had been reduced by 165,000 men and that during the spring of 1971 those troop withdrawals would total more than 260,000 men. He said the United States was ready to negotiate an agreed time-table for complete withdrawals as part of an over-all settlement.

The United States President further proposed that the other side join in a search for a political settlement that truly met the aspirations of all the South Viet-Nameese. He stated that three principles governed the United States approach to that question: the United States sought a political solution that reflected the will of the South Viet-Nameese people; a fair political solution should reflect the existing relationship of political forces; the United States would abide by the outcome of the political process agreed upon.

The President said that the demand by the other side to exclude from government whom-ever they wished was unacceptable. He said the United States would stand firm for the right of all the South Viet-Nameese people to determine for themselves the kind of government they wished; at the same time, he recognized that the only kind of settlement that would endure was one both sides had an interest in preserving.

Finally, the United States President proposed that all prisoners of war, without exception and without condition, be immediately released to return to the place of their choice, and that all journalists and other civilian victims of the conflict also be released immediately, not only for humanitarian reasons but also to establish good faith and improve prospects for negotiation.

COMMUNICATIONS CONCERNING RELATIONS BETWEEN CAMBODIA AND THAILAND

During the period between January and March of 1970, Cambodia addressed six letters to the President of the Security Council charging violations of its territory, air space and territorial waters by Thailand, and calling upon Thailand to prevent the repetition of such acts. On 19 February 1970, the President of the Security Council received a communication from Thailand, charging acts of aggression by Cambodian armed forces and paramilitary personnel.

The charges by Cambodia related to armed incursions by Thai elements who reportedly had raided and looted villages and had been discovered on Cambodian territory engaged in illicit activities. One Cambodian letter dated 15 January 1970 charged that on 20 December 1969, a helicopter of the Thai forces had violated Cambodian air space over the area of Yeang Dang Kum, in the district of Sisophon, Battambang.

With respect to violations of its territorial waters, Cambodia complained in letters of 10 and 18 February 1970 about clandestine fishing by Thai junks which, it said, often had fired on Cambodian sea patrols when challenged. In letters of 5 February and 25 March 1970, Cambodia alleged that the Thais had attacked military posts and border patrols and had laid mines in Cambodian territory, resulting in injury to Cambodian nationals.

In reply to a letter from Thailand dated 28 August 1969 to the President of the Security Council, reporting acts of aggression by Cambodia during the period between 5 May and 19 July 1969,<sup>11</sup> Cambodia concluded, in a letter dated 12 March 1970, that these Thai complaints were only another ruse by the Thai Government to mislead the United Nations and the world public in order to conceal its own acts of aggression against Cambodia and its policy of interference in the internal affairs of Cambodia.

Thailand charged in a letter of 19 February 1970 that between June and November 1969, Cambodian armed forces and paramilitary personnel had committed a series of aggressive and thoroughly unprovoked acts against Thai villagers along the Thai-Cambodian border areas. Those aggressive acts, the letter said, included firing on Thai fishing boats well within Thai territorial waters and at times seizing them by force, recklessly firing upon Thai villages, and placing mines on Thai territory.

The letter stated that those actions often resulted in death and serious injury to peaceful Thai crewmen and fishermen and innocent Thai villagers, and caused severe damage to Thai property. The Government of Thailand had protested strongly against those acts and had urged the Cambodian Government to take the necessary measures to put an end to them.

COMMUNICATIONS CONCERNING THE INDIA-PAKISTAN QUESTION

During 1970, India and Pakistan addressed further letters to the President of the Security Council on the India-Pakistan question.<sup>12</sup>

On 15 September, the representative of Pakistan transmitted the text of a note dated 29 August 1970 from Pakistan to India protesting a statement made by the Prime Minister of India on 14 July 1970, in which she was reported to have said that the accession of Kashmir was part of India's history, that history could not be reversed, and that the question of Kashmir had been decided once and for all. Pakistan's note said that in so stating the Prime Minister of India had disregarded international commitments entered into by India as a result of its acceptance of the resolutions of the United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan (UNCIP) of 13 August 1948 and 5 January 1949,<sup>13</sup> which had stated explicitly that the question of accession of the State of Jammu and Kashmir to India or Pakistan would be decided through the democratic method of a plebiscite.

Writing again, on 30 November, the representative of Pakistan forwarded the text of a note sent by Pakistan to India on 9 November 1970, which referred to an Indian note of the previous month dated 19 October. Pakistan reiterated that the Indian position taken in that note—that the State of Jammu and Kashmir was an integral part of India—was in complete violation of international agreements on Jammu and Kashmir to which India was committed.

The Pakistan note went on to say that a unilateral attempt by India to disown its international commitment could not in any way affect the continuing force and validity of the international agreements on Kashmir to which India, Pakistan and the United Nations remained parties. In its note, Pakistan recalled that Indian leaders were on record as having stood committed to holding a plebiscite in Jammu and Kashmir to determine its future.

By a letter dated 23 December 1970, the representative of Pakistan forwarded the text of a note of 16 December 1970 in which Pakistan had protested to India about the adoption of a bill by the Indian Parliament on 3 December 1970, seeking to extend 19 Central Labour Laws to the occupied State of Jammu and Kashmir. Pakistan considered that this and other similar measures taken by India were designed to dilute the special status of the State of Jammu and Kashmir and finally to integrate that disputed territory with India, in violation of United Nations Security Council resolutions of 30 March 1951<sup>14</sup> and 24 January 1957,<sup>15</sup> which had enjoined India and Pakistan to refrain from any action likely to prejudice a just and peaceful settlement.

Writing to the President of the Security Council on 30 December 1970, the representative of India forwarded the texts of two notes by India sent in reply to Pakistan's notes of 29 August and 9 November 1970.

In one, dated 19 October 1970, India said that the statement made by its Prime Minister was a reiteration of statements made by Indian authorities on several occasions in the past. Since the State of Jammu and Kashmir had acceded to India in 1947 and was part of it, Pakistan's attempt to distort or misrepresent that situation was regrettable, and India was obliged to reject it, the note said.

The Indian note then said that although the State of Jammu and Kashmir was an integral part of India, Pakistan had continued to remain in illegal occupation of about 32,500 square miles of the State; the only issue to be settled in Kashmir, therefore, was the situation arising out of that illegal occupation by Pakistan.

The note concluded by stating that India was of the view that the issues between it and Pakistan could be settled bilaterally and through peaceful means, and for that reason it had expressed its willingness on many previous occasions to establish contact and normalize relations with Pakistan.

In its second note, of 19 December 1970, India reiterated its stand that the State of Jammu and Kashmir had in its entirety become part of India as a result of its accession to India in 1947 and that Pakistan was therefore illegally occupying part of India. The note also stated that Pakistan's views with regard to the UNCIP resolutions of 13 August 1948 and 5 January 1949 were entirely without substance.

QUESTIONS CONCERNING LATIN AMERICA

COMMUNICATIONS CONCERNING RELATIONS BETWEEN EL SALVADOR AND HONDURAS

On 19 June 1970, the Assistant Secretary-General of the Organization of American States (OAS) transmitted to the Secretary-General a resolution adopted on 9 June 1970 by the Thirteenth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of OAS. The resolution concerned an agreement reached by the Foreign Ministers of Central America on a plan for establishing a security zone for purposes of pacification in the border area between El Salvador and Honduras, where there had been armed conflict between the two countries in 1969.<sup>1</sup>

The resolution expressed satisfaction that the Governments of the two countries had accepted the plan and confidence that they could settle their problems through the Bilateral Working Group established in accordance with the recommendation of the Meeting of Central American Foreign Ministers held on 3 December 1969.

COMMUNICATIONS CONCERNING RELATIONS BETWEEN GUYANA AND VENEZUELA

In a letter dated 24 February 1970, Guyana drew the attention of the Security Council to a situation which, it said, had arisen as a result of attacks by Venezuelan military forces against its territorial integrity. The letter stated that on 19, 21 and 22 February 1970, Venezuelan military forces on the island of Ankoko had levelled machine-gun and mortar attacks on a police station, a defence force camp and an air strip at Eteringbang, on the Guyana side of the border. During the attacks, the Guyanese forces had at no stage fired in retaliation. The attacks, which had coincided with the official celebrations marking the inauguration of the Guyana Republic, were followed by a Venezuelan military build-up at strategic points along the border, and by an increase in Venezuelan subversive activity among the Amerindians of Guyana. Guyana had protested against those acts and had demanded reparations from Venezuela.

In a letter to the Security Council dated 6 March 1970, Venezuela stated that since December 1969 Guyanese soldiers stationed at Eteringbang had sporadically fired at Venezuelan posts. The Guyanese Government sought to resolve its internal political problems by making Venezuela appear as an aggressor in the eyes of the international community, the letter continued. Venezuela, however, had not encouraged any hostile sentiments towards Guyana. On the contrary, its friendly attitude towards Guyana was clear from the statements made by the President and the Foreign Minister of Venezuela on the occasion of Guyana's independence. Venezuela, however, would continue its efforts, within the framework of international rules to recover the territory which it had unjustly lost. For these reasons, Venezuela had rejected the Guyanese protest.

In a further letter, dated 16 March, Guyana stated that Venezuela, in its reply, had advanced various unspecified allegations of hostile acts by Guyanese forces, about which Venezuela had made no mention either before Guyana's complaint of 25 February 1970 or in talks between the two countries. Moreover, Venezuela had not specifically denied responsibility for its acts of aggression but had implied that they had been in response to Guyanese initiative. The Guyanese Government considered that steps were necessary, through appropriate international machinery, to prevent the recurrence of similar incidents. Accordingly, it would present to Venezuela proposals designed to maintain peace along the Guyanese-Venezuelan border and to establish responsibility for any further breaches of the peace.

In a letter dated 9 April 1970, Venezuela formally rejected the interpretations and claims made by Guyana and reiterated its position as set forth in its letter of 6 March 1970 to the Security Council.

CHAPTER XI

THE SITUATION IN THE MIDDLE EAST

Various aspects of the situation in the Middle East were of continuing concern to United Nations bodies during 1970.

Communications and reports concerning the status of the cease-fire between Israel on the one hand and Jordan, the United Arab Republic, Lebanon and Syria on the other were received by the Security Council throughout the year. The Council met in May and again in September to consider complaints by Lebanon and by Israel and adopted three resolutions.

The reports of two groups concerned with aspects of the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied as a result of hostilities in the Middle East were considered variously by the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

Efforts continued in the search for a settlement of the Middle East problem, and the Secretary-General reported on the activities of his Special Representative to the Middle East, Ambassador Gunnar V. Jarring.

As had been decided at its twenty-fourth session in 1969, the General Assembly considered the situation in the Middle East at its twenty-fifth session in 1970 and adopted a resolution on the question, making recommendations to the parties to the conflict.

Details of these and other related matters are to be found in the sections which follow.

THE STATUS OF THE CEASE-FIRE

COMPLAINTS BY ISRAEL AND JORDAN

COMMUNICATIONS TO SECURITY COUNCIL (JANUARY-AUGUST 1970)

During January 1970, the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council received a number of communications from Israel and Jordan, each charging the other with aggressive acts.

Israel complained that Jordanian aggression aimed at inflicting casualties and destruction on the Israeli civilian population had persisted, and it insisted that observance of the cease-fire must be on a strictly reciprocal basis.

On 21 January, Jordan charged that Israeli military units had crossed the Armistice Demarcation Line south of the Dead Sea in the area of Ghor-Es-Safi and Feyfa and had engaged Jordanian forces until the next day, while Israeli jet aircraft bombed and strafed military and civilian targets in the area.

The following day, Israel said in reply that three tanks and eight armoured personnel carriers had entered the area in order to clear it of terror squads which, it charged, had committed several attacks against civilian centres in the area, including the Dead Sea Potash Works. Israel said it had acted in self-defence, and as a result of armed attacks from Jordan—and Israel's counter-measures—suffering and grief had been caused to both sides. For this, the Arab States, including Jordan, should be held responsible.

Until a final peace was negotiated, Israel insisted, it was the duty of the Governments concerned to maintain the cease-fire.

During April, Jordan charged that Israel, in violation of the principles of international law, had been engaged in constructing a three-kilometre-long road into Jordanian territory, in Ghor-Es-Safi, south of the Dead Sea, in an attempt to occupy the sources of water in Jordanian territory. The aim was to control those water sources and link them to Israeli potash factories.

Jordan also charged that between 1 January and 10 April over 85 attacks had been carried out by Israeli jet aircraft, artillery and rockets against civilian centres across the Jordan River, resulting in over 90 deaths. Jordan protested that the continued acts of aggression against innocent civilians, livestock and irrigation projects, together with the continued violation of Jordanian air space and its use as a testing-ground for newly delivered United States Phantom jets and other military equipment, constituted a gross violation of the Armistice Agreement and the cease-fire.

On 29 January, Israel replied that the cease-fire was constantly being violated by acts of aggression carried out by regular and irregular forces from Jordanian territory against Israeli villages and their civilian inhabitants. Israel subsequently stated, on 26 April, that the operations of the irregular forces engaged in terror warfare against the civilian population of Israel were co-ordinated with the Jordanian authorities, and Israel was compelled to act in self-defence.

Israel also drew attention to a press report quoting the Foreign Minister of Jordan as having said on 24 April that he agreed with President Nasser of the United Arab Republic that the cease-fire between the Arabs and Israel was non-existent. Israel considered that declaration to be a development of the utmost gravity. It stressed that the cease-fire was unconditional except for being based on reciprocity; the Security Council had rejected all proposals to link it to any other matters whatever, including the question of withdrawal.

During June, July and August, Israel and Jordan submitted communications to the Security Council and the Secretary-General, each complaining of attacks by the other party on civilian targets resulting in many fatalities and considerable destruction. Each side accused the other of deliberate attacks on the civilian population and asserted that the other party bore full responsibility for the aggression it was committing.

Jordan, after complaining of Israeli air raids in early June against the Jordanian villages of Shunah Shamaliyah and Kuraimeh which killed seven civilians and wounded 33 others, said those attacks had increased tension in the area and caused a serious threat to international peace.

In a letter dated 20 July, Israel said that following an agreement between Jordan and the terror organizations, the attacks launched from Jordan against Israeli villages had increased. There had been a total of 114 attacks in the period from 7 to 20 July, compelling Israel to act in self-defence. On 24 August, Israel stated further that 225 additional attacks had been carried out since 7 August 1970, when a new international effort—to which Jordan was a party—had been initiated to maintain the cease-fire.

COMPLAINTS BY ISRAEL AND THE UNITED ARAB REPUBLIC

COMMUNICATIONS TO SECURITY COUNCIL (JANUARY-AUGUST 1970)

During January 1970, the Secretary-General issued supplemental information containing reports received from the Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO).

The reports, received almost daily during the month, indicated that there had been a continuous exchange of fire across the Suez Canal, involving the use of artillery, tanks, mortars and rockets, as well as small arms. During the same period, there had been intense aerial activity involving flights mainly by Israeli fighters and bombers which had crossed the Canal to attack positions of the United Arab Republic forces on the West Bank of the Canal. The reports also indicated that there had been shots in the vicinity of the United Nations observation posts, although, it was noted, no military personnel of either side had been near those posts.

On 26 January, the United Arab Republic charged that on the previous day Israeli aircraft, in violation of international law, had attacked an unarmed United Arab Republic civilian vessel while it was sailing in the Red Sea, wounding six civilian members of the crew.

Israel replied on 2 February that the complaint was an unfounded attempt to divert attention from the United Arab Republic's repudiation of the cease-fire, and that the vessel in question was an auxiliary craft in the service of that country's army. Israeli forces were under strict orders not to strike at civilian vessels.

On 20 February, the United Arab Republic complained that on 12 February Israeli Phantom jet aircraft had raided the National Metal Products Factory at Abu Za'bal, near Cairo in the United Arab Republic, killing 80 persons, with a greater number of workers wounded. The attack against the factory—situated far from any military installation—had demonstrated the kind of use to which Israel was putting the aircraft provided for so-called defensive purposes, and belied Israel's claims that its forces were under strict orders not to strike at civilian targets.

On the same day, the USSR representative transmitted to the Secretary-General a press communique from the Telegraphic Agency of the Soviet Union (TASS) about the alleged attack on the metallurgical plant in which it was charged that the Israeli leaders were apparently prepared to violate all frontiers and commit any crimes in order to undermine a peaceful settlement in the Middle East. The communique asserted that as long as the aggressor continued to flout the principles and purposes of the United Nations Charter and the relevant United Nations resolutions, the USSR would be obliged to provide support to the Arab States to help them defend their security and rightful interests.

In its reply to the United Arab Republic's letter, Israel, on 21 February, said it had taken air action against a military camp at Al-Khankah in self-defence, but it had later transpired that because of a possible technical error the bombs on one of the aircraft had been released outside the target. Consequently the Egyptian authorities were informed through representatives of the International Red Cross and UNTSO headquarters that, among the bombs dropped, one weighing 400 kilogrammes and set to explode after an interval of 24 hours should be defused.

Replying to the USSR letter of 20 February, Israel, on 27 February, said that the TASS communique had disregarded Israel's policy—which aimed at concluding a peace agreement in the Middle East—and, instead, had exalted USSR support of the so-called Arab war of attrition.

During February and March, the Secretary-General continued to circulate supplemental information from the Chief of Staff of UNTSO, relating to firing incidents and indicating a further intensification of aerial activity in the Suez Canal sector. He also reported that, as a result of the firing exchanges, bombs had landed near some of the observation posts.

Also during March, the UNTSO Chief of Staff announced the reopening of an observation post which had been temporarily closed on 11 December 1969. On 31 March, he reported that the United Arab Republic authorities had complained that United Nations vehicles had been moving in the midst of a number of Israeli vehicles and that the local commander had not fired because of the presence of the United Nations vehicles. The United Nations Officer-in-Charge of Kantara Control Centre had replied that a United Nations relief patrol, on its way to an observation post, had inadvertently become involved with the Israeli vehicles. United Nations personnel were under instruction to avoid other vehicles.

On 8 April, the United Arab Republic complained that Israeli Phantom jets had attacked a primary school in the village of Al Husayniyah in Sharqiya Province in the United Arab Republic, resulting in the death of 31 school children and the wounding of many other civilians.

On the following day, Israel replied that the air action had been against Egyptian military installations situated at Salahiye and that air photographs taken before and after the action had clearly indicated identifiable military installations. Furthermore, press releases from the United Arab Republic had indicated that authorities there had prevented journalists from visiting the site of the reported Israeli air action. Press releases had also mentioned that some of the wounded boys seen by journalists in the hospital were dressed in khaki uniforms and apparently had participated in paramilitary training in the Salahiye camp.

On 14 April, Israel further stated that United Arab Republic authorities had taken five days to arrange for a visit of press representatives to the target area, thus allowing themselves time to remove traces of military installations.

On the following day, the United Arab Republic informed the Secretary-General that 16 other school children had died of wounds suffered during the Israeli attack and attached photographs to show that the children were so young as to refute the Israeli allegation that they had been undergoing paramilitary training in a military compound. According to a press dispatch from Cairo, the correspondents had found no sign of military equipment on the site attacked and had seen only agricultural work.

On 15 April, the USSR representative transmitted to the Security Council the texts of statements issued by the Soviet Committee of Solidarity with Asian and African Countries, the USSR Union of Journalists, the Committee of Soviet Women and the USSR Academy of Pedagogic Sciences, all protesting against the bombing by Israel of a primary school in the United Arab Republic.

In its reply on 17 April, Israel contended that the USSR had aided the propaganda services of the United Arab Republic. The prime responsibility for the losses sustained by both sides in the "war of attrition" waged by the United Arab Republic rested with that country, Israel stated.

On 1 May, the United Arab Republic charged that during the previous few days Israeli authorities had embarked upon a campaign of falsification about the so-called increasing involvement of USSR pilots in the Egyptian air force, with the twofold aim of providing justification for receiving more Phantom jets from the United States and diverting the attention of world public opinion from its persistent aggression and its defiance of the United Nations.

In its reply on 5 May, Israel stated that the United Arab Republic had neither denied the facts concerning USSR military involvement in Egypt which, it charged, had introduced a new dimension into the regional conflict, nor indicated any change in its policy of hostility towards Israel.

On 4 May, the United Arab Republic transmitted the text of an appeal addressed on 1 May to the President of the United States by the President of the United Arab Republic. The appeal asked the United States to induce Israel to withdraw from all the Arab territories occupied in 1967; if it considered that that was not within its power, then it should decline further military, political and economic support to Israel. However, if the United States was not prepared to make either move, then it would become abundantly clear that it had agreed to and supported Israel's continued occupation of those lands in order that Israel could impose its will on the Arab States.

On 8 June, the Secretary-General informed the members of the Security Council of a letter he had addressed to the States whose nationals were serving as United Nations Military Observers in the Suez Canal sector. The Observers, he said, were rendering dedicated and courageous service to the cause of peace through their work with an operation instituted by the Security Council and being maintained to the extent possible in the absence of any contrary action by the Council. The physical safety of peace-keeping personnel was always a foremost consideration, and particularly so under the hazardous conditions prevailing in the Suez Canal sector. The Secretary-General drew attention to a statement included in his report of 27 May in connexion with the closure of some observation posts that representations and protests concerning firings on or close to United Nations personnel, installations and equipment had been of no avail in reducing the number of such incidents. On the contrary, there had recently been an increase in such firings from the United Arab Republic side.

While recognizing the difficulties involved in limiting firing in what amounted to a war situation, the Secretary-General registered his deep concern at the constant and increasing danger to which United Nations personnel were exposed in the Suez Canal sector and his distress that the risks were even greater than at any previous time. Because of conditions beyond his control, therefore, he was no longer able to guarantee the physical safety of the men engaged in the observation operation, and he was painfully aware that in the existing situation—where near misses were an almost daily occurrence at the observation posts on the Canal—it was something of a miracle that casualties among the Observers had not been much higher.

The Secretary-General added that he had felt obliged to write frankly on the matter so that the Governments might be in no doubt as to the situation in which their officers were serving the United Nations.

Replies to the Secretary-General's letter were received from the representatives of Argentina, Austria, Chile, Finland, Ireland and Sweden, who stated that the physical protection of the Observers and the preservation of their status were matters of deep concern. These representatives expressed their confidence that the Secretary-General would take all necessary measures in that respect. They also expressed their concern at the developments in the Middle East and stressed the urgency of a peaceful settlement in accordance with the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.<sup>1</sup>

From the beginning of April until 7 August, the Secretary-General continued to circulate further supplemental information from the UNTSO Chief of Staff, indicating that firing incidents had continued, involving the use of artillery, mortar, machine-guns and rifles. Aerial activity in the Suez Canal sector had been intensified, involving in most cases Israeli jet aircraft carrying out bombing attacks against targets on the West Bank of the Canal and anti-aircraft fire from forces of the United Arab Republic.

During the same period, the Secretary-General's reports indicated that there had been occasional firing at or near United Nations observation posts on either side of the Canal, although no military personnel of either side had been in the vicinity of the post at the time of the incident. As a result, some damage had been inflicted on some of the United Nations observation posts, equipment and installations.

On 16 July, the Secretary-General announced with deep shock and regret the tragic death of Lieutenant-Colonel J. E. Bogvad of Sweden, a United Nations Military Observer, who had been killed that day when a reconnaissance party he was leading came under small-arms fire from positions of the United Arab Republic Forces in the area of Observation Post Blue. At the same time, another Observer, Major R. S. Fox of New Zealand, had received wounds in his left arm. On 4 August, the Secretary-General issued a further report containing the report of a board of inquiry which had been set up to examine the circumstances surrounding the death of Lieutenant-Colonel Bogvad.

On 7 August, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council that as a result of a peace initiative of the United States Government, Israel, Jordan and the United Arab Republic agreed to resume contacts with his Special Representative, Ambassador Gunnar V. Jarring, and to observe strictly, for 90 days from 7 August, the cease-fire resolutions of the Security Council. The Secretary-General said that he and Ambassador Jarring felt there was now a reasonable basis on which to renew immediately his contacts with the parties with a view towards initiating discussions under his auspices on the issues. (See also pp. 252-54.)

On 4 November, by its resolution 2628 (XXV), the General Assembly among other things recommended to the parties that they extend the cease-fire for a period of three months in order that they might enter into talks under the auspices of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General with a view to giving effect to the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.<sup>2</sup> (See page 261.)

Quiet prevailed in the Suez Canal sector from 7 August on, and few reports were circulated by the Secretary-General on the situation there. These generally related to the relocation or reopening of observation posts which had been closed previously on a temporary basis.

COMPLAINTS BY ISRAEL AND LEBANON

COMMUNICATIONS TO SECURITY COUNCIL (JANUARY-MAY 1970)

From the beginning of January until 12 May 1970, the Security Council received a number of communications from Israel and Lebanon complaining of violations of the cease-fire. Lebanon complained that its villages situated on the southern borders had been subjected to bombing and shelling by Israeli jet aircraft, causing casualties and material damage. Israel charged that villages in its border area near Lebanon had been the object of increasingly frequent attacks from Lebanese territory, causing casualties and property damage.

On 3, 9 and 26 January, Lebanon complained of an intensification of Israeli attacks against its territory which, it said, were committed in flagrant violation of the Lebanon-Israel Armistice Agreement, of international law and of the provisions of the United Nations Charter.

On 12 January, Lebanon transmitted the text of a note addressed to the Governments of what it described as the four great powers which stated that increasing acts of aggression had been accompanied by public threats against the security and territorial integrity of Lebanon. The note said that violence was being directed against the civilian population and was no longer based on even the customary false pretexts about reprisals for acts by members of the Palestinian resistance movement, for which Lebanon could not be held responsible. The presence of the Palestinians in Lebanon, the note pointed out, was the direct result of Israel's aggressive policy, which had provoked their exodus, and Israel's continued refusal to comply with United Nations decisions. Recalling that it had made specific denunciations of Israel's aggressions on each occasion to the Security Council, Lebanon added that in placing the matter before the four powers which had special responsibilities in the Council, it was invoking its own rights and legitimate interests, as well as the elementary conditions of life for civilized mankind.

Replying to Lebanon's charges, Israel on 5, 15 and 29 January countercharged that villages in its border area near Lebanon had been subjected to increasingly frequent attacks from Lebanon. With regard to the Lebanese note of 12 January, Israel asserted that Lebanon was attempting to evade its responsibility for the increasing tension caused by continued aggression from Lebanese territory, which was serving as a base for the training of terrorist organizations. Those attacks, Israel said, appeared to have been carried out with the Lebanese Government's approval, in conformity with an agreement concluded in Cairo on 3 November 1969 between the Government of Lebanon and the terrorist organizations, by which those organizations had been permitted to operate in and from Lebanese territory. In those circumstances, Lebanon could not shirk its responsibility for the deterioration of the border situation, and Israel was under obligation to take defensive measures for the protection of its territory and its population.

Further charges and countercharges were made by Israel on 27 February, 4 and 10 March, and by Lebanon on 28 February and 7 March, to the effect that their respective villages on the borders had been subjected to attacks originating from the territory of the other party.

On 17 March, Lebanon complained that Israeli artillery had shelled the heights situated between Rachaiya el Foukhar and Kafr Hamam, and on the following day had shelled other villages in southern Lebanon. On 18 March, Lebanon transmitted the text of a statement issued that day by the Lebanese Government, drawing attention to Israeli propaganda consisting of accusations and threats designed to prepare Israel for every kind of violence and to lead international opinion to regard such violence as acts of reprisal against Lebanon because of the presence and activity of the Palestinians. If the Palestinian refugees in Lebanon had become combatants struggling for their homeland it was because Israel had refused to implement the United Nations resolutions concerning their right to return to Palestine, as well as other United Nations resolutions adopted before and after the hostilities of 5 June 1967. To restore peace in the area, the statement concluded, Israel should carry out its obligations under those resolutions and under international law.

On 25 March, Israel replied that Lebanon, instead of recognizing its obligations as a Member of the United Nations, had served notice that it supported continued warfare against Israel, in flagrant violation of the cease-fire established by the Security Council. Whatever Lebanon's internal situation might be, that should not affect its international obligation to prevent the use of its territory as a base of aggression. Israel could not be expected to leave its territory and its citizens undefended, and it was incumbent upon Lebanon to abide by its obligations under the Security Council's cease-fire.

On 10 May, Israel charged that between 22 April and 10 May a series of attacks had been carried out from Lebanese territory, resulting in eight civilian and military personnel being killed and 17 wounded, in addition to considerable property damage. Israel held Lebanon responsible for those cease-fire violations and reserved its right to act in self-defence.

CONSIDERATION BY SECURITY COUNCIL (12-19 MAY 1970)

On 12 May, the representative of Lebanon requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the grave situation endangering the peace and security of Lebanon and of the area. He charged that early that morning Israeli armed forces had launched an invasion of southern Lebanon, penetrating its territory with armoured and infantry units, and bombarding towns and villages by air force and artillery, in flagrant violation of the Lebanon-Israel Armistice Agreement and the provisions of the United Nations Charter.

Also on 12 May, the representative of Israel requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider attacks from Lebanese territory against the territory and population of Israel, in flagrant violation of the cease-fire and the Charter. Particulars of those acts of aggression, he added, had already been communicated to the Council.

The Security Council met from 12 to 19 May 1970 to consider the complaints of Lebanon and Israel. The representatives of both countries, and subsequently of Morocco and Saudi Arabia, were invited at their request to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

At the beginning of the meeting on 12 May, the Secretary-General said he had been informed by the UNTSO Chief of Staff that the Acting Chairman of the Israel-Lebanon Mixed Armistice Commission had been informed by the Lebanese delegation that Israeli forces had launched an attack early that day on Lebanese territory in the general area of Mount Hermon. The Acting Chairman had also reported receiving information that the senior Israeli representative to the Commission had stated in a telephone conversation with a Lebanese representative that the current Israeli action in the Al Arkoub area was aimed at the destruction of fedayeen commandos and that it was not the intention of Israeli forces to act against the Lebanese army or population, provided that they did not support the fedayeen.

The Secretary-General added that it was understood that at the time of the above report, Israeli ground troops, supported by artillery and air force units, had reached El Khraibe and that action was continuing. The Secretary-General recalled his long but unsuccessful effort to increase substantially the number of United Nations Observers on both sides of the border. This was one of the reasons for his lack of detailed information about the current action in the area.

The representative of Lebanon said that early on 12 May, Israeli ground and air forces and heavy artillery had attacked three districts in southern Lebanon, aiming their attacks at the civilian population and at the defensive positions of the Lebanese army, causing vast destruction of property and loss of life. Israel's current aggression had been preceded by threats in the past few months—in particular, a threat to turn southern Lebanon into an area of desolation comparable to that of the Suez Canal zone.

The Lebanese representative further charged that, since its attack on Beirut airport in December 1968, Israel had carried out numerous attacks against Lebanon. On 31 December 1968, he recalled, the Security Council had issued a solemn warning to Israel that if those acts were to be repeated the Council would have to consider further steps to give effect to its decisions.<sup>8</sup> The Lebanese Government had that day delivered to the Ambassadors of France, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States a note in which it placed on Israel full responsibility for the current acts of aggression on Lebanese territory, and requested the Security Council—particularly four of its permanent members—not only to condemn Israel but to find sufficient reason to impose on it respect for international law and the United Nations Charter.

It would not be sufficient, the Lebanese representative continued, to adopt a resolution condemning Israel. The action Lebanon sought, he said, was the immediate withdrawal of all Israeli troops from Lebanese territory, a strong condemnation of Israel and the application of Chapter VII of the Charter.<sup>4</sup>

The representative of Israel said he had requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the armed attacks carried out from Lebanese territory against his country and its population. Israel, he noted, had repeatedly drawn the Council's attention to the intensification of aggression from Lebanon. Since 1 April there had been 61 acts of aggression against 22 Israeli villages and towns.

Israel, he went on, had called upon Lebanon to comply with its cease-fire obligations and also had asked United Nations organs and Member States to apprise Lebanon of the gravity of the situation. The acts of aggression, however, had not ended; on the contrary, they had grown in number, compelling Israel to act in self-defence. Its action on 12 May was directed solely against the concentration of terrorist organizations in south-east Lebanon, east of the Kashani River. Israeli forces, whose mission was to comb the area of the terrorist squads, would leave the area on completion of their mission. Lebanon was responsible for armed attacks carried out from its territory against Israel; that responsibility was particularly evident in the light of the official agreements between Lebanon and the irregular forces operating from its territory against Israel.

The representative of Israel then said he had just received a communique from his Government to the effect that the military operation had been concluded and that Israeli forces were deploying to leave the area.

The representative of Spain then proposed a draft resolution as an interim measure and asked that it be put to the vote immediately. The draft resolution would have the Security Council demand "the immediate withdrawal of all Israeli armed forces from Lebanese territory."

The proposal to proceed immediately to vote on the Spanish draft resolution received 7 votes to 2, with 6 abstentions, and was not adopted, having failed to receive the required majority.

Israel said the draft resolution proposed by Spain was clearly divorced from reality. It would be unfortunate if the Council should vote on and adopt a draft resolution marked not only by an absence of equity but also by a refusal to recognize the facts of the situation.

The Spanish representative reiterated that his proposal was only an interim measure submitted in view of the seriousness of the situation; Israel had acted in violation of Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter, which enjoined all Members to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity of any State.<sup>6</sup> He had introduced the draft because a principle of the Charter had been violated, and his action was without prejudice to whatever further action the Council might decide to take.

The United States then proposed an amendment which would add a phrase at the end of the draft resolution so that the Security Council would demand the immediate withdrawal of all Israeli armed forces from Lebanese territory "and an immediate cessation of all military operations in the area."

The USSR representative proposed a sub-amendment to the United States amendment which would add the words: "and stopping of Israeli aggression against Lebanon."

The USSR sub-amendment was put to the vote and was rejected by 3 votes to 0, with 12 abstentions. The United States amendment was rejected by 2 votes to 0, with 13 abstentions. The Spanish draft was then unanimously adopted as resolution 279(1970).

Continuing the debate, the spokesman for Morocco said that despite the warning given to Israel in previous Council resolutions, and despite the fact that some major powers had explained to Israel the consequences of its action, Israel had seen fit to attack Lebanon and had issued a challenge to both the Council and the major powers. In that respect, Israel seemed to have been encouraged by certain international circumstances that insured its impunity. At the same time, Israel had been trying to provoke disturbances and conflict between Palestinians and the Lebanese Government. Those attempts had not been productive, because the Palestinians—who were not refugees in Lebanon but combatants on Arab territory—had reached an understanding with the Government of Lebanon to exercise their rights.

He went on to say that the Council had already adopted a resolution asking Israel to withdraw its troops; that was intended to put a stop to Israel's aggression. However, according to information which he now had, the Israeli troops had not yet withdrawn. The Council was under an obligation to see that its resolutions were fully implemented, that aggression was not only stopped and condemned but that it did not recur.

The Lebanese representative said that according to information he had just received from Beirut, Israel's forces were still in southern Lebanon and showed no sign of withdrawing, as the representative of Israel had claimed. He expressed his Government's gratitude for the Council's prompt action, adding that it was for the Council now to ascertain whether the Israeli troops were withdrawing as the resolution had demanded.

Referring to the Secretary-General's proposal to station Observers on both sides of the border, he said that Lebanon had agreed to strengthening the Armistice machinery but that Israel—for the last two and one-half years—had refused to allow Observers to be stationed on its side of the border.

Saudi Arabia said the case before the Security Council was one of aggression by proxy. By its action, Israel had wanted the Arab States to suppress the Palestinians, but no Arab State would ever be able to suppress a people fighting for its homeland and establishing its right to self-determination.

Israel said the Security Council had adopted a one-sided text that ignored the facts and had refused to call for a cessation of all military operations in the area. Israeli troops had stayed on Lebanese soil in order to avoid any shooting incidents at night.

Syria said in reply that darkness had not prevented the Israelis from attacking Lebanon. Israel must abide by the decision of the Security Council; otherwise the Council, acting under Article 40 of the Charter,<sup>6</sup> would have to take account of Israel's failure to comply with the provisional measures. Syria would appreciate it if the Secretary-General would communicate to the Council any reports he might have received from UNTSO about the current situation in the area.

On 13 May, the Secretary-General reported to the Council that because of the lack of adequate means of observation on both sides of the Israel-Lebanon sector, the Acting Chief of Staff of UNTSO had been able to provide only limited information about military activities in the area. The Secretary-General also regretted that he had not yet received any information from the Acting Chief of Staff on the implementation of the resolution adopted by the Security Council on 12 May, explaining that verification of reports was not possible in the absence of direct means of observation.

Also on 13 May, in a statement communicated to the President of the Security Council and read out in the Council, the Prime Minister of Israel, after acknowledging receipt of the text of the resolution of 12 May, said that the Israeli operation, which had been carried out according to plan, had been concluded and that Israeli forces were deploying to leave the area. The forces involved in that defensive action had returned to their bases; Israel continued to hold Lebanon responsible for all acts of violence perpetrated from Lebanese territory against the population, territory and armed forces of Israel.

The representative of the United Kingdom agreed with the demand for withdrawal of Israeli troops from an action which he could not possibly condone. However, the perpetration and intensification of conflict had made it urgent to find a way out of the current situation, and it was therefore time to redouble the efforts to bring about peace and justice in the area on the basis of the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.<sup>7</sup> He hoped that the four powers, permanent members of the Council, would be able to report to the Secretary-General soon, enabling the Secretary-General to ask his representative, Ambassador Jarring, to resume his consultations with the parties in the area.

Sierra Leone expressed satisfaction over the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon. It could not condone the new attack on Lebanon, which had twice been the victim of attacks within the last two years. It hoped the Council would continue its work towards peaceful conciliation and that the four powers would resume their efforts for a speedy solution of the problem.

The USSR representative asserted that Israeli aggression against Lebanon with United States-made aircraft and with scorched-earth and bombardment tactics was against all norms of international law and in defiance of Security Council warnings on two previous occasions. Instead of complying with the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967, Israel had continued its refusal to withdraw its troops from occupied Arab territories. Israel had committed its new aggression on the pretext of fighting Arab patriots and resisters. However, if Israel were to withdraw from all the occupied Arab territories, the question of resistance would come to an end. Israel's new aggression had been strengthened by continuation of deliveries to it of the most modern United States weapons and by official promises of future arms from that country.

The USSR spokesman reiterated that his Government was firmly in favour of a lasting peace in the Middle East based on the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967, and that the only road to a peaceful settlement was the withdrawal of the aggressor from all occupied territories. The Council must also condemn Israel for its new act of aggression and must take further and more effective measures to call a halt to that aggression.

The spokesman for Finland said violent incidents had been occurring daily in the Middle East to which the Security Council had responded only by recording them. It was currently meeting to consider a complaint of a large-scale incursion by Israeli armed forces into Lebanese territory, and Finland welcomed the prompt and unanimous action taken by the Council in demanding the immediate withdrawal of all Israeli forces from Lebanese territory. The Council, however, had dealt with the symptoms of the problem rather than its core. The latest Israeli raid had illustrated the breakdown of the international arrangements established in the aftermath of the war of June 1967 to end the fighting and create the prerequisites for making peace. The passage of time had eroded the cease-fire, and the impact of the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967 was itself in danger of fading.

To progress towards peace, he continued, Finland had always supported the four-power talks, because no genuine settlement on the conflict was possible unless it was backed by some measure of agreement among the permanent members of the Council. It was essential that the four powers should make a new effort to reverse the trend towards increasing violence and set in motion a process leading to a just and lasting peace in the area.

Syria's representative said that while the attack on Lebanon by Israel was under consideration, it might be recalled that the General Assembly, by resolutions it adopted in 1969, had given special responsibility to the Security Council. In a resolution of 10 December 1969 (2535 B (XXIV)),<sup>8</sup> the Assembly, after drawing the Council's attention to the grave situation resulting from Israeli practices and policies in occupied territories, had requested the Council to take effective measures in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter. In a resolution of 11 December 1969 (2546(XXIV)),<sup>9</sup> it had condemned Israeli policies and practices of collective and area punishment. The Council, therefore, must not miss the current opportunity to affirm the rule of law and to take effective measures against aggression.

Lebanon said that contrary to what Israel had claimed—that its armed forces could not withdraw in daytime—the Israelis were, at 3:30 a.m., still bombing villages in southern Lebanon, and it had been confirmed that the Israeli air force had bombed and shelled Lebanese military positions and civilian centres during the night.

At the Security Council's meeting on 14 May, the representative of Zambia reminded the Council that he had earlier condemned Israel's policy of punitive reprisals, which represented a disregard of the authority of the Council and established dangerous precedents. The new Israeli attack on Lebanese territory was a grave violation of the cease-fire and a further impediment to peace efforts. In spite of those efforts, there had been no progress towards a settlement. After the four powers assumed the special responsibility of helping to promote a settlement, the situation had visibly deteriorated. Zambia urged the four powers to make a serious and deliberate effort to achieve a settlement and to help Ambassador Jarring resume his duties.

The representative of Poland said his vote for the Spanish draft resolution was a clear indication of Poland's condemnation of Israel's act of invasion against Lebanon. Israel's aggression was one of the links in the chain of aggression committed every day by Israel in the Middle East. The Council had heard Israel term its act a "clearing-out operation to rid the area of terrorists." That made the analogy between the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and the United States invasion of Cambodia obvious. The Council was therefore duty-bound to take effective measures to condemn the Israeli aggression. Poland, he added, maintained its support of a peaceful settlement and continued to believe that the primary condition for such a settlement was the withdrawal of Israeli troops from all the Arab territories occupied after June 1967.

The United States representative recalled that the Security Council had met in August 1969 to consider guerrilla-type attacks on Israel launched from Lebanese territory and Israeli air strikes on several Lebanese villages aimed at the source of the strikes. The Council was meeting again because the situation had been further exacerbated. There had been more fedayeen attacks from Lebanon against Israel, and Israel had mounted a major military operation into Lebanon to end those attacks. The United States, he stressed, could not but oppose all acts of violence across frontiers in violation of the cease-fire from any source; the only way to end the violence was to make an all-out effort to bring about a peaceful political settlement of the conflict.

A first step, he continued, should be cessation of the cycle of attack and counter-attack and a restoration of an effective cease-fire on the Lebanon-Israel border. That could be done with the help of United Nations Observers. The United States supported the Secretary-General's earlier suggestion to station an adequate number of Observers on both sides of the border between Israel and Lebanon and urged that consultations should be renewed between the parties and the Secretary-General to that end.

He went on to say that the United States continued to attach great importance to Lebanon's independence and territorial integrity and could not condone any threat to its integrity from any source. At the same time, it supported Israel's independence and territorial integrity and would use its influence with the parties to the conflict to reduce violence and tensions.

In the search for a lasting settlement in accordance with the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967, the United States believed that all the parties should re-examine their attitudes towards what sort of peaceful settlement they were prepared to accept and should know there could be no peace in the area until each of the parties concerned was prepared to abandon its maximum demands and agree to compromise solutions that served the interests of all.

The United States representative said that the Secretary of State and other United States spokesmen had said that the United States supported the principle of withdrawal of Israeli forces from territories occupied in June 1967, in accordance with the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967, and that it was fully committed to the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war. It also believed that the parties to a settlement should have the possibility to agree mutually on insubstantial alterations or minor rectifications of the boundaries which previously existed between them.

As a party to the bilateral and four-power negotiations, he continued, the United States had shown willingness to accept suggestions on many points not identical to its own. It had exercised restraint by deciding not to respond favourably to Israel's request for additional aircraft.

The United States appealed to the USSR, Israel and its Arab neighbours, and to the Palestinian Arabs, to join with it in a redoubled effort to bring about a just settlement of all the problems of the Middle East.

The representative of Burundi said his Government could not condone Israel's policy of disproportionate reprisals, because the policy of conquest and infinite extension of war could not guarantee peace. Burundi could not but offer its sympathy to the victims of aggression and reiterate the demand that Israel should withdraw its troops.

Nepal, which supported the Council's demand for immediate withdrawal of Israeli troops, said it had received with satisfaction the Israeli declaration that its forces had been withdrawn from Lebanese territory. At the same time, Nepal had to express its strong disapproval of the action of a Member State in mounting a large-scale military incursion inside the territory of another Member State on the ground of military reprisal. The Security Council had condemned punitive actions on several occasions. However, condemnation would, in itself, achieve nothing, and the Council should avoid running the risk of losing track of its goal as set forth in its resolution of 22 November 1967.

In the circumstances, Nepal continued, all Council members should support and encourage the process of reconciliation and peace through the continuing talks between four of the permanent members of the Council. In that respect, Nepal was encouraged to learn that some definite proposals on certain vital aspects of the problem had been submitted and that the parties concerned had defined more precisely their positions on those questions. Nepal also hoped that Ambassador Jarring would soon be able to resume his mission.

Nicaragua said the willingness of Israel to comply with the Council's resolution of 12 May was a hopeful first step towards negotiations and agreement. The Council had heard charges and countercharges of violations of international law. It was obvious that, if the situation was not normalized, it might result in a serious threat to international peace and security. It was also clear that a partial solution could not contribute to the establishment of a lasting peace in the region. Therefore, it was necessary that the Council urge the parties to resort to the means established by international law for the peaceful settlement of disputes.

Lebanon said that in the area Israel had occupied in its last military action, three Lebanese civilians and seven soldiers had been killed and three civilians and 18 soldiers injured. There had also been considerable loss of property. It was clear that Israel's armed attack had not been directed against the Palestine freedom fighters, as Israel had claimed, but against Lebanon itself, a United Nations Member State.

At the same Council meeting—on 14 May—a communication was read out according to which the Acting Chairman of the Israel-Lebanon Mixed Armistice Commission reported that the complete withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon had been officially confirmed by Lebanese authorities and that the official tune of withdrawal was given as 1030 hours GMT on 13 May.

The representative of the USSR said that, if the impression he had that the United States was in favour of the total withdrawal of Israeli troops from Arab territories was correct, then the USSR would be in favour of continuing the four-power talks. However, the question of alterations referred to by the United States representative would give Israel carte blanche to demand alterations of frontiers. The resolution of 22 November 1967 had explicitly asked for Israel's withdrawal from occupied Arab territories. If agreement could be reached by the four powers on immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Israeli troops from all occupied Arab territories, agreement would then be reached on other outstanding questions, and a Middle East settlement could be worked out in a kind of package deal.

In reply to the representative of Lebanon, Israel said that the few casualties mentioned resulting from Israeli defensive actions had, in fact, been members of the terrorist organizations who had not laid down their arms in response to Israeli appeals. The structures demolished, which amounted to 16 camps and bases, had been structures used by the irregular forces. Those forces had themselves issued press releases stating that they had been the target of the attack.

At the Council's meeting on 15 May, the spokesman for Colombia said that, in the case before it, the Security Council should look beyond the immediate conflict to consider stable solutions; interim measures could not, by themselves, eliminate the real cause of the conflict. The measures taken by the Council in the past had not been complied with and, despite efforts by the Secretary-General and by the four powers, the six-day war, which had been prolonged to three years, threatened to spread both in time and space.

The Colombian representative suggested that a recent Brazilian proposal to set up an ad hoc committee be considered, to function concurrently with the four-power talks. A three-member Council committee could be created to take note of the efforts at negotiations made by the Secretary-General and could be given access to the political formulas of the four powers in order to submit them to the Council in a series of proposed solutions to all aspects of the Middle East question.

The Spanish representative said he was gratified at Israel's compliance with the Council's resolution of 12 May. Spain deplored all violations of the cease-fire, which often resulted in the loss of innocent lives; however, cease-fire resolutions were essentially of a temporary nature, intended to give the Security Council sufficient time to prepare a final resolution. But two and one-half years had elapsed since the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967, the Spanish spokesman said, and all efforts to implement it had so far failed.

It was well known, he continued, that the non-permanent members of the Council had been deeply concerned at the lack of progress in the four-power talks. Spain hoped that there would be some progress in those talks and that Ambassador Jarring would be allowed to resume his mission. The main cause of the current situation had been the lack of compliance with the resolution of 22 November 1967. It was deplorable that an important decision of the Council remained unimplemented and that territories taken by force had not been vacated.

The representative of China said his country deplored the dangerous and futile policy of retaliation, especially in the present case when it was directed against Lebanon—a country that had not participated in the June 1967 war and had played a moderating role in the affairs of the Middle East. After expressing his satisfaction at the withdrawal of Israel's troops from Lebanon in compliance with the Council's decision of 12 May, he urged the Council to look beyond the current conflict and search for an acceptable final settlement. The Chinese representative pointed out that almost three years after the war of June 1967, the prospects were as bleak as ever. In fact, the situation had been steadily deteriorating. He appealed to the parties concerned for compromise and conciliation and expressed the hope that it would be possible for Ambassador Jarring to continue his consultations.

The President of the Council, speaking as the representative of France, said the Council's resolution of 12 August had been adopted unanimously. It was not a one-sided resolution but an expression of the collective will. The Council should continue to strive to bring about such agreement among its members which alone could help it in fulfilling the task entrusted to it by the Charter.

With regard to the military action against Lebanon, he said that France could not remain indifferent to that which affected Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and integrity; it therefore considered Israel's intervention inadmissible, not only because it had been contrary to the Charter but also because it had escalated the conflict, making it more difficult to achieve a peaceful settlement. He expressed satisfaction at the withdrawal of Israel's troops from Lebanon, but stressed that the Council's concern should now be to find a solution to the Middle East conflict, a solution which could only be a political one.

France, its representative went on, believed that Israel had the right to existence, to recognition and to security. It had the right to secure and guaranteed frontiers, but those frontiers could not be the frontiers of occupation or annexation. Israel, which owed its foundation to the United Nations, must undertake unreservedly to apply the terms of the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967. That would be a great step towards the solution of the Palestinian problem. In that respect, the efforts of Ambassador Jarring had not been futile, and the current debate had shown a large measure of agreement. France hoped that discussion of the Lebanese complaint would advance the efforts that were being made at all levels to find a peaceful settlement of the Middle East problem.

On 19 May, at the Security Council's next meeting, Morocco's representative said the question of the supplying of weapons to Israel by the United States had been at the very heart of the Middle East situation. Many parties concerned had reiterated the gravity of such a step. The President of the United States himself had decided to suspend part of Israel's request for planes. However, the question had been left open, and there were, unfortunately, indications that the decision was now being reconsidered. As the Council was considering Israel's use of weapons to attack Lebanon, he, on behalf of all the Arab Members, wished to draw the Council's attention to the serious and inevitable consequences that might result from such a decision. The strengthening of Israel's military power would necessarily compel the Arab countries to take into account the feelings and demands of their own people.

At the Council's meeting on 19 May, Zambia submitted a draft resolution which was adopted later in the meeting by 11 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions, as resolution 280(1970).

By the preambular part of the text, the Security Council among other things expressed its grave concern about the deteriorating situation resulting from violations of its resolutions and stated its conviction that the Israeli military attack against Lebanon was premeditated and of a large scale and carefully planned in nature. It also recalled its resolution of 12 May 1970, demanding the immediate withdrawal of all Israeli armed forces from Lebanese territory.

By the operative part of the text, the Council: (1) deplored the failure of Israel to abide by the Council's resolution of 31 December 1968 (262(1968))<sup>10</sup> and of 26 August 1969 (270(1969));<sup>11</sup> (2) condemned Israel for its premeditated military action in violation of its obligations under the Charter; (3) declared that such armed attacks could no longer be tolerated and repeated its solemn warning to Israel that if they were to be repeated the Council would, in accordance with its resolution of 31 December

1968 and this resolution, consider taking adequate and effective steps or measures in accordance with the relevant Articles of the Charter to implement its resolutions; and (4) deplored the loss of life and damage to property inflicted as a result of violations of Council resolutions.

Prior to the vote, Colombia said it would have preferred a more balanced text which, while censuring Israel's military action, should have issued a warning against frontier operations by Palestinian guerrillas. Colombia was abstaining because it believed the text would not advance the cause of peace, as it did not incorporate any new ideas.

The USSR said the initial proposals in consultations among Council members had aimed at an unambiguous condemnation of Israel's action against Lebanon and the adoption of effective measures under Chapter VII of the Charter.<sup>12</sup> However, through the efforts of the United States and other members, those important provisions had been eliminated. Nevertheless, the USSR felt that the final text, which provided a condemnation of Israel's action and a warning of further effective measures if the attacks were to be repeated, might play a certain positive part in sobering the aggressor and his protectors.

Following the vote, Finland said that the Council, although condemning Israel's armed attack against Lebanon, also remained gravely concerned about all violations of its resolution. Furthermore, Council members had expressed deep concern about the continuing deterioration of the situation and the Council's inability to come to grips with the problem. Moreover, there was agreement that urgent efforts for peace must be renewed on the basis of the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.

The United Kingdom representative said he had not been prepared to vote for a draft resolution that was wholly one-sided, but having worked to make the draft acceptable, the United Kingdom had voted for it. It was regrettable, he added, that the Council had not been able to agree about the future; efforts to reach an accepted settlement had not succeeded, but the aim of reaching agreement must always be kept in mind. In that respect, the four-power talks should not be impeded or frustrated; the four powers should be encouraged to proceed with all speed and with a greater sense of conciliation and urgency.

The Syrian representative said the text fell short of what Syria had considered necessary to meet the situation. It should have contained a reference to Chapter VII of the Charter. That had been omitted because it had been said that the Council would be unable to implement a decision based on Chapter VII. Such a view of the Council's incapacity would, in Syria's view, tend to undermine its authority forever. Nevertheless, he said, his Government would interpret the third paragraph to mean that the Council's next step would be taken under Chapter VII.

The United States, after reiterating its support for Lebanon's independence and territorial integrity, said it condemned massive and disproportionate attacks such as that carried out by Israel against Lebanon on 12 May. The United States, however, could not overlook the serious provocations from Lebanese territory that had preceded the attack, and it believed that the resolution just adopted was still unbalanced, in not having taken sufficient account of the repeated cease-fire violations from Lebanese territory that had resulted in numerous civilian casualties. Although its abstention in the vote should not be construed as equating those provocations with Israel's response, it believed that the adoption of a one-sided resolution would not be helpful to efforts to bring about a lasting settlement in accordance with the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967, all of whose provisions must be implemented without reservation.

Sierra Leone said it had great sympathy and respect for Lebanon and, although it had supported the Council's resolution of 12 May—requesting Israel to withdraw its forces from Lebanese territory—it did not believe that the current resolution, on which it had abstained, would facilitate the cause of peace. The stipulations of the resolution had already been expressed in previous Council resolutions. Moreover, peace in the Middle East would not be achieved by piecemeal measures. The important thing was to settle the fundamental issues permanently and as a whole.

Poland pointed out that Israel had chosen in the past to ignore the Security Council's resolutions and had disregarded the warnings contained in them. Such defiance should not be tolerated by the Council, and any effort to preserve the so-called balanced approach towards the aggressor and the victim of aggression could only lead to further aggravation of the situation. Poland associated itself with the resolution's condemnation of Israel's act, as well as with the solemn warning that if such attacks were to be repeated the Council would take effective measures as envisaged in the relevant provisions of the Charter. To Poland, that meant all the measures provided for in the Charter, including those under Chapter VII.

The representative of Israel said the resolution confined itself to Israel's defensive action and failed to mention equally the acts of aggression perpetrated against Israel from Lebanese territory. By that double standard, the resolution appeared to undermine further the Council's ability to deal with the Middle East situation equitably, realistically and constructively.

Lebanon said it would have liked the Council to adopt a stronger resolution and one adopted unanimously. The Council appeared reluctant to invoke Chapter VII of the Charter, thus allowing the aggressor to find sanctuary for his actions.

COMMUNICATIONS TO SECURITY COUNCIL
(22 MAY-4 SEPTEMBER 1970)

On 22 May, Israel charged that a terrorist squad from Lebanon had ambushed a school bus transporting children from villages along the northern frontier of Israel, resulting in the death of seven children and three adults; 23 children were wounded.

On the same day, Lebanon charged that Israeli artillery had begun a massive shelling that morning of four villages in south-eastern Lebanon, killing 20 persons and wounding 40. It was unprecedented, Lebanon said, for a State to claim the right of reprisal not only against its victims—reduced to refugee status and driven to resistance—but against the civilian population of the country in which those victims had taken refuge.

In a letter of 5 June, Lebanon further charged that since 22 May Israel had been deliberately and systematically continuing its aggression against Lebanon in violation of the Council's resolutions, the United Nations Charter, the Lebanon-Israel Armistice Agreement and international law. This was evidenced by daily crossings into Lebanese territory of Israeli tanks, half-tracks and armoured vehicles, by the shelling of civilian centres and military targets, and by other specific incidents. As a result, the letter stated, 50,000 persons had been forced to seek refuge in other Lebanese regions. Lebanon believed that Israel was following a calculated plan aimed possibly at occupying large Lebanese sectors on the Syrian-Lebanese border, under the false pretext that its forces were pursuing Palestinian commandos.

In a letter of 12 June, Israel expressed regret that Lebanon was trying to complicate the situation on the Israel-Lebanon border still further by describing it in a false and tendentious way. Israel's policy, the letter added, rested on: (a) respect for Lebanon's political independence and territorial integrity and non-intervention in its internal affairs; (b) negotiation and agreement on a final Israel-Lebanon peace settlement on the existing territorial basis; (c) scrupulous maintenance by both sides of the June 1967 cease-fire, on a basis of reciprocity which included the unequivocal responsibility of the Lebanese Government to prevent armed attacks from its territory against Israel; and (d) the right of self-defence against armed attack by all appropriate means.

On 4 September 1970, the representative of Lebanon transmitted to the President of the Security Council the text of a letter from the Lebanese Minister for Foreign Affairs. After charging that Israeli armed forces had committed 58 acts of aggression against Lebanon during the previous two weeks, the letter said that Israel's aggressive actions were increasingly assuming the dimensions of actual military hostilities and were directed not only against Lebanon and the other Arab countries but against those of the great powers which were trying to preserve world peace against a possible and probable extension of the Israeli-Arab conflict. The tragic experience which Lebanon had been undergoing on its frontiers was a test for the effectiveness of the Security Council's efforts to ensure that right should prevail.

CONSIDERATION BY SECURITY COUNCIL

(5 SEPTEMBER 1970)

On 5 September, the representative of Lebanon informed the President of the Security Council that two infantry companies of Israel's armed forces, under heavy air support, had penetrated inside Lebanese territory to a depth of seven kilometres, bombing civilian installations and opening roads for Israeli military use. In view of the extreme gravity of the situation, which was endangering the peace and security of Lebanon, he requested that an urgent meeting of the Security Council be convened.

The Security Council met on 5 September to consider the Lebanese request. The representatives of Lebanon and Israel were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussions without the right to vote.

At the beginning of the meeting, the Secretary-General informed the Council that he had received two cables from the Chief of Staff of UNTSO concerning the matter before the Council.

According to the first of these, the Chairman of the Israel-Lebanon Mixed Armistice Commission had stated that he had received from the Lebanese authorities a message to the effect that, on 4 September, Israeli aircraft had attacked the Lebanese region of Al Arkoub; at the same time, the area had been subjected to heavy artillery bombardment, causing material damage. When the bombardment ceased, an Israeli mixed infantry and armoured force had penetrated the region, destroying the road network in the area and blowing up several houses. As at 0930 hours GMT Israeli forces had not withdrawn from the territory. Lebanon had requested confirmation by United Nations Military Observers of the attack, and the immediate withdrawal of the Israeli forces from Lebanese territory. The UNTSO Chief of Staff had instructed the Chairman of the Israel-Lebanon Mixed Armistice Commission to provide two United Nations Military Observers for on-the-spot inquiries. He also indicated that at 1500 hours GMT, on 5 September, the Assistant Israeli Defence Force Liaison Officer had not had any information on the alleged incident reported to the Mixed Armistice Commission by Lebanon. In the second message, received the same day, the Chief of Staff reported that the Assistant Liaison Officer had informed him at 1705 hours GMT on 5 September that all Israeli forces had withdrawn from Lebanese territory.

The Secretary-General then recalled that during the Security Council's meeting on 12 May 1970, he had stated that he had long sought to increase substantially the number of United Nations Observers on both sides in that area, but without success. For that reason, he could not provide the Council with detailed information about actions then taking place in the area.

The representative of Lebanon said that a few hours after he had transmitted to the President of the Security Council the letter of 4 September from Lebanon's Minister for Foreign Affairs, Israeli ground and air forces had launched an attack on Lebanese territory and had reached the village of Kfar Chouba, four kilometres inside Lebanon's borders. The Israeli forces had penetrated another seven kilometres from the borders, bombing civilian centres and populations. In the face of that aggression, the Lebanese Army had entered into action against the Israeli forces and, according to a message he had received, they were still engaging them on Lebanese territory. Israel's unwarranted attack on Lebanon had resulted in two civilians being killed and many others wounded, in addition to considerable material damage to civilian installations.

The Lebanese representative went on to say that the situation created by Israel's aggression constituted a test of the Security Council's ability to ensure the security and independence of small nations. In the past, when aggression had been committed against it, Lebanon had sought the guarantees that were promised by the Charter. It hoped that on the present occasion the Security Council would discharge its responsibility by calling for immediate and complete withdrawal of all Israeli forces from Lebanon and by strongly condemning Israel's acts of aggression against Lebanon, in violation of the Charter and of past Council resolutions. After recalling that in its resolution of 19 May the Council had warned Israel that it would take effective measures in case of a repetition of armed attacks, the Lebanese spokesman demanded that measures be taken against Israel under Chapter VII of the Charter.

Israel's representative maintained that Lebanon had merely attempted to dramatize a minor patrolling incident which had become necessary because of the free hand given to the terrorists by the Government of Lebanon. The Security Council's resolution of 19 May, which was inequitable and one-sided, had given encouragement to the terrorist organizations. Since then, over 200 acts of aggression had been committed from Lebanese territory against Israel, resulting in 15 Israeli civilians and five military personnel being killed, and 38 civilians and 55 military personnel being wounded.

The terrorist activity in the area, the Israeli spokesman continued, corresponded to the proclaimed design of the terrorist leaders to sabotage the diplomatic efforts being made to reach a peaceful solution of the Middle East crisis. Members of the Security Council were aware of the Cairo agreement between Lebanon and the commandos which had provided the terrorists in Lebanon with a base for their activities against Israel. That agreement had declared that the armed struggle of the Palestinians was in Lebanon's interest; accordingly, Lebanon had undertaken to co-operate in the installation of supplies, and rest and aid posts for the commandos.

In view of the continuous attacks from Lebanese territory and the admitted helplessness of the Lebanese authorities to control their own territory, Israel, its representative said, had been compelled to exercise its right of self-defence. A small unit had been sent to carry out a "search-and-comb" mission in the foot-hills of Mount Hermon, and it had been evacuated from Lebanese territory after completing its mission. In that minor action, the Lebanese Army had not been directly involved. It was incumbent upon Lebanon to prevent the use of its territory by irregular and regular forces for aggression against another Member State of the United Nations.

The representative of Spain said that the statements of the Secretary-General and of Lebanon and Israel had established that an invasion against Lebanon had taken place and that Israel had not denied it. Recalling a similar situation in May, when Spain had submitted a draft resolution calling on Israel to withdraw its armed forces from Lebanon, he said that assurances had been given that the withdrawal had been completed even as the question was being discussed in the Council. However, he added, the facts later proved that the withdrawal had not taken place.

He went on to say that the Council could not remain inactive because of its past experience and therefore Spain was proposing a draft resolution by which the Security Council would demand "the complete and immediate withdrawal of all Israeli armed forces from Lebanese territory."

The Spanish representative asked the Council to vote urgently on his proposal, and France supported his request.

The representative of Israel said that since he had already informed the Council that Israeli forces had evacuated Lebanese territory, the draft resolution proposed by Spain was divorced from reality. It would be unfortunate if the Council should be stampeded into voting on and adopting a draft resolution that was marked not only by an absence of equity but also by a refusal to take cognizance of the plain facts of the situation.

Spain reiterated that the penetration by the armed forces of a State into the territory of another State was a violation of Article 2, paragraph 4, of the United Nations Charter.<sup>13</sup> Therefore, the Council should proceed to a vote and call for the immediate and complete withdrawal of the Israeli forces which had penetrated into Lebanon.

The United States considered that the Spanish draft resolution was being presented in haste and before there had been an opportunity to ascertain through UNTSO what the precise situation was along the border. In view of the conflicting evidence, the United States would abstain on the Spanish draft, while making clear that this in no way detracted from continued and full United States support for the maintenance of the territorial integrity of Lebanon.

On the same day—5 September—the draft resolution submitted by Spain was adopted by 14 votes to 0, with 1 abstention (United States), as resolution 285(1970).

The United Kingdom said that, in spite of the conflict of evidence, it was appropriate to adopt the draft resolution. If the Israeli forces had indeed withdrawn, that fact would be welcomed; if they had not, then there was every reason for the Council to demand their immediate withdrawal. The United Kingdom nevertheless deplored all actions which were likely to impede the progress of Ambassador Jarring's mission and of the negotiations for an eventual settlement.

The representative of Lebanon thanked the members of the Council for their support and regretted that one member was unable to support the principle of withdrawal of foreign armed forces from the territory of independent and sovereign States, particularly when that member alleged that it had been working for peace in the Middle East.

The United States replied that its abstention was not related to the principle of withdrawal. If the Israeli forces had withdrawn, that would be welcome. If not, then it was the view of the United States that they should be withdrawn immediately.

In a report on 7 September, the Secretary-General, after referring to his statement before the Security Council on 5 September, said he had received a cable from the UNTSO Chief of Staff to the effect that the Lebanese authorities had informed UNTSO officially that Israeli forces had withdrawn from Lebanese territory as at 0700 hours GMT on 6 September 1970; in the absence of United Nations Observers in the area, there could be no direct observation of the circumstances of that withdrawal.

COMMUNICATIONS TO SECURITY COUNCIL (DECEMBER 1970)

On 28 December, Lebanon stated that a unit of Israeli forces, carried by two helicopters, had that day attacked the village of Yater in southern Lebanon, killing two civilians, wounding two others and destroying several houses. The letter added that, since its attack two years ago at the International Airport of Beirut, Israel had repeatedly attacked Lebanese territory with the aim of disrupting the peaceful life of the population and deliberately extending the area of conflict.

On 30 December, Israel replied that although Lebanon, under the cease-fire agreement, was committed to preventing the use of its territory for attacks against Israel, it was a matter of common knowledge that Lebanese territory—particularly villages in southern Lebanon—were being used as bases for terrorist aggression against Israel. On several occasions during 1970, Israel had drawn the Council's attention to those acts, which in recent weeks had increased; since 26 November 1970 18 such attacks by Lebanese-based saboteurs had taken place. It was against one of those bases that Israeli defensive action had been taken on the night of 27 December. As had been indicated previously to the Security Council and to Lebanon, Israel's policy regarding Lebanon continued to be based on scrupulous maintenance by both sides of the cease-fire, including the responsibility of Lebanon to prevent armed attacks from its territory against Israel.

COMPLAINTS BY ISRAEL AND SYRIA

COMMUNICATIONS TO SECURITY COUNCIL (2 JANUARY—31 DECEMBER 1970)

From time to time during 1970, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council reports on incidents in the Israel-Syria cease-fire sector, based on information received from the Chief of Staff of UNTSO. During January and February 1970, the Secretary-General circulated supplemental information from the UNTSO Chief of Staff which indicated intensification of firing incidents and, in particular, increased aerial activity. There were also reports of occasional firing close to United Nations observation posts and minor damage to United Nations installations.

On 2 February 1970, Israel charged that during January more than 60 armed attacks had been carried out by Syrian forces in violation of the cease-fire; these attacks—which employed mortars, rockets, artillery and bazookas—were continuing, as were mining raids and overflights.

In a letter of 11 February, Israel said that Syria's Minister of the Interior and chief representative to the Rabat (Morocco) Conference had told the Conference on 19 December 1969 that "there was no alternative to armed struggle" and that "all Arab States participating in the Conference should place all their economic, political and military capabilities in the service of that objective." That policy, Israel added, was translated into action through the continued initiation by Syrian regular forces of armed attacks against Israel and through the Syrian Government's support for and participation in the terrorist warfare pursued by irregular forces.

On 9 February, Syria drew attention to the continuation and intensification of aggression by Israeli regular armed forces against it and added that, contrary to Israeli allegations, Israeli forces had, since January, begun a campaign of terror against Syria's civilian population and its cities. Furthermore, since June 1967, Israel had effectively annexed and settled the occupied Syrian territories, and Israeli leaders had made no secret of their intentions in that regard.

During the period from 1 March to 30 May, the Secretary-General continued to circulate supplemental information containing reports received from the UNTSO Chief of Staff on incidents in the Israel-Syria sector. The reports showed that incidents involving the use of artillery, tank, mortar and rocket fire were taking place on an almost daily basis and that aerial activity had increased.

On 16 March, Israel charged that Syrian aggression was continuing and that attacks by regular and irregular forces from Syrian territory had intensified in recent days, causing loss of life and damage. Since the beginning of 1970, the letter added, there had been 148 Syrian attacks; in the preceding four days, such attacks had resulted in the death of three Israeli soldiers and the wounding of 120.

On 29 March, Israel further charged that on 23 March Syrian armed forces had crossed the cease-fire line and clashed with Israeli forces. Eight of the attackers had been killed, and their bodies had been returned to Syria through the International Red Cross. The letter also stated that on 27 March the Syrian regular army had carried out another attack on an Israeli military position, during which one Israeli soldier had been killed and another wounded.

On 3 April, Syria charged that on the previous day Israeli air force and army units had attacked Syria and that Syrian air force and ground army units had had to take action in self-defence. As a result of that attack, 16 Syrian soldiers had been killed and 37 others wounded. Furthermore, the letter added, Israeli forces had also attacked Syrian towns and villages, killing a number of civilians—including women and children—and destroying a number of houses. The letter charged that Israel's violations of the cease-fire from 1 January until 18 March totalled 1,045.

On 6 April, Israel replied that its defence action on 2 April was aimed at Syrian military targets and that its objective was to thwart Syria's aggressive actions, which had intensified in recent weeks, as had been reported in its letters of 11 February and 16 and 29 March.

On 5 June, Syria, referring to its letter of 9 February regarding the annexation by Israel of occupied Syrian territory, stated that, according to a report by the Jewish Telegraphic Agency on 1 June, Israel had approved a $48 million five-year plan to expand Israeli settlement in the Golan Heights. That new manifestation of illegal military occupation by Israel, the letter added, violated Security Council resolutions, the Charter, the Geneva Convention of 1949 relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, and all of the General Assembly's humanitarian resolutions. The situation again was attributed to the support Israel continued to receive from the United States Government.

During the month of June, the Chief of Staff of UNTSO reported on numerous firing incidents in the Israel-Syria sector. On 25 and 26 June, he reported intensification of fire exchanges along the cease-fire line, involving the use of heavy and light weapons. In supplemental information issued the following day, he reported that the Officer-in-Charge of the Tiberias Control Centre had informed him that Israeli tanks, supported by armoured personnel carriers, had crossed the cease-fire line and had been seen at a distance of up to five kilometres inside Syrian territory. At the same time, heavy exchanges of fire had been observed, accompanied by raids carried out by Israeli aircraft along the cease-fire line.

The report added that Israeli forces had occupied an observation post that day at 1230 hours GMT and had asked the United Nations Military Observers to cease radio transmissions. Protests had been made to the Israeli authorities. Later that day, Israeli forces had withdrawn from the area of the post. The report further indicated that as a result of the intense exchange of firing, several United Nations installations, as well as equipment, had been damaged.

In the same report, the Chief of Staff said there had been further intensification of aerial activity in the Israel-Syria sector, involving the flight of Israeli jet aircraft over Syrian lines and attacks on Syrian positions and troops. During these attacks, the Observers reported that anti-aircraft fire from the Syrian forces had been heard. The report added that Israeli authorities had informed the UNTSO Chief of Staff that, during those incidents, 10 Israeli soldiers had been killed and 32 wounded, in addition to one aircraft lost. All cease-fire arrangements proposed by the United Nations Military Observers, although accepted by the parties on several occasions, had not been effective.

In further supplemental information issued by the Secretary-General from the beginning of July until the end of December 1970, the UNTSO Chief of Staff indicated that sporadic firing incidents had continued to take place almost daily, and that, in most of the cases, the firing had been initiated by Israeli forces. During the same period, light aerial activity was reported and, on some occasions, United Nations installations and equipment had received slight damage as a result of the firing.

TREATMENT OF CIVILIAN POPULATIONS IN ISRAELI-OCCUPIED TERRITORIES AND RELATED MATTERS

COMMUNICATIONS

During 1970, the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General received a number of communications concerning the treatment of the civilian population in territories under Israel's occupation. The Arab States complained about Israel's policies in these territories, alleging the arrest, detention, dispossession and expulsion of civilians and confiscation or expropriation of Arab lands. Israel, in its replies, rejected the charges by the Arab States.

On 23 January 1970, Syria charged that two

Syrian pilots had been ill-treated while imprisoned in Israel. Syria complained that the ill-treatment, which was in violation of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, had taken place between visits by the representatives of the International Red Cross to territories occupied by Israel. Syria further charged that Israel had refused to permit a representative of the Secretary-General to visit the occupied areas in pursuance of relevant Security Council resolutions. It had also refused to allow a visit by the Special Working Group of Experts established on 4 March 1969 by the Commission on Human Rights to investigate violations of human rights in the Israeli-occupied territories or by the three-member Committee established by the General Assembly on 19 December 1968. (See below, pp. 246-47.)

Israel, in its reply on 30 January, denied the charges of ill-treatment and said that the conditions of detention of the two Syrian pilots were in full accord with the provisions of the above-mentioned Geneva Convention. Syria's charges were an attempt to divert attention from the situation created by membership in the Security Council of a Government which persisted in violating provisions of the United Nations Charter. With regard to visits to Israeli-held territories by a representative of the Secretary-General, the Special Working Group of Experts or the three-member Committee, Israel stated it had no objection to visits by such representatives provided they also investigated the question of oppression of Jews by Arab regimes.

On 9 June, Israel noted a statement by the Foreign Minister of Somalia to the effect that his country considered itself at war with Israel and pointed out that Somalia was one of the three members of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, established by the General Assembly in December 1968.

Another member of that Committee, Israel noted further, was Yugoslavia, which had broken relations with Israel and openly identified itself with the political position of the Arab States. It also drew attention to a declaration of 14 June by the Prime Minister of Ceylon—the third member of the Committee—announcing that diplomatic and other relations with Israel would be suspended until the settlement of the conflict between Israel and the Arab countries. Following that declaration, the Foreign Minister of Israel had stated that Ceylon's decision encouraged all the extremist factors which were rendering peace in the Middle East more distant. Israel asserted that the three-member Committee, which was composed of three States inimical to Israel, was functioning as a tool of Arab propaganda and that its activities were devoid of all moral or legal validity.

By a note dated 27 July, the President of the Security Council drew the attention of Council members to a resolution adopted on 23 March 1970 by the Commission on Human Rights on the question of human rights in territories occupied as a result of hostilities in the Middle East, including the report of the Special Working Group of Experts. The Commission on Human Rights had requested the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council the text of that resolution and the report of the Special Working Group of Experts established to investigate allegations concerning Israel's violation of the Geneva Convention of 1949 relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War in the occupied territories.

In letters of 16 and 23 July, and 12 and 27 August, Jordan charged that Israel, in violation of General Assembly resolutions and the Geneva Conventions of 1949, had taken measures forcibly to expel Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories. Jordan submitted with each letter a list of the names, ages and the villages or towns of those expelled.

On 3 August, Jordan charged that Israel had opened artillery fire, aimed at the Coptic Convent and other neighbouring convents in the occupied area of Jericho, which had resulted in the destruction of parts of the Convent and damage to other properties. Jordan added that Israeli authorities had been forcing Moslem worshippers to evacuate the Ibrahimi Mosque in Al Khalil (Hebron) to make room for Jewish fanatics and Israeli soldiers. In addition, and as part of its policy to change the character of the occupied area, Israeli authorities had taken over two Islamic shrines—the Mosque of Rachael's Tomb on the Jerusalem-Al Khalil road and Joseph's Shrine in Nablus.

On 17 August, Israel replied that, since 1968, Christian monasteries on the Jordan River in the area of the Baptism Site, on the Israeli side of the cease-fire line, had been harassed by firing from saboteurs. The Coptic Convent was the target of an attack on 24 May 1969 and was later damaged by explosive charges laid by saboteurs from Jordan on 4 August and 11 December 1969.

On 16 September, representatives of 14 Arab States stated in a letter to the Secretary-General that reports in the world press had indicated that, during the previous few days, hundreds of men and women had been arbitrarily arrested in the Israeli-occupied Arab territories; that these innocent civilians were being held by Israel as hostages; and that the entire population of the occupied territories had been threatened with further measures of greater repressiveness.

They pointed out that in view of the persistent refusal of the Israeli authorities to permit international fact-finding missions to visit the occupied territories in fulfilment of their mandate under various United Nations resolutions, press reports remained a principal means by which the international community could be informed about the measures that had been systematically pursued by Israel since the beginning of the occupation.

The letter added that the arbitrary arrest and detention of civilian inhabitants of occupied territories in reprisal for actions they had not personally committed, and the taking of hostages under any pretext, were specifically and unequivocally outlawed by the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War. Israel's actions, said the letter, constituted a grave escalation of Israel's methodical violations of the Geneva Convention and the relevant United Nations resolutions.

On 23 September, in a letter to the Secretary-General, Israel rejected the charges of the Arab States and said that, on 6 and 9 September, five attempts at hijacking civil passenger aircraft on regular scheduled flights had been made by members of an Arab terrorist organization operating in and from the Arab countries bordering on Israel. One had been foiled. The four planes successfully hijacked had subsequently been blown up—one at Cairo (United Arab Republic), the other three a week later at Zerka (Jordan). Their passengers and crews were held as hostages under barbaric conditions; some had since been released but over 50 remained captive, apparently because most of them were Jews.

The Israeli letter then recalled that the Security Council had on 9 September expressed its grave concern "at the threat to innocent civilian lives from the hijacking of aircraft" and had appealed for the immediate release of all passengers and crews without exception. (See below, pp. 263-64.)

Israel, for its part, had had no choice but to take precautionary measures against the threat of further terror activity, the letter continued. On 12 September, Israeli security authorities had temporarily taken in for questioning 450 persons suspected of being associated with the terror organizations, particularly the one that openly claimed credit for the hijackings. Seventy-five of these had been released within two days; the rest were freed by 18 September, after their interrogation had been completed.

On 15 October, the representative of Syria transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of an article published on 11 October in The Sunday Times of London which stated that a report released by the International Committee of the Red Cross had accused Israel of blowing up Arab towns, villages, camps and houses in the occupied territories in defiance of the 1949 Geneva Convention—acts which the International Committee had protested.

DECISION BY HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

During 1970, the reports of two groups concerned with aspects of the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied as a result of hostilities in the Middle East were considered variously by the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

The two groups were: the Special Working Group of Experts established by the Human Rights Commission in March 1969<sup>14</sup> to investigate allegations concerning Israel's violations of the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War in territories militarily occupied by Israel; and the three-member Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, established by the General Assembly on 19 December 1968.<sup>15</sup>

On 23 March 1970, the Human Rights Commission adopted a resolution based on the recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the Special Working Group of Experts.

Among other things, the Commission noted with dismay Israel's refusal to co-operate with the Special Working Group and endorsed the Group's conclusions regarding the applicability of the fourth (1949) Geneva Convention to all the occupied areas, including occupied Jerusalem, and the existence of violations of that Convention in the Israeli-occupied territories.

The Commission condemned Israel's refusal to apply the Convention, and its violations thereof, in particular: (a) the total or partial destruction of villages and cities in the occupied territories; (b) the establishment of Israeli settlements in the militarily occupied Arab territories; (c) the unlawful deportation and expulsion of civilians; (d) coercive acts to compel the civilian population under its military occupation to collaborate with the occupying power against their will; (e) the abrogation of the national laws in the occupied territories contrary to the Convention and the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly; and (f) all policies and measures of collective punishment.

The Commission deplored all policies and actions aiming at the deportation of the Palestinian refugees from the occupied Gaza Strip and called on Israel to desist from such deportation.

The Commission also expressed concern over other specific violations of the 1949 Geneva Convention, such as: the use of means of coercion to extract information; the ill-treatment and killing of civilians without provocation; detention by administrative order, without any guarantee concerning the length of detention and fair trial; matters concerning counsel; and destruction and usurpation of movable and immovable property.

Next, the Commission called on Israel once more strictly to observe the Geneva Convention in the occupied territories and to refrain from certain measures in contravention of it. The Special Working Group was asked to continue to investigate and report Israeli violations of the Convention and to examine in particular: (a) the evidence concerning the cases of torture taking place in Israeli prisons against prisoners in the occupied territories; (b) other cases of violations of the Convention in the occupied territories which it had not yet investigated; and (c) the establishment of settlements in the occupied territories in contravention of the Convention.

The Commission called on Israel to receive the Special Working Group, to co-operate with it and to facilitate its task. The Commission also decided to include the question as a separate item of priority at its 1971 session. The Secretary-General was asked to give the widest publicity to the entire report of the Special Working Group and to report to the Commission in 1971 on that publicity. He was also asked to bring the report to the attention of the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council.

DECISION BY ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

On 27 May 1970, the Economic and Social Council decided, among other things, that the investigation decided upon by the Human Rights Commission should be undertaken in 1970, bearing in mind the need to effect maximum savings when allocating funds. The Council took this action in adopting resolution 1505 (XLVIII), by 12 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions. (See text of resolution in DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

DECISION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Later in 1970, at its twenty-fifth session, the General Assembly considered the report of the

Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, established by the Assembly in 1968 and further guided by Assembly resolution 2546(XXIV) of 11 December 1969.<sup>16</sup>

The Special Committee concluded, among other things, that Israel was pursuing policies and practices in the occupied territories which were in violation of the human rights of the population of these territories, and that in this case the fundamental violation of human rights lay in the very fact of occupation. The Committee found it almost impossible to separate the specific policies and practices applied to individuals, groups or areas from the broad context of the occupation itself. The Committee believed that, while the occupation lasted, Israel—as the occupying power—had both a legal and a moral obligation to implement the third and fourth Geneva Conventions of 1949 (the third Convention having to do with the treatment of prisoners of war, the fourth, with the protection of civilian persons in time of war).

Specifically, the Special Committee proposed that Israel be asked by the General Assembly:

(a) to permit the unconditional return to their homes of all persons who had fled the occupied territories, or who were deported or expelled therefrom;

(b) to cease immediately and to prevent all policies and practices of collective punishment, such as the destruction of property, imposition of excessively harsh curfews and mass arrests;

(c) to make full compensation for property destroyed, and to effect restitution of property confiscated in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention;

(d) to cease immediately and to prevent the torture and ill-treatment of prisoners of war and persons imprisoned or detained under the laws and regulations relating to the occupation and to apply to such persons the provisions of the third and fourth Geneva Conventions and of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners;

(e) to bring to an end the indefinite and prolonged detention without trial of all persons, including those detained under security regulations and those under administrative detention, by releasing them or affording them a fair trial in accordance with the provisions of the Geneva Conventions;

(f) to reform the procedures and conditions of administrative detention in accordance with those Conventions;

(g) to refrain from attempts at compelling the inhabitants of the occupied territories to collaborate with the occupation authorities;

(h) to discontinue the policy of establishing Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, and to withdraw all Israeli settlers from settlements already established;

(i) to eliminate and refrain from the creation of social and economic conditions resulting in the departure of the inhabitants of the occupied territories from their established homes and communities;

(j) to refrain from the harassment and arbitrary deportation of leaders and intellectuals from among the inhabitants of the occupied territories;

(k) to rescind Israeli legislation in force in the occupied territories which was repugnant to provisions of the third and fourth Geneva Conventions;

(l) to repeal all measures taken to alter the status of occupied Jerusalem and to restore it to the status subsisting before the outbreak of hostilities;

(m) to restore the judicial system in the occupied territories to the status it enjoyed before the occupation and in particular to return the Court of Appeals of Jerusalem to its seat in Jerusalem;

(n) to investigate all the allegations brought to the notice of the Special Committee concerning ill-treatment of civilians and detainees, particularly those detained under security regulations, access to whom was denied to officials of the International Red Cross, and those purportedly held under administrative detention, and to take appropriate remedial measures.

The Special Committee then proposed, as a temporary practical measure, that the General Assembly recommend to the States whose territory was occupied by Israel that they appoint immediately either a neutral State or States, or an international organization offering all guarantees of impartiality and effectiveness, to safeguard the human rights of the population of the occupied territories. In the special circumstances prevailing in the occupied territories, where there was a large population not yet given the opportunity of exercising its rights of self-determination, it was necessary, in the Special Committee's view, to make suitable arrangements for the proper representation of their interests.

The Special Committee also proposed that a neutral State or organization, nominated by Israel, be associated in the arrangement, and that Israel be called upon to accept such an arrangement and to provide all the facilities necessary for its effective functioning consistent with the provisions of the third and fourth Geneva Conventions.

The Special Committee went on to suggest that the State or States or international organization duly nominated under this arrangement be authorized to undertake the following activities: (a) to secure the scrupulous implementation of the provisions relating to human rights contained in the third and fourth Geneva Conventions, and in particular to investigate and determine the facts in the case of allegations of the violations of the human rights provisions of these Conventions or of other applicable international instruments; (b) to ensure that the population of the occupied territories was treated in accordance with the applicable law; and (c) to report on its work to the States concerned and to the General Assembly.

The Special Committee felt that until such an arrangement was made it should continue its work.

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly among other things noted with regret that the provisions of relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies had not been implemented by the Israeli authorities, and it expressed grave concern for the safety, welfare and security of the inhabitants of the Arab territories under military occupation by Israel.

The Assembly expressed appreciation to the Special Committee and its members for its efforts in performing the task assigned to it and called on Israel immediately to implement the Special Committee's recommendations and to comply with its obligations under the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the relevant resolutions adopted by the various international organizations.

The Assembly then asked the Special Committee, pending the early termination of the Israeli occupation of Arab territories, to continue its work and to consult, as appropriate, with the International Committee of the Red Cross in order to ensure the safeguarding of the human rights of the population of the occupied territories. Israel was urged to receive the Special Committee, to co-operate with it and facilitate its work.

The Assembly asked the Special Committee to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arose thereafter; and it asked the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with all the necessary facilities for the continued performance of its tasks.

Finally, the Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its twenty-sixth (1971) session an item on the report (or reports) of the Special Committee.

The Assembly took these decisions in adopting resolution 2727 (XXV)—by a roll-call vote of 52 to 20, with 43 abstentions—on the recommendation of its Special Political Committee, to which the item had been referred. The Special Political Committee had approved the text on 11 December 1970 by a roll-call vote of 49 to 14, with 37 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal sponsored eventually by Afghanistan, Guinea, Indonesia, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Pakistan and Senegal.

THE SITUATION IN AND AROUND JERUSALEM AND ITS HOLY PLACES

In a letter of 22 July 1970 to the Secretary-General, Jordan protested against the levying by Israel of defence taxes on Jordanian citizens in the occupied City of Jerusalem and its environs, as well as against Israeli measures designed to change the Arab character of the city. Jordan pointed out that in spite of the Security Council's resolution of 3 July 1969,<sup>17</sup> which had condemned all measures taken by Israel to change the status of the city, Israel had neither rescinded those measures nor had it refrained from taking new measures to change the political, legal and demographic status of the city.

In another letter, dated 28 October, Jordan, after reiterating that Israel had continued its defiance of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions on the status of Jerusalem, forwarded the text of an article published in the International Herald Tribune of 17-18 October 1970, depicting some of Israel's construction plans in the Arab part of the City of Jerusalem. The letter added that the only way that those illegal measures could be stopped was to end Israel's occupation of Jerusalem.

SEARCH FOR A PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT OF THE MIDDLE EAST PROBLEM

REPORTS BY SECRETARY-GENERAL

During 1970, efforts continued in the search for a peaceful settlement of the Middle East problem.

In a report of 4 January 1971, the Secretary-General reviewed the efforts of his Special Representative to the Middle East, Ambassador Gunnar V. Jarring, since the adoption of the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967 (242(1967)).<sup>18</sup>

In June 1970, the report said, the United States proposed to Israel, Jordan and the United Arab Republic that they should each advise Ambassador Jarring as follows:

(1) that having accepted, and indicated their willingness to carry out, the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967 in all its parts, they would designate representatives to discussions to be held under his auspices, according to such procedure and at such places and times as he might recommend, taking into account, as appropriate, each side's preference as to method of procedure and previous experience between the parties;

(2) that the purpose of the discussions was to reach agreement on the establishment of a just and lasting peace between them, based on mutual acknowledgement by the United Arab Republic, Jordan and Israel of each other's sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence, and on Israel's withdrawal from territories occupied in the 1967 conflict, both in accordance with the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967; and

(3) that, to facilitate Ambassador Jarring's task of promoting agreement as set forth in the resolution of 22 November 1967, the parties would strictly observe, effective from 1 July at least until 1 October, the cease-fire resolutions of the Security Council.

In a note of 7 August, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he had been informed by the United States that its peace proposal had been accepted by the three Governments and that Ambassador Jarring had received confirmation of the acceptances by their representatives to the United Nations. The United States, he said, had received from the parties the acceptance of a standstill cease-fire for a period of 90 days, effective from 7 August until at least 5 November.

The Secretary-General stated that he and Ambassador Jarring therefore believed that there was a reasonable basis on which to renew immediately the Special Representative's contacts with the parties. It could be said, therefore, that the Jarring mission was now reactivated. The Secretary-General added that since its inception in 1967 the mission had never been suspended or inoperative, although at times—because of unavoidable circumstances—it had been relatively inactive. In his view, an important step forward had been taken in the search for peace in the Middle East.

Subsequently, the Secretary-General reported, Ambassador Jarring invited the parties to take part in discussions opening in New York on 25 August and had met on that day with each of their representatives. However, the representative of Israel had stated that he had been instructed to return to Israel. On his return on 8 September, he had informed Ambassador Jarring that Israel's acceptance of the United States peace initiative was still in effect but that in view of Egypt's grave violation of the cease-fire standstill agreement, and inasmuch as the strictest observance of that standstill agreement was one of the central elements of the United States peace initiative, Israel would be unable to participate in the talks under the auspices of the Special Representative as long as the cease-fire standstill agreement was not observed in its entirety and the original situation restored.

On 14 September 1970, in the introduction to his annual report to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General said, among other things, that the agreement of the three Governments to the peace proposal initiated by the United States, in providing a basis on which Ambassador Jarring could renew his contacts with the parties, created at the time an atmosphere of cautious hope which had been conspicuously lacking in recent years. It was, he said, a tentative indication that at long last there might be among the parties a will to peace—indispensable for any hope of progress. Now, in mid-September, there could be no doubt that the peace effort in the Middle East had suffered a severe set-back. Israel, he noted, had charged that the cease-fire standstill conditions in the Suez Canal sector had been continuously violated by the United Arab Republic and had insisted that until the original situation was restored, Israel would not participate in the talks.

Despite all the difficulties, the Secretary-General felt that failure was not inevitable nor should it be concluded that there was no longer any scope for constructive peace talks. On the contrary, it was the time to exert every possible effort towards a resumption of the talks.

The Secretary-General stressed that the matter of the standstill arrangement involved neither Ambassador Jarring nor the United Nations but only the United States and the two parties concerned. It was an area in which the United Nations had no responsibility because none had been given to it.

The Secretary-General hoped that the talks could soon be resumed; he was convinced that this was probably the one chance of a breakthrough to peace in the Middle East. The current peace move, he said, even though it had now encountered serious obstacles, had also shown that Member States, and especially four of the permanent members of the Security Council, working together both within and outside the United Nations, could reach agreement even on the most difficult and controversial problems. In particular, he added, the concurrence of the two super-powers—buttressed by France and the United Kingdom—in a positive course of action was of decisive importance.

The Secretary-General concluded by saying that the great basic problems of the Middle East still lay ahead. If the will to peace of the parties and the will to help of United Nations Members could be maintained, he believed that the efforts of the Governments concerned, of the Security Council and of Ambassador Jarring could in the end succeed.

The Secretary-General subsequently reported that while the Special Representative's talks with the Arab representatives had continued, they could not be productive because of lack of contact with the Israel representative. However, the Special Representative had held a wide range of contacts with representatives of the parties and of other Member States during the commemorative twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly and during the Assembly's debate on the Middle East.

After the adoption of the Assembly's resolution of 4 November 1970 (2628(XXV)) (see below for details), the Special Representative invited representatives of the parties to resume talks under his auspices. Although the representatives of Jordan and the United Arab Republic informed him of their willingness to do so, the representative of Israel stated that the matter was under consideration by his Government.

On 19 November, the Special Representative, in a letter to Israel's Foreign Minister, formally invited the Government of Israel to resume its participation in the discussions. On 30 December, Ambassador Jarring received a letter from Israel's Foreign Minister stating his Government's readiness to resume its participation in the talks.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

At its 1969 session, the General Assembly had decided that consideration of the item relating to the situation in the Middle East should be deferred to the twenty-fifth Assembly session in 1970. The item was included in the agenda of that session and discussed at plenary meetings of the Assembly held between 26 October and 4 November 1970.

By a decision taken on 4 November, the General Assembly expressed serious concern that the continuation of the grave and deteriorating situation in the Middle East constituted a serious threat to international peace and security. It reaffirmed that no territorial acquisition resulting from the threat or use of force would be recognized, and deplored the continued occupation of the Arab territories since 5 June 1967. It also expressed serious concern that the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967 (242(1967))<sup>19</sup>—which had been unanimously adopted and provided for a peaceful settlement of the situation in the Middle East—had not yet been implemented.

The Assembly then:

(1) reaffirmed that the acquisition of territories by force was inadmissible and that, consequently, territories thus occupied had to be restored;

(2) reaffirmed that the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East should include the application of both the following principles: (a) withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from territories occupied in the recent conflict; (b) termination of all claims or states of belligerency and respect for and acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every State in the area and its right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force;

(3) recognized that respect for the rights of the Palestinians was an indispensable element in the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

(4) urged the speedy implementation of the Security Council's resolution of 22 November

1967—providing for the peaceful settlement of the situation in the Middle East—in all its parts;

(5) called upon the parties directly concerned to instruct their representatives to resume contact with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in order to enable him to carry out, at the earliest possible date, his mandate for the implementation of the Council's resolution adopted on 22 November 1967 in all its parts;

(6) recommended to the parties that they extend the cease-fire for a period of three months in order that they might enter into talks under the auspices of the Special Representative with a view to giving effect to the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967;

(7) requested the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council within two months, and to the Assembly as appropriate, on the efforts of the Special Representative and on the implementation of the Council's resolution; and

(8) requested the Security Council to consider, if necessary, making arrangements, under the relevant Articles of the Charter, to ensure the implementation of its resolution.

The General Assembly took these decisions in adopting resolution 2628(XXV) on 4 November by a roll-call vote of 57 to 16, with 39 abstentions. (For text and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The text, as revised and amended, was sponsored eventually by the following 22 Members: Afghanistan, Burundi, Cameroon, Ceylon, Equatorial Guinea, Ghana, Guinea, India, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Nigeria, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

During the debate, the sponsors revised their text and agreed to amendments put forward by France. These included the addition of the operative paragraph calling for the application of the principles: (a) of withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from territories occupied in the 1967 conflict; and (b) termination of all claims or states of belligerency and respect for and acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every State in the area and its right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force.

Another French amendment accepted by the sponsors was the addition of the paragraph by which the Assembly recognized that respect for the rights of the Palestinians was an indispensable element in the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

France also proposed, and the sponsors accepted, the addition of the paragraph recommending that the parties extend the cease-fire for a three-month period in order to facilitate talks under the Special Representative's auspices with a view to giving effect to the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.

Two other proposals on the situation in the Middle East were submitted to the Assembly. The first of these was a United States text, which was not pressed to a vote. The other was a text sponsored by 21 Latin American States, which was rejected by the Assembly on 4 November by a roll-call vote of 49 against to 45 in favour, with 27 abstentions. (For sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the United States proposal, the General Assembly would have, first, endorsed the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967 and urged that it be carried out in all its parts;

Second, the Assembly would have recommended to the parties and all concerned to exert their utmost efforts, taking into account the obstacles and difficulties which had arisen since the cease-fire standstill agreement went into effect, to create, in accordance with that agreement, the conditions necessary to establish the confidence in which the parties could resume discussions promptly under the auspices of the Special Representative, in accordance with the proposal contained in the Secretary-General's note of 7 August (see above).

Finally, by the United States text, the Assembly would have endorsed the Security Council's resolutions of 1967 on the cease-fire and recommended that the observance of the cease-fire as contained in the note by the Secretary-General of 7 August be extended for at least three months in order to facilitate the promotion of agreement as set forth in the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.

By the Latin American proposal, the General Assembly would have, among other things, expressed its full support of the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967 and affirmed the need for its speedy implementation. It would also have supported the efforts of the Special Representative to carry out his mission to promote agreement for the implementation of the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.

The Assembly also would have requested the parties directly concerned to instruct their representatives to resume discussions with the Special Representative to enable him to carry out as soon as possible his mission to promote agreement for the implementation of the Council's resolution in its entirety.

The Latin American text also would have had the Assembly support the Security Council's resolutions of 1967 concerning the cease-fire and recommend—in order to promote agreement as envisaged in the Council's resolution—that the cease-fire mentioned in the Secretary-General's note of 7 August 1970 should be scrupulously observed and extended for three months, with the addition of suitable measures for proper supervision of its observance, including, if possible, the use of United Nations Observers stationed in the region.

Finally, this text would have had the Assembly ask the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council within two months, and to the General Assembly as appropriate, on the efforts of the Special Representative and on the implementation of the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.

During the debate, the Foreign Minister of the United Arab Republic said his Government had asked that consideration of the situation in the Middle East be resumed by the General Assembly in view of Israel's rejection of all international efforts towards a settlement during the past three years and its insistence on following an expansionist policy, thus creating an ever increasing threat to international peace and security. In the opinion of his Government, the General Assembly should play a positive role in assisting the Security Council to implement its resolution 242(1967) of 22 November 1967.

He then charged that Israel had not only consistently refused to co-operate in all efforts at implementing that resolution but, by its withdrawal on 6 September 1970 from contacts with Ambassador Jarring, had further shown its determination to undermine efforts for peace in the Middle East. In contrast to that attitude, the United Arab Republic had not only accepted the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967 but had expressed—as early as December 1967—its readiness to fulfil all its obligations under that resolution.

With regard to the United States initiative, the United Arab Republic had, he said, accepted it in full and had designated its representative for talks with the Special Representative. Israel, however, had not made one single substantive contact with Ambassador Jarring after accepting the United States initiative and had justified its position by alleging that the United Arab Republic had violated the cease-fire arrangements.

After outlining what he described as Israel's twofold policy of military aggression and political deceit, the Foreign Minister of the United Arab Republic said that early in 1970 Israel had embarked upon a new stage in its aggression: it carried out daily air raids against the civilian population of the United Arab Republic, causing hundreds of deaths, and its war against civilians had also been extended to Jordan, Syria and Lebanon. It was regrettable, he added, that the United States had assisted in that aggression and had continued to provide Israel with bombers and other weapons, as well as with massive economic aid. By taking that hostile position towards the Arab peoples and by supporting the aggressor, the United States obstructed the realization of peace in the Middle East.

In the view of the United Arab Republic, it had become imperative that the United Nations keep the situation in the Middle East under its active consideration, follow up constantly the efforts being made for peace and make use of its powers under the Charter until peace was finally secured by the withdrawal of Israel's forces from all the occupied Arab territories.

The Foreign Minister of Israel charged that the United Arab Republic had massively violated the cease-fire standstill agreement through the construction and forward movement of a great missile system. The result was that the equilibrium of the 7 August agreement had been broken, Israel's acceptance of the cease-fire standstill had been exploited and confidence in the validity of Egyptian commitments undermined. Israel, on the other hand, had accepted a negotiating procedure under Ambassador Jarring's auspices that would be indirect in its first phase. It had also, despite doubts, acquiesced in a cease-fire of limited duration and had declared its readiness to accept and seek agreement on the implementation of the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.

To make clear that its objective in territorial negotiations was not arbitrary expansion but legitimate security, Israel, its Foreign Minister went on to say, had stated its willingness to withdraw its forces, on the establishment of peace, to agreed, recognized and secure boundaries, to be determined in the peace negotiations. That policy, he added, had been conveyed to Ambassador Jarring on 6 August in the form of an affirmative response to the United States peace initiative. Under the cease-fire standstill agreement, which was the heart and centre of that initiative, and which was accepted by Egypt and endorsed by the USSR, the parties undertook to refrain from changing the status quo within a zone extending 50 kilometres to the east and west of the cease-fire line and, specifically, to do nothing but maintain installations at the existing sites. They agreed not to introduce, move forward, construct or otherwise install missiles in the zone, or carry out any work for the establishment of any new missile sites.

However, the Foreign Minister of Israel continued, contrary to those precise undertakings, Egypt had established between 500 and 600 operational SA-2 and SA-3 missiles in the standstill zone in violation of the agreement of 7 August. These, he declared, were not defensive measures but offensive preparations designed to change the cease-fire lines by renewed war. In the circumstances, it was impossible to consider negotiating a new agreement while the existing one had been shown so little respect. The most urgent task now was to restore the confidence necessary for a peace dialogue to take place.

The Foreign Minister of Israel went on to say that the General Assembly should not upset the existing consensus among the parties on the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967 by giving it a new formulation, or balance, or emphasis.

He also noted that the situation in the Middle East was still being actively considered by the Security Council; any recommendation by the General Assembly implying a change in the balance of the Security Council's resolution would be in violation of the spirit of Article 12 of the Charter.<sup>20</sup> In those circumstances, the General Assembly should urge the parties to observe strictly the cease-fire standstill agreement and call for the restoration of the 7 August situation so that the Jarring mission could make progress in the Egyptian-Israeli sector, as well as in others.

The representative of the United States said that ever since the adoption of the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967, his Government had made every effort to help achieve its objectives. It was because of that concern that it had taken the initiative which had led to the developments reported by the Secretary-General on 7 August 1970. As a result of an intensive period of quiet diplomacy, an arrangement had been worked out with the countries concerned whereby they had stated explicitly their willingness to carry out the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967 in all its parts and had committed themselves to pursuing the goal of reaching agreement on a just and lasting peace. Moreover, the observance of the cease-fire had replaced the daily shelling on both sides of the Suez Canal, and the escalating danger of a great power confrontation had also eased.

Commenting on an early draft of the resolution later adopted by the Assembly, and prior to submitting the United States text, the United States representative pointed out that it had taken almost three years to get from all three of the States directly concerned explicit, public agreement to carry out the resolution of 22 November 1967 in all its parts, as well as agreement as to how discussions to that end should be conducted. In his view, it would be irresponsible for the General Assembly to adopt any resolution appearing to add to, subtract from, interpret or distort the careful balance of the Council's resolution.

The United States Government, he added, which valued the role of both the General Assembly and the Security Council in dealing with the problem of the Middle East, would urge the Assembly to avoid any unrealistic action. The objective must be agreement on a peaceful settlement, with serious efforts made to resume the discussions between the parties and to ensure discussions that would permit rapid progress towards such a settlement. The United States was ready to pledge all its efforts for the successful conclusion of those discussions; it stressed that comparable efforts were required from others seriously seeking a peaceful settlement for the Middle East.

The representative of France said that since the Charter had conferred on the Security Council, the primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, there was no question of the Assembly assuming the role of the Council or making an attempt to weaken a Council resolution. However, it would, in France's view, be appropriate for the Council to seek the Assembly's views and, because of the exceptional circumstances, the whole moral force of the Assembly would have to be brought to bear in the decision of the Council.

The French representative went on to say that the majority of Assembly Members also believed that a just and peaceful settlement in the Middle East would have to be based on the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967. Moreover, the United Arab Republic, Jordan and Israel had publicly confirmed their acceptance of that resolution. Four of the permanent members of the Security Council had been working on the problem for months, each one making very constructive proposals. But the resolution of 22 November 1967 had still not been applied and, in his view, this was because of the lack of determination to accept or to force acceptance of the Security Council's recommendations. It was on that point that the moral pressure of the General Assembly had to be exerted and, if need be, a new action in the Security Council had to be taken in the light of the lessons learned from the difficulties met in efforts to implement the resolution.

The United States initiative, which deserved full support, the French representative continued, had made the resumption of the Jarring mission possible. It had also called for a resumption of the cease-fire with standstill arrangements. Those arrangements had been violated, which was regrettable, but the basic error, in France's view, was that neither the four powers, nor the Security Council, nor the United Nations had ever had to take cognizance of the cease-fire. A halt to military operations, under the guarantee of the four powers acting within the framework of the Security Council, would have had a completely different value. Peace was not determined by one or two, while United Nations Member States were reduced to the role of spectators.

As to confidence, the French representative added, there could be none on either side as long as fair settlement guaranteed by other States was not reached through negotiation. Three steps were needed: the earliest possible resumption of the Jarring mission; the extension of the cease-fire for an unspecified period; and the implementation of all the provisions of the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.

The USSR representative said the hostile actions of Israel against the Arab countries continued to make it impossible to establish a just and solid peace in the Middle East. This compelled the United Nations and all peace-loving Governments to adopt further steps to make Israel accept a settlement based on the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.

He went on to say that Israel's aggression—maintained by international imperialist and neo-colonialist forces—aimed at liquidating progressive regimes in Arab countries and at holding back their progress towards liberation. For its part, the United States had taken such measures as the deployment of its Sixth Fleet in the eastern Mediterranean, the transfer of new Phantom aircraft and the extension of credit to Israel for the purchase in the United States of military technology and equipment.

According to the USSR spokesman, the United States had also supported Israel's expansionist plans by making the withdrawal of Israeli troops conditional upon the so-called rectification of borders. This United States policy was in direct conflict with one of the basic provisions of the Council's resolution, namely, the inadmissibility of acquiring territories by means of war.

Furthermore, he said, united action by Israel and the United States had aimed at blocking the progress of the Jarring mission, and the purpose of the United States draft resolution was to assist Israel in its defiance and block the implementation of the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967. The United States draft asked for the establishment of confidence, but that could not be established without the withdrawal of Israel's troops, the USSR spokesman said. Moreover, the obstacles in the way of a settlement referred to in the United States draft were of Israel's making, supported by the United States through its insistence on air superiority for Israel in the Suez Canal area.

The USSR representative said the way to a just and lasting peace in the Middle East lay not through threat and military adventure but through the total withdrawal of Israeli forces from all occupied Arab territories—the first and most important requirement of the Council's resolution.

The USSR, he said, believed that safe borders could be achieved not by a policy of expansion but only through international legal recognition and consolidation. They might, he said, be established by setting up demilitarized zones on both sides of the borders, guaranteed by the presence of the United Nations at a number of points in those zones. Direct guarantees could be given by the four powers or by the Security Council as a whole. Agreement on all these elements of a settlement could then be included in a mutually binding agreement between the parties, presented in the form of an international act with corresponding guarantees for implementation of the provisions contained therein.

The USSR believed that it was therefore necessary that Ambassador Jarring's mission be resumed at an early date, without imaginary conditions or requirements. This had been suggested by the Secretary-General and endorsed by the Foreign Ministers of the four powers, who had agreed to take all steps to ensure a peaceful settlement on the basis of the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.

The United Kingdom representative observed that there was virtually unanimous agreement that the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967 provided the only basis for a just and lasting peace in the Middle East. However, the United Kingdom had never believed that a settlement should or could be imposed on the parties. It would have to be a "package deal," embodied in an agreement binding on all the parties in international law and endorsed by the Security Council. The two main elements in the package, as in the resolution of 22 November 1967, would be commitments to peace on the one hand, and the withdrawal of troops and the determination of boundaries on the other.

First, the United Kingdom spokesman said, the Arab States and Israel must agree to establish a genuine state of peace between them, and must, in particular, respect and recognize the sovereignty, territorial integrity, inviolability and political independence of each other without resorting to threats or the use of force. Second, the objective must be to establish secure and recognized boundaries. Here, the Assembly must be guided by the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war, and there must thus be Israeli withdrawal—with the possibility of minor rectifications—from territories occupied in the 1967 war.

With respect to Jerusalem, he said, the United Kingdom believed that any agreement on the status of that city must incorporate, as an essential part of a settlement, provision for freedom of access to the holy places and for their protection.

On the question of guarantees, he went on, the agreement should be endorsed by the Security Council, and, as an internal guarantee, the United Kingdom favoured a United Nations presence, both to supervise withdrawal and to remain in the area after withdrawal.

Other elements to be considered, according to the United Kingdom, were: the establishment of demilitarized zones under United Nations supervision; freedom of navigation for all countries through the Suez Canal, the Gulf of Aqaba and the Strait of Tiran; the aspirations of the Palestinians; and a just settlement of the refugee problem.

Finally, its representative said, the United Kingdom did not believe that the Assembly should attempt in any way to alter a resolution of the Security Council, nor could it support any Assembly resolution which sought to amplify, modify or alter the balance of the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.

Representatives of the Arab States, supporting the request of the United Arab Republic for consideration of the item by the General Assembly, stressed that action by the Assembly was necessary to bring about implementation of the Security Council's resolution, particularly on the question of withdrawal of Israel's troops from the occupied territories.

These representatives also expressed support for the Palestinians in their fight for the right of self-determination. Algeria, for example, said that only the Palestinians, through their legitimate representatives, could decide about the future of their country. A discussion of the situation in the Middle East could be positive only when the General Assembly recognized the legitimate and inalienable rights of the Palestinian people.

Representatives of several Arab States deplored United States military support to Israel which, they considered, had helped Israel in its aggression and in its defiance of the United Nations. They also warned against making the Middle East a special arena for the play of great power politics or attempting to solve its problems outside of the United Nations.

Several speakers from African and Asian States and Eastern Europe emphasized the need for resumption of Ambassador Jarring's mission and felt that Israel's demand for a rectification of the so-called violations of the standstill arrangements was only a pretext for sabotaging the Jarring Mission.

A majority of those participating in the debate thought that the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967 provided an adequate basis for resumption of the talks and eventually for reaching a settlement; it was incumbent upon the United Nations to take effective action to translate the provisions and principles of that resolution into reality.

OTHER MATTERS RELEVANT TO MIDDLE EAST SITUATION

INTERFERENCE WITH INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATIONCOMMUNICATIONS TO SECRETARY-GENERAL

During 1970, several communications were received by the Secretary-General concerning the problem of airplane hijacking and other air incidents.

On 12 February 1970, Israel said that on 10 February an attack had been perpetrated by Arab terrorists at the Munich (Federal Republic of Germany) airport, directed against passengers about to board an Israeli civil aircraft on a scheduled international flight from Tel Aviv (Israel) with a stopover at Munich. The attack had resulted in the killing of one Israeli citizen and the wounding of many. The letter transmitted a statement issued by Israel's Ministry for Foreign Affairs denouncing the attack and requesting Governments and international bodies to take necessary measures to ensure the freedom of civil air transport and the safety of the general public using air transport.

The letter said that responsibility for the attack at Munich rested with the Arab Governments, which were actively participating in the organization, financing and training of the terror organizations and in the direction of their operations.

On 24 February, Israel transmitted the text of a statement by the Prime Minister of Israel concerning the explosion of a Swissair aircraft bound for Israel, in which the lives of 47 passengers and crew had been lost. This incident and others were part of the pattern of bloodshed and murder which the Arab terrorist organizations had cast on international civilian aircraft throughout the world. The Arab Governments provided encouragement, immunity and protection for the criminals and their crimes. The international community had yet to take concrete measures to put an end to the designs of Arab terrorists against civil aviation and the safety of passengers, crews and aircraft.

On 16 September, representatives of 14 Arab States, in a letter to the Secretary-General, cited reports that hundreds of men and women had been arbitrarily arrested in the Israeli-occupied Arab territories and were being held by Israel as hostages. (See also p. 246.)

On 23 September, in a letter to the Secretary-General, Israel rejected the charge, and said that on 6 and 9 September five attempts at hijacking civil passenger aircraft on regular scheduled flights had been made by an Arab terrorist organization operating in and from the Arab countries bordering on Israel. One attempt was foiled. The four planes successfully hijacked had subsequently been blown up—one at Cairo, the other three a week later at Zerka (Jordan). Their passengers and crews were held as hostages under barbaric conditions; some had since been released but over 50 remained captive, apparently because most of them were Jews.

The Israeli letter then drew attention to the Security Council's resolution of 9 September (see below).

The letter went on to say that Israel, for its part, had had no choice but to take precautionary measures against the threat of further terror activity and had temporarily taken in for questioning 450 persons suspected of being associated with the terror organizations. Seventy-five of these had been released within two days; the rest were freed by 18 September 1970.

CONSIDERATION BY SECURITY COUNCIL

In a letter on 9 September, the United States representative requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the situation created by increasing incidents involving the hijacking of commercial aircraft engaged in international commerce and the threat to the lives of innocent travellers.

Also on 9 September, the United Kingdom representative asked that an urgent meeting of the Council be convened to consider the hijacking of civil aircraft, with particular reference to the incidents that had taken place during the preceding days.

In letters dated 9 September, Algeria and Israel, respectively, requested that they be invited to participate in the discussion.

The Security Council met on 9 September and the President said that prior to the meeting extensive consultations had taken place in order to meet the wishes of all parties concerned.

The representative of Finland said it was his understanding that a consensus had been reached during the consultations, and he formally moved that the Council decide to adopt immediately the text agreed upon and then adjourn without debate.

There was no objection and the Security Council then adopted the consensus in the form of resolution 286(1970) on 9 September 1970.

By this, the Security Council expressed its grave concern at the threat to innocent civilian lives from the hijacking of aircraft and any other interference in international travel. It then: (1) appealed to all parties concerned for the immediate release of all passengers and crews, without exception, held as a result of hijackings and other interference in international travel; and (2) called on States to take all possible legal steps to prevent further hijackings or any other interference with international civil air travel.

Prior to the adoption of the resolution, the President of the Council, after stressing the gravity of the matter, said that important principles concerning the Middle East were involved which could not be solved in a single meeting, but he appealed to those concerned to spare the lives of innocent persons who were not involved in a state of war. The climate of international opinion, he said, had never been more favourable for a just solution to the problems of the Middle East, and it should be the Security Council's business to do everything to enhance that favourable climate. (For further details and text of resolution 286(1970), see pp. 803-6.)

CONSIDERATION

GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On 25 November 1970, the General Assembly, in adopting resolution 2645 (XXV), condemned, without exception whatsoever, all acts of aerial hijacking or other interference with civil air travel. It called on States to take all appropriate measures to deter, prevent or suppress such acts within their jurisdiction—at every stage of the execution of those acts—and to provide for the prosecution and punishment of persons perpetrating such acts, or for the possible extradition of such persons for prosecution and punishment.

The Assembly also declared that the exploitation of unlawful seizure of aircraft for the purpose of taking hostages was to be condemned. It declared, further, that the unlawful detention of passengers and crew in transit or otherwise engaged in civil air travel was to be condemned as another form of wrongful interference with free and uninterrupted air travel.

States to whose territory a hijacked aircraft was diverted were urged by the Assembly to provide for the care and safety of its passengers and crew and to enable them to continue their journey as soon as practicable, and to return aircraft and cargo to the lawful owners.

In addition, the Assembly: invited States to ratify or accede to the Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft, signed at Tokyo, Japan, on 14 September 1963; requested concerted action by States towards suppressing all acts jeopardizing the safe and orderly development of international civil air transport; and called on States to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the United Nations and the International Civil Aviation Organization to ensure that passengers, crew and aircraft engaged in civil aviation were not used as a means of extorting advantage of any kind.

(For further details and text of resolution 2645 (XXV), see article in the section on Legal Questions in this volume of the Yearbook, pp. 803-7.)

GENERAL STATEMENTS AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

During 1970, general statements and other communications concerning the situation in the Middle East were brought to the attention of the Secretary-General and the Security Council. They are briefly noted below.

On 18 February 1970, the representatives of Iraq, Jordan, Sudan, Syria and the United Arab Republic transmitted the text of a communique issued at the close of the conference of five Arab States, held at Cairo between 7 and 9 February 1970, in which what they described as the "Front-line States" condemned United States support for Israel—support which, they said, continued unabated while Israel had not only usurped the whole of Palestine and driven out its population but was occupying territories belonging to three Arab States.

On 24 February, the Deputy Permanent Representative of Mongolia transmitted the text of a statement of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Mongolia urging a political settlement of the situation in the Middle East, based on the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.<sup>21</sup>

On 10 March, the representative of Sudan transmitted part of the joint communique published at the end of the Sixth Summit Conference of the East and Central African States, held at Khartoum, Sudan, from 26 to 28 January 1970, in which the Organization of African Unity (OAU) reiterated its call for the implementation of the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.

On 18 May, the representative of Saudi Arabia transmitted the text of the joint communique issued at the conclusion of the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers held in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, from 23 to 25 March 1970, urging, among other things, that the great powers intensify their efforts to secure the withdrawal of Israeli forces from all the territories occupied since the hostilities of June 1967.

By letters dated 21 July, 22 and 24 September and 9 October 1970, the USSR representative transmitted the texts of statements made on the situation in the Middle East by the Supreme

Soviet of the USSR, by the Telegraphic Agency of the Soviet Union (TASS) and by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the USSR.

In its statement on 21 July, the Supreme Soviet of the USSR expressed its concern and alarm at the threat to world peace being created in the Middle East by the aggressive actions of Israel and its imperialist protectors. Israel was not fighting for its existence or its security but for the conquest of foreign territory. The alternatives were either a further extension of the military threat in the Middle East or the adoption of measures to ensure a political settlement on the basis of the complete implementation of the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.

In their statements of 22 and 24 September respectively, TASS and the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs expressed concern at the reported concentration of the United States Sixth Fleet in the eastern part of the Mediterranean in connexion with the events then taking place in Jordan, and warned that any intervention in Jordan from outside would be a threat not only to the independence of the countries of the Middle East but also to the cause of international peace.

In its statement on 9 October, the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs said the campaign of slander launched in the United States against the USSR, with regard to the alleged violations of the cease-fire agreement in the Suez Canal sector, was a deliberate attempt to mislead world public opinion and to provide Israel with another pretext for breaking off the contacts that Ambassador Jarring, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to the Middle East, had just begun with the parties.

On 9 October, the Executive Secretary of OAU transmitted, among other things, the texts of two resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, meeting at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 1 to 3 September 1970.

One of these OAU resolutions expressed solidarity with the United Arab Republic and requested all member States of OAU to use their influence to ensure the full implementation of the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967. The other condemned the illegal arrest and detention of two Algerian citizens by Israeli authorities at Lydda International Airport in Israel.

On 8 December, the USSR representative transmitted the text of a statement on the Middle East situation, adopted at Berlin on 2 December by the participants in the Conference of the Political Consultative Committee of the States Parties to the Warsaw Treaty. The statement expressed concern about the increased tension in the Middle East as a result of Israel's policies, and endorsed the attitude of the Arab leaders in pursuing a political solution to the Middle East conflict. It expressed support of the just struggle of the Arab peoples against the imperialist policy of aggression in the Middle East and for the liberation of the occupied Arab territories.

An earlier group of communications dealt with the contents of a statement made on 4 March by the Foreign Minister of Israel. On 5 March, Israel's representative transmitted the text of the statement to the President of the Security Council for circulation as a Council document. In the statement, it was charged that the USSR was organizing a campaign to compel Jews in the USSR to sign declarations against Israel zionism and that it was following a policy that constituted an obstacle to peace in the Middle East.

On 13 March, the USSR representative protested against the circulation as an official Council document of the statement referred to in Israel's letter, asserting that circulation of the statement, which contained references to matters falling within the domestic jurisdiction of the USSR, was illegal, constituted a violation of Article 2, paragraph 7, of the United Nations Charter,<sup>22</sup> and deviated from the normal practice of the Security Council.

In a letter dated 19 March, the representative of Israel said the objections to the circulation of Israel's statement were unfounded. The statement, he said, had been made in reaction to the USSR's policy of support for Arab aggression against Israel and was obviously of direct concern to the Security Council.

On 26 March, the USSR representative protested against the circulation of the Israeli letter of 19 March, again maintaining that it dealt with a matter falling within the domestic jurisdiction of a Member State and was not even remotely connected with any question then being discussed in the Security Council.

DECISION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY ON RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

On 30 November 1970, the General Assembly adopted resolution 2649 (XXV) on the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence for the effective guarantee of human rights.

By this, the Assembly among other things: affirmed the legitimacy of the struggles of peoples under colonial and alien domination recognized as being entitled to the right of self-determination to restore to themselves that right by any means at their disposal; recognized the right of such peoples to seek and receive all kinds of moral and material assistance, in accordance with United Nations resolutions and the spirit of the United Nations Charter; and called upon all Governments denying the right of self-determination to recognize and observe that right in accordance with relevant international instruments and the principles and spirit of the Charter.

The Assembly also condemned Governments that denied the right to self-determination of peoples recognized as being entitled to it, especially of the peoples of Southern Rhodesia and Palestine.

CHAPTER XII

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN THE NEAR EAST

During 1970, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) continued to provide relief, health and education services.

Expanding enrolments in the schools run jointly by UNRWA and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), accompanied by rising prices for supplies, imposed a severe strain on Agency finances. The increase in costs again outstripped the increase in income, and the year ended with a deficit of $4.9 million and a reduction of the working capital to $5.6 million.

On 7 December 1970, the General Assembly established a nine-member Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA to recommend measures to prevent the reduction of Agency services in 1971 and assist the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General of UNRWA in reaching solutions to the problems posed by the Agency's financial crisis.

The Agency's operations were affected by the activities of the Palestinian fedayeen movements and the reactions to them of Governments in the region. In September, the confrontation between the Jordanian Government and the fedayeen led to fighting, heaviest in Amman, involving tanks and artillery. Normal life was paralysed for 10 days. As soon as the fighting ceased, UNRWA resumed operations and did much to help cope with the health needs, food shortages and other problems caused by the conflict.

ACTIVITIES IN 1970

As a result of natural increase, the number of refugees registered with UNRWA rose to 1,445,022 by December 1970. Some 57 per cent of these received rations; about 40 per cent lived in the 53 established camps or in 10 emergency camps set up for persons displaced by the 1967 hostilities. (These camps, as pointed out in the Commissioner-General's annual report for 1968-69, are not extra-territorial, and the Governments are responsible for such functions as law and order.) The Agency provided limited assistance, as a temporary measure, to some non-refugees displaced in 1967.<sup>1</sup>

The Agency maintained its ceiling on the number of beneficiaries of basic food rations, with no allowance for population growth; an estimated 339,000 children, most of them in east Jordan, were excluded by the ceiling. However, the 835,000 rations issued monthly included emergency rations for 15,700 children of displaced refugees. In addition, UNRWA distributed at the expense of the Jordanian Government 217,000 rations monthly to displaced persons not registered with UNRWA, and 40,000 to displaced registered refugee children. The supplementary feeding programme, designed to avoid dietary deficiencies in nutritionally vulnerable groups, was continued.

The Agency pursued its programme of school-room construction to meet the growth in enrolment and to accommodate children of newly displaced refugees in east Jordan. Training facilities were expanded to some extent, as well.

In Syria, the authorities authorized UNRWA to replace tents with concrete-block shelters in the emergency camps, and construction of the shelters was started. Under a similar programme in east Jordan, a total of about 16,500 family shelter units had been built by the end of 1970. The construction programmes were funded with contributions made specifically for the purpose and not from the Agency's operating budget.

The health care programme of UNRWA included curative and preventive medical services, provided mainly through 112 outpatient health centres, of which 89 were operated directly by UNRWA. Nearly 6 million patient calls were recorded. The Agency also provided some hospital care and laboratory services.

The health programme, which receives technical guidance from the World Health Organization (WHO), included the control of contagious disease, maternal and child health care, health education, nutrition and environmental sanitation. The emphasis was on preventive care, and especially on vaccination. A cholera pandemic in the area presented high risks for the refugee population, in view of its poor living conditions. The outbreak was quickly contained through mass immunizations and environmental measures. Governments in the area co-operated with UNRWA in these measures of prevention and control.

In 1970, the UNRWA/UNESCO education and training programme for refugees became the largest item in the Agency's expenditure budget of $46 million. There were 480 UNRWA/UNESCO elementary and preparatory schools, attended by 219,378 children, in operation during the year.

The problem of the content of the Arab Government textbooks continued to engage the attention of the Director-General of UNESCO; schools in Gaza, which suffered even more than those in the West Bank, were almost completely without textbooks. However, secondary-school leaving certificate examinations were held in Gaza for the second straight year, organized by UNESCO with the agreement of the United Arab Republic and Israel authorities and the assistance of UNRWA.

<sup>1</sup> As noted in the report of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA for the period of 1 July 1969-30 June 1970, the term "refugees," "displaced refugees" or "newly displaced refugees" refers to those persons who were registered with UNRWA prior to the June 1967 hostilities; the term "displaced persons" or "other displaced persons" refers to those who were displaced after the outbreak of the June 1967 hostilities, but who were not registered with UNRWA.

The Agency continued to operate eight training centres offering two-year vocational and teacher-training courses. In September, political tensions obliged the Agency to refuse admission to new students at one centre. At the UNRWA/UNESCO Institute of Education for in-service training of under-qualified teachers, the emphasis began to shift to the training of preparatory teachers; about 80 per cent of the elementary teachers had benefited from the Institute's courses.

Of the Agency's staff of 13,883, more than half were teachers and all but a tiny fraction were Palestine refugees. The staff included 133 international staff members, including 36 on loan from UNESCO, WHO and the United Nations.

REPORTS OF COMMISSIONER-GENERAL

ANNUAL REPORT

In his annual report to the General Assembly, covering the period from 1 July 1969 to 30 June 1970, the Commissioner-General of UNRWA assessed the critical financial position of the Agency which, he said, must be viewed against a background of deepening frustration and uncertainty.

The Agency was able to maintain the integrity of its relief and health services and even to expand its education programme which in 1970, for the first time in the Agency's history, became the main item of expenditure. However, this was possible only because the Commissioner-General, in full agreement with the Secretary-General, had decided not to put into effect all the curtailments in UNRWA'S programme that the General Assembly was informed at its 1969 session would have to be made during the year.

As a result, UNRWA would begin 1971 in an even weaker financial situation than it had faced at the start of 1970, when its estimated deficit was about $5 million. It seemed inconceivable to the Commissioner-General that the Agency could continue operations through 1971 under these conditions. It was therefore essential that its budget for 1971 be balanced, either by the assurance of adequate income to maintain the existing level of services or by a radical review of its role and programme. In this regard, the Commissioner-General noted that the only area in which major savings could be made was education, although this would deal a grievous blow at the most constructive part of the Agency's activities. The Commissioner-General requested the General Assembly to make an unequivocal decision on the Agency's budget at its 1970 session.

The report then turned to what the Commissioner-General termed the most significant feature of the year under review: the marked change in the Agency's environment, due primarily to a transformation in the political role of the Palestine refugee community—which had not been without effect on the 13,000 Palestinians serving the Agency—and the acceptance by the refugee community and by host Governments of a representative, negotiating role for the Palestine politico-military organizations. While this development did not affect equally each of the Agency's five fields of operation, it could be considered as the factor which, together with the Agency's financial position, might require a radical reconsideration of UNRWA'S role, methods and programme.

In Lebanon and east Jordan, the considerable growth in numbers, fire-power and influence of the Palestine military organizations and the enhanced political consciousness of the Palestine refugee community raised basic questions of authority and was reflected in the attitude of UNRWA'S locally recruited staff. In Beirut, members of one Palestinian organization intruded into Agency buildings and published threats against UNRWA staff members. At the Sibilin Training Centre in Lebanon there were continual strikes by staff and students and a virtual breakdown in discipline. In east Jordan, the successive confrontations between the Government and the Palestine organizations posed many problems for the Agency and had repercussions on its work and on staff relations. In both Jordan and Lebanon, however, co-operation had continued between the Agency and the two Governments concerned in the common task of caring for the refugees.

The Commissioner-General noted that although successive resolutions of the General Assembly had referred to co-operation with the Governments of the host countries in which UNRWA operated, there was no reference to consultation with the refugee community. This consultation did take place in practice, however, either through the host Governments or informally. There were already signs that, just as the refugee community currently exercised an agreed right to consultation with Governments in host countries in one form or another, it would increasingly expect to be consulted on Agency affairs, in the same way that the Governments of host countries were consulted by the Agency, although not necessarily on the same subjects. The Arab host Governments had already recommended that representatives from the Palestine Liberation Organization should take part in future meetings on education on the same basis as the representatives of the Governments of the Arab host States, the Commissioner-General noted.

In the West Bank and Gaza, UNRWA was confronted with the same operational problems as the previous year, including the arrest, detention, deportation and imprisonment of its staff for alleged illegal activities. In the year ending 30 June 1970, 14 UNRWA staff members had been arrested in the West Bank and 57 in Gaza, and many others had been detained. The number of staff under detention or serving sentences of imprisonment at any one time remained at about 40, some of whom had been detained in prison for more than a year without charges having been brought against them.

Other problems facing the Agency in these areas included the movement of supplies into occupied territories and the obtaining of travel permits for staff. The decision of the Israeli military authorities to build roads in several camps of the Gaza strip resulted in the demolition of shelters without prior notice to UNRWA'S field director; the authorities subsequently agreed that there would be no more demolition until alternative shelters had been made available and that the Agency would be reimbursed for the costs of the new constructions.

In education, the year was marred throughout by student and teacher strikes, protests, shooting incidents and damage to UNRWA school buildings and equipment. The Commissioner-General noted that recommendations resulting from the June 1970 meeting between representatives of UNRWA, UNESCO and the Arab host countries raised further serious problems for the Agency from both a financial point of view and on grounds of principle; the Governments of the Arab host countries recommended, for example, that the UNRWA/UNESCO schools be considered as private schools and made subject to the laws applicable to private schools.

The Government of Israel continued to prohibit the import of a major part of the textbooks prescribed for use in Gaza and the West Bank, the Commissioner-General further stated. However, consultations between UNRWA and the Israeli authorities continued, and some progress was being made towards a solution.

Concluding his report, the Commissioner-General referred again to the two major difficulties faced by UNRWA: the financial crisis and the change in the Agency's operational environment. With regard to the latter, the Commissioner-General said that the Agency had sought, in the interest of the refugees, to adapt itself to a changing situation while seeking at the same time to maintain the integrity of its operations incumbent on a United Nations agency. But the pressures to which UNRWA had been subject during the year had been very great; if they continued to grow, they could seriously jeopardize future operations.

Concurrently, UNRWA'S finances continued to be drained. Unless an increase in income of about $5 million could be assured, there would inevitably be substantial cuts in the education programme which would deal a grievous blow at the most constructive sector of the Agency's work and produce repercussions that might well shatter the Agency to the point of disintegration. No less than the continued existence of UNRWA was at stake.

STATEMENT OF FINANCIAL SITUATION

By a letter dated 13 August 1970, addressed to Member States of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, the Secretary-General transmitted the text of a statement of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA on the financial position of the Agency.

The Commissioner-General noted that the financial situation of UNRWA continued to deteriorate during the first half of 1970. The funds provided to the Agency were still nearly $5 million less than its total requirements. Various reductions had been made by the Agency, but others had been postponed until the General Assembly could once again examine the problem. Unless the General Assembly acted at its 1970 session, the Agency was likely to collapse either for lack of funds or under the stresses caused by the dismantling of a major part of the programme.

SPECIAL REPORTS

In two notes, dated respectively 2 October and 6 November 1970, the Secretary-General transmitted to United Nations Members the text of two special reports by the Commissioner-General of UNRWA on the situation in Jordan following the outbreak of fighting on 17 September.

The Commissioner-General reported that 11 local staff members of UNRWA had been killed during the fighting. Although the total number of deaths among refugees registered with the Agency was not known, it was believed to be lower than the estimates reported in the press.

Damage was widespread. Two large camps in Amman, where some 70,000 refugees lived, had suffered the most heavily; the cost of replacing shelters in these camps alone might be in the order of $2 million, the Commissioner-General said. Nevertheless, regular UNRWA services were being restored, and the UNRWA/UNESCO-operated schools were to be reopened at the same time as Government schools. The Commissioner-General urgently appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals for funds to enable the Agency to restore its services and to meet the emergency needs of the refugees in Jordan.

The Secretary-General, in transmitting the reports, fully endorsed the appeal of the Commissioner-General. Earlier, on 24 September 1970, the Secretary-General and the President of the General Assembly had issued a joint appeal in which they urged all Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, as well as non-governmental organizations and private individuals, to provide the needed humanitarian aid to the Palestine refugees and to the victims of the fighting in Jordan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY DISCUSSIONS

The Commissioner-General's annual report and his special reports on UNRWA'S operations in Jordan were considered by the Special Political Committee of the General Assembly at 17 meetings held between 18 November and 4 December 1970.

By a letter dated 12 November 1970, Afghanistan, Indonesia, Pakistan and Saudi Arabia requested that the "Palestine Arab delegation" be heard by the Committee.

By a letter dated 23 November, 26 States—Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Cuba, Guinea, Indonesia, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Syria, Tunisia, the United Arab Republic, Yemen and Yugoslavia—requested that "the delegation of the Palestine Liberation Organization" be heard.

On 18 and 24 November, respectively, the Special Political Committee decided to authorize persons constituting such delegations to address the Committee, on the understanding that authorization did not imply any recognition whatsoever of either delegation.

Reservations concerning this procedure were expressed by the representative of Israel.

Introducing the annual report of UNRWA, the Commissioner-General said the year under discussion had been in many respects the most difficult in the history of the Agency. The Agency's problems were basically of two kinds: those relating to its financial situation and those concerning its operating environment. He would refer only to the financial problems.

The financial crisis had become so serious that the very continuance of the Agency was threatened; unless there was a substantial increase in the amounts pledged to the Agency, a major crisis was inescapable, the Commissioner-General said.

The increase in UNRWA'S costs could be attributed to several factors: the natural increase in the refugee population; the inflationary trend in the cost of supplies and wages; the greater needs created by the hostilities of 1967; and the increased cost of education, due chiefly to larger student enrolment. Since the Agency's income had increased at only half the rate required, the deficit had become more serious every year.

Various economy measures had been put into effect in the year under review. The Agency had reduced its relief programme, restricted its health and education activities, and curtailed its education programme. It had also reduced its subsidy payments to certain Governments. These measures had resulted in an annual saving of nearly $2 million. Other reductions had been deferred in the hope that the General Assembly would find some solution to the problem.

The Commissioner-General expressed the hope that no further reductions would be considered and that some of the discontinued services, which were fully justified, could be restored. That, however, would require an increase of between $5 million and $7 million in the Agency's income for 1971. There was no doubt that this amount could be raised if each contributing State paid a sum equal to its highest previous contribution and if all States which did not currently contribute made contributions on a comparable level, the Commissioner-General stated.

During the debate, discussion centered on the Agency's financial crisis and on the political aspects of the refugee situation.

The representative of Syria, speaking on behalf of the four Arab host countries (Jordan, Lebanon, Syria and the United Arab Republic), said that when the Commissioner-General pleaded for funds for refugee relief so that operations would not come to a full halt by September 1971, it was apparent why the need existed: the host countries alone could not cope with the problem.

In reviewing the UNRWA programme, the Syrian representative said it was difficult to see how the relief and medical services of the Agency could be further reduced, and that any cuts in the education programme would have devastating repercussions.

With regard to contributions to UNRWA, the representative of Syria stated that since 1950, the Arab host countries had contributed $19 million to the Agency's budget; an additional $135 million had been contributed directly to the refugees.

These figures of direct help by the Arab countries should be compared with Israel's behaviour, the Syrian representative said. Israeli authorities illegally detained UNRWA officials and did not admit refugee students to the Agency training centres on the occupied West Bank. Israel disregarded the right of repatriation and compensation to refugees, in defiance of repeated General Assembly resolutions, as well as the General Assembly's resolution of 19 December 1968<sup>2</sup> calling for the return of persons displaced by the hostilities of June 1967. Israel had destroyed many shelters, schools and buildings for its own military purposes and had refused to pay compensation; the claims of the Agency regarding the losses sustained during the June 1967 hostilities were still under consideration by the Israeli Government.

The Syrian representative said that it was often charged that the Arab Governments inhibited the settlement or employment of the refugees in order to keep alive the Palestine issue. The evidence was quite to the contrary. After 1948, those refugees who possessed skills needed in the Arab countries found jobs almost immediately and became self-supporting. However, 70 per cent of the working force that left Palestine in 1948 came from the rural sector and consequently became surplus farm workers in Arab countries that already had such a surplus. They became dependent on international charity not because they were held as hostages but because they were unemployable under the competitive employment conditions that then prevailed and continued to prevail.

The economic realities of the Arab people of Palestine, of Israel and of the Arab countries should also be taken into account, the Syrian representative said. In 1948, the Zionist settlers took by force many millions of dollars worth of Arab Palestine property and real estate. Since 1948, the foreign aid received annually by each Israeli citizen was greater than the average per capita gross income of each Egyptian, Syrian, Lebanese or Jordanian. The total expenditures of UNRWA from 1955 to 1966 ($627 million) were roughly the same as what Israel had received in foreign aid in 1964 alone ($624 million).

The Zionists knew that only the maintenance of a climate of hostility allowed them to sustain the inflow of outside aid, which was necessary to maintain Israel's economy at its current level, the Syrian representative said. It was evident that the Zionist settlers themselves realized that the only solution was expansion by force of an economic domination of regional proportions which, in their eyes, would then take the form of peace and of mutual co-operation. While awaiting the achievement of that colonial peace, and while the deficit of UNRWA'S budget was being discussed, the Israelis were continuing their spoliation of the Palestinian people and were already beginning to strip the other Arab countries of their resources. This was all being done in the name of civilization, self-defence and peace.

The representative of Israel said that, more than any other aspect of the Middle East conflict, the refugee problem over the years had become enveloped in passion and acrimony. A solution to the refugee problem, which was both vital and possible, would require an attitude of understanding and co-operation on the part of the Arab States.

The Government of Israel had suggested that an international conference of countries contributing to UNRWA, the Arab States and Israel be convened at an early date to agree on a five-year plan for solving the refugee problem. The Arab States had rejected the proposal. Moreover, since 1948, efforts made by the United Nations to resettle the Palestine refugees had consistently been rejected by the Arab Governments, which instead had turned the refugees into an instrument of continued warfare against Israel. While United Nations assistance continued to flow into the refugee camps, they had become bases for terrorist groups whose avowed aim was to destroy Israel. Now the Arab Governments were suggesting that the terrorist organizations grouped in the so-called Palestine Liberation Organization should be given advisory status with UNESCO and UNRWA, an irresponsible suggestion fraught with dire implications.

The Israeli Government was prepared to take certain security risks for the sake of the refugees, but there were limits beyond which an influx of refugees could become a direct threat to the welfare and security of the population, the Israeli representative said, and he recalled that by its resolution of 11 December 1948<sup>3</sup> the General Assembly had made any return of refugees conditional upon peace.

Nevertheless, over the years Israel had admitted approximately 50,000 refugees displaced by the 1948 hostilities. Since 1967, Israel had been granting permits for the return of West Bank and Gaza inhabitants, but little more than half of the permits issued had been used. The return to the West Bank and Gaza had continued under the family reunion scheme and on the basis of special arrangements for hardship cases: under these arrangements, more than 18,000 Arab inhabitants had returned. Moreover, in 1970 alone, 55,000 visitors from Arab States had been allowed to enter Israeli-administered areas, and a considerable number of these visitors had applied for authorization to remain.

The Israeli representative went on to say that it had been shown over the years that Arab refugees could be integrated into the local economies. For hundreds of thousands of refugees, UNRWA relief was merely a source of additional income, since the Commissioner-General had reported that between 50 and 60 per cent of the total number of registered refugees were economically independent or partially self-supporting.

The aim of the Israelis in the Israeli-administered areas, its representative continued, was to improve the standard of living of the refugees and to make them self-supporting, to encourage economic development, and to reduce security measures. During the previous year, Israel had contributed $4 million directly to the refugees for education, medical services and social welfare; the refugees also benefited indirectly from services that were provided to the general population of the administered areas. In addition, since 1967, the Government of Israel had contributed about $2.8 million to UNRWA.

The security measures which the Israeli Government was sometimes obliged to take were vital for the protection of the Arab population which, more often than the Jews, was victimized by Arab terror attacks. Israel's representative called for an end to bloodshed and urged the Arab Governments to think of the refugee problem in terms of peace and understanding with Israel.

Early in the discussion, the representatives of Norway and Turkey appealed to the Special Political Committee to concentrate on the financial crisis of the Agency. The Committee was not called upon to find a solution to the political problems of the Middle East, the Norwegian representative said, but to raise $5 million more for the Agency than had been contributed in 1969.

The United States said that the Security Council, on 22 November 1967<sup>4</sup> had recognized that the problem of the Palestine refugees was inextricably linked with the other issues that divided Israel and its Arab neighbors. Despite its most rigorous efforts, UNRWA could not solve all the refugees' problems. However, while the search for peace continued, the basic needs of thousands of refugees must be met. This task could be performed only by UNRWA, which needed and deserved the support of every Government. The United States added that it was concerned at the Commissioner-General's statement that host Government responsibility for the maintenance of security and order in the refugee camps had not yet been fully reasserted; the United States said that it supported the Commissioner-General's position that UNRWA should deal only with governmental authorities in that respect.

Austria, Belgium, Canada, Ceylon, Denmark, France, Greece, Iran, Ireland, Liberia and the United Kingdom said that priority should be given to the Agency's financial situation and that it was unprofitable to discuss the political background.

Other States, however, said that the Committee could not ignore the political aspects of the refugee problem. The real problem of the Middle East, the United Republic of Tanzania said, was not the lack of adequate financial and material support for the refugees but the denial of the basic, legitimate and inalienable rights of the Palestine people.

Arab representatives said the establishment of UNRWA had been an emergency measure which should not obscure the real problem—the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people. The Palestinians were waging a heroic struggle for their right to exist and to determine their own future. Only when the Arabs of Palestine were allowed freely to exercise their right to self-determination could a just and durable solution to their problem be found. In the meantime, the representative of Tunisia said, the charitable aspect of the Agency's work was serving as a sop to the conscience of the international community, which had committed the greatest injustice in history by uprooting an entire people from their homeland and enclosing them in camps.

The spokesmen of the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Palestine Arab delegation said the Palestinian tragedy began with the flagrant injustice of the United Nations partition of 1947. The Palestinians could not be expected to endure such a tragedy and injustice indefinitely. Like the struggle of the various Afro-Asian peoples against colonialism, the struggle of the people of Palestine to liberate their homeland was legitimate. The Palestinian revolution aimed at creating a State where Jew, Christian and Muslim could live in harmony, the spokesmen said; it sought to relieve UNRWA of refugee care by transforming the refugee into a normal citizen in his own homeland. Any attempt to solve the Palestine problem on the basis of the Security Council resolution of 22 November 1967<sup>5</sup> would be futile, for it would only perpetuate an injustice.

The spokesman of the Palestine Liberation Organization also noted that he looked forward to a more fruitful contact with UNRWA so that the Agency might work with the Palestine refugees as well as for them.

Kuwait, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia supported consultations between the Arab liberation movements and UNRWA. The representative of Kuwait said consultations with the representatives of the refugees did not violate the mandate of the Commissioner-General; on the contrary, failure to consult with them would violate the mandate.

The USSR said that although the question of the Palestine refugees was being considered in the Special Political Committee in the context of its humanitarian aspect, it was in origin and essence a political question that resulted from Israel's expansionist and aggressive policy towards the Arab countries, causing the displacement of the Palestinian people and the violation of their fundamental rights. Those rights had been repeatedly recognized by the United Nations in numerous resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, beginning with its resolution of 11 December 1948.<sup>6</sup> The Israeli Government had not only failed to implement these resolutions but by its acts of aggression in June 1967 had widened the scope of the problem. The USSR staunchly supported the legitimate rights of the Arab people of Palestine and felt that the United Nations should oblige Israel to implement its decisions on the matter forthwith.

The representatives of the Eastern European States expressed views similar to those of the USSR. They stated that the solution to the Palestine problem could be found in the unconditional implementation of the United Nations resolutions adopted since 1948. The representative of Ukrainian SSR said that by various resolutions the Assembly had identified Israel as the responsible party in the problem of the Palestine refugees and had drawn attention to the inalienable right of the Palestinians to repatriation or adequate compensation.

Albania said the United Nations was paralyzed in the pernicious grasp of the two big powers and could not solve the problem of the Palestine refugees.

Almost all States, however, paid tribute to the work done by the Commissioner-General and the staff of UNRWA. There was general agreement that there should be no further reductions in the Agency's services, particularly in education, and that some means should be found of increasing the Agency's resources.

The United States said that over the years its assistance to the Agency had amounted to nearly $500 million, a preponderant share of the total contributed to UNRWA. It appealed for generous contributions to the Agency, in particular from Governments that had failed to do their share, and from private voluntary organizations.

The United Kingdom said the Agency's financial problems could be solved only if the more than 50 countries which regularly voted for the continuation of the Agency's mandate but made no financial contribution to its work made a contribution, even on a modest scale. It was particularly regrettable that the USSR and other Eastern European countries, which had close contact with the area, had so far made no contribution whatsoever to UNRWA.

France expressed the hope that voluntary financing of the Agency would be maintained, since it reflected the humanitarian nature of the Agency while avoiding any further increase in the United Nations budget. Ireland said that while voluntary financing was the most realistic method in the present circumstances, other methods of financing likely to win support should be carefully considered.

Several representatives referred to proposals made by the Commissioner-General in 1969 for alternative methods of financing, including the transfer of part of the expenses of UNRWA to the United Nations budget. Morocco, supporting this proposal, said the time had come for the United Nations to shoulder its direct responsibilities under the United Nations Charter for the life and fate of the Palestinian people. The United Arab Republic said the idea of transferring UNRWA'S international staff costs to the regular United Nations budget deserved serious consideration.

Pakistan said the financial burden of the Agency should fall entirely upon the States that had supported Zionism in creating an illegal State. The Lebanese representative noted that while Lebanon did not want to minimize the importance of United States contributions to UNRWA, it did not think that the $500 million the United States had allocated for UNRWA could be compared with the $7,000 million it had given over the same period to Israel to sustain that country in its war of aggression against the Arabs.

The USSR said it would continue to assist the refugees on a bilateral basis, although it welcomed the support given to UNRWA by other countries. Poland and Romania also said they gave bilateral aid to the refugees.

Several States, including China, Italy, Turkey and Yugoslavia, said that if the persons displaced by the hostilities of 1967 were allowed to return to their homes, the financial difficulties of the Agency would be lessened.

On 25 November, prior to the annual pledging conference for UNRWA, the Chairman of the Special Political Committee stated that most Committee Members had voiced their concern about the financial situation of the Agency and had agreed that grave consequences would ensue from the reduction of services to refugees. It had been repeatedly urged that the situation required an additional and greater effort on the part of the international community. He therefore appealed to all Members to represent that situation urgently to their Governments, whether already contributors to UNRWA or not, so that further hardship and bitterness among the Palestine refugees might be averted by a demonstration of practical concern for their welfare.

On 1 December, the Commissioner-General of UNRWA informed the Special Political Committee of the results of the annual pledging conference. He stated that 43 countries were represented at the conference, 12 of which had increased their contributions. However, the Agency's estimated deficit for 1971 would still be between $5.5 million and $6 million. If additional income were not found, it would be necessary to reduce expenditures.

The Commissioner-General expressed the hope that appeals for contributions would be answered, and that Governments would continue to consider whether there were other ways by which the Agency's finances could be put on a sounder basis. In the meantime, however, it was necessary to consider what reductions could be made in the already minimal services to the Palestine refugees. In addition, subsidies for education, health and relief previously paid to a number of Governments would have to be discontinued indefinitely, although this would throw the burden on the Governments concerned.

On 2 December, the Secretary-General addressed the Special Political Committee on the seriousness of UNRWA's financial position. He stated that if the Agency was not to collapse during 1971, it either had to reduce its already minimal services to the refugees or find a way adequately to increase its income. To take the first of these alternatives would constitute a shameful failure by the United Nations to live up to its moral obligations, the Secretary-General said. Moreover, any further reduction in services would add to the tension in the Middle East. Thus, the Committee must once again address itself to the second alternative, to provide adequate financial means for UNRWA.

He expressed the hope that the appeal launched by the Director-General of UNESCO on behalf of education services for the refugees would receive a generous response.

The Secretary-General also appealed to all Governments to consider again what further contributions they could make to the Agency.

Following the Secretary-General's appeal, a number of States expressed distress at the seriousness of the Agency's financial situation. The representative of Jordan said it was now clear that the intention was to throw much of the burden of the Agency's work on the Governments concerned, in particular on his Government. Jordan, however, was unable to assume any further financial and other responsibilities towards the refugees, its representative said. The time had come for Members to find in their collective will a sounder basis on which UNRWA could carry on its humanitarian duties. He proposed that a special session of the General Assembly be convened to review the Agency's financial situation. The Jordanian proposal was supported by the representatives of Kuwait, Lebanon and Yemen.

The representative of Ghana suggested that United Nations radio and television launch a campaign to explain the work of the Agency. There was confusion in the minds of certain Governments, he said, between UNRWA and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, particularly since in the past the two organizations held pledging conferences at the same time.

The Norwegian representative said the Special Political Committee must show a greater sense of realism and concern than it had hitherto done with regard to the refugee situation and the financial difficulties of UNRWA. The representative suggested that a working group be established to study ways of ensuring a more stable financial foundation for the Agency.

The Norwegian proposal was subsequently set forth in a draft resolution, which was one of six resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and described below.

DECISIONS BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

WORKING GROUP ON FINANCING

On 7 December 1970, the General Assembly established a Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East. The Assembly took this step after noting with grave concern the acute financial situation of UNRWA and its serious implications for the future work of the Agency.

The Working Group, consisting of nine Member States to be designated by the President of the General Assembly in consultation with the Secretary-General, was to study all aspects of the financing of the Agency.

The Assembly requested the Working Group, in consultation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General of UNRWA, to present an interim report to the General Assembly not later than 14 December 1970, containing recommendations on possible measures to be taken to prevent a reduction of Agency services in 1971. The Working Group was also requested to assist the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General of UNRWA in reaching solutions to the problems posed by the Agency's financial crisis, and to present a comprehensive report on all aspects of the Agency's financing to the Assembly in 1971.

These actions by the General Assembly were embodied in resolution 2656 (XXV), which was adopted without vote on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee. The resolution was based on a text sponsored in the Committee by Norway, and approved by the Committee on 4 December by a vote of 85 to 0, with 9 abstentions. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In accordance with the General Assembly's decision, France, Ghana, Japan, Lebanon, Norway, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States were designated as members of the Working Group.

The Working Group held five meetings between 9 and 14 December. It then submitted to the Assembly an interim report containing its recommendations on possible measures to be taken to prevent the reduction of UNRWA's services in 1971.

Among the recommendations of the Working Group were the following: the General Assembly should renew its appeal to all non-contributing Governments to contribute and should request all Governments already contributing to increase their contributions; contributing Governments should endeavour to make early payment of at least a substantial portion of their contribution with a view to meeting the liquidity crisis of UNRWA; the Assembly should appeal to non-governmental organizations, foundations and individuals for contributions; serious consideration should be given to the possibility of public fund-raising campaigns in the early part of 1971. The report said the Working Group would attempt to deal at a later stage with the basic problem of the shortfall of income in relation to expenditure requirements.

The Working Group recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution concerning its work. At a plenary meeting on 15 December 1970, the Assembly, without vote, adopted the text as proposed by the Working Group, as resolution 2728 (XXV).

Thereby, the Assembly recalled its grave concern about the acute financial situation of UNRWA and took account of the need to take all possible measures to prevent a reduction of the services being provided by the Agency to the Palestine refugees.

The Assembly then: approved the report of the Working Group; endorsed its recommendations and urged the full co-operation of all concerned for their implementation; requested the Working Group to continue its work in accordance with the General Assembly resolution of 7 December and this resolution; and renewed its appeal to all Governments to join in a collective effort to solve the financial crisis of UNRWA. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

OTHER DECISIONS

The General Assembly took four other actions with regard to the situation of the Palestine refugees.

By the first of these, the Assembly: (1) noted with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees, as provided for by its resolution of 11 December 1948,<sup>7</sup> had not been effected, that no substantial progress had been made in the programme endorsed by its resolution of 26 January 1952<sup>8</sup> for the reintegration of refugees, either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continued to be a matter of serious concern; (2) expressed its thanks to the Commissioner-General and the staff of UNRWA for their continued faithful efforts to provide essential services for the Palestine refugees, and to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees; (3) directed the Commissioner-General of UNRWA to continue his efforts in taking such measures, including rectification of the relief rolls, as to assure, in co-operation with the Governments concerned, the most equitable distribution of relief based on need; (4) noted with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine had been unable to achieve progress in implementing the General Assembly resolution of 11 December 1948;<sup>9</sup> and requested the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation thereof.

The Assembly then directed attention to the continuing critical financial position of UNRWA. It noted that despite the successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions to help relieve the serious budget deficit of the previous year, contributions continued to fall short of the funds needed to cover essential budget requirements. The Assembly therefore called upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the Commissioner-General's report; it urged non-contributing Governments to contribute and contributing Governments to consider increasing their contributions.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2672 A (XXV), adopted by the Assembly on 8 December by 111 votes to 2, with 1 abstention. This action was taken on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee in which the text, proposed by the United States was approved on 4 December by 91 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions.

In another action, the General Assembly, expressing its concern about the continued human suffering resulting from the June 1967 hostilities in the Middle East, took the following steps: (1) endorsed the efforts of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, as far as practicable, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to other persons in the area who were currently displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 hostilities; and (2) strongly appealed to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously for the above purposes to UNRWA and to the other inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

These decisions of the General Assembly were embodied in resolution 2672 B (XXV), which was adopted on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, on 8 December, by 114 votes to 1, with 2 abstentions.

The text was sponsored in the Special Political Committee by 17 States: Afghanistan, Argentina, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Greece, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Nigeria, Norway, Sweden, Turkey and Yugoslavia. It was approved by the Special Political Committee on 4 December by a roll-call vote of 97 to 0, with 3 abstentions.

By another action, the General Assembly, recognizing that the problem of the Palestinian Arab refugees had arisen from the denial of their inalienable rights under the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights; recalling its resolution of 10 December 1969<sup>10</sup> reaffirming the inalienable rights of the people of Palestine; and bearing in mind the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter and reaffirmed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States (see pp. 789-92): (1) recognized that the people of Palestine were entitled to equal rights and self-determination in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations; and (2) declared that full respect for the inalienable rights of the people of Palestine was an indispensable element in the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2672 C (XXV), which was adopted by the Assembly on 8 December by a roll-call vote of 47 to 22, with 50 abstentions. Prior to the vote, the Assembly had approved (by a roll-call vote of 49 to 44, with 27 abstentions) a motion by Somalia that the decision on the draft be by a simple majority vote. A proposal by the Dominican Republic for a two-thirds majority for approval was not voted on in consequence of approval of the Somali proposal.

The text was sponsored in the Special Political Committee by Afghanistan, Guinea, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Pakistan and Somalia. It was approved by the Committee on 4 December by a roll-call vote of 46 to 19, with 37 abstentions.

Introducing the text in the First Committee, the representative of Somalia said that it was undeniable that the people of Palestine were entitled to equal rights and self-determination, in accordance with the United Nations Charter. It was not enough to provide relief to the Palestine refugees—they must be given the means to further their own social, political and economic development.

Some States that voted against the draft explained that they were doing so because it questioned Israel's right to exist as an independent and sovereign State and would also jeopardize the efforts for a peaceful settlement of the Middle East problem as provided for by the Security Council's resolution of 22 November 1967.<sup>11</sup> Other States said they had abstained because of the imprecision of the language of the text.

In a final action, the General Assembly expressed its grave concern about the plight of the persons displaced by the hostilities of 1967 and its conviction that their plight could best be relieved by their speedy return to their homes and to the camps which they formerly occupied. The Assembly considered that the plight of the displaced persons continued since they had not been able to return to their homes and camps.

The Assembly called once more upon the Government of Israel to take immediately and without any further delay effective steps for the return of the displaced persons, and requested the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of this resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 2672D (XXV), adopted by the Assembly on 8 December 1970 by a recorded vote of 93 to 5, with 17 abstentions. This action was taken on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, in which the draft text was sponsored by Afghanistan, India, Mali, Mauritania, Pakistan, Somalia and Yugoslavia. The text was approved by the Committee on 4 December by a roll-call vote of 83 to 7, with 12 abstentions.

PLEDGES AND PAYMENTS FOR 1970

For the calendar year 1970, 57 countries and territories pledged the equivalent of $40,953,631 towards UNRWA'S budget. As at 31 December 1970, the equivalent of $30,533,197 had been received in payment of these pledges. In addition, non-governmental organizations, private individuals and business corporations contributed a total of $1,508,573 to UNRWA during the year.

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East covering the period from 1 July 1969 to 30 June 1970,

Noting with grave concern the acute financial situation of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and its serious implications for the future work of the Agency,

Bearing in mind the appeal made by the Secretary-General on 2 December 1970 at the 740th meeting of the Special Political Committee as well as the appeal made by the Chairman of that Committee on 25 November 1970 at the 733rd meeting of the Committee, and taking into account the suggestions made in the course of the debate concerning possible means of securing additional income,

1. Decides to establish a Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, consisting of nine Member States, to study all aspects of the financing of the Agency;

2. Requests the President of the General Assembly, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to designate the Member States which will compose the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group, in consultation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to present an interim report to the General Assembly, not later than 14 December 1970, containing its recommendations on possible measures to be taken to prevent a reduction of the Agency's services in 1971;

Also requests the Working Group, in the interval between the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth sessions of the General Assembly, to assist, as appropriate, the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East in reaching solutions to the problems posed by the Agency's financial crisis;

Further requests the Working Group, in consultation with the Secretary-General, the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and the specialized agencies, to present a comprehensive report on all aspects of the financing of the Agency to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

Recalling its grave concern about the acute financial situation of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and its serious implications for the future work of the Agency,

Bearing in mind the need to take all possible measures to prevent a reduction of the services being provided to the Palestine refugees by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

Taking into account the urgency to undertake such action,

1. Approves the report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

RESOLUTION 2672 A(xxv), as recommended by Special Political Committee, A/8204/Add.1, adopted by Assembly on 8 December 1970, meeting 1921, by 111 votes to 2, with 1 abstention.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 194(III) of 11 December 1948, 302(IV) of 8 December 1949, 393(V) and 394(V) of 2 and 14 December 1950, 512(VI) and 513(VI) of 26 January 1952, 614(VII) of 6 November 1952, 720(VIII) of 27 November 1953, 818(IX) of 4 December 1954, 916(X) of 3 December 1955, 1018(XI) of 28 February 1957, 1191(XII) of 12 December 1957, 1315(XIII) of 12 December 1958, 1456(XIV) of 9 December 1959, 1604(XV) of 21 April 1961, 1725(XVI) of 20 December 1961, 1856(XVII) of 20 December 1962, 1912(XVIII) of 3 December 1963, 2002(XIX) of 10 February 1965,

2052(XX) of 15 December 1965, 2154(XXI) of 17 November 1966, 2341(XXII) of 19 December 1967, 2452(XXIII) of 19 December 1968 and 2535 A (XXIV) of 10 December 1969,

Noting the annual report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East covering the period from 1 July 1969 to 30 June 1970,

1. Notes with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed in paragraph 2 of Assembly resolution 513(VI) for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for their continued faithful efforts to provide essential services for the Palestine refugees, and to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

3. Directs the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue his efforts in taking such measures, including rectification of the relief rolls, as to assure, in co-operation with the Governments concerned, the most equitable distribution of relief based on need;

4. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine was unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194 (III), and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation thereof;

5. Directs attention to the continuing critical financial position of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, as outlined in the Commissioner-General's report;

6. Notes with concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions to help relieve the serious budget deficit of the past year, contributions to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East continue to fall short of the funds needed to cover essential budget requirements;

7. Calls upon all Governments as a matter of urgency to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the Commissioner-General's report, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute and contributing Governments to consider increasing their contributions.

CHAPTER XIII

OTHER QUESTIONS RELATING TO THE MIDDLE EAST

THE QUESTION OF BAHRAIN

In a note dated 28 March 1970, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that in response to approaches made to him by the Governments of Iran and the United Kingdom, and after discussions with the two parties, he had agreed to exercise his good offices in a matter pertaining to Bahrain. In agreeing to that, the Secretary-General added, he had had in mind that such action at the request of Member States had become customary in United Nations practice and had proved to be a valuable means of relieving and preventing tension by a quiet approach.

In an announcement set forth in his note, the Secretary-General stated that his decision was taken following discussions with the representatives of Iran and the United Kingdom. He noted he had informed both States of his willingness to respond favourably to a formal request from their Governments for the exercise of his good offices towards settling the differences between them over Bahrain, on the basis of suitably agreed terms of reference.

In letters dated 9 and 20 March, the Secretary-General said, Iran and the United Kingdom, respectively, had informed him that they wished him to exercise his good offices in the matter.

On 20 March, the Secretary-General advised the Governments of Iran and the United Kingdom that he was responding favourably to their request and would proceed to exercise his good offices in ascertaining the wishes of the people of Bahrain in accordance with the terms of reference agreed upon by the two Governments.

The terms of reference as conveyed to the Secretary-General read as follows:

Having regard to the problem created by the differing views of the parties concerned about the status of Bahrain and the need to find a solution to this problem in order to create an atmosphere of tranquillity, stability and friendliness throughout the area, the Secretary-General of the United Nations is requested by the parties concerned to send a Personal Representative to ascertain the wishes of the people of Bahrain.

The Secretary-General then stated that, after consultations with the parties, he had designated Vittorio Winspeare Guicciardi, Under-Secretary-General and Director-General of the United Nations Office at Geneva, to be his Personal Representative to carry out the mission to ascertain the wishes of the people of Bahrain.

The Secretary-General noted that it was agreed further that all costs of the mission would be borne by the parties. He said he had been assured that the people of Bahrain would have ready and full access to his Personal Representative and would be enabled to express their wishes to him freely and privately. The Personal Representative, he said, would then submit his findings in the form of a report to the Secretary-General who would, in turn, transmit it to the Security Council for its consideration.

On 3 April 1970, the Permanent Representative of the USSR transmitted to the Security Council the text of a USSR letter sent to the Secretary-General the day before, drawing attention to the fact that the Secretary-General had considered it possible to communicate information to the members of the Security Council on an ex post facto basis, and without the prior consultation of the members, concerning the adoption of measures in connexion with the problem of Bahrain, which related to a type of situation that could lead to complications in international relations.

Under the United Nations Charter, the USSR letter continued, questions and decisions of this type were within the jurisdiction of the Security Council. The statement in the Secretary-General's note that actions such as this by the Secretary-General "have become customary in United Nations practice" could not serve to justify those actions, the USSR said, for it was widely known that this illegal practice had been forced upon the United Nations in the past by certain powers contrary to and in violation of the Charter.

In this connexion, the USSR said that it considered it necessary to emphasize, as it had done in letters dated 27 August 1966<sup>1</sup> and 19 March 1969,<sup>2</sup> that under the United Nations Charter decisions on matters connected with action by the United Nations relating to the maintenance of international peace and security should be taken by the Security Council.

On 6 April 1970, the Secretary-General transmitted to the President of the Security Council his reply to the USSR communication. The reply, dated 4 April 1970, stated that the Secretary-General's position on the subject of the exercise of his good offices had been made clear in his letter dated 7 March 1969 to the President of the Security Council, relating to his decision to send a representative to Equatorial Guinea.<sup>3</sup> He had then stated that during his tenure as Secretary-General he had taken similar action in the past, without prior consultation with the Security Council, and that it was not his purpose on that occasion to establish any precedent of prior consultation.

The letter went on to say that the Secretary-General felt it might be useful to call attention to one aspect of that question: from time to time, States Members of the United Nations approached the Secretary-General directly and asked for the exercise of his good offices on a delicate matter; they explained they did so because they felt that a difference between them might be capable of an amicable solution if dealt with at an early stage quietly and diplomatically and that, therefore, it would be inadvisable to take the particular matter before the Security Council or to consult its members individually.

If the proposals submitted to him were fully consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter and in no way impinging upon the authority of the Security Council or any other organ of the United Nations, the letter continued, the Secretary-General then felt obligated to assist Member States in the manner requested, for to do otherwise would be to thwart a commendable effort by Member States to abide by a cardinal principle of the Organization, namely, the peaceful settlement of disputes.

The good offices mission in Bahrain, the Secretary-General added, entailed only fact-finding, and a report would be presented to the Security Council in due course so that any substantive action would be taken at that time and only by the Security Council.

The Personal Representative of the Secretary-General arrived in Bahrain on 30 March 1970 and remained there until 18 April. On 30 April, the Secretary-General transmitted the report of his Personal Representative to the Security Council.

In his report, the Personal Representative, after setting forth his terms of reference and the background information concerning his task, described the activities and the method adopted by him in carrying out his mission.

In his consultations, he had decided not to select representatives but to receive representatives of all organizations and institutions that to the best of his knowledge existed in Bahrain and appeared to offer a cross-section of the active community. To fill any remaining gap and to establish to his own satisfaction the thoroughness of the coverage, he had visited some villages as well as some organizations whose representatives had already been to see him. It was announced upon his arrival, and subsequently repeated thereafter in all local communications media, that individuals had a right to free and ready access to his mission.

The Personal Representative stated he was confident that the method he had followed had been appropriate and sufficient to ascertain the wishes of the people of Bahrain on the question at issue, and he believed that the number of persons whose views had been presented to him had been adequate.

He added that the information received from larger organizations which represented a cross-section of the Bahraini society were effectively supplemented by representatives of smaller organizations whose interests were sectoral and limited. His outside visits provided him with checks and samples of opinion that were valuable in verifying his conclusions.

The Personal Representative indicated that most of the replies to his inquiries had given credit to the Governments concerned for asking the Secretary-General to use his good offices and had expressed explicitly the hope that, as a result of ascertaining the wishes of the people of Bahrain, the cloud of the Iranian claim would be removed permanently. This hope, he said, was never accompanied by bitterness or hostility. The Bahrainis he met were virtually unanimous in wanting a fully independent sovereign State, with a great majority adding that this should be an Arab State.

Marginal to these common characteristics of most of the replies, the Special Representative reported, there had been a variety of viewpoints expressed, mainly in interviews with individuals. Some were in favour of a special relationship with Iran as a means of guaranteeing the independence of Bahrain, while others wished for the same reason that the present special relationship with the United Kingdom should continue. A union or association with Iran was favoured by some individuals and was also supported in the few written communications that were received.

In conclusion, the Personal Representative said his consultations had convinced him that the overwhelming majority of the people of Bahrain wished to gain recognition of their identity in a fully independent and sovereign State free to decide for itself its relations with other States.

In forwarding that report to the Security Council, the Secretary-General had added that with its submission the Secretary General's responsibilities in the exercise of his good offices with regard to Bahrain had been fully discharged.

On 4 May, Iran requested a meeting of the Security Council to consider the report of the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General. A similar request was received from the United Kingdom on 5 May.

The Security Council met on 11 May to consider the question of Bahrain, and, at their request, invited the representatives of Iran, Pakistan and Southern Yemen to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

On the same day, the Council endorsed the Personal Representative's report and welcomed his conclusions and findings, in particular that the overwhelming majority of the people of Bahrain wished to gain recognition of their identity in a fully independent and sovereign

State free to decide for itself its relations with other States.

The Council took this action with the unanimous adoption of resolution 278(1970), following consultations among Council members. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Following the adoption of the resolution, several members spoke.

The representative of Iran, after outlining the reasons that had led to his Government's bringing this case to the United Nations, said it had always been his Government's wish that the solution of that question be one acceptable to the inhabitants of Bahrain.

With the decision taken by the Council, he added, the long-standing dispute between Iran and the United Kingdom had come to an end, both sides having agreed to defer to the wishes of the inhabitants of Bahrain, as ascertained by the Secretary-General.

The Council, he concluded, had endorsed the report, and Iran was abiding by that outcome. Iran wished the people of Bahrain well and looked forward to a future of co-operation and close relations with them. He was certain that the basic human rights of persons of Iranian origin would be fully respected and safeguarded.

The representative of the United Kingdom referred to the agreement reached on Bahrain as a classic example of how disputes could be settled peacefully. A deeply rooted dispute that could have led to suspicion, mistrust and perhaps disruption, to the detriment of the people directly concerned, had been peacefully settled, thanks to a number of convergent and favourable factors. He praised the Secretary-General, the Shah of Iran and the people of Bahrain. He also paid tribute to the Secretary-General's Personal Representative for the thoroughness of his inquiries and the fairness of his conclusions.

Southern Yemen was gratified to note that the Arab character of Bahrain had been reaffirmed in the report.

Pakistan's representative, referring to the validity of the consultations held, said that as long as ascertainment was conducted under the aegis of the United Nations, the precise method of consulting popular opinion depended upon the circumstances of each case. In the present case, he said, there was no room for doubt that the conclusions reached in the report were the same as those that would have been reached in a plebiscite.

In this connexion, France expressed the view that a sounding out of public opinion could not have the legal value of a democratic consultation and that it was justified in the present case because of the objective to be achieved. As for the procedure followed in the action of the Secretary-General, the French representative added that there was no reason why one could not depart from customary means, since the Security Council had the final say in considering and endorsing the conclusions of the inquiry.

On the same point, the USSR stated that it maintained the position set out in its note of 2 April 1970 to the Secretary-General (described above). The USSR said that it firmly supported the just demand of the people of Bahrain for complete independence and sovereignty.

All the other speakers—China, Colombia, Finland, Nepal, Nicaragua, Poland, Sierra Leone, Spain, Syria, the United States and Zambia—among other things welcomed the decision of the Security Council and expressed congratulations and best wishes to the people of Bahrain.

THE QUESTION OF OMAN

The question of Oman was taken up on 29 October 1970 by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The question had been referred for consideration to the Sub-Committee on Oman, established by the Special Committee in 1968.<sup>4</sup>

On the recommendation of the Sub-Committee, the Special Committee decided to transmit to the General Assembly the working paper on Oman prepared by the United Nations Secretariat. The Special Committee further decided that, subject to any directives the General Assembly might give in that connexion, it

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The General Assembly considered the question of Oman at its twenty-fifth session, which opened on 15 September 1970.

On 14 December 1970, the Assembly, concerned about the situation in Oman and recalling its resolution of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,<sup>5</sup> deplored the refusal of the United Kingdom to implement relevant resolutions of the Assembly concerning the territory.

The Assembly also reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Oman to self-determination and to the natural resources of their territory, urged the United Kingdom to implement the Declaration on the granting of independence and recommended that the specialized agencies and international institutions concerned should study the possibilities of extending assistance to meet the educational, technical and health requirements of the people of the territory. It requested the Secretary-General to intensify the wide dissemination of information about conditions in the territory and asked the Special Committee on the situation with regard to implementation of the Declaration to follow closely developments concerning the colonial situation in the territory and to report thereon to the Assembly at its 1971 session.

These decisions were among those embodied in resolution 2702 (XXV), adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 70 to 17, with 22 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, which had approved the text on 11 December 1970, by a roll-call vote of 57 to 16, with 19 abstentions, on the basis of a text sponsored by Afghanistan, Algeria, Indonesia, Iraq, Kenya, Mali, Mauritania, the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen,<sup>6</sup> Syria, Tunisia, Uganda, Yugoslavia and Zambia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the discussion, which took place mainly in the Assembly's Fourth Committee, the representative of the United Kingdom said that Oman was a sovereign State, as was confirmed in a cable of 26 September 1970 from the Prime Minister of Oman to the Secretary-General. (This communication was not circulated to the Fourth Committee. It was considered on 19 November 1970 by the Sub-Committee on Petitions of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The Sub-Committee decided to circulate it as a petition.) The question of Oman therefore no longer came within the purview of the Fourth Committee, the representative of the United Kingdom said.

A number of Members—among them Algeria, Indonesia, Iraq, Kenya, Libya, Morocco and Yemen—rejected the United Kingdom's arguments on Oman. They called for compliance with resolutions of the General Assembly and for the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence.

Zambia said that the question of self-determination and independence for the people of Oman was as urgent as in the case of any other territory.

The Democratic Republic of the Congo, the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and Romania were among those that saw the situation in Oman as illustrating all the features of a colonial situation.

Iraq observed that the territory was linked to the United Kingdom by an agreement which prevented the population from fully exercising its right of self-determination.

Albania, Algeria, the Byelorussian SSR, Syria and the USSR saw the situation in Oman as an example of a colonialist policy pursued for the purpose of maintaining the presence of foreign monopolies. They said that foreign economic interests exploited the natural resources of the territory and appropriated most of the profits without regard for the rights of the indigenous inhabitants.

The representative of Cyprus believed that the presence of the United Nations in Oman was necessary to ensure that the people achieved genuine independence.

<sup>6</sup> On 4 December 1970, Southern Yemen advised the United Nations that on 30 November 1970, it had changed its name to the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen.

COMPLAINT BY SOUTHERN YEMEN

In a note verbale of 11 June 1970 to the Secretary-General, the representative of Southern Yemen alleged that British fighter planes based in Muscat and Oman, in co-operation with Saudi Arabian planes, had committed numerous violations of the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Southern Yemen. Attached to the note verbale was a map and a list giving dates and locations of the 14 alleged air space violations.

The United Kingdom both denied the charges and described them as unfounded in a letter of 25 June 1970 to the Secretary-General. The letter said that an investigation by the British authorities had shown without doubt that no Royal Air Force fighter aircraft had flown over the locations in question or anywhere near Southern Yemen on the dates alleged. The letter added that no Royal Air Force fighter aircraft were based in the Sultanate of Muscat and Oman.

A denial made in a letter dated 10 August 1970 from Saudi Arabia to the Secretary-General stated that no Royal Saudi Arabian Air Force fighter planes had flown over any air space other than that of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

CHAPTER XIV

THE SITUATION IN CYPRUS

During 1970, the Secretary-General submitted two reports to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus. On the basis of the Secretary-General's recommendation, the Council, noting the consent of the Cyprus Government, on each occasion (9 June and 10 December) unanimously decided to extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFIGYP) for a period of six months.<sup>1</sup>

Major-General Dewan Prem Chand of India continued to command the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus in 1970. Bibiano F. Osorio-Tafall of Mexico continued as the Secretary-General's Special Representative in Cyprus throughout the year.

On 19 February 1970, the representative of the USSR transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement by the Telegraph Agency of the Soviet Union (TASS) concerning the situation in Cyprus. The statement said there was evidence of increased activity by the terrorist organization known as the "National Front" and by other reactionary forces associated with the Greek military regime and serving the interests of the aggressive North Atlantic bloc. These activities were an integral part of a general plan, long under development in certain circles of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), to solve the Cyprus problem by military means, the statement continued. The anti-State forces wished to create a pretext for NATO intervention in the affairs of the island. The TASS statement called for the removal of foreign military bases from Cyprus and urged a peaceful solution of the island's problems without foreign interference of any kind.

On 24 and 25 February, respectively, the representatives of Greece and Cyprus transmitted to the Secretary-General the comments of their Governments regarding the TASS statement. The Greek Government stated that the alleged connexion between Athens and terrorist elements on the island was not worthy of a denial. It recalled that the Prime Minister of Greece had taken an unequivocal stand against those illegal activities and had expressed moral support for the Cypriot Government. The TASS statement was an attempt to exploit the current fluid situation in Cyprus' neighboring area in order to hinder efforts being made towards a peaceful solution, the Greek Government said.

The Cypriot Government stated it did not share the view that Greek officers were involved in any activities against the Republic of Cyprus, as alleged in the TASS statement.

CONSIDERATION BY SECURITY COUNCIL (9 JUNE 1970)

In his report to the Security Council on the United Nations Peace-keeping Operation in Cyprus for the period from 2 December 1969 to 1 June 1970, the Secretary-General said that the calm that had characterized the situation for some time had been disturbed by a series of violent actions culminating in the attempt on the life of Archbishop Makarios, President of Cyprus, on 8 March. The tension had been further increased by the murder, one week later, of a former Minister of the Interior. As a result of the firm measures taken by the Government of Cyprus and the restraint shown by the Turkish community, however, the harm that had been done to the normalization process had been minimized.

The Secretary-General stated that the disturbances were unlikely to encourage rapid progress in the inter-communal talks, which were being held in Nicosia, Cyprus, between leaders of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities. He reiterated his concern at the lack of progress in the two-year-old talks and said it would be unrealistic, in the circumstances, to expect an early solution of the basic problems of Cyprus. The Secretary-General still believed, however, that the elements necessary for a political settlement existed and that a compromise solution could be worked out which would include both political and economic components and would protect the legitimate interests of the two communities.

After appealing to both sides to continue the inter-communal talks, the Secretary-General stated that he and his Special Representative remained available to render any assistance the parties might desire. He also expressed the hope that, irrespective of recent tensions in the island, the Turkish Cypriot leadership would respond to the efforts of the Secretary-General's Special Representative in Cyprus and of the Commander of the United Nations Force to lessen the areas of confrontation and to accelerate the normalization process.

The Secretary-General said that although reductions in both the strength and the cost of UNFICYP had been put into effect during the period under review, the financial situation was increasingly serious. Unless additional contributions were received, there would be a deficit of approximately $7.5 million by 15 June 1970.

In view of the prevailing situation, the Secretary-General recommended the extension of UNFICYP for a further six-month period, until 15 December 1970.

On 9 June 1970, the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report and decided to extend the stationing of UNFICYP. As on other occasions, the representatives of Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited to participate in the discussion, without the right to vote.

As a result of prior consultations, the Council had before it a draft resolution, which it adopted unanimously. The Council thereby reaffirmed its previous decisions on the Cyprus question and urged the parties concerned to act with the utmost restraint and to continue determined co-operative efforts to achieve the objectives of the Security Council, by availing themselves in a constructive manner of the current auspicious climate and opportunities. The stationing of UNFICYP, for a further period of six months ending 15 December 1970, was extended in the expectation that by then sufficient progress towards a final solution would make possible a withdrawal or substantial reduction of the Force.

These Council decisions were embodied in resolution 281(1970). (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the debate, the representative of Cyprus said the Secretary-General's report indicated that the inter-communal situation had remained calm and that co-operation was continuing in the economic, agricultural and public-service fields. However, there had been no change in respect of freedom of movement, which meant that Greek Cypriots were still prevented from travelling to Turkish Cypriot-controlled areas, a matter of serious concern to the Government.

It was also regrettable that progress in the inter-communal talks had been slow. The question of local administration was proving to be the most intractable issue. The Cypriot Government was inclined to make concessions, but it could not go beyond the framework of a unitary State in a way that would destroy the integral unity of the island. While there was no intention or wish to derogate from the rights of Turkish Cypriots as equal citizens, neither cantonization nor federalization was acceptable to the Cypriot Government. Both parties had agreed that there should be a new and determined effort in the talks to reach a just, workable and enduring solution, the representative of Cyprus said.

Turkey's representative noted with regret and disappointment the deterioration of the situation in Cyprus over the previous six months. The Turkish Cypriot community had shown restraint during this period. Nevertheless, in view of the violence and terrorism of March, the prominent use of the theme of enosis (union of Cyprus with Greece) and the recovery by Greek Cypriot authorities of illegally held weapons and ammunition, the concern of the Turkish community should be understandable.

The balance sheet of "normalization" of the situation continued to leave much to be desired, the Turkish representative said. The Greek community should refrain from using normalization as a pretext for depriving the Turkish community of its present constitutional rights and for endangering its security. The Turkish community had always been ready to match every act of constructive and co-operative goodwill.

Although it was regrettable that the inter-communal talks had not as yet produced sufficient results towards an agreed solution, the determination of the leaders of the two communities and of the Governments most directly concerned constituted an element of hope, the Turkish representative stated. A successful outcome, he said, depended on realism, a constructive approach and a statesman-like attitude.

The representative of Greece expressed regret at the slow pace of the inter-communal talks, although he recognized the difficulties that the talks encountered. All sides agreed on the principle of the independence and unity of the Cypriot State, he said. The difficulties lay in the complex details of the proposals that the negotiators had before them. On its part, the Greek Government was dedicated to a viable solution concerning the joint existence of the two parties of the population of Cyprus.

Greece condemned the recent acts of violence in the island but said that they were in large measure the result of the uncertainty in which the Greek Cypriot population had lived for many years. It was reassuring to learn from the Secretary-General's report that the relations between the Greek and Turkish Cypriots during the past six months had marked slow but definite progress. If the Turkish Cypriots had shown more understanding in the questions of confrontation and of freedom of movement, there would have been an even greater relaxation of tension.

The representatives of Sierra Leone, the United Kingdom, the United States and Zambia, in supporting the extension of the mandate of UNFICYP, viewed the United Nations presence as a factor for calm and stability on the island. The representative of the United Kingdom said the United Nations Force in Cyprus was the most impressive peace-keeping operation in the history of the United Nations, and one in which the Organization could feel justifiable satisfaction and pride.

The United States representative expressed disappointment at the lack of progress in the inter-communal talks, which, he said, were still the best way to reach a solution. He also urged that Member States be approached with a view to securing additional contributions.

The representative of France wondered whether the continued presence of the United Nations Force fully corresponded to the objectives with which it was charged—namely, to contribute to a return to normal conditions. He feared that the continued presence of the Force might crystallize a dangerous situation and serve as a pretext for the indefinite postponement of any final settlement between the parties directly involved.

The USSR reaffirmed its position that the solution of the internal problems of Cyprus was a matter for the Cypriots themselves. The increased tension in the island, as a result of the subversive activities of international imperialist forces and their agents, threatened not only the independence and sovereignty of Cyprus but the peace and security of the Eastern Mediterranean region as a whole, the USSR stated. More than six years had elapsed since the armed forces first appeared on Cyprus. Such a situation could not be regarded as normal. Expressing the hope that the United Nations Force could be withdrawn by the end of the current six-month period, the USSR said that it was not raising the question of the Force's withdrawal, in view of the position of the Government of Cyprus and with the understanding that the system of financing the Force would be continued on a voluntary basis.

Poland also questioned the prolongation of the stay of the United Nations Force on the island.

On 15 October 1970, the representative of Turkey transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a message from Fazil Kuchuk, Vice-President of Cyprus, concerning President Makarios' appointment of a Greek Cypriot as Minister of Health. Mr. Kuchuk regarded the action as violating article 46 of the Constitution of Cyprus, which provided that appointments to the Council of Ministers were to be made jointly by the President and the Vice-President of the Republic.

This was only one of a series of unconstitutional and unilateral actions taken by the Greek Cypriot administration during recent months, Mr. Kuchuk said. The Turkish community considered the actions as provocative and as casting doubt on the good faith of the Greek Cypriot side in undertaking the inter-communal talks, which were passing through a delicate phase.

CONSIDERATION BY
(10 DECEMBER 1970)

In his report to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus for the period from 2 June to 1 December 1970, the Secretary-General said that the situation then prevailing in Cyprus was one of "negative stability": quiet on the surface but strained, abnormal and fraught with the serious danger inherent in the continuing close confrontation of well armed and trained forces. He felt that with the passing of time the situation could become the way of life of all Cypriots, thus perpetuating the need for UNFIGYP's presence on the island.

Moreover, no significant advance had been made towards a return to normal conditions, the Secretary-General said. The parties had not responded positively to the urgings of his Special Representative and the Force Commander to reduce military confrontations in sensitive areas. He remained convinced, however, that there were a number of helpful measures that both sides could take without endangering their political and security positions. For instance, a number of suggestions made to the Turkish Cypriot leadership, if agreed to, could, at minimum risk, generate an atmosphere of greater confidence and contribute significantly to the improvement in the living conditions of their community. On the Government side, the Secretary-General would welcome a determined move to solve the long-standing problem of displaced persons. An encouraging exception to the present immobility was the increased co-operation between the two communities in the economic field.

The Secretary-General regretted that there was not as yet any real prospect of a long-term settlement. Nevertheless, the talks should continue, for they remained the sole available method to achieve agreement between the two communities and to dissipate suspicions and tensions. What was needed was a new dynamism and direction in the negotiations. Both parties had realized, he felt, that any resort to force in resolving the Cyprus problem would only worsen the conflict. He reiterated his belief that the elements necessary for a political settlement in Cyprus existed and that a compromise solution could be worked out, including the crucial issue of local government.

In view of the prevailing situation, the Secretary-General recommended the extension of UNFICYP for a further six-month period, until 15 June 1971. As on previous occasions, he drew attention to the serious situation concerning the financing of the operation and the substantial deficit in the UNFICYP budget. This situation was obviously related to the unsatisfactory method of financing UNFICYP by voluntary contributions, he said.

On 10 December 1970, the Security Council discussed the report of the Secretary-General with the participation, as previously, of the representatives of Cyprus, Greece and Turkey.

On the same day, the Council urged the parties concerned to act with the utmost restraint and to continue determined co-operative efforts to achieve the objectives of the Security Council, by availing themselves in a constructive manner of the current auspicious climate and opportunities. The Council also extended once more the stationing of UNFICYP for a further period of six months ending 15 June 1971, in the expectation that by then progress towards a final solution would make possible a withdrawal or substantial reduction of the Force.

The Council's decisions were based on prior consultations and were embodied in resolution 291(1970), adopted unanimously. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the Council's discussion, the representative of Cyprus expressed the hope that the process of normalization, in respect of the opening of roads and the return of the Turkish Cypriots to their homes, would be approached by the other side in a constructive spirit, thereby creating a new climate of confidence for the inter-communal talks. He praised the increased co-operation between the two communities in the economic and agricultural fields, notably during the recent drought. However, that hopeful trend had not reversed the policy of the Turkish Cypriot leadership towards a separate economy.

The inter-communal talks, he stated, provided the only course for solving differences and eventually reaching an over-all agreement. The fundamental disagreement between the parties seemed to be over local government. This was a new element in the talks and had proved to be the most difficult problem in respect both of its meaning and of its application. The objective of the Cyprus Government continued to be an independent unitary State in which all Cypriots would enjoy equal rights.

The representative of Turkey said that recent events of violence had had a negative impact on endeavours for strengthening the confidence between the two communities. Turkey was also concerned by the distribution to the Greek Cypriot police of arms from the stocks imported in 1966 and by the refusal of access, on 13 June 1970, of the UNFICYP Civilian Police patrol to the Limassol docks, where military stores were unloaded. An agreement on arms imports had been in operation since 1964. Turkey could not accept any change in the implementation of that agreement.

The Turkish representative said there were more than 20,000 persons on the island who had been displaced since 1963 and whose return to their ancestral locations was an important aspect of any return to normal conditions.

In their inter-communal talks, the Turkish community had directed itself to the re-establishment of an independent, sovereign and unitary State based on local autonomy, not self-government, he said. He hoped that the door would open to that just and equitable solution.

Greece's representative stated that "positive stability" could be established in Cyprus only by a positive conclusion to the negotiations between the two parts of the population. The rate of these negotiations should be speeded up as quickly as possible. Military confrontations should also be reduced and if possible eliminated.

There were some encouraging events included in the Secretary-General's report, such as cooperation between Greek and Turkish Cypriot farmers. Greece supported any steps for increasing co-operation between the two communities, especially in the fields of the economy, the settlement of displaced persons and the restoration of freedom of movement. All of these measures would lead to the creation of an atmosphere of confidence which would greatly assist the negotiators in their delicate and difficult task.

The representatives of Finland, Sierra Leone, Syria, the United Kingdom, the United States and Zambia supported the continuation of UNFIGYP'S presence as necessary to the maintenance of peace in Cyprus. While regretting the lack of progress in the situation, as indicated in the Secretary-General's report, they welcomed encouraging signs, including those of increased co-operation between the two communities. The best hope for a settlement lay in the inter-communal talks.

France, although supporting the extension of UNFIGYP'S mandate, once again indicated its misgivings at the perpetuation in Cyprus of a precarious and threatening situation. Despite the constant efforts of the United Nations Force, the gulf between the two communities on the island was widening every day. A political solution between the parties concerned was a matter of urgency, and was in no way beyond reach. France hoped that the parties would respond positively to the appeals of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and the Commander of the Force for reduction of the direct and dangerous military confrontations in various critical areas of the island.

The representative of the USSR stated that the question of Cyprus should be settled by peaceful means in the interests of the people of Cyprus and in the interests of reducing tension in that part of the world. He repeated that all foreign troops on the island should be withdrawn and that foreign bases should be eliminated. While sharing the concern expressed by the Secretary-General at the lack of progress in the talks, he expressed the hope that they would achieve success.

On the question of the financing of UNFICYP, the representative of the United States said that, while his Government was prepared to pay its part, it nevertheless believed that no single Member should bear a disproportionate share of the cost. He expressed the hope that present contributors and others would respond to the Secretary-General's appeal for additional pledges.

Finland said that the reliance on voluntary contributions was unacceptable in principle and unsatisfactory in practice. Peace-keeping operations based on decisions the Security Council had taken on behalf of all Member States should be paid for by all. This principle should be upheld in any future agreement on the financing of peace-keeping operations.

Zambia also felt that the system of financing such an important peace-keeping effort through insufficient and uncertain voluntary contributions from Member States was unsatisfactory and unrealistic. It expressed the hope that the Security Council would take corrective measures in this regard.

The representative of the USSR said his Government had agreed to the further extension of the Force on the understanding that its renewal had been in conformity with the Security Council resolution on 4 March 1964,<sup>2</sup> which provided for voluntary financing.

CHAPTER XV

QUESTIONS RELATING TO THE UNITED NATIONS CHARTER AND MEMBERSHIP IN THE UNITED NATIONS

REVIEW OF THE CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS

An item entitled "Need to consider suggestions regarding the review of the Charter of the United Nations" was placed on the agenda of the General Assembly's 1970 session (which opened on 15 September), on the basis of a decision previously taken by the Assembly on 12 December 1969<sup>1</sup> at its twenty-fourth session.

During the debate on the subject, which took place in the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee in 1970, a number of representatives—including those of Brazil, Colombia, Ghana, Guatemala, Italy, Jamaica, Japan and Zambia—spoke in favour of a review of the United Nations Charter.

Others, among them France, Greece, Lebanon, Turkey and the United States, urged caution in considering the possibility of a review of the Charter.

Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR stressed that strict observance of the purposes and principles of the Charter was the key to ensuring the effectiveness of the United Nations. They considered that there was no need for a review of the Charter.

On 4 December 1970, the Sixth Committee approved, by a roll-call vote of 69 to 12, with 12 abstentions, a draft resolution on the matter, on the basis of a proposal by Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Haiti, Japan, Liberia, Nicaragua and the Philippines, as amended, orally, by Nigeria.

The text was subsequently adopted at a plenary meeting of the Assembly on 11 December 1970, by a recorded vote of 82 to 12, with 11 abstentions, as resolution 2697 (XXV).

The Assembly thereby asked the Secretary-General to invite Member States to communicate to him, before July 1972, their views and suggestions on the review of the Charter, and to submit a report containing these views and suggestions to the Assembly in 1972. ## ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS

ADMISSIONS IN 1970

During 1970, one State—Fiji—was admitted to United Nations membership, bringing the total number of Member States to 127.

The admission of Fiji was recommended by the Security Council to the General Assembly on 10 October 1970. The Council took this action by adopting, unanimously, resolution 287 (1970), which was sponsored by Sierra Leone, the United Kingdom and Zambia.

The General Assembly acted on this recommendation on 13 October 1970, when it decided, by acclamation, to admit Fiji to United Nations membership. Its decision was contained in resolution 2622(XXV), which was sponsored by Australia, Barbados, Botswana, Canada, Ceylon, Cyprus, Gambia, Ghana, Guyana, India, Jamaica, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Malaysia, Malta, Mauritius, New Zealand, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Swaziland, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia.

COMMUNICATIONS ON APPLICATIONS

On 23 December 1970, the Secretary-General transmitted, for the information of the Members of the United Nations, a letter dated 10 December 1970 from Bhutan applying for membership in the United Nations. The Secretary-General was asked to arrange for the application to be placed before the Security Council and the General Assembly.

THE QUESTION OF MICRO-STATES

In 1970, a Security Council Committee of Experts, especially set up for the purpose the previous year,<sup>2</sup> submitted an interim report on questions arising from the emergence of a growing number of independent States, very small in area and population and lacking human and economic resources, which might seek United Nations membership.

The Committee of Experts, consisting of all members of the Security Council, held a number of closed meetings during 1969 and 1970.

In its interim report, submitted to the Security Council on 15 June 1970, the Committee pointed out that several of its members had not yet made statements on the substantive aspects of the question; therefore the Committee could not yet formulate specific recommendations for submission to the Council.

Annexed to the Committee's report were the text of a proposal submitted by the United States and the text of a working paper submitted by the United Kingdom.

The United States proposal concerned the creation of a category of "associate membership" or "associate status," by which a recipient State would: (a) enjoy the rights of a Member in the General Assembly except to vote or hold office; (b) enjoy appropriate rights in the Security Council upon the taking of requisite action by the Council; (c) enjoy appropriate rights in the Economic and Social Council and in its appropriate regional commissions and other sub-bodies, upon the taking of requisite action by the Council; (d) enjoy access to United Nations assistance in the economic and social fields; and (e) bear the obligations of a Member except the obligation to pay financial assessments.

The admission to such associate membership, according to the United States proposal, would be effected in accordance with the same procedure provided by the Charter for the admission of Members, and States that opted for associate membership would submit to the Secretary-General a declaration of willingness to abide by the principles of the United Nations, as set forth in the Charter.

The United Kingdom working paper suggested an arrangement whereby a State could voluntarily renounce certain rights (in particular, voting and election in certain United Nations bodies) but otherwise enjoy all the rights and privileges of membership. It was suggested that this arrangement (which would not require amendment of the Charter) might be embodied in a declaration to be made by a new State at the time of its application for admission.

It was noted in the working paper that the purpose of any arrangement should be to meet the needs of very small States that wished to be Members of the United Nations but would find difficulty in meeting all the financial and administrative obligations involved. The first aim of the proposal was to respect the sovereignty and independence of the States concerned and it also aimed to enable them to enjoy the general benefits of membership.

The United Kingdom observed in its working paper that if, as a voluntary exercise of its sovereignty, as part of its request for membership, a State renounced the exercise of certain rights of membership in a manner acceptable to the Organization and its other Members, this would not be contrary to the provision of Article 2 (1) of the Charter, which notes that the Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all Members.

In its discussions, the Committee of Experts also had heard a suggestion by France to reactivate the Security Council's Committee on the Admission of New Members.

The Committee of Experts reported that a preliminary exchange of views had taken place about the legal nature, the applicability and the implications of the proposals that had been put forward. However, no conclusions were reached or recommendations made concerning those proposals.

CHAPTER XVI

OTHER POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS

QUESTION OF PERIODIC MEETINGS OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL

On 3 March 1970, the members of the Security Council received an informal memorandum from Finland on the question of initiating periodic meetings of the Council in accordance with Article 28 (2) of the Charter, which states that the Security Council shall hold periodic meetings at which each of its members may, if it so desires, be represented by a member of the Government or by some other specially designated representative.

Preliminary consultations took place on the question during March, and, in a note of 20 April 1970, the President of the Council, in his capacity as the representative of Finland, proposed that consultations be undertaken with a view to having the question considered by the Council. On 5 June, Finland requested that a meeting of the Security Council be convened for this purpose.

On 12 June 1970, the Council included the Finnish note in its agenda, and the President of the Council stated that as a result of the consultations that had been held, he had been authorized to make a statement expressing the consensus of the Council.

According to the consensus, the members of the Council considered that the holding of periodic meetings, at which each member of the Council would be represented by a member of the Government or by some other specially designated representative, could enhance the authority of the Council and make it a more effective instrument for the maintenance of international peace and security.

The date and other practical aspects of the first such meeting would be considered later in consultations. It was also understood that periodic meetings would provide members with an opportunity for a general exchange of views on the international situation, rather than for dealing with any particular question, and that such meetings would normally be held in private.

The provisional agenda of periodic meetings would be drawn up by the Secretary-General in consultation with the Council members and in accordance with the provisional rules of procedure.

FIRST PERIODIC MEETING

The first periodic meeting of the Security Council, held in private on 21 October 1970, dealt with an agenda item entitled "Review of the international situation."

The meeting was presided over by the Foreign Minister of Spain and was attended by the Foreign Ministers of China, Colombia, Finland, France, Nepal, Nicaragua, Poland, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, by the Deputy Foreign Minister of Syria, and by the Permanent Representatives to the United Nations of Burundi, Sierra Leone and Zambia.

The Council issued a communique on that day reporting that at the periodic meeting the Secretary-General had delivered a statement on the international situation, after which representatives of member States had had a general exchange of views on current issues affecting international peace and security and had pledged their full support for seeking peaceful solutions to outstanding international disputes in accordance with the United Nations Charter.

The communique noted that members of the Council also had consulted on how to contribute to a peaceful political settlement in the Middle East, and they reaffirmed their conviction that the Council's resolution of 22 November 1967<sup>1</sup> (which, among other things, affirmed that a lasting peace in the Middle East should include the withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from territories occupied in the 1967 conflict) should be supported and carried out in all parts.

With regard to the problems of southern Africa, the communique stated that members had reaffirmed their determination to continue their search for practicable means in conformity with the Charter to enable the peoples of that area to exercise their right to self-determination and to enjoy their fundamental human rights. Burundi, Sierra Leone and Zambia reserved their position on this subject.

The communique also reported that members of the Council had declared that the capability of the Council to act effectively for the maintenance of international peace and security should be further strengthened, and they had agreed that the holding of periodic meetings was an important step in that direction.

They also agreed to examine possibilities for further improvements in the methods of work of the Security Council in promoting the peaceful settlement of disputes in accordance with the Charter.

In view of the primary responsibility of the Council for the maintenance of international peace and security, the communique noted, members of the Council had emphasized the importance of reaching early agreement on guidelines for future peace-keeping operations in conformity with the Charter.

The date of the next periodic meeting of the Council would be determined through consultations.

CONSIDERATION BY SECURITY COUNCIL

SECURITY COUNCIL., meeting 1544.

S/9759. Note by President of Security Council of 20 April 1970 (annexing Finnish memorandum on question of initiating periodic meetings of Security Council).

S/9824. Letter of 5 June 1970 from Finland (request to convene Council).

S/9835. Consensus expressed by President following consultations with Council members, approved by Council on 12 June 1970, meeting 1544.

"The members of the Security Council have considered the question of initiating periodic meetings in accordance with Article 28, paragraph 2, of the Charter. They consider that the holding of periodic meetings, at which each member of the Council would be represented by a member of the Government or by some other specially designated representative, could enhance the authority of the Security Council and make it a more effective instrument for the maintenance of international peace and security. As to the date and other practical aspects of the first such meeting, these will be considered later in consultations.

"It is understood that periodic meetings, the purpose of which would be to enable the Security Council to discharge more effectively its responsibilities under the Charter, would provide members with an opportunity for a general exchange of views on the international situation, rather than for dealing with any particular question, and that such meetings would normally be held in private, unless it were otherwise decided.

"The provisional agenda of periodic meetings shall be drawn up by the Secretary-General in consultation with the members of the Council and in accordance with the relevant provisions of the provisional rules of procedure."

STATUS OF THE GERMAN-SPEAKING ELEMENT IN THE PROVINCE OF BOLZANO (BOZEN)

On 14 July 1970, Austria and Italy sent letters to the Secretary-General concerning the dispute between them on the status of the German-speaking element in the Province of Bolzano (Bozen). Referring to a General Assembly resolution of 31 October 1960<sup>2</sup> and to one of 28 November 1961,<sup>3</sup> which urged the two Governments to resolve the disagreements between them on this issue, the letters reported on various measures the two Governments had taken towards this objective.

They stated that, after talks between them from 1961 to 1968, the Italian Government, on 3 December 1969, had announced to the Italian Parliament a programme of legislative measures concerning the status of the German-speaking population of Bolzano (Bozen).

For its part, the Austrian Government had declared to the Austrian National Council that, as soon as the measures announced by the Italian Government had been carried out, it would consider the dispute on this subject terminated.

The two Governments had also negotiated an agreement designed to apply Chapter I of the European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes to disputes concerning the interpretation and implementation of bilateral agreements between them that might have existed prior to the entry into force of the Convention.

CHAPTER I

THE SECOND UNITED NATIONS DEVELOPMENT DECADE

On 24 October 1970, celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, the General Assembly proclaimed the Second United Nations Development Decade, starting from 1 January 1971, and adopted an International Development Strategy for the Decade. The Strategy was the result of two years of work by a Preparatory Committee set up by the General Assembly in 1968<sup>1</sup> and assisted by the Economic and Social Council's Committee for Development Planning and other United Nations bodies.

The International Development Strategy for the Second Development Decade was referred to in the Declaration on the Occasion of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the United Nations. (See pp. 116-17.) Governments were urged to give their full support to its implementation in order to realize the fundamental objectives of the Charter.

THE INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

DECISIONS LEADING TO GENERAL ASSEMBLY STATEMENT

In the course of discussions leading to the adoption of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council had before them reports of the Council's Committee for Development Planning, the Assembly's Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Development Decade, and the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), as well as a preliminary version of the World Economic Survey, 1969-1970.

REPORTS BEFORE COUNCIL AND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR DEVELOPMENT PLANNING

Early in 1970, the Economic and Social Council's Committee for Development Planning met to prepare guidelines and proposals for the Second United Nations Development Decade. The Committee examined the performances of the developing countries, the developed market economies and the centrally planned economies during the First United Nations Development Decade, the 1960s.

The Committee noted in its report that, despite the gains recorded in investment and savings of the developing countries, there had been marked differences in the rates of growth and that the average increase in gross domestic product was below that of the developed market economies and of the net material product of the centrally planned economies.

Developed countries had made further progress in science and technology and in trade and co-operation, but their contribution towards achieving the objectives of the First United Nations Development Decade had fallen short of expectations, according to the report. Despite the growth of international development finance institutions, the net flow of financial resources to developing countries as a percentage of gross national product had declined.

In its report, the Committee proposed that a general declaration of intent and commitments be adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session, which was to open on 15 September 1970. This declaration would enunciate broad commitments to be made by both developed and developing countries with the object of furthering the development process. Each country might then supplement the general declaration with a more specific unilateral declaration of its own intentions.

The Committee went on to define what it considered to be the basic objectives of the Second United Nations Development Decade and the national and international measures necessary to achieve those objectives. It believed it would be possible for developing countries as a group to achieve during the 1970s an average annual rate of expansion of between 6 and 7 per cent in gross product, that is of 3.5 to 4.5 per cent per capita. This would require an average annual increase of 4 per cent in agricultural production and of 8 per cent or more in manufacturing output, and an expansion of at least 7 per cent per annum in import capacity.

It was pointed out by the Committee for Development Planning that economic and social progress involved not only increasing production but also expanding employment and educational opportunities and improving the distribution of income. Among its recommendations, the Committee stressed the reform of the socio-economic structure and institutions of developing countries to further the process of modernization and the mobilization of internal resources.

The Committee also called for the expansion of the net flow of financial resources from developed market economies to developing countries so as to reach 1 per cent of the gross national product of the former by 1972. It called for the regulation of international trade in products with unstable markets and the liberalization of imports from developing countries, and it advocated more technical assistance and the application of science and technology to resolve the problems of developing countries.

It was further recommended by the Committee that the centrally planned economy countries should increase their imports from developing countries and expand technical assistance. Developing countries should expand trade and other forms of economic and technological co-operation among themselves.

PREPARATORY COMMITTEE FOR SECOND UNITED NATIONS DEVELOPMENT DECADE

In 1970, a draft of the international development strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade was prepared by the General Assembly's Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Development Decade, which met between 24 February and 13 March and between 11 and 28 May. (For membership of Preparatory Committee, see APPENDIX III. As in 1969, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Poland and the USSR did not participate in the work of the Committee.) The Committee's draft was intended to serve as a basic document for deliberations in the Economic and Social Council and in the General Assembly.

The draft consisted of a preamble and sections on goals and objectives for the Decade, policy measures to be implemented, the need for review and appraisal of performance as well as objectives and policies, and the mobilization of public opinion.

By the preamble of the draft strategy, Governments would undertake to pursue the objectives of the United Nations Charter by agreeing to implement a set of policy measures designed to accelerate economic and social progress, recognizing that this could be accomplished only by the efforts of the countries concerned and by sustained international co-operation.

The objectives of the draft strategy included an average annual rate of growth in the gross product of the developing countries of at least 6 per cent during the Decade, implying a corresponding rate of per capita growth of 3.5 per cent on the basis of an annual increase in population of 2.5 per cent. According to the draft, the over-all expansion in agricultural production would need to be 4 per cent a year, and in industry, 8 per cent.

Among the other recommended goals were an average increase of 0.3 per cent a year in the ratio of gross domestic savings to gross product, a rise of slightly less than 7 per cent in imports and of slightly more than 7 per cent in exports. Qualitative and structural improvements in the economy were also envisaged.

Proposed policy measures were set out under several headings: (1) international trade; (2) economic co-operation and regional integration among developing countries; (3) financial resources for development; (4) invisible earnings including shipping; (5) special measures in favour of the least developed among the developing countries; (6) special measures in favour of the land-locked developing countries; (7) science and technology; (8) human development; (9) expansion and diversification of production; and (10) plan formulation and implementation.

As concerned international trade, the draft urged international action with respect to commodity agreements and the establishment of general principles on pricing policy. Developed countries would aim to eliminate or reduce obstacles to imports of primary products from developing countries. They would also give increased attention to aiding developing countries in accelerating the diversification of their economies and in solving problems arising from the competition to natural products of synthetics and substitutes and surplus disposal.

The developing countries' exports of manufactures and semi-manufactures would be expanded and diversified by, inter alia, the establishment of generalized, non-discriminatory, non-reciprocal preferential access to developed countries. Efforts would be made to reduce restrictive business practices that were unfavourable to the exports of developing countries.

With regard to financial resources for development, the draft stipulated that developing countries bore the main responsibility for financing their development and outlined the measures to be taken to mobilize their domestic financial resources. Developed countries would endeavour to devote annually to external aid 1 per cent of their gross national product. It was proposed but not agreed that each developed country would try its best to provide annually 0.75 per cent of its gross national product in the form of official development assistance. Softening and harmonization of the conditions of assistance were called for, as well as untying of aid. Multilateral assistance would be increased, and arrangements to forecast and forestall debt crises would be improved.

Policies to promote foreign private investment were recommended for both developing and developed countries.

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development was called upon to pursue its efforts to set up a scheme of supplementary financing, and a proposal was made, although not agreed upon, to give serious consideration to establishing a link between the allocation of new reserve assets under the scheme of Special Drawing Rights and the provision of additional development finance for the benefit of all developing countries.

No agreement was reached by the Preparatory Committee on a text on shipping, but certain recommendations were made with regard to insurance and tourism. Special measures were urged in favour of the least developed among the developing countries to be implemented at the national, sub-regional, regional and international levels, with the assistance of developed countries. (See pp. 330-32 below.)

Special measures were also called for in favour of land-locked developing countries, attention being paid to the need for financial and technical assistance to develop the transport and communications structures of these countries.

With regard to science and technology, the proposed objective was to reduce the disparity in these fields between developed and developing countries. The latter would endeavour to attain, by the end of the Second Development Decade, a minimum annual expenditure on research and development of 0.5 per cent of their gross product, concentrating especially on appropriate technologies and applied research.

Developed countries would commit themselves to increase substantially their aid in direct support of science and technology in developing countries during the Decade. Quantitative targets were proposed but not agreed upon. Developed and developing countries and competent international organizations would draw up and implement a programme for promoting the transfer of technology to developing countries.

Policy measures for human development were prescribed in the field of population growth, employment strategy, education, health and nutrition, housing and related community facilities, the environment, and the participation of women, children and youth in the development process.

With respect to the expansion and diversification of production in developing countries, the draft strategy envisaged policies that would be carried out in a global context, with a view to achieving an optimal international division of labour. Appropriate strategies for agriculture and industry were outlined, including the roles to be played by developed countries, by regional groupings and by international organizations. Expansion of the basic infrastructure of developing countries was also the subject of recommendations.

Developing countries would establish and strengthen planning mechanisms and improve public administration, having recourse to international assistance where necessary.

The draft international development strategy also referred to subsequent review and appraisal of both objectives and policies and to mobilization of public opinion in the interest of the Second Development Decade effort. (See pp. 315-16 and pp. 316-17 below.)

There were other portions of the draft on which the Preparatory Committee was unable to reach agreement. These included the target dates for implementation of specific policy measures, notably in the fields of trade and aid. Some representatives felt the time-tables proposed were too short, and others could accept no time-table at all.

There were also differences of opinion on the subject of a specified date for the implementation of a target for net official financial resource transfers.

Agreement was not reached on the question of the need for developed countries to evolve programmes for the adaptation and adjustment of industries and workers affected by increased imports of manufactures from developing countries. It was proposed that, should interpretation of the policy measures be necessary, account should be taken of previous agreements and decisions reached by relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, but there was disagreement with respect to the inclusion of this provision in the draft.

A draft was not submitted for some sections, notably those on the policies to be undertaken by the centrally planned economy countries and on measures in the field of shipping.

Decisions on the aspects on which agreement had not been reached were left to the General Assembly, where the draft was to be finalized.

UNCTAD TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT BOARD

The contribution of UNCTAD to the preparatory work for the Second United Nations Development Decade was outlined in a decision of 16 February 1970 by its Trade and Development Board. (See also pp. 384-85.)

The Board's decision covered aspects of international trade and finance on which agreement had been reached. Agreement was not reached on some matters, including target dates for the implementation of certain measures, the volume of aid, and recommendations in respect of shipping, for which no text at all was included. In some cases, alternative texts or amendments were submitted.

At meetings held from 19 August to 24 September 1970, the Trade and Development Board took further decisions concerning UNCTAD'S contribution to the Second Development Decade. On 7 September, the Board adopted a text on shipping and ports, and on 15 September it decided to draw the attention of the General Assembly to the role of the socialist countries of Eastern Europe in the fields of trade expansion, economic co-operation and regional integration.

On the issues that still remained unresolved, the Board invited the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to transmit the draft texts on which it had been unable to reach agreement to the Secretary-General of the United Nations in order that these might be available for reference by the General Assembly when it considered the international development strategy.

WORLD ECONOMIC SURVEY

A preliminary version of the World Economic Survey, 1969-1970, "The Developing Countries in the 1960s: The Problem of Appraising Progress" was also before the Economic and Social Council during its discussions of the international development strategy.

Drawing upon the experience of economic and social development in the 1960s, this study attempted to measure progress not only in terms of its nature and pace but also in terms of the efficiency of the policies pursued. For this purpose, the process of development was broken down into various components: the production and supply of goods and services; levels of living; the growth of productive capacity; the state of economic balance; and changes in both internal and external environment in which development takes place. In each case, the problem of devising quantitative and qualitative indicators of performance was examined.

Among the criteria that might be applied in evaluating performance were the declared intentions of each country, bench-marks of earlier performance, recorded achievements of other countries in comparable situations, and averages or minimum targets designated on an international basis.

DECISIONS OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

The Economic and Social Council discussed the draft international development strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade in July of 1970.

Many representatives expressed regret that the Eastern European members had not taken part in the deliberations of the Preparatory Committee.

Representatives of these countries, although expressing reservations with respect to the draft international strategy, declared their willingness to continue to expand their co-operation with the developing countries on the basis of practical and economically sound proposals, with regard both to their own potential and to that of the developing countries.

Many speakers emphasized the need to ensure the transfer to developing countries of net financial resources from developed countries equivalent to 1 per cent of their gross national product, and several emphasized the importance of establishing a subsidiary target of 0.75 per cent of the gross national product as the official component of such transfers.

A number of representatives of developed countries indicated approval of the targets, but others pointed to their Governments' inability to meet the targets by 1972 as suggested by the developing countries, or by any other specific date.

Representatives of the centrally planned economy countries of Eastern Europe expressed the opinion that the 1 per cent target should not be applied to that group of countries.

On measures relating to international trade, the need for enlarging the access to the markets of developed countries for the goods produced in developing countries was stressed. It was suggested by representatives of developing countries that tariff and non-tariff barriers on imports from those countries should be removed within a specified period.

Particularly important, it was stated, was the need to adopt a system of generalized, non-discriminatory and non-reciprocal preferences for manufactured and semi-manufactured goods exported by developing countries. The importance of concluding international agreements for major primary commodities entering international trade, so as to stabilize their prices at remunerative levels, was also emphasized.

Four papers presenting the views of various groups of countries were discussed by the Council.

One, submitted by a group of developing countries, reaffirmed their position with regard to policy measures relating to international trade, financial resources for development, and science and technology. It included specific dates for the implementation of certain measures.

Another paper, on population policy, submitted by the United States, proposed that the development strategy should note that in developing countries where development efforts could be impaired by high rates of population growth, national policies aimed at moderating population growth on a voluntary basis should be regarded as among the important aspects of development strategy.

A third paper, on the subject of the contribution of the centrally planned economy countries of Eastern Europe in the field of trade, noted that these countries would extend their full support within the framework of their socio-economic system to the developing countries' efforts for trade expansion, economic co-operation and regional integration among themselves.

The Council also discussed a joint statement by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland and the USSR. The statement, originally issued in connexion with the adoption by the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD of its programme of contributions to the Second Development Decade (see above), noted, among other things, that these countries would support measures for the Decade's programme that corresponded to the following goals and objectives: to promote the expansion and normalization of international trade and the development of economic co-operation among all States, irrespective of their social and economic systems, on the basis of equal rights and mutual advantage; to contribute to the overcoming and abolition of the consequences of colonialism and the policy of neo-colonialism in the field of international trade, and to the elimination of discriminatory practices and the normalization of international trade on the basis of the principles governing international trade relations and trade policies, approved by UNCTAD; and to contribute to the conversion of foreign trade into an effective instrument of independent national economic development, so that it could adequately support and stimulate a fuller utilization of the domestic resources of the developing countries in the interests of those countries themselves.

On 31 July 1970, the Council affirmed that the completion of an international draft strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade would require, among other things, decisions about:

- (a) proposals concerning target dates for the transfer of resources from developed to developing countries and proposals on the target for the official component of such transfers;
- (b) proposals concerning target dates for the terms and conditions of assistance;
- (c) proposals on the question of a link between the allocation of new reserve assets under the scheme of Special Drawing Rights and the provision of additional development finance to developing countries;
- (d) shipping;
- (e) proposals on target dates in the field of international trade;
- (f) adjustment assistance measures;
- (g) restrictive business practices;
- (h) proposals on assistance by developed countries to developing countries in the field of science and technology; and
- (i) proposals relating to the contribution of centrally planned economy countries of Eastern Europe to the Second Development Decade.

The Council also stressed that an international development strategy would gain considerably in significance if a specific time were set for the implementation of the policy measures for achieving the goals and objectives of the Decade.

Further, the Council considered that the strategy for the Decade should provide for ways and means of dealing not only with existing problems of development but also with those that might arise in the implementation of policy measures. It urged Governments to give consideration at the appropriate political level to the issues listed above, in order that these might be resolved in time for the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly, due to open on 15 September 1970.

The Council requested the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD to continue its efforts to reach agreement on those issues within its competence that remained unresolved.

Also, the Council recommended that the General Assembly take priority measures in order to reach final agreement on a draft in time for the development strategy to be adopted and the Second Development Decade to be launched at the commemorative (twenty-fifth anniversary) meeting of the General Assembly on 24 October 1970. With this end in view, the Council urged Governments to consider representation at a high political level during the final phase of work on the draft strategy.

The Council's decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 1556 A (XLIX) which was adopted with resolution 1556 B (XLIX), concerning appraisal of the implementation of the strategy (see p. 315 below), without vote and subject to the reservations and observations made during the debate. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

A draft text had been approved by the Council's Economic Committee on 30 July 1970, by a vote of 24 to 0, with 2 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal submitted by Argentina, Brazil, Ceylon, Chad, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Peru, Sudan, Tunisia, Upper Volta, Uruguay and Yugoslavia.

In the course of the Economic Committee's discussions of the draft resolution, an amendment was submitted by the USSR. It proposed the deletion of both the paragraph affirming that the completion of a draft strategy would require decisions concerning a number of listed subjects and the paragraph stressing that a strategy would gain in significance if a specific time-limit were set for the implementation of policy measures. In their stead would appear a paragraph affirming that the satisfactory solution of the difficulties connected with the elaboration of the text of the strategy was an indispensable condition for fulfilment of the Decade's objectives.

The USSR amendment was rejected by 13 votes against to 2 in favour, with 10 abstentions.

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

A draft proposal for the international development strategy, based on the document prepared by the Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Development Decade, was submitted to the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session by the following States: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Barbados, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Ceylon, Chad, Chile, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Dahomey, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, the Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, the Khmer Republic,<sup>2</sup> Kuwait, Laos, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, the People's Republic of the Congo, Peru, the Philippines, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Swaziland, Syria, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

This proposal was considered mainly in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee.

Various amendments to the draft proposal (some of which were incorporated into the final revision) were introduced by Australia, France, Japan, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, but these were later withdrawn.

Extensive negotiations were carried out both in the Second Committee and by a working group of the Committee in an effort to arrive at agreement on the unresolved issues in the draft. The result was a revised text which in turn evoked a number of formal statements, explanations of positions, reservations, observations and interpretations.

On 16 October 1970, the Second Committee approved the revised text without a vote, taking into account the statements of Members made both before and after its adoption.

On 24 October 1970, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted, without vote, resolution 2626 (XXV) on an International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

TEXT OF STRATEGY

The text of the International Development Strategy was similar to the draft text approved by the Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Development Decade (see pp. 306-8 above), but it contained specific provisions relating to the various issues on which the Preparatory Committee had been unable to reach agreement.

The target dates in the final draft were somewhat more flexible than those originally suggested. With regard to the reduction of duties and other barriers to imports of primary products by developed countries and of non-tariff barriers affecting trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures of interest to developing countries, the final version of the document stipulated that efforts would be made with a view to achieving results by 31 December 1972.

With respect to the transfer of financial resources to developing countries, developed countries should endeavour to attain the target of 1 per cent of their gross national product by 1972, where possible, otherwise not later than 1975. The proposed target for official resource transfers was reduced from 0.75 to 0.7 per cent of gross national product, and countries would try to reach it by the middle of the Decade.

Agreement was also reached on the softening and harmonizing of the terms and conditions of assistance.

Whereas, with regard to science and technology, the draft of the Preparatory Committee proposed a target for aid by the developed countries to the developing countries of 0.05 per cent of the gross national product of the former and another target (5 per cent of total research and development expenditure) for outlays on work specifically relating to the developing countries, the final document left consideration of target setting until the first biennial review.

With respect to Special Drawing Rights, whereas the original draft stated that the establishment of a link with development finance would be considered by 1972 at the latest, the final text provided only for an examination of the question before the allocation of Special Drawing Rights in 1972.

On the subject of the establishment of generalized, non-discriminatory, non-reciprocal preferential treatment of manufactured exports of developing countries in the markets of developed countries, for which arrangements had been drawn up in UNCTAD, the final text of the Strategy stated that preference-giving countries were determined to seek the necessary legislative or other sanction with the aim of implementing the preferential arrangements as early as possible in 1971.

A paragraph was agreed upon concerning the need for developed countries to adapt industries adversely affected by imports of manufactures from developing countries: adjustment measures would be considered early in the 1970s. Efforts would be made to identify restrictive business practices affecting the trade and development of developing countries, with a view to achieving remedial measures before 31 December 1972. Action would be taken in favour of the least developed among the developing countries early in the Decade.

It was agreed that the implementation of policies relating to trade in primary products should take into account the resolutions, decisions and agreements of the relevant international and inter-governmental organizations. In the section on special measures in favour of the land-locked developing countries, it was stipulated in the final text that their implementation should take into account the relevant decisions and resolutions of UNCTAD.

Clauses were included on the need to protect the national sovereignty of developing countries, both in connexion with the use of external aid and in connexion with efforts to expand and diversify production.

A section on shipping was inserted in the final document, including a detailed listing of items and policies on which action should be taken.

The final document also contained texts relating to the role to be played by the socialist countries of Eastern Europe in the International Development Strategy.

A paragraph was also added to the preamble outlining the political issues on which the success of international development activities depended.

This paragraph also called for a close link between the Second United Nations Development Decade and the Disarmament Decade and pointed out that disarmament would release resources that could be used for economic and social development. (For information on the implementation of this provision, see pp. 405-8.)

STATEMENTS BY MEMBERS

A joint formal statement on the international development strategy was submitted to the General Assembly on 16 October 1970 by the following 88 developing countries: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Barbados, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Ceylon, Chad, Chile, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Dahomey, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, the Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, the Khmer Republic, Kuwait, Laos, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, the Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, the People's Republic of the Congo, Peru, the Philippines, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Swaziland, Syria, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

Joint formal statements were also submitted on the same day by the following groups of countries: Afghanistan, Bolivia, Burundi, Chad, Laos, Mali, Nepal, Paraguay, Rwanda and Zambia (land-locked countries); Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR; Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua; and France on behalf of the European Economic Community (EEC).

In addition, 40 individual formal statements were submitted by Members.

The joint statement of the 88 developing countries noted, among other things, that while the development strategy was not an adequate expression of their aspirations, it was the best reflection of the current stage of mankind's collective conscience in one of the most crucial areas of the organization of human society. This statement stressed the importance of definite target dates for the implementation of the policy measures. It referred to the scheme of Special Drawing Rights (see pp. 335-36 below) and noted the importance of the creation of a link between those reserve assets and development financing.

The 10 land-locked countries, although expressing general agreement with the strategy, stated that it did not meet their needs. They said, among other things, that they would have little chance to participate in development without adequate guarantee for their right of free access to the sea, and they noted that adequate financial and technical assistance should be provided to them.

The formal statement of the five Latin American States expressed approval of the strategy and, among other things, specifically stressed the necessity of establishing time-limits for the transfer of resources from the developed to the developing countries.

The French statement on behalf of EEC noted the position of its members on the question of price policies and the liberalization of trade in respect of commodities. Specifically, EEC members said they could not agree to the wording of a paragraph in the international development strategy which stated that no new tariff and non-tariff barriers would be raised nor would existing ones be increased by developed countries against imports of primary products of particular interest to developing countries. Instead, the members of EEC would be guided by the terms of an UNCTAD decision on the commodity price policies, taken on 18 September 1970. (See p. 378 below.)

The position of the eight Eastern European countries concerning the Second Development Decade was set forth at length in a document in which they noted their support in principle of United Nations measures that contributed to the elimination of the difficult social and economic conditions in which hundreds of millions of people were living.

Among other things, the eight-power statement listed the following measures as necessary to real progress in social and economic development: the implementation of radical social and economic reforms to eliminate obstacles hampering the development of productive forces; the perfection of budget and tax legislation to bring about a radical change in the system for the distribution of national wealth; the creation and consolidation of the State and co-operative sectors of the economy; the provision of mass consumption goods for the population; the adoption of effective legislation regulating the activities of foreign private capital; the adoption of measures to prevent effectively any capital drain; the annulment of all inequitable economic treaties, agreements and individual commitments which restricted national sovereignty; the creation of conditions for the training of national, highly skilled personnel; and the introduction of State-wide planning in the economic and social fields.

The eight-power statement noted that the sponsoring countries intended to continue their policy of extending comprehensive assistance to young independent States in order that they might overcome the economic consequences of colonialism., develop an independent national economy and speed up their rates of economic development. In particular, they were prepared to arrange for the liquidation of credits through purchases of goods and to expand support in the matter of training national personnel and rendering technical assistance.

In the individual formal statements made by Members, explaining positions, reservations, observations and interpretations of the draft strategy, a number of developed countries referred to the targets and time-tables with regard to international trade and aid.

Several countries, including Canada and New Zealand, expressed reservations concerning the time-limits for the implementation of the quantitative targets for financial resource transfers. Australia, Austria and Italy were unable to commit themselves to either quantitative targets or target dates. Japan and the United Kingdom could not accept any targets with regard to official aid. France found the quantitative target for official aid too high.

The United States said it had been re-examining its aid policy and was unable to accept the time-limits or the target date for official aid; nor could it give any assurance that the 1 per cent total aid target would be met, although it felt that the flow of private resources would respond to mutually beneficial investment policies in developing countries.

Some developing countries had observations to make concerning these paragraphs. Algeria, for instance, felt that the official assistance target should be net not only of amortization (as it had been) but also of interest payments. Chile interpreted the text of the strategy to mean that all developed countries, including those with centrally planned economies, were under an obligation to try to ensure that the targets were fulfilled.

The question of a quantitative target for aid in connexion with science and technology was considered important by the developing countries. However, the setting of such targets was seen as impractical by some developed countries, notably Australia, the United Kingdom and the United States.

There was also a divergence in the positions of developed and developing countries on the linking of aid and Special Drawing Rights, the developing countries generally being in favour of such a link.

On the provisions relating to barriers against imports of primary products, many developed countries—including Australia, Canada, Denmark, the members of EEC, Japan and New Zealand—stressed that acceptance of the relevant paragraphs of the text would be conditioned by the UNCTAD decision on commodity price policies, taken on 18 September 1970.

The United States felt that there might be exceptional circumstances that would make it impossible to give effect to the recommendations against increasing existing trade barriers.

The United Kingdom considered that it could not go beyond the commitments relating to tariff and non-tariff barriers it had made in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and also felt that the setting of target dates was inappropriate and unrealistic in this context.

With regard to the adaptation of industries affected by imports of manufactures from the developing countries, a number of developed countries expressed reservations.

Australia could not commit itself because of the early stage of its industrial development. Belgium felt that specific measures could be adopted only in specific cases. Denmark stated that it had no legislative authority to take such action. France's acceptance was without prejudice to the free recourse to saving clauses contained in other international agreements. The United Kingdom could not agree to work out a specific programme of such measures, nor did it agree to a time-table in this connexion.

The United States proposed to provide adjustment assistance only where enterprises were threatened by increased imports.

As a developing country, on the other hand, Chile was disappointed that there was no mention of promoting a broader and more dynamic international division of labour.

There were other reservations by individual countries on different paragraphs of the text of the development strategy. In very general terms, the developed countries tended to emphasize that the strategy was not a legal commitment, while the developing countries tended to feel that commitment on the part of Governments was the keystone of its success.

DISCUSSION

Many of the points of view presented in the formal statements were again presented during the discussion in the General Assembly; this discussion, however, was very general.

While the representatives of some developing countries expressed disappointment at the fact that the development strategy did not contain more definite and firmer commitments and a stricter time-table, they felt it reflected the reality of the moment.

Most speakers felt this was the first attempt at development planning on an international scale, and as such it had inevitable shortcomings reflecting not only the lack of preparation of many developing countries for modifying their economic and social structure but also the difficulties that some of the developed countries faced with regard to implementation of certain of the policy measures.

The success of the strategy would depend on the spirit in which it was implemented and on the amount of political will which developed countries brought to bear in the task of global development, most thought.

The representatives of many developed countries said that the interpretative statements did not lessen the validity of the acceptance of the principles incorporated in the strategy. Although not of a legally binding nature, the strategy, they felt, was a clear-cut expression of the highly moral and political commitment of the Governments of United Nations Member States to pursue very far-reaching policy objectives.

The discussion brought out differences of opinion concerning the relative importance of the various areas of development effort. Some Members expressed the belief that the heart of the strategy lay in its provisions on trade and aid; others stressed disarmament and the resources that would free to be used in economic and social activities.

While some Members thought the strategy revealed considerable progress in the recognition of a unified approach to development encompassing economic and social factors, others felt that this interdependence was glossed over or implied only obliquely. Some attached major importance to narrowing the disparity between developed and developing countries in science and technology.

REVIEW AND APPRAISAL OF DEVELOPMENT STRATEGYDECISION OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

In conjunction with its discussion and action on an international development strategy (see pp. 309-11 above), the Economic and Social Council noted that after the adoption of the strategy, it would be appropriate to prescribe the procedure to be followed in evaluating the progress made in its implementation. The Council noted further that it would be called upon to assume responsibility for assisting the General Assembly in the task of over-all review and appraisal and therefore would have to organize its work in keeping with this new responsibility.

The Council expressed its readiness to assume responsibility for assisting the Assembly in the task of review and appraisal of progress in the implementation of the strategy on the basis of reviews and appraisals at national, regional and sectoral levels, the comments and recommendations made by the Committee for Development Planning, and appropriate documentation and reports prepared by the Secretary-General.

It also decided to elaborate, in the light of the relevant decisions of the Assembly and at the earliest possible opportunity after the launching of the Second United Nations Development Decade, the detailed procedure for such review and appraisal.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1556B(XLIX), adopted by the Council on 31 July 1970 together with resolution 1556 A (XLIX). (See p. 310 for legislative details.) (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In addition to the draft resolution that was approved, there had been before the Council's Economic Committee another draft resolution on review and appraisal, sponsored by France, and withdrawn. With differences in wording, it conveyed the ideas that were expressed in the text that was adopted.

DECISIONS OF ASSEMBLY

On 19 November 1970, the General Assembly, recalling its decision to carry out the over-all appraisal of the progress made in implementing the International Development Strategy (a decision that was included in the Strategy itself), took note of the Economic and Social Council's resolution of 31 July 1970 on review and appraisal.

The Assembly requested organizations of the United Nations family to continue to review progress in their respective sectors according to the procedures already established and to be adapted as necessary. It also invited the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council in 1971 outlining the details of a system of over-all appraisal, with a view to enabling the Assembly to consider and decide upon the matter at its 1971 session.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2641 (XXV), adopted by the Assembly, without objection, on the recommendation of its Second Committee. The Committee had approved the text, without objection, on 10 November 1970, on the basis of a proposal sponsored by Argentina, Brazil, France, Greece, India, Indonesia, Italy, Kenya, Madagascar, Morocco, the Netherlands, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sudan, the United States and Yugoslavia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The question of review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy was also referred to by the General Assembly in a decision of 15 December 1970, embodied in resolution 2725 (XXV), on the subject of the third session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. (See pp. 384-85 for further details.)

MOBILIZATION OF PUBLIC OPINION

Early in 1970, a report on the mobilization of public opinion in developed and developing countries in support of the Second United Nations Development Decade was issued by the Secretary-General.

In the report, he observed that information activities for the launching of the Second Development Decade on the national and international levels were linked, and that contacts had therefore been established between officials of both national and international information services.

It was suggested in the report that Heads of State or Government of United Nations

Member States should personally issue a message to their peoples on the day of the launching of the Second Development Decade, and that the message might explain the purposes of the Decade.

The report went on to say that the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations (see pp. 107-15) and the proclamation of the Second Development Decade at about the same time could pose a problem in terms of publicity and that modifications in the normal procedures of the General Assembly would be entailed to handle the problem. The information services of the United Nations family were devising a special programme, in conjunction with the twenty-fifth anniversary, that would reflect the solemnity and the human appeal inherent in the purposes of the Second Development Decade.

When the Economic and Social Council met in March of 1970, it took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the mobilization of public opinion and requested him to take account of the comments and reservations expressed in the Council in carrying out his mandate with regard to mobilizing public opinion concerning the Decade.<sup>3</sup>

The Council also requested the Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Development Decade to consider the views of the Council on the question of mobilizing public opinion.

Finally, the Council asked the Committee for the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the United Nations to take into account in its deliberations the decisions of the Preparatory Committee on the procedure for the launching of the Decade.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1477 (XLVIII), adopted by the Council on 27 March 1970 by 23 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, on the basis of a text sponsored by Argentina, Brazil, Ceylon, India, Indonesia, Italy, Norway, Pakistan, Tunisia, the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The mobilization of public opinion for the Second Development Decade was also discussed at the General Assembly's twenty-fifth session, which opened on 15 September 1970.

On 24 October 1970, when the Assembly adopted, without vote, the International Development Strategy for the Decade (see pp. 311-12), it noted in an operative paragraph that an essential part of the work during the Decade would consist of the mobilization of public opinion in both developing and developed countries in support of the Decade's objectives and policies.

It was further stated therein that Governments of the more advanced countries would continue and intensify their endeavour to deepen public understanding of the interdependent nature of the development efforts during the Decade—in particular of the benefits accruing to them from international co-operation for development—and of the need to assist the developing countries in accelerating their economic and social progress.

Also, the efforts which developing countries themselves were making to meet the requirements of their economic and social progress needed to be more clearly and more generally made known in developed countries. Similarly, Governments of the developing countries would continue to make people at all levels aware of the benefits and sacrifices involved and to enlist their full participation in achieving the objectives of the Decade.

By another decision, taken on 11 December 1970 (resolution 2685 (XXV)), the General Assembly recalled that the International Development Strategy for the Second Development Decade had called for a close link between the United Nations Disarmament and the Development Decades.

In this connexion, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to propose measures for the mobilization of public opinion in support of the link between disarmament and development and thus encourage intensified negotiations aimed at progress towards general and complete disarmament under effective control. (See pp. 405-7 for further details.)

RESOLUTION 1556A(XLIX), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/4916, adopted without vote by Economic and Social Council on 31 July 1970, meeting 1722.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its relevant resolutions and those of the General Assembly on an international development strategy for the 1970s,

Having considered item 3 of the agenda of its forty-ninth session entitled "Second United Nations Development Decade,"

Having noted that a draft strategy for the Second Development Decade has not yet been completed,

Having noted further that there are still certain difficulties in the choice of an agreed basis to ensure the participation of all member Governments in the preparation of such a strategy,

1. Decides to transmit to the General Assembly documents A/7982, TD/B/299 and E/4776;

2. Draws the attention of the General Assembly to the comments and observations made in the Council on the subject and reflected in its report and in its relevant summary records;

3. Deeply appreciates the contribution made by the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system in the preparation of a draft of an international development strategy;

4. Expresses its concern that it has not so far been possible to reach agreement on a number of substantive issues, particularly in relation to certain important policy measures in the field of international trade and aid;

5. Affirms that the completion of such a draft strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade will require, inter alia, a solution to the following issues:

(a) Proposals regarding target dates for the transfer of resources from developed to developing countries and proposals regarding the target for the official component of such transfers;

(b) Proposals regarding target dates concerning terms and conditions of assistance;

(c) Proposals regarding the question of a link between the allocation of new reserve assets under the scheme of special drawing rights and the provision of additional development finance to developing countries;

(d) Shipping;

(e) Proposals regarding target dates in the field of international trade;

(f) Adjustment assistance measures;

(g) Restrictive business practices;

(h) Proposals regarding assistance by developed countries to developing countries in the field of science and technology;

(i) Proposals relating specifically to the contribution of centrally planned economies of Eastern Europe to the Second Development Decade;

6. Stresses that an international development strategy will gain considerably in significance if implementation of the policy measures for achieving the goals and objectives of the Decade is, to the greatest extent possible, given a specific time dimension;

7. Considers that the strategy for the Decade should not only provide for dealing with existing problems of development, but also with problems which may arise during the course of the implementation of policy measures;

8. Urges Governments to give consideration at the appropriate political level, inter alia, to the issues mentioned in operative paragraph 5 above, in order that these may be resolved in time for the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly;

9. Requests the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue its efforts at its tenth session to reach agreement on those issues within its competence which still remain unresolved;

10. Recommends that the General Assembly should arrange for the Second Committee to begin its work in the first week of the twenty-fifth session of the Assembly and that the Committee should take up the subject of an international development strategy from the beginning of its meetings and as the only priority item, in order to reach final agreement on a draft in time for the strategy to be adopted and the Decade to be launched at the commemorative meeting of the General Assembly on 24 October 1970;

11. Further urges Governments to consider representation at a high political level during the final phase of work on a draft strategy at the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly in order to facilitate the completion of this work with a view to the adoption of the strategy and the launching of the Decade on 24 October 1970.

RESOLUTION 2626(xxv), as recommended by Second Committee, A/8124, adopted without vote by Assembly on 24 October 1970, meeting 1883.

The General Assembly

1. Proclaims the Second United Nations Development Decade starting from 1 January 1971;
2. Adopts the following International Development Strategy for the Decade:

A. PREAMBLE

(1) On the threshold of the 1970s, Governments dedicate themselves anew to the fundamental objectives enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations twenty-five years ago to create conditions of stability and well-being and to ensure a minimum standard of living consistent with human dignity through economic and social progress and development.

(2) The launching in 1961 of the First United Nations Development Decade marked a major worldwide endeavour to give concrete substance to this solemn pledge. Since then attempts have continued to be made to adopt specific measures and to fashion and employ new institutions of international co-operation for this purpose.

(3) However, the level of living of countless millions of people in the developing part of the world is still pitifully low. These people are often still undernourished, uneducated, unemployed and wanting in many other basic amenities of life. While a part of the world lives in great comfort and even affluence, much of the larger part suffers from abject poverty, and in fact the disparity is continuing to widen. This lamentable situation has contributed to the aggravation of world tension.

(4) The current frustrations and disappointments must not be allowed to cloud the vision or stand in the way of the development objectives being really ambitious. Youth everywhere is in ferment, and the 1970s must mark a step forward in securing the well-being and happiness not only of the present generation but also of the generations to come.

(5) The success of international development activities will depend in large measure on improvement in the general international situation, particularly on concrete progress towards general and complete disarmament under effective international control, on the elimination of colonialism, racial discrimination, apartheid and occupation of territories of any State and on the promotion of equal political, economic, social and cultural rights for all members of society. Progress towards general and complete disarmament should release substantial additional resources which could be utilized for the purpose of economic and social development, in particular that of developing countries. There should, therefore, be a close link between the Second United Nations Development Decade and the Disarmament Decade.

(6) In the conviction that development is the essential path to peace and justice, Governments reaffirm their common and unswerving resolve to seek a better and more effective system of international co-operation whereby the prevailing disparities in the world may be banished and prosperity secured for all.

(7) The ultimate objective of development must be to bring about sustained improvement in the well-being of the individual and bestow benefits on all. If undue privileges, extremes of wealth and social injustices persist, then development fails in its essential purpose. This calls for a global development strategy based on joint and concentrated action by developing and developed countries in all spheres of economic and social life: in industry and agriculture, in trade and finance, in employment and education, in health and housing, in science and technology.

(8) The international community must rise to the challenge of the present age of unprecedented opportunities offered by science and technology in order that the scientific and technological advances may be equitably shared by developed and developing countries, thus contributing to accelerated economic development throughout the world.

(9) International co-operation for development must be on a scale commensurate with that of the problem itself. Partial, sporadic and half-hearted gestures, howsoever well intentioned, will not suffice.

(10) Economic and social progress is the common and shared responsibility of the entire international community. It is also a process in which the benefits derived by the developing countries from the developed countries are shared by the world as a whole. Every country has the right and duty to develop its human and natural resources, but the full benefit of its efforts can be realized only with concomitant and effective international action.

(11) The primary responsibility for the development of developing countries rests upon themselves, as stressed in the Charter of Algiers, but however great their own efforts, these will not be sufficient to enable them to achieve the desired development goals as expeditiously as they must unless they are assisted through increased financial resources and more favourable economic and commercial policies on the part of developed countries.

(12) Governments designate the 1970s as the Second United Nations Development Decade and pledge themselves, individually and collectively, to pursue policies designed to create a more just and rational world economic and social order in which equality of opportunities should be as much a prerogative of nations as of individuals within a nation. They subscribe to the goals and objectives of the Decade and resolve to take the measures to translate them into reality. These aims and measures are set out in the following paragraphs.

B. GOALS AND OBJECTIVES

(13) The average annual rate of growth in the gross product of the developing countries as a whole during the Second United Nations Development Decade should be at least 6 per cent, with the possibility of attaining a higher rate in the second half of the Decade to be specified on the basis of a comprehensive mid-term review. This target and those derived from it are a broad indication of the scope of convergent efforts to be made during the Decade at the national and international levels; it should be the responsibility of each developing country to set its own target for growth in the light of its own circumstances.

(14) The average annual rate of growth of gross product per head in developing countries as a whole during the Decade should be about 3.5 per cent with the possibility of accelerating it during the second half of the Decade in order at least to make a modest beginning towards narrowing the gap in living standards between developed and developing countries. An average annual growth rate of 3.5 per cent per head will represent a doubling of average income per head in the course of two decades. In countries with very low incomes per head, efforts should be made to double such incomes within a shorter period.

(15) The target for growth in average income per head is calculated on the basis of an average annual increase of 2.5 per cent in the population of developing countries, which is less than the average rate at present forecast for the 1970s. In this context, each developing country should formulate its own demographic objectives within the framework of its national development plan.

(16) An average annual rate of growth of at least 6 per cent in the gross product of developing countries during the Decade will imply an average annual expansion of:

- (a) 4 per cent in agricultural output;
- (b) 8 per cent in manufacturing output.

(17) For attaining the over-all growth target of at least 6 per cent per annum, there should be an average annual expansion of:

- (a) 0.5 per cent in the ratio of gross domestic saving to the gross product so that this ratio rises to around 20 per cent by 1980;
- (b) Somewhat less than 7 per cent in imports and somewhat higher than 7 per cent in exports.

(18) As the ultimate purpose of development is to provide increasing opportunities to all people for a better life, it is essential to bring about a more equitable distribution of income and wealth for promoting both social justice and efficiency of production, to raise substantially the level of employment, to achieve a greater degree of income security, to expand and improve facilities for education, health, nutrition, housing and social welfare, and to safeguard the environment. Thus, qualitative and structural changes in the society must go hand in hand with rapid economic growth, and existing disparities—regional, sectoral and social—should be substantially reduced. These objectives are both determining factors and end-results of development; they should therefore be viewed as integrated parts of the same dynamic process and would require a unified approach:

(a) Each developing country should formulate its national employment objectives so as to absorb an increasing proportion of its working population in modern-type activities and to reduce significantly unemployment and underemployment;

(b) Particular attention should be paid to achieving enrolment of all children of primary school age, improvement in the quality of education at all levels, a substantial reduction in illiteracy, the reorientation of educational programmes to serve development needs and, as appropriate, the establishment and expansion of scientific and technological institutions;

(c) Each developing country should formulate a coherent health programme for the prevention and treatment of diseases and for raising general levels of health and sanitation;

(d) Levels of nutrition should be improved in terms of the average caloric intake and the protein content, with special emphasis being placed on the needs of vulnerable groups of population;

(e) Housing facilities should be expanded and improved, especially for the low-income groups and with a view to remedying the ills of unplanned urban growth and lagging rural areas;

(f) The well-being of children should be fostered;

(g) The full participation of youth in the development process should be ensured;

(h) The full integration of women in the total development effort should be encouraged.

C. POLICY MEASURES

(19) The above goals and objectives call for a continuing effort by all peoples and Governments to promote economic and social progress in developing countries by the formulation and implementation of a coherent set of policy measures. Animated by a spirit of constructive partnership and co-operation, based on the interdependence of their interests and designed to promote a rational system of international division of labour, and reflecting their political will and collective determination to achieve these goals and objectives, Governments, individually and jointly, solemnly resolve to adopt and implement the policy measures set out below.

(20) The policy measures should be viewed in a dynamic context, involving continuing review to ensure their effective implementation and adaptation in the light of new developments, including the far-reaching impact of rapid advance in technology, and to seek new areas of agreement and the widening of the existing ones. Organizations of the United Nations system will appropriately assist in the implementation of these measures and in the search for new avenues of international co-operation for development.

1. International trade

(21) All efforts will be made to secure international action before 31 December 1972, including, where appropriate, the conclusion of international agreements or arrangements on commodities mentioned in resolution 16(II) of 26 March 1968, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its second session, in accordance with the procedure agreed upon at that session, and on the basis of a time-table for the consideration of those matters to be drawn up by the Conference.

(22) Commodities already covered by international agreements or arrangements will be kept under review with a view to strengthening the working of such agreements or arrangements and to renewing, where appropriate, agreements or arrangements due to expire.

(23) All possible resources for the pre-financing of buffer stocks, when necessary, will be considered while concluding or reviewing commodity agreements incorporating buffer stock mechanisms.

(24) Efforts will be made to reach agreement, before the third session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, on a set of general principles on pricing policy to serve as guidelines for consultations and actions on individual commodities. As one of the priority aims of pricing policy, particular attention will be paid to securing stable, remunerative and equitable prices with a view to increasing the foreign exchange earnings from exports of primary products from the developing countries.

(25) No new tariff and non-tariff barriers will be raised nor will the existing ones be increased by developed countries against imports of primary products of particular interest to developing countries.

(26) Developed countries will accord priority to reducing or eliminating duties and other barriers to imports of primary products, including those in processed or semi-processed form, of export interest to developing countries through international joint action or unilateral action with a view to ensuring that developing countries have improved access to world markets and to market growth for products in which they are presently or potentially competitive. Achievement of this objective will be sought through the continuance and intensification of intergovernmental consultations with the aim of reaching concrete and significant results early in the Decade. Efforts will be made with a view to achieving these results before 31 December 1972.

(27) Implementation of the provisions of paragraphs 25 and 26 above should take into account the resolutions, decisions and agreements which have been or may be reached in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development or in other relevant intergovernmental bodies and organizations of the United Nations system.

(28) Developed countries will give increased attention within the framework of bilateral and multilateral programmes to supplementing the resources of the developing countries in their endeavour to accelerate the diversification of their economies with a view to the expansion of the production and exports of semi-manufactures and manufactures, as well as of semi-processed and processed commodities, broadening the patterns of exports in favour of commodities with relatively dynamic demand conditions and increasing food production in food deficient countries. Specific funds for diversification will be one of the features of commodity arrangements wherever considered necessary.

(29) Appropriate action, including the provision of finance, will be taken, as far as practicable, to initiate intensive research and development efforts designed to improve market conditions and cost efficiency and to diversify the end uses of natural products facing competition from synthetics and substitutes. In their financial and technical assistance programmes, developed countries and the international organizations concerned will give sympathetic consideration to requests for assistance to developing countries producing natural products which suffer serious competition from synthetics and substitutes, in order to help them to diversify into other areas of production including processing of primary products. Where natural products are able to satisfy present and anticipated world market requirements, in the context of national policies no special encouragement will be given to the creation and utilization of new production, particularly in the developed countries, of directly competing synthetics.

(30) The machinery for consultation on surplus disposal which existed during the 1960s will be widened and reinforced in order to avoid or minimize possible adverse effects of disposals of production surpluses or strategic reserves, including those of minerals, on normal commercial trade, and to take account of the interest of both surplus and deficit countries.

(31) Special attention will be given to the expansion and diversification of the export trade of developing countries in manufactures and semi-manufactures, particularly for enabling them to attain increased participation, commensurate with the needs of development, in the growth of international trade in these commodities.

(32) Arrangements concerning the establishment of generalized, non-discriminatory, non-reciprocal preferential treatment to exports of developing countries in the markets of developed countries have been drawn up in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and considered mutually acceptable to developed and developing countries. Preference-giving countries are determined to seek as rapidly as possible the necessary legislative or other sanction with the aim of implementing the preferential arrangements as early as possible in 1971. Efforts for further improvements of these preferential arrangements will be pursued in a dynamic context in the light of the objectives of resolution 21(II) of 26 March 1968, adopted by the Conference at its second session.

(33) Developed countries will not, ordinarily, raise existing tariff or non-tariff barriers to exports from developing countries, nor establish new tariff or non-tariff barriers or any discriminatory measures, where such action has the effect of rendering less favourable the conditions of access to the markets of manufactured and semi-manufactured products of export interest to developing countries.

(34) Intergovernmental consultations will be continued and intensified with a view to giving effect early in the Decade to measures for the relaxation and progressive elimination of non-tariff barriers affecting trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures of interest to developing countries. Efforts will be made with a view to implementing such measures before 31 December 1972. These consultations will take into account all groups of processed and semi-processed products of export interest to developing countries.

(35) Developed countries, having in mind the importance of facilitating the expansion of their imports from developing countries, will consider adopting measures and where possible evolving a programme early in the Decade for assisting the adaptation and adjustment of industries and workers in situations where they are adversely affected or may be threatened to be adversely affected by increased imports of manufactures and semi-manufactures from developing countries.

(36) Developing countries will intensify their efforts to make greater use of trade promotion as an instrument for the expansion of their exports both to developed countries and to other developing countries. For this purpose, effective international assistance will be provided.

(37) Restrictive business practices particularly affecting the trade and development of the developing countries will be identified with a view to the consideration of appropriate remedial measures, the aim being to reach concrete and significant results early in the Decade. Efforts will be made with a view to achieving these results before 31 December 1972.

(38) The socialist countries of Eastern Europe will take duly into consideration the trade needs of the developing countries, and in particular their production and export potential, when quantitative targets are fixed in their long-term economic plans, adopt appropriate measures designed to maximize and diversify imports of primary commodities from developing countries and undertake measures so that imports of manufactures and semi-manufactures from developing countries constitute a growing element in their total imports of manufactures and semi-manufactures. They will promote the diversification of the structure and geographical basis of their trade with developing countries in order that the largest possible number of developing countries derive the maximum benefit from this trade. Socialist countries of Eastern Europe will take the necessary action fully to implement, by the beginning of the Decade, and in any case not later than 1972, recommendations contained in section II of resolution 15(II) of 25 March 1968, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its second session. As no uniform method of introducing multilateralism in payments relations between developing countries and socialist countries is practical at this time, it is considered desirable that elements of flexibility and multilateralism be progressively introduced or extended in such payments arrangements by appropriate consultations among the countries concerned, taking into account specific circumstances and patterns of trade.

2. Trade expansion, economic co-operation and regional integration among developing countries

(39) The developing countries will continue their efforts to negotiate and put into effect further commitments for instituting the schemes for regional and subregional integration or measures of trade expansion among themselves. They will, in particular, elaborate mutually beneficial and preferential trade arrangements which foster the rational and outward-looking expansion of production and trade, and avoid undue injury to the trading interests of third parties, including third developing countries.

(40) The developed market economy countries will, through the extension of financial and technical assistance or through action in the field of commercial policy, support initiatives in regional and subregional co-operation of developing countries. In this connexion, they will specifically consider what help can be given to any concrete proposals that may be put forward by developing countries. In the efforts of developing countries to carry out trade expansion, economic co-operation and regional integration among themselves, the socialist countries of Eastern Europe will extend their full support within the framework of their socio-economic system.

3. Financial resources for development

(41) Developing countries must, and do, bear the main responsibility for financing their development.

They will, therefore, continue to adopt vigorous measures for a fuller mobilization of the whole range of their domestic financial resources and for ensuring the most effective use of available resources, both internal and external. For this purpose, they will pursue sound fiscal and monetary policies and, as required, remove institutional obstacles through the adoption of appropriate legislative and administrative reforms. They will pay particular attention to taking, as appropriate, the necessary steps to streamline and strengthen their systems of tax administration and undertake the necessary tax reform measures. They will keep the increase in their current public expenditure under close scrutiny with a view to releasing maximum resources for investment. Efforts will be made to improve the efficiency of public enterprises so that they make an increasing contribution to investment resources. Every effort will be made to mobilize private savings through financial institutions, thrift societies, post office savings banks and other savings schemes and through expansion of opportunities for saving for specific purposes, such as education and housing. The available supply of saving will be channelled to investment projects in accordance with their development priorities.

(42) Each economically advanced country should endeavour to provide by 1972 annually to developing countries financial resource transfers of a minimum net amount of 1 per cent of its gross national product at market prices in terms of actual disbursements, having regard to the special position of those countries which are net importers of capital. Those developed countries which have already met this target will endeavour to ensure that their net resource transfers are maintained and envisage, if possible, an increase in them. Those developed countries which are unable to achieve this target by 1972 will endeavour to attain it not later than 1975.

(43) In recognition of the special importance of the role which can be fulfilled only by official development assistance, a major part of financial resource transfers to the developing countries should be provided in the form of official development assistance. Each economically advanced country will progressively increase its official development assistance to the developing countries and will exert its best efforts to reach a minimum net amount of 0.7 per cent of its gross national product at market prices by the middle of the Decade.

(44) Developed countries members of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development will exert their best efforts to reach as soon as possible, and in any case before 31 December 1971, the norms set out in the Supplement to the 1965 Recommendation on Financial Terms and Conditions adopted by the Development Assistance Committee on 12 February 1969, designed to soften and harmonize the terms and conditions of assistance to developing countries. Developed countries will consider measures aimed at the further softening of the terms and will endeavour to arrive at a more precise assessment of the circumstances of the individual developing countries and at a greater harmonization of terms given by individual developed countries to individual developing countries. Developed countries will consider, in the further evolution of their assistance policy and with a view to attaining concrete and substantive results by the end of the Decade, the specific suggestions contained in decision 29(II) of 28 March 1968, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its second session, and made in other international forums for further softening of the terms and conditions of aid.

(45) In the light of the relevant decision of the Conference at its second session, financial assistance will, in principle, be untied. While it may not be possible to untie assistance in all cases, developed countries will rapidly and progressively take what measures they can in this respect both to reduce the extent of tying of assistance and to mitigate any harmful effects. Where loans are tied essentially to particular sources, developed countries will make, to the greatest extent possible, such loans available for utilization by the recipient countries for the purchase of goods and services from other developing countries.

(46) Financial and technical assistance should be aimed exclusively at promoting the economic and social progress of developing countries and should not in any way be used by the developed countries to the detriment of the national sovereignty of recipient countries.

(47) Developed countries will provide, to the greatest extent possible, an increased flow of aid on a long-term and continuing basis and by simplifying the procedure of the granting and effective and expeditious disbursement of aid.

(48) Arrangements for forecasting and, if possible, forestalling debt crises will be improved. Developed countries will help in preventing such crises by providing assistance on appropriate terms and conditions, and developing countries by undertaking sound policies of debt management. Where difficulties do arise, the countries concerned will stand ready to deal reasonably with them within the framework of an appropriate forum in co-operation with the international institutions concerned, drawing upon the full range of the available methods including, as may be required, measures such as arrangements for rescheduling and refinancing of existing debts on appropriate terms and conditions.

(49) The volume of resources made available through multilateral institutions for financial and technical assistance will be increased to the fullest extent possible and techniques will be evolved to enable them to fulfil their role in the most effective manner.

(50) Developing countries will adopt appropriate measures for inviting, stimulating and making effective use of foreign private capital, taking into account the areas in which such capital should be sought and bearing in mind the importance for its attraction of conditions conducive to sustained investment. Developed countries, on their part, will consider adopting further measures to encourage the flow of private capital to developing countries. Foreign private investment in developing countries should be undertaken in a manner consistent with the development objectives and priorities established in their national plans. Foreign private investors in developing countries should endeavour to provide for an increase in the local share in management and administration, employment and training of local labour, including personnel at the managerial and technical levels, participation of local capital and reinvestment of profits. Efforts will be made to foster better understanding of the rights and obligations of both host and capital-exporting countries, as well as of individual investors.

(51) In the context of the search for appropriate means for dealing with the problem of disruption of development arising from adverse movements in the export proceeds of developing countries, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development has been requested to pursue its efforts at working out a scheme of supplementary financing. The Bank is invited to give further consideration to the adoption of supplementary financial measures at the earliest practical opportunity.

(52) As soon as adequate experience is available on the working of the scheme of Special Drawing Rights, serious consideration will be given to the possibility of the establishment of a link between the allocation of new reserve assets under the scheme and the provision of additional development finance for the benefit of all developing countries. The question will, in any case, be examined before the allocation of Special Drawing Rights in 1972.

4. Invisibles, including shipping

(53) The objective is to promote, by national and international action, the earnings of developing countries from invisible trade and to minimize the net outflow of foreign exchange from those countries arising from invisible transactions, including shipping. In pursuance of the objective, action should be taken, inter alia, in the following areas, by Governments and international organizations and, where necessary, appropriately involving liner conferences, shippers' councils and other relevant bodies:

(a) The principle that the national shipping lines of developing countries should be admitted as full members of liner conferences operating in their national maritime trade and have an increasing and substantial participation in the carriage of cargoes generated by their foreign trade should be implemented in the Decade.

(b) Further, Governments should invite liner conferences to consider favourably, fairly and on equal terms applications of the national shipping lines, in particular of developing countries, for admission as full members to way-port trades related to these countries' own foreign trade, subject to the rights and obligations of conference membership, as provided in section II, paragraph 4, of resolution 12 (IV) of 4 May 1970 adopted by the Committee on Shipping.

(c) In order that the developing countries may have an increasing and substantial participation in the carriage of maritime cargoes, and recognizing the need to reverse the existing trend whereby the share of the developing countries in the world merchant fleet has been declining instead of increasing, developing countries should be enabled to expand their national and multinational merchant marines through the adoption of such measures as may be appropriate to permit their shipowners to compete in the international freight market and thus contribute to a sound development of shipping.

(d) It is also necessary that further improvements be made in the liner conference system, and all unfair practices and discrimination where such exist in liner conference practices should be eliminated.

(e) In the determination and adjustment of liner freight rates, due consideration should be given, as is commercially possible and/or appropriate, to:

- (i) The needs of developing countries, in particular their efforts to promote non-traditional exports;
- (ii) The special problems of the least developed among the developing countries, in order to encourage and promote the import and export interests in these countries;
- (iii) Port improvements leading to a reduction of the cost of shipping operations in ports;
- (iv) Technological developments in maritime transport;
- (v) Improvements in the organization of trade.

(f) Governments of developed countries members of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should, upon request made by developing countries within the framework of their over-all development priorities, duly consider extending, directly or through international institutions, financial and technical assistance, including training, to developing countries to establish and expand their national and multinational merchant marines, including tanker and bulk carrier fleets, and to develop and improve their port facilities. Within assistance programmes, special attention should be paid to projects, including training projects, for developing the shipping and ports of the least developed among the developing countries and for reducing their maritime transport costs.

(g) The terms and conditions on which bilateral aid and commercial credit are available for the purchase of ships by developing countries should be kept under review in the light of relevant resolutions of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, namely, Conference resolution 12 (II) of 24 March 1968 and resolution 9 (IV) of 4 May 1970 adopted by the Committee on Shipping.

(h) Freight rates, conference practices, adequacy of shipping services and other matters of common interest to shippers and shipowners should be the subject of consultation between liner conferences and shippers and, where appropriate, shippers' councils or equivalent bodies and interested public authorities. Every effort should be made to encourage the institution and operation of shippers' councils, where appropriate, or equivalent bodies and the establishment of effective consultation machinery. Such machinery should provide for consultation by liner conferences well before publicly announcing changes in freight rates.

(i) In view of the common interest of member countries of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, shippers and shipowners in improving ports, thus lowering the cost of maritime transport and permitting reductions in freight rates, a concerted national and international effort should be evolved in the course of the Decade to promote the development and improvement of port facilities of developing countries.

(j) Maritime transport costs, the level and structure of freight rates, conference practices, adequacy of shipping services and related matters should continue to be kept under review within the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and additional measures to attain the objective set out in this field should be considered within the work programme of the permanent machinery of the Conference.

(54) Reduction in the cost of insurance and re-insurance for developing countries, especially the foreign exchange cost, will be brought about by appropriate measures, bearing in mind the risks involved, to encourage and assist the growth of national insurance and reinsurance markets in developing countries and the establishment to this end, where appropriate, of institutions in these countries or at the regional level.

(55) Developing countries will expand their tourist industry through the building of tourist infrastructure, adoption of promotional measures and relaxation of travel restrictions. Developed countries will assist in this endeavour. They will try to avoid exchange restrictions on the travel of their residents to developing countries and, where restrictions do exist, to remove them as soon as practicable and to facilitate such travel in other ways.

5. Special measures in favour of the least developed among the developing countries

(56) While it is the objective of the Decade to achieve the rapid economic and social progress of all developing countries, special measures will be taken to enable the least developed among them to overcome their particular disabilities. Every possible effort will be made to ensure the sustained economic and social progress of these countries and to enhance their capacity to benefit fully and equitably from the policy measures for the Decade. Wherever necessary, supplementary measures will be devised and implemented at the national, subregional, regional and international levels. Organizations and bodies of the United Nations system will consider initiating early in the Decade special programmes to alleviate the critical development problems of the least developed among the developing countries; developed countries will assist in the implementation of these programmes.

(57) Concerted efforts will be made early in the Decade by developed countries and international organizations through their programmes of technical assistance and through financial aid, including grants and/or exceptionally soft loans, to meet the needs of the least developed among the developing countries and designed to enhance their absorptive capacity. In particular, attention will be paid to overcoming their problem of the scarcity of indigenous technical and managerial cadres, to building the economic and social infrastructure, to the exploitation by these countries of their natural resources and to assisting them in the task of formulating and implementing national development plans.

(58) Special measures will be taken early in the Decade by national and international organizations to improve the capacity of the least developed among the developing countries to expand and diversify their production structure so as to enable them to participate fully in international trade. Moreover, in the field of primary commodities, special consideration will be given to commodities of interest to these countries and, in concluding commodity agreements, the interest of these countries will receive due attention. In the field of manufactures and semi-manufactures, measures in favour of developing countries will be so devised as to allow the least developed among developing countries to be in a position to derive equitable benefits from such measures. Particular consideration will be given to the question of including in the general system of preferences products of export interest to these countries. Special attention will also be paid by developed countries and international organizations to the need of these countries to improve the quality of their production for export as well as of marketing techniques in order to enhance their competitive position in world markets. These countries, in co-operation with other developing countries, will intensify their efforts for subregional and regional co-operation, and the developed countries will facilitate their task through technical assistance and favourable financial and trade policy measures.

6. Special measures in favour of the land-locked developing countries

(59) National and international financial institutions will accord appropriate attention to the special needs of land-locked developing countries in extending adequate financial and technical assistance to projects designed for the development and improvement of the transport and communications infrastructure needed by these countries, in particular of the transport modes and facilities most convenient to them and mutually acceptable to the transit and land-locked developing countries concerned. All States invited to become parties to the Convention on Transit Trade of Land-locked States of 8 July 1965 which have not already done so, will investigate the possibility of ratifying or acceding to it at the earliest possible date. Implementation of measures designed to assist the land-locked countries in overcoming the handicaps of their land-locked position should take into account the relevant decisions and resolutions which have been or may be adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

7. Science and technology

(60) Concerted efforts will be made by the developing countries, with appropriate assistance from the rest of the world community, to expand their capability to apply science and technology for development so as to enable the technological gap to be significantly reduced.

(61) Developing countries will continue to increase their expenditure on research and development and will endeavour to attain, by the end of the Decade, a minimum average level equivalent to 0.5 per cent of their gross product. They will endeavour to inculcate, among their people, an appreciation of the scientific approach which will influence all their development policies. The research programme will be oriented to the development of technologies that are in line with the circumstances and requirements of individual countries and regions. They will put particular stress on applied research and seek to develop the basic infrastructure of science and technology.

(62) Full international co-operation will be extended for the establishment, strengthening and promotion of scientific research and technological activities which have a bearing on the expansion and modernization of the economies of developing countries. Particular attention will be devoted to fostering technologies suitable for these countries. Concentrated research efforts will be made in relation to selected problems the solutions to which can have a catalytic effect in accelerating development. Assistance will also be provided for building up and, as appropriate, for expanding and improving research institutions in developing countries, especially on a regional or subregional basis. Efforts will be made to promote close co-operation between the scientific work and staff of the research centres in developing countries and between those in developed and developing countries.

(63) Within the framework of their individual aid and technical assistance programmes, developed countries will substantially increase their aid for the direct support of science and technology in developing countries during the Decade. Consideration will be given to the question of setting a target equivalent to a specified percentage of the gross national product of developed countries at the time of the first biennial review, taking fully into account the relevant factors. Moreover the developed countries will, in their research and development programmes, assist in seeking solutions to the specific problems of developing countries and for this purpose will endeavour to provide adequate resources. Serious consideration will be given during the first biennial review to the question of setting a specified target in this field. Developed countries will make all efforts to incur in developing countries a significant proportion of their research and development expenditure on specific problems of developing countries. In co-operation with the developing countries, developed countries will continue to explore the possibility of locating some of their research and development projects in developing countries. Private foundations, institutions and organizations will be encouraged to provide further assistance for expanding and diversifying research activities of benefit to developing countries. In relation to their aid and investment policies, developed countries will assist developing countries in identifying technologies which are appropriate for their circumstances and in avoiding the utilization of scarce resources for inappropriate technologies.

(64) Developed and developing countries and competent international organizations will draw up and implement a programme for promoting the transfer of technology to developing countries, which will include, inter alia, the review of international conventions on patents, the identification and reduction of obstacles to the transfer of technology to developing countries, facilitating access to patented and non-patented technology for developing countries under fair and reasonable terms and conditions, facilitating the utilization of technology transferred to developing countries in such a manner as to assist these countries in attaining their trade and development objectives, the development of technology suited to the productive structures of developing countries and measures to accelerate the development of indigenous technology.

8. Human development

(65) Those developing countries which consider that their rate of population growth hampers their development will adopt measures which they deem necessary in accordance with their concept of development. Developed countries, consistent with their national policies, will upon request provide support through the supply of means for family planning and further research. International organizations concerned will continue to provide, when appropriate, the assistance that may be requested by interested Governments. Such support or assistance will not be a substitute for other forms of development assistance.

(66) Developing countries will make vigorous efforts to improve labour force statistics in order to be able to formulate realistic quantitative targets for employment. They will scrutinize their fiscal, monetary, trade and other policies with a view to promoting both employment and growth. Moreover, for achieving these objectives they will expand their investment through a fuller mobilization of domestic resources and an increased flow of assistance from abroad. Wherever a choice of technology is available, developing countries will seek to raise the level of employment by ensuring that capital-intensive technology is confined to uses in which it is clearly cheaper in real terms and more efficient. Developed countries will assist in this process by adopting measures to bring about appropriate changes in the structures of international trade. As part of their employment strategy, developing countries will put as much emphasis as possible on rural employment and will also consider undertaking public works that harness manpower which would otherwise remain unutilized. These countries will also strengthen institutions able to contribute to constructive industrial relations policies and appropriate labour standards. Developed countries and international organizations will assist developing countries in attaining their employment objectives.

(67) Developing countries will formulate and implement educational programmes taking into account their development needs. Educational and training programmes will be so designed as to increase productivity substantially in the short run and to reduce waste. Particular emphasis will be placed on teacher-training programmes and on the development of curriculum materials to be used by teachers. As appropriate, curricula will be revised and new approaches initiated in order to ensure at all levels expansion of skills in line with the rising tempo of activities and the accelerating transformations brought about by technological progress. Increasing use will be made of modern equipment, mass media and new teaching methods to improve the efficiency of education. Particular attention will be devoted to technical training, vocational training and retraining. Necessary facilities will be provided for improving the literacy and technical competence of groups that are already productively engaged as well as for adult education. Developed countries and international institutions will assist in the task of extending and improving the systems of education of developing countries, especially by making available some of the educational inputs in short supply in many developing countries and by providing assistance to facilitate the flow of pedagogic resources among them.

(68) Developing countries will establish at least a minimum programme of health facilities comprising an infrastructure of institutions, including those for medical training and research to bring basic medical services within the reach of a specified proportion of their population by the end of the Decade. These will include basic health services for the prevention and treatment of diseases and for the promotion of health. Each developing country will endeavour to provide an adequate supply of potable water to a specified proportion of its population, both urban and rural, with a view to reaching a minimum target by the end of the Decade. Efforts of the developing countries to raise their levels of health will be supported to the maximum feasible extent by developed countries, particularly through assistance in the planning of health promotion strategy and the implementation of some of its segments, including research, training of personnel at all levels and supply of equipment and medicines. A concerted international effort will be made to mount a world-wide campaign to eradicate by the end of the Decade, from as many countries as possible, one or more diseases that still seriously afflict people in many lands. Developed countries and international organizations will assist the developing countries in their health planning and in the establishment of health institutions.

(69) Developing countries will adopt policies consistent with their agricultural and health programmes in an effort towards meeting their nutritional requirements. These will include development and production of high-protein foods and development and wider use of new forms of edible protein. Financial and technical assistance, including assistance for genetic research, will be extended to them by developed countries and international institutions.

(70) Developing countries will adopt suitable national policies for involving children and youth in the development process and for ensuring that their needs are met in an integrated manner.

(71) Developing countries will take steps to provide improved housing and related community facilities in both urban and rural areas, especially for low-income groups. They will also seek to remedy the ills of unplanned urbanization and to undertake necessary town planning. Particular effort will be made to expand low-cost housing through both public and private programmes and on a self-help basis, and also through co-operatives, utilizing as much as possible local raw materials and labour-intensive techniques. Appropriate international assistance will be provided for this purpose.

(72) Governments will intensify national and international efforts to arrest the deterioration of the human environment and to take measures towards its improvement, and to promote activities that will help to maintain the ecological balance on which human survival depends.

9. Expansion and diversification of production

(73) Developing countries will take specific steps to augment production and improve productivity in order to provide goods and services necessary for raising levels of living and improving economic viability. While this will be primarily their own responsibility, production policies will be carried out in a global context designed to achieve optimum utilization of world resources, benefiting both developed and developing countries. Further research will be undertaken, by the international organizations concerned, in the field of optimal international division of labour to assist individual countries or groups of countries in their choice of production and trading structures. Depending on the social and economic structure and particular characteristics of individual countries, consideration will be given to the role which the public sector and co-operatives might play in augmenting production.

(74) Full exercise by developing countries of permanent sovereignty over their natural resources will play an important role in the achievement of the goals and objectives of the Decade. Developing countries will take steps to develop the full potential of their natural resources. Concerted efforts will be made, particularly through international assistance, to enable them to prepare an inventory of natural resources for their more rational utilization in all productive activities.

(75) Developing countries will formulate, early in the Decade, appropriate strategies for agriculture—including animal husbandry, fisheries and forestry—designed to secure a more adequate food supply from both the quantitative and qualitative viewpoints, to meet their nutritional and industrial requirements, to expand rural employment and to increase export earnings. They will undertake, as appropriate, reform of land tenure systems for promoting both social justice and farm efficiency. They will adopt the necessary measures for providing adequate irrigation, fertilizers, improved varieties of seeds and suitable agricultural implements. They will also take steps to expand the infrastructure of marketing and storage facilities and the network of agricultural extension services. They will make increasing provision for the supply of rural credit to farmers. They will encourage co-operatives for the organization of many of these activities. They will adopt appropriate agricultural pricing policies as a complementary instrument for implementing their agricultural strategies. Developed countries will support this endeavour by providing resources to developing countries for obtaining the essential inputs, through assistance in research and for the building of infrastructure and by taking into account in their trade policies the particular needs of developing countries. International organizations will also provide appropriate support.

(76) Developing countries will take parallel steps to promote industry in order to achieve rapid expansion, modernization and diversification of their economies. They will devise measures to ensure adequate expansion of the industries that utilize domestic raw materials, that supply essential inputs to both agriculture and other industries, and that help to increase export earnings. They will seek to prevent the emergence of unutilized capacity in industries, especially through regional groupings wherever possible. Developed countries and international organizations will assist in the industrialization of developing countries through appropriate means.

(77) Developing countries will ensure adequate expansion of their basic infrastructure by enlarging their transport and communication facilities and their supplies of energy. As appropriate, they will seek to achieve this purpose through regional and subregional groupings. International financial and technical assistance will be extended in support of their endeavour.

10. Plan formulation and implementation

(78) Developing countries will, as appropriate, establish or strengthen their planning mechanisms, including statistical services, for formulating and implementing their national development plans during the Decade. They will ensure that their development plans are both realistic and ambitious enough to have an impact on the imagination of the people, internally consistent, and widely understood and accepted. Every effort will be made to secure the active support and participation of all segments of the population in the development process. They will pay special attention to the orientation and organization of their public administration at all levels for both the effective formulation and implementation of their development plans. Where necessary, they will seek international assistance in carrying out their planning tasks.

D. REVIEW AND APPRAISAL OF BOTH OBJECTIVES AND POLICIES

(79) Appropriate arrangements are necessary to keep under systematic scrutiny the progress towards achieving the goals and objectives of the Decade—to identify shortfalls in their achievement and the factors which account for them and to recommend positive measures, including new goals and policies as needed. Such reviews and appraisals will be carried out at various levels, involving both developing and developed countries, keeping in view the need for streamlining the existing machinery and avoiding unnecessary duplication or proliferation of review activities.

(80) At the national level, each developing country will, where appropriate, establish evaluation machinery or strengthen the existing one and, whenever necessary, seek international assistance for this purpose. Particular attention will be devoted to improving and strengthening national programming and statistical services.

(81) For appraisals at the regional level, regional economic commissions and the United Nations Economic and Social Office at Beirut, in co-operation with regional development banks and subregional groupings, and with the assistance of other organizations of the United Nations system, will assume the main responsibility.

(82) The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the specialized agencies of the United Nations will continue to review progress in their respective sectors according to the procedures already established and to be adapted as necessary.

(83) An over-all appraisal of the progress in implementing the International Development Strategy will be made by the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on the basis of the above-mentioned reviews and of comments and recommendations, within the framework of a specific mandate, by the Committee for Development Planning. In order to assist in this task, the Secretary-General will prepare and submit appropriate documentation and reports. The over-all appraisal will be made biennially, the second biennial appraisal being in the nature of a mid-term review.

E. MOBILIZATION OF PUBLIC OPINION

(84) An essential part of the work during the Decade will consist of the mobilization of public opinion in both developing and developed countries in support of the objectives and policies for the Decade. Governments of the more advanced countries will continue and intensify their endeavours to deepen public understanding of the interdependent nature of the development efforts during the Decade—in particular of the benefits accruing to them from international co-operation for development—and of the need to assist the developing countries in accelerating their economic and social progress. The efforts which developing countries themselves are making to meet the requirements of their economic and social progress need to be more clearly and more generally made known in developed countries. Similarly, Governments of the developing countries will continue to make people at all levels aware of the benefits and sacrifices involved and to enlist their full participation in achieving the objectives of the Decade. The mobilization of public opinion has to be the responsibility mainly of national bodies. Governments may give consideration to the establishment of new national bodies or to strengthening the existing ones designed to mobilize public opinion, and, as a long-term measure, to give increasing development orientation to the educational curricula. Considering that leadership can make a significant contribution to the mobilization of public opinion, the formulation of concrete aims by the competent authorities is indispensable. The role of the organizations of the United Nations system will be to assist the various national information media, in particular by supplying adequate basic information from which these media may draw both substance and inspiration for their work. There is also an urgent need for increasingly co-ordinating the information activities already being undertaken by many organizations within the United Nations system. The information stemming from international sources will be aimed primarily at strengthening the sense of interdependence and partnership implicit in the concept of the Decade.

These variables were two major adjustment criteria: literacy rate and the share of gross domestic product originating in manufacturing; and a minor adjustment criterion, the average rate of growth of real gross domestic product over the preceding five years.

"Hard core" countries would be the least developed by reference to all the selected criteria. A second group would include those falling below a defined cut-off point in some selected development indicator. A third group would include countries outside the two groups mentioned above but qualifying as least developed within a given region.

The report of the Committee included a provisional list of "hard core" least developed countries selected according to those criteria. The report also included a chapter on measures to be taken in favour of the least developed among developing countries.

The Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) also discussed measures to be taken in favour of the least developed countries and unanimously adopted a resolution on 13 February 1970 requesting that the relevant committees and bodies of UNCTAD submit concrete proposals to the Board on the effective measures that might be taken within their fields of competence.

On 16 September 1970, the Trade and Development Board decided to set up an ad hoc group of experts, designated in their personal capacity, to assist in all matters concerning the special measures in favour of the least developed among developing countries.

DECISIONS OF ASSEMBLY

By the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, which was adopted on 24 October 1970 (see pp. 311-12), the Assembly called for special measures to be taken in favour of the least developed among the developing countries.

The Assembly observed that every possible effort would be made to ensure the sustained economic and social progress of the least developed countries and to enhance their capacity to benefit fully and equitably from the strategy for the Second Development Decade. Wherever necessary, supplementary measures would be devised and implemented at the national, sub-regional, regional and international levels.

It was noted that among the concerted efforts to be made early in the Decade by developed countries and international organizations, particular attention would be paid to overcoming the problem in these countries of the scarcity of indigenous technical and managerial cadres, to building the economic and social infrastructure, to the exploitation by these countries of their natural resources, and to assisting them in the task of formulating and implementing national development plans.

Another general policy measure in the Strategy, having to do with the least developed countries, was the recommendation that the production structures of the least developed countries should be expanded and diversified so as to enable these countries to participate fully in international trade.

Special consideration would be given to these countries with regard to primary commodities and semi-manufactures and manufactures. Special attention would also be paid by developed countries and international organizations to the need of these countries to improve the quality of their production for export and of marketing techniques in order to enhance their competitive position in world markets.

Finally, these countries, in co-operation with other developing countries, would intensify their efforts for sub-regional and regional co-operation, and the developed countries would facilitate their task through technical assistance and favourable financial and trade policy measures.

These decisions were among those embodied in resolution 2626 (XXV), which set forth the International Development Strategy. (For text, see pp. 319-29, and in particular p. 325.)

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly affirmed the urgency of identifying the least developed countries in order that they might benefit from the special measures in their favour, particularly those incorporated in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

The Assembly also invited the Economic and Social Council, UNCTAD, and other relevant bodies to accord priority to the question of identifying those countries, and the Secretary-General was requested to report to the General Assembly at its 1971 session on the progress that had been made in this regard.

In this connexion, the Assembly noted an UNCTAD decision on the creation of a generalized system of preferences, which contained a section concerned with special measures in favour of the least developed among developing countries. (See pp. 387-88.)

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2724(XXV), adopted without objection by the Assembly on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text by acclamation on 2 December 1970, on the basis of a proposal submitted by Mali, Sudan and Upper Volta and orally amended by Australia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

ROLE OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC COMMISSIONS

In a decision taken on 11 December 1970, the General Assembly expressed its appreciation of the contributions made by the regional economic commissions and the United Nations Economic and Social Office at Beirut towards the formulation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

It requested those bodies to continue and to further intensify their efforts in helping to promote trade expansion, economic co-operation and integration among their member countries as a concrete step towards the attainment of the goals of the Second Development Decade; and it requested them to make suitable arrangements for appraising and evaluating progress in the implementation of the International Development Strategy. These decisions were among those contained in resolution 2687 (XXV).

(For further details, see pp. 435-36.)

UNIFIED APPROACH TO ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT PLANNING

During 1970, both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly endorsed the principle of a unified approach to development planning, envisaged in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

The Council, on 26 May 1970, endorsed the principle of the unified approach and requested the United Nations bodies to be charged with the implementation of the strategy of the Second Development Decade to give serious consideration to the role of the Commission for Social Development in the continuing appraisal of the progress of this implementation.

These were among the decisions embodied in the Council's resolution 1494(XLVIII) on social policy and planning in national development. (For further details, see pp. 583-84.)

On 11 December 1970, the General Assembly endorsed the Council's resolution of 26 May. It requested those bodies responsible for the implementation of the International Development Strategy as well as for the various social and economic long-term plans and programmes worked out in the context of the Decade and for the review and appraisal of objectives and policies during the Decade, to aim at the most effective integration of policy measures across the different sectors, based, inter alia, on the principles and guidelines embodied in the unified approach.

The Assembly also requested the Economic and Social Council to ensure that the contribution of the Commission for Social Development to the aspects of the International Development Strategy related directly to matters within the Commission's competence. It stressed the need, in the context of the objectives of the Decade, for financial and technical assistance to support initiatives leading to the achievement of a unified approach to development.

These decisions, among others, were embodied in resolution 2681 (XXV). (For further details, see pp. 584-85.)

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session on the progress made towards the identification of the least developed among the developing countries.

CHAPTER II

THE WORLD ECONOMIC SITUATION

RECENT TRENDS IN THE WORLD ECONOMY

Recent trends in the world economic situation were reviewed by the Economic and Social Council at its mid-1970 session, held from 6 to 31 July, on the basis of the World Economic Survey, 1969-1970, the regional surveys for Africa, Asia and the Far East, Europe, and Latin America, and special studies on selected development problems in the Middle East.

The World Economic Survey, 1969-1970 (The Developing Countries in the 1960s: The Problem of Appraising Progress) discussed the problem of establishing a system of indicators to be used in measuring progress during the decade of the 1970s. (See above, pp. 305-9.)

The World Economic Survey also examined recent developments in the world economy.

The Survey reported that the world production of goods and services had expanded by about 5.3 per cent in 1969, slightly less than in 1968, but at a rate roughly equivalent to the average for the decade. The aggregate growth rate of the developed market economies and the centrally planned economies declined during the period, whereas that of the developing countries showed a slight increase.

The rates of increase of both industrial and agricultural production slackened in 1969. The rate of industrial growth (about 7.2 per cent) was above the average for the decade, but agricultural output grew by only 0.8 per cent, compared to an average of nearly 3 per cent between 1960 and 1967. The sluggishness in agricultural growth reflected static or reduced production in the developed market economies and in the centrally planned economies.

Internal inflationary pressures were present in many countries, the Survey noted. The problem of maximizing growth while maintaining reasonable internal stability remained unsolved as the world entered the Second United Nations Development Decade. (For details about the Second Development Decade, see pp. 305-17.)

According to the Survey, international trade continued to be a dynamic factor in the world economy in 1969, despite a slight deceleration in keeping with the decline in total production rates. Prices were about 4 per cent above the 1968 figure on the average, both for primary commodities and for manufactured goods.

The Survey showed that on the whole, trade in 1969 contributed to moderating some of the most critical deficits and surpluses in the world market. But the difficulties experienced by deficit countries in curbing inflation with a minimum loss in employment and production made it important to prevent a squeeze in international liquidity from precipitating a sequence of defensive actions and retaliations. According to the Survey, this gave special significance to such measures as the provision of short- or medium-term loans to countries under particular strain. It also added to the importance of the decision, taken in 1969, to create a new type of international liquidity in the form of the Special Drawing Rights facility of the International Monetary Fund.<sup>1</sup>

Discussion in the Economic and Social Council on the world economic situation, which was opened by the United Nations Secretary-General on 6 July 1970, ranged over the state of the world economy, the effectiveness of the First United Nations Development Decade, the different factors to be taken into account in an international development strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, the role of the Economic and Social Council in that strategy, problems of the environment and emergency action in case of natural disasters.

REPORT OF THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

The annual report of the International Monetary Fund for the fiscal year ended 30 June 1970 was considered by the Economic and Social Council at meetings held on 12 and 13 November 1970.

Introducing the report, the Managing Director of the Fund observed that the previous fiscal year had been a particularly eventful one in the international monetary field. There had been some progress in the adjustment of international payments, he said, because the external position and prospects of several European countries had shown marked improvement, and this had helped to bring about a period of calm in the financial markets. However, inflationary pressures in the industrial countries remained strong and widespread, and the deficit in the United States balance of payments continued to cause uncertainty in the field of international payments.

With regard to the Fund's activities, the Managing Director reported that the major events of the previous fiscal year had been the first allocation of Special Drawing Rights, which had been created in 1969,<sup>2</sup> and the agreement reached on substantial increases in quotas. The Special Drawing Rights had been fully accepted as an effective reserve asset, he said, and the way had been opened to effect the appropriate growth of international liquidity through a rational process of international consultation that should contribute to a smoother adjustment process and help to improve the volume and terms of development assistance.

The Managing Director went on to say that the Fund had been considering modifications of the Special Drawing Rights facility, including changes such as would be involved in establishing a link of some kind between the issuance of new Special Drawing Rights and the financing of economic development.

During 1970, he said, the Executive Directors of the Fund had expressed their conviction that the basic principles of the par value system were sound and should be maintained and strengthened. He noted that the Fund's annual consultations with its members, which initially had concerned the elimination of restrictive practices, had been expanded to include analyses of the over-all economic situation and policies of the country, taking into account prospective international economic development.

The Fund had also been concerned with the practice of tying aid which caused distortions in the allocation of resources, discriminatory treatment of imports, and reductions in the real contribution of foreign aid, he said. He noted that the majority of donor countries had expressed support for the principle of untying bilateral and multilateral aid. On the question of foreign debt management, the Managing Director stated that the Fund had increased its efforts to develop appropriate systems and techniques for the management of external debt. The Fund had also taken steps to provide emergency financial assistance in this regard.

He observed, further, that a number of developing countries had drawn attention to actions by industrial countries relating to specific commodity trade which had the effect of reducing the developing countries' export-earning capacity. The Fund was concerned with the matter because its basic function was to assist member countries in dealing with their balance-of-payment problems; it was therefore conducting a detailed review of the international aspect of commodity problems and policies.

The Managing Director concluded by emphasizing that the Fund was concerned about widespread inflationary pressures in the industrial countries. He said a concerted effort by all countries was required to combat inflation.

In the discussion, the representatives of several countries—among them Argentina, Ceylon, India, Jamaica and Yugoslavia—spoke of the importance of establishing a link between the allocation of Special Drawing Rights and the provision of additional development finance.

Although the establishment of such a link was supported by others, it was also noted, by Japan for example, that it would be desirable to establish the credibility of Special Drawing Rights as a truly reliable reserve asset.

The establishment of such a link would merely aggravate inflation, France thought; moreover, it would give some countries a pretext to refrain from increasing their development assistance. This view did not mean, however, France said, that it was opposed to certain developed countries availing themselves of the Special Drawing Rights to set up special development assistance programmes.

The role of exchange rates in the adjustment of international payments, the need for improved management of the existing monetary system, the Fund's formula for the determination of quotas, and the provision for special financial assistance through the financing of buffer stock systems were among the topics discussed in this connexion by members of the Council.

On 12 November 1970, the Council, on the suggestion of its President, took note with appreciation of the report of the International Monetary Fund by adopting, without vote, resolution 1560(XLIX).

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY REFORM

On 24 October 1970, in the course of setting out the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, the General Assembly established certain policy measures in the field of international monetary reform.

In the context of the search for appropriate means for dealing with the problem of disruption of development arising from adverse movements in the export proceeds of developing countries, the Assembly noted that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development had been requested to pursue its efforts to work out a scheme of supplementary financing. The Bank was also invited to give further consideration to the adoption of supplementary financial measures at the earliest practicable opportunity.

The Assembly also noted as a policy measure that as soon as adequate experience was available on the working of the scheme of Special Drawing Rights, serious consideration would be given to the possibility of establishing a link between the allocation of new reserve assets under the scheme and the provision of additional development finance for the benefit of all developing countries. In any case, the question was to be examined before the allocation of Special Drawing Rights in 1972.

These decisions were among those embodied in resolution 2626(XXV), which outlined the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade. (See page 311 for further details; pp. 319-29 for text of resolution.)

In 1970, the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) also considered measures concerning international monetary reform.

On 17 September 1970, the Board adopted a declaration which, among other things, expressed the hope that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development would give further consideration to the matter of supplementary financing and make available a report on it.

The Bank's representative had earlier reported that the Bank intended to defer further consideration of a scheme of supplementary financing measures because of the limited support for making financial contributions for this purpose. However, although this position met with the approval of some developed countries, the developing countries and some developed countries felt that only after a scheme had been drawn up would it be possible to consider whether its implementation would be feasible.

The issue of Special Drawing Rights was also taken up by UNCTAD in 1970. At meetings held in February 1970, the Trade and Development Board examined a report of the Expert Group on International Monetary Issues, which had met in late 1969 and had proposed that a link be established between the Special Drawing Rights of the International Monetary Fund and development assistance.

In general, the position of the developing countries on the question was that it was essential to create the link. Developed countries were generally concerned that such a link would confuse the purpose of the Special Drawing Rights, which was to maintain adequate international liquidity.

Following discussion, the Board referred the report of the Expert Group to the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade, which reported back to the Board on the matter in September 1970.

On 18 September, the Board took note of statements by the developing countries members of the Board on international liquidity and the position of these countries on the link between Special Drawing Rights and development finance.

CHAPTER III

UNITED NATIONS OPERATIONAL ACTIVITIES FOR DEVELOPMENT

THE UNITED NATIONS DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), financed by voluntary contributions of Governments, was in 1970 the largest multi-lateral source of technical and pre-investment assistance in the world.

The Programme came into existence on 1 January 1966, following a General Assembly decision of 22 November 1965<sup>1</sup> to merge two existing assistance programmes of the United Nations: the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance and the United Nations Special Fund. The former, established in 1950, provided short-term technical advisory services, fellowships to nationals of developing countries for study abroad, and equipment for demonstration and training purposes. The Special Fund, established in 1959, focused on large-scale pre-investment projects designed to assist developing countries in widening their productive capabilities, making more effective use of their human and natural resources and attracting investment capital.

Under UNDP, Governments of developing countries are provided, at their request, with technical and pre-investment assistance to enable them to:

- (1) carry out survey and feasibility studies to determine the economic potential and plan the productive use of natural resources such as soil, rivers, forests and minerals;
- (2) establish and strengthen permanent educational and training institutes;
- (3) create and expand research centres for the development and application of modern technology;
- (4) receive technical, training and advisory services to help build the economic and social infrastructure necessary for development.

During 1970, the UNDP Governing Council reviewed an extensive study that had been made of the United Nations development system. The Governing Council adopted many of the principles and guidelines proposed for strengthening and reforming the United Nations development system; these were subsequently endorsed by the Economic and Social Council and approved by the General Assembly. (See below, pp. 350-55.)

The key provision of the reforms concerned the introduction of "country programming" in the United Nations development system. Under the new programming arrangements, the distinction between the Special Fund and Technical Assistance components of UNDP would be eliminated.

The main provisions of the new system of UNDP country programming were:

— For each country, UNDP programming would be carried out within the framework of "indicative planning figures"—i.e. approximations of the level of resources that UNDP might be able to make available to each Government during the programme period.

— On the basis of these indicative planning figures each Government would decide on the projects it wished to undertake, within the context of its own national development plans, priorities or objectives.

— Formulation of the country programmes would be carried out by the Government of the recipient country, in co-operation with representatives of the United Nations system, under the leadership of the resident representative.

— In the process of country programming, efforts would be made at all levels to co-ordinate all sources of assistance in the United Nations system, so that integration of assistance could be achieved at the country level.

— Programming for inter-country projects (sub-regional, regional, inter-regional and global) would be based broadly on the same general principles as those for country programming.

The new programming arrangements were to take effect on 1 January 1971.

An account of UNDP activities in 1970 is given in the following pages.

Activities in 1970 Under the United Nations Development Programme

During 1970, a record volume of development assistance was provided under both the Special Fund and Technical Assistance components of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

Work was being carried out on some 3,500 technical co-operation projects in more than 130 countries and territories of the developing world. This involved an outlay of more than $206 million (excluding agency overhead) of resources voluntarily contributed by participating Governments, some 17 per cent higher than in 1969. An additional $275 million in cash or in kind came from the recipient Governments.

Expenditures in 1970 under the Special Fund component rose to $154.9 million, 15 per cent above the 1969 level and 75 per cent of total UNDP expenditures. The increase resulted in part from the growing number of Special Fund-assisted projects that were moving into their operational phase.

Project expenditures under the Technical Assistance component of UNDP rose to $51.3 million in 1970, 21 per cent above the level attained in 1969. This growth reflected increasingly effective application of the new continuous programming procedures introduced in 1969.

The assistance rendered during the year reflected the priority needs of the developing world.

Under the Special Fund component, more than one third of the resources were expended in agriculture, one fifth in industry, one sixth in public utilities and one tenth each in education and multi-sector projects. Under the Technical Assistance component, about one fourth of the expenditures were in the agricultural sector. Three sectors—industry, public utilities and health—each accounted for one eighth of the resources.

All regions received increased assistance. Africa continued to take the largest share, about 40 per cent of total expenditures.

In 1970, three fifths of total expenditures under UNDP went for the provision of expert services. A total of 8,848 experts from 103 countries served in 1970 (including 1,114 experts obtained through sub-contracts).

Although most experts came from the more advanced countries (nearly three fourths were nationals from 15 countries), the number of experts recruited from developing countries continued to grow. In 1970, 1,823 nationals from developing countries were engaged in UNDP projects (compared with 1,656 in 1969), or about 20 per cent of total personnel recruited internationally.

The United Nations and its related organizations also stepped up their activities as participating and executing agencies of UNDP. Their services in implementing projects included the recruitment of experts, awarding of sub-contracts, purchase of equipment, placement of fellowship recipients, and monitoring and supervision of projects.

Four agencies executed nearly 80 per cent of total UNDP outlays during 1970. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) accounted for 33 per cent of total project expenditures, followed by the United Nations (19 per cent), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) (15 per cent) and the International Labour Organisation (ILO) (12 per cent).

PRE-INVESTMENT ACTIVITIES IN 1970

Operations under the Special Fund component of UNDP rose to $154.9 million in 1970, up from $134 million in 1969.

The growth in expenditures resulted largely from increased activities in the following fields: agricultural and industrial production; power generation; transport and communications; primary, secondary, technical- and university-level education; control and prevention of disease, public health services and environmental sanitation; and social welfare and community development.

Of the nearly $21 million in new expenditures in 1970, $8 million went to agricultural projects. Agriculture (36 per cent), industry (22 per cent) and public utilities (16 per cent) together accounted for three fourths of Special Fund expenditures. The fastest growing sectors were social welfare, health and public utilities.

A total of 743 projects were under execution in 1970, 50 more than in 1969.

During 1970, 161 new projects were approved with UNDP earmarkings of $139.3 million and Government contributions of some $236 million in cash and in kind. Countries in Africa received more than 36 per cent of the new projects approved during 1970, those in the Americas more than 20 per cent and in the Middle East more than 7 per cent.

The distribution of Special Fund projects approved during 1970—by agency, geographical region, and economic and social sector—is shown in the following table:

The volume of activities of participating and executing agencies in 1970 revealed certain short-term shifts: the activities of the International Civil Aviation Organization grew by nearly half and those of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and of ILO by 30 and 18 per cent, respectively. The activities of the United Nations increased by 8 per cent and of FAO by 5 per cent; UNESCO activities dropped by 2 per cent.

As a result of adjustments to the UNDP Revolving Fund approved by the Governing Council in June 1969, UNDP assistance was made available to Governments for short-term feasibility studies. The purpose of the studies, which have specific objectives and cost less than $200,000 per project, is to facilitate early decisions on investment follow-up. Seven short-term feasibility studies, costing $994,000, were undertaken in 1970.

Field work was completed on 101 large-scale projects in 1970. By the end of 1970, 432 projects had been completed, or 35 per cent of all large-scale projects approved by the Governing Council since the Special Fund was established in 1959.

Of the $811 million outlay on these projects, $453 million was contributed by recipient Governments and $358 million by UNDP, approximately 30 per cent of total funds earmarked by the Council up to the end of 1970.

Of the 101 projects completed in 1970, 21 (mostly survey projects) were followed by a second five-year project. Additional aid totalling $9.3 million in 1970 was given to 25 other projects to supplement the original funds budgeted for them.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE ACTIVITIES IN 1970

In 1970, the volume of technical assistance rendered by UNDP in smaller-scale projects amounted to $51.3 million. (Another $1.8 million was allocated under the Revolving Fund and from restricted contributions by the Danish Government.)

Projects for individual countries continued to account for the largest part of aid provided under the Technical Assistance component. In 1970, work on 2,369 small-scale projects was carried out in 133 countries and territories. Outlays for these projects amounted to $39.3 million, or 71 per cent of total expenditures under the Technical Assistance component. The remaining $12 million was channelled into 382 regional and inter-regional projects.

Almost three fourths of the total of $51.3 million was spent on the provision of expert services; the remainder went for fellowships and towards the purchase of equipment for training and demonstration purposes.

The distribution of Technical Assistance funds for the 1970 programme—by agency, geographical region, and economic and social sector—is shown in the following table:

PROVISION OF OPERATIONAL ASSISTANCE PERSONNEL

Under the scheme for the provision of operational, executive and administrative personnel in the field of public administration, experts are appointed, as officials of the Governments being assisted, with the task of training nationals to take over from them as rapidly as possible.

The experts are recruited by and remain in the employ of the United Nations or of the specialized agencies participating in the scheme, which supplement the salaries paid by Governments when they are too low to attract experts of the required calibre.

In 1970, the Technical Assistance component of UNDP financed 143 operational experts, who worked in 37 countries and territories. They were drawn from the following countries and territories: Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Canada, Ceylon, Chile, China, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, India, Ireland, Japan, Kenya, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Southern Rhodesia, Spain, Sweden, Syria, Turkey, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom, the United States, Uruguay and Yugoslavia.

EXTRA-BUDGETARY OPERATIONS

In 1970, as in previous years, the United Nations and its related agencies carried out some technical aid projects on the basis of extra-budgetary financing, that is, with funds other than those provided under the assessed budgets of those organizations or under allocations for the Technical Assistance component of UNDP.

In 1970, the trust funds in which the Administrator of UNDP participated at the request of the Secretary-General of the United Nations included the following: (1) the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (for further information, see page 462); (2) the Special Industrial Services (SIS) Trust Fund, administered jointly by the UNDP Administrator and the Executive Director of UNIDO (for further information, see page 409); (3) the Fund of the United Nations for the Development of West Irian (FUNDWI) (see below); (4) the Swedish Funds-in-Trust for Lesotho and Swaziland, established from contributions pledged by the Government of Sweden and totalling $1,160,000; (5) the Funds-in-Trust Programme for the Democratic Republic of the Congo, whose resources in 1970 totalled $2,186,171; and (6) the Trust Fund for the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency Residual Assets, with resources of $52,128.

The Fund of the United Nations for the Development of West Irian (FUNDWI)<sup>2</sup> is the largest fund-in-trust programme administered by UNDP. The FUNDWI programme includes capital investment, technical assistance and pre-investment projects.

By the end of 1970, FUNDWI allocations for project expenditures totalled more than $19 million, broken down as follows: rehabilitation of the provincial infrastructure (air, land, coastal and river transport, electric power, telecommunications and meteorology), $12.1 million; education and vocational training, $3 million; commercial production of natural resources (forestry, marine fisheries and local handicrafts), $3 million; improvement and expansion of agricultural crops and livestock, $900,000; and public health, $600,000. These projects were being executed by the United Nations and its specialized agencies, including ILO, FAO and UNESCO.

In addition, $4 million was allocated from FUNDWI for the West Irian Joint Development Foundation, which was established in December 1970 as an autonomous small-loan agency to encourage enterprises in West Irian through investment and technical advice. The Government of Indonesia agreed to provide the equivalent amount in local currency for this purpose.

Five plans of operation for Special Fund-type projects were signed in 1970, involving FUNDWI allocations of $10 million.

Finances of the United Nations Development Programme

Programmes assisted by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) are financed by voluntary contributions of countries which are members of the United Nations and/or the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

In 1970, contributions pledged by 126 Governments totalled the equivalent of $226,038,292. In addition, contributions of recipient Governments in the form of assessed local costs in support of approved projects amounted to $11,004,783 for the Special Fund projects and $4,569,225 for the Technical Assistance programmes. Within the total resources available and earmarkings of funds authorized by the Governing Council, allocations were issued by the Administrator totalling $208 million.

Actual expenditures incurred in 1970 totalled approximately $257.8 million, including costs of technical assistance contingencies, costs of preparatory assistance to Governments, pre-project activities for Special Fund programme requests, Special Industrial Services, investment feasibility studies, and administrative supporting services. In addition, the equivalent of $6.4 million was expended from Governments' cash counterpart contributions in support of Special Fund projects.

A summary statement of total expenditures incurred in 1970 from UNDP resources is shown below:

	SPECIAL FUND	TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE (in U.S. dollars)	TOTAL
Project costs	160,895,081	49,627,072	210,522,153

SPECIAL FUND

In 1970, the UNDP Governing Council approved earmarkings from UNDP resources totalling $139,261,300 to finance Special Fund programmes. Of that amount, $129,952,900 covered the cost of 161 projects approved at the ninth and tenth sessions; $9,308,400 was authorized to supplement the earmarkings of 25 operational projects; and $11,140,904 was earmarked for the Administrator's contingency authority. An amount of $180,000 was earmarked to cover costs of preparatory assistance missions not resulting in approved projects. After deduction of an amount of $3,114,615 of earmarkings surrendered in respect of completed and cancelled projects, the net earmarkings for 1970 amounted to $147,467,589.

Allocations issued by the Administrator in 1970 to cover project costs and pre-project activities, including preparatory assistance missions, totalled $151.6 million.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

At its ninth session, in January 1970, the Governing Council approved earmarkings from UNDP resources totalling $74,190,966 to cover the following costs of the Technical Assistance programme in 1970: $53,248,000 for projects to be approved by the Administrator against country targets; $12,057,000 for regional and inter-regional projects; and $8,885,966 for overhead costs of the participating and executing agencies.

In addition, the Governing Council approved the individual country targets for 1971 to be applied provisionally for the years 1972, 1973 and 1974., and the distribution of the provisional estimates for 1971 resources totalling $78,725,816 consisting of: (1) country targets—$53,148,000; (2) Administrator's planning reserve to be used to supplement or adjust the 1971 country targets—$4,168,000; (3) regional and inter-regional projects—$12,504,000; and (4) overhead costs of the participating and executing agencies—$8,905,816.

Allocations issued by the Administrator for country, regional and inter-regional projects, and overhead costs of the participating and executing agencies, totalled $143.5 million.

REVOLVING FUND

At its tenth session, in June 1970, the Governing Council approved an increase in the level of the UNDP Revolving Fund from $12 million to $14 million for the financing under this authority of pre-project activities of an urgent nature arising from emergency situations.

Allocations issued totalled $11,766,820 as at 31 December 1970. Of this amount, $867,035 was for Technical Assistance contingencies, $868,700 for Special Industrial Services activities, $993,990 for investment feasibility studies, $6,061,300 for Special Fund pre-project activities and $2,975,795 for Special Fund preparatory assistance missions. The unallocated balance of the Fund as at 31 December 1970 amounted to $2,233,180.

CONTRIBUTIONS

PLEDGED FOR 1971

At the Pledging Conference held in New York on 29 October 1970, 103 Governments announced contributions to UNDP for 1971, totalling the equivalent of $146.4 million. Additional contributions subsequently announced by 18 Governments brought the total pledges (as recorded in the 1970 accounts) to $239,241,505. These contributions brought to $1,846,866,604 the cumulative amount of all Governments' contributions since 1959 to UNDP and its predecessor programmes.

Decisions of Governing Council, Economic and Social Council and General Assembly

During 1970, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) held its ninth and tenth sessions, from 19 to 30 January and from 9 to 30 June respectively. It also held two special sessions, one from 16 to 26 March which dealt with a study of the capacity of the United Nations development system and one on 8 September to discuss office accommodations for UNDP at United Nations Headquarters. The Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly also took decisions on various aspects of UNDP activities.

CAPACITY OF THE UNITED NATIONS DEVELOPMENT SYSTEM

The main work of the Governing Council in 1970 related to the capacity of UNDP to undertake a greatly enlarged development programme, which was seen as vital to the success of the contributions to be made by the United Nations system to the Second United Nations Development Decade beginning in 1971.

In January, March and June, the Council considered recommendations for reform and improvement of the assistance being given by the United Nations system to developing countries. The Council had before it "A Study of the Capacity of the United Nations Development System" by Sir Robert Jackson, commissioned by the Administrator of UNDP. The purpose of the Capacity Study was to determine how the United Nations development system could be strengthened so that within the next five years it could carry out a programme at least double the size of that of 1970.

The report proposed a number of steps to revitalize the United Nations development system and suggested the restructuring of UNDP as a strong, central co-ordinating organization with a primary role in relation to the field operations of the specialized agencies carrying out UNDP-aided projects.

The United Nations was the ideal instrument for assisting developing countries, the report stated, but UNDP was not making the best use of its resources, and programming procedures did not adequately reflect the needs of developing countries. Projects, it said, were too often the result of salesmanship rather than a response to priority needs.

According to the report, the system had to be drastically overhauled so as to integrate and rationalize United Nations efforts. A United Nations development co-operation cycle was proposed, calling for an organized process in providing technical co-operation through the stages of programming, project formulation, implementation and follow-up.

Another basic tenet proposed was the country-centred approach. Under country programming United Nations development work would be synchronized with the development planning cycle of each country, covering all inputs from the United Nations system and relating closely to investment plans of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. The report outlined a design for a highly integrated information system to provide accurate data for preparing and executing development co-operation.

Under the Jackson proposals, the Governing Council would approve country programmes for a period of years instead of approving individual projects. Authority for approving projects would be delegated to the UNDP Administrator, and in the case of smaller projects to the Resident Representatives.

The detailed organizational proposals aimed at centralizing in UNDP all policy decisions affecting technical co-operation, and decentralizing authority as far as possible to the country level. Operational control of UNDP would rest in the hands of the Administrator under the guidance of the Governing Council, while the specialized agencies would perform important advisory functions in their respective fields.

Among other proposals, the report suggested establishment of a career United Nations development service and a staff college to meet the need for qualified personnel; greater use of sub-contracting in project operations; and a new system of financial procedures, carrying out the total merger of the Special Fund and Technical Assistance components of UNDP.

In June, the Governing Council approved a consensus which included a series of basic principles and guidelines for the United Nations Development Programme.

By the consensus, the Governing Council adopted the Jackson proposal for a United Nations development co-operation cycle. Central to this concept was the idea of country programming of UNDP assistance. The successive phases of the cycles were seen as programming, project formulation, appraisal and approval, implementation, evaluation and follow-up.

Under the new system of programming, each country would formulate its national development plans or, where these did not exist, national development priorities and objectives. The programming of UNDP assistance would be carried out in each country within the framework of indicative planning figures approved by the Governing Council, constituting an order of magnitude of the resources expected to be available during the programme period from UNDP.

Each UNDP country programme, formulated by the Government concerned in co-operation, at an appropriate stage, with representatives of the United Nations system, would be subject to approval by the Governing Council. The resources to be devoted to country programming would be a specified percentage of the total resources for the current year, projected over a given period of time and including a rate of growth per annum over that period. Of the total annual resources available for programming, the Governing Council decided to set aside, until further review, 82 per cent for country programmes and a maximum of 18 per cent for assistance on a sub-regional, regional, inter-regional or global basis.

The current arrangements for "full funding," under which funds were set aside to cover the total costs of projects extending over several years, would be changed to an annual funding system in order to allow a larger portion of the unused funds to be used for programme purposes. However, an operational reserve would be maintained at a level of $150 million.

Distinctions between the Special Fund and Technical Assistance components of UNDP would be eliminated.

While the Governing Council alone was empowered to approve projects submitted by countries to UNDP for consideration, it delegated authority to approve projects within country programmes to the Administrator for a period of three years and to approve inter-country projects other than global projects. The consensus endorsed the principle proposed in the Capacity Study that there should be the maximum possible delegation of authority to the Resident Representatives, whose role needed to be greatly strengthened and whose over-all responsibility for the UNDP programme in the country concerned should be recognized. In relation to representatives of the other United Nations organizations, the Resident Representative's role should be that of leader of the team.

By the consensus, the Inter-Agency Consultative Board of UNDP would be retained, but the Council asked the Board to review its functions and relationship with the Governing Council in the light of the new system of country programming and the need for efficient implementation of projects.

On 22 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the provisions contained in the consensus of the UNDP Governing Council on the capacity of the United Nations development system. It recommended that the General Assembly adopt a draft resolution whereby it would also approve these provisions (see below).

The Economic and Social Council's decision was set forth in resolution 1530(XLIX), approved by consensus of the Council on the basis of the text proposed by the UNDP Governing Council, as orally amended by the President of the Economic and Social Council. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In this connexion, the Council—on 22 July 1970—recommended to all executing agencies of the United Nations Development Programme that they review their organizational structure at the headquarters, regional and field levels with a view to adapting this structure to their increased operational activities financed by UNDP, in the light of the relevant decisions of the Council on the capacity of the Programme. Within each agency, one organizational unit should have an over-all responsibility for the implementation of UNDP projects. Higher efficiency and speedier implementation of projects should be achieved, recruitment and deployment of field staff should be improved and administrative overhead costs for executing Programme projects should be kept as low as possible.

This decision was taken without the adoption of a resolution and was in response to a request of the UNDP Governing Council.

Further, the Council considered a request of the UNDP Governing Council that it arrange an immediate inquiry into problems of the regional and sub-regional structures within the United Nations system which had a bearing on the improvement of the capacity of the United Nations development system. It adopted a resolution by which it requested, inter alia, the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with other organizations of the United Nations system, a questionnaire on the various aspects of regional structure and forward it to the Governments of Member States with a request that they send their answers to their respective regional economic commissions. The Council further requested the Executive Secretaries of the regional economic commissions to prepare reports on the basis of the answers to the questionnaire and to submit them to the regional economic commissions at their next annual session.

This request was set forth in resolution 1553 (XLIX) adopted on 30 July 1970. (For details, see p. 437.)

Later in 1970 the General Assembly discussed the recommendations of the UNDP Governing Council and the Economic and Social Council on the capacity of the United Nations development system. On 11 December, the Assembly adopted a resolution by which it approved the provisions concerning the United Nations Development Programme which had been decided upon by the Governing Council and declared that they should apply to UNDP activities commencing on 1 January 1971. In taking this decision, the Assembly noted the observations and reservations made in the Governing Council and the Economic and Social Council and it noted too that some questions remained to be settled.

The Assembly also requested the UNDP Governing Council to prepare a draft omnibus statute for the Programme for consideration at its 1971 session.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2688 (XXV) adopted without objection on 11 December 1970.

The text had been approved by the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee without objection on 18 November; it was the text recommended by the Economic and Social Council, as orally amended by Argentina and the United Kingdom.

FEASIBILITY OF CREATING A VOLUNTEER CORPS

In response to a request made by the Economic and Social Council on 31 July 1969,<sup>3</sup> the Secretary-General reported in 1970 on the feasibility of creating an international corps of volunteers for development.

Recommending the establishment of such a corps, the report proposed for the purpose a central office within UNDP to provide a point of identification with the over-all activities of the United Nations system for economic and social development.

The report was first examined by the UNDP Governing Council, which expressed its willingness to consider the proposals made therein following action by the Economic and Social Council.

On 28 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council decided to recommend to the General Assembly that it establish within the existing framework of the United Nations system, with effect from 1 January 1971, an international group of volunteers. To this end, the Council proposed the text of a draft resolution to the Assembly.

The Economic and Social Council's decisions were incorporated in resolution 1539 (XLIX), adopted by 21 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, and based on a proposal sponsored by Greece, India and Pakistan, as revised to take into account amendments proposed by Jamaica, the United Kingdom, the USSR and other Council members. One amendment proposed by Jamaica was withdrawn; this would have had the General Assembly stipulate that initial projects be carefully programmed so as to allow for flexibility and a minimum of bureaucratic centralization.

General Assembly discussion of the proposal for an international group of volunteers took place mainly in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the text recommended by the Economic and Social Council on 26 October 1970.

Adopting this text on 7 December 1970 as its resolution 2659 (XXV), the Assembly decided to establish within the existing framework of the United Nations system, with effect from 1 January 1971, an international group of volunteers, the members of which were to be designated collectively and individually as United Nations Volunteers.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to designate the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme as the Administrator of the United Nations Volunteers and, in consultation with him, to appoint a co-ordinator to promote and co-ordinate recruitment, selection, training and administrative management of the activities of the Volunteers in co-operation with United Nations agencies concerned and with organizations dealing with national and international voluntary service and relevant youth organizations.

Also, the Assembly asked States, organizations and individuals to contribute to a special voluntary fund for the support of Volunteers' activities. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Assembly adopted this resolution by 91 votes to 0, with 12 abstentions. The Second Committee's approval of the text was given by 60 votes to 0, with 16 abstentions.

DEVELOPMENT PLANNING ADVISORY SERVICES

At its mid-1970 session, the Economic and Social Council considered reports by the Secretary-General and by the executive secretaries of the regional economic commissions on steps they had taken towards organizing interdisciplinary advisory services in development planning, plan implementation, public administration and management. These steps had been taken pursuant to a General Assembly request of 13 December 1969.<sup>4</sup>

On 30 July 1970, the Council, after (a) noting that the provision of technical assistance in the form of advisory services through sub-regional interdisciplinary teams might be a particularly useful way of assisting some developing countries to build up their own services in these fields, and (b) noting the need for careful preparation of this form of technical assistance in order to avoid duplication of services, took the following action:

(1) It took note of the experimental nature of this scheme of technical aid, as well as of the fact that two such advisory teams were to be established during the year by the regional economic commissions;

(2) It invited the Secretary-General to examine different ways of financing further projects of this nature, in consultation with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme;

(3) It requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council (a) on the financing of such teams; (b) on the activities of the two teams to be established by the regional economic commissions; and (c) on the extent to which maximum use had been made or would be made of the staff and services of the regional economic commissions as well as of the specialized agencies concerned.

These decisions by the Council were set forth in resolution 1552(XLIX), which was adopted, on the recommendation of the Council's Coordination Committee, by a vote of 22 to 0, with 2 abstentions.

The text was based on a proposal by Greece, Indonesia and the United Kingdom, and approved by the Co-ordination Committee on 27 July 1970 by 21 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

OTHER DECISIONS OF GOVERNING COUNCIL

At its ninth session, the Governing Council of UNDP approved the largest Special Fund programme to date, comprising 109 large-scale projects and 16 supplementary earmarkings at a total estimated value of $250,262,200, of which $95,496,300 represented Governing Council earmarkings and $154,765,900 represented contributions by recipient Governments.

Under the Technical Assistance component, the Governing Council approved—for the year 1970—five regional and inter-regional projects each valued at $200,000 or more over their anticipated duration. It earmarked $75,400,966 for the Technical Assistance programme for 1970, which included $53,148,000 for country targets and $11,667,000 for regional and inter-regional projects, the balance being for agency overhead costs ($8,885,966) and restoration to the Revolving Fund for 1969 contingency allocations ($1.7 million).

The Council also approved a total budget of $23,858,000 for administrative and programme support services for 1970.

The Governing Council also discussed the United Nations Capital Development Fund, approving the guidelines and terms for loans proposed for the Fund by the Administrator and authorizing him to consummate future transactions by executing loan agreements as and when they were ready. (See also pp. 401-2.)

At the tenth session, in June, the Governing Council approved 52 projects under the Special Fund programme and nine supplementary earmarkings amounting to an estimated total of $111,059,000 of which $43,765,000 represented Governing Council earmarkings and $67,294,000 contributions by recipient Governments.

Under the Technical Assistance component, the Council approved—for the year 1970—21 regional and 10 inter-regional projects costing $200,000 or more each over their anticipated duration. The Council also approved an increase of $100,000 in the 1970 country target for Equatorial Guinea to help that country meet its essential programme needs, and an increase of $390,000—to $650,000—in the target of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for regional and inter-regional technical assistance projects in 1970.

The Governing Council unanimously endorsed a request by the Government of Peru that a mission of experts, drawn from all specialized agencies, be sent to Peru as soon as possible to prepare a report in conjunction with Peruvian experts on the extent of aid required following the disastrous Peruvian earthquake. The Council decided that, in addition to the activities qualifying for financing from the Revolving Fund, previously approved, pre-project activities of an urgent nature arising from the emergency situation in Peru should also be included, and that the size of the Revolving Fund be increased from the level of $12 million to $14 million.

The Council also adopted a resolution requesting the Economic and Social Council to recommend the establishment of an emergency fund for disasters, to be financed by voluntary contributions of all members of the United Nations and the specialized agencies. The first task of this fund would be to provide Peru with resources of all kinds—including technical assistance—which were needed for the reconstruction of the devastated areas, in accordance with such projects as the Government of Peru and UNDP might prepare.

The Governing Council heard a report from the United Nations Commissioner for Technical Co-operation on the major efforts being made by the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation to seek new and improved ways of assisting developing countries, and to render its operations more efficient and effective.

Further, the Council took note of a report of the Administrator on the steps taken to initiate operations of the United Nations Capital Development Fund.

At a special session on 8 September 1970, held to discuss UNDP investment towards the financing of construction costs for a proposed new office building at United Nations Headquarters, the Council decided that an amount of $10 million be made available on the understanding that, among other things, the decision would not prejudice further consideration of the question of the location of all or part of UNDP headquarters.

I. THE UNITED NATIONS DEVELOPMENT CO-OPERATION CYCLE

1. The formulation of the United Nations Development Programme country programme is the first phase of a process which may be called the United Nations Development Co-operation Cycle. The other phases are project formulation, appraisal and approval, implementation, evaluation and follow-up. The Cycle will also include periodic reviews. The scope of the Cycle might expand as envisaged in paragraph 9 below.

II. UNITED NATIONS DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME COUNTRY PROGRAMMING

A. General principles

2. United Nations Development Programme country programming means the programming of its assistance at the country level. It involves the identification of the role of Programme inputs in specified areas within the country's development objectives.

3. Country programming will be used as a means of achieving the most rational and efficient utilization of resources at the disposal of the Programme for its activities in order to have the maximum impact on the economic and social development of the developing country concerned.

4. Country programming will be based on individual national development plans or, where these do not exist, on national development priorities or objectives.

5. It is recognized that the Government of the country concerned has the exclusive responsibility for formulating its national development plan or priorities and objectives. Individual developing countries should be given, at their request, assistance from the United Nations, including the regional economic commissions and the United Nations Economic and Social Office at Beirut, in the general field of planning and from the specialized agencies in sectoral planning.

6. The programming of Programme assistance will be carried out in each country within the framework of indicative planning figures constituting an order of magnitude of the resources expected to be available from the Programme during the country programme period.

7. The country programme, based on national development plans, priorities or objectives and on the indicative planning figures, will be formulated by the Government of the recipient country in co-operation, at an appropriate stage, with representatives of the United Nations system, the latter under the leadership of the resident representative of the Programme; it should coincide, where appropriate, with the period of the country's national development plan. The formulation of the country programme should involve:

(a) A broad identification of the needs which arise out of the country's objectives in particular sectors, within the framework of its over-all development objectives, and which might appropriately be met by Programme assistance;

(b) As precise an indication as possible of the internal inputs, Programme inputs and, wherever possible, other United Nations inputs to meet these needs;

(c) A preliminary list of projects to be subsequently worked out for financing by the Programme to implement the country programme.

8. The country programme of assistance should support activities which are meaningfully related to the country's development objectives. This implies that the assistance provided constitutes a programme which receives its coherence and balance from its relationship to these national objectives.

9. In the process of country programming, efforts should be made at all levels to co-ordinate all sources of assistance in the United Nations system, with a view to achieving integration of the assistance at the country level.

10. It will be for the Government to take into account, while preparing the country programme, other external inputs, both multilateral and bilateral.

11. The resident representative will transmit the country programme to the Administrator of the Programme who, in turn, will submit it, with his recommendations, to the Governing Council for its consideration and approval. Approval will cover the entire period of the programme, with provision for periodic reviews aimed at possible adjustments. With the agreement of the country concerned, the Administrator, in submitting the country programme for consideration and approval, will invite the attention of the Governing Council to details of any other related programme of United Nations assistance.

12. The assistance of the Programme must be sufficiently flexible to meet unforeseen needs of recipient countries or exceptional situations, which country programmes could not take into account.

B. Indicative planning figures

13. For the purpose, among others, of establishing the indicative planning figures, any distinctions between the Technical Assistance and Special Fund components will be eliminated. The resources to be devoted to country programming will be a specified percentage of the total resources for the current year, projected over a given period of time and including a rate of growth per annum over that period, one of the assumptions being that the resources of the Programme will increase at least at the same rate as the average of the last few years.

14. The indicative country-planning figures should not be construed as representing a commitment, but as a reasonably firm indication for the purpose of forward programming.

15. The indicative planning figures will be proposed by the Administrator to Governments on the basis of the criteria and guidelines established from time to time by the Governing Council. There should be some flexibility in determining the level of resources available for indicative planning figures. After taking into account any comments which Governments may wish to make in regard to the figures, the Administrator will submit his final indicative planning figures for each country for approval by the Governing Council; wherever possible, the country programme concerned will be approved at the same time.

16. As an experimental basis for the first series of indicative planning figures, the Administrator will calculate the percentage devoted to each country of the total earmarkings of programmed resources (that is, Technical Assistance country targets plus Special Fund project earmarkings) during the five-year period from 1966 to 1970, including projects approved by the Governing Council at its eleventh session. He will apply this percentage in each case to resources estimated, in accordance with the procedure laid down in paragraph 13 above, to be available for country programming for a period of from three to five years, consistent with the period of the country's development plan or development programme, in order to obtain a preliminary indicative planning figure for each country for that period. He will scrutinize these figures in the light of existing criteria for the allocation of resources and adjust them where necessary to avoid arbitrarily projecting any exceptional present country situations, to correct any inequities due to historical circumstances and, in particular, to ensure that special consideration is given to the situation of the least developed countries and of newly independent countries whose lack of an adequate administrative infrastructure has prevented them from taking proper advantage of programme assistance.

17. The figures will be reviewed periodically by the Administrator and the Governing Council, in consultation with the Government concerned, in the light of progress in the implementation of the country programme.

C. Formulation, appraisal and approval of projects

18. Project formulation will be an on-going process and need not await the approval of the country programme. To ensure the soundness of project formulation, it will be carried out at the country level. Association of various kinds of expertise with the formulation of a particular project will be only at the specific request of the Government which, in the light of the expertise available locally, is in the best position to know the type of expertise required.

19. The appraisal of each project will be, to the fullest extent possible, an integral part of the process of formulation of the project. Thus smaller projects, up to a specified cost limit, will be appraised on behalf of the Programme by the resident representative with the assistance of competent technical expertise whenever necessary. Responsibility for the appraisal of larger projects will rest with the Administrator.

20. The Governing Council alone is empowered to approve projects submitted by countries to the Programme for consideration. The Governing Council, while retaining this authority, delegates to the Administrator for three years the authority to approve projects within country programmes. Nevertheless the Council and the requesting Government reserve the right to request the Administrator to submit particular projects of whatever magnitude to the Council for its consideration and approval. The Administrator may also bring to the Council any project which, because of its policy implications or the magnitude of its impact on the country programme as a whole, deserves the consideration and approval of the Council. The Administrator will, to the maximum extent feasible, which will be determined and indicated by him to the Governing Council in due course, delegate the authority to approve projects to the resident representatives. The Governing Council will be informed as soon as possible of all project decisions completed under its delegation of authority.

III. INTER COUNTRY PROGRAMMING

21. Intercountry programming is the programming of assistance for groups of countries on a subregional, regional, interregional or global basis. Such assistance will be provided through subregional, regional, interregional and global projects at the request of at least two Governments, taking into account the equitable distribution of resources among regions.

22. The programming of such assistance will be based broadly on the same general principles as set out above for country programming, particularly in that it will be systematically related to the development priorities of the countries concerned and, as far as possible, planned in advance over a period of years.

23. The procedures for the formulation, appraisal and approval of Intercountry projects will follow, in their relevant aspects, the same general lines as for projects within country programmes, and will be subject to criteria and guidelines established from time to time by the Governing Council. All global projects, however, will require specific approval by the Governing Council.

IV. OVER-ALL DISPOSITION AND MANAGEMENT OF UNITED NATIONS DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME RESOURCES

A. Over-all disposition of resources

24. The total resources available for programming will be divided between country programming on the one hand and, on the other, Intercountry programming consisting of sub-regional, regional, interregional and global projects.

25. Initially, and until further review by the Governing Council, at least 82 per cent of the net resources available each year, after deduction of programme support costs and administrative costs, as well as resources to meet the requirements set out in paragraph 27 below, will be set aside for country programming and, at most, 18 per cent for Intercountry programming, it being understood that these proportions are intended as a planning guide.

26. Subregional, regional and interregional projects, particularly those designed by interested countries to accelerate the process of economic and social integration and to promote other forms of regional and subregional co-operation, will have the first claim on the resources for Intercountry programming. Global projects will come next in the order of priority. Subject to review by the Governing Council from time to time, the amount to be allocated for global projects should not exceed 1 per cent of the net resources available for programming.

27. It will be necessary to make provisions to meet unforeseen needs, to meet special needs of the least developed of the developing countries, and to finance unanticipated projects or phases of projects, particularly projects of the Special Industrial Services type, which could have a catalytic role in the economic development of the country concerned. At the eleventh session of the Governing Council, the Administrator will make proposals on the manner in which resources to meet such requirements, as well as to maintain under present arrangements the programme of Special Industrial Services at least at the present level, will be made available.

B. Full utilization of resources and financial control

28. All financial resources of the Programme are to be available at all times to the maximum possible extent for programme purposes, subject only to the maintenance on a continuous basis of an operational reserve. After provision has been made annually for programme support and administrative costs and for replenishment of the operational reserve, all resources not otherwise committed will be utilized for project activities.

29. The purpose of the operational reserve is to guarantee in all circumstances the financial liquidity and integrity of the Programme, to compensate for uneven cash inflows and to meet such other requirements as may be decided upon by the Governing Council at a subsequent stage. The Council will keep under constant review the size and composition of the reserve, basing itself on the planning of payment authorizations and expenditures for the following financial year. At the outset, and pending receipt of a more detailed analysis from the Administrator of the financial position of the Programme up to the end of 1970, the Council, as an interim measure, authorizes the establishment of an operational reserve of $150 million in all categories of resources, the composition of which is to be determined and maintained by the Administrator in accordance with sound principles of financial management, this level to be reviewed by the Council at its twelfth session in the context of the financial review referred to above.

30. Full responsibility for proper utilization of funds of the Programme and for the exercise of financial and accounting controls will be borne by the Administrator. The Secretary-General will continue as custodian of Programme funds, but decisions regarding the Programme investment portfolio and currency management will be reached in agreement with the Administrator, subject to a full report on this arrangement and review by the Governing Council at its twelfth session.

31. In presenting forecasts of expenditure and requests for earmarkings to the Governing Council, the Administrator will distinguish clearly among the following types of expense: (a) project costs; (b) programme support costs, including overhead and consultative services costs; and (c) administrative service costs.

C. Assessment of local costs

32. Specific recommendations will be made by the Administrator to the Governing Council at its eleventh session on the formula to be followed for the assessment of local costs, which should make provision for simplified application of full or partial waivers of local costs, taking into account those cases where undue burdens would otherwise be placed on the recipient Government.

D. Agency overhead costs

33. The Administrator will consult with the participating and executing agencies and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions with a view to arriving at new methods for calculating appropriate reimbursement for project implementation and for advisory services involving programming, project formulation and policy development. The prospect of entering into general compensatory arrangements for advisory services and separate specific arrangements for the reimbursement of costs in connexion with project execution will be explored. The solution worked out should not be considered as binding until it has been submitted to the Council for consideration and approval, accompanied by a report on the kinds of services to be reimbursed.

34. The Administrator will co-operate to the fullest degree in efforts to achieve common budgeting policies and accounting systems throughout the United Nations family of organizations.

V. IMPLEMENTATION OF UNITED NATIONS DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME ASSISTANCE

A. Responsibility of the Governing Council

35. The Governing Council has over-all responsibility for ensuring that the resources of the Programme are employed with maximum efficiency and effectiveness in assisting the development of the developing countries.

36. To this end, the principal responsibilities of the Governing Council remain as stated in the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly. In the context of the principles of country and Inter-country programming set out above and of the implementation of assistance so provided, the Governing Council will consider and approve country programmes, including indicative country-planning figures, approve certain projects included in the programmes in accordance with the provisions mentioned in paragraphs 20 and 23 above, exercise effective operational control, including periodic reviews of the country programmes, and make broad allocations of resources and control their

B. Responsibility of the Administrator

37. In addition to the responsibilities to be delegated to him by the Governing Council, the Administrator will be fully responsible and accountable to the Governing Council for all phases and aspects of the implementation of the Programme.

C. Role of United Nations organizations in implementation of country programmes

38. The role of the organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of country programmes should be that of partners, under the leadership of the Programme, in a common endeavour of the entire United Nations system. Their advice should be available to the Administrator in the implementation of all projects, as appropriate, whether executed by them or not.

D. Selection and accountability of executing agents

39. The Administrator will consult the Government in each case on the selection of the agent by which Programme assistance to each project will be implemented.

40. The appropriate organizations of the United Nations system will, subject to this procedure, have first consideration as executing agents.

41. When necessary to ensure the maximum effectiveness of Programme assistance or to increase its capacity, and with due regard to the cost factor, increased use may appropriately be made of suitable services obtained from governmental and non-governmental institutions and firms, in agreement with the recipient Government concerned and in accordance with the principles of international competitive bidding. Maximum use should be made of national institutions and firms, if available, within the recipient countries.

42. In cases where expertise or services are required which are not adequately available in kind, quantity and quality within the United Nations system, the Administrator will, in agreement with the Government concerned, exercise his authority to obtain them, while inviting, in appropriate cases, the relevant United Nations organization to provide complementary support.

43. Every executing agent will be accountable to the Administrator for the implementation of Programme assistance to projects.

44. In the selection of individual experts, institutions or firms, in the procurement of equipment and supplies and in the provision of training facilities, the principle of equitable geographical distribution consistent with maximum effectiveness will be observed.

E. Availability and quality of international and national project personnel

45. The Administrator should intensify efforts in co-ordination with the appropriate organs of the system and should develop suitable proposals for consideration by the Governing Council, to improve the availability, briefing, refresher training and procedures for the punctual recruitment of well-qualified international project personnel. These proposals should particularly take into account the desirability of increasing the number of personnel recruited from the developing countries. The Administrator should also pay particular attention to such factors as the personal suitability of candidates, including their motivation and adaptability; the need for realistic job descriptions and reporting dates; prompt decisions on candidates by the agencies and requesting Governments; and conditions of service that will attract and retain candidates for whose services there is world-wide demand.

46. In suitable cases, qualified nationals may be designated as project managers, assisted by international specialists.

47. Where necessary, and upon the request of the recipient Government, consideration should be given by the Programme to training suitable counterpart personnel as an integral part of a Programme-assisted project, including its planning phase, so that they will be qualified to participate in and ensure effective execution of the project.

48. Since there is no set formula for the proportions of international personnel, fellowships and equipment for a particular project and no ceiling on the ratio of the value of the equipment in relation to the total cost of a project, Programme pre-investment assistance should be sufficiently flexible so that in appropriate cases it may consist of the supply of equipment alone as part of an integrated pre-investment project. In the latter case, particular attention should be given to the availability of personnel qualified to use the equipment or to train personnel in its use in recipient countries.

F. Operational control and assessment of results

49. The monitoring of project assistance, in so far as it is required for the discharge by the Administrator of his responsibility for operational control, will normally be carried out at the country level by the resident representative.

50. Evaluation carried out within the United Nations system of Programme-assisted activities will only be made with the agreement of the Government concerned. This will be carried out jointly by the Government, the Programme, the United Nations agency concerned and, where appropriate, the executing agent outside the United Nations system.

51. Such evaluation shall be on a selective basis and restricted to the minimum essential for the improvement or follow-up of the projects concerned, for the needs of Governments and for the improvement of the Programme. With the agreement of the Government concerned, the results will be communicated to the Governing Council for its information.

G. Investment and other forms of follow-up

52. Provision for investment and other forms of follow-up to Programme-assisted projects will, when necessary, be an integral part of the programming process and of the formulation, implementation and evaluation of the projects.

53. The Government in each case will be primarily responsible for all measures which should be taken at all stages of a project to ensure effective follow-up, including follow-up investment. It will be open to the Government to seek investment assistance from all available sources. No one source of follow-up investment financing should be regarded as the only acceptable source or as a source enjoying preference over others. The Administrator will assume full responsibility within the United Nations system, as its major source of pre-investment financing, for providing assistance and advice on behalf of the United Nations system on follow-up investment, with the agreement of the Government. The Programme will develop its expertise in this matter to ensure, in consultation with the Government, early co-ordination, from the planning stage onwards, with potential bilateral and/or multilateral sources of finance for projects requiring follow-up investment.

VI. TIMING AND TRANSITIONAL MEASURES

54. The principles set out above, and the procedures to give effect to them, will be progressively applied from the date of their approval by the competent legislative organs of the United Nations. The Administrator will undertake as soon as possible the necessary measures so that, if possible, some country programmes will be submitted in time for consideration by the Governing Council at its twelfth session in June 1971.

55. In the transitional period, to ensure continuity of action by the Programme in meeting Governments' requests for assistance, the appraisal and approval of projects will be carried out in accordance with existing procedures. These transitional measures may be extended in cases where the Government wishes to start its country programme later than 1972, on the understanding, however, that the total amount of assistance to be provided from 1 January 1972 will be consistent with the indicative planning figures and that the existing distinctions between the two components of the Programme will have been eliminated.

VII. ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME

56. The Governing Council recognizes its responsibility for policy formulation, the determination of programme priorities, and the review of implementation in both planning and practice. The decisions of the Council on country programming and its implementation have important organizational implications. The country-programming approach implies that the Administrator will be fully accountable for the management of all aspects of the Programme. At the same time, it will be necessary to bring about, within the Programme, greater decentralization of responsibility for programming and implementation from the headquarters to the country level. The application of the twin principle of the Administrator's full accountability for the Programme and the decentralization to the country level will require certain modifications in the existing structure and procedures of the Programme. A clear definition of functions and responsibilities at all levels of the administration will therefore be necessary.

57. At the headquarters level, regional bureaux should be established to provide a direct link between the Administrator and the resident representative in all matters concerning field activities. In order to streamline channels of communication and expedite the decision-making process, the heads of these bureaux should have direct access to the Administrator. To achieve the required degree of effectiveness of management of the bureaux, they should be headed by persons with the high qualifications and rank commensurate with their important responsibilities.

58. The country-programming approach also implies that the Programme should not only concern itself with current policy formulation, but should also be able constantly to analyse the main trends in the evolution of the Programme in order to give it new directions and to explore new possibilities for making it more effective. To meet this need, a small but highly competent long-term planning staff should be established at the headquarters level under the direction of a senior official.

59. The country-programming approach also envisages more rational and effective procedures for evaluation and follow-up. This, as well as the need to maintain close relations with other collaborating organizations of the United Nations system, must be fully reflected in the organizational restructuring at the headquarters level. The Administrator is invited to take the necessary steps in this direction and to submit further proposals to the Council.

60. The strengthening of the management of the Programme at the headquarters level, in view of the reform of the system and the expectation of a growing Programme, should be achieved by securing the services of highly qualified and experienced staff with due regard to the principle of equitable geographical distribution and to the need for economy.

61. The Administrator should continue to have the authority to appoint and administer the staff of the Programme. For this purpose, he should have authority, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to frame such staff rules, consistent with the relevant principles laid down by the General Assembly, as he considers necessary to meet the special problems which arise in the service of the Programme.

62. With respect to the organization of the Programme at the country level, the resident representative will be redesignated resident director of the Programme. His appointment by the Administrator will be subject to the prior approval of the Government concerned.

63. There should be the maximum possible delegation of authority to the resident director. His role therefore needs to be greatly strengthened. In this context, his relations with the representatives of other United Nations organizations in the field are of crucial importance. The resident director should be recognized as having full over-all responsibility for the programme in the country concerned and his role in relation to the representatives of the other United Nations organizations, where they are posted with the prior approval of the Government concerned, should be that of the leader of the team, taking into account the professional competence of these United Nations organizations and their relations with appropriate organs of the Government. This role of leadership and over-all responsibility should extend to all contacts with the governmental authorities concerned in connexion with the programme, in regard to which he will be the principal channel of communication between the Programme and the Government. The resident director should have ultimate authority on behalf of the Administrator for all aspects of the programme at the country level and should, subject to the agreement of the organizations concerned, be the central co-ordinating authority on their behalf for the other development assistance programmes of the United Nations system. In this connexion, the organizations in the United Nations system are requested to ensure that the resident directors of the Programme are consulted on the planning and formulation of development projects with which those organizations are concerned and that they are supplied with reports on the execution of those projects, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1453 (XLVII) of 8 August 1969.

64. The creation of new field offices or the enlargement of the existing ones should depend on the volume of Programme operations in the particular country and should be undertaken with due regard to the need for economy. In the strengthening of field offices, priority should be given to effective redeployment of existing staff.

65. The Inter-Agency Consultative Board should continue to be the forum for interagency consultation and co-ordination relating to the Programme. However, the Board should undertake a thorough review of its basic functions and methods of work and its relations with the Governing Council in the light of the new system of country programming of Programme assistance and the need for the efficient implementation of the country programmes.

E/4918 and Corr.1. Report of Co-ordination Committee.

RESOLUTION 1552 (XLIX), as recommended by Co-ordination Committee, E/4918, adopted by Council on 30 July 1970, meeting 1721, by 22 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the role of the regional economic commissions in development planning and the relevant parts of the report of the meetings of the executive secretaries of the regional economic commissions held in 1970, the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on its fifth session and annex II of the thirty-sixth report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination,

Taking account of recent discussions and decisions of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, including in particular the consensus at its tenth session on the general principles of United Nations Development Programme country programming,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 2563 (XXIV) of 13 December 1969 referring to the intensification and improvement of advisory services in the fields of development planning, plan implementation, public administration and management,

Considering that the provision of such technical assistance in the form of advisory services through subregional interdisciplinary teams, at the request of the Governments concerned, may be a particularly useful way of assisting some developing countries to build up their own services in these fields,

Considering, however, the need for very careful preparation of this form of technical assistance, and for the closest consultation with the regional economic commissions and other appropriate organizations within the United Nations system, in order to avoid duplication with advisory services in these fields provided from other sources,

1. Takes note of the experimental nature of this scheme and of the two teams to be established as set out in paragraph 16 of the report of the meetings of the executive secretaries of the regional economic commissions held in 1970;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to examine different ways of financing further projects of this nature;

3. Invites further the Secretary-General to pursue his consultations with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme regarding the participation of the Programme in the preparation of projects of this kind, and as one of the sources of finance;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council:

(a) On the results of his examination and consultations in accordance with operative paragraphs 2 and 3 above;

(b) On the activities of the two teams referred to in operative paragraph 1 above, paying particular attention to the way in which their activities relate to the over-all technical assistance provided through the United Nations development system;

(c) On the extent to which maximum use has been or would be made of the staff and services of the regional economic commissions, in particular the United Nations regional advisers, as well as those of the specialized agencies concerned.

UNITED NATIONS PROGRAMMES OF TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION

The term "United Nations programmes of technical co-operation" has been used in a collective sense to describe the work carried out by the United Nations in developing countries: (a) through regular-budget financing, and (b) under the Technical Assistance and Special Fund components of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), of which the United Nations is a participating and executing agency. The United Nations Development Programme is a co-operative venture of the United Nations and its related agencies and is financed from voluntary contributions by Governments.

ACTIVITIES IN 1970

During 1970, obligations for the United Nations programmes of technical co-operation were $55.3 million, as compared with $47.9 million in 1969 and $46.6 million in 1968.

The expenditures in 1970 were broken down as follows:

(1) "regular programme" allocations, that is, financed from the United Nations regular budget—$5.7 million;

(2) allocations under the Technical Assistance component of UNDP—$11.2 million;

(3) projects under the UNDP Special Fund component for which the United Nations was the executing agency—$32.1 million;

(4) extra-budgetary operations (including the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and programmes financed from the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the Fund of the United Nations for the Development of West Irian)—$6.3 million.

Under the regular programme, regional and inter-regional activities accounted for 52.8 per cent of the expenditures in 1970, as compared with 51.2 per cent in 1969 and 49 per cent in 1968. Under all programmes (the regular programme, the Technical Assistance component of UNDP and other programmes), regional and inter-regional activities accounted for 27.2 per cent in 1970, as compared with 29.9 per cent in 1969 and 27.4 per cent in 1968.

The total number of experts, excluding those working on Special Fund component projects, totalled 1,241, as compared with 1,367 in 1969. The number of experts working on Special Fund component projects reached 977 in 1970, as compared with 767 in 1969.

The number of fellowships awarded in 1970 totalled 2,344, as compared with 2,019 in 1969. This figure excluded Special Fund fellowships (which totalled 424, as compared with 167 in 1969), but included those awarded under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (territories under Portuguese administration, Namibia, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia).

The two tables which follow show the experts and fellowships provided by the United Nations during 1970 and the expenditures by field of activity.

PROVISION OF OPERATIONAL ASSISTANCE PERSONNEL

During 1970, under projects administered by the United Nations for the provision of operational assistance personnel, there were 67 officers filling posts in the following 29 countries and territories: Afghanistan, the Bahamas, Bolivia, Botswana, Ecuador, Ethiopia, the Gambia, Ghana, Guyana, Jamaica, Kenya, Laos, Lesotho, Malawi, Malaysia, Malta, Nepal, Nigeria, the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Swaziland, Syria, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Western Samoa and Zambia.

DECISIONS OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At its July 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council, in discussing the reports of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, considered the technical co-operation activities undertaken by the Secretary-General.

The Secretary-General had submitted to the ninth (January 1970) session of the Governing Council a report on the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation which included a statement on its future character and role. He had submitted to the tenth (June 1970) session his annual report on the programme, including a synopsis of the assistance provided in 1969, together with statistical data and an indication of the characteristics of the assistance provided to Governments in various regions, as well as a statement of the major efforts which had been made to render the technical co-operation activities of the United Nations more responsive to the needs of Governments.

The Economic and Social Council's action in this connexion was limited to the adoption of a resolution (1529 (XLIX)) taking note of the reports of the Governing Council.

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The budget appropriations for the United Nations for the financial year 1971, approved by the General Assembly on 17 December 1970, included an appropriation of $6,908,000 for the regular programme of technical co-operation. This sum included $1.5 million for financial activities in the field of industrial development to be undertaken by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (see below, pp. 408-19). Thus, the Assembly appropriated the sum of $5,408,000 to finance technical co-operation activities in the fields of economic development, social development and public administration, human rights advisory services and narcotic drugs control. (For text of resolution 2738A(XXV), see pp. 852-53.)

<sup>b</sup> The totals for experts by country of assignment are somewhat higher than the totals shown by nationality because a number of individual experts had more than one country of assignment.

<sup>c</sup> The totals for fellowships by host country are somewhat higher than the totals shown by nationality because some fellowship awards called for study in two or more countries.

The figures given under the heading "Supplied by" are based on orders placed in the various countries during the course of 1970, whereas the figures given under the heading "Received by" refer to estimated expenditure within the year (as do the figures for "Total project expenditure"). Consequently, the totals of the two equipment columns do not correspond exactly.

Data exclude agency overhead costs.

<sup>c</sup> Refers to technical assistance activities, other than those carried out under UNDP, which were financed from regular budgetary resources of other organizations of the United Nations family.

WORLD FOOD PROGRAMME

During 1970, the World Food Programme (WFP), a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), increased its assistance to developing countries by making available food commodities for use in projects of economic and social development, and continued to provide relief in emergency situations.

At a pledging conference held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 23 January 1970, States Members of the United Nations and members and associate members of FAO pledged contributions to the WFP for the two-year period 1971-1972 in food commodities, cash and services to a total value of $215.4 million. Although this amount was higher than announced at any previous pledging conference, it fell short of the target of $300 million which had been set by the General Assembly of the United Nations<sup>5</sup> and the FAO Conference. By the end of 1970, additional pledges had brought the total for 1971-1972 to $216.1 million; of this sum, however, only $186.1 million was actually available, due to the operation of a matching clause in the United States pledge. (For table on pledges for 1971-1972, see pp. 372-74.)

Additional pledges were also received during 1970 for the 1969-1970 pledging period, bringing the total for that period from the $256.1 million reached at the end of 1969 to $261.1 million.

In addition to the above pledges, a number of Governments announced during 1970 that they would channel through WFP, in whole or in part, the food-grains which they were obliged to contribute as aid to the developing countries pursuant to the Food Aid Convention concluded as part of the International Grains Arrangement of 1967. These announcements, which covered a total value of $39 million at the end of 1969, had increased to $41.9 million at the end of 1970. (For details of Food Aid Convention contributions, see table on p. 373.)

ACTIVITIES IN 1970

As in previous years, the annual allocation of $10 million in WFP resources placed at the disposal of the Director-General of FAO for emergency aid proved insufficient; in 1970, it was increased by the Programme's Intergovernmental Committee to $18 million. In addition, some commodities were also made available to the Director-General for emergency assistance. As a result, during 1970 the Director-General was able to approve 27 emergency operations, at a total cost of $19,557,600. The largest of these operations, at a cost of $4.3 million, was for the relief of victims of the cyclone and tidal wave which struck East Pakistan in November 1970.

The main emphasis in the Programme's activities, however, continued to be on the provision of food commodities to developing countries to assist them in carrying out projects for economic and social development while combating undernourishment. During 1970, $254,780,300 was committed to 88 development projects in 41 countries, as compared with $335.8 million in 1969, $208.6 million in 1968 and $463.2 million in the entire six-year period 1963-1968. (For breakdown of commitments approved during 1970, see table on pp. 373-74.)

The decrease in the level of approvals as compared with 1969 reflected the fact that the volume of resources required for the implementation of previously approved projects reduced the reserves against which new commitments could be made. The volume of disbursements in implementation of development projects—which were approved for durations of up to five years—increased from $46.4 million in 1968 to $71.8 million in 1969 and $126.1 million in 1970.

The projects approved during 1970 ranged from the development of human resources by the feeding of vulnerable groups to the improvement of irrigation schemes, and included: the feeding of mothers and young children; nutritional education; feeding of primary- and secondary-school and university students; student and volunteer work programmes; dairy development; soil conservation; land reclamation, development and settlement, including the settlement of refugees; afforestation; construction of dikes, dams and roads; self-help housing; construction of community facilities through mutual-help schemes; and the establishment of food reserves.

In appraising requests for assistance and in evaluating projects, WFP relied on its two parent bodies, the United Nations and FAO, as well as on the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization. In several cases these organizations, through the United Nations Development Programme or on their own, also provided technical co-operation to the recipient Governments in the execution of projects for which WFP furnished food aid. On other projects WFP was assisted by the United Nations Children's Fund and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The Programme also co-operated on a number of projects with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and with regional development banks. In several cases, the Programme's activities were co-ordinated with those of non-governmental organizations.

CONSIDERATION BY ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At its July 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council considered the eighth annual report of the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme, covering the period from May 1969 to April 1970.

The annual report contained the reports of the Intergovernmental Committee's sixteenth and seventeenth sessions, held respectively from 13 to 17 October 1969 in Rome, Italy, and from 6 to 15 April 1970 at United Nations Headquarters.

The annual report also incorporated a special report on food aid and related issues during the Second United Nations Development Decade, prepared in response to a General Assembly request of 20 December 1968.<sup>6</sup>

It was recommended in the special report that the General Assembly draw the attention of member States to the advantages of channelling a greater proportion of food aid through multilateral channels, as well as to the fact that recent experience had demonstrated that the World Food Programme could, without a basic change in its procedures, effectively utilize resources double or more than the $300 million agreed on as the pledging target for 1971-1972.

Other recommendations of the report concerned the avoidance by food aid programmes of harmful effects on the agriculture of developing countries and on normal commercial trade; the role of food aid generally, and of the World Food Programme in particular, in emergency relief; and the programming of WFP and other food aid assistance for economic and social development. Concerning aid-in-kind other than food aid, the report indicated that the Intergovernmental Committee did not consider it advisable at that time to make the operational changes which would probably be required if the Programme were to handle such aid, although it would re-examine its position if circumstances should change during the Second Development Decade.

On 30 July 1970, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, the Economic and Social Council took note of the eighth annual report of the Intergovernmental Committee and decided to transmit to the General Assembly the special report on food aid and related issues during the Second United Nations Development Decade.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The General Assembly considered the special report on food aid and related issues during the

Second United Nations Development Decade at its 1970 session.

On 11 December 1970, the Assembly, recognizing that the world food problem was an inseparable part of the broader problem of development, noted the recommendations and observations contained in the report of the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme, in particular those concerning the direction of food aid through multilateral channels, the doubling or more of the target level of the Programme and improvement of the Programme's procedures.

The Assembly invited member States to take account of the relevant recommendations and observations in the report in considering the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second Development Decade. It also reaffirmed that the ultimate solution to the food problem of the developing countries lay in increased production in the food-deficient developing countries, with the co-operation of the developed countries.

The Assembly then recommended to member States: (a) that food supplies in excess of commercial demand should be used to an increasing extent to meet the unsatisfied food needs of people in developing countries and to assist in their economic and social development; (b) that full consideration be given to the advantages of directing a greater proportion of food aid through multilateral channels; and (c) that special emphasis should be placed on using the World Food Programme when expanding multilateral food aid. In that connexion, the Assembly noted that recent experience demonstrated that the World Food Programme could effectively utilize resources up to double or more than double the target level of $300 million for pledges for 1971-1972 without basic changes in the Programme's procedures.

The Governments were further requested, wherever possible and without prejudice to the obligations arising from existing international agreements, to endeavour to raise their cash contributions to WFP above the amounts required for transport, insurance and other operational services of the Programme so as to enable it to increase its purchases from food exporting developing countries at world market prices.

The Assembly then requested the World Food Programme's Intergovernmental Committee and its Executive Director to take appropriate action on the suggestions contained in the Committee's special report concerning the improvement of the Programme's procedures and administration and to report back in 1973.

The Secretary-General and the Director-General of FAO were requested to report as soon as possible to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council on the evolution of the food problem in developing countries and progress made towards its solution, in accordance also with an earlier General Assembly request of 20 December 1968.<sup>7</sup>

The Assembly also noted that, pursuant to the same 1968 resolution, the Director-General of FAO had reported to the FAO Council on ways of making appraisals of prospective food deficits and food aid needs and of ensuring that sufficient foodstuffs were available to cope with unforeseen urgent situations, including through the establishment of food reserves; the Assembly invited the Director-General to report on this subject to the Economic and Social Council as soon as possible.

These decisions of the General Assembly were embodied in resolution 2682 (XXV), which was adopted by 101 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The text was based on a proposal by Canada, Ireland, Jamaica, Madagascar, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Turkey, amended by Argentina and France, and approved by the Committee on 27 November 1970 by a vote of 82 to 0, with 9 abstentions.

At the request of the United States, the Committee took a separate vote on the final provision of the resolution, dealing with appraisals of prospective food deficits and food aid needs and with means to insure the availability of sufficient foodstuffs to cope with unforeseen urgent situations, including through the establishment of food reserves. This provision was approved by 81 votes to 1, with 10 abstentions.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 2096 (XX) of 20 December 1965 and 2300 (XXII) of 12 December 1967 on the programme of studies on multilateral food aid and resolution 2462 (XXIII) of 20 December 1968,

Recognizing that the world food problem is an inseparable part of the broader problem of development,

Having examined the report entitled "Food aid and related issues during the Second Development Decade," prepared by the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme, as well as the comments of the Economic and Social Council in its report,

Taking note of the recommendations and observations contained in the report of the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme, in particular those concerning the direction of food aid through multilateral channels, the doubling or more of the target level of the World Food Programme and the improvement of the procedures of the Programme,

1. Notes with appreciation the report of the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme and invites member States to take account of the relevant recommendations and observations therein while considering the implementation of the policy measures set out in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade;

2. Reaffirms that the ultimate solution to the food problem of the developing countries lies in increased production in the developing countries with a food deficit, in the context of their general economic development, with the co-operation of the developed countries;

3. Recommends to member States that:

(a) Such food supplies as are in excess of commercial demand should be used to an increasing extent constructively to meet the unsatisfied food needs of people in the developing countries and to assist in their economic and social development, particularly through a project-oriented approach;

(b) They give full consideration to the advantages of directing a greater proportion of food aid through multilateral channels;

(c) When expanding multilateral food aid, they should place special emphasis on using the World Food Programme in order to take advantage of the experience already gained by the Programme and of its access to the experience of both donor and recipient countries with bilateral aid and the expertise and co-ordinating facilities of the United Nations system of organizations;

4. Draws the attention of member States to the fact that recent experience demonstrates that the World Food Programme could effectively utilize resources up to double or more than double the target level agreed for pledges in 1971 and 1972 without basic changes in the existing procedures of the Programme;

5. Requests Governments of member States to endeavour, wherever possible and without prejudice to the obligations arising from existing international agreements, to raise their cash contribution to the World Food Programme above the amounts required for transport, insurance and other services for operations of the Programme so as to enable it to increase its purchases from exporting developing countries at world market prices;

6. Requests the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme and the Executive Director of the World Food Programme to take appropriate action on the suggestions contained in the report of the Committee concerning the improvement of the Programme's procedures and administration;

7. Requests the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme, drawing on assistance as appropriate from the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and other interested organizations within the United Nations system, to review at its twenty-third session the progress made on the proposals contained in the report of the Committee and to submit its findings to the Economic and Social Council for transmission to the General Assembly at its twenty-eighth session;

8. Reminds the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations of the contents of paragraph 9 of General Assembly resolution 2462 (XXIII) and requests them, in consultation with the executive heads of other interested agencies and programmes, to report on this subject, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly as soon as possible;

9. Notes that, in pursuance of paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 2462 (XXIII), the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations has given active consideration to, and has consulted with member States on, possible ways of making appraisals of prospective food deficits and food aid needs and of ensuring that sufficient food-stuffs are available to cope with unforeseen urgent situations, including the establishment of food reserves, further notes that the Director-General has submitted his conclusions to the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and invites him to report to the Economic and Social Council as soon as possible.

CHAPTER IV

TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT

In 1970, the activities of a number of United Nations bodies were directed towards the formulation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, which was adopted by the General Assembly on 24 October 1970 (see pp. 319-29). Many of the policy measures outlined in the Strategy related to questions within the competence of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (see pp. 384-85).

On 16 February 1970, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, which carries out the functions of the Conference during inter-sessional periods, outlined UNCTAD'S contribution to the International Development Strategy in such fields as commodities, manufactures, trade expansion, economic co-operation and regional integration, trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems, financial resources for development, invisibles, the transfer of technology, and special measures in favour of the least developed countries and of land-locked countries.

During 1970, the General Assembly and the Trade and Development Board made decisions concerning the convening of the third session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to be held in April-May 1972.

Various approaches towards trade liberalization were promoted by UNCTAD during 1970, and in this connexion specific recommendations were made to improve the position of commodities facing competition from synthetics and substitutes.

In October 1970, the Trade and Development Board took note of mutually acceptable arrangements worked out by its Special Committee on Preferences concerning the establishment of a generalized system of non-discriminatory and non-reciprocal preferences for exports of developing countries to the markets of developed countries.

On financing related to trade, a proposal to establish a link between Special Drawing Rights within the International Monetary Fund and the provision of development finance was considered by UNCTAD.

Progress was made during the year in the evolution of international shipping policy and in promoting trade expansion, economic co-operation and regional integration among developing countries. Also during 1970, UNCTAD established an inter-governmental group on the transfer of technology to those countries.

Details of these and other matters are given in the sections that follow.

Commodity Questions

During 1970, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) continued to be concerned with commodity problems and policies and with the programme of international action on individual commodities agreed upon at the second session of UNCTAD, held in 1968.<sup>1</sup> It also considered the problems of commodity diversification in developing countries.

Further measures for dealing with the problems of natural products facing competition from synthetics, particularly intensified research and development efforts, were under consideration, and a series of studies of commodity marketing and distribution systems was begun.

Policy measures relating to commodity questions were included in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade. (See page 321, paragraphs 21-27.)

MEETINGS AND ACTION ON COMMODITY MATTERS IN 1970

COMMITTEE ON COMMODITIES

At the fifth session of the UNCTAD Committee on Commodities, held in Geneva, Switzerland, in July 1970, principles concerning the disposal of surpluses and strategic reserves and consultations among producing or consuming countries were agreed upon.

The Committee reviewed market developments and problems relating to a series of individual commodities, and it requested the UNCTAD secretariat to carry out further studies on manganese ore, phosphates and tobacco, temperate-zone products, marketing and distribution systems for primary commodities, and special measures for the least developed among the developing countries.

PERMANENT GROUP ON

SYNTHETICS AND SUBSTITUTES

The fourth session of the Permanent Group on Synthetics and Substitutes (a subsidiary body of the Committee on Commodities), held in Geneva in June-July 1970, examined measures to improve the competitiveness of natural products facing competition from synthetics.

With respect to natural rubber, the need for complete elimination of tariffs on its raw, semi-processed and improved forms was re-emphasized.

On cotton, the Permanent Group recommended intensified research efforts and extended financial technical assistance, while greater co-ordination of national policies in relation to production, marketing and research was recommended for shellac.

In addition, the Group recommended that further work be undertaken on problems arising out of competition between vegetable oils and synthetics. It also considered the matter of hard fibres.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE TO BOARD

AND TO COMMITTEE ON COMMODITIES

At its fourth session, held in Geneva in January 1970, the Advisory Committee to the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board and to the Committee on Commodities recommended that a new approach, in the form of a realistic programme with clear-cut targets, should be made by the international bodies concerned to the problem of improving access to markets for primary commodities.

At its fifth session, held in Geneva in August 1970, the Advisory Committee concentrated on the problem of mineral commodities.

TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT BOARD

At its session held in August-September 1970, the Trade and Development Board welcomed the decision of its Advisory Committee, based on a request by the Committee on Commodities, to devote an entire session in 1971 to the problems of diversification in developing countries, a subject to which the Board attached great importance.

The Board also considered policy measures on commodity problems (see below).

COCOA

The preparation of an international cocoa agreement was further discussed in the Consultative Group on Cocoa, which met in Geneva in June 1970. The Group gave special attention to the problems connected with the operation of a sales-quota system.

OLIVE OIL

The extension by protocol of the 1963 International Olive Oil Agreement (to 31 December 1973) entered into force on 15 January 1970.

The objectives of the Agreement were to secure the long-term normalization of the olive oil market by means of suitable measures designed to encourage international trade. The measures involved, among other things, the study of statistics relating to production, consumption, trade and prices, promotion, quality standards and research activities for olive oil and the promotion of table olives.

IRON ORE

An ad hoc meeting on iron ore was held in Geneva in January 1970 to identify problems of the world market for this commodity. This was the first consultation on a mineral commodity held at UNCTAD'S initiative. The meeting left it to the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to arrange any further inter-governmental consultations.

TEA

A series of meetings on tea was held under the auspices of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) with UNCTAD association, to deal with long- and short-term problems. The interim arrangement for 1970, based on export quotas, which was established pending the negotiation of a longer-term agreement, was extended to cover 1971. Two conciliators, one from FAO and the other from UNCTAD, were appointed and entrusted with the task of consulting among exporting countries with the object of developing agreement on export quotas in a long-term agreement.

TIN

The United Nations Conference on Tin, held in Geneva in April-May 1970, adopted the text of an international tin agreement which incorporated some modifications over earlier ones, particularly regarding buffer-stock operations.

TUNGSTEN

The Working Group of the Committee on Tungsten, at its session held in November 1970, reviewed developments in the tungsten market and considered whether price quotations for tungsten concentrates were representative of that market.

OTHER COMMODITY MATTERS

On 18 September 1970, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board adopted a text on commodity problems and policies having to do with pricing policy and trade liberalization. The Board considered that its decision could lead to the adoption of an international policy on primary commodities.

By its decision, the Board recommended that certain objectives and principles be observed, where possible, by Governments and competent institutions as general guidelines in deciding policies affecting commodities of special export interest to developing countries.

Questions Pertaining to Manufactures

In the field of manufactures the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) is primarily concerned with policies for the expansion, diversification and promotion of exports to all markets of manufactures and semi-manufactures produced in the developing countries.

In 1970, the drawing up of mutually acceptable preferential arrangements in favour of the developing countries was the concern of the Special Committee on Preferences. The arrangements drawn up were incorporated as an integral part of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade. (See p. 322, paras. 32-34.)

Through its Committee on Manufactures, UNCTAD was also concerned with questions concerning restrictive business practices, tariff and non-tariff barriers and export policies.

PREFERENTIAL ARRANGEMENTS

At the second session of UNCTAD, held in 1968, the early establishment of a mutually acceptable system of generalized, non-reciprocal and non-discriminatory preferences beneficial to the developing countries was called for.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> See Y.U.N., 1968, pp. 371-72, for summary of resolution 21(11) of 26 March 1968.

The Special Committee on Preferences, at its meetings in March and April 1970, held detailed and intensive consultations on the basis of the preliminary offers submitted by the prospective preference-giving countries. Certain improvements in the offers were requested. The prospective preference-giving countries undertook to bring these to the attention of their respective authorities so that they might be taken into account in final submissions to the Special Committee.

The revised offers were submitted to the September-October 1970 meetings of the Special Committee on Preferences. At this session, the Special Committee completed its work with the drawing up of arrangements concerning the establishment of generalized, non-discriminatory, non-reciprocal preferential treatment for exports of developing countries to the markets of developed countries.

Agreed Conclusions were adopted by the Special Committee on the following aspects of the arrangements as a whole: reverse and special preferences, safeguard mechanisms, beneficiaries, special measures in favour of the least developed among the developing countries, duration, rules of origin, institutional arrangements and legal status.

The Special Committee on Preferences welcomed with appreciation the submissions by the developed market economy countries, which represented an important success in the efforts and endeavours of UNCTAD to put a generalized system of preferences into operation.

Furthermore, the Special Committee recognized that the preferential arrangements were mutually acceptable and represented a co-operative effort which had resulted from the detailed and intensive consultations between the developed and developing countries which had taken place in UNCTAD. This co-operation would continue to be reflected in the future in connexion with the periodic reviews of the system and its operation.

The Special Committee noted the determination of the prospective preference-giving countries to seek as rapidly as possible the necessary legislative or other sanction with the aim of implementing the preferential arrangements as early as possible in 1971.

The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, at its October 1970 session, adopted the report of the Special Committee on Preferences and took note of the Agreed Conclusions. The Board requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to transmit to the appropriate body an agreed text on the question of preferences for incorporation in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

The Board also decided to extend the existence of the Special Committee on Preferences until the eleventh session of the Board, due to be held in 1971.

The Working Group on Rules of Origin—for the generalized system of preferences—a Subsidiary body of the Special Committee on Preferences, worked out, at sessions held in July and in December 1970, agreed texts on the following subjects: wholly produced goods, minimal process, consignments of small value, direct consignments, documentary evidence, verification, sanctions, mutual co-operation, treatment of packing, unit of qualification, and exhibitions and fairs. It also drew up a combined form for the Declaration and Certificate of Origin; notes to appear on the reverse of this form; and an application form for the Certificate of Origin.

TARIFF BARRIERS AND TARIFF RECLASSIFICATION

At its January 1970 session, the Committee on Manufactures requested the UNCTAD secretariat to keep under review three questions relevant to the consideration of tariff barriers: the non-application of most-favoured-nation treatment to developing countries that were non-members of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade; the advance implementation of concessions agreed to in the 1964-67 trade negotiations (known as the Kennedy Round) on manufactured and semi-manufactured products of interest to developing countries; and increases in tariff differentials as a result of the Kennedy Round.

With regard to tariff reclassification, the Committee urged the expediting of work on the technical examination of hand-made and handicraft products in order to establish criteria to distinguish them from products which are machine-made.

It was also decided that in the light of the progress made in this work and towards a generalized system of preferences, the date for the reconvening of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Tariff Reclassification (established in 1968) could be decided upon in 1971.

NON-TARIFF BARRIERS

Also in January 1970, the Committee on Manufactures established a sessional committee to deal with the question of non-tariff barriers. In addition, it provided, among other things, a programme of work for the UNCTAD secretariat on the question; decided to set up a sessional committee again at its next session to consider the question of non-tariff barriers; and adopted a standstill arrangement with respect to non-tariff barriers.

EXPORT POLICIES

On incentives for industrial exports, the Committee on Manufactures recognized that some types of export incentives were appropriate and necessary for the expansion and diversification of exports of the developing countries and that these countries should be aware of the problems connected with the use of export incentives. The Committee agreed that it had an obligation to keep the subject under review and to resume consideration of the question at future sessions.

In addition, the Committee stressed the need for greater co-operation between UNCTAD and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), so that commercial policy aspects would be fully taken into account in UNIDO'S activities.

Questions of Financing Related to Trade

During 1970, questions of financial resources for development, particularly in the context of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, were discussed by the General Assembly, the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and its Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade. (For text of the Strategy, embodied in resolution 2626 (XXV), see pp. 319-29.)

The issues taken up related to the flow of financial resources, the liberalization of terms and conditions of assistance, objectives for the mobilization of domestic resources, and international monetary issues. The Board also adopted a declaration on the question of supplementary financing.

FLOW OF FINANCIAL RESOURCES

On the question of the flow of financial resources, the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade had before it, during its July 1970 session, three papers: a review of recent trends in the volume of financial flows, considered against the background of the targets set by the 1968 session of UNCTAD<sup>3</sup> for financial resource transfers and for official development assistance; an examination of the outflow of capital from developing countries and of possible measures to control this outflow to conform to the development objectives of the developing countries; and a report on the economic effects of foreign investment, which in-eluded case studies relating to the experiences of Jamaica and Kenya.

(Goals and objectives concerning target dates for volume of aid were discussed by the General Assembly and included in the International Development Strategy for the Second Development Decade. See pp. 311-12.)

CONDITIONS AND TERMS OF ASSISTANCE

The Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade also considered reports on recent trends in the terms and conditions of financial flows and on measures to soften the terms of multilateral lending. In addition, it considered a study by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development on techniques of lending and one by the International Monetary Fund on the use of commercial credits by developing countries for financing imports of capital goods.

In its report to the Trade and Development Board, the Committee included a set of conclusions submitted by developing countries recommending measures to mitigate the harmful effects of tying aid. A draft proposal on the subject of tied aid was deferred by the Committee until 1971.

The Committee recommended, among other things, that UNCTAD member States should endeavour to ensure: that flows of official development assistance were not subject to short-term and unforeseen fluctuations; that projects requiring more than one financial year could be undertaken with reasonable assurance that the required financial resources would be forthcoming; and that effective planning of long-term development programmes consistent with the changing circumstances of each developing country could take place.

In another decision, the Committee recommended that the developed countries members of UNCTAD, in extending financial and technical assistance to the least developed among the developing countries, give urgent attention to extending development aid on particularly concessional terms, to affording priority access to funds on grant-like terms for technical assistance of all types, and to responding to their other special problems related to technical assistance needs.

(Sections of the International Development Strategy were particularly concerned with the least developed countries. See pp. 330-32.)

A decision on a proposal concerning terms and conditions of assistance was deferred by the Committee until 1971; a proposal on a multilateral interest equalization fund was referred to the Trade and Development Board, which deferred consideration of it to its 1971 session.

MOBILIZATION OF DOMESTIC RESOURCES

On the question of mobilization of domestic resources, the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade requested the UNCTAD secretariat to continue its work of collecting and analysing indicators in an effort to establish a more objective basis for assessment of the mobilization and effective use of internal resources.

SUPPLEMENTARY FINANCIAL MEASURES

During its August-September 1970 session, the Trade and Development Board received a report from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development on the question of supplementary financing; the report had been called for in a Board decision of 12 September 1969.<sup>4</sup>

With respect to whether a technical study had been made of a discretionary scheme of supplementary financing, the Bank's representatives reported that the Executive Directors of the Bank had concluded that it would not serve any useful purpose to explore the technicalities of such a scheme, since there was very limited support among those countries that were the major contributors to development financing for the provision of additional resources for supplementary financing. For the same reason, studies on a number of other questions had not been made, he said.

The Board adopted a declaration relating to supplementary financial measures submitted by the developing countries members of the Board. By the declaration, the Board stated that it was necessary for an effort to be made to work out the details of a discretionary scheme of supplementary financing that could be implemented within the group of organizations associated with the International Bank and to assess the probable costs of such a scheme. It expressed the hope that the Bank would give further consideration to the adoption of supplementary financial measures at the earliest opportunity and would pursue its efforts at working out a discretionary scheme of supplementary financing.

(The General Assembly, in adopting the International Development Strategy, also invited the Bank to give further consideration to the adoption of supplementary financial measures. See pp. 311-12 and p. 336.)

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY ISSUES

In its consideration of international monetary questions, the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade had before it a report on international monetary reform and co-operation for development by the Expert Group on International Monetary Issues, established in 1969.<sup>5</sup> In the report, the Expert Group discussed trends in the 1960s, liquidity, Special Drawing Rights, the case for the link between Special Drawing Rights and additional development finance, and other aspects of reform.

The Committee also considered a proposal that, inter alia, would have urged members of the International Monetary Fund to establish a direct link between Special Drawing Rights and additional development finance.

The Committee, which was unable to reach agreement on the proposal, referred it to the Trade and Development Board, which took no action on it. The Board did take note, however, of the text of a statement of the developing countries (originally submitted to the Committee) titled "International Liquidity: the Position of the Developing Countries on the Link." The Board requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to report to it on the matter in 1971.

(The question of a link between Special Drawing Rights and development assistance was taken up by the General Assembly during its discussion of the International Development Strategy. See pp. 311-12 and 336-37.)

Questions Pertaining to Invisibles, Including Shipping

The Committee on Shipping of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), at its April-May 1970 session, examined questions relating to current and long-term trends of shipping problems, levels and structure of freight rates, conference practices and adequacy of shipping services, and development or expansion of merchant marines in developing countries.

Under the last item, the Committee considered four topics, namely, assistance to shipping, financial assistance for the acquisition of ships by developing countries, manpower requirements and training facilities, and the possibility of multinational shipping enterprises.

The Committee's actions on these subjects were noted by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board at its August-September session.

During its February 1970 session, the Board took note of the report of the Working Group on International Shipping Legislation, which had held its first session in December 1969.

SHIPPING

On freight rates and conference practices, the Committee on Shipping agreed that further improvements in the liner conference system were necessary and would be in the common interest of shippers and shipowners. It also requested Governments to invite liner conferences to examine their practices thoroughly so as to eliminate any unfairness and discrimination that might exist.

The Committee recognized the principle that national flag shipping lines of developing countries should be admitted as full members of liner conferences operating in the national maritime trade of these countries and that these lines should have an increasing and substantial participation in the carriage of cargoes generated by the foreign trade of the developing countries.

The Committee on Shipping recommended that liner conferences be invited to give favourable and fair consideration to applications from national shipping lines, in particular those of developing countries.

The Committee further recommended that the scope of consultation on freight rates, conference practices and related matters should be broadened to include, where appropriate, consultations between liner conferences and interested public authorities, in addition to consultations between conferences and shippers or shippers' councils. Liner conferences were invited to initiate consultations well in advance of public announcements of changes in freight rates.

In a decision on the question of finance for the purchase of ships by developing countries, the Committee invited the signatories of the "Understanding on export credits for ships," signed by certain members of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, to define more precisely the conditions under which this understanding was to be applied to sales of ships to developing countries.

The Committee called for an intensification of national and international efforts to improve maritime training standards and increase the availability of trained maritime personnel for the merchant marines of developing countries.

Although the Committee on Shipping did not make a unanimous recommendation on the question of assistance to shipping, it did recognize that developing countries had the same right as other countries to assist, promote and protect their merchant marines through the adoption of measures which would enable them to compete in the international freight market. It further recognized that such measures should respect the responsibilities of Governments towards their shipowners and shippers.

The Committee recommended that special attention be given to the needs of the least developed among the developing countries in the contexts of bilateral and multilateral technical and financial assistance programmes in the field of maritime transport, action by liner conferences on freight rates, and secretariat studies on shipping and ports.

The General Assembly, in formulating the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, included recommendations on invisibles and recommendations for action in the field of shipping which reflected, in general, agreements reached by the Committee on Shipping. (See pp. 324-25, paragraph 53.)

INSURANCE AND TOURISM

In 1970, although neither insurance nor tourism were discussed by UNCTAD'S Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade, the General Assembly referred to both subjects in the section on invisibles in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

In order to reduce the cost of insurance and reinsurance for developing countries, especially the foreign exchange cost, the Assembly urged that the growth of national insurance and reinsurance markets in these countries be encouraged.

On tourism, the Assembly recommended the expansion of tourism by the developing countries, with the developed countries assisting in this endeavour. (See page 325, paragraphs 54-55.)

Role of United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in Second United Nations Development Decade

During 1970, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) was among United Nations bodies taking decisions concerning a strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade. (For further information on the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, see pp. 305-12.)

The contribution of UNCTAD to the Strategy for the Second Development Decade was outlined in a decision of 16 February 1970 of the Trade and Development Board. At meetings held in August and September 1970, the Board took further decisions on the subject.

DECISIONS OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT BOARD

On the basis of consultations with members of UNCTAD, the President of the Trade and Development Board and the Secretary-General of UNCTAD formulated texts that were considered at the February 1970 session of the Board.

On 16 February 1970, the Board outlined UNCTAD'S contribution to the International Development Strategy of the Second United Nations Development Decade. The contribution included policy measures on the subjects of commodities, manufactures and semi-manufactures, trade expansion and economic co-operation, financial resources for development, invisibles (including shipping), the transfer of technology, special measures in favour of the least developed countries and of land-locked countries, technical co-operation and the world food problem. It also contained sections on goals and objectives, implementation review and world public opinion.

Although agreement was reached on a great number of issues, the areas on which the Board did not agree included target dates, volume of aid, and shipping. In the absence of agreement on these and other topics, it was agreed to include as annexes or in brackets in the text the drafts that had been proposed.

The contribution of UNCTAD to the International Development Strategy was once more under consideration by the Trade and Development Board at its August-September 1970 session. At this time, a text on shipping and ports was unanimously adopted.

On the issues that still remained unresolved, a contact group working under the President of the Board was set up to try to formulate texts. Despite such efforts, however, it was not possible to reach agreement on other issues.

Thus the Board invited the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to transmit draft texts, containing suggestions made by States members, to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, so that they could be referred to in the course of the General Assembly's consideration of the International Development Strategy for the Second Development Decade.

Individual and joint statements were included as annexes to the UNCTAD contribution. These presented points of view very similar to those presented to the Economic and Social Council and to the General Assembly during their consideration of the Strategy. (See pp. 309-10 and pp. 312-14.)

DECISION OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

On 31 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council expressed its appreciation of the contribution made by various bodies and organizations of the United Nations system in the preparation of a draft of an international development strategy. It also expressed its concern that agreement had not been reached on a number of substantive issues, particularly in relation to certain important policy measures in the field of international trade and aid.

In particular, the Council requested the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD to continue its efforts during 1970 to reach agreement on those issues within its competence which still remained unresolved.

These were among the decisions contained in Council resolution 1556 A (XLIX). (See pp. 317-18 for text.)

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On 24 October 1970, the General Assembly unanimously adopted an International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade. The Strategy was embodied in Assembly resolution 2626(XXV). (For text, see pp. 319-29.)

The contribution of UNCTAD to the Strategy related to the measures on international trade, trade expansion, economic co-operation and regional integration, financial resources for development, invisibles, including shipping, and special measures in favour of the least developed countries and in favour of the land-locked countries.

The issues that had remained unresolved by UNCTAD, in particular, target dates and the volume of aid, were decided upon by the General Assembly.

In another decision, the General Assembly invited the Trade and Development Board to draw the attention of the third UNCTAD session (due to be held in 1972), in its role in the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second Development Decade, to the importance of:

(a) reviewing the progress made in and seeking further implementation of the policy measures as agreed upon within the context of the International Development Strategy;

(b) reaching agreement in more specific terms on issues that had not been fully resolved in the Strategy and that had an important bearing on its implementation;

(c) seeking new areas of agreement and widening existing ones; and

(d) evolving new concepts and seeking agreement on additional measures.

The Assembly also recommended that the institutional machinery of UNCTAD be fully oriented towards the implementation of the relevant provisions of the International Development Strategy.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2725(XXV)—adopted on 15 December 1970—which had to do with the third session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. (For text, see pp. 394-95.)

Questions Pertaining to the Development of Trade Relations

TRADE EXPANSION, ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION AND INTEGRATION AMONG DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

During 1970, the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

(UNCTAD) continued its activities relating to trade expansion, economic co-operation and regional integration among developing countries. These activities included research on fiscal compensation systems, the provision of technical assistance, and the convening of an Intergovernmental Group on Trade Expansion, Economic Co-operation and Regional Integration among Developing Countries.

The technical assistance activities of UNCTAD in this field involved, for example, an examination of the possibilities for economic co-operation among the countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations, support of a project on trade expansion, and participation in various technical assistance missions in Africa and the Caribbean.

The secretariat continued to collaborate with the secretariat of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade in servicing the Trade Negotiations Committee of Developing Countries, an inter-regional effort to expand trade among developing countries through preferential measures to liberalize trade.

In November 1970, the Intergovernmental Group on Trade Expansion, Economic Co-operation and Regional Integration met to seek ways and means for facilitating the implementation of the concerted declaration on trade expansion, economic co-operation and regional integration, adopted at the second session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in 1968.<sup>6</sup>

Before the Intergovernmental Group were studies on the following subjects: trade flows among developing countries and the activities of various regional and sub-regional bodies of economic co-operation; problems of ensuring a satisfactory distribution of benefits within economic groupings and solutions applied by some of them; techniques for trade liberalization; untying of aid; and international policies on payments arrangements among developing countries.

The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board decided to consider the report of the Intergovernmental Group in 1971.

The General Assembly, in its formulation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, included a section on trade expansion, economic co-operation and regional integration among developing countries (see p. 322, paras. 39-40).

LAND-LOCKED COUNTRIES

The Group of Experts, established in 1968 by the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to carry out a comprehensive examination of the special problems involved in the promotion of the trade and economic development of the land-locked developing countries, met from 11 May to 4 July 1970.

The report prepared by the Group of Experts analysed the nature and significance of the problems confronting land-locked developing countries and recommended a set of specific policy measures in favour of these countries.

The recommendations of the Group of Experts were classified into three broad groups, namely, administrative and other measures not requiring investments; measures requiring investment in the transport and communications infrastructure; and measures directed towards adapting the economic structure of the land-locked developing countries to their land-locked position.

At its August-September 1970 session, the Trade and Development Board considered the report and invited the land-locked developing countries and their transit neighbours to take note of the appropriate recommendations in that report in their efforts to evolve mutually acceptable solutions.

The Board also invited the United Nations Development Programme, the specialized agencies, international financial institutions and the Governments of developed countries members of UNCTAD to take into account the appropriate recommendations of the Group of Experts and to give favourable consideration to requests from land-locked countries for financial and technical assistance, including, where appropriate, financial assistance on soft terms.

The Committee on Shipping at its April-May 1970 session recommended that all possible financial and technical assistance be provided by developed countries and by the competent international institutions to enable the least developed countries to undertake projects for reducing the costs of their maritime transport, taking into account the special problems of the land-locked countries.

The General Assembly, in formulating the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, included a section on special measures in favour of the land-locked developing countries. (See p. 325, paragraph 59.)

INTERNATIONAL TRADE CENTRE

In 1970, the International Trade Centre, jointly administered by UNCTAD and by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, completed its third year of operation.

The Centre offered trade promotion assistance to developing countries by providing information on export markets, assisting in the development of export promotion and marketing organizations and services, and helping in the training of specialized personnel.

(For further information on the International Trade Centre, see pp. 396-98.)

TRADE RELATIONS AMONG COUNTRIES WITH DIFFERENT ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL SYSTEMS

The question of trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems was discussed in 1970 by a sessional committee of the whole of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board.

The committee noted the increasing growth of trade in 1969 among these countries. The growth rate of trade between developing countries and centrally planned economy countries of Eastern Europe was higher than the growth rate of the total foreign trade of the latter, and it was hoped that the share of the developing countries in that trade would continue to increase steadily. A high rate of growth was also achieved in East-West trade in 1969.

It was stressed that there existed further scope for expansion in both types of trade.

In this connexion, the committee of the whole of the Trade and Development Board noted the introduction of new measures and techniques of mutual trade expansion and particularly the role that industrial co-operation could play.

In addition to multilateral discussions held by the Board, a round of bilateral consultations took place on a confidential, voluntary and non-committal basis between interested countries in attendance, involving 51 consultations among 38 member countries. It was generally felt by these countries that such consultations had been useful and could play an important role in further increasing their trade exchanges.

PROGRESSIVE DEVELOPMENT OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE LAW

During its February 1970 session, the Trade and Development Board took note of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, which included an account of the action taken in respect of the Board's work on international shipping legislation and the co-ordination of this work with the related activities of UNCTAD.

(For further information on the Commission on International Trade Law, see pp. 807-10.)

LEAST DEVELOPED COUNTRIES

During 1970, the question of the least developed among the developing countries received special attention by UNCTAD and by the General Assembly.

DECISIONS OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT BOARD

At its February 1970 session, the Trade and Development Board examined the report of the Group of Experts on special measures in favour of the least developed countries, which had been convened by the Secretary-General of UNCTAD.

On 13 February 1970, the Board requested each of the main committees and other relevant subsidiary bodies of UNCTAD to consider the problems of the least developed among the developing countries and, taking into account the report of the Group of Experts, to submit concrete proposals to the Board on what effective measures might be taken within their fields of competence.

Thus, the Committee on Shipping, at its April-May 1970 session, recommended, among other things, that special efforts be made to establish promotional freight rates for the export products of the least developed among the developing countries and that all possible technical and financial assistance be provided expeditiously by developed countries and international financial institutions to enable these countries to undertake projects for reducing the costs of their maritime transport.

Similarly, at its July 1970 session, the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade recommended that the developed countries members of UNCTAD, and competent international institutions, in extending financial and technical assistance to the least developed among the developing countries, give urgent consideration to extending development aid on particularly concessional terms, and to affording them priority access to funds available on grant-like terms for technical assistance.

It also asked that the developed countries give consideration not only to the difficulties experienced by these countries in meeting the local counterpart requirements in multilateral and bilateral technical assistance but also to modifying and, if possible, waiving certain of these requirements.

The Special Committee on Preferences, during its September-October 1970 session, adopted Agreed Conclusions, which included a section on special measures in favour of the least developed countries. Among other things, it was stated that the preference-giving countries would consider, on a case-by-case basis, the inclusion in the generalized system of preferences of products of export interest mainly to the least developed countries, and, as appropriate, greater tariff reductions on such products.

Other measures had also been prepared with a view to enabling the least developed countries to derive additional benefits from the generalized system of preferences. These included the identification of products for which the generalized system of preferences opened up new or improved export possibilities for the least developed countries, market studies for such products, and assistance in the establishment or improvement of export promotion services.

The Intergovernmental Group on Trade Expansion, Economic Co-operation and Regional Integration among Developing Countries, meeting in November 1970, adopted conclusions which included a reference to the least developed countries. It was stated that the least developed countries in an economic integration grouping might require special attention designed to allow them to receive a satisfactory share in the benefits of such schemes.

During its August-September 1970 session, the Trade and Development Board considered once more the question of the least developed countries. After reviewing the progress made by the committees and other subsidiary organs, the Board decided, inter alia, to establish within UNCTAD an ad hoc group of experts, designated in their personal capacity, to assist the Board and its permanent organs in all matters concerning special measures in favour of the least developed countries.

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Special measures in favour of the least developed countries were also considered by the General Assembly when it adopted the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, on 24 October 1970.

Among the policy measures formulated by the General Assembly was the recommendation that every possible effort would be made to ensure the sustained economic and social progress of the least developed countries and to enhance their capacity to benefit fully and equitably from the policy measures for the Second Development Decade.

Concerted efforts would be made early in the Decade by developed countries and international organizations through their programmes of technical assistance and through financial aid, including grants and/or exceptionally soft loans, to meet the needs of the least developed countries and to enhance their absorptive capacity.

Reference was also made to measures to be taken in favour of the least developed countries in the field of primary commodities, manufactures and semi-manufactures, the general system of preferences and regional co-operation.

(See also pp. 330-32, and for text of the International Strategy, pp. 319-29.)

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly once more took up the question of the least developed countries when it considered the identification of these countries.

The Assembly affirmed the urgency of identifying the least developed among the developing countries, invited the Economic and Social Council, the Trade and Development Board and other international bodies to accord high priority to the question of the identification, and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly at its 1971 session on the progress made towards the identification of those countries. These decisions were embodied in resolution 2724 (XXV).

Other Activities

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

During 1970, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) provided technical assistance in the following fields: export promotion and marketing; trade policy, planning and projections; trade expansion and integration; shipping and ports; and insurance and reinsurance.

Such assistance activities were funded by extra-budgetary resources derived from participation as an operational agency of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), by trust funds administered by UNDP and by resources from the United Nations Regular Programme of Technical Co-operation.

For the execution of projects in the field of export promotion and marketing, UNCTAD relied on the International Trade Centre, jointly administered by UNCTAD and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. (See pp. 396-98 for further details.)

Technical assistance projects provided by UNCTAD chiefly involved the provision, through experts, of advisory services to Governments, the granting of fellowships for study or observation abroad, and the organization of regional and inter-regional seminars and training courses.

The projects included such activities as: the establishment of export promotion centres and the operation of national export promotion programmes; market surveys analysing foreign market prospects for specific products of developing countries; symposia in export promotion bringing together high-level officials from different Government departments as well as representatives of the private sector; assistance in the establishment and strengthening of common markets and free-trade areas among developing countries; assistance in the setting up of free-port zones and shippers' councils in developing countries; and similar assistance in connexion with the transit trade problems of land-locked countries.

As at 30 June 1970, the UNCTAD programme of technical assistance for 1970 included 91 projects for 58 countries, amounting to $1,065,000, and 20 inter-country projects, amounting to $695,800. The programme provided for 134 individual assignments to technical assistance missions and for 399 fellows and other participants in training activities.

At its session held in August-September 1970, the Trade and Development Board, in expressing satisfaction with the report before it on UNCTAD'S technical assistance activities, noted that technical assistance had an important part to play in the foreign trade and transactions in invisibles of the developing countries.

The Board noted the efforts made by the Secretary-General of UNCTAD in establishing co-operation with the regional economic commissions so that these bodies might play an important role in relation to UNCTAD'S technical assistance activities in their respective geographical areas.

TRANSFER OF TECHNOLOGY

During 1970, both the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD and the General Assembly were concerned with the question of the transfer of technology, including know-how and patents, to the developing countries.

On 18 September 1970, the Trade and Development Board decided to establish an Intergovernmental Group on Transfer of Technology to carry out certain functions in this field. The Intergovernmental Group was to be composed of 45 members, on the basis of equitable geographical distribution; as far as possible, the representation in the Group was to be at an expert level.

The Board decided that the functions of UNCTAD with regard to the transfer of technology would include the following:

- (a) continuing the identification of obstacles and problems that might limit the transfer;
- (b) considering studies and proposals in the field;
- (c) considering various forms of the foreign exchange costs of the transfers;
- (d) considering licensing and similar arrangements, giving particular attention to features that might hamper the expansion of the industries and exports of the developing countries and also the limitations that might exist in those countries to the effective use of technology; and
- (e) identifying, in co-operation with specialized agencies as appropriate, additional factors within UNCTAD'S field of competence.

The Board also decided that, in performing these functions, UNCTAD would co-operate with other bodies in the United Nations system and pursue its work in this field on a continuing basis.

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly endorsed the decisions of the Trade and Development Board and reaffirmed the need for UNCTAD to pursue its work in the field of the transfer of technology.

The Assembly requested the members of UNCTAD to give their fullest support to the Intergovernmental Group on Transfer of Technology, including provision through the appropriate procedures of such budgetary support as might be necessary to ensure that the Group would be able to discharge its functions effectively.

In this connexion, the Assembly noted the importance of and the need for an adequate transfer of operative technology to developing countries in order to accelerate their economic and social development.

It recognized that the adoption of concerted measures and the implementation of a programme for promoting the transfer of technology constituted an important element of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade. It also stressed the role of UNCTAD in this programme.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2726 (XXV), adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 106 to 0, with 10 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text on 11 December 1970, by a roll-call vote of 91 to 0, with 9 abstentions. The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Trade and Development Board on the first part of its tenth session,

Bearing in mind the importance of and the need for an adequate transfer of operative technology to developing countries in order to accelerate their economic and social development,

Recognizing that the adoption of concerted measures and the implementation, by developed and developing countries and competent international organizations, of a programme for promoting the transfer of technology to developing countries constitute an important element of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

Stressing the role that the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, within its competence, will be called upon to play in this programme, in particular to consider studies and, as appropriate, suggest measures aimed at broadening and facilitating the conditions for the transfer of operative technology to the developing countries, with the object of satisfying the needs of those countries, taking fully into account the special requirements of the least developed among them.

Recalling its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1454(XLVII) of 8 August 1969 and 1544 (XLIX) of 30 July 1970, as well as Trade and Development Board resolutions 48(VII) of 21 September 1968 and 62(IX) of 12 September 1969,

1. Endorses Trade and Development Board resolution 74(X) of 18 September 1970, whereby the Intergovernmental Group on Transfer of Technology of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development was established with a view to advancing the work in this field;

2. Reaffirms in this connexion the need for the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to pursue its work in the field of the transfer of operative technology to the developing countries on a continuing basis;

3. Requests the States members of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to give their fullest support to the Intergovernmental Group on Transfer of Technology, including provision through the appropriate procedures of such budgetary support as may be necessary to ensure that the Group will be able to discharge effectively its functions, as defined in Trade and Development Board resolution 74(X).

Third Session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

During 1970, the General Assembly as well as the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) considered the question of the third session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

In accordance with an Assembly decision of 30 December 1964,<sup>7</sup> UNCTAD is expected to convene a conference at intervals of not more than three years. Its second session was held in New Delhi, India, in 1968.<sup>8</sup>

At meetings held in February 1970, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board held preliminary discussions at which it was decided that: provisionally Geneva, Switzerland, should be the location of the third session; the third session might be scheduled for early 1972; and the provisional agenda for the third session should be determined by the Board at its next session.

At its August-September 1970 session, the Trade and Development Board recommended to the General Assembly that the third session be convened in April/May 1972. The Board also noted that in due course it would make its final recommendation to the Assembly concerning the location of the third session.

At the same time, the Board approved illustrative lists of substantive items for inclusion in the draft provisional agenda for the third session.

During its debate concerning the third session, the Trade and Development Board also considered a draft resolution by which it would have recommended that the General Assembly invite interested countries which were not yet members of UNCTAD and which adhered to the principles of the United Nations Charter to participate in the third session on an equal footing. This proposal, sponsored by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Iraq, Poland, Romania, Syria and the USSR, was rejected by a roll-call vote of 28 to 9, with 12 abstentions.

Later in 1970, at its twenty-fifth session, the General Assembly considered the recommendations of the Trade and Development Board and on 15 December 1970 decided that the Third session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should be convened in April/May 1972.

The Assembly expressed its concern that, two and a half years after the second session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and in spite of the efforts made in the process of formulating and reaching agreement on the International Development Strategy (see pp. 311-15), a number of issues referred to UNCTAD by the second session of the Conference remained unresolved.

The Assembly also noted with deep concern that the recent trends in some developed countries towards intensification of protectionism might jeopardize vital trade interests of all countries, particularly developing countries, and might threaten the very basis of international economic co-operation during the 1970s.

Among other things, the Assembly invited the Trade and Development Board to draw the attention of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, at its third session, to the importance of: reviewing the progress made in and seeking further implementation of the policy measures as agreed upon within the context of the International Development Strategy; and reaching agreement in more specific terms on issues that had not been fully resolved in the Strategy.

The Assembly further recommended that the institutional machinery of UNCTAD should be fully oriented towards the implementation of the relevant provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, particularly for enabling those countries that were having difficulty in accepting certain specific provisions in the policy measures of the Strategy to make a fuller and more effective contribution to the achievement of the goals and objectives of the Second Development Decade.

Finally, the Assembly requested the Trade and Development Board to give consideration to reforms to promote further evolution in the institutional arrangements of UNCTAD in its continuing machinery and methods of work, and to make specific recommendations on such improvements.

These decisions were embodied in Assembly resolution 2725 (XXV), adopted by a recorded vote of 102 to 0, with 13 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text on 11 December 1970, by a roll-call vote of 68 to 0, with 12 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The text was proposed by: Afghanistan, Algeria, Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, the Central African Republic, Ceylon, Chad, Chile, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Madagascar, Mali, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Peru, the Philippines, Sudan, Swaziland, Syria, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2402 (XXIII) of 13 December 1968, in which it drew the attention of the States members of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to the tasks which remained unfinished and to the large number of important issues remitted by the Conference at its second session to the continuing machinery for further consideration and action,

Recalling further its suggestion to the Trade and Development Board in General Assembly resolution 2570 (XXIV) of 13 December 1969 that the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should consider, at its third session, ways and means of implementing the measures agreed upon within the continuing machinery and seek new areas of agreement in the dynamic context of the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Taking into account its resolution 2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970 in which it adopted the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade and proclaimed the Second Decade to begin on 1 January 1971,

Recalling its resolution 2641 (XXV) of 19 November 1970 concerning the review and appraisal of the objectives and policies of the International Development Strategy,

Recognizing that the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development will play, within its competence, an important role in the implementation of the International Development Strategy and in reviewing progress made in that implementation,

Recalling also its resolution 1995 (XIX) of 30 December 1964, in which it expressed its intention to seek advice from the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development before making changes in the fundamental provisions of that resolution,

Recalling further that in its resolution 2570 (XXIV) it considered that the Trade and Development Board, while making a fuller and more effective utilization of the improved machinery and methods of work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in accordance with decision 45 (VII) adopted by the Trade and Development Board on 21 September 1968, and General Assembly resolution 2402 (XXIII), should, at the same time, keep the question of further improvement in the institutional machinery of the Conference constantly under review and from time to time make such suggestions as may enable the continuing machinery to discharge the responsibility entrusted to it,

Expressing its concern that, two and a half years after the second session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and in spite of the efforts made in the process of formulating and reaching agreement on the International Development Strategy, a number of issues referred to the continuing machinery by the Conference remain unresolved,

Noting with deep concern that the recent trends in some developed countries towards intensification of protectionism may jeopardize vital trade interests of all countries, particularly of the developing countries, and may threaten the very basis of international economic co-operation during the coming decade,

1. Takes note of the report of the Trade and Development Board on its activities between 24 September 1969 and 13 October 1970;

2. Decides that the third session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development shall be convened in April/May 1972;

3. Notes that the Trade and Development Board will in due course make its final recommendation to the General Assembly concerning the location of the third session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

4. Invites the Trade and Development Board to draw the attention of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its third session, in pursuing the functions falling within its competence and its role in the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade in a dynamic context, to the importance of:

(a) Reviewing the progress made in and seeking further implementation of the policy measures as agreed upon within the context of the International Development Strategy;

(b) Reaching agreement in more specific terms on issues which have not been fully resolved in the International Development Strategy and which have an important bearing on its implementation;

(c) Seeking new areas of agreement and widening existing ones;

(d) Evolving new concepts and seeking agreement on additional measures;

5. Recommends that the institutional machinery of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should be fully oriented towards the implementation of the relevant provisions of the International Development Strategy, particularly for enabling those countries which are having difficulty in accepting certain specific provisions in the policy measures of the Strategy to make a fuller and more effective contribution to the achievement of the goals and objectives of the Second United Nations Development Decade;

6. Requests the Trade and Development Board to give consideration, in the light of paragraph 5 above and in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1995(XIX) and Trade and Development Board decision 45(VII), to such reforms of the fundamental provisions of that resolution as to promote further evolution in the institutional arrangements of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in its continuing machinery and in its methods of work, designed to increase its effectiveness and to put forward concrete suggestions for its improvement, with a view to enabling the Conference to make specific recommendations for consideration by the General Assembly.

Organizational Questions

IMPROVEMENT OF INSTITUTIONAL MACHINERY

In a decision of 15 December 1970 having to do with the third session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the General Assembly recommended that the institutional machinery of UNCTAD should be fully oriented towards the implementation of the relevant provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade (see pp. 319-29), particularly for enabling those countries that were having difficulty in accepting certain provisions in the policy measures of the Strategy to make a fuller and more effective contribution to the achievement of the goals and objectives of the Second Development Decade.

The Assembly also requested the Board to give consideration to such reforms as would promote further evolution in the institutional arrangements of UNCTAD. (For text of resolution 2725(XXV), see preceding page.)

REPORT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT BOARD

At its October-November 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council considered the report of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board for the period 24 September 1969 to 13 October 1970 and transmitted it to the General Assembly. It did so by adopting, without vote, resolution 1557(XLIX), as suggested by the Council President.

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Trade and Development Board. It did so in adopting resolution 2725(XXV), which had to do primarily with the third session of the United Nations Development Conference on Trade and Development (see section above, beginning on page 392).

CHAPTER V

THE INTERNATIONAL TRADE CENTRE

In 1970, the International Trade Centre completed its third year of operation, under the joint administration of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

In co-operation with other agencies in the United Nations family, the Centre offered trade promotion assistance to developing countries by: providing information on export markets and marketing; assisting in the development of export promotion and marketing organizations and services; and helping in the training of specialized personnel.

The Centre's regular work programme was financed from a budget contributed by UNCTAD and GATT. Technical assistance programmes were financed by voluntary country contributions and by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), through UNCTAD as a participating and executing agency of UNDP.

The Centre's programme was determined by the governing bodies of GATT and UNCTAD, on the basis of recommendations made by the Joint UNCTAD/GATT Advisory Group on the International Trade Centre. The Advisory Group was composed of experts and advisers in the field of trade promotion drawn from a large number of countries and inter-governmental organizations.

In 1970, the governing bodies of UNCTAD and GATT approved the recommendations of the third session of the Joint Advisory Group with respect to the over-all policy and orientation of the Centre's activities.

The main features of the Centre's new orientation were: (1) increased emphasis on the provision of assistance for building up export promotion organizations and services in the developing countries; (2) provision of integrated programmes of assistance over a period of years to countries where limited assistance in specific fields was not likely to be effective; and (3) deployment of the Centre's resources financed through the regular budget, especially its staff, in a manner designed to build up a strong base for planning and providing substantive support for an expanding programme of technical assistance financed from UNDP funds and voluntary country contributions.

ACTIVITIES IN 1970

During 1970, the International Trade Centre offered assistance to developing countries in four main fields: trade promotion, training, market research and research in export promotion techniques.

TRADE PROMOTION

The Centre's promotion services were aimed at assisting developing countries in setting up export promotion programmes, in building or strengthening institutions and services needed to carry out these programmes and in improving the efficiency of export marketing and promotional enterprises.

In 1970, assistance in trade promotion was provided to 58 developing countries. This included 3 integrated country programmes, 39 technical assistance assignments and 20 fact-finding and programming missions. Seven trade promotion symposia were also held.

In the field of multinational product promotion, the emphasis of the Centre shifted from research to operational activities and technical assistance. In co-operation with the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, the Food and Agriculture Organization and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, work was being done with regard to the following products: cotton, ground-nuts, jute, natural rubber, oilseeds, oils and fats, tea and tropical timber.

TRAINING

The objectives of the Centre's training programme were: (1) to train government trade-service staff and business executives in export marketing and promotion techniques; (2) to encourage government trade-service staff and the business community to work jointly in the development of export markets; and (3) to improve the operational activities and effective use of national trade-service facilities.

In 1970, the Centre developed and presented a wide range of training courses, seminars and symposia in export promotion and marketing for government and business personnel with responsibilities at the policy-making, technical and executive levels. These courses were attended by more than 300 trade officials and export executives from 40 developing countries.

MARKET RESEARCH

The Centre's market research programme was directed towards the following objectives: (1) provision of up to four major sectoral market surveys per year on products of export interest to developing countries and follow-up action through specific recommendations to individual countries; (2) provision of short market reports of ad hoc trade information in response to requests from developing countries, including specific recommendations for promotional action in appropriate cases; (3) planning of market surveys to be financed by UNDP or voluntary contributions and supervision of the execution of these surveys; and (4) support to training programmes and integrated assistance programmes which involved market research elements.

In 1970, the Centre produced market surveys on the following topics: selected manufactures of developing countries; household appliances; exotic-fruit products; articles of onyx marble and hard stones; sporting goods; veneer and plywood; wood parquets; rum and liquors; frozen boneless beef; vegetable tanning extracts; canvas sports shoes; and the Nordic (the four Scandinavian countries and Iceland) market for 10 products of developing countries. It also provided individual countries, at their request, with specific market surveys and short reports.

RESEARCH ON EXPORT PROMOTION TECHNIQUES

The Centre carried out research on export promotion organization and techniques in both the public and private sectors of developed and developing countries. The object was to study methods that had been successfully employed in developed countries and could be adapted to the needs of developing countries. The results of the research were disseminated through publication in the quarterly international trade journal Forum as well as in handbook form.

Publications of the Centre in 1970 also included the following: Getting Started in Export Trade; Select Bibliography for Trade Promo- tion Libraries; World Directory of Industry and Trade Associations; and Directory of Product and Industry Journals.

BUDGET AND STAFF

The regular budget of the International Trade Centre contributed by GATT and UNCTAD totalled US$1.2 million in 1970. Since this amount was utilized mainly for maintenance of Centre staff and base services, the Centre's operations were financed primarily from extra-budgetary resources: US$896,000 from UNDP and US$800,000 from voluntary contributions.

During 1970, the regular staff of the Centre consisted of 38 at the professional level and 46 in the general service category. In addition, 6 professional and 14 general service staff located in the GATT secretariat provided administrative and linguistic services. The Centre also had on its staff 7 professionals on loan from Governments and 2 professionals whose posts were financed from overheads.

CHAPTER VI

THE FINANCING OF ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Various issues relating to the financing of economic development were discussed by United Nations bodies in 1970. Among other things, the questions of increasing the flow of capital assistance to developing countries and evolving suitable specific guidelines for the formulation of tax treaties between developed and developing countries continued to be of concern. The Economic and Social Council took decisions on both these subjects.

The General Assembly, in a decision concerning the United Nations Capital Development Fund, requested the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to consider all possibilities for reaching the objectives of the Fund, and appealed to Member States, and in particular to developed countries, to provide substantial contributions to make the Fund operational and effective.

These and other matters are described in the following pages. Various other aspects of financing economic development were considered in 1970 by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. (See pp. 380-82.)

SPEEDING THE FLOW OF CAPITAL ASSISTANCE TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

REPORTS TO ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

Several reports by the Secretary-General and by the Economic and Social Council's Ad Hoc

Group of Experts on Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries served as the basis for the Council's review of international financial issues at its mid-1971 session.

INTERNATIONAL FLOW OF LONG-TERM CAPITAL AND OFFICIAL DONATIONS

One of the Secretary-General's reports, entitled The External Financing of Economic Development. International Flow of Long-term Capital and Official Donations, 1964-1968, reviewed the most recent available data on the movement of capital into the developing countries.

It presented definitive data for the year 1968 and analysed them against the background of comparable information for the four previous years. The data were presented in two sets, first as flows from the more advanced countries and second as flows into the developing countries. The report also surveyed the outflow of resources from the developing countries. A series of tables and figures in the report presented information on the nature and magnitude of the resources transferred.

The Secretary-General also submitted a preliminary report on the international flow of long-term capital and official donations for the year 1969.

EXPORT CREDITS AND EXPORT PROMOTION

In response to an Economic and Social Council request of 8 August 1969,<sup>1</sup> the Secretary-General prepared a report on the practical considerations relating to the establishment and operation of multinational export credit insurance schemes.

The study attempted to define, discuss and suggest solutions to the problems that might arise in the establishment and operation of such schemes.

It considered the following items: the financial structure of a multinational credit insurance scheme; the kind of transactions to be insured and the risks to be covered; the duration of credit insurance coverage; co-operation with appropriate international organizations; the possible effects of the operation of such a scheme on international competition; and the possible advantages of such a scheme with regard to the financing on the international market of export credits granted by the developing countries.

By the same decision of 8 August 1969, the Council had also requested the Secretary-General to prepare studies, in co-operation with the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the regional development banks, on ways of financing of export credits. The Secretary-General reported that he expected the studies to be completed in 1971. He also noted that these topics had been discussed at regional meetings.

TAX TREATIES BETWEEN DEVELOPED AND DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

On the question of tax treaties between developed and developing countries, the Economic and Social Council had before it a report of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries and a progress report on the subject by the Secretary-General.

The report of the Group of Experts included information on their second meeting, held in April-May 1970. It also reproduced a report by the Secretary-General to the Group on issues relating to tax treaties between developed and developing countries. (These included such matters as the scope and apportionment of business profits, services rendered by corporations, international tax treatment of losses, issues relating to the taxation of interest and an analysis of the possible functions of a panel of experts.)

The Group had been of the view that substantial progress had been made in evolving suitable specific guidelines for tax treaties. It had attempted to identify the problems in formulating such treaties and had studied and formulated texts of solutions to these problems, particularly on the questions of business profits and interest. Agreement had been reached on the question of air transport profits and on income from personal services.

The Group had also paid particular attention to how tax agreements, particularly clauses relating to exchanges of information, could be used to control tax evasion and capital outflow. In this connexion, the importance of strengthening and streamlining the operations of tax administrations was stressed.

The progress report of the Secretary-General among other things endorsed the Group's recommendation that it continue its work.

DECISIONS BY ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

EXTERNAL FINANCING

On 30 July 1970, in a decision taken without adopting a resolution, the Economic and Social Council confirmed the importance of external financing for the economic development of developing countries.

On the same day, in another decision taken without adopting a resolution, the Council took note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the external financing of economic development and on export credit (see above) and of the discussion on these subjects in its Economic Committee.

TAX TREATIES BETWEEN DEVELOPED AND DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

On 30 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council requested the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries to continue its work and requested the Secretary-General to convene the Group early in 1971 and to report to it on the results of the meeting.

In making these requests, the Council noted the Group's view that substantial progress had been made in evolving suitable specific guidelines for tax treaties.

Among other things, the Council also noted its consideration that the accommodation of differing interests was of great importance for international tax relations between developed and developing countries, and that the guidelines already formulated by the Group represented an important form of technical assistance for the conclusion of future treaties.

The Council's decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 1541(XLIX), adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Council's Economic Committee, which had approved the text, without vote, on 27 July 1970 on a proposal by Ceylon, Ghana, India, Japan, Norway, Pakistan and Yugoslavia. RESOLUTION 1541 (XLIX), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/4917, adopted without vote by Council on 30 July 1970, meeting 1721.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1273 (XLIII) of 4 August 1967 and 1430 (XLVI) of 6 June 1969 on tax treaties between developed and developing countries,

Having considered with satisfaction the progress report of the Secretary-General and the second report of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries,

Noting the Group's unanimous view endorsed by the Secretary-General that substantial progress has been made in evolving suitable specific guidelines for tax treaties through the study and formulation of texts of solutions which had the general support of the members of the Group,

Considering that the mutual accommodation of differing interests is of great importance for international tax relations between developed and developing countries, and that the guidelines already formulated by the Group represent an important form of technical assistance for the conclusion of future treaties,

Welcoming the Group's consideration of the questions referred to it by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on how the tax treaty provisions on the exchange of information could be utilized to combat tax evasion and capital flight,

Mindful of the great satisfaction expressed by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination with the work of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts,

Noting with great interest that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination unanimously endorsed the recommendation of the Secretary-General that the third meeting of the Group be convened in 1971, as recommended by the Group, to continue its successful work,

1. Requests the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries to continue its work as envisaged in operative paragraph 1 of Council resolution 1273 (XLIII);

2. Requests the Secretary-General to convene the Group in 1971, preferably in the first quarter of the year, and to make the appropriate financial allocation to enable the Group to continue its work;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the results of the third meeting of the Group.

UNITED NATIONS CAPITAL DEVELOPMENT FUND

The United Nations Capital Development Fund was discussed during 1970 by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), by the Economic and Social Council and by the General Assembly.

The UNDP Governing Council reviewed the question of the United Nations Capital Development Fund at its January 1970 session. The discussion was based on a progress report in which the Administrator of UNDP, acting provisionally as Managing Director of the Capital Development Fund, reported several proposed transactions under the Fund involving six developing countries which would be beneficiaries of equipment to be supplied by three contributing countries against their pledges to the Fund.

The Administrator asked the Governing Council to approve certain suggested guidelines and terms for loans to cover these transactions. He also requested the Governing Council to authorize him to consummate future transactions by executing loan agreements as and when they were ready and to report them to the Council at its following session. Both recommendations were approved by the Governing Council.

At its June 1970 session, the Governing Council took note of a further progress report on the Capital Development Fund which had referred to nine pending transactions. The Governing Council had been informed of the difficulties in initiating operations with its current limited funds, consisting of the equivalent of $3.4 million pledged mainly in non-convertible currencies with only $799,525 paid as of 1 May 1970.

The Capital Development Fund was discussed by the Economic and Social Council at its July 1970 session, in the course of its discussion of the report of the Governing Council of UNDP.

DECISION BY

GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On 11 December 1970, the General Assembly affirmed its decision of 5 December 1969<sup>2</sup> by which, inter alia, it had requested the Governing Council of UNDP to undertake an exploratory study with a view to broadening the functions of the United Nations Capital Development Fund. In this connexion, the Assembly noted that it had not been possible for the Governing Council to undertake the requested exploratory study.

It also requested Member States to offer suggestions, within the framework of the exploratory study, so as to expedite the beginning of the effective operation of the Fund.

The Assembly also requested the Governing Council to consider, within the framework of the exploratory study, all possibilities for reaching the objectives of the Capital Development Fund, including the desirability and feasibility of providing follow-up investment projects of the Fund in country programmes.

The Assembly, further, decided again to preserve the original functions of the Capital Development Fund, this time until 31 December 1971.

It requested the Secretary-General to invite Member States to contribute separately, at the same pledging conference, to UNDP and to the Fund, and it appealed to Members, and in particular to developed countries, to provide substantial contributions to the Fund so as to make it operational and effective.

The Assembly took these decisions by adopting resolution 2690 (XXV), by a vote of 78 to 9, with 21 abstentions. It did so on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text on 2 December 1970, by a roll-call vote of 64 to 9, with 21 abstentions. The text had been proposed by Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Dominican Republic, Ghana, Morocco, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sudan, Syria,

Tunisia, the United Arab Republic and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the discussion of the Capital Development Fund, which took place in the Assembly's Second Committee, many Members said they considered the Fund an indispensable complement to UNDP'S activities and they regretted that the developed countries had not seen fit to fulfil their obligations to the Fund by contributing to it. Afghanistan, Brazil, Ghana, Iran, Iraq, Pakistan, Thailand and Venezuela, all supporters of the resolution, were among those expressing this viewpoint.

Syria suggested that a solution to the problem of financing the Fund might be to ensure the gradual transformation of UNDP into a mechanism that would finance investment, which would mean transferring some of UNDP'S resources to the Fund. Chile agreed with this suggestion.

Canada, Japan, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom were among those opposing the paragraph in the resolution that requested the Governing Council to consider all possibilities for reaching the objectives of the Capital Development Fund, including the desirability and feasibility of providing follow-up investment projects of the Fund in country programmes. In this connexion, an oral amendment to this paragraph, proposed by the Netherlands to delete the idea concerning the provision of follow-up investment projects of the Fund, was rejected by a vote of 39 to 23, with 25 abstentions.

A number of Members—among them Australia, France, Spain and the United States—also objected to the provision in the resolution requesting the Secretary-General to invite Members to contribute separately, at the same pledging conference, to UNDP and to the Capital Development Fund.

PLEDGING CONFERENCE

The 1970 Pledging Conference for the United Nations Capital Development Fund was convened by the Secretary-General on 9 October 1970.

At the 1970 Pledging Conference, 25 countries made pledges amounting to the equivalent of $954,000. Additional pledges were received following the Pledging Conference which increased the pledges for 1971 to the equivalent of $973,358. (For further details about the pledges, see table below.)

Total cumulative resources of the United Nations Capital Development Fund through December 1970 consisted of pledges equivalent to $4.4 million, of which the equivalent of $1.9 million had been paid. Approximately 90 per cent of the pledges were in non-convertible currencies.

REPORTS OF INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT, INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT ASSOCIATION AND INTERNATIONAL FINANCE CORPORATION

The annual reports for the fiscal year ended 30 June 1970 of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and its affiliates, the International Finance Corporation (IFC) and the International Development Association (IDA)—which together are also known as the World Bank Group—were considered by the Economic and Social Council at its October-December 1970 session.

Introducing the reports, the President of the International Bank discussed the World Bank Group's operations of the previous fiscal year and the period covered by its five-year programme, 1969-1973, as well as the Group's relationship to the rest of the United Nations system.

During the 1970 fiscal year, he said, new loans, credits and investments by the Bank had totalled $2,300 million, compared with $1,900 million in the previous fiscal year. Although the Bank's expanded operations—particularly under the impact of inflation—had entailed increased administrative costs, the Bank had ended the fiscal year with a net income of $213 million, about half of which had been retained for future lending; $100 million had been transferred to IDA.

In 1968, the President said, the Bank had instituted its first five-year plan, with the goal of doubling the World Bank Group's operations in the period 1969-1973, compared with the 1964-1968 period, which would mean approving a total of $12,000 million during the five-year period to help finance development projects. He said he was convinced that the goal for the period could be achieved.

He added that the World Bank Group had broadened its financial base through the sale of its bonds and notes in more than 45 countries; the 18 nations that contributed the bulk of IDA's resources had agreed to contribute a total of over $800 million a year for three years.

Lending money was not the Bank's sole purpose, the President said. The Bank hoped also to assist the developing countries to progress as quickly and effectively as possible in accordance with their own aspirations. Over the previous two years, the Bank had made a specific shift in emphasis towards the financing of projects in agriculture, education and population planning.

On the question of the relationship of the World Bank Group to the rest of the United Nations system, the President observed that the Economic and Social Council would be giving attention to the matter of the broad issue of development policy and the co-ordination of development efforts. For its part, the World Bank Group would: establish a close working relationship with other international agencies concerned with development; expand its programme of country economic missions which would be staffed and associated with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the specialized agencies; and plan to inaugurate a consultation system whereby development assistance could be better co-ordinated.

All those who spoke during the Council's discussion of the annual reports commended the activities of the World Bank Group.

A number of speakers stressed the importance of dealing with the question of the external debt burden of developing countries. France, for example, said that some developed countries had tended to emphasize forms of development that had not alleviated that burden and had in some cases even increased it over the short-term. The President of the Bank agreed that the external debt burden of developing countries, which had been growing at a rate of 15 per cent a year, was an urgent problem.

The importance of supplementary financing to ensure steady growth in the developing countries was taken up by Pakistan and Yugoslavia, and the Bank was urged to reconsider the matter.

Italy and Japan were among those welcoming discussion on the creation of an international investment insurance agency; such an agency would, in their view, help promote foreign private investment. The President of the Bank noted that this question would be taken up within the following year.

Other points raised specifically in the discussion were: the need for a review of the Bank's lending policy to establish better international balance, a point raised by Argentina; the question of refinancing export credits, stressed by India; and the need to intensify work on the stabilization of commodity prices, raised by France. A number of developed countries, including the United States, stressed the need to co-ordinate multilateral and bilateral assistance.

On 13 November 1970, by resolution 1562 (XLIX), the Council took note with appreciation of the reports of the World Bank Group. The Council took this action on the proposal of its President.

CHAPTER VII

THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL CONSEQUENCES OF DISARMAMENT

The economic and social consequences of disarmament and the conversion to peaceful uses of the resources released by disarmament were discussed by both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in the course of 1970.

DECISIONS BY ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At its May 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council had before it the comments of 28 Governments in response to communications from the Secretary-General, who had, in accordance with General Assembly requests: (a) invited Governments to provide information relating to national activities designed to facilitate the conversion to peaceful uses of the resources released by disarmament;<sup>1</sup> and (b) reminded them of the Assembly's invitation to designate an annual "peace day" on which to study the effects of disarmament measures on economic and social development, and to consider the possibility of using resources that might be released by such measures in the context of the Second United Nations Development Decade.<sup>2</sup>

In their replies, some States said they had reduced their defense expenditures, and that at least part of the funds released were being channelled into domestic programmes. Others said their defense expenditures had been reduced in terms of total Government expenditures or national production. Still others noted that in order to maintain national security, expenditures either had been increased or had been maintained at a minimum level.

In discussing the replies in the Economic and Social Council, some representatives expressed regret that military expenditures in the world as a whole had been constantly increasing since the first study of the economic and social consequences of disarmament had been carried out by the United Nations at the beginning of the 1960s; and that consequently, little progress had been made in diverting resources released by disarmament to activities promoting human well-being in general and the economic and social advancement of developing countries in particular.

On 12 May 1970, the Council took note of the submissions and decided to transmit them, together with any subsequent replies that might be received from Governments, to the General Assembly.

DECISIONS BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

At its 1970 session, the General Assembly discussed the economic and social consequences of disarmament in the context of: its disarmament discussions; in the context of its formulation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade; and in the context of its economic discussions.

By three resolutions adopted at that session, the Assembly linked the questions of disarmament and economic and social development.

One of those resolutions, dealing with disarmament problems, expressed the deep concern of the Assembly that the arms race constituted one of the heaviest burdens which peoples everywhere had to bear and absorbed immense material wealth, human energy and intellectual resources. The Assembly stated its conviction that the elimination of the enormous waste of wealth and talent on the arms race would have a positive impact, especially on the developing countries, where the need for skilled personnel and the lack of material and financial resources were most keenly felt. Among other things, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the economic and social consequences of the arms race and of military expenditures, for consideration at its 1971 session.

This resolution—2667 (XXV)—was adopted on 7 December 1970. (For text, see page 41.)

On 24 November 1970, in adopting resolution 2626 (XXV) setting forth an International Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, the Assembly affirmed that the success of international development activities would depend in large measure on improvement in the general international situation, including concrete progress towards general disarmament. The Assembly therefore called for a close link between the Second Development Decade and the Disarmament Decade, both of which it had proclaimed for the 1970s. (For text of this resolution, see pp. 319-29.)

On 11 December 1970, the Assembly took additional action concerning the link between the Disarmament Decade and the Second United Nations Development Decade. This action was aimed at ensuring that the link be fully understood and utilized in as practical and comprehensive a manner as possible.

To this end, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with such advisers as he deemed necessary: (a) to formulate suggestions for the guidance of Member States, the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), and other organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to establishing the desired link between the Disarmament Decade and the Second Development Decade, so that an appropriate portion of the resources released as a consequence of progress towards general and complete disarmament would be used to increase assistance for the economic and social development of developing countries; and (b) to propose measures for the mobilization of world public opinion in support of the link between disarmament and development and thus encourage intensified negotiations aimed at progress on general and complete disarmament.

The Assembly requested Member States, the specialized agencies and IAEA, and other organizations of the United Nations system, to submit their comments and recommendations on these matters to the Secretary-General, who was asked to report thereon in 1973, in time for the first biennial review of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2685 (XXV), adopted by 87 votes to 9, with 14 abstentions. This action was taken on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the text on 23 November 1970 by a roll-call vote of 74 to 9, with 14 abstentions.

The text was based on a proposal sponsored in the Second Committee by the Central African Republic, Colombia, Cyprus and the Philippines. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1516(XV) of 15 December 1960, 1837(XVII) of 18 December 1962, 1931(XVIII) of 11 December 1963 and 2387(XXIII) of 19 November 1968 on the conversion to peaceful needs of the resources released by disarmament, resolution 2526(XXIV) of 5 December 1969 on a day for peace and resolution 2602 E (XXIV) of 16 December 1969 declaring the decade of the 1970s as a Disarmament Decade, and also Economic and Social Council resolutions 891(XXXIV) of 26 July 1962, 982(XXXVI) of 2 August 1963 and 1026(XXXVII) of 11 August 1964 on the economic and social consequences of disarmament,

Recalling the report of the consultative group of experts on the economic and social consequences of disarmament and the various reports of the Secretary-General on national studies of the subject,

Aware that progress towards general and complete disarmament would release substantial resources which could be utilized for accelerating economic and social development in general and in the developing countries in particular,

Encouraged that the great Powers are exerting efforts to prevent what might become an uncontrollable escalation of the nuclear arms race,

Recalling further that the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade has called for a close link between the Disarmament Decade and the Development Decade,

Recognizing likewise the importance of adopting appropriate measures to ensure that the link between the Disarmament Decade and the Second United Nations Development Decade shall be fully understood and utilized in as practical and comprehensive a manner as possible,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with such advisers as he may deem it necessary to designate:

(a) To formulate suggestions for the guidance of Member States, the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, as well as other organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to establishing the link between the Disarmament Decade and the Second United Nations Development Decade so that an appropriate portion of the resources that are released as a consequence of progress towards general and complete disarmament would be used to increase assistance for the economic and social development of developing countries;

(b) To propose measures for the mobilization of world public opinion in support of the link between disarmament and development and thus encourage intensified negotiations aimed at progress towards general and complete disarmament under effective international control;

2. Requests Member States, the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, as well as other organizations of the United Nations system, to submit to the Secretary-General their comments and recommendations on the matters indicated in paragraph 1 above;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report thereon, through the Economic and Social Council, in time for consideration by the General Assembly in 1973 at the first biennial review of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

CHAPTER VIII

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

Operational assistance to developing countries for industrial purposes increased during 1970, the fourth full year of activity for the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO).

There was an expansion of activities at the country, sectoral and global levels and an intensification of the promotional approach by which UNIDO acts as a catalyst in an endeavour to mobilize resources greater than its own to assist development. Also, there were introduced a variety of activities in support of the so-called

"green revolution" in agriculture. Other areas receiving special attention were the transfer of technology, repair and maintenance, in-plant training, industrial information and the requirements of the least developed countries.

Events during the year which had implications for UNIDO'S future programmes and operations included the adoption by the General Assembly of an International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade (see pp. 319-29 for text), the reorganization of the United Nations Development Programme (see pp. 344-47) and the decision by the General Assembly to convene a Special International Conference of UNIDO. This last decision was aimed at providing an opportunity to examine UNIDO'S activities, resources and finances, and make recommendations as to its structure and future work,

Activities in 1970

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE ACTIVITIES

Under its various programmes, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) provided technical assistance in 1970 to 110 countries and territories. This entailed total budget commitments of $15 million. The magnitude and nature of this assistance varied according to the stages of development and expressed needs of individual countries. Proportionally, Africa received 33.8 per cent, Asia and the Far East 20.8 per cent, the Americas 18.5 per cent, and Europe and the Middle East 15.4 per cent. The remaining 11.5 per cent was devoted to inter-regional projects.

Financial resources available to UNIDO for its activities at headquarters and in the field include: an allocation from the regular budget of the United Nations; an allocation for assistance in industry under the United Nations regular programme of technical assistance (part V of the United Nations budget); allocations from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to finance approved projects under its various programmes; voluntary contributions, including those made by Governments at annual pledging conferences; and funds-in-trust, under which expert services are provided to countries which deposit funds with UNIDO to cover the cost of projects which they wish UNIDO to implement. The total resources under all headings in 1970 was $31.9 million, the regular budget of UNIDO being $10.2 million.

Assistance rendered through the United Nations regular programme of technical assistance amounted to $1,496,600. This was used for 185 individual fellowships, 109 participants from more than 30 countries at training programmes, 30 field experts, 12 advisory missions, 15 regional industrial advisers and 5 inter-regional advisers.

The Special Fund component of UNDP, which deals with pre-investment projects, entrusted UNIDO with the execution of 17 new projects during the year, bringing the total for which UNIDO has been responsible to 55. Three of these had previously been completed and field operations for three more were completed in 1970. The total value of these projects amounted to $101.5 million, of which UNDP earmarked $39.8 million, with the remainder coming from recipient Governments in cash or in kind. The organization was also associated during 1970 in the implementation of seven projects executed by other agencies, including the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. Total expenditure for Special Fund activities was $4,560,600 on long-term pre-investment projects in the field of industrial development.

Under the Technical Assistance component of UNDP, devoted mainly to medium-term projects providing expert services and fellowships, UNIDO was allocated $3.7 million for more than 220 approved projects, the value of those implemented during the year being $2,439,200. In addition, approval was given for a number of regional and inter-regional projects in the form of in-plant training courses, seminars, symposia and other meetings, to a value of $500,000.

The Special Industrial Services (sis) programme, introduced four years earlier to provide assistance at short notice under simplified procedures, was, by 1970, financed almost entirely from the UNDP Revolving Fund, the original trust fund set up for the work having been exhausted. The cumulative value of projects under this programme rose by $5 million in 1970 to an estimated $12.5 million. Obligations incurred in implementation amounted to $5.2 million—442 projects having been approved during the year—and the actual expenditure was $3.2 million. Rate of implementation improved as a result of streamlining procedures.

During 1970, UNIDO provided the services of 585 experts under a total of 624 contracts, and awarded 704 fellowships.

Table I, below, shows the various groups of UNIDO activities and the distribution of expenditure during the year on direct technical assistance projects and on support programmes.

Table II, below, lists countries and territories aided in 1970 with experts received and provided by each, fellowships awarded and expenditure for equipment provided, by countries.

Under the UNIDO General Trust Fund, financed by voluntary contributions from member States, projects amounting to $3.2 million were programmed and under implementation in 1970, the actual expenditure amounting to $981,800.

Table III, below, gives details.

UNIDO AND THE SECOND UNITED NATIONS DEVELOPMENT DECADE

Implementation of the strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade was advanced during 1970 in close collaboration with other members of the United Nations family, and with member countries, at the country, sectoral and global levels.

Under UNIDO'S programme of action at the country level, Governments are assisted to draw up long-term industrial plans and policies and to make arrangements for evaluation and follow-up, taking into account the need for regional co-operation and integration.

Proposals for joint action by UNIDO and the United Nations Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE) were approved at the Asian Industrialization Conference held in Tokyo, Japan, in September 1970. UNIDO contributed to a mission sent to Colombia by the International Labour Organisation. In co-operation with the United Nations Economic and Social Office in Beirut (UNESOB) and with the Industrial Development Centre for Arab States, preparations were made for the second conference on industrialization in the Arab States to take place in 1971. The number of long-range country programming exercises was brought up to 60 in 1970. These were carried out in collaboration with the Governments concerned and in association with UNDP Resident Representatives.

At the sectoral level, studies were prepared in trends and prospects for selected branches of industry, based on projections of demand and on investment known to be planned or envisaged. Those completed were for the petrochemical, textile, fertilizer and automotive industries.

Global efforts in 1970 centred on preparing projections of the industrial sector and identifying problems of a general nature such as the relationship between industrialization and employment as well as problems specially affecting the least developed among developing countries.

PROMOTIONAL ACTIVITIES

In expanding its promotional activities, UNIDO sought to supplement both its formal technical assistance activities in the field and the research, training and studies initiated by its headquarters. These programmes, financed from a variety of sources, encouraged direct international co-operation in various fields of industry by prospective partners from different countries. Contacts were thus established which might lead eventually to direct agreement on matters of financing, the supply of equipment or "know-how," training facilities, or other joint undertakings.

Two regional meetings were held in 1970 to promote specific industrial projects. One took place in the Philippines in co-operation with ECAFE, and the other in Kenya in co-operation with the Economic Commission for Africa and the African Development Bank. These meetings provided a market-place for participants from developing and industrialized countries, in both the public and private sectors, to discuss concrete co-operation in several hundred specific industrial ventures.

Other opportunities were created through the organization of industrial promotion services at trade fairs, with UNIDO providing a meeting-place for potential partners in industry, making specialist advice available and arranging "Industry Days" for examination of specific industrial sectors. The Industrial Promotion Service operated in this manner during 1970 at trade fairs in Hannover (Federal Republic of Germany), Milan (Italy), Zagreb (Yugoslavia), and Poznan (Poland).

Also in 1970, UNIDO started to promote international sub-contracting arrangements between industries of developed and developing countries to help the latter solve problems of export. Under these arrangements the partners in developed countries offered access to their markets as well as other forms of collaboration, such as technical knowledge and financial resources.

Preliminary work was also undertaken in 1970 on a UNIDO plan to improve the quality and adapt the design of products from developing countries, and to assist them to meet the requirements of potential buyers.

ACTIVITIES IN SUPPORT OF THE "GREEN REVOLUTION"

The so-called "green revolution" in agriculture, which has directly affected the work of many United Nations agencies, has brought clearer recognition of the complex inter-relationship between agriculture and industry, and has given UNIDO added responsibility for assistance to industries related to agriculture.

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization participated in 1970 in efforts to develop a co-ordinated approach to the "green revolution" by all the United Nations agencies concerned.

Production of fertilizers and pesticides, maintenance and repair of agricultural machinery and implements, transport and storage were all involved, as were related questions of policy programming, investment, management and training—all of direct interest to UNIDO'S work programme.

Assistance was provided by UNIDO in the establishment of fertilizer industries and in greater use of indigenous raw materials for fertilizer production. Operational projects included marketing and pre-investment surveys, pilot demonstration plants and studies on raw materials and new processes. A survey of fertilizer production facilities was conducted in Latin America and a meeting held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, to identify countries and regions where further facilities could be established.

To help meet requirements for agricultural machinery and implements, UNIDO provided technical assistance in 1970 through feasibility studies, establishment of workshops for maintenance and repair, production of machinery and spare parts, and transport and storage facilities. A joint UNIDO/UNESOB mission on agricultural machinery visited six countries in the Middle East.

A meeting held in Brazil in 1970 discussed, among other things, production problems for "safe" pesticides, and a study was completed in Latin America on the availability of excess chlorine as a potential raw material for this purpose. A second inter-regional training course on pesticides was organized in the United States, in conjunction with Syracuse University.

An inter-regional seminar held in Vienna, Austria, in 1970 dealt with the technology and production of plastics, which were being increasingly used in agricultural work.

MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR

Technical assistance aimed at improving the maintenance and repair of industrial equipment was continued, and a symposium on the subject was organized in the Federal Republic of Germany in November 1970, attended by participants from 78 countries. One result was a decision by maintenance associations in five countries to form a federation with the principal aim of encouraging international exchange of information on maintenance of industrial equipment. Also during 1970, a three-month in-plant training programme was held in Sweden, studies were undertaken on maintenance problems and a bibliography of publications on the subject was issued.

SUPPORTING ACTIVITIES

Among the activities designed to backstop operational programmes in 1970 were 35 meetings, which included symposia, expert groups, seminars, group training, workshops and others. There were also nine in-plant training courses—in diesel engineering, iron and steel, maintenance systems, pulp and paper, electrical engineering, metal-working, plastics and textiles. The number of studies and research projects undertaken was 104 and 54 publications were printed.

TRANSFER OF TECHNOLOGY AND INDUSTRIAL INFORMATION

The transfer of technology from advanced to developing countries occupied the attention during 1970 of all groups of activity within the organization. Efforts were also intensified to disseminate industrial information by establishing and strengthening local facilities, building up regional information centres and helping to create local inquiry and advisory services as well as library and documentation units. UNIDO'S own industrial advisory services were strengthened by an increase in the number of correspondents from countries assisting in the work.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT FIELD ADVISERS

In 1970, the number of established field adviser posts was doubled, bringing the total to 20. This programme was initiated by UNIDO and UNDP in 1967 with the aim of strengthening links in the field, the task of advisers being to assist Governments in the preparation and development of technical assistance programmes and also to contribute to the promotion and co-ordination of UNIDO programmes in their respective regions. Assignments to the regions at the end of 1970 were Africa, 8; the Americas, 6; Asia and the Far East, 5; and the Middle East, 1.

Programme Decisions

DECISIONS OF INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BOARD

Three resolutions adopted by the principal policy-making organ of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), the Industrial Development Board, at its fourth session (held from 20 April to 1 May 1970 at Vienna, Austria) were concerned with future operational activities. By the first resolution, on the follow-up of the 1967 International Symposium on Industrial Development,<sup>1</sup> the Board recalled that the Symposium was the first major international meeting devoted exclusively to the problems of industrialization in developing countries, and that it had devoted special attention to the possibilities for international action and co-operative efforts among the developing countries themselves. The Board also noted that the General Assembly had requested it to take appropriate follow-up action and the Board therefore invited member States to submit any information deemed relevant on measures they had initiated, both as regards policy and implementation, in pursuance of the recommendations of the Symposium.

The second resolution contained recommendations on the role of UNIDO in the co-ordination of activities in industrial development. Among other things, the Board asked the Executive Director of UNIDO to further develop co-operative arrangements both within and outside the United Nations system, and it suggested continued consultations with Governments for better co-ordination of multilateral programmes of aid.

By the third resolution, dealing specifically with operational activities, the Board made recommendations on the technical assistance work of UNIDO, on its role in helping developing countries to secure financial resources on favourable terms for their industrial development, on long-term programming of technical assistance, on the increasing importance of economic integration and regional harmonization, and on the central responsibility of UNIDO in the transfer of technology and information.

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Later in 1970 the General Assembly considered the report of the Industrial Development Board. When taking decisions relating to UNIDO, the General Assembly noted that it was keeping in mind the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, which it had adopted on 24 October 1970 (see pp. 319-29, text of resolution 2626 (XXV)).

By its decisions on UNIDO, the Assembly urged the Industrial Development Board to ensure that all resources available for UNIDO should be used to serve most effectively the objectives of industrialization within the framework of the Second Development Decade. It stressed the need for providing UNIDO with adequate manpower and resources for its field activities and recommended that the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) study ways and means of increasing the number of projects for which UNIDO was designated as executing agency. It also urged UNDP to provide financing for a larger number of field advisers, and asked it to take measures necessary to ensure continuity of the Special Industrial Services Programme. It reminded Governments of its earlier decision inviting additional resources through voluntary contributions to UNIDO, and asked the Executive Director to enter into appropriate arrangements with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to enable developing countries to derive increasing benefits from the system of generalized, non-reciprocal, non-discriminatory preferences.

These Assembly decisions were embodied in resolution 2639(XXV) adopted without objection on 19 November 1970, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text without objection on 10 November. The text was sponsored in the Second Committee by Austria, Chile, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sudan, the United Arab Republic, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

Organizational Questions

SPECIAL INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF UNIDO

On 15 December 1969, the General Assembly had suggested that a Special International Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) be convened at the highest possible level of governmental representation and asked the Industrial Development Board for proposals concerning the agenda and other details.<sup>2</sup>

On 30 April 1970, the Board recommended that the Special International Conference be open to all members of the organization and that it be held in Vienna, Austria, in 1971. The Executive Director was asked to consult with Governments before recommending the exact date to the General Assembly, and a special advisory committee was set up for the Conference.

The provisional agenda recommended was: (1) long-range strategy and orientation of UNIDO'S activities, including the organization's role in the Second United Nations Development Decade and the transfer and adaptation of technology for the industrial development of the developing countries; (2) the organizational structure of UNIDO; (3) questions of the financing of UNIDO.

On 20 July 1970, this decision was welcomed by the Economic and Social Council by the terms of its resolution 1527(XLIX). The Council, at the same time, drew the attention of Governments to the importance of the agenda items proposed for discussion at the Conference. The resolution was adopted—without vote—at the suggestion of the Council President. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 19 November 1970, the General Assembly decided to convene a Special International Conference of UNIDO at Vienna from 1 to 8 June 1971. The Assembly asked that documentation be prepared sufficiently in advance so that the 1971 session of the Industrial Development Board could undertake comprehensive consultations and preparatory work. The Conference was asked to report to the 1971 Assembly session through the Economic and Social Council.

These decisions of the Assembly were set out in resolution 2638(XXV) adopted without objection on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee which approved the text—also without objection—on 6 November 1970. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The text was sponsored in the Second Committee by Austria, Chile, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Madagascar, Pakistan, the Philippines, Venezuela and Yugoslavia and was amended by the United Kingdom.

MEMBERSHIP OF UNIDO

By the adoption of resolution 2637(XXV) on 19 November 1970, the General Assembly decided without objection to include Fiji in List A of the annex to its resolution of 17 November 1966<sup>3</sup> nominating States eligible for membership in the Industrial Development Board. The Assembly's action was taken on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which had approved the draft resolution without vote on 4 November 1970, on the proposal of the Committee Chairman.

REPORT OF UNIDO BOARD

The report of the Industrial Development Board on its fourth (1970) session was examined by the Economic and Social Council at its mid-1970 session. On 20 July 1970, the Council took note of the report and transmitted it to the General Assembly. The Council's decision was contained in resolution 1527(XLIX), which was adopted, without vote, on the suggestion of the Council President (see above).

The General Assembly, on 19 November 1970, in adopting a resolution (2639(XXV)) dealing with the programme of UNIDO, took note of the report.

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization Pledging Conference

Voluntary contributions made at annual United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) pledging conferences, which have been held at United Nations Headquarters in New York since 1968, provide additional financing for the organization's technical assistance activities. The resources thus provided under the General Trust Fund have helped to broaden UNIDO'S scope of activities by making assistance possible to developing countries in areas not eligible for aid under existing programmes, particularly under the United Nations Development Programme.

In 1970, the pledging conference was held on 10 November, when 60 countries announced voluntary contributions. Subsequently, additional countries made pledges, bringing the total number to 69 as at 30 June 1971 and the total amount to $2,205,101. (The table below gives details of the pledges.)

CHAPTER IX

REGIONAL ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES

THE ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR EUROPE (ECE)

At its twenty-fifth session, held from 14 to 24 April 1970, the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) endorsed a long-term work programme for 1971-1975, which established the need for priority action in four main areas: the promotion of trade, particularly East-West trade; scientific and technological co-operation; long-term economic projections and planning; and problems of the environment.

Activities in these priority fields were carried out in 1970 by each of the Commission's subsidiary bodies.

AGRICULTURE

The Committee on Agriculture of ECE prepared its annual review covering the general agricultural situation in Europe, the market situation and prospects of the major commodities of particular interest to Europe and the development of European trade in agricultural products.

Work continued on the drawing up of common European standards for the quality, size and packaging of perishable foodstuffs. In co-operation with the Codex Alimentarius Commission of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the World Health Organization (WHO), the Committee also continued to work on the standardization of fruit juices and quick-frozen foods.

Experts in the mechanization of agriculture made a study tour of the Federal Republic of Germany in 1970.

In December 1970, the Committee held a symposium on the use of new forms of fertilizer in agriculture, organized jointly with FAO.

ENERGY

The three committees concerned with various aspects of the energy situation in Europe—the Coal Committee, the Committee on Electric Power and the Gas Committee—were co-operating in the preparation of an econometric energy model for the region.

The Coal Committee reviewed the trade situation in coal, as well as management problems in the coal industry. It also reviewed developments in the utilization and preparation of solid fuels and in coal statistics.

A symposium on systems of exploitation and management of large open-cast coal mines was held in the USSR in June 1970.

The Committee on Electric Power reviewed the work of the Groups of Experts on rural electrification and distribution, on problems of planning and operating large power systems and on electric power stations.

The first version was prepared of a study on long-term prospects for the electric power industry in Europe.

A symposium on the economic problems raised by the integration of nuclear power stations into electric power systems, organized jointly with the International Atomic Energy Agency, was held in Vienna, Austria, in October 1970. A symposium on the prospects for the development of hydroelectric schemes and their incorporation in future energy supply systems was held at Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia, also in October.

The Gas Committee held its annual review of the gas situation in Europe and examined the reports of Groups of Experts on the transport and storage of gas, the use and distribution of gas, and gas statistics.

The Committee sponsored a symposium on natural gas markets in Europe, held in Barcelona, Spain.

HOUSING, BUILDING AND PLANNING

During 1970, the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning held a comprehensive debate on problems in the field, including: the socio-economic aspects of housing; building materials and construction; urban renewal and planning; planning and development of rural settlements; housing, building and planning problems in the less developed countries of southern Europe; and housing statistics.

The Committee heard reports by the ECE Seminar on the Planning and Development of Recreational Areas; the second ECE Symposium on Urban Renewal; and the Seminar on the Role of Transportation in Urban Planning, Development and Environment.

A study tour of Yugoslavia was made by the Committee during the year.

SENIOR ECONOMIC ADVISERS

Long-term planning and projections—including investment in human resources and manpower planning—was the principal item on the agenda of the 1970 meeting of Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments. Particular attention was paid to the implications of current demographic trends; serving as a basis for discussion were background papers prepared by ECE and the International Labour Organisation. It was agreed that the theme for coming meetings of the Senior Economic Advisers should continue to be the long-term aspects of economic strategies, policies and plans, and their impact on current decision-making.

A seminar on technological forecasting was held in December, under the auspices of the Senior Economic Advisers.

STEEL

Among other activities in 1970, the Steel Committee reviewed the efforts being made to reduce the delay in the publication of statistics; held a seminar on factors affecting labour productivity in rolling mills; and prepared a report on problems of air and water pollution arising in the iron and steel industry.

Studies in progress included: problems relating to steel scrap; production of steel tubes; distribution and marketing of steel products; long-term prospects for steel production, consumption and trade; and standardization.

During the year, the Committee made a study tour of Japan.

TIMBER

The Timber Committee held its annual market review and examined the prospects for the following products: sawn softwood; sawn hardwood; hardwood logs; pulpwood; pitprops and coniferous logs; panel products, including plywood and blockboards, particle board and fibreboard. The Committee also reviewed the fourth biennial survey of the structure of, and raw materials consumption by, wood-based panel products industries.

A symposium was held in Portugal on the production and industrial utilization of eucalyptus.

The Committee sponsored a training course and study tour on the application and uses of tropical hardwoods in Italy, and made a study tour of France.

TRADE

At its 1970 session, the Committee on the Development of Trade agreed to consider the possibility of holding an informal meeting of trade experts to facilitate its consideration of problems arising in general economic and trade policy.

The Committee also considered the following topics: administrative restrictions; simplification of trade procedures; norms and standards; long-term agreements and related promotional machinery; marketing and related problems of business contacts and representation, with special reference to trade in manufactured goods; exchange of information on production and trading opportunities and problems of industrial, scientific and technological co-operation. The Committee examined the report of the Groups of Experts on simplification and standardization of external trade documents and on general conditions for international transactions.

Studies in progress included: the trade problems of the less developed ECE countries and current and projected changes in demand in European countries and their implications for trade.

TRANSPORT

The Inland Transport Committee continued to deal with problems of transport by rail, road and inland waterway, including the following: transport of dangerous goods, including prevention of water pollution; customs questions; track costs; urban and suburban travel; and legal questions.

An agreement was concluded concerning the work of crews of vehicles engaged in international road transport. The Committee also concluded an agreement on the international carriage of perishable foodstuffs and on the special equipment to be used for such carriage.

WATER PROBLEMS

During 1970, the Committee on Water Problems published the study Trends in Water Resources Use and Development in the ECE Region.

The Committee sponsored a seminar on river basin management, held in London, United Kingdom, in June 1970; a preparatory meeting for a seminar on selected water problems in southern Europe; and an informal consultation of rapporteurs preparing a manual on establishing balances of water resources and water needs.

The Committee also continued to study problems involved in water pollution control and governmental policies on the formulation and administration of water management plans.

DECISIONS BY ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At its July 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council considered the activities of ECE, including the decisions of its twenty-fifth session.

On 16 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the annual report of ECE for the period 24 April 1969 to 24 April 1970, and of the views expressed in the discussion and the resolutions and other decisions adopted by the Commission at its 1970 session. The Council also endorsed ECE's programme of work and priorities.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1520(XLIX), which was adopted, without objection, on the recommendation of ECE. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

THE ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR ASIA AND THE FAR EAST (ECAFE)

During 1970, the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE) intensified its efforts to speed the balanced economic and social development of the region through international co-operation.

At its twenty-sixth session, held in Bangkok, Thailand, from 14 to 27 April 1970, the Commission outlined its plans for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

In its preparations for the Second Development Decade, the Commission emphasized joint action programmes, especially in liberalization and expansion of trade and in monetary cooperation. It also sought multinational approaches to problems relating to industry and natural resources, transport and communications, water resources, development planning, statistics, social development, population, public administration, commodity prices, and typhoon damage control.

During 1970, Bangkok was officially declared ECAFE's permanent headquarters.

The number of members and associate members of ECAFE rose to 31, with the admission of the territory of Papua and New Guinea as an associate member-

ACTIVITIES IN 1970

TRADE AND PAYMENTS

In 1970, ECAFE developed detailed plans for increasing intra-regional trade and monetary co-operation. These plans were submitted to the Council of Ministers for Asian Economic Co-operation which met at Kabul, Afghanistan, in December. The Council outlined the steps to be taken with regard to an Asian clearing union, regional trade expansion and an Asian reserve bank.

Special attention continued to be paid to the trade and payments problems of the landlocked and the least developed countries of the region.

INDUSTRY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

The second Asian Industrialization Conference, held in Tokyo, Japan, in September 1970, was attended by 200 Government and business representatives from 23 nations.

The Conference stressed the need for regional planning for industrial development and urged ECAFE nations to give priority in their national plans to multinational projects geared towards export manufacturing. The Conference adopted a declaration by which it set a target rate of industrial growth of 12 per cent per year for the Second United Nations Development Decade. It also urged increased support for the Asian Industrial Development Council as the key instrument in promoting Asian industrial development.

Off-shore prospecting of the marine shelves of eastern Asia showed increasing evidence of the presence of petroleum and solid minerals. The nine-nation Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in Asian Offshore Areas (CCOP), meeting in Saigon, Republic of Viet-Nam, in May 1970, reported that recent geological surveys indicated the possibility of petroleum off the Mekong Delta and the southwest coast of the Republic of Viet-Nam. The discovery of salt domes in the Gulf of Thailand raised hopes that sulphur and potash, two fertilizer ingredients deficient in ECAFE countries, might also be found.

Preparatory work was done on the establishment of similar committees on off-shore prospecting for the Indian Ocean and the South Pacific.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATION

A plan of operation for an Asian telecommunication network was signed in Bangkok in April 1970. Field surveys were undertaken to lay the groundwork for a low-cost telecommunication system linking Asia with Pacific and European systems.

Progress on the Trans-Asian Railway network was reported by a working party of experts, meeting in Bangkok in November. The working party drew up a five-year plan for development of the railway network.

In December, an ECAFE workshop on urban traffic recommended increased support for public transport facilities in Asia's congested cities.

Water transport experts, meeting in Bangkok in October, suggested measures for closer regional co-operation in shipping, shipbuilding and water transport problems and recommended the establishment of a regional dredging organization under ECAFE auspices.

ASIAN HIGHWAY

By the end of 1970, the Asian Highway, which was to stretch from Iran to the Republic of Viet-Nam, was 93 per cent complete; four fifths of the entire network was considered motorable in all weather.

In November, the second Asian Highway Motor Rally was held to demonstrate the availability of the western section for trade and tourist travel. The 6,700-kilometre course between Teheran, Iran, and Dacca, Pakistan, via Kathmandu, Nepal, was completed by 46 cars.

WATER RESOURCES

The water needs of Asia for the next 10 to 20 years were discussed by the Regional Conference on Water Resources, which met in Bangkok in September 1970. The Conference called for the co-operative development of rivers shared by neighbouring countries.

The seven-nation Typhoon Committee met in Bangkok in November, following a major cyclone in East Pakistan and typhoons in the Philippines. The Committee approved a special regional action programme for natural disaster relief and appealed to the United Nations General Assembly for help in minimizing the harmful effects of such storms. The Committee was under the joint auspices of ECAFE and the World Meteorological Organization.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AND PLANNING

During the year, ECAFE continued to encourage closer economic co-operation among member Governments. Following the establishment in 1969 of the Asian Coconut Community, which resulted from an ECAFE study on the problems of the coconut industry, the Commission accelerated efforts to ease the problems of other commodity producers through co-operative action. During 1970, it examined possibilities for stabilizing rice prices; undertook a study of co-operative methods of solving problems in the rubber industry; and drafted an agreement to establish a Pepper Community.

The 1970 Economic Survey of Asia and the Far East reviewed economic developments in the region, highlighting agriculture and trade.

By the end of 1970, the Asian Institute for Economic Development and Planning, operating in Bangkok under ECAFE auspices, had trained more than 1,200 fellows from 25 countries of the ECAFE region. The research facilities of the Institute were also being expanded.

STATISTICS

The Asian Statistical Institute, which was to provide training for senior statisticians of the region, was officially opened in Tokyo on 3 June 1970; 32 fellows from 16 countries were enrolled in its first course.

The Conference of Asian Statisticians, meeting in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, in December 1970, urged the increased use of statistics in the development of the region and the strengthening of data-processing facilities and training. In 1970, training facilities were being offered in Australia, India and Japan.

The second ECAFE Statistical Yearbook for Asia and the Far East was issued in December.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

During 1970, increased emphasis was placed on the need for balanced programmes of social and economic development.

A high-level working party on social development, meeting in Bangkok in December, emphasized the urgent need to consider the social aspects of development planning.

In September, representatives of young people of 25 Asian countries met in Bangkok to discuss the problems and role of youth in national development.

POPULATION

Under its expanded Asian Population Programme, ECAFE accelerated efforts to assist Governments with population problems related to development goals.

In June 1970, ECAFE convened the first meeting of the Preparatory Committee for the Second Asian Population Conference, which was scheduled to be held in 1972 or 1973. A working group on the training of personnel in family planning programmes was convened from 27 July to 7 August 1970 in Bangkok. A training course on fertility and family planning evaluation was held in Bombay, India, from 2 November to 12 December 1970, under the joint sponsorship of ECAFE and the Government of India, with financial assistance from the United Nations Fund for Population Activities.

MEKONG RIVER DEVELOPMENT

In 1970, special attention was given to the preparation of an over-all framework for the economic development of the Mekong Basin to the year 2000, including tributary projects, navigation and transportation, agriculture, forestry, fisheries, power, industries, natural resources, social development and health.

In Laos, work progressed on the $30 million Nam Ngum Dam. Despite difficulties, construction also continued on the $27 million Prek Thnot multipurpose project in the Khmer Republic; during the year, the Mekong Committee and the Secretary-General appealed to all concerned to permit work to continue on the project.

Plans also went forward on the Pa Mong multipurpose project, which would dam the Mekong between Laos and Thailand, and the Sambor power project in the Khmer Republic.

DECISIONS BY ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

On 16 July 1970, at its forty-ninth session, the Economic and Social Council adopted without objection three resolutions concerning ECAFE.

By the first resolution (1521 (XLIX)), the Council took note of the annual report of ECAFE covering the period 29 April 1969 to 27 April 1970, and of the recommendations and resolutions contained therein, and endorsed the Commission's programme of work and priorities. This action was taken on the recommendation of ECAFE. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the second resolution (1522 (XLIX)), the Council took note of the recommendation of ECAFE to declare Bangkok the headquarters of the Commission and decided to amend the Commission's terms of reference accordingly. The Council also recommended to the General Assembly that it accept the offer of the Government of Thailand to make available plots of land for the construction of a new building. These actions were taken at the suggestion of the President of the Council. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the third resolution (1523 (XLIX)), the Council approved the recommendation of ECAFE that the territory of Papua and New Guinea be included within the geographical scope of the Commission and admitted as an associate member, and decided to amend the Commission's terms of reference accordingly. This action was taken on the recommendation of ECAFE. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

DECISION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On 17 December 1970, the General Assembly accepted with gratitude the offer of the Government of Thailand to make available additional plots of land for the construction of new buildings for ECAFE.

This decision, which had been recommended by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1522(XLIX), was contained in Assembly resolution 2745(XXV). (For text, see page 875.)

THE ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR LATIN AMERICA (ECLA)

During 1970, the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) continued to promote the economic integration of the region and stepped up its activities in research and training. It also took steps to assist the areas affected by the earthquake of 31 May in Peru.

In 1970, the Committee of the Whole of ECLA held two extraordinary sessions at United Nations Headquarters, New York. At the first of these (4-7 May 1970), the Committee discussed trends in the Latin American economy in 1969 and agreed upon measures to provide the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) with greater financial stability.

Established in 1962 under the aegis of ECLA, ILPES had been carrying out an extensive programme for the training of economists and other professionals concerned with Latin American development techniques. The Institute also advised Governments on the formulation of their development plans and undertook research into the major social and economic problems of the region.

At the second extraordinary session (22-23 June 1970), the Committee of the Whole recommended measures to be taken by the international community to assist the Peruvian Government in its efforts to reconstruct the areas affected by the earthquake of 31 May. A detailed report on the disaster was submitted to the session by a joint ECLA/ILPES team that visited the site of the catastrophe. The Committee also requested the Economic and Social Council to recommend to Member States the establishment of an emergency fund for cases of natural disaster, to be made up of voluntary contributions by all members of the international community.

ECONOMIC TRENDS

The data in the 1969 Economic Survey of Latin America, published in 1970, indicated that Latin America's gross domestic product rose by 6.4 per cent in 1969, compared with 6.1 per cent in 1968. These rates represented significant progress over earlier years and over the average for 1960-1965, which was 5 per cent.

The growth rate of imports averaged around 8 per cent annually for the period 1964-1969, in marked contrast to the rate of 1.4 per cent in 1960-1965. Investment grew by 10 per cent during 1968 and 1969, compared with an average annual rate of 4.3 per cent in 1960-1965.

Basic services, construction and manufacturing were the sectors which contributed most to economic growth in 1969. On the whole, there was also less of a tendency towards inflation in the region.

Among external sector trends, international transactions showed considerable impetus for the second consecutive year. This could be ascribed to the export boom in Brazil and Chile; the recovery in Argentina's exports; the continued upward trend in exports from Mexico, Bolivia, Costa Rica and Panama; and the upsurge in exports from Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Uruguay, Guatemala and Peru.

The fact that exports increased more rapidly than imports led to an improvement in the trade balance of the region. However, with the exception of Bolivia and Honduras, the Latin American countries recorded an increase in net remittances of profits and interest on foreign capital. As a consequence, only two countries—Peru and Uruguay—maintained a current external surplus. Of the countries with a current external deficit, Argentina recorded a large increase; El Salvador, Honduras, Ecuador, Bolivia, Colombia and Venezuela showed smaller increases; Brazil and Chile showed substantial reductions; and Mexico, Paraguay, Panama, the Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Guatemala and Nicaragua either reduced their deficits or did not increase them.

DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

In line with the objectives established by the United Nations for the Second Development Decade, ECLA continued to give priority to outlining a basic development strategy for Latin America.

In 1970, a methodology for the evaluation of regional and country trends in Latin America during the First United Nations Development Decade was worked out. It was to provide a basis for evolving policies on such persistent problems of the region as: unemployment, or underemployment; low average per capita product; marked disparities in productivity; limitations in the absorption of technical know-how; and, in the international sphere, Latin America's declining economic importance and increasing financial and political dependence on other regions.

TRADE

In co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and ILPES, the Commission organized two training courses in foreign trade policy: a sixth regional course on trade policy, attended by 25 officials from 16 Latin American countries; and a course on export promotion, attended by 20 officials from Bolivia, Ecuador, Paraguay and Uruguay.

A number of studies on trade policy were prepared by ECLA. These included a guidebook for Latin American exporters and a detailed study of the main characteristics and problems of trade between Latin America and the European Economic Community; the trade study was submitted to the extraordinary meeting of the Special Committee on Latin American Co-ordination (CECLA), held in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in July.

In co-operation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the Commission brought up to date a report on the prospects for wheat production in the countries of the Latin American Free Trade Association (LAFTA), particularly as regarded intra-regional trade. The Commission also prepared a study on the current situation and prospects for the production and consumption of beef and milk in Latin America, and, at the request of the Andean Group, an analysis of the current situation and prospects for agricultural trade in the Andean sub-region.

ECONOMIC PROJECTIONS AND DOCUMENTATION

The Economic Projections Centre of ECLA carried out studies on a classification of Latin American countries for planning and strategy purposes, and on economic projections for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

To meet the region's need for social and economic data, the groundwork was laid for the establishment of a regional centre for social and economic documentation, made possible by contributions from the Netherlands Government.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

A number of studies were prepared by ECLA in the field of industrial development, including the following on forest products: the technology of bagasse on pulp and paper production; the development of the sawn-wood industry and the wood-based panel products industry; the Latin American share in world pulp and paper production; and the possibilities of exporting selected forest products to countries overseas.

MEETINGS AND SEMINARS

During the year, ECLA organized a number of meetings and seminars aimed at finding solutions for the region's structural problems, obtaining steadier economic growth, redistributing average income and reducing or eliminating the factors which made for dependence in the external sector.

In May, a regional seminar on the techniques and procedures of United Nations technical assistance was organized in collaboration with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research. Also in May, the Commission co-operated with FAO in organizing a regional consultation on the development of the forest and pulp and paper industries, held in Mexico City, Mexico.

In August, a working group was organized to consider the region's problems in the field of industrial statistics, and an intensive course on regional planning was held, in co-operation with ILPES.

During November, a group of experts on administrative capability for development examined administrative shortcomings in the development of the public sector in the Latin American countries and studied measures to eliminate such shortcomings in the light of individual country needs and regional and sub-regional economic integration movements.

A seminar on the current situation and future prospects of the tin-plate industry in Latin America was co-sponsored by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and was attended by experts from India, Japan, Spain, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States.

DECISIONS BY ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At its July 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council took two actions concerning the work of ECLA.

On 16 July 1970, the Council took note of the annual report of ECLA, covering the period from 24 April 1969 to 7 May 1970. It also took note of the decision of the ECLA Committee of the Whole to provide greater financial stability to the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES).

These decisions of the Council were embodied in resolution 1524(XLIX), adopted without objection on the recommendation of ECLA. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 23 July, the Council took note of the report by the Committee of the Whole on its extraordinary session held in June 1970 to consider the earthquake disaster in Peru. This decision was embodied in resolution 1531 (XLIX), which was adopted, unanimously, at the suggestion of the Council President.

THE ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR AFRICA (ECA)

During 1970, the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) concentrated on implementing the recommendations adopted by the Commission at its ninth session and tenth anniversary meeting, held in February 1969.

The Executive Committee of ECA held its third and fourth meetings in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 18 to 21 May and 9 to 13 November, respectively. The Technical Committee of Experts held its first meeting in February.

ACTIVITIES IN 1970

DEVELOPMENT PLANNING AND RESEARCH

During 1970 EGA continued to prepare target proposals for the Second United Nations Development Decade and made some initial studies on the implications of these targets for Africa.

The third session of the Conference of African Planners, which met in Addis Ababa from 20 to 29 May 1970, also discussed preparations for the Second Development Decade, as well as planning problems and methods, arrangements for the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning and proposals for the economic research programme of EGA.

The Commission continued to assist countries in establishing and improving their national economic surveys; by 1970, about half the countries of Africa were publishing annual surveys or similar documents.

The Economic Bulletin for Africa issued by ECA remained one of the principal sources of technical and general information about Africa.

INDUSTRY

Special attention was paid during 1970 to project evaluation and the promotion of industry, including: the preparation of model schemes for small-scale industries and of project profiles for selected industries; the examination of policies for indigenous enterprises; and the promotion of industrial investment.

As a result of the initiatives taken by the African Development Bank and ECA, an international finance corporation—the Société internationale financière pour les investissements et le développement en Afrique (SIFIDA)—was formed to invest in all African countries.

Promotion of specific industrial projects was being carried out in co-operation with the African Development Bank and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

AGRICULTURE

During 1970, the Commission carried out four sub-regional studies on intra-sub-regional co-operation and trade in agriculture. The studies revealed there was room for an increase in specialization and trade in agricultural products and recommended ways of fostering sub-regional co-operation in agricultural research, training and other fields.

As part of a programme for developing rice production in West Africa, the West African Rice Development Association and the Rice Research Centre were established. A mission on rice production was also sent to West Africa.

TRADE

The Commission continued to explore means of developing intra-regional and inter-regional trade.

The Africa Trade Centre became operational in March 1970. Officers from the Centre visited 20 countries of the region on fact-finding missions; training courses on the marketing of African products and on commercial policy were conducted and a documentation unit was established.

In response to ECA requests for bilateral assistance, the Governments of Belgium, Finland, Norway and the United States provided the Africa Trade Centre with expert staff for trade promotion, and the Belgian Government provided funds for the documentation unit.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

The year 1970 saw further expansion in the field of social development, particularly in rural development.

Under the joint auspices of ECA, the International Labour Organisation and the Danish Board of Technical Co-operation, a regional seminar on National Youth Service Programmes was held in Addis Ababa from 23 November to 4 December. The seminar examined developments in national youth service programmes, particularly in relation to the development of skills and job opportunities, and recommended measures by which Governments might increase the contribution of youth to national economic and social development.

The Commission sent advisory missions on social welfare policy and training to the Gambia, Ghana, Liberia, Libya, Mauritius, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania. Missions were also sent to Dahomey, Gabon and Mali to advise on the formulation of rural development programmes.

MANPOWER AND TRAINING

During 1970, ECA expanded its activities in the field of training and manpower. About 98

Africans received fellowships under programmes co-ordinated by the Commission.

A regional expert group meeting on education and training for development in Africa was held in December, in observance of International Education Year. The seminar focused attention on structural and programme modifications necessary to meet the demands of accelerated industrialization and modernization.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

Advisory services in the field of development administration were provided in 1970 to the following countries: Algeria, Botswana, Cameroon, Ethiopia, Kenya, Morocco, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta and Zambia.

In December 1970, a regional seminar on the administrative framework for development was held in Addis Ababa for all English-speaking African countries.

Advisory services in organization and management were provided to Algeria, the Central African Republic, Chad, Dahomey, Mali, Morocco, the People's Republic of the Congo, Rwanda and Tunisia. A similar programme was being launched in English-speaking countries.

The Commission prepared a report concerning the development of professional training in accountancy and chartered secretaryship in various English-speaking countries, and sent missions to six countries to encourage them to establish training programmes in these fields.

The study of African postal systems was continued by the Commission; it also sent advisory missions in postal administration to Botswana, Lesotho, Mauritius, Sudan, Swaziland, the United Arab Republic and Zambia.

STATISTICAL SERVICES

The basic objectives of ECA'S statistical programme, as formulated by the Conference of African Statisticians, were to assist in the development and co-ordination of national statistical services and to establish a centralized statistical service for the African region.

Efforts to develop professional-level statistical training were concentrated at the two Institutes of Statistics and Applied Economics, at Rabat, Morocco, and Kampala, Uganda; these Institutes received technical assistance under the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

Two centres for training personnel at the middle level continued to meet heavy demands: the Statistics Training Institute at Yaounde, Cameroon, and the East African Statistical Training Centre at Dar-es-Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania.

A seminar on data required for projections was held at ECA headquarters from 9 to 13 November 1970. The seminar was followed by a meeting of the Working Group on Public Sector Statistics, which was held in Addis Ababa from 16 to 20 November, to promote, among other things, the standardization of government accounts within the context of the national accounting framework.

POPULATION PROGRAMME

During 1970, ECA'S Population Programme Centre helped to carry out the Commission's expanded programme in the population field by: (a) assisting Governments in understanding the population situation in the region and the inter-relationship between population dynamics and economic and social growth; (b) helping Governments, at their request, to set up population programme services; (c) training personnel by supporting national institutions and establishing regional training and research institutes; and (d) co-ordinating the regional activities of the United Nations organs in the field of population.

A working group on fertility studies and evaluation of population programmes met in Addis Ababa in January. In a follow-up action, the Commission organized a technical group on pilot studies on fertility, mortality and evaluation of population programmes, with a view to evolving guidelines for African countries.

The Population Programme Centre published the first three issues of the African Population Newsletter, reviewing the demographic situation in the region and the activities of African Governments and institutions in this field.

NATURAL RESOURCES

The Commission continued to compile data on African mineral exploration, development, production, processing and trade, as well as on scientific and technological development and legislative problems.

It also decided to support applications by Cameroon and Nigeria for assistance to establish centres for training in aerial surveying and mapping in those two countries.

A working group meeting on water resources planning was held during the year, as was a preparatory meeting for a conference on African hydrology and hydrometeorology.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

A pre-feasibility study of the Trans-Sahara route, initiated by ECA in 1962, was completed by UNDP in 1970. The Commission also completed preliminary studies for the Trans-West African Highway and Trans-African Highway.

The Commission continued to encourage the development of tourism in Africa. Studies of the tourist potential in north, east, and central Africa had been completed by the end of 1970.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

The African Regional Group of the United Nations Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development held its fifth meeting in Addis Ababa from 19 to 22 October 1970 and discussed regional proposals for the World Plan of Action for the Application of Science and Technology to Development.

The first meeting of the ECA Panel of Experts on Advanced Institutes for Applied Science and Technology in Africa was held at the Institute of Science and Technology, University of Manchester, United Kingdom, from 10 to 14 August. The meeting formulated ideas on the forms and functions of such institutes.

From 5 to 16 October, a regional symposium on the utilization of science and technology for development in Africa, sponsored jointly by ECA and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, was held at Addis Ababa.

ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION

The Commission continued its work in strengthening the institutional framework for economic co-operation and in promoting multinational co-operation ventures in all sectors throughout the region.

Following recommendations made by its Executive Committee in 1969, the Commission sent missions to Central Africa and to West Africa with a view to determining: (a) the possibilities of further assistance by ECA to individual countries wishing to set up economic groupings; (b) the reactions of member States to proposals by the Executive Committee to create new sub-regions; and (c) the views of Governments on the proposal to establish United Nations development advisory teams to assist in the realization of multinational development programmes.

The four sub-regional offices of ECA rendered direct assistance to Governments and multinational co-operation groupings. The ECA secretariat also provided assistance through advisory missions and examination of opportunities for concerted action with organizations such as the African Development Bank.

DECISION BY ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

On 16 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council took note of the annual report of ECA covering the period from 15 February 1969 to 14 February 1970. It took this action by adopting, without objection, resolution 1525(XLIX), as proposed by the the Council President.

THE UNITED NATIONS ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL OFFICE IN BEIRUT

At its mid-1970 session, the Economic and Social Council considered a report by the Secretary-General on the activities of the United Nations Economic and Social Office in Beirut (UNESOB), covering the period 1 May 1969 to 15 April 1970.

The Office was now active in the fields of industry and population, the report noted, while continuing to work in development planning, human resources, training, housing and statistics.

During 1970, a projection of the economic development of Lebanon for the years 1975-1980 was completed; it followed a series of similar projections of growth and development for Iraq, for Jordan, for Kuwait, for Saudi Arabia and for Syria.

A seminar on children and youth in national planning and development was held in February in Beirut, Lebanon, under the joint auspices of the Lebanese Government, the United Nations Children's Fund and UNESOB. The seminar brought together representatives of 14 Arab States and various United Nations organizations.

These and other activities of UNESOB were taken note of by the Economic and Social Council on 16 July 1970, when it adopted without vote resolution 1526(XLIX), as suggested by the President of the Council.

ROLE OF REGIONAL COMMISSIONS IN SECOND DEVELOPMENT DECADE

On 11 December 1970, the General Assembly took note of the important role of the regional economic commissions and the United Nations Economic and Social Office in Beirut (UNESOB) in the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

In so doing, the Assembly: (1) expressed its appreciation of the contributions made by the regional economic commissions and UNESOB towards the formulation of the International Development Strategy for the Second Development Decade; (2) requested the regional economic commissions and UNESOB to continue and further intensify their efforts in helping to promote—on a regional, sub-regional or inter-regional basis—trade expansion, economic co-operation and integration among their member countries as a concrete step towards the attainment of the goals of the Second Development Decade; (3) affirmed that these efforts deserved the active support of the international community, in particular of the developed countries; (4) requested the regional economic commissions and UNESOB, in co-operation where appropriate with regional development banks and sub-regional groups and with the assistance of other organizations of the United Nations system, to make suitable arrangements for conducting regular appraisals and evaluation of the progress in the implementation of the International Development Strategy; and (5) urged that the regional economic commissions and UNESOB be provided with the means and resources necessary to fulfil their role for the benefit of their member countries.

These decisions of the General Assembly were embodied in resolution 2687 (XXV), which was adopted, by a vote of 99 to 1, with 9 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The text was based on a proposal by India, Indonesia, Iraq, Nigeria, the Philippines, Senegal, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Tunisia, Yemen and Yugoslavia, as orally amended by the sponsors and by the Netherlands, Syria and the United Kingdom. The Second Committee approved the text by a vote of 85 to 2, with 11 abstentions, on 23 November 1970. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

RESOLUTION 2687 (xxv), as recommended by Second Committee, A/8203/Add.1, adopted by Assembly on 11 December 1970, meeting 1925, by 99 votes to 1, with 9 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the important role of the regional economic commissions and the United Nations Economic and Social Office at Beirut in the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Conscious of the importance of making appropriate arrangements for conducting regular appraisals, on a regional basis, of progress made towards the implementation of the International Development Strategy,

Considering that the regional economic commissions and the United Nations Economic and Social Office at Beirut will be called upon to assume major responsibilities for review and appraisal at the regional level of the progress in the implementation of the International Development Strategy, in collaboration with regional development banks and other regional or subregional institutions,

5. Urges that the regional economic commissions and the United Nations Economic and Social Office at Beirut be provided with the means and resources necessary to fulfil their role for the benefit of their member countries.

OTHER MATTERS

RENAMING OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC COMMISSIONS

On 11 December 1970, the General Assembly took a decision on the question of renaming the four regional "economic commissions" as "economic and social commissions."

In so doing, the Assembly: (1) took into account the need for uniformity in the nomenclature of the commissions; (2) noted the importance of the unified or integrated socio-economic approach to development, which the regional economic commissions had adopted and would be called upon to put into practice, particularly in the context of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade; and (3) considered that the renaming of the commissions to correspond with the true nature of their activities would further emphasize the importance of an integrated socio-economic approach to development, particularly in the developing countries.

The Assembly recommended that the Economic and Social Council should consider—in consultation with the Secretary-General and taking into account the views of the regional economic commissions and those expressed at the 1970 session of the General Assembly—the renaming of the commissions as follows: Economic and Social Commission for Europe, Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Far East, Economic and Social Commission for Latin America and Economic and Social Commission for Africa.

This decision of the General Assembly was embodied in resolution 2686 (XXV), which was adopted, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, by a vote of 93 to 0, with 17 abstentions. The text was based on a proposal by the Philippines and Thailand, as orally amended by the sponsors and by India and Nigeria, and was approved by the Second Committee on 23 November by a vote of 52 to 1, with 33 abstentions. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Second Committee rejected by 34 votes to 12, with 34 abstentions, an oral amendment by the USSR which would have deleted the words "Economic and Social Commission for Europe" from the text. In proposing the amendment, the representative of the USSR said that the Economic Commission for Europe had not adopted the socio-economic approach to development.

JOINT INSPECTION UNIT REPORTS ON REGIONAL ECONOMIC COMMISSIONS

At its mid-1970 session, the Economic and Social Council considered reports by the Joint Inspection Unit on the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE), as well as comments thereon by the Secretary-General, the United Nations Development Programme and the specialized agencies and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

On 30 July 1970, the Council noted with satisfaction that the recommendations made by the Joint Inspection Unit were in line with the desires expressed in the Council concerning the decentralization of United Nations activities and devolution of resources and authority to regional economic commissions aimed at strengthening their role in the economic and social fields.

The Council commended the recommendations to EGA, ECAFE and other inter-governmental bodies concerned for consideration and appropriate action, and it decided to review any actions taken by these bodies at its mid-1972 session.

These decisions of the Council were embodied in resolution 1555 (XLIX), which was recommended by its Co-ordination Committee and adopted unanimously by the Council. The text, based on a proposal by Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Upper Volta and Yugoslavia, was approved unanimously by the Co-ordination Committee on 29 July 1970. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

PREPARATORY STUDY ON REGIONAL STRUCTURES

Also at its mid-1970 session, the Economic and Social Council considered a note by the Secretary-General on the terms of reference and financial implications of a preparatory study on regional structures. The Secretary-General commented that the existing regional structures were the result of decisions taken over a number of years and were based on a variety of political and substantive considerations, and that to bring about a rationalization of the structures would inevitably require a long process of discussion and negotiation.

On 30 July, the Council, bearing these comments in mind: (1) requested the Secretary-General to prepare a questionnaire on the various aspects of regional structures and to forward it to the Governments of Member States with the request that they send their replies to their respective regional economic commissions or to the United Nations Economic and Social Office in Beirut (UNESOB); (2) requested the comments of the regional bodies on reports to be prepared on the basis of the replies; and (3) requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council not later than at its early 1972 session on the results of the preliminary inquiry and to recommend concrete measures to be taken.

These decisions of the Council were embodied in resolution 1553 (XLIX), which was adopted, on the recommendation of the Co-ordination Committee, by 20 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions. The text was based on a proposal by Bulgaria, Sudan and the USSR, as orally amended by the sponsors, by Ghana and by the United Kingdom, and approved by the Co-ordination Committee on 29 July 1970 by 17 votes to 0, with 7 abstentions. ## CHAPTER X

STATISTICAL DEVELOPMENTS

ACTIVITIES IN 1970

Steps were taken during 1970 to create an international computing centre in Geneva, Switzerland, for the United Nations system of organizations. The centre was to provide data processing and systems and information services on an inter-organizational basis. (See also pp. 869-70.)

The Statistical Office of the United Nations continued work in 1970 on a project for the international comparison of purchasing power and production among selected countries, in co-operation with the University of Pennsylvania (United States), and with the active assistance of Colombia, Hungary, India, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Kenya, Morocco, the United Kingdom and the United States. The classifications, specifications, worksheets and manuals were completed, and the processing and computer operations required for the comparisons began.

Long-term statistical training centres—both national and international—set up in Africa and Asia and aided by the United Nations, continued to operate in 1970 in Cameroon, Ghana, the Ivory Coast, Morocco, the Republic of Viet-Nam (through August 1970), Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The Asian Statistical Institute, intended to train official statisticians of Asia and the Far East to help in improving the statistical services of their Governments, particularly the reliability of statistics for economic and social development planning and programming, opened in Tokyo, Japan, in June 1970.

In January 1970, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) approved a project to assist the Government of Malaysia in strengthening its Department of Statistics. Over a four-year period, the services of a project manager and experts in 11 specialized fields are to be provided, as are fellowships to train counterpart personnel in all aspects of the programme, and some small items of equipment and library material.

During 1970, the Statistical Office of the United Nations continued to collect and publish statistics showing the main economic and social characteristics of the world as a whole, as well as its regions and individual countries. These statistics included data on external trade, production and prices, transport, energy, national income, population, vital statistics and migration. The object of these arrays of international statistics was not only to facilitate international action but also to enable countries to see their place in the world economy.

(For details on all publications, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

DECISIONS OF STATISTICAL COMMISSION

At its sixteenth session, held in October 1970, the Statistical Commission asked the Secretary-General to formulate international guidelines for an integrated system of demographic, manpower and social statistics that would be linked with national accounting data.

The work was to be designed to assist countries to organize and extend these statistics so that they might be used jointly in making consistent and balanced social and economic policies and plans. National statistics concerning the demographic and physical environment of social problems and living conditions were considered inadequate for these purposes.

The guidelines requested by the Commission were to set out the concepts and structure of a framework for the data and were to give the co-ordinated and correlated series, classifications, tabulations and social indicators of each group of statistics.

The development of systems of economic statistics which extended or complemented national accounting data also received attention. The Commission considered: the concepts, structures, definitions and classifications of national and sector balance sheets; a system of price and quantity statistics; and a system of statistics on the distribution of income, consumption and wealth.

The Statistical Commission also requested the preparation of a directory of international statistics which would furnish information on the statistical responsibilities of the various organizations in the United Nations system, as well as an inventory of the statistical series compiled and the statistical standards adopted.

Recommendations for the 1973 World Programme of Industrial Statistics were approved by the Commission. These documents included a discussion of the objectives of the Programme, a list of selected products and materials for which production and consumption data should be compiled, and a manual that focused on the problems faced by countries at an early stage of statistical development.

A classification of international trade by broad economic categories was also approved by the Commission for international use and as a guide for national use. Based on the concepts embodied in the United Nations System of National Accounts (SNA), the classification by broad economic categories was designed as a means for converting data compiled according to the standard International Trade Classification (Revised) to meaningful aggregates for purposes of economic analysis in terms of the three basic SNA classes—namely, capital goods, intermediate goods and consumption goods.

The Statistical Commission suggested that the principles and recommendations for a vital statistics system be published and that all available resources be mobilized to assist developing countries to develop, improve and maintain civil registers of vital events and to use these registers for statistical purposes.

CHAPTER XI

THE APPLICATION OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY TO DEVELOPMENT

Questions relating to science and technology continued to receive attention from the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council during 1970. The Assembly took decisions concerning the role of science and technology in development and the transfer of technology to developing countries.

The Assembly also took action on such subjects as marine science, the human environment, the prevention and control of marine pollution, the peaceful uses of atomic energy, and the increase and use of edible protein. (Information on these matters is contained in other sections of this volume under the appropriate headings.)

At its mid-1970 session, the Economic and Social Council considered the report on the work during 1969-1970 of its Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development; future institutional arrangements for science and technology; science education; and the application of computer technology to development.

The Advisory Committee's Ad Hoc Working Groups on computer technology and on machinery for science and technology in relation to industrial development met during 1970.

The Committee's regional groups for Africa,

Asia and Europe also met during the year at the respective headquarters of the United Nations regional economic commissions. At the invitation of the Government of Brazil, the regional group for Latin America met in Rio de Janeiro. The European group discussed the exchange of scientific personnel between developed and developing countries and the adaptation of technology to the needs of developing countries. The other regional groups discussed the regional proposals for the World Plan of Action for the Application of Science and Technology to Development.<sup>1</sup>

THIRTEENTH SESSION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

At its thirteenth session, held in April 1970, the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development undertook a complete review of its work and determined its priorities, work programmes and schedule of meetings so that it could complete consideration of some of the major items before its mandate expired at the end of 1971.

The Committee adopted its second report on science education and continued to devote particular attention to one of its major projects, the preparation of the World Plan of Action for the Application of Science and Technology to Development.

The Advisory Committee also adopted a statement on strategy for the application of science and technology in the Second United Nations Development Decade and made final its recommendations on quantitative targets for the following three objectives: (a) scientific and technological activities within the developing countries; (b) international aid devoted to science and technology; and (c) the orientation of research and development activities of the developed countries towards problems of specific importance to the developing countries.

Other problems that received special attention from the Committee were machinery for science and technology in the United Nations system, the population problem, computer technology for development, science and technology in relation to industrial development, transfer of technology to developing countries and collaboration between scientists of developed and developing countries.

DECISIONS OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

FUTURE INSTITUTIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

In its discussion of future institutional arrangements for science and technology in the United Nations system, the Economic and Social Council had before it a report by the Secretary-General which presented the wide-ranging views on the subject expressed by Governments and organizations and which identified the options available for action.

On 30 July 1970, the Council reiterated that there was a need for the reinforcement and co-ordination of current and contemplated activities, including the establishment of inter-governmental machinery, in the application of science and technology to development within the framework of the United Nations system. Recognizing that there was no consensus on how to meet the need for reinforcement and co-ordination or on the place and role of the machinery to be set up, the Council decided to postpone its decision on the subject until 1971.

The Council's decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 1544(XLIX), which was adopted, unanimously, on the recommendation of its Co-ordination Committee. The text had been approved by the Committee on 29 July 1970, by 21 votes to 0, with 1 abstention, on the basis of a proposal by Brazil, India, Pakistan, Sudan and Yugoslavia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

REPORT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

On 30 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council approved the programme of meetings for 1970 and 1971 of the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development and drew the attention of United Nations bodies to its recommendations.

The Council also drew the attention of Governments to the fact that the shortage of adequately trained manpower constituted one of the major constraints on the application of science and technology to African countries and called on them to act to overcome that problem.

The Council, further, commended to the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) the idea of supporting, at the request of Governments, the establishment of bilateral links between research and education institutions in developed and developing countries.

These were among the decisions taken by the Council in adopting, unanimously, resolution 1543(XLIX). The text was recommended by the Co-ordination Committee, which had unanimously approved it on 29 July 1970, on the basis of a proposal sponsored by Brazil, India, Pakistan, Sudan and Yugoslavia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

SCIENCE EDUCATION

On 30 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council, in noting the second report on science education prepared by the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development, stressed the importance of science education in relation to development.

Expressing its disappointment at the slow progress in the implementation of recommendations in the first report on science education prepared by the Advisory Committee,<sup>2</sup> the

Council requested the organizations concerned, particularly the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to take the necessary steps for further implementation. The Council also commended the additional recommendations in the second report.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1545 (XLIV), adopted by the Council, unanimously, on the recommendation of its Co-ordination Committee, which had approved the text unanimously on 29 July 1970, on the basis of a proposal by Brazil, India, Pakistan, Sudan and Yugoslavia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

APPLICATION OF COMPUTER TECHNOLOGY TO DEVELOPMENT

In July 1970, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council a report concerning international co-operation in the use of computers and computation techniques for development. The report dealt with programmes for developing countries with respect to computer technology and the barriers and incentives relating to it.

On 28 July 1970, the Council, noting that late publication prevented a thorough discussion of the report, requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to ensure wide distribution of the report. It also recommended that the regional economic commissions, UNDP, the specialized agencies and the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development continue to assist the Secretary-General in the study of the question. The Council decided to consider the report at its first session in 1971.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1538 (XLIX), which was adopted by the Council, without a vote, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee. The Committee had approved the text, without a vote, on 24 July 1970, on the basis of a proposal submitted by Argentina, France, Tunisia and Yugoslavia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In a related decision, on 11 December 1970, the General Assembly decided (without adopting a resolution) to defer consideration of the application of computer technology for development until 1971. The Assembly's decision was taken on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee which acted on the question on 21 October 1970 without voting.

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

ROLE OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY IN DEVELOPMENT

On 7 December 1970, the General Assembly noted its conviction that science and technology constituted one of the main pillars of economic and social development. It recognized the interests of all countries in benefiting from the achievements of modern science and technology for the acceleration of their economic and social development and in having access to the world's intellectual and technical resources, taking into account the special needs of the developing countries.

The Assembly called upon Governments to give due attention to the promotion of science and technology in their national policies and to encourage increased international technical and scientific co-operation. It also invited bodies in the United Nations system to take action with a view to strengthening economic, scientific and technical co-operation within their programmes.

The importance of establishing direct channels of co-operation among universities, research institutes, laboratories and similar institutions was also recognized by the Assembly.

The Assembly went on to recommend that the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and other appropriate organizations continue and intensify their efforts for the transfer of operative technology to the developing countries, including assistance for the promotion of indigenous technology.

The Secretary-General was requested to prepare a study that would evaluate the main implications of science and technology, particularly for development, and, on that basis, appraise the results achieved within the framework of the United Nations system, and the difficulties encountered, since the United Nations Conference on the Application of Science and Technology for the Benefit of the Less Developed Areas, held in 1963.<sup>3</sup> The Secretary-General was asked to report his progress to the Economic and Social Council in 1971.

The Assembly also asked that the study suggest ways and means of implementing recommendations, ways of strengthening international co-operation in the field, and additional forms of international action within the framework of the United Nations system to ensure that scientific and technical achievements were more effectively applied to the needs of all countries.

These were among the decisions embodied in resolution 2658 (XXV), adopted, without objection, by the Assembly on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which had approved the text, without objection, on 23 November 1970. The text had been sponsored in the Committee by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, France, Ghana, India, Iran, Madagascar, Malaysia, Morocco, Nigeria, Peru, Romania, Spain, Tunisia, Venezuela and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In its formulation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, the General Assembly included references to the role of science and technology in development. (For text of resolution 2626 (XXV), in which the Strategy is embodied, see pp. 319-29, particularly paragraphs 60-64.)

TRANSFER OF TECHNOLOGY

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly endorsed a decision of the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to establish the Intergovernmental Group on Transfer of Technology. In this connexion, the Assembly noted the importance of and the need for an adequate transfer of operative technology to developing countries in order to accelerate their economic and social development.

(For text of resolution 2726 (XXV), in which these decisions were embodied, see pp. 391-92.)

RESOLUTION 1544 (XLIX), as recommended by Co-ordination Committee, E/4920, adopted unanimously by Council on 30 July 1970, meeting 1721.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1454 (XLVII) of 8 August 1969 on future institutional arrangements for science and technology,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the matter,

Having also considered the report on the same subject of the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development,

Taking note of the relevant part of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on its sixth session,

Noting further the relevant section of the thirty-sixth report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination,

1. Attaches the highest importance to the strengthening of the activities, including the elimination of any prevailing institutional gaps, of the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system dealing with specific problems of the application of science and technology to development and with the question of the transfer of operative technology to developing countries;

2. Recalls operative paragraph 5 of its resolution 1454(XLVII);

3. Notes that the Trade and Development Board has decided to consider at its tenth session, as a matter of high priority, necessary action regarding appropriate institutional arrangements to deal with those aspects of the transfer of operative technology that fall within its jurisdiction;

4. Reiterates that there is a need for the reinforcement and co-ordination of present and contemplated activities, including the establishment within the framework of the United Nations system of inter-governmental machinery in the field of the application of science and technology to development and taking into account the respective responsibilities of the General Assembly and the Council;

5. Recognizes that so far no consensus or majority opinion has emerged on how best to meet the need for such reinforcement and co-ordination or on the place and role of any intergovernmental machinery to be set up;

6. Decides, pending further clarification of the issues involved by the relevant bodies of the United Nations, to postpone till its fifty-first session its decision on this subject;

7. Endorses the view contained in the thirty-sixth report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination that any institutional arrangements in the field of science and technology will be meaningful only if additional resources are made available for tackling major problem areas.

CHAPTER XII

PROBLEMS OF THE ENVIRONMENT

UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON THE HUMAN ENVIRONMENT

DECISIONS OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

A progress report on the preparations for the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, scheduled to be held in 1972 in Stockholm, Sweden, was submitted by the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council at its July 1970 session, in accordance with a General Assembly request of 15 December 1969.<sup>1</sup>

In his report, the Secretary-General noted that the Preparatory Committee for the Conference had held its first session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 10 to 20 March 1970.

The Committee had underlined the General Assembly's call for an action-oriented conference and stressed the need to ensure an appropriate balance between the environmental problems of developing and of developed countries. It had proposed that the Conference be organized around three main themes: (a) environmental aspects of human settlements; (b) rational management of natural resources; and (c) environmental degradation from pollution and nuisances.

Among other things, the Secretary-General noted his intent to continue close contacts with Governments and with the specialized agencies and other international organizations in preparing for the Conference.

The popularization of environmental problems, the report noted, raised the danger of a concentration on the more spectacular aspects of environmental deterioration (such as pollution) in a few advanced countries, to the neglect of less obvious aspects of a cultural and economic nature. The Secretary-General felt that there was a need for an information programme aimed at legislators, Government policy-makers and leaders in industry and agriculture, with a view to placing current concern about pollution and other evident nuisances in proper socio-economic perspective. The information programme should also give prominence to the environmental problems of developing countries, the Secretary-General said.

Finally, the Secretary-General, while expressing his awareness of the need to keep the Conference costs to a minimum, noted that a number of important developments had occurred which necessitated a revision of the estimates and would entail additional financial implications.

On 27 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council took note of the progress report of the Secretary-General regarding the current stage of preparations for the Conference on the Human Environment.

In so doing, the Council among other things: reaffirmed the action-oriented character of the Conference; stressed that due account be taken of environmental problems of developing countries; expressed the hope that the Conference would promote the aims of the Second United Nations Development Decade by contributing to sound economic and social development; and recommended that the Conference be presented with a draft declaration of principles regarding the human environment, based on the suggestions made by the Preparatory Committee.

The Council also: reiterated that the Conference agenda should be selective, its organizational structure simple and efficient and its documentation reasonably limited; emphasized that every effort should be made to keep the financial implications of the Conference to the minimum compatible with the task of fulfilling its objectives; recommended that the second session of the Preparatory Committee be held early in 1971; and called upon Governments, specialized agencies and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to give all possible support to the Secretary-General and the Preparatory Committee in their efforts to prepare effectively for the Conference.

These decisions of the Economic and Social Council were embodied in resolution 1536 (XLIX), which was adopted unanimously. The text was based on a proposal by Argentina, Japan, Norway and Yugoslavia, as orally amended by Brazil, France and Tunisia.

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

At its 1970 session, the General Assembly reviewed preparations for the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment.

On 7 December, the Assembly, after expressing its awareness that the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade called for intensified national and international efforts to arrest the deterioration of the human environment and to promote activities that would help to maintain the ecological balance on which human survival depended, and after reaffirming that environmental policies should be considered in the context of economic and social development, taking into account the special needs of development in developing countries, took the following steps:

(1) requested the Secretary-General to convene the second session of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment at Geneva, Switzerland, from 8 to 19 February 1971, and the third session in New York from 13 to 24 September 1971;

(2) recommended the inclusion in the agenda of the Preparatory Committee of one or more specific items relating to economic and social aspects in order to safeguard and promote the interests of developing countries with a view to reconciling national environmental policies with national development plans and priorities;

(3) recommended that the Preparatory Committee consider, among other things, the financing of possible environmental action with a view to ensuring that additional resources were provided to developing countries in the context of the protection of the environment; and

(4) requested the Secretary-General to report in 1971 on progress of the preparatory work for the Conference.

These decisions of the General Assembly were embodied in resolution 2657 (XXV), which was adopted, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, by a vote of 86 to 0, with 10 abstentions. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The text, which was approved by the Second Committee on 27 November 1970 by a vote of 78 to 0, with 10 abstentions, was based on a proposal by Argentina, Australia, Canada, Cyprus, Greece, India, Iran, Japan, Malta, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Philippines, Singapore, Spain, Sweden, Yugoslavia and Zambia, as amended by the sponsors and by Brazil, Ceylon, Chile, Nigeria and Sudan.

Prior to the vote on the draft resolution, the Committee had voted by 49 to 10, with 26 abstentions, to retain the final phrase "on which human survival depends" from the preambular provision that called for national and international efforts to promote activities that would help to maintain the ecological balance. The vote was taken at the request of Czechoslovakia.
